In response to a question from Mr Neeson yesterday, the Minister accepted that it was not in the best interests of pupils to have 20 or 30 pupils in a school. Yet, in response to the next question from Dr McCrea, she attempted to justify, using unsubstantiated, projected figures, opening an Irish-medium school with 12 pupils.

Is it not time that the Minister focused on the existing education structure and stopped cherry-picking from the Bain Report in an attempt to shore up her sectarian agenda? The cost of propagating that agenda cannot be justified when we consider the motion that came before the Assembly on 29 May this year regarding a revised literacy and numeracy strategy. Where are the press statements to address that pressing problem, which affects Northern Ireland as a whole?

During that debate, I called for the Minister to be strong and show effective leadership to her Department. However, all I have seen is dithering and her aspirations for cultural segregation. Her Department's sustainable schools policy says that over the years:

“there has been a lack of a consistent planning framework.

It appears that the Minister is following in the footsteps of her predecessors.

It is time for the Minister to show an even-handed approach to the challenges that face education in Northern Ireland. I support the motion, and I call on the Minister to provide the House with a comprehensive, reasoned and well-balanced policy to deal with the recommendations of the Bain Report and the sustainable schools policy. It is time for the Minister to be bold and brave, to set aside her personal agenda and work for all the people of Northern Ireland.

4.15 pm

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Member who proposed this important motion. I am speaking in a personal capacity as a member of the Ulster Unionist Party and not as the Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister.

I address my remarks to the section of the motion that refers to:

“decisions taken by the Minister of Education over the summer recess”.

I particularly want to scrutinise her decision to approve the development proposals for four Irish-medium schools. I want to try to gain an understanding of the rationale as to why those decisions continue to be made. There appear to be political, as opposed to educational, reasons for those decisions.

I have to confess that I have a limited understanding of the Irish language, in spite of the fact that I was brought up, and still live, in a nationalist/republican area. My great-grandfather, Jones Black, was a fluent Irish speaker. However, somewhere along the line, the family sorted that out — that tradition no longer exists.

I am not interested in the Irish language. Those who wish to pursue it have a perfect right to do so, which I accept. Some Members speak Irish fluently; Mr Dominic Bradley speaks fluently and eloquently — one presumes. However, there are others in the Chamber who speak what might be regarded as “prison Gaelic”. I am not sure that that generally benefits the language. The lesson is that people should stop using the language as a political tool. It is an entirely different matter if people choose to harness the language as an educational asset.

What is the rationale behind Gaelic being taught primarily in an exclusive setting — that is, Irish-medium schools in one sector? It strikes me that Irish is adequately dealt with, and taught, in the maintained sector. I have no doubt that there is increasing room in the maintained sector to improve facilities and give a better and more rounded education — not only in Irish but in various subjects — to children and parents who express that interest.

I am not convinced that teaching children Gaelic gives them a competitive advantage for the future. It does not produce better doctors, engineers or software developers for society. Over 25% of the world's population can communicate, to some extent, in English. English is the common language in almost every sphere — from science to air traffic control. Irish has a limited national or international appeal. Although there may be more native speakers of Chinese or Spanish, English is the language that people use across the world and across cultures.

The money that is being expended to provide Irish-medium education in an exclusive Irish setting — largely for political reasons — must be closely considered. It is unjustified, and it cannot be defended. I wish that we could move on to a more sensible debate in which the rationale for those decisions could be examined objectively and reviewed sincerely.

Mr McCausland: I was interested by the comments made on the motion by both Paul Butler and Michelle O'Neill. I must pick up on those of Michelle O'Neill, who told us that the Irish language is no threat to anyone. Despite her extensive studies on this matter, she obviously has not read the official Sinn Féin party publication that tells us that every single word that is spoken in Irish is another bullet in the struggle for freedom. Sinn Féin was responsible for that publication — it bears the Sinn Féin badge and it has that party's imprimatur.

Some Members: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCausland: I do not have time to give way — I assure Members that I have a lot to get through. I will give way some other time.

It would be helpful if Michelle O'Neill and other Sinn Féin Members would explain how something presented by her party in military terms is no threat to anyone. Her understanding of the European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages — and, I might also add, of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child — is very different from my understanding of them. One of the core principles of those documents is equality. That is a point that I wish to stress; for me, it is a core issue in this debate.

Sinn Féin constantly presents itself as pursuing an equality agenda. "Equality" is one of those words that appears in almost every Sinn Féin speech and publication. Sinn Féin Members say that they demand it, but the truth is that Sinn Féin does not want, and cannot cope with, equality. What Sinn Féin Members really want is preferential treatment for their community, their culture and their pet projects. They want inequality in favour of themselves, and institutionalised discrimination in favour of their position. All their talk about equality is simply a sham and a fraud. The truth is that the decisions made by the Minister were shameful and sectarian.

I warmly welcome the proposal, made by Basil McCrea, that the Assembly debate the Irish-medium sector, which needs to be scrutinised, and, if it were scrutinised, a lot more might come out than is already known. It would be good to debate that at the earliest opportunity.

Members should take note of the following: the Belfast Education and Library Board, of which I am a member, is under pressure from the Minister's Department to review and rationalise controlled school provision in the city because of the number of empty school places. Belfast Education and Library Board is not unique in that; the CCMS is also implementing a programme of rationalisation, particularly in the west of the city. In Belfast, schools have an enrolment of 120 or more pupils, so that if one amalgamates two Belfast schools, one creates a single school of 250 to 270 pupils. Those schools are being put under pressure to amalgamate, while the Minister creates a school of just 43 pupils in one case, and of just 12 in another.

That matter was discussed at a meeting of the education committee of the Belfast Education and Library Board last Thursday. No one from Sinn Féin bothered to turn up. All those present discussed the matter and there was complete unanimity on the matter. Even members of the SDLP who were present supported my proposal that we should ask the board to approach the Association of Education and Library Boards to seek a judicial review of what the Minister has done, so that she is scrutinised, not merely by this House, but by the British courts.

The Minister is a woman who has taken a great interest over the years in the court system, so she will welcome the opportunity to be taken to court on this matter. We need a judicial review of this decision, and I hope that my proposal is approved by the full Belfast Education and Library Board and by the Association of Education and Library Boards.

What the Minister has done shows that she does not view the situation in a fair and impartial way. It was done in a partisan way to further the sectarian agenda of Sinn Féin.

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): Go raibh maith agat. We have heard from Members on issues regarding the opening and amalgamation of schools, the Bain Report, and sustainable schools. I will respond to as many of the points as possible, and explain the position on decisions taken in individual cases, as well as the overall position, as set out in the Bain Report and 'Schools for the Future: a Policy for Sustainable Schools', published by the direct rule Administration.

Before that, I will respond to Iris Robinson's question, although it was unfair. We are all politicians in this House, and we should not involve each others' children in the choices that we make. Given that Mrs Robinson has brought my children into the debate, I will explain my situation. I use my home address in north Louth for my two children, who go to school in the North of Ireland. I make no apology for that, because I believe that children should be able to go to their nearest school, no matter where they live in relation to the border. If Members are serious about changing the education system, and dealing with demographic decline we must examine how issues around the border are dealt with. I am aware that there is a judicial review around the issue of "grannyng" and I will await the court's ruling on that.

European legislation is in place regarding the many people, right across the island, particularly in the border communities, who live in the South, and work and pay taxes in the North. What I ask — [Interruption.]

Please Iris, there is no need to be rude, I did not interrupt you. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order Members, the Minister has the Floor.

Ms Ruane: We should not bring each other's children into our political debates.

Mr Speaker: Order. Members should address their remarks through the Chair. The Minister has the Floor.

Ms Ruane: The Independent Strategic Review of Education, or the Bain Report, examined issues of school funding, planning, collaboration and sharing. Published at the end of last year, the report contains 61 recommendations and focuses on the quality of education for children. It recommends that there should be an estate of fewer, but larger, schools, with greater collaboration and sharing, in and across school sectors, in order to address the needs of children in local areas.

I agree with the general thrust of the Bain Report, and the objective of providing modern schools that are fit for purpose and provide a high-quality education for all children. Nevertheless, many of the recommendations require further detailed work and consultation. It would not be possible to implement the report overnight.

Since taking up the post of Minister of Education, I have had many meetings with school representatives and interest groups across the education sector, who have raised aspects of the Bain Report. I know that the issues are important to the education sector and need to be dealt with fully and carefully. Implementation must be taken forward in consultation. It is essential that the Department of Education gets the detail correct because children's long-term educational interests are at the heart of such work.

The Bain Report recommended that provision should move to a system of schools that are educationally and financially viable in the long term, and planned on an area basis.

Cuideoidh seo le fadhbanna an ró-sholáthair a laghdú i dtréimhse athruithe móra sa líon daltaí agus lena chinntiú go bhfuil na scoileanna ag comhphobail atá de dhíth orthu.

Around half of the recommendations in the Bain Report relate directly to the improved planning of schools on an area basis. The report recommends that there should be a more strategic approach, with greater consistency and coherence in planning. There has been a general recognition across the education sector that an area-based planning approach should be introduced. That would have an important role in supporting our wider educational policies and raising the equality of education. The relation between schools and further education provision will also be a key consideration in improved planning and collaboration.

4.30 pm

The need to provide a system of strong, viable schools is at the heart of area-based planning. The Bain Report recommended that a policy on sustainable schools be produced. To that end, my Department has been analysing the responses from the consultation that took place earlier in 2007.

The draft policy document on sustainable schools proposes the same enrolment thresholds as the Bain Report suggested: 105 for rural primary schools; 140 for urban primary schools; and 500 for post-primary schools that have pupils who are aged 11 to 16 years. Concerns have been raised about those levels; however, the Bain Report did not say that schools that are below those levels need to be rationalised automatically. Instead, schools that are in that position are to be reviewed to see whether they continue to provide quality education.

Enrolment levels are only one of a proposed set of six criteria by which to assess school viability. The proposed criteria also include: the educational experience of the children; the school's financial position; leadership and management of the school; the school's accessibility; and its links with the community. The core objective of the policy is high-quality education for children regardless of where they live. Often, concerns about a school's viability are raised only when enrolments have fallen irreversibly. The criteria and indicators in the policy are intended to provide a framework for early consideration and possible remedial action.

The Department received 119 responses to 'A Consultation on Schools for the Future: A Policy for Sustainable Schools'. The document and the responses raise complex questions about a school's viability. Overall, however, there is an interest in having a clearly set-out approach to viability. That will help to shape our education system for the future. The responses deserve the most careful consideration so that the policy can be clearly articulated for the future. I intend to introduce proposals towards the end of the year.

The motion refers to openings and amalgamation decisions. I want to turn to the processes that are involved, because it is obvious from many Members' contributions that they do not understand those processes. [Interruption.]

I did not interrupt Members during their contributions; I would appreciate it if they did not interrupt me.

There is a statutory requirement for a development proposal to be published when a school is being established, is closed or is undergoing a significant change that alters its character or size. Proposals can be initiated by the local education and library board, the Catholic Council for Maintained Schools, the Council for Integrated Education, Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, an individual school or any other interested parties. However, it is important to remember that I do not initiate the proposals.

The proposals that have been highlighted in the debate were initiated by parents' groups, in the case of the opening of the new Irish-medium schools, and by the CCMS, which acted on behalf of the trustees, in the case of the amalgamation of maintained schools. The closure of Minterburn Primary School has also been raised, and that closure was proposed by the Southern Education and Library Board.

Before a proposal is published, the relevant education and library board is required to consult with any school that it may affect. There is also a statutory duty on the proposer to consult with governors and teachers of any schools that are the subject of the proposal, as well as with parents. Following publication of the proposal, there is statutory period of two months during which representations can be made to the Department in support of or against a proposal. At the end of those two months, the Department evaluates all relevant information about the proposal.

The Department of Education considers demands for all forms of education, including Irish-medium and integrated education, within the general framework that is set out in the Education and Libraries Order 1986. That states that so far as is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure, children will be educated in accordance with the wishes of their parents.

Following a commitment that was made in the Belfast Agreement, the Education Order 1998 placed a duty on the Department to encourage and facilitate the development of Irish-medium education.

Mrs I Robinson: Will the Member give way?

Ms Ruane: I will not give way.

In addition, the British Government have signed the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, which came into force in July 2001.

The charter provides that where families request, and where there is a sufficient number of potential pupils, education will be made available in Irish. The Bain Report identified a significant growth in recent years in the number of pupils being educated through the medium of Irish. There are currently over 3,000 pupils in Irish-medium education, compared to an earlier figure of fewer than 400. I have the Bain Report here. I had a meeting with George Bain last week. I urge people to read the Bain Report; it is obvious that some people have not. I quote:

“In view of the pattern of growth in the sector, the issues that need to be considered, and a radically changing planning context for education, the Review recommends that DE should develop a comprehensive and coherent policy for IM education.”

That is exactly what my Department and I are doing. It is interesting that when we discuss the issue of Irish-medium education, the temperature in the House rises. We are in new arrangements. Mitchel McLaughlin made points that Members need to listen to. I do not want to score points. We should not be having divisive debates like this in the House. Michelle McIlveen talked about leadership; let us show leadership. I have seen it in the communities and in schools, including controlled schools. I am working — [Interruption.]

Please do not interrupt me.

Mr Speaker: Order. The Minister has the Floor. I ask the Minister to address her comments through the Chair.

Ms Ruane: My apologies. OK.

The educators are way ahead of the political parties in the unionist community. I say that from experience. I ask Members to put division behind them and move forward on the basis of equality. I take equality very seriously, as Members know. I have invited the Equality Coalition to have a discussion and to brief all my officials on all the issues relating to equality. I invite all the other Departments to follow my lead in that matter.

Last week, I discussed with George Bain his report and its conclusions on Irish-medium provision. As someone who has experienced bilingualism in his native Canada, George Bain was well aware of the issues that can arise. That is why he recommended that there should be a review of Irish-medium education. In considering the development proposals of the three — not four — Irish-medium schools, Gaelscoil Éanna, Gaelscoil Ghleann Darach and Gaelscoil na Daróige, I took careful account of the individual circumstances.

I took careful account of the views of Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, the body funded by the Department to encourage and facilitate the development of Irish-medium education. I considered that in each case there would be sufficient demand for Irish-medium primary-school provision in the respective areas. Members are playing with figures. They need to understand that in each of those schools, there are 12-15 pupils in primary 1, not the whole school. Members are not comparing like with like.

The granting of conditional approval entitles a school to recurrent funding only. The position is reviewed after three years to confirm whether viability is expected to be sustainable. In each of those schools, there is pre-school provision in the medium of Irish with, already, sufficient numbers for the next two years. A school's eligibility for capital funding is assessed at the end of that three-year period, and pupil intake levels are relevant to that assessment.

A successful amalgamation of schools should realise important benefits, including a reduction in the number of surplus places, a reduction in the pressure on teachers in their delivery of the curriculum, and better use of resources. Many positive amalgamations are happening.

The criteria for assessing proposals for new Irish-medium schools are no different from those for other sectors. The minimum intakes required to ensure a viable school over the long term are in line with the Bain Report's views on the viability of primary schools. It is inevitable that new schools will start small but are expected to grow. There has been undue and unfair focus on the three Irish-medium schools that I approved for funding. It is worth making the point that Irish is for all communities, not just one community. In light of the fact that there has been that undue focus, I should like to wish those schools well and assure them that we will not allow them to become political footballs. That would not be fair.

Demand for the Irish-medium sector and the integrated sector is growing in an education sector in which overall numbers are falling. In every proposal, I will examine individual circumstances. In regard to proposals for closures or amalgamations —

Mr Speaker: The Minister's time is up.

Mrs M Bradley: I want to refer to the important points that my colleague Dominic Bradley made. He mentioned first the duty on the Department to provide a policy to guide practice. He also told us that we need clear policies to ensure an even-handed approach towards all sectors, according to their needs. We need policy to bring clarity and transparency to the situation, and Dominic Bradley pointed out that so much in the reforms depends on a workable sustainable schools policy. The planning of the schools estate under area planning cannot be implemented without that policy. He mentioned that the Department plans to begin the movement towards reform through a programme of convergence of the education and library boards with the soon-to-be-established education and skills authority.

Moreover, Mr Bradley reminded us that we are setting out on a road and that none of us knows where we are going without the policy signposts that should be guiding us along the way. One of the main policy signposts is the sustainable schools policy. Again, so many of the RPA reforms depend on that policy. I agree that policy drives practice, and the fact that many policies, including 'Schools for the Future: A Policy for Sustainable Schools', are not yet in place is not acceptable after 21 months of preparation.

The previous Minister accepted the Bain recommendations in full, and our current Minister has indicated that she accepts the Bain Report in principle, but clarification is needed as to which recommendations will now be subject to further discussion or change. In my view, quite a few issues require clarification in an updated policy.

The Bain Report figures for minimum pupil numbers were 115 pupils for a primary school, 500 pupils for post-primary schools for 11- to 16-year-olds, and 100 pupils for sixth-form provision. However, those were not set as minimum thresholds for retention, but as review thresholds. I would like the Minister's view on that.

The Bain Report also refers to schools having composite classes with no more than two year groups per class. That equates to four teachers, and with the current average pupil:teacher ratio and local management of schools arrangements in primary schools, would allow primary schools to function with 80 pupils. What is the Minister's view of that? I do not know. Does she know? We have no way of knowing without the policy.

There is also a significant number of schools with 55 to 60 pupils and three teachers. Although those schools require additional support for the significant challenges that they face, in the main, they are financially and educationally viable, and an option for their retention should be available. Does the Minister agree?

The proposal to merge two small schools in Ahoghill also sits well below the Bain Report numbers, but the report also points out that sustainable schools policy must take account of the need of communities, whether they are rural communities or those that represent a single sector in an area in which that population is in the minority. There will always be the need to retain a few schools that sit outside any recommended figures, and the policy should accommodate those exceptions. Again, the issue is the urgent need for a sustainable schools policy to be adopted and operational.

Since the consultation on 'Schools for the Future: A Policy for Sustainable Schools' before the summer, no approved policy has as yet emerged. That policy vacuum means that proposals and subsequent decisions are being made, at best, on the basis of an outdated policy and will cause disagreement.

We need the clarification and consistent direction of guiding policy. For that reason, I call on all Members to support the amendment and to ensure that the sustainable schools policy is published without further delay.

Mr Donaldson: Let me say at the outset that the DUP rejects the SDLP amendment. Quite frankly, it does not hold the Minister to account on the decisions that have been taken over the summer. It is a fudge. It is the political equivalent of being mauled by a dead sheep, as we once famously heard in the House of Commons. What does the amendment do?

It simply asks the Minister to publish her intentions. The Minister must do that, but in the context — ignored by the SDLP — of the widespread concern in the community about the nature of the decisions taken in the summer.

4.45 pm

Mr D Bradley: Will the Member give way?

Mr Donaldson: No, I will not give way. In response to — [Interruption.]

The Member had his chance earlier and he did not have much to say, so he will not add anything now.

In respect of Mr Butler's — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. The Member has the Floor.

Mr Donaldson: In response to the nonsense we heard from Paul Butler about witch hunts, I was not aware that there was a witch to be hunted; maybe he knows something that we do not. Michelle O'Neill and Paul Butler were at the Committee for Education when it decided to write to the Minister with concerns about her decisions, but neither of them raised an objection. They said absolutely nothing. There was consensus in the Committee, so what is going on this afternoon? Is there a Whip being applied, I wonder?

This is about democracy, and holding the Minister to account. That is what we are doing on this side of the Chamber — holding the Minister to account. It is not about witch hunts; it is simply about addressing some very real concerns. What are those concerns? As a Member for Lagan Valley, Mr Butler should know what they are. He knows that four small rural schools were closed in my constituency this summer: Hillhall Primary School; Lambeg Primary School; Charley Memorial Primary School; and Drumbo Primary School. Yet, in the same breath, the Minister took the decision to amalgamate two primary schools in Ahoghill. The combined enrolment of those two schools of 43 pupils is less than that of Hillhall Primary School, one of the four schools that the Minister closed this summer in my constituency. Four rural schools have been closed, and yet, the combined enrolment of those schools would come to almost 100 pupils. Why did they not have the option of amalgamation? It is because they were controlled schools.

The schools in Ahoghill that were amalgamated were maintained schools. With the greatest respect to the Minister, the message that people in my constituency get is that controlled schools are "fair game under Bain", whereas those in the maintained, Irish-medium or integrated sectors are a preserved and protected species. That is the message that is coming through loud and clear from the Minister's decisions.

Mr D Bradley: On a point of order. Is it in order for a Member who was not in the Chamber for the full duration of the debate to make the winding-up speech?

Mr Speaker: That is not a point of order. Mr Donaldson has the Floor.

Mr Donaldson: I have heard enough from the hon Member opposite to know a wind-up when I hear one.

Five years ago, the previous Sinn Féin Minister of Education, now the Deputy First Minister, grant-aided several Irish-medium schools, and predicted that they would all reach enrolments in excess of 105 pupils. Yet, of the 18 Irish-medium schools that exist today, half are nowhere near meeting the enrolment target of 105 pupils. In fact, 'Schools for the Future: Funding, Strategy, Sharing', published in December 2006, states that numbers in those schools range from just 18 pupils — [Interruption.]

Mr McElduff: A Cheann Comhairle. On a point of order. Is it in order for a Member to use a book in the fashion of an exhibit?

Mrs I Robinson: Are you serious?

Mr Speaker: Order. If the Member is quoting from a book, he is entitled to use it in the Chamber.

Mr Campbell: The truth is hitting home now all right.

Mr Speaker: Order — that goes for every side of the House. Mr Donaldson has the Floor.

Mr Donaldson: The report makes clear that some of those schools have as few as 18 pupils. If the then Minister of Education got enrolments so spectacularly wrong, what prospect is there that the current Minister has correctly estimated the enrolments of the three Irish-medium schools to which she gave approval earlier this summer?

The question is one of confidence in the Minister's decisions. I say to her sincerely that there are people that I represent in my constituency who do not see fairness in the decisions that she made during the summer. I am afraid that they see bias, and if that does not change, let me be clear from these Benches, there will neither be consensus in the House, nor cross-community support, for the kind of reforms that the Minister wants to introduce.

The Minister must demonstrate fairness and end bias, and then we will start to listen. Only then will there be the prospect of some consensus. However, as regards the big decisions that have to be taken, unless we get a level playing field for all sectors, including the controlled sector, the Minister will not achieve the kind of cross-community consensus that she needs in order to make progress in educational reform.

The DUP does not want children to be turned into political footballs. The party wants children to be treated equally and fairly, whether they are Protestant or Roman Catholic and whether they speak Irish, English or any other language. The DUP is asking for fairness, but the decisions taken this summer do not reflect fairness or impartiality, and that goes to the heart of the matter.

Mr McElduff: Does the Member accept —

Mr Speaker: Order.

Resolved:

That this Assembly notes with concern some of the decisions taken by the Minister of Education over the summer recess on school openings and amalgamations; and calls upon the Minister to clarify her approach to the recommendations of the Bain Report and the Sustainable Schools Policy published by her Department.

Heart Defect Screening Service

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for the winding-up speech. All other Members will have five minutes. One amendment has been selected and published on the Marshalled List. The proposer of the amendment will have 10 minutes to propose and five minutes for the winding-up speech.

Mr D Bradley: I beg to move

That this Assembly expresses its sympathy to the families of Patrick Breen and Patrick Devlin, who died recently on the sports field from heart defects; sympathises with all families on the island of Ireland who have lost loved ones in this way; calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to bring forward options for a comprehensive screening service; further calls on other Government Departments to co-operate in clarifying the costs of the development of such options, which should include schools and college services; and believes that such a service would benefit from co-operation and co-ordination through the North/South Ministerial Council and the British-Irish Council.

Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I express my sympathy and that of the House to the families of Patrick Breen and Patrick Devlin, who died recently.

I know that no amount of sympathy extended to those families, or any of the families and friends bereaved by that type of sudden death, can comfort them. However, the assurance that this House cares enough to do all in its power to establish a system of screening that might help others to avoid the suffering that they are going through may be of some consolation to them.

5.15 pm

Cormac McAnallen and John McCall were sportsmen who might have survived their conditions had they been detected early enough. That raises an important issue that we, as a legislative Assembly, must try to address. Young people who are not involved in sport also suffer from cardiac conditions, and, unfortunately, die from them. So our efforts to detect and treat those conditions must include all young people who may be at risk.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Molloy] in the Chair)

We must take steps to prevent further deaths from cardiac conditions, and that is why we are calling on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and other Ministers in the Executive to put forward options for a screening service to identify those at risk. The Minister's previous comments in the Chamber, when he undertook to ask officials to look into whether the screening of young athletes in Northern Ireland would be effective and appropriate, were welcome. I ask him to extend that investigation to all young people who may be at risk.

Before bringing this motion to the House today I spoke to sports organisations that are also concerned about cardiac conditions. I am very heartened by the forward thinking of, and proactive moves being taken by, such organisations as the GAA, the Irish Football Association and Ulster Rugby in engaging with issues like sudden adult death syndrome, through the charity Cardiac Risk in the Young, in an attempt to try to deal with the problem, and also taking their own measures.

It is important for us to reassure people that sport and physical exercise are major contributors to the health of young people, and we must support the sporting bodies in their efforts to involve as many young people as possible. Those organisations have developed responsible coaching programmes and approaches that are appropriate to the age and physical development of participants.

I pay tribute to the families of victims — families like the McAnallens and the McCalls — who have raised funds to provide vital equipment. I also wish to acknowledge my neighbour Kathleen Mooney, who lost her 18-year-old daughter, Mary, to a cardiac condition, and who has set up “Mary’s Fund” to help provide equipment like defibrillators to schools, youth clubs and sports organisations. I acknowledge the work of groups like the Cormac Trust in providing automated external defibrillators to communities in County Tyrone.

I do not believe that we should be leaving those initiatives solely to the families and sporting organisations. We, in this House, have a duty to investigate all the possibilities and to set up a system of screening that will complement, and possibly encompass, existing efforts and help to reassure all parents.

Comprehensive screening does not necessarily mean a widespread hospital-based screening programme for every young person in the country. It is possible to narrow the target group for screening by methods that are relatively inexpensive and already in use in Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, and England. The Gaelic Athletic Association, for example, through its medical welfare committee, recommends cardiac screening for all who participate in its games. The first stage is the completion of a questionnaire on the individual player's health and well-being. It uses a trigger system whereby anyone who has had a family member die before the age of 50 from a heart condition, or anyone who has ever felt dizzy or had chest pains during physical exercise, is referred to their GP for a more detailed screening.

SADS, a UK organisation that raises awareness about sudden arrhythmic death syndrome, believes that young people should be invited to a doctor's surgery at the ages of 11 and 15 to complete a questionnaire that gives information about their personal and medical history, and their family's medical history. During that visit, the GP would examine the patient with a stethoscope to try to detect any heart murmur. That would be followed up with a questionnaire, to be completed with parental assistance, to establish whether a child is in an at-risk group or has suffered signs or symptoms consistent with a cardiac condition. Those are simple, but effective, ways to help to identify those who may benefit from a more comprehensive screening process and which may help us to use our resources to the best possible effect. We can learn and co-operate with others within these shores and beyond. We can share expertise and experience that could help us to shape a system that would help to ensure that we identify and treat those at risk before it is too late.

It was with that in mind that Carmel Hanna and I tabled the motion. The Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety and his colleagues should engage the necessary advice from cardiology experts in Northern Ireland, call on expertise south of the border and in other parts of the United Kingdom, and introduce workable proposals that would help to identify and treat young people with cardiac conditions through a screening programme. Gabhaim buíochas ó chroí leat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Go raibh maith agat.

Mrs I Robinson: I beg to move the following amendment: Leave out all after the second "families" and insert

"who have lost loved ones in this way; and calls upon the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, and the Executive, to consult with their United Kingdom counterparts through the National Screening Committee, and bring forward fully costed, evidence-based proposals to reduce avoidable cardiac deaths in the young, including screening programmes where appropriate."

On behalf of my party colleagues, I express my sincere sympathies to the two families that have lost their precious sons. There can be few things more tragic than the sudden death of a young person, which is made all the more shocking in instances where the victim is seemingly active and healthy, and perhaps even a successful athlete.

The time and effort that many young people in the Province put into their sports is, to say the least, phenomenal. I was contacted yesterday by a representative from the Rathgael Gymnastics and Trampolining Club, which supports the finding of a means to reduce deaths from heart defects, but it admitted that it was mindful of the likely costs involved.

Young gymnasts at the Rathgael club commit many hours each week to training. For example, it currently has two 11-year-old girls who train 21 hours a week after school; two 13-year-old girls who train 17.25 hours a week; two 10-year-old girls who train 17.5 hours a week; and two nine-year-old girls who train 13.25 hours a week. The club also has a development squad, where girls as young as six years of age train for 13 hours a week.

Those children manage to fit in all that training while managing homework and all the other activities in which they are involved. They put in those hours in order to enhance the standards at which they compete, and several of those girls compete at international level. They assume that if they are putting in those training hours on behalf of their country, surely the least that they can expect in return is that the Northern Ireland Government resource preventative health services for them properly.

In many other sports in Northern Ireland, young people are also devoting long periods to training in the pursuit of excellence, often unseen in the early hours of the morning while others remain in their beds. Such is the commitment of our current ice-skating champions that they are in training at Dundonald Ice Bowl at approximately 6.37 am, before they start their school day.

High-profile stories are undoubtedly tragic. However, many other deaths also occur among those who have not excelled to the same high level of excellence.

We want to do all that we can to limit the needless loss of young life. The available resources must be carefully directed to ensure that we obtain the maximum benefit from them. That is why Members must follow the evidence of the experts and take heed of all of the research that has been conducted.

Various practices have been adopted in different countries. A report published in March 2006 in the Irish Republic, 'Reducing the Risk: A Strategic Approach', by the Task Force on Sudden Cardiac Deaths stated:

"The evidence is weak...Our understanding of the diseases underlying SCD in athletes comes from autopsy studies."

Sudden cardiac death rates are higher in those actively involved in sport. The deaths are mainly as a consequence of underlying disease, with abnormal heart rhythms occurring. Participants in high-dynamic sports appear to be those who are at the greatest risk. Many of the tests available are not sufficiently sensitive to identify those with the most serious conditions. To seek to act on limited results could result in excluding inappropriately huge numbers of healthy people from participating in sport.

The report by the Department of Health and Children in the Irish Republic last year concluded that:

"There is insufficient evidence to support the implementation of a mass population screening programme to identify risk of SCD."

Members must bear that in mind. The DUP amendment seeks to incorporate all means of preventing needless loss of life in a manner that ensures expert opinion is taken on board. It extends the possible options beyond screening and allows for other proposals.

It is essential that decisions, and the subsequent allocation of resources, are based on firm evidence.

The Dublin-based specialist Dr Gavin Blake admitted recently that screening tests may not be the solution to the deaths of young sports stars. The cardiologist expressed concern that tests were not guaranteed to identify heart problems. He said:

"I think as cardiologists, our concern is that screen tests are not perfect. We don't have a single test that can identify children that are at risk of sudden and unexpected problems when they are playing sport. It's as simple as that. That's our reluctance in embracing a widespread screening programme."

Understandably, the relatives of young victims want action, but it is the duty of Members to ensure that any decisions taken are the right ones. Where there is conflicting or inconclusive evidence, it is important to ensure that we have all the information that we require before making a final judgement. I support the amendment.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an díospóireacht seo agus ba mhaith liom a rá go mbeidh Sinn Féin ag tacú leis an rún. I welcome the debate, and I am pleased that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Michael McGimpsey, is in the Chamber to listen to it. I support the motion because it is not absolutely prescriptive, and it refers to bringing forward options for a comprehensive screening service.

It is better not to be prescriptive about how to proceed. As Iris Robinson and Dominic Bradley said, we must hear from the experts, including medical experts. Families and parents of those who have died have also become experts and should be heard in this debate.

Of course, déanaim comhbhrón ó chroí leo, my sympathy goes to all of the families that have lost loved ones as a result of heart defects. I include those young people who have recently died while actively participating in sport. Such deaths tend to be high profile and provoke a lot of public concern and fear. They command public attention and touch every home. The deaths of Cormac McAnallen, the Tyrone Gaelic football captain, John McCall, the young rugby star, Patrick Devlin, Patrick Breen and the two young boys from County Westmeath in the last month have shocked people the length and breadth of Ireland.

5.30 pm

Those deaths have concentrated people's minds on the condition.

We must listen to the experts, and we must study not only the report of the Irish Government's task force on sudden cardiac death, but the recommendations of the American Heart Association's 1996 consensus panel report, 'Cardiovascular Preparticipation Screening of Competitive Athletes'. That report says that a justifiable and compelling case for the establishment of a comprehensive screening service for young athletes can be made on ethical, legal and medical grounds.

The Irish Government's task force points to a particular group that is a priority for risk assessment. That group comprises the first-degree relatives of those who have suffered sudden cardiac death under the age of 40: they may be at increased risk of having an inherited disorder such as that described.

Although there is concern for those who participate in sports and exercise, perhaps there should be some categorisation of or differentiation between moderate- and high-intensity sports, with the latter being the highest priority for risk assessment.

Like other Members, I have not yet heard a convincing case for mass screening. However, there is a role for risk assessment for those who exercise or participate in sport. A balance must be struck, however, because participation in sport and exercise are inherently good and should be encouraged. All major sporting organisations should undertake — and many do — pre-participation assessment for elite players. Such assessments could be extended and broadened.

I note, as did Dominic Bradley, the primary assessment phase of the GAA's player welfare scheme. Its questionnaire asks, for example, whether the participant has a heart condition, whether a doctor has ever advised them not to participate in sport, or whether they have ever fainted during or after exercise. If a person answers yes to any of the 11 questions, further medical screening is required, and a GP referral is made.

There are probably more defibrillators in County Tyrone than in any other county. Volunteers are trained to use them, and I commend everybody who raises awareness of, and funds for, that endeavour. Reducing the incidence of sudden cardiac death is an appropriate objective for a cross-departmental strategy, as the motion states. Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: In considering the motion and the amendment, it seems that there are two sides to the matter. On the one hand, there is strong sympathy and sentiment for the bereaved, but on the other, there are questions about the implementation of the screening that is being asked for.

I am sure that I speak for everyone in the House when I say that our hearts go out to all those who have lost a loved one, especially someone young, whether through sport or in some other way.

There are two ways to view sympathy. One is to focus on the tragedy that is effected by the loss of a child, while the other is to focus on support for those who are suddenly plunged into grief and loss.

Recently, I heard a member of a family that had lost a very young child speak about loss. They said that when someone experiences the shock of the loss of their child, or another loved one, they are often incapable of functioning normally in their own world.

They went on to say:

All Members, and I am sure I speak for everyone, extend our sympathy to all those who have lost a loved one, not least the families of Patrick Devlin and Patrick Breen. On the tide of such emotion, we ask ourselves: what can we do? Is there something that should be done? Is there something that the House can do? Is there something that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, and his Department can do?

There are many questions that need to be asked. For example, at what age should a screening programme be commenced — is it in the cradle, at school, or later on? What level of screening should be undertaken — mere basic screening, or in-depth, intense screening? Do we have enough resources to undertake a rigorous screening programme, bearing in mind the comprehensive spending review and any pressures that it may bring? I am sure that the Minister will be able to tell us something about that. The cost of a comprehensive screening programme would be astronomical.

There is also an ethical issue. If problems occur, are there enough resources to provide treatment? Is it unethical of a Department to implement a screening process, and not have the resources to treat those who are discovered to have an ailment? What would be the knock-on effects in education, in sports, of the possible lack of physical exercise if a child were discovered to have such an ailment? What impact would such a discovery have on insurance premiums, on mortgages later in life, and on job situations? I could go on and on.

I believe that the sensible approach is to be guided by the Chief Medical Officer and his colleagues on the National Screening Committee. What is the point of the existence of that Committee, if we do not listen to its expert advice?

The amendment gives us a platform on which we can move forward sensibly, and not just ride on the tide of the emotion that we have in sympathy for those who have been so affected. I support the amendment.

Dr Farry: I thank the proposers of the motion for bringing this important issue before the Assembly. That said, the Alliance Party will be supporting the amendment, as we believe it represents a more realistic approach to dealing with this critical issue.

Obviously the death of a child — particularly the sudden death of a seemingly healthy, active child — is enormously difficult, and I am sure that every Member is committed to doing everything that we can to avoid a repeat of such situations.

It is worth noting that, in the case of Patrick Breen in Drumquin, the best medical practice was followed, with a doctor and defibrillator on the scene within five minutes, but it was obviously too late to save the boy.

We must ensure that, in the natural rush to avoid a repeat of that tragic occurrence, we do not end up taking steps that may, on reflection, turn out to be counterproductive. For example, we must be careful not to give the impression that sport is somehow an unusual or risky activity for young people to take part in. Indeed, we should be doing the opposite: trying to encourage people into as much activity as possible. In fact, many more young people will likely die as a consequence of inactivity than die because of shocking, but mercifully rare cardiac conditions.

Obesity and diabetes are great childhood health problems of our time, and any steps that can be taken must in no way jeopardise the fight against those big killers.

Fundamentally, we must take steps in line with best medical practice. Rather than prescribe what the clinical community should do, the Assembly should first listen to what experts in paediatric cardiology think is most appropriate.

I understand that, in some countries, such as Italy, there is a system of comprehensive child screening programmes. However, the vast majority of other developed countries have chosen not to set up such a system. We need to examine the medical literature on the experience of Italy and other countries in preventing sudden cardiac deaths among young children, instead of rushing to make snap judgements.

Furthermore, the availability of resources is a real issue. I refer not only to finance, but to Health Service resources in the broadest sense. However, it should be recognised that money that is spent on one area of healthcare inevitably means that less money is available to spend on others. We need to ensure that we spend our money in line with priorities to ensure the maximum return for the well-being of the population.

The inevitable outcome of any cost-benefit analysis along National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidelines will tend towards saving the life of a child, because a child has a long life ahead of him or her, and will make a greater contribution to society in the future than an older person.

As for human resources, paediatric cardiologists are not exactly thick on the ground in Northern Ireland. It takes many years to train doctors and consultants in that highly specialised field. Before imposing a new burden on the NHS, we need to ensure that it can cope with the demand, and must train new staff to meet that demand within a reasonable timeframe.

Important practical questions should be asked before a large-scale screening programme for a rare condition is introduced. There is a danger that the number of minor, non-threatening abnormalities that are detected will vastly exceed the number of dangerous abnormalities. That raises the spectre of children being referred for invasive and potentially risky treatment that is entirely unnecessary, and, in some cases, people will end up labelled, with unwelcome consequences for their insurance requirements, as Dr Coulter has already described.

I cannot assess the various risks; that is why we must take evidence from experts before imposing new burdens on the health sector.

Although the Alliance Party supports the spirit of the motion and wants to ensure that there will be no tragic repetition of the events of last month, Members of the Assembly are not best qualified to make judgements about complex clinical issues. They should look to qualified medical advice and ensure that resources are used to achieve the maximum benefit for our young people and for the population as a whole.

The amendment represents the more realistic way forward, although I respect the sentiments that lie behind the original motion.

Mr Easton: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate. Like many others, I am aware of the increase in the number of young athletes — and some older sportsmen — who die on the sports field. They fall victim to a silent killer that gives no warning. It is often the case that the first symptom is the sudden collapse and death of the young person.

This is not a new phenomenon, but sadly it seems to be on the increase. The loss of a loved one is a tragedy for any family. Grief knows no boundaries, and our response and concern should not, in any way, be limited.

I am sympathetic to many elements of the motion that is before us, and I will support any action that will be taken by the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to help reduce the number of such incidents. However, I believe that the amendment represents the more balanced way forward. Other Departments will have a part to play. Sport Northern Ireland, under the auspices of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL), will work in close co-operation with other Departments and statutory bodies to share information and research that might help in some way. Our sports professionals have a significant contribution to make in this area.

However, we need to recognise the complexities of the problem and not rush to judgement in determining the most effective way forward. The problem is like looking for a needle in a haystack. Non-traumatic sudden death from diseases such as cardiovascular disease are, thankfully, very rare. Although the introduction of a screening process seems a compelling idea, we must be conscious of the need to develop a correct and affordable solution.

The low prevalence of those diseases means that we need to think carefully about what a screening process can achieve. Research indicates that screening 200,000 competitive athletes will find one whose cardiovascular disorder may cause death in a specific situation. Tests can be inaccurate, and differences between normal and abnormal changes in the heart caused by training and exercise may be difficult to detect.

The option of alternative technology such as cardio-ultrasound screening, which may give equally good results, must also be considered. The opinions of experts are necessary to help us to find the best way forward. The process that will be developed to protect our young people and athletes must be well thought through, and must engage a wide range of people to make a contribution from their area of expertise or responsibility. Regular physical examinations by medical practitioners should be a vital part of such a programme.

The incidence of heart disease in families, and general family medical history, must also be considered. Coaches and parents should have awareness training and be sensitive to symptoms of chest pain and excessive, unexplained shortness of breath and be well trained in all aspects related to the physical conditioning of the young athletes in their care.

The GAA must be commended for its initiative to make available the best possible assistance in an emergency through the provision of medical equipment, as well as awareness and response training in GAA clubs across the Province. The governing bodies of all sports and associated clubs must take immediate responsibility to provide efficient training and the appropriate equipment at every sports location.

Members must task Departments and Government agencies to undertake a review of all the possibilities available to us. We need to deliver urgently a carefully considered and co-ordinated strategy with a range of options to deal with the problem as effectively as possible. Options must include school and college services and be characterised by a willing co-operation that puts young people at the centre of our thinking.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom tacaíocht a thabhairt don rún. Much of what I had intended to say has been covered by other Members. Sinn Féin supports the motion and is sympathetic to families who are bereaved by losing their children through sudden death. I am a parent and grandparent, and I imagine that the sudden death of a child who is apparently the picture of health must be terribly shocking.

5.45 pm

My understanding is that only those below the age of 35 with a family history of sudden cardiac death are entitled to free screening. Therefore groups such as Cardiac Risk in the Young (CRY) promote screening for young athletes across the board.

Several Members mentioned the efforts of the GAA, particularly in County Tyrone, following the sudden death of the GAA player Cormac McAnallen. The Tyrone-based campaign to provide defibrillators and training in most GAA clubs should be commended, as should the work of the Cormac Trust.

Heartstart UK works with the British Heart Foundation (BHF) to provide defibrillators and training at a reduced cost. That initiative is geared towards schools rather than sporting organisations, which is something that Members could consider.

Members must examine the tenets of the motion that suggest developing options for a comprehensive screening service. The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, who is in the Chamber, must take the options given earlier in the debate to the Department and his team of advisors.

Other factors must also be considered, such as the possible causes of heart diseases. For example, there is evidence of greater incidence of heart disease among those living west of the Bann, and that poor health and poverty are interrelated. We must also be aware that hereditary problems play a role.

On Friday September 14 2007, 'The Irish News' printed a good, albeit lengthy, letter from a Dr White calling for a well-designed protocol for those at risk.

The Assembly must examine this issue and decide how it can respond to it. Every Member has mentioned the need for the promotion of exercise and has expressed concern for the well-being of children who are involved in sports and play. That must be reinforced at every opportunity.

In the past, the link between obesity and poverty has been discussed, as well as the need to promote activity, play and sport for better health. Barry McElduff and Alex Easton referred to the need for robust questionnaires and for greater awareness among sporting bodies and trainers. That must be encouraged. The argument for strategic location and training in the use of defibrillators in communities must be taken on board by the Department, particularly in rural areas where services are out of reach. The efforts of the Cormac Trust, Heartstart and other mainly voluntary organisations must also be considered by the Department. Voluntary activity alone is not a response.

I pay tribute to Dominic Bradley for proposing the motion. There needs to be a response at interdepartmental and Executive level. The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure and the Department of Education must also be involved in discussions. I support the motion. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Shannon: I support the amendment. I wish to extend my sincerest sympathy to the families that have recently been bereaved through sudden cardiac death.

It is particularly heart-rending when children are the victims of those conditions. I am sure that those are the feelings of all Members.

Recently, we have been touched by the heart-breaking stories that have been in the news about young people who have died from genetic heart diseases. Indeed, in my constituency, some of us have had first-hand experience of the death of a teenage girl from such a condition. We mourned with her family. Although they had been aware of her condition, they were unable to prevent her death. They worked hard in a successful campaign to bring a dedicated heart expert to the Province. That happened as a result of a young girl from Newtownards passing away in her sleep. Her family woke up one morning to find that she had passed away. She had seemed healthy and had been involved in sports. There had been no indication that she would die.

At the time of the loss of that young girl in my constituency, I lent my support not only to the attempt to secure a heart specialist for the Province, but to Cormac McAnallen's mother Bridget, who said that all children should be screened for heart problems. This has been an issue since then.

One in 500 people is believed to have a genetic heart disease. Although that figure cannot be substantiated, the fact that so many young people are dying compels us to take it on board. In 2004, the young Irish rugby player, John McCall, died of heart failure during a game in South Africa. At the time, there was uproar, but here we are, shocked that the same disease has cruelly struck again. In Italy, the syndrome has led to the obligatory screening of all sportsmen and sportswomen, which is the least that should be done in schools and colleges in Northern Ireland.

I am probably one of the few Leicester City Football Club supporters in Northern Ireland. In August 2007, the team played a match against Nottingham Forest Football Club, which had to be abandoned at half-time because one of Leicester's defenders had a heart attack in the dressing room. Interestingly, that player had been checked just 10 days before the game took place, and was declared fit. I am not sure how the situation will work out for him.

Those conditions give no warnings or signals: they simply strike. Prevention is always far better than cure. However, there is no cure for genetic heart conditions that kill before they are detected. If the Executive and the Health Department were to take the lead in the fight and start a screening programme for all children, they could save lives. The amendment is a realistic way to approach that, and I hope that Members support it. There are two options: people can go on dying at a rate of eight a week in the United Kingdom owing to a lack of information and awareness, or the Assembly can take the issue on board and begin screening all children for heart problems — or, at the very least, those who take part in sports — as part of their general check-ups.

That is when members of the family try their hardest to find information about the condition, and then the rest of the family are screened. Would it not be better if all young people were screened for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, rather than families having to face a tragedy first? Is it not better to help people before it is too late?

Families who have experienced the awful tragedy of one of their young people dying of the condition thought that no information on the condition was available, particularly in Northern Ireland. They found that the only way to find information about the condition was to search the Internet. Some information found on the Internet may be false while other information may be accurate. However, there are medical staff who must answer questions on the condition and give guidance on how to deal with it.

In the course of my research, I discovered that one boy who was at risk from sudden death syndrome saw his doctor and, subsequently, was able to undergo an operation to deal with the condition. Therefore, having the condition does not necessarily mean that one's life is over; people with the condition can continue to live. There are ways of addressing the condition. The amendment, perhaps, looks towards our counterparts in the United Kingdom. That is where the evidence, and the information, will be found to deal with the condition.

Currently, people in the Province are learning of the condition through the media. As with most news, it will become old and forgotten until tragedy strikes again, and we are shaken to realise that we have done nothing to address the problem since the last time we were shocked. That is why a system is needed in the Province that works with the people of Northern Ireland to provide care for those suffering from hypertrophic cardiomyopathy. Moreover, money must be invested in raising awareness of the condition and in giving support to those families who have suffered, and are suffering, because of it. It is the Assembly's responsibility to ensure that that happens. We must act now before we face another tragedy because of our lack of information on the condition. I support the amendment.

Mr Ross: It is, of course, a tragedy when any young person dies and is robbed of a future. It is particularly distressing, as other Members have said, when someone who was considered fit and healthy dies suddenly, having had no apparent health problems and no history of illness. There is much media interest in the topic, with some high-profile athletes in Northern Ireland having died from sudden heart problems. The sad and recent deaths of two young boys are fresh in our minds. It is a very emotive issue, particularly for those involved.

However, we need more solid information on sudden death in children, recognising that, at present, many post mortem examinations are not carried out by those with expertise in that specific area. The amendment tabled by Mrs Robinson articulates that view.

One related issue, which was raised by many Members during the debate — Barry McElduff referred to it — is the call for more defibrillators. We must be sensible when considering the issue. I have heard some Members calling for defibrillators to be installed in every club, school and public toilet in the country. We cannot forget the practical difficulties that that would entail. Setting aside the cost, if that equipment were available in all those places, who would use it? Members have referred to those who have volunteered to do so, and I pay tribute to them. I know from my own experience in sports clubs to which I belong, that not too many members would volunteer to be trained in the use of the equipment, because alongside the training is the massive burden of responsibility. The individual who is called to use the equipment may end up in court if the person dies.

There is an onus on the clubs that have the equipment to use it, even if no one there has been trained in its use. The club may be vulnerable to legal action and, of course, there is the danger of equipment being misused by people who are not fully trained in its use in emergencies. We must be mindful of that when considering the issue.

I do not wish to detract in any way from the seriousness of the issue. However, we must be careful not to create mass hysteria about young people playing sport. Dr Farry mentioned that in his speech. There is the danger that we create a fear among children and particularly among parents, who will be afraid to allow their children to participate in sport. Sport is a good thing. Sport can be beneficial to a child's general health with regard to fitness and to social development. Sport and recreational activity is vital as we fight the increase in obesity which is prevalent among the young.

That is not to say that we should do nothing — quite the contrary. We must be realistic and measured in how we respond to the problem of sudden death syndrome and look at a wide range of options. The Reverend Dr Coulter made two excellent points — and not just because I was going to make them as well. He mentioned the age at which young people should be screened for the condition. Usually, children under the age of 14 will not be screened because ECG testing on prepubescent children is inconclusive.

He also told us that if a heart defect is detected, there is an onus to take action to remedy it. He also said that such a diagnosis affects that person's ability to get mortgages, life insurance and so on. That is an important point that must not be forgotten.

6 00 pm

Jim Shannon told us that screening is compulsory in Italy. Indeed, in the University of Ulster at Jordanstown in my constituency of East Antrim, an excellent CRY clinic is run once a week. It is supported nationally by Steve Redgrave and Ian Botham and, locally, by Gary Longwell and Pat Jennings. I have learnt from my correspondence with CRY that, over the past year, 2,000 to 3,000 people across the UK have been screened and that that number is increasing every year. I believe that the intention is to create more such facilities in Northern Ireland, particularly in Londonderry. Mobile screening units that can go to clubs and other venues on request are also available. That is useful, as CRY provides that service to elite athletes or those who have been referred by their GPs for some of the symptoms that we heard about at the start of the debate. However, as we have heard already, those proposals are not perfect.

It is important that we do not create panic among parents and children who enjoy playing sport, but that we investigate those who are most at risk and those who are involved in elite sports at a young age.

I, therefore, support the amendment and hope that it will lead to a fully costed and evidence-based case for helping to reduce avoidable cardiac deaths among young people.

Dr Deeny: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker, for calling me. I was not sure whether I would be called to speak, but I am delighted that I have been because sudden cardiac death is a very important and topical issue. I am also delighted that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is present, and I hope that he will give us a commitment that something will be done.

I read the motion and the amendment, and, like other motions and amendments, they confuse me because they both say more or less the same thing, only worded a little differently. I will refer to both later.

I am a GP in a county that has been hit particularly hard by sudden cardiac death, although it can happen anywhere and in any county and is no respecter of age or gender. Last week, one of my partners in practice told me that parents are already approaching GPs to get their children checked for defects. Another GP in my area told me a similar story. The matter is very much in the public's mind, and something must be done.

As I said, sudden cardiac death has no respect for age. We know about the death of the two very young Patricks, Patrick Breen and Patrick Devlin, and of the fit young adults Cormac McAnallen and John McCall, whom Members have already mentioned. It just shows you. It must be pointed out that such deaths also affect females. Furthermore, it can happen to people who are not involved in sport at all — I was watching much of the debate in my room and heard a Member mention that. Those points should not be forgotten.

The major problem seems to be cardiomyopathy, although there are other diseases as well. As a GP, I know about defibrillators, and my local club in Tyrone has one. Yes, they will help, but let us face it: sudden cardiac death is due to an arrhythmia, which is a rhythm disturbance brought about by a heart defect. The person using a defibrillator has three to five minutes to get the heart going again; otherwise the individual will be dead or brain-dead — although there is not really much difference. Defibrillators are certainly helpful, but they are not the complete answer.

I ask the Minister to consider taking action to deal with this matter. Something must be done, and both the motion and the amendment agree on that. Jim Shannon said that prevention is better than cure, and that is true. Certain tests are cheap: electrocardiograms, which are tracings of the heart, are very cheap to carry out, and they can perhaps pick up on people at risk. Then we can move on to tests such as echocardiograms, which are much more expensive.

After the tragic events in Tyrone, my son, a fit young man of 19, who is taller than I am, was alarmed while he was playing a game of football to see someone on the sideline holding a defibrillator. I share other Members' concerns about that. That is why I am not happy with the word "comprehensive" in the motion, because it suggests that everybody should be screened. That is where we cause undue alarm and anxiety, which, believe me, also has consequences for people's health. We do not want children who participate in sports to see people carrying defibrillators, because that will cause alarm.

This is an important matter that has attracted publicity, because, for the most part, it concerns young lives. A child of 10 or 15 years of age can expect to live to 70 years of age or longer. I mean no disrespect, but to resuscitate the heart of people in their 80s may only give them three or four more years of life.

I want to pay tribute to Cardiac Risk in the Young, the Cormac Trust and the University of Ulster at Jordanstown, which now provides facilities in which patients can be checked. However, problems can sometimes arise with the procedures, making diagnosis unobtainable until the patient is older. There are false positive results and false negative results; these conditions are not simple, and neither are the treatments.

Members have mentioned the use of defibrillators and the fact that children might in future avoid becoming involved in sports. I read Dr White's article in 'The Irish News' last week, to which Ms Ní Chuilín referred earlier. If what he says is true — I have no reason to doubt him — 2% of Italian athletes are told at a young age to avoid becoming involved in sport. My sons would not do that, no matter which doctor had advised them. A solution must be found, and we must work on this issue. I ask the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give a commitment to examine the matter seriously. I support the amendment.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): It is unfortunate that this issue has been brought to the Floor of the House as a result of the tragic deaths of two children. I want to add my condolences to the families of Patrick Devlin and Patrick Breen during this terrible time. Every young death is a tragedy, but when that death occurs in an apparently fit and healthy young person, the devastation is much greater, because it is unexpected and comes without any kind of warning.

Those deaths have not occurred in isolation. Two young players from County Westmeath died earlier this month. Zeeshan Muhammed died while playing football in his schoolyard in Athlone, and Tony Parker died just before he was due to take part in a physical education class in his school in Moate. Members have also recalled the tragic loss of the young lives of John McCall, who died on a rugby tour in South Africa, and Cormac McAnallen.

In this day and age, we have come to associate death with increasing old age, and to have young people struck down before their potential is fulfilled, without their families having the time to adjust and say goodbye, is very difficult to deal with. The fear that another family member might have inherited the same — possibly fatal — condition causes high levels of stress for the grieving family, which is difficult to imagine.

Heart disease is the most common cause of unexpected sudden death in all age groups. In people over 40 years of age, heart disease is usually due to coronary artery disease, which is the narrowing or blockage of the blood vessels that supply the heart muscle. However, in young people, the majority of sudden deaths are due to congenital or inherited disorders of the heart muscle and irregular heart rhythms. Estimates from studies in other countries suggest that there are probably about five sudden unexpected cardiac deaths from different causes in young people in Northern Ireland every year.

It is important to note that, although most sudden deaths of young people occur as a result of underlying heart problems, those are not single conditions, and there are many different causes. More than 20 different conditions have been identified as causes of sudden cardiac death in young people. However, a few groups of conditions are responsible for most sudden deaths, and the largest group are the cardiomyopathies, which are abnormalities of the heart muscle and are usually inherited. The other major group of disorders affect the electrical condition in the heart and can trigger abnormal heart rhythm. Those disorders are believed to occur in one in 5,000 people. Congenital heart defects are another important group.

One of the cardiomyopathies — hypertrophic cardiomyopathy — is estimated to affect one in 500 people in the UK. It is the most common cause of sudden death in young athletes, accounting for up to 40% of such deaths, according to one study in the US. The majority of sufferers of hypertrophic cardiomyopathy have no symptoms prior to sudden death. A few sufferers may have a family history of a sudden or unexpected death, and some may have signs or symptoms of cardiac disease, such as chest pain, palpitations or blackouts. Hypertrophic cardiomyopathy is a hereditary disease associated with at least 150 genetic mutations.

Sadly, there is no cure for cardiomyopathy. However, several treatments, including medicines, pacemakers, implantable defibrillators and surgery may have a role in improving symptoms or in preventing complications. Patients with cardiomyopathy and other heart diseases are usually referred to a consultant cardiologist, a number of whom have a specialist interest in the subject, and other inherited cardiac conditions. In those families where the genetic abnormality has been identified, it may be possible to do genetic tests for that specific mutation. Specialist services in that field are provided by a consultant cardiologist and the regional genetic centre in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust. In addition to clinical tests and treatment, counselling, advice and information are provided for children and adults who suffer from inherited heart disease.

In one major way, Northern Ireland has contributed significantly to advances in cardiology because the portable defibrillator was invented by Professor Frank Pantridge, who was a cardiologist in the Royal Victoria Hospital. Until recently, defibrillation required considerable skill and training, and was largely restricted to medical and nursing staff. However, the recent introduction of the automated external defibrillator has meant that the average layperson, following a brief period of training, should be easily able to perform defibrillation. It is estimated that over 1,000 volunteers are skilled in that area.

My Department is also working with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service and other key stakeholders to develop and implement a first-responder strategy for Northern Ireland. Appropriately trained local volunteers, using automated defibrillators, together with associated skills, can provide life-saving first aid, particularly in remote rural areas, until an accident and emergency ambulance can reach the scene.

I am aware that there have been calls for a screening programme, and I have heard those calls today. However, it must be considered whether the available evidence indicates that screening is always the right course of action. If it is not, we must consider what we must do to protect our children from such a devastating condition. It is a complex issue.

There is no specific test or one single solution to identifying all those at risk of the various causes of sudden cardiac death. In those who have a regular heart rhythm, the ECG may be normal when the person is at rest, and the characteristic changes may be present only after the administration of a specific drug. In others, it may require repeated ECGs and exercise monitoring before the diagnosis can be made.

Even if there were a successful screening test, it would be difficult to define at what age to begin screening. There is no optimum age at which to screen, so some people could die before they were screened and others after they were screened, if their conditions were not detected. Studies have shown that there is little evidence that starting treatment before the onset of symptoms makes a difference to the course of the disease. In fact, the majority of people with those underlying conditions do not have any symptoms for all or most of their lives, and will go on to have a normal lifespan. It is only in a small minority of cases that the condition leads to unexpected death, often in early adulthood. It is difficult to predict who will die suddenly and who will have a normal lifespan.

There are also concerns about the possible negative aspects of screening, including enforced changes in lifestyle, consequences for employment prospects, and securing insurance in the future. There are also psychological consequences of telling a young adult and his or her family that they have a condition that might kill them without warning, and for which there is no effective treatment or preventative measure.

The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) advises Government and the four UK Health Departments on all aspects of screening. To inform its proposals and advice, the NSC draws on the latest research evidence and the skills of a group of experts. For 10 years, the former Chief Medical Officer in Northern Ireland, Dr Henrietta Campbell, chaired that group, and a senior medical officer from the Department currently sits on the NSC.

Members of the NSC assess proposed new population screening programmes against a set of internationally recognised criteria. They ask questions about the tests, treatment options and the effectiveness and acceptability of the screening programme. By assessing programmes in that way, their intention is to do more good than harm to the population.

Since the NSC was established, it has made several recommendations on screening policy that have been implemented in Northern Ireland. They include diabetic retinopathy screening, which I launched recently, and the hearing screening of all newborn babies. It has also recommended screening for bowel cancer. Providing the Department's bid under the comprehensive spending review is successful, I hope to introduce that in 2009, and it is expected to save 70 lives a year.

The NSC has previously considered the research evidence on screening for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy and has advised that the current evidence does not support the introduction of a screening programme. That advice is due for imminent review in 2007-08. I have asked a departmental official to accelerate the process as far as is possible, and the Chief Medical Officer has already raised the issue with the chair of the NSC.

There has been some research on, and much discussion about, the risk assessment for those involved in sport and exercise. The evidence for screening is not strong, and there are varying practices in different countries. In Italy, pre-participation screening programmes using an ECG exist for competitive athletes who compete at national and international level. In 1998, American research estimated that 200,000 competitive athletes would need to be screened potentially to identify one athlete who would die as a result of taking part in competition.

I must stress, however, the importance of raising awareness of the complex condition. The careful provision of information can do much to educate the public. I emphasise wholeheartedly that if young people are experiencing concerning symptoms, such as unusual breathlessness, palpitations, dizziness or fainting, it is important that they seek advice from their GP. However, the Department does not want to cause undue anxiety or panic among parents and families by suggesting that the problem is more common than it really is.

The vital contribution that voluntary organisations have made in bringing the issue to the fore must be recognised. As has been mentioned, a heart charity, Cardiac Risk in the Young has established a clinic in the University of Ulster at Jordanstown. CRY provided the equipment, but the university provides the facilities and the staff. I add my warm tribute to the dedicated work of the Cormac Trust, CRY and other voluntary organisations that have done so much to raise awareness of this issue.

In Northern Ireland, a service framework for cardiovascular health and well-being is being developed. I have asked that sudden cardiac death is addressed in that framework, which is due to be published in April 2008. It is vital that any service that affects the lives of young people is based on sound evidence. It is worth taking time to get the service right, and it is essential to examine best practice elsewhere.

I have also asked the Chief Medical Officer to lead a workshop for health experts in cardiology, clinical psychology, genetics and research academics in the field, officials from the relevant Departments, public health bodies, the Sports Council for Northern Ireland and voluntary organisations. The workshop's remit is to explore thoroughly what further steps are available and to inform future policy development in Northern Ireland.

The correct policy must be found: in doing so the Assembly will pay a proper tribute to those children who lost their lives at such a young age and in such a terrible way.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for being in the House for the debate. There have been more debates in the Chamber about health than about any other subject. In supporting the amendment, I extend my sympathy to all families who have lost young people on or off the sports field. However, it would be remiss of me not to single out the Breen family who are present today. They are relatively close neighbours and are natives of my own village of Drumquin in west Tyrone. When the community there heard that such a young lad had died on the sports field, it not only brought a sense of disbelief to the locality and devastation to the family, it raised the question in everyone's thoughts — could anything have been done to prevent the tragedy?

I have no doubt that all families that have found themselves in that position have pondered the same question. However, there is no clear medical evidence as to the root cause of sudden cardiac death amongst athletes. A study carried out in the USA on the causes of sudden cardiac death in high-school students, college athletes and military recruits found that a wide variety of conditions were responsible, and the study was unable to establish a common underlying cause for those sport-related deaths. That has resulted in different conclusions being drawn and has led to the development of varying practices in different countries.

We have tabled the amendment to widen the scope for the Minister and the Executive to consult with their UK counterparts through the UK National Screening Committee (NSC), and to bring forward a fully costed, evidence-based proposal to help reduce such avoidable cardiac deaths, which includes the introduction of screening programmes where appropriate. It is important that an evidence-based strategy is put in place to tackle this all-important issue.

A report by the Task Force on Sudden Cardiac Death revealed that there is insufficient evidence to support the implementation of a mass population screening programme, but there is, however, a role for risk assessment in respect of those involved in exercise or sport. Given that heart conditions are often hereditary, it is vital that families with a history of this condition are identified and assessed at an early stage and sent for screening if necessary.

It is also important that the sudden deaths of sport participants do not discourage our young people from taking part in sport. It is widely accepted that regular exercise reduces the risk of developing or dying from cardiac heart disease, obesity and other associated conditions. Even in childhood, there is substantial evidence to prove that regular physical activity positively affects body composition, reduces the risk of cardiac heart disease and provides immediate health benefits. A balanced approach must be taken, through the publicity and provision of information on the health benefits of regular exercise.

On listening to the debate, I sense that there is unity in the House regarding the way forward. Several Members mentioned the opinions of experts, and there is consensus that the Assembly must listen to experts and move forward on their advice. Indeed, the Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety referred to current resources, the need to use them wisely and the need to provide an evidence-based way forward that incorporates all means of preventing avoidable deaths. Reference was also made to cross-departmental strategies that must be taken on board.

Jim Shannon mentioned having a system that works, which is obviously needed, and Alastair Ross mentioned the importance of sport.

All those factors will form part of the way forward. I appeal to all Members to support the amendment, as it is the way to proceed on the issue.

Mrs Hanna: The motion has provided the House with the opportunity to have a sensitive debate on sudden cardiac death. The death of a young, healthy person is very distressing, and we have every sympathy for the parents and families of those who have suffered such a loss.

Understandably, such a scenario throws up many questions, particularly about why the death occurred and how it could have been avoided. Members have highlighted the many concerns of families, worried parents and sports' bodies. There is considerable agreement on appropriate screening, especially for those who are most at risk. Many Members have talked about having a range of screening, including risk assessment, with the health warning that it is not perfect, given the possibility of false negatives and positives. However, screening can certainly be a way forward, particularly for those who are at high risk.

The Assembly must, of course, listen to cardiologists, who are the experts in the field, while continuing to encourage participation in sport. Information, guidance and screening are needed, which is what the public are calling for. The SDLP motion asked for a range of options, including a comprehensive screening service. "Comprehensive" is used in the broadest sense of the word in order to create, and to allow the exploration of, the widest range of options.

Iris Robinson, who proposed the amendment, spoke of the sudden death of many young gymnasts. She mentioned the fact that those people are healthy and that they expect support when it is needed. She also said that resources need to be directed carefully and that an evidence-based service is needed.

Barry McElduff rightly said that the motion is not prescriptive, that we need to hear from the experts — the cardiologists — and that we must learn from other bodies, such as the American Heart Association and the Irish Government's task force on the issue.

The Rev Coulter mentioned the importance of having sympathy, sentiment and support for those who grieve. He also mentioned the many questions that the issue raises on ethics, legal implications and insurance. All those are important points to consider.

Stephen Farry spoke of the importance of physical activity, on which, like so many aspects of this issue, all Members agree. He also said that we should continue to promote exercise and the best medical practice.

Alex Easton said that there was a compelling argument for screening. However, he said that it needs to be costed and must be part of a co-ordinated strategy.

Carál Ní Chuilín emphasised the need for screening in schools, which the motion also requested. Jim Shannon talked about genetic heart disease, the need for specialist facilities and to raise awareness, and the search for answers. He called for the immediate introduction of obligatory screening.

Alastair Ross talked about the costing of defibrillators, his own experience in sports' clubs and the burden of the training in and use of such equipment. He praised the work of organisations such as Cardiac Risk in the Young, and he mentioned the good work that mobile units carry out.

Kieran Deeny said that something must be done and that his patients are asking many questions. Although he raised his concern about the use of defibrillators, the motion is not about that — it is exclusively about screening. Many sports' clubs already have defibrillators, and getting them involved a great deal of community and charity work.

6.30 pm

The Health Minister — who, as usual, is welcome and is always present at health-related debates — gave an informative and helpful explanation of the conditions required for screening, its pros and cons, and statistics relating to it. He said that a review is imminent, and that is welcome and timely. He also mentioned the service framework, and said that it will include sudden cardiac death. He further said that the Chief Medical Officer will lead a workshop with cardiologists.

Tom Buchanan expressed his sympathy and said that there is insufficient evidence to support screening, but he mentioned the role of risk assessments, the need to listen to experts, and the sense of unity in the House regarding the way forward.

Dominic and I carefully considered the wording of the motion. We are asking the Minister to bring forward a range of options. As I have already said, that should be a comprehensive range of options and a comprehensive screening service. What we are looking for is the widest range of options. Many Members who supported the amendment quoted from the motion, so I do not believe that there is any difference between the spirit of the motion and that of the amendment.

When we call for a wide range of options, we are looking for the simplest screening procedure for those in high-risk categories to be brought into schools. When we say "comprehensive", we do not mean "universal". We want the full range of options to be looked at, and the Minister has said that it will be. That is very important.

As I have said, I do not believe that there is much difference between the spirit of the motion and that of the amendment, and the SDLP wants to avoid unnecessary tension, because this is a sensitive issue. To that end, we will not oppose the amendment, because we all want to find the best way forward for these unfortunate young people and their grieving families.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and agreed to.

Mr D Bradley: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. May I ask you to investigate a situation that arose in the House earlier today? This morning, I was three minutes late for a ministerial statement and was, therefore, denied the right to speak. I accept that as the rule of the House. However, later in the afternoon, a Member who was not present for the debate was allowed to make a winding-up speech.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to raise his point of order after we have finished with the motion. We are in the middle of the process. It is certainly a matter that can be raised with the Speaker.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly expresses its sympathy to the families of Patrick Breen and Patrick Devlin, who died recently on the sports field from heart defects; sympathises with all families who have lost loved ones in this way; and calls upon the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, and the Executive, to consult with their United Kingdom counterparts through the National Screening Committee, and bring forward fully costed, evidence-based proposals to reduce avoidable cardiac deaths in the young, including screening programmes where appropriate.

Mr D Bradley: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I apologise for interrupting the business at an inappropriate time.

This morning, I was, rightly, denied speaking rights because I was three minutes late for a ministerial statement. However, this afternoon, several Members were not present for most of the debate, but were permitted to contribute to it. One in particular was allowed to make a winding-up speech. Other Members participating in the debate this evening have openly told you, Mr Deputy Speaker, that they had not been present for most of it and had been listening to it elsewhere. Will you investigate this matter and provide a ruling?

Mr Deputy Speaker: I am happy to refer that to the Speaker and to get a reply to you, Mr Bradley.

Motion made:

That the Assembly do now adjourn. — [Mr Deputy Speaker]

ADJOURNMENT

Maximising Tourism Potential in the Strangford Constituency

Mr Hamilton: It is widely accepted and acknowledged on all sides of the House that our economy is in urgent need of transformation. The structural weaknesses in our economy have been well rehearsed in the Chamber in the past and need no elaboration today.

Regardless of the doubts of some Members, I think we must encourage every aspect of the private sector to expand and take its rightful place in the driving seat of Northern Ireland's economy. One obvious area in which the private sector can fulfil that responsibility is tourism.

By any barometer, tourism is a growth area in Northern Ireland, and in the Strangford constituency. The latest available base-year figures show that total tourism income represents 3.5% of the gross value added (GVA) in Northern Ireland, is worth £783 million to the economy and employs 28,700 full-time equivalent jobs. ASM Howarth recently published a survey in 2006 on the Northern Ireland hotel industry, which showed that local hotels enjoyed an occupancy rate of close to 70%. That was a record high and represented an increase of 3% on the previous year.

In my own patch, tourism is a critical component of the local economy. The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) estimated that in 2005 tourists spent £16 million in the Ards Borough Council area, which takes up the largest part of Strangford. An economic impact study is being carried out by the Armagh and Down Regional Tourism Partnership and includes the entire Strangford constituency. I understand that the early findings indicate that many hundreds of millions are being spent in the economy through tourism, when day trippers and those staying with relatives are included in the figures.

However, despite the important position tourism already has in our economy, we are not maximising our full potential, and that is widely accepted. The NITB stated that if Northern Ireland had matched the Republic of Ireland's external visitor trends since 1969, tourism would be worth an extra £270 million in income, and would generate an additional 11,000 jobs.

It is worthwhile remembering why tourism in Northern Ireland represents only 2% of our gross domestic product (GDP) compared to 9% in the Republic and 11% in Wales. It is not because we have suddenly discovered the whole concept of tourism, or that people suddenly want to come here, it is because for more than 35 years this place was subjected to civil strife. When innocent civilians were the victims of random terrorist violence, it is no wonder that outsiders stayed away.

Hopefully, those days are long gone, and their demise will present Northern Ireland with an excellent opportunity to capitalise on political stability and bring a fresh focus from abroad, which will perhaps attract new tourists. We have all been encouraged by the reaction to the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington, with record numbers visiting the event and experiencing something of Northern Ireland.

Although the subject of the debate might suggest otherwise, I am not parochial about the issue. We must maximise the tourism potential of the whole of Northern Ireland in the hope that a rising tide will lift all boats. I want to see the tourism sector across Northern Ireland overcome fundamental problems such as the lack of suitable skills, and acknowledge issues such as the lack of a distinct Northern Ireland brand, and the associated fall-off in visitor numbers from Great Britain, while those from the rest of the world are on the rise.

We also need to anticipate other problems such as the need for a national conference centre to compete with the one in the pipeline for Dublin. To achieve those aims we must make the most of all our tourist attractions in each and every part of our Province. In short, places such as Strangford should receive their fair share of support so that they can contribute to the growth of tourism overall.

I am glad when there are adjournment debates on the Strangford constituency, because looking at the Members in the House at the moment shows the DUP domination there, and that is always good to see.

I am sure that Members, particularly those from Strangford, will forgive me for indulging briefly in a little promotion of the area that I consider myself lucky to live in and represent. We all believe that our constituencies are the most beautiful, but in the case of Strangford it is very much true. The sheer volume and diversity of our tourism attractions is probably unparalleled in Northern Ireland. At the heart of our offering to tourists is Strangford Lough, which was voted the fourth best view in the United Kingdom in a show seen by millions across the country. The fact that people in Northern Ireland were unable to vote, because of the screening of a rugby match, is testament to how good the view is, given that it came in at fourth place despite those problems. Strangford's shores are surrounded by excellent places of interest for every type of tourist — Mount Stewart, Scrabo Tower, Nendrum, Delamont, the Somme Heritage Centre, Exploris, and the Wildfowl and Wetlands Centre at Castle Espie, which already draw hundreds of thousands of tourists from all over the world year in, year out. I hope I have not offended anyone by leaving something out of the list.

Strangford is home to a great many events and festivals, with sports and outdoor activities such as golf, fishing and sailing, which can be enjoyed in some of the best surroundings in Northern Ireland, and our hospitality is second to none. Our proximity to Belfast, so often a hindrance in other aspects of economic development, is a positive advantage in the realm of tourism. The product is there; is it simply a matter of exploiting it.

I will outline a few specific areas where there is scope for significant improvement in Strangford's tourism potential. No discussion of tourism can be allowed to pass without dwelling on the lough from which our constituency takes its name. The biggest inlet in the British Isles is home to an exceptional variety of more than 2,000 marine species, the largest breeding population of common seals in Ireland and many migrating birds from all over the world. Indeed, its rich, diverse, abundant, and sometimes unique, bird, marine and animal population is recognised in its status as Northern Ireland's first marine nature reserve, and sets us apart not only in a British or European context but also in a global perspective. It may not be a world heritage site, but it is world-renowned.

There is a widely held view that Strangford Lough has been under-marketed compared to other attractions in Northern Ireland, such as the Giant's Causeway and the Fermanagh lakes. If we are to maximise Northern Ireland's undoubted tourism potential, it could be argued that such a target will ever be achieved only by highlighting and developing new jewels in the crown, instead of concentrating solely on the well-established ones. I do not mean that in purely monetary terms: Strangford must be accepted as an asset.

I have long felt that the best way to show such an acceptance and to capitalise on Strangford Lough's potential would be to establish it as one of the Tourist Board's signature projects. Strangford Lough was omitted from the first slate of signature projects, and although we have no argument against those projects that were included, surely Strangford Lough, with its many unique designations and broad tourism offerings around its shores, could be considered, after 2009, as a new signature project. In the past, I have even suggested that Strangford Lough could be included in a wider loughs signature project, which could include Fermanagh's lakes or Lough Neagh. Strangford Lough should be in Northern Ireland's portfolio of top-class tourism attractions — however it is done — and I hope that the Tourist Board will consider the case of Strangford Lough for future signature project status.

Strangford Lough could also provide Northern Ireland with an excellent opportunity to take advantage of the increasing interest in ecotourism — and by that I do not mean three Irish guys running around the Colombian jungle — I mean the form of tourism that is already worth an estimated $3.6 trillion in economic activity globally.

I have already spoken of the many environmental designations that Strangford Lough enjoys, yet more could be achieved. Ards Borough Council, of which I am a member, has taken a lead in its limited way through Exploris — the Northern Ireland Aquarium — and an annual ecotourism conference. However, the council is operating in a policy vacuum with little or no leadership at a higher level. With the anticipated growth in this sector, and the fact that ecotourists usually spend more than other tourists, Strangford Lough is ripe for a flagship ecotourism project such as the Ards and Down Salmonid Enhancement Association (ADSEA) scheme, in which some of my party colleagues are interested.

I have already mentioned the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's signature projects, and just as important as securing such a status for Strangford Lough is the continued assurance that the Strangford constituency is tied in with existing, more generic, projects. The Strangford constituency is already intimately involved in the St Patrick's/Christian Heritage tourism signature project, but perhaps the greatest potential in Strangford lies in what we all suspect may be the signature project with the greatest potential of all — the Titanic project. My hometown of Comber has a huge connection with Titanic, as it is the hometown of the ship's designer, Thomas Andrews. The local council is engaged in developing a walking tour around the town, taking in many Titanic-related sites. Comber may be only a tiny part of the Titanic tale, but it is a part nonetheless, and it is important that the development of the Titanic signature project include Comber and its deeper insight into the story of that ship.

Strangford is a hotbed of Ulster-Scots culture and heritage. In fact, since it is the home of the Ulster-Scots Academy, we almost consider ourselves as the Ulster-Scots capital. The reawakening of the Ulster-Scots tradition is worthy in its own right, but it also presents us with tremendous tourism opportunities. For far too long the impression of Northern Ireland given to the outside world has been one dominated by everything from Irish dancing and Irish music to leprechauns and shillelaghs — everything but what is distinctive and different about Northern Ireland. It is little wonder that that problem perpetuates, given that the marketing of Northern Ireland to the world — including the rest of the United Kingdom — is in the hands of Tourism Ireland.

I acknowledge that they have done a great job in selling the whole of Ireland to the world, and visitor numbers from places such as North America and the Far East are on the rise. However, numbers of visitors from Great Britain are falling and have been heading downwards for the past two years. We insult the intelligence of our fellow countrymen in the rest of the UK by not marketing Northern Ireland as it is. People in Scotland and Wales know the difference between the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland; they know the difference Belfast and Dublin, and do not need to be sold some type of concocted nonsense.

I agree with Tom McGrath, Chairman of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, who told the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee that the Northern Ireland tourism product is diluted when marketed as part of the island of Ireland:

“because it does not stand out”.

The Ulster-Scots heritage and culture could be utilised to increase visitor numbers from Scotland and, indeed, North America, as the Smithsonian Folklife Festival has shown. Developing the potential of Ulster-Scots is essential in order to develop Northern Ireland tourism and, because of its rich vein of Ulster-Scots tradition, the Strangford constituency would surely benefit from such an initiative.

An accepted weakness of the tourism product in Strangford is in hotels and conference facilities. Despite its obvious attractions and great potential, Strangford is not blessed with as many hotels as it should be. In common with other parts of Northern Ireland, Strangford suffers from a restriction in Invest NI's 'Support for Tourism Businesses 2004-2007' policy, which states that:

“In the Belfast area, (defined for this purpose as a radius of 10 miles from Belfast City Centre) no applications for financial assistance for new hotel developments, including extensions and upgrades etc to existing properties will be accepted by Invest NI.”

Although I understand the sense behind such a restriction, and of ceasing financial support for hotel developments in Belfast that are likely to be a success, regardless of support from the public purse, the 10-mile radius rule denies new or existing hotel developments from availing of initial capital support in key towns such as Newtownards, which is a gateway to Strangford. I urge the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to examine that policy, with a view to assisting hotel developments in Strangford and elsewhere.

I also wish to make a case for not only securing current levels of funding, but consideration of future growth in resources for the Armagh and Down Tourism Partnership. The regional tourism partnerships (RTPs), including the Armagh and Down Tourism Partnership, were created in 2006 and identified in, 'A Strategic Framework for Action 2004-2007', as the way forward for the delivery of regional priorities. That important task requires appropriate levels of funding. The RTPs have lost various elements of EU funding and are now increasingly dependent on their share of £500,000 worth of core support from NITB, in addition to what they can elicit from the private sector.

I have already outlined the impact of the Armagh and Down Tourism Partnership in my area. Its input into communications, marketing, product development and visitor servicing is valuable, and it does a good job. I agree with the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee, which concluded that RTPs should be properly funded to enable them to carry out their functions of identifying and pursuing local regional tourism priorities

There are wider issues — many that are not unique to Strangford — that require attention. Those issues are not specifically within the remit of DETI; however, Members have been encouraged by the Minister's comments about co-ordinating economic development in general. Tourism fits into that category, particularly in general areas such as skills development, infrastructure and planning, and, specifically, the ADSEA project, which I mentioned earlier, and possible National Parks status at a later date for Strangford.

Strangford is as good a snapshot as any of what is needed to maximise the potential of tourism in Northern Ireland. Strangford, in common with the rest of the country, has a tourism product to be proud of. It requires not only assistance, but encouragement, so that the Strangford constituency, with its wealth of tourism riches, can play its part in building the better, prosperous, Northern Ireland that all Members hope for.

Mr McNarry: I am grateful to Simon for not only securing the debate, but for the commercial for our constituency. I am glad to speak in advance of Jim Shannon, otherwise, I imagine, there would be nothing left to say. However, having heard Simon for the past 20 minutes, I am not sure there is anything to say anyway. Nevertheless, I will have a bash at it.

I am delighted to see the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, following a hard day at the office in front of the Committee, which I listened in to for a while in the Senate Chamber.

I wish we had a Giant's Causeway to invest in and a visitor attraction such as that to argue over, as people are doing in another part of Northern Ireland.

Strangford is politically unique, because it has no republican or nationalist representation in this House. Sometimes I wonder whether it suffers because of that. I cannot put my finger on the reason, but — and sometimes people say this to me — because it is a predominantly unionist constituency the word "tourism" does not seem to fit. I hope that that is not the case, and it would be grossly unfair if it were. Perhaps the Minister will consider investigating the matter. Community relations in Strangford are first class, and its MLAs represent the whole constituency and all its constituents.

The Assembly, in conjunction with its partners in the tourism industry, can help Northern Ireland emerge as an internationally competitive tourist destination. I have sourced an article about the ASM Horwarth hotel industry survey in 'Business First', volume 3, issue 4. I hope that nobody else has sourced this and that I am not accused of anything. The performance of Northern Ireland hotels in 2006 showed that:

"The average bedroom occupancy rate was 68.7 per cent... an increase of three percentage points when compared with 2005.

The average letting rate of a bedroom in 2006 was £63.20, an increase of 11 percent over 2005.

Food and beverage sales increased by 13 per cent over 2005.

Total sales increased by an average of 15.8 per cent compared to 2005."

A key point is that Northern Ireland hotel profitability is now "on a par with Dublin".

That should be more than encouraging for potential investors. I am extremely confident about the future of tourism in our country. However, against the backdrop of growth, we must ensure that there is an effort to maximise the tourist potential in the Strangford constituency.

The tourism potential will only be realised through investment in marketing, product development and physical tourism facilities, such as infrastructure and accommodation. We need quality facilities and accommodation that will contribute to the sustainability of an industry when we are asking for growth.

We need hotels to complement the excellent bed-and-breakfast facilities, which are of the highest standard. Sometimes, I think that they are almost too good and that the short distance from Belfast to many of our towns and villages may be discouraging hotel development. Therefore, we must commend, as Simon Hamilton said, an in-depth look at promoting more hotels in our area.

Strangford should not be seen in isolation. I mentioned the proximity of Belfast, but perhaps we should consider Strangford as the hub of, or gateway to, the whole of the region, extending to the Republic and — with a natural Ulster-Scots tradition — to Scotland in particular.

Mention has been made of the Strangford Lough environment, which is of international and national importance for its bird and marine life. Although that should be protected, it is important to avoid the perception that conservation interests are inhibiting the economic development of the area. That is a key area for the potential development of at least one hotel without disruption to conservation interests.

In the past it has seemed to those of us in Strangford that the tide was out as far as tourism potential in and around Strangford Lough was concerned.

There are still many challenges. However, this debate will encourage the Assembly, the district councils, the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, and other partners in the tourism industry, to ensure that the tide is coming in for us.

There are small villages in pockets around Strangford. Promotion and marketing of tourism in that area is primarily the responsibility of Ards Borough Council, Down District Council, and a small element in Castlereagh Borough Council. Ards Borough Council and Down District Council both operate a range of tourist facilities, including picnic, caravan and amenity sites. In fact, there is tremendous potential for the development of caravan sites.

Along with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Forest Service, and the Department of the Environment, through the Environment and Heritage Service, there is a togetherness in managing historic and special wildlife sites. Some of those have been mentioned, but there are also the archaeological remains of the Nendrum monastery near Whiterock.

The National Trust owns and manages properties of nature and historical interest. Outside Northern Ireland, Mount Stewart always gets high ratings as a place to visit, and there is Rowallane House and Gardens in the Saintfield area.

I want the councils to do more for tourism, as opposed to visitor numbers. There needs to be a differentiation between real tourists and visitors. Many people visit Strangford — they perhaps only come from Lisburn, east Belfast or wherever — and they are more than welcome; however, it is real tourists who will help and contribute to our economy.

The village of Comber is growing into a town, and is famed for its wide variety of antique and interior shops. It is a good place to eat now; I am glad that a new coffee-shop culture has developed there. It is, as was mentioned, the birthplace of Thomas Andrews, the man who designed the Titanic. It seems strange that Comber has not really claimed him as a famous son. I understand why the Titanic Quarter is being built where it is, but perhaps, one day, someone will provide a bus to take people from the Titanic Quarter to Comber.

Portaferry — no doubt Kieran will say something about this — is a beautiful town at the tip of the Ards Peninsula. It is an area popular with locals, and it attracts foreign tourists because of its outstanding beauty and other visitor attractions, such as the aquarium that Simon Hamilton mentioned.

Newtownards is a main town with a main shopping centre. It is in an area of astonishing beauty and diversity, which has evolved through the natural forces of the environment of wind, of water and ice, as well as through the activity of humans. It is worrying to see subsidence on some of the coastline there.

Mr McCarthy: No one is interested.

Mr McNarry: They should be.

Portaferry has a successful hotel — The Narrows. There is no doubt that it shocked and annoyed everyone — not only the relatively new owners, but people all around — that it was subject to wanton vandalism. Louts simply came along and smashed windows. I am sure that all Members present have issued some kind of public statement on that. It is very discouraging for any hotel owners, or for anyone who owns a business, to be subjected to that, and — worse still — not really to know what is behind it.

While the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is present, I want to raise the matter of the general malaise of anti-social behaviour. I wonder what consideration he would give, from a tourist perspective, to the detrimental impact that anti-social behaviour undoubtedly has on tourism.

Will the Minister consider discussing with the Chief Constable the impact of antisocial behaviour on the tourist industry? I mean that sincerely. All Members who represent Strangford have talked with the local police commander about that problem — some of us as recently as last week. When tourists see antisocial behaviour on such a scale as I have seen in Strangford, it switches them off.

Antisocial behaviour has a serious detrimental effect on tourism and — not only that — it can lead to a bad story being carried back. Such damage cannot be undone. There is a connection between those two aspects; and tourism will benefit immensely if we can outlaw antisocial behaviour from our streets. That would, of course, benefit us all; but antisocial activity has a particularly dire effect on tourism. Nothing sends people packing from a town or from an amenity more effectively than a display of vandalism or thuggery.

Will the Minister also consider the importance of tourist-driven, as opposed to visitor-driven, support for events? I will not identify particular events, but it would be useful for a signal to be sent out that the Department might support events with a local Strangford flavour. Events of a high standard could, if given the attention and the necessary support, become winning tourist attractions in a short time.

A lot goes on in the constituency, much of it indigenous and small; but there is a nucleus of events that might bring forward an entrepreneurial spirit or a new capital-risk venture scheme. I hope that people might be prepared to host events in the Strangford constituency, which could be identified with, and would capture, the flavour of the place.

7.00 pm

I would welcome a signal from the Minister that such events would be supported. I know that his response will be that if he is given the right event, he will consider it. However, I want to be able to report back to some people who might seriously consider putting on such events in the constituency.

Mr McCarthy: I was nearly falling asleep.

I will be as quick as I can, because there are other things to be done. I do not disagree with anything I have heard so far. One or two things have been missed out, but I will not repeat what any Member has said.

The proposer of the motion is most supportive of increased tourism, but I question his attitude to the disposal of coastal land within the Ards Borough Council area. If Mr Hamilton wishes to encourage tourists and see our tourist industry thrive, he must know that we have to provide facilities such as basic car parks and local play areas along Strangford Lough and the Irish Sea coast. Mr Hamilton and other DUP members of Ards Borough Council voted to dispose of such areas and sell the land that visitors and tourists want to come to, park their cars and enjoy what is there.

Recently, Mr Hamilton and others agreed to the disposal of a coastal car park outside Ballywalter for the construction of a waste-water treatment works, which would be a monstrosity on our coastline. Mr Hamilton must get his priorities right. If he wants to bring more tourists to the constituency he must reassess his attitude to the disposal of coastal land.

There is a tremendous opportunity throughout Northern Ireland to capitalise on the natural assets — a beautiful landscape and a wonderful heritage. There is particular evidence of those attributes in the Strangford constituency, and great potential for a successful and sustainable tourist industry.

As was pointed out earlier, Strangford Lough is the centrepiece of the constituency and is recognised throughout the world as an area of outstanding natural beauty. That designation alone is sufficient to attract visitors from across the globe. To ensure that the best possible tourism potential is derived from Strangford Lough, it is essential that the lough and its coastline are respected, protected and enhanced.

Strangford Lough offers much to encourage visitors, not least a wide variety of active bird life. I am fortunate enough to live by the edge of the lough, and I can assure Members that the many species of birds provide wonderful sights and sounds for those who visit. Surely more effort could be made to encourage birdwatchers to spend some time in Northern Ireland and along the Strangford Lough coast?

I am delighted to see that the Minister with responsibility for tourism, Mr Dodds, is in the Chamber this evening. I will draw his attention to the fact that in Portaferry, at the tip of Strangford Lough, we have a wonderful tourist attraction in Exploris. Since its inception a number of years ago, it has been run and managed by Ards Borough Council, of which I and other Members present in the Chamber are members.

I would like the Minister to consider ways in which his Department could contribute, financially or otherwise, to the future expansion and sustainability of this magnificent tourist destination. Exploris, which is a replica of what goes on underneath the surface of Strangford Lough, is almost as important to Northern Ireland as the Giant's Causeway. People may disagree, but that is my opinion. I ask the Minister to consider the input that his Department could have to the Exploris experiment. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment will become more involved.

In the Strangford constituency we have many more tourist attractions that could blossom if sufficient effort was directed towards them by the Department. For example, there is a rich Christian heritage in the constituency, and many relics of the past, such as Nendrum, Castlehill, Greyabbey, Movilla and many more, all of which could make a significant contribution to tourism if brought together.

A number of historical events took place in the constituency. In particular, if Members know their history they may be aware of the activities of the Presbyterian United Irishmen around 1798. The story features Betsy Gray at the Six Road Ends, and the part played by the town hall in Newtownards. Mrs Robinson is looking startled — she may not know what that entails.

Mrs I Robinson: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Not only do I know the history, but I have spoken about it two or three times.

Mr McCarthy: I apologise for my mistake — the Member certainly looked startled. At least she knows about the town hall's history.

Saintfield, Ballynahinch, etc, should be of great interest to visitors and tourists. Indeed, if they were put together on some type of heritage trail, it would be an excellent attraction not only for our constituency, but for North Down, South Down and right across the area. There are many more features that could encourage tourists into our constituency, such as sport, agriculture, walking, cycling and horse riding; all of which must be examined and exploited to further the tourism industry.

In conclusion, I must mention Scrabo Tower and its beautiful parkland, and Mount Stewart, with its wonderful house and gardens. Ballyquintin Farm, which is right at the tip of the Ards Peninsula, has tourism potential that must be explored and exploited. I ask the Minister, his Department, local councils and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to work together to produce a plan to encourage more visitors to visit our shores and, in particular, the Strangford constituency.

Mrs I Robinson: Kieran mentioned Strangford Lough. If he wants more coastal space, he might consider bulldozing his own house, because it is five feet from the lough shore. That would create some space.

I congratulate my party colleague for securing the Adjournment debate. When I delivered my maiden speech in another place, I was privileged to detail the breathtaking beauty of the constituency that I represent, both as MP and MLA, alongside my three party colleagues. I still feel the same sense of pride as I drive through that part of the Province, to and from advice centres in Portavogie, Killyleagh and Saintfield.

We have yet to grasp the role that tourism must play in the development of Northern Ireland's economy. To be fair, we are still finding our feet after emerging from 40 years of terror and violence that ensured that tourism was essentially suffocated. At the same time, the legislative Assembly is still in its infancy. The concept of devolved Government in Northern Ireland is still bedding in. Although we can be excused for being a little behind in practical terms, I am concerned that we do not yet understand what must be done in order to maximise our tourism potential; nor do I believe that the matter is simply one of blind investment in tourism. Rather, it is crucial to the future success of tourism that a co-ordinated and strategic approach is adopted in order to facilitate its expansion: only at that point must the funding that is needed to achieve those goals be identified.

There is no point complaining that there are no hotels between Bangor and Portaferry on the Ards Peninsula, because such businesses are consumer led — they are not viable without demand. Until the area's natural and historical assets are maximised, there will remain insufficient demand.

Northern Ireland is a blank canvas, compared to the state of affairs in other parts of the United Kingdom. Strangford is a case in point. There are several issues that contribute to that, such as the decline of traditional industries in the area, the job losses that have resulted, and the need for new investment. In recent years, we have witnessed the collapse of the textile industry, which has all but disappeared; the closure of TK-ECC in Dundonald, and the decline in fortunes of the fishing and farming sectors. As a result, around 2,500 people have lost their jobs. At the same time, however, there has been little meaningful inward investment.

People ask themselves where the peace dividend is in all of that. With the end of the Troubles, and the prospect of a peaceful future, we were promised huge advances and investment in tourism as overseas visitors returned to our shores.

That has not yet materialised. In the meantime, the Strangford Lough area — an area of outstanding natural beauty — remains completely relevant as a tourist resource. The lough is unique in that it is the largest sea lough in the British Isles, covering approximately 150 square kilometres and separated from the Irish Sea by the Ards Peninsula. Its visual beauty is unquestionable. In the recent ITV competition, 'Britain's Favourite View', Eddie Irvine described it as:

"Swept constantly by Atlantic weather, every single day is different. For trees, and oceans and hills and greenery, it is hard to beat."

Scrabo Tower dominates the area and gazes out at the glorious panorama of Strangford Lough, its islands, the Mountains of Mourne and the whole of north Down. Almost completely landlocked, Strangford Lough is rich with the marine and plant life that revel in the islands, foreshore, salt marshes and wetlands. The lough is a conservation area, and its abundant wildlife is recognised internationally for its importance. Animals commonly found in the lough include seals, basking sharks and brent geese. Three quarters of the world population of brent geese winter in the lough.

Away from the lough itself, we have the beauty of the beaches on the Irish Sea side of the Ards Peninsula. In recent correspondence, the permanent secretary of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure stated that his Department recognised that our greatest assets are our unspoilt landscapes, seascapes and the importance of our coastline and beaches. He stated that beaches attract a diverse range of visitors and activity-users as well as providing a natural visual amenity, and that it is important that all visitors have confidence that our waters and beaches are clean and safe.

There are at least 12 wonderful beaches on the Ards Peninsula, which in itself should form a central plank of the area's tourism strategy. Unfortunately, the water quality at many of those beaches leaves a lot to be desired because of the pumping of sewage, in some cases untreated, into local bathing waters. The Department for Regional Development, which is responsible for waste water and sewage treatment, recently admitted that there is some way to go to reach the compliance levels that prevail in England. That should have been a no-brainer. Matters should never have been allowed to reach the point, where, in the twenty-first century, we still allow raw sewage to be pumped into our bathing waters.

A Member: Will the Member give way?

Mrs I Robinson: No, I will not give way.

Across the Strangford area, we also have a heritage and a history that remain all but hidden. The following was written of Sir Hugh Montgomery, who was central in the Scottish settlement of the area after 1606:

“Thus the country where Montgomery had settled was unhappy and devastated, but he laid balm upon the wounds, and in a few years he had founded economically sound industries and turned large portions of Ulster into a prosperous country.”

The history and heritage of the area is essentially an account of how the Scots influenced local life on economic, social and cultural levels. The area's built heritage reflects that, whether it be the old cross in Newtownards — the only market cross still in existence outside of Edinburgh — or the almost fairytale castle in Killyleagh, the ancestral home of the Hamiltons, whose family, along with that of Sir Hugh Montgomery, settled lands from Killyleagh to Bangor and from Dundonald to Cloughy.

The Ulster Scots have etched their own identity on the entire area. The story of Strangford is, therefore, the story of the Scots who arrived on a barren, depopulated, wasted land and who were responsible for the establishment and growth of most of the local settlements in the area, not least Newtownards. Sir Hugh Montgomery, Sir James Hamilton and all those who followed them to the area left a rich and powerful inheritance: a people whose first loyalty was to truth and fairness; whose support could never be taken for granted; who would fight for their freedom and liberty; who were committed to improving themselves and where they lived; and who brought a diverse array of cultural expression through music, literature and language, which resonates to this very day.

However, that remains nothing more than tourist potential, a vein of tourist gold that has yet to be mined. At a time when US tourists are becoming tired of the old “plastic Paddy” image that they have been fed for so long, and as interest in Scots-Irish heritage increases, we have an unprecedented wealth of Ulster-Scots history and heritage on our doorstep that is simply waiting to be exploited.

I find it frustrating that in the likes of Scotland, tourist attractions and areas of interest are provided for on a comprehensive scale, utilising all their available resources to attract and entertain visitors in a co-ordinated and joined-up fashion. There is an absolute wealth of attractions and history in Strangford, yet we have not even got off the mark in fulfilling the area's potential.

Although we have a number of excellent attractions such as Mount Stewart, Scrabo Tower and Castle Espie, without a strategic approach to tourism we will never maximise the area's appeal. The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure estimates that, at present, tourism is worth £500 million a year to the Northern Ireland economy. If addressed properly, that could double.

Miss McIlveen: I commend my hon Friend Mr Hamilton for the positive and enthusiastic manner in which he has demonstrated the tourism potential not only of my own Strangford constituency, but of the whole of Northern Ireland, and for the way in which he has set it in an economic context. I agree wholeheartedly with all that he has said.

Northern Ireland is now rapidly catching up on so many fronts after decades of terrorism and political instability, and the tourism deficit presents us all with major challenges and opportunities. In order to maximise potential, we need to ensure that the structures are right and that all the key players are singing from the same hymn sheet. As things stand, our tourism industry is hindered rather than helped by the seemingly numerous bodies and organisations involved, some of them politically motivated products of the Belfast Agreement.

As a result, therefore, the message is not always as clear as it might be — a point that was made by the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee in its report on tourism in Northern Ireland, published last year. The tourism industry is a vital cog in our economic wheel, and it deserves efficient, effective and dynamic strategic leadership. As things stand, I do not think that it is getting that, and I urge the Minister to address that as soon as possible.

Northern Ireland is a small place. My colleague has quite rightly drawn attention to the many and varied attractions of the Strangford area. He has also set these firmly within a broader Northern Ireland context. The signature projects — focusing as they do on the main historic and other main attractions across the Province — are clearly the key to attracting out-of-state visitors. We need to be sure that, once those visitors are here, the infrastructure is in place to encourage and direct them to other attractions, such as those in my constituency.

I am not sure that the tourist attractions of the Strangford region receive the publicity that they deserve in overseas marketing. I also feel that support from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board for the local tourist industry in Strangford and beyond is essential if the regional tourism partnership for the area is to operate effectively.

Another area that is important if we are to make progress in tourism is that of good-quality accommodation. We are happy to see day visitors, as others have mentioned, but we are even happier if they decide to stay for a few days to fully enjoy the many attractions in Strangford. We must ensure that they are comfortable during such a stay. I would be interested to know whether the Minister is satisfied that enough is being done to support the development of the accommodation sector in my constituency.

One of my main concerns — and my colleague referred to this — is that Tourism Ireland, rather than the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, is responsible for marketing Northern Ireland in Great Britain. That is patently absurd. It is little wonder that visitor numbers from Great Britain are falling. It is not rocket science to work out that the marketing of Northern Ireland in, say, China or California requires a very different approach to that taken among our fellow citizens across the Irish Sea. Northern Ireland must be marketed in Great Britain as an integral part of the United Kingdom, and far more emphasis must be placed on our British history, traditions and culture. That will not be done while Tourism Ireland remains in charge of marketing in Great Britain. I encourage the Minister to strengthen and enhance the role of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and to give it back the responsibility for the promotion of Northern Ireland in Great Britain.

At the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington at the end of June, I was reminded of the closeness of the historical, religious and family ties between Northern Ireland and the so-called southern states of the United States of America, such as Virginia, Tennessee and the Carolinas. There is a vast and largely untapped tourist potential there. Again, I ask the Minister to do all he can to ensure that Tourism Ireland markets Northern Ireland positively and properly in those states. This means that —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Your time is up, sorry.

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): I congratulate the hon Member Simon Hamilton for securing this adjournment debate, and I welcome the opportunity to discuss this important issue, especially at a time when tourism continues to flourish. The Hansard report of this debate will serve as a wonderful tourist advertisement for Strangford. It will save the Northern Ireland Tourist Board from having to publish any new pamphlets, because Members have waxed lyrical and eloquent about the attractions of a very beautiful part of the world. As has been said, the Strangford constituency is blessed with natural beauty and plays a central role in making Northern Ireland the attractive destination that it is.

Several Members mentioned that Strangford Lough featured in the final of the prime time TV show 'Britain's Favourite View'. It was piped at the post, but the fact that it was voted among the top four views in the United Kingdom was a tremendous achievement. It underscored the potential of the area and will serve to advertise Northern Ireland, particularly Strangford Lough, to a very wide audience. The Northern Ireland Tourist Board and VisitBritain joined forces for that series to promote the diversity of landscapes across Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom. Therefore,

I hope that people will be inspired to come and enjoy trips to Strangford Lough and the surrounding area.

Other important tourist attractions have been mentioned, including Castle Ward, which is one of Europe's most unique houses; the famous gardens at Mount Stewart; and Exploris, Northern Ireland's public aquarium and seal sanctuary. In 2006, more than 300,000 people visited those attractions, two of which are in the Strangford constituency. The Tourist Board and Tourism Ireland continue to work together to organise press trips to those attractions, thus ensuring that the area remains on the radar of local and international journalists and obtains positive coverage across the world. The house and gardens at Mount Stewart, near Greyabbey, have featured prominently in Tourism Ireland's global-destination marketing campaign. I understand that Tourism Ireland has also undertaken an initiative in the market in Great Britain to encourage visitors to come here with their cars.

I have listened carefully to what some Members — particularly Ms McIlveen — said about Tourism Ireland. I am absolutely determined that Northern Ireland's image be promoted as effectively as possible, so that we can secure the best possible value for money from our investment in tourism. My Department will actively examine that. As Members have pointed out, the division of those promotions has been subject to the institutional legacies of previous arrangements. I am determined to address the dip in the number of tourists and visitors who come to Northern Ireland from Great Britain.

Mr Shannon: The Minister has said, rightly, that Strangford is the jewel in the crown, and some Members have raised issues that must be addressed. Does the Minister agree that the Ulster-Scots culture should be exploited and, indeed, enhanced? Every year, 250,000 visitors come from Scotland, and Ulster-Scots trails could be enhanced to entice visitors to Strangford. As well as the beauty of Strangford Lough, the culture and history of the place are attractions.

Country sports could also be exploited. Last year, American tourists spent £50,000 in the Ards Borough Council area during the two-day Ballywalter game fair. The potential of that event should be exploited, along with the attractions of the Battletown Gallery and the Eden Pottery Centre.

Mr Dodds: I congratulate the hon Member for managing to compress a speech into an intervention. However, it is fair that all Members who wished to speak have been able to contribute to the debate, even though we are constrained by time. The points that the hon Member has raised, such as Ulster-Scots culture, are important.

Some Members have mentioned the Smithsonian Folklife Festival, which I attended, as did Michelle McIlveen and others. We have seen the tremendous benefits of our participation in that event. It attracted over 1,500,000 visitors, and the tremendous programme of events at the festival focused on food, music, crafts and landscapes. The Ulster-Scots connection, particularly to the southern states of America, was very noticeable. The Strangford constituency featured prominently at that event, with an entire evening devoted to Ballywalter Park, with Lord and Lady Dunleath taking guests on a virtual tour of their home.

Northern Ireland's participation in the Smithsonian Folklife Festival, and the Strangford aspect of that event, will have a hugely positive impact on tourism here. Members have mentioned the five signature projects, one of which is the Christian Heritage/St Patrick project, and they have rightly pointed to the importance of the Christian heritage in the Strangford constituency and surrounding area.

7.30 pm

The main focus of that tourism signature project will be to increase visitor numbers and spending in Northern Ireland through the development and promotion of key Christian heritage sites.

One of the priorities is to develop the St Patrick and Christian heritage trail, which stretches from Armagh to Bangor. The trail passes through Downpatrick and links major Christian heritage sights along the way, including Inch Abbey and Saul, before travelling along the Ards Peninsula where it follows Strangford Lough, incorporating the impressive Cistercian abbey at Greyabbey on its way north. Signage for the trail will feature strongly throughout the constituency, with 15 signs in Newtownards, six in the Greyabbey area and 11 around Portaferry. That signature project has also attracted media familiarisation trips from across Europe and the United States.

The need to ensure that good accommodation is available and that there are good skills in the accommodation sector has been mentioned. There is excellent accommodation and hospitality in the Strangford constituency. Balloo House in Killinchy won the award for hospitality at the recent Northern Ireland tourism awards. The Portaferry Hotel and the Narrows offer excellent accommodation and cuisine, including a wide selection of local seafood. I sound like an advertisement for Strangford but it is right to put those things on record.

Hotels have been mentioned, and it is interesting and good to note that work has started on the Strangford Arms Hotel in Newtownards, with refurbishment work to be carried out, which will result in improved accessibility and the creation of an additional 20 en suite bedrooms. I note the point that Mr Hamilton made about grant assistance for hotels in the greater Belfast area. I will investigate that point, and I am happy to take the points that he and others have made about that.

Mrs I Robinson: It would be remiss to forget that in the Castlereagh hills we have the La Mon House Hotel, which is currently expanding; several million pounds is being spent to provide additional bedrooms, a spa and a swimming pool.

Mr Dodds: Yes, that is an excellent point. The major boom in the provision of hotel bedrooms in the greater Belfast area is to be welcomed.

The need to ensure that events are organised that will draw in people was mentioned, and that is essential. Recently, I was at Royal County Down Golf Club, which hosted the Walker Cup between Great Britain and Ireland and the USA. Although that event did not happen in Strangford, it brought many people into the general locality, and Strangford will have benefited from the worldwide attention. I know from speaking to people there that they enjoyed their visit and saw all the attractions and the local area. There are also excellent courses in the Strangford constituency, such as Scrabo and Kirkistown Castle.

Last week we had the sixth festival of the Peninsula, which was organised by Ards Borough Council, who I am happy to congratulate in having presented once again a splendid variety of all that celebrates the folklore, music and literature of the area, which I am sure attracted a good number of visitors. There are many good things happening in Strangford. I congratulate Members for speaking so eloquently and well of their constituency.

I will pick up on a number of points that were raised by Members, although I will not have time to deal with all of them. The Tourist Board operates a tourism development scheme, which can support the development and expansion of tourist attractions such as Exploris. The council is, of course, free to explore that possibility.

The Tourist Board also has a victims-of-crime policy to ensure that tourists who are subjected to crime or antisocial behaviour are looked after and enjoy the rest of their stay in Northern Ireland. The antisocial behaviour agenda is wide: it not only covers tourism, but the general quality of life of the people of Northern Ireland. The Armagh and Down tourism partnership is currently undertaking a marine and coastal strategy for the area, which is almost complete and will include marine tourism opportunities for Strangford Lough. Any tourism initiative based in Strangford Lough will, of course, have to take careful account of the Lough's ecological and scientific importance.

Well done to everyone involved in promoting tourism in Strangford. I congratulate all the efforts that have been made, and I wish you well for the future.

Adjourned at 7.34 pm.

TAXIS BILL (NIA 4/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Patsy McGlone (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Billy Armstrong

Mr Bill Laverty	} Department of the Environment
Mrs Adele Watters

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): Welcome, Mrs Adele Watters and Mr Bill Laverty, and thank you for attending today, for what, I think, is your fourth time.

Mrs Adele Watters (Department of the Environment): Yes, indeed it is.

The Chairperson: I also thank you for the concise way that the documentation has been presented to the Committee. It is very readable, which is useful when distilling the legislation into the pros and cons of what is to be achieved.

Mrs Watters: I thank the Chairperson and members for the opportunity to address the Committee as it starts its detailed scrutiny of the Taxis Bill. I proposed that we brief the Committee on the main provisions of the legislation, so a summary of the provisions has been provided for members.

However, before I outline the provisions and answer questions that members may have, it would be useful to mention a few key points that the Department had in mind when drafting instructions to the Office of Legislative Counsel in preparation for the Bill. Some of those points will pick up on themes that were mentioned by Alan Rehfish in his briefing earlier and will help members to understand why the legislation has been drafted in this way.

The first point concerns linkages in the licensing system and the licensing framework; the second concerns uniformity, but with flexibility; the third relates to the need for forward-looking legislation; the fourth relates to the range of sanctions that are available in the Bill, and the fifth and final point relates to fees. I will cover all of those quickly.

First, with regard to linkages in the licensing system, I will recap some of our previous briefings on the main problems in the taxi industry. One of those problems is the extent of illegal taxiing that is taking place — and a lot of it happens through taxi depots that engage unlicensed vehicles and drivers. Another problem is that there are too few accessible taxis, and there is also a lack of accountability for service standards, which, in practice, often results in poor customer service. The Department believes that the one key measure that will allow it to make substantial headway in addressing those problems is the introduction of operator licensing, and that is why powers to introduce operator licensing are a key aspect of the Bill.

Furthermore, the legislative framework recognises that to achieve the objectives of fewer instances of illegal taxiing, more accessible taxis and better customer standards, it is vital to establish taxi operators as legal entities and link them legally to the drivers that they engage and, separately, to the vehicles that they use.

It is also worth pointing out that the legislation contains no legal linkage, as such, between a taxi driver and the taxi vehicle that he or she drives. Although many taxis are owner-driven, that is not necessarily the case. The Department has no difficulty with the idea that someone — maybe a car dealer or taxi dealer — can own a taxi but allow it to be driven by someone else, or even by two people alternately. It is important to get those linkages in place, because the Bill does not comprise a series of completely unrelated parts. The provisions interlink like pieces of a jigsaw.

The Department is seeking to achieve uniformity across the licensing system. The Bill provides for a one-tier licensing system across Northern Ireland; the same basic requirements for operators, regardless of the size of their operations; the same basic rules for drivers, regardless of the types of taxis that they drive; and the same basic requirements for vehicles, at least for those providing normal, non-specialist accessible and non-accessible services.

It is also important that the legislation enables the Department to provide flexibility where needed — through measures that can be applied differently, according to circumstances and cases, or by way of exemptions. For example, clause 18 requires all taxis to have taximeters, but it also gives the Department the power to make regulations establishing exemptions to that rule.

Another example of the legislation's flexibility is that it gives the Department the power to require all operators to provide a certain percentage of accessible vehicles. However, the conditions, and, therefore, the percentage of accessible vehicles required could differ depending on the size of a taxi operator's fleet. For example, the figure could be 10% for a large fleet but 100% for an operator who has only one vehicle.

Clause 54 provides further flexibility. It permits the Department, where it deems it appropriate, to apply regulations made under the Bill to a specific area or areas rather than to Northern Ireland as a whole. The Bill has been developed on the premise of providing a one-tier system. However, it contains a great deal of flexibility to allow the Department to vary those basic rules. For example, clause 54 enables the Department to retain the two-tier system in Belfast, if it considers that to be appropriate.

The Bill must be forward looking. The Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, under which taxis are currently regulated, is over 25 years old. The Taxis Bill may not have to last quite as long as that before, in due course, it is also replaced. However, we should anticipate that it will provide the licensing framework for the next 10 to 15 years. The Bill must be capable of anticipating developments that are on the horizon but whose impact is not fully known and for which the Department is not necessarily thinking actively about the development of policies.

The Department has included in the Bill matters on which it does not necessarily intend to act. They include: restrictions on age; the ability to regulate for taxi marshals; and provision for in-car security equipment, such as CCTV, which is not used in Northern Ireland but is installed in some taxis in GB. The Department at least wants the powers to regulate that. The increase in the number of applications for taxi-driver licences from people from the rest of the EU is also an issue, and the legislation must be flexible to enable the Department to deal with it.

A range of sanctions must be put in place. To an effective regulator, prosecution should be, if not quite the last resort, certainly not its first resort. Enormous importance should be attached to education, persuasion, warning letters, the potential for civil penalties and enforcement notices. Next should come criminal penalties, and the final stage should be the suspension and revocation of licences. That is why the Bill contains a broad range of sanctions. It is important that all those are available to the regulators, who must use them effectively to target the main areas of risk.

A fundamental tenet of licensing systems, such as taxi licensing, is that they should, as far as possible, be run on a full cost-recovery basis. The cost of the licensing service should be met through the income generated from fees. Typically, the powers to charge fees must appear in primary legislation and must be specific. Without a clear primary power to charge a fee, regulations on fees cannot be made. A prime example of that, which has caused difficulty for the Department, relates to the introduction of taxi plates in 2004.

Although the Department took the policy decision to introduce taxi licence plates, it does not have the power to charge a fee for issuing them. Therefore, the costs of producing and issuing the plates had to be rolled into that for the PSV test. Ideally, the Department should be able to charge for all items that need to be produced as part of the licensing system.

In addition, the Department needs to be able to charge for the services that it provides, including the work involved in processing applications that may end up being rejected. At the moment, if the Department processes a driver's application, which, for some reason, is rejected, the fee has to be returned to the unsuccessful applicant. There is no opportunity for the Department to state that because it has completed its work, it will hold on to the fee.

The fees issue is not all one-way traffic. The Department is conscious that it does not have the powers to refund or remit fees in cases where, for example, a person has booked a PSV test — the fee for which includes the cost of the taxi licence plates — but finds that he or she cannot attend the appointment. The fee would be lost, and the applicant would have to pay a second fee for a subsequent test. In effect, drivers can pay twice for one set of plates, which means that quite a significant amount of money is involved.

Many people in the taxi industry say that the Department is mostly interested in fees. Therefore, the Department must ensure that every aspect of the fees issue is covered in the legislation.

The Committee will be glad to know that I will not be going through all the briefing material that has been provided. The Bill comprises six parts, with 58 clauses and three schedules. It is a significant piece of legislation.

Part 1 deals with the regulation of taxi operators. It introduces the requirement for a taxi operator to apply for, and obtain, a taxi operator's licence, and imposes duties on licensed operators. It also introduces requirements and duties relating to the operation of taxi services at separate fares.

Part 2 of the Bill deals with the regulation of vehicles used to provide taxi services. It includes more flexible and extensive powers for the Department to set appropriate suitability requirements for vehicles, as regards their type, size and design. Part 2 also gives the Department powers to set the maximum rates and fares that can be charged for the hire of a taxi, and to require all taxis to have taximeters and receipt printers.

Part 3 of the Bill deals with the regulation of taxi drivers. In particular, it amends existing legislation by reducing the period of a taxi-driver licence from five years to three years, bringing it into line with taxi-driver repute checks, which are repeated every three years.

Part 4 of the Bill contains general provisions for the licences that can be applied for, and includes provisions relating to fees, applications, suspensions, revocations, curtailments and appeals.

Part 5 of the Bill makes provision for enforcement. It gives the police and the Department powers to stop, search and seize vehicles believed to be taxiing illegally, and to inspect premises, under warrant, where there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that a person is operating an unlicensed taxi service.

Part 6 provides for a number of general issues relating to the operation of the Bill, including sharing information, payment of grants and the provision of training.

The Bill contains three schedules. Schedules 2 and 3 deal with minor and consequential amendments, and repeals. Schedule 1 will probably be of most interest, as it lists the offences and penalties that will be included under the Bill. The most serious licensing offences — all of which, on conviction, will attract a maximum fine of £5,000 — include: driving a taxi without a taxi-driver licence; operating a taxi service without an operator's licence; a taxi operator's using unlicensed vehicles or drivers; and using a taxi, or permitting a taxi to be used, without a taxi licence.

That completes a quick overview aimed at familiarising members with some of the detail of the Bill. I am happy to take questions.

The Chairperson: Thank you. I am sure that many questions will emerge when the Committee's consultation begins. Do members wish to ask any questions either on Adele Watters's briefing or on the information that Alan Rehfishch from Research and Library Services provided earlier?

Mr Weir: Alan Rehfishch mentioned the financial elements of the legislation. Although the Bill is enabling legislation, one of the aims of the taxi-licensing system is full cost recovery. How will the cost of enforcing the legislation — such as the checking of licences — be worked out? Are there costings for that, and how will those costs be met?

Mrs Watters: Currently, £20 of the PSV licence fee goes towards funding enforcement. Further funding for enforcement comes directly from the Department.

Mr Bill Lavery (Department of the Environment): The Driver and Vehicle Agency's enforcement team comprises 21 officers. Of those 21, four officers deal with taxi-related matters. The full enforcement team deals with road freight, bus licensing and taxi licensing and, as Adele said, funding for its work comes mainly from the Department.

Mr Weir: Presumably, the intention is to expand that team? A much stronger framework, with regulations and a fee structure, will require much greater enforcement.

Mrs Watters: Yes, it will. However, some of that enforcement will be supported by the IT systems that are already in place. We will have much more and better information on who is licensed, whose licences have been renewed, and what is going on in general. Consequently, we will be able to make better use of that information.

Current taxi legislation is drafted in such a way that the Department has powers and sanctions to deal with those in the taxi industry who are regulated. Most legislative power is directed at the prosecution of offenders, which is very resource intensive. The intention is that the new legislation will provide a range of sanctions that could be used before the prosecution stage is reached, which would mean that enforcement officers would not necessarily need to be out on the roads.

Mr Weir: It was mentioned that the more serious offences would, ultimately, attract a maximum fine of £5,000. Is there any provision for the revocation of licences in the event of prosecutions for serious offences? For example, if a taxi operator were to employ unlicensed cash-in-hand drivers, will the legislation provide for the ultimate sanction of revoking that operator's licence? My thinking behind that is that in the bar trade, if a publican is responsible for a number of serious breaches, his or her liquor licence can be revoked. Will the Taxis Bill provide for similar sanctions for taxi operators?

Mr Lavery: Yes. The legislation provides powers to suspend, revoke or curtail an operator's licence. Curtailing an operator's licence would reduce the number of vehicles that his or her company could operate. Repeated convictions could affect an operator's reputation and fitness to hold a licence, and, therefore, could justify the revocation of his or her operator's licence.

Mr Armstrong: If a driver is unable to keep a PSV test appointment, he or she must still pay for a licence. How much does it cost the Department to supply a licence?

Mrs Watters: Is the question whether the component costs of a PSV test can be separated out?

Mr Armstrong: Yes. If a driver is unable to keep a PSV test appointment, he or she cannot claim the licence cost back. Is there a separate cost for the supply of a licence?

Mr Lavery: The Driver and Vehicle Agency, which is responsible for the testing of vehicles, calculates the cost of the test.

Mr Armstrong: Yes. There is a cost for the PSV test. However, the Department charges applicants for supplying licences, even if they were unable to attend their PSV test appointments. In other words, are there separate costs for PSV tests and for supplying licences?

Mr Lavery: Is that a reference to the administrative cost of issuing licences?

Mrs Watters: There is a separate administrative cost.

Mr Lavery: The PSV test fee comprises several components: the cost of the taxi licence plates; the cost of administration; and the cost of the test.

Mr Armstrong: Is it correct to say that the Driver and Vehicle Agency does not refund the licence part of the application fee if a driver is unable to keep a test appointment?

Mrs Watters: The Department does not currently have the power to make such a refund.

Mr Armstrong: Should that issue not be examined?

Mrs Watters: In cases such as that, the Department wants the legislation to give the Driver and Vehicle Agency the power to refund the licence part of the fee. That is right and fair, and we should be able to do that.

Mr Armstrong: Will the Department look into that matter?

Mrs Watters: Absolutely.

Mr Boylan: In the debate on the Second Stage of the Taxis Bill on 26 June 2007, my party broadly supported a one-tier system for taxi licensing. The Department's position appears to be that a one-tier system should apply across the board, and the taxi industry has voiced some concerns about that. Will you clarify that situation?

Mrs Watters: The Bill paves the way for a move to a one-tier system across Northern Ireland. However, when the Bill was sent out for consultation, we considered the impact that responses in favour of retaining the two-tier system in Belfast would have on the legislation. Consequently, clause 54 of the Taxis Bill gives the Department the flexibility to apply certain rules and regulations to different areas of Northern Ireland.

Although the Department's clear intention is that there should be a one-tier system, the Bill does not close the door entirely on the idea of a two-tier system. It is not that we are in two minds about that — we support the idea of a one-tier system, but we are also saying that that is not the end of the matter.

Mr Boylan: There are many taxi operators in rural areas where a one-tier system would not be suitable. It would be unfair, for example, to demand that all taxi firms should have disabled-accessible vehicles.

Mrs Watters: That is not the intention of the legislation.

Mr Boylan: There are other concerns about a one-tier system, but I wanted clarification on that specific point.

Mrs Watters: No one wants a fully disabled-accessible taxi fleet — not even people with disabilities.

Mr McKay: If a one-tier system is introduced in Belfast, where all taxis licensed as Belfast public hire are already wheelchair accessible, only those taxis will provide disabled access, with the rest not having to meet that requirement. Would that system be compatible with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995? Will an equality impact assessment be carried out?

Mrs Watters: An equality impact assessment has been carried out. It concluded that if the number of accessible taxis could be increased, and the availability of accessible taxis improved throughout Northern Ireland, a one-tier system would be acceptable. If there were accessible taxis that, for example, did not work out of depots with dispatch facilities and, therefore, could not be booked by telephone, it would restrict disabled people's ability to avail of them.

The Department believes that the Taxis Bill will have a positive impact on disabled people. It has worked closely with the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (Imtac) to establish whether the Bill conflicts with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. Imtac is sponsored by the Department for Regional Development and is the main adviser to Government in Northern Ireland on accessibility and transport for people with disabilities. Certainly, it takes the view that there is no conflict between the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and the Taxis Bill's ability to regulate for accessible taxis.

Mr Lavery: I should point out that the spirit of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 has been a major consideration throughout the taxi review. By virtue of existing regulations, taxis that are licensed for public hire in Belfast must be accessible. There is a shortcoming in the number of accessible taxis in rural areas. The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 gives UK territorial Departments powers to prescribe accessibility for taxis that are available for immediate — in other words, public — hire. The Department has been conscious of that from the start.

Mr McKay: Has consideration been given to an increase in the number of taxi ranks, particularly in Belfast?

Mrs Watters: Practical responsibility for the provision of taxi ranks is a traffic-management issue, which is the responsibility of the Department for Regional Development. However, through its work with the taxi industry and colleagues in the Department for Regional Development, the Department of the Environment is aware that moves are already afoot to increase the number of taxi ranks in Belfast. The sub-regional transport plan has, I understand, been published. It refers to consideration of the provision of taxi ranks in towns and cities outside Belfast. That is a pressing issue. There are several towns of considerable size where ranks are not provided.

Mr I McCrea: During the Committee's earlier briefing, Mr Rehfish mentioned the cost implications of taximeters. There is also the issue of taxi divers and operators who want to bring their vehicles up to disabled-accessible standards. That has major cost implications — perhaps thousands of pounds, rather than a few hundred.

Part 6 of the Bill refers to "Payment of grants". Could any specific issues arise from that? Obviously, it is up to the Department of Finance and Personnel to produce any extra money that is required. Does the Department envisage that grants would be made available to improve accessibility or, indeed, for the introduction of taximeters, given that fitting them would lead drivers and operators to incur costs?

Mrs Watters: The Department believes that to obtain completeness, and for the Bill to be forward-looking, it would have been remiss to exclude the provision of a grant-making power. Therefore, the legal provision is being included in the Taxis Bill. However, no money is available, and there are no proposals to introduce grants.

With the Taxis Bill, the Department has made it clear that it wants to raise the standard of provision for consumers. It is inevitable that that will involve some costs: there will be one-off costs relating to taximeters and receipt printers, and more significant costs from vehicle purchasing. The Department has not indicated what the vehicle specification for accessible taxis will be. It is a complex area, and we are conscious of not being overly prescriptive about accessible taxis. Much has been said about accessible taxis costing between £30,000 and £35,000, but those would be top-of-the-range purpose-built taxis. It is important that there is a range of accessible taxis and a range of prices.

The Chairperson: I am conscious that the potential costs to the industry, compared to the incomes of taxi drivers and operators, have become a feature of the debate on the Bill. I would like to see a breakdown of the different tariffs that have been proposed and I would like to be able to compare them with existing tariffs.

Costs associated with taximeters and accessible vehicles have been mentioned, although no vehicle specifications have been recommended. I presume that the associated costs have been considered. The Committee would find such figures useful during its deliberations, as this issue will inevitably arise. Projected costs must have been calculated at some point.

Mrs Watters: Some costs are easier to calculate than others, and I am referring to compliance costs. Figures for taximeters and receipt printers would be relatively easy to produce. However, the cost of accessible vehicles, or the potential cost of adapting vehicles to make them accessible, would be more complicated, and the Department would not have details on those items.

The Chairperson: It seems to me that the Department is not laying down any specifications as regards accessible vehicles. Does the Department anticipate introducing specifications through, for example, section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 or the Disability Discrimination Act 1995?

Provision for specifications has been left very loose. There are two ways that that could be resolved. First, the Department could make it easier for taxi drivers to buy accessible vehicles that will meet the required specifications. Secondly, in the future, another agency could say that those specifications are not up to standard and could introduce new provisions for higher specifications.

Mr Lavery: The Bill gives the Department the power to prescribe the accessibility requirements for taxis, as does the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. The Department envisages that the Taxis Bill will enable it to prescribe accessibility requirements for Northern Ireland. We will take notice of any regulations that may be made in GB under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

The Chairperson: Are you satisfied that the Bill's provisions for vehicle specifications are entirely compatible with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and any other regulatory requirements?

Mrs Watters: If the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 requires that regulations be made, the Department for Transport is responsible for them for England and Wales and the Scottish Executive are responsible for them for Scotland.

Mr Lavery: The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 gives the UK territorial Governments powers to make regulations.

Mrs Watters: The Department for Transport does not make UK-wide taxi-accessibility regulations.

The Chairperson: I am trying to ascertain which regulations apply here, other than the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. Are you sure that the flexibility that the Bill contains on vehicle specifications meets the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and any other statutory requirements?

Mrs Watters: We are.

Mr Boylan: I had a question about designated areas, but it was covered in the reply to Daithí McKay.

Mrs Watters: Designated areas are a slightly different concept in the legislation. Taxi ranks or stands might be situated in designated areas, and disabled access to taxis in those areas might be required. The term “designated areas” is designed to bring together several matters. We have in mind key instances in which taxis should be accessible to disabled people who wish to make connections with other forms of transport, such as at airports, train stations or ferry terminals. A great deal of money has been spent to ensure that ferries, trains and other forms of public transport are accessible to people with disabilities; however, if those people cannot manage that final leg home, they may not set out on the big journey at all.

The Chairperson: Can you provide the Committee with a list of any associated costs that may be incurred by the Department of the Environment or the taxi industry?

Mrs Watters: When we become aware of costs, we will provide them to the Committee. Do you also require information about income that will be generated by fees? It will be for the Driver and Vehicle Agency to collate such information, but we will press for it.

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr McKay: Taxi drivers have reported that, following a PSV test, it can take the Department up to 10 days to issue a taxi vehicle licence — in other words, the taxi licence plates. That results in the loss of work and money. Have you considered providing drivers with some form of disc to cover those 10 days and to prevent their being out of pocket during that period?

Mr Lavery: The taxi review team is conscious that the time between the PSV test’s taking place and the issuing of taxi licence plates has been a major area of complaint from taxi drivers. We will aim to streamline those procedures when we review taxi vehicle regulations. There will probably be a resultant cost, but the solution to the problem is for taxi licence plates to be issued at the point of testing.

Previously, a disc was used to identify a licensed taxi. However, the disc was indiscernible to the travelling public. That was one of the reasons for the introduction of the taxi-plating system. I appreciate that the delay between the time of the test and the issuing of plates is a problem.

Mr McKay: When will the review of taxi vehicle regulations take place?

Mr Lavery: The Taxis Bill will give the Department enabling powers to make new taxi vehicle regulations. The current PSV requirements will be reviewed and enhanced. I would like to believe that the review will take place sooner rather than later, possibly within 18 months of the new Bill’s being enacted.

The Chairperson: On a final note, could the Committee have sight of the early draft of the regulations flowing from the Bill?

Mrs Watters: The Department does not have any early drafts of regulations.

The Chairperson: Could they be made available to the Committee when the Department has them?

Mrs Watters: Of course, but it will be some time before early drafts of regulations are available. The Department’s main focus is on the primary legislation, but, as the policy is being developed in those regulatory areas, we are happy to work with the Committee. The Department does not envisage that the Committee will first hear about those regulations when it sees the secondary legislation.

The Chairperson: I thank the departmental representatives for their time; does any other Committee member want to add anything?

Mr Boylan: After these discussions, taking a taxi has a whole new meaning for me. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Thank you for your time today.

HEALTH (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) BILL (NIA 2/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mrs Iris Robinson (Chairperson)

Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mrs Carmel Hanna
Mr John McCallister

Witnesses:

Mr Raymond Anderson	}	Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland
Mr Raymond Blaney
Dr Kate McClelland
Ms Stella Cunningham	}	Southern Health and Social Services Council
Ms Maggie Reilly
Mr John Farrell	}	Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety
Mr Robert Kirkwood

The Chairperson (Mrs I Robinson): The departmental officials attending today's Committee meeting are Mr John Farrell, an assistant director of the primary and community care directorate, and Mr Robert Kirkwood, from the departmental Bill team. They are on hand to offer advice.

I welcome the representatives of the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland, who are here to give evidence. Mr Raymond Anderson is president of the society, and Mr Raymond Blaney is its director. Dr Kate McClelland is a member of the Council for Healthcare Regulatory Excellence (CHRE) and is a representative of the Pharmaceutical Group of the European Union (PGEU). I would not like to try to say that mouthful if I had a drink on me.

I ask you to deal specifically with the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, and the clauses in the Bill that you would like to see amended, if any. You have 10 minutes to make your presentation, and then we will have approximately 30 minutes for a question and answer session.

Mr Raymond Blaney (Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland): Thank you for saving me from making the introductions, especially for the Pharmaceutical Group of the European Union. The Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland is grateful for the opportunity to make a presentation and give evidence to the Committee today.

The society is the regulatory and professional body for pharmacists and pharmacies in Northern Ireland. We currently host a register of 1,898 pharmacists and 529 pharmacies.

Although pharmacists are not numerous in Northern Ireland, the discipline is not small in reputation. Queen's University is regarded worldwide as one of the top universities for pharmacy education. Its degree course has been provided since 1929, which makes it one of the oldest courses in the United Kingdom.

Almac Group Ltd, which was established in 2001 and is based in Craigavon, bought over Galen Holdings plc in 2004. It is now a $600 million company, employing almost 2,000 people across the US and Europe. Almac offers an unparalleled range of pharmaceutical services on a global scale.

Northern Pharmacies Ltd was established in response to the need to provide pharmacy services in areas that did not generate natural business opportunities. Established in 1968 to serve Craigavon, it now has three further pharmacies in Greyabbey, Poyntzpass and Cullyhanna, and its turnover in 2006 was about £2.6 million. Profits are either reinvested into the organisation or it divests itself of them through its charitable organisation, which helps to promote pharmacy practice and education, supporting the advancement of the profession.

The Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland has existed since 1925, and, over that period, it has established itself firmly as the lead regulatory body for the profession. Public safety is never compromised when considering the regulation of the profession. It demonstrates its commitment to the public by operating an independent statutory committee structure and an independent inspectorate. It is the only nation-specific healthcare regulator and the only regulatory body to have an independent inspectorate regime.

The society, like the profession, is undergoing a period of change. The legislation under which it was established, The Pharmacy (Northern Ireland) Order 1976, is no longer appropriate for the profession and the practices that we regulate today. The recent publication of the Government White Paper, 'Trust, Assurance and Safety — The Regulation of Health Professionals in the 21st Century', is the culmination of the work of Foster and Donaldson in response to the Shipman, Kennedy, Kerr/Haslam, Ayling and Neale Inquiries. All recognised the need for regulatory bodies to have the necessary and appropriate structures in place to adapt to modern healthcare practices to ensure the confident delivery of patient safety.

Although the recommendation is, ultimately, that the regulatory and professional representation rules must be split, the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland acknowledges that this is an ideological position rather than one evidenced in fact. The Harold Shipman case occurred despite the separated functions, and Dame Janet Smith's report praised the independent inspectorate system while acknowledging that the system was only sustainable in a region of the size of Northern Ireland.

The current legislation restricts the society's role in defining the structure and make-up of the society's council; namely, by excluding lay representation. It defines the register of pharmacists as only practising pharmacists, not allowing for those who are non-practising or retired. The range of sanctions that is available to the council is also restricted, because it can only recommend striking off or retaining pharmacists on the register. Remaining outwith our legislated remit are the rehabilitation of professionals and support; the interim measures of supervision and support; continuing professional development; and registration of technicians.

The Pharmacists and Pharmacy Technicians Order 2007 has enabled the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain (RPSGB) to advance its powers. It has provided a legislated arrangement that, arguably, provides greater patient protection in Great Britain than we enjoy in Northern Ireland. For example, if the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland made a direction to remove a pharmacist from the register, that person would still be entitled to practise for up to a further three months, allowing them the right to appeal the statutory committee's decision. However, in Great Britain, if appropriate, the individual may be instructed that he or she may not practise during that period. The 2007 Order does not remove their right of appeal.

The regulatory environment is changing, and the society is ready for the challenge. It has begun the process of reforming its organisation, has participated fully in Lord Carter's working group and continues to work with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) and the Department of Health in Great Britain to establish the most effective regulatory solution for Northern Ireland.

The society has set up its own working groups to focus on the areas of governance, legislation, functions, registration and education in Northern Ireland. A one-size-fits-all solution to UK-wide healthcare regulation would not necessarily be the most appropriate route to go down. It is important to take into consideration the differences between Great Britain and Northern Ireland in order to ensure that a Londoncentric position is not foisted on Northern Ireland's patients. It is essential that those differences are recognised and, where appropriate, protected.

Northern Ireland is the only UK nation with an EU land border. The relationship with the Republic is important from a regulatory and employment perspective. Without a clear and agreed regime in place for cross-border treatment and drug control, the Province could be more exposed than any other UK nation. Northern Ireland's pharmacies have a footfall of 123,000 patients daily. Nearly 29 million prescriptions were dispensed in 2006. Through initiatives such as the minor ailment scheme, the management of prescribed medicines and chronic conditions, and the support offered to guide patients towards healthier lifestyle choices — smoking-cessation clinics, and so on — community pharmacy is becoming increasingly focal.

Northern Ireland has a ratio of 61:39 independent to multiple pharmacies compared with the GB ratio of 52:48. The nature of the pharmacy as part of the community is an essential factor that makes Northern Ireland's pharmacies so successful across all sectors: specialist; hospital; academia; industry; and community. Pharmacists tend to offer the last opportunity in the dispensing chain to correct an error or to hear about patients' concerns. Often, it is during a one-to-one conversation between a patient and his or her pharmacist that a side effect is discussed or a worry is shared that can significantly impact on the patient's treatment. That is not to say that errors do not occur; however, in considering risk management, the society has expressed its concerns about the proposal to allow remote pharmacy supervision.

In the society's opinion, the question is about the need to balance the desire to provide greater clinical care in the community with the need to manage the risk of increased exposure to dispensing errors. Those issues can be mitigated to a degree by improving and raising standards and processes in pharmacies. In order to implement that, the society is working closely with the Department, to which it has submitted a business plan for the introduction of standards measurement across community pharmacy, the concept of which the society intends to roll out to hospitals.

A further step would be to ensure that all pharmacies have two pharmacists in the practice, that a co-operative arrangement be introduced among local pharmacies or simply that a locum be employed to cover the time when clinical practice means that a pharmacist will be off the premises.

The profession welcomes the fact that the Government have requested an increasing breadth of services from it in order to ease the pressure on the Health Service. However, that must be done in a considered and supportive way that will not compromise patients' safety. The society believes fundamentally that the introduction of the "absent pharmacist" could be abused in such a manner that it would not achieve the intended aims; rather, patients could suffer as a result.

The Department undertook a survey in 2006 on public attitudes to health and social services in Northern Ireland. The results for pharmacies spoke volumes: 99% of patients were satisfied with pharmacy services; 96% were satisfied with the general attitude of pharmacists; and 18% of service users called for better access to services. The ambition must be to continue to achieve that level of satisfaction and to consider how the needs of the 18% of patients who require greater access can be better satisfied. Would that be achieved by the introduction of remote supervision? It may appeal to the larger corporate organisations that wish to centralise their superintendent- or responsible-pharmacist role across the UK. However, would that satisfy corporate efficiency goals or effective patient-treatment objectives?

As for increasing a health and social services boards' remit for sanctions, we understand the premise for that, but we do not consider it necessary for a board to go beyond the remit of its employer disciplinary systems.

The Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland holds a central register of pharmacists, and a statutory committee process is in place. It is important for patients and professionals that the Government support the regulatory bodies that statutorily provide a service rather than look elsewhere to bolster regulatory practice.

We urge the Committee to consider the legislative powers that are granted to the society as a primary objective, and to support the tasking of the boards to work with the society to reflect its standards in their disciplinary procedures. That approach would ensure clarity for patients and professionals alike rather than duplicate what is already established or potentially create a situation in which two professional disciplinary systems that are neither compatible nor consistent are in place.

A health and social services board could, for example, instruct that a person be suspended or removed from its list. The statutory committee could determine that an issue does not warrant removal from the register but may agree that a person should be suspended. However, our powers do not allow for that. Therefore a pharmacist who is considered unemployable by a board could be retained on the society's register. As a result, that person would have extremely restricted employment opportunities. That dilemma is not far-fetched, and has been experienced by other healthcare regulators. That is not helpful to the profession, the patients or the public purse.

In order to address regulatory processes, we must deal with the issues that the professional regulatory body has been raising. Another layer of regulation must not be introduced. When the regulatory issue arose in Great Britain, the Better Regulation Task Force advised that another layer of regulation should not be adopted. We ask the Committee to consider what is best for patient care: a strong regulatory body with appropriate legislative powers, or an additional layer of regulation that could add confusion.

The society, which has been in existence for more than 80 years, recognises the demand for reform and broadly welcomes the changes that are recommended in the White Paper. We have a difference of opinion about the implementation of a solution across the UK, and ask for the Committee's support to ensure that everything possible has been done to provide the best solution for patient safety and care in Northern Ireland.

Devolution provides us with the opportunity to make our own determinations, and to focus on and address local issues. As the specific regulator for pharmacy in Northern Ireland, the society requests that the Committee recommend that legislative limitations and inadequacies be addressed as a priority in order to provide the optimal regulatory provision in Northern Ireland.

Representatives of the Department — Mr David Bingham, Dr Norman Morrow and Ms Joyce Cairns — are assisting with that process. We urge the Committee to request that addressing legislative limitations and inadequacies be made a priority so that we can be confident that the best solution is in place for patients and the profession.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Mr Blaney. How many pharmacists have lost their livelihoods since the society was established?

Mr Blaney: On average, there are two or three statutory committee hearings in Northern Ireland per annum. I estimate that an average of 75% of pharmacists who are called before the committee remain on the register. I do not have accurate figures with me.

The Chairperson: How do you respond to the accusation — I am playing devil's advocate — that the society is looking after its own fiefdom, and does not want others involved in overseeing the workings of pharmacists?

Mr Blaney: There are two responses to that. First, I am the director of the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland, but I am not a pharmacist. The society is demonstrating that it wants to change.

In dealing with current legal limitations, we try to think outside the box to encourage the involvement of lay members.

Secondly, a regulator cannot operate effectively without there being a connection with the professional body that it is attempting regulate. If there is no such connection, regulation from afar will not necessarily be effective or relevant.

Our primary objective is not to protect the profession but to ensure patient safety. That is done by representing the profession, promoting better standards, and ensuring that the requisite support exists to allow the optimal delivery of services that members want for patients. Pharmacists do not enter the profession without adhering to those core principles. If they did not hold to those principles, they would probably end up before the statutory committee.

Dr Deeny: Thank you, Raymonds and Kate. We had three Brians before us last week, and now we have two Raymonds.

As a health professional, I have an interest in this matter. Moreover, my father was an old-time pharmacist who worked closely with the community in Downpatrick for years.

Earlier this week, I read in a GPs' magazine that health professionals seem to spend more time in seminars, learning how to administer the Health Service, than working with patients, so I take your point that new measures may simply be another layer of bureaucracy to ensure safety. With that in mind, but conscious that patient safety is paramount and that balanced decisions are required because one is dealing with someone's livelihood and reputation, you mentioned that you could strike members off or retain them. That seems to be a case of one extreme or the other. What options can you suggest to achieve a balance?

Furthermore, having worked as a GP in primary care for well over 20 years, and with pharmacy in my blood, I ask what the future holds for pharmacists. The Chairperson mentioned that new hospital wards resemble those in the US. Whether our hospitals wards are copying the US model, I do not know. I have been to the US a few times, and I like the way that pharmacists take responsibility for advice that can be dealt with at their level, rather than having to organise appointments with GPs or trips to hospitals. Do you see such practices as part of the future? If the concept of administration of risk is imposed on Northern Ireland as part of a UK-wide extra layer of bureaucracy, will the community care that I witnessed while growing up be lost, and will community pharmacies continue to play a proactive role alongside GPs and primary healthcare professionals?

Mr Raymond Anderson (Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland): To the comments that Raymond Blaney and the Chairperson have made, I would add that the independent inspectorate separates —

The Chairperson: We are having difficulty hearing you, Mr Anderson. Will you speak up a wee bit?

Mr Anderson: There is an independent inspectorate that does not sit within the purview of the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland. If pharmacists engage in malpractice, the inspectorate, which is based in the DHSSPS, will carry out an inspection. The profession is separate from that process, and it is the inspectorate that would bring any cases before our statutory committee. Inspections and the regulatory function of the society are separate, and the existence of the independent inspectorate should dispel any sense that we protect ourselves. During the Shipman Inquiry, the inspectorate was acclaimed by Dame Janet Smith as a good system for regulating professionals.

In response to Dr Deeny's question, my answer is that the society is aware that the sanctions available to it are limited. The organisation is in discussion with the Department about that. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain has introduced the section 60 Order — The Pharmacists and Pharmacy Technicians Order 2007 — which is known as such because it was made in exercise of the powers conferred by section 60 of the Health Act 1999, and has increased its range of sanctions. Those sanctions can include suspension, but they may also involve retraining, supervised training, revalidation or time off the register in which pharmacists must prove their fitness to be placed back on it. Those sanctions are not available to us yet, but we want to see them introduced.

However, when considering whether we should adopt the UK-wide regulation process, it must be remembered that we have a land border with another EU country. That may lead to the movement of drugs, pharmacists and prescriptions across the border daily. Pharmacists here are not allowed to dispense any prescriptions that have not been prescribed by a general practitioner who is on the General Medical Council (GMC) list. The EU has taken a case to the Cabinet Office and to the UK Government. That case is being challenged in the European Court of Justice (ECJ). If the policy were to be changed, it would open up the movement of prescriptions across the border between North and South. Pharmacists could be faced with regulating and managing that daily, as could patients who move from the South to the North. Ways must be found to regulate that so that patients are not inconvenienced. That daily movement of prescriptions is not as important a consideration for England, Scotland and Wales who do not have a land border with another EU country.

Mr Blaney: Our society is not regarded as a supportive professional regulatory body, because the sanctions available to it only allow the polar-opposite positions of either removing pharmacists from the register or allowing them to remain on it. Pharmacists will not turn to the regulator to ask for help if the only options open to them are to be struck off or reprimanded. The society's role must change from one of negative regulation to one of positive regulation. It is important to consider how the range of sanctions is constructed, but we must also introduce a supporting framework to advance the profession.

Mr Gallagher: Raymond Anderson made the point about the problems that pharmacists who work close to the border face. I come from a border area, so I understand that regulations are needed that better reflect the fact that pharmacists work in areas close to the border and that their customers can come from either side of that border. Will you tell us again about your particular concerns about that?

Mr Anderson: An out-of-hours centre has been established in Castleblaney. That centre covers part of south Armagh. Prescriptions written in that area cannot be dispensed in the North of Ireland, because a general practitioner who is registered in the United Kingdom has not written them. The Cabinet Office is considering changes to the legislation, but if that legislative change goes through, prescriptions could be taken across the border and dispensed in pharmacies in the other jurisdiction. A pharmacist would then have to determine whether it was a legitimate prescription and, if the prescription was for schedule 2, 3 and 4 controlled drugs under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and associated regulations, it would increase the chances of a pharmacist's deciding not to dispense the prescription because he or she was not sure whether the prescription was legal. Handwriting on prescriptions can easily be forged, and computers can also be used to forge prescriptions.

It can be hard to verify whether a prescription has been written by a GP or whether it is fraudulent. If we allow prescriptions to move across the border and be dispensed in both jurisdictions, pharmacists will have to be very vigilant about whether they are legitimate. That is one concern, although the movement of controlled drugs and the potential for controlled drug prescriptions to be dispensed across the border could pose a problem too.

Mr Gallagher: I hope that there will be a development of the out-of-hours GP services in border areas, although, as you are probably aware, a pilot scheme has been set up. Are you satisfied that those concerns will arise from the pilot studies that are under way?

Dr McClelland (Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland): The UK delegation is trying to get the Pharmaceutical Group of the European Union (PGEU) to change its name to the pharmacy group of the European Union, which would be so much easier; unfortunately, however, the German and French translations just do not go there. I am a member of the UK delegation, which, more often than not, forgets that the UK has a land border with another European country. The pilot schemes will show the way, one hopes, but let us start with pilot schemes. Let us take it slowly across the border.

The Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain work closely together in Europe. The Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland has gone through huge regulatory changes, and it is now allowed all the derogations. All the problems with opening pharmacies and ownership have been swept away by the Southern Government, and the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland is waiting to see what happens there. Article 63 of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 and proposed new article 63AA of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill refer to an application being "necessary and desirable". Europe could sweep that away. The UK delegation would like to keep it in, but our Southern Irish friends have let it go.

However, because we are a group of small islands off Europe, we must learn to work across the border to provide for patients; healthcare in Malta, Luxemburg and other small countries crosses borders, and they have full patient mobility where their Governments fund it. Does that help?

Mr Gallagher: Yes. Thank you.

Mrs Hanna: You mentioned community pharmacies and told us that the breadth of services is a plus. Does the proposed legislation put that at risk? You also said that you do not like the pharmacy supervision proposals. Why is that? You said that one size does not fit all, which I accept. I am not saying that the proposals are good or otherwise, but could they be balanced in a way that would be acceptable? Should pharmaceutical professionals be included? Is the present system sufficiently independent?

Mr Anderson: I will address the first part of the question, which related to the risk to pharmacies and remote supervision. Regarding the latter, we are aware that some larger organisations are undertaking trials in which a pharmacist sits in a remote office and looks at a bank of screens. Therefore when patients go into a pharmacy, the pharmacist may not be there; instead, patients would use touch screens to take part in videoconferences with a pharmacist.

Mrs Hanna: Is that remote supervision?

Mr Anderson: Yes. Such a system could jeopardise the sustainability of pharmacies. It could downscale a pharmacy or remove the skills of the pharmacist from the pharmacy. If patients did not like remote supervision, they could go to a pharmacy where that service is not provided. However, patients might find that there is no longer a facility for them to go to a pharmacy with a minor ailment, or to discuss issues with the pharmacist relating to medicines or their side effects, or with matters that affect the family. Remote supervision risks losing personal contact.

Mr Blaney: If a patient has been taking the same medication for several months or has been given a repeat prescription, a pharmacist may intervene and ask why a treatment has not been successful; with remote supervision, that personal intervention may be lost.

Our fundamental questions about pharmacy supervision are whether the miscellaneous provisions realise the corporate goal of reducing costs for organisations, whether they upset existing one-to-one care, and whether they will improve patient care. That is a good example of our society not looking at professional ambition but at patient safety and treatment.

We are eager to ensure that a proper support network is in place and that expectations do not become so great that they dilute the community aspect of pharmacists' services.

Pharmacists welcome the clinical aspects of pharmacy — getting out into the community and working in GPs' surgeries. They welcome the minor ailment scheme, independent prescribing and opportunities to utilise the professional skills that they have been trained to provide.

We do not want to see a replication of the situation as regards GPs and nurses where, having been starved of an opportunity for so long, any opportunity would be grasped without ensuring that changes will not undermine quality of service. Consideration must be given to how the introduction of additional services and requirements can be supported.

As regards the White Paper, we have been fortunate. The Foster report recommended that the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland merge with the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain (RPSGB). However, at that time, we were assured by Minister Burnham and Minister Goggins that no London-centric decision would be made and that Northern Ireland would have the opportunity to consider the future of its pharmacy regulation.

We set up working parties, but we have not taken a position on the matter yet because we wish to look at the opportunities that a UK-wide college for pharmacy could provide. However, we are concerned about the dilution of the regulatory function in Northern Ireland.

At present, we have sovereignty and legislative responsibility and, considering the matter from the perspective of the Northern Ireland patient, we must think long and hard before we cede that responsibility.

The society could be made more open, transparent and inclusive to patients, perhaps through lay representation. However, the legislation does not provide for that. The legislation has been in operation for more than 30 years, so we would push for a re-examination of the fundamental legislative framework that the regulatory body, which is empowered to provide sanctions and to regulate the profession, works to. If that could be changed, the Bill would enable the boards to reflect the requirements of the professional regulatory body.

Dr McClelland: The Council for Health Care Regulatory Excellence in London oversees all the regulators. However, at its inception in 2004–05, it saw no place for the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland.

That attitude softened following Dame Janet Smith's report. The view then was that, because of Northern Ireland's small population, its land border with another country and because it worked in a different way from the rest of the UK, pharmacy in Northern Ireland was one of the best regulated of the healthcare professions. However, the system was thought too resource-intensive to be duplicated. The chairperson of the Council for Health Care Regulatory Excellence asked me whether I thought that our local system for pharmacy regulation and inspection could be applied across the United Kingdom. I had to answer in the negative, because I thought it too resource-intensive.

If the present system is considered too resource-intensive, we must ask ourselves whether the Bill, with its provisions to set up another register and inspection regime in the health boards and the duplication that that would involve, would not be even more resource-intensive.

Mr Anderson: We have a high-quality system in which the inspectorate is separate from the organisation, and that is why it received acclaim from Dame Janet Smith. Dame Janet also considered the possibility of rolling out that system across the UK but felt that it was too resource-intensive. We must ask ourselves whether that is a good reason to throw away our system and change to one that might not be as effective or efficient.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your fine presentation; you have given the Committee food for thought. You will receive a copy of the report of our proceedings. The Committee would appreciate copies of any speaking notes that were used.

I welcome Ms Maggie Reilly, the Chief Officer of the Western Health and Social Services Council and Ms Stella Cunningham, the Chief Officer of the Southern Health and Social Services Council. Please address specific provisions in the Bill and tell the Committee which clauses, if any, you would like to see amended.

Your presentation should last 10 minutes, and then it will be open to Committee members to ask questions. You are most welcome, and I look forward to hearing your presentation.

Ms Maggie Reilly (Western Health and Social Services Council): Thank you very much. Good afternoon, everyone. Many of you will be aware of the existence of the four health councils — one in each health board area — which were established in 1991. They are often called watchdog bodies for patients as they serve as a voice for them. Therefore the four health councils welcome the opportunity that the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety has given us to present our views on the provisions of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill.

Our presentation is based on the views of council members across Northern Ireland and on our analysis of the concerns of the public and service users about the Bill. In particular, we will mention some of the issues that were raised directly with us as we supported people who were making complaints in the Health Service.

The Committee's invitation gives recognition to the health councils' role and we thank you for that. We intend to provide a much fuller response to all the Bill's provisions and amendments later. Ms Stella Cunningham will provide you with our views on general dental services, and I will follow that with our comments on the provisions regarding disqualification by the tribunal, after which you will want to ask questions.

Ms Stella Cunningham (Southern Health and Social Services Council): The four health councils are pleased to offer comments on the clauses in the Bill that deal with dental services. Dental services are a core part of National Health Service provision and are fundamental to the general health of our population. This is a matter that the health councils have inquired into regularly since our establishment in 1991. You have been provided with recent research by the southern council into patient experiences of general dental services, and you have also been supplied with a joint statement from the four councils highlighting what we believe to be the crucial issues from the patient's perspective.

I want to make three points this afternoon. Patients' aspirations are changing and dental work is increasingly seen as a fashion accessory; however, Northern Ireland still has the worst dental health record in the UK, and we live with the political decision not to fluoridate the water supply.

First, we support the provisions of clause 2 for proposed new article 60A: access to NHS dentistry is at a critical point in Northern Ireland. If the new dental contract is not speedily resolved, the NHS will continue to leak dentists until the only option will be private treatment, and that could disadvantage vulnerable groups. In the southern area we conducted a survey of 68 dental practices in October 2006. At that time, 43% of practices in the southern area were registering NHS patients. When we updated the survey in May 2007, only 12 practices, or 21%, were still registering NHS patients. This means that it is virtually impossible to register with a dentist as an NHS patient in Newry and South Down, while in an area such as Dungannon there is extremely limited choice. That situation is replicated throughout Northern Ireland.

In the northern area only 27 practices, or 32%, now accept new NHS patients. There are no practices open in Carrickfergus, Cookstown or Magherafelt. Alongside the situation in Dungannon, we see that there is practically no capacity in the whole of the mid-Ulster area. In the western area there is no statutory out-of-hours dental provision; it has been left to dentists to provide that service. There is now no access to NHS dentists in Fermanagh or Omagh.

The health councils believe that there is a moral issue at stake: the public purse contributes to the training of dentists but does not gain full advantage from that contribution. Access to services also depends on where a patient lives.

Secondly, the health and social services councils welcome proposed new article 61, which the Bill will insert into the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972, as it will allow health and social services boards to make such arrangements as they see fit to provide dental services, whether by employing salaried dentists or by making local arrangements with primary dental care practitioners. Such arrangements should be based on local need and should aim at ensuring maximum choice for service users in a way that does not lead to NHS provision being perceived as a second-class service.

There will not be a one-size-fits-all solution. The Northern Health and Social Services Board has sought to employ salaried dentists; the Southern Health and Social Services Board's preferred option is to enter into contracts with high-street dentists for specific NHS slots. Whatever local arrangements may be made, they must be sustainable in the long term and provide boards with the ability to influence the location of practices to ensure equity of provision.

Finally, on proposed new article 61A and proposed new schedule 15A that clause 2(2) and clause 4(3) respectively will insert into the 1972 Order, the health and social services councils believe that the new contract should review dental charges. The present system is cumbersome for dentists, confusing for patients and does not reward health promotion activity. A simpler tariff of charges limited to basic dental care, including health promotion, could separate services that are required for good general dental health from cosmetic treatments. A charging system that allowed patients to retain their NHS entitlement, while paying for enhanced treatments that are not available on the NHS, would retain the principle behind an NHS dental service and meet the expectations of today's service users. We also suggest that a further group — people aged 65 and over — be added to the list at paragraph 1(1) of proposed new schedule 15A.

We welcome the fact that the Bill allows a new dental contract to be negotiated. We urge that the opportunity to secure quality accessible dental services for all sections of our community should not be lost.

Ms Reilly: On the issue of disqualification by tribunal, the four health and social services councils welcome and strongly endorse schedule 1(5)

“After paragraph 1 (7), insert—

‘(7A) The third condition for disqualification is that the person concerned is unsuitable (by virtue of professional or personal conduct) to be included, or to continue to be included in the list.’”

That ground is well recognised by the professional regulatory bodies and is in keeping with the principles of good clinical and social-care governance and of public accountability. We fully concur with the extension of the category of professions to include all practitioners who are on, or have applied to be included on, the board's list so that all such practitioners will be subject to the tribunal's jurisdiction.

It is self-evident that if a disqualification judgement is made against a practitioner, the sanction should be upheld in all board areas of Northern Ireland. Arrangements should be put in place to ensure that any sanctions that a tribunal in Northern Ireland, England, Scotland or Wales makes are appropriately communicated across the system to ensure that a disqualified practitioner may not practise in any of those regions. Therefore there is merit in having a UK-wide list that is open to all boards and Health Service commissioners. With the move towards greater co-operation and shared care for patients using the health service in the Republic of Ireland, and given some of the border-area arrangements, we hope that further arrangements will be put in place to ensure that such sanctions are communicated, recognised and enacted in both jurisdictions.

There should be a formal interface and integration between the function of the tribunal and that of the professional regulatory bodies on matters of alleged serious misconduct. That seems to have been missed in the Bill. We fully support the provision to allow boards to suspend temporarily a practitioner on referral to a tribunal, as that will create greater safety for patients.

In our experience, when a matter of conduct is referred to a body such as the General Medical Council and the case is judged to warrant a full investigation, boards do not have the power to suspend the practitioner temporarily. We want reassurance that the Bill will reflect the need for boards to be able to use temporary suspension for matters of serious misconduct, whether such cases are referred to the professional regulatory body or to the tribunal. The Bill makes no reference to referrals to the professional regulatory body. In cases of potentially serious misconduct, it seems logical to offer the same level of safety when a practitioner is referred to the regulatory body as when the matter is referred to the tribunal.

However, we caution against prolonged precautionary suspension as the practitioner has a right to have his case heard in a timely manner.

There may also be issues about a board's ability to fund and find temporary replacements for suspended practitioners, and that may affect patients. However, neither of those considerations should influence a decision to make a precautionary suspension.

Finally, we want to ensure that provisions to extend the powers and functions of the tribunal are open and transparent so that the public and patients can have full confidence in its workings and decisions.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your submission. Will the arrangements under the Bill be sustainable in the longer term?

Ms Reilly: Do you mean sustainable in general or in specific areas?

The Chairperson: In general terms.

Ms Reilly: Ensuring that all the provisions of the Bill are enacted will involve a cost. The Bill has been prepared with the present model of four health and social services boards in mind. However, a single health and social services authority, under the RPA, will presumably replace those boards. Therefore to ensure sustainability, account must be taken of imminent changes.

As regards patient safety, it depends what is meant by sustainability. Patient safety is most important, and the Bill reinforces it. The other issue for us is access to services. Therefore sustainability will ultimately depend on how much is invested.

Ms Cunningham: Since we do not have a sustainable dental service, we need the Bill to drive forward and build one.

Mrs Hanna: As regards driving forward dental services and improving access to them, we accept the points that you make. Will the Bill achieve those aims?

Ms Cunningham: It will enable the development of a new general dental services contract. The other important point is the role of the boards, which, as Ms Reilly said, will be replaced at some stage. The boards control the development of doctors' practices and pharmacies; however, dental surgeries are outside that control. Dental provision is a cornerstone of healthcare, and it should be treated in the same way as the provision of GP services. It is essential that boards have some control over the development of dental practices.

Mrs Hanna: Therefore a broad spread of services should be covered.

Ms Cunningham: Yes.

Mrs Hanna: Will dental provision be covered or is an act of faith involved?

Ms Cunningham: It is increasingly the case that more dental practitioners operate in the private sector than in the NHS sector, so there will always be some tension. However, giving boards a clearer role in deciding on the location of practices can only strengthen their hand.

Ms Reilly: To reinforce that point, it is important to note that this is the start of a process that will enable a contract to be hammered out between dentists and a board that will have some responsibility for commissioning dental services.

Mrs Hanna: Therefore it is the detail that is needed.

Ms Reilly: Yes, but the Bill is necessary to start the ball rolling and to give it some impetus.

Mr Buchanan: Why are dental practices closing or no longer taking on NHS patients? Dentists say that the NHS does not pay enough to cover a patient's treatment and so they cannot carry out the necessary work to the required standards. That is why they are opting out of the NHS.

Ms Cunningham: We agree with that absolutely. There can only be sustainable NHS dental services if dentists feel valued and are recompensed as part of that. The current funding system is complex and is administratively heavy on dentists. They are not being rewarded for their health-promotion work, which most dentists do as a matter of course, even though they cannot charge for it. Anomalies in the charging system must be sorted out.

Another factor is the change in the way in which dentistry is viewed — affluent sections of society increasingly use the service as a kind of cosmetic-enhancement process. As people who speak from the patient's point of view in the context of the NHS, we believe that what is required is a dental service that can meet all sections of our community's health needs. We must ensure, through the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, that dentists are rewarded for operating in the less affluent and more peripheral areas. Everyone needs access to good, general-health dentistry.

Dr Deeny: I agree. Maggie, you said that different areas have limited access to health services and dental services. As a GP, I am aware that there have been access problems in the south-west of Northern Ireland at weekends.

We have just learnt that Mr Shaun Woodward is to be the new Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. He said previously that the review of public administration (RPA) could result in the four health and social services councils being amalgamated into one body, which is to be called the patient client council (PCC). I do not like the word "client"; I prefer "patient".

As this is the first time that the health and social services councils have given evidence to the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for my benefit and that of the Committee, will you clarify the role that they play? How much clout do the councils have? I know that they are supposed to be the patients' representative or spokesperson. There are many issues and problems across Northern Ireland; I hear about them every day. Do the public know enough about the councils, or about the proposed PCC?

Yesterday, in Omagh, a mother gave birth to twins in a hospital that has no maternity backup whatsoever. That is totally unacceptable, yet that sort of problem occurs all the time. What can be done if patients approach the councils with concerns about services that are completely inadequate and unacceptable? Could the public be made more aware of the councils' role?

It is good that the councils can lobby a Committee such as this, but will they, in future, be able to address patients' serious concerns about healthcare and health provision across Northern Ireland? Will a new single body have more power and clout?

Ms Reilly: The health and social services councils were established in 1990. When they started, they were only ever meant to be a committee of local people nominated to a council to debate and discuss healthcare issues, to raise them through their committee, to write letters to the appropriate bodies, and to lobby in that form.

As they developed, they did not have the appropriate funding to match that development. Furthermore, as the public became more aware that there was an independent body, speaking on their behalf, they began to go to the health and social services councils to ask them to intervene on their behalf, whether that was to support them in making complaints, to lobby on their behalf, or to advocate on behalf of individuals. Therefore part of our remit is to monitor the quality of the services that are provided and the general public's access to those services.

Our role is not to be a proxy patient, because we think that it is incumbent on the Health Service to speak directly to patients about services or changes to services. However, we will speak in the public interest, in the more general interest of patients or clients, or on behalf of any service users.

One of the most important functions that we perform is to support the public when they want to make complaints. Every health body has a complaints system, but sometimes it is inaccessible to members of the public. We support and help the public to understand their rights, and what they should reasonably expect from the system. The councils are available to ensure that the public have full access and receive full answers, and to monitor their progress right through to independent review.

We agree that it was a problem that we have never had the resources to make the public aware of the complaints system. It is a catch-22: when we make the public aware of the system, we do not have the capacity to deal with the resulting influx of enquiries.

Therefore we welcome Shaun Woodward's vision of a new PCC, which he outlined when he was Minister with responsibility for health. He said that a new council would have better resources and be much more powerful. However, the power will probably lie in the new council's level of influence — to whom it has the right to speak directly; whom it can pressure to make changes; its right to be listened to; and how its recommendations are acted on — as opposed to having statutory powers to act there and then. Such power rightly belongs to the regulatory bodies, such as the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA).

The Chairperson: I see that there are no further questions. That was a short session. I thank you, Maggie and Stella, for your interesting presentation.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Thursday 5 July 2007

HEALTH (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) BILL (NIA 2/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mrs Iris Robinson (Chairperson)
Mrs Michelle O'Neill (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Thomas Buchanan
Rev Dr Robert Coulter
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mrs Carmel Hanna
Mr John McCallister
Ms Carál Ní Chuilín
Ms Sue Ramsey

Witnesses:

Mr John Botteley	}	Theatrical Management Association
Mr Nick Livingston	}	Arts Council of Northern Ireland
Mr Robert Kirkwood	}	Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety
Dr Brian Gaffney	}	Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition
Mr Gerry McElwee	}
Mr Seán Martin	}

The Chairperson (Mrs I Robinson): We now come to the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. I refer members to the folder circulated at the Committee meeting of 21 June 2007, which contains the papers relating to the Bill. Members are reminded to bring the folder to each meeting of the Committee Stage of the Bill.

I refer members to the following correspondence on the smoking issue: from the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health; from Northern Ireland Cancer Registry; a letter from the Roy Castle Lung Cancer Foundation; and, finally, a letter dated 28 June 2007 from the Northern Ireland Chief Environmental Health Officers Group. Copies of the letters are in members' packs. An information pack from the Health Promotion Agency has also been tabled for members' information.

During the Committee Stage of the Bill, officials from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Mr John Farrell and Mr Robert Kirkwood, will be present to provide clarification or to answer questions. Today's evidence session will consider the provision in the Bill to allow performers to smoke if the artistic merit of a performance requires it. During the Second Stage of the Bill, the Minister signalled his intention to withdraw that exemption to the smoking ban at the Consideration Stage of the Bill.

At present, however, clause 15 remains part of the Bill.

The two sets of witnesses in attendance today wish to put the cases for and against the exemption. The sessions will be short, with each organisation allocated about half an hour. The first set of witnesses is from the Theatrical Management Association (TMA) and the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. The Health Committee welcomes Mr John Botteley, who is the Theatre Director at the Grand Opera House and a member of the TMA; and Mr Nick Livingston from the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. Witnesses, you can decide whether one or both of you will give the presentation, for which you will have 10 minutes. After that, there will be about 20 minutes of questions.

Mr John Botteley (Theatrical Management Association): Thank you, Chairperson. I will begin the presentation; Mr Livingston will speak on behalf of the Arts Council. I am a member of the council of the Theatrical Management Association.

The TMA represents a large proportion of the theatres and theatrical production companies in the UK. In Northern Ireland, the Grand Opera House and the Lyric Theatre in Belfast; McNaughton Productions Ltd in County Antrim; the Market Place and Arts Centre in Armagh; the Millennium Forum in Derry; and the Riverside Theatre in Coleraine are all members of the TMA. It also represents the National Operatic and Dramatic Association (NODA), which has 22 affiliate groups in Northern Ireland and which represents 4,000 amateur participants.

Mr Nick Livingston (Arts Council of Northern Ireland): In February 2007, the Arts Council responded to the consultation on smoke-free premises and vehicles and to proposed regulations to be made under powers in the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. The Arts Council welcomed the proposed exemption for actors who participate in a performance when the artistic integrity of the piece determines that smoking should be part of a performance.

The council supports the position taken by Equity and the Society of London Theatre. The exemption should be applied not only in England, but also in Northern Ireland when sections of the work to be performed require it. The Arts Council wants to persuade the Government of its view and notes that the regulations apply only to performers and not to the place of performance or premises, and only when justified by the plot. Exemptions are in place in England and in the Irish Republic, where actors have the option to use herbal cigarettes.

The Arts Council is not opposed to the introduction of the smoking ban in workplaces and enclosed spaces, nor does it dispute the evidence that has been provided to the Committee by the Chief Medical Officer that smoking claims the lives of about 2,300 people each year in Northern Ireland — a truly shocking statistic. The Arts Council does, however, consider the exemption to be about more than merely trying to achieve a lifelike effect on stage when an author has written a stage direction that a character should smoke in a scene.

Smoking during scenes of certain plays, such as the modern classic ‘Saturday Night and Sunday Morning’, assists the author to establish the character. The character’s smoking is part of the play and the characterisation and contributes to the quality of the experience that the audience enjoys. Smoking is, therefore, an integral part of that play. Can we imagine, for example, Winston Churchill without his trademark cigar or Joanna Lumley as her character Patsy in ‘Absolutely Fabulous’ without her cigarettes? It is difficult to imagine how that effect would be achieved convincingly in any other way.

The Arts Council is not opposed to the greater freedom of the general public to enjoy smoke-free areas. The general smoking ban is not the issue; the issues is the unique circumstances of theatre, film and television, where smoking is required to establish character, period, historical accuracy or setting when there is no alternative. Interpreting smoking as using “any lit substance” would also rule out the use of herbal cigarettes. Scenes would, therefore, lose the power to convince. Smoking happens in real life, and if the stage is to reflect real life in all its diversity, theatre practitioners must be able to use the tools of their craft to make effective use of props and to sustain the power of the scene.

If a blanket ban on smoking in all public places were imposed, smoking would be one of the few human behaviours that could not be portrayed on stage, film or television, and that would be extraordinary. We accept, for example, that an actor can take a drink on stage; however, he is not consuming alcohol but a substitute, such as apple juice, Ribena or burnt sugar. Real blood is not shed on stage in a production that contains violent scenes; a substitute is used. Therefore smoking would become one of the few human behaviours that could not be simulated on stage.

In his evidence to the Committee on 14 June, the Chief Medical Officer referred to the dangerous effect that an exemption would have on actors and performers; but that is difficult, if not impossible, to establish. The risk to theatregoers from short-term exposure to smoke in brief scenes is incalculably small.

Is there any real evidence that attending a theatrical performance at which a few plumes of smoke drift forward from the stage amounts to passive smoking? Is there a material health risk to the audience? Is there any known evidence of risk from smoking herbal cigarettes? Theatres are huge spaces, and smoke quickly dissipates into the fly tower and backstage. The inconvenience and disruption to the public who are sitting in the auditorium is small.

We are concerned about the intrusion on artists’ liberty. Furthermore, an issue of artistic quality arises. Northern Ireland is renowned throughout the world for the quality of its contemporary theatre, with playwrights such as Graham Reid and Brian Friel having brought great distinction to Northern Ireland. The public has a right to know that what it witnesses on stage is being represented as the author wrote it. Were we to compromise that, our reputation as a centre of theatrical excellence and distinction might be short-lived. To ban smoking on stage would be a cruel judgement on those who care about and work in theatre, and whose endeavours have succeeded in creating artistic integrity of a calibre that is valued and acknowledged internationally.

The TMA believes that a blanket ban on smoking in public places will reduce the choice available to audiences in Northern Ireland. Northern Ireland depends on touring product from the rest of the United Kingdom, and it is difficult to see how scenes could be adapted or rewritten to accommodate our audiences. Our argument that herbal cigarettes — for which there are no known health risks — proposes a reasonable alternative. Theatres are wide-open spaces in which the smoke quickly dissipates, causing little inconvenience to the public.

Mr Botteley: The public areas in the Grand Opera House have been virtually smoke-free for the past 10 years. Since it reopened in October last year, the theatre — front of house and backstage — has had a total smoking ban in place, with the exception of a couple of occasions when actors smoked on stage.

I support the legislation. An artist friend of mine died of lung cancer as a result of exposure to smoky venues. The entertainer Roy Castle, whom the Chairperson mentioned, died of a smoking-related disease, which he attributed to working in arts venues. Therefore I am aware of the situation.

The TMA does not want to return to those times. However, we do seek an exemption for the very occasional occurrence when smoking is important to a production. Theatre portrays society warts and all; it portrays fiction, fact and fantasy. We are concerned that, without the exemption, we would have to censor productions, without there being any resultant health benefit.

Theatre portrays the best and the worst of people. The longest-running play in the history of theatre, 'The Mousetrap', by Agatha Christie, is still performing in London after 55 years. Its central theme is murder, but, of course, no actual murder takes place. In the theatre, we use artifice. At Second Stage, the Minister cited 'Julius Caesar'. He is right to say that no real blood is shed in productions; however, as an alternative, actors can use what resembles real blood in order to convince audiences.

The problem is that although there are realistic alternatives to blood and shootings, we cannot find a realistic alternative to smoking. The Grand Opera House production of 'Chicago', which was staged last week, featured a dance sequence that is a stylised portrayal of 1920s America — a time when many men smoked. In order to comply with the new legislation, all the dancers in that scene had unlit cigarettes. It looked completely unconvincing and, frankly, ludicrous.

There is an argument that smoking on stage encourages others to smoke. However, a recent production of 'Trainspotting' at the Grand Opera House was described by one customer as the best argument against drug taking that he had ever seen. Smoking was integral to the plot, and had a smoking ban been in place, that play could not have been staged in Northern Ireland.

In addition, the law can restrict what is seen on television or on film. On the first day of the ban in England, Dot Cotton of 'EastEnders' was portrayed lighting up as usual in the Queen Vic pub, only to be told to put out her cigarette. That is an example of how drama can reflect what happens in people's lives. It is interesting to note that that scene could not have been filmed in Northern Ireland.

In the portrayal of historical characters, smoking partly defines who those characters are — Mr Livingstone referred to Winston Churchill. In 'The Rat Pack – Live from Las Vegas', Dean Martin always has a characteristic cigarette in one hand and a glass of bourbon in the other. The Grand Opera House had two sell-out weeks of that production in January 2007; had the smoking ban been in place, that show could not have been produced in Northern Ireland because the characterisation could not have been made without the bourbon and the cigarette.

It can be argued that alcohol is just as damaging to health as smoking. As Mr Livingstone said, alcohol can be simulated on stage whereas smoking cannot. The fact that the legislation differs in various jurisdictions poses a serious problem for productions staged in the Grand Opera House. An actor can smoke a cigarette on stage in England or a herbal alternative in the South of Ireland, but they cannot do so in Northern Ireland. Most of the productions staged in the Grand Opera House come from England or the South of Ireland; we would either have to change those well-rehearsed productions — which is inconceivable — or do without them.

A couple of weeks ago, I attended a West End production of 'The Hound of the Baskervilles', which I was considering bringing to Northern Ireland. The production features Sherlock Holmes lighting his pipe. That is an important part of the show, but the ban means that I cannot bring that production to Northern Ireland. Surely some herbal tobacco smoke from Sherlock Holmes's pipe would not affect anyone's health.

In conclusion, the Theatrical Management Association and the National Operatic and Dramatic Association ask for an exemption from the ban on smoking on stage where it is essential to the plot or to historical accuracy, and in associated rehearsals. At the very least, as a compromise we ask that the law allow the use of non-tobacco products. In that way, tobacco smoke could be simulated in the same way that murder is simulated without the use of real blood. We believe that there is no risk to health in allowing the very occasional portrayal of smoking in the wide-open space of a theatre stage or, for that matter, a film studio.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much, Mr Livingstone and Mr Botteley. I shall now open up the discussion so that members can ask questions. I visited Disney-MGM Studios in America with my grandchildren where we enjoyed seeing simulations of battles scenes from the 'Star Wars' trilogy and the magnificent props from the film studios. I find it difficult to accept that no one in the theatrical world, which you are representing today, can find a realistic alternative to smoking on stage.

Mr Botteley, you said that the legislation in the Republic of Ireland allowed some flexibility in these matters. What did you mean by that?

Mr Botteley: Actors can smoke herbal cigarettes on theatre stages in the Republic of Ireland. The legislative definition of smoking in the South refers to tobacco; herbal cigarettes can, therefore, be smoked on stage in that jurisdiction. It is my understanding that no health risks are associated with the smoking of herbal cigarettes or the passive smoking of such products.

That is the alternative that we seek. I agree that Disney-MGM Studios use alternatives. However,

Dean Martin's having a cigarette in his hand is central to the way in which his character is defined, but a burning cigarette is not permitted in Northern Ireland. It is permitted in England, and in the Republic herbal cigarettes can be smoked on stage.

The Chairperson: What happens when touring productions go to Wales and Scotland?

Mr Livingston: No exemption was granted in Wales and Scotland, so those productions would be in the same position as in Northern Ireland. The difference is that Northern Ireland has an established reputation for excellence in the theatre, and it would be unfortunate if that reputation were diminished because of the general ban on smoking. Touring productions may not come to Northern Ireland because rehearsals would be expensive; scenes would have to be prepared differently and different stage directions given.

Mr Botteley: Wales and Scotland have the same limited choice that we in Northern Ireland argue against. Certain productions would not be seen because producers would not want to re-rehearse a scene for one visit to Northern Ireland. Productions in Scotland and Wales are similarly limited.

The Chairperson: You did not address the issue of the use of convincing props.

Mr Botteley: It is against the law to use a lit cigarette, and no convincing alternative has been found. In certain scenes, it is important that actors bring a burning cigarette to their lips. In 'Chicago', unlit cigarettes were used, and they looked ridiculous. In the Lyric Theatre's production of 'Dancing at Lughnasa', Brian Friel had to rewrite a scene because of the smoking ban, which is fine, provided the author is available to do that. That play is about a young girl in the 1920s and 1930s, whose rebelliousness and emancipation are characterised by the fact that she smokes. That is a powerful image. When I saw the play last week, the actor had to open a packet of Woodbines, take out a cigarette, put it to her lips and then put it back on the table without smoking the cigarette. Most of the audience were preoccupied by her not smoking the cigarette because of the smoking ban rather than engaging with the plot of the play.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: You said that you believed that herbal cigarettes would not be harmful to audiences because of the wide-open space in a theatre. What scientific evidence do you have for that?

Mr Botteley: I cannot cite any scientific evidence to support that. The area above the stage in the Grand Opera House is twice the size of the stage, and the auditorium is massive. However, there is no scientific evidence that our proposed substitute — herbal cigarettes — damages health. I cannot believe that one cigarette in a huge space — 50 to 60 times the size of the Senate Chamber — would cause any health-related disease. The smoke would go up into the ether, and it would be difficult for anyone to inhale it.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: Can I take it that that part of your evidence is purely an assumption?

Mr Botteley: Yes, it is an assumption.

Mrs Hanna: I fondly support the arts, including the Grand Opera House, the Lyric Theatre and other venues; however, I do not believe that the absence of a lit cigarette will affect acting ability. You have referred to the excellent standards of acting in Northern Ireland. Do you not think that good actors can simulate smoking with an unlit cigarette? I have seen 'Dancing at Lughnasa' at the Abbey Theatre and at other venues, and I would not have been distracted if the cigarette had not been lit.

Mr Botteley: I understand where you are coming from. The problem is that there is no ban in England; therefore plays, as rehearsed there, will not be able to come here. If there were a blanket ban throughout the United Kingdom, however much we disliked it, we would have to cope. With few exceptions, the productions that come to the Opera House are generated in the West End or in other parts of England, where no such ban exists. It is a question of providing theatre-going choice for the people of Northern Ireland.

The 'Hound of the Baskervilles' and 'Trainspotting', which are great productions and award-winning shows, cannot come to Northern Ireland because their management would not change their structures to suit one venue. If actors could smoke herbal cigarettes on stage, such productions would come to Northern Ireland.

Mrs Hanna: I cannot understand why that should be. The only difference is that our legislation would require cigarettes to remain unlit. I am not an actor, but I could pretend to smoke a cigarette on stage — I could pretend to puff and inhale; I do not believe that it would make much of a difference. Is the problem that actors would not be allowed to come on stage here unless they performed plays in exactly the same way as in England or is it because they would not wish to do so?

Mr Botteley: Last week, unlit cigarettes were used in a production of 'Chicago' at the Opera House — they were completely unconvincing. Although that is a personal view, it is shared by the Theatrical Management Association, which represents every theatre director in the UK.

Mr Livingston: When the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety made his remarks to this Committee on 17 June, I was surprised by the unprecedented outcry from actors in Northern Ireland. Articles and blogs on the Internet appeared almost immediately, and there was an in-depth article in 'The Stage'. There is a general feeling that to implement this ban would be to chip away at an important artistic liberty. It seems extraordinary that the stage, which can so accurately portray every other aspect of our lives, will be silenced in this area. From the perspective of theatre technicians and actors, it seems incomprehensible.

Mrs O'Neill: What do the groups that are lobbying against artists being allowed to smoke on stage feel about herbal cigarettes? Have you been in contact with such groups?

Mr Botteley: I have not been in contact with any such groups. I am aware that, as with everything, there is a suitable alternative, and the only realistic alternative to smoking tobacco is smoking herbal cigarettes.

Ms S Ramsey: I thank the guys for their presentation. It was said that some actors perceive the proposed introduction of this ban as chipping away at their profession. I disagree. Things change every day — we live in a changing world. I do not wish to be flippant, but, not so long ago, it was thought OK to send children up chimneys. People realised that that was wrong and changed their attitudes.

Roy Castle was mentioned in the presentation, and hope was expressed that if smoking were allowed to continue in auditoriums, no harm would come to audiences in those wide-open spaces. For health and safety reasons, a duty of care exists for staff and workers. The concerns apply not only to audiences but to those who work in those environments every day.

Is there any evidence that plays have not been taken to Scotland and Wales? Dean Martin and 'The Rat Pack' were mentioned. Has that show not been staged in Scotland or Wales?

Mr Botteley: The ban has been in force for too short a time. I arrange the programme for the Opera House 18 months in advance, as do my colleagues, so it is too early to gather evidence. I spoke to a colleague who runs the Festival Theatre in Edinburgh, and the problem has yet to arise there — it is too early to say whether the ban will affect shows in Scotland.

I made a direct programming decision not to bring 'The Hound of the Baskervilles' to Northern Ireland because smoking a pipe is integral to the plot. Therefore, I made that direct decision.

To answer the question about sending kids up chimneys; the difference is that the theatre portrays history, whereas life moves on. In all other circumstance, the ban is utterly justified. However, we still need to portray historical events. For example, 'Mary Poppins', which is currently playing in the West End, portrays chimney sweeps going up chimneys. That is a portrayal; it does not actually happen — that is the difference.

Ms S Ramsey: I am well aware of that. However, Mr Botteley has said that there is evidence that we will lose out on the theatre productions that could be shown here. The Chairperson asked about the situation in Scotland and Wales because the same legislation operates in those regions also. Can it be said — 18 months in advance — that there is no way that 'The Rat Pack: Live from Las Vegas' will be shown in Scotland or Wales because of the smoking ban?

Mr Botteley: I cannot speak for what will happen in Scotland and Wales; I can only mention the discussion I would need to have with the producer about bringing the show here. The fact is that it would be a lesser production if Dean Martin were not shown in the way in which he is characterised in the current form of the show. I can confirm that 'The Hound of the Baskervilles' will not be coming to Northern Ireland.

Mr Livingston: Essentially, substitute stage directions would have to be written. Reflecting on the points that have been made, the view of most actors is that they respect the author's integrity and would wish to see his intentions carried out. They would want to present a piece so that Northern Ireland audiences could see it in the manner in which the author originally intended.

We will arrive quite quickly at a situation where it will not be possible to approach authors and ask them to write new stage directions for plays because in some cases they will be dead. In those circumstances, that part of the repertoire would be seen less frequently, and that would deny choice to audiences in Northern Ireland.

Mr Botteley: The other issue is that 'The Rat Pack: Live from Las Vegas' is an accurate reconstruction of an concert that actually took place. It has been recreated as accurately as possible from film footage and, therefore, the smoking that featured in the concert must be portrayed in the show. I am not saying that it would be impossible to change that, but it would be against the artistic integrity of the piece to do so. I have not spoken to the producer, but if he said that he did not want to change that aspect, the only option would be not to show it here.

Mr Buchanan: I apologise for my late arrival.

I, too, am a great lover of the arts. However, I find it difficult to believe that those involved in the arts and the theatre cannot come up with something that is akin to a cigarette. If tobacco or cigarettes were allowed to be used during theatrical performances, would that not create the potential for licensed premises across Northern Ireland to be afforded the same right?

Cigarette smoke causes many deaths, and we need to provide a healthier society for young people, many of who see performers as role models. Would it not defeat the purpose of introducing a smoking ban across Northern Ireland if we were to allow performers to smoke cigarettes during performances such as those described by Mr Botteley? Exempting theatres would defeat the purpose of the ban and provide a bad example to young people in society.

The detrimental effect that the smoking ban will have on theatres across the Province and on the various plays and performances that will not be staged has been mentioned. How much will theatres lose financially because they are unable to present such plays during the first 12 months of the ban?

Mr Botteley: The member has asked several questions. First, herbal cigarettes would be a suitable substitute for tobacco; however, they are also covered by the legislation. Secondly, as regards the effects that smoking on stage might have on young people, theatre drama shows life as it is, not as we would like it to be. I do not believe that an Agatha Christie play showing a murder on stage will encourage people to commit murder. Smoking on stage will not encourage anyone to smoke. People smoke; therefore drama should be able to show that.

The example of Dot Cotton in 'EastEnders' was very clear. The message in that instance was the opposite of the encouragement that Mr Buchanan suggested. Dot lit a cigarette in a pub and was told that, for a very good reason, she could not do that. That was a very positive anti-smoking message.

'Trainspotting' is a very powerful play about people with drug addictions. However, its message is exactly the opposite; it is about not taking drugs. It would not have been possible to stage that play if the actors had not been able to light up, because it was about the fact that lighting up — in this case, rolling joints and injecting heroin — was bad. The piece demonstrated that that was bad, and if the actors could not portray the drugs being taken, they could not demonstrate the message.

There would be no loss of revenue to theatres. The ban will have no financial impact, but it will have an impact on art. That is why we are here.

The Chairperson: Does that answer all your questions, Tom?

Mr Buchanan: Yes.

Mr McCallister: Tom asked most of the questions that I was interested in. I agree with Tom and Carmel: it is incredible that, given the ingenuity of theatre producers, there is no better alternative than herbal cigarettes. I worry about the effects of smoking on young people, and I worry about the message that would be given if smoking on stage were to be permitted. As Tom also said, that might open the legislation to challenges from pubs. If pub takings were being affected by the smoking ban, then why should representatives of the licensed trade not ask for exemptions also? I feel strongly that the Committee must take a stand on this matter.

I am involved in amateur dramatics, so I — [Interruption.]

Ms S Ramsey: It is called the Assembly.

The Chairperson: Order.

Mr McCallister: I am interested in the arts and in theatrical productions. However, the fact that Northern Ireland's legislation is in line with that in Scotland and Wales leaves our English colleagues as the odd ones out. The sooner they join us, the sooner the problem will be solved.

Mr Livingston: We do not dispute the need for smoke-free workplace regulations in Northern Ireland. However, theatre is a special case. Points that might be made, for example, by the licensed trade, are not necessarily those that we would embrace. Our point is that, if a stage direction — which is a very specific instruction by an author — requires actors to smoke, we are going to be faced with a dilemma. Should we ignore the author's direction, and the characterisation it implies, and would we lose the value of the social or historical setting of the piece? Would the scenes portrayed on stage still be convincing? Would the lack of smoking erode the quality of the experience that the public currently enjoys? Fundamentally, would it affect the choice of plays that will be offered to the public on Northern Ireland's stages?

Mr McCallister: Actors do not have to get drunk to portray drunkenness convincingly. Therefore, they do not have to smoke to make a role convincing.

Mr Livingston: We covered the point about alcohol. Alcohol is not consumed on stage because a substitute can be used. We are suggesting that a substitute for tobacco be considered.

The Chairperson: Carmel, do you want to ask a supplementary question?

Mrs Hanna: As someone who encourages and supports the arts, I hope that actors will not lose out on jobs because of artistic integrity.

We all feel strongly that the ban should apply to all workplaces, including the theatre. However, I hope that actors will still visit here regularly and will not stay away simply because they cannot light up on stage.

Mr Botteley: Let me make one supplementary point. It does not take a great deal of intelligence to realise that we are batting on a fairly sticky wicket here but, pending more research on herbal cigarettes, would it be possible for us to put warning signs outside theatres or reach another compromise?

Although many of my colleagues feel that there should be no compromise on artistic integrity, the people of Northern Ireland will lose out by being given an inferior choice in comparison with that which is available in England. I am a theatre director, not a scientific expert. If herbal cigarettes do not constitute a risk to health, as I am assured is the case, could an exemption be given for smoking those instead of tobacco? Such an exemption would seem to satisfy all the genuine objections that members raised while providing the alternative for which they have rightly asked. We are not set on having an exemption for cigarettes; we are just asking that the ban should be realistic in the context of the piece.

The Chairperson: We take that point on board.

Ms S Ramsey: I want to make two quick points. First, as Carmel Hanna pointed out, if the Bill were to be introduced, as worded, it could offer individual actors opportunities for smoking that they would not otherwise have. Secondly, if a compromise were to be included in the Bill — which I would not support — who would be responsible for policing such legislation?

Mr Botteley: As the person responsible for the Grand Opera House, I would be facing a substantial fine were the law to be broken. Members can be absolutely sure that I would police it.

Ms S Ramsey: I am conscious of the fact — and I am just trying to think this through — that if Belfast City Council's smoke wardens entered the Grand Opera House and smelled smoke there, performers could claim to be smoking as part of a rehearsal. That suggestion needs to be thought out more.

Mr Botteley: We would have no objection to policing the legislation or to welcoming wardens from Belfast City Council as we do as regards all the other licensing legislation to which we are subject.

The Chairperson: Unfortunately, smoking was made glamorous by film stars and stage actors. The whole thing probably emanated from American movies and from the advertising of cigarette brands such as Camel and Marlboro. Tobacco advertising was then banned. In Northern Ireland, we have a big problem of very young teenage girls taking up smoking as a habit. If we were to slacken the legislation by providing exemptions, where would we stop? We would simply be opening a can of worms.

I hope that the Committee has given you a fair hearing but, as you may have gauged, many of us feel that the interests and welfare of the people of Northern Ireland are best served by protecting them from secondary inhalation and from being in smoky environments. Having said that, I sincerely thank you both, Mr Botteley and Mr Livingston, for attending.

Obviously, the Committee will need to address issues such as what constitutes herbal cigarettes and other minutiae when it considers the Bill line by line.

Thank you for attending. No doubt we will hear from you again.

Mr Botteley: I thank the Committee for listening.

The Chairperson: Mr Kirkwood, does the Republic of Ireland legislation contain an exemption that allows thespians to smoke herbal cigarettes on stage?

Mr Robert Kirkwood (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Yes. During the drafting of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, a conscious decision was taken to adopt a definition of “smoking” that was similar to that applied in England, Wales and Scotland. The definition in article 2(2)(b) of the Smoking (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 states: “smoking includes being in possession of lit tobacco or of anything lit which contains tobacco, or being in possession of any other lit substance in a form in which it could be smoked.”

That definition was chosen largely because it was designed to aid enforcement in cases in which those caught in breach of the ban would claim that their cigarette did not contain tobacco.

It was considered that amending the legislation in order to permit the smoking of herbal cigarettes on stage would make enforcement more difficult. Any amendment to the Bill allowing for the smoking of herbal cigarettes would mean further defining what herbal cigarettes are. For example, would cannabis qualify?

The Chairperson: As well as acting, the performers would all be merry. Thank you very much.

I welcome the representatives of the Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition: Dr Brian Gaffney, chief executive of the Health Promotion Agency for Northern Ireland; Mr Gerry McElwee, head of cancer prevention at the Ulster Cancer Foundation; and Seán Martin from the Chief Environmental Health Officers Group.

Dr Brian Gaffney (Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition): I thank the Chairperson and the Committee for allowing the Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition to state its case for opposing the proposed exemption.

I am here in my capacity as chairperson of the Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition, which is a coalition of partners from the public sector, statutory bodies, the community and voluntary sectors, and the private sector. Established in the run-up to the introduction of the Smoking (Northern Ireland) Order 2006, the Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition acted as advocates of the legislation and lobbied for its passage. The coalition remains together in order to provide a voice for partners across Northern Irish society in the implementation of smoke-free legislation. We are also trying to improve public health by preventing smoking in general. Accompanying me today are colleagues who each represent their particular sectors on the coalition.

The coalition obviously opposes the proposed exemption. The reasons why the legislation was originally passed must be recalled. We regard “performers”, as clause 15 of the Bill refers to them, as another workforce, who must be protected from the effects of passive smoking. Why is one person’s smoking harmful to others? Tobacco smoke contains about 4,000 chemicals, 60 of which are known or suspected to cause cancer.

It is well known that people who do not smoke, and who are exposed to second-hand smoke, have a higher risk of suffering from lung cancer, heart disease and strokes, than those who are not exposed. It can also induce asthma attacks, cause pregnancy complications, and put children at risk.

A recent review of international research on the immediate health impact of smoke-free workplace legislation found rapid and dramatic improvements. Therefore, as a result of this legislation, we are seeking to achieve rapid and dramatic improvements for every workforce — including the acting profession.

The director general of the World Health Organization (WHO) summed up the evidence by saying:

“The evidence is clear, there is no safe level of exposure to second-hand tobacco smoke”.

That is true whether it involves a few puffs in a theatre, or a large amount of smoke in the theatre because tobacco smoke is a class A carcinogen — that has been accepted.

The proposed exemption is not limited to performances in theatre productions and other mainstream dramatic arts. It is a loose definition and covers any performance in any venue. It could include a performance in a public house, a hall or even a school. It would be ludicrous for smoking to be allowed at a school play, perhaps performed by an outside theatre company, just because of the belief that it is important to artistic integrity. What does “artistic integrity” mean? It has not been defined. We are opposed to the exemption because of the lack of a safe level of exposure to second-hand smoke, and because there are other implications in allowing people to smoke tobacco on stage or to use a substitute.

The influence of the tobacco industry in film and television is well documented. The ‘British Medical Journal’ has clearly highlighted that influence amongst teenagers. The five-year tobacco action plan for Northern Ireland, which we all work to — including, to my knowledge, the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, as a statutory body that is seeking to reduce inequalities in health — emphasises the fact that young people, who are affected by those performances, should be protected from tobacco smoke, and should be prevented from smoking.

To include the exemption would weaken legislation that has already been shown to be well supported across industry. It is important to remember that all workforces in Northern Ireland have had to make changes. Why should the performing workforce not have to do so too? The rate of compliance, as members will hear from my colleague, has been 99% or more. There is no doubt that this piece of legislation is well supported.

Some of the points that were raised previously surprised me. Recently, in Edinburgh, Mel Smith gave a successful depiction of Winston Churchill and was able to do so without smoking. Evidence presented on the basis of one’s opinion, or on the basis of one person attending a production, should not be treated seriously.

We are also concerned about the lack of definition of the word “herbal”. I am not sure what that means. By introducing herbal cigarettes, we could be exposing people to damaging substances. I certainly do not know whether or not smoking herbal cigarettes in the presence of someone who has asthma could induce an asthmatic attack. Therefore, we do not support any move to allow the use of herbal cigarettes.

When people go to the theatre or go to a performance, their choice is to go to the theatre — not to have their health damaged. We ask the Committee to take that into consideration.

As a Sherlock Holmes fan, I am surprised and disappointed that one person can make an arbitrary decision to refuse to allow the Northern Ireland public to see a play that we have seen reviewed in London on the basis that it cannot be performed because of a lack of lighting up a pipe. I do not recall that ever affecting my appreciation of Sherlock Holmes.

Mr Seán Martin (Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition): Environmental Health Officers have been charged with enforcing the new legislation. All sectors of industry have embraced it, and we have had practically no difficulties whatsoever. The law is currently being enforced with regard to theatre productions. Permitting an exemption would be a backward, not a forward step, and we would like to move forward.

In less than a year, smoking will also be banned in mental-health units in Northern Ireland. It would be a step in the wrong direction to grant an exemption that would permit actors to smoke as part of a theatrical production. The legislation gives the Minister powers to add to smoke-free premises, and we feel that that is the way forward, rather than going backwards and permitting smoking to be part of stage productions.

I reiterate Dr Gaffney’s point that the word “performers” and not “actors” is being used in the legislation. It means that the exemption would not apply solely to theatres. The ridiculous situation could arise in which, even though smoking is banned in pubs, a theatrical production could be staged in a pub, and it could then be argued that actors should be allowed to smoke there for the sake of artistic integrity. That could lead to double standards being applied. At the moment, we are clear on the law, and people accept it. They supported the legislation before it was introduced, and they have shown that they support it wholeheartedly now. We have had few problems with enforcing the legislation.

Mr Gerry McElwee (Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition): I reiterate the point that second-hand smoke is a killer. Tobacco smoke is a lethal cocktail of 4,000 chemicals including ammonia, arsenic and cyanide. We have heard from Dr Gaffney that there is an increased risk of stroke — up to 80% for non-smokers — not to mention lung cancer and heart disease.

The legislation was introduced after a long battle to protect the health of our population. The legislation is popular, and, hopefully, our research will soon prove that it is beneficial in improving the health of the population and, particularly, that of our workforce.

It is worth remembering that the legislation was introduced following many consultations. There were 71,000 responses from the public consultation in 2005, and 92% of the public informed us that they wanted comprehensive legislation. It would be strange if we were to go back on such popular and effective legislation only two months after its introduction. If our colleagues from the theatre discovered asbestos in a theatre tonight, I assume that they would close it and there would be no performance. However, we do not need to close the theatre to keep out cigarettes — all that we need to do is maintain the current legislation. The question is whether we wish to introduce carcinogens into the workplace and public places — to do so would defy all logic.

The Theatrical Management Association spoke about portraying real life accurately. However, if a play were being staged about the shipyard in the 1940s and 1950s, would real asbestos have to be introduced — I think not.

The association also spoke about herbal cigarettes. However, as Dr Gaffney said, the association did not provide a definition for such a cigarette. As far as I can see, they could be described as cigarettes minus nicotine and, therefore, could give us 3,999 chemicals but not 4,000. The association also stated that it has been assured that herbal cigarettes pose no health risk, but I do not know how it could have been given such an assurance. It defies logic. The Smokefree Northern Ireland Coalition believes that when substances such as herbal cigarettes are burned, similar cocktails of lethal chemicals are produced. There is no safe level, and we should not be exposing ourselves to them.

Smoking in the movies was mentioned. In the 1950s, three times as many people smoked as do now, yet several recent studies have found that there is now more smoking in Hollywood movies than there was in the 1950s. Perhaps it is due to product placement from big industry, but it could also be due to lazy scriptwriters who cannot think of another way to portray tension, rebellion — or whatever other emotion — other than by putting a cigarette into the scene.

I do not believe that there is a case for going back on our legislation. We have heard arguments about actors being unable to portray reality. I do not want to place any more tobacco products on the public stage. However, I will demonstrate an exception. Without needing to do much research, a colleague of mine went to a joke shop and bought this cigarette that I have brought with me. I assure the Committee that talcum powder and not a burning substance is coming out of it. We believe that the Theatrical Management Association has scored an own goal by stating that everything else — cleaning chimneys, producing blood, taking heroin and shooting bullets — can be portrayed on stage except smoking.

It is called acting, and it is time that that option was considered. In any scripts that need to be rewritten, the actor should simply be directed to hold, but not light, a cigarette.

The Chairperson: Thank you. I liked your props, which were most convincing. Indeed, I was going to ask whether you would mind stubbing out your cigarette.

Before I open the floor to members' questions, can I ask why the exemption was successfully included in the legislation in England? I assume that the Health Development Agency made similarly rigorous demands to yours that the Government should not go down that route.

Dr Gaffney: I must emphasise that there was no smoke-free coalition in England. In looking back on how the legislation on smoking was introduced, I refer to New York, which was one of the first cities to introduce a ban. The New York Coalition for a Smoke Free City guided us on our approach. It emphasised the need for a lobby, or advocate body, comprising as many of the public, statutory, community/voluntary and private sectors as possible, to send a consistent message. By following that advice, we succeeded in a way that those in England did not. We were able to push through what we consider to be successful, well-supported legislation, with which there is a high level of compliance.

Mr McCallister: Is there any rock-solid evidence that would make you accept the use of herbal cigarettes?

Dr Gaffney: No one really knows what herbal cigarettes contain. There is no consensus on that and no definition. Therefore to ensure that a dangerous substance was not being introduced into public areas, rigorous trials would have to be carried out to define what is meant by a “herbal” cigarette.

Even allowing herbal cigarettes would create role models who smoke for those young people who see actors doing it on stage. It would also allow owners of other businesses, such as licensed premises, to argue that if smoking on stage does not harm anyone’s health, it should be permitted in their pubs.

How to police the smoking of herbal cigarettes would cause confusion. An exemption to allow smoking on stage would introduce a negative element into what the Chief Medical Officer referred to as probably the most important piece of public-health legislation for many decades. When the ban was introduced in England, Sir Liam Donaldson described it as “a footprint” in public health. Rather than seeking to weaken the legislation, the ban should be supported and additional measures sought to prevent further smoking.

The Chairperson: Are you happy with that answer, Mr McCallister?

Mr McCallister: I am more than happy.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: I thank the witnesses from the coalition for coming today. I am impressed by your arguments, particularly the powerful and valid one about school plays. Is it an insult to the intelligence of the people in the audience that, although they have no problem with accepting actors in a play portraying drug taking, they cannot make a similar leap of imagination on the portrayal of smoking without it actually happening? If the exemption is agreed, how would it be policed? How would we know that the cigarettes being smoked did not contain tobacco?

Dr Gaffney: I have nothing but admiration for professional actors. However, almost every other workforce in Northern Ireland has had to amend its behaviour to comply with legislation that protects its safety. Any building that contains asbestos, which is another class-A carcinogen, must have it removed.

We have legislation on smoking because tobacco smoke is a class-A carcinogen, and the workforce must comply. I expect professional actors to come up with a creative solution by amending or interpreting stage directions to make clear what they are trying to portray. I cannot tell them how to do that, but I am sure that they can come up with an answer.

Mr Martin: The definition of smoking is good and all-encompassing and is written in a way with which the Smokefree Coalition is happy, because it prevents expenditure on analysing products to determine what they are.

The difficulty that we would face if herbal cigarettes were introduced as an option for performers is that smoking is defined in the legislation as using “any lit substance”, including tobacco and herbal cigarettes. That is primarily to make enforcement easier.

If an actor were seen smoking a lit substance, we would not have to take a sample or approach the smoker because there is no funding to send a sample for analysis — he or she would be considered to be smoking. From the perspective of the agency that is charged with enforcement, allowing the use of herbal cigarettes would be a retrograde step.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: In those circumstances would policing the legislation be impossible?

Mr Martin: It would be expensive and difficult for the enforcement agencies. It would also be a backward step, because the legislation makes enforcement easy: everyone understands that smoking cannot be done in public spaces and workplaces.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: Would it insult the intelligence of the audience to expect it to accept a portrayal of drugs, but not of cigarettes?

Dr Gaffney: Any reports that I have heard about current plays have been very positive. I have not heard of anyone saying that they did not enjoy a production because the cigarettes were not lit. I would find it hard to believe if they did.

Mr McCallister: How would you portray Winston Churchill now? [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: There we shall end. Cut.

I watch ‘Bones’, which is so realistic that I sometimes hide behind the cushion. If that programme can have such realistic props, surely a convincing cigarette or pipe can also be created.

I thank you, Brian, Seán and Gerry, for your presentation.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr David McNarry (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley
Lord Browne
Mr Kieran McCarthy
Mr Nelson McCausland
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Pat Ramsey
Mr Ken Robinson
Mr Jim Shannon

Witnesses:

Mr Edwin Poots	} Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure
Mr Colin Jack	} Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure
Miss Irene Knox	} proposed Northern Ireland Library Authority

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): I welcome the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, Mr Edwin Poots, to the meeting. He is accompanied by senior officials.

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): They are Mr Colin Jack and Miss Irene Knox, who is the new chief executive designate of the proposed Northern Ireland library authority.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Minister. I shall hand over to you straight away so that you can make your presentation on the Libraries Bill. Afterwards, the Committee will ask questions.

Mr Poots: I was enjoying the Committee's scones, when I was rudely interrupted.

The Chairperson: I hope that you have not carried any of them into the room in your pocket because eating during the Committee meeting is not permitted.

Mr Poots: We had only half a scone each. However, half a scone is better than none.

It is good to be here. I trust that Committee members had a good break during the summer and that everyone is ready for hard work. There is plenty of work to be done, both by the Department and the Committee. I thank the Committee for my invitation to discuss the timing of the introduction of the library authority.

At the outset, I want to introduce Irene Knox officially. Most members will already know Miss Knox from her previous role as chief executive of the South Eastern Education and Library Board. She has now taken up her post as chief executive designate of the library authority. The circumstances of that appointment have been explained to the Assembly. She took up her post in August 2007 and is on secondment from the South Eastern Education and Library Board, pending the final decision on the legislation. Her task is to lead and take forward the setting-up of the new body. She is happy to talk to the Committee about her key priorities for the next few months. With the Committee's agreement, I will invite her to do so later in the meeting.

At their meeting on 7 June, the Executive agreed that the Libraries Bill should be brought before the Assembly. The Libraries Bill sets out the argument for a single library service for the whole of Northern Ireland that will be managed and delivered by a regional body — the library authority. The matter is now for the Assembly to consider, and I am looking forward to working with the Committee to ensure that the issues are considered fully and that appropriate legislation is produced to establish a library service of which we can be proud.

The creation of a single library authority reflects the review of public administration's (RPA) objective of streamlining the management and delivery of public services. It also reflects the desire to build on the developments that have been made towards joint working at regional level by the five existing library services during the past few years. That work has proved valuable, and I appreciate the way in which the library services of the education and library boards have worked together.

The Library Service's provisions are universal and open to all. They are free at the point of use, and have no entry or eligibility requirements to deter users. They are, therefore, valuable in combating social exclusion and promoting equality of opportunity through meeting a range of needs among individuals and communities.

Even though the Library Service's core services of book lending and reference have not substantially changed, a new core service has been added in recent years — internet access. Furthermore, the way in which libraries operate has changed. There is an additional emphasis on proactive engagement with, and on behalf of, specific social groups, often in partnership with others. It is important to have a structure for the delivery of libraries that will reflect their range of roles and broad customer base and which exploits their potential to contribute to equality of opportunity.

A single library service for Northern Ireland — delivered by one body, linked to other relevant providers and properly positioned to reflect local needs — offers an exciting way forward. Libraries have, inevitably, been the minor partners in education and library boards and the proposed change offers the opportunity to bring a new strategic focus to the delivery of library services that will benefit the public.

Chairperson, I know that you have asked me to talk chiefly about the Committee's concerns on the timing of the introduction of the Libraries Bill, and I am happy to listen to your views and answer questions. However, before we do that, the chief executive designate will say a few words — with the Committee's permission.

Miss Irene Knox (proposed Northern Ireland Library Authority): I thank the Chairperson, the Committee, and the Minister for giving me the opportunity to attend this morning's meeting. I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the Committee about the work that I will be undertaking over the next few months, and I will be happy to return to the Committee at any stage. I am aware that the Committee will be involved in the consideration of the Bill over the next while, and I am content to talk to you at any time about the progress that I am making.

Subject to the Assembly's agreement on the Libraries Bill, the aim is for the Northern Ireland library authority to function as a separate legal entity from 1 April 2008. To achieve that end, there is a significant amount of preparatory work to be done.

My first priority relates to the staff of the service. As Committee members will know, schedule 2 of the Libraries Bill makes provision for the transfer of staff from the existing education and library boards to the Northern Ireland library authority under the terms of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 (TUPE) at the time of commencement of the new authority. At that stage it will be necessary to have a comprehensive framework in place to support the human resource needs of the new organisation and to manage issues such as human resource policies and procedures, payroll, staff recruitment, training, terms and conditions, etc, as well as to establish consultation and negotiating machinery with the trade unions.

The new authority will also require an effective organisational structure to facilitate the delivery of the key priorities for the Library Service as contained in 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries'. That structure must take account of the regional nature of the new organisation as well as the importance of local delivery and local engagement through, for example, the anticipated community planning process. I envisage the library authority having a strong subregional structure that will facilitate involvement and participation at local level.

While people have a right to expect a seamless and equitable service throughout Northern Ireland in relation to core provision, the Library Service must also be responsive to the needs of local communities and tailor its services to meet those needs. The organisational structures I propose to put in place must facilitate that process.

In developing the proposals for that organisational structure I should like to involve the existing chief librarians and their deputies so that the local needs that they are already aware of can be reflected adequately, and that they have ownership of the outcome. Once that structure has been agreed it will be necessary to recruit the senior team — again, I emphasise, on a secondment basis — to help to make that a reality. As I have said, I see that senior team as being few in number.

The quality of the Library Service, now and in the future, is heavily dependent on the professionalism of the staff who work in it. This is an unsettling time for them, and I am very conscious of the need to ensure that the change process is handled sensitively and that staff are consulted and have an opportunity to contribute to the way forward. I will be taking as many opportunities as possible to visit libraries to meet staff and, indeed, customers and to hear from them the vision that they have for the public library service in the future.

My second priority relates to the financial systems. As a separate legal entity, the Northern Ireland library authority will need to have effective and efficient systems and procedures that comply with accounting and governance obligations. I understand that the Committee has recently received a copy of a report prepared by Deloitte on options for the financial systems for the new authority. Over the next few months it will be necessary to procure, design, test and implement an appropriate financial system and to facilitate the migration of relevant data from the education and library boards.

Given the importance of the human resource, financial functions and the financial aspect of the work over the next few months, I am seeking to engage a human resources project manager and a finance project manager from the education and library boards, again on a secondment basis, to assist with that work.

There will, of course, be other work ongoing on, for example, other corporate services, business planning, administrative functions, and so on. As far as I am concerned, the critical issue is to ensure that the structures and systems are in place to build on the developments in joint working at education and library board level and thus improve the quality of provision for the future.

I should be pleased to come back to the Committee at any stage, Mr Chairman, to update you on progress, and also to hear the Committee's views on the work that needs to be done.

Thank you.

The Chairperson: Thank you. Are there any additional comments?

Mr Poots: Not at this stage.

Mr McNarry: I welcome you, Minister, and your staff.

I can see that a helter-skelter approach to this Bill has been adopted by your officials — you and I have discussed this before, Minister. The project was well under way before you actually took office. I define the Libraries Bill as a rush job, and I think that sufficient evidence of that will be brought to you today. Certainly, I am glad to see that it is going to be up to the Assembly to divert you, because you gave no indication in your opening remarks that you are deviating from proceeding with the Bill and the dates.

There is no specific date in the Bill for the library authority to take over from the education and library boards, and the boards themselves have been given a stay of execution. However, not only are you rushing this Bill, you have already rushed into appointing a chief executive designate to a body that does not exist. Today, I hear from her that she is now recruiting staff. She has said that she is seeking to engage both a human resources project manager and a finance project manager on a secondment basis. Engage them for what purpose, and to what organisation? We do not have a library authority. Minister, how is it proposed that the chief executive designate will fulfil her job description while the education and library boards continue to function and there is no library authority?

Does the chief executive designate have an employment contract? Have other designated appointments been made? Has a recruitment process been activated beyond what the chief executive designate has told us? What costs are being borne by your Department in preparation for the establishment of the library authority?

There is no date for establishment of the authority; that will be for the Assembly to decide. Should the Assembly decide that the date will be late in 2008 or perhaps, as is more likely, that it will be in 2009, will all this not have been premature? What will happen to the appointment of the chief executive designate and to other prospective appointments if the Assembly decides that it will not accept your rush job? The Assembly may conclude that a date in 2009 is preferable, and other colleagues will argue for such a date in line with RPA. In an era when the Finance Minister seems to be lecturing everyone on prudence — to steal a term from Gordon Brown — here you are, Minister, setting up a post for an organisation that does not exist. Staff have been appointed, and someone has been assigned to the most senior position — I do not know at what salary — in an organisation that does not exist, and the chief executive designate is now recruiting people to join her.

I do not fault the fact that preparation is a good thing, but premature preparation seems to be rather silly in this instance, and I am anxious to know the costs. If the library authority is not going to be established until 2009, what will those people do? What work will they do, who will they report to, and who will carry them? I do not think that the Assembly will respond positively to those costs if the authority is not going to be in place until 2009. I am interested to hear the Minister's comments.

Mr Poots: That is quite a range of questions, but I will try to cover them.

Mr McNarry: I have another question, but I do not want to mix different issues.

Mr Poots: The process started a long time ago. In fact, at that time, the Deputy Chairperson may have been involved in advising those who started the RPA process. Six years after the Assembly decided to have a review of public administration. When I was on the other side of the table, I thought it did not go far enough — it is now being implemented.

It is correct to say that I have been handed the issue of the single library authority and responsibility of delivering that part of RPA. I have no doubt that the single library authority will deliver greater efficiency savings than are currently being made. If the commitment were to efficiency savings alone, the library authority would have been kept with a single education authority, because that would have made for a more efficient body overall. However, it is much better to have a single library authority whose focus is exclusively on delivering quality library services to the public. Library services are not a small element in Northern Ireland; delivery costs are over £30 million. Those services should have their own silo, as opposed to being the poor relation in another Department. Therefore the basis for establishing a single library authority is good, and I encourage the Committee to hear the views of others on the issue.

I come before the Committee today, having obtained the Executive's agreement to proceed with a single library authority. Although I am conscious that 10 or 11 Members of the Assembly are not represented in the Executive, I have the support of the four parties that are represented in the Executive to deliver a single library authority in Northern Ireland, and that is the basis on which the Department is proceeding. When the point of deciding on the intention to go down that route is reached, it is for the Department to work with, and consult with, the Assembly and the Committee to deliver the library authority. The Department can say that it will do something and set a date for doing it, but it cannot achieve it by magic. Preparation work must be done first.

Therefore, with the agreement of the Executive, the Department has begun the preparation work needed to create a single library authority, the focus of which will be on delivering quality library services across Northern Ireland. We want to do that in a managed way and in a way that ensures that there is a seamless separation. We want to ensure that staff interests are not jeopardised. For example, if we do not employ people with expertise in corporate services and human resources, staff might not be paid, and that would be a wholly unacceptable situation. I have no apology to make for the work that is ongoing to take forward a policy that was agreed by the Executive.

Mr McNarry: Thank you, Minister. Is it not correct that the appointment of the chief executive designate was made before the Bill was brought before the Executive?

Mr Poots: The appointment was not made, but the process was in place.

Mr McNarry: The process was under way?

Mr Poots: Yes.

Mr McNarry: I will not go into the details, but you were not fully aware of the circumstances at the time, Minister. The process was well under way, and I am not hanging that on you. However, I am asking you to consider that it was possibly foolish to continue with a process in which nothing has been put into place.

All you have is agreement from the Executive to take a particular route. However, that route ends at the Assembly and, given information that you will know as well as the Committee does, proceeding with the Bill with the intention of having arrangements in place in 2007-08 is unlikely to succeed.

Minister, I am challenging you to address the question of whether you are squandering public money on salaries that are not yet of use. I do not take issue with the need for a single library authority; I have supported that, despite having certain reservations. I am not taking issue with the outcome, but with the manner in which the process has been rushed and the squandering of public money on salaries. Where will that stop? I am glad to hear that two more people are being considered for posts and that other staff are being considered. However, to whom will they work? I ask you to consider that in the light of what you and I know, Minister. I do not want you or anybody else to look foolish if the Assembly decides on a much later date for the setting up of the authority.

Mr Poots: In the first instance, staff will work to the chief executive designate, who will be their line manager. The chief executive designate will report through the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure to the permanent secretary and, ultimately, to me.

As for dates, the Department inherited the date of 1 April 2008. We had to work to that date, because it was the date that the education authority —

Mr McNarry: You did not have to work to that date. Other Ministers changed decisions in light of RPA; will you not do the same?

Mr Poots: Members may have noticed that I phrased my answer in the past tense — the Department was working to that date, and had to do so because if the setting up of the education authority had failed to happen there would be no service for delivering the library authorities. We no longer have to work to the date of 1 April 2008, nor do we have to work to the date of 1 April 2009.

If the Committee agrees — and no doubt it will have further hearings on the matter — that a single library authority is the way forward, the Department and the Committee will work through the Bill to get that right. Ultimately, we do not need to be time bound. Nonetheless, the aspirational date of 1 April 2008 should not necessarily be removed: it is an aspiration; it is not set in stone. However, setting a date helps to generate momentum and drive for the Department to see things through to their conclusion. Having said that, meeting the deadline of 1 April 2008 was always going to be very challenging, and I am glad that we are no longer in the situation where we have to meet that date.

Nevertheless, we should not necessarily tie ourselves to the date on which the education and skills authority comes into being. The Department of Education has set an end date of 1 April 2009. However, the education and skills authority could be established before that date, although that is unlikely.

Once we have brought our work to a satisfactory conclusion, we can set the single library authority up. However, we should do so when we are satisfied that the date is right rather than wait for the education and skills authority to be established.

Mr McCarthy: What are the benefits of creating the library authority by March 2008 rather than waiting another year? Would it not be more sensible to wait until a decision has been made about the future of the education and library boards before creating a single library authority?

Mr Poots: The decision to establish a single education and skills authority has not changed; the timing has changed. We are still engaged in the same process, even though the timeline has moved.

We have commenced work on the issue, and we are no longer under pressure to have it finished by a particular date. Once the problems and their solutions have been identified and addressed, there is no reason for waiting until 1 April 2009 to establish the education and skills authority. I am not insisting on 1 April 2008, which is an aspirational date; however, neither should we tie ourselves to the establishment of the library authority on 1 April 2009. The handover from the five education and library boards to the single library authority should be as seamless as possible, and I want to work with the Committee on how best to achieve that. Neither the Department nor the Committee should get hung up on dates; let us focus on delivering quality library services in the best way possible while looking at the best solutions.

Mr P Ramsey: You are very welcome, Minister. The single library authority was chosen as a good basis for creating professional partnership links with statutory, community, health, and education bodies. I agree that the single authority is the best way forward in library provision, but we must ensure that it brings benefits. You mentioned efficiency savings several times, Minister, but the change stems from a desire to improve rather than diminish services, and certainly not from a desire to make wide-ranging efficiency savings as part of the RPA.

To increase educational capacity in the community, lifelong learning and informal learning must be provided as part of the move. One in four adults in Northern Ireland has literacy and numeracy difficulties. What output will the new authority give to people and communities that face those difficulties?

Mr Poots: It would be appropriate to ask Irene to indicate how she wishes to see progress be made in that area, and how she intends to achieve that.

Miss Knox: I agree completely with Mr Ramsey that literacy levels, for example, are a major issue. People sometimes think of libraries as simply places from which to borrow a book. They play an important role in delivering a much wider agenda than that. I believe passionately that libraries have a critical role to play in the development of literacy levels among children and among adults. They have a huge role to play in community regeneration. There is a huge agenda for library services.

The benefit of the library authority will be that we can look regionally at how the library agenda is carried through. For example, partnerships can be developed at a strategic level, but services must be delivered locally. A strategic approach will be needed from the centre — the library authority — but local engagement with further education (FE) colleges, local councils and local community sectors will also be required in order to meet local needs. A single library authority will allow strategic partnerships to develop across Departments, the FE sector and the community sector. However, the single authority will also help to develop those policies at a local level.

Mr P Ramsey: I have a few other questions. The Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA) and other sources have raised their concerns with me. Library staff recognise the crucial role that libraries provide in delivering social learning and development. However, they fear that the drive to create a single authority will mean a rationalisation of services, a reduction in staff, and a reduction in the static and mobile provisions of the current library service. Can we have a commitment and a guarantee that those services will continue?

Another concern is whether there will be rural proofing. We all know the damage that Planning Policy Statement 14 (PPS 14) caused. Its introduction brought about the closure of rural post offices and small rural schools. I hope that people in rural areas are treated equally by being given the same access to libraries as those in urban settings.

Equality legislation is also needed to guarantee services for the visually impaired and people with other disabilities. Those are the big concerns outside this Committee room. People want to see a single library authority, as long as it provides a better service, with more social inclusion and high levels of adult participation, which will give them greater confidence and prepare them for work. We want to have libraries across Northern Ireland that are centres of excellence and second to none. However, the proposed legislation does not provide that at present.

Mr Poots: I had the opportunity to visit the library in Mr Ramsey's city, and I was impressed by the numbers of young people who were using it. I was in the library in Coleraine, which offers computer and IT training services to the public. I have been to a range of libraries, and although I have been impressed by the services that are provided, those services are not consistent throughout. I think that the library authority will offer a more consistent service.

Inevitably, there will be a reduction in staff numbers at administration level. The purpose of the RPA was to reduce administration and introduce cost savings that could then be used for front-line services. I will not back off from reducing administration costs. My Department will fight its case with the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) to retain those savings, which can then be used to deliver better front-line services.

All staff transfers are protected by the provisions of The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE). I do not like the term “natural wastage”, but we will consider giving people who are approaching retirement age, or who wish to retire, the opportunity to do that, and we will not be recruiting new staff to replace them. That is how we will be seeking to reduce administration costs.

At an early point, those provisions should deliver savings of £600,000 and, at a later point, should deliver savings of £1.2 million. If we do not deliver those savings, the Department of Finance and Personnel will want to know why, because that was what was set out at the outset. We will work with the staff on all of that. In my view, the trade unions are quite pleased with the idea of a single library authority, provided that they have some guarantees that their staff will be treated fairly.

I can again indicate that the trade unions are wholly opposed to the library authority coming under the remit of local government — they can give the reasons for that themselves. I trust that that gives you some comfort about how the staffing issues will be addressed.

Mr P Ramsey: Regarding equality issues and rural proofing, I accept the point about the Department of Finance and Personnel. However, we are not going to improve people’s education, and therefore their opportunities for work, by taking that level of money out of the service.

Regarding the location of the library authority, I hope that it is not just talk about having subregional forums or panels. I hope that they are going to be structured and that there is a place to ensure that people in the subregions have ownership of that single library authority.

Mr Poots: I would love the headquarters to be modest and to house a modest number of staff. Some people talked previously about a chief executive with eight deputies. That will not be the case. There was some confusion with the education authorities. A maximum of three individuals will head the key and corporate services in the authority, and they will not have deputy chief executive status.

We all know that rural life has become more difficult in recent years. Planning has played a key role in that, and a lot of services have been removed from our towns and villages. Services such as filling stations, shops, restaurants and pubs, which are associated with local villages, have disappeared.

Ultimately, we, as the public sector, need to consider how best to deliver services in rural areas. I want a more joined-up approach with other service providers in those areas. I have said this before: whether it is the local authority that is providing the community centre or the libraries, or it is the GPs who are providing services, if we can get all those services under one roof, there will be a much more sustainable facility.

One of the issues that I will want to give direction on to a future chief executive of a single library authority is that we should consider how we can join public services in rural areas up so that they can be delivered at the lowest cost to the public sector but with the highest possible service to the public. That is something that I will be aspiring to do. Rural issues are very close to my heart, and I want to see the library services continuing to be delivered in those areas.

The mobile library — which is something that I should declare a personal interest in, as my father uses that service — provides a lifeline to many people who are housebound or who have mobility difficulties. That is certainly a service that I want to see continued and not reduced in any way.

Mr Shannon: Minister, you are welcome to the Committee. It is good to see you here. It appears that the chief executive of the proposed library authority, whoever that may be, will have to do much more than an ordinary chief executive.

I want to reiterate Mr Ramsey’s question about rural proofing. I welcome the Minister’s response about the importance of the Library Service to the rural community, especially mobile libraries. I hope that that can be built on and encouraged rather than minimised in any way.

I have two questions for the Minister. The first relates to discussions with the education and library boards. What discussions have taken place between your Department and the education and library boards, and what has been the initial response from the boards? I know that board members will be attending a meeting of the Committee in a fortnight’s time, but I am curious to know about the Minister’s initial discussions with the boards.

Secondly, the Minister rightly indicated that moneys will be saved after the introduction of the new Libraries Bill; that is to be welcomed. However, would it not have been better value for money if that money had been used to keep the current Library Service in place before dismantling it?

Mr Poots: I will ask Mr Jack to respond on the level of discussion that has taken place with the education and library boards. I have a caveat; I am not sure what the education boards or authorities would want to say when they appear before the Committee. However, it may be in their interests to retain libraries within the education authority, as it would constitute a larger empire than the two being separated. The Department and the Committee will focus on the delivery of quality library services to the public and on finding the best way to do that.

Mr Colin Jack (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure): There has been significant ongoing engagement with the education and library boards since the decision to opt for a single regional library authority was announced by direct rule Ministers in 2006. A meeting was held between the then Minister with responsibility for culture, arts and leisure, David Hanson, and the chairpersons of the boards. Since then, regular meetings have taken place between the permanent secretary and the chief executives of the boards, approximately every six months, and there have been more frequent meetings between the Department and the chief librarians and other significant officers in the boards, such as chief finance officers, who will be involved in the implementation.

The Department of Education has established structures for the new education and skills authority. As issues will arise that will be in common with the establishment of the library authority, the Department has engaged in those structures along with the education and library boards. The chief executive designate has already initiated a round of meetings with all the boards, and there will be meetings between the Minister and the boards later this week at chairman and chief executive level.

Mr Poots: In answer to the second question, there will be set-up costs — identified at some £670,000 — which have been secured to deliver the single library authority. Ultimately, I go back to what I said at the start: we will move when we are ready to move, and that will happen in the most efficient and seamless way possible so that the transfer can take place from the education and library boards to a single library authority with the least impact on staff and services. That timescale should not be set by arbitrary dates — either an early or late date. It should focus on delivering the transfer in the most efficient way possible.

Mr Shannon: I welcome the Minister's response.

Mr P Maskey: The work of the Committee is concerned with how best to professionalise the service provided by libraries in the best way possible. Some of the issues that I want to mention have already been touched on, but perhaps they could be discussed in a wee bit more depth. The changes will affect rural and urban areas, and areas of high deprivation. Is anything specific planned for those areas where people may find it difficult to buy books or to have the Internet installed in their homes?

The importance of working with chief librarians and their deputies was mentioned. I want to know how exactly that work will enable staff at lower grades to voice their opinions on the Libraries Bill. That is important, because from talking to library staff, it is clear that each knows how best to run their libraries. Therefore, we should not get stuck on talking to chief librarians and the most senior Library Service staff; we must work out how best to consult those who work in the libraries.

We will be talking to union representatives in the next few weeks, and we will obviously listen to the views of many of the stakeholders. It is good that we will have the chance to do that. However, I am sure that the Minister is aware that all the groups that will give evidence to the Committee will raise concerns. Therefore we must listen to and process those concerns.

I am glad to hear that the front-line services will not be hit. However, we must work out how to professionalise those services to ensure that more people use libraries and to ensure that we use libraries to help education provision generally.

Mr Poots: Internet access has provided a lifeline to many in the immigrant community. Many such people who are working in Northern Ireland use the Internet extensively to retain contact with their friends and families. A new single library authority will operate under the principles of targeting social need, which covers all Departments. Working under those principles, my Department will consider what it can do.

Irene will explain how she intends to cut through senior management and talk to library staff about how best to deliver services.

Miss Knox: The establishment of a new library authority represents a major change process for staff, among whom there is a great deal of concern about what is happening. As I said in my introductory remarks, I want to talk to staff. Library staff know what is required, and their managers should also be aware of those requirements. I have already visited each of the chief librarians, many of whom took me to some of their branch libraries to meet staff. I intend to spend more time getting out and meeting people to find out what they want.

It is also important that I set up consultation mechanisms with staff. In addition to doing that through the trade unions, the library authority will provide opportunities for non-union staff to communicate their views on what should happen in the future.

Mr Maskey mentioned professionalising the service and its staff. The new authority will be able to examine strategically the training needs of library staff and to work effectively with providers on how to ensure that staff receive the necessary training. That will differ greatly from the training that I received 20 years ago as a librarian; life has moved on, and libraries — and the needs of the people who use them — have changed. The new library authority must ensure that staff have the necessary skills to provide the required level of service.

Mr K Robinson: I thank the Minister and his staff for coming this morning. I shall ask a simple question first: how much was bid for the new library authority for 2008-09? If that amount is greater than what the Department currently spends on the library service, by how much? That is the easy question — your starter for 10.

The Minister knows that a series of issues will arise. However, I want to discuss structures and mechanisms, which have been mentioned. The feeling of a cold, efficient and remote service is beginning to form in my mind. A library should be a warm and welcoming place for everyone, from the smallest customer who comes in at two or three years of age to the elderly lady or gentleman who tootles in for a book once a week or once a month.

I will cite an example of what happened under the former regime. A library was closed down despite being based in a community school on the fringes of a marginalised community. What impact had that on the community? Great opportunities to learn, to introduce children to the joys of reading, to get teenagers in the nearby youth club involved in research and all sorts of programmes, were lost.

Can you or Miss Knox assure me that the new system — efficient and cost effective as it may be — will deliver the warm, caring, helpful, developing service that those communities and individuals need?

Mr Poots: Having sat with you on the former Committee of the Centre for years, Ken, I was concerned when you said that you would ask a simple question. I knew that that phrase was the preamble to an awkward question. I do not have figures for the Department's bids for funding for the year 2008-09. I assure members that the Department bids for more funding than it currently receives. That is how we operate; we always ask for more.

Mr K Robinson: I am surprised to hear that, Minister. I thought that your Department's bid would be absolutely accurate and in keeping with the facts.

Mr Poots: No. My Department bids for a little more than it would normally anticipate receiving.

I cannot tell the Committee that no libraries will ever be closed during my term of office. It would be wrong of me to do that. My Department's desire is not to close libraries, but to provide a better service to the public. Closing libraries does not help the Department to provide a better service. In the past, certain libraries may have been not well used for particular reasons. In any future discussions on whether to close libraries, the arguments for closure would have to be strong to persuade the Department to take such action.

Ultimately, if certain libraries are in difficulty or are not attracting people, we need to look first at why that is happening and see whether the issues can be addressed so as to get more people through the doors of those libraries and ensure that those services are properly utilised. Closure should be the last option. That is the direction that my Department will take.

Mr K Robinson: Minister, is Irene going to address my question on the warm, caring ethos of the modern and future library?

Mr Poots: Absolutely.

Miss Knox: Libraries are a valuable resource for the community. Young babies are brought in by their mothers and are introduced to books at an early stage in life; teenagers come in to do homework; members of immigrant populations come in to use the Internet; and elderly people's use of libraries may form an important aspect of their contact with the public. Libraries play those roles in communities, and I intend to ensure that they continue to do that for the whole community.

Libraries must be welcoming, or people will not use them. No one forces anyone to enter a library. Use of libraries is not compulsory and there is no eligibility or entry requirement to be met. People enter libraries voluntarily, so they must be welcoming.

Mr K Robinson: We all agree with you that libraries must be welcoming. The danger, however, is that the members of staff most likely to leave under the new regime are those with the most warm and welcoming attitude. The service will lose those experienced members of staff. Every organisation that modernises and becomes more efficient becomes more remote and less welcoming to its customers, in whatever business it operates. How will you address that potential loss of those staff members who form the core of the system? I do not mean those at the top of the organisation, but rather those whom you meet while walking through the library. If they are cold and remote in their attitude, customers will not want to be in the library and will want to leave.

Miss Knox: The Library Service needs to retain front-line staff. Those who work at the front line in branch libraries are those who have an interest in helping the public, and we must retain them. As the Minister said, the central administration needs to be looked at.

Staff will always leave the service, through natural wastage, retirement, and so on. However, we must ensure sure that younger front-line staff joining the service understand the type of ethos that should exist in our libraries and that they have the skills to deliver the kind of warm, welcoming service about which the member spoke.

Mr K Robinson: Is a training programme in place?

Miss Knox: We do not have a training programme in place yet, but there will be one.

Mr K Robinson: It worries me that the service will become more like commercial businesses, where customers are welcomed with the question: "What do you want?" The next step on from that is: "We do not have it."

Mr Poots: I encourage Committee members to visit some libraries. I have visited several libraries, and members will find that they are welcoming environments. They are not like the libraries that I remember as a 10- or 11-year-old child, where the atmosphere was quiet and people had to move around silently looking for books. Libraries have moved on, and our larger modern libraries are certainly more vibrant places nowadays. I encourage Committee members to get out there. Mention was made about talking to the staff who deliver front-line services, and it would be useful for the Committee to talk to such staff.

Mr K Robinson: This morning, my wife was talking to a librarian in my house, so I am ahead of the Minister on that one.

Mr Poots: The Committee will find that those people are keen to have a bigger focus on libraries and on the service that they provide.

Mr D Bradley: Maidin mhaith, a Chathaoirleach. Good morning, Minister. Tá céad míle fáilte romhat go dtí an Coiste.

Minister, I wrote to you on 25 July 2007 about the consultancy exercise that is being carried out by Deloitte. I had several concerns about that matter, one of which was the unholy haste with which we were proceeding with the single libraries authority, without due knowledge of the costs involved. I was also concerned that the Committee was not properly informed about that particular consultancy and that, to some extent, we were working in the dark.

Minister, I thank you for your response, dated 8 August 2007, in which you state that before a decision was taken to create a free-standing library authority, an exercise had been undertaken to identify the hidden corporate costs of delivering the public library service. Paragraph 14 of the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Bill states that:

"An exercise to identify the cost of the support services is underway."

Will you comment on the outcome of that exercise and tell us how it has informed the process?

Mr Poots: As regards haste, I explained at the start of the meeting that from 19 July 2007, we were operating under a different scenario, which changed the situation considerably. We are happy to work within the new parameters, but we nonetheless seek to deliver as efficiently as possible.

We must remember what the Deloitte report is about. I will use an analogy: it is akin to someone deciding to open a shop, choosing the right location, and then bringing people in to see how it will be fitted out. The report is concerned with drilling down to the detail of how corporate services will be delivered.

The Chairperson: The report also deals with financial systems, does it not?

Mr Poots: It deals with financial systems and gets down to the detail. The big decision is made on the basis of the prevailing evidence; more detail is then needed when making the smaller decisions. The report identifies how we can best deliver financial services. The view now is that we should use the DCAL system to deliver financial services to the other non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) in DCAL's remit. I think that that was the recommendation from Deloitte, but I may stand to be corrected.

Mr Jack: The Department has the Deloitte report and has shared it with the Committee. However, consideration of the report's recommendations is still at an early stage, and the Department will need to work with the Minister and the chief executive designate to determine the best options. Deloitte has made certain recommendations, and we will need to consider those carefully.

Mr D Bradley: Will the Minister assure the Committee that it will be kept informed when the Department is undertaking that work?

Earlier, the chief executive designate spoke earlier about the changing role of libraries. Obviously, we live in a changing society. However, many people's view is that libraries play a passive role in education, lifelong learning, and in the communities in which they are set. Will the Minister and chief executive designate assure the Committee that, under the single library authority, libraries will play a more dynamic and vibrant role in education, in lifelong learning and in their host communities; and will they explain how that is to be achieved?

Mr Poots: Earlier, I said that when we visited libraries we found that opportunities were being taken; for example, in IT training. In addition, some libraries were bringing people in for reading sessions while others were placing emphasis on young people who were involved in examinations. I have also said that one of the problems is that there is a degree of "ad hoc-ery" taking place.

My Department's vision is for a flexible and responsive Library Service that provides a dynamic focal point in communities and assists people to fulfil their potential and having a single library authority and a chief executive can bring a focus to lifelong learning and to all of the areas to which Mr Bradley has referred. The Library Service, as it stands, is being delivered through five discrete streams with differing priorities.

Miss Knox: I believe passionately that libraries should be a dynamic focal point for local communities. However, that cannot be the case unless they become active participants in the processes within the local community that determine the needs of that community and how services should be delivered. A lot of work has been done by the education and library boards over the past few years. However, we now have an opportunity to take that work a step further by taking a strategic approach across Northern Ireland and starting to build the partnerships that are required at strategic and local levels.

In many instances, I believe that libraries should lead the way in delivering a much broader social and educational agenda, and they should examine how they can play a very active role; whether it is in working with local further education colleges, schools, community groups or councils.

Lord Browne: I should like to take Dominic's question a little bit further. One of the main components in delivering a high-quality service is cost, and although the Committee is in possession of quite a lot of documentation from Deloitte, it is difficult to quantify costs when those for corporate services, in particular, have not been identified. I know that there are difficulties because Library Service corporate and support services are part of the general administration of the education and library boards. However, it is very difficult for the Committee to make informed decisions when it is not in possession of the figures for all of the costs.

We are in danger of proceeding at a very fast rate. I do not know when the Deloitte report on options for the provision of corporate services will be completed. Is there a date by which that report will be available?

We are proceeding rapidly along a particular track, and until decisions on RPA and on the future of the education and library boards are made, it will be difficult for the Committee to make informed decisions.

Mr Poots: The Department is waiting for the report from Deloitte. As has been indicated, the costs of delivering corporate services for libraries has been hidden in the larger education and library services pot, and there has been no division as yet. At some point, the cost of providing corporate services will be determined through best assumptions, as opposed to being able to say definitively how much it costs the education and library boards to provide those services to the library sector.

The cost of delivering corporate services is significant, and I have no doubt that DCAL's views on those costs will differ from those of the education and library boards and that there will be quite a debate as to what the costs really are. We will have to drill down to get general agreement on the costs and on how they can be rolled over to the new single library authority.

Mr McCausland: In this morning's presentation, the Minister spoke about a strong subregional structure. What will that mean in practice? Will it mean staff, buildings, or a committee at a subregional level? What powers would such a committee have?

Mr Poots: Any subregional structure would have to be based on the number of council areas that are agreed through the RPA and on how DCAL will work with those councils on delivering library services in their areas. In many cases the issue will be about how public services can be delivered in a more joined-up fashion; for example, whether we should have GP surgeries, libraries and community centres under one roof, or have a mix-and-match of services, which would be provided in ways that are not currently available. If services cannot be delivered to the public in a more comprehensive fashion, we will have failed.

Community planning will be a key element of RPA and it will play a key role in delivering library services and those provided by local authorities.

Miss Knox: As the Minister has said, the establishment of subregional structures will depend on the number of local councils there will be as a result of RPA. If the Library Service is to deliver co-ordinated and joined-up services, we must ensure that that is achieved coterminously with other local planning arrangements. The community planning process will be extremely important in delivering such a co-ordinated approach, and there will need to be structures in the regional library authority that will co-operate and work locally with bodies to ensure that such co-ordination is achieved.

That does not mean that large numbers of staff will be involved in co-ordination work. Such staff will be based in libraries, and we will need to use those libraries as the bases for going out into the local community, through a subregional structure, to ensure that we are co-operating with people locally.

Mr McCausland: I accept that such staff may be based in library buildings — it makes good economic sense. However, I am not clear about what they will be doing and to whom they will be answerable. How will local input take place? Will it only come about through community planning or will it take place with the local authority in some other way?

Miss Knox: My thinking on these matters is still at an early stage as I have been in post for just two weeks. Through meetings with chief librarians and other members of staff, I am discussing how we can deliver local involvement and engagement; and as part of that process I will be talking to people in the community about how we can establish the subregional structure that I have spoken about. I cannot give the member a detailed answer yet, but I will be looking at the points he has raised immediately and I will be happy to come back to the Committee to speak about them in more detail when my thinking on the matter is clearer.

Mr Poots: In our discussions with the Minister of the Environment we considered how best DCAL could work with local authorities to deliver library services in their areas if responsibility for libraries is not to go to councils. We also discussed the type of services that local authorities would wish to provide.

The Department has not done anything definitive in that area and is seeking to engage on how best to proceed. We would welcome feedback from the Committee to help us come to a decision.

Mr McCausland: I raised the matter because it is not mentioned in the legislation. I was pleasantly surprised when I saw reference to it this morning as I am keen that there should be as much local input as possible, particularly through elected representatives at council level. Has the idea of a subregional structure emerged recently? Is it a new development?

Mr Poots: It was something I discussed with Minister Foster, because if we go for a single library authority then we would not want such a body to be remote. Delivering library services at subregional level is important. However, I am not sure about the time frame or whether the Department had been working on it previously.

Mr Jack: The Department was keeping a close eye on the discussions about community planning because we saw the process as one in which we would like the library authority to engage proactively. We had discussions about the type of legislation that would confer a duty on the authority to participate in the community planning process. The conclusion of those early discussions was that such provision would more properly be for inclusion in legislation that puts the community planning process in place rather than in legislation concerning libraries. The Department has had local engagement at the forefront of its thoughts from the outset.

The Chairperson: We will move to a conclusion, as I am mindful that the Minister has been very generous with his time. I ask Kieran McCarthy and David McNarry for last comments.

Mr McCarthy: I want to return to a response that the Minister gave to Pat Ramsey earlier. The question concerned possible cutbacks in staff, or redundancies. I was not happy with the response, because the Minister immediately mentioned senior staff. The age of ageism is past. Senior staff have made an enormous contribution to the Library Service and they should not be put under pressure when change takes place.

The Chairperson: If David would make his point now, the Minister could give a composite answer.

Mr McNarry: The start-up costs for the so-called small unit for 2007-08 have been estimated at £670,000: £380,000 for staff salaries; £200,000 for consultancy; £85,000 for premises, and £6,000 for support for board members, whatever that entails. It appears that, as the Minister has said, there is cover for the in-year monitoring bid. However, will new contingency cost factors create different figures? In light of the Deloitte consultancy exercise, it is expected that corporate services will require the figures to be revised upwards. What does the Minister now estimate the start-up costs to be? He might need to come back to the Committee with those figures. What impact would delaying a start-up to 2009-10, for example, have on those costs? How confident is the Minister that he can sustain his monitoring bid beyond 2007-08?

Mr Poots: The estimated start-up costs are still £670,000. That is the Department's bid, and it will seek to manage with that sum.

Mr McNarry: Is the Minister saying that the costs will be the same in two years' time?

Mr Poots: No. The establishment of the library authority will incur certain costs. However, the start-up costs — the costs of putting in place the structures that are necessary to create the single library authority — are £670,000. The Department has estimated that initial savings from the delivery of those services will be around £600,000 and that they will rise to around £1.2 million per annum. Costs may be incurred in order to reach the point at which such savings can be made.

The member asked what the costs would be if the Department were to delay the introduction of the library authority until 2009-10. The Department has no intention to delay until then; indeed, it has indicated that it will progress at the appropriate time. It has, therefore, not worked out the costs of such a delay. If the Department were to decide to hold back for a year, there would be additional costs.

Mr McNarry: If you will permit me to do so, Chairman, and with all due respect to the Minister, I must point out that he has also been telling the Committee about appropriate times, and so on, with regard to the stadium. Can he not give us a date? It is difficult for the Committee to work towards an outcome when it does not know when that will occur.

Mr Poots: The Department provided a date, which was 1 April 2008.

Mr McNarry: The Minister said that the Department could move from that date.

Mr Poots: Yes. The Committee's desire this morning appears to be that the Department should not be bound by the date of 1 April 2008 and that it should consider delaying the matter until 1 April 2009. First, I am not sure that the Department could wait until 2009, given that the education and library boards may not wait until then. Secondly, if its work has been completed and the best solutions have been identified, why should the Department wait until 1 April 2009? Therefore the date of 1 April 2008 is aspirational.

On the other hand, why should the Department force itself to do something on 1 April 2008 if it is not ready to do so — just because that date has been set? Ultimately, the Department will move forward when the time is right. The momentum to deliver the new service on 1 April 2008 exists, and that momentum must be maintained.

Mr McNarry: That momentum has come from the Minister and his Department since the start. They are rushing the matter.

Mr Poots: That momentum existed before I came into office. The establishment of the single library authority was agreed by the Executive, and the appointment of the chief executive designate and the team will help keep that momentum going. I do not see any reason to stop the momentum if that is the desired outcome.

With regard to Mr McCarthy's comments, the Department is not seeking any enforced redundancies. Staff will have an opportunity to take other positions and will also have the option to retire if that is what they wish to do. However, no one will be forced to do so. Ultimately, the Department is seeking to deliver savings in administration, and that will require fewer staff in the administration of library services rather than at the front line.

Mr McCarthy: I am glad to hear that senior staff are not to be targeted.

The Chairperson: By using the word "senior", do you mean age, Kieran?

Mr McCarthy: Yes.

Mr Shannon: Speaking as a 63-year-old, I am relieved to hear it.

The Chairperson: I thank the Minister, Colin and Irene for speaking to the Committee. I have no doubt that we will meet again.

Mr Poots: Thank you.

Ms Christine Jendoubi
Mr Robert Kirkwood
Mr Donncha O'Carolan	}	Acting Chief Dental Officer

The Chairperson (Mrs I Robinson): I welcome Ms Christine Jendoubi, Mr John Farrell, Mr Robert Kirkwood and Mr Donncha O'Carolan, who are here to provide clarification and answer questions as the Committee commences its clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. Members have been provided with much written material, including a copy of the Bill, a detailed commentary and a copy of extracts from the legislation that the Bill seeks to amend. Members will recall that oral evidence was taken from groups before recess and that further written submissions were received over the summer.

Members should use the notes on the clauses that were prepared by the Department and which were circulated last week and the document provided by Committee staff at tab 4. The Committee will have several options on each clause. Before inviting the Committee to choose an option, I will ask the officials to outline briefly the purpose and meaning of each clause. Members may then seek clarification.

Following discussion with officials on each clause and the potential for amendment, the options available to the Committee will be: first, to declare itself content with the clause as drafted; secondly, to agree the potential for amendment and request that the Department consider the matter and report its position to the Committee — and by doing so defer consideration of the clause. If an amendment is considered appropriate, the Committee can invite the Department to say whether it would be willing to undertake the drafting of such an amendment.

Clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill will now commence. At tab 4 of the papers there is a list of suggested questions on each clause that have arisen from the written submissions. Members may wish to use those during discussions.

Clause 1 (Persons performing primary medical services: listing subject to conditions)

Ms Christine Jendoubi (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The Bill amends The Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972, which is Northern Ireland's main primary health legislation. The amendments relate to primary care arrangements and specifically to family practitioner services. The Bill also amends The Smoking (Northern Ireland) Order 2006, as Kevin Shiels described earlier.

Clause 1 relates to primary medical services. It provides for a person's inclusion — or continued inclusion — on the list of persons performing primary medical services to be subject to conditions. That is a new provision. It also provides for there to be one list for Northern Ireland, instead of the current four. That means that if a person is removed from the list, he or she will be unable to practise anywhere in Northern Ireland. At the moment, if someone is removed from one of the lists, he or she can still practise in the other three board areas.

That concludes my remarks on clause 1. I am happy to take questions.

The Chairperson: If you do not mind, I will kick off. Clause 1 provides for a change from separate board lists to a regional list of primary medical services performers. By and large, that is generally welcomed. However, clause 1 also deals with the conditions for inclusion or continued inclusion on the list. The British Medical Association (BMA) has called for a suspension framework and a right of appeal against suspension. Is a right of appeal provided for in the Bill?

Ms Jendoubi: We will discuss how the tribunal deals with these matters later, but, in general, the Bill does not provide for a right of appeal against suspension. It provides for a right of appeal against removal from the performers' list, but that already exists, as far as general practitioners (GPs) are concerned. Other provisions in the Bill extend the performers' list regulations to pharmacists, dentists and opticians, and a right of appeal will extend to them, too. However, at the moment, it does not provide a right of appeal against suspension.

That raises an interesting issue: the assertion that suspension is a neutral act has been challenged. The matter was put to bed by the Appeal Court ruling in the Mezey case, which found that it was not a neutral act. It is neutral in so far as it does not prejudice the outcome of a disciplinary investigation, but it has an effect on the individual concerned and their capacity to work.

The Chairperson: The BMA is very keen on the right to appeal, and Kieran, as a GP, may want to comment on that.

Dr Deeny: As a primary care professional, I believe that the Bill should make some allowance for a right of appeal. If I were suspended tomorrow, it would leave me in a dreadful situation professionally. It is very wrong that medical professionals do not have the basic right of appeal that every member of the public is entitled to in law. It leaves the profession very hard done by. I back the BMA completely on this: provision for a right of appeal should be built into the Bill.

Mr John Farrell (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The health board would have to have reasonable grounds for suspending a GP. There would have to be clear criteria: suspension would not occur willy-nilly. The legislation does not contain the detail of the conditions that could apply when a suspension takes place; that detail will emerge in the regulations. However, the Department proposes to provide clear guidance on cases in which a suspension could be made. We will refer to the Appeal Court ruling on the Mezey case, which sets out the types of conditions that could apply.

Mr Robert Kirkwood (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): May I clarify the point? Clause 1 is specific to general practitioners — it applies to no other profession. Clause 1 amends article 57G of the Order, and nowhere in the clause is provision made for suspension. As Christine said, clause 1 simply amends a paragraph of article 57G to allow for subordinate legislation that would provide for one list, rather than requiring GPs to be on the list of the board in whose area they perform services. It also proposes new paragraphs (3A) and (3B), which allow for regulations to set out conditions for inclusion or continued inclusion on the list — the board can include somebody on a list, subject to conditions.

For example, a health and social services board that considers a GP who is returning from maternity leave to be falling short in some areas of her practice must ask that GP to undertake training to compensate for those deficiencies. When the practitioner had done so, she may apply to be included on a list so that she can provide services in the board's area. It is a relaxation of the present provisions because it allows a board to put a practitioner on its list, subject to conditions.

The Bill also introduces an alternative to suspension. For example, if a board feels that a practitioner who is already on its list is falling short in one of his her competencies, it does not automatically have to suspend the practitioner. It will allow the board to discuss any problems that the GP may have so that a solution can be worked out amicably between them. The GP will remain on the list, but subject to conditions. That is what the clause does — no more and no less. Suspension —

Dr Deeny: Is the word “suspension” used?

Mr Kirkwood: No. The provision for suspension is already included in The Primary Medical Services (Northern Ireland) Order 2004, which inserted article 57G into the 1972 Order. The primary provision for suspension of GPs already exists — but only for GPs. The Bill has clauses that make provision for other practitioners such as dentists, pharmacists and opticians. The enabling power that clause 1 introduces is to draft regulations to amend The Health and Personal Social Services (Primary Medical Services Performers Lists) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2004 list regulations, to move away from four lists to one list, and to introduce the conditions of conditional inclusion and contingent removal.

Dr Deeny: Suspension without the right of appeal sounds like guilty until proven innocent.

Mr Kirkwood: Clause 1 does not mention suspension of a GP. The primary power to suspend a GP already exists. The performers' list regulations will be amended to include suspension of a GP. The regulations will set out in detail how that is to be done, the involvement of the National Clinical Assessment Service (NCAS) in such a suspension, and the period of suspension. That will be set out in regulations that will come before the Committee before consultation. You may say that there must be a right of appeal against suspension; however, there is no such right in England, Wales and Scotland.

The BMA has debated the matter at length. Northern Ireland is not going any further than England, Scotland and Wales; why should Northern Ireland be different from the established arrangements in England, Scotland and Wales?

Ms Jendoubi: As Robert says, the Committee can discuss that matter when the regulations have been introduced.

Mr Kirkwood: The regulations will cover the issue, but clause 1 relates only to GPs. It amends article 57G of The Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 concerning primary medical services and relates solely to GPs. Similar provisions are made in subsequent clauses of the Bill for ophthalmic, pharmaceutical and dental services. However, clause 1 will enable boards to move from a four-list system to one regional list, and it introduces powers of conditional inclusion and contingent removal, which, I feel, is beneficial, as it will give boards the power to put someone on their list. It will also allow them to introduce conditions rather than simply take the ultimate decision to suspend. The situations in which that option would apply will be set out in amendments to the performers' list regulations. The legislation will appear as an SL1 letter to the Committee, setting out the policy decisions that will be implemented in the amending regulations.

The Chairperson: There will be opportunity to discuss that matter later; however, I want to move on.

Dr Deeny: These matters are of extreme interest to me. I agree entirely that four boards give the impression that there are four different health systems here. I believe that my practice is the only one that takes patients from three different health boards, and for many years I have seen the problems that that creates, so changing the system is a good idea. However, I am suspicious about using the word "suspension" to someone who might lose his livelihood without the right to appeal; it is irrelevant that there is no such right in England, Wales or Scotland.

Mr Kirkwood: That is a debate for another day. Clause 1 is not concerned with those matters, and to debate them would be outwith its provisions. I know that because it is a miscellaneous provisions Bill; it jumps from here to there and is very hard to follow; but that is what it does.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Perhaps this is a question for Kevin Shiels, but in order to include the point that Kieran Deeny made, will there be an opportunity to amend the clause rather than add to it? Can we amend what is already there?

Ms Jendoubi: That would require an amendment to The Primary Medical Services (Northern Ireland) Order 2004.

Mr Kirkwood: What sort of amendment do you want to make?

Ms Ní Chuilín: One that would address the point that Kieran raised. What happens here matters to him.

Mr Kirkwood: Yes, but Dr Deeny was talking about suspension; clause 1 does not cover suspension. An amendment could not be tabled to something that is not in the clause.

Ms Ní Chuilín: That is fair enough.

Mr Kirkwood: I hope that I have clarified the effect of the provisions of the clause.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The point that I want to make, and which the BMA raised with us, is about how the costs of suspension would be covered.

Mr Kirkwood: There are provisions —

Ms Ní Chuilín: Are there detailed provisions for costs and how they will be contained?

Mr Kirkwood: There is already provision for the payment of suspended practitioners in The Primary Medical Services (Northern Ireland) Order 2004, so there is no need for new primary legislation to cover that. There is already subordinate legislation that makes provision to pay a GP suspended by the tribunal or by the Interim Orders Committee. Once we introduce provision for health boards to use powers of suspension, we will amend the subordinate legislation to include that provision. We do not need new primary legislation to introduce that, so we do not need to include references to such payments in the Bill.

The Chairperson: The health and social services councils of Northern Ireland have called for the amendment: "preventing unsuitable inclusion by virtue of professional or personal conduct" to be added to the conditions provided for in regulations. Is that already covered, and should it be added if it is not covered?

Mr Kirkwood: It is not covered. The BMA picked that up with regard to the new condition that will be introduced for the jurisdiction of the tribunal on grounds of unsuitability by professional or personal conduct. The conditions that are being imposed relate to people who are to be included on a list or who are already included on a list. The reason that the unsuitability provision is not included is that there are no degrees of unsuitability: if a practitioner is unsuitable, he or she cannot be on a list and must be removed or suspended. If a board says that someone is unsuitable to be on a list for a professional or personal reason, it cannot impose conditions on the practitioner, because that person will already have been taken off the list. That is similar to the situation in England, Scotland and Wales.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 (Provision of dental services)

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 2 introduces new arrangements for the provision of general dental services. It places a duty on each health and social services board to provide or to secure the provision of primary dental services in its area, to the extent that the board considers necessary to meet the needs of its area. Clause 2 also enables boards to enter into contracts with general dental practitioners to provide dental services for their areas.

The provisions in question introduce a range of regulation-making powers. Some respondents to the consultation complained about the lack of specificity of many of the provisions of the Bill. The reason for the lack of specificity is that they are regulation-making powers: the detail and underpinning measures that will allow for the implementation of the provisions of the 1972 Order will come before the Committee as regulations in due course.

Ms Ní Chuilín: That makes no sense to me. There is nothing specific in the Bill, yet we are being asked to regulate something that is not specific.

Mr Kirkwood: What Christine is saying is that the Bill introduces enabling powers to make regulations to enter into dental contracts. Many of the comments from the consultation referred to the lack of specific detail and wanted to know what would go into the contracts. Christine is saying that that issue will be dealt with further down the line.

The detail will be set out in the contract regulations that will come before the Committee; many of the new provisions are technical. Proposed new articles 60A to 61F will replace article 61 of the 1972 Order. That is it in a nutshell. Clause 2 introduces enabling powers to make regulations for entry into a general dental services contract. The terms of that contract are still being negotiated by the British Dental Association (BDA).

Ms Ní Chuilín: Will the regulations come before the Committee?

Mr Kirkwood: Yes. The enabling powers that have been drafted are more or less identical to the primary powers for the general medical services contract: “Each Health and Social Services Board shall, to the extent that it considers necessary to meet all reasonable requirements, exercise its powers so as to provide primary dental services within its area, or secure their provision within its area.”

Regulations will be written around that idea. Performers’ lists regulations will be written for dentists. There will be contract regulations. The regulations for the general medical services contract are like a book. The contract, its contents and how it will operate still need to be negotiated. Clause 2 introduces an enabling power to facilitate the writing of regulations that will surround the contract and the boards’ entry into contracts with dentists.

Mrs Hanna: The matter is daunting for the Committee because it has concerns; it is, however, unsure of the stage at which it should talk about those concerns. Everyone wants the new services to have a positive effect. I hear a great deal from my constituents about the lack of National Health Service (NHS) doctors. There are concerns about the fact that what happens in England and Wales is being more or less copied here. The situation seems similar. I want to be sure that I know when I must intervene and express my concern about how targets will be set and measured and, indeed, about the availability of pilot schemes. I presume that now is not the stage to raise those concerns. However, I want to know when the Committee will have the opportunity to do so.

The Chairperson: I have concerns that so many NHS dentists are removing themselves from the system and into private dental care and about the lack of dental practices.

Ms Jendoubi: We hope that when a contract has been agreed by the BDA it will be piloted across Northern Ireland before it is rolled out. The contract must be underpinned by regulations that will prescribe with whom health boards can enter into a contract, what the contract needs to cover, and dental practitioners’ and boards’ responsibilities under the contract.

Services that can be contracted separately outwith the general dental services contract, such as those of individual, high-street dentists — orthodontists, for example — might be covered by a separate personal dental services contract under primary dental services. The underpinning legislation needs the primary powers of the Bill to enable the Department to make regulations that will bring the contract into being.

The Chairperson: If I am reading you correctly, you are suggesting is that if the ‘i’s are dotted and the ‘t’s crossed, we may see more dentists wanting to operate in the National Health Service.

Ms Jendoubi: Donncha would be happy to explain, at some length, the benefits that the new contract will bring.

The Chairperson: Can we touch briefly on that? I am concerned; because many of my constituents tell me — as I am sure other members’ constituents tell them — that there are queues to get into a dental practice. The number of NHS dental practices that have gone over to private dental work means that services are reducing, especially in disadvantaged areas. We are all concerned about the dental health of young children, but if parents cannot afford to pay the private sector, we need more NHS dentists.

Mr Donncha O’Carolan (Acting Chief Dental Officer): May I respond to the point that Carál made? Although it is very hard to comment on something so vague, the key is proposed new article 60A, which will place a duty on the boards to provide services in their areas. The 1972 Order allows dentists to choose where they set up and whom they treat. Significantly, proposed new article 60A will transfer the balance of power. The boards will have the power to decide where practices locate and to ensure that there is access in their areas. That is the fundamental provision of clause 2; the regulations will cover the detail on how that is done. The boards will hold the budget and they will decide how it is allocated. At the moment, services are completely demand-driven. The boards cannot compel a dentist to set up in a particular area or to see particular patients, so in many ways their hands are tied. The Bill will reverse that.

Ms Ni Chuilín: On 2 July the Assembly debated the lack of availability of NHS dental treatment, although that might have been a premature debate. My understanding was that boards would be compelled to provide dental services in areas of high deprivation. Apart from being compelled to provide services, I thought that they might consider doing preventative work, improving education and health awareness and promoting healthy eating. It alarms me that aspects of dentistry could be streamlined or that professions could be categorised or sectioned off. I cannot relate that to the Bill. Market forces have determined whether there are dental services in our communities.

Mr O'Carolan: That is correct. Dentists make all the decisions at the moment, but the Bill will give the boards power, and as they hold the budget they will be able to decide where they will target their money.

Ms Ni Chuilín: If the long-term use of antibiotics rots a child's teeth, the parents have to take out a bank loan to pay for treatment, because such treatment is deemed cosmetic. Rather than having to wait months for an appointment, parents should be able to avail of the service in their health centre or healthy-living centre. Access is the key, and at present many people do not have access.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: Will the new legislation interfere with the ability to sell a dental practice?

Ms Jendoubi: No. A dentist will still be an independent practitioner working under a contract with the health board.

Mr Kirkwood: It will depend on the negotiations on the contract. However, proposed new article 61B allows a health and social services board to enter into a contract with those specified in the sub-paragraphs. The contents of the contract have not been decided, so we cannot answer that today.

Ms Jendoubi: This legislation will not affect that one way or the other.

Mr O'Carolan: At present, dentists cannot sell their Health Service contract to anyone, so there will be no change.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: Therefore, it would not be in the contract at all?

Mr O'Carolan: That matter would not be dealt with in this legislation. Dentists are independent practitioners and businesspeople. Their premises and equipment belong to them, so they are free to sell them.

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: In proposed new article 60A(1) in the 1972 Order, each of the four health and social services boards would provide dental services. Is that really in the public interest, especially in the interest of those people who live on the periphery of a board area?

Ms Jendoubi: Proposed new article 60A(1) places a duty on each health and social services board to provide for its area's needs. That may mean a difference in emphasis but not in the service that is available. The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is negotiating a Northern Ireland-wide contract with the BDA, under which everyone will work to the same terms and conditions. Therefore, as Ms Ni Chuilín pointed out, boards will have the flexibility to decide, for example, whether to set up a practice in a disadvantaged area. Moreover, it is not compulsory for dentists to enter into a contract. They will still be free to make that decision.

If a board cannot get an independent practitioner to set up in a particular area, it becomes the board's duty to secure dental services in some other way; for example, by employing a salaried dentist or by temporarily appointing the Community Dental Service (CDS) to provide dental services where they are needed. Proposed new article 60A(1) merely places a duty on a board to ensure that dental services are available where necessary.

Mrs O'Neill: The BDA suggests that proposed new article 60A(2)(b), which states that a board:

"may in particular make contractual arrangements with any person", contradicts proposed new article 61B(1), which states that a board:

"may, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed, enter into a general dental services contract".

Mr Kirkwood: It is not contradictory. Proposed new article 60A(2)(b) refers to primary dental services. Proposed new article 61B(1) deals with a general dental services contract.

Ms Jendoubi: That is the difference. Proposed new article 61B relates to the contract.

Mr Kirkwood: Proposed new article 60A relates to primary dental services, which is the generic term for general dental services and personal dental services; therefore, proposed new article 60A(2)(b) does not contradict proposed new article 61B(1).

Mrs O'Neill: May I have clarification on the categories of dental personnel who will be subject to the Health Service tribunals? For example, will hygienists, dental nurses, and so on, fall into the same category? Will that be covered by regulations?

Mr Kirkwood: Yes, that will be set out in regulations. The tribunal services will cover healthcare professionals, so, when it has been negotiated and is in place, the contract will clarify what personnel, other than dentists, will be covered by the tribunal regulations. However, the overall provision for healthcare professionals will allow regulations to stipulate who will be covered.

Mrs O'Neill: The BDA has also called for provision for piloting the new dental contract. The Northern Health and Social Services Board has interpreted clause 6 as meaning that pilot schemes will not be possible until the Bill has been passed. Is that correct?

Ms Jendoubi: We can deal with clause 6 now if the Committee wishes.

Mrs O'Neill: Shall we come back to clause 6?

Ms Jendoubi: We are happy to deal with it now.

Clause 6 will remove the power to make pilot schemes for provision of personal dental services. However, it will not obviate boards' power of the boards to pilot general dental services. We can do that without the need for primary legislation. We have agreed with the BDA that the new contract — when we get one that we all agree looks as if it is a runner — will be piloted before it is rolled out formally.

Mr Gallagher: I have concerns about a couple of points. We have heard about the current problems with dental services. As has been said, the Committee wants an outcome that delivers a service for the public and that results in a profession that is worthwhile and rewarding for its practitioners. It is to be hoped that our dentists will enter into contracts because those contracts will be rewarding.

I am concerned about what is happening, for example, in England. I am not sure what you mean when you talk about British dental services. I presume that you mean dentists in Northern Ireland who are members of the BDA, and that you are in discussions with those dentists. I see that you are nodding by way of confirmation. That is encouraging. However, the contracts are not working well in England; they have not produced the desired outcome. There are still huge problems with dental services in England. After going to all this bother, we do not want to end up with bigger problems here.

Although I have heard that there is no contradiction between, under proposed new article 60A(2)(b) of the 1972 Order, entering into contractual arrangements with any person and, under proposed new article 61B(1), entering into general dental services contracts, it appears that there is one. Is it necessary to include proposed new paragraph (2)(b) of the 1972 Order? We are trying to solve a problem by removing any doubt or suspicion about the way forward.

Another point concerns the piloting of general dental services, which Christine mentioned. Will the boards pilot those new services before or after the new contracts are agreed? Will the Bill become law before the contracts are piloted, or will it be done the other way around? Will everyone be confused?

Ms Jendoubi: Technically, the Department does not need either primary or subordinate legislation in order to run pilot schemes. However, for practical reasons, the Department will need to know the contents of the subordinate legislation in order to ensure that it is consistent with the content of the pilot schemes. The Department hopes to develop subordinate legislation at roughly the same time as the contract is implemented, so that we can ensure that the contract and the subordinate legislation are consistent.

The Committee will play its role by scrutinising the subordinate legislation that underpins the contract. The detail of the contract will be a matter for negotiation. Tommy Gallagher is absolutely right to say that the new contract that was established in England found no favour with the profession, largely because of the way in which remuneration was handled. Dentists' activity is still measured in units of dental activity (UDAs), and that keeps dentists on what they refer to as the treadmill of "drill and fill". Dentists are paid for the amount of treatment that they carry out rather than for their professional time spent on preventive measures and the promotion of oral health.

We will try to take full account of the English contract and learn what we can from it, such as what to do and what to avoid. Together with the BDA, we will produce a dental contract that suits Northern Ireland and its dentists, that acknowledges their professionalism and that rewards them for the use of their time rather than for the number of root canals that they fill.

Mr O'Carolan: We have never indicated that the English contract will be introduced in Northern Ireland. The Minister told the Assembly that on 2 July 2007. We hope that a joint communiqué with the BDA will be issued this month to all dentists. It will indicate how our contract will be different from the English one.

Mr Gallagher feels that there is a contradiction in the Bill. Proposed new article 60A(2)(b) deals with all dental services, which means primary care as performed by our independent practitioners as general dental services, and personal dental services, which we do not have in Northern Ireland at present. Regulations must be written for that provision to be introduced.

Proposed new article 61B(1) deals specifically with the general dental services contract. It is necessary that that distinction be included in the legislation.

Mrs Hanna: We want a better service; we do not want “drill and fill”. We want to ensure that people are attracted to the dental profession, that they receive sufficient remuneration for their work and that they are not on that treadmill to which Christine referred.

The Committee has been given the impression that the content of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill will change little. However, as Tommy said, if all contracts were to be signed before the pilot schemes were in place, it would be hard to undo the legislation if it were found not to be right. Surely it would better to find out first whether the pilot schemes work, before the contract is set in stone. It is important that that be done.

Ms Jendoubi: The contract will not be set out in regulations, but its underpinning framework will be. The contract will be piloted. It will not be set in stone until after the pilots have been rolled out and it becomes clear what has worked and what needs to be tweaked. Only when we reach the point at which everyone is content will the boards enter into a contract with individual dentists. I agree that the full contract cannot be set out in legislation.

Dr Deeny: I hope that the answer to both of my questions will be yes.

I have been approached in the past fortnight by a constituent and patient, who told me that she could not get an NHS dentist in either Omagh or Dungannon. She had tried to register with every one of them. Is what you are saying that, in future, clause 2 will ensure that the boards will bring that situation to an end?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes.

Dr Deeny: That answer is important, because if patients cannot get an NHS dentist, a serious deficiency in dental care exists.

Last week, I was appointed to the West Local Commissioning Group (LCG), having had to take the Department to the High Court, so I have an interest to declare. The health and social services boards will, at some point, come to the end of their lives — we know that. It is now too late to legislate for their replacement by LCGs, as was to have happened by 1 April 2008. Will the term “local commissioning groups” replace “boards” in the legislation?

Mr Farrell: As Christine has already indicated, the answer to your first question is yes. As for your second question, when it comes to the use of the term “boards”, the Bill must use terminology that applies to the structures currently in place. We currently have health and social services boards; however, if, after the review of public administration (RPA) is implemented, they are to be replaced by a new health and social care authority, any reference to “boards” in the existing legislation will have to be amended in the legislation that establishes the health and social care authority.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The BDA has called for an independent adjudication of any disputes that may arise as a result of clause 2. Its concern extends to clause 3. To achieve that outcome, the BDA recommends that proposed new article 61E(2)(b) be changed from:

“for the Department, or a person appointed by it”

to:

“for the Department to appoint an independent person or panel”.

Ms Jendoubi: Again, that issue will be set out in regulations, so the Committee will have another chance to examine the details.

Mr Kirkwood: The same dispute-resolution procedure that the general medical services (GMS) contract uses will probably be followed, whereby the Department appoints someone and a tribunal is established.

The Chairperson: The BMA has queried the proposed change to the cross-heading after article 60 of the 1972 Order from “General Dental Services, General Ophthalmic Services and Pharmaceutical Services” to “Primary dental services”. Moreover, in clause 5, Roe Valley Dental Practice has queried the change to the cross-heading and heading that precede article 15B of the 1972 Order from “personal dental services” to “primary dental services”. What is behind the decision to use those different titles?

Mr O’Carolan: “Primary dental services” is a generic term for general dental services and personal dental services, which is an alternative way in which to deliver general dental services. No personal dental services operate in Northern Ireland at present, but that proposed change to the 1972 Order gives the option of having those services in the future. Rather than include “general dental services” and “personal dental services” in every sentence, “primary dental services” is used as a catch-all term.

The Chairperson: Therefore, “primary dental services” is used as an umbrella term.

Mr Kirkwood: I want to raise a further point so that the Committee is aware of the full provision of clause 2. Although we have covered the contract issues, clause 2 will introduce proposed new article 61F to the 1972 Order. That provision sets out the enabling power for how dentists will be listed in future. We discussed that issue when we considered clause 1. The proposed new article sets out similar powers to those that are currently in place for GPs for conditional inclusion on a list and for contingent removal and suspension.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Chairperson: If members agree, we will call a halt to our scrutiny of the Bill, because we are now due to hear evidence from the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service. We will scrutinise the Bill further next Thursday. Clause 3, from where we will begin, is fairly short. I hope that it will be full steam ahead. Thank you very much.

Ms Jendoubi: We look forward to it.

Mr John Gray	}	Libraries and Information Services Council (Northern Ireland)
Mr Kirby Porter

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): I thank the Association of Chief Librarians for its attendance and I welcome Ms Katherine McCloskey, Ms Helen Osborn and Mrs Anne Connolly. They will be the first set of witnesses to give evidence to the Committee on the Libraries Bill today.

Mrs Anne Connolly (Association of Chief Librarians): Good morning and thank you. I am the director of library and corporate services in the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB). I am here in my capacity as chairperson of the Association of Chief Librarians (ACL). I am accompanied by my colleagues Helen Osborn, who is chief librarian of the Western Education and Library Board (WELB), and Katherine McCloskey, who is chief librarian of the Belfast Education and Library Board (BELB).

The association, which was established in 1973 by the chief executives, comprises the five education and library boards. As chief librarians, we are the senior officers who work on the steering group, and we are responsible for the development, management and delivery of library services to the public and to schools in Northern Ireland. At present, there are 113 static libraries and 28 mobile libraries, which deliver services to hard-to-reach areas and to people who are housebound. There are also 11 mobile libraries attached to the schools' library service.

Over the past few years, one of the key objectives of the association has been to try to harmonise services across the education and library boards. One of the most successful outcomes has been the establishment of the electronic libraries service, which has provided a single network for all libraries in Northern Ireland. One example of how that has improved customer service is that each customer now has a single library card that they may use in any library in Northern Ireland to access books or use a computer. In addition, a library member may borrow a book from any Northern Ireland library and return it to any other library of their choice. That seamless service has already been established, and Northern Ireland was the first region to achieve it.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure's vision is for a flexible and responsive public library service that provides a dynamic focal point in the community and assists people to fulfil their potential. Obviously, the association concurs with that and believes that libraries in Northern Ireland are well on the way to achieving that vision.

At the outset, we wish to dispel the myth that libraries are just about issuing books, and we are concerned that, despite the wide range of activities in which libraries engage, the emphasis in measuring performance is still based on the number of books that are issued. We wish to draw the Committee's attention to the fact that library services currently extend to: the provision of Internet and website-use classes; open-learning centres; study space and homework assistance; activities and support for ethnic minorities and disadvantaged groups; the staging of events and exhibitions, and reading initiatives for all age groups, including the famous Bookstart programme, which is a highly successful initiative that is run in conjunction with Sure Start.

Although most of those activities take place in libraries, some are delivered as outreach programmes by library staff in venues across Northern Ireland. We particularly wish to draw attention to the fact that library staff work in places other than libraries to deliver library services.

Each year, public libraries in Northern Ireland welcome more than seven million visitors; deal with approximately 1.5 million enquiries; lend approximately 10 million items, and provide access to 1,200 computers with broadband internet access.

In the past year, the association has worked closely with the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure to produce 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries', the new policy for the development of public libraries in Northern Ireland. We believe that that policy sets the context for the delivery of a high-quality library service. It is the association's view that quality of service should be the priority when it comes to establishing the structure for delivering library services in Northern Ireland.

To assure a high-quality service that best meets the needs of the customer, several key factors should be taken into account. We strongly feel that library services should be free at the point of delivery and that coterminosity with other service providers should be considered to facilitate community planning and successful partnership working. There should be a single-transfer system for all education and library board employees, and we are in favour of maintaining and developing links with the education sector.

Finally, we wish to emphasise that the continued delivery and further development of a high-quality service is dependent on the availability of adequate resources. In that regard, the affordability of a new structure is paramount to the decision-making process.

Thank you for your attention.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Anne. Members may now ask questions.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the association for its presentation and congratulate it on what has been achieved to date. At the end of this exercise, we hope that that work will be enhanced.

You said that services should be free at the point of delivery. Clause 6 of the Libraries Bill deals with charges for certain library services. In your submission, you explained that you do not believe that the Bill, as currently drafted, provides enough protection for core library services to remain free of charge. Please explain what you perceive to be the potential problems of not clarifying in the Bill that core services will remain free of charge, and do you have a suggested form of wording that could be added to the Bill to guarantee the provision of free core services?

Ms Katherine McCloskey (Association of Chief Librarians): We are concerned because the idea of a free library service is inherent in the public library service. It should be free at the point of delivery.

However, clause 6 of the Libraries Bill states: "(1) The Authority may not make any charges for any library services provided by it unless—

(a) the services in question are specified in a scheme of charges approved by the Department ...

(2) The scheme of charges may make different provision for different cases including different provision in relation to different persons, circumstances or localities."

The existing legislation made it very clear that the library service would be free except for itemised lists of services that libraries could charge for. UK legislation provides for that sort of arrangement. The English legislation and the current Northern Ireland legislation address charges in that way. This Bill's wording suggests that a broader potential for charging might be implemented, or might be specified, in the future. Existing legislation seems to cover the matter better. We are worried that there is potential to raise funding in the future by increasing library service charges, and that that might be used to augment other services if there was a budget shortfall, for example.

Mr Shannon: You have said that the number of people on the board of the proposed authority will not be sufficient to deal with the workload. The changes are being made for several reasons, and one of the advantages of those changes will be that it will maximise savings. At the same time, the continuation of the service is critical. How many members should there be on the board of the library authority and what evidence do you have to suggest that it may not be able to deliver services?

You also referred to the mobile library service. I think you mentioned that there are ten mobile libraries, is that correct?

Mrs Connolly: There are 11 in schools.

The Chairperson: The figure was 28.

Mrs Connolly: We are also responsible for the schools' library service, but under the new legislation that will not be the case.

Mr Shannon: I am keen to ask a question based on your experience, Mrs Connolly — and Ms Osborn may wish to answer also. If you could do one thing to improve the mobile library service, what would that be?

Mrs Connolly: We have debated the size of the authority at length. However, our experience is based on dealing with library committees. Currently, the library committee within each education and library board comprises between 12 and 15 people. If the library authority is to recruit people who are interested in library services and would be interested in regularly attending meetings, such people might be very busy already and might have to drive long distances. The authority will therefore need to recruit around 20 members to get a quorum and ensure that local and regional interests are looked after.

There is also the view that being a board member — as some Committee members, being board members, will know — is not just about being on a steering group or governing body; it is also about assisting in other committees. The association expects that the library authority will have to have an audit committee and a finance committee. Therefore the smaller the number of people involved, the smaller the pool from which the authority can draw. It will be asking busy people to attend a lot of meetings.

Ms Helen Osborn (Association of Chief Librarians): Mr Shannon is right to suspect that I would like to answer the question about mobile libraries. The mobile library service is extremely important in rural areas, but it is also important in city areas, particularly areas of targeting social need.

There are two ways in which the mobile library service could be improved. First, it could provide more outreach activities. Typically, a mobile library pulls up in a village or a housing estate and stays for an hour or two. During that time people come on board and borrow books, and, in some places, they also use the Internet. That mobile library would be staffed by one person. We would like to be able to provide the same outreach activities as branch libraries, such as playgroup visits, storytelling sessions, local history sessions, IT taster sessions — the full gamut of library services. However, additional staffing is required for that. The Western Education and Library Board has been fortunate to have had external funding to pilot such a service. Outreach activity is important if people are to experience the full benefits of a library service.

Secondly, there could be greater scope for partnership working. Recently, a scheme was piloted in a rural part of the Western Education and Library Board area in which post-office services were provided on the mobile library while a sub-post office was being rebuilt. It is important that such joined-up strategic partnerships are considered. That was a great pilot project, and it worked well for local people and for both services. However, the ideal scenario would be to have strategic partnerships with other organisations serving rural areas, using customised vehicles to meet the needs of the local community and provide the full range of services.

Mr D Bradley: I share your concern about clause 6(2) of the Bill, which relates to charges. It seems to be granting power to vary charges according to locality and even according to individuals. That seems to partially defeat the aim of having a single authority. However, the explanatory and financial memorandum claims that the approach in clause 6: “retains the approach of the Education and Libraries Order but simplifies the provisions.”

Do you agree?

Secondly, what linkages should there be between the Northern Ireland library authority and the education and skills authority? How would those be reflected in service delivery?

Ms McCloskey: Members of the association are nervous that the previous legislation stated that libraries would be free at the point of delivery, except for certain services that were listed. Why remove that provision? It was clear which services would be charged for. If libraries are to be free at the point of delivery, and there is no intention to raise or to make extra charges, why change the legislation? It has worked well for many years. Such a provision is not in the UK legislation, and we, as an association, are nervous that it may open the door to further charges.

Mr D Bradley: Would an itemised list of charges be helpful?

Ms McCloskey: It would probably make association members happier if potential charges were clearly listed.

Mr D Bradley: Can you give us examples?

Ms McCloskey: If a library provides items, such as a photocopies or book lists, which then become the properties of a person, that person would be charged for the items. In the previous legislation, there was a list, which specified the items and services that could be charged for. I would be very nervous if such a list were not included in the Bill. The phrasing could be taken from UK legislation or it could be just as it was in the previous legislation — why change it?

Mr D Bradley: What form of linkage do you think there should be between the Northern Ireland library authority and the education and skills authority, and how should that be reflected in service delivery?

Ms Osborn: We believe that there are three key areas in which it will be important for public libraries and education to work together. One is the schools' library service. Currently, we manage both the public library service and the schools' library service, which has a number of benefits, one of which is financial. We share premises, IT systems, members of staff, stock contracts, and so on. More importantly, the arrangement enables us to provide a holistic service to children and young people whether at home or at school, and the two services work closely together on extended schools information, literacy, the revised curriculum; all of the key education agendas.

Early years education is another important area, and public libraries have always done a great deal with pre-school children using programmes such as Bookstart. Early years education is now the responsibility of the Department of Education, which makes it even more important that libraries and education work together in that area.

Public libraries have a great deal to contribute to literacy and lifelong learning. It will be important that the linkages between the education and skills authority and the library authority will be in place at the strategic and operational levels. Our concern is that organisations, during periods of change, or when they are being created, tend to be internally focused. Therefore, it will be extremely important that the links are maintained. It will also be important that all subregional structures in the new library authority will be reflected in the education and skills authority and in the councils so that community planning becomes another device for joined-up working.

The Chairperson: Mrs Connolly, would you give a composite answer to the next questions, which will be from Mr McCausland and Mr Ramsey?

Mr McCausland: There are two points on which I require clarification. What potential difficulties are there for the transfer of staff, particularly if the single library authority does not start at the same time as the single education authority? Secondly, and you have raised questions about this matter; do you think that the Department is overestimating the savings that can be made?

Mr P Ramsey: I would like to acknowledge the contribution that the association is making to lifelong learning. Given that the Minister said during the last Committee meeting that efficiency savings on pay have been projected at almost £1.5 million, how will you be able to provide an enhanced service in lifelong learning in educational centres of excellence with reduced resources? You are saying that you need additional resources. How will you be able to provide the same level of service, given that in Northern Ireland, one in four adults has low levels of literacy and numeracy? How will you effect change?

Mrs Connolly: I will answer Mr McCausland's question first. Many of our staff work across public libraries and school libraries, and currently all of them are education and library board staff. Our concern is that if public library services move first, we will have to determine who our public library staff are and get a transfer scheme in place for them in advance of the creation of the education and skills authority. More importantly, opportunities for them to apply for other posts, to which they are entitled as education and library board staff, would be removed because they would no longer be part of the RPA-affected group.

Staff are already quite stressed and worried about their jobs. We would prefer the organisations to move together. At present, we are managing people in both sections. We believe that there should be a clean break. People would then be able to see the various opportunities and apply for the jobs that suit their future needs. It is a people issue.

Katherine McCloskey will answer the question on funding.

Ms McCloskey: The question was on what we believe the savings will be. Paragraph 13 of the explanatory and financial memorandum states: "Unifying five separate library services will, in time, lead to efficiency savings".

The memorandum goes on to quote savings of £600,000 in 2009-10, rising to £1.2 million. There is no specific indication as to where those savings will be made, apart from unifying the services and reducing staff. We do know the current budget for the five library services. Over the past few years, my colleagues and I have been working to reduce our staffing levels because of reductions in funding for the Library Service. Indications are that the new library authority will have a budget of £30 million, which is not a lot more than what we are running the service on at present — and we are struggling. The Belfast Education and Library Board will face a shortfall of £750,000 next year. We do not feel confident that savings will be made without swingeing cuts.

There is some indication that we have a large number of senior and middle managers. I have 25 staff, classified as professional librarians and managers, for all of Belfast, covering 20 branch libraries, the schools' library service and the central reference library. We are not awash with staff. The indications are that the new library authority will struggle to provide even the level of service provided at present with the stated budget. We cannot understand where the savings will come from, and that is worrying. Northern Ireland deserves a quality library service. I have spent my life in the library service. Northern Ireland has an excellent library service and the people of Northern Ireland deserve a high-quality, well-funded service that will provide not just excellent community libraries and mobile libraries, but will be able to fund reference and research collections and support the wonderful local studies and collections that exist throughout Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: Have Mr Ramsey's questions been answered?

Mrs Connolly: You may have picked up some of the answers. We are wholly behind 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries', which is the Department's vision for the future of library services. However, as has been rightly said, there is much more to libraries than issuing books. Many areas need to be developed, and we are not convinced that the money is available to do that. We have all been in difficult positions, as members will know. In making cuts in our board area, some of our learning centres have fallen by the wayside, as we cannot afford to fund them.

Mr P Ramsey: Do you believe that cutbacks are imminent? That will entail more than job losses.

Mrs Connolly: Who knows? The North Eastern Education and Library Board has already offered premature retirement to as many people who want it, and it does not have many more people to let go. The funding issue and the development of services are major concerns. In the past, we have asked the Department of Education and the Department for Employment and Learning to fund areas that we believed fell under their umbrella. The money that we get from Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is for the core library service. However, we have not had any success in getting funding from other Departments.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Anne, Katherine and Helen, for coming along this morning.

The next witnesses to come before the Committee are from the Chartered Institute of Library Information Professionals (CILIP). Following CILIP's five-minute overview of its written submission, members will have a chance to ask questions. I will try to give preference to members who did not question the first set of witnesses. Dr Bob McKee will lead the presentation. Witnesses, you are all welcome, and the Committee is looking forward to hearing your evidence.

Dr Bob McKee (Chartered Institute of Library Information Professionals Ireland): Good morning. My colleagues, Elga Logue, John McCormick and I represent CILIP. In my allotted five minutes, I want to cover three areas: some background information on CILIP, our position on the proposals on the way forward for public libraries in Northern Ireland, and comments on the draft legislation.

CILIP was formerly known as the Library Association, and some members may know it by that name. It was established about 130 years ago and received the royal charter in 1898. It is long-established as the professional and regulatory body for the library information sector across the UK.

We are responsible for maintaining the register of qualified practitioners for all parts of the library and information spectrum across the UK, not only public libraries. We provide opportunities for networking, professional development and advocacy on professional issues. It is worth saying that, in Northern Ireland, we have consistently worked across all divides for more than 30 years. A North/South liaison committee has held an annual conference for 30-plus years, without fail. That commendable record is due more to my two colleagues than to me.

We form a community of about 35,000 people who are engaged in library and information work across the UK, of whom about 12,500 are on the register of qualified practitioners, and, of those, about 3,200 work in public libraries. Therefore, we can speak from an authoritative base. We have been involved throughout the current sequence of initiatives on public library policy in Northern Ireland.

I was involved in the work that led to the original 'Tomorrow's Libraries' report in 2002. Recently, I was a member of the appointments panel that recruited a chief executive designate for the new library authority. We have submitted evidence at every stage of the consultation process and have provided assistance to DCAL officials, both in their work on policy development and in their early preparations for the new authority.

We strongly agree with the role and vision of public libraries that is outlined in the 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries' report. We welcome the introduction of a published set of standards, which is in the annex to the report. We welcome the commitment to the equitable distribution of resources and the consequent commitment to equity in library provision across Northern Ireland. We welcome the establishment of a new library authority, which provides an opportunity to strengthen the Library Service in Northern Ireland by building on the collaborative work that has already been carried out across the current five education and library boards. The Committee heard reference to that during the previous submission.

It seems highly appropriate that the new political Administration in Northern Ireland should, as one of its first acts, enact legislation to strengthen the Library Service, because libraries have a role to play in any civilised society in relation to opportunity, equity, democracy, and human rights. For that reason, we are glad to be here.

Most of the points that we want to make on the legislation are contained in our written submission, but I want to highlight just a few. The duty of the new library authority that is set out in the Bill should refer explicitly to the set of standards of provision that citizens can expect. The principle of the Library Service being free at the point of use, which is safeguarded in the Bill, should be strengthened by making it clear that the scheme of charges cannot include charging for any core elements of the service. That requires definition.

We doubt the validity of the specific levels of efficiency savings and start-up costs that are set out in the explanatory and financial memorandum. There is a real danger that a declaration of such efficiencies will cause the new authority to be born into a negative climate of cutbacks, rather than a positive climate of service development.

Although the memorandum refers to start-up costs, there is no explicit reference to transition costs, such as the inevitable costs of redundancies. There must be more clarity about where those figures come from and what they mean.

My next point has already been made by the previous witnesses. The present link with education provides a close collaboration between libraries and schools. That must not be lost. A framework agreement between the new library and education authorities will be necessary.

I wish to draw the Committee's attention to a point that is not included in our submission, which concerns the provision of advice to the Northern Ireland library authority. Legislation across the water makes provision for a body that used to be called the Library Advisory Council; its name has now been changed, intelligently, to the Advisory Council on Libraries. There might be some value in the Committee considering whether a similar advisory role should be enshrined in Northern Ireland legislation. That has been very helpful across the water.

That concludes our introductory comments.

Lord Browne: CILIP's submission states that it is concerned that the start-up allocation of £670,000 may not be sufficient. Please explain why.

Dr McKee: We have seen the figure, but not how it was worked out. I mentioned in the submission that we need to know whether that figure includes transition costs and the inevitable costs of the transfer of undertakings and redundancies.

Lord Browne: The Committee understands that the new education and skills authority will not be in place until March 2009. Will there be any risks for CILIP if the new library authority is not established by April 2008?

Dr McKee: There is no threat to CILIP, because it is an independent body. However, we act in the public interest, which is why we are registered as a charity. There would be damage to the public interest if there were to be continuing uncertainty about the future of libraries in Northern Ireland. What is in the public interest is the orderly transition from the present situation to the new arrangement. We need clarity about that transition and its timetable.

Mr K Robinson: I thank the witness for his precise and concise opening remarks. In your submission, Dr McKee, you stated that there needs to be a clearer explanation in clause 4(8) as to what constitutes commercial activities. What are the problems with the way commercial activities are defined in the Bill? Is the definition that is contained in the Bill too broad or too narrow?

Dr McKee: We discussed that question immediately prior to the meeting. Clause 4(4) contains a helpful safeguard, namely that commercial activities are permitted so long as they do not interfere with the primary duties of the authority. The subsection that you referred to relates to specific types of commercial activities — the provision of services, and so on — and there is nothing wrong with that. Our problem is with the culture that that may create. Will success be judged using commercial, entrepreneurial, income-generating criteria, or, on social and educational criteria, as it ought to be?

Mr K Robinson: I see the danger of the “burger and a book” syndrome creeping in. Is that what you mean?

Dr McKee: Absolutely.

Ms Elga Logue (Chartered Institute of Library Information Professionals Ireland): We asked whether a library that is situated in a highly populated area and that runs many activities might be judged on profit-making, as opposed to the quality of service it offered.

Mr K Robinson: Compared with a library in a rural situation?

Ms Logue: Exactly. We would not want to see a situation in which profit-making jeopardises other libraries, which may be doing tremendous work, but may not be making the same profits because of their location, perhaps in marginalised areas. That, however, does not mean that they are not good libraries — they may be doing wonderful work. The question is whether one assesses quality on the basis of issue figures, or on user satisfaction.

Mr K Robinson: I shall play devil's advocate for a moment. In answer to Wallace's question a moment ago, you said that the allocation for start-up costs would not cover those costs. However, if the opportunity of commercial input arises, the question becomes whether you would sell your soul to keep the system afloat, or keep the system pure because of the end benefits that we all want the library system to produce for us.

Mr McCormick: There is no reason why we cannot have both. Commercial activity for libraries per se is not wrong. Everyone wants to generate some money. We worry that libraries would be expected to become profit-making operations. That would be very difficult to do in many ways.

Mr K Robinson: For geographical and other reasons?

Mr McCormick: Yes.

Mr Brolly: You made an issue of the absence of the words “efficient and effective” and “comprehensive and efficient”. How important is that wording? Surely the efficiency and effectiveness of the Library Service will be down to those people who will eventually be given the job of running the libraries?

Dr McKee: It is very dangerous for things to be implicit in legislation and not explicit. The inclusion in the Bill of the words “comprehensive and efficient” would serve two purposes: it would align the Bill with legislation across the rest of the UK — and there is a value in that — and it would make explicit two requirements that you might think are implicit, but, hey, people change. The inclusion of the word “comprehensive” means that the service has to be inclusive of everyone — people with disabilities, people living in rural areas, and so on. That could get lost if the word is not in legislation for people to see. The word “efficient” is all about public service reform. Again, one would expect efficiency — that is understood — but it would be nice for it to be required in legislation.

Mr D Bradley: You mentioned the importance of the continuing close collaboration between libraries and schools. How do you think that the schools’ library service should be delivered in the new emerging context?

Dr McKee: That is a difficult one for me, because we are looking at this matter as a professional body, not in terms of the local operational detail. However, I listened as you asked the same question to the previous group of witnesses. It seems that there is a very clear understanding of what a schools’ library service is, and of the public libraries’ role and the schools’ role in that service. It would not, therefore, be impossible to construct a framework agreement between the two new authorities that would enshrine that. That framework could then be delivered among individual libraries and schools.

Mr McCarthy: Should a specific or stronger form of words be included in clause 6 so that the authority cannot charge for core services?

Dr McKee: Yes.

Ms Logue: Yes. Membership of public libraries has always been free. All the wonderful activities that go on in the library every day — storytelling, book clubs, and so on — are never charged for. In many ways, that is what makes a library service a quality service that reaches out to all groups — one that promotes social inclusion. The Bill should clearly define the core services that will remain free.

Dr McKee: One could extract a list of core services and write it down — I did that on the plane this morning. If a scheme of charges can be written down, a list of core services can too.

The Chairperson: I will allow Members to ask one other question, if anyone wants to take this opportunity to do so.

Mr K Robinson: The previous presentation touched on the issue that I wish to raise, and the Committee discussed it last week as well. In this new, wonderful world in which everything will be streamlined and reorganised and money will be saved, and so forth, individuals with tremendous experience may well find themselves in a position whereby they want to leave the service — or it may be advantageous to the service to see them leave. How do you cope with that experience gap? How do you fill it so that the service and delivery are not diluted?

Dr McKee: That is a central issue for us as the professional body, given that our job is professional development. I mentioned a figure of 12,500 qualified practitioners earlier, and less than 100 of them work in Northern Ireland. Thus, the gap already exists here. That workforce developmental issue has to be addressed at some level, and I do not think that the authority could address it unaided.

The Chairperson: I thank the CILIP team, Dr McKee, John and Elga for their contribution.

We now welcome Kirby Porter and John Gray from the Libraries and Information Services Council (Northern Ireland) (LISC (NI)). They will give a five-minute overview of their written submission and then they will take questions from members.

Mr Kirby Porter (Libraries and Information Services Council (Northern Ireland)): I thank the Committee for inviting us here today.

LISC (NI) is a membership organisation that represents the main library providers in Northern Ireland. Members include public libraries, university and college libraries, and even libraries in the voluntary sector. Its two basic roles are to advise the Department of Culture Arts and Leisure on matters pertaining to libraries, and to engage in co-operative activities throughout the library world in Northern Ireland in order to advance libraries in all forms.

Three projects in which you may be interested will give you a flavour of the work that LISC does. One is that it is the Northern Ireland partner for Newsplan, which is a project to collect, preserve and make available newspapers throughout the United Kingdom and Ireland.

The second is Inspire NI, which is a project to widen access to all libraries, on a managed basis, to anyone in the Province. There are several other similar projects, including the Northern Ireland Publications Resource (NIPR), the funding for which comes through LISC. That project’s aim is to collect all material published in Northern Ireland and publications that relate to Northern Ireland.

As an organisation, LISC broadly welcomes the decision to create a single, strategic, library authority. However, our submission includes caveats which are, basically, the same as the concerns that have been raised today. They relate to the service’s comprehensiveness, charging, and the costs relating to its start-up and continuing functioning. In broad terms, the creation of a single library authority is a useful step forward for libraries and one that should be commended.

The Chairperson: I will offer Committee members the chance to ask questions — unless John has anything to add.

Mr John Gray (Libraries and Information Services Council (Northern Ireland)): I have nothing to add. Kirby has said everything that I would wish to say.

Mr Shannon: You indicated your support for the single library service. In paragraph 3(d) of LISC's written submission, it is stated that a single library authority:

“should ensure the development of specialist services and expertise not currently within the scope of five separate education and library boards”

and “could enable more effective marketing of the service.”

In the final sentence of the same paragraph it is stated that a single library authority could:

I am keen to learn from where you might attract that external funding. Is it from independent business? Is it from other Departments? Why do you refer to the greater capacity to attract significant levels of external funding? If you can attract significant levels of external funding, we will be very keen to learn how you can do that, as, I am sure, will the Executive. However, I digress. I just want to get your opinion on the matter of external funding.

Mr Gray: I shall answer that question. It is not provable in advance, but a single library authority, with a higher profile and a high level of focused leadership, is more likely to achieve major strategic partnerships with other bodies that can, essentially, bring funding to the table. Those could include anything from public-private partnerships to such bodies as the Heritage Lottery Fund, the Big Lottery Fund, or other service providers. I suspect that smaller services have less strategic capacity to engage in that type of work.

Mr Shannon: You mentioned partnerships, as did one of the previous deputations. Partnerships are all very well, but have initial discussions taken place with any potential partners? I am keeping a note — I realise that you said that it is not provable.

Mr Gray: The question that you ask is a more of a commentary on the difficulties of the current environment than the possibilities of a single library authority.

LISC (NI) is one example of the possibilities that exist for co-operation on a Province-wide basis, in that the five education and library boards, which provide library services, and all the other library-interested parties in Northern Ireland co-operate in partnership on a range of beneficial projects. Those projects have been taken forward at a little extra public cost, but they deliver more than the sum of the parts of the organisations concerned.

The Chairperson: In your submission, you state that the number of board members in the library authority — a maximum of 14 — may not be sufficient to deal with the workload or be able to reflect the broad range of library users. Would you elaborate on that?

Mr Gray: LISC (NI) is aware of the need for caution to avoid unwieldy bodies, but is also concerned that library services are spread widely across Northern Ireland and that the board will have to have specific strategic expertise available in a range of fields. The board will also have to provide for adequate representation of age and gender spectrums and issues such as the rural/urban divide. That tends to suggest that a board comprising 14 or 15 members may be a bit tight. One option would be to consider the possibility of giving the board the provision to appoint an advisory council. There is no provision in the legislation for that, but it might help. Our thinking, without being dogmatic about the matter, is that the board should have more than 14 or 15 members.

Mr Porter: LISC (NI) is particularly concerned that, during the first years of the new library authority, when a lot of strategic work will have to be done, a board comprising 14 members may not be sufficient to provide the required expertise. Currently, between 50 and 60 people are involved in the library committees of the education and library boards, so having a board with 14 members would be a considerable reduction. As John Gray says, LISC (NI) is not suggesting a board of 30 or 40 people; we are asking for a modest reconsideration to ensure that the balance is correct.

Mr K Robinson: In a corporate and individual sense, local government has been excluded from this process, presumably due to the fear that councillors may burn or eat books. Given that councillors can accurately reflect the feeling of communities, is there a place for a local government presence on an extended board? If larger local authorities are created, the role of councillors will become more apparent.

Mr Gray: The difficulty is that the number of local authorities under the review of public administration is unclear. If I am right, there will be a minimum of eight councils, but there are likely to be more. If that is so, it will not be possible for every local authority to be represented on the new library authority; there will have to be another mechanism. Local government representation may have to be organised through the Northern Ireland Local Government Association. However, adoption of the idea for an advisory council would provide scope for more local input.

Mr D Bradley: Could, and should, the Northern Ireland library authority deliver schools' library services?

Mr Porter: There is no doubt that, given how the schools' library service is delivered, a partnership arrangement — at the very least — with the public library service is required. However, should the public library service, rather than the education and skills authority, deliver the schools' library service? It would be difficult for school libraries to realise their full potential were they not part of the educational framework.

The Libraries and Information Services Council (Northern Ireland) has done a great deal of work to try to improve school libraries' efficiency. However, the standard of that efficiency varies, and depends on the level of support that a head teacher gives to his or her library. If school libraries were seen to be removed further from the education service, they would lack the necessary credibility to make progress. Therefore, it is probably best that school libraries remain within the ambit of the education service.

Mr McCarthy: Do you believe that clause 6 should include a specific form of words that would not permit the library authority to charge for services?

Mr Porter: Undoubtedly, it is essential that core services are protected in legislation to prevent that from happening in future.

The Chairperson: Kieran, you seek stronger wording in that clause.

Mr McCarthy: I have undoubtedly made that point this morning.

Mr Porter: Where possible, the tendency is to charge for services. The temptation in future will be that, if something can be charged for, at some stage that issue will be raised, and charges will be introduced. By definition, that is the way in which things work — if a charge can be levied, it eventually will be.

The Chairperson: I thank Kirby and John for coming along this morning, and for sharing their wisdom with the Committee.

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): The next item of business is the Committee Stage of the Taxis Bill. As the Committee will be dealing with a lot of business today, each person giving oral evidence will be given a maximum of 15 minutes to make a presentation, after which I will move proceedings on so as to afford everyone an opportunity to present his case. Members may raise questions about the clarity of the evidence, and, finally, if required, the Committee will hear from officials from the Department of the Environment, who will shed light on the details of the legislation.

The Taxis Bill is complex, and there may be some difficulties in it, but I ask the witnesses to bear with us, as we aim to stay focused on its main content and the issues contained therein.

The Committee will now hear evidence from Mr Samuel Egerton. Thank you for attending, Mr Egerton. I will ask you to identify yourself and the organisation that you represent. Mr Egerton, the floor is yours. The Committee will time the proceedings, so please bear with me if I interrupt to say that your time is coming to a close.

Mr Samuel Egerton: Thank you for giving us the opportunity to express our views. Some of those views will be the same as other taxi drivers, and some will be personal.

I have been in the taxi industry for 25 years — since approximately 1982 — and age tends to blur time. Since I am the first taxi driver to give evidence to the Committee, I urge members to spare a moment to consider some of my colleagues who are no longer with us. Northern Ireland suffered much over the past 40 years, and many taxi drivers were murdered or assaulted or had their cars hijacked. Given the current trend of binge drinking, many taxi drivers are subjected to verbal abuse at the weekends. I am sure that, in their own areas, members see young ladies and men hanging out of taxi windows and doing all sorts of things such as yelling and singing, but it is taxi drivers who get those people home. We should not forget those who work in the taxi industry — and from other sectors of Northern Ireland society — who are not with us today.

The Chairperson: Yes. Thank you for that.

Mr Egerton: I acknowledge the effort that the taxi review team has put into the Taxis Bill. The team has been working on it for a long time, but I have been involved for even longer. I sat in this Building a long time ago with other taxi drivers, and we were given promises by the then Minister Richard Needham that there would be changes in the taxi industry. Those changes did not materialise. The recommendations of the Sterling Report were not implemented, and I would be delighted if a Committee member were to ask the Department why they were not even partly implemented, because one of the report's many prominent proposals related to depot licensing. There are many similarities between what happened to the Sterling Report and the current process. If depot licensing alone had been introduced all those years ago, I suspect that we would not be sitting here today, wondering where we are going.

We have been down this road before, and I feel restricted in what I am permitted to say. However, the Taxis Bill is weak: its foundations may not be built on sand, but they are weak in aggregate. Matters that should be covered by the Bill — such as taxi driver numbers — have been omitted. If you wish to rule me out of order, Mr Chairperson, please do so.

The Chairperson: The Committee is restricted to consideration of what is in the Bill, so I ask you to restrict your comments likewise.

Mr Egerton: I accept that, Mr Chairperson. The Taxis Bill is enabling legislation, and, as the Minister said, its recommendations will not cost anything: it is a piece of paper. However, taxi drivers and their associated bodies anticipate all sorts of ramifications from the Bill. I and many others feel that we are being asked to issue a blank cheque. I am sure that Committee members who are in business, in some shape or form, know that. People who are in business need to have cost projections, but we do not have any.

Taxi drivers have been told that the legislation will mean the introduction of standards, increased enforcement and depot licensing. We have no problems with that. However, clause 2 of the Bill deals with the licensing of sole operators. I have been self-employed — a sole trader — for many years, as have most other taxi drivers. There will be ramifications for the taxi industry if the Department pushes ahead with the licensing aspect of the legislation. For instance — and this has been discussed before in other places — if a Committee member flags me down at 1.00 am, perhaps a wee bit under the weather — and my apologies for saying that — I have to ask him for a destination and a name, because I am a sole operator. Therefore, those involved in the taxi industry see many practical difficulties. I am a legitimate taxi driver, but I cannot speak for legitimate taxi-depot drivers.

We should not fear change, because change is long overdue; it is the outworkings of that change that concerns us.

Let me go back to the point about operator licensing. Those operators pose no problems because they run commercial businesses and have systems in place. One of the significant messages that came from the consultation document, however, was that many taxi firms have fewer than five drivers, many of whom are self-employed. In rural areas, there are several one-man operations in which drivers work from home and cover their villages or towns.

The cost implications of the proposed legislation are very important to us. Let us make no bones about it: taxi depots will pass the costs of the changes on to the drivers. As an individual, I cannot pass those costs on to my customers.

To be honest, the Department of the Environment's record on setting reasonable fares is quite appalling. In 2004, after two and a half years, Belfast public hire drivers on the day shift — I call myself a day-shift worker — were awarded a mere 10p of a fare rise. During that time, fuel costs rose by between 20p and 25p a litre, and the Department's inspection fee was increased to £126. Those figures speak for themselves. How was the 10p fare rise arrived at?

With regard to sole drivers/operators, many of my colleagues in Belfast feel that we do not need to have sole operator licences. That will be discussed later. I am easy about that; I do not have a problem with it, but I do have a problem with the cost involved, which is a concern for one-person operations. I really feel that although the Department has considered the option, it has not thought it through properly.

If the Department wanted to, it could include a clause in the Bill to outlaw any contrived arrangement made to get around the requirement to apply for an operator's licence. For example, the Department said that if a person who was running a depot had say, six or seven guys with an operator's licence working from his depot, he would not need an operator's licence himself. To me, that would be a contrived arrangement, which should be outlawed. I have no idea how such an arrangement could be made, but it could be circumvented.

The other major issue, which relates particularly to Belfast, is the abolition of the two-tier system. In her speech to the Assembly on 26 June during the debate on the Second Stage of the Taxis Bill, the Minister of the Environment made it clear that the two-tier system was history. However, not enough research has been done into the economic impact that the abolition of that system will have on individuals like me. The T&G Section of Unite estimates that as many as 450 drivers may lose their jobs. That is the equivalent, for example, of the closure of a major manufacturing complex, and it will mean a gradual strangulation and deprivation of work for individuals like me.

The Department of the Environment raised the issue of exclusion zones. The taxi rank at the corner of Great Victoria Street and Amelia Street is one of only two ranks that operate during the day in Belfast — I will return to ranks later. However, there are a couple of food outlets near that rank. If the DOE imposes a 250-metre exclusion zone, into which only accessible taxis are permitted, guys who are not supposed to be there will drive in and say "I am tying my shoelace", or "I want to go to the shop for 20 cigarettes", or "I want to buy a drink". It is happening already. They sit at the back of our ranks as though they are waiting for somebody; and if they are looked at suspiciously, they go and buy something. Other drivers say the same. I have heard that a member of the Committee has been out and about in Belfast investigating the matter. We are having these problems all the time. It is a serious situation; there are too many drivers — I do not want to get into that discussion. The idea of an exclusion zone poses several difficulties.

One of the biggest problems for the Department lies between the hours of 1.00 am and 3.00 am on Saturday night and Sunday morning, when the nightlife in Belfast empties out into the streets. Everyone can understand that young people come into Belfast for a night out — we have all been young. However, the problem is that they all leave the bars and nightclubs at the same time. In my many years as a private-hire driver, I often thought that I would be a millionaire if I were able to split my vehicle four ways. In any city, taxis cannot cover the busy period when bars close and people want to go home.

Based on the recommendation of the Office of Fair Trading, other cities have deregulated the licensing system, resulting in more taxis being introduced. Several years ago, for a three-week period, DOE officials marshalled taxis in the Shaftesbury Square area to ensure that people got home.

When the World Irish Dancing Championships took place in 2004 at the Waterfront Hall, people needed taxis, and the result was a free-for-all. Private-hire vehicles were trying to pick up people from the streets illegally, and my public-hire colleagues were trying to work a rank legally. It was chaos. However, Belfast City Council viewed Belfast public hire — the black taxis — as hoods and nasty people. I am an example of one of the good guys — and there are plenty of us — who work the streets, but we were rubbished. When the World Irish Dancing Championships took place again in Belfast in 2006, the DOE and the PSNI were present on the first day. DOE officials waved the black taxis forward, and the system worked well. I ask the Committee to seriously consider a taxi-marshalling scheme. Such a scheme works across the water. Although it would cost money, it is right that the Government invest in helping people who bring money into Belfast to get home at the end of the night.

I listened to the Minister of the Environment and other Members speaking during the debate on the Taxis Bill. It seemed that their minds were already made up that the Bill was needed and would be going through. I accept that that is their prerogative in a democratic society. However, the 'Public Carriage Office (London) Conditions of Fitness Reconsideration', 15 December 2005, page 6, states:

"Concern has been expressed that some members of the PCO (Public Carriage Office) appeared to hold views on key aspects of the reconsideration. The PCO does not consider it improper for members of their staff to hold such views on particular questions relevant to the reconsideration of this process: indeed, it would be surprising if staff whose jobs concern the regulation of taxis did not hold such views on such issues."

The following is the important sentence:

"What is important is that any such views should be subject to change in the light of new evidence available from the studies undertaken."

I hope that the Committee will recognise that my evidence and that of other individuals from the taxi industry constitutes new evidence.

Since 1994, along with every taxi driver in Northern Ireland, I have experienced a steady decline in income, because there are too many drivers. Some taxi drivers in Belfast may be earning less than the national minimum wage. Rather than considering that, taxi drivers tend to think about their next job. There was a time when waiting in a rank for 20 minutes would be considered a bad day for a taxi driver. Today, public-hire taxi drivers can wait for 30, 45 or 75 minutes for a fare. It is busy at 5.00 pm, and everyone wants more taxis between 1.00 am and 3.00 am because they want to get home in one piece after a good night out. I hope that the Committee will ask where those taxis go after those busy periods.

Public-hire vehicles are sitting in totally inadequate ranks, as the Committee will already be aware. Drivers of public-hire vehicles have to fight off widespread illegal p-uing, because if private-hire taxis do not have a fare and see an opportunity to grab one, they will take it.

If I can turn to the issue of taxi ranks —

The Chairperson: We are approaching the end of your 15 minutes.

Mr Egerton: I will make it quick. Today, and during a previous meeting, Committee members have referred to tourism, and I remind the Committee that tourists often meet a taxi driver before anyone else in Belfast to either ask where the Belfast Welcome Centre is, because they cannot find it, or to go somewhere. Therefore, it is essential that public-hire taxi drivers have somewhere to ply their trade — to wait legally and not be forced to sit in the middle of the road illegally where one can fall foul of the PSNI traffic branch.

I could say much more, and if any Committee members want to get in touch with me privately, I am more than happy to deal with any enquiries. I have not been in touch over the holidays because Committee members were entitled to a break, but, as the saying goes, the "honeymoon is over". I think that someone said that on television.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much, Mr Egerton.

Mr Egerton: I am free for another two hours, but I do not think that I would be allowed to talk for that long.

The Chairperson: I appreciate that; you have kept well within your time limit. Members, let us focus on some of the distilled issues that have emerged from Mr Egerton's evidence.

Mr Weir: Thank you for your presentation, Mr Egerton. I wish to seek clarification on two matters. First, you mentioned the impact that the regulations would have on single operators, particularly in regard to costs. Can you explain the nature of those additional costs and their financial implications?

Mr Egerton: An earlier DOE presentation to the Committee referred to those costs. We are aware of the costs that are associated with the three-year licence period, such as a three-day training module — taken for a day a year, or all together. The DOE has a better idea of the cost factors. A further example is that the reduction of a taxi licence from five years to three years means that, in a 10-year period, three licences rather than two will be required, which means more revenue for the Department but less for us. However, I cannot quantify those costs because, as I said earlier, we are being asked to sign a blank cheque.

I know that the Bill is enabling legislation and that much legislation will follow on from it, but my main concern is that the industry is dominated by a strong black economy; everyone wants to be a taxi driver, but only around 10% of those people want to go through the necessary formalities. I am sure that all Committee members know someone in their area who has done some taxiing. I think that a Committee member, speaking in the Assembly, referred to our industry as being low-wage and high-hour; that member hit it the nail on the head, because our status has plummeted. People say that one cannot go any lower, but we have. Perhaps this is the beginning of a comeback, but I cannot give you the detail of the costs. The Department may be able to do that.

Mr Weir: You also expressed concern about the ending of the two-tier system in Belfast. A two-tier system operates in Belfast, particularly in the city centre. Why do you think that Belfast should be different from anywhere else in the Province?

Mr Egerton: For a start, Belfast is a conurbation. Other cities have a two-tier system. What concerns me, as someone who is heading towards retirement, is that I see many people — particularly young ladies — who, if you will excuse the expression, “knock the bottle back” before they even hit the town. The partition between the driver and the passenger is very important, especially in the case of a female passenger.

I was in private hire for many years. I am no longer, or I could possibly argue the case for those taxis. I have noticed, since I came into the public-hire side, is that if a saloon can pick up off the street, incidents can happen, such as those that happen in cities across the water. We have taxi badges now, but I can remember a time when we did not. We got them because there were incidents, and I will put it no more strongly than that. That is my primary concern. The Department has a history of having to be dragged forward by the arms and feet.

The second point concerns public hire. If someone stops a taxi in the street and is not too sure where he wants to go, the taxi driver is supposed to know the way. I gained my knowledge through experience and the grey matter — forget about satellite navigation, which is a good toy, but goes no further. Most of the private-hire drivers rely on directions from their depot; a depot is a group instrument, because many drivers are in the business for four or five years. No one has ever studied how long the average working life is.

The Chairperson: Excuse me, Mr Egerton, I am conscious of a few other members who want to ask further questions, and you have adequately answered that question.

Mr Weir: Mr Egerton has answered my question.

The Chairperson: I remind members to stay focused on today's subject matter, please.

Mr Boylan: Mr Egerton, thank you for your presentation. Can you elaborate on how the proposed taxi-marshalling scheme will be enforced?

Mr Egerton: If you want an honest answer, enforcement is a bit of a joke, because there are only five dedicated enforcement officers. If you read the ‘Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency: Enforcement Strategy 2005–2008’, as I did, it is clear that the DOE is having a shake-up of enforcement. It seems to be more concerned with the overload of HGVs hammering along the countryside than with a lot of wealthy taxi drivers in Belfast. Enforcement is a real problem. If the DOE had a sophisticated enough computer system, similar to the one used for motor tax, that could make a difference. The DOE come out in Belfast and clear the streets of public- and private-hire taxis, and that speaks volumes about the number of taxi drivers. I hope that answers your question.

Mr Ford: I have a couple of quick questions on your written submission. First, you clearly have concerns about hirings on behalf of another operator, and, in particular, the difference between you as a single operator and some of the larger companies. The way I read the Bill, as it is currently drafted, that would not be a problem as long as your friend is a fully regulated taxi driver. What particular problem do you see in handing over hirings?

Secondly, you highlighted clause 34, which relates to an appeals procedure that will stop short of court proceedings. Have you any evidence from across the water, or anywhere else, of how that might operate?

Mr Egerton: Unfortunately, I do not. Liverpool, Birmingham and London and other cities have some licensing systems, but they are not as rock solid as they seem. My point is that the Department's mindset seems to be that if taxi drivers are not happy, they can take the Department to court. There must be an intermediate system. If someone were to make an allegation about me after I took him or her from A to B, enforcement officers would pull me in.

The Department has my statement, and it would also hear my side of the story. It would then act as — I am sure that Committee members, as politicians, are aware of the phrase — “judge, jury and executioner”. I would be on my own and in trouble because an allegation had been made. If I wanted to challenge that, I would need to hire a solicitor to accompany me. Quite often, drivers are not aware that such an allegation has been made against them until it is sprung on them.

To return to an earlier point: when the member asked about a “regulated driver”, did he mean an affiliated driver? I need to be clear about the terminology.

Mr Ford: Clause 4(1) states:

“A licensed operator (‘the first operator’) who has accepted a taxi booking may not arrange for another person who requires an operator’s licence to provide a taxi to carry out that booking as sub-contractor unless the other person is a licensed operator”.

Mr Egerton: I want to give the Committee a brief example, if I may. I am licensed as a sole trader. For instance, if I had a couple of bookings and was prevented from carrying those out, I would ask a guy who lives a couple of streets away from me — a mate of mine who works for one of the large depots — to cover those jobs on my behalf. However, my understanding is that because he is an affiliated driver with another company, he would not be able to cover those jobs. Please correct me if I am entirely wrong. However, as many of you gentlemen will know from political experience, such fine details — the nitty-gritty — must be clarified.

That primary legislation could be on the statute book for at least 15 years. If it is not right at the outset; unfortunately, I will be the victim. The taxi industry is far down in the pecking order of Committee priorities. It has more important issues to consider. However, it is number one on my agenda. I have listened to, and taken on board, what members have said about previous progress, and so on. I realise that on the grand scale of things, taxi drivers are far down the pecking order. However, on our scale, we are high up.

The Chairperson: The Committee is determined to get such an important piece of legislation right.

Mr Egerton: That is why I tried to interject with those points earlier.

The Chairperson: It is crucial that the Committee hears from someone with your grasp of the issues, Mr Egerton.

Mr Egerton: I have serious concerns about the Bill. I want to conclude my remarks, as I am sure that my time is almost up. I want to make the point that the Taxis Bill is an in-house document from the Department of the Environment. Across the water, councils and bodies have used firms that have specialist expertise. To the best of my knowledge, no one from the Department has ever come along and stood at my rank and noted that it took the taxi at the end of the rank 25 minutes, for example, to get to the front. I do not believe that such a survey has ever been carried out, although I may be wrong. That is a simple, basic survey that should have been undertaken.

Mr Gardiner: Thank you, Mr Egerton, for your presentation. I wanted to ask you about the two-tier system. However, Mr Weir asked you about that, and you expanded on it. Will you consider installing a mechanism in your taxi to protect yourself from the sort of conversations that take place, for example, when you are leaving people home late at night, and they become abusive towards you?

Mr Egerton: Across the water, several systems are available and have been installed in taxis. Some taxi drivers and operators slip a small video camera underneath their passenger seats. Some professionally installed systems are available as protection. However, an issue that occurred to me when I read through the documents was that use of such systems may have implications under the Data Protection Act 1998. Drivers can use small cameras in their taxis. However, the industry is vulnerable. When a driver has four young male or female passengers in the back, the trick is to get them home as quickly as possible. A few months ago, one of my colleagues had a nasty weekend. He was taking certain individuals home to Dunmurry when he was stabbed. Fortunately, he is out and about and working again. My colleagues who are sitting behind me know whom I am talking about.

Taxi drivers endure much abuse and what the police call “small incident violence”, which is not reported. Another colleague asked a passenger for the fare, which was £4.00. What he received was a punch in the eye. It is as simple as that.

Mr Gardiner: That is why there should be a recording. Taxi drivers do sterling work, and they must be protected. It is only a suggestion on my part that we try to assist on that.

Mr Egerton: It costs money to install cameras.

Mr Gardiner: I know that it does, but lives are worth more than money.

The Chairperson: That is another issue that will arise. Let us distil the main issues. We discussed the two-tier system, its economic impact and the costs that, inevitably, will be passed on to drivers. There was also the issue of enforcement, which Cathal Boylan raised, and the associated issue relating to the taxi-marshalling scheme. Have we covered the main issues? It is my intention that the Committee will take evidence from the groups here today and will then ask the Department to respond later to the issues arising.

Mr Ford: I think that Peter Weir mentioned an appeals process, which would stop short of moving into the normal court system. I am someone who, as far as possible, prefers to keep lawyers out of such matters.

The issue merits consideration as regards alternatives or experiences we could learn from other places.

Mr T Clarke: Mr Egerton touched on another matter. He suggested that Belfast taxi drivers wear badges and that others do not. Is that correct?

Mr Egerton: No, it is not. To clarify that point; in 1981–82 the only identification that taxi drivers had was having their names on green discs on their windscreens, similar to the public-service-vehicle licence discs. A number of incidents occurred in the university area, and there was a considerable outburst from the press, in which the point was made that people wished to know whether taxi drivers were working legitimately — in those days, anyone could claim to be a taxi driver. That was when the badge scheme was introduced. Departmental officials will be able to go into greater detail on that matter. However, the badge scheme arose from specific incidents, and the DOE had to be dragged into doing something. Unfortunately, it has been Department's policy down the years to be dragged into doing things.

Mr T Clarke: I asked that question because I notice that the issuing of a driver's badge is provided for in clause 24 of the Bill.

The Chairperson: We can get clarification from the Department when we come to that issue.

Mr T Clarke: The provision of a driver's badge is in the Bill. I thought that there was a concern about it.

Mr Egerton: My point is that everything that has come to us from the DOE over the years has had to be dragged out of it.

The Chairperson: Do you rate this as progress?

Mr Egerton: Many taxi drivers think that there should be two badges. If I am not wearing my badge, as I am wearing this security pass today, a police constable or a DOE officer can prosecute me.

The Chairperson: Thank you for giving up your time to give evidence this morning, Mr Egerton. It has been very useful.

Mr Egerton: Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to address the Committee. I hope that the point I made about the Public Carriage Office will be borne in mind by the Committee.

The Chairperson: Welcome, Mr Long and Mr O'Reilly. Please clarify who you represent and in what capacity.

Mr Stephen Long (West Belfast Taxi Association): We will cover that in our oral submission, which will vary slightly from our written submission.

The Chairperson: I ask you to please stay within the remit of the Taxis Bill. You will have a maximum of 15 minutes to make your presentation. As you were present during the previous witness session, you will know how the process works. Thank you, again, for attending.

Mr S Long: Good morning. My name is Stephen Long, and I am the general manager of the West Belfast Taxi Association. I am accompanied by Stephen O'Reilly, who is the chairperson of the nine-member committee that is elected annually to look after the interests of all association members. I thank the Committee for today's invitation. We are conscious of the time allotted for our presentation, but, in the interest of all present, we want to present some background information about the West Belfast Taxi Association.

The West Belfast Taxi Association has been in business since 1970 and has 230 members, on behalf of whom we are authorised to speak. All association members hold current public-service-vehicle licences, and each member is covered by a current Roads Service operator's licence, issued by the Department of the Environment's road transport licensing division, to provide multi-stage carriage fares and occasional private-hire contract services. This is the reason that the association is the only holder of a Department-licensed taxi-bus plate.

All our vehicles are wheelchair accessible and display plates allowing them to carry six or seven passengers, depending on the type of approved vehicle. I will show the Committee the type of plate that we use, which says "taxi bus".

An independent survey carried out in March 2001 demonstrated annual usage of our service by 5·8 million passengers. That was before the construction of our new operating centre in Belfast city centre — a gateway to west and north Belfast, for which we provide services.

Although the core of our service provision is based on multi-stage carriage fares, we also provide occasional private-hire services, specifically for tourists, and, through contract services, supply transport for the Belfast Education and Library Board and health trusts for passengers with special needs.

As well as being regulated by statutory agencies, the West Belfast Taxi Association is self-regulating through its constitution and code of conduct, which already contains the majority of the key elements in the Taxis Bill. To fully appreciate the services that we offer, we suggest that the Committee visit our operating centre and experience at first hand the workings of the taxi-bus service.

The association has the only hail-and-ride bus service in western Europe, and it can be a lifeline for anyone who lives, works or socialises in the areas to which we provide services. The association recognises the need for the Taxis Bill, and it was a key stakeholder in the consultation that led to the development of the Bill. We commend the DOE, especially the taxi review team, on the consultation held in March 2005. We also commend those who made themselves available for public and private meetings about the impending regulations.

Like many other service industries, the taxi industry is growing due, in particular, to the increasing number of tourists. In many instances, taxi drivers at ports, airports and bus stations give tourists their first impressions of the place we live in. Passenger and provider satisfaction must be achieved. Consideration must also be given to the economic effect of changes on providers. Any excessive increase in regulatory demands made on providers will, ultimately, lead to increased fares, which will impact on consumers, and the effect of that must be considered.

In some countries, increased regulation has led to an increase in illegal services: taxi users who do not have a sizeable disposable income elect to use illegal services, even in the knowledge that they are not properly covered by insurance, and so forth.

I will deal with certain elements in the sequential order in which they appear in the Taxis Bill and give the Committee details of our proposed amendments, additions, omissions and advice.

The association agrees in principle with the one-tier system for all. The more forms of amenable taxis there are, the better it will be for taxi users, especially those who socialise in the evenings. The more service provision there is, the lower the likelihood of low-level street disorder and antisocial behaviour, which will also benefit the accident and emergency services.

In dealing with the arrangement of the Bill, we suggest adding the term “taxi bus” and its definition to an introductory section. Taxi bus means the provision of a taxi service based on multi-occupancy of a vehicle by up to six or seven passengers with an agreed and publicised fare tariff and regulated under a Roads Service operator’s licence.

With regard to the regulation of taxi operators, we suggest the following amendment to clause 2(4)(a)(i) after:

“is a fit and proper person to hold an operator’s licence”

“and checked against the child sex offender register.”

At the end of clause 2, which deals with operator’s licences, we suggest inserting the following new subsection:

“(9) Holders of existing Road Service Operators Licences who provide taxi bus services will Require no need for an additional operators licence;

Not require any changes ... in the conditions and criteria of a Road Service Operators Licence to operate existing services under new operators licence;

Capping of charges for Road Service Operators Licence in view of service provision to public transport by licensed taxi bus providers.”

At the end of clause 6, which deals with compliance with a departmental taxi-sharing scheme, we suggest the following new subsection:

“(4) Those who currently hold a Road Service Operators Licence will be permitted to operate a taxi-sharing scheme any additional taxi-sharing scheme in the defined areas of provision of transport already provided for must demonstrate the need for an additional taxi sharing scheme.”

We suggest an amendment to clause 9(b) because the frequency of the services, the times of departure and the times to be taken on the journeys included in those services, and the number of taxis to be used in those services, is not realistic. Frequency of service is restricted in relation to the volume of traffic, specifically at peak times. Times of departure are based on demand. Times taken on a journey are restricted due to the length of journey and the volume of traffic. The number of taxis will be denoted by the number of vehicles on the operator’s licence.

In Part 2, which concerns the regulation of drivers of taxis, the Department needs to look seriously at the design of some vehicles that are used as taxis but have never been crash-tested as taxis.

We suggest that clause 14(5)(a) should be redrafted to:

“(a) give notice under same conditions of SORN information to the Department of the fact that the name and address of the new owner whose vehicle must be licensed in accordance with the taxi service they will provide under an operator’s licence.”

At the end of clause 15, which deals with the identification of licensed vehicles, we suggest inserting a new subsection (7):

“(7) No licensed taxi will be permitted to carry signage that is not applicable to the service provision that the taxi is licensed to provide. Permitted signage should only indicate applicable type Accessible or Non-accessible Public Hire, Private Hire or Taxi Bus. Anyone who contravenes this regulation is guilty of an offence.”

In clause 16, which deals with the regulation of fares, we suggest including a new paragraph (1)(c):

“(c) In accordance with Disability Discrimination no differential in application of taxi fares or charges irrespective of able bodied or non-able bodied usage.”

We suggest that clause 19(1), which deals with taxis not being permitted to carry more than the prescribed number of persons, should relate specifically to the carrying of children of five years of age and under in taxis. Usually, parents and guardians keep children on their knees or in their arms. Primary legislation is required.

In Part 3, which deals with the regulation of drivers of taxis, clause 23(2)(a)(ii) should be amended to state:

“(ii) is a fit person in accordance with a General Practitioners examination and statement of same. The applicant is of good repute, which is determined by internal Departmental process. Applications will be accepted from a person who is classed as exempt under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act. Schedule 1 and 2 offences to be dealt with in accordance with the exemption under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act. The Department will consider applications from those not exempt under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act. Repute checks will also include checks against the Child Sex Offenders Register.”

The part of the Bill that relates to training should be omitted, because of an ongoing consultation process relating to training needs. Training needs must be delivered in a format that includes current holders of public-service-vehicle licences who have low-level educational skills but are ideal taxi drivers.

Finally, the Department must protect under legislation those who provide taxi services in a similar way to that in which other public-service providers are protected. The West Belfast Taxi Association is willing and, within its capacity in the taxi industry, welcomes operational and other changes that are required. Compliance costs are paramount. In the light of that, the association suggests that an independent regulatory body or taxi commissioner be appointed to adjudicate on the introduction of fees and regulations in relation to the Taxis Bill.

The Northern Ireland taxi industry already faces higher costs for insurance and fuel than any other provider in England, Scotland or Wales. The much-needed establishment of an independent authority should be responsible for the seamless transition of the new Taxis Bill, particularly in respect of fees.

Representation in an independent authority should include urban and rural taxi providers from the following sectors: public hire; private hire; wedding and funeral cars; stretch limousines, including novelty vehicles; chauffeur-driven cars that provide exclusive services; and taxi buses. Representation should also be included on behalf of consumers.

From a user and provider scenario, the taxi industry is made up of people irrespective of social, economic, religious, gender, or ethnic background. In many ways, the industry is the first face of tourism. Although the Department has no direct responsibility for tourism, it needs to recognise its role. Any higher additional compliance costs will clearly bring increased driver and vehicle costs to consumers. It must be realised is that, while addressing illegal taxis, the Taxis Bill could lead to unachievable compliance costs, resulting in the further establishment of illegal activity.

The West Belfast Taxi Association thanks the Department for the opportunity to consult on the process. Furthermore, we are happy to discuss the contents of our document with any duly appointed responsible persons. We suggest that particular attention be given to the changes to the Bill that we deem appropriate.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your comprehensive overview. Will members indicate whether they wish to ask questions?

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation. You mentioned the additional costs that will be incurred to bring taxis up to the standards required for carrying children. Will you elaborate on the taxibus system?

Mr S Long: Under the multi-occupancy arrangements, we provide a transport system on seven routes in west Belfast and one in north Belfast, which works on the basis of passengers sharing the price of the fares. The West Belfast Taxi Association transports 5.8 million passengers per annum, which is four times greater than the number passing through the George Best Belfast City airport. That is an indication of the service that we provide.

With regard to compliance costs, under the new legislation, there will be two increases in those costs over a 15-year period, because licence renewal will take place every three years instead of every five years. In addition, anyone over the age of 45 who applies for the renewal of a public service vehicle (PSV) licence must undergo a medical, which will mean two additional medical costs in that 15-year period also.

The training needs, which are still in the consultation process, will also involve additional compliance costs, and those costs, whether we like it or not, will be passed on to consumers. If it gets to the stage where those costs are outside the capabilities of taxi drivers, and fares become too expensive for consumers, illegal activity will start. It happens in other countries.

Mr Boylan: Would you elaborate on the carrying of children?

Mr S Long: The proposed legislation does not refer to children in taxis — I cannot see anything there about seatbelt wearing, booster seats etc. I suggest that the Department considers how children are carried in taxis. If they are not strapped in, children can act like missiles, and we are all conscious of the damage that can be done.

Mr Ford: I would like to follow up on a similar safety point. You referred to a design issue with certain vehicles: I take it that you are thinking about stretch limousines and new style multi-purpose- vehicle (MPV) people carriers, which are allegedly wheelchair accessible. Are you saying that PSV tests are not currently picking up safety issues in such vehicles?

Mr S Long: We would describe some of those vehicles as hybrid — their registration documents might show that they are van conversions. Such vehicles may have been tested to various national and European approval standards such as the M1 standard, some of which have been adopted here. However, seats could be removed after testing, as they are only framed in. Recently, I was in a private taxi, an MPV, which was registered to carry six passengers. I was sitting in the back, which had two rear seats, and there were three seats in front of me. Had there been an accident, and had the vehicle been rear-ended, I would have had great difficulty getting out.

Our advice to the Department is that it must be very careful when considering the type of vehicle to be classed as a taxi, especially if that type of vehicle has not been crash-tested as a taxi.

Mr Ford: Are you saying that that issue is distinct from the annual PSV testing?

Mr S Long: No. I am suggesting that when the annual testing is taking place, some criteria should be established for what is classed as a type-approved vehicle, especially one that has been adapted for people with special needs.

The Chairperson: You mentioned the potential for a disparity in the fares charged to people with disabilities.

Mr S Long: Legislation should ensure that there can be no differential.

The Chairperson: Is there a disparity at the minute?

Mr S Long: Yes. I do not have any evidence of that, or I would give it to the Committee. Some companies charge a premium rate for providing a service to people in wheelchairs, and that is a disgrace.

The Chairperson: Please expand on the educational standard of drivers and how that should, or should not, affect their ability to obtain a licence.

Mr S Long: The issue is not about a driver's ability to get a licence. A consultation process is ongoing on training needs, and we have submitted a document, which we have also given to the Committee. I do not think that there can be legislation on training needs until the consultation process has been completed and every area examined. A lot of PSV drivers are good taxi drivers who keep their vehicles in pristine condition and provide a great service, but they may have training needs. However, they may not be able to get that training, so training must be given in such a way that drivers with low-level educational skills can avail of it and still work in the industry.

The Chairperson: Have you ideas about the remit, or form, that an independent regulatory body should take? I do not want to bounce that one on you.

Mr S Long: It should comprise representatives from rural and urban areas, including those from private-hire and public-hire firms, taxibuses and the chauffeur-driven, novelty-type vehicles I mentioned earlier, such as fire engines and former British Army vehicles. There must be representation from across the board, including the Consumer Council, which was referred to earlier. Consumers must get value for money — compliance costs could be incurred and could be passed on to them.

Mr Boylan: Please clarify your remarks about clause 23(2)(a), and training delivery. Your comments, as regards low-level educational skills, are key. Would you also say something about schedules 1 and 2?

Mr S Long: As regards schedules 1 and 2, former prisoners still have to list on their original PSV licence applications that they were convicted in, say, 1973, and, as they renew their vehicle licences, they have to continue to list those convictions. Other convictions are dealt with under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, and it is high time that everything was dealt with under that Act. If convictions are spent, that should be the case for everyone. We are talking about social inclusion, not social exclusion. People whose convictions are spent should not have to list those convictions continually.

Mr T Clarke: I disagree.

The Chairperson: The Committee can ask the Department to elaborate on that point, and quite a lot may depend on the nature of the offence — if I am correct. The Committee will ask the Department to clarify those matters later today.

Mr T Clarke: The question is straight forward. If there is a conviction, the answer is either yes or no. If the answer is yes, the nature of the offence is immaterial. People have to be honest and complete the application form correctly. There should be no get-out clauses, regardless of the offence involved.

The Chairperson: To clarify, I have seen two scenarios relating to convictions. In some cases, a conviction is spent, which has applied to taxi drivers; in others, they are not: it depends on the nature of the offence. Perhaps we can call in officials from the Department today to clarify, if possible, the different situations.

Mr Boylan: Each witness is here today to submit challenges to certain clauses of the Bill, and it is up to the Department to respond. The only reason that I brought up the subject was to clarify the nature of the various offences.

Mr Weir: Mr Long, it was probably a slight omission on your part, but you referred only to the child sex offenders register. Surely you should have referred to the entire sex offenders register, because it would be inappropriate for someone who had been placed on the sex offenders register for a sexual offence against a woman to be permitted to have a licence.

Mr S Long: Perhaps that was an omission on my behalf. I should have said the entire sex offenders register. Any reference to the register was left out of the legislation.

I want to clarify a point that relates to the offences listed in schedules 1 and 2 to the Bill. On the original application for a PSV licence, if a conviction is spent, that is that. However, even though the Department has been made aware of a conviction, a driver who wants to renew a vehicle licence annually must continue to list any convictions on the application. The association thinks that that is wrong. Once a driver has been awarded a PSV licence, there is no need to repeat that process at each annual renewal.

The Chairperson: I take your point. Thank you very much for your time today. There are several issues to which the Committee must return.

I will summarise for the Committee the issues that I have identified, and members can draw to my attention anything that I have missed. The association highlighted child safety, training needs — especially for drivers of lower educational ability — and cost issues linked to the question of a regulatory body. If I picked it up correctly, there is also a query about the criteria used to define a taxi and a lack of clarity about convictions.

The next witness is Mr Robert McAllister. Good morning, Mr McAllister. You are most welcome. Thank you for giving up your time to be here today. I do not know whether you were present earlier to see the format that the meeting takes. The Committee is working within time constraints. You are welcome to give evidence, but will you please limit it to a maximum of 15 minutes— and you may only need 10 minutes. After that, members will question you on specific issues that you have mentioned. Further down the line, the Committee will take evidence from the Department or seek clarity where required.

Today is your only opportunity to give evidence to the Committee: you will not have a further chance to come back. Please start when you feel comfortable.

Mr Robert McAllister: My name is Robert McAllister, and I am a concerned public-hire taxi driver whose vehicle is wheelchair accessible. I must congratulate the Committee for the Environment for listening to my concerns about the Taxis Bill.

My main point about the operator's licence is that private-hire taxis that are not wheelchair accessible will be able to pick up members of the public without having been pre-booked. The only taxis to be Government-regulated in Northern Ireland are public-hire taxis that are wheelchair accessible. I agree to everything else in the Bill.

The Minister of the Environment, Arlene Foster, stated in the news media on 26 June that there was great demand for taxi services. I have to contradict that. Obviously, she has been misinformed by her officials.

The Chairperson: Can I say, Mr McAllister —

Mr R McAllister: Am I talking too quickly? I apologise.

The Chairperson: It is not that. Please focus on the legislation that is before us. We cannot ask members to interpret what the Minister may or may not have said. Please bear with us on that.

Mr R McAllister: OK. This is about public-hire accessible taxis. Belfast is the capital of Northern Ireland and London is the capital of England. Whether we like it or not, Northern Ireland is a part of the United Kingdom. A single-tier system like the one that the Department is trying to create in Belfast has always operated throughout the six counties of Northern Ireland.

I have already submitted written evidence to the Committee that the Department of the Environment has created a taxi monster in Belfast. The peak time for taxis is from 1.00 am to 3.00 am or 4.00 am on Sunday mornings. For hours before that, taxis are waiting in the streets doing nothing.

I work 70 hours per week — 10 hours per day — in a £32,000 wheelchair-accessible vehicle. I had to borrow £2,000 from a member of my family to pay for it. I find it very hard to break down the barriers. I believe that the national minimum wage is £5-odd per hour; public-hire taxi drivers in Belfast do not earn that much. As a taxi driver, you may be parked for an hour on your stand to get a run to Botanic Avenue. That brings in £2.70 or maybe £3.00. Then you come back and wait another half an hour. When you work out the cost of running the taxi and the other costs and payments, it does not add up. To be honest, I am seriously considering becoming unemployed. Public-hire services in Belfast are at a standstill. Drivers are not making a living.

Where is this coming from? Unfortunately, it is DOE mismanagement. There is a lack of enforcement. I have photographic evidence here that contradicts the assertion that taxi services are busy.

The Chairperson: The Committee hears what you are saying. However, enforcement is for the Department. We have to stay focused on the legislation.

Mr T Clarke: Part of the legislation that we are discussing relates to improving enforcement. That is why we need to stay focused on that point. I have sympathy for the taxi drivers if the enforcement is not there or is not being carried out correctly. However, the fact that it has been included in the legislation shows that the Department is trying to put that right. It might have been wrong; the wheel has been broken; but now the Department is trying to fix it.

The Chairperson: There are enforcement issues there, and the issue of resources for enforcement has been raised.

Mr Boylan: I am seeking clarification. I agree with some of Mr McAllister's remarks, but I urge him to explain his concerns clearly.

The Chairperson: If you do not mind, Cathal, the Committee will return to that later. Mr McAllister has not had his 15 minutes yet.

Mr R McAllister: There was to be 15 minutes for me to make a presentation, and another 15 minutes for members to question me.

I will tell you where the main problem lies in Belfast. Again, I have photographic evidence. The main problem is that FonaCab and Value Cabs —

The Chairperson: We cannot allow witnesses to mention specific companies or name individual operators.

Mr R McAllister: I am sorry. OK, two major companies in Belfast city centre — [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: I am sorry, but you must bear with me. The Committee's purpose is not to adjudicate on allegations, it is to hear evidence. If you have other specific issues, you can report them to the Department, and it will be up to the Department to investigate them. The Committee's purpose is not to act as a court or to make judgements on what companies may or may not be doing.

Mr R McAllister: OK. Excuse me for saying that.

It would be totally wrong to create a one-tier system in Belfast. If the Committee and the Department are going to allow private-hire, non-accessible taxis to pick up fares on the street, they must consider the following; a wheelchair user may stick out his hand to flag down a private-hire taxi on the streets of Belfast in a situation in which the taxi driver is not duty bound to drive a wheelchair-accessible taxi. In addition, the taxi driver will not have the proper facilities in his car to cater for that wheelchair user. Public-hire taxis have partitions in their taxis. About four or five weeks ago, a private-hire taxi driver in a non-accessible taxi picked up a job in Belfast city centre. Four males got on board and said that they were going to Andersonstown —

The Chairperson: I think that that matter may be before the courts at the moment.

Mr R McAllister: Again, I am sorry for saying that.

The Chairperson: It may be helpful to give you an indication of the type of issues that we are dealing with today — it is up to you whether you pick up on any of them. The issues are: the regulation of taxi operators; the regulation of taxis; the regulation of taxi drivers; licensing; enforcement, which we have touched on, and miscellaneous aspects of the Bill. So, if there are issues in those areas that you feel you should dwell on, please do.

Mr R McAllister: Public-hire taxi drivers in Belfast city centre do not have a lot of problems with the majority of the Bill. Truthfully, there are only two problems. The first is with private-hire non-accessible taxis being allowed to pick up people on the streets, and the second is the fact that public-hire taxis are currently the only regulated taxis in Northern Ireland. We are regulated by the Department, which seals our taximeters. We are the only sole operators, and we are under an operators' licence as things stand.

In my experience, there are too many taxi drivers in Belfast city centre. To be frank, PSV licences are being given out like Guinness labels. I had to sit a PSV driving test before I could get my PSV licence. Now, a driver can apply for a PSV driving licence, which will be sent out in the post. The only requirements are a medical check, and a background check for any skulduggery that might be found, and then the PSV licence is posted out to the driver.

The Department has created a taxi monster throughout Northern Ireland. The Department was formed in May 1972 and if it had got its act together from the beginning, it would have created a two-tier system throughout Northern Ireland. A public-hire taxi in any place outside Belfast should be wheelchair accessible. A terrible amount of taxpayers' money has been wasted on this. If the Department had got its act together from the start, we would not be sitting round this table today.

I want to make another point, which is relevant to the discussion. In the 1970s, before Stormont was abolished, taxi services in Belfast were run by the Belfast Corporation Transport Department. The time has come for the Committee to put taxi services back into the hands of Belfast City Council.

The Chairperson: That may be a point well made, but, unfortunately, we cannot discuss it.

Mr R McAllister: I understand that it cannot be discussed at today's Committee meeting.

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr R McAllister: What sense was there in my investing £32,000 on a purpose-built wheelchair-accessible taxi that can carry six people — five in the back and a ramp for use by someone in a wheelchair, someone using a Zimmer frame, someone who has suffered a stroke or someone who is elderly and has difficulty in walking? That taxi is purpose-built to accommodate disabled passengers. A private-hire taxi — without access for the disabled — does not cater for disabled passengers. That is the main reason that the two-tier system should remain in Belfast.

I have already mentioned other parts of Northern Ireland, where the one-tier system operates. Belfast, as a busy capital city, should be treated differently.

The idea that there is a large demand for the creation of a one-tier taxi system, which will result in people loitering about the streets waiting for taxis, is totally unfounded. Committee members should experience travelling by taxi for themselves. Some members travelled with two public-hire taxi drivers from the T&G Section of Unite. I can honestly say that from 1.00 am to 3.00 am on a Sunday morning there is a peak-time demand for taxis, as there is in any other part of the United Kingdom. Every city in the world has that peak time. If there were a million taxis, they would not be able to cater for the demand during that peak period.

Usually, people want a taxi at the snap of their fingers. Unfortunately, that is a result of the public-licensing laws in Northern Ireland. I realise that I am moving away from the issues under discussion today. All the bars and nightspots close at some time between 1.00 am and 2.00 am, at which time people flock onto the streets. That only accounts for three hours out of 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Therefore, I ask the Committee to go out with taxi drivers, any time before that three-hour period, to confirm what I have said.

I have provided the Committee with photographic evidence, which will allow members to see that taxi drivers are sitting in taxi ranks and that there are insufficient parking spaces for taxis. To my knowledge, Belfast is the only city in the world that does not have parking spaces for taxis in its city centre. Most people will have witnessed that — from Royal Avenue, Castle Place, Donegall Place and Donegall Square North; taxis have to double-park to get onto a nine-car taxi rank in order to accommodate people leaving Belfast city centre during daytime. That is bloody ridiculous.

Do any Committee members — if their parents are living — want their elderly mother or father, who may be infirm, to walk from CastleCourt to Donegall Square North to get a taxi? That is totally unfair. I realise that that is an issue for the Department for Regional Development.

The Chairperson: I am not criticising your mentioning that issue, but I am merely advising you that your time is up. You have made your points in a very articulate way. Thank you for that.

Mr T Clarke: You referred to Guinness licences. — [Laughter.]

Mr R McAllister: Fortunately, I do not drink.

Mr T Clarke: The regulation of licensing and the introduction of tests are an issue. You have said that there is a negative aspect to the rationing of licences, similar to the problems in the past with Guinness licences. Surely the DOE must be congratulated for its suggestion that testing for all taxi drivers should be introduced rather than it being a matter of a licence being sent out as the result of a postal application.

Mr R McAllister: I apologise for interrupting, Mr Clarke. That would be like my saying to you to close the door after the horse has bolted. Go out to the taxi industry, throughout Belfast, and you will see that there are too many taxi drivers.

Mr T Clarke: If I may pick up on that point, even taxi drivers who have been issued with a taxi driver's licence will be regulated and asked to sit the test or go through that procedure.

The horse may have bolted, but the DOE is attempting to remedy the situation. You say that you are having problems with the industry and are not making money. The DOE recognises those problems and is addressing them to help public-hire taxi drivers.

Mr R McAllister: The Taxis Bill makes no provision whatsoever for public-hire taxi drivers working from Belfast city centre. We feel that we have been let down by the Department of the Environment and other Government bodies. To put it bluntly, public-hire taxi drivers have been shafted by all the relevant Departments. The Taxis Bill contains nothing for public-hire taxi drivers. There are not enough public-hire taxi ranks, and there are too many taxis.

Mr T Clarke: You say that there are too many taxis and not enough ranks. If there are not enough ranks, perhaps that is because there too many taxis? You are contradicting yourself. The DOE recognises that there are difficulties, and it is introducing measures to help and support public-hire taxi drivers.

The Committee understands that everything is not as it should be. The purpose of the Committee's speaking to the taxi industry as part of the consultation process is to determine parts that can be tweaked or remedies that members can suggest to the Department of the Environment. The Committee must take on board what the taxi drivers say. We all see how many taxis are on the roads and realise that there are problems. The DOE is attempting to find a remedy, which it may not achieve, but with the support of the taxi industry and others, it might.

Mr R McAllister: Taxi marshals work well in other parts of the United Kingdom, and I have emailed information to the DOE taxi review team. Taxi marshals are important, and they would be welcome during limited hours — for example, between 1.00 am and 3.00 am on a Saturday morning — when they could bring order and discipline. Taxi marshals should have similar powers to those afforded to the DOE's taxi enforcement officers, of whom there are only five for the six counties of Northern Ireland, which is not acceptable, given the influx of taxi drivers across the board.

On a different point, public-hire taxis are the only regulated taxis. On their regular checks in Belfast city centre, DOE officials seem to target only public-hire vehicles and turn a blind eye to private-hire taxis, which have always picked up fares illegally off the streets because of lack of enforcement and control.

Mr T Clarke: May I answer that question, Mr Chairman?

The Chairperson: Only if it relevant to the proceedings.

Mr T Clarke: I feel that I am representing the industry, and Mr McAllister is a member of the Committee.

[Laughter.]

The reason that the Committee is meeting is to discuss all those issues, including the lack of enforcement. All the issues are covered by the legislation, because the DOE is trying to fix a system that it recognises does not work.

Mr I McCrea: During your presentation on the lack of revenue, you mentioned that earnings do not reach the minimum wage. Earlier, Mr Egerton said that, some years ago, public-hire taxi drivers were allowed to increase fares by only 10p. Can you give us a steer on what you feel would be —

Mr R McAllister: To be honest, Ian, the problem is based on the fact that two main companies in Belfast city centre —

The Chairperson: Please deal with the subject generally, without referring to specific companies.

Mr R McAllister: Private-hire taxi services in Belfast city centre are picking up fares illegally off the streets. Would you like it if I put my hand into your pocket and took money out? I doubt it. However, that has been happening to public-hire taxi drivers in Belfast over years, and it is unfair.

The situation is such that I have to borrow money to enable me to go out to work. That is not acceptable: perhaps it is time for me to go down the unemployment route. The DOE has made a shambles of this matter, and it has put me and fellow taxi drivers in a position where we are at our wits' end. I believe that the DOE has an agenda to force public-hire taxi drivers off the street and into the private-hire sector. That is disgusting, to be frank.

The Chairperson: The Bill aims to achieve a level playing field.

Mr R McAllister: There is no level playing field here.

Mr Weir: Thank you, Mr McAllister, for your presentation. I am sorry that there are some areas that the Committee cannot discuss with you. I agree with Trevor Clarke's comments, and, Mr McAllister, I appreciate your remarks about the frequent checks on — and heavy regulation of — the operation of public-hire taxis. The aim of the legislation should be to try to extend the scope of regulations.

Your main concern seems to be about the abolition of the two-tier system in Belfast. I was confused at one stage, because you seemed to be contradicting yourself. At one stage, you seemed to suggest that the same standards should apply throughout Northern Ireland and that there should be the same system throughout. However, you later said that the two-tier system should be protected in Belfast, because Belfast is unique. Those are slightly contradictory positions. Either Belfast is unique and needs a unique solution, or the whole of Northern Ireland should be treated in the same way.

Mr R McAllister: Northern Ireland — whether some people like it or not — is a part of the United Kingdom, and this exercise would not happen in London. Belfast is the capital city and the busiest city in Northern Ireland. That is why we need accessible public-hire taxis on the streets for people who have disabilities.

Mr Weir: Is London an appropriate analogy? Northern Ireland people have a tendency to think of themselves as the stars of the picture, but Belfast city has a population of between 250,000 and 300,000, whereas London has a population of between eight million and 10 million. Is Belfast so very different from medium-sized cities in other parts of the UK?

Mr R McAllister: The DOE taxi review team conducted a study among consumers four or five years ago, but it was not aware of the increase in the public-hire taxi sector in Belfast city centre. Belfast public-hire taxis have been operating for years, and by-laws dating back to 1951 show that those taxis were the responsibility of Belfast Corporation at one time. Public-hire taxis are the only accessible taxis. There is no demand in Belfast for an end to the two-tier system.

Mr Weir: The only —

Mr R McAllister: Mr Weir, I do not wish to be rude, but please hear me out. The DOE and other relevant bodies are saying that the one-tier system is required to cater for the increase in public demand for taxis. That is untrue.

Mr Weir: I know that you were restricted in what you could say about ministerial matters, but you were attacking the rationale behind abolition, because you believe that there is a need for the two-tier system in Belfast on the grounds of volume of business. However, you also said that you had photographs showing that, for the vast majority of time, some areas were not very busy.

Mr R McAllister: That is correct.

Mr Weir: If that is the case, and if, as you said, you are on the verge of unemployment —

Mr R McAllister: I am not telling lies.

Mr Weir: I do not doubt you for a second. However — if I may play devil's advocate — does that suggest that the current system is working? If the current system is forcing current taxi drivers out of business, surely there is a need to change that system and introduce the regulations that pertain in the rest of Northern Ireland.

Mr R McAllister: Are you saying, therefore, that the one-tier system should be introduced and that it should be acceptable for private-hire taxis to make illegal pick-ups on the streets of Belfast without any enforcement from the DOE?

Mr Weir: I am not saying that.

Mr R McAllister: That is the way that what you are saying is coming across.

Mr Weir: Does your suggestion that there are currently too many taxi drivers chasing too few fares, except during those three or so hours at the end of a Saturday night and the beginning of a Sunday morning, not imply that the system in Belfast city centre is not working well? Ultimately, the number of taxi drivers who are currently operating will not be able to survive economically.

Mr R McAllister: There are simply too many taxis. To be frank, it is similar to that scone that you are eating. If everyone in this room wants a slice, someone will not get one.

[Laughter.]

I know that that sounds funny, and you may laugh, but I am not laughing. A similar thing has happened to public-hire taxi drivers — we have been shafted. Our democratic and human rights have been taken away. The human rights of people with disabilities have been taken away. If legislation is passed that allows non-accessible private-hire taxis to pick people up in the streets, half the guys in the public-hire industry will end up in the private-hire industry. That is not a threat: private-hire non-accessible taxis will not be legally obliged to pick up a person who is in a wheelchair. If that happens, which I believe it will —

The Chairperson: Excuse me, Mr McAllister.

Mr R McAllister: No, I am sorry, Patsy, this is relevant.

The Chairperson: I am sorry; other members want to discuss other matters, and given that time is short, I ask you to please make your point.

Mr R McAllister: The public-hire taxi drivers will get their backs up because private-hire, non-accessible taxis will be allowed to be hailed in the streets. If, God forbid, a wheelchair user is at a public-hire taxi rank, the public-hire driver will be so annoyed that they will drive past that person. A private-hire taxi driver will not be obliged to pick up a wheelchair user, because their car is not equipped to do so. It is asking a disabled person to get out of a wheelchair so that they can get into a private car. It does not make sense. My experience tells me that all relevant parties concerned with making this decision are making a big mistake.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation and for answering the questions. You mentioned that there are only five enforcement officers, and you also discussed your concerns about the two-tier system. The Committee recognises your concerns. However, I am a rural MLA, and I know that areas other than Belfast must be considered. Will you talk in more detail about the enforcement officers?

Mr R McAllister: There are five taxi enforcement officers for Northern Ireland, but there are between 9,000 and 10,000 taxi drivers. Therefore, there is an insufficient number of taxi enforcement officers. The Department's concern should be with the introduction of taxi marshals to maintain order and discipline. Those should have similar powers to check the dress code and manners of drivers as the taxi enforcement officers. Eventually, it will give the public confidence that there is a taxi marshal who will address their concerns at the time.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for giving the Committee your time, Mr McAllister; a fair bit of ground has been covered.

Mr R McAllister: I am sorry that I am not well educated enough to be talking in front of people like you. Excuse anything that I said; I apologise.

Mr Boylan: You got your point across.

The Chairperson: It came across loud and clear. You appreciate that the Committee is constrained by the type of evidence that it can take. Thank you.

The major issues that came across today include the provisions and pick-ups for disabled people, as well as the old question of the two-tier system and how that can best be harmonised and addressed. Other major issues are: enforcement — the Committee has just heard that there are only five enforcement officers for the whole of the North; and the concept of marshalling, which had previously been raised by other witnesses. Much ground has been covered, but that is it in a nutshell. Again, thank you for your contribution.

Mr R McAllister: I am sorry that I did not bring headache tablets for everyone. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Do not worry; you were as good as a high.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

13 September 2007

HEALTH (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) BILL (NIA 2/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mrs Iris Robinson (Chairperson)
Mr Thomas Buchanan
Dr Kieran Deeny
Mr Alex Easton
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mrs Carmel Hanna
Ms Carál Ní Chuilín
Ms Sue Ramsey

Witnesses:

Mr John Farrell	}	Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety
Ms Christine Jendoubi
Mr Robert Kirkwood
Mr Donncha O'Carolan	}	Acting Chief Dental Officer

The Chairperson (Mrs I Robinson): I welcome the departmental officials, Christine, John, Robert and Donncha — I have found out how to pronounce that name. Members will recall that clauses 1 and 2 have been agreed. Members have been provided with much written material, including a copy of the Bill, a detailed commentary and a copy of extracts from any legislation that the Bill amends. Members will also recall that we took oral evidence from a number of groups before the summer recess, and further written submissions have been received over the summer.

I suggest that, in the main, Members should use the notes on clauses that the Department has prepared, which were circulated to Members last week, as well as the paper provided by the Committee staff.

The Committee will have a number of options when considering each of the clauses. Before choosing an option, I will invite the officials to outline briefly the purpose and meaning of the clause. Members can then, if they wish, seek clarification. Following discussions with officials on each clause and the potential that there might be for amendment, the Committee can consider the options available to it.

The first option is to decide whether it is content with the clause as drafted. The second is to agree the potential for an amendment and request that the Department consider the matter and report its position back to the Committee: by doing so, we effectively refer the clause for further consideration. In cases where an amendment is considered appropriate, we can invite the Department to indicate whether it would be willing to undertake the drafting of such an amendment. We will now begin the clause-by-clause scrutiny at clause 3.

Clause 3 (General dental services: transitional)

The Chairperson: I invite officials to outline the meaning of this clause. Thereafter, questions will be taken.

Ms Christine Jendoubi (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): This clause deals with general transitional provisions and provides for the transition between the existing contract for dentists and the new contract. It also provides that all practices will have the right to enter into a new contract. At the point of transition, the boards will not have, for example, the right to decide to which existing dental practices they will offer the new contract. All existing practices must be offered the contract. The clause ensures continuity of provision for patients so that they will not notice the transition between the old and new contracts.

We must organise matters so that the new contract will come into effect on the same day as the transitional arrangements that are provided for in the legislation. There must be no gap: the legislation must be ready for the new contract to come into effect. When the legislation comes into effect, the old contract will fall, so the new contract has to be ready on the same day. This clause provides for that transition.

The Chairperson: The British Dental Association (BDA) has called for an Order made under clause 3(7) to be subject to an affirmative, rather than a negative, resolution procedure. What is your view on that?

Ms Jendoubi: The draftsmen, rather than the Department, usually decide whether a clause will be subject to affirmative or negative resolution. In my experience, the affirmative resolution procedure is usually reserved for clauses that include a power to set fees, charges or financial penalties. We have no strong views on that matter, and we are happy to take a recommendation from the Committee.

The Chairperson: If members are agreed, can I ask the panel about the relationship between negative resolution and affirmative resolution?

Ms Jendoubi: “Affirmative resolution” means that the clause cannot go forward unless the Assembly votes in favour of it. “Negative resolution” means that the clause is put before the Assembly for a period of days, I think of 40 days, during which time the Assembly can pray against it. If no-one prays against it during that period, then it is carried.

The Chairperson: We are covered. We do not lose out, we have a period of grace, then.

Mr Robert Kirkwood (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The transitional arrangements would require that at a stage before drafting, the Committee would be involved in the policy that was being set out. As Ms Jendoubi said, the difference between affirmative and negative resolution is that, with affirmative resolution, the legislation has to be approved by the Assembly and it is necessary to go before the Executive for approval to make the legislation. Although it is an Order, it is still subordinate legislation. With negative resolution, the policy intention included in it would come before the Committee, so you would have an opportunity then. Once the legislation had been made and was laid, the Committee would have another chance. Any Member could pray against it, and the legislation could be annulled at that stage, if that was what the Committee wanted.

The Chairperson: Therefore, there is a window of opportunity.

Ms Ní Chuilín: If we go for affirmative resolution, on the other hand, we give the prerogative to the Executive, and we have no recall. Is that correct?

Mr Kirkwood: No. We would be going to the Executive first, in the affirmative —

Ms Ní Chuilín: And then come back to us?

Mr Kirkwood: Yes.

The Chairperson: Am I correct in thinking that the Committee has a period after the Executive give their —

Mr Kirkwood: Yes, but with negative resolution it would not need to go to the Executive. We would come to the Committee setting out the policy that was intended to be taken forward in the legislation.

The Chairperson: Are members content?

Mrs Hanna: We should go with whatever leaves us with most opportunity to come back. I find that it becomes very complicated when we ask a question. Sometimes the answers make it almost more complicated, because we get a lot of information back. Really, we want to leave it as open as possible so that we can come back if we feel it is necessary to do so. The Committee should choose whichever is most favourable to it and affords it the most opportunity to return to the issue.

The Chairperson: If the clause provided for affirmative resolution an order for transitional provision would go to the Executive first and then we would have the opportunity to come back to it for a second time.

Question, that the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Clause 4 (Charges for dental services)

The Chairperson: I invite the officials to explain the meaning of the clause, and we will invite questions thereafter.

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 4 provides for a change from the existing item-of-service payments to dentists to a new regime of charges. It removes paragraph 1A of schedule 15 to the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 — which provides for item-of-service payments — and inserts a new paragraph 1A that allows regulations to set out a new system of charging. It also inserts a new schedule 15A, which deals with exemptions, into the 1972 Order. Schedule 15A replaces article 26 of the Health and Social Services (Primary Care) (Northern Ireland) Order 1997. Therefore, the exemptions in the primary legislation are all now contained in one Order. It does not add any new exemptions, and it does not change any of the exemptions that are already in force. That was the basis on which we consulted.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Does it mean that people of 65 years of age and over will be exempt from charges?

Ms Jendoubi: No, because they are not exempt at present. The basis that we consulted on —

Ms Ní Chuilín: Was that the primary dental care strategy?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes.

The Chairperson: Do you want to expand on that, Carál?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I believe that there should be exemptions for people aged 65 and over.

This may not be the time to discuss that; maybe we can do that when we go into the nitty-gritty of the dental contract.

Mr Donncha O’Carolan (Acting Chief Dental Officer): Recommendation 5 of the primary dental care strategy, which the Department consulted on, was that the existing exempt groups should continue to receive free dental treatment. None of the groups that were consulted wanted the current exempt groups to be changed. No one wanted the over 65s to be exempt from dental charges. The Department drafted the legislation on that basis.

Ms S Ramsey: That does not make it right. It is my birthday today and, although I am not 65 yet, I would like free dental treatment when I reach that age.

Mr Kirkwood: There would be an expense attached to that. If a policy decision were made or an amendment tabled that over 65s should be included among exempt groups, the Minister would have to consider whether it was affordable and whether it was a priority compared to other priorities in the Health Service.

Dr Deeny: What groups did you consult with prior to drafting the legislation?

Mr O'Carolan: An extensive list of consultation groups is held in the Department. I do not know exactly how many groups are on it, but there are around 70 names.

Dr Deeny: Did any of them say that over 65s should receive free dental care?

Mr O'Carolan: None of them came back with that view. Free treatment for over 65s is not available anywhere else in the UK.

The Chairperson: Are you saying that it is offered nowhere, not even in Scotland?

Mr O'Carolan: Some areas offer free dental examinations. The Department costed free dental examinations at a total of £600,000 — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] That is just for examinations; the cost of the treatment would run to millions.

Ms Ní Chuilín: People have paid their stamps for most of their adult lives. At the age of 65, people would imagine that they would be able to get their dentures without paying — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

The Chairperson: Do you want it to be called?

Ms S Ramsey: Free dental care for the over 65s needs to be explored. I understand that there are cost implications. However, elderly people receive free transport, free eyecare and free prescriptions. The fact that no other regions have taken action on free dental care for over the 65s should not stop us from leading the way. I do not mean to be flippant, but the fact that none of the consultation groups requested the measure should not stop us from introducing it either.

The Chairperson: Can you give me an idea of how many in the population are over 65?

Ms Jendoubi: I cannot answer that off the top of my head.

The Chairperson: Do members agree that before the Committee takes any decision, we defer and come back to it, deo volente, next week? I suggest that a rough calculation is made to find out what the cost might be and the number of people that it would affect.

Dr Deeny: Did you say that 70 groups were listed for consultation on the issue of dental charging?

Mr O'Carolan: I do not know exactly how many are listed. The Department has a distribution list that all consultation documents have to go out to.

Dr Deeny: Is Age Concern on that list?

Mr O'Carolan: Yes, as far as I am aware, Age Concern is on the list.

The Chairperson: Help the Aged is also on the list.

Mr O'Carolan: It is a comprehensive list.

The Chairperson: We shall set clause 4 aside and invite the witnesses to return and provide a report with further information.

Mr John Farrell (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Our population is ageing, and the number of people who are over 65 today may not reflect what the number will be in five or 10 years' time. We should look forward a couple of years, if possible, and forecast what the future cost may be.

The Chairperson: It would be appropriate to consider more than one year.

Ms S Ramsey: Money can be saved by investing in health.

The Chairperson: I am sure that that view is not just a personal crusade.

Clause 4 referred for further consideration.

Clause 5 (Provision of dental services: Article 15B arrangements)

The Chairperson: Could you please talk us through clause 5, Ms Jendoubi?

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 5 looks very daunting. It seems very complicated, but all it does is make minor technical amendments to existing articles 15B, 15C, 15D and 15F, under which boards can enter into arrangements for "personal dental services": the clause changes that to "primary dental services". As was mentioned during last week's Committee meeting, primary dental services embraces both general dental services (GDS) and personal dental services — those being services for which boards can enter into contracts, except for general dental services that will be contracted for with each individual dentist. For example —

Mr O'Carolan: Are you looking for examples of when personal dental services might be used?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes.

Mr O'Carolan: Under the new contract in England, all orthodontic treatment is carried out under the banner of personal dental services. However, other areas, such as out-of-hours care or when a preventative scheme is needed in a deprived area, are not covered under the heading of GDS. A specific tailor-made scheme could be set up to target such areas. That would offer a degree of flexibility for the future; GDS is a bit more rigid. This would allow other providers such as dental hygienists and dental therapists to deliver services alongside dentists.

The Chairperson: The purpose is to protect the public.

Ms Jendoubi: We do not currently have personal dental services in Northern Ireland, nor do we have a vision for them in primary legislation. We have never brought the provisions that already exist into force. Clause 6, which was also mentioned at last week's meeting of the Committee, deals with piloting personal dental services. Clauses 5 and 6 together will remove the provision to pilot personal dental services, because we cannot foresee circumstances in which we would want to pilot that type of separate contract. That might be a fixed-term contract dealing with specific areas, and it is not the sort of arrangement that a health and social services board would want to pilot. A board would simply want to let the contract. Articles 15B, 15C, 15D and 15F will provide for personal dental services to be made permanent.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

Clause 6 (Revocation of power to make pilot schemes for provision of personal dental services)

Ms Jendoubi: That is the clause that I have just mentioned.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clause 7 (Assistance and support for persons providing primary dental services)

Ms Jendoubi: The boards currently have such powers in respect of general practitioners, but not dentists. Clause 7 gives boards the power, when a dentist is injured, off sick, or when there has been a fire at a dentist's surgery, for example, to step in and appoint a locum to ensure that continuity of service is maintained.

The Chairperson: The clause simply protects the continuation of services.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clause 8 (Ophthalmic services)

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 8 provides for ophthalmic services what preceding clauses provide for general medical and dental services, in so far as it provides for them to be on a performers' list for Northern Ireland.

It provides for the conditional inclusion, and contingent removal, of practitioners from the performers' list, and it provides for suspension by boards in the same way as other family practitioners.

The Chairperson: As in malpractices?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes. It is on exactly the same grounds.

Dr Deeny: Does that apply solely to optometrists? They used to be called opticians, but they are optometrists now.

The Chairperson: They all have fancy names now.

Dr Deeny: There can be confusion with ophthalmologists when we refer to "ophthalmic services", but we are talking about optometrists.

Ms Jendoubi: It is "persons providing general ophthalmic services".

Dr Deeny: But it is referring to optometrists?

Ms S Ramsey: I am being blinded by science.

Ms Jendoubi: To be honest, so am I. I understand that opticians did not like to be called opticians, but preferred to be called optometrists in the same way that chemists prefer to be called pharmacists.

The Chairperson: They just like big words. That is what it boils down to.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Perhaps the Chairperson is right. People say that they are going to the chemist's, not to the pharmacist's —

The Chairperson: Or to their pharmaceutical adviser.

Ms Ní Chuilín: You normally use the name of the shop that you get your glasses from, but we will not give anyone free advertising.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

Clause 9 (Local optical committees)

Ms Jendoubi: There are local optical committees in the same way that there are local medical committees in Northern Ireland. At the moment ophthalmic medical practitioners are not included in local optical committees, and clause 9 provides for them to be included.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Dispensing opticians are not included — we have just had this conversation.

Ms Jendoubi: As I understand it, dispensing opticians are people who sell glasses. They do not actually examine your eyes.

Dr Deeny: Therefore, a dispensing optician is not an optometrist?

Mrs Hanna: Nor an optician.

Ms S Ramsey: Yes, because you get your eyes tested there.

Dr Deeny: The optician only sells the glasses.

Ms S Ramsey: Most of them do eye tests as well.

Ms Ní Chuilín: At the place where I get my glasses — which I will not name — I just walk in, get my eyes tested, get my glasses and walk out.

Mr Farrell: An optometrist carries out the eye examination.

Ms Ní Chuilín: And then a salesperson will sell the glasses?

Mr Farrell: It would not be a salesperson. The dispensing optician will be responsible for ensuring that the lenses that you are prescribed have been done up in the correct way and are put into the glasses. Dispensing opticians do not actually carry out eye tests. They have their own separate role to play in the optician's practice, but they cannot examine eyes.

Ms Ní Chuilín: A bit like the hygienist in the dentist's, really?

Mr O'Carolan: My understanding is they can fit the glasses and dispense them, but they cannot examine your eyes.

The Chairperson: Why are dispensing opticians not included, and is it appropriate for them to be included, in local optical committees?

Ms Jendoubi: We can look at that and come back to the Committee.

The Chairperson: Optometry Northern Ireland argues that it is anomalous that dispensing opticians do not have a statutory right to membership of local optical committees and has proposed an amendment to clause 9 to provide for that. The Committee wants to explore why dispensing opticians are not included and whether it is appropriate that they should be. Can the Department examine that?

Mr Farrell: The Department will examine that and come back to the Committee. Local medical and dental committees comprise either doctors or dentists. The Department wants optometrists — the people who carry out eye examinations — to sit on the local optical committees. Dental hygienists, for example, do not sit on dental committees. One must read across to specify what professions should have places on committees.

Mrs Hanna: I think that there is a difference. An optometrist examines eyes. However, a dispensing optician fills out prescriptions and measures it all up. I do not wish to denigrate what dental hygienists do, but I think that dispensing opticians have a much more technical role.

Ms Jendoubi: Optometrists are on the local optical committees.

Mrs Hanna: Surely dispensing opticians are arguing to be on the committees.

Ms Jendoubi: You have described optometrists, who are already on the committees.

Mrs Hanna: So dispensing opticians do not fill out prescriptions; they do not measure?

Ms Jendoubi: Exactly.

Mrs Hanna: When I get my eyes checked, one person examines them and another person works out what the prescription should be. Certainly, at the practice that I go to, it seems very much like teamwork: one person examines my eyes and the other does somewhat more than simply choose the frames.

Dr Deeny: Clarity on that is needed. GPs get referrals from optometrists. They are synonymous with opticians of the past. However, the Committee is hearing the term “dispensing optician”, which is confusing. My understanding is that a dispensing optician is not qualified to examine the back of someone's eyes. That must be made clear, because, until now, people have understood opticians and optometrists to be synonymous. That is not the case. A dispensing optician is not a qualified optometrist. Can the Department provide clarity on that? Indeed, is the term “optician” a proper description of someone who is just selling glasses?

Mr Farrell: I believe that opticians do more than simply sell glasses.

Mrs Hanna: That is the point that I have tried to make.

Mr Farrell: Dispensing opticians ensure that a prescription is made up correctly and that the fitment is correct. They do not carry out eye examinations or assess whether a person's eyesight is strengthening or weakening. They do not determine what prescription lens a patient needs. The optometrist does that. Optometrists are also able to refer their patients to secondary care, whereas dispensing opticians cannot do that because they are not able to examine the eyes.

The Chairperson: Members agree that the Department will provide more information on that.

Clause 9 referred for further consideration.

Clause 10 (Pharmaceutical services)

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 10 largely consolidates the provisions for pharmaceutical services that are already in the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. However, over and above that, it makes the same provisions for pharmacists that the previous clause made for optometrists and ophthalmic services: the performers' list; conditional inclusion and contingent removal; and suspension. We want provisions to be consistent throughout family practitioners services.

The Chairperson: The Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland argues that the provision adds further confusion to the regulation of pharmacists and feels that it will cause duplication. Can you respond to that?

Ms Jendoubi: It depends what it means by "duplication". If it means duplication of the role of the regulatory body and the role of the tribunal, the Department argues that there is none. That was discussed last week. I do not know what else the society might mean by duplication.

The Chairperson: Could we defer that? A delegation from the Pharmaceutical Society will address the Committee later.

Clause 10 referred for further consideration.

Clause 11 (Disqualification by the Tribunal)

Ms Jendoubi: This clause covers schedule 1 of the Bill, which amends schedule 11 to the 1972 Order in relation to the provisions for the tribunal. We will come to that in a moment.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with the clause as drafted?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I know that we discussed that before; however, the issue of suspension and neutrality seems to be a neutral act.

Ms Jendoubi: We will get to that when we discuss the amendments to that schedule. This is just the covering clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 11 agreed to.

Clause 12 (Charges for services provided to persons not ordinarily resident in Northern Ireland)

Ms Jendoubi: This is a humanitarian provisions clause. It is extant already in other parts of the United Kingdom and is a parity measure. It provides that, when someone has been allowed to come into the country for a course of treatment, the Secretary of State or, in our case, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, can determine that, on humanitarian grounds, that person should not be charged. The reasons for being brought in for treatment must include the fact that the treatment is not available in the person's own country. For example, specialist services, or some cutting-edge technology, might be provided by the Royal Victoria Hospital.

The Chairperson: Someone may be classed as a "bleeder" and may not be able to have a tooth extracted unless senior consultants are on hand.

Mr Kirkwood: It will be only for treatment that is not available in the person's home country.

The Chairperson: I use that as an example of a specialist treatment that may not be available in other countries.

Mr Kirkwood: The provision allows for that person to come over here to be treated and for the Department to consider if he or she should be charged.

The Chairperson: On the other hand, does it open the floodgates? You must prove that it cannot be —

Mr Kirkwood: Specific criteria will be set down in regulations. As Christine said, the first requirement is that the treatment is not available in the person's home country.

Mrs Hanna: My query may be covered in some other part of the legislation. Will that provision cover emergency treatment for toothache for someone visiting the country? Is that covered anywhere?

Mr Kirkwood: That is covered in "persons not ordinarily resident".

Mrs Hanna: It is covered?

Mr Kirkwood: A person can receive emergency treatments during a temporary stay in Northern Ireland. Legislation already covers that.

Ms S Ramsey: Christine, did you say that this is not available in other parts of England, Scotland and Wales?

Ms Jendoubi: I said that it is.

The Chairperson: We are coming into line.

Ms S Ramsey: Sorry. Such a provision is a good idea, on the basis that we should have top-of-the-range, merged services, as long as it is not abused.

Mr Easton: Will this "humanitarian grounds" provision apply only to serious cases or could it be used for simple things?

Ms Jendoubi: Ordinarily, simple things are available in the person's own country. An example might be a youngster who has been caught in a bomb blast in Iraq and who is then brought to Northern Ireland because surgeons here have specialist skills, or a child born with a severe abnormality that specialist plastic surgeons here have skills to treat.

The Chairperson: Is that like the dental surgery that is required to correct a cleft palate?

Dr Deeny: On that costing, I know that the charge is waived for someone coming in from another country where the treatment is not available, but is the country not charged? For example, if someone from Canada — a wealthy country — came for neurosurgery in the Royal Victoria Hospital, will that country not be charged for the treatment?

Ms Jendoubi: This clause deals with exceptional humanitarian grounds, and “exceptional” means just that. Someone coming to Northern Ireland for treatment that is not available in another country would not necessarily attract the use of that clause. There would have to be something particular about the treatment that would move the Department to regard it as exceptional in that way.

The Chairperson: The member picked a bad example. Canada would be able to cope with all kinds of dental work.

Dr Deeny: Is it for people from poor countries? Is that what you are saying?

Ms Jendoubi: Treatment would have to be examined on a case-by-case basis.

The Chairperson: Do you feel that the wording ties down what it actually means?

Mr Kirkwood: The clause more or less brings Northern Ireland into line with the rest of the UK, where it has currently fallen behind. The provision would probably be used more in London, for example, where there are specialist hospitals. It would be used more there than for patients transferring to Northern Ireland for specialist treatment.

Dr Deeny: Does a similar arrangement exist in America, for example?

Mr Kirkwood: There is reciprocity among various countries in relation to the Health Service.

Dr Deeny: Last week, the Committee met one patient who is now in Chicago having treatment that is not available here. I wonder whether we can draw a comparison, when there is no available treatment here.

Ms Jendoubi: I am afraid that I cannot comment on whether the Americans should charge that patient.

Ms S Ramsey: Why the NHS?

The Chairperson: That is a fair point; the family are paying half the cost of treatment, and we are asking the Department to pay the other half. However, that is another issue that we have not sorted out.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 12 agreed to.

Clause 13 (Retirement of practitioners)

Ms Jendoubi: The Committee may be familiar with this clause and its import already. The Department came to the Committee before the summer recess with the underpinning regulations for this clause. It will remove from the primary legislation the requirement for age restrictions for dental practitioners and GPs. The GP age restriction is no longer in effect, and the restriction on dental practitioners is the only one left. Dental practitioners were required to retire at 70 years of age, which is against the European directive that deals with discrimination on the grounds of age. Therefore, the Department is asking for it to be removed.

Dr Deeny: GPs will be able to work forever or until we drop?

Ms S Ramsey: Dr Deeny will be OK; he can work for another 40 years.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 13 agreed to.

Clause 14 (Minor and consequential amendments)

Ms Jendoubi: This clause deals with small technical amendments that are necessary for the interpretation of the 1972 Order. For example, “Article 17C” should be replaced with “section 17C”, because that was a mistake in the original Order. There is nothing of import.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I do not understand what this clause is about.

Mr Kirkwood: It is a clause that can be included in any primary legislation. It is a standard type of clause, similar to Clause 16, which deals with interpretation. They are clauses that pick up on any minor or consequential amendment that is needed because articles are being changed.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

The Chairperson: If I may, we will finish there, because we have other deputations from which to hear. Next Thursday, we hope to consider the remainder of the clauses, as well as the two schedules and the long title, thereby completing the Committee Stage of the Bill. I thank you for your attendance.

Ms Jendoubi: Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mr McNarry): Good morning. On behalf of the Committee, I welcome the witnesses. You have been asked to provide a five-minute overview of your written submission. I am compelled to ask that you keep within those five minutes, after which Committee members will ask questions. For the record, I am also obliged to ask that you answer the questions succinctly; I am sure that you will do that. May we call you by your first names?

Ms Joan Christie (South Eastern Education and Library Board): Please do.

Deputy Chairman, thank you for the invitation to attend this Committee meeting. We are grateful for the opportunity. In our submission, we outlined the background of the role of the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) in the Library Service. We are on a tight timetable, so I will avoid repeating that information. I will outline the six points that were highlighted in that submission.

First, our view is that a single library authority will provide a unique opportunity for the Library Service in the future. If it cannot be under the remit of the education and skills authority, we are happy that it will be a single, free-standing organisation; we support that concept. That said, libraries have always had, and should continue to have, a close relationship with education; that is a vital partnership that we wish to continue.

Secondly, the SEELB highlights the community planning and partnerships that the Library Service already has, which it hopes will be developed and will grow as the new authority develops. The Library Service provides a local service to local communities. There are several other bodies, including the new education and library bodies, the health boards and various other organisations, with which the library service should be coterminous.

Thirdly, the board is conscious that, at present, the setting up of the new library authority is less than six months away. The establishment of the education and skills authority has been deferred until 2009. That throws up particular difficulties for the Library Service in some areas. The board is anxious that any changes must be carried out smoothly and that staff should be the focus of attention.

Fourthly, the board has outlined its view on the free library service in its submission, and welcomes the opportunity to do so again. We consider a free library service to be vital. Recently, someone wondered whether the chap who created libraries, if he were alive today, would have been able to set up free libraries. The board, however, already has them and considers it vital to keep them.

Fifthly, I have already mentioned the relationship with the schools' library service, which is vital. At present, the schools' library service comes under the umbrella of libraries. The board understands that that will change under the new library authority. However, maintaining that relationship and working together with the schools' library service is vital.

Finally, I have kept the most important point until the end, which is funding. The board supports the concept of the new library authority; it wants to be involved in it. However, we put our hands up and say that it must be funded properly — it must not be set up on a shoestring. The board strongly urges that the resources that the new library authority needs must be made available.

If there are any questions, I am inclined to point towards the two experts on either side of me. I apologise for not introducing them properly. Stanton Sloan is the new chief executive of the South Eastern Education and Library Board. He was appointed during the past month. Adrienne Adair is the assistant chief librarian. Unfortunately, the chief librarian is on holiday and is unable to be here. I am one of the commissioners. The chairman is also on holiday and, therefore, sends his apologies to the Committee for being unable to attend.

The Deputy Chairperson: I congratulate Mr Sloan on his appointment. If my question is unfair, you do not have to answer it: your predecessor was seconded, so where does that leave the board? In my understanding, if someone is on secondment, it means that they can be returned to their previous post. However, you are now the chief executive.

Mr Stanton Sloan (South Eastern Education and Library Board): I am also appointed on that basis. However, with the support and agreement of the commissioners, I will continue to act as the chief executive. If circumstances change, they will be dealt with as and when they arise. At present, however, there have been no significant effects on the board. Matters are progressing as usual.

The Deputy Chairperson: OK. That is good to know. Thank you.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the board for its presentation. Ms Christie mentioned a free library service. The Committee agrees with her on the need for that. Is the board content, therefore, that the wording of clause 6 of the Libraries Bill is strong enough to guarantee the continuation of a free library service?

Ms Christie: In our submission, we suggested that stronger wording is necessary. I will ask Adrienne to deal with that.

Ms Adrienne Adair (South Eastern Education and Library Board): The board would prefer that the wording of the legislation were much stronger in order to clarify that there will be a free library service at the point of use. There is concern that if budgets were to be reduced in the future, charges could be applied. The South Eastern Education and Library Board is keen to ensure that minimum charges are applied.

Mr McCarthy: That is fine; thank you.

Mr Shannon: You are very welcome, and congratulations, Stanton, on your new post.

In your submission to the Committee, you expressed some concern about the savings predicted for 2009-10 and through to 2011. You said that savings were unlikely to come from reducing management costs alone. First, what brought you to that point of view? Secondly, where do you think savings can be made?

Mr Sloan: Perhaps I could turn that question around somewhat. The South Eastern Education and Library Board supports a single library authority, but is concerned that it is properly funded.

We have some specific concerns. For example, there will not be five chief librarians, so there will be redundancy costs. Recent reports from Deloitte examined estates management, human resources, IT and finance systems. Mr Shannon's question is on the mark and would be better directed to the new authority. The SEELB would like to be convinced, and we simply want to know how all those factors have been taken into account, and we are asking the Department to ensure that, when the authority is set up, it delivers a high-quality service and is adequately funded. We want to be assured that all those factors have been taken into consideration.

Mr Shannon: You are not convinced about how savings can be made. Do you feel that any savings can be made?

Mr Sloan: The SEELB's experience of other amalgamations, albeit of schools, is that the first and second years require investment to achieve savings in the longer term. Therefore, we suggest that there may need to be considerable investment in the first two years to ensure savings later on. We want to be assured — as will the Committee — that sufficient funds will be available for that investment.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you, Jim. That was an important question and response.

Mr K Robinson: My question about your submission is similar to Jim Shannon's. You have asked the Department to clarify how the start-up costs and the estimated efficiencies have been calculated. What are your underlying concerns about that, and do you think that the Department has underestimated or overestimated the costs and savings?

Mr Sloan: That follows on from Mr Shannon's question. I received and read the Deloitte reports only in the last few days. On the basis of those, the library authority will have to address certain things. There is potential for savings. For example, the SEELB is close to Belfast and has a library at Cregagh, which is close to another library further down the Cregagh road.

To return to the point, the Department is underestimating the costs and overestimating the savings. We pointed that out in our submission. We are simply asking the Department, if it is going ahead with its plan, to give us the details, so that we can be assured that the service is properly funded. That is our simple intention: to ensure that there is proper funding and that the level of funding is clear and transparent.

Mr K Robinson: You think that the Department has overestimated one sector and underestimated the other?

Mr Sloan: The initial estimate of savings is probably too high, and the start-up costs may be underestimated. However, we are simply asking the questions. The answers must come from a more detailed response from the Department.

Mr P Ramsey: There are several areas of concern, which your presentation clearly highlighted. What is your current budget for library provision in the SEELB? Can you tell us what the costs for staffing are and what revenue there is?

I have raised literacy and numeracy problems in Northern Ireland, because one-in-four people have such difficulties. The Department of Education provides money for numeracy and literacy education and for early-years programmes. Will that money be lost, or do you see the early-years programmes and help for those less skilled in numeracy and literacy continuing?

Ms Adair: Our budget this year is £5.235 million, and approximately 68% of that goes towards the staff costs that are required to run our library services — we have 24 static libraries. We work closely with Bookstart and Sure Start to deliver books and services to young children. Professional librarians work across groups of libraries to deliver those programmes. Those librarians devise content, and our staff on the ground deliver programmes to improve literacy, numeracy and computer literacy. As Mr Sloan has said, the SEELB does not know what the budget and structures of the new service will be, so the board does not know whether it will deliver those programmes in the future. However, the board currently delivers those programmes.

Mr P Ramsey: Are there indications from the Department of Education that the process will lead to links between the Department and the library authority?

Ms Adair: We hope that formal structures will be set up so that we can link closely with education, as the education and library boards do currently. We also run the schools' library service, which runs programmes for literacy, reading and reading exploitation. However, we need formal structures.

Mr P Ramsey: That point should be noted for future reference.

The Deputy Chairperson: That is a good point. You said that you do not know what the budget for the library authority will be.

Ms Adair: We know that the budget will be £30 million for the entire Northern Ireland library authority, but we do not know what the structures will be or how the new service will be delivered.

The Deputy Chairperson: You do not know what the carve-up will be — that is important.

Mr D Bradley: My question concerns the link between the education and skills authority, and the library authority. I notice from the Department of Education's policy papers on the review of public administration (RPA) that it envisages a service-level agreement between the library authority and the education and skills authority. What do you see that agreement encompassing?

Mr Sloan: That relates to Mr Ramsey's question. Libraries play a significant part, as do youth services, in the areas of literacy and numeracy. New literacy and numeracy strategies will shortly be launched, and there is every indication that the early-years programmes will continue. The schools' library and education service will work closely on that; the SEELB has recently received an additional allocation from the Department, and it is working, through its education and library sides, to develop those initiatives. Support for those initiatives will be available through the schools' library service, and that will be part of the education and skills authority.

Literacy problems do not only affect children up to the age of 16 or 19. Mr Ramsey mentioned adult literacy, and we need to ask bodies such as libraries and education associations, and the people who work in them, what we need to do in that area.

Any service-level agreement that the library authority will have will probably relate to areas where cover is needed — for example, estates management. Estates will transfer over to libraries, but libraries do not have an estates branch, so who will look after them? I have met Irene Knox, the chief executive designate of the library authority, and we have discussed the need for service-level agreements on areas such as that.

The Deputy Chairperson: I need to remind you that time is pressing on. I apologise to our guests that we have to push ahead, and although the Committee may hear the same points being made by the other boards, it is important that we hear from those boards.

I remind members that the Committee has asked the Department for a report on the start-up costs of the library authority, and the spread and make-up of those costs. Perhaps it is an indication of joined-up government, but that report is not expected until tomorrow. We will have to deal with that report at our next meeting.

Lord Browne: You referred to the fact that the education and library boards will now be in place until March 2009. The library authority is due to be in place by April 2008 — do you feel that there are any risks to the SEELB if it is not in place by then?

You said that you foresaw difficulties with the changeover, especially with your staffing. If the library authority is not established by April 2008, do you foresee that being a difficulty? Do you feel that a later start would help with the difficulties in synchronisation?

Ms Christie: It is difficult to see how the single library authority will be up and running by April 2008. We are less than six months away from that date, and there is a question over whether that deadline can be met.

On the other hand, my understanding is that the commitment has been made to having a single library authority, and one wonders if there will ever be a time when everything is absolutely ready. Therefore, should we not proceed with the target of April 2008, with all the potential problems involved, and deal with those as they occur?

The issue of staff morale concerns me deeply. It is already in difficulty and will continue to be so. Irene Knox, previously of the South Eastern Education and Library Board, and now the chief executive designate for the library authority, will be recruiting staff from RPA-affected bodies, which means that our staff will be recruited. The SEELB, while sorry to lose Irene, is happy with its new executive, Stanton Sloan, but the problem remains that other jobs are going to be filled by people from our board.

A key issue for us and our staff is that we do not know where the new library headquarters are going to be located, and that presents a real problem. The SEELB has quite a percentage of female staff with commitments, and they cannot necessarily move to, for example, Omagh. I am not saying that the headquarters are going to be in Omagh, or that there is anything wrong with that as a potential location, being a Castlederg native myself. However, the new headquarters could be in a place that renders it impossible for current staff to apply for jobs, and that presents an equality issue.

Mr McCausland: Would it make more sense if the library authority and the education and skills authority were established in sync, as regards the organisational aspect of the transition? Are there advantages in having the two in sync?

Mr Sloan: There are certainly advantages to that. To expand on what Ms Christie said, the problem is that the staff who work in education and library boards cannot be classified as either library staff or education staff, and they cannot be treated separately — they comprise one set of staff, and should be treated accordingly.

The board supports the establishment of the new bodies. There should be sufficient time to ensure that that is done properly, but it should not cause undue delay. We think that it is only when the organisations are up and running that we will see benefits. When single procedures are in place, the organisations may well start their work at different times, but I agree that the closer together those dates are, the better.

Mr Brolly: I see a weakness in clause 6 as regards library services being free at point of delivery, particularly as the SEELB is concerned about savings being overestimated and costs being underestimated. Is it possible — and this is a bit of a conspiracy theory — that the clause may be a loophole, and that any losses incurred could be supplemented by charging in some subtle way?

Mr Sloan: I do not believe that to be the case.

Mr Brolly: It is something that should be watched.

Mr Sloan: That may be prudent.

Mr Brolly: Do you have a view on how the new library authority should engage with other local structures apart from those in education — the local councils, for example?

Mr Sloan: Although there will be a central library authority, library services will be delivered locally. Therefore, we must take account of other subregional structures that may be set up, including what may transpire as a result of the establishment of the education and skills authority. We have to take account of what happens in the health sector, and members will have already heard about provisions for literacy and numeracy, early years, and the Sure Start initiatives that are in place. I am not a politician, but I would say that, as far as joined-up government is concerned, it will be important to consider subregional structures throughout Northern Ireland and ensure that they are co-ordinated and include a wide range of services.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you. Contrary to public perception, politicians do listen to good advice.

Mr Sloan: It was not my suggestion that they do not listen.

The Deputy Chairperson: I know. I merely wanted to make the point.

Mr Sloan: I apologise if the Committee took that inference from my remarks.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you. Your presentation and timeous replies set a good standard for the witnesses who will follow. If you feel that you have missed anything, or wish to add something, please contact our officials, because this is a major issue. The Committee welcomes such information — we are only too aware of time constraints.

I welcome Ms Helen Osborn, Mr Bill Reilly and Mr Barry Mulholland from the Western Education and Library Board (WELB). I understand that Rev Robert Herron is unable to attend today. You will have five minutes for your presentation, and the Committee would appreciate it if you would keep to that time. Members will ask succinct questions so that you can give succinct answers. I am sorry to press you for time. The previous presentation set the standard, so please do not let us down.

Mr Bill Reilly (Western Education and Library Board): I am chairperson of the library committee of the Western Education and Library Board (WELB). The board is the local authority that is charged with the provision of education, library and youth services in the west of the Province, covering 289,000 people. The public library service and the schools' library service are integral parts of the board's activities, and we are particularly proud of four areas of our activities in library service provision. First, we work in partnership with the statutory, community, voluntary and private sectors to improve customer services.

Secondly, we are proud of the way in which the public library service and the schools' library service work closely together to address education priorities and initiatives. Current examples include the revised curriculum, extended schools, the One Book project and the Children's Books Ireland festival.

Thirdly, we take pride in our early-years provision activities, which is particularly important now that the Department of Education is responsible for early-years education provision. The board has seven play and learn centres in its libraries; it supports 113 preschool groups; operates the Bookstart scheme, and holds weekly rhymetimes in most libraries for children under three. Finally, our local history collections are popular and deserve to be made more accessible to everyone.

I wish to briefly highlight seven points from our submission. First, core library services should be free at the point of delivery. Secondly, there should be a single transfer process for the establishment of the Northern Ireland library authority and the education and skills authority, and the subregional structure that will be developed for the library authority should mirror that being developed for the education and skills authority. Thirdly, there should be close working relationships between the education and skills authority, and the library authority. Fourthly, we are concerned about the proposed size of the board of the library authority; we are unsure whether it will be sufficient to provide the breadth of expertise required for what will be a considerable workload. Fifthly, we have serious reservations about the figures provided on projected financial savings and about the limited budget for start-up costs. Sixthly, the cost of support services, which is currently provided for in WELB's budget, also concerns us.

Finally, the current funding allocation to each board for public libraries is based on a formula that relates to population and takes account of social need and rurality. That provides a level of transparency and equality, and we would like an assurance that it will be maintained, when the Northern Ireland library authority is set up, so that the west will not be disadvantaged.

That is a synopsis of what our very hard-working staff in the Western Education and Library Board are doing, and we are very proud of them. We hope that when the library authority is established, services in the west will not be disadvantaged and that they will be at least as good if not better.

The Deputy Chairperson: I apologise to members for not giving them an opportunity to let me know if they want to ask questions. I will sort that out before the next session. I have a note that Mr McCarthy wants to ask the first question, then Mr Shannon and Mr K Robinson. Would those who have not signalled to me please follow on from the next three questions?

Mr McCarthy: You have said that you would like the wording in clause 6 to be strengthened. What do you see as the potential problems if the words "free service" are not included in the Bill?

Ms Helen Osborn (Western Education and Library Board): Our belief is that without an explicit commitment in the Bill to provide core services free at the point of delivery, there is a danger that charges will be levied to address budget shortfalls, which would clearly undermine the purpose and ethos of the public library service.

Mr Shannon: In your written submission, you referred to what will probably be the biggest single UK library authority. You also said, and I quote: "the level of savings referred to in the financial memorandum is a matter of grave concern."

Your concerns are very clearly to do with savings that may, or may not, happen. The Committee has received indications that some of the savings could be achieved from reducing management costs. Do you agree? I suspect that you do not, going by your submission. Do you feel that any savings can be made?

Mr Reilly: Ms Osborn is probably the best person to answer that as she has had experience in the Welsh and English library services.

Ms Osborn: We do not know how the figures for savings were arrived at as we have not seen the calculations. There will be some scope for streamlining management structures, etc. However, in the Western Board, only 6.6% of our budget, some £200,000, is spent on senior management and their administrative support staff. It is difficult to see how the level of savings indicated in the explanatory and financial memorandum could be achieved with that level of expenditure.

As regards specialist staff and being the biggest library authority in the UK, and possibly in Europe, an authority of that size needs certain specialist staff in order to have a vibrant, dynamic, community focus and be at the forefront of library developments.

Mr Reilly mentioned local history. The new library authority will need to be at the forefront of digitization in order to make material accessible. It will also need to have expertise in other areas, for example, an external funding officer. The service currently benefits from having external funding officers within each board area. The new authority will have to have those types of specialists if it is to be effective and efficient.

Mr Shannon: Do you feel that savings can be made in the long term?

Ms Osborn: There will be significant initial costs in setting up the library authority, and substantial funds will be required to finance redundancies. Thereafter, there may be some potential for savings, but without seeing the calculations and knowing the proposed structure and how support services will be delivered, it is difficult to say what those savings will be.

Mr K Robinson: My colleague has fully explored the financial aspects, so I will move on. Mr Reilly, you expressed concern that the proposed library authority board will be too small to provide the necessary expertise, and that it should reflect the geographical spread of Northern Ireland. How many board members would be required to cover committees, subcommittees, and so forth? How should the geographical spread be reflected in the board?

Mr Reilly: The board should comprise between 20 and 25 members. The current education and library boards each have 35 members, but that could probably be pruned back a little. One way to solve the geographical question would be to hold all meetings at the board's headquarters in Omagh — where I live. That would be very convenient. [Laughter.]

I have probably annoyed everyone else in the Province now.

We must ensure that the composition of the board represents a good geographical spread and expertise in various fields such as financial control, staffing and local councils, as well as those who have an interest in the running of libraries. One must remember that all members will not be able to attend all meetings, and if the board comprises as few as 12 members, we will run the risk of meetings being inquorate. Furthermore, the committees and subcommittees will be almost be incestuous if there are only 12 board members, because the same people will be appearing all the time. A board comprising 12 members will not be sufficient to achieve a spread of expertise and allow for members to miss meetings for such reasons as holidays and sickness. Mr Mulholland has experience of running a board.

Mr Barry Mulholland (Western Education and Library Board): I agree with Mr Reilly. Our board enjoys a good level of public-representative membership — 40% of the board comes from local government.

Mr K Robinson: You have anticipated my next question. I was going to ask whether the involvement of public representatives in a board is the solution to the incestuous relationship that was referred to.

Mr Mulholland: It is an advantage in our board because it ensures a level of public accountability and that communities in the five district council areas coterminous with our board area — Limavady, Derry city, Strabane, Omagh and Fermanagh — are well represented.

Mr K Robinson: I am glad that you said that. Several of us had concerns about that.

Mr Reilly: Expertise is also important — that does not mean that we do not get that from local representatives — and there is a double whammy in that respect. If we proceed with a small committee, everyone must bring a degree of expertise with them. A bigger committee will mean that more people can be accommodated.

Mr P Ramsey: Paragraph 15 of your written submission refers to the overall costs for the single library authority. What are the overall costs of the Western Education and Library Board's library provision, excluding staff costs and revenue?

Ms Osborn: The overall recurrent budgets of public libraries in the western board area is £4.3 million, of which £3.1 million is spent on staff, because — as members will appreciate — public library provision is a staff-intensive service. Staff must be present in the branches to provide front-line services.

Mr P Ramsey: I know that, but another import matter is that the establishment of a single library authority will mean that library services will not have the benefits of the regional support they currently enjoy. Therefore, I wonder about those costs being taken on board at some stage.

Paragraphs 9 and 10 of your written submission state that the schools' library service and the public library service share buildings, resources and IT facilities, and provide a holistic approach to the education of children.

How will that work? Will you be able to ensure that you continue to provide the same excellent service to both youngsters and adults?

Mr Mulholland: The questions are excellent, and similar enquiries have exercised our board members. A single library authority for the whole of Northern Ireland was not the Western Education and Library Board's preferred option, and our board colleagues share that view. Given that schools' library services are very much integrated, we believe that library services should remain an integral part of education. For that reason, and for those already outlined, library services have a critical role to play in all levels of learning.

The difficulties that the new library authority will experience are clear. The Western Education and Library Board operates what is almost a shared-service facility in which human resources, finance, procurement, property services, and management of assets for library, youth and educational facilities are run centrally. Therefore, the budget will have to be disaggregated to ensure that the new library authority has the proper baseline funds to cover all those areas. The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is carrying out that exercise.

The change will present a challenge. The new education and skills authority's chief executive designate and the chief executive designate of the library authority will have to work together extremely closely.

Mr Reilly: The schools' library service is critical, particularly for primary schools, as it provides valued support to teachers in those schools. It is becoming more obvious that getting children as young as three years old accustomed to going to libraries, reading books, and enjoying reading is important to their later educational development. Therefore we must ensure that the schools' library service does not suffer and result in an inferior service to people who are too young to complain for themselves.

The Deputy Chairperson: I am conscious of time, and I do not want to curtail either the later questioners or the relevant answers.

Mr McCausland: Would there be merit in having the new library authority and the education and skills authority established at the same time, so that the two processes could run in sync? What would be the practical implications if that were not to happen?

Mr Mulholland: It is crucial that the processes that will bring about the transition from the education and library boards to the education and skills authority and the library authority are aligned. That would reduce the duplication of effort needed. More importantly, it is crucial that we continue to deliver high-quality services to the public. It will not be an effective or efficient use of staff time for us to have to break away from delivering those services in order to consider the human resource, transfer, property and financial services of the two services — in the first instance for an early set up of the library authority, and then again for the slightly later establishment of the education and skills authority. That will create many difficulties. However, if the processes were aligned to ensure that we work effectively once they are complete, the education and library service could be established in April 2009 and the library service could be established in January 2009. The starting dates could be agreed if the processes could be aligned.

Mr Brolly: Until the new library authority is established, the Western Education and Library Board will be in charge of the provision of all things associated with libraries. Does that include proposals for new build? I am concerned that the proposed new library for Dungiven might be handed over and would have to wait until the library authority is in place.

Mr Mulholland: The Western Education and Library Board will continue with its plans for the development of new libraries and the refurbishment of old libraries until such times as the new library authority is created. However, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure will be aware of what we are doing, and approve of our work, as it always has.

Mr Brolly: When do you think that Dungiven library might be ready?

Ms Osborn: I will answer that. We understand that planning permission has been granted; however the board has not yet been officially notified. Assuming the traditional route for building, it will take approximately 12 months thereafter.

Lord Browne: Further to Mr McCausland's questions, what risks do you anticipate, particularly concerning staffing, if the library authority is not established by April 2008?

Mr Mulholland: I do not envisage any difficulty if there is a delay — far from it: a delay will allow more time to ensure that the transfer is as seamless as possible. Morale issues, which have been referred to, will be greater if people believe that a difficult timescale for establishing the new authority is being forced on them for the sake of hitting a particular date. People would prefer that it were done properly.

Mr D Bradley: The Department of Education's policy papers on the review of public administration stated that there would be a service-level agreement between the library authority and education and skills authority. What should be encompassed by such an agreement?

Mr Mulholland: That is a question for the chief executives designate of the new authorities. We consider it crucial that the Library Service continues to work closely with the Department of Education concerning school libraries.

There are opportunities for service-level agreements in areas such as, human resources, finance, property services, asset management etc. However, any arrangement would have to be a consequence of agreement between the chief executives designate of the new organisations.

Mr D Bradley: Do you think that that might be a means to achieve savings for both bodies?

Mr Mulholland: It would be an efficient use of resources.

The Deputy Chairperson: How is your staff coping with the goings-on?

Mr Reilly: The board is worried about staff insecurity. Education board employees, more so than those in the Library Service, are looking for jobs in other areas. The problem with library staff is that they are highly specialised.

The Deputy Chairperson: Please stick to discussing library staff.

Mr Reilly: We are not losing as many library staff. Where else could they get a job?

Ms Osborn: Library staff have many skills and are employable in several sectors. Staff morale is fairly high; however, certainty about a date is needed. The possibility of an alteration to the timescale would be welcomed by most staff members, some of whom have many years' service. For someone who has worked for the board for 20 or 30 years, it would be difficult if the board were to continue without libraries being a part of it. However, those staff members would appreciate knowing with certainty whether changes are to take place in January 2009 or April 2009 or whenever.

The Deputy Chairperson: If you have the opportunity, please pass on the Committee's regards to your staff for the future, and assure them that their good intentions are behind our deliberations.

I apologise for the speed of these sessions; however, more comes from them than you think. Thank you for your presentation and for answering our questions. Please contact our officials to advise them of any additional matters that might come to mind after today. Thank you and safe home.

Good morning to the delegation from the Belfast Education and Library Board (BELB), and thank you for coming to address the Committee. The standard so far has been excellent, and I am sure that you will not let us down.

I remind you that there is a limit of five minutes for your presentation; Committee members have been instructed to make their questions succinct, and I ask that you be as succinct as possible in your responses.

I apologise that this is not a calming exercise, but — given the time restraint — that is the way that things have to be done. We will force the time and the issues with you.

Mrs Rosemary Frawley (Belfast Education and Library Board): I thank the Committee for giving us the opportunity to speak at this meeting. My colleagues are David Cargo, chief executive of BELB, and David Jess, assistant chief librarian for Belfast public libraries. I am a member of BELB and vice-chairperson of the library committee. I also have a long association with the public library service; I worked there for 36 years, spending the latter years as a member of the electronic libraries project team.

As the Committee has our written submission, I will not go through it now. I will simply highlight several issues that members may wish to explore further.

Belfast's public library service operates in what has been, effectively, a divided city for the past 30 years with a large urban population. That has had, and continues to have, serious resource implications for effective service delivery. Furthermore, some 70% of the community libraries are located in areas of high social deprivation. At a time when outreach activities are extremely important to address the challenge of improving literacy, numeracy, employability and economic prosperity, those libraries are severely constrained by staff and resource shortages.

Belfast's public library service is unique in the Northern Ireland Library Service. It operates a large central library and reference facility whose role is to conserve, preserve and exploit historical and contemporary resources for in-depth study and research. Many of the collections are of national and international importance, and we are concerned that the legislation does not adequately reflect the custodial role of the new library authority. Developing those collections and employing specialist staff means that it costs the Belfast Education and Library Board much more than other boards to maintain that resource. Perhaps the Committee will consider the case for separate, ring-fenced funding for a provincial reference library service to include the extremely valuable collections that are located throughout the other board areas in Northern Ireland, which have a major role to play in the cultural capital of the Province.

We emphasise the fact that a quality library service is the overriding priority and that a few fundamental factors are imperative to its delivery. It should be free at the point of service, and there should be coterminosity with other service providers to facilitate community planning and productive partnership working. The strong links with education should remain, so that we provide a seamless service to children and young people in the city. There should be a single transfer system for education and library board employees.

Finally, we have concerns about the affordability of the new library authority.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you very much for your clear presentation.

Lord Browne: In your written submission, you stated that the draft Libraries Bill should not proceed until the results of the review of public administration are known. Why have you taken that position? In your original response to the consultation on the draft Libraries Bill, you did not oppose the creation of a single library authority. Is that still your position, or has it changed? Should libraries, perhaps, become part of local government?

Mr David Cargo (Belfast Education and Library Board): I will deal with your questions in the context of our submission. When it was first mooted that a reform of public administration was needed, the board had two distinct views on the future of libraries. Our preferred option was to view libraries in the context of lifelong learning. Therefore, we felt that there should be a close relationship, in any regional body, between education, youth and the Library Service, because we have all spent the past 30 years trying to embed and conjoin those services in that context.

Should that not be possible, the board's view was that the Library Service needed to maintain close links with its users, so our second preference was for libraries to move towards council control, because that would ensure a close relationship between libraries and the public.

There are two issues at the core of the debate. Rationalisation can bring structural efficiencies: one of something is probably better than five of something.

However, the downside of that is that the effectiveness of services can also suffer. The Library Service is dependent upon the close proximity of the library to its community and to its users. We are all struggling with a tension: where, on the continuum, does the crossover between structural efficiency and customer effectiveness meet?

Therefore, we are not opposed to a single body. Our preference is for a single body with democratic input, which is close to its users so that there would be a strong subregional structure that would ensure effective community use.

The Deputy Chairperson: That is pretty clear. I think that everyone is happy with that response.

Mr D Bradley: In its submission, the BELB stated that the Bill does not adequately address the potential for libraries to be community hubs. Could you outline for the Committee how the Bill should address that?

Mrs Frawley: I cannot identify that statement in our submission. However, our view is that libraries, as community hubs, constitute a vital part of the future development and prosperity of library services. We view partnership working as critical to successful strategic and resource planning.

We are already involved in that process — for example, in the Grove project, which is the result of a partnership among the Library Service, Belfast City Council leisure services, and Belfast Health and Social Care Trust. I will not go into the details of that project, but I assure the Committee that we have a lot of documentation and reports on it that we would be happy to submit. We will send the Committee any information on any of our services that members require.

Mr D Bradley: Do you think that the role of libraries needs to be more clearly spelt out in the Bill?

Mrs Frawley: We feel that the generic description of services should be strengthened. Inclusion of the word “comprehensive” would help, because, without some recognition of the breadth and depth of services, there is danger of dumbing down all services.

We also feel strongly that the research and study role of the Belfast reference libraries and their unique collections, as well as the specialist collections held in other boards, should be part of the role and responsibility of the new library authority. They are a part of our cultural capital and their continued development is important, not just for the libraries themselves but for the Province as a whole.

Mr D Bradley: Do you think that the Bill should go as far as to specify exactly what libraries should be used for?

Mrs Frawley: We do not think it necessary for the Bill to identify every role and activity. We are more concerned that the legislation might proscribe the libraries from doing certain things. We would not want to be limited in expanding current services, in introducing innovative new services or in any options along those lines.

Mr K Robinson: I thank the board for the presentation. Mrs Frawley has highlighted an important factor, namely the archives held by the library boards. I know from bitter experience what can happen. A member of a library board, on his way to shred an archive, just happened to know that I had an interest in that particular area, and I was able to save that archive. Is that a danger? With reorganisation, do we need to list and protect those archives before they are transferred? That is a point that the Committee needs to highlight.

Now, I will ask my question, which is a simple one.

The Deputy Chairperson: Hear, hear.

Mr K Robinson: What, if any, are the specific risks to your organisation if the new library authority is not established on 1 April 2008?

Mr Cargo: Such matters are never risk free; however, our service currently operates through the Belfast Education and Library Board. If the new library authority is not established on that date, the service will continue to run. The risk to the service is minimal, because the board will continue to provide that service.

Mr K Robinson: You have a plan B in place.

The Deputy Chairperson: Perhaps the officials will take note of Ken's point about archives, and the Committee could return to that. It is a valid point.

Mr P Ramsey: Rosemary, you and your team are most welcome.

I have read your formal submission; you obviously take great pride in the outreach work that you do in library provision. However, you are very straight in challenging Government on monetary value, set-up costs, and so forth.

Are you happy with the proposals? The Belfast Education and Library Board is concerned that the costs for a stand-alone service have not been identified. We share that concern. The board's submission states that:

"Projected budgetary forecasts indicate that overall funding for libraries looks set to decrease."

It also points out that access to library services in rural areas may be reduced, which is a fundamental concern for the Committee.

The Deputy Chairperson: What about a question now, Pat?

Mr P Ramsey: I am leading up to it.

There is clear criticism of the proposed single library authority. Can you provide us with any information or evidence us other than that which you have already provided? We do not have any costs for start-up, only projected costs. I asked the previous witnesses about the attempts to reduce literacy problems in Northern Ireland — one-in-four adults has such problems. How can you ensure that the collaborations among library services, the Department of Education, and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure continue to adopt a holistic approach to children's and adults' education?

Mr David Jess (Belfast Education and Library Board): The question of cost is a vexed one. The start-up costs for this year will probably cover what is required in this financial year, and that is fine. However, we are concerned that there are no figures for start-up costs for next year and the succeeding years. We assume that, for the first two or three years, there will be further significant start-up costs.

There will also be a figure for the infrastructure costs for those parts of the service that are currently provided by the boards. Figures that we have just received from consultants estimate that those costs will be around £900,000. Those costs will have to be factored in, and additional funds will have to be found from within the libraries' budget. We have not yet had time to fully analyse those figures.

Turning to the savings that are required; referring to our experience in Belfast, the library budget in 2003 was £6 million. This year, that was reduced to £5.2 million, and next year it goes down to £4.7 million. In order to live within budget, we have, in the last three years, shed, or not replaced approximately 30 staff, which makes it has become very difficult to maintain current levels of service, and we are now at risk of ad-hoc closures.

Another problem to note is that when staff numbers are reduced, it becomes much more difficult to carry out the important one-to-one library activities, such as those involving, for example, literacy and special needs. Some of those activities produce low statistics, but they are labour-intensive. Therefore, having fewer staff means that there is less capacity to do the jobs that involve one-to-one services.

The explanatory and financial memorandum suggests that there will be nearly £2 million in savings — £600,000 in 2009-10, and £1.2 million in 2010-11. From a budget of £30 million, that is quite a considerable saving, and we cannot envisage where that level of saving will come from. From the current Belfast example, with reduced staff numbers, we will still face a potential £700,000 shortfall next year. As costs increase, reducing staff numbers may not produce sufficient savings. We are concerned about where those savings will come from, and we believe that they cannot be achieved without the wholesale closure of libraries and the consequent paying-off of staff. Closing buildings saves a little, but the big savings are in reducing staff numbers. We are very concerned that that is how the savings may have to be achieved.

Mr P Ramsey: David, you said that the overall Belfast library budget for this year was £5.2 million. How much of that is for staff costs?

Mr Jess: Approximately 70%.

Mr K Robinson: We have come to a key point. Staff numbers have been reduced, including face-to-face staff. Is the suggestion that front-line staff will be sacrificed in the new system, as opposed to middle or senior management, as was suggested?

Mr Jess: The redundancies have been of senior staff, by and large. Front-line staff have gone mainly through natural wastage, if I can use that term. We have also moved a lot of staff around to try to keep service points running.

We have also transferred a number of staff from what were traditionally back-room jobs to the front line. Staffing has reached a critical level whereby everyone is manning the fort.

Mr Cargo: We have already been part of an efficiency programme, as have all boards, in the past few years. Any back-room staff are now front-office staff. If more staff are lost, there will be library closures.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you for that. That provides a clear picture.

Mr McCausland: Do you think that the new library authority and the education and skills authority should be established in sync? Would there be any disadvantages, with respect to staff and buildings, if that did not happen?

Mr Cargo: There is a danger that one becomes fixated by dates. Dates are useful for targets that everyone can work towards. An important point, both for this Committee and the Committee for Education, is that, if there is going to be change — and none of us is opposed to change — it should be done right, rather than by a certain date.

Another point to consider is that the board does not have education staff, youth staff and library staff. Rather, it has Belfast Education and Library Board staff. If those staff go to different organisations, there should be a single scheme of transfer. There should not be a scheme of transfer for libraries staff, one for youth staff, and another for school staff. Therefore, there is a major piece of work that must be done in respect of the reorganisation and redeployment of those staff in the new organisation. That needs to happen in a co-ordinated, planned way — to use your phrase, Nelson, in sync.

I would find it extremely difficult, as chief executive, to manage or hive off a group of staff on one set of terms and conditions, and another group of staff on slightly different terms and conditions. There are also practical issues involved in moving to new organisations, such as signage, rebadging of vehicles and uniforms, and the like. We want a one-off exercise.

Lastly, I do not want to get to a situation in which I am going around with little bits of paper that state that we are now the Belfast education board, rather than the library board. The work needs to be done properly, in a co-ordinated fashion, and at one time, on whatever date that may be.

Mr Brolly: Fundamentally, my understanding of your submission is that you are worried that the new library authority will provide something which is very clinical, almost like a banking service. You have mentioned the services that your organisation has provided as an education and library board, in particular the disabled, and your association with schools. All of those services are very local and produce a sense of warmth, so to speak, from the Library Service. Do you have a view as to how the new library authority can engage with all those local structures, including the local council, to make sure that that engagement is not lost?

Mrs Frawley: The most effective way to engage with the local population is through local people and/or their local representatives. As a member of the board and the library committee, I have seen that working in practice — it has facilitated many joint exercises between education and libraries, and between libraries and the city council. My view is that there should be more public representation on the new library authority.

Mr D Bradley: Excuse me, Mr Deputy Chairman. I need to leave the room for a few minutes. Please excuse me.

The Deputy Chairman: Are you coming back?

Mr D Bradley: I will be back.

The Deputy Chairman: I have heard that before. [Laughter.]

Witnesses, thank you for your presentation. You kept the standard up. I am not going to say whether it was better or worse than the previous witnesses. Take with you the best regards of the Committee to your staff.

There may be another meeting in the near future, and, if so, our officials will bring it to your attention. Please keep in contact, as this matter is ongoing. We are under pressure and time, as you have acknowledged.

I wish you all the best, and perhaps we will see you again. Thank you very much.

Mrs Frawley: Before we go, I would like invite the Committee to view the collections in Belfast Central Library.

Mr P Ramsey: That would not be a bad idea.

The Deputy Chairperson: Is lunch any better there than it is elsewhere?

Mr K Robinson: Are you still operating an amnesty? I might have an overdue book tucked away somewhere.

Mr Cargo: We will have an amnesty arranged for you.

The Deputy Chairperson: The next set of witnesses is from the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB). You are very welcome. We are formally informal here, so if I may, I will address you as Marie, Kathleen and Wilbert; I hope that you are not offended. I am Mr McNarry. [Laughter.]

I know that you have been apprised that you should make a five-minute presentation. Up to now, the presentations have been bang on time, and I apologise for pushing you on that, but time is tight for all the matters on which the Committee is working. Nevertheless, I am sure that that will not detract from what you have to say to us. Please proceed, and we will be ready with our questions.

Ms Kathleen Ryan (Southern Education and Library Board): I shall begin by making the introductions. Marie Donnell has been chairperson of the Southern Education and Library Board since 2006 and has been a library interest member of the board since 2001. She is a retired head teacher and has worked in schools in England and Northern Ireland. Mr Wilbert Mayne has been vice-chairperson of the libraries committee since 2005. He is currently a library interest member of the board, and he has been a board and library committee member since 1999. I am Kathleen Ryan. I have been chief librarian of the Southern Education and Library Board for the past five years. Prior to that, since I left school I have worked in public libraries in England.

Mr Wilbert Mayne (Southern Education and Library Board): Good morning. With your permission, I will give a short description of the location that is serviced by the SELB library service. In giving our responses to the Committee and to the consultation on the new library authority that will replace the five boards, we emphasise that our concerns are based on our widespread knowledge and experience of the SELB area and its needs.

The current population of the SELB area is approximately 364,000. The board area stretches from Ballyronan on the western shores of Lough Neagh, near Cookstown — the most northerly point — to Newry and Kilkeel in the south, and as far west as Fivemiletown. It encompasses all County Armagh and parts of County Down and County Tyrone. The area has a mixture of isolated rural communities and large urban areas such as Banbridge, Dungannon, Lurgan and Portadown.

A wide spectrum of economic circumstances is represented in the board area. That includes deprived wards in the council areas of Cookstown, Craigavon and Newry — in which average earnings are below the Northern Ireland mean — and a small number of affluent areas.

For many years, we have had the largest population of migrant workers and their families in Northern Ireland, particularly in the Southern Education and Library Board council areas of Dungannon and Cookstown. Many migrant workers make heavy use of the library services; for example, they use the computer facilities to keep in regular contact with their families, perhaps in eastern European countries.

The concerns that we would like to discuss include proposals not to guarantee a free service to users, the geographical spread of members of the new library authority, and the proposed start-up costs.

Mr P Ramsey: You are very welcome. What are your specific concerns about the predicted savings mentioned in your submission? Do you believe that the holistic approach currently used by libraries for the provision of early-years literacy, outreach work and rural work can be achieved by a single library authority?

Ms Ryan: We have serious concerns about the savings that have been identified, because we are not sure how they have been identified, or whether account has been taken of the fact that savings are bound to lead to redundancy costs, as a large percentage of our budget comprises staffing costs. There can be savings in the long term; however, we are not sure that they can be made in the first two years, as proposed.

We hope that having a single library authority will enable the same quality of services across the board for early-years provision, outreach and rural services. Some boards have developed expertise in certain areas, and a single library authority will enable that expertise to be spread across the whole.

Mr P Ramsey: What is your current expenditure for the provision of staff and library services in the Southern Education and Library Board?

Ms Ryan: The total provision is between £5.2 and £5.5 million, depending on whether the figure is net or gross.

Mr P Ramsey: What part of that is staff costs?

Ms Ryan: Staff costs represent around 80% of that figure.

Mr Mayne: That figure reflects the rurality of the area, the number of small libraries, and the staffing issues that that entails. A large number of large libraries would be more efficient to run than the rural system.

The Deputy Chairperson: We appreciate that, Mr Mayne. Thank you.

Mr Brolly: What is your opinion on how a new library authority could keep in touch with the local structures that are so essential to the ethos of the library service?

Mr Mayne: The make-up of the new authority must reflect all sections and areas of society. As I come from a rural area, I have an interest in ensuring that the new authority reflects rural issues. There must be a mechanism of selection built into the appointment of members that reflects the needs of rural areas, as well as the principles that we have already mentioned. Unlike the Belfast Education and Library Board, or other boards that are nearly all urban, we are very rural. Therefore, the needs of those west of the Bann must be represented by individuals who live and work there and who service those needs.

Mr Brolly: Do you think, therefore, that the maximum number of 14 for membership of the library authority board is much too small?

Mr Mayne: I do not think that it is too small, as long as the appointment process is carried out correctly, and the membership is a true reflection of everybody in the Province.

Mr Brolly: Are you concerned about the geographic spread?

Mr Mayne: Yes; that is our concern.

Lord Browne: In your submission, you state that you are extremely concerned that the Libraries Bill does not contain any provision for the strategic advice system for the new library board that is available in England, Scotland and Wales. How do you receive advice? Do you feel that we need to set up a body in Northern Ireland to provide you with advice? How would such a body be useful to you?

Ms Ryan: There is no form of strategic advice to public library services in Northern Ireland, as there is in the other three home countries.

We want to see a body in Northern Ireland similar to that which exists in the other three home countries; however, the cost would be prohibitive. One way around that might be to have a formal buy-in to one of the other bodies — a formal arrangement between the relevant Government Departments in two jurisdictions.

The biggest of the bodies is the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council in England, which carries out a huge amount of research on public libraries, on training schemes, and so on. It welcomes us, informally, to make use of its website and publications. However, when pieces of research are being commissioned, there are no samples from Northern Ireland. It recently conducted a big training scheme for senior library staff, but it was available only to its members. Owing to the scale of running such a scheme in Northern Ireland, if we did it alone, would be very costly.

Mr K Robinson: Thank you for your presentation. As a former employee of the Southern Education and Library Board — three decades ago — I know exactly the problems that you face, with the geography west of the Bann, and the provisions that have to be made for rural schools and rural communities. You have stressed that some mechanism needs to be found to make sure that there is a geographical spread, and a spread of expertise in the board. Will you elaborate on that? If you had the opportunity to do so, what sort of mechanism would you write into the Bill?

Ms Ryan: We have discussed that issue quite a lot. We want the new library authority to engage with local structures. We would like there to be local consultative forums that would have representation from the various education sectors — from pre-school through to higher education — health, adult education, the youth sector, the voluntary sector, the citizens advice bureaux, and so on. Those consultative bodies should exist in every council area.

Mr K Robinson: If such a mechanism existed, would you write into the legislation that a consultative body should be set up, and then allow the individual communities to respond to that?

Ms Ryan: Personally, I would not write that into the legislation, but I am not a legislative expert. However, if I were chief executive of the new body, that is what I would seek to do.

Mr K Robinson: That would be a strategic aim of yours?

Ms Ryan: Yes.

The Deputy Chairperson: Marie, I am not sure whether questions are falling into your area of specialty, but feel free to chip in. We have two questions left, and if they are not in your area of specialty, I will allow you 30 seconds at the end.

Mr Mayne: To answer Mr Robinson's point, I have had experience of rural development issues and local strategic partnerships. Local strategic partnerships include a mechanism whereby the statutory bodies, the voluntary and community sector and the business sector work together. They have 50:50 representation of folk from the statutory sector, and from social partners, who know how to operate through local councils. Therefore, that might be an option of how to include the community and voluntary sector. Like Kathleen, I am not a legislative expert, but I know how those sectors can work when they are brought together. In my experience, when that happens, it works very well.

Mr K Robinson: The local strategic partnerships are a good model.

Mr D Bradley: Your submission states that you want to see the establishment of a public library advisory forum. What do you think should be the functions of that forum?

Ms Ryan: In the other parts of the UK, such forums advise the relevant Minister. In the Republic of Ireland, it does the same, and it is also a strategic advisory body and a grant-making body. The forums in Scotland and Wales have the same role.

We have talked further about that issue since we made our submission, and we feel that the local consultation bodies are even more important than the forums.

Mr McCausland: Do you envisage any advantages or disadvantages with two processes — the transfer to a single library authority, and the transfer to the education and skills authority — running in sync with each other, with respect to staffing issues, buildings, and so on?

Mrs Marie Donnell (Southern Education and Library Board): Our major concern is that parallel processes and equivalent schemes be put in place for both the Northern Ireland library authority and the education and skills authority. It is important that, whatever happens — whether it happens at the same time or at different times; whether the timescale is identical or not — the best outcome for both bodies is ensured.

Mr McCausland: Will there be any practical difficulties if the two do not run in sync with regard to transfer schemes, and so on?

Ms Ryan: The transfer scheme must be the same. I cannot envisage any practical difficulty whether the scheme applies to 10% of people now or 90% of people in six months' time. However, the Committee may need legal advice on that.

I have concerns about the delay. It is already difficult to maintain staff morale. The board is having considerable difficulty in recruiting staff. It is also difficult to plan in a strategic, long-term manner. The longer that continues, the more difficult it will get. At present, it is difficult for the board to make strategic, long-term decisions on future planning, buildings and major changes in service delivery when it does not know whether it must plan for a discrete area or for the entirety. That is the risk of delay, which applies to both the education side and the library side.

Mr Mayne: Ms Ryan has mentioned staff morale. The current recruitment process must be trawled internally as the board is not permitted to recruit from outside. That has a knock-on effect on libraries — their opening hours, and so on. Recently, there have been cases in which libraries have had to close because of staffing problems. That reflects back to the general public, who cannot get access to library services, and the number of books that are in usage is reduced. It has a snowball effect throughout the service. That must be managed carefully.

The Deputy Chairperson: Welcome back, Mr McCarthy.

Mr McCarthy: Deputy Chairman, was clause 6 mentioned in my absence? The board has pointed out — and the Committee agrees — that clause 6 does not guarantee the statutory provision of a free library service. What wording would the board propose in order to guarantee that provision?

Mrs Donnell: The precise wording would need to be detailed on the advice of a parliamentary draftsman. However, the single greatest concern of the Southern Education and Library Board is that the legislation does not guarantee in statute the provision of a public library service that is free at the point of delivery. Making changes to a scheme of charges will require no input from the Assembly, only a decision by the board of the new body in consultation with the Department.

The board is concerned that, in the future, financial hard times could mean that changes are introduced. The board feels strongly that, in a democratic society, the legislative body should make provision to allow its citizens to have free access to books and information, and that decisions on any changes to that provision should be taken at Assembly level. The proposed legislation would make Northern Ireland the only area in the UK where citizens do not have a statutory right to free library services.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you very much for your time, attention, presentation, dedication and answers, which were excellent. I apologise again for the tight schedule. Please take with you the Committee's best wishes to all your staff. We wish them well for the future. If there are any additional matters that arise or evolve from today's meeting, feel free to contact the Committee staff, if you feel that that might be helpful. Safe home.

Ms Claire Toner

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): I welcome Mr Eamonn O'Donnell and Mr Andrew McCartney from North West Taxi Proprietors (NWTP). It is good to see you. The Committee's standard format is quite informal: you will have about 10 minutes to make your presentation or to add to the submission that you provided to the Committee, and then Members will ask a few questions for clarification. Your written submission is concise, and you have put a lot of work into it. Your submission is highly focused on the Bill: if you wish to supplement it, you have 10 minutes.

Mr Eamonn O'Donnell (North West Taxi Proprietors): Before I begin our presentation, I wish to thank the Committee for giving us the opportunity to discuss the Taxis Bill. Our presentation will outline some background, examine the proposals and specify some of our concerns.

NWTP has been involved in the taxi review from the beginning and at every stage of its progress. We lobbied for the taxi review, responded to the key-stakeholder consultation, responded to the consultation on the regulation of taxis and private-hire vehicles, and we responded to the draft Order in Council. We wrote a briefing paper for MLAs before the debate in June 2007, and we responded to the Environment Committee's recent request for submissions.

We were very pleased when the Assembly decided to introduce the Taxis Bill early in its mandate. We are impressed with local politicians for taking that decision, and we thank them.

We met the Department of the Environment (DOE), various taxi groups, the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (Imtac), the Consumer Council and many others in our quest to create a fair and regulated taxi industry for everyone. It is fair to say that we have been involved in the process from the beginning and at every level.

On 3 May 2002, I sat before the previous Environment Committee to lobby for a taxi review and to call for the Department to give proper priority to the taxi industry. It is worth revisiting the reasons behind our call for a review of taxi administration and the introduction of the Taxis Bill.

In 1992, the Sterling Report was completed and given to the Department. That report highlighted the inadequacies of the Department and the fragmentation of the taxi industry, but it was inexplicably shelved. NWTP discovered through research that poor working practices and attitudes existed in the local taxi industry. That was later confirmed by the Department's own research. It was widely accepted that the taxi industry's system of administration had failed and was inadequate for dealing with the problems of the industry.

In Derry, where I live, regulated taxi services were outnumbered by the unregulated providers by at least 2:1. The situation was dire. At the start of the legislative process, the taxi industry was heading for total collapse. The current legislative process has pulled that situation back. However, it is vital that you, our local representatives, complete that process and deliver meaningful change that impacts on community safety and proper working conditions for those in the taxi industry.

NWTP welcomes the proposals in the Taxis Bill. We are happy to finally see the taxi review being translated into legislation. In principle, we agree with almost all the content of the proposed Taxis Bill. The changes are necessary to bring the taxi industry into the twenty-first century.

I turn to the specific proposals in the Bill. Clause 1 deals with operator licensing for taxi businesses. That will make office owners more accountable and will put the taxi industry firmly into the mainstream economy. NWTP welcomes the introduction of operator licensing, because it is long overdue and should go some way to addressing many of the bad practices of some office owners. The industry needs operator licensing, but, as in the past, if that measure is not enforced properly, all the good work will amount to nothing.

We agree that all taxi operators should be licensed. We see that as a central plank in the fight against the unregulated sector. Under the current system, sex offenders cannot be taxi drivers, but they can own and run taxi offices. That must change, and we would welcome such a change.

All taxi proprietors should be licensed. Owing to the loophole in the current regulations, standards in the taxi industry have fallen significantly. There is no accountability for taxi offices, and the Bill will introduce accountability and responsibility. That measure will be very effective in tackling the problem of unfair competition.

Clause 20 allows for taxis to pick up passengers on the street without them having booked. The structure of the taxi industry will change to a one-tier system. The Department intends to designate areas where only accessible vehicles will be able to pick up. We believe that a one-tier system is the best option for the local taxi industry. Regulation should maintain a safe standard for the industry, but market forces should dictate who services the different aspects of the diverse market. Regulation for the taxi industry in the North is undertaken by the Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) and is confined to the probity and health of drivers and vehicle suitability, roadworthiness and safety, including insurance cover. If the current position were enforced, it would regulate a safe standard for the industry.

Market forces should be allowed to develop and supply services, where there is a demand, and entrepreneurs in different localities could develop sustainable services that are tailored to that locality, covering the mix of urban and rural services. The taxi industry outside Belfast currently operates as a one-tier system, although on paper it is supposed to be a two-tier system. A two-tier system is not practical or enforceable. The law should not cover something that is not enforceable.

We want the taxi industry to be regulated to a safe standard. We want the marketplace deregulated and opened to allow the development of twenty-first-century services. If a taxi driver's medical and repute checks are in order and his vehicle is up to standard, he has earned the right to work in the taxi industry marketplace. There should be no monopolies.

The new proposals will make it safer for the general public by providing more taxis at key times to pick up on the streets. We do not accept the Transport and General Workers Union analysis that such a measure will cost 400 jobs in Belfast public-hire taxis. Rank designation will protect them. The claim made by the union was sensationalist. It was an attempt to grab headlines on the day of the debate to protect what is an unfair monopoly in the city centre of Belfast. The union's claim should not deflect the Committee from establishing equity and endorsing the proposal.

Clause 16 of the Taxis Bill proposes that maximum fare rates are set for all taxis. The Department has agreed that it will commission a taxi cost index to establish what a fair fare is. The maximum fare will come from that report. At present, the economics of the taxi industry are wrong. It is imperative that the Department also sets a minimum fare. North West Taxi Proprietors believe that the taxi cost index will establish what a fair fare is; it should be initiated immediately, and maximum and minimum fares should be set. A multi-tariff system should be put in place to cover day, evening and night-time shifts. Holiday rates should also be built into the system. Once the taxi cost index is completed, the cost of taxiing will be officially established here for the first time ever. If the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) wants fair competition on fares, it is important that parameters be set at both the maximum and minimum ends. The minimum wage is currently set. If the taxi cost index sets out the cost of running a taxi, it will not be rocket science to set a minimum fare, equating to a minimum wage for taxi drivers, alongside the maximum fare.

Clause 18 requires all taxis to have taximeters. NWTP agree that all taxis should have taximeters. A taximeter is a measuring instrument for time and distance to set the cost. Taximeters are good for the taxi industry. They give the general public clarity, and, as they are standard in most European taxis, they are good for tourism. Taximeters are fundamental to the success, sustainability and growth of the industry. Implementation of the policy will increase fees for taxi drivers, so it is important that the Department moves at an early stage on two key issues for taxi drivers: improved enforcement and the early introduction of taximeters.

It is important to deal with unregulated taxis and offices that use them before we introduce taximeters. We believe that that will mean that operator licensing, at least in part, will be initiated within the next year. It is also important that the Department shows some understanding of taxi-driver issues and deals with costs by the early introduction of taximeters.

Clause 23(3) proposes that all new taxi drivers must pass a taxi-driving test. Existing taxi drivers will be required to complete one training day a year. The taxi driver's licence must be re-established as a vocational licence, and that will require the reinstatement of the taxi-driving test. Only new applicants should be required to sit the test and existing taxi drivers should have their grandfather rights respected as they have already invested significant sums of money in becoming taxi drivers.

Clauses 50 and 23(2)(a)(iii) require taxi drivers to complete vocational training at the same time as other vocational lorry and bus licence holders. We expect training in disability awareness, customer care, health and safety and other relevant areas. Cost is an issue for drivers. NWTP admits that the taxi industry has room for improvement in areas such as disability awareness, customer service, health and safety and new innovation. We agree with the proposal, but cost will be an issue for the industry.

The shared-fares scheme — in which taxi drivers are permitted to charge individual passengers separate, but less expensive, fares — is covered by clauses 5 and 6. Shared-fares schemes are to be introduced, where possible, and will provide for some diversity in the development of services. The scheme will also cover the current “black hack” services. Shared-fares schemes are aimed at peak periods when taxis are scarce, or they operate between entertainment centres or busy areas in a town or city centre. The schemes result in a person getting a taxi more quickly, saving money on the standard meter fare, and they may meet interesting fellow travellers. Such schemes help to reduce congestion and pollution and will enable the development of new urban and rural services.

As regards clause 2(5) and the issue of requiring operators to provide more taxis designed to meet the needs of older people and people with disabilities, Disability Discrimination Act requirements insist that each taxi operator provides more accessible vehicles. We expect this to be mandatory for a percentage of each fleet. We believe that the needs of people with disabilities should be addressed. However, it is important that the solution is balanced with the scale of the problem. Cost will be an issue, and it will be important for the Department to take a balanced approach when setting percentages for businesses and when designating areas.

With respect to allowing only accessible vehicles to use taxi ranks, it appears that in certain transport hubs and other designated areas only accessible vehicles will be allowed to ply for hire, and that, after a certain period, only accessible vehicles will be allowed on taxi ranks. Accessible vehicles are expensive to buy and more expensive to run than ordinary taxis. The Department is creating non-financial incentives for those who buy and operate accessible vehicles.

There are other issues covered in the Taxis Bill such as advertising, signage, enforcement, increased penalties, requirements for taxi drivers and operators, vehicle licenses. The main issues will be dealt with within the first three years. Other issues may take longer.

We have specific concerns relating to clause 55. We ask for clarification regarding article 66A of the of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, which deals with car sharing arrangements and provides an exemption for people in the rural transport schemes run by DRD to transport people in a similar way to taxis. Has that exemption been written into the Taxis Bill? If so, that will enable people to abuse the scheme, as has happened on a wide scale in the past.

Taxi drivers have to undergo repute and medical checks; their vehicles undergo rigorous tests; they have to carry identification plates, and they will be required to undergo training under the new legislation. Why put us through all of that while providing an exemption that could become a loophole and be abused? Why not run voucher schemes in rural communities and other areas that require special services, and use local taxis to bolster the local industry? If that exemption is to be retained, enforcement will be important.

As regards clause 15(2), the Department has stated that a taxi driver could be fined £1,000 for failing to have proper identification on his taxi. Past inefficiency in the Department concerns us. We have an unwritten agreement with the Department that taxi drivers can work, once they acquire the vehicle inspection notice in the test centre, for a period of up to ten days, and they should then contact the Department to find out why their taxi plates have been delayed. If the Department is serious about fining taxi drivers for failure to display, we need a system that provides drivers with certificates or plates at the test centre.

Our preference is that the plates are replaced with roof signs containing the information. We agree with the principle of plating but would rather have the information displayed at eye level on roof signs. There is also an environmental impact to be considered in destroying more than 20,000 plastic plates annually. A disc, or certificate, could be issued at the test centre.

Changing vehicles is a vital issue for taxi drivers. The current process can keep a taxi driver off the road and losing earnings for two weeks to six weeks, except when the Department grants an amnesty through goodwill. We acknowledge that the merger between DVTA and DVLNI should improve the situation, together with the new legislation that will remove the criminal records office check from the vehicle. We would like to see the Department put a fast-track process in place for taxi drivers who are currently on the Department's records. The process needs to be speeded up, and provision needs to be written into the Bill.

The cost of change is going to be a massive issue for taxi drivers. That can be illustrated by examining clause 30. Under the legislation, taxi drivers will be charged additional fees. We accept that fees must increase so that the new system can be introduced, but we would like some understanding from the Department about taxi drivers' costs. We would like the Department of the Environment to spell out the time frame of change in an action plan. With regard to clause 8, we do not want all the costs to be introduced to taxi drivers without the introduction of meters in all taxis.

We would like clauses 18 and 30 to be linked at the implementation stage. We are pleased that the Department and the Committee are bringing the administration of the taxi industry into the twenty first century. However, we are concerned that the taxi enforcement team consists of only five people for the whole industry. Although a bigger pool of 21 can be tapped into on occasions, that is not good enough. All the good work of the Department and the Assembly will come to nothing if the legislation is not properly enforced. We would like a new enforcement strategy that instils confidence and has a local element of enforcement or compliance. Given that the taxi review is five years old, what is the action plan for implementation? What resources will the Department put into that?

In the consultation, the Department was vague on designated areas. We need a common-sense approach and more detail before implementation. Our fear is that whole areas of city centres and towns will be designated out of bounds to non-accessible taxis.

In conclusion, NWTP welcomes the Taxis Bill. We are happy that the Department is taking steps to update policy and the administration of taxis. The taxi review and the Taxis Bill are long overdue. We agree, in principle, with almost all the proposed Taxis Bill. However, we have concerns because we do not have the detail. The legislation is enabling, but our main concern is that it is so open. Although we understand that more consultation will follow, it points up the inherent difficulty that we have in giving a complete welcome to the Bill.

The Committee for the Environment should endorse the Taxis Bill and do all that it can to ensure that it receives Royal Assent, so that the development of the taxi industry can move ahead as soon as possible and the Department can get on with planning the programme of change that will bring the taxi industry into the twenty first century. I thank the Committee for taking time to listen to us and for giving us the opportunity to express our opinion.

The Chairperson: Thank you for that well-constructed, cogently argued submission.

Mr I McCrea: I reiterate what the Chairperson said. It was a well put-together response that dealt with almost every clause, which helps the Committee to understand any potential problems with the Bill.

There is concern that a one-tier system may put sole operators out of business if large companies can come in and take business off the street. You also touched on the benefits that you have reaped from tourism.

Will there be room for everyone if a one-tier system is introduced?

Secondly, you mentioned setting meters at the maximum fare rate. There would be no obligation for anyone to discount if the meter was set at the maximum rate. I do not know how that discount would work, given that taxi drivers, quite rightly, want to make as much money as possible, as does any business. Obviously, it would be down to the individuals or the companies.

Mr O'Donnell: There is room for everyone in the one-tier system. Operator licensing is imperative because there is nothing in place to make operators accountable. Many of the industry's problems, including the growth of the unregulated sector, have arisen from the lack of operator licensing.

As with others, if the Department takes a common-sense approach to the sole-operator issue and if there is good consultation with the taxi industry, there is an opportunity. We hear, mainly from rural operators, that sole operators in each location could, together, cope with operator licensing under a percentage system. If not, in other words, a sole operator should be forced to provide the service. As long as a sole operator can contact someone in a village with access to a vehicle to provide the service needed, that is enough to cover that clause. Without sole-operator licensing, a loophole will be created that could be abused, and there has been massive abuse in the past.

The second issue is the maximum fare. Maximum fares and discounts are not the preference of the taxi proprietors. Our preference is a maximum and a minimum fare: the taxi cost index would set a fare for the region, and we would all work from that. However, a report by the Office of Fair Trading recommends competition, and the argument is that someone could go on a taxi journey, find at the end of it that the fare is the maximum, and argue the price. It was put to the Office of Fair Trading that someone filling a trolley with groceries in a supermarket would not negotiate the prices when their shopping came to be rung through at the checkout. Taxi proprietors also find that unacceptable, and our counter argument is that, if there is to be one rate, all meters must be set at that. They cannot be set at the lowest rate, because there would not be one.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation. You have outlined many issues, and I hope that they have all been noted. Could you expand on fast tracking and on designated areas?

Mr Andrew McCartney (North West Taxi Proprietors): Fast tracking is a big concern in the taxi industry. If a taxi driver writes off his or her car, or it is burnt, or, for whatever reason, the vehicle can no longer be used as a taxi, that situation is out of his or her control. The driver has to buy a new car, and re-apply for a PSV licence, and the process can take up to six weeks. Even if the driver knows someone in the Department who can put it through more quickly, it can take two weeks. Therefore, a taxi driver is off the road from between two to six weeks, and there is absolutely no mechanism written into the Bill to fast track the process.

Every week, taxi drivers face the possibility of being off the road. If a driver forgets to apply for a PSV licence, that is his or her fault; however, if, for reasons that are out of the driver's control, the vehicle no longer works, provision should be written into the Bill to fast track that process. There would have to be very strict criteria, but there should be some mechanism whereby the vehicle could be presented at a test centre, tested, and the paperwork done in reverse. If there is a problem, the licence can then be revoked, as opposed to the current situation in which the Department takes the safe option of going through the bureaucratic process and issuing the licence six weeks later. No driver can afford to be off the road for six weeks, earning no money. That has not even been considered, but it must be. It is perhaps not too high on the scale, but, from a practical point of view, it is a possibility that taxi drivers face every week.

Mr O'Donnell: NWTP fears that the Bill is vague on designated areas. They work on a ranking space where accessible taxis are allowed to queue up, but saloon cars will be allowed to pick up at a designated distance. We are afraid that four or five places in a town or city centre will be chosen as designated areas and that the whole city centre will, therefore, be designated as out of bounds. I suggest that the departmental officials use their common sense and talk to representatives from the local taxi industry to work out what the designated areas should be.

Mr T Clarke: Mr O'Donnell referred to the test for new drivers, but he seems to be against the one-day training course for existing drivers. Perhaps I misunderstood him, but would that examination not surely be a good way of maintaining an excellent service in the taxi industry?

Mr O'Donnell: You picked me up wrongly. We are in favour of the training because we accept that there is room for improvement in the industry.

Mr T Clarke: Are you happy for existing drivers to do the one-day training course?

Mr A McCartney: We are opposed to the introduction of a driving test for existing licence holders; we are not against the one-day training course.

Mr T Clarke: In the past, some drivers — although others might call them cowboys — have been given taxi licences even though they have not received adequate training. In fact, it has been said that the licences were given out like Guinness labels. If that is the case, the obligation on those drivers to do the complete test would iron out lots of problems in the system.

Mr A McCartney: The difficulty that I have with that might sound like a contradiction. Many people who have invested in taxiing as a job and a livelihood might not pass the test and would be out of work. We are trying to be all inclusive. Many people in the industry — even the operators — have played their part in destroying it over the past number of years. You called them cowboys, but I call them pirates. If they license themselves, they should be part of the process: they should not be excluded. The Department decided to do away with the driving test and give out licences. Existing drivers should not have to do the test, but drivers who join the industry hereafter should. However, every driver — existing and new — should be trained in disability and customer awareness.

Mr T Clarke: Mr McCartney's comments about drivers who have invested heavily in the industry but who might not pass the test make me fearful. For the sake of the industry, the Bill should enforce the test. I know that people have made heavy investments, but if those individuals are not of the standard required to transport the public, they should not be in the industry. I am almost afraid to say that, but that is why I agree with that part of the legislation. The Department was wrong to do away with the test.

Mr A McCartney: That is what I meant when I said that my comments might sound like a contradiction. However, it is about defending people's rights, and the Department has to make a decision on that. If it goes back on its decision, many people — not just one person — will be affected. The taxi industry has always been honest enough to say that there are gaps in its service — even with regard to disability awareness — but the Department has created those. Therefore, the Department must be careful when drafting the legislation, because some people might be put out of work. We may have to deal with a few contradictions to protect those who are working. There are worse things happening than taxis being driven by people who are not properly trained to drive; for example, people who do not even have licences are taxiing. We have to draw a line in the sand and get a fully regulated, professional service.

Mr O'Donnell: For instance, some people are capable of driving taxis, but they might be slow learners or have literacy problems, so they must be protected.

Mr Gardiner: I compliment the witnesses on their professional presentation; thank you for that. You have suggested areas that the Department can consider and hopefully amend.

The Chairperson: We could not finish on a finer point. Thank you for travelling from Derry to make your valuable presentation.

I welcome Claire Toner and Eddie Lynch from the Consumer Council. The Committee has limited time and a lot of business to do; nonetheless, the Consumer Council's contribution is extremely valuable in bringing the voice of the consumers to the Committee. The Committee hears similar and conflicting messages from the taxi industry.

Mr Eddie Lynch (Consumer Council): Thank you for the opportunity to come before the Committee. I appreciate the opportunity to present the views of passengers on this subject, and I will try to keep my presentation brief. I will focus on the views of the Consumer Council and on why the Taxis Bill is important to consumers here. I will also focus on areas of the Bill where the council feels that there should be some amendment. Members should have copies of our presentation. I will outline the role of the Consumer Council in the process, the impact that the Taxis Bill could have on consumers and taxi users, the process so far and the need for changes.

The Consumer Council is a statutory body and represents passengers travelling to, from and within Northern Ireland. It has been involved with the Department and others in the review since 2002. Early in the review, the Consumer Council conducted consumer research and produced a report, 'Talking about Taxis', which fed into the review of taxis and outlined the key issues and concerns faced by consumers who use the industry. Throughout the process, the Consumer Council felt that the consultation was very well handled by the Department and officials. It has always had an opportunity to speak to the Department during the various stages and put its views across. Indeed, several areas that caused concern have been addressed, and I will refer to them later.

What does the taxi industry need? The Consumer Council strongly supports the key objectives of the Taxis Bill because it believes that the current standards are not high enough for consumers and must be raised across the industry. More legal taxi operators must be introduced, and we need to tackle and remove illegal operators. We need improved consumer protection, awareness to enable passengers to make informed decisions and choices and a framework for competitive and reasonable fares for all, both for the industry and for the passenger.

Why is change needed? Over one million passenger journeys are made annually. Research carried out by the Consumer Council a few years ago showed that 5% of consumers use taxis as their main mode of travel, which is significant when compared to the 4% who use buses and the 1% who use trains. Taxis have a key role in transporting people about their business.

The research also highlighted real concerns about charging. Around 51% of consumers believed that public-hire taxis may have overcharged them at least once, and 37% of consumers believed that they had been overcharged by private-hire taxis. That highlighted not necessarily that taxis were overcharging, but real consumer confusion over what is a fair price. The Bill is needed to ensure a proper and fair system of charging and to ensure that consumers know what they have to pay and how to take action if they believe that they have been overcharged.

There is a lack of consumer knowledge about rights and protection. More than half of the consumers who made a complaint were unhappy about how that complaint was received. Many felt that there was no avenue to progress it.

Some key issues emerged from the consultation process. Initially, it was proposed that roof signs should be removed from taxis. We strongly opposed that, believing that they are vital for passenger information and safety. We are pleased that the Department of the Environment has changed its mind on that issue, and we welcome the new suggestions. Roof signs could be used more effectively and could include licence plates, making them more visible. We are keen to work with the Department on that proposal.

Accessibility is another key issue. We argued that Northern Ireland consumers require a mixture of fleets and vehicles to meet various needs and disabilities. A single solution would not meet all of those requirements. Accessible taxis, or "wheelchair taxis", would not meet the needs of all consumers. We agree with the Department's approach that a proportion of taxi operators' fleets should be wheelchair-accessible, leaving other taxis to meet other needs.

We have some concerns about operator licensing, particularly in regard to sole operators in rural areas. I will touch on that issue later.

In general, any concerns that we raised with the Department have resulted in safeguards being put in place throughout the Bill. Although the Taxis Bill provides a framework for change, the devil will be in the detail. Many issues still need to be teased out to get it right.

In summary, the status quo is not an option. There must be a more passenger-focused system that meets the three principles of accessibility, or the three As: accessible vehicles that meet the needs of all passengers; vehicle availability when passengers wish to travel; and affordability. In the future, we want consideration to be given to how concessionary fares could be extended to the taxi industry.

Taxis must be available at the point of need. We must work to ensure that, for every passenger, a vehicle that meets requirements is available when it is wanted and at a fair price.

I have some specific points about the Bill itself. In the area of operator licensing, consideration must be given to the needs of sole operators — particularly in rural areas. That matter is addressed in the Bill; however, we want reassurances that the Department will ensure that those operators are not overburdened by huge costs, which would have a negative impact on consumers in such areas.

Although passenger complaints are mentioned in regard to the operator licence, a robust complaint system must be put in place. In addition to operators having to have a complaints procedure, it is essential that there be a further avenue to pursue if passengers are unhappy with the taxi company's initial response. In other areas, that is a role for the Consumer Council. It is vital to ensure that passengers are adequately protected.

We welcome clause 10(4), which states that:

"The Department shall take into consideration ... any recommendations made by the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland."

That is an important initiative. However, recourse to the Consumer Council should be embedded in other parts of the legislation, and its role enshrined. In particular, the Bill should state that the Consumer Council should be consulted in relation to fare-setting and maximum fares; passenger information; accessibility standards; and the handling of passenger complaints. Currently, that happens in many of those areas. We have close links and discussions with the Department of the Environment; however, if the Bill is to be passenger-focused, the passenger representative must be enshrined in it.

Ms Claire Toner (Consumer Council): We are aware that there has been a separate consultation on taxi-driver training, and we have responded to that.

The Consumer Council welcomes the additional training proposed for drivers and believes that it will help to raise standards in the industry, as well as meet the needs of passengers. Disability-awareness training is a particular issue for those passengers and will help to address their needs. The Consumer Council has recently received feedback from passengers with disabilities, regarding driver attitudes, so disability-awareness training is vital. However, the Consumer Council recognises that a balance needs to be struck, so that the costs of that training are managed and the benefits of the system to passengers are not outweighed by increases in fares.

Mr Lynch: To finish, there are two points. First, enforcement — which has been mentioned already — is central to the success of the Taxis Bill. The Department needs sufficient resources to ensure that there is compliance and that standards are met across the industry. Raising standards is very important for the industry, but we recognise that it is a challenge. Therefore, as they move to improve service for passengers, those working in the industry need protection from damage by illegal operators. The Consumer Council urges that the Department be given the necessary resources to ensure that the Bill is implemented fully.

Secondly, to date, the Consumer Council has welcomed the implementation and monitoring of the process by the Assembly, and it welcomes the Committee's role in overseeing progress on the issue. As the current system does not meet the needs of passengers, the Consumer Council urges the Committee to take an active role in setting timescales and in the monitoring process, so that passengers can benefit from the changes as soon as possible.

Consumers must have feedback; they have played a part in the whole review and given their views, so communication with them is vital. We would like to see the "what", the "when" and the "why" addressed; consumers must be told what key changes they can expect, when they can expect them, and why they are happening and what their impact will be. The Consumer Council looks forward to working with the Department and other stakeholders, to ensure that the Taxis Bill meets its objectives.

We thank members for their attention and are happy to answer any questions that they may have.

(Mr Deputy Chairperson [Mr Boylan] in the Chair)

Mr Deputy Chairperson: Thank you for your presentation. Does anyone have any questions?

Mr Ford: The Committee has heard a lot about accessibility in the earlier presentation, and the Consumer Council talked about regulating the one-person operator. If there is a situation such as that, and we accept the idea that only a proportion of taxis should be fully accessible, how do you decide what the necessary proportion is? Furthermore, could that proportion vary between the single operator — or possibly two or three operators sharing in a type of partnership — in a rural area, and the big Belfast firms? How can a reasonable balance be produced in a situation where not every operator has to be fully accessible?

Mr Lynch: That is a very good question, and one with which we have struggled. Initially, we thought of exemptions for sole operators, in relation to providing fully accessible taxis. After speaking to the Department, we had concerns that that route could open up a loophole for the industry to register a number of drivers as sole operators. We felt that it would have a negative impact on efforts to increase accessibility standards across the industry. Further discussion is needed on that issue, and we are happy to work with the Department on it.

The question of proportions has to be looked at on an area-by-area basis, to see what is needed. Again, referring to our principles about accessibility, what is important is that a taxi that meets the needs of the passenger is available when he or she wants to travel. That is where the level of proportion is vital. The situation in Belfast must be viewed differently to that in rural areas. We must examine the system again to see how it will operate.

There is no easy answer. There must be incentives that encourage the industry to provide accessible taxis. We welcome the proposals to develop taxi ranks and to establish interchanges at such strategic points as public transport stations, which only accessible taxis will be able to enter. The industry must be offered business benefits and incentives to encourage it to go down that route, so that it considers the provision of accessible taxis worthwhile.

Mr Ford: That leads us to regulation. Last week, we heard significant complaints from Belfast public-hire drivers that taxi ranks do not work, because there is no enforcement and because ordinary private-hire saloon cars hover around — if not use — the ranks. Without a proper regulatory regime, how can one achieve a balance and offer incentives? It appears that the Department is failing — at least, according to the Belfast public-hire drivers.

Mr Lynch: The current system is failing and in no way meets the general needs of passengers, including those who require wheelchair access to taxis. We are trying to develop a public transport network that is accessible to everyone. We are introducing fully accessible trains and buses, and our focus is on connectivity. We want people with disabilities and older people with reduced mobility to be able to get from A to B. Many journeys involve more than one bus or train service; people are required to use more than one mode of transport. We recognise that unless all links in the chain are accessible, some journeys cannot be completed.

I agree that the current situation does not meet the needs of passengers, particularly those with disabilities.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you for your presentation. It is important that the Consumer Council has a major input in the discussion.

The Chairperson (Mrs I Robinson): I welcome Christine Jendoubi, John Farrell and Robert Kirkwood, who are here to provide clarification and answer questions as the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety continues its clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. This is becoming a habit; I feel that we have adopted you.

Members of the Committee will use notes on the clauses that have been prepared and circulated by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

At our meeting on 13 September, clauses 4, 9 and 10 were referred for further consideration. I intend to commence by scrutinising those clauses and, thereafter, resume from clause 15.

Clause 4 (Charges for dental services)

The Chairperson: At our previous meeting it was noted that the Western Health and Social Services

Board and the health and social services councils had called for people over the age of 65 and other categories to be exempt from charges for dental services. The issue was raised with officials, who agreed to consider it further and report back to the Committee. I invite comments from officials and further questions from members on the issue of charging for dental services.

Ms Christine Jendoubi (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): We have prepared some figures for the Committee to consider. Those figures outline the estimated costs of providing free dental treatment for those over the age of 65.

The Chairperson: Yes, we asked how many people over the age of 65 the proposal would affect. Christine, will you talk us through the figures?

Ms Jendoubi: Estimated population increases between 2004-05 and 2013-14 are based on assumptions by the Northern Ireland Statistical Research Agency (NISRA). We have assumed that there will be a 3% uplift per annum because that is what normally happens.

The estimated cost of treatment for people aged over 65 is based on actual figures and incorporates fee payers and those who are exempt from charges. Adding the figures for fee payers and those who are exempt from charges gives the total spend on dental treatment.

All figures given are based on the number of people who are registered with a dentist, which is 31% of people over the age of 65. The total number of people over the age of 65 in each year is also shown.

The proposal is that those who pay fees be given free dental treatment so that everyone will be exempt from charges. In 2007-08, it would cost £3.8 million to provide free dental treatment for those who pay fees. Fee payers are included in the 31% of those over the age of 65 who are registered with a dentist. If dental treatment were free for everybody over the age of 65, a significant increase in cost could be expected, because many of the 69% of people who are not registered would register. However, a proportion of older people in the over-65s category does not have any teeth. Therefore, dental treatment would not be an issue for them, unless they wanted to get dentures. The fee-payers column shows the estimated cost of giving free dental treatment to those over the age of 65 who are currently registered with a dentist; however, the figure could be anything up to three times the statistics listed in that column.

Moreover, the exempt column shows the estimated cost for those over the age of 65 who are exempt from paying dental charges because they are on low incomes. The fee payers are those who have already been deemed able to pay. They, therefore, would be the beneficiaries of free dental treatment.

The Chairperson: Can we distinguish between those fee payers? The way in which many people have been raised means that, like those on a better income, they will pay their way regardless of whether they can afford to. Is there a way in which to dissect the information in the fee-payers column to identify those who are in the low-income bracket?

Ms Jendoubi: No.

The Chairperson: Does anybody wish to comment or ask a question?

Ms Ní Chuilín: For only 31% of people over the age of 65 to be registered with a dentist is quite a low percentage.

Ms Jendoubi: It is. Less than 50% of adults, and about 60% of children, are registered with a dentist in Northern Ireland. That percentage is clearly lower for the older population.

Ms Ní Chuilín: That is quite a low percentage. If people over the age of 65 were exempt, would you anticipate an increase in the registration rate?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Is a projected percentage available?

Ms Jendoubi: No, and I could not guess what the percentage increase would be.

Mr Easton: The figure of 35% is very low. Theoretically, if those over the age of 65 were exempt from paying dental charges, and if all those who were eligible to register with a dentist did so, the cost of providing free dental care for them could rise to about £10 million.

Ms S Ramsey: Do the figures mean that, are you saying that, out of the 31% of people over the age of 65 who are registered with a dentist, roughly half are already exempt from paying?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes, slightly less than half are exempt.

Mr Buchanan: Is the exemption based on means testing?

Ms Jendoubi: It is based on the benefits that a person is entitled to, such as income support.

Ms Ní Chuilín: People who get pensions are also exempt.

Mr Buchanan: It seems that, of the 31% who are registered with a dentist, more than half already receive free dental treatment.

Ms Jendoubi: It is less than half. Approximately 35% of people over the age of 65 who are registered receive free dental treatment.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clause 9 (Local optical committees)

The Chairperson: Members will recall that Optometry Northern Ireland argued that it was anomalous for dispensing opticians not to have a statutory right to membership of local optical committees, and it proposed an amendment to clause 9 to rectify that anomaly. Officials agreed last Thursday to consider the proposed amendment and to provide further clarification of the role of a dispensing optician. Christine, may we have your comments?

Ms Jendoubi: I have another piece of paper to distribute.

The Chairperson: Why am I not surprised? That is another rainforest gone.

Ms Jendoubi: The piece of paper explains the difference between an optometrist and a dispensing optician.

The Chairperson: We are all on a learning curve.

Ms Jendoubi: Committee members can take away the information to read.

The Department was almost surprised to learn that the definitions are almost exactly the same as those that we gave the Committee last week.

An optometrist conducts eye tests and examinations and prescribes eye drugs. A dispensing optician makes up the prescription that the optometrist has prescribed, fits the lenses and frames, or contact lenses, and dispenses them. Clause 9 is designed to reflect the fact that ophthalmic opticians, who are now called optometrists, are listed and can have a contract with the board to provide ophthalmic services. They appear in the Central Services Agency (CSA) list, which makes them contractors.

Clause 9 now incorporates ophthalmic medical practitioners. They are doctors who are also qualified to conduct eye tests and prescribe glasses and contact lenses. Article 55(3)(a) of The Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 did not originally include dispensing opticians because they cannot hold contracts, conduct eye tests or prescribe. Therefore, dispensing opticians cannot enter into the same kind of relationship with the board.

In the past week, we have discovered that dispensing opticians can hold a contract with a health and social services board if they own a practice in which they employ an optometrist to conduct eye tests and prescribe. There are few, if any, dispensing opticians who do that in Northern Ireland; they could be counted on the fingers of one hand. If it is accepted that the role of a local optical committee is to reflect the interests of those who are on the list and hold contracts, it is up for consideration whether the clause needs to be extended to include provision for those dispensing opticians who can enter into contracts because they employ an optometrist.

Mrs Hanna: Would those dispensing opticians who employ optometrists and can be counted on the fingers of one hand go out of business were they not to be included in the provisions?

Ms Jendoubi: No.

Mrs Hanna: What effect does it have on them not to be included?

Ms Jendoubi: The optometrists who they employ are already on the CSA list, because they must be listed in order to practise. The clause as it stands will have no effect on them at all, nor will it have any effect on dispensing opticians; it simply allows ophthalmic medical practitioners to sit on the local optical committee.

The Chairperson: Are you satisfied with that answer, Carmel?

Mrs Hanna: Yes.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 9 agreed to.

Clause 10 (Pharmaceutical services)

The Chairperson: The Committee will recall that the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland (PSNI) argued in Committee on 28 June 2007 that clause 10 adds further confusion to the regulation of pharmacists in Northern Ireland. A transcript of that meeting can be found in the members' pack. The clause was referred for further consideration last Thursday. Christine will now talk us through the clause.

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 10 makes the same provision for pharmacists as previous clauses make for dentists and as clause 1 makes for general medical practitioners. It allows for the existence of one performers' list for pharmacists instead of four — one in each board area — and includes provisions for the conditional inclusion, and contingent removal and suspension, of pharmacists from the list.

Ms Ni Chuilín: You mentioned suspension of pharmacists from the list. I apologise for not having a copy of the Bill in front of me, but I recall the notes on the clause.

When a pharmacist is deemed unfit to practise, does suspension follow directly? No intermediate stage, during which problems might be discussed, is implied in the clause. Is removal mandatory until a suspended person is considered fit to practise again?

Ms Jendoubi: The situation is the same for all practitioners. A board will contemplate suspending a pharmacist only in exceptional circumstances; suspensions must be considered case by case. Boards do not suspend pharmacists lightly. If there is a problem with a pharmacist, a board will want a pharmacy to continue operating, as it provides a service to an area. It will work through the problem with a pharmacist as far as it considers that appropriate in the interests of patient safety. That is one of the key considerations for a board in deciding whether a pharmacist should be suspended.

Mr Easton: I am unsure as to how relevant this question is, but if a pharmacist who owns a practice is suspended, is he or she allowed to employ another pharmacist who meets all the criteria to run the business?

Ms Jendoubi: Yes.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Clause 15 (Smoking: exemption for performers)

The Chairperson: I remind members that the Minister has indicated that he will not support clause 15 at Consideration Stage. The Committee heard the arguments for and against the exemption at our meeting on 5 July, a transcript of which is in the members' pack. I invite officials to outline the meaning of the clause, and I will invite questions from members afterwards.

Ms Jendoubi: Clause 15 provides for an exemption from The Smoking (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 to allow for smoking by an actor in a theatrical performance, where the integrity of the performance requires it. That includes in rehearsal.

The Committee received representations from the Theatrical Management Association about the possibility of using herbal cigarettes as a substitute. That is something that the Committee will want to take into account; however, the Minister is not impressed by the argument.

The Chairperson: If memory serves, members were sympathetic to the Minister's stance that there should be no exemption.

Mr Easton: I want this clause removed.

Ms Jendoubi: That is also the Minister's wish.

Mrs Hanna: We are unanimous.

The Chairperson: Ms Jendoubi, will you explain how a clause is removed from a Bill?

Ms Jendoubi: Kevin Shiels explained the process for doing so a couple of weeks ago.

Mrs Hanna: He is behind you.

Ms Jendoubi: He will explain it again if the Committee so wishes.

Mr Kevin Shiels (Northern Ireland Assembly Bill Office): Technically, to remove a clause at Consideration Stage does not require the tabling of an amendment. The Bill, including clause 15, is will become the property of the Assembly, not just of the Minister. The Minister will remain the Bill's sponsor of, but it will be in the hands of the Assembly. Only the Assembly, in a plenary sitting at Consideration Stage, can vote to include or exclude a clause from the Bill.

If the Minister is still minded to have the clause removed, he will get the draftsman to put to the Bill Office his intention to oppose clause 15 when the Speaker puts the Question that it stand part of the Bill.

Likewise, if the Committee, having taken evidence, is of the same mind, it can, through your name, Chairperson, convey the same decision to the Bill Office, and it would appear on the Marshalled List thus:

"The following Members have indicated their intention to oppose the Question that clause 15 stand part of the Bill."

The Marshalled List would then probably show the Minister's name, and, below that, the Committee's name would appear.

Clause 15 of the Bill would then be treated as if it were an amendment. The Minister would be asked to speak to his intention to oppose the clause. You, Chairperson, and any other Members who so wished would then have an opportunity to speak. The Speaker would then put the Question that clause 15 stand part of the Bill. At that stage, Members need to be very careful that they vote against the Question that the clause stand part of the Bill.

The Chairperson: Of course, but closer to the time, if that is the route that we choose to take, we will obtain further assistance on establishing the correct procedure for the passage of the Bill.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and negated.

Clause 15 disagreed to.

Clause 16 (Interpretation)

Ms Jendoubi: This is a standard clause that will be found in any Bill. In some Bills, and certainly in regulations, it will appear as the first provision. In this Bill, the definition of some terms used appears in clause 16 because that is where the draftsman inserted it.

The Chairperson: This is a fairly simple and non-contentious issue.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 16 agreed to.

Clause 17 (Supplementary provision)

Ms Jendoubi: Again, this is a standard clause that will be found in any Bill. It is a catch-all clause, designed to cover unforeseen circumstances.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 17 agreed to.

Clause 18 (Repeals)

Ms Jendoubi: This is a covering clause. Every schedule to a Bill or an Order in Council must contain a clause in the body of the Bill that introduces the schedule. Clause 18 introduces schedule 2.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

Clause 19 (Commencement)

Ms Jendoubi: This clause provides for the times at which the sections of the new Act, and the schedules to it, will come into operation.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 19 agreed to.

Clause 20 agreed to.

Schedule 1 (Amendments of Schedule 11 to the 1972 Order)

Ms Jendoubi: Schedule 1 provides for changes to the operation of the tribunal, on foot of amendments to the 1972 Order that appear earlier in the Bill that pertain to opticians, pharmacists, dentists and GPs. Specifically, the main changes are that schedule 11 to the 1972 Order will now include applicants to a performers' list as well as those who are already on that list. It will include locums, deputies and employees as well as principal practitioners. It will extend the grounds on which a tribunal can consider a case that has been referred to it to include unsuitability by reason of professional or personal conduct.

Question, That the Committee is content with the schedule, put and agreed to.

Schedule 1 agreed to.

Schedule 2 (Repeals)

Ms Jendoubi: Schedule 2 contains consequential repeals made on the foot of provisions that the Bill will introduce.

Question, That the Committee is content with the schedule, put and agreed to.

Schedule 2 agreed to.

The Chairperson: The clause-by-clause consideration of the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill has been completed. No clauses remain referred for further consideration. I advise members that a draft Committee report to the Assembly will be prepared for consideration and agreement at a future meeting.

I thank Christine, Robert and John for all the time and energy that they have put into briefing us. The Bill's Committee Stage was completed very quickly, and I am sure that you are even happier than I am that it was so quick. Thank you very much for your attendance.

Child Poverty

Mr Fred Cobain asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many children live in severe poverty in Northern Ireland; and what strategies are in place to reduce child poverty. (AQW 317/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: There are no official statistics that reflect a measure of severe poverty. The measurement of child poverty in Northern Ireland, which is consistent with United Kingdom and European measures, is derived from the proportions and numbers of children who live in households whose income is less than 60% of median household income.

Government departments already deliver a wide range of initiatives and programmes that positively impact on child exclusion and poverty issues.

Some of these policies are reserved matters in relation to financial support through Child Benefit, Working Tax Credit and Childcare Tax Credit and parental employment. Other measures include those set out in the ten year strategy for Children and Young People action plan as well as initiatives in health, education and for lone parents for example.

'Lifetime Opportunities' Governments Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy outlines many of the current policies and strategies which will contribute to the reduction of Child Poverty.

In the current Comprehensive Spending Review the Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy has been identified as a key cross-cutting priority. This means that Departmental spending plans and resources will be directly linked to the delivery of commitments within an Anti Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy. A copy of Lifetime Opportunities has been placed in the Assembly Library.

The two Junior Ministers in OFMDFM have a particular responsibility agreed by the Executive for children and young people, and tackling child poverty will be an urgent priority for the Junior Ministers and for the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

Child Poverty

Mr Fred Cobain asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister whether Northern Ireland is on target to halve child poverty by 2010. (AQW 320/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Accurate data on child poverty is available only from 2002/03.

The percentage of children in relative income poverty in;

- 2002/2003 was approximately 26% (114,000),
- 2003/2004 was unchanged

The latest available figures for the number of children in relative income poverty for 2004/05 indicate approximately 24% (101,000).

It is not possible, on the basis of the available data to determine reliably if we are on target to half child poverty by 2010.

Tackling child poverty is an urgent priority for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. Junior Ministers in line with their responsibility for children and young people, will bring an early focus to this issue.

Shared Future Strategy

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to set out the operational responsibilities of the department, arising out of the 'Shared Future: First Triennial Action Plan', to ensure that all government departments take into account within future public expenditure plans the content and conclusions of the OFMDFM-commissioned research report, 'Cost of Division - Shared Future Strategy'. (AQW 539/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Good Relations and Reconciliation Division of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister remains responsible for taking forward the policy on A Shared Future.

In regard the research undertaken by Deloitte we made it clear during question time on 11 June that this research is extremely important. We also made the point that how we deal with the issues in the report is even more important.

As we said on 11 June in this House our colleague, the Finance Minister, cautioned against plucking a figure out of the air. The issue is far more complex than simply reducing the research to a figure whatever that figure or range of figures might be.

We are starting a journey, a long journey that will take time to overcome all of our problems and consign them to history. It is clear as we have said that division costs us all, socially, economically, physically.

The Executive will consider the Cost of Division report carefully and fully along with this House and the Committee for the Office of the First and Deputy First Minister.

We will publish the research shortly.

Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will ensure that resources allocated to the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland will help to change the patterns of disadvantage and tackle inequalities; and, in particular, if he will comment on the extent to which the Strategy will address the needs of the ten most deprived wards in Northern Ireland. (AQW 667/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Executive will decide on the allocation of resources in the Investment Strategy in accordance with its agreed priorities, taking account of the Regional Development Strategy, identified need, access to services and statutory obligations. The Strategy will reflect the spending priorities agreed by the Executive in the Programme for Government. It will encompass the levels of investment directed at social transformation, economic development and other areas that the Executive agrees. As a high level strategy, the Investment Strategy will not identify expenditure within individual wards but it will be subject to an Equality Impact Assessment.

Gloria Choir

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it has received an invitation to the Gloria choir concert at the National Concert Hall in Dublin, on Saturday 16 June 2007, and if the Junior Ministers will be in attendance at this event.

(AQW 678/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: An invitation to a concert by the Gloria Choir in the National Concert Hall in Dublin on Saturday 16 June 2007 has not been received by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. No ministers from the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister are planning to attend this concert.

Victims' Commissioner

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline the process for the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner; and to detail the number of candidates that have applied for the position.

(AQW 740/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Article 4 of the Victims and Survivors (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 makes provision for the Commissioner to be appointed by the First Minister and deputy First Minister acting jointly. This is a regulated appointment falling within the remit of the Commissioner for Public Appointments in Northern Ireland (OCPANI).

Following public advertisement in January 2007, 46 applications were received. An initial eligibility sift process was applied to all applications to determine if sufficient evidence was provided against each of the essential criteria. As a result of that exercise, 14 applicants were invited for interview by a selection panel, consisting of two senior civil servants and an independent assessor appointed by OCPANI. The interviews were conducted over a three day period in March of this year.

Following the interviews the panel prepared a list of candidates, who were considered suitable for appointment. This list was subsequently forwarded to the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their consideration. The complete process was overseen and certificated by the independent assessor.

An announcement is expected to be made before the Assembly rises.

Children's Issues

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail which Minister is responsible for children's issues.

(AQW 892/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We would refer the member to the reply given to Mr McGlone, the Member for Mid-Ulster, on 11 June 2007. [Official Report Vol 22, No 10 p374 Col 2].

Salaries Paid to OFMDFM Staff

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what is the total annual amount paid in salaries to (a) full-time employees; (b) part-time employees; and (c) special advisers.

(AQW 946/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The total annual amount paid in salaries to OFMDFM staff in 2006/07 was £14.4 million.

Data on the total amount paid in salaries split between full-time and part-time staff is currently not held. The calculation of these figures would be a lengthy process and the cost of doing so would be disproportionate.

There were no salaries paid to special advisers in the 2006/07 financial year. The total amount paid in salaries to OFMDFM staff in 2005/06 was £14.1 million. This included £61,000 for Special Advisers.

Prioritising Issues of Children, Young and Older People

Ms Sue Ramsey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline what steps junior Ministers have taken to prioritise the cross-cutting issues of children and young people, and older people, since their appointment.

(AQO 140/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The First Minister set out the roles of the Junior Ministers in the response to the member for Mid-Ulster during question time on Monday 11th June. As well as assisting us they have particular responsibility for liaising with the Assembly on Executive business, for co-ordination of policy for young people and children's issues, and for older people's issues.

We can assure you of our commitment to the rights and needs of our children and older people and that the co-ordination of issues for children and young people and older people will be a priority matter for both Junior Ministers following their recent appointment.

Last week the Junior Ministers accompanied us in meeting the Commissioner for Children and Young People. The Junior Ministers also launched recently the Super Six comic as part of the 10 year strategy for Children and Young People. The Junior Ministers will also take the lead in reviewing and revising as necessary the 10 year strategy for Children and Young People.

Finally, promoting the rights of children and young people and older people and addressing their needs will be key issues for both Junior Ministers.

Revitalisation of Omagh

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if Ministers will visit the Community House in Omagh; and if they will meet with local representatives of the community, business and voluntary sectors to discuss the ongoing revitalisation of Omagh. (AQO 171/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The deputy First Minister was in Omagh recently (30 May 2007) for the official opening of Omagh Further Education College with the Minister for Employment and Learning, Sir Reg Empey. He saw for himself this significant investment which is a key location for future education and economic confidence. It is one of the important developments which have taken place in Omagh since the tragic bomb.

Our colleague, Margaret Ritchie, the Minister for Social Development, was in Omagh on 13 June to celebrate the achievements of the Omagh 2010 Task Force and Michael McGimpsey, Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety visited the site of the new Omagh hospital on 14 June.

We would like to put on record our personal tribute to all those involved in the Omagh Task Force. We have seen at first-hand the remarkable work of this partnership - a partnership between the community, business, elected representatives, local and central government. Their achievements are extremely impressive. They have succeeded in bringing £100m of new investment to Omagh, 500 new jobs created and a doubling of retail floor space.

The new college, which the deputy First Minister had the pleasure of opening; the new arts centre and very significant environmental improvements to the town centre are also a fine testament to their exemplary dedication and commitment.

We hope to visit Omagh and view all these commendable developments which are revitalising Omagh and building a future for this community.

Study of Obstacles to Cross Border Mobility

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to provide an update on the recommendations of the 'Study of Obstacles to Cross Border Mobility'; and to detail the recommendations that have been implemented to date, and those which are outstanding. (AQO 138/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness:

Significant progress has been made on the implementation of the recommendations of the "Study of Obstacles to Cross Border Mobility." In particular, work has progressed well on the development of a website, dedicated to providing information on cross border mobility issues and this will be operational in the Autumn. This is a joint project with the Irish Government and is being taken forward in the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC). A report on progress will be provided to the next meeting of the NSMC and, following this to the Assembly. We will then write to you providing further details.

Staffing in OFMDFM

Mr Samuel Gardiner asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many staff are employed within the department; and how this compares with the Office of the Prime Minister; the Office of the First Minister of Scotland; the Office of the First Minister of Wales; the Office of the Taoiseach; and the President of the United States of America. (AQO 149/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: It is important to recognise that, as the responsibilities of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister extend beyond those of the other Offices mentioned, a comparison of the numbers of staff is not appropriate.

The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister is a Department with a wide range of functions, many of them conferred on it by statute.

Of the 415 staff currently working in the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, 37 work in our joint private offices, providing advice and administrative support us and to our Junior Ministers.

Most staff are engaged in other Departmental business areas; indeed, much of our work facilitates the business of the other Ministers and their Departments; for example, through the Office of the Legislative Counsel, the Executive Information Service, the Economic Policy Unit, our offices in Brussels and Washington, and through our support of the work of the Executive including the North South Ministerial Council and the British Irish Council.

It is worth pointing out that the number of staff currently working in our Department is very much in line with the number employed under the previous administration.

Lifetime Opportunities

Mr Fra McCann asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will confirm that consideration will be given to the evidence provided by Lifetime Opportunities, taken at meetings of the Committee on the Programme for Government, and if it will give a timescale within which this consideration will be undertaken. (AQO 137/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Executive Committee, in formally considering 'Lifetime Opportunities' Government's Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy will have regard to the Conclusions and Recommendations issued by the Transitional Assembly's Programme for Government Committee following its assessment of the strategy document.

The process to obtain Executive Committee agreement on an anti-poverty strategy has begun. Proposals are currently being cleared at official level, with a view to Executive consideration over the summer period.

Departmental Expenditure on Equality

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what are the annual expenditure levels currently available to all departments, for equality programmes and measures. (AQO 139/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Equality is mainstreamed through a range of departmental spending programmes including through screening and equality impact assessment of policies. It is, therefore, difficult to identify separate expenditure lines across the range of departmental programmes and measures or to separate out expenditure that is unique to equality from overall programme expenditure. In the case of the Office of the First Minister and the deputy First Minister it is more straightforward as there is a dedicated Equality Directorate with a budget for 2007/2008 of £32,675,000.

Linkages to Third World Countries

Mr John Dallat asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline its plans to encourage linkages with third world countries. (AQO 162/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: This is an issue that is being considered by the First Minister and deputy First Minister, as they look at how best to develop the international relations role of their Office.

Victims' Commissioner

Mr David Simpson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what role it will have in the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner. (AQO 195/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The appointment of the Commissioner for Victims and Survivors will be made by us as provided for under Article 4 of the Victims and Survivors (Northern Ireland) Order 2006.

Discussions with First Minister of Scotland

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what discussions it has had with the First Minister of Scotland. (AQO 131/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We met the First Minister of Scotland on 18 June during his visit to Belfast. Following the meeting we issued a joint statement announcing our commitment to work together to enhance mutual understanding and friendship, to strengthen co-operation between the devolved administrations and to work together in a number of areas, including higher education, tourism and renewable energy.

New-Build Government Offices

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what proposals it has to maximise sustainable development within new-build government offices. (AQO 172/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We are committed to sustainable development for which we have lead responsibility. The Sustainable Development Strategy includes a target of achieving carbon neutrality on the government estate. The associated Implementation Plan commits Government to achieving a design standard BREEAM (Building Research Establishment Environmental Assessment Method) rating of 'Excellent' for new government buildings. The Minister of Finance and Personnel will take the lead on issues in relation to the government estate.

Independent Monitoring Commission

Mr David Burnside asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what liaisons it has had with the Independent Monitoring Commission, since the formation of the new Northern Ireland Executive. (AQO 145/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We have had no liaisons with the Independent Monitoring Commission in this period.

Maze / Long Kesh

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, with reference to statements made by the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to this Assembly on 11 June 2007, if it will confirm that it ‘would not wish to establish a shrine at the Maze site or support any proposal that would be offensive to victims of the Troubles’. (AQO 185/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We can confirm that there are no proposals to establish a shrine at the Maze/Long Kesh. This is no part of our intention. The Masterplan proposals for the regeneration of the site envisage a wide range of uses, including a multi sports stadium, an International Centre for Conflict Transformation, as well as provision for employment, leisure and housing – in addition to key transport and other infrastructure.

The Masterplan proposals for the International Centre for Conflict Transformation reflected the unanimous recommendations of a multi-party consultation panel. The panel recommended that the Centre should provide a facility for research and education, and create the opportunity to contribute to the management, resolution and transformation of conflict on an international level.

Fair Employment Monitoring

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what is its understanding of the terms ‘Protestant community’ and ‘Catholic community’, in the context of Fair Employment Monitoring, where they are used in a mutually exclusive way. (AQO 174/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Monitoring under the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998 enables employers to determine whether those who belong to either the Protestant or Roman Catholic community enjoy fair participation in the workforce and is an essential step in implementing equal opportunities practices.

The Fair Employment (Monitoring) Regulations (NI) 1999 require employers to determine the community background of their employees by reference to their answer to a direct question. This requires the employee or applicant to state in writing whether they belong to the Protestant or Roman Catholic community or belong to neither.

Where persons state they belong to neither community, employers may make a determination of community background for monitoring purposes only. The Regulations set out a number of ways in which community background can be established. This entails consideration of any relevant information which employees or applicants have provided, in writing, about themselves. If the information tends to show that they have a connection with both communities, they are treated as belonging to the community with which, in general, it tends to show they have the stronger connection. Where neither method ascertains the community background, the employer shall treat a person as if the community background to which they belong cannot be determined.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Reintroduction of the Fox Bounty

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will consider reintroducing the ‘fox bounty’, to control the rise in fox numbers and their impact on wildlife. (AQW 627/07)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): The fox bounty, which ended in the mid-seventies, had been introduced in circumstances which suggested that the culling of the fox population was necessary to reduce the levels of predation by foxes of farm stock. The measure proved to be ineffective in reducing numbers as evidenced in Dr James Fairley’s 1968 Report on the impact of bounty schemes, which noted that there is no case where bounty schemes have successfully controlled fox numbers. During the lifetime of the previous scheme, numbers were maintained at a constant level while in certain counties when the bounty was withdrawn, there was no indication of an increase. The conclusion drawn from the study was that fox mortality attributable to the bounty scheme failed the basic test for the control of any wild animal population in that the activity did not exceed natural mortality and thus was not having any impact on the standing population. It recommended that the bounty scheme be withdrawn.

The question of reintroduction of the bounty scheme was raised in 2000. At that time my predecessor considered that she would not be justified in reintroducing a further scheme having considered the necessity, the probable level of effectiveness, the level of payment needed to encourage participation and the cost of resources required to ensure proper monitoring of the operation.

Since 2000 the question of rising fox numbers has not been raised, either in the context of farm stock or of wildlife, so I conclude that there is no overriding need to reintroduce the “fox bounty”.

Less Favoured Area Compensatory Allowances Scheme

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline what steps she is taking to ensure that the aid to hill farmers encourages the adoption of environmentally beneficial farming practices. (AQW 685/07)

Ms Gildernew: The Less Favoured Area Compensatory Allowances Scheme requires farmers to maintain their land in Good Agricultural and Environmental Condition (GAEC). GAEC measures ensure that land is farmed according to good agricultural practices that do not damage the environment. There are six GAEC measures in relation to Soil Management, Supplementary Feeding, Overgrazing, Undergrazing, Field Boundaries, Protection of Habitats (Wildlife Areas), Archaeological Sites and Permanent Pasture. Inspections are undertaken on 5% of applications each year and Breaches of GAEC identified can result in a penalty reduction in the payment.

Flooding Task Force

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will (a) establish a permanent task force to identify flooding hotspots; (b) assess the impact of continuing development upon these areas; and (c) undertake to ensure that proposals regarding surface water run-off from roads are fully consulted upon, with particular reference to the impact on streams and salmonid rivers. (AQW 748/07)

Ms Gildernew:

- a) DARD Rivers Agency already chairs an inter-Agency Flood Liaison Group which is supported by 2 regional Flood Liaison Groups, and includes representatives from Roads Service and NI Water. A main objective of these Groups is to identify flooding hotspots and allocate a lead Agency to investigate the cause and possible solutions to the flooding problem at each location. The lead Agency also takes lead responsibility for dealing with emergency response at each hotspot.
- b) As part of the overall planning consultation process the Agencies and NI Water assess the impact of continuing development including that impacting on identified flooding hotspots.
- c) Department of Regional Development, Roads Service consults with, and informs the public, at various stages of the design of major road improvements. This includes an environmental assessment and an Environmental Statement if considered necessary. In relation to all private street developments, Roads Service require developers to seek consent from NI Water for surface run-off into storm drainage systems. Also Department of Environment, Environment and Heritage Service is consulted at the design stage of road schemes in order to ensure pollution prevention.

Watercourse Maintenance

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how often the covering metal grids for water-courses are checked and cleared in (a) Ards Borough, and (b) Strangford. (AQW 819/07)

Ms Gildernew: The grid or grille structures at the inlets to designated culverted sections of watercourses in Ards Borough and Strangford Council areas are generally inspected and maintained by DARD Rivers Agency on a weekly or monthly basis depending on their criticality in the context of the risk to life and property in the event of a flood. Grilles are also inspected and cleared if necessary during periods of continuous wet weather or on receipt of heavy rain warnings.

Responsibility for clearing inlet grilles on undesignated watercourses rests with riparian landowners.

Farm Map Correction Letters

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (a) the number of farm map correction letters sent to the farming community, requesting that farmers ensure that any land on which there is a building or other permanent feature is not depicted as a field on maps; and (b) the total cost of sending these letters. (AQW 1046/07)

Ms Gildernew:

- a) The number of correction letters issued was 15,307.
- b) The cost of sending the letters was £9,006.39

Single Farm Application Packs

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development why it was considered necessary to contact members of the farming community to ensure that any land on which there is a building or other permanent feature is not depicted as a field on current maps, given the fact that they were already made aware of this through the Single Farm Application Packs, which were issued in April. (AQW 1047/07)

Ms Gildernew: It was necessary to contact those farmers on whose land full planning permission for a dwelling had been approved in the last six years. On the basis of a sample of such approvals, the Department estimated that maps had not been adjusted for a quarter of such dwellings. The response to the forms in the application packs was not sufficient. There was a need to target the relevant cases so as to help reduce the number of mapping variances being found during inspections. My objective in this exercise has been to help farmers reduce queries on their claims and to help speed their payment.

Inspection Process

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to explain the reasoning behind confining inspectors to departmental offices until 27 June 2007 and how this will help expedite the inspection process, given that the inspectors' workload in relation to visits has increased by 50%, but no additional staff have been recruited. (AQW 1048/07)

Ms Gildernew: Providing a farmer corrects his 2007 Single application for an irregularity, before that is identified and advised to him by the Department, no penalty need be applied to his 2007 application. Consequently inspections were held back so that farmers had the opportunity to make such corrections before being exposed to inspection and possible penalty. The Department is mindful of the pressure of increased inspections and is seeking to redeploy resources to meet that challenge.

Integrated Area Control System

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of departmental counter staff that were made available during the period 10-26 June, to assist farmers wishing to seek advice on maps or the 2007 Integrated Area Control System Single Application Form. (AQW 1049/07)

Ms Gildernew: In addition to the normal administrative staff working in local offices, 33 Inspectors were available to deal with queries. This period also provided an opportunity for Inspectors to complete pre-inspection checks in relation to forthcoming inspections.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Civil Service Bonuses

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline how many non-pensionable bonuses were paid to staff in his department in each of the last three years; and what steps he has taken to ensure that such bonuses are not used as a cheaper alternative to an appropriate salary increase. (AQW 639/07)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): Non-pensionable bonuses can be paid to staff at all grades to reward performance in two ways: as part of the annual pay round, or under the NICS special bonus scheme. The number of payments made under each scheme in the last three financial years is as follows:

Year	Performance-related	Special Bonus Scheme
2004/2005	225	24
2005/2006	248	51
2006/2007	321	47

Performance-related bonuses are an important and integral element of the NICS reward strategy and are used as part of the annual pay round to acknowledge and reward higher performing staff.

The special bonus scheme is designed to reward members of staff for exceptional performance in particularly demanding tasks.

The award of bonuses is therefore regarded as being complementary to, rather than a substitute for, the award of consolidated pay increases.

Please note that information can be provided only in relation to staff currently employed by the Department.

Funding for Irish League Football

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to (a) outline when the £8 million fund which was made available for the further development of Irish League football will be distributed, (b) detail how much of this money has been spent to date, (c) list the projects which have benefited from this fund, (d) detail the sums spent on each project, and (e) to detail all other expenditure from this fund. (AQW 679/07)

Mr Poots: The up to £8 million set aside under the Soccer Strategy for the development of football at all levels, including Irish League football, is currently being distributed by the Irish Football Association (IFA) with assistance from Sport Northern Ireland (SNI). Up to 31st March 2007 SNI has provided a total of £2,575,258 to the IFA from Soccer Strategy monies. The projects which have benefited from this fund to date are Governance and Administration, UEFA Under-19 Championship Finals 2005 and Youth Football development. The sums spent on each project and expenditure is as follows:

Project	Expenditure (£)
Governance & Administration	1,098,988
Youth Football Development	866,270
UEFA U19 2005	610,000
	£2,575,258

Promotion of Gaelic Games

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to give a commitment to the Gaelic Athletic Association (GAA) that he will provide the necessary funding and support for the promotion of gaelic games in the 2008-2009 financial year.

(AQW 682/07)

Mr Poots: Responsibility for the promotion of Gaelic Games rests with the Gaelic Athletic Association (GAA) which is the governing body of Gaelic sports. Sport NI (SNI), which is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding, has made a commitment to invest £60,142 to assist the GAA promote Gaelic Games in NI in 2008/09. SNI also proposes to carry forward a projected underspend of approximately £249,000 from the £4.5m made available to GAA for the 3-year period 2005-2008.

Promotion of the Irish Language

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much money the department has spent on the promotion of the Irish language in each of the last five years.

(AQW 691/07)

Mr Poots: DCAL's expenditure on the promotion of the Irish language is via organisations and projects such as Foras na Gaeilge, Colmcille and the Irish Language Broadcasting Fund. The amount of funding paid to these organisations by DCAL over the past five years is shown in table A below:

TABLE A

Promotion of Non-Language Ulster-Scots Culture

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much money the department has spent on the promotion of non-language Ulster-Scots cultural traditions, including highland dancing and pipe bands, in each of the last five years.

Mr Poots: DCAL's expenditure on the promotion of Non-Language Ulster-Scots Cultural traditions is via organisations such as the Ulster-Scots Agency, the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Events Company. The amount spent by these organisations over the past 5 years is shown in table B below:

Northern Ireland Events Company – For events offered funding as part of the Community Festivals Fund, these are projects which included elements of Ulster Scots entertainment and celebration. Payments made in tranches 1 and 2 equates to £50k (2006-07) and £41k (2007-08).

Promotion of Non-Language Irish Culture

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much money the department has spent on the promotion of non-language Irish cultural traditions, including gaelic games and St. Patrick Day celebrations, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 693/07)

Mr Poots: Tables 1 and 2 below details funding provided by the Northern Ireland Events Company to Irish cultural festivals from the Community Festivals Fund in 2006/07 and 2007/08.

Funding for Promotion of Ulster- Scots Language

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much money the department has spent on the promotion of the Ulster-Scots language in each of the last five years. (AQW 694/07)

Mr Poots: DCAL's expenditure on the promotion of the Ulster-Scots language is via organisations such as the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group. The amount spent by both these organisations on language promotion over the past 5 years is shown in the table below:

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Ulster-Scots Agency	£100k	£500k	£103k	£198k	£345k

Ulster-Scots Agency

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the members of the Ulster-Scots Agency; (b) when they were appointed; (c) how many meetings have been held since their appointments; and (d) how many meetings attended by each member. (AQW 810/07)

Mr Poots: The table below shows the members of the Board of the Ulster-Scots Agency; the dates they were appointed; the number of meetings held since their appointments and how many meetings each member has attended.

Members Name	Date of Appointment	Number of Meetings since Appointment	Number of Meetings Attended

International Matches at Windsor Park

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he or any of his officials have held discussions with Linfield Football Club or the Irish Football Association regarding the agreement between Linfield Football Club and the Irish Football

Association for the use of Windsor Park for international matches. (AQW 864/07)

Mr Poots: My officials, in conjunction with Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), are currently facilitating discussions between both Linfield Football Club and the Irish Football Association (IFA) regarding the agreement between the two organisations for the use of Windsor Park for international matches. These discussions are still on-going.

Upgrading of Sports Venues

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if his Department has carried out an appraisal of the cost of upgrading (1) Windsor Park (2) Ravenhill and (3) Casement Park and if so, what are those costs likely to be. (AQW 866/07)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has not carried out an appraisal of the cost of upgrading (1) Windsor Park (2) Ravenhill and (3) Casement Park as this is primarily a matter for the owners of the venues, ie Linfield FC/Irish Football Association (IFA), the Irish Rugby Football Union (IRFU)/Ulster Rugby and the Gaelic Athletic Association (GAA) respectively. However, DCAL, together with Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) and the Strategic Investment Board (SIB), is currently in discussion with the owners of these stadia about their future facility requirements and the related cost implications.

Potential Investment in Windsor Park

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he or any representative of his department has held discussions with representatives of Linfield Football Club regarding potential investment in Windsor Park and will he make such information available. (AQW 867/07)

Mr Poots: To date neither I nor any representative of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has held discussions with Linfield Football Club regarding potential investment in Windsor Park. DCAL officials are, however, currently facilitating discussions between Linfield Football Club and the Irish Football Association, in conjunction with Sport Northern Ireland, regarding Windsor Park as part of on-going negotiations between the two organisations on the contract for staging international football games at the stadium.

Potential Investment in Windsor Park

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he or any representative of his department held discussions with the Irish Football Association regarding potential investment in Windsor Park and will he make such information available.

(AQW 869/07)

Mr Poots: To date neither I nor any representative of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has held discussions with the Irish Football Association (IFA) regarding potential investment in Windsor Park. DCAL officials are, however, currently facilitating discussions between the IFA and Linfield Football Club, in conjunction with Sport Northern Ireland, regarding Windsor Park as part of on-going negotiations between the two organisations on the contract for staging international football games at the stadium.

Rally Ireland

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much money his Department (i) offered, and (ii) paid to Rally Ireland for the following years: 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2007.

(AQW 870/07)

Mr Poots: No funding was offered or paid to Rally Ireland for 2004, as the initial pilot events in the bid for World Rally Championship status were held in October 2005 and March 2006.

The Northern Ireland Events Company (NIEC) offered Rally Ireland up to £368,931.13 for its 2005 event and up to £647,953.20 for its 2006 event. NIEC is currently finalising payments to Rally Ireland for 2005 and 2006. To date Rally Ireland has received £321,869.75 for 2005 and £570,004.21 for 2006.

No final decision has been made on the level of funding which will be offered for the 2007 World Rally Championship Rally Ireland event. However, the Department has so far made payments to Rally Ireland amounting to £200,000 for the 2007 event.

Rally Ireland

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if his department is satisfied that both the Rally Headquarters and Rally Service Park for Rally Ireland 2007, is based in the Republic of Ireland, and not Northern Ireland.

(AQW 871/07)

Mr Poots: It is anticipated that the cross-border 2007 World Rally Championship event will have both its Headquarters and Service Park in Sligo, but that Northern Ireland will host a Super Special Stage in the grounds of Stormont to open the Rally, with significant worldwide television coverage. Rally Ireland has also confirmed its commitment to a 50/50 split of the event either side of the border.

A final decision on the amount of government funding to be provided for the 2007 event will be based on the potential benefits to Northern Ireland demonstrated through a fully-costed business case.

Ulster-Scots Academy

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to confirm that, prior to the formal establishment of the Ulster-Scots Academy, the Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group will have the role of standardising Ulster-Scots spellings, and that these should be used across the public sector.

(AQW 911/07)

Mr Poots: The remit given to the Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group in 2005 included the resourcing without delay of specified projects within a Language Development Programme, including a spelling standardisation programme. It is intended that this spelling standardisation when completed and agreed should be used across the public sector.

Upgrading Windsor Park

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what discussions he has had with Linfield Football Club regarding upgrading Windsor Park, with reference to its use as a national stadium.

(AQW 963/07)

Mr Poots: To date neither I nor any representative of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has held discussions with Linfield Football Club regarding the upgrading of Windsor Park. DCAL officials are, however, currently facilitating discussions between Linfield Football Club and the Irish Football Association, in conjunction with Sport Northern Ireland, regarding Windsor Park as part of on-going negotiations between the two organisations on the contract for staging international football games at the stadium.

Funding for Repairs at Windsor Park

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail whether he has been approached to provide financial assistance towards repairing the roof of the north stand at Windsor Park.

(AQW 964/07)

Mr Poots: To date I have not been approached to provide assistance towards repairing the roof of the north stand at Windsor Park. The Irish Football Association (IFA), however, is currently developing a programme to help improve football grounds in Northern Ireland, including Windsor Park. Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), which is responsible for the development of sport in NI including the distribution of funding, is assisting the IFA with the development of this programme.

Ulster Scots

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what engagement the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group had with representative organisations, such as the Ulster-Scots Language Society and the Ulster-Scots Heritage Council, in preparing the last periodic report for the Committee of Experts (COMEX) for the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. (AQW 969/07)

Mr Poots: My Department provided a list of non-governmental organisation contacts to the European Charter Secretariat who issued invitations to all interested parties wishing to meet with the Committee of Experts (COMEX). According to the timetable for the visit both the Ulster Scots Language Society and Ulster Scots Heritage Council were scheduled to meet with COMEX on 5th December 2005.

North-South Committee of the Arts

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure who are the members of the joint North-South committee of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and An Chomhairle Ealaíon; and from which of the two organisations are they nominated. (AQW 970/07)

Mr Poots: The members of the joint North-South Committee of the Arts are: Tony Kennedy, Gearóid Ó hEara, Sharon O'Connor, Jaki Irvine, Noelle Campbell Sharpe and Rosaleen Linehan.

Tony Kennedy, Gearóid Ó hEara and Sharon O'Connor were nominated by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. Jaki Irvine, Noelle Campbell Sharpe and Rosaleen Linehan were nominated by An Chomhairle Ealaíon.

EDUCATION

Pre-School Expansion Programme

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education if she will provide details, for each Education and Library Board, of (a) the number of children who have not received a funded place under the pre-school expansion programme; and (b) her plans to address the shortage in funded places. (AQW 415/07)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): The position is as recorded in my answer to Mr Bradley's AQW 272/07, answered in the official record on 8th June 2007.

Education and Library Boards, who operate the admissions process, are now going through the re-allocation process. It is hoped that they will be in a position to confirm any shortfall in funded places in their respective areas by mid to end June.

The Early Years Team in the Department is liaising closely with Education and Library Board officers to ensure that any shortfall is identified and appropriate action taken as soon as possible

Saintfield High School

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to address the over-subscription of pupils in 2007 for Saintfield High School. (AQW 419/07)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to increase the admissions and enrolment numbers of Saintfield High School beyond the long-term enrolment number of the school. The Department is in the process of incrementally increasing the school's enrolment number to the long-term enrolment number of 340. The school's admissions number of 68 is already in line with this. Saintfield High School is a popular school but there is no shortage of places available at alternative controlled post-primary schools within a reasonable distance of the Saintfield area.

Saintfield High School

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education if she will give an update on plans for a greenfield site to be identified for a new build for Saintfield High School. (AQW 420/07)

Ms Ruane: A scheme for Saintfield High School was announced in 2003. In considering the appraisal options at the time, the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) considered a Greenfield site option but no suitable sites were identified.

The approved scheme was for the extension and refurbishment of the school building to replace sub-standard permanent accommodation and mobiles. Work is currently on site and is expected to be completed later this year.

The SEELB had also submitted an addendum to the appraisal for the provision of a sports hall as part of the overall building project. Several site options were considered for this facility including Greenfield sites. The SEELB are now proposing to build the sports hall on the existing school site and the Department is considering the plans and costs associated with this option.

Conlig Primary School

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Education what are her plans to meet a delegation of parents from Conlig Primary School to discuss its potential transformation to integrated status, following the recent successful ballot of parents. (AQW 445/07)

Ms Ruane: I have received an invitation from the Acting Principal of Conlig Primary School for a meeting with a group representing the school to discuss a proposal to transform to controlled integrated status. I have responded that once a development proposal is published, I would be happy to meet with the group as part of the consultation process, to hear their views.

Integrated Education in North Down

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to address the increased demand for integrated education at primary level within the North Down area. (AQW 446/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has a statutory duty to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education and also to have regard to the general principle that, so far as is compatible with the provision of efficient instruction and training and the avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure, pupils shall be educated in accordance with the wishes of their parents. Proposals to increase places at integrated schools either through expansion of intakes at existing schools, or the establishment of new schools, are the subject of a statutory development proposal consultation process. Each such proposal is considered on its individual merits

Donemana Primary School

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister of Education if she will detail her plans for the replacement of Donemana Primary School. (AQW 458/07)

Ms Ruane: An Economic Appraisal for a replacement for Donemana Primary School was prepared by the Western Education and Library Board (WELB) last year. The Department of Education has requested that it be reviewed to confirm that the scheme is required for the area.

Classroom Assistants

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister of Education how many classroom assistants are employed in (a) controlled; (b) maintained; (c) integrated; and (d) Irish medium secondary and primary schools in the Western Education and Library Board; and to state the pupil/classroom assistant ratio within each of these sectors. (AQW 475/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of classroom assistants in each sector is detailed in the attached table and is based on information provided by the Western Education and Library Board (WELB). It relates to assistants employed by WELB in mainstream schools and therefore excludes those employed in special schools and those employed by the Boards of Governors of Voluntary Grammar and Grant Maintained Integrated schools.

There is no recommended pupil/classroom assistant ratio. The allocation of a classroom assistant to support children with special needs depends on the assessed needs of individual children and can range from a full-time assistant for one child to a part-time assistant providing support to a group of children within a class or school. In addition, the Department's Making a Good Start Initiative provides funding directly to schools to provide a minimum of 10 hrs classroom support for all P1 classes and for P2 classes in schools with the lowest proportion of their pupils achieving the expected level for their age at Key Stage 2 Assessment. The information provided by WELB also includes details of the total pupil enrolment for each sector, the total number of classroom assistants employed and the full-time equivalent figure.

Sector	Total Enrolment	No of Classroom Assistants	Full Time Equivalents
Controlled Primary	9374	328	205
Maintained Primary	19757	625	391
Controlled Integrated Primary	43	1	1
Irish Medium Primary	429	13	9
Controlled Post Primary	3834	60	51
Maintained Post Primary	11033	162	148
Total	44470	1189	805

Magherafelt High School

Mr Ian McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the start date of the new build for Magherafelt High School. (AQW 479/07)

Ms Ruane: The North Eastern Education and Library Board have advised that they expect construction work on the proposed new school should start on site in spring 2008.

Rainey Endowed Grammar School, Magherafelt

Mr Ian McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the start date for the new build for Rainey Endowed Grammar School, Magherafelt. (AQW 480/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education is currently examining an Outline Business Case (OBC) for the project which will confirm the appropriate procurement route, based on a value for money assessment. Once the outcome of the OBC has been established, planning of the scheme will be taken forward with the school. It is not possible to detail a start date at this stage until the work on the OBC has been completed.

Security and Personal Safety in Schools

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Minister of Education what steps will be taken to ensure that teaching and non-teaching staff in schools are adequately protected from, and supported when subject to physical assault and abuse from pupils and parents; and whether consideration has been given to adopting a similar approach and protocols, as are now operational in the health service. (AQW 487/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department is currently reviewing existing guidance on security and personal safety in schools and the support available to staff. The Department has received representations from education stakeholders on this issue and, in continuing with this review, intends to examine the protocols of other organisations including those of the health service.

Donaghadee High School

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education what discussions have taken place regarding the closure of Donaghadee High School, with (a) teachers and classroom assistants; (b) the Board of Governors; and (c) pupils and their parents; and if she will detail the outcome of these meetings. (AQW 494/07)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board (the Board) has commenced preliminary consultations with Governors, staff and parents at Donaghadee High School and Movilla High School, Newtownards, in relation to a potential rationalisation between the two schools. The Board advise that pupils were not specifically invited to the meeting with parents but were not excluded if they wished to attend. A formal consultation by the Board is expected to commence during the forthcoming autumn term.

The Board has advised that as of 12 June 2007 meetings have taken place as follows:

	Movilla High School	Donaghadee High School
Teachers and Classroom Assistants	6th June 2007	16th May 2007
Board of Governors	15th May 2007	15th May 2007
Parents	22nd May 2007 (2 meetings)	29th May 2007

The Board has advised that the meetings raised a variety of issues and that these will be considered fully as part of the consultation process.

Public Private Partnership Scheme

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to extend the Public Private Partnership scheme; and to detail which schools in each of the Education and Library Boards are currently engaged in the scheme. (AQW 496/07)

Ms Ruane: In accordance with the requirements of public expenditure decisions, the procurement routes for capital projects are determined on the basis of value for money.

Details of schools in each Education and Library Board area currently engaged in a PPP procurement phase are detailed in the table below.

Education and Library Board Area	School Cluster

Attacks on Teaching Staff

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to ensure that attacks on teaching staff are stopped. (AQW 505/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department is currently reviewing existing guidance on security and personal safety in schools and the support available to staff. The Department has received representations from education stakeholders on this issue and, in continuing with this review, intends to examine the protocols of other organisations including those of the health service.

Review of Irish-Medium Education

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister of Education if there is an indicative timeline for the department's review of Irish-medium education. (AQW 519/07)

Ms Ruane: I intend to publish a report and recommendations for consultation in the late autumn of 2007.

Homophobic Bullying

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Education what percentage of secondary-level schools in Northern Ireland have policies in place to deal with homophobic bullying. (AQW 532/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department does not hold the information requested.

All grant-aided schools are required by law to have measures in place to prevent all forms of bullying among pupils. The Department has issued guidance to schools on measures to address bullying for whatever reason, including homophobic bullying. The effectiveness of an individual school's discipline policy is monitored through the regular cycle of school inspections undertaken by the Education and Training Inspectorate.

Disparity in Funding of Schools

Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley asked the Minister of Education to explain the disparity in funding between primary and secondary schools in relation to (a) the controlled sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector. (AQW 554/07)

Ms Ruane: Under the Local Management of Schools Common Funding Formula, schools with similar needs or characteristics receive similar funding, regardless of their location or management type.

Grant-maintained integrated schools, together with voluntary grammar schools, face additional responsibilities and costs which, for controlled and maintained schools, are met centrally by Education and Library Boards. The funding formula therefore includes some factors specifically to meet the needs of those schools.

The differential in funding for primary and post-primary schools reflects in large part the additional costs associated with delivery of the post-primary curriculum. I do intend, however, to look further at the opportunities for reducing the scale of the current differential in a way that would allow additional funding to go into primary schools without presenting difficulties for their post-primary counterparts.

Pre-School and Primary School Education in Derry/Londonderry

Mr Gregory Campbell asked the Minister of Education what future provision is being made for pre-school and primary education in the controlled sector for the Derry/Londonderry City Council area. (AQW 564/07)

Ms Ruane: A new-build replacement school for Lisnagelvin Primary School was announced in 2004 and planning is well advanced. New schools to replace New Buildings, Eglinton and Ebrington Primary Schools were announced in 2006. The scheme for Ebrington includes the replacement of the existing nursery unit.

A development proposal to establish Learning Support Centres within Foundation Key Stage 1 and Key Stage 2 at Lisnagelvin Primary School from 1 September 2007 or as soon as possible thereafter was published by the Western Education and Library Board on 25 May 2007. A decision on the proposal will be taken following the statutory 2-month consultation period which ends on 26 July 2007.

Sure Start Children's Centre

Mr Gregory Campbell asked the Minister of Education what plans are there for securing a SureStart Children's Centre in the Drumahoe area of Derry/Londonderry City Council to respond to local needs. (AQW 565/07)

Ms Ruane: Sure Start works with parents and children to promote the physical, intellectual and social development of pre-school children - particularly those who are disadvantaged - to ensure they are well prepared for school and later life. In the North of Ireland, Sure Start currently covers the top 20% most disadvantaged wards. Drumahoe falls within the Altnagelvin ward which is ranked in the top 33% Most Deprived Wards and therefore it falls outside of the catchment area of the nearest Sure Start project in the Waterside.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education what progress has been made in the establishment of the All-Ireland Centre for Excellence for Autism at Middletown, Co. Armagh, announced in 2002 by the two education Ministers, for Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 615/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education, in partnership with the Department of Education and Science, is taking forward the arrangements needed in order to enable the Middletown Centre for Autism to begin offering services later this year. Considerable progress has been made in the last 6 months.

A Holding company was set up in 2004 to purchase the property. A second company to operate the Centre, the Middletown Centre for Autism Ltd was incorporated as a company on 16th March 2007. The appointments of the Board of Directors and the Chief Executive Officer for the Centre were announced in January 2007 and a recruitment process is currently underway for further senior management posts.

An Integrated Design Team led by the two Departments is taking forward the refurbishment project, which includes a new building for the Learning Support Centre.

It is planned that services will start to be phased in from late 2007, beginning with the training/advisory and information/research services. The educational assessment and learning support services will come on stream on a longer timescale when building works are complete at the end of 2008.

Primary School Enrolment in Coleraine Borough Council Area

Mr Gregory Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils on the roll in each of the primary schools in the Coleraine Borough Council area, in (a) 2001/02; (b) 2002/03; (c) 2003/04; (d) 2004/05; (e) 2005/06; and (f) 2006/07.

Ms Ruane: The enrolment at primary schools in the Coleraine Borough Council area from 2001/02 – 2006/07 was as follows:

Compensation Claims for Injuries

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education how much has been paid in compensation claims for injuries received by (a) pupils; and (b) teachers, (i) on school field trips; and (ii) while at school, in the last year. (AQW 644/07)

Ms Ruane: I have been advised that £639,183k was paid out in compensation claims for injuries during the 2006/07 financial year. A breakdown of the amount paid out to pupils and teachers on school field trips and whilst at school is provided in the table below:

		2006/07 £
Pupils	Field Trip	21,933
	Injuries at School	503,000
Teachers	Field Trip	0
	Injuries at School	114,250

Special Needs Units at Secondary Schools

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the current provision of special needs units in the secondary sector in Bangor, Donaghadee and Millisle. (AQW 651/07)

Ms Ruane: I am advised by the Chief Executive Officer of the South-Eastern Education and Library Board that the current provision of special needs units in the secondary sector in Bangor, Donaghadee and Millisle is as follows:

Donaghadee High School – 4 special units for pupils with moderate learning difficulty:

Year 8	8 pupils
Year 9	23 pupils
Year 10	18 pupils

There are no special needs units in the secondary sector in Bangor or Millisle.

Special Needs Unit at Donaghadee High School

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what provision will be made for the pupils currently catered for by the special needs units in Donaghadee High School. (AQW 657/07)

Ms Ruane: I am advised by the Chief Executive Officer of the South-Eastern Education and Library Board that there are presently 4 special units located at Donaghadee High School catering for pupils with moderate learning difficulties in Years 8-10. That provision will remain in place for the 2007/08 academic year. The parents of pupils in the units have been advised accordingly.

A preliminary consultation is underway regarding the possible amalgamation of Donaghadee and Movilla High Schools with effect from September 2008. Formal consultation by the Board is expected to commence during the forthcoming autumn term. Any proposals the Board bring forward for the rationalisation of existing post-primary provision in the area will require the publication of a statutory development proposal.

The Board is writing to post-primary schools in the North Down/Ards area to seek expressions of interest to locate a special unit(s) at their school in the event of Donaghadee High School closing/amalgamating.

I have been assured by the Chief Executive that, whatever the outcome, the Board would wish to ensure that the special needs of those pupils in the units in September 2008 and thereafter are fully catered for.

Amalgamation of Donaghadee and Movilla High Schools

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Education what is the rationale behind the proposed merger of Donaghadee High School and Movilla High School; and what alternatives were considered prior to this decision being made. (AQW 670/07)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board (the Board) published in March 2006 a Strategic Review of Provision in North East Ards, which includes Donaghadee. The purpose of the review was to provide a strategic framework in which to progress a prioritised programme of capital development schemes. The review consulted the options for post-primary provision in the area for Donaghadee HS and Movilla HS including the retention of the two schools, the amalgamation of the two schools and the possibility of developing a new school in Donaghadee which would cater for all age-groups, nursery, primary and post-primary. A copy of the review document can be viewed through the Board's website.

Following the Review, the Board commenced preliminary consultations with Donaghadee High School and Movilla High School in relation to a potential rationalisation between the two schools. Formal consultation by the Board is expected to commence during the forthcoming autumn term.

Armagh Integrated College

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister of Education to detail the religious breakdown of pupils enrolled at Armagh Integrated College over the past 3 years. (AQW 674/07)

Ms Ruane: The religious breakdown of pupils enrolled at Armagh Integrated College over the past three years was as follows:

Year	Protestant	Catholic	Other/Not specified	Pupils
2004/05	#	30	*	50
2005/06	28	67	11	106
2006/07	41	92	20	153

Ulster Scots

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education what guidance her department has received from the Inter Departmental Charter Implementation group as to what 'resolute action' it should take to promote the Ulster-Scots language in the sphere of education. (AQW 705/07)

Ms Ruane: The Inter-Departmental Charter Implementation group, on which my Department is represented, has developed guidance for public servants to help them meet their obligations under the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.

This guidance is available on the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure's web-site.

Special Educational Needs

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education how many children carry a statement of special educational needs in (a) Donaghadee High School; (b) Movilla High School; (c) Glastry College; and (d) Bangor

Academy, broken down by year group. [R] (AQW 746/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of children with a statement of special educational needs in (a) Donaghadee High School; (b) Movilla High School; (c) Glastry College; and (d) Bangor Academy, broken down by year group is shown below:

Children with a Statement of Special Education Needs by Year Group 2006/07

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Social Work Grants

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister Employment and Learning to detail what support is available to students from Northern Ireland who are studying for social work degrees in universities in other regions of the United Kingdom. (AQW 609/07)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): Northern Ireland students undertaking degree courses including those in social work at institutions in other regions of the United Kingdom are entitled to receive support in accordance with the Education (Student Support) Regulations (Northern Ireland).

Students who commenced study in the current academic year may apply through their Education and Library Board for support comprising a fee loan, a means-tested maintenance grant, a maintenance loan and supplementary grants.

Tuition Fees

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will carry out an assessment of the impact of tuition fees on university entrants; and, in particular, if he will examine the number of people from disadvantaged backgrounds who take up places at university. (AQW 633/07)

Sir Reg Empey: A review of variable tuition fees is planned to take place in FY2008/09. Widening participation in higher education by students from those groups who are currently under-represented is one of my Department's key strategic goals, in particular, students from disadvantaged backgrounds and students with learning difficulties and disabilities. The impact of the new arrangements, particularly on people from disadvantaged backgrounds, will be a key aspect of the review.

Migrant Workers

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline what steps will be taken to ensure that the skills of migrant workers are matched with existing job vacancies. (AQW 638/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department offers access to a range of information, advice and guidance services aimed at assisting jobseekers to find suitable work through its network of local offices and through the JobCentre Online facility. A telephone interpretation service has been introduced to ensure that those customers whose first language is not English have full access to the services offered. Information leaflets have been translated into a number of languages, including basic Chinese, Portuguese, those relating to the majority of Eastern European countries. Job vacancies are displayed locally and throughout Northern Ireland, Europe and World-wide via the website www.JobCentreOnline.com. Potential migrant workers can therefore begin their jobsearch activity before arriving in Northern Ireland. Those migrants who are eligible to work in Northern Ireland, may apply for employment opportunities for which they have the skills and experience on equal terms with local job seekers.

School Leavers with Severe Learning/Physical Difficulties

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment he has made of existing further education provision for young people aged 19 and over, with severe learning and/or physical disabilities, leaving special needs schools in Northern Ireland; and if he will seek to enhance that provision. (AQW 755/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department offers access to a range of information, advice and guidance services aimed at assisting jobseekers to find suitable work through its network of local offices and through the JobCentre Online facility. A telephone interpretation service has been introduced to ensure that those customers whose first language is not English have full access to the services offered. Information leaflets have been translated into a number of languages, including basic Chinese, Portuguese, those relating to the majority of Eastern European countries. Job vacancies are displayed locally and throughout Northern Ireland, Europe and World-wide via the website www.JobCentreOnline.com. Potential migrant workers can therefore begin their jobsearch activity before arriving in Northern Ireland. Those migrants who are eligible to work in Northern Ireland, may apply for employment opportunities for which they have the skills and experience on equal terms with local job seekers.

Transitions Inter-Departmental Working Group

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to confirm that a stakeholder forum has been established to support policy development and good practice in relation to transition processes and provision, as detailed in the report of the Transitions Inter-departmental working group; to detail the membership of the forum, and to outline when the forum has met to date. (AQW 756/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Transitions report was published in February 2006 and since then, my Department has been progressing a number of actions.

The Careers Service is currently developing an all-age Careers Education, Information, Advice and Guidance Strategy, jointly with the Department of Education. The overall aim of the proposed strategy is to develop effective career decision makers leading to increased participation in education, training and employment. The development of this strategy began in March 2006 with a consultation event involving almost 70 key stakeholders. The strategy will be issued for consultation in the near future and will include a clear commitment towards young people and adults who are vulnerable to social exclusion, including young people and adults with disabilities.

In relation to the establishment of the specific stakeholder forum referred to in the Transitions

Report, this has not yet been formally set up. However, work is on-going to develop appropriate stakeholder relationships with a view to establishing a formal stakeholder group to support the development and implementation of the actions within the Transitions Report, following publication of the Careers Education, Information, Advice and Guidance strategy,

The Careers Service has introduced a Social Inclusion policy with a focus on addressing the needs of young people and adults who are facing or vulnerable to, social exclusion and excellent stakeholder engagement is firmly in place, at a local level. This is evidenced through the active role that Careers Advisers play in working with a range of professionals on the Transition Planning process of clients with Statements of Special Educational Need. In addition, since the publication of the Transitions Report, the Careers Service has hosted and participated in several stakeholder networking events, at local level throughout Northern Ireland. A list of participating organisations is attached.

The Department will continue to progress all of the actions specified in the Transitions Report, for which it has lead responsibility.

Students with Learning Difficulties and/or Disabilities

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to widen access to further education colleges, to include leavers of special needs schools who are unable to access mainstream vocational training provision, such as Jobskills or Jobskills Access and specialist vocational training. (AQW 757/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department provides a range of financial incentives to encourage Colleges to make provision for students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities, including leavers of special needs schools. This includes dedicated provision. However, FE is not always suitable for those with severe learning difficulties who may require nursing and other personal care and attention.

The Department, in co-operation with the Association of Northern Ireland Colleges (ANIC), is undertaking a review of the nature and extent of special needs provision throughout the FE network, to determine how best provision might be improved, within the terms of FE's remit.

Funding for Post Graduate Diplomas in Legal Studies

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the total amount of all grants given by his department to students studying at the Institute of Professional Legal Studies, in relation to course fees, for each of the last five years.

(AQW 783/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department has not provided funding for postgraduate diplomas including legal practice courses at the Institute of Professional and Legal Studies, since 2005. The amounts of course fee grants paid to students at the Institute of Professional and Legal Studies for each of the 3 years prior to this were:

2002/03	£127K
2004/05	£264K

Funding for Post Graduate Courses in Legal Studies

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to provide means-tested financial support to trainee solicitors and barristers, to aid their training and contribute towards their course fees at the Institute of Professional Legal Studies.

(AQW 784/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Support for postgraduates has always been discretionary and subject to change to reflect wider Government priority.

The Department is currently drawing up Terms of Reference for a Review of Postgraduate Policy and Funding which is due to commence in autumn 2007. The review will inform the way forward for the funding of postgraduate provision across all disciplines including the legal professions.

Access to Post Graduate Courses

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to take action to increase access to postgraduate courses to students from a less affluent background. (AQW 785/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Widening participation in higher education by students from those groups who are currently under-represented is one of the key strategic goals of my Department. My Department has a widening participation strategy in place to ensure that participants in higher education are representative of society, which includes the target to increase representation of people from the lowest socio-economic classifications (SEC 5 to 7) among entrants to higher education.

My Department increases access to all higher education through a number of broad policy directions and a range of specific actions including Foundation Degrees, funding premia and special project funding for the universities. Furthermore, my Department is now taking forward the recommendations of the Northern Ireland Higher Education Council (NIHEC) Expert Group report on proposals for the future direction of the Department's widening participation policies. Work is underway to develop and implement a regional strategy to widen participation in higher education by groups who are currently under-represented.

In the wider context, I am aware that an increase in the number of PhD places would be beneficial to the Northern Ireland economy. My Department has therefore bid for additional postgraduate places from the Chancellor's Fund for Innovation. A review of Postgraduate Policy and Funding will be taken forward this autumn.

Funding of Places at the Institute of Professional Legal Studies

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of places funded by his department for (a) solicitors; and (b) barristers, at the Institute of Professional Legal Studies in Northern Ireland, for each of the last five years. (AQW 788/07)

Sir Reg Empey: As autonomous bodies, the Northern Ireland universities are responsible for determining how the core teaching funding provided to them by the Department for Employment and Learning is allocated and which courses they provide. The Department has no locus in this area and does not allocate specific core funding for places at the Institute of Professional Legal Studies in the Queen's University of Belfast.

Course Fees for Trainee Solicitors and Barristers

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the course fees charged to trainee solicitors and barristers at the Institute of Professional Legal Studies for each of the last five years.

(AQW 789/07)

Sir Reg Empey: According to the admissions office at the Institute of Professional and Legal Studies, the course fees charged in the last five years were as follows:

in 2002/03 £5,150; in 2003/04 £5,640; in 2004/05 £6,000; in 2005/06 £6,500; and in 2006/07 £6,750.

Ulster Scots

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what guidance his department has received from the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group, as to what 'resolute action' it should take to promote the Ulster-Scots language in the spheres of tertiary and community education.

(AQW 968/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department for Employment and Learning has received no specific guidance from the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group as to what action it should take to promote the Ulster-Scots language in the spheres of tertiary and community education.

Kilroot Power Station

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action is being taken to resolve the situation at Kilroot Power Station, where workers employed in the construction of the new desulphurisation plant have not been paid by the sub-contractor.

(AQW 1069/07)

Sir Reg Empey: It is the statutory duty of the Labour Relations Agency (LRA) "to improve industrial relations" and in doing so may assist the parties to a trade dispute to try and achieve a settlement. Until this question was asked the LRA were unaware that a dispute was taking place in Kilroot Power Station. The LRA have now been advised of this dispute and will try to contact the parties to assess the situation and try and achieve a settlement. Both parties can also independently seek the free services of the LRA, or indeed professional advice, for guidance on their respective positions and avenues of redress.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Ardboe Business Park

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail what strategic measures/investment his Department has to support business expansion & future job creation at Ardboe Business Park, Co. Tyrone

(AQW 632/07)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): Invest NI's strategic role is to deliver expertise and resources to accelerate the creation and growth of businesses committed to, and capable of, being entrepreneurial, innovative and international.

To facilitate this work, Invest NI has developed a series of Business Development Solutions tailored to the needs of businesses to help them become more competitive and to enhance their exporting capability, leading to an increase in sustainable employment and wealth creation throughout Northern Ireland. For companies to be eligible for Invest NI support they must be engaged in manufacturing or internationally-traded services and demonstrate an ability to grow and compete in international markets.

Invest NI recently undertook a business review with one of the companies based at Ardboe Business Park which concluded that it did not meet this criteria for support. However, Invest NI will now, through its regional office team, approach each of the other businesses located in the Park to establish whether they could qualify for any form of support under the Agency's Business Development Solutions

Land for Industrial Use

Mr Pat Doherty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the efforts being made by Invest NI to identify and secure additional land for industrial use within the Strabane District Council area, in order to facilitate opportunities for inward investment and the expansion of existing businesses within the area. (AQW 710/07)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI continues to work closely with Planning Service to assist it to meet its obligation under the Regional Development Strategy to identify a generous and continuous supply of land for industrial use.

It has contributed in detail to the West Tyrone Area Plan, which is expected to be published in draft form in 2008. As part of that consultation it has considered the needs of its clients and submitted representations to the various stages of the Plan process, including the issues paper of October 2005. It continues to engage with Planning Service on site specific matters.

In addition to endeavouring to influence future zoning, Invest NI has also sought to protect existing industrial land. It has opposed planning applications, on the former Adria factory and Dublin Road Industrial estate, by objecting to planning applications for non-industrial uses.

Strabane is one of four areas identified in the first phase of Invest NI's current acquisition policy, which was adopted in August 2006. The Strabane acquisition project will move forward in due course, following a full economic appraisal and in line with the Area Plan process

Future of Manufacturing in Northern Ireland

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the recommendations of the report 'The Future of Manufacturing in Northern Ireland', commissioned by his department in 2006; to detail the number of recommendations that were implemented; and to give an assessment of their success. (AQW 733/07)

Mr Dodds: Information on the share of Gross Value Added¹ (GVA) accounted for by tourism is not available for the years 1996, 2001 and 2006. However, research commissioned by the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment estimated that tourism's direct contribution to GVA was 1.9% in 2003, and when indirect and induced effects are also included it contributed a total of 3.5% to Northern Ireland GVA.

¹ Regional Gross Value Added is now used instead of Gross Domestic Product

Visitors' Centre, Giant's Causeway

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to explain the reasons for the delay in replacing the Visitors Centre at the Giants Causeway, and to state the plans and timetable for bringing the project to completion. (AQW 825/07)

Mr Dodds: The detailed design for the replacement visitor facilities has reached an advanced stage of development. In committing public funds to the project my Department must take account of all material considerations which may impact on the development of the new facilities including a value for money assessment. Key issues which have delayed the project have been the resolution of car parking requirements and planning considerations.

Consideration must be given to a planning application submitted to Planning Service for an alternative, private sector led visitors centre at the Giant's Causeway.

Performance of Invest NI

Mr Trevor Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if Invest NI is underperforming compared to the Industrial Development Agency (IDA) in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 879/07)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI and the IDA cannot be compared directly as the agencies differ in terms of functional responsibility and product offering. Whereas the IDA is responsible solely for attracting Foreign Direct Investment (FDI), Invest NI's remit is significantly broader as its client base comprises both locally-owned and internationally-owned companies. In addition to attracting FDI to Northern Ireland, Invest NI supports local business starts and expansions by existing companies. It also encourages its client companies to embrace higher levels of Research and Development and Innovation to help increase their competitiveness, and supports the development of their exporting capability.

Invest NI has performed strongly in FDI terms since it was set up in 2002. In the five years to March 2007 Invest NI has secured 169 inward investment projects, leveraging over £1 billion of investment, promoting over 13,200 new jobs and safeguarding almost 10,500 existing jobs. Directly equivalent information is not available from the IDA, which does not publish the number of jobs promoted with each project.

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to indicate the percentage of the Gross Domestic Product produced by tourism in (a) 1996; (b) 2001; and (c) 2006. (AQW 950/07)

Mr Dodds: Information on the share of Gross Value Added¹ (GVA) accounted for by tourism is not available for the years 1996, 2001 and 2006. However, research commissioned by the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment estimated that tourism's direct contribution to GVA was 1.9% in 2003, and when indirect and induced effects are also included it contributed a total of 3.5% to Northern Ireland GVA.

ENVIRONMENT

Golf Course at Gilford Castle

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of the Environment if she is satisfied that all procedures have been applied properly in relation to the planning application to build a championship golf course and related works at Gilford Castle in Co. Down; if she recognises the benefits that this project will bring to the rural economy; and if she will commit herself to making a positive intervention in this case.

(AQW 347/07)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): I am assured that this application was considered against all relevant planning policy and procedures applicable. I am fully aware of the benefits this scheme would bring to the Gilford area. However, the Craigavon Divisional Planning Office did not consider that the benefits of the scheme as currently framed would outweigh the planning policy constraints. The Divisional Office is holding the application following a request by Banbridge District Council for a decision to be deferred to allow the applicant to put forward amendments. Contact between this office and the developer's agents is being maintained and there have been some discussions. Intervention by me in these circumstances would not be appropriate.

Possible Breaches of Planning Control

Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how many of the 11,229 files opened in Omagh Divisional Planning Office, in relation to possible breaches of planning control, relate to (a) Omagh District Council area; (b) Fermanagh District Council area; (c) Strabane District Council area; (d) Cookstown District Council area; and (e) Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council area. (AQW 569/07)

Mrs Foster: Of the 11,229 files opened on possible breaches of planning control in the last 3 years, some 1,680 were opened in the Omagh office. The breakdown by council area is as follows: (a) Omagh, 392; (b) Fermanagh, 382; (c) Strabane, 278; (d) Cookstown, 265; and (e) Dungannon & South

Unlicensed Waste Disposal

Mr Ian McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment if the Environment and Heritage Service responds to every complaint and/or referral it receives in regard to the unlicensed disposal of waste; and to detail the circumstances in which a referral might not be actioned. (AQW 576/07)

Mrs Foster: Every complaint and/or referral received by the Environment and Heritage Service is individually risk-assessed. Investigative resources are limited, so waste disposal reports are prioritised for further action. Commercial-scale disposal, biodegradable wastes of a municipal-nature, hazardous wastes, and other wastes likely to cause significant environmental damage, are investigated as a priority. Consequently, reports of wastes falling outside these parameters are only actioned if resources permit.

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr Francie Molloy asked the Minister of the Environment if any planning applications which have been refused on the basis of 'Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside' will be reviewed, in light of possible changes to planning policy in the future. (AQW 604/07)

Mrs Foster: In relation to planning applications which have been refused under PPS14, my Department will carefully consider the implications of any change in policy emerging from the Executive's review along with the findings of the court in relation to the ongoing Judicial Review.

Development at Camperdown Garden Village, Comber

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to give an update on the proposals for development at Camperdown Garden Village, Comber. (AQW 616/07)

Mrs Foster: A planning application (X/2000/0001/O) for a new village including a mixed-use centre, business park and housing on 123.4 hectare of land to the east of Belfast Road, Comber between Ballyrainey Road junction, 372 Comber Road, Belfast, Fairview 52 Greengraves Road, Dundonald and The Old House 77 Ballyrainey Road, Comber was received on 23 December 1999. The application was considered as a major planning application under Article 31.

The applicants (Frazer Houses [NI] Ltd) in their submission refer to the application as Camperdown Garden Village.

I can confirm that the application was withdrawn by the applicants on 4 May 2002. The Department is not aware of any subsequent contact or discussion in relation to this proposal.

Carnmoney Hill, Newtownabbey

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the steps she is taking to ensure the conservation and preservation of Carnmoney Hill, Newtownabbey. (AQW 623/07)

Mrs Foster: I am aware of the conservation importance of Carnmoney Hill particularly for its landscape, amenity and biodiversity value. In 2000, as part of the Northern Ireland Landscape Character Assessment, my Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) identified it as a unique landform and as an area of scenic quality.

Designation COU 1 of BMAP proposes extending the Metropolitan Area Green Belt to include Carnmoney Hill. Within the Green Belt, landscapes which are particularly sensitive because of their quality, or which need particular protection because of their location and the pressures for development on them, are afforded special protection by additional designations in the Plan. One such form of protection is the Area of High Scenic Value (AoHSV) designation.

BMAP designated Carnmoney Hill as an AoHSV. Policy COU 7 of the draft Plan proposes that planning permission will not be granted to development proposals that would adversely affect the quality, character and features of interest in designated AoHSVs. Proposals for mineral working would not be acceptable. All proposals must be accompanied by a Landscape Analysis to indicate the likely effects of the proposal on the landscape.

A significant part of the Carnmoney Hill is also designated as a Site of Local Nature Conservation Importance. Policy ENV2 protects such sites on the basis of their flora, fauna or earth science interest. Planning permission will not be granted for development that would be liable to have an adverse effect on nature conservation interests in such sites.

The proposals in the draft Plan seek to conserve the natural environment, protect the City's natural setting and keep the slopes free from urban development.

EHS has provided grant aid to the Woodland Trust to produce a Biodiversity Management Plan for Carnmoney Hill and also for the creation of safe public access routes within the area.

Carnmoney Hill was also designated as a Local Nature Reserve by Newtownabbey Borough Council in 2006. EHS continues to support this initiative through the provision of grant-aid to two of the partnership bodies that are involved in the management of the site: the Woodland Trust and the Belfast Hills Partnership.

Water Pollution

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment to outline, for each of the last three years, (a) the number of incidents of water course pollution investigated by the Environment and Heritage Service in the Newtownabbey Borough Council area; and (b) the number of cases brought to the Director of Public Prosecutions. (AQW 624/07)

Mrs Foster: The data presented in tables below detail the numbers of pollution incidents investigated by the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) in the Newtownabbey Borough Council area. The incidents have been classified by Severity (the environmental impact of the pollution).

Year	Severity			Total No of Incidents
	Low	Medium	High
2004	43	9	0	52
2005	49	6	0	55
2006	43	8	3	54

Year	To DPP	Absolute Discharge	Fine	Dismissal	Pending	Warning Letters
2004	2	1	0	1	0	2
2005	0	0	0	0	0	7
2006	1*	0	0	0	1	8

* To Public Prosecution Service

EHS also undertakes Pollution Prevention Risk Assessments. The aim is to identify sites which have the potential to adversely affect water quality and, through education or enforcement, reduce the risk of these sites causing pollution. The data presented in the table below detail enforcement action in respect of these visits in the Newtownabbey Borough Council area.

	2005	2006	2007
Pollution Prevention visits	6	5	11
Water (NI) Order 1999 Notices	0	0	5

The Water (NI) Order 1999 gives EHS the power to issue legally binding Notices; which can be used where an offender is required to take prompt action to stop pollution or to remedy its effects, or to remedy a serious risk of pollution.

Water Course Pollution

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment to outline, for each of the last three years, (a) the number of incidents of water course pollution investigated by the Environment and Heritage Service in the Antrim Borough Council area; and (b) the number of cases brought to the Director of Public Prosecutions. (AQW 625/07)

Mrs Foster: The data presented in tables below detail the numbers of pollution incidents investigated by the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) in the Antrim Borough Council area. The incidents have been classified by Severity (the environmental impact of the pollution).

Year	Severity			Total No of Incidents
	Low	Medium	High
2004	25	10	2	37
2005	33	4	0	37
2006	31	7	0	38

The data presented in the table below detail the enforcement action taken by EHS with respect to water pollution offences in the Antrim Borough Council area.

Year	To DPP	Absolute Discharge	Fine	Dismissal	Pending	Withdrawn	Sentence	Warning Letters
2004	3	0	2	0	0	0	1	7
2006	1*	0	0	0	1	0	0	8

EHS also undertakes Pollution Prevention Risk Assessments. The aim is to identify sites which have the potential to adversely affect water quality and, through education or enforcement, reduce the risk of these sites causing pollution. The data presented in the table below detail enforcement action in respect of these visits in the Antrim Borough Council area.

	2005	2006	2007
Water (NI) Order 1999 Notices	0	0	4

The Water (NI) Order 1999 gives EHS the power to issue legally binding Notices; which can be used where an offender is required to take prompt action to stop pollution or to remedy its effects, or to remedy a serious risk of pollution.

Waste Management Centre, Dungiven

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of objections that have been received to the planning application for a proposed industrial development to provide a waste management and recycling centre at Upper Dernalflaw, Dernalflaw Road, Dungiven. (AQW 645/07)

Mrs Foster: The application was received in May 2007 and as at 19 June, some 112 objections have been received.

Impact of Penalty Points

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to give her assessment of the success of the penalty point system in relation to reducing the speed of traffic, in order to prevent accidents and fatalities. (AQW 652/07)

Mrs Foster: There is no Northern Ireland research demonstrating a direct link between penalty points and reductions in traffic speed, collisions and fatalities. There are many factors that impact on safety on our roads and it is very difficult to attribute reductions in collisions or fatalities to any one single measure.

It is my view that penalty points are useful as part of a package of measures to reduce speeding.

Research to assess the impact of penalty points which were introduced in October 1997 showed that 70% of drivers reported a change in their driving behaviour with 34% indicating that they had slowed down and 46% driving more carefully as a result.

Illegal Dumping at Bonfire Sites

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made in preventing illegal dumping and fly-tipping at bonfire sites in the East Antrim area. (AQW 653/07)

Mrs Foster: The Environment and Heritage Service has targeted the disposal of waste tyres on bonfires and continues to work towards reducing the number of tyres disposed of illegally. This has been achieved by auditing producers of waste tyres, and by enforcing waste legislation where evidence is obtained of illegal dumping from commercial premises. Some tyre dealers in the East Antrim area have been visited. Powers in relation to removing waste fly-tipped on bonfire sites lie with District Councils.

Governance Arrangements for Councils

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of the Environment if she will implement legislation immediately that makes it binding on local councils to share power with all political parties, on the basis of proportionality, in time for local council annual general meetings in 2008. (AQW 687/07)

Mrs Foster: The development of governance arrangements for local councils will be informed by the review that I will be leading with Ministerial colleagues of the RPA decisions of the previous administration as they related to local government.

Drainage of Reservoir, Carrickfergus

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to give her assessment of the drainage of water of the reservoir at Raw Brae Road, Carrickfergus, and the potential impact on wildlife. (AQW 695/07)

Mrs Foster: EHS has no historic information on the wildlife present at this location. It is believed that the impact on wildlife will have been minimal. Rivers regularly experience flood events and their wildlife usually recovers quickly.

I am advised that DARD Rivers Agency has no statutory remit in the control of water in reservoirs or the potential impact on wildlife.

Rivers Agency is aware of incidents when large quantities of water were discharged to the designated Slaughtersford-Water river from this small reservoir. However, it does not consider that these incidents have caused any lasting damage to the drainage function of the watercourse.

Water Framework Directive

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of the proposal to maximise public participation in the implementation of the Water Framework Directive; and to detail her plans to ensure full public participation in water management issues. (AQW 719/07)

Mrs Foster: I received these proposals from the Freshwater Task Force and welcome the interest shown by it in Water Framework Directive implementation matters. The proposals are currently under consideration and will be responded to in due course. I am also aware that the Department of Environment, Heritage and Local Government in the Republic of Ireland is also considering the same proposal.

My Department is committed to encouraging the active involvement of all interested parties in the implementation of the Water Framework Directive. Regular meetings take place of the WFD Stakeholder Forum, which includes representatives of a broad range of non governmental organisations; local-level Catchment Stakeholder Groups are being established, reports on important issues affecting our water environment are published and public consultation takes place on policy and legislation designed to protect and enhance our environment. The recent publication for public comment of the reports on Significant Water Management Issues is likely to serve as a catalyst for further active involvement by the public in WFD issues.

Eelgrass at Island Hill

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to explain the enhanced growth of eelgrass at Island Hill, near Comber, in the last year. (AQW 763/07)

Mrs Foster: I am not aware of any enhanced growth of eelgrass at Island Hill. Environment and Heritage Service will conduct a condition assessment of all of Northern Ireland eelgrass beds in 2009 as part of its 6 yearly monitoring of Natura 2000 sites, of which this part of Strangford Lough is one. This will enable us to determine how far the Island Hill site has recovered utilising 2003 baseline data.

Motorcycle Track at Nutts Corner

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of the Environment what action she will take, with respect to the motorcycle track at Nutts Corner Road, that has recently been developed without planning permission. (AQW 806/07)

Mrs Foster: This motor-cycle track is currently under investigation as a breach of planning control. The owners of the land have been identified and have been asked to rectify the breach of planning control. It could compromise any potential action through the Courts to provide further detailed information on the particular stage in the enforcement process which this case has reached.

Protection of Wild Birds

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment what measures she will introduce to stop trees being cut down during the nesting season, if there is the possibility that birds are nesting. (AQW 815/07)

Mrs Foster: The Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 already gives full legal protection to all wild birds and also protects them by making it an offence to intentionally damage or destroy the nest of any wild bird whilst that nest is in use or being built.

The Wildlife Order is currently being reviewed and the effectiveness of the protection afforded to wild birds during the nesting season will be considered as part of this Review.

Pollution Caused by Burning Tyres

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to outline any information regarding the pollution caused by the burning of tyres; and if she has any plans to prevent tyres being burnt in public. (AQW 824/07)

Mrs Foster: Waste tyres are extremely combustible and produce thick clouds of sulphurous black smoke. This smoke results in high levels of particulate pollution and may contain up to fifty toxic components. Due to the poor combustion conditions when tyres are burnt in the open air, polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons and dioxins are also produced.

The Environment and Heritage Service has targeted the disposal of waste tyres on bonfires and continues to work towards reducing the number of tyres disposed of illegally, through auditing producers of waste tyres, and by enforcing waste legislation where evidence is obtained of illegal dumping from commercial premises.

The Environment and Heritage Service does not have the powers to remove waste from bonfire sites. This falls within the remit of the District Councils, who are also responsible for the control of smoke emissions.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline her response to the recent review calling for the setting up of an independent Environmental Protection Agency. (AQW 842/07)

Mrs Foster: The independent Review of Environmental Governance was commissioned under Direct Rule. Its recommendations touch on the responsibilities of a range of Executive Ministers and other authorities.

I will carefully consider my approach to environmental governance and make proposals to the Executive Committee. In so doing, I will take full account of the Review's recommendations and of resource considerations. I will discuss the way forward with my Ministerial colleagues, the Environment Committee and other stakeholders. It is important to ensure that the right decisions are made and this will take some time.

At present I remain open minded about proposals for an independent Environment Protection Agency.

Arthritis Treatment Centre

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of the Environment, further to her reply to AQW 655/07, to detail her position on the proposed amendment to the previously approved building, to include the arthritis treatment centre which will be the direct use of the renewable heat produced by the previously approved Biomass (CHP) system. (AQW 868/07)

Mrs Foster: A refusal notice outlining the specific reasons for refusal was issued from the Ballymena Divisional Planning Office on 25th May 2007.

The Department does not deem the proposed use, even within the approved Biomass building, to be a use acceptable in the rural area. The sustainable aspects of the proposal have not been regarded as outweighing the other strict planning policies which exist to protect the countryside from unacceptable development or inappropriate use.

The applicant does, of course, have the opportunity to appeal the decision with the Planning Appeals Commission within 6 months of the date of the refusal notice.

Illegal Dumping of Waste

Mr Tommy Gallagher asked the Minister of the Environment if she is satisfied with the current arrangements for the remediation and removal of hazardous waste, arising from the illegal dumping of waste originating in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 74/07)

Mrs Foster: Waste illegally dumped in Northern Ireland from the Republic of Ireland is mainly from households. It is not legally defined as 'hazardous' but nevertheless presents a high risk of pollution of the environment and a risk to human health.

There is already good co-operation between the authorities in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. My officials are currently exploring with their counterparts the available mechanisms for the removal of this illegally deposited waste.

Road Traffic Laws

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to outline progress in harmonising road traffic laws and penalties between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 187/07)

Mrs Foster: While there is no specific programme of harmonisation of traffic laws and penalties between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, the framework of road traffic and transport regulation in both jurisdictions is defined very largely by EC directives, and my Department is responsible for transposing these into domestic law. Work is ongoing to introduce mutual recognition of driving disqualifications, and a study on further opportunities for cooperation has been commissioned.

Marine Act

Mr Billy Armstrong asked the Minister of the Environment what co-operation has taken place, and will take place in the future, between her department, Westminster departments and the other devolved governments in preparation for a Marine Act. (AQO 189/07)

Mrs Foster: My officials have been working closely with other UK administrations in the development of the proposals for a Marine Bill and their possible application to Northern Ireland. I also had a meeting in London on 18 June with the Defra Secretary of State and Ministers from the other devolved administrations to discuss a wide range of issues including marine management.

Planning Service

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications submitted to the Planning Service in February and March 2006; and to detail the number of these applications which were not validated until 16 March 2006 or later. (AQO 161/07)

Mrs Foster: 2,922 applications were received by the Planning Service during February 2006 and 4,279 during March.

1,393 applications were validated after 16 March 2006. Of these, 380 were received by the Planning Service on or before 16 March.

Identity Checks for Driving Tests

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister of the Environment to outline what identity checks are in place for learner drivers sitting the driving theory and practical tests. (AQO 141/07)

Mrs Foster: At check-in for the theory test, candidates are required to provide a photocard driving licence. If a candidate does not have or cannot produce their photocard driving licence, he or she MUST present both the licence paper counterpart AND one of the approved forms of photographic identification as follows:

Passport, Employers Identity Card, Trade Union Card, Cheque Guarantee Card or Credit Card (containing a photograph); or

A photograph signed by an approved person. The original documents must be presented as photocopies and faxes are not accepted. Driving licences are examined to establish authenticity and establish the identity of the candidate. The candidate's signature is captured electronically and compared with the signature on their licence or approved form of identification. A candidate who does not provide the appropriate identification cannot sit the test.

At the commencement of the practical driving test appointment, the candidate is asked to sign an insurance declaration. DVA's driving examiner then examines the candidate's driving licence and compares the signature on the licence with the signature on the declaration. If a licence is defaced or altered the test will not proceed.

If a candidate does not have or cannot produce their photocard driving licence, other forms of acceptable identification are the same as I have outlined for the theory test.

With all forms of acceptable ID the candidate must be clearly recognisable from the photograph presented.

The original documents must be presented as photocopies and faxes are not accepted.

Processing Planning Applications of Economic Significance

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of the Environment what assistance is in place to help businesses and foreign direct investors to speed up planning applications. (AQO 191/07)

Mrs Foster: Over the last 4 years my Department has been engaged in a comprehensive reform and modernisation programme which has looked at all aspects of the planning system. This includes aligning structures within the Planning Service to improve delivery, working with consultees on improving performance, reforming planning legislation and developing new IT systems to support the process.

One of the outcomes of this programme of reform and modernisation has been the creation within Planning Service of a new division to focus specifically on planning applications which are of social or economic significance to Northern Ireland. A further outcome has been the introduction of a protocol for dealing with such applications – a protocol which focuses on front-loading the planning process with constructive pre-application discussions and pro-active management of applications through the planning system. This protocol is already paying dividends, as experience with the Coca Cola and IKEA planning applications has demonstrated.

All of these arrangements are of course a necessary but not quite a sufficient requirement for speeding up the processing of major planning applications. It is important to emphasise that an application can only pass through the planning process as quickly as the quality of the application and its supporting information will allow. To this end, there is clear onus on the applicant to ensure that any application is well prepared and that it is accompanied from the outset by all of the information that is necessary to determine it.

Advanced Driving Courses

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Minister of the Environment if she is satisfied with the provision of advanced driving courses for those who have just passed their test. (AQO 175/07)

Mrs Foster: The provision of advanced driver training throughout the UK is currently under review, along with all aspects of driver training and testing. Whilst there is currently no legislative requirement for advanced training in Northern Ireland, private initiatives such as the advanced driving tests conducted by the Institute of Advanced Motorists and ROSPA are available here. In addition a privately operated scheme known as Roadwise is available to encourage drivers to take advanced training. I have announced my intention to initiate a review of road safety and this is an issue I will wish to consider.

Open Cast Mining in Glenarm

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Minister of the Environment if she will make a statement on the suitability of proposed sites for open cast mining in Glenarm, and other areas of the glens of Antrim which rely heavily on tourism. (AQO 154/07)

Mrs Foster: In relation to minerals developments my Department applies the relevant policies contained in the Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland.

In considering the suitability of sites within areas such as the Glens of Antrim Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB) Policy MIN 1 Environmental Protection and Policy MIN 2 Visual Implications are of particular relevance.

The policies for mineral developments not only recognise that it is a fact of geology that scenic areas such as AONBs contain workable reserves but also that mineral workings can have significant environmental impacts.

My Department will therefore balance the case for a particular mineral working proposal against the need to protect and conserve the environment, taking account of all relevant environmental, economic and other considerations, including statutory designations and advice from other Departments, including DETI which has responsibility for the promotion of tourism.

It should also be noted that minerals proposals, particularly those in sensitive locations will be subject to the Environmental Assessment Regulations.

Road Safety

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on the nature of co-operation with the Minister for Regional Development on the issue of road safety. (AQO 169/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department works closely with DRD and the PSNI to coordinate delivery of the road safety strategy, ensuring cohesive and complementary road safety education, enforcement and engineering activities.

This partnership is working well and is making a significant contribution to casualty reduction.

However, there is much more that we can do, and I have instructed officials to instigate a full review of the road safety strategy. I am meeting with the DRD Minister and the PSNI early next month to decide how the review should be taken forward.

Environmental Stewardship in Schools

Mr John McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment what measures she intends to put in place to ensure co-operation between herself and the Minister of Education in promoting responsible environmental stewardship in schools. (AQO 181/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service, already promotes environmental stewardship in schools. Since 2002, the Environment and Heritage Service has delivered curriculum-based environmental education programmes to 5,300 school groups, comprising some 78,000 children at our various sites.

EHS has contributed significantly to the revised Curriculum for Primary Schools, to be implemented from September 2007, which has the development of a young person as a contributor to the economy and the environment, as one of its three key objectives.

EHS also works in partnership with many voluntary groups to deliver environmental education. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds has been very active in this area; and I had the pleasure, only last week of seeing an outstanding presentation from a number of schools as part of the RSPB initiative.

The Environmental Education Forum which includes officials from both my Department and the Department of Education, promotes environmental education. Last year, the Forum provided training for 650 trainee teachers in education for sustainable development.

In addition, it is intended that 25% of our schools will achieve Eco-schools accreditation by 2009. This target was included in the Northern Ireland Sustainable Development Strategy, published last year.

Areas of Village or Townscape Character

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of the Environment what proposals exist to ensure that all departments take account of Areas of Village or Townscape Character status, when carrying out public works. (AQO 166/07)

Mrs Foster: Planning Policy Statement 6 (PPS 6) - Planning Archaeology and the Built Heritage and its subsequent Addendum sets out my Departments policies for Areas of Townscape/Village Character.

These policies together with the provisions of the development plan are material considerations in the determination of individual planning applications and appeals for proposed development, including public works, within an ATC/AVC.

In processing planning applications within ATC/AVCs the key consideration for the Department will be to ensure that development proposals respect the appearance and qualities of each townscape area and maintain or enhance their distinctive character. My Department has no additional proposals in relation to Areas of Townscape/Village Character.

Plastic Bag Levy

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what evaluation she has made of the impact of the plastic bag levy in the Republic of Ireland; and if she has had any discussions on this matter with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 152/07)

Mrs Foster: I have not made any evaluation of the impact of the plastic bag levy in the Republic of Ireland although I am aware that, with effect from 1 July this year, the levy will increase from 15 cents to 22 cents per bag in an attempt to counteract a gradual increase in the use of bags over recent years. I have not had any discussions on this matter with my Republic of Ireland counterpart.

National Parks

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister of the Environment if she intends to expand the number of National Parks in Northern Ireland. (AQO 142/07)

Mrs Foster: There are currently no National Parks in Northern Ireland.

I will consider the issue of National Parks very carefully before making any decisions.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Staffing Levels at Rates Offices

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide details of staffing levels and case load at Rates Offices and to make a statement on performance pressures. (AQW 758/07)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Robinson): Housing Benefit applications are handled only in the Land & Property Services Agency's Housing Benefit central unit based in Londonderry House, Belfast.

At 1 April 2006 there were 36 staff employed in the central unit and by 31 March 2007 there were 60 staff in post.

In the period 1 April 2006 to 31 March 2007 some 19,000 new applications for Housing Benefit were received, resulting in a total of some 52,000 owner occupiers entitled to Housing Benefit.

The Agency has experienced performance pressures as a result of ongoing work necessary to implement a new IT system to handle rate collection together with Housing Benefit and rate relief, which has led to delays in issuing refunds of Housing Benefit. The Agency, in cooperation with its IT supplier, is working hard to resolve all outstanding difficulties and clear backlogs of benefit assessments and subsequent refunds.

Rate Rebate Applications

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will provide details of the number of outstanding rate rebate applications (a) per District Council area and/or constituency; and (b) per Rates Office; and if he will indicate the numbers of such cases which have taken longer than six months to process.

(AQW 759/07)

Mr Robinson: Applications for assistance with payment of rates are processed through the Housing Benefit scheme and are handled centrally in the Land and Property Services Housing Benefit central unit based in Londonderry House, Belfast.

The number of outstanding Housing Benefit cases on a District Council basis, including those outstanding longer than six months, is set out in the table attached.

Heating in Stormont Estate

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the progress made in the installation of a Combined Heat and Power based heating system to heat buildings in Stormont Estate.

(AQW 862/07)

Mr Robinson: This project originated in late 2003 but did not proceed, pending development of Workplace 2010. A review of the proposal in February 2006, when the Environment and Renewable Energy Fund was launched, concluded that Combined Heat and Power was no longer viable due to changes in fuel prices. As an alternative, this review also identified opportunities for stand-alone biomass units around Stormont Estate and adjacent buildings, some of which are now being developed.

Revaluation of Non-Domestic Property

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when he plans to carry out a re-evaluation of non-domestic property in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 1168/07)

Mr Robinson: The next revaluation will take effect in 2010. However, business ratepayers should be aware that this measure is not a reform of the system. There will be no change to the basis of valuation and the exercise will be revenue neutral.

EU Funding Compensation

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he is seeking European Union funding, under EQUAL 2007-2013, to provide compensation to those unsuccessful in the recruitment competition for the Police Service of Northern Ireland, as a result of the 50/50 recruitment policy.

(AQO 133/07)

Mr Robinson: There is no EU EQUAL Community Initiative Programme for 2007-13.

Meetings with other Finance Ministers

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to meet his Ministerial colleagues with responsibility for finance in other parts of the United Kingdom. (AQO 148/07)

Mr Robinson: I recognise that it is beneficial to meet with Ministerial colleagues from other parts of the UK, as there are various issues of common interest and concern.

In this context, I met with the UK Euro Ministers on the 6th of June regarding the UK and its policy on the Euro.

On the 9th of July I will attend a meeting of Finance Ministers from the three devolved administrations with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury. These meetings provide a regular forum discussion and consideration of issues of common concern.

I am also planning to meet bilaterally with the Scottish Minister in the near future.

Financial Subvention to Northern Ireland

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to report on the scale of the current financial subvention to Northern Ireland from the UK Treasury. (AQO 170/07)

Mr Robinson: Unfortunately because of the time-lags involved in obtaining data from HM Treasury, the most recent calculation of a subvention or fiscal deficit is for the 2003-04 financial year. This figure stood at £7 billion – the shortfall between total public expenditure attributed to Northern Ireland and revenue collected.

However a consideration of the growth in public expenditure since 2003-04 would suggest that the fiscal deficit has increased to £8 billion by 2006-07

Sale of Land for Social Housing

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will review arrangements for selling land, so that the proceeds of land sold by the Department for Social Development can be used for social housing. (AQO 193/07)

Mr Robinson: The proceeds from the disposal of assets, including land, by any department remain in NI for use on public services here. It is important that decisions on such reinvestment are taken collectively by the Executive, in the context of strategic priorities and available resources.

Civil Service Recruitment

Mr Gregory Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide a breakdown of recruitment to the Civil Service, by religion and gender, for each of the Northern Ireland government departments, for each of the last five years. (AQO 153/07)

Mr Robinson: I am placing in the Library a table providing the information requested. The figures include all permanent, temporary, non-industrial and industrial appointments. The breakdown by gender shows that more females than males have been appointed over the period. In terms of community background, fewer Protestants than Roman Catholics have been appointed over the last five years.

Regional Economic Strategy

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give an update on the development of the Regional Economic Strategy. (AQO 179/07)

Mr Robinson: The formal consultation period on the draft Regional Economic Strategy concluded on 19 April 2007. There were 23 responses in total. Key issues flagged up included the need for local fiscal measures, a greater role for local government and the importance of dispersing economic activity beyond the greater Belfast area. The Strategy redrafting will now await the outcome of the Varney Review.

Additional Funding for Northern Ireland

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will provide details of additional funding being received by Northern Ireland, over the next four years, as part of the political settlement. (AQO 143/07)

Mr Robinson: Discussions on the content of the financial package are ongoing, and thus at this stage it is not possible to be specific as regards the final outcome. The latest position on offer from the Chancellor was set out in his Written Statement to the House of Commons on 8 May 2007. I have placed a copy of this in the Library.

Public Sector Share of GDP

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to comment on the public sector share of Northern Ireland's Gross Domestic Product. (AQO 176/07)

Mr Robinson: Public sector spend in the local economy is estimated to be equivalent to 71 per cent of regional GDP in 2005-06 – higher than the UK average of 43 per cent

However, it is important to note that the local public sector is not overly large when assessed as a proportion of the local population. It is the relatively small private sector that gives rise to the perception of a highly dominant public sector.

Decentralisation of Public Sector Jobs

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to decentralise public sector jobs to areas west of the river Bann.

(AQO 150/07)

Mr Robinson: The consultation on ‘The Guiding Principles for the Location of Public Sector Jobs in Northern Ireland’ which closed on 30 April 2007 is the first step in developing a framework which would facilitate future decision-making on the location of public sector jobs. The analysis and summary of the consultation responses has now been completed and the next stage will be to discuss the matter further with the Executive Committee.

Take-Up of Rate Reliefs

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what are his plans to bring forward proposals to increase the take-up of existing rate reliefs.

(AQO 147/07)

Mr Robinson: I am very keen to make sure that all those entitled to get assistance with paying their rate bills are made aware of the help that is available through the various relief schemes and that they are encouraged and helped to make application. Work is already underway to encourage and increase the take-up of reliefs through a targeted public information campaign and continuation of the existing take-up strategy for Housing Benefit. To this end, Land & Property Services are working in partnership with a range of organisations including the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, the Social Security Agency, the Department of Social Development and the voluntary and advisory sector.

While it is too early at this stage to give a substantive report on take-up for 2007/2008 so far, this is being carefully monitored and will be reviewed as soon as possible to identify if, and where, additional steps may be needed.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to ensure that the content and conclusions of the OFMDFM report ‘The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy’ are taken into account within the forthcoming Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQO 167/07)

Mr Robinson: The Executive’s spending priorities and associated financial allocations for the period covered by the 2007 Comprehensive Review, 2008-09 to 2010-11, will be determined through the development of a draft Programme for Government and Budget which is due to be published in September for consultation. In terms of A Shared Future, OFMDFM commissioned research into the ‘Financial Cost of the Divide’ in April 2006. This is a very comprehensive and complex piece of research that the Executive will wish to take time to consider.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Health Centre, Sion Mills

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he will take to provide a fully resourced health care centre in Sion Mills, County Tyrone. (AQW 595/07)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): There are no plans to develop a Health and Care Centre in Sion Mills. There have been no proposals put to my Department to suggest this facility is required, or has a priority need.

Medical Cards

Mrs Michelle O’Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps, if any, have been taken to rationalise medical cards, so that those living in border counties can access the nearest available health facility. (AQW 607/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There are currently no plans to rationalise medical cards; however, it remains a high priority for my Department to ensure that health facilities are accessible for all NI residents, including those living in border counties.

Funding for Health Care Assistants

Mrs Mary Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when funding will be made available to allow health care assistants to be put in place for the new academic year, so that children with special needs can be admitted to schools. (AQW 610/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Funding has already been made available for the academic years 2006 to 2007 and 2007 to 2008 across all four Board areas to enable health care assistants to be put in place to support school children who have special needs.

Radiotherapists

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of radiotherapists per head of population, and (b) how this compares with the figure in each of the last three years. (AQW 680/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of Radiotherapists (Clinical Oncologists) per head of population employed within the Northern Ireland Health and Social Care Services as at March 2007 and in each of the previous 3 years is shown below.

	Radiotherapists per 100,000 Population
	Headcount	WTE
March 2007	1.51	1.51
March 2006	1.51	1.51
March 2005	1.40	1.39
March 2004	1.29	1.28

1. WTE = Whole-Time Equivalent.
2. Figures refer to Radiotherapists (Clinical Oncologists) employed at Consultant and Specialist Registrar Grades.

The latest Civilian Population MYE figures are for 2005. These figures have therefore necessarily been used for 2006 and 2007. 2004 MYE figures have been used to determine the 2004 ratio.

Nurses' Pay

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will explain the rationale for the upgrade from one nurses' pay scale to the next, in terms of experience and training, with reference to the Agenda for Change programme. (AQW 707/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Under the Agenda for Change arrangements there is no automatic upgrade to a higher pay band for any staff group. However, nurses who have acquired the necessary qualifications, knowledge, skills and experience are eligible to apply for a job in a higher pay band whenever vacancies arise.

Ambulance Service Provision

Mr Pat Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the current levels of ambulance service provision, in terms of staffing, resources and cover, at the Strabane town and Castlederg facilities; and to outline whether this level of provision will be developed or contracted in the short, medium or long term. (AQW 711/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The current level of ambulance service provision in terms of staff, resources and cover, for Strabane and Castlederg ambulance stations is as follows:

	Strabane	Castlederg
Staffing level	1 x Paramedic Supervisor 5 x Paramedics 4 x Emergency Medical Technicians	1 x Paramedic Supervisor 3 x Paramedics 4 x Emergency Medical Technicians
Resources	2 x A&E vehicles 1 x PCS vehicle	2 x A&E vehicles 1 x PCS vehicle
Cover	Mon – Sun: 24/7 1 x A & E crew	Mon – Sat: 0800 – 1700hrs 1 x A&E crew Mon – Sun: 2300 – 0800hrs 1 x A&E crew Cover is provided by Strabane/Omagh: Mon – Sat: 1700 – 2300hrs Sun: 0800 – 2300hrs

The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) currently has no plans to alter the level of service provision in the Strabane and Castlederg areas. However, NIAS is constantly reviewing its service provision to ensure that adequate resources are in place to deal with emergency demand.

Fire Cover in Northern Ireland

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment he has made of fire cover in Northern Ireland; and to detail any areas that would warrant further assessment, on the basis of economic growth and population movement. (AQW 720/07)

Mr McGimpsey: In line with developments throughout the UK, the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) has reviewed the operational effectiveness of its service delivery since 2003 to take account of the changing demands of Northern Ireland's public and business communities. This process has resulted in the development of:

- an annual review and update of its Integrated Risk Management Plan (IRMP);
- a 2007/08 IRMP Action Plan, which includes a review of fire station locations and resources in Belfast on the basis of social demographics and economic growth; and
- a Risk Assessment System which reflects nationally agreed standards.

NIFRS also works closely with other agencies such as the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE), the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) and the Valuation and Lands Agency to ensure that the data used is up to date and accurately reflects the demographics and building risks across Northern Ireland.

Malicious Calls to the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of false alarm call outs to the Fire Service in the South Antrim constituency, for each of the last five years.

(AQW 721/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service (NIFRS) does not collect operational data on a Westminster Constituency basis. However, the following figures have been collated from data provided by NIFRS stations in the South Antrim area.

Calendar Year	No of Malicious/False Alarms Calls
2002	263
2003	232
2004	243
2005	170
2006	140

Fire Related Casualties / Fatalities

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, for each of the last five years, the number of (a) fire related deaths; and (b) non-fatal fire related casualties, recorded in the South Antrim constituency.

(AQW 724/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service (NIFRS) does not collect operational data on a Westminster Constituency basis. However, the following figures have been collated from data provided by NIFRS stations in the South Antrim area.

Accidental Dwelling Fires (Fatalities & Casualties) in South Antrim (2002 to 2006)

Year	Casualty	Fatality
2002	17	1

Enniskillen and Omagh Hospital Projects

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will explain the reasons why the Sperrin Lakeland Trust and the Western Health and Social Care Trust have denied UNISON access to documentation (under Treasury rights) on the outline business case for the Enniskillen and Omagh Hospital projects; and why the Trust refuses to respond to UNISON's request for an equality impact assessment of these two projects.

(AQW 737/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Outline Business Cases for both the South West Acute Hospital and Omagh Local Hospital Complex have been made available by the Western Health and Care Trust (and previously the Sperrin Lakeland Trust) to the public and trade unions, including Unison. In line with HM Treasury guidance only those sections which were judged commercially confidential, given the current procurement process underway, have not been made available.

An Equality Impact Assessment (EQUIA) was completed by the Sperrin Lakeland Trust in 2005 and a further equality screening exercise was carried out by the Western Health and Care Trust in April 2007. As a result of this it was decided that a full EQIA should be conducted specifically on facilities management services at the Preferred Bidder stage in the procurement, when the details of facilities management arrangements proposed by the Preferred Bidder, and the effects on staff, will be known.

Omagh and Enniskillen Hospital

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm that the deal to secure the building of the proposed new Omagh and Enniskillen Hospitals will include an undertaking from the successful private contractor to provide a guaranteed 25% reduction in whole-time equivalent posts.

Mr McGimpsey: A reduction in whole-time equivalent posts has NOT been stipulated as a tender requirement, either in the Outline Business Case or to the companies bidding to deliver the new facilities in the South West Acute and Omagh Local Hospital projects. Bidders are required only to put forward their detailed proposals for delivering the optimum facilities management services to meet NHS Standard Specifications.

The Trust is assessing the best Value for Money from all bids, regardless of the labour complement within them. Bidder's proposals are being shared with trade union representatives and will be subject to a rigorous value for money evaluation before any decision is reached regarding future service provision.

Key to the evaluation will be the benefits for patients and choosing a service delivery method that provides the best support to deliver quality care.

Health Centre, Omagh

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are his plans to review, and potentially reverse, the decision by the Western Health and Social Services Board regarding the building of a new Health and Social Care Centre for Omagh; and if he will allow the new centre to be built in a central location, according to the wishes of local patients and health care professionals.

(AQW 739/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The inclusion of the Health and Care Centre in the Local Hospital Complex in Omagh is to provide core community services with the aim of achieving a more integrated service in terms of patients more easily accessing diagnostics, outpatients, and related services.

After a detailed area search and analysis of site options, the Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital location was selected as the most suitable. The decision was based on a robust appraisal of a range of options based on need and accessibility as part of the Outline Business case process, and involved consultation with a wide range of stakeholders.

Following robust scrutiny of the Outline Business Case by my Department no evidence has been identified which would merit reconsideration of the decision on location for the new Health and Social Care Centre for Omagh.

Type 1 Diabetes

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people that have been diagnosed with Type 1 diabetes in each of the past three years; and how many of those diagnosed have been under 18 years old.

(AQW 742/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Official estimates of the number of people who have been diagnosed with Type 1 diabetes are not available. However, under the Quality & Outcomes Framework (QOF) of the General Medical Services contract, the total number of GP-registered patients aged 17 and over with diabetes mellitus is recorded. Table 1 shows the total number of people on the QOF diabetes register in the past three years.

	Number of patient on Diabetes Register (aged 17 and over)

In addition, a 2005 study¹ by Ireland and Northern Ireland's Population Health Observatory has made estimates of the expected number people with diabetes, that is, those diagnosed plus those undiagnosed. This study estimated that in Northern Ireland in 2005, the expected number of those aged 20 years and over with Type 1 diabetes was 4,776. The study also estimated that the expected number of the population aged 0-19 years with Type 1 diabetes, most commonly diagnosed in children and adolescents, was 992.

Leukaemia

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people that were diagnosed with leukaemia in each of the last three years.

(AQW 743/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The table below details the number of incidences of leukaemia (ICD-10 C91-C95) in Northern Ireland for the last three years available.

Exemptions to Smoking Ban

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will outline the exemptions to the smoking ban in public places or places of work. (AQW 744/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Smoke-free legislation applies to most enclosed and substantially enclosed public places and workplaces in Northern Ireland. Limited exemptions are available, primarily in premises which represent one person's home, whether permanently or temporarily, and another's workplace. The exemptions available include a designated bedroom in a hotel or guest house, and a designated room used as accommodation for persons aged 16 or over in a residential care home or nursing home. Prisons, young offenders' centres and remand centres are also exempt but are covered by prison rules.

The exemptions are set out in The Smoke-free (Exemptions, Vehicles, Penalties and Discounted Amounts) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, copies of which have been placed in the Assembly Library. The Health Promotion Agency's "Space to Breathe" website www.spacetobreathe.org.uk contains helpful information about smoke-free legislation.

Type 2 Diabetes

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people that have been diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes in each of the last three years; and how many of those diagnosed were under 18 years old. (AQW 745/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Official estimates of the number of people who have been diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes are not available. However, under the Quality & Outcomes Framework (QOF) of the General Medical Services contract, the total number of GP-registered patients aged 17 and over with diabetes mellitus is recorded. Table 1 shows the total number of people on the QOF diabetes register in the past three years.

In addition, a 2005 study¹ by Ireland and Northern Ireland's Population Health Observatory has made estimates of the expected number people with diabetes, that is, those diagnosed plus those undiagnosed. This study estimated that in Northern Ireland in 2005, the expected number of those aged 20 years and over with Type 2 diabetes was 62,287. No estimates have been made of the expected number of the population aged 0-19 years with Type 2 diabetes. Type 2 diabetes usually occurs in older people although it is becoming more common amongst younger people, partly due to lifestyle factors such as diet, lack of physical activity and obesity.

Young Carers

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what additional support he intends to put in place to support children who are acting as carers for their parents and/or guardians. (AQW 747/07)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has allocated an additional £400,000 per annum, from 2005/06, on a recurrent basis to Health and Social Services (HSS) Boards to be earmarked to provide flexible and responsive services for all carers.

The HSS Boards have also submitted a proposal for an additional £0.5m from the Children and Young People funding package to bring consistency and uniformity in relation to assessments for, and services to, young carers through a new regional initiative. Additional allocations under the funding package will be considered by the Executive in due course in the context of its overall spending priorities.

Asylum Seekers and Illegal Immigrants

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what provisions are available through the National Health Service to protect the health of asylum seekers and illegal immigrants in Northern Ireland. (AQW 768/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Immigration and Nationality is a reserved matter and therefore falls within the responsibility of the Home Office rather than my Department or the Northern Ireland Executive.

The current position is that asylum-seekers are entitled to care under the health service while their application to remain in Northern Ireland is being processed. Should their application be unsuccessful then they would no longer be entitled to receive free health care.

Any person who has overstayed their visa period or entered the country illegally is not entitled to free health care. There is, however, an exemption to this in relation to “emergency care” and any “immediately necessary care” to stop a condition becoming life-threatening. In addition, treatment for communicable diseases such as Tuberculosis can also be carried out free, because of their potential impact on public health.

Smoking Cessation Clinics

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, with reference to the smoking ban, the number of smoking cessation clinics available within the Ulster Community Hospitals Trust, in each of the last three years. (AQW 776/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of clinics available within the former Ulster Community & Hospitals Trust in each of the last three years pre-dates the introduction of smoke-free legislation. The information requested is set out below.

2004/05:	20 clinics
2005/06:	22 clinics
2006/07:	49 clinics

Tuberculosis

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps are being taken to screen all (a) staff; (b) visitors; (c) inpatients; and (d) outpatients, for the type of tuberculosis diagnosed in a member of staff at the Causeway Hospital, Coleraine. (AQW 791/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Precautionary screening of all those who may have been in contact with the healthcare worker diagnosed as having Multi-drug Resistant Tuberculosis at Causeway Hospital is continuing to determine the likelihood that this infection has been transmitted to exposed individuals. This is in line with national guidelines. However current expert advice is that this is not an easy infection to catch.

As part of this action, all patients and staff who may have been in contact with this healthcare worker have been contacted by telephone and/or letter. They have been advised of the risk and, if necessary, to make an appointment for screening. The Northern Trust is holding special clinics to facilitate testing.

A helpline has been set up from Friday 8th June for the immediate future from 9am to 9pm, seven days a week. This will enable those with concerns to speak to professionals, and where indicated to arrange appointments for screening.

My Department is continuing to monitor the situation with the Northern Health and Social Services Board.

Testing for Tuberculosis-like Symptoms

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what funding will be made available for General Practitioners in the Causeway Hospital catchment area, to enable them to test anyone attending surgeries with tuberculosis-like symptoms. (AQW 792/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Causeway Hospital is dealing with one case of multi-drug resistant tuberculosis in a healthcare worker. This is not considered to be an outbreak and any additional costs arising from screening and testing of possible contacts will be met from within existing resources.

Tuberculosis Testing

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will undertake to make additional funding available for tuberculosis testing, in light of the tuberculosis outbreak at Causeway Hospital. (AQW 793/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Causeway Hospital is dealing with one case of multi-drug resistant tuberculosis in a healthcare worker. This is not considered to be an outbreak and any additional costs arising from screening and testing of possible contacts will be met from within existing resources.

STARS Early Years Intervention Project

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if his department will provide funding to ensure that the pre-school service provided by the STARS early intervention project at Kilrea Health Centre is supported and safeguarded. (AQW 823/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Stars early years intervention project will continue to be supported by the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety, through the Children's Fund, until March 2008. Government spending plans after that date have yet to be agreed.

Diagnosis of Breast Cancer

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who have been diagnosed with breast cancer in the last three years; and to specify their age groups. (AQW 850/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The table below details the number of incidences of breast cancer (ICD-10 C50) in females in Northern Ireland by age for the last three years available.

TABLE 1: NUMBER OF CASES OF FEMALE BREAST CANCER BY AGE GROUP: 2002-2004

Age	Year of diagnosis
	2002	2003	2004
0 to 29	5	7	6
30 to 34	18	13	16
35 to 39	46	40	47
40 to 44	67	71	75
45 to 49	103	90	115
50 to 54	105	141	137
55 to 59	119	145	125
60 to 64	102	139	148
65 to 69	79	90	107
70 to 74	96	88	96
75 to 79	83	85	95
80 to 84	66	63	85
85 & over	56	63	65
Total	945	1,035	1,117

Notes:

1. Incidence refers to the number of new cases of a cancer diagnosed in Northern Ireland for a particular period.
2. There were 18 males diagnosed with breast cancer between 2002 and 2004. These are excluded from the above table for confidentiality reasons.

This information was provided by the NI Cancer Registry and is the most up-to-date available.

Early Detection and Diagnosis of Breast Cancer

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the examinations and appointments that are available to those people with a family history of breast cancer, to enable early detection and diagnosis. (AQW 851/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Patients with a family history of breast cancer, or a suspected family history, will have an initial assessment of the risk of their developing breast cancer undertaken in primary care prior to referral to appropriate breast care.

Subsequent patient management reflects the assessed risk to the individual. Care may range from follow-up within the breast screening programme for those considered to be at no greater risk than the general population, an annual appointment at a specialist breast clinic for those considered to have an increased risk of breast cancer or, for those considered to be at high risk, testing for a genetic predisposition to breast cancer and annual review at a specialist breast clinic.

Guidance on the referral of patients with suspected breast cancer or concerns about their family history has been issued to GPs and reflects best practice guidance issued by the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE).

Availability of Dedicated Stroke Units

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many dedicated stroke units there are available in each of the health board areas, and what percentage of hospitals have on-site generic rehabilitation units which can be used for recovery. (AQW 852/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of dedicated stroke units available in each health board area, as of 1st April 2007, is shown in the table below.

Health Board	Number of Dedicated Stroke Units Available
Eastern	6
Northern	0
Southern	3
Western	2
Northern Ireland	11

Source: Northern Ireland Health and Social Care Providers

Of the 30 hospitals in Northern Ireland that provide services from the acute programme of care, 47% have on site generic rehabilitation units which can be used for recovery of stroke patients. This figure does not include the dedicated stroke units detailed above.

Support for Informal Carers

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what provision he is making to support carers, and in particular, to address the growing levels of care that is provided unpaid. (AQW 853/07)

Mr McGimpsey: In recognition of the contribution made by informal carers, and taking into account future changes in demographics, my Department published a strategy for carers in January 2006, which aims to recognise, value and support the important role they play in our society. Carers are entitled to have their needs assessed and have access to a range of advice, training and practical support.

In addition to the additional investment that has already been made, I shall be working to ensure that the needs of carers are reflected as a priority within the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Private-Sector Involvement in the Provision of Public Health Service

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to cap private sector involvement in the provision of public health services, and to detail why no guarantees have been given to staff that there will be no compulsory redundancies. (AQW 854/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There are no plans at present to cap the extent of private sector involvement. I consider that it is necessary and appropriate to make use of independent sector providers in some circumstances, for example as a short term measure to supplement local capacity to reduce waiting times for patients and the HSC system will continue to involve the private sector where that is in the public interest. It is not anticipated that contracts with the independent sector would lead to redundancies.

On job reductions, I am currently considering the next steps that should be taken in respect of the HSC following the creation of the five new Trusts. There are no plans for compulsory redundancies, and every effort is and will be made by all HSC organisations to provide suitable alternative employment for those staff displaced through the reorganisation of services. However, I cannot at this stage rule out the possibility that compulsory redundancies may be needed. Further clarification will follow as soon as possible.

Diagnosis of Agoraphobia

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give an indication of the number of people who have been diagnosed with Agoraphobia in each of the Health and Social Services Board areas; and to outline what support services are provided for people with this condition. (AQW 856/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Accurate figures are not available for the number of people suffering from Agoraphobia because they would normally be treated at primary care level. More severe cases may be referred to clinical psychologists or cognitive behavioural therapists. A diagnostic breakdown would only be made on admission to hospital. However, an admission to hospital, with Agoraphobia as a primary diagnosis, would be extremely rare.

Availability of National Health Dental Services

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what emergency dental services are available to people not registered with a dentist under the National Health Service or private practices, particularly at weekends, and for those who cannot afford to pay. (AQW 857/07)

Mr McGimpsey: General Dental Practitioners providing health service dentistry have a contractual obligation to ensure that a registered patient has access to urgent treatment outside of normal surgery hours. In addition, the Northern, Eastern and Southern Health and Social Services Boards run relief of pain clinics to provide out of hours emergency dental services for all patients at times when dental surgeries would not normally be open including weekends and public holidays. These services are available to the public whether they are registered with a Health Service dentist or not.

In the Western Board area, all dental practices have answering machines which are activated when the practices are closed and these machines detail the arrangements for emergency care in their area. Many of the practices in the major towns participate in an emergency rota. Normally, dentists operating the rota do not discriminate between registered and unregistered patients.

Normal Health Service charging arrangements apply for this service; however, those who are normally exempt from charges do not have to pay for treatment.

Withdrawal of Ear, Nose and Throat Surgical Services from Omagh

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the reasoning was behind the withdrawal of children's ear, nose and throat surgical services from Omagh, given the lack of 24-hour paediatric cover in Tyrone County Hospital. (AQW 858/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The recent NHS Clinical Governance Support Team's review of services in the former Sperrin Lakeland Trust highlighted concerns about the level of paediatric cover at the Tyrone County Hospital (TCH). In implementing the recommendations from that review steps have been taken to ensure that if a child needs to remain in hospital overnight after an ENT procedure, as is often the case following a tonsillectomy, they should be admitted to a hospital that has appropriate paediatric cover.

This ensures that if they develop a post-operative complication they are in a hospital that has the necessary facilities and trained staff to respond quickly and effectively.

ENT services continue to be provided at TCH and this includes adult ENT cases, inpatient and daycase, as well children's daycase procedures.

Future Plans for South Tyrone Hospital

Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his future plans for the South Tyrone Hospital.

Mr McGimpsey: As set out in Developing Better Services, South Tyrone Hospital will play a key role as a local hospital, providing a broad range of services, including a minor injuries unit, high quality diagnostic services, day procedures, outpatient services, and intermediate care and rehabilitation beds.

An Outline Business Case for the redevelopment of the South Tyrone Hospital site was received by the Department in March 2007. The Southern Health and Social Care Trust has been asked to review their proposals for the hospital with a view to establishing the requirements to maintain the existing services

Renal Dialysis Units

Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to (a) outline why patients in the Dungannon/South Tyrone area currently have to travel to Daisy Hill Hospital, Newry, for dialysis treatment, (b) give his assessment of these arrangements, and (c) explain why this provision cannot be made available at South Tyrone Hospital.

Mr McGimpsey: Renal Dialysis is provided in a number of units across Northern Ireland. These are, the regional unit in Belfast City Hospital, and local units in Tyrone County, Omagh; Daisy Hill, Newry; Antrim; Altnagelvin; and Ulster Hospitals. The Southern Health and Social Services Board commissions renal services for patients in the Dungannon/South Tyrone area. These patients are given the choice of accessing renal dialysis units in Daisy Hill Hospital in Newry and the Tyrone County hospital in Omagh.

Plans to increase dialysis capacity for the Northern Ireland population are based on the Renal Services Review 2002, which addresses estimated demand to 2010. Increased capacity is being facilitated by the provision of additional stations in existing units. Renal dialysis is a life-saving specialised treatment required by a relatively small number of patients, currently 666 patients across Northern Ireland. As a specialised service it cannot be provided at all hospital locations. The only new unit planned will be at the Causeway Hospital, although this will not be required for some years to come.

Junior Doctors in Obstetrics and Gynaecology at Erne Hospital

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to ensure that the required and appropriate number of junior doctors will be in place to provide sufficient cover for the maternity and obstetrics unit at the Erne Hospital post-August 2007.

(AQW 861/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Six junior doctors will take up speciality training posts in obstetrics and gynaecology in Erne Hospital on 1 August 2007. The number of junior doctors taking up post is in line with previous year's arrangements and is considered to be sufficient to ensure the provision of maternity services.

Psychiatric Unit at Craigavon Area Hospital

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to report on progress in relation to the building of the new psychiatric unit at the Craigavon Area Hospital, including an assessment of whether the expenditure is on target and within budget.

(AQW 888/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust is making excellent progress on the building of the new psychiatric unit, also known as the Crisis Resource Centre, at Craigavon Area Hospital.

Construction work began in September 2006 and the Trust reports that the project is currently running two weeks ahead of schedule and is within budget.

Work is on schedule to meet opening of the new facility planned for early in the Spring of 2008.

Adoption and Fostering Placements

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many children and young people are currently awaiting (a) adoption (b) fostering placement, on a Trust by Trust basis, including age, gender and, how long each is waiting; what plans his department has to encourage more people to come forward to foster/adopt; and to indicate the waiting time for assessments of prospective parents by social services. (AQW 890/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The statistical information requested is not available centrally.

In July 2006, my Department launched an adoption strategy which proposed a radical overhaul of adoption legislation and adoption services with a view to:

- ensuring that effective adoption support services are available for children and adoptive families throughout the process and after adoption;
- building confidence in the adoption process by establishing an independent review mechanism for adoptive applicants who have had an unfavourable recommendation as to their suitability; and
- tackling delays in adoption.

The Department is also consulting on 'Care Matters in Northern Ireland', a strategy also developed under the previous administration, that aims to further improve services for children in and on the edge of care and their carers through increased financial packages, greater assistance with educational and recreational needs, continued support for children up to 21 years of age, and increased parental responsibility for foster carers. Funding for the initiative is being considered as part of the CSR process.

I will consider the implications of implementation of these new strategies in line with other pressures and commitments.

A Fostering Strategy, developed by four HSS Boards and Fostering Network, was commenced in June 2006. This was underpinned by additional funding of £4m in 2006/07 rising to £6m in 2007/08. £1.2m of this funding was used to increase foster care allowances in Northern Ireland in line with rates in Great Britain following a review carried out there. The strategy also involves the setting up of a regional service delivered by one provider from the statutory sector, responsible for the provision of:

- a 24/7 telephone helpline for foster carers, staffed by experienced foster carers;
- a regional recruitment/marketing service, which will work alongside Trusts; and
- a regional training co-ordinator, to co-ordinate and, where appropriate, commission training for foster carers.

The Department also supports and participates in Foster Care Fortnight and National Adoption Week in association with HSC Boards and Trusts and the voluntary sector. High profile media campaigns take place during these promotional periods to raise the profile of adoption and fostering and increase the numbers of prospective adopters and foster carers.

Treatment of Patients Presenting Neurological Symptoms

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the procedures to be followed when a patient arrives at hospital with a suspected neurological condition.

(AQW 894/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The investigation and treatment of a patient with neurological symptoms is a matter of clinical judgement, and will depend on the patient's condition, its severity and the range of treatments available to manage their particular symptoms.

A patient presenting at hospital with a suspected neurological condition will be assessed, and if appropriate, may be referred to a consultant neurologist for a specialised opinion.

Where a patient has been assessed as possibly requiring neurosurgery they would normally be referred to the regional centre at the Royal Victoria Hospital for the specialised opinion of a consultant neurosurgeon.

Encephalomyelitis Cases

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of cases of encephalomyelitis diagnosed, in each year from 2000 to date. (AQW 895/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of cases of encephalomyelitis diagnosed, in each year from 2000 to date is not available. However, the number of admissions to hospital, where the patient had a diagnosis of Post Viral Fatigue Syndrome (PVFS) is available and is detailed in the table below for each calendar year since 2000.

Year	Admissions ¹

Encephalomyelitis

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the professional support services that are in place to provide information, guidance and support to those suffering from encephalomyelitis. (AQW 896/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Encephalomyelitis is a rare neurological condition in which there is inflammation of the brain and spinal cord usually caused by viral, bacterial, fungal or parasitic agents. The symptoms of this condition may come on quickly beginning with encephalitis-like symptoms such as fever, fatigue, headache, nausea and vomiting, and in severe cases, seizures and coma. It may also damage brain tissue leading to neurological symptoms such as visual loss, weakness and paralysis, and difficulty coordinating voluntary muscle movements.

The investigation and treatment of a patient with symptoms of encephalomyelitis is a matter of clinical judgement, and will depend on the patient's condition, its severity and the range of treatments available to manage their particular symptoms.

A patient suspected of suffering from encephalomyelitis will be assessed, and if appropriate, will be referred to a consultant in neurology. Treatment for encephalomyelitis is targeted at suppressing inflammation in the brain using anti-inflammatory drugs. Additional treatment is symptomatic and supportive.

Treatment of Private Patients

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what procedures are in place to ensure that Health and Social Care Trusts recover the full cost of privately provided treatment; and to advise whether these Trusts have a policy of checking with insurers to confirm that the private patient, and associated procedures, are covered. (AQW 900/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Departmental guidance for the health service regarding the treatment of private patients is covered by its document "The Management of Private Practice in Health Service Hospitals". Hospital consultants are required, under their code of practice, which is an agreement between consultants, the Department and the British Medical Association, to notify Trusts of any patients being treated privately. Private patients are also required to sign an undertaking to pay for the treatment they receive. Trusts have a designated Private Patient Officer, who checks with insurers that the private patient and proposed procedures are covered by his or her health insurance. Trusts set charges for private treatment individually in order to fully recover costs.

Waiting Time for Appointments

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time for (a) physiotherapy; (b) occupational therapy; (c) psychiatric treatment; and (d) children's behavioural clinics, broken down by parliamentary constituency. (AQW 904/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the average waiting time for physiotherapy is not collected centrally. Information is, however, collected on completed waiting times for a first outpatient appointment of an episode of care with a community physiotherapist, according to time band. This is shown in Table 1 below, for the position during the quarter ending 31 March 2007. The information is not collected according to parliamentary constituency, but is shown in respect of the relevant community or hospital Health and Social Services Trusts in operation at that date.

(b) Information on the average waiting time for occupational therapy is not collected centrally. Information is, however, collected on completed waiting times for assessment by an occupational therapist, in respect of those aged 19 and over, according to time band. Figures are categorised according to priority and non-priority cases. The figures are shown in Table 2 below, for the position during the quarter ending 31 March 2007. The information is not collected according to parliamentary constituency, but is shown in respect of the community Health and Social Services Trusts in operation at that date.

Information is not available on the average waiting time for psychiatric treatment. However, information is collected on inpatient and outpatient waiting times for a number of mental illness specialties. Waiting list information is collected by time band. It is therefore not possible to calculate the arithmetic mean (average) length of time waiting. The median waiting timebands for (a) outpatients who were waiting for their first appointment and (b) inpatients who were waiting for treatment, in the following specialties: Mental Illness, Child & Adolescent Psychiatry, Forensic Psychiatry, Psychotherapy and Old Age Psychiatry for the quarter ending 31 March 2007 are shown in Tables 3(a) and 3(b) below. The information is not available by parliamentary constituency, but is shown in respect of the provider (hospital) Trusts in operation at that time.

Time Spent on Counselling and Support Services

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of hours of counselling services and support provided by each Health and Social Care Trust, broken down by parliamentary constituency. (AQW 905/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Due to the wide range and diversity of counselling, collecting details of the number of hours counselling services and support provided by each Health and Social Care Trust could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Bamford Review

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline how the recommendations of the Bamford Review, in relation to service user involvement in the design and delivery of mental health services, are to be implemented.

(AQW 913/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There is increasing recognition through mental health services of the need to involve service users in design and delivery of services and service users are already involved in some aspects in some localities. It will be for the Inter-Departmental Task Force being set up to oversee the Government's response to the Bamford review and subsequent implementation to determine how service user involvement can be firmly embedded throughout mental health services. The Mental Health and Learning Disability Board announced on the 15th May 2007 will include service user and carer representation and will be another mechanism for giving service users and carers a voice in reforming and modernising mental health services.

Bangor Community Hospital

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm that there is no intention to cut the services of, or to close, Bangor Community Hospital. (AQW 920/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There no plans to cut services at, or to close, Bangor Community Hospital.

Funding for Patients and their Families Required to Travel outside Northern Ireland

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what funding is available to support patients and their families who have to travel to England for operations, particularly with regard to flights and accommodation.

(AQW 924/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Funding to support patients and their families who are required to travel outside Northern Ireland (NI) is only available to patients who have been referred outside NI for treatment (as opposed to those patients who choose to travel abroad to seek treatment and make their own arrangements).

Assistance with such costs is the responsibility of the patient's local Health and Social Services Board. Expenses covered include the following:

- Transport – this includes flight/ferry costs; mileage at public transport rate; tube; bus; rail; and train fares;
- Accommodation - A subsidy is paid towards the cost of accommodation. It is expected however, that patient hospital accommodation would be used when available;
- Subsistence - In the absence of alternative arrangements, e.g. provision of meal vouchers, the Boards will subsidise food or grocery expenses;
- Other expenses - Boards will consider other expenses necessarily incurred, upon evidence of receipts, e.g. car parking.

The majority of flights are booked and paid for by the Boards/referring hospitals on the patients' behalf in advance of their travel. If/when these arrangements are made prior to assessment/treatment taking place, staff endeavour to make as complete an arrangement as possible – to include air/ferry, accommodation, train and taxi journeys (when necessary) etc. Every effort is made to ensure a smooth transfer during what is already a stressful time for patients and their family or carers.

Support for Young Carers

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assistance is currently provided for young carers; and what proposals he has to increase support for young carers.

(AQW 926/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The needs of young carers are assessed by HSC Trusts and a range of services are provided to meet those needs. There are a number of voluntary organisations, such as Carers Northern Ireland and Barnardo's that also work for and on behalf of young carers. The range and extent of the information, support and services available from the statutory and voluntary sectors are contained in a useful A - Z Guide for Carers. A DVD for young carers, produced by Barnardo's with financial assistance from my Department, is also available.

My Department has allocated an additional £400,000 per annum, from 2005/06, on a recurrent basis to Health and Social Services (HSS) Boards to be earmarked to provide flexible and responsive services for all carers.

£0.5m from the Children and Young People funding package has been made available in 2007/8 only to provide services to young carers across Northern Ireland. Future plans for these services will be considered as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Transportation of Patients

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to minimise delays in the transportation of patients between hospitals by the Ambulance Service, in particular to and from Whiteabbey Hospital, Antrim Hospital and the Royal Victoria Hospital.

(AQW 931/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) has existing procedures in place to minimise delays in transporting patients between hospitals.

The new regional Non-Emergency Medical Dispatch Centre (RNEMDC) at Altnagelvin coordinates and consolidates the management of non-emergency patient transport. This is augmented by a new non-emergency command and control system to assess non-emergency patients' needs so that resources can be planned and deployed on a regional basis. The system will also capture and use clinical data to support transport prioritisation decisions based on clinical need and minimise delays for patients with greatest clinical need.

The Regional Emergency Medical Dispatch Centre (REMDC) in Belfast ensures that emergency resources are used efficiently and effectively. REMDC prioritises incoming 999 calls on a clinical basis and targets rapid response to the most clinically urgent, life threatening calls. Protocols have been shared with hospitals for urgent transport requests to enable their staff to upgrade requests to emergency response in line with the clinical priority of the patient.

Tonsillectomy Operations at the Erne Hospital

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to return tonsillectomy operations to the Erne Hospital on a permanent basis.

(AQW 948/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Recent paediatric tonsillectomy operations performed at the Erne Hospital were undertaken as part of a waiting list initiative. At present the Trust has no plans to repeat this, however outpatient clinics will continue to be held at the Erne Hospital.

Adult ENT services, both in-patient and day case, and children's day case procedures will continue to be provided at Tyrone County and Altnagelvin Hospitals.

Adoption

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to ensure that all those seeking to adopt children will be fairly assessed and treated on an equal basis; and to ensure that all those referred to under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 will have the right to adopt children.

(AQW 973/07)

Mr McGimpsey: HSC trusts welcome enquiries from all persons interested in adopting children and are mindful of their duties in relation to equality legislation. There is, however, no right for any person to adopt. It is the responsibility of adoption agencies to ensure that only those who are suitable to adopt are approved to do so. They also have a responsibility in law to ensure that any adoptive placement is in a child's best interests. Ultimately, it is for the courts to decide whether to grant an adoption order.

Attacks on Emergency Services Personnel

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of members of staff in (a) the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service; and (b) the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, who were injured as a result of attacks upon them when responding to emergency calls, for the last three years. (AQW 974/07)

Attacks on Emergency Services Personnel

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of attacks upon staff of (a) the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service; and (b) the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, when responding to emergency calls, for the last three years. (AQW 975/07)

Respite Care for those with Learning Disabilities

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust area, the number of respite care beds available to those with learning disabilities; and the number of these beds that are specifically allocated to those aged (a) 18 years and under; (b) 19-25; (c) 25-50; (d) 50 and above. (AQW 986/07)

Mr McGimpsey: This information is not collected centrally. However, information is collected on the number of residential places available for those with learning disabilities, although these include places which are occupied on a long-term basis as well as those which may be used to provide respite care. The average number of places available in 2005/06 is presented in the table below.

Respite Care for Young Adults with Learning Difficulties

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust area, the number of young adults aged 19-25 with learning disabilities, who have been assessed as requiring respite care, who have (a) received their full allocation of respite care; (b) received a partial allocation; and (c) received no respite care, in (a) 2005/06; and (b) 2006/07. (AQW 989/07)

Mr McGimpsey: This information is not collected centrally.

Treatment of Alcohol Related Injuries/Illness

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people under 18 that were treated for alcohol related injuries/illnesses at each hospital in Northern Ireland, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1026/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of people under 18 that were treated for alcohol related injuries/illnesses at each hospital in Northern Ireland is not available. However, information on the number of admissions¹, for those aged under 18, to hospitals in Northern Ireland, where the primary or secondary diagnosis was an alcohol-related condition or a combination of an alcohol-related condition and an injury is available and is presented below, for 2003/04, 2004/05 and 2005/06 (the latest year for which data is available).

Orthopaedic Treatment

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of people on the waiting list for an appointment to see an orthopaedic consultant; (b) the waiting time for such appointments; and (c) the average time between the first appointment and referral for joint replacement surgery, for those patients so referred. (AQW 1045/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on (a) the number of people on the waiting list for an appointment to see an orthopaedic consultant and; (b) the waiting time for such appointments are contained in the table below.

Information on (c) the average time between the first appointment and referral for joint replacement surgery, for those patients so referred is not readily available and could only be complied at disproportionate cost.

Northern Ireland Suicide Prevention Strategy

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of GPs in the Derry/Londonderry area who have taken up the training available under the Protective Life Strategy, which has a budget of £300,000 for the provision of such training, in order to address the need for more professional help in identifying people at risk. (AQW 1073/07)

Mr McGimpsey: To date nine GPs in Derry/Londonderry have participated in the new GP Depression Awareness Training programme, which has been developed as part of the roll out of the Northern Ireland Suicide Prevention Strategy.

In addition, a further 20 GPs have participated in this training programme from the wider Western Health and Social Services Board Area. The roll out of this training programme will continue as a matter of priority during 2007.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Funding for Roads in Donaghadee

Mr Alex Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how much money has been spent on roads in Donaghadee over the last five years. (AQW 612/07)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): My Department's Roads Service has advised me that some elements of its operational budget including resurfacing, patching, gully emptying, grass cutting etc. are allocated on a Section Office basis. However these figures do not give an overall indication of actual spend within the section as sizeable elements of the budget are allocated either on a Divisional basis, or indeed on a province-wide basis. These include major and minor improvement works, traffic management, and street lighting.

Roads Service does, however, undertake an analysis of actual spend during the preceding financial year in each council area, which in the case of Ards Borough Council incorporates the Donaghadee area.

The table below provides details of spend in the Ards Borough Council area during each of the last five years for which information is available.

Council	Functional Area	2001/02 £K	2002/03 £K	2003/04 £K	2004/05 £K	2005/06 £K

	Maintenance	3,087	3,216	3,547	3,661	4,307

Strategic Road Improvement Programme

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail additional strategic roads measures that are intended to support job creation/business expansion and increased housing development in the Ardboe, Moortown, Ballinderry, Loup, and Ballyronan areas of the Cookstown District. (AQW 631/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the composition and delivery of its major works programme is consistent with the level of investment proposed under the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland (ISNI), published in December 2005. The ISNI sets out a high level view of planned investment up to 2015 with proposals for up to £1.4 billion of strategic road improvement schemes. Around £1 billion of these schemes have already been identified and Roads Service is currently considering responses to a consultation exercise on a further £400million of major works proposals.

The Strategic Road Improvement Programme is a key component of plans to improve our transport infrastructure and Road Service is focused on progressing these major works schemes which are a catalyst for economic development and provide the means for all citizens to access social and educational services as well as leisure activities.

I can confirm that a scheme to construct a dual carriageway from Castledawson Roundabout to the Toome Bypass and from the Bypass to the start of the M22 at Randalstown is now being progressed through the statutory procedures. Furthermore, the Roads Service Forward Planning Schedule contains proposals for a bypass of Magherafelt and an Eastern Distributor Road for Cookstown, which will provide an alternative route for through traffic, avoiding the town centre.

Road Safety in Finis

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take to improve road safety in the Finis area of Lagan Valley; and, in particular, if he will consider placing gateway traffic calming measures on the approach roads to the area. (AQW 646/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service identifies the need for improvements in road safety on an ongoing basis. Within Finis, during the current financial year, Roads Service plans to improve facilities for pedestrians by providing a section of footway, to complete a pedestrian link between Finis and Dromara. In addition, a scheme is programmed for 2009/10 to improve visibility on the Finis to Dromara road at its junction with Bridge Road, a short distance outside Finis village.

In terms of traffic calming, Roads Service does not implement these measures for roads to which the national speed limit applies, as is the case at Finis. Typically, measures are considered for roads where speed limits of 30mph or 40mph are in place. Given the rural nature of Finis and the lack of development within the area, the existing national speed limit is considered to be appropriate and accordingly, Roads Service has no plans to introduce traffic calming in the area.

Roads Service will, of course, continue to provide and maintain the appropriate road signs and markings required to warn, direct and inform road users.

Flooding at Station Road, Saintfield

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail what steps he is taking to alleviate flooding at Station Road, Saintfield, following a site meeting on 12 March 2007. (AQW 672/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that during a site meeting on 12 March 2007, attended by you and two local residents, officials agreed to arrange for a pipe to be laid under the road to alleviate flooding and that the work would be carried out during June 2007.

I am further advised that, following subsequent detailed consideration, officials have concluded that directional drilling would be the best means of placing the pipe under the road. This will avoid the need for deep excavation in peaty ground and will keep traffic disruption to a minimum.

Due to the limited availability of specialist contractor's plant this will result in a slight delay in the commencement of the work. However, I am pleased to be able to advise that Roads Service anticipates that this scheme will be completed before the end of August 2007.

Distributor Road for Dungannon

Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made on the provision of a distributor road for Dungannon. (AQW 718/07)

Mr Murphy: Following a public inquiry into the Draft Dungannon and South Tyrone Area Plan 2010 in February 2003, the Planning Appeals Commission, having considered both the Department's and the objector's case for an Eastern Distributor Road, recommended that it should not be included in the Development Plan.

Accordingly, the Dungannon and South Tyrone Area Plan 2010, adopted in 2004, does not contain any such road proposal.

However, a number of measures to assist in relieving traffic congestion in Dungannon have been identified in the Sub Regional Transport Plan 2015, published on 11 June 2007. They include widening the A29 Moy Road as well as junction improvements at the Oaks Road roundabout, Circular Road at Northland Row and Ranfurly Road at Perry Street, all of which will be subject to the availability of resources.

Road Drainage System, Clonduff Drive

Mr Robin Newton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place to upgrade existing drainage systems in Clonduff Drive, Belfast, in light of the fact that it has flooded four times in the last 17 years. (AQW 725/07)

Mr Murphy: I should point out that the extreme flooding which occurred at a number of locations in the afternoon of 12 June 2007, was not caused by any failure to maintain the operational effectiveness of the storm water gullies or road drains. The gullies, road drains and watercourses were overwhelmed by the deluge of rain which fell within a 2 hour period.

With regard to Clonduff Drive, I am advised that the road drainage system was not the cause of the flooding experienced on 12 June 2007. The performance of the underlying drainage systems into which the road drainage system discharges at this location, which includes a storm sewer and the Loop River, are matters for Northern Ireland Water and DARD Rivers Agency respectively. I have therefore passed this reply to the Chief Executives of Northern Ireland Water and the Rivers Agency for their direct consideration.

Traffic Volume, Frances Street, Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of vehicles using Frances Street, Newtownards, on a daily basis. (AQW 772/07)

Mr Murphy: I should explain that my Department's Roads Service collects traffic volume data by means of 273 automatic census points strategically located across the road network. The information is recorded either for 365 days per year or for one week in each quarter during the year and an annual average calculated. The results are published in Roads Service's annual Traffic and Travel Information Report, which presents the traffic volumes in a variety of formats for each site.

Unfortunately, Roads Service has no traffic census point located on Frances Street, Newtownards and therefore cannot provide the information you request.

Traffic Volume, Kempstones Road, Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of vehicles using the Kempstones Road between Newtownards and Dundonald, on a daily basis. (AQW 773/07)

Mr Murphy: As you will be aware, my Department's Roads Service collects traffic volume data by means of 273 automatic census points strategically located across the road network. The information is recorded either for 365 days per year or for one week in each quarter during the year and an annual average calculated. The results are published in Roads Service's annual Traffic and Travel Information Report, which presents the traffic volumes in a variety of formats for each site.

Unfortunately Roads Service does not have a traffic census point on the Kempstones Road. It does however have one closer to Dundonald on the Upper Newtownards Road, near the site of the old Quarry Inn. Two-way traffic flow information for the past three years from this site is shown in the table below.

Road No.	Location	Annual Average Daily Traffic
		2004	2005	2006
A20	Upper Newtownards Road	24270	23080	24214

Traffic Volume, Portaferry Road, Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of vehicles using the Portaferry Road, Newtownards, on a daily basis. (AQW 774/07)

Mr Murphy: As you are aware traffic volume data is collected by my Department's Roads Service by means of 273 automatic census points strategically located across the road network. The information is recorded either for 365 days per year or for one week in each quarter during the year and an annual average calculated. The results are published in Roads Service's annual Traffic and Travel Information Report, which presents the traffic volumes in a variety of formats for each site.

Roads Service has a traffic census point located on the A21 Bangor Road, Newtownards and the annual average daily two way traffic flow information for the last three years at this census point is shown in the table below.

Location	Annual Average Daily Traffic
	2004	2005	2006
A20 Portaferry Road, Newtownards	11,400	11,520	11,939

Companion Travel Scheme

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development, further to his reply to AQW 41/07, to provide the estimated annual cost of providing companion free travel, in cases where assistance is required by passengers who are eligible for free travel on public transport. (AQW 798/07)

Mr Murphy: The cost of any companion travel scheme would depend critically on the eligibility criteria to be used and the definition of the circumstances in which assistance would be required. I therefore do not have an estimate.

Traffic Volume, A22 Belfast to Comber Road

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an estimate of the daily volume of traffic along the A22 Comber to Belfast road. (AQW 800/07)

Mr Murphy: I should explain that traffic volume data is collected by my Department's Roads Service by means of 273 automatic census points strategically located across the road network. The information is recorded either for 365 days per year or for one week in each quarter during the year and an annual average calculated. The results are published in Roads Service's annual Traffic and Travel Information Report, which presents the traffic volumes in a variety of formats for each site.

Roads Service has a traffic census point located on the A22 Comber to Belfast Road and the annual average daily two way traffic flow information for the last three years at this census point is shown in the table below.

Location	Annual Average Daily Traffic
	2004	2005	2006
A22 Comber to Belfast Road	10,770	10,860	11,046

Improvement Scheme, Ballygawley Roundabout

Lord Morrow of Clogher Valley asked the Minister for Regional Development to confirm the starting date for (a) the new dual carriageway from Moygashel, Stangmore roundabout, to Ballygawley roundabout; (b) the improvements to the A5 Tullyvar road, and (c) the improvements to the A4 from Ballygawley roundabout to Annahilla. (AQW 837/07)

Mr Murphy: The main A4 dualling from the M1 motorway at Moygashel, Stangmore Roundabout, to Ballygawley Roundabout is due to commence on site in spring 2008. The A5 Tullyvar and the A4 Annaghilla road improvement schemes will commence shortly afterwards.

Funding for Water Infrastructure Improvements

Mr Fred Cobain asked the Minister for Regional Development in the absence of an improved financial package, what plans, are in place to address funding for water infrastructure improvements. (AQW 883/07)

Mr Murphy: In light of the Executive's decision to conduct a comprehensive review of the financing of water and sewerage services, I have announced terms of reference for an independent review chaired by professor Paddy Hillyard. The independent review will address, "the cost of water and sewerage services and how these will be funded". It will report on this aspect by Autumn. The scope of the review specifically includes the investment programme including, "the scale, structure and phasing of investment planned to meet requirements

Unfinished Roads, Bashfordsland, Carrickfergus

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the unfinished roads at the Bashfordsland housing development in Carrickfergus. (AQW 932/07)

Mr Murphy: I should explain that responsibility for bringing development roads to adoption standard rests with developers and when the roads and sewers are properly constructed to the Departments standards, Roads Service will complete the adoption. Although the developer is primarily responsible for completing the roads and sewers in a development and the Department has limited control over progress, where satisfactory completion of the roads and sewers is not effected within a reasonable time, the Department has powers under The Private Streets (NI) Order 1980 to enable it to complete the necessary work at the developer's expense.

Roads Service is aware of the situation at Bashfordsland and has been liaising with the developer to encourage completion of the works. In the absence of a positive response, enforcement action under the terms of the Private Streets Order was initiated in February 2007.

Prior to appointing a Roads Service contractor to undertake the remedial works it is necessary to identify the nature and full extent of the works that are required. While road surfacing defects have been relatively easy to identify, initial investigations into the condition of the development's sewers have revealed substantial damage and blockages that have prevented completion of the CCTV surveys. Roads Service staff are working closely with Northern Ireland Water colleagues to conclude the sewer investigations as quickly as possible.

It is difficult to accurately predict a timescale for completion of the works at this time, as the full extent of the sewer repairs is not yet known. However, Roads Service is aiming to have a contractor on site immediately following the forthcoming July holiday period. Roads and sewers will be reconstructed as necessary and, under the terms of the Private Streets Order, the streets will be adopted upon completion of the works. The department will of course be pursuing the developer for the full costs of this work.

Sewage System in Kircubbin

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what are his intentions with regard to the continuation of the sewerage system a further 50-60 yards, towards 94 Rubane Road, Kircubbin.

(AQW 958/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issues raised are operational matters, I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to these questions.

Cullybackey Bypass

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the proposed Cullybackey bypass. (AQW 1025/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS) envisaged that major road improvements would be focussed on the Regional Strategic Transport Network (RSTN) and it did not envisage any significant expenditure on major works schemes off the RSTN, so the affordability of schemes like a bypass for Cullybackey remains a difficult issue.

The land needed for this bypass is currently protected and the adjoining land zoned for housing. Discussions have been ongoing for some time with a potential housing developer about how the land could be developed, while helping to deliver a portion of the bypass as part of the development. These discussions concluded recently with the issue of planning approval for a housing development to include a short section (200m) of the proposed new road. This represents approximately 20% of the overall scheme.

Completion of the remainder of the route may only be considered on a priority basis and subject to the availability of land and financial funds. The scheme is not included in any current Roads Service programme.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Social Housing

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to address the differential experiences of members of the Protestant and Catholic communities in relation to access to social housing, as evidenced by waiting list statistics. (AQW 669/07)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): I am content that all social housing allocations made by the Housing Executive and Registered Housing Associations are made on the basis of need as determined by the points awarded under the Common Selection Scheme – a scheme that was equality proofed and subject to detailed and widespread consultation. Allocations cannot be made on any other grounds.

The Housing Executive formulates plans and programmes for social housing that take into account supply and demand issues. This effectively targets additional supply into areas with the greatest demand, ensuring that assessed need is met.

I recognise that due to supply and demand issues, people have differential experiences in accessing social housing.

Removal of Building Rubble

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to give a timescale for the removal of building rubble at no. 42 Windmill Road, Millisle, and to explain why it has taken over three years for this issue to be addressed. (AQW 673/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive undertook a Multi Element Improvement Scheme at 42 Windmill Gardens and it appears that rubble was left in the garden of the property following the completion of the work. The Housing Executive however received no complaints from the tenant and was not therefore aware that there was a problem. The site has now been inspected and the Housing Executive has instructed the contractor for the MEI scheme to cut back grass and remove any large debris, during this week.

Vesting Orders

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of occasions that the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has used its powers to vest land for social housing in each of the last ten years. (AQW 690/07)

Ms Ritchie: The number of occasions on which the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has used its powers to vest land for social housing in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Number
1997	1
1998	4
1999	3
2000	1
2001	1
2002	6
2003	4
2004	6
2005	5
2006	2
2007	2

Included in these 35 vesting orders were some 3,800 dwellings in addition to plots of land.

Bonfires

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister for Social Development what action she will take to prevent the building and lighting of bonfires on Housing Executive land in Rasharkin, in order to protect property in close proximity. (AQW 753/07)

Ms Ritchie: Rasharkin is within the Ballymoney Borough Council area and the local Community Safety Partnership Group has set up a bonfire sub-committee to review this issue. The committee comprises representation on an inter agency basis, including staff from the Housing Executive's Ballymoney District Office. The Housing Executive also supports an annual safer bonfire competition to encourage awareness of the health and safety, and environmental, implications of bonfires.

There are currently no bonfire sites situated on Housing Executive land in Rasharkin.

Purchase of Land in Calhame Park, Cloughey

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to explain the delay in processing the application to purchase land adjacent to 19 Calhame Park, Cloughey. (AQW 762/07)

Ms Ritchie: The delay related to the fact that this is a small piece of land which the Housing Executive identified as having development potential as a site for residential housing. The Executive decided to retain the land and carry out a latent demand testing exercise this year to establish the level of social housing need in the area. The two parties interested in purchasing the land have been informed.

Neighbourhood Renewal Schemes

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, for each post supported under Neighbourhood Renewal Phase 2, (a) the nature of the post; (b) the geographical location; and (c) the National Joint Council scale for each post, in each of the Neighbourhood Renewal Areas in North Belfast.

(AQW 808/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is included in the table below. The National Joint Council (NJC) scale provided is the current scale for 2006/2007. (In some instances where the NJC scale does not apply, the relevant pay scale referred to is indicated e.g. NIPPA pay scales.)

(a) Nature of post	(b) Geographical Location Neighbourhood Renewal Area (NRA)	(c) NJC Scale (Point Band)

Social Housing in Ards Borough

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if she will initiate a strategy, involving the Housing Executive and Housing Associations, to provide new-build and social housing in the Ards Borough, as a matter of urgency. (AQW 816/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive has in place a number of robust planning mechanisms that establish locally and strategically the current and projected levels of housing need within each Council area and indeed within each settlement and catchment area. These mechanisms include a formal annual assessment of housing need which is used to develop the Social Housing Development Programme and to inform Planning Service under the remit of PPS12 of such needs so Area Plans and the Planning system can make land available. The annual District Housing Plans currently outline the extent of identified social housing need and the Social Housing Development Programme proposals for addressing that need.

The Housing Executive has submitted formal objections to the Ards & Down and Belfast Metropolitan Area Plans, pointing out a general lack of zoning and provision for social and affordable housing within those plans

Neighbourhood Renewal Programme

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development to ensure that any proposed review of the Neighbourhood Renewal Programme will not prevent essential funding going to community groups in the Derry/Londonderry area post-30 June 2007; and to detail when the action plans agreed by the Neighbourhood Partnership Boards will be ready for full implementation. (AQW 880/07)

Ms Ritchie: Neighbourhood Renewal works across Government to tackle the root causes of deprivation by ensuring that the needs of the community come first. There are no plans to review this policy. The 6 Neighbourhood Action Plans in the North West have been agreed by the Neighbourhood Partnerships and extensive discussions with Government Departments and Agencies to take forward the implementation of these plans are underway. I expect that agreement to best address the needs identified in Action Plans will be reached well in advance of the end of this financial year. Meanwhile, all community groups, citywide or otherwise, currently funded by DSD providing key services in Neighbourhood Renewal areas will be eligible to seek extension funding. The key criteria will be that they are addressing priority needs in the most disadvantaged neighbourhoods.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 6 July 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Northern Ireland Bureau

Mr David Burnside asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what direct business input there has been to the management and direction of the Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington D.C. (AQW 375/07)

The First Minister and Deputy First Minister (Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness): Economic Development is one of the primary objectives for the Northern Ireland Bureau. The business community is actively involved in the Bureau's management through an informal economic advisory group of business people from both the United States and Northern Ireland, based in the Greater Washington, DC area. Members of this network were consulted in the development of the Bureau's strategy and meet regularly with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, Invest NI and Ministers during economic development visits to Washington, DC.

Contract to Draft Legislation

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give details of all private companies under contract to draft legislation on behalf of Northern Ireland government departments; and the total costs incurred due to the use of these companies in each of the last three years. (AQW 585/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Office of the Legislative Counsel in our Department drafts all primary legislation (Assembly Bills) for the Executive's Legislative Programme. Normally the drafting of subordinate legislation (Statutory Rules) is carried out by officials in the relevant department with the assistance of the Departmental Solicitor's Office in the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The Department for Regional Development employed the law firm Herbert Smith to provide legal advice in relation to the development of the new arrangements for delivering water and sewerage services. This included the drafting of some subordinate legislation but we understand that the cost of this cannot be readily disaggregated from the total cost of advice provided.

Lisburn City Council

Mr Paul Butler asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will examine the reasons why the Equality Commission did not ensure Lisburn City Council's compliance with its recommendations on the Council's policy in respect of flags, arising from the investigation of 4 July 2006. (AQW 649/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister has no legal authority to scrutinise investigations undertaken by the Equality Commission under its powers and duties contained in Schedule 9 to the NI Act 1998, except where they relate to Government Departments.

Unemployment and Economic Inactivity

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it has taken, in legislative and policy measures, to address the religious differential in terms of unemployment, long-term unemployment, and economic inactivity. (AQW 668/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: While we note from the Labour Force Survey 2005 religion report that progress has been made since 1990, we remain committed to tackling the differential experience in unemployment between the two communities and a range of measures both legislative and non-legislative have been put in place to deal with this.

One of the challenges is the need to tackle inequality in the labour market. Key to tackling such inequality is the creation of employment opportunities as a primary route out of poverty and the promotion of equality of opportunity.

New Targeting Social Need has in the past directed resources and effort at those in greatest need as a means of reducing community differentials. Future policy to tackle poverty and patterns of deprivation must continue to be based on objective need. In addition, a strong framework of fair employment and broader anti-discrimination legislation provides protection from discrimination in the area of employment, including training, recruitment and promotion.

Policy responsibility to help people move towards and into work rests with the Minister for Employment and Learning. Programmes and services for the unemployed and economically inactive are available to all eligible clients, irrespective of their community background.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to provide a schedule of equality impact assessments conducted by each department, including the number of policies screened out, and those which were subject to a full equality impact assessment, over the past two years.

(AQW 865/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The details requested by the member are published in the annual reports on implementation of Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which are submitted annually to the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland by each individual Department. Details for 2004/05 and 2005/06 are currently available on Departments' respective websites. Information for 2006/07 is in preparation and will be available at the end of August 2007, when these reports are submitted to the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland.

Rural Poverty

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail what steps it has taken to identify the extent of rural poverty in Northern Ireland, and what action it proposes to deal with the issue.

(AQW 893/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The preferred Government method of measuring poverty is through the Family Resources Survey. This survey was first introduced to Northern Ireland in 2002/03. The survey is sponsored by the Department for Social Development (DSD). The survey incorporates a geographical marker that allows for poverty levels to be compared on an urban and rural basis.

The most recent year for which data has been published by DSD is 2004/05. Results for 2004/05 estimated that 19% of all individuals live in relative income poverty after adjustments for housing costs have been made. A household is classed as being in relative income poverty if the household income is less than 60% of the contemporary median income level.

In terms of urban and rural, the level of relative income poverty in the Belfast Metropolitan Urban Area (BMUA) of 17% compares with 23% in other urban areas and 19% in rural areas.

'Lifetime Opportunities – Governments Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy for Northern Ireland' (which still has to be formally considered and adopted by the Executive Committee) highlights that while poverty and multiple deprivation tend to be concentrated in urban areas, rural communities are also at risk with high levels of deprivation in less accessible rural areas.

Within the strategy the need, to strengthen the social and economic infrastructure of rural areas by supporting farm based non-agri businesses and non-farm small rural businesses in the creation of rural jobs, is recognised. Government commits to work to ensure that rural and fisheries dependent villages and communities in greatest need, are sustained and regenerated and have equitable access to public services and programmes. Government further commits to seek to build a strong rural community infrastructure which will help provide economic and social opportunities for everyone, but in particular, for young people who want to live and work in the countryside.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's (DARD) vision of a thriving and sustainable rural community and environment means that it is engaged in many activities that will directly and indirectly tackle rural poverty.

DARD is in the final stages of obtaining approval for its 2007-13 Rural Development Programme. This programme will invest over £500m in rural areas over the next 6 years, with the focus on supporting the farming industry, improving the environment, and improving the quality of life in rural areas. The Programme will make a significant contribution to Government's Anti Poverty strategy by supporting initiatives to ensure that, by 2015, the needs of rural communities are met by equitable access to public services and programmes and through programmes which enhance economic opportunities in rural areas and strengthen their social infrastructure.

In addition DARD's College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise aims to build up a skilled workforce within the agri-food sector by providing training opportunities for those entering and working in the industry, and development programmes to assist the development of competitive and sustainable farm businesses.

Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many staff surveys were carried out by this department in each of the last two years, and what was the total cost.

(AQW 916/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has undertaken a total of 20 staff surveys in the last 2 years, 14 in 2005/06 and 6 in 2006/07 at a total cost of £750.

Older People's Commissioner

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to provide details of work undertaken by junior Ministers in relation to the creation of an Older People's Commissioner.

(AQW 947/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: A key concern for Ministers is how best to champion older people's issues and Junior Ministers have been given particular responsibility for older people.

This matter of an Older People's Commissioner was debated by the Assembly on Tuesday 5th June when an undertaking was given to examine carefully the case for establishing such an office.

Junior Ministers will now agree how this assessment should be taken forward and on completion of the work will seek agreement on proposals through the Executive Committee, in consultation with the Departmental Committee.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Tree Felling Licences

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will consider the introduction of tree felling licences. (AQW 814/07)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): My Department has completed an extensive review of forestry policy which resulted in the publication of Northern Ireland Forestry: A Strategy for Sustainability and Growth in March 2006 and which confirmed future forest policy and produced a strategy for its delivery.

A key recommendation is to regulate the felling of trees so that woodland owners will be compelled to manage their woods with greater consideration to sustainability, including the timing and extent of felling and the composition of regenerating woodlands.

It will be necessary to amend the Forestry Act (Northern Ireland) 1953 to give effect to the proposed regulation and I am currently considering this and other amendments to the Act. Once drafted, there will be a formal 13 week consultation period when interested parties will be given the opportunity to comment on the changes and the Bill will also be considered within the Assembly.

Rivers Agency

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many Rivers Agency officials are available within her department to address problems in (a) Ards Borough, and (b) Strangford.

(AQW 818/07)

Ms Gildernew: Drainage and flooding problems in Ards Borough and Strangford Council Areas are handled by the Rivers Agency's Eastern Region Office in Lisburn (which covers the Greater Belfast and Lisburn areas)

Routinely 10 industrial workers together with 2 Foremen are available for frontline operations in these areas. These are supervised and managed by the respective Area Engineers and other engineering and technical staff who have broader management responsibilities across wider areas. These frontline staff may be augmented by staff from other Rivers Agency Areas as the scale and nature of an emergency may demand.

Detailed information on the deployment of staff may be obtained from the Rivers Agency's Regional Manager in Lisburn at Telephone 028 92606110.

Fishing Industry

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to provide figures for those who have been working in the fishing industry in 2004, 2005 and 2006. (AQW 821/07)

Ms Gildernew: My Department gathers information regarding the number of people employed in the fishing industry, including the processing and marketing sector as well as those employed in professions related to the fishing industry in the harbours of Ardglass, Kilkeel, Portavogie and the North Coast ports. Minor ports are not included.

In 2004, there were 1433 people employed full-time and 227 employed part-time within the fishing industry. In 2005, there were 1401 employed on a full-time basis, with 268 employed part-time. In 2006, 1319 were employed in the fishing industry full-time, with 282 employed part-time.

Bird Flu

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, with reference to the recent outbreak of bird flu in Wales, what steps she has taken, and proposes to take in the future, to ensure that Northern Ireland and its agricultural interests are protected from a possible outbreak. (AQW 897/07)

Ms Gildernew: My Department is constantly monitoring developments and reviewing the risk of Avian Flu being introduced to Northern Ireland. A range of preventive measures are in place, which are on-going, to address the risk of Avian Flu entering Northern Ireland and to prevent it spreading in poultry. Surveillance of domestic poultry and wild birds is undertaken. A NI Bird Register is in place to gather essential information about poultry, game and other captive birds for the purposes of risk assessment, disease prevention and control. My Department has issued extensive guidance to bird keepers on biosecurity measures to protect their birds. This is also available on the DARD website.

In response to confirmation of low pathogenic Avian Flu H7N2 in North Wales, my Department carried out an assessment of the risk and took additional precautionary measures to minimise the risk of spread of the disease to Northern Ireland. A temporary precautionary ban was imposed on the movement of poultry from Great Britain to attend bird gatherings in Northern Ireland. Additional General Licence conditions were introduced in relation to imports of poultry and ornamental fowl from Great Britain to ensure protection and traceability were maintained. My Department reiterated its advice that bird keepers remain vigilant for signs of disease and maintain good biosecurity and reminded bird keepers of the requirement to register on the NI Bird Register. These precautionary steps were in proportion to the risk associated with the Wales outbreak. Throughout the outbreak, my Department worked closely with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, the Welsh Assembly Government, and in conjunction with NI stakeholders, to monitor developments and to keep the position under review. Very close contact was also maintained with the Department of Agriculture and Food in Dublin.

As regards future steps, it is my intention that the range of on-going preventive measures that is already established in Northern Ireland will remain in place. In addition, my Department will continue to keep the Avian Flu situation and the need for further measures under constant review in proportion to the level of risk.

My Department has a contingency plan in place to ensure that Avian Flu is dealt with quickly and effectively if it does occur here.

DARD Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many staff surveys were carried out by her department in each of the last two years, and what was the total cost. (AQW 915/07)

Ms Gildernew: The following table highlights the number of staff surveys conducted by DARD over the last two years and the total cost involved in conducting these surveys.

Year	Number of surveys	Total cost
2005/06	8	£10,078
2006/07	7	£9,070.50

Staff Employed Beyond the Age of 65

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what facility exists, at present, for members of staff in her department to work in their existing post beyond the default retirement age. (AQW 937/07)

Ms Gildernew: Since 1 October 2006 staff in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development wanting to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised all such applications are approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements). To date all staff in DARD have remained in their existing posts.

Flooding at Killyleagh Football Club

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she will take to alleviate the flooding at Killyleagh Football Club playing fields; and if she will consider providing a larger water pipe crossing the main road in order to help the water to drain. (AQW 941/07)

Ms Gildernew: Rivers Agency is investigating the recent flooding at Killyleagh Football Club playing fields and the scope and responsibility for remedial action. The culverted watercourse crossing the football field (which may have contributed to the flooding) is not designated under the Drainage (Northern Ireland) Order 1973 and therefore maintenance is the responsibility of adjacent occupiers of land. Rivers Agency is not yet in a position to comment on the adequacy of the main road culvert but will liaise with DRD Roads Service on this as necessary. Road culvert would be a matter for Roads Service.

Flooding at Killyleagh Football Club

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to explain why the excess water at Killyleagh Football Club playing fields was not cleared by officials, following their call to the site on Sunday 17 June 2007. (AQW 942/07)

Ms Gildernew: When Rivers Agency officials attended the flooding incident on 17 June they placed sand bags to protect the Club pavilion. The depth of flood waters and the need for further investigation of the complex drainage system affecting the playing fields made it impossible to clear excess water. This was achieved during a further site inspection on 20 June. I would explain that in the initial emergency response to flood reports Rivers Agency's immediate priority is to alleviate risk to life, and damage to built property such as dwellings or, in this case, the pavilion.

Watercourse at Greyabbey

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to confirm that Rivers Agency is responsible for the water course that runs behind numbers 2 and 4 Strangford View, Greyabbey; and to explain why her department has stopped cleaning the metal grid that covers the entrance to the water course. (AQW 943/07)

Ms Gildernew: The watercourse in question is not designated within the terms of the Drainage (Northern Ireland) Order 1973 and therefore Rivers Agency has never had responsibility for maintenance of either the watercourse or the metal grid (grille) that covers the entrance to it. Responsibility for maintenance rests with adjacent landowners. The Agency did however provide an emergency response to reported flooding at this location on 15 June 2007 and, on a one-off basis to alleviate flooding, cleared the blocked grille.

Underspend of European Funding

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail, as a consequence of N+2 underspend, (a) the amount of European funding not spent by her department; (b) the amount of European funding transferred to other departments or agencies; (c) how transferred monies were ultimately spent; and (d) what impact this has had on meeting the outcomes contained within the Rural Development Action Plan. (AQW 965/07)

Ms Gildernew: As a consequence of N+2 underspend my Department:

- (a) did not spend €1,500,000 (EU) and €500,000 (National) from Measure 1.4 of the Interreg programme;
- (b) all of this funding was transferred to either the Department of Finance and Personnel or the Department of Regional Development;
- (c) this money was transferred to other Interreg measures which directly target rural economic and business development projects and the improvement of rural infrastructure in cross-border hinterlands.
- (d) as the reallocated funds remained within the Interreg Programme it was used to achieve the targets contained in that programme such as creating and safeguarding jobs in rural businesses / enterprises.

Use of Meat and Bone Meal

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is his department's policy on the use of meat and bone meal. (AQW 991/07)

Ms Gildernew: The use of meat and bone meal must be conducted in accordance with the EU Animal By-Products Regulation No. 1774/2002, which is implemented by the Animal By-Products Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003. The options for use depend on whether it is considered to pose a high risk to animal and public health, for example, if it contains Specified Risk Material; or a low risk if it contains material that was fit for human consumption. Depending on the risk, meat and bone meal may be used for energy production, as an organic fertiliser, or in petfood.

Bridge Replacement at Aghagallen

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give a timescale for the replacement of the bridge on the laneway to the farm at 109 Cornakinnegar Road, Aghagallen. (AQW 1063/07)

Ms Gildernew: As advised in a letter of 18 June 2007 from officials in DARD, Rivers Agency, there are no plans to replace the bridge. A site inspection by Rivers Agency staff failed to identify any hydraulic reason to replace the bridge. Rivers Agency did not construct the bridge therefore responsibility for its structural integrity and replacement rests with the riparian owner.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Multi -Sports Stadium

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will disclose the reasons why the potential sites for a multi-sports stadium, other than the Maze prison, were ruled out. (AQW 811/07)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): All the sites submitted for consideration for a Shared Future Multi-Sports Stadium were initially subject to a rigorous technical review covering planning, transport, contamination, site assembly and other related issues. The short-listed sites were then tested against cost, development potential and acceptability to the three sports bodies, Soccer, Rugby and Gaelic. Only the Maze/Long Kesh site was deemed capable of delivering against these criteria. This report will be made available on request.

Multi-Sports Stadium

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will make available, in full, all information relating to the selection of the site for the proposed multi-sports stadium. (AQW 812/07)

Mr Poots: All relevant information in relation to the selection of the site for the proposed Multi-Sports Stadium will be released once negotiations with the 3 sports bodies and business planning exercises are completed and a decision is reached. In the meantime, the SIB is planning to release the technical study that covered the deliverability criteria in response to a request it has received under the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

Lough Neagh

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans he has to work with local authorities to regain ownership of the soil and bed of Lough Neagh. (AQW 906/07)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure has never owned the bed and soil of Lough Neagh. As this Department's only relevant statutory functions on Lough Neagh are restricted to dredging and marking the mouth of the River Sixmilewater, I can confirm that I have no plans to take forward the possibility of bed and soil purchase from its owners.

Multi-Sports Stadium

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the organisation responsible for the preparation of the business case for a multi-sports stadium at the Maze; (b) when the business case was completed; and (c) when it was submitted to the department. (AQW 939/07)

Mr Poots: PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) were engaged in 2005 on behalf of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure and the Strategic Investment Board to prepare an economic appraisal on a multi-sports stadium for Northern Ireland. PwC are currently updating this appraisal and preparing an outline business case. Work on the updated outline business case is well advanced and will be considered by the Department once complete.

Promoting Target Sports

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, further to his answer to AQW 358/07, to detail the target sports that have applied for funding from Sport NI; and when the decisions will issue. (AQW 979/07)

Mr Poots: Sport NI (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. The Minister for the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) can confirm that Comber Shooting Club, in conjunction with Hollow Farm Shooting Club, together with Dungannon Rifle and Pistol Club have applied for funding to improve their grounds through the Elite Facilities Competition for Northern Ireland's Olympic/Paralympic Sports.

The decision on who can proceed to the second stage of the Elite Facilities Programme will be taken by SNI's Council at its meeting on Tuesday 4th September 2007.

New Library in Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the total cost of the new library for Newtownards. (AQW 980/07)

Mr Poots: The cost of the new library in Newtownards was estimated, in March 2006, to be in the region of £3.3m. This figure is subject to revision as more detailed costs are identified as part of the ongoing appraisal process.

Multi-Sports Stadium

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if the Strategic Investment Board has employed the services of external consultants in preparing a business case for a multi-sports stadium at the Maze, and if so, to name the consultants. (AQW 998/07)

Mr Poots: PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) were engaged in 2005 on behalf of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure and the Strategic Investment Board to prepare an economic appraisal on a multi-sports stadium for Northern Ireland. PwC are currently updating this appraisal and preparing an outline business case for the Multi-Sport Stadium. PwC are also completing a business plan which will assess the operational viability of the Multi-Sports Stadium.

International Football Games

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he has taken, or intends to take, to ensure that international football games can continue to be played in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1020/07)

Mr Poots: Responsibility for ensuring international football games can continue to be played in Northern Ireland rests with the Irish Football Association (IFA) which is the governing body of soccer in Northern Ireland. I am currently developing proposals for a new Multi-Sports Stadium which will meet the future facility requirements of the IFA for international football. In the meantime, Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure officials, in conjunction with Sport Northern Ireland, are in discussions with the IFA over their current needs for staging international football games in Northern Ireland.

Soccer Strategy

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to explain why a key recommendation of the 'Soccer Strategy', namely the provision of modern facilities exclusively for football, has not been implemented. (AQW 1021/07)

Mr Poots: Primary responsibility for implementing the recommendations of the 'Soccer Strategy' rests with the Irish Football Association, which is the governing body of football in Northern Ireland. The IFA has developed a facilities strategy for football which is designed to enable more modern facilities to be provided for the game. Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), with support from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL), is assisting the IFA with the implementation of this facilities strategy. The 'Soccer Strategy' did not recommend that modern facilities should be provided exclusively for football.

Ulster-Scots Agency

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the recruitment process used to appoint the first interim chief executive of the Ulster-Scots Agency; (b) when he took up the appointment; and (c) when he left the position. (AQW 1032/07)

Mr Poots: The first interim Chief Executive of the Ulster-Scots Agency was recruited through a NICS wide trawl notice/interest circular and took up the appointment on 2 December 1999. He resigned from the position as Accounting Officer of the Ulster Scots Agency on 2 August 2001 and retired from the Civil Service on 14 August 2001.

Arts Council of NI and An Chomhairle Ealaíon

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what matters of co-operation and mutual interest have been brought forward as a result of the North-South committee meetings between the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and An Chomhairle Ealaíon, during the years 2005-2007. (AQW 1035/07)

Mr Poots: During the years 2005-07 the following matters of co-operation and mutual interest were brought forward as a result of the North-South committee meetings between the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and An Chomhairle Ealaíon:

- A joint art exhibition organised at the Glucksman Gallery, Cork, in partnership with the British Council (as part of the European Capital of Culture programme, 2005);
- Consideration of the advantages and benefits of continuing to fund organisations on a joint basis;
- Agreement to review the arrangements for the appointment of members to the board of the Tyrone Guthrie Centre;
- Agreement to jointly fund a curated visual arts award;
- Proposals to encourage north/south touring;
- Agreement to update and upgrade the Arts and Disability Handbook from a printed to an online publication;
- Agreement to co-operate on a joint language and traditional arts initiative (pilot launched May 2007);
- Agreement to support a common position urging an amendment to the rules relating to VAT on non-resident artists' earnings;

- Agreement to support the formation of a literature touring network on a pilot basis for three years.

Soccer Strategy

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to advise (i) at what stage is the 'soccer strategy'; and (ii) what recommendations from the Soccer Advisory Panel have yet to be implemented. (AQW 1044/07)

Mr Poots: The governing body of soccer in Northern Ireland, the Irish Football Association (IFA) has agreed to implement the 'soccer strategy' and is currently doing so with assistance from Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) and the support of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL). All the recommendations from the Soccer Strategy Advisory Panel are currently being implemented, but work to date has focused mainly on governance and administration, youth football and facilities.

EDUCATION

Homophobic Bullying

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to ensure that all secondary-level schools have policies in place to deal with homophobic bullying. (AQW 533/07)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): All schools are required by law to have measures in place to prevent all forms of bullying among pupils.

The Department's publication 'Pastoral Care in Schools: Promoting Positive Behaviour' offers detailed guidance, practical initiatives and case studies to support schools to tackle bullying. However, the detail of each school's policy and their approach to tackling bullying of any type is a matter for each school to determine in consultation with pupils and parents.

Within the next few weeks, the Department will be publishing a research report on the nature and extent of bullying in the North of Ireland. This will provide us with further insight into the nature and extent of bullying in our schools and will help us in our efforts to tackle this problem.

Staff Non-Pensionable Bonuses

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline how many non-pensionable bonuses were paid to staff in her department in each of the last three years; and what steps she has taken to ensure that such bonuses are not used as a cheaper alternative to an appropriate salary increase. (AQW 640/07)

Ms Ruane: Non-pensionable bonuses can be paid to staff at all grades to reward performance in two ways: (a) as part of the annual pay round, and (b) under the NICS Special Bonus Scheme. The number of payments made in the last three financial years is as follows:

Year	Performance - related bonuses	Special Bonuses
2004/05	670	37
2005/06	562	42
2006/07	563	157

Performance related bonuses are an important and integral element of the NICS reward strategy, and as such are used as part of the annual pay round to acknowledge and reward higher performing staff in year.

The NICS Special Bonus Scheme allows Departments to reward staff for exceptional performance in particularly demanding tasks.

The award of bonuses is therefore regarded as being complementary to, rather than as a substitute for, the award of consolidated pay increases.

Merger of Donaghadee and Movilla High Schools

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what is the timescale for the proposed merger of Donaghadee High School and Movilla High. (AQW 656/07)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has commenced preliminary consultations with Donaghadee High School and Movilla High School in relation to a potential rationalisation between the two schools. A formal consultation by the Board is expected to commence during the forthcoming autumn term. Should the Board decide to proceed with the rationalisation, it would be required to publish a statutory development proposal which would initiate a 2-month period during which all interested parties can make their views known to the Department of Education. The Board has suggested September 2008 as the date for rationalisation though this would be subject to the consultation process, and the subsequent approval of a development proposal. No decisions have therefore been made at this time.

Merger of Donaghadee and Movilla High Schools

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what assurances she can give to the staff of both Donaghadee High and Movilla High, in terms of job security, following the proposed merger of the two schools. (AQW 658/07)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board (the Board) has commenced preliminary consultations with Governors, staff and parents at Donaghadee High School and Movilla High School, Newtownards, in relation to a potential amalgamation of the two schools.

If the proposed amalgamation proceeds, teaching staff at both schools would be offered posts in the new school and be eligible for protection under the terms of the Collective Agreement with the Teachers' Unions (Teachers' Negotiating Committee Circular - TNC 1999/4). This Agreement ensures (inter alia) that in the two years immediately following the date of the amalgamation, there will no compulsory redundancies of those permanent teachers who transfer to the new school. In addition, it provides that transferring teachers, who are unable to secure a post of a similar level of responsibility in the new school and thus suffer a reduction in salary, are eligible for a Re-organisation Allowance (Department of Education Circular 1996/1) to protect their salary to the level they would have been paid had they remained in their previous post.

There is no comparable agreement for other staff in the schools. However, the Board would make every reasonable effort to find employment for all non-teaching staff who would want to continue working, whether this is in the new school or at a suitable alternative location.

Armagh Integrated College

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister of Education to detail the capital expenditure costs of Armagh Integrated College over the past four financial years. (AQW 675/07)

Ms Ruane: Armagh Integrated College opened in 2004 as a new grant maintained integrated (GMI) school. As for all new GMI schools, it must satisfy intake criteria set down by the Department of Education before capital grant aid is provided. The capital expenditure for this school has to date been incurred by the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) amounting to £59k in 2005-06 and £9.7m in 2006-07.

Special Needs Pupils

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Education what is the current policy in relation to enabling young people attending special needs schools to remain in education after their nineteenth birthday, until the end of the school term; and to detail if this policy is equally applied across all education and library board areas in Northern Ireland. (AQW 686/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has obtained extra-statutory approval for the 2006/07 school year to allow Education and Library Boards to maintain a statement of special educational needs until the end of the school year following the young person's 19th birthday. An extension of that approval will be sought for the 2007/08 school year. Boards are currently preparing information for the Department to enable this extra-statutory approval to be sought. The Department of Education will be taking the first available legislative opportunity to amend the current legislation, which only allows Boards to maintain a statement of special educational needs until the end of the school term following the young person's 19th birthday.

I have sought and obtained assurances from each education and library board that this change of policy is equally applied across all 5 boards.

Ulster-Scots Language

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education which organisation made the representation to her department, in January 2001, regarding the lack of educational resources available for the teaching of the Ulster-Scots language. (AQW 702/07)

Ms Ruane: This representation was made by Balmore Primary School.

Expenditure for Ulster-Scots

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to itemise the expenditure of £69.95, which was the total expenditure by her Department in relation to Ulster-Scots in the year 2003-2004. (AQW 703/07)

Ms Ruane: This expenditure was due to the translation of a leaflet entitled 'Information about Transfer Tests and New Post-Primary Arrangements' into Ulster-Scots.

Funding for Additional Administrative and Support Staff

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education if she will undertake to review the resources allocated to primary schools, with specific reference to the provision of funding for additional administrative and support staff in schools, and to the discrepancy between the primary school and secondary school surplus funds. (AQW 708/07)

Ms Ruane: The rationale for the differential in funding for primary and secondary schools stems from the additional cost demands which arise for secondary schools in the delivery of the curriculum. I am, however, committed to reducing the current differential and will be looking very carefully, within the resources I can secure for education under the Comprehensive Spending Review, at how we can improve the current balance and allow more investment in early years. At a local level, it is for school boards of governors and principals to determine how best to spend their funding allocations in meeting their needs and priorities, including provision of administrative and support staff. This includes the flexibility, in the interests of prudent financial management, to hold modest surpluses in reserve in order to allow the school to live within its budget allocation or to plan for specific future expenditure.

Teacher Education

Mr David McClarty asked the Minister of Education if she will consider introducing a bursary scheme to support teachers' continuing professional development. (AQW 709/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department and the Department for Employment and Learning are jointly carrying out a review of teacher education.

The Review is almost complete and Sir Reg Empey, the Minister for Employment and Learning and I will, in the coming months, be carefully considering the way forward on all aspects of teacher education. This will include consideration not only of the introduction of a bursary scheme to support teachers' continuing professional development but also the way forward on all phases of teacher education: initial teacher education, induction, early and continuing professional development. In considering the way forward account will be taken of the overall resources made available for education.

School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools in each Education and Library Board area, where meals are prepared on site, that are buying in pre-packed sandwiches for sale to pupils. (AQW 715/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of schools in each Board area, where meals are provided on-site, that are buying-in pre-packed sandwiches for sale to pupils is:

Belfast	19
North-Eastern	12
South-Eastern	15
Southern	9
Western	19

School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of funding allocated for the provision of school meals that is actually used for this purpose. (AQW 716/07)

Ms Ruane: Education and Library Boards receive allocations to cover the delivery of the full range of services that they provide, including school meals. It is a matter for each Board to determine how much of its centre allocation is spent on school meals. Additionally, however, my Department is allocating a further £3 million to schools in the current financial year which is ring-fenced and must be used to ensure that expenditure on the food and nutritional content value of school meals amounts to at least 50p in nursery, primary and special schools and 60p in post-primary schools.

Early Years Strategy

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Education if she will review the maximum size of pre-school education groups, currently set at 26 places, with particular reference to rural areas. (AQW 717/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department is currently working on an Early Years Strategy for the 0-6 age group. Policy responsibility for early years services transferred from DHSSPS to DE in November 2006. I will ensure this issue, particularly as it may impact on rural areas, is taken into consideration as the new policy for early years is developed.

Education Transition Co-ordinators

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Education what is the current position in regard to the recruitment of two education transitions co-ordinators per Education and Library Board area, as outlined in the report of the Transitions Inter-departmental Working Group; and to detail when the positions were (a) advertised; and (b) filled. (AQW 722/07)

Ms Ruane: I am advised by the Chief Executive Officers of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) that following the publication of the Transitions Report in February 2006, all permanent appointments to the post of Education Transition Co-ordinators were made by March 2007.

Home Tuition

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children who have been in receipt of home tuition in the North Eastern Education and Library Board area in each of the last three years. (AQW 754/07)

School Year	Number of Pupils in Receipt of Home Tuition
2003/04	188
2004/05	242
2005/06	237

Figures for the 2006/07 school year are not yet available.

11+ Examination

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to explain the rationale behind the instruction given to staff to find a way of replacing the 11+ examination, no matter what form this replacement takes. (AQW 761/07)

Ms Ruane: No such instruction has been given.

Draft Disability Action Plan

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to explain the reasoning behind the omission of the term 'Northern Ireland' from her department's draft disability action plan, with particular reference to the inclusion of the term in this document when initially posted on the department's website, and its subsequent removal during the course of the week commencing 11 June 2007. (AQW 764/07)

Ms Ruane: The draft Disability Action Plan was published on the Department of Education website on the 5th June for a limited and targeted consultation.

This version did not reflect my preferred terminology in a number of respects and an amended version was placed on the Departmental website on 7th June. There were no substantive changes made to the actions or intentions of the plan which are the subject of consultation.

Maintenance Expenditure by SEELB

Mr Jimmy Spratt asked the Minister of Education to detail the total spend on maintenance within the South Eastern Education and Library Board, in this financial year. (AQW 767/07)

Ms Ruane: I have been advised that the amount of maintenance expenditure by the South Eastern Education and Library Board during the 2006/07 financial year was £3,935k.

School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail what measures she will take to maintain the current level of school meal preparation at schools across Northern Ireland. (AQW 804/07)

Ms Ruane: The arrangements for school meal preparation are an operational matter for the Education and Library Boards. However, the Member will be assured to know that, for 2007-08, the Department is continuing to provide additional, earmarked funding of over £3 million to Education and Library Boards and other school authorities over and above the normal centre budget allocations to improve the quality of food in schools. That funding helps deliver enhanced food and nutritional content value of school meals. It also supports training arrangements for the many hundreds of canteen staff and assists with additional staff costs and preparation time.

Pupils Attending Post Primary Schools

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children currently attending secondary schools in (a) the state sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector, in each Education and Library Board area. (AQW 805/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

PUPILS ATTENDING POST PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN EACH EDUCATION AND LIBRARY BOARD AREA 2006/07

Note:

1. Maintained schools include Catholic Maintained and Other Maintained schools.
2. Integrated schools include Controlled Integrated and Grant Maintained Integrated schools.
3. Voluntary Grammar schools may be Catholic Managed or Other Managed.

Children with Autism

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Education how she plans to improve services for children with autism. (AQW 822/07)

Ms Ruane: In 2002 the Task Group on Autism published its report providing a framework for action over a ten-year period. Since its publication the Department of Education (DE) has secured additional resources totalling some £7.5m to support positive measures in the area of autism. Many of these measures are already underway, however future measures include:

- additional resources for special educational needs (SEN) pressures made available to the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) in 2007/08;
- the continued funding of an Interboard Autistic Spectrum Disorder (ASD) group to advise the ELBs' Regional Strategy Group and DE on progress on ASD-related matters;
- the implementation of the strategy for the Interboard ASD Group to progress the work of the group within the ELB's overall ASD services and to which ELBs are committed;
- the ongoing observation by the Education and Training Inspectorate of the use of DE-produced classroom resources to support positive interventions for children with ASD.
- the establishment by ELBs of multi-disciplinary, multi-agency intervention practices for children and young people with autism.

The Department plans to work closely with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, through the SEN Interdepartmental Group, to jointly review ASD provision.

DE and the Department of Education and Science (DES), are taking forward arrangements to enable the Middletown Centre of Excellence for Autism to begin offering services later this year.

In addition, DE and DES are exploring the possibility of jointly hosting an all-island ASD conference, also later this year.

Devenish College

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister of Education what is the estimated start date and completion date for the new Devenish College in Co Fermanagh. (AQW 878/07)

Ms Ruane: The Western Education and Library Board has advised that the estimated date for construction work to start on the new Devenish College is autumn 2008 with an estimated completion date of spring 2011.

Expenditure for Teaching Irish Language and Irish-Medium

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Education to confirm that, in 2006/07, her department's expenditure on the Irish language and Irish-medium teaching was close to £13 million. (AQW 909/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education's expenditure on the Irish language and Irish-medium teaching for 2006/07 is provisionally £11,721,530.

Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education how many staff surveys were carried out by her department in each of the last two years, and what was the total cost. (AQW 914/07)

Ms Ruane: In the two years 1 April 2005 to 31 March 2007 the Department of Education commissioned two staff surveys and the total cost was £10,324

Primary School in Keady

Mr Cathal Boylan asked the Minister of Education what is the future of the state primary school in Keady; and if she will make a statement on the effect of the closure of small rural schools on the local community. (AQW 925/07)

Ms Ruane: The Southern Education and Library Board has initiated discussions with this school on its future but these discussions are at an early stage and no decisions have yet been taken.

Rural schools are an important and integral part of rural life and I fully understand community concerns when the future of such schools is under review. Reviews of small rural schools should be handled carefully with a focus on educational quality and the needs of the children in the area.

Post Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education what facility exists, at present, for members of staff in her department to work in their existing post beyond the default retirement age. (AQW 936/07)

Ms Ruane: Since 1 October 2006 staff in the Department of Education, who want to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) policy on the age of retirement has been finalised all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

Number of Pupils Attending Primary School

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children currently attending primary schools in (a) the state sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector, in each Education and Library Board area. (AQW 951/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

PUPILS ATTENDING POST PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN EACH EDUCATION AND LIBRARY BOARD AREA 2006/07

School Management Type	Education and Library Board area

Note:

- Figures include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – 7 classes.
- Maintained schools include Catholic Maintained and Other Maintained schools.
- Integrated schools include Controlled Integrated and Grant Maintained Integrated schools.

- Includes preparatory departments of Voluntary Grammar schools.

Administrative and Advisory Staff

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of additional administrative and advisory staff recruited by (a) Education and Library Boards; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, in the last two years. (AQW 959/07)

Ms Ruane: The 5 Education & Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools have advised that they have not recruited any additional administrative and/or advisory staff in the 2005/06 and 2006/07 financial years. This answer relates to permanent appointments that are additional to the 2004/05 approved staffing complement for ELB and CCMS Headquarters based staff. Fixed term appointments and temporary appointments are therefore excluded.

A Vacancy Control Policy was introduced in October 2006 in the Department's "RPA-affected bodies", following the publication of the agreed Public Service Commission Principle 'Managing Vacancies Effectively', to ensure that all reasonable steps are taken to safeguard and secure the employment of existing education sector staff until the new Education and Skills Authority is established.

Heads of Departments Redundancies

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of heads of department that will be made redundant, and the total cost of redundancy payments, in (a) each Education and Library Board; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools. (AQW 960/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of posts in the Education and Skills Authority will be determined by the arrangements established for the delivery of services and the associated organisational structure. Work in these areas is ongoing and it is not therefore possible, at this stage, to determine the number and cost of redundancies arising from the establishment of ESA.

Every effort will be made to avoid compulsory redundancies and as part of this process a Vacancy Control Policy has been put in place across existing education organisations.

Second Tier Officer Redundancies

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of second tier officers that will be made redundant, and the total cost of redundancy payments, in (a) each Education and Library Board; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools. (AQW 961/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of posts in the Education and Skills Authority will be determined by the arrangements established for the delivery of services and the associated organisational structure. Work in these areas is ongoing and it is not therefore possible, at this stage, to determine the number and cost of redundancies arising from the establishment of ESA.

Every effort will be made to avoid compulsory redundancies and as part of this process a Vacancy Control Policy has been put in place across existing education organisations.

Chief Executive Redundancies

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of Chief Executives that will be made redundant, and the total cost of redundancy payments, in (a) each Education and Library Board; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools. (AQW 962/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of posts in the Education and Skills Authority will be determined by the arrangements established for the delivery of services and the associated organisational structure. Work in these areas is ongoing and it is not therefore possible, at this stage, to determine the number and cost of redundancies arising from the establishment of ESA.

Every effort will be made to avoid compulsory redundancies and as part of this process a Vacancy Control Policy has been put in place across existing education organisations.

Suicide Prevention in Schools

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to liaise with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in the development of strategies and support, in order to address suicide prevention within schools and the community sector. (AQW 967/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education contributed to the development of the Suicide Prevention Strategy published by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in March 2006. My Department is also an active member of the Suicide Strategy Implementation Body. The action plan for this Body sets out a number of measures aimed at preventing suicide across all age groups and communities. These actions require close co-operation across Departments as well as with the statutory, voluntary and community sectors.

I have met with the Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety to examine progress with these measures and to discuss how to ensure effective co-operative working in this area. I plan to continue monitoring progress on a regular basis.

Alcohol Abuse in Schools

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils excluded from schools as a result of alcohol abuse, broken down by Education and Library Board area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 990/07)

Ms Ruane: Statistics on the reasons for pupil suspension are gathered annually from each Education and Library Board, and relate to the number of incidents of suspension not to the number of pupils suspended. In 2002/03, data on alcohol abuse was combined with data on substance abuse, however from 2003/04 it has been identified separately. Available information on the number of incidences of suspension for alcohol abuse is shown in the following table:

NUMBER OF INCIDENCES OF PUPILS BEING SUSPENDED FOR ALCOHOL ABUSE BY ELB AREA

	2003/04	2004/05
Belfast	3	6
Western	11	14
North Eastern	0	16
South Eastern	29	7
Southern	8	27
Total	51	70

Note:

There was a change in the data collection systems between these two years

Reasons for pupil expulsions were first collected in 2003/04, and alcohol abuse was combined with data on substance abuse. In 2004/05, data on alcohol abuse was collected separately and, in that year, there were 2 pupils expelled for this reason.

The suspension and expulsions statistics for the 2005/06 school year are currently being analysed and will be placed on the DE website when this has been completed.

Promotions in Catholic Maintained Schools

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education how many existing staff in (a) each Education and Library Board; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools have been promoted, in advance of the implementation of the Review of Public Administration recommendations. (AQW 993/07)

Ms Ruane: The 5 Education and Library Boards (ELBs) and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) have provided the following information for the period 22 November 2005 (when the Review of Public Administration was announced) to 31 March 2007. The information relates only to non-teaching ELB and CCMS headquarter based staff and reflects only permanent promotions, ie fixed term promotions and temporary promotions are excluded.

Teacher to Pupil Ratios

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Education to detail the current target teacher-to-pupil ratios at each of the key stages in primary and secondary schools; and what plans she has to change target ratios in the near future. (AQW 1008/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not set targets for pupil: teacher ratios. It is for schools to decide, within their delegated budgets, how many teachers to employ.

Pupil:teacher ratios are compiled and published each year by the Department based on pupil numbers from the Annual School Census and teacher numbers verified with schools.

The following table provides the current (2006/07) pupil:teacher ratios for schools in the North of Ireland by school type.

School type	Pupil: teacher ratio
Nursery	25.9
Primary*	20.8
Preparatory	16.8
Secondary	14.0
Grammar	15.3
Special	5.9
All	16.9

School Attendance

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children attending primary and secondary schools in the years (a) 1985; (b) 1990; (c) 1995; (d) 2000; and (e) 2005. (AQW 1010/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
1985/86	182,697	152,917
1990/91	184,874	141,146
1995/96	185,413	151,576
2000/01	172,491	155,553
2005/06	161,143	151,840

Note:

- Figures for primary include pupils in primary schools and preparatory departments in grammar schools in years 1 – 7.
- Secondary includes both secondary and grammar schools

Pupils Learning English as an Additional Language

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education how many pupils learning English as an additional language are attending (a) primary schools; (b) special schools; (c) post-primary selective schools; (d) post-primary non-selective schools, in each of the Education and Library Board areas, and what are the countries of origin of these pupils. (AQW 1015/07)

Ms Ruane: Information on the country of origin of pupils learning English as an Additional Language is not collected. The number of pupils with English as an Additional Language in each school sector, by Education and Library Board and by main language spoken is as follows:

10. Figures for primary schools include preparatory departments in grammar schools and enrolments in years 1 – 7.

11. Country of origin information is not collected by the Department. An alternative indicator is the main language spoken by these pupils. It is this information that has been provided.
12. The "Other Languages" category includes those languages which were listed by schools as 'Other first language spoken', as well as those first languages where there were very small numbers of pupils listed.

New School at Glastry

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to outline whether a price had been agreed concerning the site for a new school at Glastry, following the discussions between the South Eastern Education and Library Board and the landowners. (AQW 1016/07)

Ms Ruane: Negotiations for the purchase of the land are currently ongoing between the Land and Property Services (Valuation and Lands Agency), who are acting for the South Eastern Education and Library Board, and the landowners. Subject to the outcome of these negotiations the Board have advised that they hope to complete the acquisition of the land within the current financial year.

Sale of Land for Glastry College

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to give a timescale for the completion of the sale of land for Glastry College; and to outline whether a direct contract had been developed with the landowners, and, if so, what has been the outcome of negotiations. (AQW 1017/07)

Ms Ruane: Negotiations for the purchase of the land are currently ongoing between the Land and Property Services (Valuation and Lands Agency), who are acting for the South Eastern Education and Library Board, and the landowners. Subject to the outcome of these negotiations the Board have advised that they hope to complete the acquisition of the land within the current financial year.

English as an Additional Language

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the number of pupils learning English as an additional language that are currently fee-paying boarding pupils in schools in Northern Ireland; (b) what schools they attend; and (c) what are their countries of origin. (AQW 1018/07)

Ms Ruane: Information on the countries of origin of pupils learning English as an Additional Language is not collected. In 2006/07 the number of pupils with English as an Additional Language who are fee-paying boarding pupils by school attended and by main language spoken is as follows:

	Main Language spoken
	Cantonese	Mandarin	Russian	Other
Methodist College	22	*	*	*
Victoria College	8	*	0	0

13. Country of origin information is not collected by the Department. An alternative indicator is the main language spoken by these pupils. It is this information that has been provided.

Vandalism at Schools

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the cost of damage caused by vandalism at schools in each Education and Library Board area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1029/07)

Ms Ruane: The Education and Library Boards have provided the following information on the cost of repairing vandalism in controlled and maintained schools in each of the last three years:

Board Area	2004/05 £000s	2005/06 £000s	2006/07 £000s

Total	39	52

The information for 2006/07 for schools in the Voluntary Grammar and Integrated sectors is not yet available and has been requested. I will write to you with the information as soon as possible.

Special Education

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Education if she will determine when the fundamental review of Special Education will be published.
(AQW 1030/07)

Ms Ruane: It is anticipated that the policy proposals which have emerged from the review will be published for consultation by January 2008 following consideration by the Education Committee.

Unqualified Teachers in Irish Language Schools

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline whether any comment has been made by inspectors on the impact of unqualified teachers teaching in Irish language schools.
(AQW 1036/07)

Ms Ruane: The Education and Training Inspectorate (Inspectorate) has made comment to the Department of Education, in relation to its review of Irish Medium Education, of the need to ensure, that all teachers in Irish Medium schools have a recognised teaching qualification. The Inspectorate gives similar advice in relation to all teachers in all schools.

Formal Teaching Qualifications for Teachers in Irish Language Schools

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to require teachers in Irish language schools to have formal teaching qualifications.
(AQW 1037/07)

Ms Ruane: The Teachers' (Eligibility) Regulations 1997 require that all teachers hold the relevant qualifications as laid down by the Department. This provision covers all sectors.

All teachers employed currently in Irish Medium schools on Permanent, Pro rata or Job share contracts are confirmed as eligible to teach.

However, under the provisions of the Teachers' (Eligibility) Regulations 1997 an employer may appoint, for a period normally not exceeding 4 weeks, a person who is not eligible to teach.

There are currently 25 unqualified teachers employed by virtue of this provision in Irish Medium schools.

Unqualified Teachers in Irish Language Schools

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers in Irish language schools who do not have a formal teaching qualification.

(AQW 1039/07)

Ms Ruane: The Teachers' (Eligibility) Regulations 1997 require that all teachers hold the relevant qualifications as laid down by the Department. This provision covers all sectors.

All teachers employed currently in Irish Medium schools on Permanent, Pro rata or Job share contracts are confirmed as eligible to teach.

However, under the provisions of the Teachers' (Eligibility) Regulations 1997 an employer may appoint, for a period normally not exceeding 4 weeks, a person who is not eligible to teach.

There are currently 25 unqualified teachers employed by virtue of this provision in Irish Medium schools.

Modern Languages

Mr Alastair Ross asked the Minister of Education what efforts are being made to encourage more children to study modern languages.
(AQW 1040/07)

Ms Ruane: I am introducing a primary languages programme from September 2007 to give our youngest pupils an enjoyable introduction to language learning, with a view to encouraging them to continue with languages at post-primary and beyond.

The purpose of this initiative is to prepare the ground for the languages strategy, which the Department has asked the universities to develop by March 2008. The strategy will include recommendations on how we can encourage greater uptake of language learning at all levels of education.

Under-Spend in Capital Investment

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Education to detail the reason for her department's £30.7 million under-spend in capital investment in 2006/07, in light of the deteriorating conditions of school premises and the accepted cases for renovation and new build for schools.
(AQW 1052/07)

Ms Ruane: Of the £30.7million under-spend in capital incurred in 2006/07, £28.9million was attributable to the schools capital programme. This under-spend arose from issues arising for individual building projects. The main reasons were delays in planning approvals and, site purchase, site difficulties and reviews of projected enrolments. The funding committed to those capital projects where there has been slippage in spending will be carried forward for those projects in future years.

Children Suspended from Schools

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Education to advise of the number of children per thousand who have been suspended from schools, broken down by (a) Education and Library Board; and (b) District Council area or postcode area, in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 1057/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is set out in the following tables:

The numbers of pupil suspensions per thousand were first collected by District Council area in 2002/03 and therefore no data is held for previous years. The suspension statistics for the 2005/06 school year are currently being analysed and will be placed on the DE website when this has been completed.

Grammar School Enrolment

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of grammar school places there are in Northern Ireland, broken down by the 18 Northern Ireland constituencies. (AQW 1064/07)

Ms Ruane: The total approved grammar school enrolment numbers for the 2007/08 school year by constituency are as follows:

Constituency	Total Approved Grammar School Enrolment Numbers
Belfast East	4765
Belfast North	3510
Belfast South	7240

Children Travelling to School

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children living within the Strangford constituency that are estimated to travel outside the constituency in order to attend a grammar school. (AQW 1065/07)

Ms Ruane: In the 2006/07 school year, there were 3,134 children living within the Strangford constituency who attended a grammar school outside the constituency.

Unqualified Teachers in Irish Language Schools

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline any proposals she has to pay the fees of unqualified teachers in Irish language schools, in order to enable them to obtain formal teaching qualifications. (AQW 1070/07)

Ms Ruane: I do not have any proposals to pay the fees of unqualified teachers in Irish Language schools in order to enable them to obtain formal teaching qualifications.

Preparation of Briefings and Speeches

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to confirm that she has instructed her officials, when preparing her briefings and speeches, to refer to 'England, Scotland and Wales' rather than the 'United Kingdom'. (AQW 1074/07)

Ms Ruane: I have not instructed my officials regarding my use of language. I have, however, indicated my own preference in relation to language and am committed to ensuring the principles of equality apply to all areas of my work.

Permanent Teaching Posts

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers on the substitute teachers' roll who have not yet been in full-time permanent employment in teaching; and to state the number that are (a) male; and (b) female. (AQW 1075/07)

Ms Ruane: Based on the payroll information, since September 2005 there have been 3176 female and 695 male teachers paid who worked as substitute teachers and who have never worked in a permanent teaching post. It includes teachers paid on the DE payroll regardless of qualified status, e.g. teachers who are not treated as qualified until they graduate and those who are qualified to teach in the FE sector only, but are employed on a temporary capacity in the primary and secondary sector.

The Curran Report

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to outline the business case put to her by the Teachers Trades Unions, regarding the implementation of aspects of the Curran Report on teachers' conditions of service. (AQW 1077/07)

Ms Ruane: I have not received a business case from the Teachers' Trades Unions regarding the implementation of any aspect of the Final Report Part 2 of the Teachers' Pay & Conditions of Service Inquiry (the Curran Report).

Preparation of Briefings and Speeches

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to confirm that she has instructed her officials, when preparing her briefings and speeches, to use the terms 'Derry' instead of 'Londonderry', and 'the North' or 'the North of Ireland' instead of 'Northern Ireland'. (AQW 1081/07)

Ms Ruane: I have not instructed my officials regarding my use of language. I have, however, indicated my own preference in relation to language and am committed to ensuring the principles of equality apply to all areas of my work.

Preparation of Briefings and Speeches

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to confirm that she has instructed her officials, when preparing her briefings and speeches, to use the term 'South of Ireland' instead of the 'Republic of Ireland'. (AQW 1087/07)

Ms Ruane: I have not instructed my officials regarding my use of language. I have, however, indicated my own preference in relation to language and am committed to ensuring the principles of equality apply to all areas of my work.

East West Co-operation

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail how she will develop and expand education as an area of east-west co-operation.

(AQW 1121/07)

Ms Ruane: I am keen to build on the progress made and to develop and expand East-West co-operation in the area of education.

The Department funds the Education and Training Group of the British Council to support and encourage schools to participate in the East-West Schools Programme. This Programme aims to build educational links on a tripartite basis, involving schools from the North and South of Ireland, England, Scotland and Wales.

Council for Catholic Maintained Schools

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Education what discussions she has had with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools regarding the proposals for the closure of St Aloysius High School in Cushendall; and what was the outcome of these discussions.

(AQW 1136/07)

Ms Ruane: I have had no discussions with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) about proposals for the closure of St Aloysius High School. The CCMS and the Trustees are examining possible rationalisation of post-primary provision in the Glens and East Antrim area involving three schools, including St Aloysius HS. A feasibility study which examines options for rationalising provision has been presented by CCMS to the Department of Education for consideration. Any proposal for rationalisation which CCMS and the Trustees bring forward in due course will require the publication of a statutory development proposal which will be the subject of consultation.

Expenditure for Award Schemes

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail, for the last two years, the amount spent by each Education and Library Board in relation to the achievement of (a) quality assurance awards; (b) Investors in People awards; and (c) other similar awards.

(AQW 1149/07)

Ms Ruane: The 5 Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have provided the following information on spend (excluding VAT) for the 2005/06 and 2006/07 financial years.

Promotion and Teaching of the Ulster-Scots Language

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education what guidance she has sought from the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group as to what 'resolute action' it should take to promote the teaching and use of the Ulster-Scots language in the sphere of education.

(AQW 1163/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department has not sought guidance from the Inter-Departmental Charter Implementation group. However, the Department is represented on this group and has been involved in the guidance developed for public servants to help them meet their obligations under the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.

Learning Outside the Classroom

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Education what proposals she has to introduce a 'Learning Outside the Classroom' manifesto in Northern Ireland, similar to those established in England and Wales by the Department for Education and Skills.

(AQW 1187/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education specifies the minimum curricular content that schools are required to provide but does not specify how the curriculum should be delivered. It is a matter for schools, with the support of the Education and Library Boards, to determine what out-of-classroom learning opportunities they provide.

The Education and Library Boards issued an 'Education for Sustainable Development Good Practice Guide' to schools in 2005, which includes guidance on Education Outside the Classroom. The Boards also worked with CCEA to produce a 'Learning Outdoors' resource for primary schools in 2005 to support teachers in provide high quality outdoor play experiences. In these circumstances, I do see a need to introduce such a 'manifesto' here.

Sign Language Interpreters

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers in Northern Ireland that are qualified as sign language interpreters. (AQW 1213/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department does not hold this information centrally and contacted the 5 Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (who employ teachers), for the information.

The Southern Education and Library Board have advised they have 4 and the Western Education and Library Board have 7. These figures relate to Peripatetic Teachers in the Boards Sensory Impaired Services. The other employing authorities have advised they do not hold this information.

Sign Language

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to introduce sign language onto the school curriculum. (AQW 1222/07)

Ms Ruane: Although sign language is not currently a specific requirement within the curriculum, there are already some schools who offer it as an extra-curricular option. Indeed, the revised curriculum provides greater flexibility for schools to teach sign language as part of the opportunities pupils have to develop the cross-curricular skill of communication, and through the Language and Literacy Area of Learning.

I am also awaiting recommendations in March 2008 from the joint University of Ulster-Queen's University Belfast Subject Centre for Languages, Linguistics and Area Studies on a languages strategy. The strategy will include recommendations on how we can encourage greater uptake of language learning and will include coverage of sign language.

The Vacancy Control Policy

Mrs Claire McGill asked the Minister of Education to detail, if there is a delay in establishing the new Education and Skills Authority, whether the Education and Library Boards and other education bodies will continue to operate vacancy control policy. (AQW 1228/07)

Ms Ruane: The Vacancy Control Policy has been in place since November 2006 and operates in accordance with the 2nd PSC Guiding Principle. It is a key means of minimising potential redundancies which may arise in the future from the streamlining of education administration. There are currently no plans to discontinue the operation of the policy.

Irish Medium Education

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education (a) to give the date on which her department initiated the review of Irish-medium education; (b) what is the scope and nature of the review; and (c) to advise whether this review is being carried out internally, or whether consultants have been employed to take forward the work. (AQW 1286/07)

Ms Ruane: (a) The Review of Irish-medium education was initiated on 14 December 2006 by the then Minister, Maria Eagle.

(b) The scope of the review is to take stock of the best way to facilitate continued and sustainable growth of Irish Medium education for the next decade, ensuring the highest quality education outcomes for pupils, particularly in light of the revised Northern Ireland curriculum.

The objective of the project is to review current DE policy towards the development of high-quality education through the medium of Irish. This will be achieved by fulfilling the Terms of Reference (TOR), agreed by Maria Eagle. The full TOR are:

- i. an analysis of past and likely future demography and demand;
- ii. an analysis of how DE's policy has developed and operated over the last five years with regard to pre-school, primary and post-primary education;
- iii. a consideration of the current approaches of Irish-medium schools, units and streams;
- iv. a review of Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta (InaG) and Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta's (CnaG) development plans, particularly in light of the forthcoming Bain Review;
- v. through ETI, an evaluation of quality and standards across Irish-medium provision;
- vi. a study of the outcomes of Government's financial investment in Irish-medium education over the last five years;
- vii. an analysis of the challenges and issues facing the Irish-medium sector;
- viii. a gathering of information on how such provision is developed and operated elsewhere;

- ix. an analysis of the implications of “A Shared Future” for Irish-medium provision;
 - x. a consideration of future policy towards the provision of Irish Medium Education; and
 - xi. an investigation and analysis of how cross-border approaches in the development of IME might enhance provision.
- (c) Consultants have not been employed to take forward the work of the review. The review is being taken forward internally by departmental officials, based on the PRINCE II methodology. This requires a Project Board, supported by an Advisory Group which quality assures the information that the Review considers. Both groups have members from outside the department.

Enrolment at Portstewart Primary School

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Education if she is aware of allegations of malpractice in the recording of enrolment figures at Portstewart Primary School; and if she will make a statement. (AQW 1311/07)

Ms Ruane: I am aware of allegations of malpractice in the recording of enrolment figures at Portstewart Primary School. My Department has investigated the allegations.

While no evidence of criminality was established, there were matters identified during the investigation which are subject to further consideration. It would be unfair and prejudicial to the outcome of those considerations to release any information at this time.

Saint MacNisius' School

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of Education to detail whether Saint MacNisius' Primary School in Tannaghmore will be included in the Buildings List. (AQW 1331/07)

Ms Ruane: A scheme for a replacement school at St MacNisius' Primary School was stopped in March this year following a review of all previously announced schemes then in planning. It was announced at that time that there were concerns over enrolments, raising the issue of longer term viability. The school has 73 pupils.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what proposals he will bring forward to generate greater flexibility in the modern apprenticeship framework; and if he will consider alternatives to National Vocational Qualifications. (AQW 156/07)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): Although normal practice, it is not always necessary to use NVQ frameworks in undertaking a Modern Apprenticeship. However, all apprentice frameworks must include a competence based element assembled from the National Occupational Standards set by the employment sector for which the framework is designed and, if required, other employment sectors.

The content of the competence element may be determined by the Sector Skills Councils, Sector Bodies and their employers. Subject to assessment methods designed to test competency, it is not a mandatory requirement to use National Vocational Qualifications. Alternatives may be considered.

Health and Safety

Mr Jimmy Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if any provisions are being made by his department, to provide courses to precede apprenticeships, in order to provide skills and knowledge on matters such as health and safety. (AQW 1022/07)

Sir Reg Empey: All Apprenticeship training has a Health and Safety element built into the qualification frameworks. Health and Safety awareness is usually delivered in the early stages of the training as part of induction.

Skills Deficit in Northern Ireland

Mr Jimmy Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what proactive steps are being taken by his department, in order to address the skills deficit in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1023/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Success through Skills, the Skills Strategy for Northern Ireland, aims to identify current and future skills needs both at a regional and local level and seek appropriate interventions.

The Strategy advocates the use of the Department's existing provision to raise the population's overall level of skills. This provision includes Essential Skills, Leading..to Success, Management Analysis Planning (MAP), Investors in People, Training for Success and the implementation of an all age Careers Strategy.

In addition, the Department is examining more sector specific requirements through an employer led network consisting of the Skills Expert Group, six Workforce Development Forums and the 25 UK wide Sector Skills Councils. Two priority skills sectors have already been identified: Financial Services and Information and Communication Technology.

Once specific skills needs have been identified the Department will work with the relevant stakeholders to put in place suitable interventions.

My Department has undertaken to work more closely with Invest NI. This continued collaboration is aimed at ensuring the local workforce has the skills needed to take full advantage of future Foreign Direct Investment and business opportunities.

Information and Communications Technologies Skilled Labour

Mr Jimmy Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps are being taken to increase the number of skilled workers in Information and Communications Technologies, in order to address the needs of indigenous firms, and eliminate the need for them to locate elsewhere for skilled labour. (AQW 1024/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The demand for Information and Communications Technology (ICT) skills in Northern Ireland is experiencing a period of rapid expansion. This together with the loss of image of the sector as a career choice following the retrenchment in the sector about 5 years ago, has created pressure on the demand for skills. The department is working with key stakeholders such as E-skills, the Sector Skills Council, Invest NI and employers from the sector to profile the demand for specific skills and find solutions. In order to do this, the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) has established a Future Skills Action Group which brings together all of these interests with representative of Higher Education (HE) and Further Education (FE).

In the meantime a range of initiatives have taken place, including the creation of a 30-week software professional course delivering through 3 FE Centres of Excellence. This DEL "Budget to Employment" funded course provides software developers through the conversion of non-IT graduates. This is in addition to training undertaken on behalf of specific companies. In addition, work continues with the sector employers, E-skills and other interests to improve the attractiveness of IT careers, prepare new entrants to the workforce and determine how best to develop the existing workforce.

Acceptance of Corporate Gifts

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline whether his department has conveyed any views or advice to the University of

Ulster on the acceptance of gifts, such as Rolex watches, from a middle eastern company. (AQW 1059/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The University of Ulster is an independent autonomous institution, with responsibility for its own policies and practices, including those in relation to corporate gifts and hospitality. The Department has not, therefore, conveyed any views or advice to the University on the acceptance of gifts. The University's Financial Procedures Manual sets out the policy statement to provide guidance as to circumstances when it is and is not appropriate to accept gifts, gratuities and hospitality.

Comparisons with Qualification Recognition

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give an update on the issue of mutual recognition of qualifications for apprentices, for example, City and Guilds, in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 1090/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The UK awarding and qualifications regulatory bodies and the Irish awarding bodies and qualifications authorities embarked on an exercise to align/cross reference the qualifications frameworks in the UK and Republic of Ireland. Following completion of this exercise in June 2005 the document "Qualifications can cross boundaries – a rough guide to comparing qualifications in the UK and Ireland" was published and is on the National Qualifications Authority of Ireland website.

Potential Redundancies

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give his assessment of whether redundancies will take place as a result of the merger of Fermanagh, Omagh and Dungannon Colleges; and to detail the number of potential redundancies. (AQW 1097/07)

Sir Reg Empey: As incorporated bodies, the Further Education Colleges in Northern Ireland are the employers for all college staff. The College Governing Bodies are the legal entities. Accordingly, it will be for the Governing Body of the new South West College, supported by the senior management team, to consider the staffing requirements of the new college, and whether or not there will be a need for redundancies. Therefore, I am not in a position to provide the assessment you have requested.

Apprenticeships in Manufacturing

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of apprenticeships in the manufacturing industry available in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Ards Borough Council area; and (c) the Strangford constituency, in the last three years. (AQW 1145/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department's method of data recording makes it very difficult to report the number of apprentices in the manufacturing industry within the specific areas of Ards Borough Council and the Strangford constituency. To do so would incur disproportionate cost. However, I can confirm that in Northern Ireland, a total of 1,027 young people commenced a manufacturing apprenticeship in 2004-05, 1,049 in 2005-06 and 988 in 2006-07.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Water-Based Tourism on Lough Neagh

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the commitment the Northern Ireland Tourist Board is making to the development of water-based tourism on Lough Neagh. (AQW 891/07)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): In the NITB Activity Tourism Strategy 2005-08, priority has been given to adventure activity, walking and cycling. Watersports is an integral part of adventure activity and therefore marketed alongside other adventure tourism activities.

NITB encourages key tourism organisations to work together to develop product around more regional and local areas (such as Lough Neagh). For example NITB recently hosted a Countryside Recreation Network (CRN) Seminar in Northern Ireland titled "Activity Tourism – A Practical Approach". Activity providers, Local Authority and Countryside Officers throughout Northern Ireland were invited.

Once developed and market-ready NITB will support and help promote activity tourism developments as an integrated part of our overall marketing strategies.

Foreign Nationals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the numbers of foreign nationals currently living in Northern Ireland by (a) constituency; and (b) District Council area. (AQW 954/07)

Mr Dodds: My officials are still working on the response. I will have a substantive answer to you by Wednesday 11 July 2007 at the latest.

Shooting Sports

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will consider including shooting sports as a priority within the Northern Ireland Tourist Board Activity Tourism Strategy 2005-2008. (AQW 981/07)

Mr Dodds: Shooting sports did not emerge as a priority for Northern Ireland's key customer segments in either extensive recent research by Tourism Ireland Limited or the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's on-going work on "Product Development Priorities".

As future developments for NITB must be customer led and market focused, there are no plans to add shooting sports as a priority area within the Northern Ireland Tourist Board Activity Tourism Strategy 2005-2008.

Tourist Signage

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, further to his response to AQW 454/07, if he will review the decision not to place a 'white on brown' Northern Ireland Tourist Board sign at Hollow Farm Shooting Grounds. (AQW 1013/07)

Mr Dodds: The responsibility for deciding eligibility for tourist signing rests between NITB and Roads Service of the Department of Regional Development and is an operational matter. Hollow Farm Shooting Grounds is not considered a tourist attraction in accordance with section 1.2.p (Tourist Utility) and section 4.1.8. (Sports Facilities) and as such not eligible for tourist signing; therefore I see no grounds for review. However, the applicant may wish to discuss the signing of the facility with Roads Service in black-on-white directional signage if there are traffic management or road safety issues.

Forbairt Feirste

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of funding given by his department to Forbairt Feirste, in each year since 1998. (AQW 1034/07)

Mr Dodds: No offers of assistance have been made to Forbairt Feirste by my department since 1998. A grant of £1,450 was paid by the Local Enterprise and Development Unit in March 1998 under a letter of offer dated November 1997. This grant was made under the Making Belfast Work Enterprise Awareness Programme.

Public-Sector Jobs

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the current number of public sector jobs located in each of the 18 Northern Ireland constituencies, broken down by department, agency or quango. (AQW 1051/07)

Mr Dodds: Estimates of the number of employee jobs at Parliamentary Constituency level are only available from the Census of Employment which is conducted on a biennial basis with the most recent figures relating to September 2005. Estimates of the total number of employee jobs in the public sector for each Parliamentary Constituency Area within Northern Ireland at that time can be found in Table 1 below.

The Census of Employment is conducted under the Statistics of Trade and Employment (Northern Ireland) Order 1988 and Article 7 of the Order prohibits the disclosure of information relating to individual undertakings except under certain conditions. It is therefore not possible to provide data on individual public sector organisations from this source.

Giant's Causeway Site

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline whether the Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre will be progressed in accordance with the proposed timetable; and what role his department will have in any other applications for development at the Giant's Causeway site.

(AQW 1068/07)

Mr Dodds: Although the detailed design for the replacement visitor facilities has reached an advanced stage of development, progress has not been as swift as originally anticipated. Key issues which have delayed the project have been the resolution of car parking requirements and planning considerations. We are continuing to work to resolve these issues.

Currently, my Department has no role in other applications for development at the Giant's Causeway.

Invest NI Initiatives

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail, in each of the last five years, the number of jobs created by Invest Northern Ireland initiatives, broken down by District Council area. (AQW 1126/07)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI does not create jobs. It provides assistance for businesses to improve their competitive position, which in turn may lead to employment creation. The number of jobs promoted and safeguarded through assisted inward-investment projects since 2002/03 is presented by District Council Area in Table 1(a) and 1(b) respectively.

It should be noted that these areas are not self-contained labour markets and a project assisted in a particular location has the potential to create benefits across a much wider area. Northern Ireland is a relatively small place and evidence indicates that many investments draw their workforce from areas beyond constituency and council area boundaries. Invest NI's scope to 'direct' investment to specific geographic areas is limited, although it has been able to influence the location decisions of some inward-investment projects. Ultimately, however, the final location decision rests with the business itself.

In addition, the number of jobs expected to be created through assistance offered to new locally-owned business starts by district council area is presented in Table 2.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Streams

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment if she will review the role that urban streams play in re-establishing nature corridors within towns and cities, with particular reference to the level of inter-agency consultation that exists with regard to the processing of planning applications affecting the catchment areas of such streams. (AQW 751/07)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster):

My Department is aware of the role urban streams play in relation to nature conservation and the protection of wildlife. This is reflected in the number of key planning policy statements and protective designations, where appropriate, in area plans aimed at conserving and enhancing their biodiversity. Comprehensive inter-agency consultation between Planning Service, Environment & Heritage Service, Rivers Agency and Northern Ireland Water, in particular, has been and continues to be an integral part of the policy and plan-making process. It is also an integral part of the processing of planning applications affecting the catchment areas of such streams. While my Department is continually seeking to make operational improvements to the consultation process, I am satisfied with the current level of inter-agency consultation and have no plans to review it.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the measures of protection given to the lake and woodland area on the site of the Rathgael Training Centre in Bangor, with specific reference to the approved planning permission and the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan. (AQW 799/07)

Mrs Foster: Both the existing planning approval and the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan (BMAP) contain conditions and policies respectively which are intended to provide the appropriate level of protection for the lake and woodland area at Rathgael Training Centre site, Bangor.

The planning conditions attached to the approval identify among other matters a defined acceptable development area and provide for the retention and protection of trees outside that development area and the retention of the important nature conservation features of the site.

The relevant policies of draft BMAP propose the designation of the area as a Local Landscape Policy Area and as a Site of Local Nature Conservation Importance as well as specifying key site requirements which include requirements regarding the protection of landscape and vegetation and existing flora and fauna.

Road Safety Strategy

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment if she will ensure that all Northern Ireland political parties are involved in the group that has been established to review the road safety strategy; and if she will give a timescale within which all parties will be represented on the group. (AQW 839/07)

Mrs Foster: No group has been established to review the Road Safety Strategy. As the review progresses, my Department will engage with the Environment Committee and all Northern Ireland political parties will be included in any consultation process.

I shall be meeting shortly with the Minister for Regional Development and the Police Service of Northern Ireland, the key statutory partners in developing and delivering the current Road Safety Strategy, to discuss the way forward on the review including the timescale within which the process can be completed.

Road Safety Authority

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how her department intends to work the Road Safety Authority (RSA), and other relevant authorities, in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 841/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department works closely with the relevant authorities in Ireland, including the Road Safety Authority. I intend to ensure that those close working relationships continue to secure shared road safety benefits.

Tree Preservation Order

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to give an assurance that Tree Preservation Orders are not lifted on trees, because of disease, without the confirmation of an independent expert. (AQW 843/07)

Mrs Foster: In the event of consideration being given to lifting a Tree Preservation Order because of disease, it would be normal practice to seek an opinion from the Department's consultant arboriculturist. However, the Department will not seek expert advice where it is obvious that the extent of the disease has affected the structure of the tree.

Diseased trees that are dead, dying or dangerous are exempt from the provisions of a Tree Preservation Order requiring the Department's consent for works to be carried out.

Climate Change

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to state what proposals she has to introduce a Climate Change Bill to set targets for the reduction of carbon emissions. (AQW 844/07)

Mrs Foster: The UK government and each of the devolved administrations are committed to tackling the issue of climate change. I met with my environment Minister colleagues in the other UK administrations to discuss the Climate Change Bill on 18 June. I will be meeting with the Committee for the Environment on 5 July and am currently getting feedback on the DEFRA consultation which finished on 12 June.

Once I have reflected on the matter, particularly on the issue of statutory targets, I intend to bring my policy position to the Executive for agreement.

In Northern Ireland the issue of climate change is already central to the NI Sustainable Development Strategy which identifies challenging targets on greenhouse gas reductions and a range of actions to support this.

Road Safety

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment if she can provide an indicative time-line for her review of road safety. (AQW 881/07)

Mrs Foster: I shall be meeting shortly with the Minister for Regional Development and the Police Service of Northern Ireland, the key statutory partners in developing and delivering the current Road Safety Strategy, to discuss the way forward on the review including the timescale within which the process can be completed.

Water Quality at Lough Neagh

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of how the water quality standard of Lough Neagh compares to that required under EU Directives. (AQW 889/07)

Mrs Foster: Lough Neagh is designated as 'salmonid' under European Directive (2006/44/EEC) 'on the quality of fresh waters needing protection or improvement in order to support fish life'. Monitoring by Environment and Heritage Service, in the period 2000 to 2006, has shown that the quality of the water in the Lough has intermittently failed to comply with the requirements of the Directive.

Failure to comply has in the main been due to exceedences in the level of pH value. The high pH values are attributed to the effects of plant nutrients in the rivers which flow into the Lough.

Lough Neagh is 'eutrophic' which means that it contains high levels of nutrients, especially compounds of nitrogen and/or phosphorus, which affect the balance of organisms in the water and the quality of the water itself.

The vulnerability of the Lough was recognised in 1994 when it was designated as Sensitive (Eutrophic) under the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive.

My Department's Environment and Heritage Service has responsibility under the Nitrates Directive Action Programme for enforcing good practice in relation to the application of nutrients to land, and it is envisaged that work under this programme will also reduce the nutrient loadings to water bodies including Lough Neagh.

As it is a source of drinking water, Lough Neagh is also monitored by Northern Ireland Water for compliance with the European Directive (75/440/EEC) on Surface Water Abstraction. Under the terms of the Directive, water bodies are graded as Category A, B or C, and Lough Neagh is currently graded as 'B'.

Park Land, Open Space and Playing Fields

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment, with reference to the Local Government (Northern Ireland) Act 1973, what action she proposes to take to stop District Councils selling off park land, open space and playing fields for development. (AQW 899/07)

Mrs Foster: Both the Department for Culture, Arts and Leisure and my Department have policy responsibility for local government functions concerning park land, open spaces and playing fields. District councils can apply to the Natural Heritage Grant Programme to purchase or manage open space to enable a wide range of people to enjoy and appreciate our natural heritage. However, district councils are not permitted to appropriate any part of the land aided under this scheme for any purpose other than nature conservation or to sell, lease or otherwise dispose of it without the prior consent of my Department.

In addition if councils wish to dispose of land the Local Government Act (NI) 1972 provides that except where disposal is at less than best price or rent (when the approval of my Department is required) district councils are free to dispose of any land in their ownership.

Protection of the Irish Hare

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what consultations she has undertaken with the Countryside Alliance in relation to the special protection order for the Irish hare. (AQW 935/07)

Mrs Foster: No consultation took place between my Department and Countryside Alliance prior to the publication on 15th June of the notice proposing a new Special Protection Order for the Irish Hare. In accordance with the powers contained within the 1928 Game Preservation Act, under which the Special Protection Order is made, the Department published notice of the proposal in the Belfast Gazette and the local press, providing a suitable period to receive objections to the proposal. In addition individual letters were sent to relevant interests, including Countryside Alliance, advising them of the proposal and the deadline for objections. No further consultation was considered appropriate.

The Minister is meeting Countryside Alliance in the near future.

Green Shoots Survey

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions she has had with the British Association of Shooting and Conservation regarding its Green Shoots survey for Northern Ireland; and if she will give her assessment of the content of the survey. (AQW 938/07)

Mrs Foster: I have not yet had the opportunity to discuss The Green Shoots Survey with British Association for Shooting and Conservation (BASC). However I am aware that my officials commissioned BASC to complete a Green Shoots Survey of its members in Northern Ireland. I am delighted to learn that over 400 BASC members completed the survey, covering some 25% of Northern Ireland and generating over 16,000 wildlife records. I welcome this engagement of grass roots support within the shooting community.

I understand that BASC now wishes to encourage its members to build on these results and develop projects which would improve the biodiversity potential of large tracts of Northern Ireland. I look forward to seeing some of these projects come to fruition.

Renewable Energy

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of the Environment what is her current position on the development of renewable energy; and what considerations are in place for the inclusion of renewable energy sources in the planning application process. (AQW 949/07)

Mrs Foster: I believe that renewable energy has an important part to play in tackling climate change.

Planning policy for renewable energy is currently set out in Policy PSU 12 of the Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland which advises that proposals for the development of renewable energy sources will be assessed against the need to protect and conserve the environment.

There is currently no requirement for developers to include renewable energy sources as part of their planning application.

Dibney River

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if the Dibney River is monitored and maintained for river quality. (AQW 984/07)

Mrs Foster: It is the role of the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) to conserve, protect and where possible improve both the freshwater and marine aquatic environment in Northern Ireland.

EHS protects the aquatic environment through a variety of activities including targeted programmes to conduct water quality monitoring in waterways designated under the EC Freshwater Fish Directive (2006/44/EC). The Dibney River does not have a large enough flow to be designated and monitored under this Directive and is therefore not monitored chemically.

In a 1999 review of the Northern Ireland river monitoring network, the Dibney River was investigated for inclusion in the freshwater biological river monitoring programme. For health and safety reasons related to sampling, the river was not added to the monitoring programme and as a result it is not monitored biologically.

EHS is also responsible for taking action to combat or minimise the effects of pollution on waterways and groundwater sources in Northern Ireland. Where pollution occurs it is the policy of EHS to take formal enforcement action, if this is warranted by the severity of the pollution and the circumstances which led to it occurring.

In the period 1 January 2004 to date, there were ten reports of pollution received and investigated by EHS in relation to the Dibney River. None were found to be significant enough to merit formal enforcement action.

Backlog of Planning Applications

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of the Environment to provide an update on the number of planning applications that are currently backlogged; and to detail the length of time it will take the Planning Service to clear this backlog. (AQW 992/07)

Mrs Foster: The total number of valid applications awaiting decision at 31 May 2007 is 19,279. It is not possible to give definitive timescales for the processing of all applications, but in an effort to ease the current operational pressures a Divisional Support Team has been established and is currently in operation in the Craigavon Divisional Planning Office. Alongside the work of the team, the Planning Service's Operations Directorate will be critically examining existing practices within Divisions with a view to changes that will further assist. Specific areas of focus include, but will not be limited to, arrangements for handling planning appeals; the approach to processing reserved matters applications; and arrangements for handling telephone contact with offices.

Recycling in the Work Place

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what percentage of businesses, in particular large businesses, regularly recycle in the workplace. (AQW 1042/07)

Mrs Foster: The Department currently co-sponsors the Business in the Community ARENA Network's Environmental Management Survey. The Survey benchmarks the environmental management performance (inclusive of solid waste) of Northern Ireland's 200 leading firms, 26 local authorities, Health Trusts and the education sector.

While it is not possible to provide separate figures for businesses, this year's Survey identified that 93% of organisations taking part collected data on the amount of waste they produced. Furthermore, 82% of participants were able to demonstrate greater diversion of waste from landfill through waste reduction and recycling.

Recycling and Domestic Waste Separation

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of District Councils currently providing information leaflets on recycling and domestic waste separation in languages other than English. (AQW 1043/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not hold this information, as District Councils are not statutorily obliged to provide it.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Industrial De-Rating

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what proposals exist to give businesses in the services sector similar tax breaks to those enjoyed by manufacturers, in respect to industrial de-rating.

(AQO 126/07)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Robinson): There are presently no firm proposals to introduce local taxation breaks for businesses in the service sector. However, the Economic Research Institute has been engaged to undertake a study into small business relief, alongside the work they are undertaking into industrial derating. This is in connection with a review of the decision made by the previous administration in 2006 not to introduce a small business rate relief scheme in Northern Ireland.

Public Sector Jobs

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to list the number of public sector jobs, per 100 economically active people or otherwise, in each (a) travel-to-work area, (b) district council area, and (c) constituency, in Northern Ireland.
(AQW 826/07)

Mr Robinson: The number of full-time equivalent public sector jobs per 100 economically active people is as follows:

(A) TRAVEL-TO-WORK AREAS

Ballymena	16.8	Enniskillen	17.3
Belfast	28.1	Mid-Ulster	14.5
Coleraine	19.1	Newry	19.4
Craigavon	21.7	Omagh	31.0
Londonderry	25.9	Strabane	13.3
Dungannon	17.6

(B) DISTRICT COUNCIL AREAS

Antrim	31.1	Down	17.5
Ards	11.1	Dungannon	17.9
Armagh	23.8	Fermanagh	18.1
Ballymena	21.6	Larne	10.4
Ballymoney	13.5	Limavady	17.0
Banbridge	11.4	Lisburn	17.6
Belfast	53.2	Magherafelt	15.9
Carrickfergus	10.6	Moyle	13.8
Castlereagh	32.1	Newry and Mourne	19.5
Coleraine	21.4	Newtownabbey	13.3
Cookstown	11.3	North Down	13.6
Craigavon	23.5	Omagh	30.8
Derry	29.9	Strabane	12.2

(C) CONSTITUENCIES

Belfast East	33.8	Mid Ulster	12.8
Belfast North	42.6	Newry and Armagh	27.0
Belfast South	62.3	North Antrim	18.4
Belfast West	45.6	North Down	12.9
East Antrim	10.1	South Antrim	20.4
East Londonderry	19.8	South Down	13.7
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	19.6	Strangford	18.3
Foyle	29.9	Upper Bann	22.0
Lagan Valley	17.4	West Tyrone	22.9

Notes:

1. The economically active population is taken as those economically active aged 16-74 as recorded in the 2001 census of population. Area is where the economically active population lives.
2. The estimates given of public sector jobs are from the Census of Employment and refer to the number of employee jobs in the public sector at September 2005. The public sector comprises Central Government (including bodies under the aegis of Central Government), Local Government and Public Corporations.
3. The most up-to-date employee jobs estimates for the public sector are available from the Quarterly Employment Survey (QES) with the most recent data available relating to March 2007. However these estimates are only available at Northern Ireland level. Employee jobs figures below Northern Ireland level are only available from the biennial Census of Employment with the most recent figures relating to September 2005.
4. The Census of Employment has been carried out biennially since 1987 and covers all employers in non-agricultural sectors. Results are available at detailed levels of disaggregation and geographical location (subject to confidentiality being maintained), including a split by public and private sector. Sub Northern Ireland analysis from the Census of Employment is primarily based on the location of the jobs, not on the home address of the employees. Furthermore, in a small number of instances where employers were not able to provide figures by actual location, the employees were allocated to the address where pay records were held (e.g. head office). The re-location or change of reporting procedures by large employers can therefore affect the Census of Employment sub NI analysis.
5. The Census of Employment (and the QES) collect information on the number of persons in full-time and part-time employment. The surveys both count the number of jobs rather than the number of persons with jobs. Therefore a person holding both a full-time and a part-time job, or someone with two part-time jobs, will be counted twice. Persons working 30 hours or less per week are normally regarded as being in part-time employment.
6. The sub-Northern Ireland analysis is based on 1992 ward boundaries, which have been aggregated to form Parliamentary Constituency Areas, District Council Areas and Travel-to-Work Areas. Individual companies were assigned to 1992 wards using the Central Postcode Directory. In the case of Travel-to-Work Areas (TTWAs), the 11 existing TTWAs were constructed from 1984-wards - the data presented is therefore a best fit of 1992 wards.
7. To convert employee jobs data to full-time equivalents, part-time employee jobs were considered to equal 0.5 of a full-time employee job.

Secretary of State's Financial Package

Mr Basil McCrea asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he has received any assurances from the Secretary of State that there will be progress made on a suitable financial package. (AQW 884/07)

Mr Robinson: The Secretary of State played an important role in the negotiations on a financial package before the devolution of power to the Assembly and Executive. Responsibility for continuing discussions with the Treasury on a suitable financial package now lies with the Northern Ireland Executive. No further specific assurances have been received from the Secretary of State about changes to the financial package. However, the Northern Ireland Executive will continue to seek the support from the Secretary of State and other members of the Government on this matter.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the percentage of the Gross Domestic Product produced by the agricultural sector in (a) 1996; (b) 2001; and (c) 2006. (AQW 945/07)

Mr Robinson: Estimates produced by the Office for National Statistics indicate that the percentage of Northern Ireland's Gross Value Added¹ (GVA) produced directly by the agricultural sector was 5.5% in 1996; 2.7% in 2001; and 2.6% in 2004 (the latest year for which these statistics are available).

Irish Language Film and Television Fund

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide a list of the names of the companies that tendered for the preparation of the business case for the Irish language film and television fund. (AQW 971/07)

Mr Robinson: The Department of Finance and Personnel did not award a contract for the Preparation of the Business Case for the Irish Language and Television Fund. The Department did, however, act as an agent on behalf of the Department of Culture Arts and Leisure, in the establishment of a contract for the provision of a Business Case and Economic Appraisal of the Minority Language Broadcasting Fund. The purpose of the Business Case was to support a bid for resources to deliver Irish language film and television production in Northern Ireland.

Three companies tendered for this contract and they were:-

- BDO Stoy Hayward;
- FPM Chartered Accountants; and
- Peter Quinn Consultancy Services.

Design and Build Contracts

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is his assessment of the transfer of risk on Design and Build contracts, with specific reference to value for money for the taxpayer. (AQW 999/07)

Mr Robinson: The purpose of Design and Build contracts is to reduce the risk to the Client and to maximise the opportunity for value for money gains in project delivery.

Integration of the design and construction functions facilitates:

- partnership working with the client team;
- innovation;
- joint commitment to best whole-life value; and
- improved risk management through early contractor involvement.

In addition, it provides the public sector client with single point responsibility for delivery on time and to budget.

Disposal of Land

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel in view of the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development's decision to sell-off DARD property to finance the Nitrates Directive, if it is now policy across departments for land and other valuable assets to be sold in order to fund departmental initiatives. (AQW 1056/07)

Mr Robinson: All departments have a responsibility to ensure their capital infrastructure supports the delivery of effective and efficient public services. Where departments identify and dispose of surplus assets, the proceeds remain in Northern Ireland to support the delivery of public services. Decisions on the reinvestment of such proceeds are taken collectively by the Executive, in the context of strategic priorities and available resources.

Quangos

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many quangos there are in Northern Ireland; and if he will list them. (AQW 1060/07)

Mr Robinson: The latest information on all the public bodies sponsored by Northern Ireland

departments, including the amount of government funding received by each body and the number of staff employed by each body, is contained in the Cabinet Office publication, 'Public Bodies 2006' and can be accessed through the following link:

<http://www.civilservice.gov.uk/other/agencies/publications/pdf/public-bodies/publicbodies2006.pdf>

I have placed a copy of an extract from this report referring to Northern Ireland departments in the Library.

Information on whether or not those employed are full-time or part-time is not readily available and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost. However, information is currently being gathered in respect of 2007 to inform a report on public bodies sponsored by Northern Ireland departments only and I have asked to have these employment details included. The report is due to be published at the end of August.

Funding for Quangos

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the amount of funding from the Northern Ireland Block grant used to fund quangos in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1061/07)

Mr Robinson: The latest information on all the public bodies sponsored by Northern Ireland departments, including the amount of government funding received by each body and the number of staff employed by each body, is contained in the Cabinet Office publication, 'Public Bodies 2006' and can be accessed through the following link:

Staff Employed by Quangos

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of people that are employed by quangos, both full-time and part-time. (AQW 1062/07)

Mr Robinson: The latest information on all the public bodies sponsored by Northern Ireland departments, including the amount of government funding received by each body and the number of staff employed by each body, is contained in the Cabinet Office publication, 'Public Bodies 2006' and can be accessed through the following link:

Review into Forecasting and Monitoring

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to comment on how his department intends to address the recommendations of the PKF (UK) Review into forecasting and monitoring. (AQW 1118/07)

Mr Robinson: My officials will work with departments in taking forward all the recommendations of the review. The initial focus will be on improving the quality of financial information used by departmental boards and on training for non-finance professionals.

Financial Subvention

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to set targets for reduction in the level of financial subvention to Northern Ireland from the Treasury. (AQW 1120/07)

Mr Robinson: The size of the financial subvention, or fiscal deficit, can best be reduced by encouraging economic growth in the local private sector. A more buoyant and vibrant private sector will generate greater tax yields within Northern Ireland thereby reducing the estimated subvention.

Workplace 2010

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give an assurance that Workplace 2010 will not act as a barrier to decentralisation of civil service jobs, either in structural or financial terms, if a decision to decentralise is made by the Executive. (AQW 1122/07)

Mr Robinson: The Workplace 2010 contract, if approved by the Executive, will contain appropriate flexibility provisions to accommodate future movement of business. The price will be determined upfront in a competitive environment thus ensuring best value for money. I am satisfied that this procurement will not fetter any future decisions on the location of public sector jobs.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to set targets for reduction in the public sector share of Northern Ireland's Gross Domestic Product. (AQW 1125/07)

Mr Robinson: The public sector share of Northern Ireland's Gross Domestic Product is estimated to be the highest of all UK regions. However, this is mainly due to the small scale of the local private sector. Therefore, growing the Northern Ireland private sector is crucial to reducing the public sector's relative contribution to the local economy.

Draft Regional Economic Strategy

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to revise the draft Regional Economic Strategy. (AQW 1142/07)

Mr Robinson: Public consultation on the draft Regional Economic Strategy concluded on 19 April 2007. I am currently assessing the responses and I will place a response on the DFP website after discussion with Executive colleagues. The next stage in the Regional Economic Strategy will need to await the outcome of the ongoing Varney Review which will be critical to future economic development policy in Northern Ireland.

Car Parking for Civil Servants

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the amount spent on car parking for civil servants, in the last five years. (AQW 1147/07)

Mr Robinson:

COST OF CAR PARKING TO DFP

Year	Cost
2003/04	£1,080,738.23

Year	Cost
2004/05	£1,205,648.21
2005/06	£1,507,055.29
2006/07	£1,353,138.64
2007/08	£948,677.02
Total	£6,095,257.39

Note:

The Department of Finance and Personnel has historically had responsibility for the provision of car parking to essential users within all the Northern Ireland Departments. The table above reflects this DFP expenditure.

When Departments require additional spaces, these are acquired from within Departmental budgets.

Rates Holiday

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail whether any incoming business to Northern Ireland receives a rates holiday, either now or in the past. (AQW 1170/07)

Mr Robinson: There is no provision in the rating legislation to provide for a rates holiday for incoming business to Northern Ireland, either now or in the past.

Rating of Unoccupied Non-Domestic Properties

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to introduce changes to the rating of unoccupied non-domestic properties in the near future. (AQW 1355/07)

Mr Robinson: I have no plans to do so at present. My Department is monitoring the current reforms being taken forward for England and Wales and I will examine the issue further following the outcome of the current review of industrial derating by the Economic Research Institute.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Respite Care

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are being put in place to ensure that the assessed needs of those with severe learning disabilities who require respite care are met, within each Health and Social Care Trust area. (AQW 987/07)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): My Department and Health and Social Care Trusts are working collaboratively to progress business cases for identified capital projects. I am also considering respite care in setting my budgetary priorities for the coming year.

Respite Care

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the action being taken by each Health and Social Care Trust to ensure the availability of age appropriate facilities for those with severe learning disabilities aged 19-25, who require respite care. (AQW 988/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Places are allocated on a compatibility basis rather than by specific age bands; however age alignment takes place when respite is being planned, where possible.

As part of the current modernisation plans, Trusts are taking cognisance of age appropriateness when modernising and replacing existing residential provision.

Compensation Paid for Medical Negligence

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will detail the amount of money paid to legal representatives, for both the claimants and Health and Social Care Trusts, in terms of claims for compensation for medical negligence made against each of the Health and Social Care Trusts, in each of the past five years. (AQW 1005/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate costs.

Successful Recipients of Compensation Payments for Medical Negligence

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will detail the amount of money paid out to successful claimants, in terms of claims for compensation for medical negligence made against each of the Health and Social Care Trusts, in each of the past five years. (AQW 1006/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested has been set out in the table below.

AMOUNTS PAID OUT TO SUCCESSFUL CLAIMANTS IN TERMS OF CLAIMS FOR COMPENSATION FOR MEDICAL NEGLIGENCE MADE AGAINST EACH OF THE HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES TRUSTS IN EACH OF THE LAST 5 YEARS

The five new Health and Social Care Trusts came into operation on 1 April 2007. Since the information requested is in respect of the years 2001/02 – 2005/06, the answer has been given in relation to the nineteen Health and Social Services Trusts which existed prior to that.

Compensation Claims for Medical Negligence

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will detail the number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made against each of the Health and Social Care Trusts that are still pending determination, in each of the past five years.

(AQW 1007/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested has been set out in the tables below.

The five new Health and Social Care Trusts came into operation on 1 April 2007. Since the information requested is in respect of the years 2001/02 – 2005/06, the answer has been given in relation to the nineteen Health and Social Services Trusts which existed prior to that.

Alcohol Related Incidents

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many alcohol related incidents have been dealt with by the A&E departments of hospitals in Northern Ireland, in each of last three years. (AQW 1028/07)

Mr McGimpsey: I am not in a position to provide the precise number of alcohol related incidents that have been dealt with by A&E departments of hospitals in the last three years.

The information requested is not held centrally by my Department.

Figures collated by my Department relate to the number of verbal and physical abusive incidents that occur within Trusts, Boards and Agency's and can only be detailed by staff group but not by hospital departments.

Financial Contributions by Care Home Residents

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to state the number of dwellings which have been acquired from care home residents by Health and Social Care Trusts to cover the cost of care, in the last five years. (AQW 1053/07)

Mr McGimpsey: This information is not collected. Care home residents are required by legislation to contribute to the cost of their care. Each resident undergoes a financial assessment to determine the level of this contribution. That assessment takes into account savings and other assets. Health and Social Care Trusts do not acquire properties to enable people to contribute to the cost of their care. It is for residents and their advisers to decide how best to meet their assessed contribution to the cost of their care.

Lurgan Hospital

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to comment on the future of Lurgan Hospital, both in the short term and long term, with specific reference to the closure of two respite care wards, and the moving of the skin clinic to Craigavon Area Hospital. (AQW 1164/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Lurgan Hospital will continue to provide a range of services locally including elderly care and therapy services.

The Southern Health and Social Care Trust, which is responsible for Lurgan Hospital, has recently approved proposals for a number of major service developments for older people living in the Southern area. The proposals include moving respite care which is currently provided at Lurgan Hospital to a community setting. This is consistent with my Department's policy that high quality care should be provided in the most appropriate settings, preferably in or near people's homes. The Trust also plans to develop new services for older people, including a 'one-stop' consultant led clinic based at Lurgan Hospital.

A review of dermatology services is currently under way within the Trust to examine new ways of delivering services to improve access for patients. The review is part of the Trust's ongoing modernisation and reform programme and is focusing on how and where dermatology should be most appropriately provided in future. The process will include the introduction of a Dermatology Integrated Clinical Assessment and Treatment Service (ICATS), which will help to reduce the length of time patients wait for specialist assessment and treatment.

Availability of Drugs for Dementia

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make a statement on the comparison between the availability of clinically effective drugs for dementia in Northern Ireland and their availability in England and Wales. (AQO 242/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The prescription of drugs for the Alzheimer's form of dementia in England and Wales is subject to guidance issued by NICE which recommends that certain drugs be used for treating people at the moderate stage of the disease only. The process by which NICE developed this guidance is currently subject to judicial review.

In Northern Ireland we would generally expect to apply NICE guidance on the use of drugs as this provides the most robust evidence base available to inform such decisions. However, NICE guidance on Alzheimer's drugs has not yet been applied in Northern Ireland and remains under review by my Department. Consequently a number of drugs used in treating people with Alzheimer's disease are currently more widely available in Northern Ireland compared to England and Wales.

NHS Direct

Mr David McClarty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will undertake to extend NHS Direct to Northern Ireland to enable patients to have 24 hour access to NHS staff and advice. (AQO 231/07)

Mr McGimpsey: I am interested in developing an NHS Direct-type service for the people of Northern Ireland. I believe this would provide improved access to advice and information on health matters, enabling people to deal with many issues at home, thus avoiding attendance at their Doctor or A & E services. However, this will, quite properly, have to be considered by the Executive against a range of priorities as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Dental Patients

Ms Carmel Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the number of dental patients in receipt of NHS funded treatment, broken down by Trust area. (AQO 206/07)

Mr McGimpsey: By Trust area, the numbers of patients receiving Health Service dental treatment in 2006/07 were as follows:

Belfast Trust:	176,273
Northern Area Trust:	180,685
South Eastern Area Trust:	123,671
Southern Area Trust:	136,097
Western Area Trust:	95,189
These total	711,765.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Spending on Consultancy and Public Relations

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money has been spent by his department in each of the last five years on (a) public relations, and (b) other consultancy services. (AQO 288/07)

Mr McGimpsey: In 2002/03, £1,009,481 was spent on external consultancy.

In 2003/04 £1,590,641 was spent on external consultancy, including £1,435 on public relations.

In 2004/05, £1,885,458 was spent on external consultancy, including £6,197 on public relations.

In 2005/06, £2,173,702 was spent on external consultancy, including £6,894 on public relations.

In 2006/07, £2,502,487 was spent on external consultancy.

Cost of Drugs Wastage

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the total cost to the Health Service in relation to the annual cost of drugs wastage, and what measures he is taking to address this wastage. (AQO 217/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested on cost is not routinely collected. On the basis of figures extrapolated from Great Britain, it is estimated that the cost of unused medicines in Northern Ireland amounts to approximately £2.5million per year. I should add, however, that even this is an inaccurate figure as it represents only those unused drugs returned to pharmacies for disposal. It is impossible to estimate accurately how much people dispose of privately. However, even £2.5m is a tiny fraction – about 0.7% - of the total drugs bill for NI, which stands at some £354million.

To reduce drugs wastage, my Department is pursuing a number of initiatives. These include medicines management initiatives, where patients are provided with information and support by their pharmacist on when and how to take their tablets and so reduce the opportunities for medicines to be wasted. In addition, repeat dispensing is currently being rolled out across Northern Ireland – this allows patients to get their repeat medicines for up to a year from their community pharmacy, under careful monitoring by the pharmacist, without having to contact their GP.

We are also rolling out an Integrated Medicines Management initiative, which includes promoting, where appropriate, the use of patients' own drugs during a hospital stay, thereby contributing to a reduction in medicines wastage.

Re-Branding of Hospitals

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make a statement on the cost and value for money of re-branding hospitals, following reconstitution of the Health Trusts. (AQO 236/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The changes to the health and social care structures in Northern Ireland as a result of the Review of Public Administration provided an opportunity for a single identity to be developed. For the first time patients and staff can recognise that organisations belong to one coherent system delivering consistent, high quality services across Northern Ireland.

In terms of cost, and regardless of re-branding, the reduction in the number of Trusts from 19 to 6 necessitated a change to the corporate identity of all the health and social care facilities and buildings across Northern Ireland. Every effort has been made to minimise costs in this area including keeping all design within the Service and using up existing stocks of stationery where possible. The only separately identifiable cost to date has been for signage at just over £33,000.

I am satisfied that to date the process for re-branding is beneficial, should be applied to other areas as appropriate and represents value for money. I have made it clear that as the process rolls out cost must be kept to the absolute minimum.

Autism

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give an update on his approach to autism. (AQO 212/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The steep rise in diagnosed cases of autism in the past few years has placed considerable pressure on the services available. I share in the cross party support for improving these services and to that end my Department will shortly be undertaking a review of autism service provision to identify gaps, share best practice and promote innovation.

New Acute Hospital at Enniskillen

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what services will be available to the new acute hospital at Enniskillen when it is completed. (AQO 270/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The new acute hospital at Enniskillen will provide a wide range of acute services for the people of the south west including Accident and Emergency, inpatient medicine and surgery, critical care and maternity. It will also provide day case surgery and day procedures together with a comprehensive range of diagnostics, including radiology and laboratory tests and a comprehensive range of outpatient services.

Enabling works have already begun on the selected site at Wolf Lough to the north of Enniskillen and it is expected that the hospital will be completed in 2011.

Mental Health

Mr Samuel Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give an update on his department's approach to mental health. (AQO 211/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Bamford Review has made recommendations on the future configuration of mental health services. My officials are currently developing detailed proposals for handling Government's response to the Review's recommendations as a whole, including the resource implications over coming years although we have already begun to implement a number of the recommendations from reports received to date.

Cushendall Fire Station

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the Fire and Rescue Service will provide a new fire station in Cushendall, Co. Antrim. (AQO 205/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service has identified Cushendall Fire Station as a high priority for rebuild on the existing site in its current Strategic Infrastructure Development Plan. The timing of the new build will depend on the successful completion of work currently being jointly undertaken by my Department, the Fire and Rescue Service and the Strategic Investment Board to secure the funding which has been identified in the current Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland for the modernisation of emergency services,

Investment Package for Dentistry

Mr John McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to introduce an investment package for dentistry to ensure that dental practices can invest in oral health promotion. (AQO 230/07)

Mr McGimpsey: My officials are currently engaged in negotiations with the British Dental Association on the development of a Dental Contract which will underpin the Primary Dental Care Strategy and provide a framework for the delivery of primary dental services. The contract will enable both independent contractors and commissioning authorities to further enhance and develop the role of dentistry in improving the health and well being of the Northern Ireland population, including oral health promotion.

Hospital Performance

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what efficiency measures he plans to put in place to ensure a better performance from hospitals in Northern Ireland. (AQO 232/07)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is currently finalising challenging efficiencies of £338m for the period 2008/09 to 2010/11, as part of the Executive Committee's agreed approach to the Comprehensive Spending Review. This builds on existing efficiencies of £146m to be achieved by 2007/08.

Savings will be attained through a range of measures such as improved procurement; more efficient prescribing and dispensing of medicines; improved productivity and reduced administration.

My Department is also currently working on an updated set of financial rules to govern transactions between commissioners and providers. This will enhance the efficiency of the service by improving the link between the level and appropriateness of services provided and the income of the provider.

Carrickfergus Fire Station

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give his assessment of the current condition of Carrickfergus fire station. (AQO 251/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service has confirmed that the condition of the Fire and Rescue Station at Carrickfergus is adequate for the immediate needs of the Fire and Rescue Service.

However, Carrickfergus Fire Station has been identified by NIFRS as High Priority for the construction of a new station in a new location in its Strategic Infrastructure Development Plan. In the interim further minor improvements to the condition of the Station are planned in this financial year, which will accommodate NIFRS plans for changes in the duty system where fulltime fire fighters will provide an enhanced attendance time at incidents.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Civil Servants' Car Share Scheme

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the incentives made available by the Northern Ireland Civil Service, in order to encourage staff to share vehicles when travelling to work. (AQW 636/07)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): The promotion of car sharing is a matter for my Department's Roads Service.

A car share scheme was introduced in June 2005 to encourage Civil Service staff to share the journey to work on the basis that it reduces traffic congestion, saves on fuel costs, and contributes to a reduction in exhaust emissions. In Clarence Court, the Headquarters of my Department, 23 spaces in the car park are reserved for car sharers.

A free on-line car-share scheme is promoted across the Civil Service through my Department's Travelwise initiative. Participating staff can register their journey details on the car share website. The system then automatically searches for potential journey partners travelling in the same direction and allows individuals to contact each other via email or telephone. Staff can register by logging on to www.travelwisenicarshare.com or by contacting the Travelwise NI information line on 0845 378 0908. More than 1050 Civil Servants are currently registered on the scheme. I can also advise that the Travelwise Car Share Scheme has now been rolled out to businesses and the public.

Roads Service also promotes the use of free Park & Share sites, where staff and the public may park their cars, meet their car share partners and continue the journeys to work.

Street Lighting

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will conduct a new survey in relation to the request for lighting along the coast road from Larne to Drains Bay, in particular before and after the Black Arch area, due to the popularity of this route with walkers, runners and cyclists. (AQW 782/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that there is a 300m length of road with a 30 mph speed limit on the Larne side of the Black Arch at Drain's Bay. While there has been no recent development on this section of road, Roads Service's current policy would allow street lighting to be installed from the Arch up to end of the 30mph speed limit.

There are, however, some strong arguments against extending the lighting on this rural road which is in a particularly scenic setting. I have therefore asked Roads Service officials to arrange to meet some of the Larne Borough Councillors to discuss these arguments and agree a course of action. If it is agreed that the street lighting should be extended to the end of the 30 mph limit, Roads Service will also discuss the siting of columns close to the Black Arch, so that they do not detract from its appearance.

Maintenance of Drainage Systems

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to have a clearance of gullies undertaken to prevent blockages after the recent storms, within (a) Ards Borough, and (b) Strangford. (AQW 820/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that, it aims to inspect, and clean where necessary, all gullies in urban areas twice each year and gullies in rural areas once each year. This is in line with road maintenance guidelines which apply equally to the Ards Borough and Strangford areas. This policy ensures that a reasonable level of maintenance is carried out to drainage systems, taking account of the Department's finite funding and staff resource levels.

In addition to the scheduled operation, further cleaning is carried out to deal with blocked gullies, particularly at locations where fallen leaves represent an ongoing problem at certain times of the year, or where there has been a history of gullies becoming blocked for other reasons.

I have been assured that Roads Service's local staff are in the process of identifying and cleaning any gullies or storm drainage systems that became blocked during the recent storms.

Cycle Lane in Carrickfergus and Larne

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his strategic plan for cycle lanes in Carrickfergus and Larne. (AQW 827/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department, which continues to promote cycling as a sustainable mode of travel, has a number of high-level policy documents that deal with cycling. These include the Northern Ireland Cycling Strategy, the Regional Transportation Strategy, the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan which includes Carrickfergus, and the Sub-Regional Transport Plan which includes Larne.

The Department's strategic plan for cycle lanes in Carrickfergus is set out in Chapter 8 of the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan. In summary, the thrust of the proposals is to improve facilities along the A2 coast road, with appropriate linkages into Carrickfergus and beyond to the B90 (Middle Road).

The Sub Regional Transportation Plan outlines the Strategic Plan for cycle lanes in Larne. The plan contains a blueprint for Larne that outlines the existing and proposed cycle infrastructure for the town. A significant amount of the plan contained in the blueprint has been delivered by Roads Service, working in conjunction with Larne Borough Council and Sustrans over the past number of years, for example, a new off-road shared use facility was provided along the A8 from the Old Belfast Road to Pound Street during 2004/05 at a cost of some £60,000.

Road Works, Larne

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to confirm when work will be completed on the main road that is to connect Walnut Hollow,

Oakdene, and Hampton Manor in Larne. (AQW 828/07)

Mr Murphy: These streets are in a large residential development, known locally as Larne West, which is to be served by a main housing distributor road. In accordance with the overall concept plan, individual housing developers are constructing sections of this main road as part of their planning approvals, with the final desired outcome being the complete delivery of the road. As such, the timing of the delivery lies outside my Department's direct control, and depends on suitable housing proposals being brought forward by developers through the planning process. I am unable therefore, to give a definite date for overall completion.

Light Rail System for Belfast

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development to set out the progress which has been made in providing a light rail system for the Greater Belfast area. (AQW 830/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department is currently examining the feasibility of two pilot rapid transit routes in the Belfast Metropolitan Area (BMA): EWAY, which would serve the Newtownards corridor; and the CITI Route (City Airport Titanic Quarter route) as a new route linking Belfast city centre and George Best Belfast City Airport through the Titanic Quarter and the new retail development in the Belfast Harbour Estate. The study is also looking at routes through the City centre to the Queens University area of South Belfast and to West Belfast.

While the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan, published in 2004, suggested that Rapid Transit should be bus-based, the current study is considering both light rail and a variety of bus-based rapid transit options to determine the most appropriate technology for the BMA. The study is due to make an initial report in the summer on the EWAY and CITI routes, with a supplementary report in the autumn on the feasibility of routes through the City centre to South and West Belfast.

Belfast to Derry / Londonderry Railway Line

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the steps that have been taken to minimise breakdowns on the Belfast to Derry/ Londonderry and Portrush railway lines. (AQW 831/07)

Mr Murphy: NIR currently operates 7,248 services from Belfast and Derry each year. During the period July 2005 to June 2006 there were 62 cancellations and 178 delays on services due to technical faults on trains. In the period July 2006 to June 2007 this fell significantly to 17 cancellations and 72 delays.

The trains currently used on the Derry line are a combination of the Class 80 trains and the new C3K trains. The use of the new trains has helped combat breakdowns on the line and NIR continues to work with the train manufacturer, CAF, to further improve fleet reliability. Translink also proposes to undertake a programme of works between June and December of this year in order to improve the reliability of the remaining class 80 trains. This will have a beneficial impact on the Portrush line where services are mainly provided by the class 80s.

Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of mechanised defects which led to (a) cancellations, and (b) late arrivals, of the trains operating on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry and Portrush lines in the last two years. (AQW 832/07)

Mr Murphy: Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) operates a total of 7248 services per year from Belfast and Derry/Portrush. During the period July 2005 to June 2006 there were 178 delays and 62 cancellations to these services and, in the period July 2006 to June 2007, 72 delays and 17 cancellations. The improvement in service reliability is a direct result of the deployment of the class 3k trains on services to the North West.

Parking Facilities at Prior's Lea, Holywood

Mr Alex Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to put in place better parking facilities for residents, particularly the elderly residents, of Prior's Lea in Holywood. (AQW 833/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service, has previously received requests from residents and elected representatives for the conversion of a grassed area to allow a new access road from Palace Grove and additional parking facilities at Prior's Lea, Holywood.

These requests were assessed using established guidelines, which have been agreed with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE), for use when considering the provision of car parking facilities in existing NIHE housing areas, such as Prior's Lea, Holywood.

Under these guidelines the Housing Executive processes all requests for such facilities and decides, in consultation with Roads Service, where additional parking areas/lay-bys should be provided. If a scheme is deemed to be justified by both parties and duly agreed, it is then financed jointly by Roads Service and the Housing Executive, subject to the availability of funds, with the necessary work executed by Roads Service.

Whilst Roads Service has in the past contributed towards the cost of improved parking provision within some housing estates, such contributions have been restricted to routes where there is a significant traffic progression difficulty to through traffic, or where road safety is compromised. Where this is not the case, the provision of additional parking facilities is the responsibility of the landowner.

As part of a full assessment of this request, a site inspection and traffic surveys were carried out at various times of the day at Palace Grove/Prior's Lea. These surveys indicated that traffic progression was not a significant problem at this location. It was also noted that there were no recorded personal injury collisions in this area and that the conversion of the grassed area at Prior's Lea would result in the removal of existing parking bays on Palace Grove, which provides 11 marked parking spaces for the residents of Prior's Lea. It was therefore considered that the expenditure of limited public funds to provide additional car parking at Prior's Lea could not be justified.

However, an additional traffic survey was carried out between 10.00am & 10.30pm at Palace Grove, at the request of residents, who believed that any traffic progression problems would be evident at this time. The results of this survey were considered as part of an independent review of this case. This review was carried out in March 2007, by a senior Roads Service official not previously involved in the matter. He considered all the relevant facts and procedures used to assess this request, along with the additional survey results which did not highlight any significant traffic progression problems for through traffic on Palace Grove, and agreed with the decision not to provide additional parking facilities at Prior's Lea, Holywood.

As the facts surrounding this request have not changed since the March 2007 review, I can confirm that there are no current plans to provide additional parking facilities at Prior's Lea, Holywood.

Improvements to Abercorn Bridge

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister for Regional Development what plan he has to make improvements to the Abercorn Bridge, Castle Brae, Newtownstewart. (AQW 834/07)

Mr Murphy: I understand that Abercorn Bridge, Castle Brae, Newtownstewart, has deteriorated significantly in recent years. Following an assessment carried out in December 2006, a 3T weight restriction was imposed on the bridge and traffic was reduced to single lane operation. These restrictions have not had as severe an effect on traffic as they would have had a few years previously, due to the construction, by my Department's Roads Service, of the Newtownstewart Bypass, in December 2002. This provided additional linkages between Plumbridge Road and the town centre.

I am advised that it would be neither practical nor economical to repair the bridge, and that a replacement bridge is estimated to cost in the region of £1million. As with any of my Department's functions, bridge improvement works have to be prioritised. A scheme to replace Abercorn Bridge is currently approximately five years away.

A32 Omagh to Enniskillen

Mr Tom Elliott asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place for the upgrade of the A32 Omagh to Enniskillen route, particularly in relation to the recent announcement of two new hospitals for the south-west region of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 838/07)

Mr Murphy: In July 2006, my Department's Roads Service issued a consultation document entitled 'Expanding the Strategic Road Improvement Programme 2015', which contained a number of road improvement proposals including a £10 million programme of single carriageway improvement and realignment schemes including guaranteed overtaking sections (2+1s) for the A32 between Omagh and Enniskillen.

Roads Service is currently considering responses to the consultation document. Work on the assessment of this Programme is at an advanced stage, and as it has not yet been finalised, I am presently not in a position to advise on details of its content or timing.

I am advised that, the Department of Health, Social Services & Public Safety will contribute £5 million towards upgrading this route as a result of new hospital provision in Enniskillen.

A5 Dual-Carriageway

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an outline plan of how officials from road services will liaise with their counterparts in the National Road Authority for the proposed A5 dual-carriageway from Londonderry/Derry to Aghnacloy.

(AQW 882/07)

Mr Murphy: You may be aware that as part of the Chancellor's package announced on 22 March the Irish Government confirmed its intention to make available a contribution of £400 million to fund an unprecedented package of infrastructure investment, including a major new roads programme to provide dual carriageway standard on routes within the North serving the North West Gateway of Letterkenny/Derry and on the eastern seaboard corridor from Belfast to Larne.

As management arrangements have not yet been finalised I am not in a position to provide an answer to your question at present.

However, I can advise you that senior officials in my Department's Roads Service currently meet regularly with their counterparts in the National Roads Authority and that there is precedent for excellent working relationships in projects such as the Newry-Dundalk dual carriageway, which is due to be completed shortly.

Northern Ireland Water Customer Service

Mr John McCallister asked the inception of Northern Ireland Water a) what is the target time for the Northern Ireland Water Customer Relations Centre to reply to queries from customers b) what percentage of replies to queries are reached by way of a 'holding letter' c) on how many occasions 'holding letters' have been issued and d) how many customers have received more than one 'holding letter'

(AQW 885/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but The Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW).

I have, however, contacted NIW in relation to this matter and the Director of Customer Services has advised me that the target times for Northern Ireland Water to reply to customer queries are in line with the standards that apply for service delivery in the water industry in England and Wales. The target response time for billing queries is 5 days and for complaints is 10 days. Response times for other customer queries range from 10 days for general correspondence and up to 60 days for adoptions of sewers under Article 167 of The Water & Sewerage Service (NI) Order 2006.

Since the inception of Northern Ireland Water on 1 April 2007, a total of 314 holding letters have been issued to customers. This represents just under 1.8% of all queries received in writing. During this period, only 3 customers received more than one holding reply.

Belfast to Derry / Londonderry Railway Line

Mr John McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development what assessment has been made of the condition of track on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry rail line, with particular reference to the Ballymena to Derry/Londonderry section; and what money has been earmarked to invest in renewing and replacing track on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry rail line. (AQW 887/07)

Mr Murphy: The network of continuous welded track is inspected twice per week and ultrasonic rail inspections, which check the integrity of the rails, are undertaken every 6 months. Permanent Way Inspectors walk their respective track sections on a quarterly basis and ad hoc train cab rides permit additional track evaluation. During April and May of this year, NIR's Professional Head of Track and the District Engineer also completed a full inspection of the tracks between Ballymena and Londonderry on foot.

As a result of its examinations, Translink has assessed that the line between Ballymena and Londonderry is in poor condition and the speed limit for the overall line has been reduced from 70mph to 60mph. In areas of particularly poor condition the speed limit has been further restricted.

Following the carrying out of an appraisal which assessed the merits of a range of options for future railways provision, the Department is bidding for additional funding to upgrade the Derry line as part of the second Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland. Meanwhile, work between Belfast and Derry is planned to maintain services at existing levels in accordance with the Railways Review Group Report published in 2004. Translink have recently submitted to the Department an economic appraisal of options in support of a £12.0million project to deliver track life extension on parts of the Ballymena to Derry Line. This is currently with the Department's Economists who are carrying out an evaluation of the business case before inviting DFP approval.

Finally action is currently being taken to address problems which have arisen on the line close to Ballymoney where wet beds are leading to deterioration of the track. The Department has approved capital grant of £489 thousand in this regard.

Public Transport

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development what action his department has taken to address the public transport needs of residents in (a) Ballymena Borough Council area; (b) Ballymoney Borough Council area; and (c) Moyle

District Council area, in each of the last two years. (AQW 907/07)

Mr Murphy: Public transport needs have been addressed through the development and publication of the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan, published in March 2005 and the Sub-Regional Transport Plan (SRTP), published in June 2007. Specifically the SRTP proposes infrastructure improvements and service improvements in the Ballymena Borough Council, Ballymoney Borough Council and Moyle District Council areas.

During the last two years my Department's Roads Service has introduced a number of measures to improve the transport needs of residents in Ballymena, Ballymoney and Moyle Council areas. These measures are as follows:

Council Area	Year	Costs	Measures
Ballymena Borough Council	2006/07	£3,000	Direction signage to Ballymena Bus Station; direction signage to a new park and ride facility adjacent to Ballymena Bus and Railway station; and hardstand area at bus stop at Largy Road/Kilcurry Road junction.
	2005/06	£18,000	Footway links at Tullygarley bus shelter; footway links and central reservation crossings provided to a number of bus stops along the Lisnevenagh Road.
Ballymoney Borough Council	2006/07	£9,000	Footway link at junction of Craig's Road at Drumack Road to bus shelter; footway link at Vow Road to bus shelter; footway link at Clintyfinnan to bus shelter; footway link on Kilraughts Road at junction of Boyland Road to bus shelter; and hardstand area on Frosses Road at Burnquarter at bus stop.
	2005/06	£6,000	Footway link at Derrykeighan to bus shelter; footway link at Knockahollet Primary School to bus stop; any footway link at Bellaghy Road at junction of Bellaghy Road at bus stop.
Moyle District Council	2006/07	£12,000	Bus Stop Upgrades, including footway links, Giant's Causeway
	2005/06	£Nil

Residents of the Ballymena Borough Council, Ballymoney Borough Council and Moyle District Council have also benefited from general expenditure on public transport services. In the past two years my Department's expenditure on public transport services has been as follows:

	2005-06 £000	2006-07 £000
Railway Services	60,382	36,026
Road Passenger Services	58,132	61,214

Part of this expenditure is aimed specifically at residents of the three Council areas.

My department provides support to North Antrim Community Transport and Coleraine Area Rural Transport. These are community based transport partnerships which offer a range of transport options, including door-to-door (demand responsive to members) transport and group hire services to rural dwellers.

The door-to-door transport scheme was introduced in Ballymena and Ballymoney on 27 April 2007. The door-to-door scheme is a transport service for people living in urban areas (defined as areas whose population is in excess of 10,000), who through disability find it difficult or impossible to use mainstream public transport.

Public Transport at Rathlin Island

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development what new initiatives his department has introduced to address the public transport needs of residents of Rathlin Island, in the last two years. (AQW 908/07)

Mr Murphy: No new initiatives have been introduced in the last two years. Rathlin Island is served by a ferry service which is provided under long term contract and this is currently under review.

Public Transport Needs in Craigavon and Banbridge

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he has taken to address the public transport needs of residents in (a) Craigavon Borough Council; and (b) Banbridge District Council, in each of the last two years. (AQW 919/07)

Mr Murphy: Public transport needs have been addressed through the development and publication of the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan, published in March 2005 and the Sub-Regional Transport Plan (SRTP), published in June 2007. Specifically the SRTP proposes infrastructure improvements and service improvements in the Craigavon Borough Council and Banbridge District Council areas.

I understand that my Department's Roads Service has spent approximately £100,000 over the last two financial years in providing and improving bus lay-bys and shelters in the Craigavon and Banbridge Council areas. The breakdown of this investment, which involves improving linkages to bus shelters, is as follows:

Council Area	Year	Costs	Measures
Craigavon Borough Council	2006/07	£32,000	Bus lay-bys have been provided at Drumgor 2 and Tullygalley East.
	2005/06	£41,200	Bus lay-bys have been provided at Drumgor 1, Moyraverty Road, Main Street Waringstown and Lake Street Lurgan Footway Link.
Banbridge District Council	2006/07	£21,000	A bus stop and lay-by have been provided at Lawrencetown.
	2005/06	£6,000	A bus lay-by has been provided at Ballybrick/ Glenburn/ Mays Corner.

Residents of the Craigavon Borough Council and Banbridge District Council areas have also benefited from general expenditure on public transport services. In the past two years my Department's expenditure on public transport services has been as follows:

	2005-06 £000	2006-07 £000
Railway Services	60,382	36,026
Road Passenger Services	58,132	61,214

Part of this expenditure is aimed specifically at residents of the two Council areas. My department provides support to Down Armagh Rural Community Transport, a community based transport partnership which offers a range of transport options, including door-to-door (demand responsive to members) transport and group hire services to rural dwellers in both the Craigavon Borough Council and Banbridge District Council areas.

The door-to-door transport scheme was introduced in Craigavon on 11 May 2007 and in Banbridge on 30 March 2007. The door-to-door scheme is a transport service for people living in urban areas (defined as areas whose population is in excess of 10,000), who through disability find it difficult or impossible to use mainstream public transport.

Traffic Calming Measures

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount spent on traffic calming measures in Carrickfergus and Larne in 2006/07; and what plans there are for providing traffic calming measures for these areas in 2007/08. (AQW 921/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service receives many requests for traffic calming schemes and, as demand greatly exceeds the capacity to supply these measures, priorities must be established. I should also explain that the funding for traffic calming measures is allocated on a Divisional basis and not by individual Council area. Within each of Roads Service's four Divisions schemes compete for inclusion within a minor works programme on the basis of merit. Implementation is then subject to the successful completion of resident's consultation and legislative process.

The table below outlines the spend in both the Carrickfergus and Larne areas in 2006/07 and the proposed spend for 2007/08.

Area	Year	Cost	Scheme
Carrickfergus	2006/07	£Nil
	2007/08	£30,000	Alexander Road. Barn Road.
Larne	2006/07	£Nil
	2007/08	£45,000	Drumahoe Road/Gardens, Millbrook. The Upper Waterloo Road/ Recreation Road area of Larne. Ballycarry village.

Ownership of Land

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to confirm that his department owns the land upon which garages are built at the rear of Shannagh Park, Carrickfergus; and if so, to detail the planned maintenance programme for the removal of litter at this site. (AQW 922/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department does not own the unregistered land upon which the garages at Shannagh Park, Carrickfergus are built. However, the surfaced area to the rear of Shannagh Park, Carrickfergus is adopted by Roads Service and is therefore part of the public road network.

Under Article 7 of The Litter (Northern Ireland) Order 1994, responsibility for litter removal from a 'relevant road' is a function of the appropriate district council (every road is a 'relevant road' unless specifically designated otherwise by the Department).

Bus Service in Ballymena and Moyle

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail, for each of the last three years, the amount spent by his department on (a) improving bus services; (b) providing, repairing or improving bus lay-bys and shelters; (c) establishing new conventional bus services linking isolated communities to villages and towns; and (d) developing innovative demand-responsive services for residents in deep rural areas in (i) Ballymena Borough Council area; and (ii) Moyle District Council area. (AQW 929/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service introduces a number of measures each year aimed at improving access to bus services. Work is carried out in liaison with local councils and is frequently aimed at locations where the local council has provided bus shelters.

In the Ballymena Borough Council area during the last three years the following works have been carried out:

Year	Costs	Measures
2006/07	£3,000	Direction signage to Ballymena Bus Station; direction signage to a new park and ride facility adjacent to Ballymena Bus and Railway station; and hardstand area at bus stop at Largy Road/Kilcurry Road junction.
2005/06	£18,000	Footway links at Tullygarley bus shelter; footway links and central reservation crossings provided to a number of bus stops along the Lisnevenagh Road.
2004/05:	£47,000	New bus lay-by and turning area between Crebilly Road and Old Crebilly Road in Ballymena, removing the need for buses to turn in area of heavy pedestrian movement; bus boarder provided at bus stops at Ballymoney Road, Ballymena; footway links at Mount Pleasant, Craig's Road to a bus shelter; footway link on Ballnafie Road at Tully Road to a bus shelter; footway link on Whitesides Road at Caddy Road to a bus shelter; and footway link on Grove Road at Dunclug Gardens to bus stop removing need to use steps.

In the Moyle District Council area during the last three years the following works have been carried out:

Year	Costs	Measures
2006/07	£12,000	Bus Stop Upgrades, including footway links, Giant's Causeway
2005/06	£ NIL
2004/05:	£ NIL

During the past three years my Department has provided support to road passenger services as follows:

Year	Amount
2004/05	£36,967,000
2005/06	£58,132,000
2006/07	£61,214,000

Part of this expenditure has been aimed specifically at residents of the two council areas.

My Department has supported the provision of services for residents in deep rural parts of the Council area through providing Rural Transport Fund support to North Antrim Community Transport as follows:

Year	Amount
2004/05	£61,687
2005/06	£60,000
2006/07	£130,150

Rural Transport Funding support was also provided Translink to support services which are uneconomic but socially necessary as follows:

Year	Ballymena Borough Council	Moyle District Council
2004/05	Nil	Nil
2005/06	£1,863	£8,415
2006/07	£3,591	£47,685

In 2006/07 my Department spent £17,501.70 on door-to-door transport services in the Ballymena urban area. The door to door scheme is a transport service for people living in urban areas (defined as areas whose population is in excess of 10,000), who through disability find it difficult or impossible to use mainstream public transport.

Parking Meters in Belfast

Ms Carmel Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the number of parking meters in Belfast; and (b) the number that are not working at present. (AQW 933/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service advises that there are 158 pay and display machines in Belfast, of which 152 are located on-street and 6 are located in off-street pay and display car parks.

The machines are fitted with a report-back facility that details faults as they occur, to a back-office monitoring system. At the time of investigating this request, on Thursday 21 June 2007, 8 on-street machines were not working.

Planning Policy Statements

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development what are his plans for future planning policy statements. (AQW 944/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department is currently preparing four Planning Policy Statements (PPSs), which are at different stages of development. They are a revision of PPS 12 (Housing in Settlements), PPS 5 (Retailing Town Centres and Commercial Leisure Developments), PPS 20 (The Coast), and PPS 14 (Sustainable Development in the Countryside). There are presently no plans to prepare further Planning Policy Statements.

Road Closures in Strangford

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to address the closure of roads within (a) the Ards Borough Council area; and (b) the Strangford constituency, as a result of bad weather and storms; and to detail the number of roads in these areas that have been closed, in each of the last three years. (AQW 957/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that, whilst several roads in the Ards Borough Council area were flooded as a result of the recent prolonged and intense rainfall, none were deemed to be fully closed. The situation on the ground was that although a small number of vehicles became stranded having attempted to drive through the floods, the majority of drivers were able to negotiate the flood water and the roads were passable with care. This is clearly not an ideal situation and Roads Service staff are working closely with staff in the Rivers Agency to determine if any steps can be taken to avoid this happening again or, at the very least, reduce the risk in the future.

Although I am unable to provide exact details of the number of roads which have been closed as a result of bad weather in the past three years, I understand that there is some history of flooding on the A20 between Newtownards and Portaferry which has resulted in the road having to be closed. This tends to occur on one or two occasions during the year when heavy rain and strong winds coincide with abnormally high tides. Unfortunately there is little that can be done to combat these combined forces of nature and closing the road is the only option and this is done in the interests of motorists' safety.

In the Strangford constituency, one road, Park Drive, Dundonald, was closed to traffic for a relatively short period of time on Tuesday, 12 June 2007, as a result of the heavy rain. Roads Service aims to inspect and clean where necessary, all gullies in urban areas between once and twice per annum depending on local circumstances. Gullies in rural areas are inspected and cleaned on average once per annum. This policy ensures that a reasonable level of maintenance is carried out to drainage systems, taking account of the Department's finite funding and staff resource levels.

Residents' Parking Schemes

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the measures his department is taking to ensure that residents are able to park outside their homes; and to outline the steps taken to provide residents with parking permits. (AQW 966/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has received numerous requests from elected representatives and community groups to introduce Residents' Parking schemes in areas subjected to all day commuter parking. Following a public consultation on a draft Residents' Parking policy, which was completed in February 2007, Roads Service is now finalising a policy, which will facilitate the introduction of such schemes. Subject to my approval of this policy, Roads Service expects to introduce the first Residents' Parking schemes towards the end of 2007.

I understand that operating times for Residents' Parking schemes will be designed to reduce commuter parking in residential areas during weekdays. However, outside the operating times, normal parking will be permitted, unless no other waiting restrictions are in place.

Prior to the introduction of a Residents' Parking scheme, residents will be consulted on the scheme design. Once a Residents' Parking Order has been introduced, Roads Service will issue a letter to residents explaining how the scheme will operate and how to apply for a Residents' permit.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the criteria that are applied in assessing the requirement for representatives from Northern Ireland Water to attend District Council meetings. (AQW 978/07)

Mr Murphy: There is no statutory requirement under the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 for representatives from Northern Ireland Water (NIW) to attend District Council meetings. I have asked the Chief Executive of Northern Ireland Water (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you about any operational approach taken by NIW.

Road Signs

Mr Cathal Boylan asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps she is taking to introduce signs detailing the number of road deaths in each county in Northern Ireland, similar to those in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 983/07)

Mr Murphy: As road signage is a matter for the Department for Regional Development, your question has been passed to me, as Minister responsible, to answer.

Signs of this nature have been erected by the National Roads Authority (NRA) in the South, generally on each National Primary approach road to each county, to indicate the number of road deaths in each county. I am advised that the NRA has concerns about the use of such signs, is unconvinced of their value and is proposing to remove them. My Department's Roads Service has, therefore, no plans to introduce such signs in the North.

Road Signs

Mr Cathal Boylan asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to introduce road signs detailing distances in kilometres, in addition to the existing signs showing distances in miles. (AQW 985/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has no plans to introduce road signs detailing distances in kilometres in addition to miles for cost, safety and amenity reasons.

The inclusion of a metric (km) equivalent on road signs in the North, which currently carry the distance in miles, would incur a significant capital cost, as all existing signs would need to be retrofitted or replaced. These costs would be disproportionate to any overall benefit to be derived from the change and, given the current budgetary pressures on the Department, would be difficult to justify.

From a safety aspect, there is the potential for driver confusion where distances are given in both metric and imperial units.

The addition of a metric equivalent on road signs would require the use of larger signs and would increase the visual intrusion on the landscape, particularly in rural areas.

Disabled Parking Facilities

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of applications received in each year from 2000 to 2006 inclusive, for disabled parking facilities, made by non-disabled drivers of people with disabilities; and how many of these applications were successful. (AQW 1002/07)

Mr Murphy: I should explain that applications for disabled parking bays are made by the person with the disability, giving details of the requested location, their vehicle (and details of the driver, if the latter is not the applicant) and other relevant details.

Complete statistics of the number of these applications received by my Department's Roads Service, where the driver of the vehicle was not the applicant, and those subsequently successful, are only available from 2002, as detailed in the table below:

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Applications where the driver of the vehicle was not the applicant	115	131	126	129	133
Successful Applications	34	26	32	27	25

Residents' Disabled Parking

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of applications received in each year from 2000 to 2006 inclusive, for disabled parking facilities outside peoples' homes; and how many of these were rejected. (AQW 1003/07)

Mr Murphy: Complete statistics of the number of applications for disabled parking bays received by my Department's Roads Service, and those subsequently rejected, are only available from 2002, as detailed in the table below:

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Applications for disabled parking facilities outside homes	278	333	347	355	336
Rejected Applications	180	208	218	198	187

Applications are made by the person with the disability giving details of the requested location, their vehicle (and details of the driver, if the latter is not the applicant) and other relevant details.

Free Travel for Women Aged 60

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail when free travel for women aged 60 will become available. (AQW 1041/07)

Mr Murphy: I have no current plans to introduce free travel for women aged 60 and over. However, following a review of the Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme, I have made bids as part of the Budget 2007 process to secure the resources to extend the Scheme in a number of ways, including lowering the eligible age for free travel for all men and women to 60. Any extension of the scheme will be dependent upon securing the necessary resources which means that the case for such an extension will need to be considered alongside not only other possible changes to the scheme, but against many other spending priorities which will be put before the Executive later this year. An extension of the scheme would also require that both equality impact and public consultation processes were successfully completed.

Severance Package to Former Chief Executives

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline whether his department has endorsed the salary and severance package levels paid to the last two chief executives of Translink. (AQW 1054/07)

Mr Murphy: Salary levels and the terms of reference for Translink Chief Executives are determined by the Remuneration Committee of the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company (NITHC).

The financial framework, within which NITHC and its subsidiary companies is required by the Department to operate, is set out in the Financial Memorandum implemented in July 2006. While there is no provision for the Department to endorse salary levels, recommendations of the NITHC Remuneration Committee in respect of periodic reviews of Directors' remuneration and the award of annual bonuses must be submitted to the Department prior to adoption. The Department reserves the right to direct the Remuneration Committee in relation to remuneration levels.

Regarding severance any proposal by NITHC to pay any redundancy or compensation for loss of office over and above the standard terms requires the approval of the Department for Regional Development and the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Consequently the Department did not endorse the salary packages paid to the last two Chief Executives of Translink. It was aware of the baseline salary for Mr Moffatt, the last Chief Executive, and did approve his severance package. However, it did not approve the severance package for the previous Chief Executive Mr Hesketh who retired in March 2003, prior to the implementation of the Financial Memorandum.

Severance Package to Head of Infrastructure

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail whether any severance or enhanced retirement package was paid to Translink's Infrastructure and Property Executive on his retirement in 2002; and, if so, what was the amount of this payment. (AQW 1055/07)

Mr Murphy: There was no severance or enhanced retirement package paid to the former Head of Infrastructure on his departure from the Northern Ireland Holding Company (NITHC) in March 2002. However, he did receive an exgratia payment of £28,500 under an agreement with NITHC that he would stay to March 2002 instead of leaving the company in July 2001 as he had originally intended.

Comber Bypass

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will enhance safety and security for pedestrian and vehicular users of the second phase of the Comber Bypass, now known as the Cherryvalley Line, by providing additional lighting. (AQW 1066/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised that the 800 metre unlit section of the Cherryvalley Line between the Copeland Link Roundabout and Killinchy Road Roundabout is covered by a 50mph speed limit, which defines it as "semi-urban". It is Roads Service policy that semi-urban roads may only be considered for road lighting if there is continuous frontage development beyond the urban limit, there is another lighted area within 300 metres, or night-time collision statistics indicate that lighting is justified as a collision remedial measure.

As this section of the Cherryvalley Line does not meet any of these criteria, Roads Service cannot consider providing road lighting along this stretch.

Water Treatment Facilities at Lisbarnett and Ringneill

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to confirm that the upgrade of waste water treatment facilities at Lisbarnett and Ringneill will go ahead this year, as originally planned. (AQW 1067/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issues raised are operational matters, I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to these questions.

Street Lighting

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his department's expenditure on street lighting, broken down by Divisional Roads Office, in the last four years. (AQW 1099/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's expenditure on street lighting in the last four years, broken down by the four Roads Service Divisions, is detailed below:

Division	Year
	03/04 (£m)	04/05 (£m)	05/06 (£m)	06/07 (£m)
Northern	4.2	5.5	5.2	4.4
Eastern	6.1	8.7	9.5	7.5
Southern	4.0	4.9	5.0	4.6
Western	2.2	2.9	2.8	2.6
Totals	16.5	22	22.5	19.1

NB: The figures shown in the table consist of all expenditure recorded against street lighting operations in the last four financial years. These include, capital street lighting works, operation and maintenance activities, electricity costs, Strategic Investment Programme funding where granted, and costs related to street lighting operational activities by Roads Service Direct (internal contractor).

Motorway Lighting

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his department's expenditure on motorway lighting, broken down by each motorway in Northern Ireland, for the last four years. (AQW 1100/07)

Mr Murphy: I must advise that my Department's Roads Service does not maintain specific details of expenditure on motorway lighting. However, in my recent answer to AQW 1099/07, I detailed the overall expenditure on street lighting in each Roads Service Division for the last four years.

Park and Ride Facilities at Lisburn

Mr Trevor Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development to report on plans to improve park and ride facilities at Lisburn, in connection with the Belfast-Portadown railway line. (AQW 1101/07)

Mr Murphy: Translink is currently evaluating options to improve park and ride facilities at Lisburn station by providing up to 200 extra spaces. The economic appraisal will then be submitted to the Department for approval. If approved Translink hopes to complete the project in 2011.

Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line

Mr David Ford asked the Minister for Regional Development to report on plans to improve the railway timetable on the Belfast-Londonderry railway line. (AQW 1102/07)

Mr Murphy: Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) currently operates 9 trains each way daily Monday to Saturday between Belfast and Derry plus two trains daily between Belfast and Portrush.

Additional temporary speed restrictions between Ballymena and Coleraine have recently resulted in extended running times on some services by up to 8 minutes. The Department is currently considering a Business Case for remedial work to the line. If approved this work, which is likely to take until 2010 to complete, is expected to yield journey time improvement of 10-15 minutes.

In the short term, Translink proposes to commence additional commuter services between Ballymena and Belfast, commencing 2 September 2007 (two extra morning Ballymena to Belfast services and two extra Belfast to Ballymena evening services).

In the longer term, subject to a detailed feasibility review, Departmental approvals and funding, NIR plans to upgrade the infrastructure and rolling stock fleet to deliver an hourly frequency service between Derry-Coleraine and Belfast with half-hourly frequencies between Belfast and Ballymena.

Public Transport

Mr David Ford asked the Minister for Regional Development to report on the relative percentage split of the transport budget between public transport and private transport. (AQW 1103/07)

Mr Murphy: From this year's total budget allocation for transport of £452.5 million, 39% (£178.6 million) has been allocated to public transport. This will be the largest spend on public transport since the introduction of the Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS).

The Department does not directly fund private transport; however 61% (£273.9 million) of this year's transport budget has been allocated to roads which benefits all transport users and includes walking and cycling.

The RTS set out the spending priorities for transport to tackle the historic underinvestment in roads and public transport. It suggested a spending ratio for roads to public transport of 65: 35.

Park and Ride Facilities at Bangor

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development to report on plans to improve park and ride facilities, in connection with the Bangor-Belfast railway line. (AQW 1107/07)

Mr Murphy: Translink is currently assessing options to improve park and ride facilities at Bangor railway station; these options include the possibility of providing up to 120 additional spaces.

Exploratory discussions are also underway about the possibility of leasing up to 20 car parking spaces to provide a park and ride facility at Bangor West railway halt. In addition Translink is also hoping to provide up to 15 additional spaces at the Holywood park and ride facility on the Belfast to Bangor line. All of these projects will be subject to economic appraisals being approved by the Department.

Park and Ride Facilities at Larne

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister for Regional Development to report on plans to improve park and ride facilities, in connection with the Belfast-Larne railway line. (AQW 1112/07)

Mr Murphy: Plans to improve park and ride facilities, in connection with the Belfast to Larne railway line are as follows:

Greenisland

The Department has already approved funding for the provision of 72 additional spaces.

Whitehead

There are approximately 20 additional spaces planned.

Carrickfergus

Between 100 and 150 additional spaces are planned.

Jordanstown

There are plans for up to 46 additional spaces.

Whiteabbey

There are plans for up to 58 additional spaces.

The planned Whitehead, Carrickfergus, Jordans-town and Whiteabbey projects will be subject to economic appraisals being approved by the Department.

Trooperslane

In the longer term, the possibility of providing up to 20 additional spaces is being considered.

Translink is also liaising with Roads Service about the possibility of providing an overflow car park in Carrickfergus for the life of the A2 (Greenisland) roadworks which are due to commence next year.

New Traffic Management System

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development to give details of traffic attendant patrols in the Moyle District Council area; giving specific dates, times and areas in which patrols have taken place; and to list traffic enforcements in the area, since the implementation of the new traffic management system. (AQW 1146/07)

Mr Murphy: As you will be aware, Traffic Attendants are employed by National Car Parks Services (Ltd), who are contracted to my Department's Roads Service, to provide parking enforcement and car park management services.

Since the commencement of the new Parking Enforcement Contract on 30 October 2006 several towns and villages in the Moyle District Council area have been patrolled by Traffic Attendants. The following information summarises the enforcement carried out in these towns and villages, broken down by street and time period, and identifies the number of Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) that have been issued under each type of contravention.

Ballycastle

BALLYCASTLE HAS BEEN PATROLLED 62 TIMES FROM 9 NOVEMBER 2006 TO 28 JUNE 2007.

Ann Street 45 PCNs have been issued for the following contraventions:
Parked in a prohibited street during prescribed hours	2
Re-parked in the same parking place within prohibited time	2
Not wholly parked within the markings of the bay or space	1
Vehicle not parked close to the kerb	1
Parked for longer than permitted	23
Parked in a disabled bay without displaying a Blue Badge	7
Stopped on a crossing marked by zigzags	9
Castle Street 34 PCNs have been issued for the following contraventions:
Parked in a prohibited street during prescribed hours	2
Parked for longer than permitted	25
Parked on a restricted bus stop	7

Clare Street 1 PCN has been issued for the following contraventions:
Parked in a prohibited street during prescribed hours	1
Fair Hill 2 PCNs have been issued for the following contraventions:
Parked in a prohibited street during prescribed hours	2
Market Street 3 PCNs have been issued for the following contraventions:
Parked in a prohibited street during prescribed hours	1
Parked in a parking place not designated for that class of vehicle	1
Parked in a loading bay without loading	1
North Street 2 PCNs have been issued for the following contraventions:

Parked for longer than permitted	7
Parked in a disabled bay without displaying a Blue Badge	3

Bushmills

BUSHMILLS HAS BEEN PATROLLED 6 TIMES FROM 14 APRIL 2007 TO 27 JUNE 2007.

Main Street 2 PCNs have been issued for the following contraventions:
Parked in a prohibited street during prescribed hours	1
Parked on a restricted bus stop	1

Giant's Causeway

Giant's Causeway has been patrolled 3 times from 28 May 2007 to 27 June 2007. No PCNs have been issued.

Railway Station at George Best Belfast City Airport

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will allocate the required resources in order to enable Translink to provide a station at the George Best Belfast City Airport. (AQW 1185/07)

Mr Murphy: There are no immediate plans to commit resources to provide a station at the George Best Belfast City Airport.

The Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan (BMTP) does however include a 'longer-term' proposal for a single new railway station at Tillysburn. If this went ahead it could serve both the Holywood Exchange and George Best Belfast City Airport. However, a new station located directly opposite the City Airport would be very close to the existing, relatively well used, Sydenham station. Given their proximity it could be difficult to operate services calling at both stations in an efficient manner. The Sydenham station would therefore have to be closed or significantly downgraded in status – causing substantial disbenefits to existing rail users.

At present a feasibility study for a pilot rapid transit scheme linking Belfast city centre to Titanic Quarter, George Best Belfast City Airport and the retail development in the Belfast Harbour Estate is underway. It is due to report around August 2007 and is expected to provide a view of the various route options and technologies. The outcome of the study cannot yet be anticipated, but it may offer an alternative public transport connection to the George Best Belfast City Airport.

Public Spending on Transport

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Minister for Regional Development to make a statement on the ratio of public money spent on roads to that spent on public transport. (AQO 240/07)

Mr Murphy: From this year's budget allocation for transport of £452.5 million in total, 61% (£273.9 million) has been allocated to roads and 39% (£178.6 million) to public transport. This will be the largest spend on public transport since the introduction of the Regional Transportation Strategy.

The Regional Transportation Strategy sets out the spending priorities for transport in the north to tackle the historic underinvestment in its roads and public transport. It suggested a spending ratio for roads – including walking and cycling – to public transport of 65:35.

Rights of Rural Dwellers

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to state when he expects to restore the rights of rural dwellers to live in the rural community by removing Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside. (AQO 261/07)

Mr Murphy: Ensuring that appropriate rural planning policy is devised is a priority for me, and I shall be giving due consideration to the full range of views expressed during the public consultation on the draft policy, including the conclusions of the Report of the Programme for Government Committee on RPA and Rural Planning.

Planning Policy Statement 14 is a complex and topical issue. It was also subject to a judicial challenge, the Hearing of which concluded on 27 June 2007. However, judgement was reserved. The timing and outcome of this Judicial Review will impact upon the publication of a final policy.

Nonetheless, and in the interim I am considering the way forward on this important issue. To this end I will be submitting a paper to the Executive Committee later this week. I also intend to initiate further debate on the issues with key stakeholders, via 'round-table' discussions, some of which will be chaired by me.

Review of Water Rates

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development to make a statement on the absence of conservation and sustainability of water issues from the terms of reference for the review of water rates. (AQO 243/07)

Mr Murphy: Naomi Long, raised a similar issue on Monday 11 June after my Statement to the Assembly and I will reaffirm now what I said then.

Conservation and sustainability of water are important considerations in examining the financing of water and sewerage services and will form part of the review.

Water Charges

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake to review the policy relating to water charges that arise from undetected leaks in the supply to farms and commercial businesses. (AQO 209/07)

Mr Murphy: Under the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006, which was introduced on 1 April this year, responsibility for the delivery of water and sewerage services transferred from the Department for Regional Development to a statutory water and sewerage undertaker. A government-owned company, Northern Ireland Water, was appointed as the undertaker from that date with direct responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services.

However, I have raised this question with Northern Ireland Water and the Chief Executive of Northern Ireland Water has advised me that the Company plans to carry out a review of this policy commencing in January 2008.

Road Schemes

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of road schemes that ran over their expected completion date, in each of the last three years. (AQO 226/07)

Mr Murphy: I assume the Question relates to major road schemes. I can report that seven major road schemes have exceeded the date of completion that was expected at the outset of the works, over the course of the last three financial years. The schemes are:

- A1 Loughbrickland to Beech Hill;
- A5 Omagh Throughpass - Stage 3;
- Foyle Bridge, Londonderry – Strengthening;
- A1 underpass at Hillsborough Road junction, Dromore;
- Bann River Bridge, Portadown – strengthening;
- A8 Belfast to Larne Road - dual carriageway from Doagh Road to Hillhead Road; and
- M1 Blacks Road to Stockmans Lane.

In the same period 3 other major schemes were completed on or ahead of schedule. These were the A6 Toome Bypass; the A1 Flyover at Rathfriland Road Junction, Banbridge; and the A8 Belfast to Larne Road, Ballynure.

There are legitimate contractual reasons that have attributed to the majority of these extensions, and which may have been permissible under the terms of the contracts. For example, unforeseen ground conditions; adverse weather conditions; archaeological finds; and additional works, which have accrued additional benefits.

Furthermore target completion dates for major road schemes are deliberately set to be challenging in order to encourage early completion of the works.

Ferry Passengers to Rathlin Island

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of people who travelled on the Ballycastle to Rathlin Island ferry in 2005/06 and 2006/07. (AQO 225/07)

Mr Murphy: In 2005/06 there were 47,742 single tickets issued for passenger journeys. This number increased to 49,516 in 2006/07.

Belfast-Dublin Rail Link

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister for Regional Development what meetings he has had in relation to disruption to the Belfast-Dublin rail link.

(AQO 228/07)

Mr Murphy: I have had no meetings in relation to disruption to the Belfast – Dublin rail link. However, I hope to meet the Southern Minister for Transport and the Marine in the near future and will discuss this amongst other public transport issues.

Where disruption arises as a result of civil unrest Northern Ireland Railways follows PSNI advice in relation to the closure of the line.

A55 Knock Road

Mr Alex Maskey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail concerns raised by local residents in relation to the proposed A55 Knock Road widening scheme; in particular, concerns raised by the Residents' Associations of Cherryvalley, Kensington, and Shandon. (AQO 208/07)

Mr Murphy: Over the past year my Department's Roads Service has been developing a number of options for the A55 Knock Road widening scheme, to be considered in more detail upon commencement of the formal statutory procedures, which I announced on 14 May 2007.

As part of this work Roads Service officials held an informal two day public consultation in June 2006; public meetings were held on 11 November 2006 and 17 January 2007 and a further meeting with residents on 27 March 2007.

Roads Service is fully aware of the concerns that local residents have in relation to the proposed road improvements. In particular, the speed and volume of traffic using local residential streets, such as Shandon Park, Kensington Road and Cherryvalley, and the further impact that the proposed right-turning facilities on the A55 Knock Road may have.

Now that the statutory procedures have formally commenced, Roads Service will be carrying out a detailed evaluation of the environmental impacts of the scheme, including a further evaluation of alternative options assessing criteria such as the provision of right-turn facilities and the traffic impacts on the surrounding area. This work will be used to prepare an Environmental Statement, which will be published for public consultation.

Concurrent to this, detailed land vesting proposals will also be published. Following receipt of all objections and comments to these proposals, I am advised that Roads Service may then decide to hold a public inquiry. It is only after receipt of the Public Inquiry Inspector's report that a final decision will be taken on the scheme's progression.

I can confirm that no final decision has been taken on the scheme implementation. All those affected by the A55 Widening Scheme, including local residents, will have a formal opportunity to express their views on the proposals when the Environmental Statement and other Statutory Orders are published in due course.

Ports in Northern Ireland

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake an evaluation of the impact of the development of the new port at Bremore in the Republic of Ireland on ports in Northern Ireland, including Belfast, Larne and Warrenpoint. (AQO 258/07)

Mr Murphy: I am aware that consideration is being given to development of new port facilities at Bremore. However there are, as yet, no definitive plans upon which an evaluation could be made. Ports in the north currently make their own assessments of the commercial threats and opportunities that they face. I would expect them to continue to do so.

Northern Ireland Water

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will give a commitment that he will require Northern Ireland Water to implement (a) a full equality impact assessment, and (b) full public consultation, on its Debt Management Policy. (AQO 280/07)

Mr Murphy: On 10 May the Executive agreed not to introduce domestic charges in 2007/08 and to conduct a comprehensive review to address the approach that should be adopted to financing water and sewerage services. In light of this decision NIW will not be implementing any domestic debt arrangements this year.

On 11 June I announced the Terms of Reference of the review and have since appointed Professor Paddy Hillyard as chair.

The Terms of Reference are broad and the review can look at this and other issues of concern.

Rural Non-Trunk Roads

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development (a) what plans he has to bring all the rural non-trunk roads in the North Antrim constituency up to an acceptable standard; (b) what is the timetable for doing this; and (c) what is the estimated cost. (AQO 216/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service prepares annual work programmes covering the development and maintenance of the network, which reflect the availability of finances. This year's work programme is currently being finalised in preparation for presentation to the respective district councils.

In the North Antrim constituency, Roads Service currently plans to spend in excess of £4 million in the 2007/2008 financial year on structural maintenance of the rural road network. This includes resurfacing/strengthening, surface dressing, patching and structural drainage.

Of course, it is always the case that if more funding was available, more maintenance work would be carried out and I can assure you that Roads Service will continue to make strong bids for additional structural maintenance funds. In the meantime, Roads Service will continue to make best use of the resources available to it to develop and maintain the road network.

A2 Carrickfergus-Newtownabbey Road Widening Scheme

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline what progress has been made to date with the A2 Carrickfergus-Newtownabbey road widening scheme. (AQO 227/07)

Mr Murphy: I can confirm that the A2 Shore Road Carrickfergus – Newtownabbey scheme is included in my Department's Roads Service, Major Works Preparation Pool, at an estimated cost of £41.1million.

In March 2007 the Statutory Orders for the proposed road improvement scheme were published. These comprised of an Environmental Statement, a Notice of Intention to Make a Direction Order and a Notice of Intention to make a Vesting Order. A two day public exhibition was held over 21-22 March 2007 in the Clarion Hotel, Carrickfergus to explain the Department's proposals. Following the publication of the Statutory Orders, 69 formal comments were received, 48 of these objecting to the proposals.

Bearing in mind the nature of the proposals and the likelihood that a number of the objections would not be resolved, I announced, on 19 June 2007, that a Public Inquiry will be held in October this year to hear the objections and comments received on the scheme.

Arrangements are now being made for this, and a formal notification with details of the inquiry will be published in due course.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Tenders for Installing Gas Appliances

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to confirm the amount of public money expended under the original tenders for installing gas appliances, broken down by Northern Ireland Housing Executive district; and to identify the successful bidders in each tender. (AQW 778/07)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): Gas appliances were installed prior to March 2001 using the traditional contract arrangements. These contracts also included solid fuel appliance renewal in some homes to accord with individual tenants' wishes. These contracts for combined gas and solid fuel installations are detailed below:

Gas Installations

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of gas installations installed in social housing per Housing Executive district; and the number of gas installations deemed unsafe or dangerous per Housing Executive district. (AQW 779/07)

Ms Ritchie: As at 11 June 2007 the Housing Executive has installed 24,765 gas heating systems. None of these are deemed unsafe or dangerous. The number of gas installations in each District is detailed below.

District	Number
Belfast East	2,136
Belfast 5	2,198

Repair and Replacement of Gas Installations

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the amount of public money, over and above that provided under the tenders, expended on repairing and replacing gas appliances that had been incorrectly installed, or were otherwise unsafe due to faulty workmanship, broken down by Northern Ireland Housing Executive district. (AQW 780/07)

Ms Ritchie: Under the pre-Egan contract arrangements the Housing Executive expended £185K, in 2001 and 2002, in Belfast District 5, in repairing and replacing gas appliances that were incorrectly installed, or were otherwise unsafe due to faulty workmanship.

Repair and Replacement of Gas Installations

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development what action has been taken to recover public money which has been expended on repairing and replacing gas appliances in public housing, that had been incorrectly installed, or were otherwise unsafe due to faulty workmanship.

(AQW 781/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive has entered into legal action against two contractors (pre Egan contracts in 1999) in respect of recouping monies expended on faulty workmanship and redecoration grants. In the case of one Contractor, in the region of £60K has been recovered. The case involving the other is currently at litigation to recoup a further £125K.

Maintenance of Bonfire Sites

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the planned maintenance programme, after 12 July, for the clean-up of bonfire sites on land owned by the Housing Executive.

(AQW 786/07)

Ms Ritchie: While the Housing Executive does not include the maintenance of bonfire sites within its planned maintenance programmes, it will, in co-operation with local Councils and with the support of the local community, remove items which represent a health & safety issue, on request, from the site of a bonfire.

The clearances of bonfire sites, identified as being greater than 1.5 square metres in diameter, is dealt with as part of the Housing Executive's Grounds Maintenance contract. All burnt litter and debris in areas less than 1.5 square metres will be considered to be part of the normal litter lifting operation, through its response maintenance programme.

Within 7 days of a bonfire being burnt, all bonfire debris (including ashes and material not burnt, or scattered) are removed. Damaged grass areas will be made good.

Allocation of Public Housing

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to give her assessment of the points system that is used for the allocation of public housing by the Housing Executive.

(AQW 787/07)

Ms Ritchie: All social housing in Northern Ireland is allocated in accordance with the Housing Executive's Housing Selection Scheme which is based on the principle of need and availability. From time to time the Selection Scheme has been changed to reflect changes in standards and in society. However for more than 30 years the Scheme has fundamentally withstood the test of time. The Housing Executive is currently undertaking a review of the Common Waiting List, including in particular the level of the applicants on the list deemed to be in housing stress. This is expected to come before me in the autumn. Dependant on the outcome it may be necessary to look once again at the points system while holding rigidly to the fundamental principle of housing need which underpins it.

Maintenance of Bonfire Sites

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the planned maintenance programme, during the run up to 12 July, for the removal of litter and household waste from bonfire sites on land owned by the Housing Executive.

(AQW 790/07)

Ms Ritchie: While the Housing Executive does not include the maintenance of bonfire sites within its planned maintenance programmes, it will, in co-operation with local Councils and with the support of the local community, remove items which represent a health & safety issue, on request, from the site of a bonfire.

The clearances of bonfire sites, identified as being greater than 1.5 square metres in diameter, is dealt with as part of the Housing Executive's Grounds Maintenance contract. All burnt litter and debris in areas less than 1.5 square metres will be considered to be part of the normal litter lifting operation, through its response maintenance programme.

Within 7 days of a bonfire being burnt, all bonfire debris (including ashes and material not burnt, or scattered) are removed. Damaged grass areas will be made good.

Dunclug Action Plan

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the implementation of the Dunclug Action Plan.

(AQW 797/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Dunclug Action Plan was launched on 17 January 2007. Of the 22 actions contained within the plan, 3 have been delivered, 10 are on track for delivery within the envisaged timescale and 9 will be delivered with some minor delays. I have placed a full report on the implementation of the Dunclug Action Plan up to 20 June 2007 in the Assembly library.

Neighbourhood Renewal Scheme

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to state when action plans for long-term funding to address multiple deprivation, arising from the neighbourhood renewal scheme, will be provided to those communities who are at present still receiving short-term funding or funding extensions.

(AQW 846/07)

Ms Ritchie: Neighbourhood Renewal works across Government to tackle the root causes of deprivation, it is a move away from short term funding to a more strategic and co-ordinated response. Government Departments and Public Bodies are presently in discussions about how they can best respond to the priorities identified in Action Plans developed by Neighbourhood Partnerships. I expect that all statutory providers will have finalised their responses to Action Plans well in advance of March 2008 to enable a long term strategic approach to Neighbourhood Renewal funding beyond that date.

Urban Renewal Scheme

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to provide details of all urban renewal area schemes that have undergone economic appraisals in North Belfast.

(AQW 847/07)

Ms Ritchie: Urban Renewal proposals which are currently under consideration include New Lodge (Upper) comprising improvements to some 300 homes, Queen Victoria Gardens/Fortwilliam Parade, comprising the demolition of 75 dwellings and 4 commercial, new build 24 homes, Parkside, comprising the demolition of 95 dwellings and 7 commercial, new build 69 homes and Stanhope, comprising the demolition of 13 dwellings, new build 24 homes

Urban renewal which is currently in progress includes Torrens. This was vested in 1998 and two phases of social housing have been completed, with a third phase, incorporating the former Finiston school site, programmed for 2008/09. The total new social housing units provided will be 168. Grove was vested in 1999 and three phases of social housing have been completed. Phase 4 (private housing) is on site. The total new social housing units provided is 126. Gainsborough was vested in 2003 and Phase 1, which included 26 new social housing units has been completed. A development brief for private housing is being prepared for part of the remaining cleared area.

A further 5 social units proposed in an infill site are programmed for 2008/09. Mountcollyer Urban Renewal Assessment was approved by the Housing Executive's Board in May 2001, and vested in 2003. Phase 1, comprising 35 social housing units is currently on site. A development brief has been issued for private housing on the remainder of the cleared land. Glenbryn Urban Renewal Assessment approved by the Board in March 2001, and vested in 2002. Phase 1 which comprises 30 social housing units is complete. Phase 2, which comprises 55 units of private housing, is currently on site.

Urban renewal which has been completed includes Rosewood/Crumlin, which was vested in 1995 and completed in 2000, providing 43 units of new social housing. North Queen Street, which was vested in 1999 and completed in 2002, providing 22 units of new social housing. New Lodge (Lower) was vested in 1996 and completed in 2004, providing 90 units of new social housing. Clifton/Oldpark was vested in 1999 and completed in 2005, providing 95 units of new social housing.

Local Community Fund for West Tyrone

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how much funding has been made available in west Tyrone from the local community fund in 2005, 2006 and 2007, and to list each project funded.

(AQW 848/07)

Ms Ritchie: The total allocations from the Local Community Fund for West Tyrone in respect of the last three financial years is; 2004/2005- £301, 952; 2005/06-£364,056; 2006/07-£254, 239. The projects funded for this period are as follows;

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Statistics

Mr George Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, for each Northern Ireland Housing Executive office, (a) the number of houses let; (b) the number of houses occupied; (c) the number of transfers; and (d) the number of average points required to be provided with accommodation, broken down by month, in each year from 2005 onwards.

(AQW 898/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to reduce the potential for inequality to occur between those living in designated areas of neighbourhood renewal, and those living in areas that have been designated an area of risk.

(AQW 901/07)

Ms Ritchie: Neighbourhood Renewal works across Government to tackle the root causes of deprivation in areas suffering the worst levels of deprivation and the greatest inequality in Northern Ireland. Thirty six areas, identified using the Noble multiple deprivation measure as suffering the highest levels of deprivation in Northern Ireland, are being targeted for intervention. The focus of Neighbourhood Renewal is to address the core causes of deprivation in a targeted way where the need is greatest. It is, however, recognised that there are other areas falling outside the top 10% which are also at risk of decline, and it is these areas which are targeted through the Areas at Risk programme.

Payment of Social Security Benefits

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, taking into account the amount of money saved through unclaimed benefits, her department's commitment to invest in advice services to ensure that those in the North Belfast area who are in most need, have access to information and entitlements.

(AQW 902/07)

Ms Ritchie: The framework for public expenditure is divided between Departmental Expenditure Limit and Annually Managed Expenditure. All social security benefits are paid out of the Annually Managed Expenditure. Monies from this fund are not transferable to the Departmental Expenditure Limit from which the advice services are funded.

My Department is committed to supporting advice services and will shortly, subject to Executive approval, launch a comprehensive strategy to support the delivery of voluntary advice services to the community. This strategy is Northern Ireland wide and will encompass the North Belfast area.

I have also recently launched the Benefit Uptake Programme for 2007/08 which includes tendering for the delivery of six targeted exercises. Contracts for these exercises have been awarded to Citizens Advice and Advice NI and will include those targeted clients living within areas of North Belfast.

As part of the work of my Department, the North Belfast Community Action Unit also provides support to a thematic Community Empowerment Partnership, North Belfast Independent Advice Partnership which provides comprehensive advice services to those in need within that geographic area.

Urban Development Grant

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Social Development how he proposes to roll-out the Urban Development Grant Scheme in the future; and to detail when (a) applications will be considered; and (b) awards will be made.

(AQW 910/07)

Ms Ritchie: Urban Development Grant commenced in December 1982 with the aim of stimulating urban regeneration in inner city commercial areas and Enterprise Zones in Belfast and Londonderry in partnership with the private sector.

A pilot extension of the Urban Development Grant scheme was launched in May 2006 in five target towns; Ballymoney, Dungannon, Larne, Lurgan and Strabane. Thirteen applications have been received – two in Ballymoney, one in Dungannon, two in Larne, three in Lurgan and five in Strabane. To date two of these applicants has been granted an award.

My Department will consider a further extension of the UDG scheme to all regional towns when a full review of the programme, including the pilot scheme, is carried out. As the applications for the pilot scheme are at various stages of the assessment process it is unlikely that the review will take place before the end of 2008. Any decision to extend the scheme to new applicants will only be made after this review is complete.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Strabane

Mrs Claire McGill asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (a) the capital cost of the new Northern Ireland Housing Executive offices in Strabane; and (b) her commitment to maintain the current level of services and staffing at the new facility, including the Housing Benefits section.

(AQW 927/07)

Ms Ritchie: In 2004 the Housing Executive estimated the capital value of the existing office at £190,000. Since then a total of £400,000 has been spent on major refurbishments in 2005 when additional space was leased in a new adjoining building. The annual cost of the lease is £29,000 per annum.

The matter of effective use of staff and resources is an issue for the Housing Executive. A local office will be retained in Strabane which will provide a response maintenance service, deal with housing allocations and homelessness, estate management, schemes and development of the community network. Housing Benefit and Rent Accounting will be processed in a new Area Service Centre in Derry but members of the public will still be able to call into the Strabane office for advice and assistance on these matters. A number of staff will move to the Area Service Unit but the majority of staff will remain in Strabane.

Regeneration of Former Military Sites

Mr Pat Doherty asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what progress she has made in attempting to secure the transfer to the Executive of the redundant Lisanelly and St. Lucia Ministry of Defence military sites in Omagh. (AQW 940/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Department for Social Development has taken a particular interest in the regeneration of a number of former military sites throughout Northern Ireland. This includes the two sites at Lisanelly and St Lucia in Omagh.

Officials from my Department are continuing to work with Omagh District Council and their counterparts in other Departments, in particular the Department of Education, to seek to explore the possible acquisition of both the Lisanelly and St Lucia sites for the benefit of the people of Omagh. The acquisition of these sites by the Department for Social Development, would allow a Masterplan for each to be prepared, with subsequent controlled disposal for a range of uses. Business Cases for the acquisition of both sites have been prepared but affordability will need to be considered by the Executive.

I remain concerned that sites have to be acquired at market cost which seems to go against the stated position in the 2003 Joint Agreement by the British and Irish Governments, in which there is a clear implication that redundant sites will be transferred, at no cost, to the Northern Ireland Administration, in order to enhance the asset base at our disposal, to revitalise and regenerate the Northern Ireland economy.

The Lagan Weir

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development if he will report on the contribution of the Lagan weir to flooding in south and east Belfast.
(AQW 952/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Lagan Weir did not contribute to the flooding that occurred in south and east Belfast. During the recent heavy rainfall, the Lagan Weir was operated to ensure that the risk of further flooding in the area was minimised. The drainage infrastructure such as road gullies and storm culverts were unable to cope with the unusually high levels of run off caused by the exceptionally high level of rainfall in a short period of time.

The sewerage pumping station at River Terrace (Lower Ormeau) has an overflow pipe to the river to provide protection in case of a sewer blockage or pump failure. This pipe was designed and constructed to operate by gravity and cannot discharge if the river level is too high. At the request of Water NI, the Weir was used as a tidal barrier as a precaution on 13, 14, 19 and 20 June with the gates raised to maximum height in order to keep the water level as low as possible and allow the gravity over flow pipe to operate if their system became overloaded or failed.

Housing Association New Builds

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development what action she is taking to address the fact that there have been only 61 new builds by Housing Associations in the Ards Borough Council area in the past six years, compared to 129 in the Down District Council area, and 149 in the Castlereagh Borough Council area. (AQW 956/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Social Housing Development Programme is formulated by the Housing Executive on the basis of demonstrated need in each local area. The Housing Executive does recognise that housing need in the Ards area has shown a marked recent increase and has programmed a total of 310 additional houses to be provided over the current five-year planning period. Of these, 136 are scheduled to start in the current financial year.

There have been problems in securing land for social housing in the area. The Housing Executive is actively pursuing the possibility of earmarking sites of surplus land in the ownership of Ards Borough Council.

Disabled Bungalow at Grey's Park, Helens Bay

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to explain why there has been a twelve week delay in the completion and allocation of a disabled bungalow at Grey's Park, Helen's Bay; and to give a timescale for the allocation of this accommodation. (AQW 1014/07)

Ms Ritchie: This delay was caused by obtaining necessary approvals for water connections to this property.

The Water Service has confirmed that the connections will be made during the week commencing 2 July 2007. The Housing Executive anticipates that the property will be available during the week commencing 23 July 2007.

Refusal of NIHE to the Purchase of Property by Tenants

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many applications from tenants for the purchase of property have been turned down or refused by the Housing Executive Land and Property Section at Craigavon for a) the Ards Borough Council area; and b) the Strangford constituency, in the last 3 years. (AQW 1019/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information is not readily available in the form requested.

The number of applications rejected by the Housing Executive in the last 3 years for areas defined as Castlereagh, Newtownards and Downpatrick was as follows:

	Castlereagh District	Newtownards District	Downpatrick District
2004/05	34	30	57
2005/06 46	46	68	42
2006/07 35	35	43	32

Total no. of cases - 387

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Cathal Boylan asked the Minister for Social Development to advise of any mechanism through which a school that falls outside the neighbourhood renewal boundary by a matter of yards, and has pupils from within neighbourhood renewal areas, can access such funding. (AQW 1135/07)

Ms Ritchie: Neighbourhood Renewal works across Government to tackle deprivation where the need is greatest. 36 areas across Northern Ireland have been identified for intervention and Neighbourhood Partnerships have been established to develop action plans to address the key priorities for each area. Poor educational attainment is a significant problem in most Neighbourhood Renewal areas. It is the statutory responsibility of the Department of Education to consider and deliver appropriate actions through whichever delivery mechanism they consider appropriate. This can be through mainstream funding or with the support of the Neighbourhood Renewal Investment Fund. Support is not necessarily based on whether schools are physically situated within a Neighbourhood Renewal boundary, but on the catchment area of the school. Therefore, it is possible that funding could be provided to support a school outside a Neighbourhood Renewal area, but which will have a positive impact on pupils living within that area.

Shared Equity Schemes

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the shared equity schemes that are available in Northern Ireland; and to detail the uptake of these schemes in the last three years. (AQW 1139/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Co-ownership scheme which is operated by the Northern Ireland Co-ownership Housing Association (NICHHA) is the only shared equity scheme in Northern Ireland. It operates on the basis of funding from the Department for Social Development in the form of Housing Association Grant (HAG) augmented by surpluses which the Association makes on equity sales to participants.

The aim of the scheme is to provide assistance to those on marginal incomes who would not be eligible to obtain a full mortgage, to allow them to become homeowners. Participants join on a 50/50 equity sharing basis and then purchase further tranches of equity – a process known as staircasing – at the prevailing market value, as and when their circumstances permit.

The uptake of the scheme for the last three years is detailed in the table below:

	2006/07	2005/06	2004/05
No. of Participants	325	504	502

Charities Bill

Mr Alex Attwood asked the Minister for Social Development to make a statement on the forthcoming Charities Bill. (AQO 274/07)

Ms Ritchie: I intend to introduce a draft Charities Bill for consideration by the Assembly before the summer recess, subject to agreement from the Executive Committee. This legislation will ensure that we have a robust regulatory framework in place for charities in Northern Ireland who do an immense amount of good work for some of the most disadvantaged in our communities

Social Housing

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what measures and time-frames she is putting in place, as part of a strategic response, to address the shortages in social housing that exist in North Belfast. (AQO 215/07)

Ms Ritchie: Housing in North Belfast is being addressed through the North Belfast Housing Strategy which set out to address two chronic housing problems, acute housing shortages (in Catholic areas mainly) and poor housing conditions (in Protestant areas mainly).

Its aims were to invest around £133m and provide 1,750 new social homes over the 7 year lifetime of the Strategy concluding in March 2008.

1,248 homes have been started and £113.7m has been invested in new housing in the first 5 years of the Strategy.

A Review of the Strategy is already underway and a final report is due by the end of the summer. This final report will identify the next steps to be taken.

Affordable Housing Crisis

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister for Social Development what role she envisages for private developers and builders in solving the affordable housing crisis. (AQO 262/07)

Ms Ritchie: Sir John Semple in his Review into Affordable Housing considered that developers have an important and varied role to play in solving the affordable housing crisis. These included –

- building a range of housing types from affordable through to executive homes;
- providing developer contributions of 20% of the houses provided in any housing development granted planning permission for affordable housing through Article 40 of the Planning (NI) Order 1991 and building relationships with housing associations, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Northern Ireland Co-ownership housing to assist with this;

- working with the Planning Service and other key partners to develop a better relationship to assist in the planning and development process;
- developing more sustainable buildings that incorporate modern methods of construction and renewable technologies; and
- working with others to help develop the necessary skills in their labour forces to deliver new homes.

I will be considering all of Sir John Semple's recommendations through the Inter Departmental Group I will be chairing and which will convene on 5 July.

Social Housing

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Social Development to detail her plans to ensure that applicants for social housing, who have severe physical and/or mental health conditions, are properly assessed and given a range of options before being offered temporary accommodation. (AQO 223/07)

Ms Ritchie: A detailed housing needs assessment is carried out on all applicants for social housing under the Common Selection Scheme. This includes a Health and Social Wellbeing assessment to gauge the applicant's ability to function in their current accommodation and their support and/or care needs. Points are awarded in recognition of a wide range of health and social factors relevant to each individual's circumstances.

In the event that any such applicant is threatened with homelessness, the needs identified will be considered by the Housing Executive in deciding the most appropriate form of temporary accommodation to be offered. Care is taken to balance the needs of the application in terms of the physical layout and location of this accommodation.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to make a statement on the effects of the Review of Public Administration on her department. (AQO 278/07)

Ms Ritchie: The key decisions announced by Direct Rule Ministers affecting my Department were:

- the transfer of significant Urban Regeneration and Community Development and Housing functions from the Department and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to local councils;
- the transfer of the Appeals Service to a new Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service; and
- the closing of a small number of Arms Length Bodies, namely the Northern Ireland Housing

Council and the Northern Ireland Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board.

However, the Executive recently announced its intention to undertake a review of the Review of Public Administration decisions relating to local Government and I will use this review to protect the integrity of my Department and of the Housing Executive.

Benefit Fraud

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development to make a statement on the levels of benefit fraud in Northern Ireland. (AQO 221/07)

Ms Ritchie: The estimated levels of fraud in benefits administered by the Social Security Agency have reduced by over half since 2001/2002 from £60.9m or 1.9% of benefit expenditure to £28m which equates to 0.8% of expenditure in 2005/2006. My Department also administers housing benefit and the equivalent estimate for housing benefit fraud is £4m, equivalent to 1.1% of housing benefit expenditure in 2005/2006.

Disability Living Allowances

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister for Social Development to account for the variations between constituencies in terms of the numbers of those in receipt of Disability Living Allowances. (AQO 275/07)

Ms Ritchie: There is no single definitive reason to account for the differences in Disability Living Allowance uptake between constituencies. Contributing factors may include differences in population size, health and the level of deprivation within particular constituencies.

Mixed-Religion Social Housing

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what plans she has to promote mixed-religion social housing. (AQO 247/07)

Ms Ritchie: In Northern Ireland social housing applicants exercise their choice by identifying where they want to live. Through Shared Future my Department is working to ensure that social housing applicants have the opportunity to exercise real choice free of fear.

Shared housing is not about socially engineering communities or neighbourhoods. Trust and safety will dictate the pace of change. Together with my Ministerial colleagues I will be working to create a climate where trust and safety can grow and thrive in our community.

The Housing Executive's duty is to ensure housing is provided on the basis of need. There is no doubt that community division and segregation exerts a high price, in housing terms, preventing the best use being made of existing housing and land.

Shared Future states that the Housing Executive should bring forward as soon as is practicable its proposed 2 shared-future pilot housing schemes. The 2 pilot areas which have been chosen are Enniskillen, which is complete, and Loughbrickland. The Housing Executive is also in the process of examining the 5 year Social Housing Development Programme to identify further schemes which would be appropriate for the Shared Future model.

Property Held by the Department for Social Department

Mr Alban Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development what lands are held by her department. (AQO 285/07)

Ms Ritchie: A list of lands held by my Department has been placed in the library.

Workforce Under-Representation of Protestants

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Social Development if she will work with the Equality Commission and the main organisations in the voluntary sector, to address the imbalances which exist in the workforces of many of these organisations, especially the significant under-representation of members of the Protestant community. (AQO 279/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Equality Commission has not approached my department regarding any perceived imbalance in the workforce of any voluntary and community sector organisation. If the Equality Commission made such an approach I would of course assist it so far as I could within my responsibility as Minister for Social Development.

Social Housing Waiting Lists

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if she will give a commitment to address the waiting list for social housing in the Strangford constituency by building 250-300 homes, over the next 6 years. (AQO 220/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Social Housing Development Programme is managed on a 5 year basis. The programme contains proposals for 426 homes (27 schemes). 205 homes (11 schemes) are programmed to start in 2007/08 with the remainder over the following

4 years. However, sites have not yet been acquired for 4 schemes for the 2007/08 year.

In addition to the schemes formally programmed, Housing Associations have registered a further 47 sites within the Strangford constituency. 33 of these are within the Ards Borough Council area. Associations are currently working with the Housing Executive to confirm support and to determine whether the sites should be acquired.

A detailed site investigation programme is currently under way in areas of housing need across the Province as a whole. More than 30 potential sites within the Strangford constituency have been identified so far for further examination.

Shared Housing Estates

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Minister for Social Development to make a statement on further provision of shared housing estates in line with the policy document 'A Shared Future'. (AQO 241/07)

Ms Ritchie: In Northern Ireland social housing applicants exercise their choice by identifying where they want to live. Through Shared Future my Department is working to ensure that social housing applicants have the opportunity to exercise real choice free of fear.

Shared housing is not about socially engineering communities or neighbourhoods. Trust and safety will dictate the pace of change. Together with my Ministerial colleagues I will be working to create a climate where trust and safety can grow and thrive in our community.

The Housing Executive's duty is to ensure housing is provided on the basis of need. There is no doubt that community division and segregation exerts a high price, in housing terms, preventing the best use being made of existing housing and land.

Shared Future states that the Housing Executive should bring forward as soon as is practicable its proposed 2 shared-future pilot housing schemes. The 2 pilot areas which have been chosen are Enniskillen, which is complete, and Loughbrickland. The Housing Executive is also in the process of examining the 5 year Social Housing Development Programme to identify further schemes which would be appropriate for the Shared Future model.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 3 August 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Investigation of Public Authorities

Mr Paul Butler asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many investigations the Equality Commission has generated into public authorities; and to provide details of all those investigations and their outcomes. (AQW 428/07)

The First Minister and Deputy First Minister (Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness): We are advised by the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland that it has conducted the following Investigations involving public authorities.

14 Investigations have been authorised under Schedule 9 of s. 75 of the Northern Ireland Act. Of these, 10 have been in respect of complaints under Paragraph 10 of the Schedule, as follows:

- Leeson & Dept. of Finance and Personnel. Outcome 8/9/04 - Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme
 - McCartney & Northern Ireland Office. Outcome 23/6/04 - Failure not established to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Allen & Fire Authority for Northern Ireland. Outcome 27/10/04: Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Beattie & Fire Authority for Northern Ireland. Outcome 27/10/04: Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Children's Law Centre & Northern Ireland Office. Outcome 27/04/05: Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Finlay & Dept. Regional Development. Outcome 27/04/05: Failure not established to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Allen & Fire Authority for Northern Ireland. Outcome 30/06/05: Complaint withdrawn
 - Butler & Lisburn City Council. Outcome 28/06/06: Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Marshall & Omagh District Council. Outcome 28/02/07: Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme.
 - Steer & Queen's University Belfast. - Investigation in progress.
- In addition, 4 investigations have been authorized under Paragraph 11 of Schedule 9 to s. 75 of the Northern Ireland Act into potential failures to comply with approved Equality Schemes:
- Belfast Education and Library Board. Outcome – Failure to comply with approved Equality Scheme. (Lack of consultation on closure of an educational establishment).
 - Dept. of Social Development Outcome – Failure not established to comply with approved Equality Scheme. (Screening of criteria for funding).
 - Northern Ireland Office. Outcome - Failure not established to comply with approved Equality Scheme. (Time allowed for consultation on ASBOs).
 - Dept of Finance and Personnel. Investigation in progress. (Consultation and whether EQIA needed for legislative proposal on reasonable chastisement of minors).
- The Equality Commission has also conducted Formal Investigations under anti-discrimination legislation; in particular:
- A general investigation under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, into the Accessibility of health information, is currently under way, and focuses on public health service providers.
 - In 2005, the Equality Commission concluded an investigation under Article 71(3) of the Fair Employment and Treatment Order into the exception from the Order of employment as a teacher in a school, and made recommendations.
 - Completed Section 75 investigation reports (including recommendations made where failure established) are available on ECNI web-site at http://www.equalityni.org/sections/default.asp?cms=Publications%5FStatutory+duty_investigation+reports&cmsid=7_43_50&id=50&secid=8
 - The report of the Investigation into the schoolteachers' exemption from the fair Employment and Treatment Order is available on the ECNI website at <http://www.equalityni.org/archive/word/TeacherExceptionInvestigation1003.doc>

North West Gateway Initiative

Mr Pat Doherty asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail (a) the projects undertaken to date by the North West Gateway Initiative; and (b) how these projects are being resourced. (AQW 620/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The North West Gateway Initiative was taken forward by the British and Irish Governments during Direct Rule and was intended to provide a strategic approach to encouraging a more integrated and joined up approach to economic growth in the North West region.

The initiative has helped to encourage practical co-operation from existing Departments and agencies in developing a range of projects for the benefit of the region including; an Integrated Spatial Planning Development Framework, a cross-border tourism framework, the establishment of the North West Workforce Development Forum, and a number of cross border health initiatives.

The financial resources for these projects are provided from within existing Departmental budget allocations.

The recent agreement in the NSMC about funding for a major roads programme to provide dual carriageway standard on the route serving the North West area will also have a major impact by improving roads infrastructure in the region.

North West Gateway Initiative

Mr Pat Doherty asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the efforts that have been made to date by the North West Gateway Initiative to identify and develop specific projects between Strabane District Council and Donegal. (AQW 621/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The North West Gateway Initiative was taken forward by the British and Irish Governments during Direct Rule and was intended to provide a strategic approach to encouraging a more integrated and joined up approach to economic growth in the North West region.

It aimed to encourage economic growth and development for the mutual benefit of both jurisdictions including those living in the Strabane and Donegal Council areas. There have to date been no specific proposals for projects between Strabane and Donegal though the recent agreement in the NSMC about funding for a major roads programme to provide dual carriageway standard on the route serving the North West area will of course have a major impact by improving roads infrastructure in the region.

Ulster Defence Regiment Memorial

Mr Paul Butler asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps the Equality Commission has taken to investigate Lisburn City Council's decision to erect an Ulster Defence Regiment memorial on land owned by the Council. (AQW 647/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: As this is an operational matter for the Equality Commission, I have asked the Chief Executive to respond to you directly. I understand that the Chief Executive will respond in the following terms:

The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has passed to the Equality Commission for reply your question (AQW 647/07) asking what steps we have taken to investigate Lisburn City Council's decision to erect an Ulster Defence Regiment memorial on land owned by the Council.

When you raised concerns about this with the Commission last year you were advised of the procedure for taking a formal complaint. While no such complaint has since been received the issue remains on file as a potential investigation on which we have provided advice. The Commission had sought clarification from Lisburn City Council in relation to the issue you raised as it related to the Council's Equality Scheme.

The Commission, conscious of its powers to initiate an investigation of its own volition under Paragraph 11 of Schedule 9 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, has kept the issue of a potential failure to comply with an approved scheme under consideration.

The Commission is also writing to Lisburn City Council requesting an update on this matter.

Anti Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what is it's assessment of the disproportionate number of people from the Catholic community experiencing poverty and disadvantage. (AQW 665/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The government's anti-poverty and social inclusion strategy "Lifetime Opportunities" is based on an analysis of disadvantage wherever it occurs.

This analysis illustrates the risks faced by different types of household and shows that age, gender, marital status, qualifications, location, tenure, family size, health, disability and other factors are associated with disadvantage.

It is known that the risks are higher among the Catholic population but also that significant proportions of both communities face disadvantage. "Lifetime Opportunities" acknowledges that these risks need to be addressed within both communities.

Equality Impact Assessment

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will explain the failure to apply to high level decision making, such as spending priorities, the Review of Public Administration and the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, the equality requirements of section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. (AQW 666/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: In the early stages of implementation of Section 75, the full seven stage Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA) process was not applied to some high level policies, including spending priorities, Review of Public Administration and the Investment strategy for Northern Ireland. In the case of the Review of Public Administration and Priorities and Budget high level EQIAs were carried out, along with consultation with relevant stakeholders.

Departments involved in the implementation of RPA decisions are mainstreaming their statutory obligations arising from Section 75 into their decisions, through screening and EQIA, where appropriate. OFMDFM is continuing to work with Departments to promote a coordinated approach to mainstreaming equality and other considerations into RPA implementation.

In relation to inherited spending priorities, a high level EQIA was carried out on spending allocations from the 2006-2008 budget process prior to restoration, using a high level impact assessment (HLIA) process agreed with the Equality Commission. This included pre-consultation and formal consultation with key stakeholders, including representatives of groups across Section 75 categories. A similar exercise was conducted in late 2006 in relation to the current 2007 budget process.

Work is currently under way to produce a new programme for Government for this Executive which will set policy and spending priorities for 2008 and beyond, and to prepare a ten-year Investment Strategy which will be published for consultation in the Autumn and forwarded to the Assembly for consideration in December 2007. In line with Section 75 obligations, full consideration and due regard will be given to the need to promote equality of opportunity in all decisions taken in these two areas. This will involve an EQIA or HLIA process, as appropriate, and full consultation with key stakeholders and the Equality Commission.

Vacancies in the Northern Ireland Civil Service

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many vacancies there are in the Northern Ireland Civil Service in each government department at (a) Administrative Officer, (b) Executive Officer II, (c) Executive Officer I, and (d) Staff Officer grades. (AQW 855/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The number of vacancies in permanent posts in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at the grades of (a) Administrative Officer, (b) Executive Officer 2, (c) Executive Officer 1 and (d) Staff Officer is set out in the attached table. The figures, on a full time equivalent (FTE) basis, are broken down by each of the eleven NI Departments and their Agencies, and show the position at 1 July 2007.

NUMBER OF NICS PERMANENT POST VACANCIES IN SPECIFIC GRADES AT 1 JULY 2007, BY DEPARTMENT.

Slavery Booklet

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how the text of the booklet 'Slavery: marking the 200th anniversary of the Abolition of the Slave Trade Act' was produced. (AQW 863/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The booklet was commissioned by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland prior to the restoration of devolution, and was produced jointly by the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister and the Northern Ireland Office as a contribution to the UK-wide commemoration of the bicentenary of the Abolition of the Slave Trade Act on 25 March 2007.

The text of the booklet was based on original material provided by the historian, Dr Nini Rodgers, an acknowledged expert on this topic. The material was edited to make it suitable for a target audience of children of Key Stage 3 age.

North West Gateway Initiative

Mr John McCallister asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what work is being done to develop the Strabane-Lifford Gateway and what assessment it has made to the potential impact this initiative will have on the North-West Region; and to detail which groups and individuals have been consulted. (AQW 886/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The North West Gateway Initiative was taken forward by the British and Irish Governments during Direct Rule and was intended to provide a strategic approach to encouraging a more integrated and joined up approach to economic growth in the North West region which includes Strabane/Lifford.

The initiative has helped to encourage practical co-operation from existing Departments and agencies in developing a ranges of initiatives for the benefit of the region including; an Integrated Spatial Planning Development Framework, a cross-border tourism framework, the establishment of the North West Workforce Development Forum, and a number of cross border health initiatives. It has also helped to identify a range of potential cross-border roads infrastructure projects and has supported the establishment of a communications link between the North West Institute of Technology and the Letterkenny Institute of Technology.

The recent announcement of the funding to provide dual carriageway standard on routes within Northern Ireland and in particular the route serving the North West Gateway area will of course have a major impact by improving roads infrastructure in the region.

The joint group of officials responsible for taking the Initiative forward consulted a wide range of stakeholders during the development of the initiative, including with representatives of the four Councils, the North West Stakeholders Alliance, the North West Region Cross Border Group, the Ilex Urban Regeneration Company, the Strabane Employment Taskforce and representatives of local political parties.

Environmental Impact Assessment

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail whether an environmental impact study has been carried out on the site for the proposed multi-sports stadium at the Maze, and, if so, if this will be made available to elected representatives. (AQW 923/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: An environmental impact assessment of the potential implications of the Maze/Long Kesh Masterplan, published last year, is currently being undertaken. This will be available to elected representatives as and when any planning application is submitted for the regeneration of the former prison site.

Default Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what facility exists, at present, for members of staff in the department to continue to work in their existing post beyond the default retirement age. (AQW 934/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Since 1 October 2006 staff wanting to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

Maze Stadium Business Case

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many hours the staff of the Strategic Investment Board have devoted to preparing a business case for a multi-sports stadium at the Maze. (AQW 972/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The outline business case for a Multi Sports Stadium at Maze/Long Kesh is the responsibility of the Department of Culture Arts and Leisure. The Strategic Investment Board's (SIB) contribution to the preparation of the outline business case for the stadium has comprised some 1000 hours.

Monitoring Reports on Human Rights Instruments

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will ensure that there is full engagement with the Ulster-Scots Heritage Council and the Ulster-Scots community in any future consultations on monitoring reports, for international human rights instruments that contain cultural rights. (AQW 995/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Monitoring reports on the United Kingdom's implementation of international human rights instruments are, of course, matters for the UK Government. Consultations on these reports are conducted either by the lead UK government department or by the lead department here, or both. In any case we would hope to ensure that they consult all key stakeholders.

We will seek to ensure that the Department for Culture Arts and Leisure liaises, as appropriate, with the relevant United Kingdom or Northern Ireland department so that account is taken of the views of all interested parties here, including the Ulster-Scots Heritage Council and the Ulster-Scots community.

United Nations Convention

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how the 57 non-governmental organisations invited to attend the consultation meetings at Stormont on 14 and 23 February 2007, on the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, were selected. (AQW 996/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The organisations selected to attend the consultation meetings on the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, were drawn mainly from a list of key children's and young people's groups and those representing their interests that make up the membership of the All Party Group on Children and Young People. That generic consultee list was approved by direct rule Ministers in August 2005 for the purposes of discussing matters of interest to children and young people. Any groups wishing inclusion on the OFMDFM mailing list should contact the Department.

Young People Advisory Forum

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail (a) when the Young People's Advisory Forum was established; (b) what is the role and remit of the forum; (c) which organisations are on the list of nominating organisations to the forum; and (d) how many members are on the forum. (AQW 997/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Young People's Advisory Forum was established on a time-limited basis in October 2002 and ran until June 2004, when it was considered that it had fulfilled its remit. It had two key roles. First, to help in the appointment process for the first Commissioner for Children and Young People, Nigel Williams, who took up office in October 2003. Second, to contribute ideas to and assist in the consultation on a ten-year strategy for children and young people. The latter was published on 20 June 2006.

The ten year strategy makes clear our intention to embed a culture of engaging with children and young people and involving them in decision-making. As part of the implementation of the strategy a participation network has been established. Its aim is to support statutory agencies, local and central government and fulfil their duties to effectively engage children and young people in public decision making.

It is our intention, in accordance with Articles 3 and 12 of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, that children and young people are routinely involved in the public decision making process.

Anti-Poverty Strategy

Mrs Mary Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will formally take ownership of the Northern Ireland Anti-Poverty Strategy, and its targets to halve child poverty by 2010, on the way to eradicating child poverty by 2020; and to oversee the development and implementation of a cross-departmental approach to achieve those targets. (AQW 1000/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Section 16 of the Northern Ireland St Andrews Agreement Act 2006 places a statutory obligation on the Northern Ireland Executive Committee, to adopt a strategy setting out how it proposes to tackle poverty, social exclusion and patterns of deprivation based on objective need.

The process to obtain Executive Committee agreement on an anti-poverty strategy has begun, however the Executive Committee has still to formally consider the adoption of 'Lifetime Opportunities' - Government's Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy for Northern Ireland, together with its associated priorities, objectives, goals and targets, including child poverty reduction targets.

In adopting an Anti-Poverty Strategy the Executive Committee will also consider monitoring and reporting arrangements. This would be to ensure that all Departments take due cognizance of the issues of poverty and social exclusion in Northern Ireland in planning their own Programmes, and contribute to the overall effectiveness of Government in tackling these issues.

British - Irish Council

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what east-west meetings have been held by the department, either independently or through the British-Irish Council, since 8 May 2007. (AQW 1072/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: In the ten weeks since restoration, Government Departments have continued to work on East West issues across a range of sectors of mutual interest and benefit. Within OFMDFM, officials have had a series of meetings with participating administrations about the work of the British-Irish Council leading to our hosting the 9th BIC Summit meeting in Belfast on 16 July. A copy of the Summit communiqué has been placed in the Library.

In addition, seven BIC sectoral meetings have been held covering the range of BIC activities. In June we had a meeting with the Scottish First Minister, Alex Salmond and had separate discussions with the Prime Minister and the heads of the other administrations during the BIC Summit in Parliament Buildings in July.

Staffing in the Planning Appeals Commission

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it is taking to ensure that additional commissioners are employed in the Planning Appeals Commission; and also to ensure that the nine commissioners working on development plans and other issues are redeployed to help clear the backlog of appeals. (AQW 1080/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: In recognition of the growing backlog of planning appeals facing the Planning Appeals Commission, we have agreed with the Department of Finance and Personnel to commission a review of the Commission's funding and pressures. This review will inform future decisions on levels of support for the Commission. The Chief Commissioner is aware of the position and has been fully involved in developing terms of reference for the review.

As the Commission is an independent tribunal, the deployment of Commissioners is a matter for the Chief Commissioner to determine and I understand she has written to the member on this issue. A copy of her response has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Good Relations

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to report on the amount of resources allocated to each District Council for good relations programmes, for the 2007/08 financial year. (AQW 1105/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The table below provides the detail of resources made available to district councils in support of community relations and good relations programmes in 2007/08 and in each of the five previous financial years.

Good Relations

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to report on the amount of resources allocated to each District Council for community relations programmes, for the last five financial years.

(AQW 1106/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The table below provides the detail of resources made available to district councils in support of community relations and good relations programmes in 2007/08 and in each of the five previous financial years.

Integrated Schools

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail whether a target has been set for the expansion of the percentage of children attending integrated schools, as part of the series of indicators for assessing the health of good relations.

(AQW 1108/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The good relations indicators baseline report January 2007 does not set targets. Rather, as the title of the report suggests, the intention is to monitor progress against a number of general and specific indicators. These include:

- number and proportion of first preference applications to post-primary integrated schools that do not result in admissions;
- proportion of people who would send their children to mixed schools;
- proportion of people who believe government is actively encouraging integrated schools;
- of pupils enrolled at grant aided schools, the proportion enrolled at integrated schools;
- proportion of pupils enrolled in Catholic managed schools who are Protestant, and
- proportion of pupils enrolled in controlled schools who are Catholic.

Finally, all schools have an important role to play in promoting good relations.

Good Relations Proofing of Policies

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to report on the good relations proofing of policies.

(AQW 1110/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act (1998) places a duty on public authorities in carrying out their functions to have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations between persons of different religious belief, political opinion or racial group.

The Equality Commission has a duty to offer advice to public authorities and others in connection with the statutory equality and good relations duties under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act (1998). The Commission is also required to keep under review the effectiveness of these duties.

The Commission has a statutory duty under the Race Relations (Northern Ireland) Order (1997) to promote good relations between persons of different racial groups.

The equality proofing mechanism (through the existing process of screening and equality impact assessment) is intended to ensure that equality and good relations are mainstreamed into all levels of decision making as set out in guidance provided by the Commission. It regards the two duties of Section 75 as complementary.

The screening process specifically asks policy makers to consider whether there is an opportunity to better promote equality of opportunity and good relations by altering the policy or working with others in Government or in the larger community.

Because of the difficulties in subjecting high level strategies and policies to equality impact assessment, a high level equality impact assessment process was designed specifically to mainstream equality, good relations and other considerations into the Priorities and Budget process. This process was agreed by the Equality Commission.

The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister is committed to a shared future and to racial equality and supports Departments to mainstream good relations in the development of their policies and specific intervention. Ministers have given a commitment that the Executive and the Assembly will wish to consider carefully the progress to date and bring forward detailed plans, consistent with the pledge of office, to promote the interests of the whole community towards the goal of a shared future and a prosperous, peaceful and settled society.

The mainstreaming of the good relations duty and the practical outworking of actions to support good relations interventions are evidenced by the Commissions publication of

- (a) annual implementation reports;
- (b) 'Good Relations in Practice' and 'Section 75, Keeping it Effective';
- (c) the Equality Impact Assessments and screening outcomes; and
- (d) the forthcoming 'outcomes report' on implementation of a shared future and the racial equality strategy action plans. This will be published by the Department for consideration by Ministers, the Executive and the Assembly.

Equality Impact Assessments

Mrs Naomi Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give a commitment that all equality impact assessments for future policies will take into account those people who do not align with the two main religious or political traditions. (AQW 1113/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Equality Impact Assessments currently carried out by all the Northern Ireland Departments follow the Equality Commission's guidance on implementing the duties under Section 75, which defines religious belief and political opinion more broadly than the two main religious or political traditions in Northern Ireland. Future EQIAs will also adhere to this guidance and its definitions.

Devolution of Policing and Criminal Powers

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to report on any discussions it has had with the Northern Ireland Office or Treasury, regarding the financial arrangements and implications of the devolution of policing and criminal justice powers to the Assembly. (AQW 1124/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Officials from the relevant Departments including OFMDFM, have begun consideration with NIO on the full range of implications of the potential devolution of criminal justice and policing to the Northern Ireland Assembly. However, no specific or substantive discussions have at this stage taken place on the financial arrangements and implications.

Good Relations Indicators

Ms Anna Lo asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if targets have been set for decreasing the number of people living within segregated housing areas, as part of the series of indicators for assessing the health of good relations. (AQW 1156/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The good relations indicators baseline report [January 2007] does not set targets. Rather, as the title of the report suggests, the indicators are designed to measure progress over time towards achieving the priority outcomes that link directly to the aims and objectives of a shared future and the racial equality strategy.

In that regard it has established 'that Northern Ireland is a place where people of all backgrounds work, live, learn and play together' as one of its priorities. Under this priority our department will monitor progress against a number of general and specific indicators. These include:

- (a) proportion of people living in mixed / segregated areas;
- (b) number of housing executive transfer requests due to: (i) intimidation (ii) fear without violence;
- (c) number of homes purchased by the housing executive because of sectarian intimidation of the occupants: (ii) number of houses purchased and cost; (iii) number of applications;
- (d) number of houses protected under the protection of private property initiative (POPPI);
- (e) proportion of children (age 16) who think relations between Protestants and Catholics are better than they were five years ago;
- (f) Proportion of adults who think relations between Protestants and Catholics are better than they were five years ago;
- (g) proportion of people who would prefer to live in a mixed neighbourhood;
- (h) proportion of people who would accept minority ethnic people as residents in their area;
- (i) proportion of people who would define the neighbourhood where they live as a 'neutral' space;
- (j) proportion of people who define their local shops as a 'neutral space';
- (k) proportion of people in favour of greater mixing in sports / leisure activities;

- (l) number of mixed marriages;
- (m) proportion of people who would mind if a close relative married someone of a different religion; and (ii) proportion of people who think other people would mind if one of their relatives married someone of a different religion;
- (n) proportion of people who would accept minority ethnic people as relatives by marrying a member of their family;
- (o) proportion of people who have friends of the same religion;
- (p) proportion of people who believe that better relations will come about through more mixing;
- (q) proportion of people who believe that the government is actively encouraging shared communities where people of all backgrounds can live, work, learn and play together.

Economic Growth

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to confirm that economic growth is a priority for the department. (AQW 1166/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Executive is determined to deliver a better future for all our people. We recognise the need for the creation of a dynamic and competitive economy if we are to deliver a prosperous and stable society which benefits everyone. In this context, addressing the economic challenges we face and providing the conditions for economic growth will be a key priority for the Executive. The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister will play its part in delivering the Executive's priorities.

National Stadium

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if alternative plans for the use of the Maze/Long Kesh site have been considered, if the National Stadium is not to go ahead. (AQW 1179/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The current proposals for the Maze/Long Kesh are rooted in the unanimous report of the multi-party Maze Consultation Panel. Masterplanners appointed under direct rule to explore the potential to turn the Panel's vision into reality considered a number of options based on the report's central recommendations for a multi-sports stadium and an international centre for conflict transformation.

Cross-Border Reconciliation

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if there are any plans to improve cross-border reconciliation, in addition to the recommendations of the 'Study of Obstacles to Cross Border Mobility', by addressing matters such as the recovery of the bodies of the 'disappeared'. (AQW 1180/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Responsibility for the recovery of the bodies of the 'disappeared' lies with the Northern Ireland Office and not with OFMDFM.

Cross-Border Projects

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give an update on the projected spend that is to be made available from the Republic of Ireland's National Development Plan, with specific reference to cross-border projects; and to detail the projects that will receive such funding. (AQW 1183/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The North South Ministerial Council discussed this matter at its recent Plenary meeting in Armagh, and a copy of the Joint Communiqué setting out the agreed position has been placed in the Library.

Breach of Ministerial Code

Mr David Burnside asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, with reference to recent comments made by the deputy First Minister in an interview with broadcaster Stephen Nolan on 30 May 2007, what is the department's assessment of whether or not this constitutes a breach of the Ministerial Code. (AQW 1256/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The First Minister and deputy First Minister are fully committed to the Ministerial Code and see no need for any assessment of the remarks.

Community Relations Funding

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the amount of community relations funding the department has provided to the Community Relations Council, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1351/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The table below provides details of the amount of community relations funding provided by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to the Community Relations Council in each of the last five financial years. These figures are confirmed, with the exception of 2006/2007, in the Council's published audited financial statements.

Financial Year	Amount
2002/03	£2,708,587
2003/04	£3,111,523
2004/05	£3,111,670
2005/06	£3,107,019
2006/07	£3,249,250

Good Relations and Reconciliation Programme

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to provide a breakdown of the allocation of the contributions made by the Good Relations and Reconciliation Division to each of the District Councils in 2006/2007; and to outline the proposed allocation for the 2007/2008 financial year. (AQW 1376/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The table below provides the detail of resources made available to district councils in support of community relations and good relations programmes in 2006/2007 and 2007/08 financial years.

Council	2006/07	2007/08

Planning Appeals

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the backlog of planning appeals at the end of June 2007, in (a) the Omagh District Council area; and (b) the Strabane District Council area; and to detail the number and percentage of these planning appeals that were successful in the 2006/2007 year. (AQW 1377/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The Planning Appeals Commission is a tribunal Non Departmental Public Body, and I understand the Chief Commissioner has written to the member in the following terms:

"At the 30th June 2007 there were 199 appeals outstanding which relate to the Omagh District Council area and 172 outstanding for the Strabane District Council area.

From 1st April 2006 to 31st March 2007 there were 11 successful appeals out of the 28 decisions made in the Omagh District Council area, which equates to a success rate of 39%. During the same period there were 3 successful appeals out of the 27 decisions made relating to the Strabane District Council area, this equates to a success rate of 11%.

I would be happy to provide any further information you require arising out this response or to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable."

North-South Ministerial Council

Mr Alex Attwood asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister (a) if it intends to produce a new work programme for the North-South Ministerial Council; (b) to outline the proposed timescale for this; and (c) what additional initiatives are being proposed on a North-South basis.

(AQW 1437/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: A Plenary meeting of the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) took place on 17 July 2007 in Armagh, at which Ministers agreed a schedule of NSMC meetings for the period July to December 2007. The Joint Communiqué from the Plenary meeting is attached. This provides details of decisions on a range of issues which Ministers agreed at the meeting.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Water Level at Shrigley

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement on whether a minimum water level was agreed for the Claylakes at Shrigley, Killyleagh, in light of the agreement on a maximum water level.
(AQW 1151/07)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): The historic agreement between the then Ministry of Agriculture and the undertaking at the Clea Lakes provided only for maximum water levels in the Lakes and did not specify a minimum water level. The agreement was aimed at ensuring a balance between the needs of the previous industrial Tannery operation for water, and avoidance of flooding of surrounding land. I am aware that environmental concerns have been raised about lower water levels in the lakes and officials in Rivers Agency have recently met with officials of DOE Environment and Heritage Service and local landowners, to discuss a possible way forward. The position is that, if agreement can be reached to transfer responsibility for maintaining the maximum water levels to Rivers Agency, subject to availability of funding, they will undertake remedial work to the existing control structures in the Clea Lakes. If that proves possible, the exceptional minimum levels currently being experienced, due to leaking structures, will be significantly improved. However, it should be noted that it is impossible to guarantee a minimum level for the lakes as this is dependent on weather conditions. Neither Rivers Agency nor EHS has any statutory responsibility to maintain minimum water levels.

Sheep Industry

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has for the marketing of Northern Irish lamb, to enable it to compete with the market for New Zealand and Welsh lamb.

(AQW 1173/07)

Ms Gildernew: I am committed to supporting local produce and can advise that my Department is actively involved in work to assist our sheep industry. The Department and industry stakeholders have formed a Red Meat Task Force to develop a long term strategy for the local beef and sheepmeat industry. The consultants appointed in April to carry out this work are due to report later this year and will provide an action plan for this important sector. In addition, under the European Protected Food Names Scheme, the LMC has produced an application to register 'Northern Ireland Lamb' as a Protected Geographical Indicator (PGI). The Red Meat Task force will also examine how best to utilize a PGI. The aim is to position NI lamb in the market where returns can be maximised. Furthermore, in October, lamb will be included in LMC's programme of activities at Anuga (the international food and drink exhibition in Cologne attracting international traders). LMC also conduct market research and provide pricing and marketing information to assist our industry in remaining competitive.

DARD Consultancy Services

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her department's projected spend on consultancy services, in the 2007/2008 financial year.
(AQW 1176/07)

Ms Gildernew: The estimated projected spend for the financial year 2007/08 is £781,450.

Voluntary Modulation

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of stakeholders that were consulted prior to her announcement on voluntary modulation; and to detail the number of those consulted who made proposals that were later reflected in her decision to increase the current rate of modulation.
(AQW 1190/07)

Ms Gildernew: I consulted the Assembly's Agriculture and Rural Development Committee and met with 12 organisations representing environmental, agri-food and wider rural interests. I also received two written submissions.

All of the organisations expressed a view on the level of voluntary modulation rates - ranging from maintaining the higher Voluntary Modulation rates set by David Cairns to having no Voluntary Modulation at all. In making my decision to reduce the rates set by David Cairns, I took into account the full range of views.

Sustrans Scheme

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement on the Sustrans scheme for safety at schools; and to provide details of (a) the primary schools involved in the scheme; and (b) the funding that each school will receive. (AQW 1203/07)

Ms Gildernew: Sustrans have been awarded £936,531 under Measure 4.9 of the EU Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity (PBSP) of the Rural Development Programme through DARD. This funding allows for the development and implementation of a project known as the Rural Safe Routes to School Project. The total cost of the Project is approximately £1.25m and is being delivered in partnership with other key stakeholders/match funders including the Department of Regional Development, Roads' Service, the Department of Education and the Department of Environment, Road Safety Unit.

Cattle Exports

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the progress made on marketing since the removal of the live exports ban; and to outline the short-term and long-term prospects of the live export trade. (AQW 1236/07)

Ms Gildernew: Since the lifting of the European Commission's ban on live cattle exports in May 2006, 2,648 consignments totalling 51,900 animals have been exported from the North of Ireland to Member States.

These figures demonstrate that there is a significant demand in Europe for cattle from here.

In the short-term, I am planning to meet key stakeholders at the end of July to discuss a range of trade issues.

In the longer term, I will be working closely with the industry and my counterparts in GB, to ensure industry concerns are raised with the Commission and to secure a level playing field across Europe.

I will also be engaging with my Ministerial colleague in the south of Ireland, to explore ways of securing the freer movement of animals on the island of Ireland within the framework of the All-Island Animal Health and Welfare Strategy.

Capital Expenditure on Opening Forests

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her department's capital expenditure on opening up forests for leisure and recreation, for the last five years; and to detail the proposed capital expenditure for the next financial year. (AQW 1237/07)

Ms Gildernew:

2002/03	£169k
2003/04	£268k
2004/05	£12k
2005/06	£24k
2006/07	£6k
2007/08	No expenditure budgeted for recreation activities.

The main areas of capital expenditure included development of the Walkway at Glenarriff Forest and improvements to shower and toilet facilities in forest parks.

Countryside Management Scheme

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to confirm that the Countryside Management Scheme, or a similar scheme, will be introduced in the near future. (AQW 1251/07)

Ms Gildernew: The Northern Ireland Rural Development Plan (NIRDP) 2007 - 2013 may be approved by the European Commission in late July 2007. Local legislation will follow, but is unlikely to come into operation before October 2007. The proposed Countryside Management Scheme (NICMS) in the North of Ireland is an integral part of the NIRDP. I can confirm that this scheme will be introduced in the near future; however it is unlikely that this will be in 2007.

Single Farm Payment Land Inspections

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total number of land inspections associated with Single Farm Payments, that were carried out in the month ending 31 May 2007. (AQW 1254/07)

Ms Gildernew: There were no land inspections, associated with the 2007 Single Farm Payment, carried out in the month ending 31 May 2007.

Import of Cattle from Scotland

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement on the import of cattle from Scotland to processing plants in Northern Ireland, with specific reference to the impact of the price paid by Northern Ireland Meat Plants for Scottish cattle, when compared to Northern Irish cattle; and what plans she has to address this issue.

(AQW 1281/07)

Ms Gildernew: During the year from 3 May 2006 to 14 May 2007 9,820 cattle were imported from Great Britain for direct slaughter at Meat Plants in Northern Ireland.

I acknowledge the valuable contribution that the red meat sector makes to the local economy. With regards to pricing, you will be aware that prices paid for cattle are a commercial matter between Meat Processing Plants and their customers and government cannot interfere with normal market forces.

The situation suggests that there may be over capacity across Meat Processing Plants in the North and this is an area that needs to be addressed. My Department is currently involved in a wide ranging review of the red meat sector along with key stakeholders representing both Producers and Processors interests and this is one of the areas that will be addressed in that review. It will also look at the long-term future of this important sector, help to bring together a fragmented industry and clarify priorities for both the industry and government providing a much needed focus on how public money could be used most effectively to support the industry and aid sustainability.

Sustrans Scheme

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to roll out the Sustrans scheme for cycle paths in rural towns and villages.
(AQW 1336/07)

Ms Gildernew: There are currently no plans for the Department to roll out this project throughout rural towns and villages.

The Safe Routes to Schools project is led by Sustrans, the Sustainable Transport Charity. It is funded under Measure 4.9 of the EU Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity (PBSP) of the Rural Development Programme through DARD.

As part of the project an evaluation will be carried out towards the end of 2008. If this evaluation is positive, it is anticipated that Sustrans will be well placed to pursue further funding opportunities to develop this type of work in both rural and urban schools across the North of Ireland.

Review of Planning Applications

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with the Minister for Regional Development regarding a review of the criteria to be applied to planning applications for single homes in the countryside from farmers and those involved in the agricultural industry.

(AQW 1362/07)

Ms Gildernew: I have discussed Planning Policy Statement 14 with the Minister for Regional Development on a number of occasions, including at the Executive Committee Meeting on 5 July

As a representative on the inter-Ministerial group on this issue, I will continue to ensure that the rural issues related to PPS14, including the criteria to be applied to farmers and the agriculture industry, are taken into account.

Common Agriculture Policy

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the effect that the decision of EU Ministers to simplify and improve the Common Agricultural Policy's cross-compliance system will have on farmers in Northern Ireland.
(AQW 1383/07)

Ms Gildernew: The proposals, as presented by the Commission and considered by the Council, will be a helpful contribution to simplifying the system of cross compliance. There will be benefits for farmers in Northern Ireland, such as the non application of penalties which fall below €50, the possibility of a points system for cases of non compliance, and 14 days advance notice of some inspections. Simplification of the ten month rule will be welcome provided it delivers an easier system. The use of warning letters for minor breaches is already deployed in Northern Ireland. The proposals represent modest gains and I would have liked more to have been delivered.

Maintenance of Water Levels at Clea Lakes

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she is taking to maintain the water levels in the Clea Lakes at Shrigley, Killyleagh.
(AQW 1403/07)

Ms Gildernew: Responsibility for maintenance of maximum water levels in the Clea lakes currently rests with the private owners of the water rights and DARD Rivers Agency has no statutory responsibility. In response to environmental representations about lower water levels, recent meetings were held involving Rivers Agency and DOE Environment and Heritage Service officials, local land owners and businesses and a further meeting has been arranged for later in July.

If agreement to transfer responsibility for water level management can be reached, Rivers Agency, subject to the availability of funding and Drainage Council approval, will undertake remedial works to the existing control structures. It is hoped that these would curtail leakage which is occurring at present and improve maintenance of water levels in the Lakes. It should be noted that it is not possible to guarantee a minimum level for the Lakes as this is dependent on weather conditions.

Illegal Trade of Exotic Wildlife Products

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to revise the current list of regulated plants and animals, to help prevent growth in the illegal trade of exotic wildlife products; and to detail the number of seizures of regulated flora and fauna, intended for illegal trade, that have taken place in the last five years. (AQW 1457/07)

Ms Gildernew: My Department does not have a remit covering measures to prevent the illegal trade of exotic wildlife products. I am aware that the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs is the UK Management Authority for CITES, (the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora). The Department of the Environment is responsible for prohibitions on the trade or sale of a limited number of species of animals and plants that are of European importance. I have been informed by DOE that there is no significant incidence of illegal trade of these species in the North. DOE have noted that they have never prosecuted anyone in the North of Ireland for sale of European protected species and, as such, there are no figures available on levels of incidence.

Indigenous Bee Population

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (a) what estimate her department has made of the indigenous bee population of Northern Ireland; (b) if any assessment has been made of the threat of Colony Collapse Disorder against the indigenous bee population of Northern Ireland; and (c) what measures her department has put in place to safeguard Northern Ireland's native bee colonies against Colony Collapse Disorder. (AQW 1460/07)

Ms Gildernew: My Department does not monitor the indigenous bee population in the North of Ireland and has not therefore made any assessment of the threat to it from Colony Collapse Disorder. Consequently, my Department has not considered measures to safeguard native bee colonies. My inspectors check "managed" bees for certain notifiable diseases. While Colony Collapse Disorder is not recognised as a disease in the UK or Ireland, unexplained colony collapse is investigated to ascertain the cause. There is no evidence that Colony Collapse Disorder is present in the North of Ireland.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Funding for Ulster Grand Prix

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to state what support, including financial support, has been given to the Ulster Grand Prix over the past five years; and what financial support it will receive from his department in 2007. (AQW 400/07)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): In 2007, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, through Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), provided an additional £150,000 funding to the 2&4 Wheel MSG. Of this, £50,000 was made available to the NW200 for the upgrading of health and safety at the site and £100,000 was used to purchase safety equipment such as bales, pole protectors and safety fencing which is available for use by any of the motorsport organisations. SNI is currently assisting 2&4 Wheel MSG with the preparation of a business case setting out further funding requirements.

Gaelic Language Network

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the Northern Ireland members on the board of the Gaelic language network Colmcille; and to explain how they were recruited and appointed. (AQW 1031/07)

Mr Poots: I am aware that this question was due for answer on 9th July and I apologise for the delay.

There are currently three Northern Ireland Board members. Risteard MacGabhan serves as an ex-officio member due to his position as Chair of the Northern Ireland Regional Committee of Colmcille. At the time of the formation of the Board in April 2002, Aodán Mac Póilín served as NI Regional Committee Chair, resulting in his appointment as a Core Director of the Board. Róise Ní Bhaoill was appointed as DCAL's nomination to the Board.

Ulster-Scots Agency

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the recruitment process used to appoint the second interim chief executive of the Ulster- Scots Agency; (b) when he took up the appointment; and (c) when he left the position. (AQW 1033/07)

Mr Poots: Following the resignation of the first Interim CEO of the Ulster-Scots Agency in August 2001, a second interim CEO was appointed. An advisor working with the Agency was appointed with the Board's approval as the second interim CEO. He was informed of the CEO's responsibilities on 3 September 2001 and advised of the Accounting office role of the CEO on 20 September 2001. The Board of the Ulster-Scots Agency terminated his contract on 28th March 2002 on the grounds of non-availability.

Promotion of Ulster-Scots Linguistic Projects

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount his department has spent on Ulster-Scots linguistic projects activity, on a project-by-project basis, in the last five years. (AQW 1071/07)

Mr Poots: DCAL's expenditure on the promotion of the Ulster-Scots linguistic projects activity is via organisations such as the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group. The amount spent by both these organisations on linguistic projects over the past 5 years is shown in the table below:

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Ulster-Scots Agency	£100k	£500k	£103k	£198k	£345k
Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group				05-06 £134k	06-07 £392k

There would be a disproportionate cost to show these figures over the past 5 years on a project-by-project basis.

Promotion of Non-Linguistic Ulster-Scots Projects

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the amount his department has spent on non-linguistic Ulster-Scots projects activity, on a project-by-project basis, in the last five years. (AQW 1082/07)

Mr Poots: DCAL's expenditure on the promotion of non-linguistic Ulster-Scots projects is via organisations such as the Ulster-Scots Agency, the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Events Company. The amount spent/allocated by these organisations over the past 5 years is shown in the table below:

	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Ulster-Scots Agency	£1.44m	£1.67m	£1.81m	£1.94m	£2.23m
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Arts Council for N.I	£914k	£650k	£846k	£365k	£357k
Comments DCAL pays to the Agency in each Calendar year. *The 2007 amount is the allocated figure in line with the business plan.

Under the Community Festivals Fund administered by the Northern Ireland Events Company, projects which including elements of Ulster Scots entertainment and celebration have received payments of £50k in 2006-07 and £41k in 2007-08 (tranches 1 and 2 only).

If required the Ulster Scots Agency could supply details of its funding in relation to a specific project, however, there would be a disproportionate cost to show these figures over the past 5 years on a project-by-project basis. The table below shows a breakdown of the Ulster Scots Agency's expenditure/allocation on non-linguistic projects under its four main strategic themes over the past five years as defined in its business plans.

Strategic Theme	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Culture	£610k	£627k	£650k	£493k	£590k
Education	£280k	£288k	£482k	£547k	£430k
Public Awareness	£200k	£205k	£200k	£180k	£325k
Corporate Affairs	£350k	£481k	£479k	£672k	£886k

Rural Community Festivals

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what strategy there is to ensure future sustainability of community festivals in rural areas of Northern Ireland. (AQW 1138/07)

Mr Poots: The Community Festivals Fund (CFF) policy and guidance framework came into operation on 1 April 2006. The aim of the policy is to improve the capacity of community festivals, to make them more sustainable and less reliant on public funding.

In 2006/07 the CFF provided financial support to 42 festivals, which were from both urban and rural areas of Northern Ireland, helping existing festivals to grow and emerging festivals get off the ground.

CFF staff regularly attend information sessions throughout Northern Ireland to promote the Fund. They also provide an extensive package of training to build capacity amongst festival organisers.

The current arrangements apply for 2007/08. The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure will bring forward proposals in respect of policy arrangements for community festivals later this year.

Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what engagement the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group (ICIG) has had with representative organisations, such as the Ulster-Scots Language Society and the Ulster-Scots Heritage Council, in regard to the preparation of the content of the Northern Ireland element of the periodic report for the Committee of Experts, for the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. (AQW 1161/07)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) acting on behalf of the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group (ICIG) Secretariat, as part of the periodic report, identified to the Committee of Experts (COMEX) organisations that had an interest in Ulster-Scots Language issues. The Ulster Scots Language Society and the Ulster-Scots Heritage Council were referred and invited to meet with COMEX on 5th December 2005.

DCAL Spend on Consultancy Services

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail his department's projected spend on consultancy services, in the 2007/2008 financial year. (AQW 1178/07)

Mr Poots: The projected spend on consultancy services within DCAL in the 2007/08 financial year is as follows:

	Projected expenditure Amount £000's
Arts	35
Museums	27
Libraries	200
Languages	9
Waterways and Fisheries	150
Sports	45
Multi Sports stadium	2800
Internal Governance	252
Total DCAL projected Consultancy spend	3518

Safety at Sports Ground Programme

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of funding that has been provided as part of the Safety at Sports Grounds programme, and to list those in receipt of such funding. (AQW 1202/07)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the provision of funding under the Stadia Safety Programme. The following details the amounts of funding and those in receipt under the Stadia Safety Programme up to 31 March 2007

Total Funding Provided Per Programme
Interim Safe Sports Ground	£4,704,483
Stadia Safety Programme	£5,124,756

Total Funding Provided Per Governing Body
Irish Football Association	£4,604,828

Safety at Sports Ground Programme

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the budget for the Safety at Sports Grounds programme. (AQW 1206/07)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the administration of the Stadia Safety Programme. The programme's current operating budget from 2005/06 to 2007/08 is £8.1m. This is broken down as follows:

2005/06	£4,660,335
2006/07	£1,888,003
2007/08	£1,597,773
Total	£8,146,111

World Pipe Bands Championship

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what consideration he has given to North Antrim as a suitable venue for the World Pipe Bands Championship. (AQW 1262/07)

Mr Poots: I plan to meet with representatives of the Northern Ireland Branch of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association next week to discuss the possibility of bringing the World Pipe Band Championships to Northern Ireland.

In the event that the Championships were to be held in Northern Ireland, I would hope that North Antrim would be considered as a possible venue. However, this would be a decision for the organisers of the event to take after giving careful consideration to the area's capacity to host the event.

World Pipe Bands Championship

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what efforts he is making to bring the World Pipe Bands Championship to Northern Ireland. (AQW 1264/07)

Mr Poots: I plan to meet with representatives of the Northern Ireland Branch of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association next week to discuss the possibility of bringing the World Pipe Band Championships to Northern Ireland.

Castle Gardens Site, Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of car parking spaces that will be available at the new library for Newtownards, at the Castle Gardens School site. (AQW 1308/07)

Mr Poots: The Castle Gardens School site option in the draft Economic Appraisal, which is currently under consideration by the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, indicates that on site parking can be accommodated. The number of car parking spaces will be determined as the project proceeds to planning and design stage.

Smithsonian Folklife Festival

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail whether his department consulted the Ulster Council of Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann (CCE) about the Smithsonian Folklife Festival; and whether any attempts were made by his department to involve and include CCE in the Smithsonian Folklife Festival. (AQW 1319/07)

Mr Poots: A number of performers invited to the Smithsonian's Folklife Festival are members of CCE and they were consulted as individuals by the Smithsonian in terms of the programme of performance that they would present at the Festival to explain their performing traditions. These performers are from Armagh, Down, Antrim and Fermanagh. The Festival focuses on the individual participants rather than the organisations to which they belong.

Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of grant aid or financial assistance provided by his department to Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann in 2006/2007. (AQW 1320/07)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure does not directly fund Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann. The Department is aware that Foras na Gaeilge, the Irish Language Agency, which is co-sponsored by DCAL and Department of Community Rural and Gaeltacht Affairs in the Republic of Ireland, has approved sponsorship of €15,000 for Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann in 2006 and for the same amount in 2007. The Arts Council of Northern Ireland awarded funding through the Awards for All programme to Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Éireann in 2006/07 totalling £19,780.

Athlete Support Programme

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is his assessment of how the grants paid by Sport Northern Ireland, as part of the Athlete Support Programme, compares to those paid by equivalent sports bodies in the rest of the United Kingdom. (AQW 1329/07)

Mr Poots: The grants paid by Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), as part of the Athlete Support Programme, differ significantly to those paid by equivalent sports bodies in the rest of the United Kingdom (UK). Unlike SNI, equivalent bodies in the UK do not invest in individual athletes. SNI grants are not the same as those paid by equivalent bodies and are also intended to help Northern Ireland athletes reach a level to be eligible for UK Sport investment.

Stadia Safety Programme

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the recipients of grants paid out under (a) phase one; and (b) phase two of the Stadia Safety Programme; and to detail the amount of funding paid to each recipient. (AQW 1330/07)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the payment of grants under the Stadia Safety Programme. The following details the recipients of grants paid out under (a) phase one; and (b) phase two of the Stadia Safety Programme and the amount of funding paid to each up to 31 March 2007.

Architecture and Built Environment Ministerial Advisory Group

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he has selected candidates for the new Architecture and the Built Environment Ministerial Advisory Group, announced by his direct rule predecessor; and if he will list these candidates. (AQW 1334/07)

Mr Poots: Interviews have recently taken place for the selection of candidates for the Ministerial Advisory Group. The outcome of the selection has not yet been finalised.

Default Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what facility currently exists for members of staff in his department to work in their current post, beyond the default retirement age. (AQW 1343/07)

Mr Poots: Since 1 October 2006 staff wanting to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

Irish Language Act

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, further to his answer to AQW 372/07, to outline the timescale for completion of the analysis of responses to the consultation on the proposed Irish Language Act. (AQW 1349/07)

Mr Poots: It is my intention to bring a paper on this issue to the Executive in the autumn.

Understanding Cultural Traditions

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of funding made available by his department to help promote understanding of cultural traditions in Northern Ireland; and the amount of this funding that was allocated to single identity initiatives, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1350/07)

Mr Poots: Expenditure on the promotion of understanding of cultural traditions in Northern Ireland by the Department of Culture, Arts & Leisure is shown in the tables below:

Funding for Coleraine and Limavady Councils

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the level of funding for events made available to (a) Coleraine Borough Council; and (b) Limavady Borough Council, in the last five years.

(AQW 1357/07)

Mr Poots: The level of funding for events made available to Coleraine Borough Council and Limavady Borough Council for events in the last five years is detailed in the tables below.

COLERAINE BOROUGH COUNCIL – FUNDING MADE AVAILABLE BY THE ARTS COUNCIL

* Note these amounts are indicative of applications made directly from each council for funding from the Northern Ireland Events Company .

2012 London Olympic Games

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is his assessment of the impact that the increased lottery funding for the 2012 London Olympic Games will have on the amount of money available for lottery grants, to be distributed in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 1360/07)

Mr Poots: An additional contribution from the Lottery of £675m is required over the four years 2009 to 2012 for the 2012 London Olympic Games.

In Northern Ireland this means a direct loss to the non-Olympic good causes of £26.6m over the period 2009-2012. Each distributor will, based on the existing share of Lottery proceeds, contribute:

Big Lottery Fund	£19.1m
Heritage Lottery Fund	£ 2.7m
Arts Council of Northern Ireland	£ 2.5m
Sport Northern Ireland	£ 2.3m

People Registered at Rugby Clubs

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of people registered at rugby clubs in Northern Ireland, as amateur and professional players, in (a) youth teams; (b) men's teams; and (c) women's teams.

(AQW 1368/07)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) does not retain information on the number of people registered at rugby clubs in Northern Ireland, nor is such information available, except at disproportionate cost.

Ulster Cycling Federation

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what meetings he has had, or plans to have, with the Ulster Cycling Federation. (AQW 1398/07)

Mr Poots: I have had no meetings to date, nor have I currently any plans to meet with Cycling Ulster. However, Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) which is responsible for the development of sport including the distribution of funding, meets regularly with Cycling Ulster.

Financial Support for Cycling

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of financial support he has given to (a) the sport of cycling; and (b) individual cycling clubs and organisations, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1399/07)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. SNI has provided financial support to (a) the sport of cycling and (b) individual cycling clubs and organisations, in each of the last five financial years as follows:

Financial Year	Sport of Cycling		Individual Clubs/ Organisations		Total (£)
	Exchequer (£)	Lottery (£)	Exchequer (£)	Lottery (£)
2002/03	Nil	63,340	Nil	5,000	68,340
2003/04	70,892	35,880	Nil	Nil	106,772
2004/05	Nil	117,140	Nil	35,590	152,730

2006/07	58,650	151,850	Nil	Nil	210,500

Northern Ireland Cycling Federation

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of grants awarded by his department to the Northern Ireland Cycling Federation, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1400/07)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of grants to sports organisations. SNI has made no awards to the Northern Ireland Cycling Federation (NICF) in each of the last 5 years as it currently recognises Cycling Ulster as the governing body of cycling in Northern Ireland and as the NICF is now represented within Cycling Ulster.

Grants to the Ulster Cycling Federation

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of grants awarded to the Ulster Cycling Federation, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1401/07)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. SNI has provided the following grants to Cycling Ulster, in each of the last five financial years:

Financial Year	Exchequer (£)	Lottery (£)	Total
2002/03	Nil	63,340	63,340
2003/04	70,892	20,880	91,772

2006/07	58,650	131,450	190,100

Northern Ireland Cycling Federation

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what meetings he has had, or plans to have, with the Northern Ireland Cycling Federation. (AQW 1402/07)

Mr Poots: I have had no meetings, nor do I plan to meet with, the Northern Ireland Cycling Federation (NICF) as the Federation agreed in December 2006 to amalgamate with Cycling Ulster. The NICF is now represented within Cycling Ulster and Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), which is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding, meets regularly with Cycling Ulster to monitor investment in cycling in Northern Ireland.

Funding to Féile an Phobail

Mr Gerry Adams asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of funding that is outstanding, from the funding allocated last year by his department to Féile an Phobail. (AQW 1456/07)

Mr Poots: Last year the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure awarded up to £100k transitional funding to Féile an Phobail. £25k of this funding is still outstanding.

EDUCATION

Post-Primary Integrated Education

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the current provision of integrated education in the secondary sector in Bangor, Donaghadee and Millisle. (AQW 650/07)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): There is no post-primary integrated provision in Bangor, Donaghadee or Millisle. The nearest post-primary integrated provision for the towns in question is:

Priory College, Holywood; and Strangford Integrated College, Carrowdore.

The enrolment at St Columbanus the Catholic Maintained post primary school in Bangor includes over 30% Protestants.

Provision of School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the measures being taken to ensure the delivery of healthy menus in school canteens. (AQW 712/07)

Ms Ruane: As the Member for Strangford has asked a number of related questions concerning the provision of healthy school meals, I shall reply to these together.

My Department has worked, in conjunction with the Education and Library Boards, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, the Health Promotion Agency and the Food Standards Agency, to develop compulsory new Nutritional Standards for school meals and to ensure that these standards are reviewed regularly in light of the latest information on nutrition and health. These were originally published in the document, "Catering for Healthy Lifestyles". This booklet is at present being updated to take account of the new standards.

Healthy menus were first introduced through a pilot scheme in almost one hundred schools. Thereafter, a roll-out programme encompassed all schools.

The standards are now being extended to other sources of food in schools such as tuck shops and vending machines.

School canteen staff are presently being trained in the delivery of healthy menus. Also, nutritional co-ordinators have been appointed to advise canteen staff and schools on menu-planning and nutrition-related matters.

The implementation of healthy menus is being monitored by the Education and Library Boards and other school authorities. Schools are also being checked for compliance with the standards by the Education and Training Inspectorate.

Provision of School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the methodology used to monitor the implementation of government policy regarding the delivery of healthy school meals. (AQW 713/07)

Provision of School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the methodology used to introduce healthy options on to school menus in the past; and how this is to be expanded in the future. (AQW 714/07)

Referral of Children for Statutory Assessment

Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children referred to the North Eastern Education and Library Board to be assessed for a statement of special educational needs, in each of the last three years. (AQW 723/07)

Ms Ruane: The North Eastern Education and Library Board report that the number of children referred for statutory assessment in each of the last three financial years is as follows:

2004/05	360
2005/06	327
2006/07	338

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education if she will ensure that the Craigavon-based

Dickson Plan is preserved in any proposed replacement of the existing transfer test system. (AQW 734/07)

Ms Ruane: The arrangements for post-primary transfer that will succeed those currently in operation have not yet been decided. I have made clear that I am not in favour of academic selection.

Budget Performance of South Eastern ELB

Mr Jimmy Spratt asked the Minister of Education to confirm the reported savings of £4.5 million in the South Eastern Education and Library Board's 2006/07 budget; and to outline where the savings were made. (AQW 765/07)

Ms Ruane: The unaudited Annual Accounts of the South Eastern Education and Library Board for 2006/2007, submitted to the Department of Education on 1 June 2007, report that the Board lived within the budget allocated to it for this period whilst also meeting the agreed 2006-07 repayment target of £4.5m.

The Board tells me that this was achieved in part through the application of stringent budget management disciplines and also by giving effect, following a comprehensive review of services, to proposals designed to secure greater efficiencies in service provision.

South Eastern Education and Library Board Maintenance Budget

Mr Jimmy Spratt asked the Minister of Education to give details of the deficit, to date, in the maintenance budget allocated to the South Eastern Education and Library Board. (AQW 766/07)

Ms Ruane: Education and Library Boards receive allocations to cover the delivery of the full range of services that they provide. It is a matter for each Board to determine how much of its centre allocation is spent on maintenance. In 2006/07, the Board has advised that it spent £3,935k on maintenance; an increase of 123% on the previous year.

School Vending Machines

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to name the schools that provide tuck shops or vending machines in the South Eastern Education and Library Board. (AQW 777/07)

Ms Ruane: The following schools in the South-Eastern Education and Library Board area provide vending machines in their canteen/dining areas:

- Down Academy, Downpatrick
- Dundonald High School

- Knockbreda High School
- Laurelhill Community College, Lisburn
- Regent House School, Newtownards
- Shimna Integrated College, Newcastle
- St Malachy's High School, Castlewellsan

Information relating to the schools which provide tuck shops or vending machines outside the school canteen is not available.

From September 2007 my Department's nutritional standards initiative will be extended to all sources of food in schools. This means that only healthy options will be available in vending machines and tuck shops etc.

Pupil Behaviour Maintenance

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number and type of schemes currently in existence to prevent school exclusions; and what is the level of funding allocated to these schemes.

(AQW 794/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education allocates earmarked funding to the Education and Library Boards, which they can augment from their block grant, for a range of interventions to maintain pupils with challenging behaviour in school. Funding for this financial year is as follows:

Area	Allocation (£k)
Behaviour Support Teams	1,002
Pupil Referral Units	1,212
Education Otherwise Than at School	3,229
School Behaviour Schemes	250
Total	5,693

Each Education and Library Board decides how to allocate this funding to best meet the needs of the young people in their area.

Suspension and Expulsion of Pupils

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Education to advise of current departmental policy in relation to 'rolling exclusions'; and how this policy is enforced.

(AQW 795/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not have such a policy.

All schools are required to have a scheme for the suspension and expulsion of pupils, in which the procedures to be followed are set out.

A pupil can be suspended only by the School Principal for up to five school days and this can only be extended with the prior approval of the Chair of the Board of Governors. A pupil can only be suspended for a maximum of 45 school days in a school year. The Principal must immediately give notice of a suspension to the parent of the pupil, the Chair of the Board of Governors, the relevant Education and Library Board and, as appropriate, to the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools.

Education and Library Boards are responsible for monitoring pupil suspensions.

Suspension and Expulsion of Pupils

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the advice currently given to schools in relation to suspension and exclusion tariffs; and what guidance is provided to ensure that they operate on an equivalent basis in all schools. (AQW 796/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department's current advice to schools, on sanctions for breaches of discipline and the use of suspension and expulsion, is set out in "Pastoral Care in Schools: Promoting Positive Behaviour" published in June 2001.

The Education Order (NI) 2006 sets out new arrangements for the suspension and expulsion of pupils, including the introduction of a common scheme for all grant-aided schools. The scheme will be the subject of wide consultation later this year. Following this, the Department will issue the agreed common scheme and associated guidance to all schools. This will ensure consistent practice across all schools and to allow equity of treatment for all pupils irrespective of the school they attend.

Funding of School Meals Service

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of funding allocated for the provision of school meals at primary schools that is used for other purposes in (a) the controlled sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector, in each Education and Library Board area. (AQW 801/07)

Ms Ruane: As the Member for Strangford has asked a number of related questions concerning the funding of the school meals service, I shall reply to these together.

Education and Library Boards receive allocations to cover the delivery of the full range of services that they provide, including school meals. It is a matter for each Board to determine how much of its centre allocation is spent on school meals. However, the Initial Resource Allocation Plans submitted to my Department by the Boards indicate that they have allocated the following expenditure in relation to the school meals service for 2007/08 in respect of maintained and controlled schools:

Belfast	£5.906 million
North-Eastern	£6.574 million
South-Eastern	£4.427 million
Southern	£6.581 million
Western	£7.087 million
Total	£30.575 million

(A breakdown of this expenditure between school types and sectors is not available.)

My Department is also providing funding of £1.5 million to grant-maintained integrated schools and £2.5 million to voluntary grammar schools for the provision of their school meals service.

Additionally, my Department is providing a further £3 million to Boards in the current financial year which is ring-fenced and must be used to improve the quality of food in schools. This additional funding is mostly to ensure that expenditure on the food and nutritional content value of school meals amounts to at least 50p in nursery, primary and special schools and 60p in post-primary schools. The remaining funding supports the implementation of the standards, including the recruitment of five Nutritional Co-ordinators to advise schools, training arrangements for the many hundreds of canteen staff and assistance with additional staff costs and preparation time.

Funding of School Meals Service

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail how much funding is allocated to secondary schools for the provision of school meals in (a) the controlled sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector, in each Education and Library Board area. (AQW 802/07)

Funding for Primary and Secondary Schools

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking to narrow the gap between funding for primary and secondary schools. (AQW 807/07)

Ms Ruane: The rationale behind the differential in funding for primary and secondary schools reflects the greater cost demands which arise for secondary schools in the delivery of the curriculum. I am, however, committed to reducing the current funding differential and I will therefore be looking very carefully, within the resources I can secure for education under the Comprehensive Spending Review, at how we can improve the current balance to allow more investment in early years, without creating difficulties for the post-primary sector.

School Vending Machines

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education how many schools provide tuck shops or vending machines, by school type and Board area. (AQW 873/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of schools providing vending machines in their canteen/dining areas is as follows:

	BELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	WELB	TOTAL
Controlled	2	0	5	1	3	11
Maintained	2	0	1	0	9	12
Grant-Maintained Integrated	0	0	1	0	1	2
Voluntary Grammar	0	1	0	0	0	1

Information relating to the schools which provide tuck shops or vending machines outside the school canteen is not available.

From September 2007 my Department's nutritional standards initiative will be extended to all sources of food in schools. This means that only healthy options should be available in vending machines and tuck shops.

Craigavon Based Dickson Plan

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education what is her assessment of the impact of the Craigavon-based Dickson Plan on (a) the delivery of education; and (b) academic performance in the Craigavon area. (AQW 903/07)

Ms Ruane: I have noted that the arrangements currently operating in the Craigavon-based Dickson Plan are well established. Research into the impact of the Dickson Plan published in 1998 produced inconclusive findings. I understand that a study of provision in the Dickson Plan area, commissioned by the Southern Education and Library Board, will be published soon. This will better enable an assessment of the area's provision to be made.

School Amalgamation

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to outline, in cases where two or more schools amalgamate, whether any overspend associated with these schools transfers to the school formed by the amalgamation. (AQW 917/07)

Ms Ruane: All schools are required, under the Local Management of Schools delegated funding arrangements, to ensure that levels of expenditure are contained within the total available resources. Schools should work with the relevant funding and employing authorities in the run up to an amalgamation.

Any overspend associated with these schools coming together on amalgamation will be met from centre funds, providing that in preparing the school for amalgamation, they have complied with any requirements, direction or advice issued by the Funding Authority.

Delegation of Funding

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to explain, in instances where a school closes, what happens to any overspend associated with that school. (AQW 918/07)

Ms Ruane: All schools are required, under the Local Management of Schools delegated funding arrangements, to ensure that levels of expenditure are contained within the total available resources. Schools should work with their Funding Authority in planning for a closure. Where a school closes with an associated overspend, the responsibility for meeting this falls to the relevant funding authority.

Teaching of Evolution in Schools

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education what provision currently exists for teachers to teach (a) creationism; (b) Intelligent Design; and (c) other theories of origins, as scientific explanations. (AQW 928/07)

Ms Ruane: The revised curriculum will have a greater emphasis on developing skills, such as critical thinking and analysis, and will also provide greater flexibility for schools to include teaching of alternative theories to evolution. GCSE Science specifications also include the exploration of theories other than evolution to explore the development of life on earth.

Child Obesity

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail what role her department has in combatting childhood obesity. (AQW 976/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education contributes to the Public Service Agreement target to stop the rise in obesity in children by 2010 and is progressing recommendations in the report "Fit Futures: Focus on Food, Activity and Young People".

From September 2007, healthy eating and physical activity will be addressed in the school curriculum through the new strand of Personal Development, where pupils will explore healthy lifestyles, and the compulsory study of Home Economics at Key Stage 3 and Physical Education from age 4 to 16. In support of this, I am working with the Gaelic Athletic Association and the Irish Football Association to introduce a sports programme in primary schools to help young people develop the physical literacy skills that will support them in maintaining a healthy lifestyle and to encourage them to take part in sports and to develop an enjoyment of 'getting out there' and being active.

In addition New Nutritional Standards, which are aimed at improving the quality of food served in schools, are being applied to all schools. Extended Schools are playing an important part in promoting healthy eating and physical activity.

Examination Timetables

Mr Cathal Boylan asked the Minister of Education what steps she is taking to minimise the potential for 'timetable fatigue', in relation to children sitting A-level and GCSE examinations. (AQW 982/07)

Ms Ruane: Schools are free to choose awarding bodies across GCE and GCSE subjects. The timetable for examinations is jointly agreed across the five awarding bodies following consultation with examination centres. There is a requirement within timetabling that daily examination times are limited to 6 hours for GCE and 5.5 hours for GCSE.

CCEA, as the main awarding body here, can arrange examinations during the half-term week in England and Wales in late May/early June to spread examinations over a slightly greater number of days with fewer days on which candidates are required to take examinations in more than one subject.

The number of assessment units in GCE courses beginning in 2008 will be reduced from six to four resulting in a reduction of one third in the number of AS examinations (from 2009) and A2 examinations (from 2010) taken by candidates.

Irish Language Schools

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to provide financial incentives in order to encourage teachers in Irish language schools who do not hold formal teaching qualifications to obtain such qualifications. (AQW 1038/07)

Ms Ruane: I am awaiting the review of Irish medium education before I consider whether it is appropriate to provide financial incentives to encourage teachers in Irish language schools who do not hold formal teaching qualifications to obtain such qualifications.

Pupil Expulsions

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Education to advise how many children per thousand have been expelled from schools, broken down by (a) Education and Library Board area; and (b) District Council area or postcode area, in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 1058/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is set out in the following tables:

School Year	BELB	WELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	All Boards
2000/01	0.01	0.02	0.04	0.02	0.02	0.02
2001/02	0.01	0.02	0.02	0.02	0.04	0.02
2002/03	0.03	0.02	0.03	0.03	0.01	0.02
2003/04	0.01	0.03	0.03	0.02	0.03	0.02
2004/05	0.01	0.03	0.04	0.02	0.02	0.03

The numbers of pupil expulsions per thousand are not collected by District Council area. The expulsion statistics for the 2005/06 school year are currently being analysed and will be placed on the Department of Education website when this has been completed.

Joint Declaration of Protection

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education if the Equal Opportunities and Sex Discrimination Joint Declaration of Protection, which was agreed by the Administrative, Executive, Clerical, Professional and Technical Staffs Council on 24 March 1995, has been adopted and signed by (a) each of the five Education and Library Boards; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, and, if so, to give the date that it was signed by each of these bodies. (AQW 1078/07)

Ms Ruane: The Southern Education and Library Board signed the declaration on 18th May 1995.

The Belfast Education and Library Board signed the declaration on the 29 October 1998.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board's declaration was signed by the then Chief Executive. Although there is no record of the date on which it was signed on behalf of the board it would have pre-dated 1 January 1997.

The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) signed the declaration in June 1995.

The Joint Declaration of Protection was adopted by the Finance and General Purposes Committee of the Western Education and Library Board on 27 September 1995.

The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools adopted this policy as the CCMS Joint Declaration of Protection on 13 May 1999.

Pupil Class Sizes

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the maximum allowable; and (b) the average class sizes in schools in each year group at primary and secondary level, for the years (i) 1985; (ii) 1990; (iii) 1995; (iv) 2000; and (v) 2005. (AQW 1079/07)

Ms Ruane:

- (a) Prior to 1998 the Primary School Principal determined the number of pupils in all classes in a primary school, taking account of the accommodation available, the needs of pupils, and the deployment of teaching staff. In September 1998 this was modified slightly, with the introduction of the 'Class Sizes in Key Stage 1' policy whereby all classes in P1 to P4 are limited to a maximum of 30 pupils.

In post primary schools, the number of pupils under instruction together by one teacher does not normally exceed 20 for a class in a practical subject; there are exceptions in some practical subjects. These exceptions are as follows:

- Science - up to 26 pupils in Years 8-10
- up to 24 pupils in Years 11-12
- 20 pupils in Years 13-14
- Art & Design - up to 26 in Years 8-10
- 20 pupils in Years 11-14
- PE - up to 25 in Years 8-10 if held in a Gym or Assembly Hall
- 20 pupils in Years 11-12
- up to 30 in all years if held in a sports hall or playing-pitch
- Home Economics, Technology & Design and Music are all restricted to a maximum of 20 pupils.
- Music became recognised as a practical subject in 2004 but all the others have been recognised as practical subjects since 1985.

- (b) Information on the average class size in post primary schools is not collected by the Department of Education. Average class size information has only been available for primary schools from 1999 onwards. The average class size in primary schools by year group for 2000 and 2005 is as follows:

	2000	2005
Year 1	21.9	22.1
Year 2	24.2	23.8
Year 3	24.9	24.4
Year 4	25.5	24.5
Year 5	25.9	25.3
Year 6	25.7	25.0
Year 7	25.0	24.1

Note: The average class size is calculated using only those classes that comprise single year groups.

Impact of Review of Public Administration on Education

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of information sessions held by Education and Library Boards, explaining to staff the impact upon them of the closure of the Boards. (AQW 1083/07)

Ms Ruane: The Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards have informed me that the number of information sessions held by Education and Library Boards to explain to staff the impact upon them of the implementation of the Review of Public Administration in education is as follows:

Education and Library Board	Number of Information Sessions
BELB	3
NEELB	19
SEELB	28
SELB	7
WELB	10

Staff are also kept informed through Board Intranet /Internet sites, in-house staff magazines, minutes of Board meetings and internal monthly core briefs.

Classroom Assistants

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's expenditure on classroom assistants working with children with learning difficulties. (AQW 1084/07)

Ms Ruane: I am advised by the Chief Executive Officers of the Education and Library Boards that in 2005/06, the last year for which full outturn figures are available, £48,075,000 was spent on the costs of assistance, to children with special educational needs. For three Boards the cost includes expenditure on both classroom assistance and general assistance as it is not possible to identify these separately.

Education and Library Board Expenditure

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount spent by each Education and Library Board on (a) refurbishing offices; (b) travel expenses of administrative staff; and (c) travel expenses of advisory staff, in each of the last two years. (AQW 1085/07)

Ms Ruane: I have been advised that the amount spent by each Education and Library Board in the 2005/06 and 2006/07 financial years is:

2005-06	BELB £	NEELB £	SEELB £	SELB £	WELB £
Refurbishment of Offices	10,000	71,031	-	5,000	387,218
Travel expenses of Administrative staff	22,000	91,845	12,116	130,000	100,443
Travel expenses of Advisory staff	93,000	113,075	54,484	319,000	237,680

2006-07	BELB £	NEELB £	SEELB £	SELB £	WELB £
Refurbishment of Offices	33,000	-	-	28,000	148,334
Travel expenses of Administrative staff	32,000	108,027	14,670	108,000	103,166
Travel expenses of Advisory staff	86,000	94,888	52,343	303,000	222,845

Review of Public Administration

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of Chief Executives or Chief Officers in (a) Education and Library Boards; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, who are involved in the Review of Public Administration. (AQW 1086/07)

Ms Ruane: Six Chief Executives in total from the areas described are involved in the Review of Public Administration:

- (a) 5 Chief Executives in the Education and Library Boards
 - (1 in each of the 5 Education and Library Boards – Belfast, North-Eastern, Southern, South-Eastern and Western) and
- (b) 1 Chief Executive in the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools

Home to School Transport

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education to explain why a Lithuanian child travelling from her home in Randalstown to Tannaghmore School, Co. Antrim, a distance exceeding four miles, has been refused a bus pass. (AQW 1088/07)

Ms Ruane: The North-Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that it has no record of receiving an application for home to school transport assistance for a Lithuanian child travelling from Randalstown to Tannaghmore School, Co Antrim.

Replacement School at St MacNisius'

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education to provide an update on the proposed refurbishment, extension or new build at St MacNisius' School, Tannaghmore, Co. Antrim. (AQW 1092/07)

Ms Ruane: A scheme for a replacement school at St MacNisius' was stopped in March this year following a review of all previously announced schemes then in planning. It was announced at that time that there were concerns over enrolments, raising the issue of longer term viability. The school has 73 pupils.

Additional Funding for Primary Schools

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of additional funding that will be made available to primary schools, to finance the resources and training required to deliver the new Primary 1 curriculum. (AQW 1098/07)

Ms Ruane: An additional £3m will be allocated to primary schools in 2007/8 to support the introduction of the Foundation Stage in Year 1. Schools will be notified of the amount they will be allocated as soon as possible in new school term.

In addition, across all schools, over 25,000 new laptops will be provided during the 2007/08 school year to support the introduction of the revised curriculum and assessment arrangements.

Teacher Training

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Education what plans he has to ensure that the supply of newly trained teachers is consistent with demand. (AQW 1109/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department determines the number of students to be admitted each year to initial teacher education (ITE) courses. This is achieved by means of the Teacher Demand Model: a statistical exercise which takes account of projected pupil enrolments in the various school sectors, teachers' leaving the profession, pupil teacher ratios, and those not completing ITE courses. The end result provides a projection of teacher vacancies arising in future years and the consequent requirements for intakes into ITE courses needed to satisfy this demand.

In recognition of the impact which demography is having and to ensure that supply is consistent with demand, the number of students admitted to ITE courses has been systematically reduced over the last three years. My Department will continue to monitor the situation closely, giving careful consideration to numbers and subject specialism required in future years.

Primary School Funding

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Education to make a statement on the amount of funding received directly by primary schools. (AQW 1114/07)

Ms Ruane: I am convinced of the benefits of investment in our primary schools which play such an important role in building the foundations for learning and where early intervention has a vital role in preventing or reducing future difficulties. In 2007/08 £416.3m was provided directly to primary school Principals and Boards of Governors under Local Management of Schools arrangements. This included additional direct-to-schools allocations from the Children & Young People Funding Package. In addition to this primary schools also receive funding for classroom assistance under the Making a Good Start initiative.

In the context of the Comprehensive Spending Review, I will be looking very carefully, at how we might ensure that the importance of primary education is properly reflected in our funding arrangements.

Implementation of the Revised Curriculum

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Education if she is considering postponing the implementation of the revised curriculum in primary schools for one year, to enable it to be more appropriately funded and resourced. (AQW 1115/07)

Ms Ruane: The implementation of the revised curriculum will begin as planned from September 2007, to enable pupils to benefit from it.

The Department has provided an additional £9million over 2 years to support the implementation of the curriculum, with the bulk of this money going towards a full programme of training for principals and teachers. It has also provided significant extra resources to the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) to enable it to provide curriculum guidance materials. Some of these materials have already been provided to schools, with more to follow in the next school year. I am also providing an additional £3million in 2007/08 for resources to support the introduction of the Foundation Stage in Year 1.

Pupils Resident in Each Education and Library Board

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils resident in (a) the North Eastern Education and Library Board area; and (b) the South Eastern Education and Library Board area, that have attended schools in the Belfast Education and Library Board area, in each year since 2001.

(AQW 1116/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

Underspend of Resource Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Education to account for the 26.4% (£11.6m) underspend of resource departmental expenditure limits, and the 71.3% (£400,000) underspend of capital departmental expenditure limits, for the 2006/07 children and young people's priority funding package. (AQW 1117/07)

Ms Ruane: Over £100m has been provided for 2006/07 and 2007/08 to reduce social, health and educational differentials and give children from the most disadvantaged backgrounds the best possible start in life. Around £41m is to be spent in 2006/07 with the remaining funding being spent in 2007/08.

The financial outcome on the package will not be known with certainty until the position regarding end of year flexibility has been determined (which is likely to be in August/September). However the latest monitoring round undertaken by the Department estimates an underspend for the 2006/07 financial year of just over £1.5m (5.6% of the overall resources available for 2006/07). This figure is subject to revision.

The package did not contain any capital element, although late in the financial year (February 2007) approval was given to re-classify £400k from Theme 2 Early Years Provision to address the issues of rural access to services in those areas of the North of Ireland where it would be difficult to progress expansion plans in the absence of capital spend. Delays associated with the capital process (e.g. planning permission etc.) lead to difficulties in this allocation being spent in the 2006/07 financial year. Progress on expenditure is now being made in the 2007/08 financial year.

Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education what actions were taken by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment in response to a letter, dated 7 November 2005, from her department's Curriculum and Post-Primary Division, requesting that 'Ulster-Scots cultural heritage is reflected as appropriate when CCEA is preparing exemplars or guidance materials for schools'.

(AQW 1119/07)

Ms Ruane: Since November 2005 CCEA has been working with the Ulster-Scots Agency and Stranmillis College's Ulster-Scots curriculum development unit to develop online resources for primary schools, mapped to the revised curriculum, which aim to promote the language, culture and history of Ulster-Scots. These materials will be published once they have been reviewed and approved by the Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group.

CCEA is working to provide further guidance materials to support the introduction of the revised curriculum and in that context will continue to take appropriate opportunity for references to Ulster-Scots heritage.

Classroom Assistants

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to confirm that her departmental guidance states that schools will have one classroom assistant per classroom, even if more than one child in the class has a statement of special needs. (AQW 1132/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has no recommended pupil or classroom ratios that relate to classroom assistants.

The Department's Making a Good Start Initiative provides funding directly to schools to provide a minimum of 10 hrs classroom support for all P1 classes and for P2 classes in schools with the lowest proportion of their pupils achieving the expected level for their age at Key Stage 2 Assessment.

The provision of classroom assistants to pupils with special educational needs is a matter for the Education and Library Boards and I am assured by the Chief Executive Officers of the Boards that they do not have a specific policy relating to one classroom assistant per class.

Any decision on the provision of classroom assistance is based on an informed assessment of the child's special educational needs, taking account of the circumstances both of the individual child and the environment in which the child is to be found.

Pupils Attendance

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils resident in the Belfast Education and Library Board area who have attended schools in (a) the North Eastern Education and Library Board area; and (b) the South Eastern Education and Library Board area, in each year since 2001. (AQW 1134/07)

Statutory Assessment of Children

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the average number of months taken for an Education and Library Board to complete the assessment process for a child with autism or special needs. (AQW 1140/07)

Ms Ruane: The Chief Executive Officers of the Education and Library Boards inform me that separate figures for the various categories of special education needs are not maintained. However, the average time taken to complete a statutory assessment of a child with special education needs and issue a Statement, in the last year for which figures are available, that is 2005/06, is as follows.

Belfast Education and Library Board	6 months
North Eastern Education and Library Board	5.75 months
Western Education and Library Board	7.60 months
Southern Education and Library Board	10.04 months
South Eastern Education and Library Board	7.20 months

Expenditure

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the annual expenditure of each Education and Library Board; and to provide information on how this expenditure is broken down. (AQW 1141/07)

Ms Ruane: I have been advised that expenditure in relation to the budgets provided by each funding department is as detailed in the table below. Expenditure has been reported against each of the main budgets classifications.

Promoting Inclusiveness

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education what steps she is taking to promote inclusiveness, with specific reference to her department's use of terminology in relation to place names. (AQW 1144/07)

Ms Ruane: I have indicated my own preference in relation to language in my speeches and correspondence.

Integrated Education

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Education what assessment her department is making with regard to increased demand for integrated education across Northern Ireland in (a) primary schools; and (b) secondary schools. (AQW 1148/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has a duty to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education and also a duty to ensure that parental choice is balanced against the provision of efficient instruction and training, and avoidance of unreasonable public expenditure. Proposals to expand integrated school provision are the subject of a formal development proposal consultation process. All proposals are considered on their individual merits.

Over the past five years four new grant maintained integrated primary schools have opened and two more are planned to open in September 2007. Four primary schools transformed to integrated status and a further two are due to transform in September. Approval was also given for one integrated primary school to increase its enrolment. Over the same period in the secondary sector, two new grant-maintained integrated schools have opened; one school will transform to integrated status in September; and approval was given for two schools to increase their enrolments.

Special Education

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to outline the information given to parents of children with special needs regarding the options available to them when considering the most appropriate type of school for their child; and, specifically, to state whether the information issued relates only to grant-maintained schools, and those funded by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools. (AQW 1150/07)

Ms Ruane: The responsibility for providing information to the parents of children with special educational needs lies with the Education and Library Boards. The range of options discussed will vary according to the individual needs of the child.

Education and Library Boards have a statutory responsibility to make special educational needs provision in schools within the grant-aided sector. Where a Board is of the opinion that they cannot meet a child's special educational needs within the grant-aided sector then the special education legislation provides a route to enable them to make the provision other than in the grant-aided sector.

A Board cannot make arrangements for special educational provision other than in a grant-aided school in the north of Ireland unless it is satisfied that the interests of the child require such arrangements to be made and those arrangements are compatible with the efficient use of resources. Where a Board proposes to make provision in this way it will issue relevant information to the parents.

DE Spend on Consultancy Service

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's projected spend on consultancy services, in the 2007/2008 financial year. (AQW 1175/07)

Ms Ruane: It is anticipated that the department's projected spend on consultancy services in the 2007/08 financial year will amount to £2.053m, of which:

- £1.607m relates to management consultancy;
- £135k relates to construction related consultancy;
- £14k relates to PPP related consultancy;

- £222k relates to Information Technology related consultancy;
- £35k relates to legal consultancy; and
- £40k relates to Training related consultancy.

Independent Conductive Education School

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to outline the steps taken by Education and Library Boards to make parents of autistic children aware that there is an Independent Conductive Education School in Dungannon. (AQW 1195/07)

Ms Ruane: The Buddy Bear School, which is an independent conductive education school, opened in Dungannon in 1993 to provide for children with cerebral palsy.

The Buddy Bear School has not been established to meet the needs of children with Autism, therefore the Education and Library Boards do not routinely advise parents of children with Autism about the school.

Special Educational Needs

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to outline the action taken by Education and Library Boards regarding the provision of information to parents on methods, schools or units specialising in teaching children with autism, cerebral palsy, and behaviour-related problems. (AQW 1196/07)

Ms Ruane: Education and Library Boards use a number of means to provide parents with information on specialist provision that could be appropriate to meet the needs of their particular child, such as lists of schools in their areas which are available in booklet form or on websites. In addition when a Board issues a proposed Statement of Special Educational Needs it will provide parents with details of educational provision within the area to enable parents to make a choice. Parents are also encouraged to visit schools or obtain a school prospectus to obtain more detail.

In addition each of the Education and Library Boards has established an Advice and Information Service, which provides parents with advice in relation to Boards services and special education provision.

Since 2005, the five Boards have worked collaboratively to develop a Special Educational Needs website that provides information relating to special education and since June 2007 this can be accessed in a range of languages.

Out-of-Court Settlements

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of out-of-court settlements for each Education and Library Board over the past two years; and the costs incurred in relation to legal fees and compensation, on a case-by-case basis. (AQW 1198/07)

Ms Ruane: The information detailed in the table below has been provided by each Education and Library Board:

Pupil Suspensions

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education how many pupils have been suspended from (a) primary schools; (b) post primary schools; and (c) special needs schools, broken down by Education and Library Board area, for each of the last five years.
(AQW 1199/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is shown in the following tables:

(a) The number of pupils suspended from primary schools in each Education and Library Board.

School Year	BELB	WELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	Total
2000/01	70	29	88	29	12	228

2003/04	54	30	29	53	0	166
2004/05	41	33	26	42	0	142

Key: # denotes figure has been suppressed to prevent possible identification of individual pupils

* denotes less than five pupils

Note: While the information from the 2002/03 school year onwards is regarded as accurate, the information for the school years prior to that is regarded only as an indicator of the position.

Suspension statistics broken down by school were first collected in the 2002/03 school year. Separate figures for suspensions from special schools are, therefore, not available for previous years.

Statistics for 2005/06 school year are currently being analysed and will be placed on the DE website when this has been completed.

Support for Suspended Pupils

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail, for each of the last five years, expenditure on support services for the education of suspended pupils, broken down by Education and Library Board area. (AQW 1216/07)

Ms Ruane: Grant-aided schools are responsible for the education of all pupils on their registers, including those who have been suspended.

Each Education and Library Board provides support services to schools in their area, including support for suspended pupils. There are, however, no systems for tracking separately any costs associated with support provided specifically for pupils on suspension.

Pupil Expulsions

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail, broken down by Education and Library Board, the number of (a) primary school; (b) post-primary school; and (c) special needs school pupils that have been expelled, in each year for the last five years. (AQW 1217/07)

Ms Ruane: The following tables show:

(a) The total number of pupils expelled from primary schools:

School Year	Total*
2001/02	0
2002/03	3
2003/04	2
2004/05	2

* due to the small number of pupils expelled, a breakdown by Education and Library Board is not published.

(b) The number of pupils expelled from post-primary schools in each Education and Library Board.

School Year	BELB	WELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	Total
2000/01	5	19	29	11	14	78

2003/04	6	10	15	12	26	69
2004/05	6	11	26	9	9	61

The Department does not collect information in the format requested to provide details of expulsions from special schools separately.

Expulsion statistics for the 2005/06 school year are currently being analysed and will be placed on the DE website when this has been completed.

Disruptive Pupils

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the consideration given by the Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools to the family group conferencing and restorative justice approaches, in order to assist in dealing with disruptive pupils. (AQW 1218/07)

Ms Ruane: The Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools support the appropriate use of family group conferencing and restorative justice approaches to assist in the resolution of educational issues. Relevant Boards' staff have been trained in the family group conferencing process and use this with pupils, parents and school personnel to tackle persistent non-attendance, bullying and anti-social behaviour.

Controlled Primary Schools

Mr Gregory Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail the level of funding per pupil, for controlled primary schools in each Education and Library Board area, in (a) 2004/2005; (b) 2005/2006; and (c) 2006/2007. (AQW 1261/07)

Ms Ruane: Figures shown in the table below refer to the average funding per pupil, within the delegated school budgets made available under the Local Management of Schools (LMS) funding arrangements, for controlled primary schools in each of the Education & Library Board (ELB) areas for the years in question. Figures exclude capital funding, other initiative funding made available outside of delegated funding arrangements, and services and support provided by Education & Library Boards on behalf of all schools in their area.

- 1 Includes nursery class pupils in primary schools
- 2 Includes controlled integrated primary schools
- 3 In 2004/05 funding was distributed under the separate LMS Schemes operated by each ELB and includes the funding allocated directly to schools under the "Chancellor's Budget Addition". From April 2005 all schools have been funded under Common Funding arrangements, with all schools funded according to their relative need, and in a way that aims to mitigate the effects of social disadvantage. Funding distributed in 2005/06 and 2006/07 included the transitional funding arrangements, designed to support schools and smooth budgetary changes in moving all schools to the single funding formula.
- 4 Funding distributed in 2006/07 includes the funding allocated directly to schools from the Children & Young People Funding Package.

Controlled Secondary Schools

Mr Gregory Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail the level of funding per pupil, for controlled secondary schools in each Education and Library Board area, in (a) 2004/2005; (b) 2005/2006; and (c) 2006/2007. (AQW 1263/07)

Ms Ruane: Figures shown in the table below refer to the average funding per pupil, within the delegated school budgets made available under the Local Management of Schools (LMS) funding arrangements, for controlled post-primary schools in each of the Education & Library Board (ELB) areas for the years in question. Figures exclude capital funding, other initiative funding made available outside of delegated funding arrangements, and services and support provided by Education & Library Boards on behalf of all schools in their area.

St Joseph's Primary School, Co Tyrone

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister of Education at what stage are the plans for a new build for St. Joseph's Primary School at 7 Lurgylea Road, Galbally, Co. Tyrone. (AQW 1272/07)

Ms Ruane: A capital scheme for St Joseph's Primary School is in the very early stages of planning. Officials from the Department and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) visited the school in March 2006 to assess the school's accommodation needs. While it was recognised that the school suffered from sub-standard accommodation, the Department advised that a capital scheme for the school's future provision would have to be considered within the context of area-based planning. Further consideration of this scheme will be taken forward with the CCMS in the coming months.

Teaching of Music

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of funding allocated specifically to the teaching of music, broken down by Education and Library Board; and to explain the reasons for the disparities in such funding. (AQW 1294/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not allocate funding specifically to the teaching of music. Schools are allocated funding under a Common Funding Formula which has been developed to cover, among other key areas, support for schools in delivering the curriculum, including the teaching of music. Under Local Management of Schools arrangements, each school receives a delegated budget, calculated in accordance with the Formula, and it is then for the Principal and the Board of Governors to manage these funds appropriately in accordance with their priorities and the needs of all pupils enrolled at the school.

All Education and Library Boards provide a Music Service from within their overall funding allocations and it is a matter for each Board to determine the allocation of funds to each service which they provide.

Music Lessons in Schools

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to explain the reasons why children taking music lessons in schools in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area are required to pay for their musical instruments, and also to pay towards additional lessons needed for grading. (AQW 1295/07)

Ms Ruane: Schools are required to teach music as part of the curriculum but they also have access to their Board's music service, which provides additional tuition to help nurture the talent of those young people with a gift or passion for a particular instrument. If a young person does not have an instrument of their own, their parents may hire one from the SEELB's Music Service and this is common practice across all Boards. The SEELB has to levy a charge for instrument hire as the income this generates is an important part of the overall funding arrangements that enables the Board to provide this service. The SEELB's hire charge has remained at £35 since 2005/06.

The SEELB charges schools for the lessons it provides in that school, but it is for schools to determine how much of the charge to pass on to parents. The lessons provided by the Music Service include preparation for graded examinations as an integral part of the lesson, i.e. there is no additional charge.

East West Co-operation

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education, further to her response to AQW 1121/07, to detail what action she plans to take to develop and expand education as an area of east-west co-operation. (AQW 1326/07)

Ms Ruane: I attended the British Irish Council on 16 July 2007 and this was a very useful meeting. I met my counterparts from England, Scotland, Wales, Guernsey, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands.

I have also met with Alex Salmond during his visit to the North of Ireland and discussed with him a future meeting with the Minister of Education in the Scottish Executive and with officials in the British Council to take this forward.

Dean Maguire College, Carrickmore

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Education to detail the current status of the new build development proposal for the Dean Maguire College, Carrickmore; and to outline the history of this proposal, including her department's interest in potential sites for the new build. (AQW 1338/07)

Ms Ruane: Following a review of previously announced capital schemes in planning conducted earlier this year, the project for Dean Maguire College, Carrickmore was put on hold pending further examination of the proposed scheme with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS). The key issues for consideration are the potential impact of enrolment trends for the scheme and the provision needed in the area. The Department expects to be able to provide confirmation of the position shortly.

The planning of a major capital scheme for Dean Maguire College was approved by the Department in November 2002. An economic appraisal was completed in 2004 which identified site options and recommended the provision of a new purpose built school on a new site. The scheme for the school was included in the capital programme announced in March 2006. The economic appraisal had identified the former PSNI site in Carrickmore as a possible site for the proposed new school.

I understand that this site is no longer available and if it is considered that the capital scheme should proceed, then consideration will be given to the options for a suitable site.

Managing Grant-Aided Schools

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Education, further to her answer to AQW 340/07, to detail what (a) daily input to the school; (b) influence over the appointment of school governors; and (c) routine inspection of the delivery of the curriculum in the classroom, her department has in relation to an independent school that has made a successful application for grant-aided status. (AQW 1352/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department has a general strategic aim to promote the value of education and create a desire for learning. However, the day to day running of a school is an operational matter for a school Board of Governors in liaison with the School Principal and teaching staff. Among their responsibilities are the admission of pupils, the delivery of the curriculum, staffing matters and the management of school budgets.

My Department is responsible for the appointment of Departmental governors to Boards of Governors. Other appointments to Boards are made by a number of other bodies including Education & Library Boards, school trustees and representatives of transferors.

With regard to inspections all grant-aided schools are subject to inspection in the normal way, which would include an evaluation of the curriculum on offer.

Schools Selection System

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Education, further to her answer to AQW 338/07, if, as part of her proposals, it is her intention to give (a) greater; (b) equal; or (c) less weight to public opinion, than her predecessor under devolution. (AQW 1353/07)

Ms Ruane: I do not think it is helpful or possible for me to compare the level of consideration I will give to public opinion to that of previous Ministers. As I have made clear, I am listening to the full range of views on the issue of the new arrangements for transfer from primary to post-primary education, and will be mindful of the strength of arguments put forward and any equality considerations. I will ensure that the needs of the child will be at the heart of any decision taken. We are committed to a consultation on draft regulations for future school admissions criteria.

Critical Areas of Education

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking to ensure that critical areas of education, such as special needs, are not denied funding due to expenditure on other areas, with reference to the £11,721,530 spent on the Irish language and Irish-medium teaching in 2006/07. (AQW 1354/07)

Ms Ruane: In 2006-07 current expenditure on education services amounted to £1,584.3 million, and capital investment totalled £128.0 million. This included some £1 billion in relation to school delegated budgets, as well as significant provision for education initiatives, education reforms and other important areas of provision such as early years and special educational needs and inclusion.

The 1998 Education Order places a statutory duty on the Department of Education to encourage and facilitate the development of Irish-medium education. The Department of Education funds Irish-medium schools that meet the specified criteria. The intake and enrolment criteria for Irish-medium schools are the same as for all schools.

Budgets for Irish-medium and other schools are determined under a single Common Funding Formula according to their relative need and in a way that helps mitigate the effects of social disadvantage. The implementation of Common Funding in 2005 ensures that schools in all areas receive similar levels of delegated funding and greater consistency in their access to centre services provided by Education and Library Boards.

In the 2007 Priorities and Budget process, which is currently under way, I am committed to ensuring that the funding available to the education service takes account of future needs.

Breakfast and Homework Clubs

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of money available to primary and secondary schools to promote (a) breakfast clubs; and (b) homework clubs, in the last 3 years. (AQW 1356/07)

Ms Ruane: My Department does not hold the information requested.

Almost 500 (40%) of our schools are being funded as Extended Schools under The Children and Young People Funding Package to support wide ranging activities, including breakfast clubs and homework clubs, based on each schools' particular circumstances. £10m has been made available in each of the 2006/07 and 2007/08 financial years aimed at those schools operating in the most disadvantaged areas. Over 300 primary and almost 70 post primary schools have been allocated approximately £7m and £2m respectively. Many other schools also offer these services on a voluntary basis.

Extended Schools will provide to the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) a short report including statistics on participation and activities undertaken during the first year of the programme and, in turn, ELBs will provide a summary report to DE later this year. However, in order to avoid unnecessary bureaucratic burden on school principals, individual costings for each activity has not been requested in the end-of-year report.

Standardising School Holidays

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to standardise school holidays.
(AQW 1364/07)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to make any changes to the current arrangements for school holidays. Harmonisation of school holidays does take place as far as is possible with dates for each academic year agreed to take account of school transport arrangements. Schools are informed in writing of the non-operational transport dates from their respective Education and Library Board. However, schools have discretion to close at varying times during the year for 5 optional days, 5 staff training and development days (known as Baker Days) and 5 School Improvement Days. This inevitably means that there will be some variation between schools on holiday periods.

Teacher Employment

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers employed in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 1366/07)

Ms Ruane: The number of teachers employed in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area, in each of the last three years is detailed in the attached table. The figures do not include Voluntary Grammar Schools or FE Colleges.

Sector	April 2005	April 2006	April 2007
Controlled	1978	1897	1834
Maintained	895	878	838
Grant Maintained Integrated	173	179	182
Special	207	195	187
Total	3253	3149	3041

School Cleaners' Salaries

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education if she will confirm that the South Eastern

Education and Library Board has not updated school cleaners' salaries, in line with the other Education and Library Boards; and what steps she will take to address this issue.
(AQW 1375/07)

Ms Ruane: School cleaners are employed by the local Education and Library Boards and as such their terms and conditions of employment are primarily a matter for the relevant Board. I am advised that the results of the five Boards' job evaluation exercise for cleaners is currently subject to appeal. However Boards decided to move the cleaners on to the new pay rates determined by the evaluation, pending the outcome of the appeal. The South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) has advised me that its school cleaners will transfer to the new pay rates in August 2007.

School Closures

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools that are scheduled to close in the current financial year.
(AQW 1384/07)

Ms Ruane: Nine primary schools and two post-primary schools are due to close at 31 August 2007. In addition, a total of eight primary schools and three special schools are due to amalgamate to form four new primary schools and one new special school respectively at 1 September 2007. One primary school is to close at 31 August 2007 as the first phase of an amalgamation involving two other primary schools and one nursery school will close at 31 August 2007 and be re-established as a nursery unit at a primary school.

The Bain Report

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the savings that have been made as a result of the implementation of Professor Sir George Bain's Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education.
(AQW 1385/07)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Report sets out 61 recommendations covering funding of education, strategic planning of the schools estate, and sharing and collaboration. Some of the recommendations would require further detailed work and consultation and others should be progressed as part of the Department's and education authorities' existing responsibilities. I am currently considering the details of the Bain report and the implications of each of the recommendations before decisions on implementation and it is too early at this stage to estimate costs and savings from implementation.

School Closures

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools that have been closed to date, as a result of the implementation of Professor Sir George Bain's Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education. (AQW 1386/07)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Report was published on 4 December 2006. Since then development proposals have been approved to close eight primary schools and two post-primary schools, however the respective school authorities had commenced work on each of these proposals well in advance of the publication of the report.

The Bain Report

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the expenditure of (a) each Education and Library Board; and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, in relation to the implementation of Professor Sir George Bain's Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education. (AQW 1387/07)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Report sets out 61 recommendations covering funding of education, strategic planning of the schools estate, and sharing and collaboration. Some of the recommendations would require further detailed work and consultation and others should be progressed as part of the Department's and education authorities' existing responsibilities. I am currently considering the details of the Bain report and the implications of each of the recommendations before decisions on implementation and it is too early at this stage to estimate costs and savings from implementation.

Development of Educational Village at Lisanelly, Omagh

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) her department's involvement in plans to develop an educational village concept at the Lisanelly site in Omagh; (b) what discussions her department has had with the Ministry of Defence regarding the disposal of the Lisanelly site; and (c) the timetable for taking this project forward. (AQW 1388/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has been in contact with relevant managing authorities of a number of schools in the Omagh area to seek their views on the possible development of part of the Lisanelly site for educational use. The Department is also liaising with the Department for Social Development which, with its responsibilities for regeneration, has been in discussion with the Ministry of Defence on the possible acquisition of the site on the behalf of the administration. The Ministry of Defence wishes to dispose of the site by spring of next year and requires confirmation shortly from the administration as to whether it wishes to purchase this site. Subject to a decision to purchase the site, the planning for its development, including an educational campus, would commence shortly thereafter.

Educational Psychology Services

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Education to detail whether pupils attending grant-aided primary schools and post-primary schools in Co. Tyrone are given equal access to the full range of educational psychology services, including those pupils who are resident in Co. Donegal. (AQW 1389/07)

Ms Ruane: The five Education and Library Boards have a reciprocal arrangement as regards educational psychology services for pupils who live in one Board area but are educated in another Board area. Children, even if they reside in another Board area, who are at Stage 3 of the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs can be assessed for the purposes of Stage 3 in the school in which they are enrolled by the educational psychology service of the Board in which the school is situated. However, those who are referred for assessment at Stage 4 of the Code of Practice must be assessed by an educational psychologist from the Board in which they reside, as it is that Board which is responsible for issuing and maintaining any statement of special educational needs.

This service is not available to pupils who live in Co Donegal, but attend schools in Co Tyrone. Currently it is advised that these children should access assessments through the National Educational Psychological Service.

Integrated Primary Schools

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of integrated primary schools in each constituency in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1390/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

Constituency	Number of integrated Schools in 2006/07
Belfast East	1
Belfast North	1
Belfast South	2
Belfast West	0

Integrated Primary Schools

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of applicants for each integrated primary school, in each constituency in Northern Ireland, for the year 2007/2008. (AQW 1391/07)

Ms Ruane: For each constituency in the North of Ireland, the number of applicants for each integrated primary school and the number of applicants not admitted are as follows:

Constituency	Integrated Primary School	Total Applications	Those Not Admitted
Belfast North	Hazelwood	47	All admitted
Belfast South	Cranmore	24	All admitted

Integrated Primary Schools

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of applicants that failed to gain a place in an integrated primary school, in each of the constituencies in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1392/07)

Ms Ruane: For each constituency in the North of Ireland, the number of applicants for each integrated primary school and the number of applicants not admitted are as follows:

Constituency	Integrated Primary School	Total Applications	Those Not Admitted
Belfast North	Hazelwood	47	All admitted
Belfast South	Cranmore	24	All admitted

Integrated School Closures and Mergers

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the integrated primary schools in Northern Ireland currently facing closure or merger. (AQW 1393/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department is not currently aware of any integrated primary schools that are due to close or merge. Groomsport Primary School, which had been given approval to acquire controlled integrated status from September 2004, will close at 31 August 2007. During that period the school did not achieve the necessary community balance in intakes for integrated status.

Number of Classroom Assistants

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of classroom assistants employed in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1395/07)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has provided the following information on the number of classroom assistants employed by the Board during the last three school years.

School Year	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Number of Classroom Assistants	1604	1584	1460

St Patrick's Secondary School and St Mary's Primary School, Banbridge

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of Education to outline the capital investment planned for St Patrick's Secondary School and St Mary's Primary School in Banbridge; and to give a timescale for the commencement of these works. (AQW 1412/07)

Ms Ruane: Capital schemes for the construction of replacement school buildings for St Patrick's College and for St Mary's PS in Banbridge were announced in March 2006. Planning of both projects is underway and it is estimated that the dates for construction work to start on site for St Patrick's and St Mary's are autumn 2008 and early 2009 respectively.

Non-Domiciled Pupils

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children resident in Northern Ireland, currently attending schools in the Republic of Ireland, in the (a) primary; and (b) post-primary sectors, broken down by Education and Library Board area.

(AQW 1418/07)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is not available, as the school census only collects information from schools in the North of Ireland.

Non-Domiciled Pupils

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children resident in the Republic of Ireland who are currently attending schools in Northern Ireland, in the (a) primary; and (b) post-primary sectors, broken down by Education and Library Board area.

(AQW 1419/07)

Ms Ruane: Information on the number of children resident in the South of Ireland but attending schools in the North of Ireland is not collected. However, the number of children attending schools in the North of Ireland who are not domiciled here is as follows:

NON-DOMICILED PUPILS ATTENDING SCHOOLS IN THE NORTH OF IRELAND 2006/07

Education and Library Board	Primary	Post Primary
Belfast	3	134
Western	116	102
North Eastern	0	0
South Eastern	7	1
Southern	9	83
Total	135	320

Note:

- Figures include children normally resident in the South of Ireland and Borders from outside the North of Ireland.

Cross - Border Teacher Mobility

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education what progress has been made in addressing the issues associated with cross-border teacher mobility, in relation to the transfer of pensions and other associated issues.

(AQW 1420/07)

Ms Ruane: A study on Obstacles to Mobility commissioned by the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) identified the transfer of pensions in both the public and private sectors as an important mobility issue. Since transferability has implications for all public service pension schemes, it was decided to consider the transfer of teachers' pensions along with the wider pensions issues arising from the Study. Work on this is ongoing.

A Joint Working Group established by the NSMC in the Education Area for Cooperation has also been examining obstacles to teacher mobility in relation to teacher qualifications. Issues in relation to proficiency in the Irish language for teachers wishing to move south have been largely addressed. The requirement for teachers who move south to study for and undertake a written examination on the History and Structure of the Irish Education System has been reviewed by the Registration Council in the South of Ireland and the way forward will be determined at the next meeting of the Group.

The General Teaching Councils for Scotland, England, Wales, North of Ireland, and the South of Ireland subscribe to the general principle that teaching qualifications throughout these islands should be mutually recognised. They are actively considering the issue in the context of freedom of movement throughout Europe.

Non-Domiciled Pupils

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers resident in Northern Ireland, who are currently employed in schools in the Republic of Ireland, in the (a) primary; and (b) post-primary sectors, broken down by Education and Library Board area.

(AQW 1421/07)

Ms Ruane: The information is not collected by the Department and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Northern Ireland Teachers Resident in the South of Ireland

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers resident in the Republic of Ireland, currently teaching in schools in Northern Ireland, in the (a) primary; and (b) post-primary sectors, broken down by Education and Library Board area.

(AQW 1422/07)

Ms Ruane: Details of the number of teachers (permanent/temporary) with an address in the South of Ireland currently teaching in schools in the North of Ireland are shown in the tables below:

PERMANENT TEACHERS

	BELB	WELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB
Primary	1	37	0	0	11

Canteen Facilities at Bunscoil an Traonaigh

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister of Education what progress has been made regarding the provision of canteen facilities at Bunscoil an Traonaigh, for the new school term in September 2007. (AQW 1430/07)

Ms Ruane: The provision of school meals accommodation is the responsibility of the Western Education and Library Board. A site meeting involving the Board and representatives of the Board of Governors of the school will take place on the 24th July to discuss the location of the meals accommodation. An application for planning permission will then be required to be submitted to the Planning Service. It is hoped that the schools meals accommodation will be provided as quickly as possible.

'Area-Based Planning Approach' for Schools

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria that have been developed by her department, on an 'area-based planning approach' for future building projects. (AQW 1440/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education is working on the area-based planning approach and will liaise with the education sector in developing the work. Central to this approach will be a consideration of the anticipated educational needs of an area, and the longer term viability of schools. A draft sustainable schools policy proposing criteria and indicators was the subject of consultation earlier this year and is now being analysed. Until such time as area plans are in place, the Department would expect to see such issues addressed by the education authorities in project appraisals.

School Building Projects

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) all outstanding future new build school projects; and (b) which of these projects have experienced delays in implementation, due to the development of an 'area-based planning approach'. (AQW 1441/07)

Ms Ruane: There are 86 approved school building projects which are proceeding, together with another 6 projects originally approved but which have been put on hold pending further examination of, among other things, their consistency with an area-based planning approach. A list of all these projects is attached.

In addition, a number of feasibility studies and draft economic appraisals for potential capital schemes which have not yet been approved and are in the early stages of development, are being reviewed by relevant school authorities in the context of area based planning.

Education and Skills Authority

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of money that will be saved at senior management level, through the creation of the Education and Skills Authority. (AQW 1449/07)

Ms Ruane: A key aim in creating the new Education and Skills Authority is to release resources from back office functions for redeployment to the front line, through slimmer management structures throughout the organisation and more efficient service delivery arrangements.

Work is continuing on the design of the new ESA taking account of comments received from the legacy education organisations and trade unions. It is therefore not possible, at this stage, to detail the amount of money that will be saved at senior and other management levels.

Education and Skills Authority

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the salaries that will be received by the respective directors of the new Education and Skills Authority. (AQW 1450/07)

Ms Ruane: Work on the organisational design of the Education and Skills Authority is ongoing and the number of Director posts and their associated salaries has not yet been determined.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Teacher Training

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to address the duplication of resources in relation to teacher training. (AQW 1111/07)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): My Department is responsible for the funding and administration of initial teacher education.

The Department of Education determines intakes to initial teacher education courses in the four locally based higher education institutions, and the Open University in Ireland, based on their Teacher Demand Model. My Department allocates funding to the initial teacher education (ITE) providers, based on this model which takes account of projected pupil enrolments in the various Northern Ireland school sectors, teacher wastage rates, pupil teacher ratios and wastage rates from the ITE courses.

The issue of duplication is one of several I shall be examining jointly with my colleague, the Minister of Education, in the ongoing Review of Teacher Education.

Lip-Reading Classes

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of lip reading classes in Further and Higher Education Colleges that have been closed in the last two years; and to give the reasons for such closures. (AQW 1171/07)

Sir Reg Empey: North West Institute of Further and Higher Education is the only FE College that provides a course in lip reading. No lip reading classes in FE Colleges have been closed in the last two years.

South Eastern Regional Council

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the procedure through which the present Director Designate of the South Eastern Regional College was appointed; and to detail (a) the date of the advertisement; (b) the date of interview; (c) and the number of candidates who applied for this post. (AQW 1192/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Under the requirements of the 1997 FE Order, in the circumstance of college mergers, the recruitment process for the new college Director posts must, in the first instance, be internal and be restricted to the existing Directors of the colleges that are merging. Only in cases where there are no internal applicants, or if such applicants are found to be unsuitable, can an external process be conducted.

The appointment of a college Director is the responsibility of the college's Governing Body. As the appointment of the Directors designate for the new FE colleges was in advance of the appointment of the new colleges' governing bodies, Temporary Executive Committees (TECs), comprised of existing governors from the colleges that are merging, were formed to oversee a range of merger related activities. The TECs also undertook the task of identifying Directors designate for the new colleges. The Director designate appointments will be ratified formally by the new in-coming governing bodies in August 2007.

- The Temporary Executive Committee of the South Eastern Regional College invited, through correspondence on 18 September 2006, the Directors of the three merging colleges to express an interest in, and make application for, the Director designate post in the new college.
- The interviews took place on 24 October 2006.
- Two candidates applied for the post.

Employment-Led Apprenticeships

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how the experience and uptake patterns of the Electrical Training Trust have informed his department's recent approach to contracting for other employment-led apprenticeships. (AQW 1208/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Electrical Training Trust (ETT) has an annual intake in excess of 300 apprentices and achieves success rates in excess of 80% for completion of the MA framework. A key element of this model training approach is the strong employer support given throughout the industry to ETT.

From this experience it was decided that where a Level 3 Apprenticeship training provider demonstrated in their tender for Traing for Success that an all NI approach could deliver high quality training and levels of performance the Department would award a single contract as a best option.

Modern Apprenticeships in the North West

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give a timescale for publication of the consultants' report on the impact of the uptake of electrical installation modern apprenticeships in the north west, since the contract was awarded to the Electrical Training Trust. (AQW 1209/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department has received the first draft of the consultants report and will make its findings known at the end of August 2007.

Employment-Led Apprenticeships

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what measures are planned to ensure that the concentration on employment-led apprenticeships does not compound the skills shortage in districts with a weaker employment base.

(AQW 1210/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department's approach to skills training, while wishing to encourage training in priority skill areas, does not favour any geographical area. Under the recent contracting process for the delivery of Training for Success, the Department sought tenders for all professional and technical frameworks across all 26 contract management areas.

A range of options is open to participants under Training for Success that offers options that meets the needs of the individual and the local economy, either for those employed or not in employment.

Sign Language Courses

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students that have enrolled on sign language courses, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 1214/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Number of enrolments on sign language courses in the Northern Ireland Higher and Further Education sectors from 2003/04 to 2005/06.

Academic Year	Number of Enrolments
2003/04	975
2004/05	1,161
2005/06	1,023

Source: Further Education Statistical Record; Higher Education Statistical Agency.

Note: The data above relates to enrolments as opposed to a student headcount and all levels of provision are included.

Sign Language Courses

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of sign language courses that are currently available in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 1215/07)

Sir Reg Empey: There are currently 36 sign language courses being offered in Northern Ireland for the 2007/08 academic year. Details of the courses are listed below:

College	Course	No of Courses
Northern Regional College	Intro to BSL Level 1	1
	BSL Level 1	3
	BSL Level 2	2
South West College	BSL Level 1	2
North West Regional College	BSL Level 1	5

Sign Language Courses

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of further education colleges that currently offer interpretive courses for sign language; and what is the cost of these courses.

(AQW 1234/07)

Sir Reg Empey: There are currently no further education colleges in Northern Ireland that offer Level 4 interpretive courses for sign language. However, Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education (BIFHE) is currently working on costed proposals for Level 4 training provision which will shortly be submitted to my Department for consideration.

Sign Language Courses

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of (a) universities; and (b) further education colleges that currently offer sign language courses; what is the cost of enrolling on each of these courses; and what is the cost of running each of these courses. (AQW 1235/07)

Sir Reg Empey: There are no universities in Northern Ireland that currently offer sign language courses. Details of sign language courses currently on offer in FE Colleges for the 2007/08 academic year are listed below. Each of these colleges will comprise a merger of a number of individual colleges. Hence the enrolment and running costs shown are average figures.

College	Course	No of Courses	*Enrolment Cost (per year)	Running Cost (per year)
Northern Regional College	Intro to BSL Level 1	1	£50	£360
	BSL Level 1	3	£100	£2,100
	BSL Level 2	2	£150	£3,200
South West College	BSL Level 1	2	£90	£1,900

DEL Special Bonus Scheme

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of non-pensionable bonuses that were paid to staff in his department in each of the last three years; and what steps he has taken to ensure that such bonuses are not used as a cheaper alternative to an appropriate salary increase. (AQW 1249/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) introduced a Special Bonus Scheme in February 2006.

The scheme is designed to reward exceptional performance in particularly demanding tasks or difficult situations, which fall outside normal duties, and are unable to be recognised and rewarded within the performance appraisal system.

A total of 17 nominations were approved for payment, during the period 1/4/06 to 31/3/07, resulting in awards to 25 staff totalling £10,025.

The awards ranged from £50 to £900.

A further 5 nominations have been approved for payment since 1/4/07, resulting in awards to 21 staff totalling £4400.

DEL Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by his department in each of the last two years; and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys. (AQW 1258/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department has not carried out any staff surveys in the last two years.

Religious Breakdown of Undergraduates at University of Ulster

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the percentage of undergraduate students at the University of Ulster that are (a) members of the Protestant community; and (b) members of the Roman Catholic community.

(AQW 1312/07)

Sir Reg Empey:

- In 2005/06, of those who provided religion information, 38.6% of undergraduate enrolments at the University of Ulster were from the Protestant community; and
- in the same year, of those who provided religion information, 59.6% of undergraduate enrolments at the University of Ulster were from the Roman Catholic community.

Please note that religious affiliation is not a mandatory question and has a high non-response rate. Information on religion was not available for 19.3% of undergraduate enrolments at the University of Ulster in 2005/06.

Religious Breakdown of Undergraduates at Queen's University Belfast

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the percentage of undergraduate students at Queen's University Belfast that are (a) members of the Protestant community; and (b) members of the Roman Catholic community.

(AQW 1313/07)

Sir Reg Empey:

- In 2005/06, of those who provided religion information, 43.3% of undergraduate enrolments at Queen's University Belfast were from the Protestant community; and
- in the same year, of those who provided religion information, 51.8% of undergraduate enrolments at Queen's University Belfast were from the Roman Catholic community.

Please note that religious affiliation is not a mandatory question and has a high non-response rate. Information on religion was not available for 25.7% of undergraduate enrolments at Queen's University Belfast in 2005/06.

Working Beyond Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what facility currently exists for members of staff in his department to work in their current post, beyond the default retirement age. (AQW 1340/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Since 1 October 2006 staff who wish to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

Teaching Grants

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Employment and Learning what is the recurrent teaching grant for (a) Stranmillis University College; and (b) St. Mary's University College. (AQW 1371/07)

Sir Reg Empey: The recurrent teaching grant for the 2007/08 Academic Year for Stranmillis University College is £5,446,199 and for St Mary's University College £5,077,493.

Religious Breakdown of Staff at St Mary's University College

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the religious composition of (a) teaching staff; (b) administrative staff; and (c) ancillary staff at St Mary's University College. (AQW 1372/07)

Sir Reg Empey: St Mary's University College, like all other higher education institutions, is an independent autonomous institution, responsible for its own policies and practices. The College must comply with all fair employment legislation in all matters relating to the recruitment and employment of staff at the College.

Given this autonomous status, my Department does not collect statistics relating to the composition of the workforce at St Mary's University College.

Religious Breakdown of Staff at Stranmillis University College

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the religious composition of (a) teaching staff; (b) administrative staff; and (c) ancillary staff at Stranmillis University College. (AQW 1373/07)

Sir Reg Empey: Stranmillis University College, like all other higher education institutions, is an independent autonomous institution, responsible for its own policies and practices. The College must comply with all fair employment legislation in all matters relating to the recruitment and employment of staff at the College.

Given this autonomous status, my Department does not collect statistics relating to the composition of the workforce at Stranmillis University College.

Research and Development Opportunities

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline his department's efforts to create more research and development opportunities for local university graduates; and to detail whether his department is actively seeking expertise from overseas. (AQW 1423/07)

Sir Reg Empey: In order to increase the number of research and development opportunities for university graduates my Department has bid for funding for additional PhD places. In addition, my Department is taking forward a review of the wider policy and funding of postgraduate places. It also operates a range of funding initiatives/mechanisms that enable the universities to attract experienced graduates from overseas.

University of Ulster Travel Expenditure

Mr Alex Attwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the University of Ulster's total expenditure on (a) international flights taken by university staff; and (b) domestic flights taken by university staff, for the 2005/06 and 2006/07 financial years; and to detail the sources of this expenditure. (AQW 1438/07)

Sir Reg Empey: As autonomous bodies, the universities are responsible for the travel arrangements of their staff on official business; therefore, the Department does not hold this information.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Asbestos Complaints

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail for each of the last three years, (a) the number of complaints relating to asbestos on construction sites received by the Health and Safety Executive; (b) the resultant number that were verified as being valid; (c) the resultant number of written cautions issued; and (d) the resultant number of prosecutions taken. (AQW 1076/07)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): The numbers requested are given in the following table.

Year	(a) Asbestos related complaints	(b) Those verified as valid
05/06	56	24
06/07	58	28
07-date	20	7

(c) HSENI does not issue written cautions as Inspections generally result in a satisfactory outcome. Since 2005 there have been 109 resultant Inspections.

(d) There were no prosecutions completed in the period in question. However 4 cases arising from complaints within the period are awaiting a decision on prosecution.

Prohibition Notices are used in cases where there is a risk of serious personal injury. There have been 6 resultant prohibition notices since 2005.

Energy Issues

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is the current position with regard to the establishment of an all-island single energy market. (AQW 1091/07)

Mr Dodds: Co-operation with the Government of the Irish Republic on energy matters is set in the context of the development of EU internal energy markets and is based on the delivery of mutual long term benefits to consumers in both Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

A key priority is the establishment of a single competitive wholesale electricity market (“the SEM”) which will be underpinned by a Memorandum of Understanding between the two Governments and parallel legislation which has been passed in each jurisdiction. A significant milestone in the development of the new market was achieved with the triggering, on 3 July, of the ‘go active’ phase. This involved a legal obligation being placed on market participants, via licence modifications, to continue their preparations, including trialling of new systems and procedures, in advance of the market going ‘live’ on 1 November. A programme of structural change within the two existing electricity markets is also being implemented, with the aim of addressing dominance and market power in order to assist the creation of a fully competitive single market which will attract new investment in generation.

Other ongoing work includes: the planning by the two transmission system operators of a second North/South electricity interconnector which is expected to be operational by 2012; a joint study of how the all-island electricity grid can accommodate an increased contribution from renewable generation, which is due to be completed in the Autumn.

Tourism Ireland

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the members of the expert group recruited by Tourism Ireland to advise on a review of the branding of the island of Ireland; and (b) the criteria that were used in selecting the members of the group. (AQW 1123/07)

Mr Dodds: The Expert Group appointed by Tourism Ireland consists of local and international business people as well as marketing and brand professionals who are not directly involved in the tourism industry.

The members are David Nichols, Chairman; Professor David Carson; Trevor Ringland; Mark Thompson; John Fanning; Dr. Maureen Gaffney; Ciarán Ó Gaora and Regine Reinhardt.

Members of the expert group were selected on their ability to fulfill the following criteria and also to ensure a balance of interests from outside the tourism industry both within and outside Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic:

- To bring recognised perspective on international brands to the review
- To bring forward recognized perspective on the island of Ireland brand, as viewed from outside the tourism industry in Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.
- To bring forward views on how the diverse culture and heritage on the island of Ireland is reflected in marketing overseas.

Investment in Ards Borough Council

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of potential investor visits to the Ards Borough Council area organised by Invest Northern Ireland, that have resulted in investment. (AQW 1128/07)

Mr Dodds: There have been six potential investor visits to Ards Borough Council area, organised by Invest Northern Ireland since 2002. However none of these visits has resulted in investment.

Investment in Castlereagh District Council

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail which of the six potential investor visits to the Castlereagh District Council area, that were organised by Invest Northern Ireland, resulted in investment.

(AQW 1129/07)

Mr Dodds: There have been six potential investor visits to the Castlereagh District Council area organised by Invest Northern Ireland since 2002. None of these visits resulted in an investment project within this district council area. However, a significant investment project was located by one of these visiting companies in Belfast, within travel to work distance of Castlereagh District Council area.

Down District Council

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail which of the four potential investor visits to the Down District Council area, organised by Invest Northern Ireland, resulted in investment.

(AQW 1130/07)

Mr Dodds: There have been four potential investor visits to Down District Council area, organised by Invest Northern Ireland, since 2002. One of these visits resulted in an investment project within the Down District Council area, promoting 70 jobs and leveraging £2.84m in planned investment.

Another of these visits resulted in investment within the Greater Belfast area

Ballycastle to Campbeltown Ferry

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions he has had with the Scottish and Irish Parliaments regarding funding for, and the future of, the Ballycastle to Campbeltown ferry; and to detail any developments on this issue.

(AQW 1169/07)

Mr Dodds: I have not as yet held discussions relating to funding or the future of a Ballycastle to Campbeltown ferry service. The matter has been raised in recent discussions between the Scottish and Northern Ireland Executive and more recently at the British Irish Council where agreement was reached to examine the case for restoring the ferry service.

Officials have arranged to meet to consider the issue further, following which, the facts will be presented to me for consideration.

Private Sector Employment in East Derry/Londonderry

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he is taking to attract private sector employment to East Derry/Londonderry.

(AQW 1223/07)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI promotes Northern Ireland as a single entity in its drive to attract new inward investment, and its regional office network works closely with local stakeholders to encourage them to develop regional propositions which can help ensure that the offering for their area is maximised to attract visits by potential investors. In addition, Invest NI works to stimulate further investment by existing companies and it encourages and supports the formation of new businesses.

Since it was set up, Invest NI has secured three inward investment projects within the East Londonderry constituency, leveraging total investment of around £19 million, safeguarding almost 790 jobs and promoting a further 24. It has also offered over £24 million assistance towards further investment projects by existing businesses totalling £75 million, in addition to supporting over 860 new business starts. Constituency boundaries do not represent self-contained labour markets and a project assisted in a particular location has the potential to create benefits across a much wider area. Northern Ireland is a relatively small place and evidence indicates that many investments draw their workforce from areas beyond constituency and council area boundaries.

Invest NI's Londonderry regional office is also actively working with the five North West councils involved in the North West Action Plan to encourage private sector development in key areas of business growth, innovation and trade. Combined with a rolling programme of activities and initiatives to stimulate business starts and growth, this work by Invest NI is facilitating the private sector to provide ongoing employment opportunities within the constituency.

Investment Projects in North Antrim

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide details of work undertaken by Invest Northern Ireland in relation to attracting new investment and employment to the North Antrim constituency; and to outline the work currently being done to promote inward investment within the constituency.

(AQW 1224/07)

Mr Dodds: Since it was set up, Invest NI has secured two inward investment projects within the North Antrim constituency, leveraging total investment of around £21 million, safeguarding almost 650 jobs and promoting a further 23. It has also offered almost £21 million assistance towards further investment projects by existing businesses totalling £105 million, in addition to supporting around 830 new business starts.

Constituency boundaries do not represent self-contained labour markets and a project assisted in a particular location has the potential to create benefits across a much wider area. Northern Ireland is a relatively small place and evidence indicates that many investments draw their workforce from areas beyond constituency and council area boundaries.

Invest NI promotes Northern Ireland as a single entity in its drive to attract new inward investment, and its regional office network works closely with local stakeholders to encourage them to develop locally-focused propositions which can help ensure that the offering for their area is maximised to attract visits by potential investors. Invest NI's scope to 'direct' investment to specific geographic areas is limited, and ultimately the final location decision rests with the business itself. However, Invest NI works proactively to stimulate further investment by existing companies and it encourages and supports the formation of new businesses throughout Northern Ireland.

Attracting Tourists to Northern Ireland

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to attract more visitors to Northern Ireland from (a) the Republic of Ireland; (b) the rest of the United Kingdom; (c) the European Union; (d) the USA and Canada; and (e) the rest of the world. (AQW 1238/07)

Mr Dodds:

(a) Irish Republic

Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) has identified the Irish Republic market as a key market for Northern Ireland Tourism.

NITB will deliver several key marketing initiatives within the Irish Republic in 2007/08 in line with the Winning Themes and Signature Projects outlined in the Strategic Framework for Action. These include a

- 'Great Days' Campaign - aimed at promoting things to see and do in Northern Ireland for families, friends and couples, it will include partnership activity with the Regional Tourism Partnerships (RTPs) and;

- An Awareness Campaign which will seek to improve perceptions of Northern Ireland and raise awareness of the many things that Northern Ireland offers as a holiday / short break destination.

NITB are also carrying out a major review of the 'Island of Ireland' market to inform future decision making on domestic marketing activities in both Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Tourism Ireland promotes Northern Ireland overseas by ensuring that Northern Ireland features prominently in the full range of island of Ireland marketing activities in over 30 countries, and through a programme of additional tactical marketing activities specifically designed to promote tourism to Northern Ireland.

(b) Great Britain

Tourism Ireland focuses on promoting Northern Ireland throughout the GB market, but particularly in Scotland/Northern England. Tourism Ireland will seek to develop tactical campaigns, in conjunction with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, which will be implemented in autumn 2007.

Northern Ireland will be highlighted in a range of ways including campaigns, newspaper, magazine and radio advertising.

(c) Mainland Europe

Activity in Europe includes promoting Northern Ireland in markets with direct access to Northern Ireland including Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Spain, creating specific Northern Ireland eNewsletters for Tourism Ireland's European consumer databases and using other events such as international football matches to showcase Northern Ireland

(d) United States and Canada

Northern Ireland will continue to be promoted actively both in the United States and Canada; in addition to being well represented in the main destination marketing campaign, Tourism Ireland continues to promote Northern Ireland specifically to Ulster Scots ethnic groups in North America. Activities include specific advertising in selected newspapers and magazines, direct and eMarketing to respondents to previous initiatives such as the Northern Ireland Family Names campaign. Production of Northern Ireland tour programmes and flyers and liaison with specialist tour operators, and specific promotions on aspects of Northern Ireland culture and heritage

Tourism Ireland is also working closely with the NITB and other agencies to maximize the tourism benefits from Northern Ireland's exposure at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington DC this summer.

(e) New & Developing Markets

Publicity will continue to be key to raising awareness of Northern Ireland in our new and developing markets. The focus will be on attracting key travel and lifestyle journalists to experience at first-hand what Northern Ireland has to offer.

Northern Ireland Tourism

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to develop Northern Ireland as a distinct tourist designation; and which unique features he plans to emphasise in relation to this. (AQW 1239/07)

Mr Dodds: NITB plans to develop Northern Ireland through delivery of the programme areas identified in the Strategic Framework for Action (2004-2008). The Strategic Framework for Action forms the basis of Northern Ireland's tourism strategy for 2004-2008. The key objective of the strategy is to position Northern Ireland as a unique tourist destination through the delivery of ten programme areas.

The unique features that the Strategic Framework for Action identified to give Northern Ireland international standout include: Giant's Causeway and Antrim & Causeway Coast Area; Saint Patrick and Christian Heritage; The Mourne National Park; The Walled City; and Titanic Made in Belfast

Interpretative Centre at Giant's Causeway

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will give an update on plans for an Interpretative Centre at the Giant's Causeway. (AQW 1240/07)

Mr Dodds: The detailed design for the replacement visitor facilities has reached an advanced stage of development. In committing public funds to the project my Department must take account of all material considerations which may impact on the development of the new facilities including a value for money assessment. Key issues which have delayed the project have been the resolution of car parking requirements and planning considerations.

Consideration must be given to a planning application submitted to Planning Service for an alternative, private sector led visitors centre at the Giant's Causeway.

Northern Ireland Tourism

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to increase the number of people resident in Northern Ireland who holiday within the country. (AQW 1241/07)

Mr Dodds: Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) has identified the domestic Northern Ireland market as key to the success of the tourism industry in Northern Ireland.

NITB will deliver several key marketing initiatives within Northern Ireland this year. The direction for Northern Ireland Tourism is set by the Strategic Framework for Action (2004-2008), which outlines our strategies for development of Northern Ireland as a competitive, must see destination for visitors from home as well as from overseas. In line with this our marketing activity within Northern Ireland will be driven by the Winning Themes and Signature Projects outlined within our Strategic Framework for Action

Northern Ireland Tourism

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps his department (a) has taken in the last three years; and (b) plans to take in the next three years, to give Northern Ireland a competitive advantage over the Republic of Ireland as a tourist destination. (AQW 1250/07)

Mr Dodds: Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) seeks to give Northern Ireland competitive advantage over the Irish Republic by positioning Northern Ireland as a distinct tourist destination.

As strategic leader for Northern Ireland tourism, NITB developed and launched the Strategic Framework for Action (2004-2008) for Northern Ireland Tourism. The Strategic Framework for Action has identified 5 Signature Projects to give Northern Ireland competitive advantage.

A brand for Northern Ireland tourism is currently being developed to support the distinctive positioning of Northern Ireland.

In addition we are carrying out a major review of the island of Ireland market which will inform future decision making within our domestic marketing activities to ensure our messages and campaigns are best placed to ensure more Northern Ireland residents holiday within the country.

Northern Ireland Tourism

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assurances he will give that additional resources will be made available to the Regional Tourism Partnership.

(AQW 1268/07)

Mr Dodds: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) is fully committed to regional development as outlined in the Strategic Framework for Action (2005 – 2008). In the current financial year, £500,000 has been allocated from the agency's core budget to Regional Tourism Partnership's (RTPs) to assist in the delivery of aspects of regional development.

NITB is looking at the possibility of further funding for regional development with my department. Any further bid for funding will be considered with other requests as part of the Government's 2007 Comprehensive Spending Review.

Northern Ireland Tourism

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give his assessment of comments, made in the recent Northern Ireland Affairs Committee report on 'Tourism in Northern Ireland and its Economic Impact and Benefits', regarding the lack of clarity of roles between Tourism Ireland, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Regional Tourism Partnerships. (AQW 1276/07)

Mr Dodds: My Department accepts the view expressed by the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee (NIAC) that there needs to be greater clarity of roles and responsibilities between Tourism Ireland, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Regional Tourism Partnerships.

This will be addressed in the coming months as part of a wider review of roles and responsibilities of tourism support organisations within my Department. That review will take cognisance of the NIAC report and other data which has recently become available.

Tourism Industry

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give his assessment of comments, made in the recent Northern Ireland Affairs Committee report 'Tourism in Northern Ireland and its Economic Impact and Benefits', indicating that properly funded Regional Tourism Partnerships, identifying and pursuing local regional tourism priorities, were essential to the development of the tourism industry. (AQW 1283/07)

Mr Dodds: Local delivery and development of visitor services and servicing is a key element of raising the profile of the tourism industry across Northern Ireland and perhaps more importantly providing visitors with the quality of services and facilities they want and need.

Under current proposals responsibility for a number of local tourism functions, including local visitor servicing and local product development, is to be transferred to the new councils under the Review of Public Administration (RPA). However the key thing is that there is still a need for engagement with the private sector. Pending the outcome of the RPA there remains a strong case for the retention of Regional Tourism Partnerships (RTPs) as the vehicles for the delivery of sub- regional strategies.

Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) currently allocates £500,000 of its core budget to fund RTP activities. In addition NITB are currently bidding for an additional £1m per annum for regional development from the EU Competitiveness and Employment Programme 2007-13.

Northern Ireland Tourism

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail what steps his department is taking to ensure that the roles of Tourism Ireland, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, and the Regional Tourism Partnerships are clearly defined. (AQW 1284/07)

Mr Dodds: My Department accepts the view expressed by the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee (NIAC) that there needs to be greater clarity of roles and responsibilities between Tourism Ireland, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Regional Tourism Partnerships.

This will be addressed in the coming months as part of a wider review of roles and responsibilities of tourism support organisations within my Department. That review will take cognisance of the NIAC report and other data which has recently become available.

Deaths at the Workplace

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the number of people killed at their workplace as a result of work-related accidents; (b) the number of employers that were found guilty of health and safety breaches as a result of Health and Safety Executive investigations into such deaths; and (c) the financial fines that were imposed in each case, for the last ten years. (AQW 1288/07)

Mr Dodds: The numbers requested are given in the following table:

Year	Total number of people killed in their workplace	Total number of employers found guilty	Fines imposed in each case
2006/07	17	2	£2,000
			£2,000
2005/06	20	5	£50,000

Tourism Ireland

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail whether Tourism Ireland has a cultural diversity policy which would require it to reflect appropriately and proportionately, in its publications and programmes, the cultural diversity of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 1289/07)

Mr Dodds: Tourism Ireland does not have an official cultural diversity policy. The Company's two Key Objectives are to: (1) Increase tourism to the island of Ireland and (2) Support Northern Ireland to realise its tourism potential

Foreign Investment

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the incentives that are being made available to attract foreign investors to Northern Ireland (a) in order to make it a more attractive proposition than the Republic of Ireland; and (b) over and above the incentives offered in the rest of the United Kingdom. (AQW 1327/07)

Mr Dodds: One of the incentives available to attract Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) to Northern Ireland is Invest NI's ability to offer Regional Aid in the form of Selective Financial Assistance (SFA) to secure either capital investment and/or job creation projects. Such assistance generally takes the form of capital and/or employment-related grant, and this can sometimes be supplemented by offering training grants through the Business Improvement Training Programme, R&D financial assistance, and help to identify suitable property.

The level of SFA that Invest NI may make towards the eligible costs of any FDI project is governed by the European Commission's Guidelines on Regional Aid and this is true of all regions within the UK, the Irish Republic and the rest of the European Union's Member States.

Whether and how much aid can be offered in particular geographical areas within Member States is determined principally by the overall population of the Member State to which Regional Aid may be applied and relative wealth of each region.

(a) Irish Republic

- The inward investment product offering in the Irish Republic has a different focus to that of Northern Ireland and is based on its 12.5% corporate tax rate.
- Northern Ireland's product offering focuses more on skilled labour availability and cost competitiveness for near-shore markets. As a result of the tax situation Northern Ireland tends to win projects where the Irish Republic tax advantage can be neutralised e.g. in cost centre projects as opposed to profit centres.

(b) Rest of UK

- Whereas very few areas in England are eligible for Regional Aid, and its availability in Wales and Scotland is partial, Invest NI may offer

Selective Financial Assistance to FDI projects locating anywhere in Northern Ireland.

- The UK's inward promotional effort combines both UKTI and the Devolved Administrations in one co-ordinated network organised under the Committee on Overseas Promotion (COP). The network's objective is to attract inward investment into the UK, and to retain and expand that investment. Invest NI is a member of COP and attends regular meetings to ensure the Northern Ireland offering is fully represented.

Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what facility currently exists for members of staff in his department to work in their current post, beyond the default retirement age.

(AQW 1341/07)

Mr Dodds: Since 1 October 2006 staff wanting to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by his department in each of the last two years; and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys.

(AQW 1348/07)

Mr Dodds:

	Number of Surveys	Cost of Surveys
2005/06	8	£850
2006/07	12	Nil

Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to report on discussions he has had regarding the future of Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly, as a centre for industry and/or a business park.

(AQW 1374/07)

Mr Dodds: I have not been involved in any discussions concerning the future of Shackleton Barracks either as a centre for industry or as a business park.

Funding for Tourism Ireland

Mr Robin Newton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail, for each of the last three years, (a) the level of funding provided to Tourism Ireland; (b) the percentage of total budget of Tourism Ireland made up by this funding; and (c) the targets agreed with Tourism Ireland, against which the effectiveness of this departmental funding can be measured.

(AQW 1413/07)

Mr Dodds:

- (a) The level of funding provided to Tourism Ireland from Northern Ireland over the last three years is:

2005	£12.7m
2006	£12.6m
2007	£13.128m

- (b) The NI contribution represents a percentage of the total funding as follows:

2005	29.5%
2006	28.7%
2007	27.85%

- (c) The targets agreed with Tourism Ireland against which the effectiveness of this departmental funding can be measured are:

INCREASE IN TOURISM REVENUE

All Island	6.8%
Irish Republic	6.5%
NI	9%
2006
All Island	6.9%
Irish Republic	6.7%
2007
All Island	8.4%
Irish Republic	8%
NI	9%

Enterprise Action Zone / Enterprise Arc

Mr Gerry Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is his assessment of the recommendation of the West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force report, for the development of an Enterprise Action Zone/ Enterprise Arc in that area. (AQW 1455/07)

Mr Dodds: The West Belfast and Greater Shankill Task Forces' recommendation for the development of an Enterprise Action Zone/Enterprise Arc in the area is currently under consideration. The West Belfast and Greater Shankill Enterprise Council, which was established to bring greater coherence to the promotion of and support for local businesses and to foster local enterprise, is working on the production of an interim report on the establishment of an Enterprise Zone based on existing models of best practice. This report is due to be completed by September/October this year and, upon receipt, will be jointly considered by Invest NI and DETI with other relevant Departments as necessary.

Open Air Internet Access

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to develop open-air internet access for towns and cities in Northern Ireland, similar to the wi-fi project that is currently being pioneered in Carlow in the Republic of Ireland, which offers wireless 24-hour, seven days a week access to the internet on its main streets, to upwards of 10,000 households. (AQW 1458/07)

Mr Dodds: There are a number of initiatives in this area of telecommunications, either underway or recently completed, which DETI has pushed forward. In particular, as part of the Northern Ireland Broadband Flagship Initiative, DETI has pioneered an open-access wi-fi project in Londonderry. This enables citizens, businesses, the council and tourists to access a range of services, including free access to the internet for a limited period. This £1.38 million project was undertaken by DETI with support from the EU Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme and on foot of this successful investment, I understand that Derry City Council have plans to develop the service further in due course.

In addition, in conjunction with Belfast City Council and DRD, DETI has been considering the feasibility of delivering wireless broadband services in Belfast. Two companies (BT and eircom) have expressed an interest in taking this forward. I am also aware that DFP plan to undertake small scale pilots of free public wireless access points starting in August.

From a wider commercial perspective, there are already a number of private sector companies offering wi-fi services in various cities and towns in Northern Ireland. Wireless internet services are also available through mobile phones and from specialist wireless operators.

ENVIRONMENT

Non-Pensionable Bonuses for DOE Staff

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of the Environment to outline how many non-pensionable bonuses were paid to staff in her department in each of the last three years; and what steps she has taken to ensure that such bonuses are not used as a cheaper alternative to an appropriate salary increase. (AQW 912/07)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): Non-pensionable bonuses can be paid to staff at all grades to reward performance in two ways: as part of the annual pay round, or under the NICS special bonus scheme. The number of payments made under each scheme in the last three financial years is as follows:

Year	Performance-related	Special Bonus Scheme
2004/2005	1199	505
2005/2006	1364	151
2006/2007	1802	174

Performance-related bonuses are an important and integral element of the NICS reward strategy and are used as part of the annual pay round to acknowledge and reward higher performing staff.

The special bonus scheme is designed to reward members of staff for exceptional performance in particularly demanding tasks.

The award of bonuses is therefore regarded as being complementary to, rather than a substitute for, the award of consolidated pay increases.

Please note that information can be provided only in relation to staff currently employed by the Department.

Planning Permissions

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of the Environment whether there is any intended change in procedure or policy, in relation to the renewal of existing planning permissions. (AQW 1004/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department has no plans to change procedure or policy in relation to the renewal of existing planning permissions at this time.

Setting Planning Policy in Northern Ireland

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the difference between the roles of DOE and DRD in setting planning policy in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1093/07)

Mrs Foster: DOE prepares planning policy under the statutory provisions of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 while DRD prepares planning policy under the statutory provisions of the Strategic Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1999.

Replacement Dwellings

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to specify exactly what criteria is applied by the Planning Service when assessing applications for replacement single dwellings in rural areas; and to state how many (a) refusals; and (b) approvals have been granted in the (i) Moyle; (ii) Ballymena; and (iii) Ballymoney areas, since 16 March 2006.

(AQW 1095/07)

Mrs Foster: Current planning policy in relation to replacement dwellings is set out in Policy CTY5 of Draft Planning Policy Statement 14. This states that planning permission will generally be granted for a replacement dwelling where the proposed replacement would not have a visual impact significantly greater than the existing dwelling.

In addition, a proposal for a replacement dwelling will only be permitted where all the following criteria are met:

- the proposed replacement dwelling is sited within the established curtilage of the existing dwelling, unless either (a) the curtilage is so restricted that it could not reasonably accommodate a modest sized dwelling or (b) it can be demonstrated that an alternative position nearby would result in clear landscape, heritage, access or amenity benefits;
- the overall size of the new dwelling allows it to integrate into the surrounding landscape and its design is appropriate to its rural setting having regard to local distinctiveness and vernacular styles;
- where it is proposed to replace a vacant or unoccupied building, it is demonstrated by the applicant that the property is or was last lawfully used as a dwelling house and that residential use has not been abandoned.

The number of rural replacement applications granted and refused in each of the Council areas referred to since 16 March 2006 is shown in the table below.

Council Area	Replacement rural applications from 16 March 2006 to 31 May 2007
	Approvals	Refusals
Ballymena	83	14
Ballymoney	39	5
Moyle	30	4

Replacement Dwellings

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the criteria for abandonment, as defined in planning policy in relation to replacement dwellings, specifying which policy covers this issue; and to confirm that no criteria, other than those defined in policy, will be used. (AQW 1096/07)

Mrs Foster: To ask the Minister of Environment to detail the criteria for abandonment, as defined in planning policy in relation to replacement dwellings, specifying which policy covers this issue; and to confirm that no criteria, other than those defined in policy, will be used.

Current planning policy in relation to replacement dwellings is set out in Policy CTY 5 "Replacement Dwellings" of Draft Planning Policy Statement 14.

Abandonment is not a concept embodied in planning law, but has arisen out of court judgements. Where a dwelling to be replaced is unoccupied or where it is unclear when the dwelling was last occupied, the onus will be on the applicant to demonstrate that residential use has not been abandoned. This will be assessed having regard to the following matters:

- the physical condition of the building
- the period the dwelling has not been in use;
- whether there has been any intervening use; and
- evidence of the owner's intentions.

Judgements on the issues of abandonment and the intentions of the owner remain a matter of fact and degree. Various appeal cases have shown that after a dwelling has ceased to be used, the time which has to elapse for it to be regarded as abandoned is very variable and to a large extent relies on how much it has deteriorated.

I can confirm that no criteria other than those which I have outlined are used to assess abandonment of residential use.

Marine Conservation Bill

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to present a Marine Conservation Bill before the Assembly.

(AQW 1104/07)

Mrs Foster: I am broadly in support of the UK Government's proposals for a Marine Bill. However, I am reserving my position on how they might best be delivered in Northern Ireland until I have given the matter further consideration and agreed with Ministerial colleagues the best approach for Northern Ireland.

Waste-to-Energy Plant

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment to outline her policy regarding the provision of a waste-to-energy plant in Northern Ireland, to help meet EU landfill targets.
(AQW 1133/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department's policy is set out in the Northern Ireland Waste Strategy, 'Towards Resource Management' that was launched in March 2006.

Government believes that energy from waste will be a necessary component of the preferred infrastructure to ensure that Northern Ireland meets its landfill diversion targets. Energy from waste facilities will also provide diversity of energy supply.

Bonfire Management

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on the road safety implications of bonfires that are situated on, or near, roads.
(AQW 1153/07)

Mrs Foster: As the Minister with responsibility for roads, your question has been passed to me to answer.

I can advise that my Department's Roads Service does not approve of, or support, the unauthorised use of departmental property either for the siting of bonfires or for the storage of materials and that it is Roads Service policy to remove such material where there is a danger to road users. However, bonfire management is an interagency issue and it is not always easy to find quick fix solutions when problems arise. The support, co-operation and involvement of local communities is an important factor and this was recognised in the report of the interagency group which produced guidelines on bonfire management. A copy of the report can be found on the Department of the Environment's Environment and Heritage Service website: www.ehsni.gov.uk. A copy of this report has been placed in the library.

Roads Service's experience has been that many of the complaints received from the public are related to the stockpiling of materials on sites adjacent to public roads, which are not owned by Roads Service. On occasions where the overspill from bonfire stockpiles obstructs the public road or footway Roads Service will remove it or arrange for it to be pushed back off the road onto the bonfire site, consulting with the police and local communities as necessary. However, Roads Service has a duty of care to its staff and the immediate and ongoing safety of personnel tasked with removal work is always taken into account in consultation with the police and other parties.

There are relatively few instances where bonfires are actually brought onto the public road for lighting. However where bonfires are lit on or near the public road, Roads Service will arrange for burnt out debris to be removed and carry out any repairs to carriageways, footways and street lights that may be needed.

Landfill Allowance Scheme

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she is taking to ensure that District Councils meet Northern Ireland Landfill Allowance Scheme targets over the next five years.
(AQW 1159/07)

Mrs Foster: My officials are finalising a strategic business case to identify the best solutions for waste management and this will consider the case for central government support in Northern Ireland. The strategic business case draws on a comparative analysis of central government support in Great Britain and will estimate the cost of providing equivalent levels of support in Northern Ireland.

My Department has provided Guidance to District Councils on their responsibilities under NILAS. Guidance and advice are also provided to the District Councils on an ongoing basis through the NILAS Implementation Steering Group, chaired by the Department.

The Department also provides funding to the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) which advises, supports and provides guidance on a number of environmental issues, including landfill diversion, to District Councils.

Landfill Allowance Scheme

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the funding she will provide to District Councils, in order to help them meet Northern Ireland Landfill Allowance Scheme targets.
(AQW 1160/07)

Mrs Foster: My officials are finalising a strategic business case to identify the best solutions for waste management in Northern Ireland. Among the various scenarios being considered is the possibility of providing an element of central government support.

The business case will be considered by the Department of Finance and Personnel and following that it will be for the Executive, as part of the Priorities and Budgets exercise, to consider whether central government support will be provided.

Landfill Allowance Scheme

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of the impact of the fines that District Councils will face if they fail to meet Northern Ireland Landfill Allowance Scheme targets over the next five years. (AQW 1162/07)

Mrs Foster: The allocation of allowances as set out under the Northern Ireland Landfill Allowance Scheme Regulations is an essential element of my Department's strategy to meet our obligations under the EU Landfill Directive to reduce the amount of biodegradable municipal waste going to landfill.

The Regulations make provision for the imposition of fines should individual District Councils exceed their agreed allowances in any given year. Councils may be fined £150 per tonne of waste over their allowances.

My Department has, however, indicated that only in exceptional circumstances would a penalty be imposed on a Council before 2009.

DoE Spend on Consultancy Services

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail her department's projected spend on consultancy services, in the 2007/2008 financial year. (AQW 1174/07)

Mrs Foster:

Business Area	Projected 2007/2008 spend £'000
DVA – Testing	238
DVA – Licensing	0
Planning Service	534
Environment and Heritage Service	196
Road Safety	195
Local Government Division	7
Local Government Reform Division	27
Planning and Environmental Policy Group	803
Total	2,000

Erection of Flags

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of the Environment what are the requirements with respect to planning permission for the erection of flags, bunting or other symbols on lamp posts.

(AQW 1181/07)

Mrs Foster: Under the Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1992, the national flag of any country can be displayed on a single flagstaff without the need to apply to the Department for consent to display. The term "flagstaff" is not specifically defined in legislation but it is unlikely that a lamp post could be considered as such for the purposes of the above legislation.

Other types of flags and emblems of a political nature are not included in the exemption noted above. The erection of bunting is considered to be outside the scope of planning control as it is very minor in nature.

In practice, it is almost invariably impossible to enforce these requirements.

Fox Numbers in Northern Ireland

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of foxes in Northern Ireland; whether there has been an increase in these numbers over the past three years; and whether this correlates with a decrease in songbirds and other wildlife. (AQW 1193/07)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not monitor foxes in Northern Ireland and therefore cannot give details of their population.

Research reports from Queen's University along with anecdotal information suggests that the range and abundance of foxes has increased since the 1930s and probably continues to increase.

There is no scientific information to suggest that foxes predate song birds in significant numbers. A project is currently underway to assess the impact of a number of predators, including foxes, on the breeding success of the Curlew in Co Antrim.

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI) designations for the last twelve months; and to detail (a) their location; (b) the size of land of each designation; (c) the number of replies to consultations on each of the designations; and (d) whether each designation was accepted by affected parties. (AQW 1200/07)

Mrs Foster: Details relating to Areas of Special Scientific Interest designated during the period 1 July 2006 to 30 June 2007 are given in the table below.

ASSI Name	ASSI Location	Area (ha)	Replies (excluding objections) to Declaration	Objections to Declaration

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what consultation has taken place between departmental officials and landowners and families affected by an Area of Special Scientific Interest designation, to ensure that they are not disadvantaged by such a designation. (AQW 1201/07)

Mrs Foster: Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) is required under the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002 to give notice to every owner and occupier of land that is included in an Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI).

The notice and accompanying papers advise of the purpose and implication of the ASSI designation, provide full details of the implications of the designation and invite comments from these consultees, including any matters perceived to disadvantage them.

EHS is required to consider any representations or objections that are received as a consequence of this notice before confirming the designation, with or without modification.

EHS officials also endeavour to visit, in accordance with established procedures, every landowner and occupier that they are able to identify prior to the designation to advise about the proposal to include their lands within the ASSI and to address any questions that may arise.

These procedures were followed with respect to the designation of ASSIs at sites around Strangford.

Staff Departures at the Planning Service

Mr Alastair Ross asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of Planning Service staff that have left the service for (a) employment in planning offices of councils in the Republic of Ireland; (b) employment in private planning consultancy firms; (c) retirement; or (d) unknown, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1211/07)

Mrs Foster: The following tables detail the number of staff who have left the Planning Service in each of the last 5 years. The Department does hold complete records of why staff leave the Planning Service and staff are under no obligation to provide this information. Where this information is available it has been provided. For the purposes of this question the response relates only to permanent staff and excludes casual staff.

There are also a number of additional administrative staff who have left the Planning Service on promotion or transfer to take up posts in both the wider Department and the NICS but these have not been included in the following tables.

Planning Service Staffing

Mr Alastair Ross asked the Minister of the Environment what efforts have been made to retain staff in the Planning Service, given the high proportion of staff leaving for similar jobs in the Republic of Ireland or the private sector. (AQW 1212/07)

Mrs Foster: The Planning Service is conscious of the problems created by the loss of valuable experience though resignations. Management in the Agency has previously raised the issue at Ministerial level and with the Department of Finance & Personnel's Central Personnel Group (CPG) which is responsible for such matters as pay and terms and conditions of employment. Efforts have been made in the recent pay negotiations to address the pay concerns of staff but remuneration packages to compete with those offered by employers outside the NICS are neither viable nor affordable.

The Planning Service does however make use of the NICS bonus scheme to reward staff who are performing exceptionally well. In addition, I have recently endorsed a proposal by the Agency to pay the professional fees of specialist planning staff from 1 January 2008, in recognition of their professionalism and their particular contribution to the work of the Agency.

The situation will be regularly monitored and reported to CPG as appropriate.

Backlog of Planning Applications

Mr Alastair Ross asked the Minister of the Environment what steps have been taken to address the current backlog of planning applications. (AQW 1219/07)

Mrs Foster: In an effort to ease the current pressures on the development control system a Divisional Support Team has been established and is currently in operation in the Craigavon Divisional Planning Office. Alongside the work of the team, the Planning Service's Operations Directorate will be critically examining existing practices within Divisions with a view to changes that will further assist. Areas of specific focus include, but will not be limited to, arrangements for handling planning appeals; the approach to processing reserved matters applications; and arrangements for handling telephone contact with offices.

Training for Planning Service Staff

Mr Alastair Ross asked the Minister of the Environment what training is given by the Planning Service to staff transferring from one section of the service to another. (AQW 1220/07)

Mrs Foster: In the majority of cases staff transferring, moving on promotion or for location reasons the Planning Service tries to ensure that, as far as possible, the skill set and experience of staff match the requirements of the post they are moving to but Planning Service endeavours to ensure that staff are properly inducted to their new posts or grade. This is mainly the responsibility of the immediate line manager who is responsible for setting out and clarifying the requirements of the post. If the member of staff has been moved to a post, with new roles and responsibilities, the line manager should agree a personal performance agreement (PPA) and identify any training and development needs on the personal development plan (PDP).

The Agency also has a checklist for line managers to use for the induction of new staff. This is primarily used for new staff entering the Agency but is also appropriate for use with staff moving location - to help them integrate locally.

Water Framework Directive

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the ways in which her department is working with the government in the Republic of Ireland, in order to implement the Water Framework Directive in the north-western and Neagh-Bann river basin districts. (AQW 1226/07)

Mrs Foster: Co-ordinated implementation of the Water Framework Directive within the international river basin districts is supported by the North South WFD Co-ordination Group, the North South Technical Advisory Group and the NS SHARE project, all of which involve participation of officials from both jurisdictions.

Considerable co-ordination has taken place in successfully completing the initial stages of the Water Framework Directive's implementation. Most recently for example, reports on the significant water management issues (SWMI) within each river basin district were published on a joint North-South basis.

Ards and Down Area Plan 2015

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment to confirm the implementation date for the new Ards and Down Area Plan 2015. (AQW 1244/07)

Mrs Foster: It is anticipated that the Planning Appeals Commission's (PAC's) report on the Public Inquiry into the draft Ards and Down Plan will be with my Department by the end of 2007. My officials will then consider the report and will put recommendations to me on the draft Plan's adoption and publication in whole or in part, with or without modification, as the final document.

It is not possible at this stage to provide a definitive date for implementation of the Plan because this will depend on what the PAC report says and on the work that will be needed to consider its findings. However, the aim will be to publish the adopted Plan as early as possible in 2008.

High Hedges Legislation

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the legislative priorities which are preventing her from introducing high hedges legislation. (AQW 1253/07)

Mrs Foster: The main priorities requiring resources to develop policy and take legislation forward are (i) responding to a number of EU imperatives arising from new and amended EC Directives and European Court judgements, (ii) work to determine the way ahead on the Review of Public Administration and (iii) proposals that will be brought forward to simplify, streamline and further reform the planning system.

Practical and Theory Driving Tests

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to upgrade the requirements of the practical and theory driving tests, in order to address the high levels of road traffic accidents involving inexperienced drivers. (AQW 1278/07)

Mrs Foster: The syllabus for the theory test is specified in the Second European Directive on Driver Licensing 91/439/EU but the Northern Ireland theory test, like that in GB, specifies in addition a hazard perception test (HPT). From 3 September 2007 when the number of questions asked in the theory test will increase to 50 with candidates being required to answer at least 43 questions correctly. This increase in the number of questions will create a more robust test with better content validity and make a positive contribution to driving standards and road safety through a more thorough assessment of the learner's knowledge and understanding.

The Driving Standards Agency (DSA) has commissioned the Central Office of Information (COI) to develop new hazard perception clips to ensure that the current bank of clips covers a wider range of scenarios. To assist with this process staff from the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) are in the lead providing technical support. The increase to the bank of clips will impact on training in relation to scanning the road, recognising at the first opportunity from the clues that a potentially dangerous situation might arise and adopting a driving plan to reduce the risk.

The practical Driving Test in Northern Ireland is based on European legislation and is similar in design and content to the rest of the UK.

It is recognised throughout Europe that the practical driving test in its current format achieves the designed objectives, that is to establish whether or not a driver has reached an acceptable level of competence to drive safely on the road.

DVA officials have also been working with UK and European partners on a number of projects to consider ways to integrate measurement of driver behaviour and attitude, previously not assessed, into the driving test. DVA are fully committed to working with other European partners to achieve a common goal of reducing the number of road deaths. To this end DVA have not only committed staff resources but also partly funded one of the projects.

In addition to this we intend to monitor closely recently commissioned research in GB which includes taking a radical look at how drivers are currently trained and tested. DVA will consider recommendations coming from this research and implement if appropriate.

Deferral of Planning Applications

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the circumstances in which a second deferral of a planning application is permissible, where such a course of action can lead to a resolution of outstanding issues. (AQW 1285/07)

Mrs Foster: One of the key elements of the revised consultation procedures with councils, which were introduced in October 2005, is that Planning Service would accept only one deferral on an application. Where an initial deferral on a planning application is acceptable, an office meeting or exceptionally a site meeting will be arranged to further discuss the issues.

Subject to the outcome of the meeting, and where it is considered that amendments to the scheme may lead to a resolution of outstanding issues, applicants may be offered the opportunity to submit additional or revised information. If this information is not submitted within the stipulated timeframe, the proposal may be presented back to council with an unchanged opinion or the decision notice may be issued accordingly.

Where an application is presented to the council for the second time and the council is strongly of the opinion that a decision contrary to that proposed by the Divisional Planning Office should be made, the council may request that the application be referred to the Management Board.

However, applications referred to the Management Board must relate to significant developments as defined in the revised guidance issued to councils in May 2007.

Deferral of Planning Applications

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the consultation process between Planning Service and District Councils in respect to planning applications; and to detail the guidelines, as implemented by planning officials, in regard to permitting a deferral on a planning application. (AQW 1287/07)

Mrs Foster: In line with the revised procedures on Council consultation on planning applications, Councils must provide planning reasons when seeking a deferral on an individual application. If a deferral is granted then all the outstanding issues will be dealt with before the application is brought back to Council with Planning Service's opinion. A key element of the revised procedures, brought in to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of consultation with Councils, is that Planning Service would only accept one deferral on an application.

These procedures are currently the subject of an independent review.

Planning Service Customer Standards

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the requirements on planning officials in relation to communication with agents and elected representatives, with specific reference to any timescales within which responses to letters, emails and telephone calls should issue. (AQW 1290/07)

Mrs Foster: Planning Service is committed to providing an open and professional service with clear lines of communications for all stakeholders, and has targets in place for replying to letters, faxes, emails and telephone calls. These targets apply to correspondence from agents and elected representatives as well as members of the public.

Acknowledgments to letters, faxes and emails are required to issue within 3 working days of receipt, with a substantive response to issue within 15 working days. Where a response requires more detailed investigation, a holding reply should issue within 15 days to advise a substantive reply will issue as soon as possible (recognised as replying within a further 15 working days). Responses to Freedom of Information and Environmental Information Regulation requests are required to issue within 20 working days of receipt.

In relation to telephone enquiries, the Agency's Customer Standards Statement outlines the aim of answering 85% of telephone calls within 20 seconds. The Agency aims to respond to telephone enquiries immediately or, if this is not possible, to respond within 1 working day or indicate who is better placed to deal with the enquiry.

Refusal of Planning Applications

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to confirm that it is now current practice within Planning Service to issue a refusal in respect of an application with an outstanding request for a deferral, without notifying the elected representative, agent or applicant that the request has been declined. (AQW 1291/07)

Mrs Foster: A key element of the revised procedures brought in to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of consultation with Councils is that Planning Service accepts only one deferral on an application. Requests for a deferral must be based on defensible planning grounds.

The practice is that a request for a deferral will be considered at the Council meeting and the Planning Service official attending the meeting will advise the elected representative whether a deferral will be accepted or declined. If the request is accepted, the Council will be consulted again before a decision is issued. If the request is declined, the decision notice will be issued.

On occasions, additional information is presented at the Council meeting or promised within a few days. In such cases, the issue of the decision notice may be held for up to 5 days to allow this new information to be considered. This would not be classed as a 'deferral' of the application.

If the new material leads to a change of opinion by the Planning Service, the application is returned to the Council with a reconsidered opinion to approve. If, however, the information does not alter the Planning Service's opinion, the decision notice refusing planning permission is issued. The Councillor(s) who sent the new information is not routinely notified in these circumstances.

A review of the Council consultation procedures is currently ongoing.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of the Environment if she will make a statement on progress in dealing with the issues associated with Houses in Multiple Occupation, particularly in the East Belfast constituency and Coleraine Borough Council area. (AQW 1300/07)

Mrs Foster: The Department published the Draft Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) Subject Plan for Belfast City Council Area in June 2006. The Plan's

Strategy seeks to protect area amenity, accommodate multiple occupation, focus development in areas where it can contribute to regeneration and promotes development of purpose built student accommodation.

The Plan's policies will limit development of HMOs throughout most of East Belfast to 10%. The exception to this limit is at HMO Nodes. Such nodes are designated along certain parts of arterial routes, where development would contribute to regeneration.

Planning Appeals Commission will consider objections to the Subject Plan at an Independent Examination commencing on 1st October 2007.

My officials are currently reviewing the Coleraine Borough HMO Plan 2016 and I will make a decision on the best way forward for this plan in the coming months.

Areas of Special Scientific Interest Designated at Strangford

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the consultation that has taken place between her department and the landowners and farmers, regarding Area of Special Scientific Interest designation at sites in Strangford. (AQW 1307/07)

Mrs Foster: Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) is required under the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002 to give notice to every owner and occupier of land that is included in an Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI).

The notice and accompanying papers advise of the purpose and implication of the ASSI designation, provide full details of the implications of the designation and invite comments from these consultees, including any matters perceived to disadvantage them.

EHS is required to consider any representations or objections that are received as a consequence of this notice before confirming the designation, with or without modification.

EHS officials also endeavour to visit, in accordance with established procedures, every landowner and occupier that they are able to identify prior to the designation to advise about the proposal to include their lands within the ASSI and to address any questions that may arise.

These procedures were followed with respect to the designation of ASSIs at sites around Strangford.

Bloomfield Shopping Centre

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to confirm that the recently approved extension to Bloomfield Shopping Centre was in accordance with previous conditions laid down by the Planning Appeals Commission, in its original approval of the centre. (AQW 1314/07)

Mrs Foster: Full planning permission was granted in May 2007 for an extension to Bloomfield Shopping Centre, Bangor. The approval relates to stores and ancillary areas and includes a new lift and stairs. This approval accords with the conditions previously imposed, following a public inquiry. The decision therefore does not increase the net retail floor space of the shopping centre.

Demolition of Property on Bryansburn Road

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment what action her department intends to take against the person who demolished numbers 38 and 40 Bryansburn Road, which is part of an Area of Townscape Character in the new Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan. (AQW 1315/07)

Mrs Foster: An enforcement case W/2006/0050CA was opened on 2 June 2006 relating to the demolition of the dwellings at 38 & 40 Bryansburn Road, Bangor, which is within an Area of Townscape Character (ATC). Whilst the demolition of buildings in an ATC is a breach of planning control it is not an offence.

Despite exhaustive searches and investigations, the Department has been unable to identify the relevant landowners and was therefore not in a position to serve an enforcement notice on this matter. That said these efforts still are continuing and the Department has been in contact with the applicants of a recent application submitted to the Department for a new-build residential development of 12 sheltered category one elderly apartments on these lands (Planning Ref W/2007/0495/F refers) to try identify the owners. We await the information requested.

Default Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of the Environment what facility currently exists for members of staff in her department to work in their current post, beyond the default retirement age. (AQW 1342/07)

Mrs Foster: Since 1 October 2006 staff wanting to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised, all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

DOE Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by her department in each of the last two years; and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys. (AQW 1345/07)

Mrs Foster: Two staff surveys have been carried out within my Department in the last two years, at a total cost of £15148.35

Planning Application Fees

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the amount of money received by Planning Service from planning application fees in the Downpatrick Divisional Planning Office for (a) the Ards Borough Council area; and (b) the Strangford constituency, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 1365/07)

Mrs Foster: I regret that figures are not available in the format requested. However, net receipts for the Downpatrick Divisional Planning Office for each of the last 3 years are shown in the attached table.

Net receipts per year/Year	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Downpatrick DPO	£2,471,000	£2,632,000	£3,001,000

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the Planning Service policy and criteria that exist in relation to floor space restrictions for single houses in the countryside. (AQW 1381/07)

Mrs Foster: There are no specific references or criteria in current planning policy in relation to floor space restrictions for single houses in the countryside. However, in granting planning permission the Department has the power to impose what ever conditions it sees fit and can restrict the maximum floor space of a new dwelling if the particular circumstances of the case warrant this approach. Such conditions are imposed to ensure the development being permitted properly integrates into the rural landscape and does not harm the character of the rural area. Any condition restricting floor space will also take account of the need to allow sufficient area to meet modern space standards.

Clea Lakes, Killyleagh

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the designations currently given to the Clea Lakes, Killyleagh; and to detail any designations that are imminent. (AQW 1396/07)

Mrs Foster: The Clea Lakes are designated as:

- (1) 'Salmonid' under the EC Freshwater Fish Directive (2006/44/EC) and
- (2) a 'Protected Area' under the EC Water Framework Directive (2000/60/EC).

The Lakes were formerly designated as an 'Area of Scientific Interest' under the now repealed Amenity Lands Act (Northern Ireland) 1965. In recognition of their value for nature conservation, they have been proposed for designation as a site of Local Nature Conservation Importance in the draft Ards and Down Area Plan.

Planning Service Management Board

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications that have been referred to the Planning Service Management Board, in (a) the Ards Borough Council area; and (b) the Down District Council area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1405/07)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that in the Ards Borough Council area there were 7 Management Board Referrals in 2004, 3 in 2005, none in 2006 and 1 to date in 2007. In the Down District Council area there were no Management Board Referrals in 2004, 1 in 2005, 3 in 2006 and 3 to date in 2007.

Planning Policy Statement 6

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment what account the Environment and Heritage Service has taken of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Living Over the Shop scheme in Cookstown, in its response to the consultations on planning applications I/2007/0124 and I/2007/0138. (AQW 1407/07)

Mrs Foster: Environment and Heritage Service was consulted on the application for Listed Building Consent I/2007/0124 and Planning Application I/2007/0138. In these cases the proposed changes were considered to impact negatively on the character of buildings of special architectural or historic interest and thus were contrary to current policy contained in Planning Policy Statement 6.

However, it is the opinion of Environment and Heritage Service that it should be possible to achieve a 'Living Over The Shop' scheme in these buildings, without compromising the character to an unacceptable degree.

Advertising Planning Applications

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of the Environment to detail what action she is taking to ensure that the Planning Service promotes equality of opportunity when advertising planning applications in newspapers; and to outline the criteria that is used in deciding how and where advertising occurs.

(AQW 1408/07)

Mrs Foster: The Planning Service is required, under Article 21 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, to advertise planning applications received in at least one newspaper circulating in the locality in which the land to which the application relates is situated.

However, it has been the custom and practice of the Planning Service to advertise in a range of newspapers circulating in each district council area to try to ensure that all sections of the community have access to this information. The Department also operates a neighbour notification scheme and all applications are displayed on the Agency's website www.planningni.gov.uk. These arrangements are set out in the Department's Equality Scheme.

Government advertising generally was the subject of a review in 2005 and as a result changes were proposed to the advertising of planning applications in the Belfast area. Following a judicial review, these changes were largely put on hold pending a further review which is about to commence. This further review will initially consider the issue of advertising of planning applications in the Belfast area but will also consider advertising in all other district council areas. The aim is to devise a procurement and advertising strategy, taking account of new developments in advertising, technology and communication, that will communicate effectively to the public information about planning applications received, deliver value for money and minimise the cost to applicants.

The Tannery at Shrigley

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if she will make available the agreement relating to the use of water by the owner of the tannery at Shrigley, which formed part of the original planning permission for the tannery.

(AQW 1409/07)

Mrs Foster: I understand the original planning permission for the tannery was granted prior to 1973, the date my Department became responsible for planning, and regret that Planning Service has no record of an agreement relating to the use of water by the tannery within any of its files.

However, there are references in two previous planning approvals to the factory water supply being an 'existing gravity feed via Clea Lakes' to which, according to an application form in 1986, the tannery had water rights.

Promotion of Recycling Initiatives

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she has taken to promote recycling initiatives in North Belfast.

(AQW 1410/07)

Mrs Foster: The Department of the Environment's role in promoting recycling initiatives is Northern Ireland wide, rather than focused on any specific area. The Environment and Heritage Service has provided waste management grant funding to Belfast City Council, enabling it to purchase household recycling bins. In addition, it provides support to organisations such as Bryson House and Sustainable NI, who work with young people and communities to promote the reduce, reuse, recycling message developed in the Wake Up to Waste campaign. The Environment and Heritage Service's education officers, based in its Country Parks and Countryside Centres, reinforce the work of Belfast City Council's waste education team, who offer visits and activities to all schools and community groups in Belfast.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Regional Economic Strategy

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to finalise a Regional Economic Strategy, in advance of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

(AQW 1143/07)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Robinson): The redrafting of the Regional Economic Strategy will now await the outcome of the ongoing Varney Review. The recommendations of this Review will be critical to the future economic development of Northern Ireland. Sir David Varney is scheduled to report in September, which will align with the Executive releasing its draft Budget to public consultation.

Disabled Person's Allowance

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of applications for Disabled Person's Allowance, under the new capital values systems, that (a) have been processed and awarded; and (b) are awaiting processing.
(AQW 1269/07)

Mr Robinson: All ratepayers already in receipt of Disabled Person's Allowance under the old Net Annual Value (NAV) system have been automatically awarded the Allowance using the new basis under the capital values system. In respect of new applications received under the capital values system, (a) 400 have been processed but none have yet been awarded; and (b) 872 are awaiting processing following initial sifting.

Disabled Person's Allowance

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action his department is taking to reduce the backlog of applications for Disabled Person's Allowance, currently being processed by the Land and Property Services.
(AQW 1277/07)

Mr Robinson: A backlog of 1,179 cases from the period September 2006 to 31 March 2007 built up as Land & Property Service awaited the completion in June 2007 of the module within its new IT system to allow the processing of new applications for Disabled Person's Allowance. The staff resource available to process applications has also been increased and some 868 cases from this period have been completed. I expect that all backlogs will be substantially cleared by the end of September 2007.

Recruitment to and Promotion within NICS for over 55s

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel further to his answer to question AQW 635/07, what percentage of (a) those people recruited; and (b) those people promoted, in Northern Ireland Civil Service departments, were aged 55 or over at the time.
(AQW 1282/07)

Mr Robinson: Figures are based on all those who were aged 55 or over at the time of their recruitment into, or promotion in, the 11 NI Departments of the Northern Ireland Civil Service, expressed as a percentage of the total number of staff promoted or recruited in each year.

RECRUITED INTO THE 11 NI DEPARTMENTS 2004, 2005 & 2006. FIGURES ARE FOR ALL STAFF (PERMANENT, CASUAL AND INDUSTRIAL)

	Promotion		Recruitment
	No.	%	No.	%
2004	25	2.2%	37	1.3%
2005	10	3.4%	55	2.5%
2006	12	1.2%	23	1.2%

Water Charges

Mr David McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the amount of funding, for the years 2008/09 and 2009/10, that his department has secured for the Department of Regional Development, so that it is adequately resourced to offset water charges.
(AQW 1296/07)

Mr Robinson: On 10 May, the Executive agreed to the deferral of water and sewerage charges in this financial year (2007-08). The Executive also decided to conduct a comprehensive review to address the longer term approach that should be adopted in relation to financing water and sewerage services. The position for 2008-09 and beyond, and the associated financial implications, will be considered following the conclusion of this review.

Default Retirement Age

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what facility currently exists for members of staff in his department to work in their current post, beyond the default retirement age.
(AQW 1339/07)

Mr Robinson: Since 1 October 2006 staff wanting to continue working beyond the default retirement age of 65 can apply to do so. Until the NICS policy has been finalised all such applications are automatically approved for periods of up to 6 months, and extended at up to 6 monthly intervals (subject to the normal performance and attendance requirements).

Departmental Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by his department in each of the last two years; and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys.
(AQW 1344/07)

Mr Robinson: The table below details the number of staff surveys carried out in the last two years and the total cost.

	05/06	06/07
Staff Surveys	2	1
		Total Cost	£5,024.11

Rates Review

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will consider, as part of the rates review, granting rates relief to residents living beside, or near, late night entertainment centres.

(AQW 1411/07)

Mr Robinson: Proximity to a late night entertainment centre should already be reflected in the local sales evidence used to determine the capital value rating assessment upon which rates bills are now based.

If a resident, however, feels that it has not been adequately reflected in his/her capital value, or the late night entertainment centre has only recently been opened, he/she can ask for it to be reviewed by Land and Property Services.

Departmental Funding

Mr Alex Attwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (a) the financial pressures identified by each Northern Ireland Government Department; and (b) a breakdown of the quarterly returns each department provided to his department at the end of the first quarter of 2007/08. (AQW 1435/07)

Mr Robinson: As a consequence of the opening position inherited by the Executive for 2007-08, and in particular the level of planned overcommitment, departments were not asked to identify pressures in their June Monitoring returns as it was anticipated that there would be no resources available for reallocation.

Details of reduced requirements, internal reallocations and reclassifications, identified by departments and approved by the Executive as part of the June Monitoring round are set out in the attached tables.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

costs to Northern Ireland, including alcohol related crime, were estimated at £777 million in the same report.

Strategy for Reducing Alcohol Related Harm

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount that alcohol related illness is costing the National Health Service in Northern Ireland, on an annual basis.

(AQW 1027/07)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The Strategy for Reducing Alcohol Related Harm was published by DHSSPS in September 2000 and estimated that the social costs to the HPSS were £25.1million, including £3.5million in occupied psychiatric bed days; £8.8 million in occupied acute bed days; and £12.8 million in general practice costs. Total direct and indirect

Lip-Reading Classes

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of the value of lip reading classes as a method of rehabilitation for those who have lost their hearing, or whose hearing is declining. (AQW 1172/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Anecdotal evidence and feedback received suggests that those who attend lip-reading classes provided in Health and Social Service Board areas find them valuable, not only in terms of what they learn to help facilitate communication, but also in terms of friendship, support, and the confidence it gives them to cope with hearing loss, or hearing that is declining. It supports the view that the classes contribute to rehabilitation and in helping to reduce isolation.

Acute Hospitals

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are his plans to provide vital acute or emergency life saving hospital services for the people of Co. Tyrone. (AQW 1189/07)

Mr McGimpsey: In February 2003 Des Browne announced a new configuration of acute hospitals for Northern Ireland. His announcement on Developing Better Services (DBS) included the decision to develop a new acute hospital for the South West to be located to the north of Enniskillen. He also announced that the Tyrone County Hospital (TCH) would evolve into a local hospital.

These two new hospitals, together with enhanced primary and community care services, will provide the people of the south west, including those in Co. Tyrone, with high quality health services designed to meet their needs.

During the transition towards the implementation of DBS, people in Co Tyrone will normally access acute or emergency life saving hospital services from Altnagelvin or the Erne Hospitals. Some acute services, including inpatient medicine and cardiology, and an Urgent Care and Treatment Centre, continue to be provided at Tyrone County Hospital.

Patients who require highly specialised or regional services will continue to be referred to a hospital which can provide the expertise to effectively manage their condition

Provision of Lip-Reading Classes

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will produce a strategy for the provision of lip-reading classes, on a region-wide basis, through local Health and Social Care Trusts. (AQW 1194/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There are no plans to produce such a strategy. However, services for the deaf and hearing impaired are being considered as part of a Physical and Sensory Disability Strategy, which is currently being developed by my Department.

Acute Hospitals

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he will take to provide acute hospital services for children in County Tyrone. (AQW 1204/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Acute hospitals services for children in Co Tyrone are currently, and will continue to be provided in the Erne and Altnagelvin Hospitals. These acute services are supported by a range of services provided for children in Tyrone County Hospital including ambulatory paediatrics, day surgery and outpatients.

Children who require highly specialised or regional services will continue to be referred to a hospital which can provide the expertise to effectively manage their condition. In the majority of cases this will be the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children.

Altnagelvin Area Hospital Cancer Unit

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will make a statement regarding the future of the cancer treatment unit at Altnagelvin hospital. (AQW 1225/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The cancer unit in Altnagelvin Area Hospital is one of five cancer units in Northern Ireland which were established following the Campbell Report, Cancer Services – Investing in the Future, published in 1996.

The cancer units deal with the more common cancers arising in their local population, and the cancer unit in Altnagelvin will continue to provide a range of high quality, comprehensive care and treatment services.

Waiting Lists for Home Lifts

Mrs Claire McGill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will investigate the delay in the release of funding for the installation of stair lifts in 16 homes in the former Sperrin Lakeland Trust area; and if he will ensure that the necessary funding is released, as a matter of urgency, to allow these adaptations to proceed. (AQW 1227/07)

Mr McGimpsey: At present there are 18 clients awaiting home lifts to be installed within the Southern Sector of the Western Trust. Feasibility inspection reports have been completed and costs identified. The Trust's Corporate Management Team and Western Health & Social Services Board commissioners are being asked to consider if any additional in-year funding can be made available to address this outstanding waiting list.

The Trust continues to target those in greatest need but difficult decisions must be taken to ensure that resources are allocated in the most effective and efficient means to meet the requirements of those most in need.

Public Transport Access to Antrim Area Hospital

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he is aware of the difficulties and expense incurred by patients and relatives accessing Antrim Area Hospital by public transport from Newtownabbey and Carrickfergus. (AQW 1255/07)

Mr McGimpsey: A range of public transport services are available from Antrim Area Hospital to Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey. A direct service operates on weekdays from Carrickfergus and supplements a range of scheduled daily services to the Hospital via either Larne or Belfast.

My Department has made financial help available through the Hospital Travel Costs Scheme (HTCS) which provides assistance with the cost of travel to hospital for patients who are in receipt of benefits or on a low income. The assessment of entitlement is carried out by the individual's local Social Security Office or Jobs and Benefits Office.

The Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme, which provides discounted fares, will also be of assistance to those travelling on public transport.

People who are eligible under this scheme include the over 65's, those registered blind or partially sighted, children and those receiving a war disablement pension.

DHSSPS Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by his department in each of the last two years, and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys. (AQW 1259/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The last staff attitude survey undertaken by the Department was in April/May 2005. The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) were commissioned to undertake the survey. The survey was an on-line survey and cost £8k.

The Occupational Health Service carried out a Workforce Health and Well-Being survey in May/June 2005 across the NICS with the assistance of NISRA. This was a paper survey and the cost to this Department for the survey amounted to £3,850.

Private Finance Initiatives

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of Private Finance Initiatives for funding health projects in England; and to make a statement on the lessons that can be learned in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1266/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The number and total capital value of PFI projects has increased in recent years.

In July 2003 the HM Treasury laid out its approach to continued use of PFI in its policy document PFI: Meeting the Investment Challenge outlining PFIs contribution to improving public services through increased investment and reform. The Treasury presented evidence of the use of PFI's delivering the construction of vital new facilities on time and at the cost contracted for.

The independent report by the National Audit Office PFI: Construction Performance (February 2003) also concluded that PFI in most cases delivered price certainty for departments and timely delivery of good quality assets.

In March 2006, the Treasury commissioned research on the performance of 100 operational PFI projects across all sectors, including health. It demonstrated that they are in the main working well, although there are some areas for improvement and some projects have not been as successful as expected.

Clearly some PFI projects have not been successes. Well-publicised problems have arisen with a small number of PFI projects, with problems ranging from over-ambitious plans and affordability problems, poorly negotiated contracts, ill thought out financial or business models, and poor public sector service planning. In some cases PFI has been used where experience has clearly proven it is not best suited, such as with ICT projects.

It is a matter of good practice that we continually learn lessons from previous PFI projects in the UK and elsewhere, as indeed we should always seek to improve our public sector procurement processes generally. This is no less important with PFI.

Among the lessons learned that we can apply in Northern Ireland are:

- The measure of success for the use of PFI must be that it delivers value for money, but never at the expense of the terms and conditions of NHS staff.
- We must ensure the detailed scope of PFI project requirements is clear and well planned before procurement commences.
- We must ensure prior to commencing procurement that projects are affordable and can deliver value for money.
- We must ensure that we only use the PFI procurement route where it is suitable and appropriate in terms of project size, scope, and capacity to deliver value for money in accordance with HM Treasury guidelines.

- We must continue to use, and further develop, the Exemplar Design process, developed in Northern Ireland by Health Estates Agency for PFI projects, and thus ensure more robust costing and planning of projects. This approach is now being adopted in GB as best practice by HM Treasury.
- We must ensure high standards of contract management in the public sector in order to achieve a high performance by the PFI operator throughout the period of the contract period.

Foreign Nationals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of foreign nationals treated for alcohol related injuries or illnesses in the A&E Departments of each hospital in Northern Ireland, in each year for the last five years. (AQW 1270/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of foreign nationals treated for alcohol related injuries or illnesses in the A&E Departments of each hospital in Northern Ireland, in each year for the last five years is not available.

Drug Misuse

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans his department has to deal with drug abuse in North Down. (AQW 1271/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The New Strategic Direction for Alcohol & Drugs (NSD) launched by my Department in May 2006 contains a number of proposed outcomes in relation to addressing drug misuse across Northern Ireland.

In support of the NSD, the Eastern Drugs & Alcohol Co-ordination Team outlined its proposals for addressing alcohol and drug misuse across the whole of the Eastern Board area in its Local Action Plan. A range of additional programmes have subsequently been put in place to support the local implementation of the NSD covering the 18-month period October 2006 to March 2008.

These include counselling and mentoring services for under-18s, targeted education and prevention work, training and community support, as well as family support services. In addition, at a local level, the Eastern Health & Social Services Board is responsible for the commissioning of adult treatment services based on its assessment of the level of need.

Early Support Services for Deaf Children

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the draft principles for early support services for deaf children, tabled at the Regional Newborn Hearing Screening Group meeting on 28 November 2005, will be approved and taken forward, in partnership with the Department of Education. (AQW 1273/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The draft principles are being considered as part of the Physical and Sensory Disability Strategy, which is currently being developed by my Department. My officials continue to work collaboratively with the Department of Education in taking forward the work of the Newborn Hearing Screening Programme Steering Group.

Early Years Support for Deaf Children

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give an update on his department's input into the development of an inter-departmental strategy on early years support services for deaf children, identified through the Newborn Hearing Screening Programme, which was introduced in 2005. (AQW 1274/07)

Mr McGimpsey: A Support Services Sub-group of the Newborn Hearing Screening Programme (NHSP) Steering Group, comprising representatives from my Department, the Department of Education (DE) and the voluntary sector was set up. As part of the work of this sub-group, DE commissioned an audit of existing provision in relation to the impact of the NHSP on Educational Services for the Hearing Impaired. The key findings of the DE audit, which was completed in March 2006, indicate that existing Education and Library Boards (ELBs) Hearing Impaired Services can cope with an increased demand. DE has asked the ELBs to continue to keep the resources required for the impact of the NHSP under review.

An initial audit of current service delivery in respect of family support and multi-agency working was also carried out by the sub-group. Following this, Family Friendly Development days were held with the multidisciplinary teams from every children's hearing service and paediatric hearing service site in Northern Ireland and more than 150 professionals attended. Recommendations emanating from this audit are being considered as part of the Physical and Sensory Disability Strategy, which is currently being developed by my Department.

Drug and Alcohol Co-Ordination Teams

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount of funding his department has allocated to community groups involved in anti-drugs initiatives, broken down by parliamentary constituency, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1279/07)

Mr McGimpsey: We are unable to provide the information in the manner requested.

The following Table shows the breakdown of funding allocated to the local Drug and Alcohol Co-ordination Teams from DHSSPSNI in respect of the Alcohol and Drugs Budget for the last five years which includes funding to community and voluntary based organisations.

Omagh Health Services

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are his proposals for health professionals in the Omagh area to deliver acute services. (AQW 1297/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Health services in Omagh are, and will continue to be, delivered by a wide range of professionals including primary care teams, allied health professionals, dental practitioners, pharmacists, hospital clinical staff and the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS).

Our future plans include the provision of two new hospitals in the South West, a new acute hospital to the north of Enniskillen and a new local hospital at Omagh. The hospital at Omagh will provide a wide range of services including urgent care, outpatients, diagnostics, some inpatient provision, day surgery and renal dialysis. These services will be delivered as necessary by a wide range of health professionals.

Health Care Services in Co Tyrone

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of the health care situation in Co. Tyrone, compared to that in other areas of Northern Ireland. (AQW 1298/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Equality of access to health care services for all within Northern Ireland is a priority for my Department, and my officials continue to develop policy that will deliver modern high quality services to the whole population, including those in Co. Tyrone.

In support of this aim I am fully committed to progressing the implementation of Developing Better Services and the provision of high quality hospital services for the population of Northern Ireland, including the South West. The significant investment being spent on two state of the art hospitals, a local hospital in Omagh and an acute hospital to the North of Enniskillen, will, in conjunction with enhanced primary and community care services, allow us to continue to provide modern, high quality services for the 21st century designed to meet patient needs.

GP Recruitment in Co Tyrone

Dr Kieran Deeny asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of the impact that the closure of the three acute hospitals (Omagh, Magherafelt and Dungannon) providing for the people of Co. Tyrone is having on GP recruitment in the area. (AQW 1299/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Western Health and Social Services Board has confirmed that it has not experienced difficulties in the recruitment of GPs by practices in the Co Tyrone area.

However, to allow for the further development of primary and community care services, my Department has taken steps to increase the numbers of GP training places, and additional investment over the next three years will see a yearly increase in the annual output of trained GPs. In 2007/08 funding has been provided for 55 training places, rising to 65 by 2009/10.

Satellite Cancer Centre in the North-West

Mr Pat Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with his counterpart in the Republic of Ireland regarding the establishment of a satellite cancer centre in the north west. (AQW 1306/07)

Mr McGimpsey: I have had no discussions with the Irish Minister for Health and Children about the establishment of a satellite cancer centre in the north west.

Specialist regional services for cancer in Northern Ireland, including radiotherapy services, are provided by the Cancer Centre at Belfast City Hospital (BCH), which opened in March last year. The Cancer Centre was developed to meet Northern Ireland's needs with respect to radiotherapy until 2015.

My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Health and Children, is currently assessing the potential of further collaboration and co-operation to improve the health of the population and the provision of health services for people in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. The provision of cancer services is one area that will be explored within that process.

Response Times for Queries

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his proposals to ensure that the Northern Health and Social Care Trust puts in place an effective system of communication with specific timescales within which responses to letters, emails and telephone calls should issue.

(AQW 1309/07)

Mr McGimpsey: I have delegated the responsibility for answering this question to the Chief Executive of the Northern Health and Social Care Trust. I understand that she has replied as follows:

The Northern Health and Social Services Trust strives to ensure that all letters, emails and phone calls that are received are responded to as quickly as possible.

We attempt to deal with all enquiries from MLAs in relation to specific cases as quickly as possible, taking into consideration the individual circumstances of the case. However, the maximum time for responses to be made would be 20 working days, in accordance with the timescales laid down within the Complaints Procedure.

As advised in my email to you on 29 June 2007, I would ask you to process any correspondence or phone calls through my office at Trust Headquarters and I will ensure that a prompt response will be made and, where the nature of the enquiry may require time to compile, you will be kept advised.

Prevention and Awareness of Fraud

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to report on the steps taken to prevent fraud arising out of compensation claims against Health and Social Services Boards, Health and Social Care Trusts and other agencies. (AQW 1316/07)

Mr McGimpsey: In addition to general guidance on fraud awareness and prevention the Department has put in place measures to ensure financial probity when HSC organisations are handling claims. HSS Boards and HSC Trusts and agencies are expected to report their compliance rates against controls assurance standards and these are audited on an annual basis.

Respite Care

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the criteria that must be met to qualify for respite care; which organisation determines the criteria; and what measures are in place to ensure that assessments for respite care are subject to section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. (AQW 1321/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The need for all social care services is subject to individual assessment by the appropriate professional staff against agreed criteria. Health and Social care Trusts agree access criteria with their Health and Social Care Boards to reflect local levels of need and the availability of resources. Respite care is just one of the needs that may be identified as part of a care assessment. As with all public bodies, Health and Social Care Boards and Trusts are required to comply with the requirements of Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 in carrying out their functions, including assessment of care needs.

Review of Clinical Pathology Service

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail whether his department has carried out an impact assessment on the provision of health-related services if the pathology laboratory at Altnagelvin Hospital is centralised to a location in Belfast or Dundonald; and what is his assessment of the impact upon patients in the north-west region, in the absence of such a service. (AQW 1332/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There is no proposal to relocate the pathology laboratory at Altnagelvin Area Hospital to Belfast or Dundonald.

On 28 November 2006 the Department issued for consultation the recommendations of a review of clinical pathology laboratory services in Northern Ireland. The report of the review makes twenty-three recommendations which aim to ensure the sustainability of high quality hospital laboratory services across Northern Ireland. Included in the recommendations are proposals for reconfiguration of the current service delivery profile.

Under the proposals, all pathology services currently provided at Altnagelvin Area Hospital would continue to be provided there on the present basis with the exception of histopathology and cytopathology services where, it is proposed, that a single laboratory in Belfast should provide services to the whole of Northern Ireland. An integrated team of pathologists, clinical scientists, biomedical scientists and cytoscreeners would provide a service across the region, with part of that team permanently located at Altnagelvin Area Hospital. Large acute hospitals, including Altnagelvin, would retain facilities for urgent diagnostic work in these specialties.

The consultation period on the Pathology Review ended on 28 February 2007 and the Department is currently considering the responses. Final recommendations on the review will be announced later in the year.

Burials in Grounds at Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of people who lie buried in the grounds of the Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital in Omagh; (b) the planned timetable and process for the exhumation and reburial of these bodies; and (c) whether the records for, or identities of, those buried in the grounds are known to his department. (AQW 1333/07)

Mr McGimpsey: A survey of the Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital site commissioned by the Western Health and Social Care Trust has indicated that at least 140 unmarked graves may be present in a small portion of the site which is unconsecrated ground. Further work is currently in progress to establish the total number of people who have been buried there.

The timing and details of an exhumation and reburial process cannot be finalised at this time until further evidential information is gathered under archaeological license.

Some details of identities of those buried in the grounds have been found in the Hospital Chaplaincy records but many of these are incomplete. As part of the exhumation and reburial process, procedures will be put in place, in conjunction with the archaeological team, to gather and record available information on all remains found.

Legal Service Fraud

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list those solicitors known to have defrauded (a) Health and Social Care Trusts; and (b) Health and Social Services Boards, in cases where the solicitors were acting on behalf of these organisations; and to outline the steps taken to recover associated monies. (AQW 1379/07)

Mr McGimpsey: There has been one case of suspected fraud involving the senior partner in Brangham and Bagnall solicitors which provided legal services to a number of HSS Trusts and one HSS Board. Following a forensic investigation, a firm of solicitors acting on behalf of the Department and the HPSS has initiated civil proceedings to recoup the losses through the insurance protection scheme in respect of the legal profession. This action is currently ongoing.

Waiting Times

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average time a patient who has self-harmed, and presents in an Accident and Emergency department, waits to see a psychiatrist; and to outline, broken down by parliamentary constituency, the number of such patients that were discharged without a referral to a psychiatrist. (AQW 1397/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1397/07, by the 23 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Nursing Staff

Ms Sue Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount of money that is paid to agencies for the supply of nursing staff, across all hospitals in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1404/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question, AQW 1404/07, by the 23 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Suicides in Craigavon Area

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the recent suicides in the Craigavon area, to detail the resources that have been, and will be in the future, allocated to the area to provide counselling and other advisory services to young people; and what discussions he has had with the Minister of Education regarding the provision of a quality counselling service in this area.

(AQW 1429/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1429/07, by the 24 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Health Centre in Trillick

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the schedule for the delivery of a new health centre in Trillick, Co. Tyrone; and to provide detail on the budget being made available for this project.
(AQW 1442/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1442/07, by the 24 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Cushendall Fire Station

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of the feasibility of combining Cushendall Fire Station with an ambulance station, when it is rebuilt.
(AQW 1443/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1443/07, by the 24 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Ambulance Times

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to comment on an incident on 25 June 2007, when the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service took almost two hours to transport an injured child from Glenarm to Antrim Hospital.
(AQW 1445/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1445/07, by the 24 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Ambulance Cover

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he recognises that there is a shortage of ambulance cover in North and East Antrim; and if he has any plans to increase that cover.

(AQW 1446/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1446/07, by the 24 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

Blood Samples

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail whether blood samples of local haemophiliac patients are being tested, without their knowledge, for variant CJD.
(AQW 1461/07)

Mr McGimpsey: It will not be possible to reply substantively to your Written Assembly Question AQW 1461/07, by the 24 July 2007. I will reply before the end of recess.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bus Lay-bys and Shelters

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail, for each of the last three years, the amount spent by his department on (a) improving bus services; (b) providing, repairing or improving bus lay-bys and shelters; (c) establishing new conventional bus services linking isolated communities to villages and towns; and (d) developing innovative demand-responsive services for residents in deep rural areas in (i) Craigavon Borough Council area; and (ii) Banbridge District Council area.
(AQW 930/07)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): I understand that my Department's Roads Service has spent approximately £147,000 over the last three financial years in providing and improving bus lay-bys and shelters in the Craigavon and Banbridge Council areas. The breakdown of this investment, which involves improving linkages to bus shelters, is as follows:

Council Area	Year	Costs	Measures
Craigavon Borough Council	2006/07	£32,000	Bus lay-bys have been provided at Drumgor 2 and Tullygalley East.

Affordable Housing

Mr Declan O’Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans she has to set a planning policy to allow for affordable housing in the North Coast area, with particular reference to the mid-Glens area. (AQW 1094/07)

Mr Murphy: The Department for Regional Development has lead responsibility for regional planning policy on the provision of affordable housing through the planning system. Accordingly, your question has been passed to me to answer.

In response to the growing affordability issue and complexity of the problem, the Government commissioned Sir John Semple to undertake an independent review into affordable housing in September 2006. His report, published on 4 April 2007, contained eighty wide-ranging recommendations which impact on a number of Departments. The Minister for Social Development has agreed to Chair an Interdepartmental Group to consider the Semple recommendations in greater detail and focus effort on progressing those recommendations which are accepted.

Existing regional planning policy is set out within Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 12 – ‘Housing in Settlements’ published in July 2005. PPS 12 explained that it was not considered appropriate at that time to impose an arbitrary level of affordable housing to be delivered by the private market. However, if the situation warranted, mechanisms to address affordable housing would be considered further (PPS 12, Para 51). Officials in my Department have been liaising with colleagues in the Department for Social Development, Department of the Environment (DOE), and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to consider the need to revise PPS 12. Consideration is being given to the need for a broader definition of affordability, and to the most appropriate mechanism to secure affordable housing through the planning system. This work will need to take account of the advice of the Interdepartmental Group which is considering the Semple recommendations.

At present the primary vehicle to facilitate a local supply of affordable housing is through the identification of land for social housing purposes in development plans prepared by DOE Planning Service. The North Coast and the Mid-Glens area are covered by the North East Area Plan 2002 and the Draft Northern Area Plan 2016. The latter, which was published prior to PPS 12, contains Policy HOU 5 – Meeting Community Housing Needs. This seeks to address social or specialist housing needs where there is an identified need and it also makes reference to the broader issue of affordable housing. These matters

	2005/06	£41,200	Bus lay-bys have been provided at Drumgor 1, Moyraverty Road, Main Street Waringstown and Lake Street Lurgan Footway Link.
	2004/05	£46,800	Bus lay-bys have been provided at Drumlyn Hill, Drumgor 1, Belfast Road Dollingstown, Long Lane, Levin Road Lurgan.
Banbridge District Council	2006/07	£21,000	A bus stop and lay-by have been provided at Lawrencetown.
	2005/06	£6,000	A bus lay-by has been provided at Ballybrick/ Glenburn/ Mays Corner.
	2004/05	£Nil

I am advised that the provision and maintenance of bus shelters by Roads Service is carried out through a contract with a private advertising company, at no cost to Roads Service.

During the past three years my Department has provided support to road passenger services as follows:

Year	Amount
2004/05	£36,967,000
2005/06	£58,132,000
2006/07	£61,214,000

Part of this expenditure has been aimed specifically at residents of the two council areas.

My Department has supported the provision of services for residents in deep rural parts of the Council area through providing Rural Transport Funding to Down Armagh Rural Transport as follows:

Year	Amount
2004/05	£56,000
2005/06	£63,125
2006/07	£82,275

In 2006/07 my Department spent £10,911 on door-to-door transport services in the Craigavon urban area and £16,912 in the Banbridge urban area. The door to door scheme is a transport service for people living in urban areas (defined as areas whose population is in excess of 10,000) who, through disability, find it difficult or impossible to use mainstream public transport.

will be addressed at an independent examination of the draft Plan that will be conducted in public.

Resurfacing in Castle Street, Comber

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to upgrade the footpath, kerbs and carriageway at Castle Street, Comber. (AQW 1131/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that, in general, the footways and carriageways in Castle Street, Comber, are in reasonable condition. However, numerous service openings over the years, particularly in the southern side footway detract from its appearance. Roads Service is also concerned about vehicles mounting the footway at some of the narrower sections of Castle Street to pass oncoming traffic.

In order to address this situation, Roads Service has plans to raise the kerbing and resurface the footway along the southern footway of Castle Street. While it would wish to undertake the work in this financial year, staff have been made aware of possible works in the area by two utilities. You will appreciate that in these circumstances, Roads Service would be reluctant to commence the scheme until the utility work has been completed in order to avoid a situation where a newly surfaced footway is re-excavated so soon after completion. Contact is being made with the utilities with a view to having their work brought forward if possible.

Finally, I am further advised that there are no plans to resurface the carriageway in Castle Street at this time.

Road Safety on the A43 Cushendall Road

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale for completion of the footpath from Martinstown to the local church. (AQW 1157/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service is aware of concerns over road safety issues on the A43 Cushendall Road and has been monitoring the safety record of the road.

The provision of a footway on the A43 from Martinstown to the Chapel has been included in the programme to be undertaken this financial year.

In addition a collision remedial scheme at the location of the fatal collision that occurred on New Year's Day 2007, near Cargan, is also programmed to be undertaken this financial year. Work will include the provision of kerbing, resurfacing and additional warning signage.

A route study is currently being carried out on the A43 to identify any further warning signage or road markings that may be appropriate to ensure that drivers are fully aware of the road layout. Any works identified will be addressed during this financial year.

Signs in Glarryford Area

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which the new directional signage for Rasharkin will be erected at the Frosses Road/Station Road (Glarryford) junction. (AQW 1158/07)

Mr Murphy: I am pleased to inform you that my Department's Roads Service has confirmed that the new direction sign to Rasharkin at Frosses Road / Station Road, Glarryford, was erected on 2 July 2007. This sign complements a series of other new direction signs recently erected within the Glarryford area.

Erection of Advertising Signs

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of occasions, in each of the last five years, that Roads Service has (a) removed illegal advertisements from Roads Service property; and (b) directed the removal of illegal advertisements from Roads Service property. (AQW 1182/07)

Mr Murphy: As you may be aware, the erection of advertising signs, without lawful authority, within the curtilage of a public road is an offence under The Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993. Under the Order, my Department's Roads Service may remove any such signs and may recover any expenses reasonably incurred. The erection of such signs can be unsightly, can create a distraction for road users and can be dangerous to pedestrians and cyclists.

In general Roads Service aims to have the signs removed as soon as possible and local personnel undertake periodic checks to identify offences. If resources permit, an attempt may be made to have the signs removed by agreement. However, on occasions, particularly in urban areas where there may be extensive violations, Roads Service may take immediate action to have the offending signs removed without consultation.

In relation to part (a) of your question, I am advised that within Roads Service's Eastern Division, where the erection of such signs is a particular problem, a means of recording the unlawful signs removed was introduced in 2005. In the other three divisions, where the problem is not as acute, details are not retained. However, it has been possible to provide an estimate of the numbers involved in those divisions. These figures are summarised in the table below:

	No of Signs Removed Northern	Southern	Eastern	Western
2005/06	-	-	4780	-
2006/07	1700*	1500*	4557	1175*
2007/08 to date	-	-	1660	-

* Estimated figure.

Details of the number of occasions when Roads Service directed the removal of illegal advertisements are not held.

Erection of Flags

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of occasions, in each of the last five years, that Roads Service has (a) removed illegally erected national flags from Roads Service property; and (b) directed the removal of illegally erected national flags from Roads Service property. (AQW 1184/07)

Mr Murphy: First of all, I should explain that my Department's Roads Service has signed up to the Multi Agency Protocol, arising from 'A Shared Future' – the policy and strategic framework for good relations in Northern Ireland. This protocol, which was published by the Government on 4 April 2005, addresses the issue of the display of flags in public areas. The aim of the Protocol is to provide a proactive approach, with support from communities and their representatives, to address the removal of flags from arterial routes, town centres and from particular locations, such as interface areas or near schools, hospitals and churches.

The Protocol recognises that an effective resolution to the issues surrounding flags and emblems is more likely to be achieved through co-operation with local communities. It requires widespread community support, for the partnership established by the Protocol to be effective.

When inter agency consultation is required by the protocol, the Agency that is in the most effective position to consult, negotiate or resolve the situation will take the lead, with the Police Service of Northern Ireland assuming this responsibility where appropriate. The Police also take the lead where the display of any flags or emblems is causing tension, or having a detrimental affect on the quality of life in a community.

Under the protocol, Roads Service will, when called upon by the lead Agency, provide the access equipment and resources to remove unwanted flags, once agreement has been reached on their removal, particularly if their location proves to be inaccessible to members of the community concerned. In doing so, as a responsible employer, Roads Service has to take account of the possible risk to their workers in removing flags and emblems.

You may also be interested to know that research of flagging on arterial routes during July/September 2006 shows a decrease of almost 40% of symbols by the end of the reporting period. This includes flags, bannerettes and bunting.

With regard to the removal of illegally erected national flags, I must advise that Roads Service does not record the type or affiliation of illegally erected flags. However, the table below details the number of occasions that Roads Service has removed illegally erected flags from its property in the past three years (no records are held prior to 2004/05):

Year	No of Occasions when Roads Service removed illegal erected flags
2004-05	9
2005-06	20
2006-07	35

Erection of Flags

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of occasions, in each of the last five years, that Roads Service has (a) removed paramilitary flags or symbols from Roads Service property; and (b) directed the removal of paramilitary flags or symbols from Roads Service property. (AQW 1186/07)

Mr Murphy: I refer the Member to my recent reply to his Assembly Question AQW 1184/07 in which I explained the multi-agency protocol for the removal of illegally erected flags.

With regard to the removal of illegally erected paramilitary flags or symbols, I must advise that my Department's Roads Service does not record the type or affiliation of illegally erected flags or symbols. However, the table below details the number of occasions that Roads Service has removed illegally erected flags and symbols from its property in the past three years (no records are held prior to 2004/05):

Year	No of Occasions Roads Service removed illegal erected flags and symbols
2004-05	84
2005-06	39
2006-07	55

Bonfire Management

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development what are the responsibilities of the Roads Service in relation to bonfires that are erected on its property, in particular in relation to (a) public liability insurance in the event of a serious injury; (b) damage to ground; and (c) section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. (AQW 1188/07)

Mr Murphy: I can advise that my Department's Roads Service does not approve of, or support the unauthorised use of departmental property either for the siting of bonfires, or for the storage of bonfire materials. It is Roads Service policy to remove such material, particularly where there is a danger to road users or nearby residents. My Department has discretionary powers, contained in the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993, which deal with obstructions on an adopted highway. This does not, in law, make Roads Service liable to pay compensation to persons whose property is damaged. Liability for property damage rests with those responsible for erecting the bonfire.

While Roads Service would wish to respond as positively as possible to instances of this problem, taking into account its statutory obligations, including those arising under Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, there are some sensitive aspects to be considered.

Bonfire management is an interagency issue and it is not always easy to find quick fix solutions when problems arise. The support, co-operation and involvement of local communities is an important factor and this was recognised in the report of the interagency group which produced guidelines on bonfire management. A copy of the report can be found on the Department of the Environment's Environment and Heritage Service website: www.ehsni.gov.uk. A copy of this report is available in the library.

Roads Service's experience has been that many of the complaints received from the public are related to the stockpiling of materials on sites adjacent to public roads. In most cases, these sites are not owned by Roads Service. On occasions where the overspill from bonfire stockpiles obstructs the public road or footway, Roads Service will remove it or arrange for it to be pushed back off the road onto the bonfire site, in consultation with the police and local communities as necessary. However, Roads Service has a duty of care to its staff and the immediate and ongoing safety of personnel tasked with removal work is always taken into account in consultation with the police and other parties.

There are relatively few instances where bonfires are actually brought onto the public road for lighting. However, where bonfires are lit on or near the public road, Roads Service will arrange for burnt out debris to be removed and will carry out any repairs to carriageways, footways and street lights that may be needed.

Free Travel

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to extend the free bus and rail travel scheme to cover women at state pension age of 60. (AQW 1191/07)

Mr Murphy: I have no current plans to introduce free travel for women aged 60 and over. However, following a review of the Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme, I have made bids as part of the Budget 2007 process to secure the resources to extend the Scheme in a number of ways, including lowering the eligible age for free travel for all men and women to 60. Any extension of the scheme will be dependent upon securing the necessary resources which means that the case for such an extension will need to be considered alongside not only other possible changes to the scheme, but against many other spending priorities which will be put before the Executive later this year. An extension of the scheme would also require that both equality impact and public consultation processes were successfully completed.

Investment in Rail Network

Mr Mark Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will outline his department's expenditure on improving the railway line between Derry/Londonderry and Belfast, for each of the last three years; and to detail the amount his department intends to spend on this work in each of the next three years. (AQW 1207/07)

Mr Murphy: In 2003, the Railways Review Group (RRG) was established to consider the immediate investment needs of the NIR network and in particular, those of the lines north of Ballymena and Whitehead. As a result of the RRG report, Ministers agreed to provide total funding of £23.6 million (£17.2 million of which was capital) to maintain services on these lines at their present levels and to prevent deterioration. Further investment in the rail network was not envisaged until an assessment had been made of the benefits of the investment to date, including the purchase of the 23 new train sets. Accordingly, there has been no expenditure on improvements to the Derry line in the last three years.

However, Translink has recently submitted to the Department an economic appraisal of options in support of a £12.0 million project to deliver track life extension on parts of the Ballymena to Derry Line. This is currently being evaluated by the Department's Economists ahead of the business case being forwarded to DFP for approval. Meantime, problems have arisen on the line close to Ballymoney where wet beds are leading to deterioration of the track. This requires urgent attention to avoid speed restrictions or possibly closure. The Department has already approved a capital grant of £489,000 to enable this to be addressed.

With regard to the future, as part of an inter departmental working group, my Department has worked in conjunction with Northern Ireland Railways to examine a range of investment options for future railways provision. As a result, I have now submitted a bid for additional funding to upgrade the Derry line as part of the second Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland. Future levels of spending on the line and on the rail infrastructure generally will be considered by the Executive Committee in producing ISNI 2 and Budget 2007, and future budget allocations will therefore be set as a result of that process. I cannot predict the outcome at this stage but I am hopeful that it will be possible to invest on rail infrastructure generally and on the Derry line in particular to enable services to be improved.

Ballykelly and Dungiven Bypasses

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to specify a completion date for (a) the Ballykelly bypass; and (b) the Dungiven bypass.
(AQW 1229/07)

Mr Murphy:

(a) Ballykelly bypass

My Department's Roads Service advises that a bypass of Ballykelly is not currently included in their major works programme. However, a scheme was included in an additional £400 million package of proposed Strategic Road Improvement (SRI) schemes which was published for public consultation in 2006.

Work on the assessment of the expanded SRI Programme is at an advanced stage. However, as it has not yet been finalised, I am presently not in a position to advise on details of its content or timing.

(b) Dungiven bypass

Proposals for a bypass of Dungiven have been merged with plans to dual the A6 from east of Dungiven to Derry. Work on the development of the scheme has progressed and an initial report on the various corridor options has been completed. Roads Service proposes to commission consultants, imminently, to expand on this work and to bring forward a preferred route.

It is envisaged that it may take several years to complete the statutory procedures and, ultimately, the timing of the scheme will be dependant on the availability of funding. However, the scheme is currently planned to commence in the latter part of the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan period, which ends in 2015.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale for completion of repairs to the sewerage system at the junction of Tamblough Park, Ballykelly, and the main Derry/Londonderry to Limavady Road, to prevent the leakage of sewerage from a manhole at this location.
(AQW 1231/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issues raised are operational matters, I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to these questions.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to provide a mains water supply free of charge, to those rural residents still without a mains supply.
(AQW 1232/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issues raised are operational matters, I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to this question.

Cullybackey Bypass

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Regional Development when he will bring forward plans for a road bypass for Cullybackey.
(AQW 1252/07)

Mr Murphy: I would refer the Member to my recent answer to AQW 1025/07.

Rail Fares

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Regional Development what was the average rise in rail fares (a) across Northern Ireland; and (b) on the three busiest rail routes, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1257/07)

Mr Murphy: The average rise in rail fares in Northern Ireland, on local lines, in the last three years was as follows:

- 2007/08 No increase.
- 2006/07 10.0% increase.
- 2005/06 5.0% increase.

The three busiest rail routes in Northern Ireland in terms of passenger journeys are

- Portadown to Belfast;
- Bangor to Belfast; and
- Larne to Belfast.

The average rise in fares on these lines was the same as the Northern Ireland local line average.

Rail Routes

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Regional Development to detail the three busiest rail routes in Northern Ireland, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1260/07)

Mr Murphy: The three busiest rail routes in Northern Ireland in terms of passenger journeys are:

- Portadown to Belfast;
- Bangor to Belfast; and
- Larne to Belfast.

The passenger journeys on these routes for the last three years are as follows:

PASSENGER JOURNEYS (MILLIONS)

	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07

* the drop in Larne line passenger journeys in 2005/06 was the result of disruption to service caused by track relay.

Dualling of the A3 Portadown to Armagh Road

Mr William Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to extend the proposed dualling of the A3 Portadown to Armagh road, to cover the entire route. (AQW 1265/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service published a consultation document listing proposals to expand the Strategic Road Improvement Programme in July 2006. This expanded Programme contained proposals to construct a dual carriageway from Portadown to Richhill which is the more heavily trafficked section of this route. The schemes which were included were selected on the basis of environment, safety, economy, accessibility and integration (which are the Government's five key criteria for transportation projects).

The responses that the Department received to this consultation document are being considered at present, and included a request for a dual carriageway from Portadown to Armagh.

While this assessment is at an advanced stage it is not yet finalised, and I am therefore not in a position to confirm which schemes, including the extent of dualling on the A3, may be added to the current Strategic Road Improvement Programme.

Bonuses Payable to Northern Ireland Water Staff

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain why the bonuses payable to Northern Ireland Water staff for 2006/2007 were set by Northern Ireland Water, a private company, for employees who were civil servants in the year for which the bonuses were payable. (AQW 1267/07)

Mr Murphy: The assets and liabilities in respect of Water Service (including responsibility for bonuses payable to staff) were transferred to Northern Ireland Water Limited (NIW) on 1 April 2007. NIW staff who were NI Civil Servants, were covered by the NICS 2006/07 pay award, and who were eligible for bonus payments, have received bonuses in accordance with the terms of that settlement.

Traffic Calming Measures

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the feasibility of placing traffic calming measures on all roads outside schools, in order to enhance road safety for children. (AQW 1275/07)

Mr Murphy: The demand for traffic calming greatly exceeds the capacity of my Department's Roads Service to provide schemes. An assessment procedure enables Roads Service to identify sites where the greatest benefits may be achieved, primarily in terms of accident reduction.

Traffic calming is only considered on routes subject to a speed restriction. Other traffic management measures, such as signs and road markings, may, however, be used to improve road safety at locations where traffic calming is not considered appropriate. Hence, while traffic calming measures may be introduced in the vicinity of some schools, it is not considered feasible to place them on all roads outside schools.

The issue of safer travel to schools has been recognised and Roads Service, in partnership with the Department for Education, the Department of the Environment's Road Safety Branch, the Education and Library Boards, the Health Promotion Agency, Translink and Sustrans, is delivering the Travelwise NI, Safer Routes to Schools Initiative. This initiative, together with the Speed Management at Rural Schools initiative, which aims to introduce safety measures to manage speeds outside rural schools where the national speed limit (60mph) applies, encourages the increased use of sustainable travel options and ensures that journeys to school are safer.

In addition, the use of variable speed limits outside schools on rural roads, where the national speed limit applies, is being considered. The use of variable signs, which are displayed only when relevant, offers a way in which the drawbacks of permanent speed limits at schools can be minimised and may actually enhance driver acceptance of any restriction imposed. It is intended to establish pilot sites in 2008.

Parking Enforcement

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Regional Development what is the rationale behind the 'persistent offender' section of Parking Enforcement Unit; and to detail how such measures are implemented. (AQW 1280/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that there is no section within the Parking Enforcement Unit dealing specifically with 'persistent offenders'.

I can advise that it is intended to give consideration to clamping or removing the vehicles of people who persistently disregard parking and waiting restrictions, even if they pay their penalties. This would provide an additional deterrent to those people who are regularly prepared to park illegally and pay any penalty charges that this may incur. However, the main purpose of this clamping or removing vehicles facility would be to recover debts owed to Roads Service by people who have not paid their Penalty Charge Notices. The timescale for introducing such a facility, and the criteria for identifying persistent offenders, are currently under consideration.

Water and Sewerage Charges

Mr David McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount of funding, for the years 2008/09 and 2009/10, that his department will receive from the Department of Finance and Personnel, in order to offset water charges. (AQW 1293/07)

Mr Murphy: On 10 May, the Executive agreed to the deferral of water and sewerage charges in this financial year (2007/08). The Executive also decided to conduct a comprehensive review to address the longer term approach that should be adopted in relation to financing water and sewerage services. The funding requirements of the Department for Regional Development for 2008/09 and 2009/10 will be considered as part of the Budget 2007 process and should be informed by stage 1 of the Executive's review.

Display of Flags

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his plans for the removal of paramilitary flags and emblems, or any messages of support for such organisations, from lamp posts on public roads owned by his department. (AQW 1310/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has signed up to the Multi Agency Protocol, arising from 'A Shared Future' – the policy and strategic framework for good relations in Northern Ireland. This protocol, which was published by the Government on 4 April 2005, addresses the issue of the display of flags in public areas. The aim of the Protocol is to provide a pro-active approach, with support from communities and their representatives, to address the removal of flags from arterial routes, town centres and from particular locations, such as interface areas or near schools, hospitals and churches.

The Protocol recognises that an effective resolution to the issues surrounding flags and emblems is more likely to be achieved through co-operation with local communities. It requires widespread community support, for the partnership established by the Protocol to be effective.

When inter agency consultation is required by the protocol, the Agency that is in the most effective position to consult, negotiate or resolve the situation will take the lead, with the Police Service of Northern Ireland assuming this responsibility where appropriate. The Police also take the lead where the display of any flags or emblems is causing tension, or having a detrimental affect on the quality of life in a community.

Under the protocol, Roads Service will, when called upon by the lead Agency, provide the access equipment and resources to remove unwanted flags, once agreement has been reached on their removal, particularly if their location proves to be inaccessible to members of the community concerned. In doing so, as a responsible employer, Roads Service has to take account of the possible risk to their workers in removing flags and emblems.

You may also be interested to know that research of flagging on arterial routes during July/September 2006 shows a decrease of almost 40% of symbols by the end of the reporting period. This includes flags, bannerettes and bunting.

Knockmore Railway Line

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the number of trains that have used the Knockmore railway line since its discontinuation in 2003; (b) what types of trains these were; and (c) the date on which the last train travelled on the line. (AQW 1323/07)

Mr Murphy: The number of trains that have used the Knockmore line since 29 June 2003 (when the line ceased to be used for scheduled services) is 236.

The types of trains were:

- 194 trains used for training purposes (for new train drivers);
- 11 ballast trains (for infrastructure works);
- 24 passenger trains (using the line as a diversionary route in times of emergency), and;
- 7 empty trains (performing repositioning activities in support of the above mentioned passenger trains).

The date the last train travelled the line was 9 February 2007 (for training purposes).

Knockmore Railway Line

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his department's expenditure on maintaining the Knockmore railway line in (a) 2006; (b) 2005; (c) 2004; and (d) 2003. (AQW 1324/07)

Mr Murphy: Expenditure on maintaining the Knockmore railway line for the financial years in question was as follows:

2006/07	£109,000
2005/06	£120,000
2004/05	£171,000
2003/04	£121,000

Traffic Calming Measures

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his department's expenditure on traffic calming measures in (a) the Strangford constituency; and (b) the other 17 constituencies, in the 2007/08 and 2008/09 financial years. (AQW 1328/07)

Mr Murphy: Financial allocations for Traffic calming schemes follow the guidelines contained in the 10 year Regional Transportation Strategy.

The proposed spend in the Strangford constituency for 2007/08 is £30,000. The spend in the other 17 constituencies is planned at £2,270,000.

It is not possible to give accurate figures for our proposed expenditure on traffic calming measures in the financial year 2008/09, but it is anticipated that the total financial allocation for Roads Service will be similar to this year. The individual financial allocation for the Strangford constituency will be dependent upon the prioritising of proposed schemes in the constituency, in competition with other proposed schemes within the Roads Service division serving this geographical area.

Maintenance of Private Wells

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to ensure that Northern Ireland Water maintains the wells that provide the water supply to homes, draining water from the Clay Lakes at Shrigley, Killyleagh. (AQW 1335/07)

Mr Murphy: Northern Ireland Water is not responsible for maintaining private wells. The Department of the Environment has oversight of private supplies.

Street Lighting

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to install overhead street lighting from the entrance to the City of Derry/Londonderry airport on to the A2. (AQW 1337/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that there is street lighting on the access road from the City of Derry Airport to the main A2 Clooney Road including the junction on the A2. There are currently no plans to install any additional street lighting on the A2 at this location.

However, under proposals to dual the A2 from Maydown Roundabout to the City of Derry Airport, the proposed new junctions will include appropriate street lighting.

Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by his department in each of the last two years; and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys. (AQW 1346/07)

Mr Murphy: The Department for Regional Development conducted three staff surveys in 2005/2006 at a cost of £347. There were no surveys in 2006/2007.

Traffic Calming Measures

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development (a) what criteria is used to assess whether a location merits traffic calming measures; and (b) how are these locations prioritised. (AQW 1359/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service is committed to the achievement of the targets outlined in The Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy, through the implementation of road safety engineering measures and, in this context, we place high priority on the introduction of traffic calming schemes in residential areas.

Roads Service receives many requests for traffic calming schemes and, as demand greatly exceeds the capacity to supply these measures, priorities must be established. I should also explain that the funding for traffic calming measures is allocated on a Divisional basis and not by individual Council or Constituency area.

On receipt of a request for the provision of traffic calming measures, Roads Service will carry out an assessment of the area in question. The assessment procedure takes into account various factors such as; personal injury collision statistics; the volume, type and speed of vehicles using the road; environmental factors including the presence of schools, playgrounds, hospitals, clinics, shops, public buildings; and whether the road in question is used as a through route.

The findings of the assessment process are used to give each site a priority rating and list these in merit order. If a scheme is identified and included in Roads Service's traffic calming programme, implementation is subject to the successful completion of residents' consultation and legislative processes. If objections are received to proposals to traffic calm a particular road, it may mean that Roads Service will not be able to implement the scheme.

Bypass for Kilrea

Mr Adrian McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has for a bypass for Kilrea. (AQW 1361/07)

Mr Murphy: I should explain that the composition and delivery of the major works programme of my Department's Roads Service, is consistent with the level of investment proposed under the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland (ISNI), published in December 2005. The ISNI sets out a high level view of planned investment up to 2015, with proposals for up to £1.4 billion of strategic road improvement schemes. Around £1 billion of these schemes have already been identified and, with priorities focused on the key Transport Corridors, it was not possible to include a bypass for Kilrea within the substantial but finite level of funding available.

Roads Service is currently considering responses to a consultation exercise on a further £400m of major works proposals. Work on this reassessment is at an advanced stage, but it has not yet been finalised. Therefore I am not yet in a position to advise on the schemes which may be added to our programme.

Flooding in West Winds Estate, Newtownards

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of dealing with blockages and flooding in the drainage system in the West Winds estate, Newtownards. (AQW 1363/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised that it is unable to provide detailed costs of work associated with the flooding incidents in the West Winds Estate, Newtownards, arising as a result of blockages in the storm drainage systems.

Roads Service personnel responded to a number of flooding incidents in the area and costs incurred were not recorded specifically for each location.

I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it is unable to provide detailed costs of work associated with the flooding incidents in the West Winds Estate, Newtownards, arising as a result of blockages in the storm drainage systems as they are not responsible for all the sewers and drains within the estate and consequently any information provided would be incomplete.

Drainage System in West Winds Estate, Newtownards

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to replace the drainage system in the West Winds estate, Newtownards, with specific reference to the replacement of the current piping system. (AQW 1367/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issue raised is an operational matter, I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to this question.

Moss Road, Ballygowan

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development if an upgrade of the Moss Road, Ballygowan, is part of the Minor Works programme. (AQW 1378/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service advises that it had planned to resurface the Moss Road, but that the scheme had to be postponed, pending the completion of developer-led road works associated with a housing development adjacent to the Moss Road.

Roads Service also has an ongoing minor improvement scheme at Moss Road, to enhance the sightlines at the junction with the Ballykeigle Road.

There are no plans to carry out any other minor improvement schemes along this road at this time. I have, however, asked Roads Service officials to make contact with you to discuss any further improvement measures you have in mind.

Rural Planning Policy

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the rural planning policy in relation to replacement dwellings; and to detail whether the policy specifies that a single storey dwelling shall be replaced with a single storey dwelling. (AQW 1382/07)

Mr Murphy: Policy CTY 5 of draft Planning Policy Statement 14 'Sustainable Development in the Countryside' governs applications for 'replacement dwellings' in the countryside. This policy allows for a replacement dwelling where the visual impact would not be significantly greater than that of the existing dwelling and which takes into account the character of vernacular buildings in the locality. Approval to replace older dwellings deemed as examples of a vernacular tradition of building may be withheld although permission to upgrade rather than replace is likely.

Principal amongst the considerations in all cases is that residential use has not been abandoned. This is assessed by considering a number of matters, including:

- The physical condition of the dwelling;
- The period the dwelling has not been in use;
- Whether there has been any intervening use; and
- Evidence of the owner's intentions.

The policy does not specify that the replacement must be like-for-like, that is to say, replace a single storey with a single storey, but rather that the siting and design of the proposed new dwelling combine to ensure that an appropriate level of integration within the landscape is achieved and that the visual impact is not significantly greater than the existing dwelling house to be replaced. Each case is likely to be different and must therefore be considered on its individual merits.

Upgrading the A5/N2 Route

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to meet with Ministers in the Republic of Ireland's government, to secure early progress on the issue of upgrading the A5/N2 route from Derry/Londonderry to Dublin. (AQW 1394/07)

Mr Murphy: long with the Chancellor's package announced on 22 March, the Irish Government confirmed its intention to make available a contribution of £400million/€580million, to help fund an unprecedented package of infrastructure investment, including a major new roads programme to provide dual Acarriageway standard on routes within Northern Ireland serving the North West Gateway of Letterkenny/Derry and on the eastern seaboard corridor from Belfast to Larne.

The Northern Ireland Executive has confirmed its acceptance in principle to taking forward the development of these two major roadworks projects and the North / South Ministerial Council at its Plenary Meeting on 17 July 2007 agreed the proposed investment.

Resurfacing Scheme

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to resurface the Drumenny Road, from its junction with Ballinderry Bridge Road and the Diamond, Ardboe; and if he will give an indicative timescale for the completion of this work. (AQW 1414/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service have advised me that a resurfacing scheme on a 1 kilometre stretch of the Drumenny Road, between Mullan Road and Derrycrin Road, is planned for the 2008/2009 financial year. It is also planned to surface dress the 1.6 kilometres stretch, from Battery Road to the Diamond, in the 2008/2009 financial year.

A third stretch, of 0.75 kilometres in length, from Ballinderry Bridge Road to Mullan Road, is scheduled to be resurfaced after the completion of sewerage and housing development works, which is expected in the 2009/2010 financial year.

These three stretches, when completed and taken with resurfacing work carried out over the past 3 years, will see the complete length of the B161 Drumenny Road resurfaced.

Increase in Traffic Volume

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the increase of traffic volume in Northern Ireland, (a) overall; (b) in cities; and (c) in major towns, in the last five years; and to detail the projected traffic volume in five years' time. (AQW 1426/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service does not categorise traffic flows into groups such as traffic flow in cities or major towns, due to differences in the characteristics of traffic flows in different towns. Traffic flow is dependent on a number of factors, including the network of roads within the town and whether there is a major trunk road through the town (e.g. Dungiven). Therefore, some of the traffic on major roads within a town may not be solely a reflection of the characteristics of the town that the road passes through.

The increases in overall traffic volumes across Northern Ireland are provided in the table below.

Year	Overall % Increase
2006	Not yet available
2005	1.4%
2004	0.6%
2003	1.18%
2002	5.4%
2001	0.73%

The 10 year Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS), published in 2002, contains an estimate of traffic growth over the lifetime of the Strategy. Estimates made at that time suggested that traffic volumes would grow at under 2% per annum over the period 2002 - 2012. Roads Service continues to use this figure. This is comparable with National Rates of Traffic Growth for Great Britain which forecast traffic growth to be between 1.18% and 1.83% per annum to 2010.

Background

- Roads Service collects traffic volume data by means of 273 automatic census points strategically located across the road network. The information is recorded either for 365 days per year, or for one week in each quarter during the year, and an annual average is calculated.
- Roads Service produces an annual Traffic and Travel Information Report, which presents the traffic volumes in a variety of formats for each site. Traffic flows obtained from these census points are used to calculate the overall increase in traffic using the road network.
- Roads Service produces a traffic growth figure for the whole of Northern Ireland. This is not disaggregated into any further sub groups, such as cities or major towns.
- Forecasting is a difficult and uncertain process. Traffic growth varies from road to road, and no average forecast can be expected to predict accurately growth everywhere. Traffic growth is dependent on several different sets of factors.
- Growth in the number of car trips originating in a location will depend, for example, on growth in the number of people living there and growth in the proportion of people who own cars. Any area where employment and population are growing rapidly would consequently experience a high rate of traffic growth.

Congestion Charges

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration has been given to the implementation of congestion charges in Northern Ireland's major urban areas; and, if so, to detail the rate at which these charges would be fixed. (AQW 1427/07)

Mr Murphy: The issue of congestion charges was considered during the development of the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan (BMTP). I have recently reviewed my Department's position on this issue and can confirm that I agree with the policy position stated in paragraph 7.27 of the BMTP. As such, I do not propose to give further consideration to the implementation of congestion charging in urban areas in the North at this time.

Regional Transportation Strategy

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to encourage greater use of public transport by commuters, with particular reference to increased traffic volume on Northern Ireland's roads. (AQW 1428/07)

Mr Murphy: In pursuit of the Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS) which is aimed at encouraging more use of public transport and greater levels of walking and cycling, my Department, Roads Service and Translink are working together to make public transport more attractive and a real alternative to the private car. The RTS vision is to have a modern, sustainable, safe transportation system which benefits society, the economy and the environment and which actively contributes to social inclusion and everyone's quality of life. Examples of actions already taken or currently being pursued are:

- Some 23 new train sets were recently introduced to the rail network. This has helped to achieve an increase in patronage of 31% between 2002 and 2007;
- The Department is bidding for additional funding to upgrade the Derry line and enhance rail services generally with the purchase of more new trains;
- A study is currently underway into the feasibility of two pilot Rapid Transit routes in the Belfast area. Rapid Transit is a form of public transport that offers faster and more reliable services;
- Between 2003 and 2007 DRD assisted Translink in the purchase of 542 new buses at a cost of almost £71million. It also plans to provide a further £61million for more new buses in the period to March 2009. The modernised fleet has already helped generate an increase in passenger numbers of 15% over the two years to March 2007;
- Park and ride schemes are being promoted from locations on the outskirts of Belfast and Roads Service and Translink are working in partnership to deliver an agreed Quality Bus Corridor network for the Greater Belfast area. Elsewhere, infrastructure and service improvements are being undertaken. Raised kerbs for urban bus stops and at well-used stops in housing areas will help all passengers, including those with buggies and wheelchairs, to board fully accessible low floor buses. A minimum frequency level for local bus services is envisaged and priority measures will be introduced for buses entering or exiting bus stations;
- Roads Service, through its Travelwise initiative, is raising awareness of a range of sustainable transport measures, including the promotion of public transport to employers, commuters and schools. This entails undertaking information days for businesses, holding public events, placing articles in the media and working directly with school management teams; and

- A pilot 'Personalised Travel Planning' scheme recently began in South Belfast to promote sustainable travel, including public transport.

Car Parking in Omagh

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will consider making Roads Service-owned car parking facilities adjacent to Tyrone County Hall, Omagh, available to the public at weekends; and if he will consult with the Western Education and Library Board, Omagh District Council and the Department of the Environment regarding creative solutions to practical parking problems in Omagh. (AQW 1439/07)

Mr Murphy: I am informed that the car park located adjacent to County Hall, Omagh, forms part of premises managed by the Department of the Environment's Planning Service who have stated that on the basis of legal and security advice, it would not be appropriate to open the car park for public use at weekends in the interests of public and staff safety.

I can confirm, however, that all of my Department's Roads Service-owned car parks are available to the public at weekends. Roads Service officials will also be happy to discuss solutions to any roads-related problems with interested parties and indeed some discussion has already taken place with Omagh District Council and representatives from Omagh traders regarding car parking provision. Should Omagh District Council consider that there is merit in having a meeting with representatives from the Department of the Environment and the Western Education and Library Board my Roads Service staff, based in Omagh, would be willing to attend.

Disabled Parking Spaces

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what are his plans to introduce disabled parking spaces in Dundonald village. (AQW 1448/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has no proposals at present to provide further disabled parking spaces in Dundonald village. However, if the Honourable Member feels that there is a need for additional disabled spaces at specific sites in Dundonald, she should forward the details to the Divisional Roads Manager for Eastern Division, Mr Tom McCourt, Hydebank, 4 Hospital Road, Belfast, BT8 8JL, for consideration.

I should add that Roads Service officials have regular contacts with relevant interest committees/groups, such as Disability Action's Regional Access Committee and the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee's (IMTAC) Personal Mobility Working Group. These contacts provide the mechanism for any perceived deficiencies in provision for those with disabilities to be brought to our attention and is in addition to the processing of applications for disabled parking bays, that may be submitted by individual blue badge holders.

A55 Knock Road Widening Scheme

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the proposed development of the A55 Knock Road; and to outline the reasons for the selection of Option D as the preferred option. (AQW 1459/07)

Mr Murphy: Over the past year my Department's Roads Service has been developing a number of options for the A55 Knock Road widening scheme, to be considered in more detail upon commencement of the formal statutory procedures, which I announced on 14 May 2007.

As part of this work Roads Service officials held a two-day informal public consultation in June 2006; public meetings were also held on 11 November 2006 and 17 January 2007 and a further meeting with residents was held on 27 March 2007.

Now that the statutory procedures have formally commenced, Roads Service will carry out a detailed evaluation of the environmental impacts of the scheme, including a further evaluation of alternative options, the provision of right-turn facilities and the traffic impacts on the surrounding area. This work will be used to prepare an Environmental Statement, which will be published for public consultation.

Concurrent to this, detailed land vesting proposals will also be published. Following receipt of all objections and comments on these proposals, it may then be decided to hold a public inquiry. If this is the case, it will only be after receipt of the Public Inquiry Inspector's report that a final decision will be taken on the scheme's progression.

With regard to your reference to the preferred option, I am advised that Roads Service presented 3 improvement options for inspection at the public consultation in June 2006 and at a subsequent meeting with local residents on 17 January 2007. During this period officials continued to progress the preliminary design, while giving due consideration to the comments made.

I am informed that at a presentation to the Roads Service Chief Executive and Board members in early February 2007, permission was given for commencement of formal statutory procedures for the scheme. While this decision was based on a preferred option, I should stress that the assessments include an evaluation of alternative scheme options, including those suggested by the residents association.

The preferred option was chosen as a cost effective way of providing 2 lanes in each direction between Glen Road and Kings Road, with improvements to the junction at Shandon Park and right turn facilities for side road traffic and private entrances. An alternative option to construct a dual carriageway with parallel service roads would provide little additional benefit in terms of improved journey times or road safety and would be significantly more expensive. It would also have the biggest impact on the environment and local property.

At the meeting with residents held on 27 March 2007, officials advised that no final decision had been taken regarding the scheme to be implemented and that such a decision would only be made after a formal consultation had been carried out and a public inquiry held, if required.

Finally, I can confirm that all those affected by the A55 Widening Scheme, including local residents, will have an opportunity to express their views and objections to the scheme when the Environmental Statement and other Statutory Orders are published in due course.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Housing Executive Accommodation

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the list for Housing Executive accommodation in the Ballymena Borough Council area, compared to the amount of accommodation available in that area; and what are her plans to provide accommodation for those who have been on the list for over a year.

(AQW 1137/07)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): At 31 March 2007, there were 1,411 applicants on the Housing Executive waiting list, of which 695 had been on the waiting list for more than one year. At the same date, 755 of the total applicants were deemed to be in housing stress. Of those, 402 had been on the waiting list for more than one year.

At 31 March 2007, the Housing Executive had 2,743 tenanted properties within the area covered by the Ballymena District Office. Re-lets accommodated 226 applicants during the year.

The Social Housing Development Programme plans to provide an additional 137 homes in the Borough Council area over the current five-year planning period. The Ministry of Defence site at St Patrick's has the potential for mixed use development. In addition to current plans, part of the site may transfer for social housing, with potential for up to 60 houses.

Tenant Payments

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the amount of housing benefit paid to those renting privately owned houses, broken down by Housing Executive Office, for the years (a) 2003/04; (b) 2004/05; (c) 2005/06; and (d) 2006/07; and also to give the total amount paid for each of the above years. (AQW 1152/07)

Ms Ritchie: Due to limitations imposed by its payments system, the Housing Executive is currently unable to separate the total amounts paid per District Office to tenants of private landlords from those paid in respect of tenants of registered social landlords. The figures in the table below therefore contain both sets of payments for the years 2003/04, 2004/05, 2005/06 and 2006/07. The Housing Executive is taking steps to separate these payments for the future.

A change in accounting methodology for the year 2006/07 means the total includes the amount of overpaid housing benefit that has been repaid by claimants and landlords. In previous years the total was net of the amounts repaid. This change means that the increase in expenditure between 2005/06 and 2006/07 is overstated. During the years in question the caseload for private tenancies and registered Housing Association tenancies was split on an approximate 70%/30% basis.

NIHE Office	2003-2004 £	2004-2005 £	2005-2006 £	2006-2007 £

Good Relations

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister for Social Development what discussions she has had with the Northern Ireland Office regarding the removal of ‘peace walls’. (AQW 1154/07)

Ms Ritchie: My Department works with communities that are frequently divided by boundaries. All too often this division is marked by a peace wall. I believe these barriers can reinforce division and discourage the development of good relations between people, and I heartily wish to see them removed.

I recognise however that the peace walls in many areas are there because of fear.

I believe the best way of removing this fear is through a process of engagement. Developing good relations between our communities is a very significant part of what DSD does. Our daily work in supporting and developing the capacity of communities, in promoting shared space through regenerating our cities and towns leads to positive engagement between communities. My department is committed to a range of positive action through the A Shared Future strategy and I intend to drive forward this side of our work.

To date I have had no discussions with NIO on this matter but intend to do so in the future.

Social Housing

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister for Social Development to list all housing executive estates that are currently under consideration with a view to designating them as shared future housing areas. (AQW 1155/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive has proposed, through a selection process and community consultation, designating 30 existing social housing areas as shared future neighbourhoods, over a pilot three year period. The selected estates will be announced on completion of the consultation period.

Housing Benefit Claimants

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of claimants of housing benefit, broken down by (a) District Council area; and (b) Westminster constituency, in the last three years. (AQW 1165/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive does not hold information on claimants broken down by District Council area or Westminster constituency. The table below shows the numbers of claimants of housing benefit in the last three years broken down by Northern Ireland Housing Executive district office administrative area.

DSD Spend on Consultancy Services

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail her department's projected spend on consultancy services, in the 2007/2008 financial year. (AQW 1177/07)

Ms Ritchie: The projected spend on consultancy services in the 2007/2008 financial year for the Department for Social Development is £2,785,053. This spend relates to Urban Regeneration and Community Development Group.

Public Housing in East Derry/Londonderry

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has for the provision of more public housing in East Derry/Londonderry. (AQW 1221/07)

Ms Ritchie: The East Derry/Londonderry area comprises the Coleraine and Limavady districts.

In Coleraine, plans are to start 23 additional houses in 2007/08 and 118 additional houses over the following four year period.

In Limavady, plans are to start 11 additional houses in 2007/08 and 27 additional houses over the following four year period.

Market Value of Housing Executive Properties

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the valuation process for Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties, prior to sale. (AQW 1242/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive has appointed, through a tendering process, external professionally qualified valuers to determine the market values of its properties.

When a tenant's eligibility to purchase has been established, the valuer is instructed to carry out a market valuation of the property. There is a 21 day target for completion of this valuation. The valuation forms the basis of an offer to purchase which is made to the tenant. If a tenant is dissatisfied with the market value placed on a property, a request for a re-determination (i.e. a revaluation) can be made. The re-determination is carried out by the District Valuer (Valuation and Lands Agency) and is binding on the tenant and the Housing Executive.

New Build Scheme for Comber

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to give a timescale for commencement of the new build scheme for Upper Crescent, Comber. (AQW 1243/07)

Ms Ritchie: BIH Housing Association plan to start this 50 house scheme in the latter part of this year.

Works Contract

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development what criteria is used by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to determine that a contractor is no longer suitable for tendering for Housing Executive schemes. (AQW 1245/07)

Ms Ritchie: Different criteria apply to two levels of contract.

Firstly, where the value, or aggregated value, of any proposed Works Contract exceeds £3,611,319, the Housing Executive is regulated by the Public Contracts Regulations 2006 (PCR 2006). For such contracts, the Housing Executive pre-qualifies contractors for the tender list. If the contractor, its directors or any other person who has powers of representation, decision or control of the contractor has been convicted of any of the offences detailed in Part 4 Regulation 23 of the PCR 2006, the contractor is excluded from the procurement process. The Housing Executive undertakes financial checks on all applicants to determine their capability to undertake a contract of the value of the proposed works. The Housing Executive also evaluates the technical ability to perform the works, including skills, efficiency, experience and reliability. This also includes previous performance on works of a similar nature and value.

Secondly, for Works Contracts valued at less than £3,611,319, the Housing Executive is regulated by its Standing Orders. The Housing Executive also takes account of Public Sector Procurement Guidance and procurement best practice in line with the rest of the Public Sector in Northern Ireland. Additionally, and again in line with all public sector bodies, the Housing Executive uses Constructionline to assess the competence of contractors to undertake the works. The Housing Executive will also use information held by it as regards performance by contractors on past and current schemes

Egan Initiative

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to list those contractors that the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE), under the Egan Initiative, has determined unsuitable for the award of tenders in any forthcoming NIHE schemes, due to poor delivery of work in previous schemes. (AQW 1246/07)

Ms Ritchie: Under the Achieving Excellence in Construction (Egan) initiative, the Housing Executive is currently procuring a Framework Contract of three to five firms to undertake its Revenue Replacement/

External Replacement programme. This procurement is regulated by Public Contracts Regulations 2006. Tender documents issued to 13 contractors and completed tenders were to be received by the Housing Executive on 5 July 2007. The Housing Executive intends to award the Framework Contract in Autumn 2007. I have asked the Housing Executive to provide you with the information requested when this procurement exercise has been completed.

Egan Contracts

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development what measures the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) has put in place to prevent contractors that have been awarded tenders from subcontracting to contractors that have been judged unsuitable by NIHE; and what action will be taken against contractors found using such practices. (AQW 1247/07)

Ms Ritchie: Under Achieving Excellence in Construction (Egan) contracts, contractors are required to submit information as regards their supply chain management and details of the aspects of work which they propose to sub-contract together with details of their proposed sub-contractors. All Housing Executive contracts require contractors to seek the prior approval of the Contract Administrator if they intend to sub-contract any portion of the works.

Northern Ireland Civil Service Special Bonus Scheme

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of non-pensionable bonuses that were paid to staff in her department in each of the last three years; and what steps she has taken to ensure that such bonuses are not used as a cheaper alternative to an appropriate salary increase. (AQW 1248/07)

Ms Ritchie: Non-pensionable bonuses can be paid to staff at all grades to reward performance in two ways, as part of the annual pay award, or under the Northern Ireland Civil Service Special Bonus Scheme.

Performance related bonuses paid as part of the annual pay award are an important and integral element of the Northern Ireland Civil Service reward strategy, and are used to acknowledge and reward higher performing staff.

The Special Bonus Scheme is designed to reward members of staff in particularly demanding tasks or situations during the year or where good performance was achieved under particularly adverse conditions.

The award of performance related bonuses is therefore regarded as being complementary to, rather than as a substitute for, the award of consolidated pay increases.

The number of non-pensionable bonuses paid to staff in the Department for Social Development in the last 3 years is detailed in the table below.

Year	Performance Related Bonuses	Special Bonus Scheme
2004/2005	6289	1303
2005/2006	5637	1661
2006/2007	5897	1970

Please note that information can only be provided in relation to staff currently employed by the Department.

Sale of Housing Executive Property to Tenants

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the standard procedure for selling Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties to tenants. (AQW 1301/07)

Ms Ritchie: The standard procedure for selling Housing Executive properties is detailed in the Housing Executive's 'Homes for sale: a tenant's guide to house purchase' information booklet which is included with every house sale application form issued to tenants. The publication is available on the Housing Executive web site at www.nihe.gov.uk/publications/leaflets/Homes_for_SaleJune 05.pdf and also at all the Housing Executive District Offices. A copy has been placed in the Assembly Library.

The timescales for selling properties is as follows:

- Application to offer - 10 weeks
- Tenant acceptance period - 6 weeks
- Acceptance of offer to issue of contract - 8 weeks
- Tenant acceptance of contract - 8 weeks
- Signed contract of completion - 10 weeks

Average time from application to completion is 10 months.

Sale of Housing Executive Property to Tenants

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the time scale for selling Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties to tenants. (AQW 1302/07)

Ms Ritchie: The standard procedure for selling Housing Executive properties is detailed in the Housing Executive's 'Homes for sale: a tenant's guide to house purchase' information booklet which is included with every house sale application form issued to tenants. The publication is available on the Housing Executive web site at www.nihe.gov.uk/publications/leaflets/Homes_for_SaleJune 05.pdf and also at all the Housing Executive District Offices. Redevelopment of Queen's Parade, Bangor

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development to give a timescale within which her department will produce its revised plans for the redevelopment of Queen's Parade Bangor.

(AQW 1317/07)

Ms Ritchie: DSD has employed GVA Grimley to conduct a detailed analysis of the current development proposal and to consider it in light of the views expressed during a public consultation in 2006. The consultants have completed a number of elements of the work and will shortly be meeting with the developer to discuss some concepts which GVA believe to be important to the success of the scheme.

Once these core concepts have been agreed, there will be a second round of public consultation to test the public view of the revised concept and to inform GVA Grimley's report to DSD. Subject to the GVA report, the Department will prepare a development brief which will bring together all the objectives, concepts and design principles which would contribute to the proper planning of the area. The Department will then invite Karl Greenfarm Ltd, as the major landholder, to respond to the brief. Once the Department receives a response it will then enter a period of negotiation with the developer, if necessary, to refine the scheme.

It is anticipated that this process should be completed by April 2008. At that stage, we would hope to have plans which DSD could support and which could be progressed into the Planning system.

Grant Funding to Forbairt Feirste

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the amount of funding given by her department to Forbairt Feirste, in each year since 1998. (AQW 1318/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Department for Social Development provided £7,000 in grant funding to Forbairt Feirste in 1998 for the appointment of consultants to develop an existing proposal for an Irish language business centre for West Belfast. There has been no further funding awarded to this organisation since 1998.

Demolition of Housing Executive Property

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the proposed timetable for the demolition of Northern Ireland Housing Executive-owned houses in the Antrim Borough Council area, which are vacant and in a state of disrepair, and which are not in line for any further repairs. (AQW 1322/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive has identified 20 flats for demolition within the Dunamoy Drive area of Stiles. The appointed contractor is currently on site removing asbestos from the dwellings and the demolitions will be completed before the end of July 2007.

The Housing Executive has identified a further 32 flats and maisonettes in Chainé Court, Ballycraigy and is in the process of rehousing the remaining three tenants to allow the demolition of the affected properties during this financial year.

Housing Executive Owned Properties in Antrim Borough Council

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of Northern Ireland Housing Executive-owned properties in the Antrim Borough Council area that are (a) unoccupied; and (b) in a state of disrepair; and to outline when a programme of repairs will commence. (AQW 1325/07)

Ms Ritchie: At 30 June 2007 there were a total of 241 vacant Housing Executive properties within the area covered by the Housing Executive's Antrim District Office, as detailed below.

Awaiting Imminent Relet	Pending demolition	Included in improvements schemes	Used for decanting	Pending sale/transfer	Total
30	49	31	37	94	241

A total of 36 of these properties require major repairs, although 5 are in the process of being sold. The remaining 31 dwellings are included in current or future planned improvement schemes to allow them to be relet.

Work is underway on 3 properties, with 19 scheduled to start later in 2007/08 and 9 scheduled to start in 2008/09.

DSD Staff Surveys

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of staff surveys carried out by her department in each of the last two years; and what was the total cost of carrying out such surveys. (AQW 1347/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Department for Social Development carried out the following surveys during the last 2 years:

Year	Number of Surveys	Costs
April 2005 – March 2006	7	1 survey - cost £1,200 (estimate).
		2 survey – nil cost.
		4 surveys - minimal cost – carried out within existing resources.
April 2006 – March 2007	10	1 survey cost £387.92 (estimate).
		9 surveys - minimal cost – carried out within existing resources.

Tendering for NIHE Contracts

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the process of appeal against determinations by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) that a contractor will no longer be suitable for tendering for NIHE schemes. (AQW 1358/07)

Ms Ritchie: Contractors who are unsuccessful in meeting the qualifying criteria for contracts are offered a debriefing at each stage of the procurement process. This is undertaken by the Chairperson of the Evaluation Committee, with a procurement officer present. The contractor is given details of each area scored by the Committee and is informed of areas which did not meet the qualifying criteria.

In the event of the contractor not being satisfied with the reasons given an appeal can be made to the Head of Procurement who will subsequently meet the contractor, hear the evidence and take legal advice before issuing a written detailed and reasoned adjudication to the contractor.

The tender documentation indicates that a final appeal may be made to the Courts in Northern Ireland.

Bonfire Management

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the responsibilities of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in relation to bonfires that are erected on its property, in particular, in relation to (a) public liability insurance in the event of a serious injury; (b) damage to ground; and (c) section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. (AQW 1380/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive 'self insures' against all public liability claims up to a limit of £500,000. This includes injury liabilities which arise from incidents on Housing Executive property, including bonfire related incidents. Catastrophe insurance is secured to cover up to £10m in respect of single incidents, where claim settlement costs exceed the self-insured limit of £500,000.

A good relations and community led approach to best manage bonfires, to reduce their numbers and reduce the cost of reinstating sites is in place. Support is given to local communities to focus on more acceptable expressions of culture, which extends to the control of bonfires by way of local agreements. One of the general benefits in providing support to improve bonfire management is reduced clean up costs and repairs to the ground.

Clearance of bonfire sites identified as being greater than 1.5msq in diameter is dealt with as part of the Grounds Maintenance contract. All burnt litter and debris less than this, is considered part of normal litter lifting operation through the response maintenance programme. Within seven days of a bonfire being burnt, all bonfire debris, including ashes and material not burnt or scattered, are removed. Grass areas damaged are made good.

Local bonfire management initiatives are monitored closely to ensure good relations duties under Section 75 (part 2) and community relations policy into action on the ground, through a partnership approach.

Combating Anti-Social Behaviour in Housing Executive Areas

Mr Fra McCann asked the Minister for Social Development what measures she will implement to combat anti-social activity in housing estates across Northern Ireland. (AQW 1415/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive has in place Anti-Social Behaviour Policies and Procedures to address anti-social activity when it arises on its estates. The Housing Executive receives approximately 4,500 reports of anti-social behaviour each year to its 35 District Offices. The vast majority of these reports relate to low level anti-social behaviour (pets or noise), which are resolved by the District Office without recourse to legal action.

There does, however, remain a need to provide some form of cautionary or supportive intervention. This may take the form of a warning letter to the perpetrator advising them of their unacceptable behaviour. Over 60% of all cases are resolved with a warning letter. Other options available include the use of:

- Acceptable Behaviour Contracts or mediation if both parties are willing to participate.
- Working with another agency (social services, health trust etc.) should an underlying vulnerability be identified which may have contributed to the reported anti-social behaviour.

- Where the reported anti-social behaviour is of a more serious and persistent nature the Housing Executive will use its legal powers (as contained in the Housing (NI) Order 2003 and the Anti Social Behaviour (NI) Order 2004) to stop the anti-social behaviour and protect the wider community. All legal action is dependent on the quality of evidence available. To this end, agencies will work closely with victims and communities to ensure that those who engage in serious anti-social behaviour are brought before the courts. Work also goes on with the PSNI and other statutory and voluntary sector organisations to secure sufficient evidence to support:

- A Decree for the repossession of a property
- An Injunction to stop the anti-social behaviour
- An Anti -Social Behaviour Order (ASBO)

Urban Development Grant Scheme

Mr Fra McCann asked the Minister for Social Development what financial assistance is available to businesses in the Castle Street, King Street and Bank Square area, in addition to Public Realm Development funding. (AQW 1416/07)

Ms Ritchie: The Department's Urban Development Grant scheme is available, subject to satisfactory appraisal and approval of eligible proposals, to businesses in the King Street area since it falls within Lower Falls Neighbourhood Renewal area.

Housing Executive Community Centres

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of Northern Ireland Housing Executive houses in the Antrim Borough Council area that are (a) used as community centres; and (b) used as community centres, but are currently underused or vacant. (AQW 1417/07)

Ms Ritchie: There are nine Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties in the Antrim Borough Council District currently being used as community centres. None are vacant or currently underused.

Affordable Housing

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development if she will undertake a review of the sale of Northern Ireland Housing Executive stock to tenants, as part of a wider affordable housing strategy, with a view to increasing the number of homes that are owner-occupied. (AQW 1424/07)

Ms Ritchie: Sir John Semple's independent review into affordable housing in Northern Ireland made eighty recommendations, including a Review of the House Sales Scheme. The Interdepartmental Group which I have established is tasked with considering all of Sir John's recommendations and will examine how the House Sales Scheme can make a contribution to affordable housing.

Affordable Housing

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development to outline her plans to address the need for affordable housing in the (a) Omagh District Council area; and (b) the Strabane District Council area. (AQW 1425/07)

Ms Ritchie: My Department is tackling the issue of affordable housing through a variety of programmes and schemes including the Social Housing Development Programme, a house sales scheme for social tenants, the housing benefit system and the shared equity scheme operated by Co-ownership Housing Association.

Sir John Semple's independent review into affordable housing in Northern Ireland made eighty recommendations, which are wide ranging and will impact on a number of Departments. I have therefore established an Interdepartmental Group, which is tasked with considering all of Sir John's recommendations. This group met on 5 July, and will meet bi-monthly, and report at the end of the first year. An action plan with target dates will be agreed shortly.

Specifically for Omagh and Strabane, the Social Housing Development Programme for the next 5 years comprises 52 and 95 units, respectively.

Incapacity Benefit Appeals

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of oral tribunals on Incapacity Benefit appeals that were processed to conclusion; and the number of these that overturned the original decision, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1431/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is not available separately in relation to oral and written tribunals. The information provided relates to appeals which were determined either by way of an oral hearing or decided by the tribunal on the papers alone.

The total number of Incapacity Benefit appeals that were processed to conclusion and the number of these that had the original decision overturned were:

	Total Appeals	Number Allowed
2004/2005	3,126	1,170
2005/2006	3,855	1,270
2006/2007	4,406	1,616

Disability Living Allowance Appeals

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of oral tribunals on Disability Living Allowance appeals that were processed to conclusion; and the number of these that overturned the original decision, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1432/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is not available separately in relation to oral and written tribunals. The information provided relates to appeals which were determined either by way of an oral hearing or decided by the tribunal on the papers alone.

The total number of Disability Living Allowance appeals that were processed to conclusion and the number of these that had the original decision overturned were:

	Total Appeals	Number Allowed
2004/2005	5288	1493
2005/2006	5304	1546
2006/2007	4563	1560

Incapacity Benefit Appeals

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of written tribunals on Incapacity Benefit appeals that were processed to conclusion; and the number of these that overturned the original decision, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1433/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is not available separately in relation to oral and written tribunals. The information provided relates to appeals which were determined either by way of an oral hearing or decided by the tribunal on the papers alone.

The total number of Incapacity Benefit appeals that were processed to conclusion and the number of these that had the original decision overturned were:

	Total Appeals	Number Allowed
2004/2005	3,126	1,170
2005/2006	3,855	1,270
2006/2007	4,406	1,616

Disability Living Allowance Appeals

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of written tribunals on Disability Living Allowance appeals that were processed to conclusion; and the number of these that overturned the original decision, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1434/07)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is not available separately in relation to oral and written tribunals. The information provided relates to appeals which were determined either by way of an oral hearing or decided by the tribunal on the papers alone.

The total number of Disability Living Allowance appeals that were processed to conclusion and the number of these that had the original decision overturned were:

	Total Appeals	Number Allowed
2004/2005	5288	1493
2005/2006	5304	1546
2006/2007	4563	1560

Pension Credit

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development, further to AQW 416/07, to outline why it was not possible to provide a breakdown of new claimants for pension credit by constituency; District Council area and Social Security Office, when a similar breakdown was provided for pension credit claimants in AQW 379/07. (AQW 1444/07)

Ms Ritchie: The questions relate to different subject data. AQW 379/07 requested details of the number of people in receipt of Pension Credit, and AQW 416/07 asks for the number of new claimants for Pension Credit for the last five years. The answer to AQW 416/07 was provided on the basis that new claims referred to the number of claims to Pension Credit regardless of their outcome; allowed, disallowed or withdrawn. The Agency does not retain information relating to allowed, disallowed, withdrawn claims by constituency, District Council area and Social Security Office and could not therefore provide the information requested in that format.

However, the Agency does hold a subset of information in the format requested in relation to the number of allowed claims to Pension Credit and this is set out in the tables below:

Neighbourhood Renewal Action Plans

Mr Gerry Adams asked the Minister for Social Development to specify the date on which her department made the decision to redefine Action Plans devised by local Neighbourhood Partnerships as ‘agendas for change’; and whether this change had prior Ministerial approval. (AQW 1452/07)

Ms Ritchie: Neighbourhood Renewal Action Plans, developed by Neighbourhood Partnerships to identify and prioritise local needs have not been formally redefined and remain central to the successful implementation of Neighbourhood Renewal. Whilst some of the actions in these plans lend themselves to early implementation, others will require further discussion with relevant statutory bodies to ensure they provide the most appropriate and effective response to the identified need. As such, these Action Plans provide an “agenda for action” in each neighbourhood.

Belfast Regeneration Office

Mr Gerry Adams asked the Minister for Social Development what level of statutory involvement the Belfast Regeneration Office has secured in regard to (a) funding of; and (b) representation on, Neighbourhood Partnerships in West Belfast. (AQW 1453/07)

Ms Ritchie: Most Neighbourhood Partnerships are not formally constituted bodies and do not, therefore, directly receive funding. My Department has, however, made money available for technical assistance to enable the Partnerships to develop Neighbourhood Renewal Action Plans for their areas. The money awarded by DSD is normally managed by a lead partner organisation. For example, the Colin Neighbourhood Initiative Partnership which had been in existence before Neighbourhood Renewal receives funding from Department for Social Development (DSD) to deliver a number of programmes and the Greater Shankill Partnership which is core funded by DSD as one of the 5 Belfast Area Partnerships.

The following table shows the statutory organisations that are represented on each of the Neighbourhood Partnerships in West Belfast and Greater Shankill. In addition, BRO has established an inter-Departmental group to consider how best to implement Neighbourhood Renewal actions that cut across a number of Neighbourhood Renewal Areas in Belfast.

Neighbourhood Renewal Area	Statutory Body represented on Neighbourhood Partnership
Andersonstown	Belfast City Council Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Council for Catholic Maintained Schools Department for Employment and Learning Department for Social Development Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Greater Falls	Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Department for Social Development Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Greater Shankill	Belfast Education and Library Board Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Department for Social Development Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Lenadoon	Belfast City Council Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Council for Catholic Maintained Schools Department for Employment and Learning Department for Social Development Northern Ireland Housing Executive
Upper Springfield/Whiterock	Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Department for Employment and Learning Department for Social Development Northern Ireland Housing Executive

Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships

Mr Gerry Adams asked the Minister for Social Development to explain whether future funding for community activity from her department is conditional upon applicants providing written evidence that they are (a) endorsed by the Neighbourhood Partnership; and/or (b) providing services congruent with the Neighbourhood Partnership draft action plan, otherwise known as 'agenda for change'. (AQW 1454/07)

Ms Ritchie: My Department provides funding for community activity through a number of programmes including Neighbourhood Renewal, each with different criteria. In relation to Neighbourhood Renewal specifically, funds continue to be available to support services and activities where these clearly address local priorities and needs as identified in Action Plans, developed and agreed by individual Neighbourhood Partnerships.

EDUCATION

Ulster-Scots Expenditure

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education how much money her department has spent in relation to Ulster-Scots, in each year since the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages came into force in the United Kingdom. (AQW 360/07)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): I list below expenditure in relation to Ulster-Scots since July 2001.

Financial Year	Expenditure
2001/2002	£00.00
2002/2003	£00.00
2003/2004	£69.95

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail, for each year since 2000, the expenditure on legal fees, broken down by € (i) each Education and Library Board; and (ii) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools on (a) appeals from parents against decisions regarding placement as a result of a statement of special needs; (b) suspension of pupils from primary, post-primary and special schools; (c) grievance procedures from teachers; (d) grievance procedures from school principals; and (e) disciplinary action involving administrative or advisory staff. (AQW 1197/07)

Ms Ruane: I have been advised that legal fees incurred for each year since 2000, broken down by (i) each Education and Library Board and (ii) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools in relation to (a) appeals from parents against decisions regarding placement as a result of a statement of special needs; (b) suspension of pupils from primary, post-primary and special schools; (c) grievance procedures from teachers; (d) grievance procedures from school principals; and (e) disciplinary action involving administrative or advisory staff, are as follows:

a. Appeals from parents against decisions regarding placement as a result of a statement of special needs.

WELB
CCMS*
Total			£4,700.00	£7,931.25	£750.00	£3,525.00	£5,581.25

The fees detailed above are in respect of legal fees incurred in respect of the appeals to the Special Educational Needs Tribunal. The figures exclude legal expenditure incurred in respect of judicial review fees since the latter are not appeals.

*As an area Board maintains the statement of special needs regardless of the type of school attended, (controlled, maintained, voluntary grammar, grant maintained, integrated) CCMS would not incur any legal fees in this area.

b. Legal fees incurred in relation to suspensions of pupils from primary, post primary and special schools.

The information supplied for the Education and Library Boards has been supplied by the Education and Library Boards in-house Solicitors who act for the controlled sector in cases of this nature. There were no legal fees incurred by the NEELB, SELB and WELB since 2000, in relation to suspensions of pupils from primary, post primary and special schools. The information supplied in respect of CCMS is derived from legal bills of costs supplied by CCMS's external solicitors, and in one instance the Children's Law Centre, to the Chief Legal Adviser for approval.

c. Legal fees incurred in respect of grievance procedures from teachers.

None of the Boards maintain records in respect of in-school grievances raised by teachers which are a matter for the school principal and individual boards of governors in controlled schools. Such matters normally do not incur expenditure on external legal fees. Boards may however, on occasion, incur legal costs in respect of unresolved grievances from teachers who have taken legal action, such as a claim before the Office of the Industrial Tribunal & Fair Employment Tribunal, on the basis, by way of example only, of sex discrimination, constructive dismissal, disability discrimination, racial discrimination etc. Whilst Boards would hold information in respect of the legal fees incurred in cases of this nature, cases are not further subcategorised and therefore such costs can not be readily separately identified.

CCMS have confirmed that they have not incurred any costs associated with grievance procedures for teachers.

d. Legal fees incurred in respect of grievance procedures from school principals.

None of the Boards maintain records in respect of in-school grievances from school principals which are a matter for individual boards of governors in controlled schools. Such matters within the controlled sector normally do not incur expenditure on external legal fees. Boards may however, on occasion, incur legal costs in respect of unresolved grievances from principals who have taken legal action, such as a claim before the Office of the Industrial Tribunal & Fair Employment Tribunal, on the basis, by way of example only, of sex discrimination, constructive dismissal, disability discrimination, racial discrimination etc. Whilst Boards would hold information in respect of the legal fees incurred in cases of this nature, cases are not further subcategorised and therefore such costs can not be readily separately identified.

CCMS have confirmed that they have not incurred any costs associated with grievance procedures for school principals.

e. Legal fees incurred in respect of disciplinary action involving administrative or advisory staff.

The Boards normally do not incur legal expenditure on disciplinary action involving administrative or advisory staff. Where legal advice is required it is normally provided in-house by the Board's Human Resources sections who, where necessary, obtain advice from the Board's in-house solicitors.

Where disciplinary action results in dismissal this may result in legal fees, where the employee dismissed challenges the dismissal on the basis that it is unfair. Whilst Boards hold information in respect of legal fees incurred in respect of unfair dismissals, the unfair dismissal cases are not further categorised by type, by way of example only – redundancy, misconduct, capability, ill-health, some other substantial reason. Costs in relation to dismissal following disciplinary action, cannot, therefore be readily separately identified.

CCMS legal fees in respect of disciplinary action involving administrative or advisory staff:

Authority	Financial Year 2000/2001	Financial Year 2001/2002	Financial Year 2002/2003	Financial Year 2003/2004	Financial Year 2004/2005	Financial Year 2005/2006	Financial Year 2006/2007
CCMS			£17,419.00	£10,044.00		£2,115.00	£6,201.00

The 2006/07 costs above include expenses relating to a teacher case, as this particular case was not indemnified by the area Board, and CCMS was liable. This situation is unusual.

Salaries of the Chief Executives of ELBs

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the salaries received by the Chief Executives of each of the Education and Library Boards.

(AQW 1451/07)

Ms Ruane: The salaries received by the Chief Executive of each Education and Library Board are outlined in the table below. Figures reported, in bandings of £5k, are consistent with the reporting requirements of the Remuneration Report detailed within each ELB Annual Report and Account document.

Board	Amount £000'S

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Workplace 2010

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail, for each building the department proposes to sell as part of the Workplace 2010 proposals, (a) the average annual maintenance costs for the past five years; and (b) expenditure on building modernisation and improvement since 1999. (AQW 1292/07)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Robinson): The details of the average maintenance costs and expenditure as requested are set out in the attached annexes.

Annex A provides annual average maintenance costs for the past 5 years. Annex B provides expenditure on building modernisation and improvements since 1999.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Provision of New Fire Station in Coleraine

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has for the provision of a new fire station in Coleraine; and what is his assessment of the impact of this new facility on fire and rescue provision in Portrush and Portstewart. (AQW 1230/07)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) has identified Coleraine Fire Station for replacement in its Strategic Infrastructure Development Plan.

NIFRS continually assesses emergency fire and rescue service cover throughout Northern Ireland. Prior to constructing a new Coleraine station, NIFRS will, therefore, review cover in the area, including Portrush and Portstewart, to ensure the best possible service can be achieved within available resources. The new station will improve the provision of emergency response cover making it possible to introduce variable crewing and by enabling firefighters to train in a purpose-built facility.

Mental Health Provision, Causeway Hospital

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to enhance provision for mental health patients at the Causeway Hospital, Coleraine. (AQW 1233/07)

Mr McGimpsey: A number of initiatives to enhance mental health provision in Causeway Hospital are currently being developed. These include -

The extension of a 24-hour Crisis Response Service to cover the whole of the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, which will reduce pressure on inpatient beds.

An enhanced adult mental health liaison service.

The introduction of a Trust wide bed management service to ensure capacity is being used to its maximum effect across the whole Trust area.

Breast Screening Waiting Lists

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, the number of women currently awaiting breast screening. (AQW 1303/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The information is not available in the format requested broken down by Trust. In relation to the Health and Social Services (HSS) Board areas, there are no women waiting for breast screening in the Southern and the Western HSS Board areas. There are approximately 7,000 women awaiting breast screening in the Northern HSS Board area, where there is a 16 month backlog for mobile screening. This will fall to 8 months from October 2007. There is no backlog for the static unit at Antrim Area Hospital. In the Eastern HSS Board area there is a backlog of approximately 7,000 with an 8 month delay. A regional breast screening plan has been drawn up to address the backlog and progress is being closely monitored by my Department. Funding has also been made available to the Northern Trust to purchase a second mobile screening unit.

Breast Screening Waiting Times

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, breast screening waiting times. (AQW 1304/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The information is not available in the format requested broken down by Trust. In relation to the Health and Social Services (HSS) Board areas, there are no women waiting for breast screening in the Southern and the Western HSS Board areas. There are approximately 7,000 women awaiting breast screening in the Northern HSS Board area, where there is a 16 month backlog for mobile screening. This will fall to 8 months from October 2007. There is no backlog for the static unit at Antrim Area Hospital. In the Eastern HSS Board area there is a backlog of approximately 7,000 with an 8 month delay. A regional breast screening plan has been drawn up to address the backlog and progress is being closely monitored by my Department. Funding has also been made available to the Northern Trust to purchase a second mobile screening unit.

Psychiatric Referral Times for Self-harming Patients

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average time a patient who has self-harmed, and presents in an Accident and Emergency department, waits to see a psychiatrist; and to outline, broken down by parliamentary constituency, the number of such patients that were discharged without a referral to a psychiatrist. (AQW 1397/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Following investigation by Health and Social Care Trusts, the information requested is not available on the current electronic Emergency Care monitoring systems.

Cost of Agency-supplied Nurses

Ms Sue Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount of money that is paid to agencies for the supply of nursing staff, across all hospitals in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1404/07)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department publishes information on the cost of agency supplied nurses on a six-monthly basis.¹

The most recent figures available are for the monitoring period October 2006 to March 2007. The total cost recorded was £7.39 million for this period.

£6.33 million was recorded for April 2006 to September 2006.

Published reports can be found on the Departmental Internet site at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/hrd/wpu/wpu-monitoring.htm>

¹ These figures include all agency nursing staff both hospital and community.

Number of Agency-supplied Nurses

Ms Sue Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of agency-supplied nurses that are working in hospitals in Northern Ireland; and to detail the average length of time they are in post. (AQW 1406/07)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of agency nursing staff is not held centrally. Health and Social Care Trusts were asked to supply information on the number of agency nurses employed at 30th June 2007 and their replies are set out below;

The Northern HSC Trust paid for approximately 14 whole time equivalent (wte) agency nurses during the month of June.

The Western HSC Trust reported that an average of 22 wte agency nurses were employed during June.

The South Eastern Trust were unable to supply a figure for the number of agency nurses employed for a particular date and stated that the Trust does not block book nursing agency staff.

The Southern HSC Trust recorded 10 agency nurses working on 30th June 2007.

The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust recorded 60.7 agency nurses working on the 30th June 2007. Of this figure 9 agency nurses were working on a single shift basis in Belfast City Hospital.¹

It should be noted that Trusts reported where agency nursing staff are employed on a shift by shift basis, it was not possible to provide any meaningful information on average length of time in post.

For agency staff engaged for more than a single shift the average length of time in post for the remainder ranged from 2 weeks to one instance of 33 months.

¹ The Mater, Royal and Musgrave Park hospitals could not provide information on the number of Agency nurses working on 30th June 2007 on a single shift basis.

Suicides in Craigavon Area

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the recent suicides in the Craigavon area, to detail the resources that have been, and will be in the future, allocated to the area to provide counselling and other advisory services to young people; and what discussions he has had with the Minister of Education regarding the provision of a quality counselling service in this area.

(AQW 1429/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust provide support and counselling for children through a 4-Tier model ranging from primary care to specialist inpatient settings. Within Craigavon/Banbridge locality 26 Health Visitors, 8 School Nurses and 94 Social Workers are trained in the promotion of good mental health, early recognition of problems and early intervention. The Trust also provides grant aid funding to the following voluntary organisations who provide Tier 1 support - Contact Youth, D.A.W.N. project, Care in Crisis, Breakthrough and React.

There are 10 Tier 2 staff in the Craigavon and Banbridge locality who provide a range of clinic and community based services/interventions to Children and Young People, e.g., Young Persons Project. Practitioners include, Nurses trained in Mental Health practices, Social Workers and one Psychologist.

A Southern Trust wide service provides more specialised Tier 3 services for children with more severe and complex and persistent mental health disorders and illness. There are 18 staff within this specialist service. An additional member of staff has been seconded to address issues arising from the recent suicides.

Tier 4 inpatient treatment can be accessed at Donard Ward, Knockbracken. Residential respite care is also available at Cherry Grove, Lurgan, which caters for young people with a range of needs.

During the 2006/07 school year counselling support was available to post primary schools in the Craigavon area. In addition, programmes to promote a positive approach to mental health and well being were on offer in some schools.

From September 2007 the Independent Counselling Service for Schools will be operating in all post primary schools which wish to use it. Some £1.8m has been allocated to support this service across Northern Ireland in 2007/08 school year.

Regionally, the Northern Ireland Suicide Prevention Strategy, "Protect Life – A Shared Vision", was launched on 30 October 2006. The Strategy, which contains over 60 actions, aims to tackle the issue of suicide by taking a dual population and targeted approach, and this year I have allocated over £3 million to support the Strategy's implementation.

As part of the implementation of this Strategy, my Department has been piloting a suicide prevention telephone helpline, which specifically targets young people in North and West Belfast, and a self-harm mentoring initiative in the Western Health and Social Service Board. Both Pilots are supported by peer mentoring and counselling services, and I am now keen the telephone helpline and relevant support and counselling services are made available across Northern Ireland as a matter of urgency.

I have allocated £1.8 million of the £3 million allocation in this financial year to support local communities with the development and operation of initiatives that will help to reduce the Northern Ireland suicide rate, and in doing so, I have specifically asked that provision be made for those new initiatives which reach out to young people. A new GP Depression Awareness Training programme is also being rolled out across Northern Ireland, and the new "Share It" mental health awareness public information campaign is being re-run in July.

In response to the recent clusters of suicide across Northern Ireland, I have established a Ministerial co-ordination group, whose primary function is to ensure that suicide prevention is a priority for all relevant Government Departments and to enhance cross-departmental co-ordination on the issue. Membership of the group includes the Education Minister and the two junior OFMDFM Ministers.

Health Centre in Trillick

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the schedule for the delivery of a new health centre in Trillick, Co. Tyrone; and to provide detail on the budget being made available for this project.

(AQW 1442/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Western Health and Social Services Board are currently working with the GP Practice in Trillick to identify a possible site to build upon, or suitable renovation for the replacement of the GP premises. This project is part of the Western Board's Capital Development programme and cost rent funding for the scheme has been earmarked by the Board. It is anticipated that a suitable site will be identified within the coming months; it would then take approximately one year for the scheme to be operational. The scheme will be based on two GPs. There are no current plans to provide a health centre in Trillick.

Combined Ambulance and Fire Station in Cushendall

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of the feasibility of combining Cushendall Fire Station with an ambulance station, when it is rebuilt.

(AQW 1443/07)

Mr McGimpsey: I think it is in the best interests of the public that the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service and Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) continue to maintain a close relationship and share facilities at locations throughout Northern Ireland where this is deemed appropriate. However there is no current plan to either establish an Ambulance Service station, a deployment point or combined station in Cushendall.

NIAS will continue to monitor and analyse trends in Accident and Emergency activity in the Cushendall area. This will inform future decisions on the best location for ambulances to be based in order to achieve an 8-minute response standard.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to comment on an incident on 25 June 2007, when the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service took almost two hours to transport an injured child from Glenarm to Antrim Hospital.

(AQW 1445/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) received an emergency call to the Glenarm area on Monday 25 June 2007 at 20:58hours and, in line with current protocols, the nearest available A&E ambulance was despatched.

This ambulance was, in fact, near Armoy village, having left Ballycastle ambulance station some 10 minutes earlier to provide cover in the greater Ballymena area where, according to NIAS's recently introduced tactical deployment plan, the next emergency call was most likely to occur. The ambulance arrived at the scene at 21:54hours and left for Antrim Hospital at 21:59hrs arriving at 22:55hrs.

This call was assigned Category B status (serious but not immediately life threatening) and did not, therefore, require the 8 minute response time for life-threatening calls. I regret that, on this occasion, the overall journey time to hospital was longer than desirable because of the distances involved and the high level of demand for emergency responses in the area at the time.

Ambulance Cover in North and East Antrim

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he recognises that there is a shortage of ambulance cover in North and East Antrim; and if he has any plans to increase that cover. (AQW 1446/07)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Health and Social Services Board (NHSSB) is responsible for commissioning ambulance services, in the North and East Antrim area, from the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS).

The Northern Board is currently working with the NIAS to ensure the achievement of the Northern Ireland PFA Target of responding to 65% of Category A calls (life threatening) within 8 minutes during 2007/08.

Some key elements of this work include an analysis of ambulance performance using spatial systems modelling, specialist mapping models and an analysis of historical emergency call data. NIAS is also currently working with the Department to introduce Satellite Navigation and Automatic Vehicle Locating Systems to its entire fleet. This system will enable ambulance controllers to identify and task the ambulance nearest to an incident thereby improving response times to life-threatening calls. These various initiatives will lead to improvements in response times across Northern Ireland.

Testing of Haemophiliac Blood Samples

Dr Alasdair McDonnell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail whether blood samples of local haemophiliac patients are being tested, without their knowledge, for variant CJD. (AQW 1461/07)

Mr McGimpsey: No blood samples of local patients with haemophilia are being tested for variant CJD nor is the matter under consideration in the Health Service in Northern Ireland.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

New Claimants for Pension Credit

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development, further to AQW 416/07, to outline why it was not possible to provide a breakdown of new claimants for pension credit by constituency; District

Council area and Social Security Office, when a similar breakdown was provided for pension credit claimants in AQW 379/07. (AQW 1444/07)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie):

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Thursday 6 September 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline the extent to which procurement measures can ensure that the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland contributes to reducing current inequalities; and in particular, those in relation to long-term unemployment.
(AQO 196/07)

The First Minister and Deputy First Minister (Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness): OFMDFM is working with the Strategic Investment Board and with the Central Procurement Directorate of the Department of Finance and Personnel in exploring how social objectives can be addressed within the public procurement process. This work will impact on projects taken forward under the Investment Strategy and will build on a successful pilot scheme, operated by the Central Procurement Directorate, to facilitate the long-term unemployed into work through public sector contracts.

OFMDFM, in conjunction with the Equality Commission and Central Procurement Directorate, is also sponsoring a Working Group tasked with producing a comprehensive guide on equality and sustainable development considerations in public procurement, which will be published later in 2007.

Reduction of Departments

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what is its assessment of the Secretary of State's assertion that reducing the number of Executive departments from eleven to six can improve delivery of policy objectives; and whether the department is in possession of the Northern Ireland Office blueprint on departmental reductions.

(AQW 248/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: No such assessment has been made by us and nor is the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister in possession of a Northern Ireland Office blueprint on departmental reductions. The efficiency and effectiveness of current departmental arrangements will be matters among others for the Efficiency Review Panel which we intend to establish later this year.

Civic Forum

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if funding has been set aside for the Civic Forum in this financial year, 2007/2008.
(AQW 284/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: In order to make provision for the return of the Civic Forum a preliminary budget of £516,000 was set aside based on the running costs of the Forum in 2002.

We are considering carrying out a review of the Forum to examine its structure and role and the mechanisms for engaging with civic society. The proposed review would consider the most appropriate support and resourcing arrangements for the Forum.

Washington Bureau

Mr Samuel Gardiner asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what opportunities for cooperation between the United States of America and Northern Ireland have been identified and developed by the Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, DC over the past four years.
(AQW 374/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Opportunities now exist with US organizations in a number of priority sectors. Business opportunities have been created with organizations in four regions and with the Federal Government. A strong workforce development relationship now exists with North Carolina. The National Institute of Health and Georgetown University are working with our universities. Educational exchanges have been established with three states, our conflict resolution experience has been shared with US universities and the World Bank. Cultural partnerships have been developed with the Smithsonian Institute, the Library of Congress and sporting organizations. Opportunities are now developing in agriculture and regeneration.

RUC Part-time Reserve Pensions

Mr David McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what representations it will make to the Secretary of State in pursuance of the right of members of the former Royal Ulster Constabulary Part-Time Reserve to proper pension provision, as agreed without division by the Northern Ireland Assembly on 20 November 2001.

(AQW 752/07)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: As Junior Minister Paisley indicated in his response to a recent Assembly debate on this issue (Official Report 26 June), we have conveyed to the Secretary of State the concerns raised by members during that debate.

A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Flood Plain Map

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if her department intends to produce a flood plain map for Northern Ireland, and if this will be made available on the internet.

(AQO 130/07)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Rivers Agency is developing a series of flood risk maps for Northern Ireland in accordance with its interim flood mapping strategy. The initial phase mapping that is currently being produced will indicate the extent of flood plains assuming no defences in place. It is planned that this will be available on the internet by March 2008.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Foras na Gaeilge

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if Foras na Gaeilge will be required to provide an English language version of the minutes of its board meetings on its website.

(AQW 232/07)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): In accordance with the North/South Co-operation (Implementation Bodies) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 the working language of the Irish Language

Agency of the Body is Irish. As part of development work currently underway on the Foras na Gaeilge website, Foras are considering arrangements for minutes of its future Board meetings to be made available online in Irish. The Department has written to Foras na Gaeilge requesting that such minutes also be translated into English and posted on the English language section of their website.

Minutes of North/South Meetings

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts & Leisure if the Arts Council of Northern Ireland will publish on its website the minutes of all North–South plenary and committee meetings with An Chomhairle Ealaíon. (AQW 523/07)

Mr Poots: The Arts Council do not publish the minutes of meetings of the North South sub committee. A report is generally made to the Council and this is recorded in the published minutes of the Council. The same practice applies with regard to the plenary meetings. The Arts Council will raise the issue of publication of the minutes of plenary meetings with An Chomhairle Ealaíon at their next plenary meeting.

Cloghy Footpath

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will conduct a new survey in relation to the request for a footpath between 50 and 62 Main Road, Cloghy, in light of the fact that the last survey was carried out in 2004, since when the population and volume of traffic has risen considerably.

(AQW 578/07)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): I have asked my Department's Roads Service to reassess this proposal to provide a footway between 42 and 70 Main Road, Cloghey.

The assessment will include a pedestrian and vehicle survey between both locations, to determine the amount of pedestrian and vehicular activity in the area. The assessment will be completed before the end of August 2007.

My officials will write to you directly to advise you of the outcome of this further assessment.

Gaelic Games

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, to detail the number of people registered as playing Gaelic Games in Northern Ireland, as amateur and professional players in (a) youth teams; (b) men's teams; and (c) women's teams.

(AQW 1370/2007)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) does not retain information on the number of people registered as playing Gaelic Games in Northern Ireland, nor is such information available, except at disproportionate cost.

Safety at Sports Grounds

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is the criteria for inclusion in the Safety at Sports Grounds programme. (AQW 1205/07)

Mr Poots: In order to be considered for inclusion in Sport Northern Ireland's (SNI) Stadia Safety Programme applicants must demonstrate to SNI that their project can satisfy the following criteria:

- strategic importance;
- improved spectator safety and comfort;
- safety management arrangements;
- financial need;
- viability;
- additionality; and
- security of tenure

In addition, applications must be for capital projects, from properly constituted organisations with no outstanding issues relating to non-compliance with the conditions associated with any previous SNI award.

Registered Footballers

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of people registered at football clubs in Northern Ireland, as amateur and professional players, in (a) youth teams; (b) men's teams; and (c) women's teams. (AQW 1369/07)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) does not retain information on the number of people registered at football clubs in Northern Ireland, nor is such information available, except at disproportionate cost.

EDUCATION

Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education what actions her department has been able to report to the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group, in relation to its obligation to take 'resolute action' to promote the Ulster-Scots language within the education system. (AQW 366/07)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): The Department of Education has reported the following actions to the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group:

- to provide funding through the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA), to support the publication of Ulster-Scots educational materials for use in primary schools and in post-primary schools.
- to support the implementation of Part II of the Charter through the provision of various elements of the (now previous) statutory curriculum which will continue through the revised curriculum when it is introduced from 2007 onwards.
- that it had written to CCEA to ensure that Ulster-Scots cultural heritage is reflected as appropriate when exemplars or guidance materials are being prepared for schools.
- provided comments on the Road Map for Ulster-Scots to attain Part III status under the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages, which was prepared by the Partnership Board of the Ulster-Scots Academy Implementation Group.

Unfilled School Places

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education what definition her department uses to determine an 'unfilled' place in a school; and, using this definition, if she will detail the number of 'unfilled' places there are in Northern Ireland schools. (AQW 501/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department uses two measures, unfilled places and surplus places, for short-term and long-term planning respectively.

The calculation of surplus places in post-primary schools is based on the enrolment which can be accommodated by the total physical capacity of teaching spaces, less the actual number of pupils attending. For primary schools, the methodology for calculating surplus places is based on the schedules of accommodation in the Department of Education Building Handbook for primary schools, which uses enrolment bands to determine the number of classrooms that a school should have e.g. the enrolment band for a 7 classroom school is in the range 176 - 205 pupils. However, many primary schools have a number of classrooms which are not used for teaching purposes. Therefore, to make some allowance for the non-teaching spaces, the methodology for calculating surplus places has deemed the capacity of each primary school to be the lower end of the enrolment band. The actual enrolment is subtracted from this to produce an estimate of the surplus places. Based on enrolment numbers from the October 2006

Schools Census, there are estimated to be 36,600 surplus places in the primary school sector and 18,500 surplus places in the post-primary sector in the North of Ireland.

An unfilled place is defined as the difference between a departmentally approved enrolment number and the actual enrolment. In setting the approved enrolment number the physical capacity of a school is only one of the factors the Department has regard to. It also takes account of the annual level of demand for places at an individual school based on local demography and levels of parental preference. Unfilled places at schools in an area are used only in the context of considering the justification for requests for increases to the enrolment number of the most popular school(s) in an area and are therefore part of the process of managing and facilitating local demand. They are therefore not used as an aggregate indicator or a measure of spare capacity in the schools' estate.

Surplus School Places

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education what definition her department uses to determine a 'surplus' place in a school; and, using this definition, if she will detail the number of 'surplus' places there are in Northern Ireland schools.

(AQW 502/07)

Ms Ruane: The Department uses two measures, unfilled places and surplus places, for short-term and long-term planning respectively.

The calculation of surplus places in post-primary schools is based on the enrolment which can be accommodated by the total physical capacity of teaching spaces, less the actual number of pupils attending. School Dinners

Ms Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education how many schools provide school dinners where food is prepared on site, by school type and Board area. (AQW 876/07)

Ms Ruane: As the Member for Strangford has asked two related questions concerning the school meals service, I shall reply to these together.

The number of schools that provide school dinners where food is prepared on site is as follows:

School Meals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children currently taking school meals at primary schools in (a) the state sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector, in each Education and Library Board area. (AQW 953/07).

Ms Ruane: As the Member for Strangford has asked two questions concerning the number of children currently taking school meals, I shall reply to these together.

The number of children taking school meals varies from week to week. However, information collected annually from the School Meals Census provides a snapshot of the numbers taking meals on the day on which census information is gathered. The figures from the 2006 census were as follows:

NUMBERS TAKING MEALS IN PRIMARY SCHOOLS

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children currently taking school meals at secondary schools in (a) the state sector; (b) the maintained sector; and (c) the integrated sector, in each Education and Library Board area. (AQW 955/07)

Ms Ruane: As the Member for Strangford has asked two questions concerning the number of children currently taking school meals, I shall reply to these together.

Ulster-Scots Language

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail the dates on which the previous Permanent Secretary met with myself to discuss the accommodation of the Ulster-Scots language and culture within the education system, and what actions were taken in response to those representations. (AQW 994/07)

Ms Ruane: The previous Permanent Secretary met with you on 9 November 2004, 14 September 2005 and 15 November 2005 to discuss Ulster-Scots issues.

The Department continues to meet its obligations under the European Charter with regard to Ulster-Scots and is introducing Citizenship as part of the revised curriculum from September 2007, which will provide opportunities for young people to explore cultural heritage, diversity and respect for others.

The Department provided funding in 2005/06 for the publication of the Ulster-Scots Agency's primary curriculum materials and agreed to consider similar provision for post-primary materials when they are ready for publication. The Department also wrote to CCEA in November 2005 asking it to ensure that Ulster-Scots cultural heritage is appropriately reflected within its curriculum guidance materials.

Newbuild Schools

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Education if she is aware of any criteria or guidelines yet to be developed and/or issued by her department, which have delayed capital projects in relation to new build schools, including that of Crossroads Primary School, Kilrea. (AQW 1050/07)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Review recommended that future building projects should be compatible with an area-based planning approach. The Department of Education will be working with the education sector in progressing this approach. In putting forward proposals for school capital projects the relevant education authority needs to consider the longer term viability of the school and how it would meet the needs in the local area. The Department would expect to see such issues addressed in economic appraisals. The proposed scheme for Crossroads Primary School is currently at the appraisal stage.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Student Complaints Mechanism

Mr Alex Attwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what consideration he is giving to the introduction of legislation for a student complaints mechanism for Queen's University Belfast, to replace the current "visitor" model. (AQW 1436/07)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): In my Department's policy consultation document "A Consultation on Proposals to Introduce Variable Deferred Tuition Fees, Access Agreements and a Review of the Student Complaints System", published in April 2004, consultees were asked whether an independent adjudicator should be established to hear student complaints in Northern Ireland and end the Visitor system in both Northern Ireland universities. The majority of responses were heavily weighted in favour of change to make the system more clearly independent of the universities.

In light of the consultation responses, it was agreed that the option to extend the remit of the Ombudsman, to include the adjudication of student complaints, could be considered as part of OFMDFM's proposed review of the Offices of the Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, following restoration of the Assembly.

OFMDFM has now advised the Department that a timetable for consultation, implementation and amendments to the Commissioner for Complaints Order 1996 has yet to be set following restoration of the Assembly. When the review is carried out, the option to extend the Ombudsman's remit, to include the adjudication of student complaints, can be considered.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Indigenous Renewable Sources

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give the target for the proportion of electricity to be generated from indigenous renewable sources by 2012. (AQW 422/07)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): The Department's Strategic Energy Framework published in June 2004 specifies a 12% target for the proportion of Northern Ireland's electricity consumption that is to be met from indigenous renewable energy sources by 2012.

Foreign Nationals

Mrs Iris Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the numbers of foreign nationals currently living in Northern Ireland by (a) constituency; and (b) District Council area. (AQW 954/07)

Mr Dodds: The LFS sample size does not support the production of sufficiently reliable estimates at constituency or district council level.

Targeting Social Need

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the areas that Invest Northern Ireland considers to be new Targeting Social Need areas, for the purpose of achieving its target of 75% investment in such areas. (AQW 1127/07)

Mr Dodds: In targeting 75% of first-time inward investment towards areas of greatest need, Invest NI utilises the DETI disadvantaged area maps which are based on data from the income and employment domains of the Northern Ireland Multiple Deprivation Measure 2005. The areas recognised as 'disadvantaged' include Derry, Strabane, Omagh, Cookstown, Newry and Mourne and Dungannon Council areas together with parts of Belfast. The detailed maps are available on the DETI website at www.detini.gov.uk.

Bombardier Jobs

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assurances he has received that the financial assistance given by his department to Bombardier Aerospace, Belfast, will result in the availability of a substantial number of jobs.

(AQW 1167/07)

Mr Dodds: In answering this question, I am assuming that the Member for Strangford is referring to the announcement I made during my visit to Paris Air Show on 19 June. In that announcement, which related to Bombardier's new Resin Transfer Moulding facility at Dunmurry, I welcomed Bombardier's investment of £8.2 million towards which Invest NI would contribute £1.5 million in Selective Financial Assistance. The project, which safeguards sixty highly skilled jobs, will enable Bombardier Aerospace in Northern Ireland to exploit global market opportunities and add significant value to the Northern Ireland Aerospace Sector.

ENVIRONMENT

Green Shopping

Mr David Hilditch asked the Minister of Environment if she will give an assessment of how to encourage shoppers to go green; and of the possibility of banning plastic bags and excess packaging given out by supermarkets.

(AQW 398/07)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): Many shoppers are becoming increasingly aware of, and concerned about, environmental issues and as a result are making "greener" choices. All of us have a role to play in helping to protect our environment and in so far as consumer behaviour is concerned, retailers need to help and encourage their customers who want to reduce their impact on the environment. The UK's major supermarket and convenience stores link large global supply chains with the mass consumer grocery market and are therefore well placed to promote reductions in household waste. I welcome, therefore, the various initiatives by many key retailers to reduce the environmental impact of carrier bags and to be more efficient in their use of packaging materials.

The Department funds the Waste Resources Action Programme (WRAP) as part of Government's waste strategies across the UK. WRAP's Retail Innovation Programme works in partnership with leading retailers, brand-owners, suppliers and designers to reduce the amount of packaging at source and increase its recycled content.

As regards a ban on plastic bags, alternatives often entail their own environmental problems and we need to consider all of the issues before deciding on the most appropriate way forward for Northern Ireland.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail all policies and codes of practice relating to the operations of Northern Ireland Water. (AQW 197/07)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): The policy framework for Northern Ireland Water (NIW) as statutory undertaker with responsibility for delivery of water and sewerage services is reflected in the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006. This, together with the Licence to appoint NIW and under environmental legislation, provides for Codes of Practice relating to:

- environmental and recreational duties (Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006, Art 10);
- work on private land (Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006, Art 244);
- customers and relations with the General Consumer Council (Licence, Condition G);
- arrangements in connection with domestic customers having difficulty paying bills and for collection outstanding customer debt (Licence, Condition H); and
- liability for charges with domestic customers occupying metered premises (Licence, Condition I).

A copy of the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 is available in the Assembly Library.

Cloghy Footpath

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will conduct a new survey in relation to the request for a footpath between 50 and 62 Main Road, Cloghy, in light of the fact that the last survey was carried out in 2004, since when the population and volume of traffic has risen considerably. (AQW 578/07)

Mr Murphy: I have asked my Department's Roads Service to reassess this proposal to provide a footway between 42 and 70 Main Road, Cloghy.

The assessment will include a pedestrian and vehicle survey between both locations, to determine the amount of pedestrian and vehicular activity in the area. The assessment will be completed before the end of August 2007.

My officials will write to you directly to advise you of the outcome of this further assessment.

Moira Bypass

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to bring forward a bypass for Moira. (AQW 735/07)

Mr Murphy: An assessment of the requirement for major road improvements to the strategic road network in the greater Belfast area was conducted by my Department's Roads Service, as part of the development of the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan 2015. This Plan covers the Lisburn City Council area and the road network around Moira.

The assessment for the Plan did not identify the need for major road improvements around Moira and consequently there are currently no plans to bring forward a bypass in that area. I can, however, confirm that a traffic management study of the main junctions in Moira is currently being undertaken. This will consider possible minor junction improvements between the M1 motorway roundabout and the Kilmore Road junction.

Road Upgrades in West Tyrone

Dr Kiernan Deeny asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures are currently in place to repair, upgrade and modernise the roads in West Tyrone; and what funding has been made available to Roads Service in the Omagh District Council area. (AQW 736/07)

Mr Murphy: With regards to the first part of your question, I should explain that as with all public roads, my Department's Roads Service currently repair roads in West Tyrone in accordance with the Roads Maintenance Standards for Safety, where all public roads are inspected on designated cycles and any defects repaired within well established time scales.

With regards to the second part of your question, I can advise that The Regional Transportation Strategy, which was approved by the Assembly in 2002, is the basis upon which all transportation initiatives are being taken forward. This Strategy is achieved through the implementation of various Transport Plans. The two plans which include the West Tyrone area are the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan (RSTN TP) and the Sub Regional Transport Plan (SRTP). The RSTN TP includes proposals to provide the Strabane / Lifford Link and stage III of the Strabane Bypass, while the SRTP, published in June 2007, includes a range of measures planned for the towns of Omagh and Strabane.

In addition, in 2006, Roads Service issued a consultation document entitled 'Expanding the Strategic Road Improvement Programme 2015', which included proposals for a new route for the A5, from Victoria Bridge to Derry and improvements to the A32 between Omagh and Enniskillen. Work on the assessment of this Programme is at an advanced stage, and as it has not yet been finalised, I am presently not in a position to advise on details of its content or timing.

You may be aware that as part of the Chancellor's package announced on 22 March the Irish Government confirmed its intention to make available a contribution of £400 million to fund an unprecedented package of infrastructure investment, including a major new roads programme to provide dual carriageway standard on routes within the North serving the North West Gateway of Letterkenny/Derry and on the eastern seaboard corridor from Belfast to Larne.

I can confirm that during the 2007/08 financial year, expenditure in the region of £3.4 million is planned on Structural Maintenance operations such as resurfacing, surface dressing and structural drainage etc., while an additional £2.6 million will be deployed on Capital schemes in the Omagh District Council Area.

A2 between Bangor and Belfast

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Regional Development what plans he has to improve the efficiency of the traffic flow on the A2 dual carriageway between Bangor and Belfast. (AQW 741/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service advises that approximately 75% (12km) of the A2 between Belfast and Bangor is dual carriageway. The busiest section of this route, the Sydenham Bypass, has been identified in the Belfast Metropolitan Transportation Plan (BMTP), for substantial improvement. The proposed scheme, which is currently in the Roads Service Forward Planning Schedule of major schemes to be promoted within 5-15 years, will upgrade this 2.5km stretch to provide 3 lanes in each direction between Bridge End and Tillysburn.

Further improvements, proposed to be completed this financial year, include schemes to fully control right-turning movements from the A2 into Sullivan Place and Old Belfast Road in Holywood, and the signalisation of the junction at Palace Barracks. I am also advised that the PSNI propose to introduce a speed camera system (SPECS) which will detect average speeds and improve safety on the A2 from the Holywood Bypass to its junction with Coothall Road outside Bangor.

The BMTP also proposes a route management strategy to identify schemes to improve road safety along all key routes into Belfast and increase the capacity and safety of existing junctions where localised widening would be feasible. £4million has been identified in the Plan for this purpose, and consultants are currently completing a route management study of the A2 to identify any improvements required.

In relation to the remaining 4km of existing 4-lane single carriageway on the A2, I am advised that a scheme to improve this portion to dual carriageway standard would have a significant effect on adjacent properties, a major impact on the environment and would be very costly. In addition, due to constraints caused by the substantial number of junctions along the road, any improvements would have little impact on the vehicular capacity of the road or on journey speeds at peak times, without associated grade separation at a number of the junctions.

Tullynagardy Road, Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to widen and re-surface the Tullynagardy Road, Newtownards. (AQW 775/07)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service have advised that there are no current plans to either widen or re-surface the Tullynagardy Road, Newtownards.

However, in accordance with the Roads Maintenance Standards for Safety, Roads Service will continue to inspect the Tullynagardy Road during routine designated inspection cycles and any defects found will be repaired within well established time scales.

Drains in the West Winds Estate

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development how many times has Northern Ireland Water had to call their contractors to clear drains, both storm and sewage, in the West Winds estate in Newtownards in the last 12 months. (AQW 817/07)

Mr Murphy: As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issue raised is an operational matter, I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to this question.

Drains in Carrickfergus

David Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to confirm the last date on which drain cleansing teams were working in Carrickfergus and, in particular, the Joymount area. (AQW 829/07)

Mr Murphy: I am advised that my Department's Roads Service aims to inspect, and clean where necessary, all gullies in urban areas twice a year. Gullies in rural areas are inspected and cleaned if necessary once a year. This policy ensures that a reasonable level of maintenance is carried out to drainage systems, taking account of the Department's finite funding and staffing resource.

Within the Greater Belfast area there are some 136,000 storm water road gullies which require considerable resource on an ongoing basis for the inspection and cleansing of this network.

The first clean of all storm water gullies in Carrickfergus commenced on 2 January 2007 and is due to finish by 30 June 2007. The storm water gullies in the Joymount area were cleaned between 22 and 24 of March 2007.

Barron Road, Donemana, Water Mains

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to upsize water mains supplying Barron Road, Donemana. (AQW 835/07)

Mr Murphy: The Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 transferred responsibility for the delivery of water and sewerage services from the Department's Water Service Agency to a statutory water and sewerage undertaker. A government-owned company, Northern Ireland Water (NIW) has been appointed as the undertaker and the issues raised are operational matters for it. I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to this question.

North Tyrone Supply Zone

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain what progress has been made in implementing the detailed zonal studies report for the North Tyrone supply zone. (AQW 836/07)

Mr Murphy: The Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 transferred responsibility for the delivery of water and sewerage services from the Department's Water Service Agency to a statutory water and sewerage undertaker. A government-owned company, Northern Ireland Water (NIW) has been appointed as the undertaker and the issues raised are operational matters for it. I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW (Mrs. Katharine Bryan) to write to you in response to this question.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, by benefit category, the amount of unclaimed social security benefits for the last five financial years. (AQW 203/07)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): The information requested is not available as statistical data for all benefit categories. The Family Resources Survey provides details of estimates of unclaimed income related benefits and shows that the annual amounts unclaimed in respect of Income Support, Housing Benefit, Minimum Income Guarantee/Pension Credit and Jobseeker's Allowance (Income-Based) lies in the ranges shown in the attached table. This information is only available for the period 2002 – 2005.

Kilcooley Estate, Bangor

Mr Alex Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to make a statement on the Neighbourhood Renewal Programme for the Kilcooley estate, Bangor; and to outline the role Kilcooley Primary School will play in that programme. (AQW 578/07)

Ms Ritchie: A Vision Framework and Action Plan which sets out a series of measures to tackle deprivation in the Kilcooley Estate, Bangor has been drawn up by the local Kilcooley Neighbourhood Renewal Partnership. To date over £1,175,000 has been spent on Neighbourhood Renewal projects in the Kilcooley Estate, 3 of which are based in the Kilcooley Primary School premises. The Department is currently awaiting a number of further funding requests under the Vision Framework and Action Plan and some of these are likely to include educational programmes which may involve the local primary school.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Visitors to Parliament Buildings

Barry McElduff asked the Assembly Commission to detail the number, age profile and geographical spread of visitors to Parliament Buildings in (a) the past year; and (b) the past two years; and to detail the measures undertaken to increase access to Parliament Buildings. (AQW 477/07)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): Public Visitors to Parliament Buildings fall primarily into three categories which can be summarised as follows:

1. Those participating in the Assembly Education Programme;
2. Those participating in official Tours, Events and Functions and
3. Casual visitors (permitted entry to Great Hall only)

An analysis of visitor numbers by each of these categories is set out below for 2005 and 2006.

1 GRAND TOTAL OF VISITORS ON THE EDUCATION PROGRAMME

Other - known	1559	9697
Total	6398	19327

With many of the groups on tours, functions, etc, it is not possible to distinguish which countries they emanate from. The Northern Ireland Assembly does not collect specific information on the age profile of visitors on tours, events and functions.

3. CASUAL VISITORS

An accurate analysis of casual visitors to the building is not maintained primarily because of the restricted access available to them, i.e. entry to Great Hall only.

The measures set out below have been taken in order to increase access to the building.

- Information about access to Parliament Buildings is available on the website and in the Guide to the Northern Ireland Assembly.
- Members are made aware that they can sponsor tours and events in Parliament Buildings in the Members' Handbook and are given guidance on the Assembly's intranet site, Assist.
- Letters about the Education Programme have been sent to all schools and MLAs.
- The Education Officers actively promote the programme through participation in teacher training events and meetings with the various education authorities.
- The scheme of work for Citizenship produced by CEA includes the Education Programme.

Written Answers to Questions

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Breast Screening Backlog

Mr Leslie Cree asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to deal with the backlog of approximately 7,000 women waiting for breast screening in the Eastern Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 28/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): There are a total of 26,400 Eastern Board women eligible for breast screening between 1 August 2007 and 31 July 2008 (7,000 backlog and 19,400 women invited as part of the routine breast screening programme). The Eastern Board currently screens 419 women per week and plans to increase this to 555 per week from September. This will reduce the backlog to approximately 3,600 by 31 July 2008 and it is anticipated that it will be cleared by the end of July 2009.

The breast screening programme is a rolling one which invites women from GP practices in turn on a three year cycle and any additional activity in one year would have to be replicated every third year or a backlog would develop again. The reduction in the backlog requires careful management to ensure that the situation does not recur and my Department is monitoring the situation closely.

Cost of Bonfire Clean-up

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the costs incurred by Roads Service in relation to the clean-up of bonfires held on 11 July. (AQW 30/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): My Department's Roads Service may be involved with the removal of bonfire material from the public road network, either before or after the bonfire has been lit, and the subsequent removal of that material. Repairs to the road surface may also be required. The extent of Roads Service's involvement varies from year to year and also between local council areas.

While Roads Service does not monitor expenditure specifically related to bonfires, it is estimated that in the summer of 2007, around £60,000 was spent on attending/repairing bonfire sites.

Road Safety Measures on the A26 Frosses Road

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will introduce (i) further road safety measures on the A26 Frosses Road between Glarryford and Ballymoney; and (ii) roundabouts at the Kirk Road and Dervock Road junctions of the A26 Frosses Road. (AQW 42/08)

Mr Murphy: A number of improvements to the A26 route from Glarryford to the Dervock Road have been introduced over the past number of years. These have included a significant safety scheme carried out during the period 2001 to 2003 that provided upgraded road markings to indicate safe overtaking opportunities, edge of carriageway markings, improved junction safety through the introduction of coloured surfacing and traffic islands and improved signage. In addition climbing lanes have been introduced at Glenlough to provide overtaking opportunities for traffic travelling towards Ballymena; and at Ballinaloob for traffic travelling towards Ballymoney. The latter scheme also introduced a much improved junction layout at the Dunloy Crossroads junction. A roundabout has also been provided at the junction of the A26 Ballymoney bypass at the Kilraughts Road junction. My Department's Roads Service is currently progressing plans for the provision of a dual carriageway on this route from Glarryford to the junction of the A26 with the A44 Drones Road.

With regard to the second part of your question, the recently published Sub-Regional Transport Plan 2015 has identified a number of junctions within Ballymoney

Town that may require upgrading during the plan period. However, this did not extend to or identify any issues with the junctions to which you refer in your question. I am not, therefore, in a position to offer any immediate likelihood of further improvements being introduced at these junctions. I understand that you had recently written to Roads Service, expressing concerns about the delays being experienced at the Dervock Road. Traffic surveys will be carried out at both the Dervock Road and Kirk Road junctions to quantify the extent of any delays being experienced and I have asked the Divisional Roads Manager to write to you with the results of these surveys when available.

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Historic Crimes Investigation

Mr David Burnside asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if all Ministers, officials and policy advisers within the department are fully committed to co-operate with the Police Service of Northern Ireland in any historic crimes investigation, now and in the future. (AQW 86/08)

The First Minister and Deputy First Minister (Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness): All Ministers have affirmed the Pledge of Office as set out in the Northern Ireland Act 1998, as amended by the Northern Ireland (St Andrews Agreement) Act 2006. One of the terms of that Pledge is a commitment “to uphold the rule of law based as it is on the fundamental principles of fairness, impartiality and democratic accountability, including support for policing and the courts, as set out in paragraph 6 of the St Andrews Agreement.”

All Northern Ireland Civil Servants, including policy advisers, are required to comply with the standards of behaviour set out in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Code of Ethics, which forms part of the contractual relationship between civil servants and Departments. The Code of Ethics states that civil servants must “comply with the law and uphold the administration of justice”.

Promotion of Northern Ireland in the USA

Mr Nelson McCausland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, in light of the recent Smithsonian Festival, what plans are in place to promote Northern Ireland in the United States of America. (AQO 73/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: During the Smithsonian Festival Ministers had a very successful visit attending over 100 meetings and events. The support of the US Administration has provided a real window of opportunity which we must maximise. In the United States the Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, DC promotes our interests and is engaged in a number of activities to promote our economy, science and research, skills, culture, education and our knowledge.

The Bureau is working with other Departments and organisations on economic initiatives with corporate America, networking with Irish and Scots-Irish communities, education and research partnerships with universities and schools, cultural and sporting activities and promoting our expertise and best practice at federal and state levels .

Invest NI which is the responsibility of our ministerial colleague Nigel Dodds, also has an important role to market Northern Ireland in the United States and has invested considerable resources in this.

An important outcome of the Executive’s visit in the summer is the US Government’s support for an investment conference next spring.

The First Minister intends to visit the United States later this year with colleagues to continue to promote Northern Ireland’s interests and in particular to focus on this very important economic work.

Junior Ministers

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if any of the Junior Ministers have attended, or will be attending, meetings of the Northern Ireland Executive.

(AQO 41/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Junior Ministers were appointed in the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister on 8 May under the determination of 8 December 1999 which provided for two Junior Ministers whose function would be; “Assisting the First Minister and deputy First Minister in the exercise of their functions in relation to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister.”

The Junior Ministers assist in all functions and have particular responsibility for:

- liaison with the Assembly in relation to Executive business;
- co-ordination of policy in relation to Children and young people’s issues; and

- co-ordination of policy in relation to Older people's issues.

Given their roles both Junior Ministers have attended, and will continue to attend, meetings of the Northern Ireland Executive.

Special Advisers for Junior Ministers

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail what representations were made to the present Secretary of State, and his predecessor, in respect of the appointment of special advisers to the Junior Ministers.

(AQO 38/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We wrote to the former Secretary of State, Peter Hain, on 18 May asking him to bring forward an amendment to the Civil Service Commissioners Order to allow the appointment of special advisers to the Junior Ministers.

Efficiency Review Panel

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will commit to the early establishment of an efficiency review panel with the widest possible remit.

(AQO 2/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The establishment of the Efficiency Review Panel to examine efficiency and value for money of aspects of the Strand One institutions is an important issue which needs to be carefully considered.

We have given a commitment to consult with the Assembly and Executive Review Committee on our proposals for the establishment, remit and work programme of the Panel before bringing proposals to the Assembly for approval.

Foot-and-Mouth Disease

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what interventions it has made in respect of the trade of local produce in the aftermath of the recent Foot-and-Mouth Disease outbreak.

(AQO 96/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The recent Foot and Mouth Disease outbreak clearly demonstrated the advantages of a devolved Government in protecting Northern Ireland's interests.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, with the support of the Executive, and the co-operation of the industry took swift and decisive action to protect our farming industry from the threat posed and in securing an early exemption from an export ban.

Following international trading difficulties, we made contact with the Taoiseach, the Japanese Ambassador to the UK and several senior representatives within the US Administration to resolve export difficulties relating to our meat and dairy products.

We are delighted that we were able to secure their support and following our interventions the export restrictions were removed. This ensured that Northern Ireland could continue to export to the EU and world markets.

Foot-and-Mouth Disease

Mr William Irwin asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it has taken to assist in the recent Foot and Mouth crisis.

(AQO 83/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The recent Foot and Mouth Disease outbreak clearly demonstrated the advantages of a devolved Government in protecting Northern Ireland's interests.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, with the support of the Executive, and the co-operation of the industry took swift and decisive action to protect our farming industry from the threat posed and in securing an early exemption from an export ban.

We are delighted that we were able to secure their support and following our interventions the export restrictions were removed. This ensured that Northern Ireland could continue to export to the EU and world markets.

North/South Ministerial Council

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail any discussions it has had with the Government of the Republic of Ireland, aimed at identifying and developing additional bodies and areas of co-operation within the North-South Ministerial Council.

(AQO 117/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: At the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) Plenary meeting held on 17 July in Armagh the Council agreed to take forward the Review, provided for in the St Andrews Agreement, of the North/South Implementation Bodies and Areas for Co-operation. The Review will commence later this month and a final report will be presented to the first North South Ministerial Council Plenary meeting in 2008.

A full report on the most recent Plenary meeting will be made to the Executive and to the Assembly in the near future.

Victims' Commissioner

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to report on the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner.

(AQO 58/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: Victims and survivors needs are a high priority for us and we want to get the decision on an appointment right. We will take the necessary time to do this, not least for those who have suffered so much during the Troubles. We would ask everyone to be patient; the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner is under active, detailed and careful consideration and we hope to make an early decision on this important appointment.

North/South Ministerial Council

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will outline the benefits of the North-South Ministerial Council meeting, held in Armagh on 17 July 2007.

(AQO 108/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The fifth Plenary meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) took place in Armagh on Tuesday 17 July 2007. This meeting was significant in that it was the first meeting of the NSMC since 2002.

Ministers welcomed the opportunity to meet in the Council to consult, promote mutually beneficial co-operation and take a number of decisions on a range of issues within the Council's work programme. These are outlined in the Joint Communiqué from the Plenary which is available on the NSMC website at www.northsouthministerialcouncil.org.

A full report on the most recent NSMC Plenary will be made to the Executive Committee and the Assembly in the near future.

Victims' Strategy

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will provide a timeframe for the publication of a Victims' Strategy; and to detail the plans for consultation with the Assembly on this issue.

(AQO 1/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: It is hoped to publish a draft strategy for Victims and Survivors shortly. We are committed to engagement with the Committee of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister at the earliest opportunity to discuss this important document.

NSMC and BIC Meetings

Mr Peter Weir asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail what actions were agreed at the recent meetings of both the North-South Ministerial Council and the British-Irish Council.

(AQO 3/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: A British Irish Council (BIC) Summit and a North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) Plenary meeting took place on Monday 16 July and Tuesday 17 July respectively.

Ministers agreed a number of decisions on a range of issues within the BIC and the NSMC work programmes. These are outlined in the Communiqués which are available on the BIC and NSMC websites at www.britishirishcouncil.org/ and www.northsouthministerialcouncil.org.

A full report on the most recent BIC Summit and NSMC Plenary will be made to the Executive Committee and the Assembly in the near future.

Commissioner for Older People

Mr Mickey Brady asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will detail the current position on the appointment of a Commissioner for Older People.

(AQO 112/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The matter of an Older People's Commissioner was debated by the Assembly on Tuesday 5th June when an undertaking was given by the deputy First Minister to review the case for establishing such an office.

We have agreed however that such a review should be conducted, recognising the need to consult with the age sector, older people and the Departmental Committee. We aim to have the review completed by the end of 2007.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Land Inspections

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total number of land inspections associated with Single Farm Payments that were carried out during (i) June 2007; (ii) July 2007; and (iii) August 2007. (AQW 31/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): In total 620 land inspections associated with Single Farm Payment were carried out during June, July and August 2007. The breakdown is as follows:

June 2007	89
July 2007	282
August 2007	249

Animals Rejected from Food Chain

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of animals presented for slaughter at Northern Ireland meat plants in the first six months of 2007, that were prevented by her department's personnel from entering the food chain due to lack of proper identification, perceived or otherwise. (AQW 33/08)

Ms Gildernew: During the first six months of 2007 44 cattle, 40 sheep and 8 deer were rejected from the food chain, due to lack of proper identification.

Over-Thirty-Months Rule

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will make a statement on the Over Thirty Months Rule that continues to operate at Northern Ireland meat plants. (AQW 35/08)

Ms Gildernew: The Over Thirty Month (OTM) Rule which was introduced across the UK in March 1996 prohibited animals over thirty months entering the food chain.

On 7 November 2005, the Over Thirty Month (OTM) Rule was replaced throughout the UK with a BSE testing regime for all cattle over thirty months of age born on or after 1 August 1996.

Since that date these cattle have been eligible for entry into the food chain subject to a negative BSE test.

Number of Farmers in Northern Ireland

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of farmers in Northern Ireland, (i) in total; (ii) broken down by district council area; and (iii) broken down by parliamentary constituency, for each of the last five years. (AQW 85/08)

Ms Gildernew: Information on the number of farmers recorded in the Northern Ireland Agriculture and Horticultural Census over the last five years is presented in Table 1 by district council area, and in Table 2 by parliamentary constituency.

Foot-and-Mouth-Disease Outbreak

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what further actions are being taken as a result of the recent outbreak of Foot-and-Mouth Disease in Surrey. (AQO 79/08)

Ms Gildernew: I would refer the Member to the Statement which I made to the Assembly at Noon today.

Once the Commission Decision which is currently in place is revoked, it is my intention to review our certification requirements for product coming from Britain and product being exported from the North, with a view to reverting back to certification requirements that were in place before 3 August 2007 as soon as possible.

My aim has always been to return to normal trading practices as soon as it was safe to do so.

As exports to countries outside the EU remain an issue it is my intention to engage with the UK Government to support negotiations with the World Organisation for Animal Health, the OIE, which is the internationally recognised standard setting body for animal health to regain country-wide officially FMD Free status for the UK.

North South co-operation will continue on animal disease control and trading practices, given the interest we share in preventing the introduction of a serious animal disease to the Island of Ireland.

Farm Safety

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will detail how her department is addressing the issue of improving safety, and preventing accidents, on farms. (AQO 131/08)

Ms Gildernew: I would like to extend my sincere sympathy to families who have had a loved one killed in a farm accident.

Improving safety and preventing accidents on farm is included as an integral component of all further and higher education programmes delivered by the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise, (CAFRE). Students enrolled on these programmes receive training in the safe use and operation of farm machinery, safe movement and handling of livestock, safe use of pesticides, emergency first aid procedures and safe lifting techniques.

CAFRE also offers a similar range of health and safety related training courses for farmers and family farm members. These courses are delivered at the CAFRE Campuses and at local out centres.

Single Farm Payment Applications

Mr Allan Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement on farmers who made an unintentional error on their 2005 Single Farm Payment Application (IACS) Form. (AQO 50/08)

Ms Gildernew: 2005 was the first year of the Single Farm Payment Scheme and I accept that some applicants were unfamiliar with the Scheme rules and may have made genuine mistakes when completing their forms. These mistakes included overdeclaring land for example, land which may not have been eligible or where the farmer had not used the correct farm map. In some of these cases no further action was taken as the over declaration was less than 3% or 2 hectares but in all other instances these mistakes meant that, in accordance with EU rules, my Department had to apply penalties.

Unfortunately, there is little scope within these EU rules to waive such penalties, even when the mistakes were made unintentionally. Indeed, if my Department had considered these mistakes to have been intentional, more stringent penalties would have been applied in line with EU rules on intentional errors.

As previously announced to Assembly colleagues, I have given farmers an additional opportunity in 2007 to correct their maps and 2007 application forms. Hopefully, this will mean that farmers will have picked up many of these ineligible areas before my Department identifies them as irregularities.

Equality Agenda in Rural Communities

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will outline how her department intends to address the equality agenda in relation to rural communities. (AQO 132/08)

Ms Gildernew: I refer my colleague to the equality impact assessment paper on the Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme 2007- 2013 which is currently out for public consultation. In this paper DARD has clearly outlined how it has been engaging with a wide spectrum of equality groups in recent months, to help gain a better understanding of the specific issues affecting rural communities.

This positive engagement will continue in the future too. I am keen to ensure that people who work and live in rural areas are treated every bit as fairly as their urban counterparts, and are made fully aware of the scope of the new Programme, and how it has the potential to bring positive benefits to disadvantaged groups in rural communities.

The consultation period runs until 2 November and during this time we will host a series of consultation events to discuss the new Programme with various interested groups. We want to hear their views and suggestions that will help us ensure that equality is mainstreamed into all aspects of delivery of the Programme.

Rural Childcare Strategy

Mrs Claire McGill asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will give an update on progress on the Rural Childcare Strategy. (AQO 190/08)

Ms Gildernew: The Rural Childcare Stakeholders Committee has now met twice and is due to bring forward a report on Rural Childcare issues in January 2008. Membership of the group is wide and includes childcare specialists, community groups, women's interests and government representatives.

Inspections for Farmers

Mr Francie Brolly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what progress has been made on reducing inspections for farmers. (AQO 125/08)

Ms Gildernew: I am able to report that good progress has been made. This year, DARD has put in place arrangements whereby all the Cross-Compliance animal requirements are inspected as part of one on-farm inspection. This has reduced the number of separate on-farm inspection visits required by 800 when compared the figures for 2006. Also, it has been agreed in principle that, from 2008, DARD inspectors will undertake the health and safety related Cross-Compliance inspections (currently undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive), which will remove a further 400 separate farm visits.

I would also advise that recent legislative amendments introduced by the European Commission will enable eligibility and Cross-Compliance inspections for the 2008 scheme onwards to begin before the closing date for applications. This will enable us to spread inspections throughout the year and avoid unnecessary pressure at the end of the year.

All-Ireland Approach to Rural Development

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the progress that has been made in relation to an all-Ireland approach to rural development. (AQO 127/08)

Ms Gildernew: All Ireland co-operation on rural development is vital to ensure the sustainability of all our rural communities.

There have already been many positive examples of my Department working together with our colleagues in the South. This cross border co-operation has supported the creation of new industries and jobs and reinvigorated our Border areas.

I am very keen that this co-operation continues. Rural people face the same challenges across the whole island of Ireland, and a partnership approach pays dividends. To develop this further, I met with Ministers O'Cuiv and Devins on 7 September to discuss a range of rural development issues including rural childcare and their Rural White Paper, to share experiences and to look to opportunities for further co-operation in the future.

Support for Farmers

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what support she is giving to farmers in negotiating more favourable terms with supermarket chains for the sale of their produce.

(AQO 36/08)

Ms Gildernew: The multiple retailers are major markets for food and drink produced in the North and as such I have made it a priority to engage with them to discuss their policies for local sourcing and promotion of local produce.

I have already met with senior representatives of two of the major retailers in June and plan to meet others in the coming months. During these meetings I encouraged the retailers to support the sustainability of local supply chains and to take account of rising input costs faced by producers and processors. I also encouraged them to increase the amount of produce sourced from NI for their stores, both locally and in GB.

I have also just issued a letter to all the supermarkets locally seeking their view on the increase in price of feed and expressing my concern about the potential knock-on effects on producer margins.

I am committed to helping farmers develop strong and profitable relationships with their supply chain partners and my Department has been proactively facilitating such communication through the Supply Chain Awareness Programme for the past four years. I am also pleased to say that we are also currently providing facilitation support to groups of producers exploring market focused initiatives.

Delay in Single Farm Payments

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give an assurance that Northern Ireland farmers will not be put at a disadvantage, compared to farmers in the Republic of Ireland, through delays in paying out the 2007 Single Farm Payment.
(AQO 52/08)

Ms Gildernew: While I am not in a position to compare the 2007 payment position between here and the south, I can provide an assurance that there will be no unjustified delays in the issue of our 2007 Single Farm Payments. However, as payments can only be made on fully validated claims, if there is a query on a case this cannot be paid until the query is sorted out. Around 38,800 applications were received this year and good progress is being made in processing these with a sizeable percentage being query free. A timetable setting out payment targets will be published in November.

Biosecurity

Mr Cathal Boylan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her plans for ensuring that bio security is as effective as possible in ensuring freedom from future outbreaks of Foot-and-Mouth and other diseases.

(AQO 116/08)

Ms Gildernew: I will continue to ensure that everything possible is done to keep us free from animal diseases that would have serious economic implications.

My Department has a system in place at ports to ensure that “dirty” vehicles are not permitted to enter the North. There are also systems in place that can easily be introduced at times of increased risk, for example, disinfection at ports as we have seen in the past month.

Our procedures for cattle traceability are excellent and this forms the basis for ensuring that animals are monitored closely and can be easily traced. During the recent Foot and Mouth outbreak, as an example, within 48 hours my Department had traced all 128 consignments of animals that had come from or through Britain since the beginning of July. This was fundamental to ensuring that if the disease had spread here we would have picked it up quickly.

As well as traceability my Department also has a long term commitment to education which includes biosecurity messages being issued in a timely manner and in response to heightened risk. This takes the form of leaflets, advertising and posters.

There is very close, on-going co-operation between my Department and the Department of Agriculture and Food in Dublin on the prevention, surveillance and control of a range of epizootic diseases, such as FMD, Bluetongue and Avian Influenza.

This co-operation has included discussions about the assessment of risk, the preventive actions that would be taken in the respective jurisdictions and the importance of these being co-ordinated, the alignment of contingency planning, and the movement controls which would be necessary in the event of an outbreak.

This close level of North/South co-operation will continue, given the interest we all share in preventing the introduction of serious animal disease to the Island of Ireland.

Foot-and-Mouth-Disease Outbreak

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of the ‘Fortress Ireland’ approach adopted following the Foot-and-Mouth outbreak in England, and its role in Northern Ireland’s exclusion from the European Union ban on produce from Britain.
(AQO 114/08)

Ms Gildernew: In my opinion, the “Fortress Ireland” approach was crucial in minimising the risk to the Island of Ireland during the recent Foot and Mouth outbreak. I, together with my officials, worked closely with counterparts in Dublin to ensure a consistent approach was adopted throughout the Island which was proportionate to the risk. The Department already has close links with colleagues in Dublin and this close level of North/South co-operation will continue in the future.

Indeed the European Commission has recognised the unique position of the North which means that we were excluded from the EU ban and therefore allowed to continue to trade with other Member States.

Foot-and-Mouth-Disease Outbreak

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will outline the diplomatic efforts that were involved in ensuring that other countries understood and respected that Northern Ireland's exports were free of Foot-and-Mouth Disease. (AQO 120/08)

Ms Gildernew: The First Minister contacted the Japanese Ambassador in London and the deputy First Minister and I worked very closely with the US Administration.

At my request, the UK Chief Veterinary Officer (CVO) wrote to all EU CVOs advising each of them that the North was free from FMD and had been since 2001. My officials then rang and spoke to a number of Member States to re-inforce the message.

We also spoke to countries such as Turkey where there were initial difficulties concerning hides and skins.

DETI and Invest NI were also very supportive and will continue to promote our produce at international exhibitions, Meet-The-Buyer events and by increasing the number of trade development visits to overseas exhibitions.

My CVO attended the Standing Committee of the Food Chain and Animal Health (SCoFAH) in Brussels on two occasions.

Letters of comfort were also provided to exporters who were experiencing difficulties with importing countries.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Bailiffs for Fisheries

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of bailiffs to service (i) Killylane Reservoir; (ii) Altnahinch Reservoir; and (iii) Dungonnell Reservoir; and to give his assessment of whether this number is sufficient. (AQW 67/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): The Department employs the Fisheries Conservancy Board on an agency basis to provide the bailiffing for these 3 fisheries which form part of the Department's Public Angling Estate. There are 64 fisheries in the Estate including Lough Erne.

There is no set number of bailiffs attending these fisheries rather the Department allocates a specific number of hours per season for each fishery. Bailiffing is undertaken by "blitzes" (several bailiffs at weekends or evenings) and single bailiffs at any time. The hours allocated are shown below.

Fishery	Evening and weekend visits	No of bailiffs	Blitz hours	Individual hours	Total hours
Killylane	4	2	30	33	63
Altnahinch	3	2	18	12	30
Dungonnell	1	2	6	12	18

Additional hours may be added if specific problems are identified.

The amount of bailiffing is based on the revenue available to the Department for this purpose. The level of bailiffing at the 64 fisheries is determined by the investment in each fishery (value of fish stocked) or its importance as a wild fishery. This is the most cost effective way to bailiff these fisheries at this time.

Eel-Fishing Community on Lough Neagh

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail his strategy for assisting the eel fishing community on Lough Neagh. (AQO 123/08)

Mr Poots: My Department already implements a number of operational measures to assist the eel fishing community on Lough Neagh. This includes:

- the funding of a scientist to work specifically with the eel fishing community on Lough Neagh on eel research work; and
- the Freshwater Fishing Vessels Grant Scheme provides financial assistance primarily to the Lough Neagh commercial eel fishing community towards the cost of fishing vessels or a new engine for a fishing vessel.

The Department is currently developing an eel management plan for the Neagh/Bann catchment which includes Lough Neagh. This is required by an EU Eel Conservation regulation to address the current decline in European eel stocks. Whilst this is primarily a conservation measure it should also assist the continued viability of the local eel fishing industry.

For the first time the European Fisheries Fund includes a grant provision for the specific purpose of elver restocking. The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development is the lead NI department for delivery of the Fund. The provision of grant for elver restocking is currently under discussion between my Department and DARD.

Funding of GAA Clubs

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he has taken to ensure that funding to local Gaelic Athletic Clubs is awarded fairly and in accordance with need, and that district councils that fail to comply are informed accordingly.

(AQO 13/08)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland is responsible for the development of sport in Northern including the distribution of funding to sport. All Sport Northern Ireland investment programmes are subject to open competition and have clearly documented procedures to ensure they address need, are transparent and that there is consistency in the assessment of applications for all sports including Gaelic Games. These procedures are also subject to independent internal and external audit in accordance with accountability requirements of public funding. In addition, all Sport Northern Ireland programmes are assessed to ensure that they take account of the need to promote equality of opportunity in line with the equality requirements imposed upon public bodies under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. District Councils are also subject to the same accountability and equality obligations.

Maritime Heritage

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps are being taken to preserve the maritime heritage of Northern Ireland.

(AQO 59/08)

Mr Poots: My Department's responsibilities on maritime heritage are outworked through our sponsorship of the National Museums of Northern Ireland. National Museums have significant and extensive maritime collections. Those collections include a photographic archive containing tens of thousands of images, hundreds of thousands of drawings from the Harland and Wolff shipyards and a number of full sized vessels. All are adequately being cared for and preserved.

Mobile Library Service

Mr Gerry McHugh asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he is taking to ensure that the mobile library service is expanded. (AQO 128/08)

Mr Poots: I appreciate that mobile libraries provide a greatly valued service, especially in rural areas. 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries', the DCAL Framework Policy for Libraries, encourages the use of mobile libraries to provide access to library services in rural areas.

Operational decisions regarding the most effective and efficient way to provide library services in any particular area are made by Education and Library Boards.

PRONI Online

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, following the announcement of a relocation of the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland to Belfast's Titanic Quarter, what plans he has for, and what resources he intends to commit to, increasing the accessibility of public records online.

(AQO 40/08)

Mr Poots: A major project - with government funding to date of £740,000 - to make the extensive and detailed catalogues to the archives held in PRONI, available and searchable on-line will be completed before the end of 2007. This will open up PRONI's archives to both a local and world-wide audience, enable the public to be much better prepared in advance of a visit to PRONI and speed up the research time actually spent in PRONI. The public will be able to access PRONI's catalogues through the public library service and Electronic Libraries for Northern Ireland (ELFNI) thereby providing a more joined approach to information retrieval.

Alongside this major project, PRONI has completed 2 significant digitisation projects that are available on-line, and is currently completing 3 further projects to get the 1858-1900 wills, the early street directories and the historical Ordnance Survey maps for Northern Ireland (the latter in partnership with Ordnance Survey Northern Ireland) available on-line.

Electronic educational resources based on PRONI's rich archives have also been created to support the Northern Ireland curriculum, and are either available through LearningNI to all schools in Northern Ireland or directly on the Internet. Plans are well advanced to create an on-line exhibition in partnership with the Linen Hall Library and the Ulster Museum on the Ulster connections to the Abolition of the Slave Trade. The exhibition will draw extensively on PRONI's archives and will be of value to schools, universities and the life-long learner.

In addition PRONI is currently re-designing its website that will provide more information to customers using the archives with plans to include databases to particular series of archives.

Both present and future initiatives in regard to the enhancement of online access to the unique holdings of PRONI are considered within the overall context of DCAL resource priorities and the priorities of PRONI as a division of the Department. Those priorities will take full account of the need for PRONI to encourage the wider use of unique archive resources that are ‘the documented community memory’.

Business Plan for All-sports Stadium at the Maze

Mr David Ford asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the timescale for presentation of a full business plan for an all-sports stadium at the Maze site. (AQO 80/08)

Mr Poots: A draft business plan has been passed to the 3 sports governing bodies – Soccer, Rugby and Gaelic Games – for their consideration. The independent consultants appointed to complete the business plan will then review and finalise the plan in light of the comments received from the 3 sports bodies. This process will hopefully be completed in the next few weeks. In parallel with this, but on a slightly longer timescale, work is in hand to address the governance and management arrangements for the Stadium. This work will also be taken forward in conjunction with the preferred developer for the Maze site.

Development of Recreational Sea Angling

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he is taking to ensure adequate investment is made into developing recreational sea angling in coastal areas. (AQO 121/08)

Mr Poots: My Department has no direct remit under the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966 to develop recreational sea angling. Currently there is no funding allocated for this purpose.

However as the implementing body for a Peace II Water Based Tourism Measure we allocated funding totalling over £116, 000 to four commercial recreational sea angling projects. This funding was primarily to provide new or upgrade existing charter boat vessels for recreational coastal angling for the benefit of both local communities and tourists.

My department has commissioned a report into the social and economic impact of recreational fisheries, angling and angling resources. The report includes sea angling. It is due to be published in the near future. I will be considering the recommendations contained in the Report.

I am also currently in discussion with Ards and Down Sea trout Enhancement Association regarding the feasibility of coastal sea trout angling on Strangford Lough.

Joint Projects

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the joint projects currently being undertaken by his department and the Department of the Environment, Heritage and Local Government in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 124/08)

Mr Poots: Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland, an Agency of DCAL, is working with a number of other organisations including the Department for Regional Development, NI Planning Service, Ordnance Survey Ireland, the University of Ulster Jordanstown and the Department of Environment, Heritage and Local Government in the Republic of Ireland, on a Spatial Indicators project. This project covers Northern Ireland and the Border counties. It is funded through the EU INTERREG IIIA programme.

The Spatial Indicators project is based on work developed in an EU project named MOLAND (Monitoring Land Cover/Use Dynamics). MOLAND uses a modelling tool to predict the impact of spatial planning decisions, and to monitor and assess where development is likely to take place. The results enable organisations to proceed with planning decisions with a view of their likely consequences. The model also contains a set of indicators of urban and regional sustainability that can be used to compare between areas.

ENVIRONMENT

Eco-driving Campaign

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration she will give to the introduction of an “eco-driving campaign” similar to that launched by the Scottish Executive. (AQW 3/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): I have no plans to introduce such a campaign in Northern Ireland but changes to driver training and assessment should help to promote eco-friendly driving. From 3 September 2007 the Theory Test for car and motorcycles has introduced more questions on the effects of certain driving behaviours on the environment. From September 2008 for drivers of buses and September 2009 for drivers of large goods vehicles, it is proposed to introduce into the practical test an assessment to demonstrate understanding of ways to reduce fuel consumption and reduce noise and pollution.

Mourne National Park

Mr John McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment if she will confirm that she has no plans to include Carlingford Lough in any proposed Mourne National Park. (AQW 8/08)

Mrs Foster: The Mourne National Park Working Party will be presenting me with its recommendations about the proposed Mourne National Park later this month. After I receive its recommendations I will seek the opinions of the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside and the Environment and Agriculture and Rural Development Committees. The views of these bodies will help me decide how to proceed.

Ballycraigy Bonfire

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the scientific tests that were performed on, or after, 12 July 2007, to assess the environmental impact of the Ballycraigy bonfire. (AQW 115/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not regulate bonfire sites and has not carried out any scientific tests on or around the Ballycraigy bonfire site.

Planning Applications and PPS 14

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment if she will outline in detail the implications for all planning applications refused, or with an opinion to refuse, under Draft Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside, in light of Mr Justice Gillen's decision of 7 September 2007. (AQW 122/08)

Mrs Foster: Following the Court's decision that the Department for Regional Development did not have the power to prepare draft PPS 14, the Judicial Review parties have been given one week to consider possible remedies and a further hearing will take place, today 14th September 2007. Planning Service is currently holding all applications that have been determined under draft PPS 14, including those where an opinion has already been presented to the District Council but no decision has been issued. Applications for single rural dwellings listed on Council schedules during the week beginning 10 September 2007 have been deferred. The implications for applications which have previously been refused will be considered further in light of the outcome of the further Court hearing on 14 September 2007.

Waste Offences

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of people who have been prosecuted for waste offences, in each of the last five years. (AQW 125/08)

Mrs Foster: EHS does not hold records for these prosecutions prior to late December 2003, when it assumed responsibility for waste management from District Councils. Since then, EHS has overseen the following successful prosecutions for waste offences:

2003	3
2004	24
2005	61
2006	126
2007 (to date)	55

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Art in Hospitals Expenditure

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount spent by each hospital in Northern Ireland on art works, for each of the last five years. (AQW 18/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The information requested is not held centrally. The review, which I announced on 24 August 2007, will look at the pattern of spending on artwork in healthcare facilities. In particular, I have asked that clear guidance is produced on how resources should be found for works of art.

Gardening and Landscaping Expenditure

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount spent by each hospital in Northern Ireland on gardening and landscaping, in each of the last five years. (AQW 19/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is not held for each hospital.

Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount spent by each hospital in Northern Ireland on hospitality and entertainment, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 20/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is not available by hospital.

Transfer of Patients Outside Northern Ireland

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, for each of the last five years, the number of patients transferred to hospitals outside Northern Ireland owing to a lack of beds or personnel, broken down by hospital.

(AQW 21/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is not available by hospital but some high level information is available by Commissioning Board and this is shown in the table below.

NUMBER OF PATIENTS TRANSFERRED TO HOSPITALS OUTSIDE NORTHERN IRELAND 2002/2003 – 2006/2007

Commissioning Board	Financial Year					Total
	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Northern	214	212	211	246	324	1,207
Southern	133	146	185	199	207	870
Eastern	328	345	363	366	346	1,748
Western	41	63	105	120	61	390
Total	716	766	864	931	938	4,215

Notes

The data include:

- Patients transferred for a specialist service not available within Northern Ireland; Patients transferred to hospitals with which the Commissioning Board holds a Service Level Agreement (SLA) except for Western Board which was unable to separately identify these patients within the timeframe available.

The data exclude:

- Patients admitted to hospitals outside Northern Ireland while on holiday or studying abroad;
- Patients admitted to state secure hospitals;
- Patients transferred to hospitals outside Northern Ireland due to waiting list initiatives.
- The data represent the actual number of patients being seen or treated in each financial year but do not reflect the frequency of each patient's visit to hospital. It should be noted that a patient may be counted in each of the financial years if their condition is kept under review.

Southern Health and Social Care Trust

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of directors and assistant directors in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area; the cost of their salaries and that of the Chief Executive; and how these costs compare with previous costs before the new arrangements were implemented.

(AQW 37/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I have delegated the responsibility for answering this question to the Chief Executive of the Southern Health and Social Care Trust. I understand that he has replied as follows:

With reference to the above question, please find detailed below the response:

Job Title	Salary Band	Salary Range
Chief Executive	Band 2	£88,125 - £117,498
Director of Acute Services	Band 4	£66,093 - £88,125
Director of Children & Young People's Services	Band 4	£66,093 - £88,125
Director of Finance & Procurement	Band 4	£66,093 - £88,125
Director of Human Resources	Band 5	£56,650 - £75,534
Director of Mental Health & Disability	Band 4	£66,093 - £88,125
Director of Older People & Primary Care	Band 5	£56,650 - £75,534
Director of Performance & Reform	Band 4	£66,093 - £88,125

Bandings for the above posts have been set by the Department of Health, Social Services & Public Safety.

Job Title	Salary Band	Salary Range
Assistant Directors (24)	8C	£46,900 - £68,880
Assistant Directors (7)	8B	£39,346 - £50,733

Bandings for the Assistant Directors posts were determined by a desk top banding exercise in accordance with the new Agenda for Change Pay Arrangements. This desk top banding was carried out by trained management side and staff side representatives.

The cost of Chief Executives, Directors and Assistant Directors in the old structures is estimated to be of the order of £6.4m (the figures have to be treated with some degree of caution owing to definitional issues around Assistant Directors in the old structures) compared to an estimated £2.6m in the new structure. This latter figure does not reflect the cost of some posts/structures currently being consulted upon but is not likely to exceed £3m.

Tackling Violence in the Home Strategy

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has established an inter-Ministerial group to deliver on the Tackling Violence in the Home Strategy; and to detail the number of meetings that have taken place to date. (AQW 38/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I announced in the Assembly on 29 May 2007 my intention to establish an Inter-Ministerial Group on Domestic Violence, in order to ensure the implementation of the Tackling Violence at Home Strategy. Recognising Northern Ireland's particular needs and planning to make best use of people's time, I have decided to expand the remit of the Group to include sexual violence.

I have written to Ministers Peter Robinson, Margaret Ritchie and Cairtriona Ruanne seeking their endorsement of the 2007/08 Domestic Violence Action Plan and informing them about the proposed Group. In order to establish the Group, I intend to seek the Executive's formal approval in early November and follow with the first meeting as soon as possible thereafter.

Community Health Village in Banbridge

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following the commitment to the people of Banbridge after the closure of Banbridge Hospital, if he will provide a new community health village on the site; to give a timescale for completion of this work; and to give an indication of what plans currently exist for the site. (AQW 39/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust have produced a conceptual plan for a Community Health Village on the site of the former Banbridge Hospital. As part of this plan the new GP Group Surgery and the FOLD sheltered accommodation have already been developed at the location. The Health and Care Centre, and Day Centre projects proposed for this site are included in the Trust's business case for their Primary and Community Care Infrastructure Programme, which was submitted to the Department in July 2007 for assessment. It is expected that this appraisal of the PCCI business case, including Banbridge, should be completed before the end of 2007, at which time a decision on approval could be taken. This would then enable the project to progress to the procurement stage. This will, of course, be subject to the availability of the requisite capital and revenue resources, which is yet to be confirmed in the current Comprehensive Spending Review and associated review of the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland later this year. Other plans for the site include the development of a memorial garden and community park which is to be provided by Banbridge District Council.

Altnagelvin Hospital

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, for the Altnagelvin Hospital Estate, (i) the number and location of inpatient beds; and (ii) the provision of professionals allied to medicine, allocated to people who have suffered a brain injury, spinal injury or who have a progressive neurological condition. (AQW 47/08)

Mr McGimpsey: (i) There are 17 beds, located at Spruce House in Altnagelvin Hospital, that are allocated to patients who have suffered a brain injury, spinal injury or who have a progressive neurological condition.

Most patients are admitted to these beds directly from home but in some cases they may be transferred from an acute bed within the main Altnagelvin Hospital where they had been admitted through A&E.

(ii) One physiotherapist is allocated to Spruce House for 10 hours per week to provide a service for patients who have suffered a brain injury, spinal injury or who have a progressive neurological condition.

Physiotherapists are allocated as required to patients with these conditions, who occupy acute beds, within the main Altnagelvin hospital as required.

There is no formal Occupational Therapy or Speech and Language Therapy cover for Spruce House. However, the Head Occupational Therapist / Head Speech and Language Therapist will see patients with such conditions when required.

No other Allied Health Professionals provide an input to these services at Spruce House.

Regional Disabled Services Unit at Musgrave Park Hospital

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he intends to take to reduce the waiting list for special seating for wheelchairs at the Regional Disabled Services Unit at Musgrave Park Hospital. (AQW 52/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is working to bring about a significant programme of change in the delivery of the wheelchair service in Northern Ireland. The current review of the wheelchair service being carried out by the Regional Wheelchair Reform Group will ensure that service users can avail of a high quality, accessible, and responsive service. The Group's remit covers the complete spectrum of wheelchair services, including the area of special seating. It will report its findings and recommendations by March 2008.

Breast Screening Waiting Lists

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures have been put in place to tackle the breast-screening waiting lists and waiting times within the Northern Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 65/08)

Mr McGimpsey: A regional breast screening plan has been drawn up by the Chief Executives of the Health and Social Services Boards for the provision of an equitable breast screening service for Northern Ireland, and to address the backlog that has arisen as a result of suspension of the breast screening service in the Northern Board. The plan identified the need for a second mobile screening unit in the Northern Board. My Department has made funding available for this and the Northern Board has begun the procurement process.

Currently 370 Northern Board women are being screened every week compared with 250 women prior to October 2005. There is a 16 month backlog for mobile screening in the Ballymena area but this will fall to 8 months from October 2007 when screening in the Ballymena area is completed. The provision of the second mobile and use of unscheduled capacity at Antrim Hospital from October 2007 will increase the number screened and further help reduce the backlog. It is anticipated that the backlog will be fully cleared by 2009.

The breast screening programme is a rolling one which invites women from GP practices in turn on a three year cycle and any additional activity in one year would have to be replicated every third year or a backlog would develop again. The reduction in the backlog requires careful management to ensure that a backlog situation does not arise again and my Department is monitoring the situation closely.

Delayed Discharge of Patients

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people, broken down by Health and Social Services Board, who remain in hospital because an adequate care package is not available to facilitate their return home. (AQW 66/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of people, broken down by Health and Social Services Board, who remain in hospital because an adequate care package is not available to facilitate their return home is not available. However, the number of patients who had their discharge delayed due to 'no place or care package available' is available and is shown in the table below broken down by Health and Social Services Board of residence. Figures shown represent the situation at the end of April 2007, the latest month for which information is available.

Withdrawal of Drugs for Alzheimer's Disease

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the anticipated financial savings that would be achieved as a result of withdrawing clinically effective drugs for the treatment of the early and late stages of Alzheimer's Disease. (AQW 98/08)

Mr McGimpsey: In November 2006, the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) published guidance on four drugs used in the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. This guidance was amended in September 2007. The Institute's conclusion was that three of these drugs (donepezil, galantamine and rivastigmine) were recommended as treatment options for people with Alzheimer's disease of moderate severity only. The other drug, memantine, was not recommended as a treatment option for people with moderately severe to severe Alzheimer's disease.

Using a costing template produced by NICE, it is estimated that implementation of this guidance in Northern Ireland would realise annual savings in the region of £400,000.

Cost of Alzheimer's Drugs

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost per annum of prescribing the Alzheimer's drugs Aricept, Reminyl and Exelon. (AQW 99/08)

Mr McGimpsey: During the 2006/2007 year the cost of prescribing these Alzheimer's drugs was:

Drug	Cost
Aricept	£2,205,113
Reminyl	£1,186,528

Drug	Cost
Exelon	£116,636

Number of People with Alzheimer's Disease

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people with Alzheimer's Disease, who are currently in receipt of community care services. (AQW 100/08)

Mr McGimpsey: This information is not collected centrally.

Patient Complaints

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, broken down by hospital, the total number of complaints made by patients in each of the last five years; the number of these that related to (i) misdiagnosis; (ii) unacceptable standards of care; and (iii) unsuitable treatment; and the total number and percentage of these that were upheld. (AQW 145/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information is not available in the format requested. The following represents the number of complaints made by patients in each of the last five years across HSC Trusts.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Upgrade of Sewerage System in Bangor

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to upgrade the sewerage system in Bangor; and if he will give a timescale for the work to be carried out. (AQW 4/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): As Minister for Regional Development, I have policy responsibility for water and sewerage, but the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 introduced by the previous administration transferred responsibility for the operational delivery of water and sewerage services to Northern Ireland Water (NIW). As the issue raised is an operational matter, I have asked Katharine Bryan, Chief Executive of NIW, to write to you in response to this question.

Improvements to Road and Rail Infrastructure

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he has taken to improve the contribution of Northern Ireland's road and rail infrastructure towards our ability to compete economically with the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 43/08)

Mr Murphy: The Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS) identifies strategic transportation investment priorities up to 2012. The strategic direction and underlying principles of the RTS were agreed by the Assembly in July 2002.

The RTS acknowledges that transportation is inextricably linked to the economy. The RTS was developed on the basis that enhancing the regional gateways identified in the Regional Development Strategy and creating an upgraded and integrated transport system, built around the Regional Strategic Transport Network incorporating the Key Transport Corridors, is essential for the future prosperity of the region.

Proposals to upgrade and improve these corridors were contained within the Regional Strategic Transportation Network Transport Plan (RSTNTP – 2005), which identified £1,567 million for major highway improvements and bus and rail services, up to the year 2015.

The composition and delivery of the major works programme of my Department's Roads Service is consistent with the level of investment proposed under the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland (ISNI), published in December 2005. The ISNI sets out a high level view of planned investment up to 2015 with proposals for up to £1.4 billion of strategic road improvement schemes. Around £1 billion of these schemes have already been identified in the RSTN TP and Roads Service is currently considering responses to a consultation exercise on a further £400million of major works proposals.

The National Development Plan 2007-2013, launched in January 2007, contains proposals for Irish Government investment in North/South projects. At the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) meeting in July, the Irish Government indicated its intention to make available £400million to help fund major roads programmes, providing dual carriageway standard on routes within Northern Ireland on the Western Corridor and the Eastern Seaboard Corridor (Belfast to Larne). The Northern Ireland Executive has confirmed its acceptance, in principle, to taking forward these two major road projects. Roads Service is now engaged in developing a process for the governance, delivery, and funding of these projects including the early commencement of a route corridor study for the A5.

An interdepartmental working group led by my Department has now undertaken an assessment of investment, and considered options for future investment for the rail network. As a result, a bid for additional funding to purchase further new trains and to upgrade the Derry line has been submitted for consideration in drawing up the second Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland.

The RTS contains a commitment to carry out a mid-term review which will include examining the progress of implementation to date, budgets secured and relevant developments since 2002.

Security of Rail Link to Dublin

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of meetings he has had with the Police Service of Northern Ireland, regarding the security of the rail link to Dublin.

(AQW 44/08)

Mr Murphy: I have not met with the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) to discuss the security of the rail link to Dublin. However, Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) liaises closely with the PSNI on matters concerning the security of the line. In the past six months senior operational managers from NIR have met with senior divisional PSNI officers on six occasions regarding security assessments / security incidents on the Belfast – Dublin line. In addition there have been numerous telephone communications at other operational levels between the two organisations.

Security Threat on Rail Link to Dublin

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the security threat against the Dublin rail link; and what steps he has taken to ensure that it remains free from disruption.

(AQW 45/08)

Mr Murphy: Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) liaises closely with the PSNI in terms of its response to reported security issues on the rail line. Where closure is considered necessary, this is done and the necessary contingency plans are implemented with co-operation from Iarnród Éireann. NIR, under the guidance and advice of the PSNI, works to ensure the earliest practical inspection, clearance and re-opening of the line, while at all times ensuring the safety of passengers and staff.

Assessing the level of threat is an issue for the PSNI rather than NIR or the Department for Regional Development. However, NIR has worked hard to achieve effective community relations on the route. Efforts have been made to raise awareness of the economic, environmental and social benefits that reliable access to public transport offers as well as the risks to safety, inconvenience and frustration to passengers that security alerts entail.

Road and Rail Infrastructure and Economic Competitiveness

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the contribution of Northern Ireland's road and rail infrastructure in determining its ability to compete economically with the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 46/08)

Mr Murphy: Transport is a key driver of economic development. It provides the means for all citizens to access employment, social and educational services as well as leisure activities and for the efficient and timely movement of goods. A modern infrastructure is crucial to economic growth and competitiveness. We need high quality ports and airports to trade internationally and also high quality road and public transport linkages.

The Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, published in December 2005, sets out a high level view of planned investment up to 2015 with proposals for up to £1.4 billion of strategic road improvement schemes. Around £1 billion of these schemes have already been identified in the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan and Roads Service is currently considering responses to a consultation exercise on a further £400million of major works proposals. The Regional Strategic Transport Network connects the major hubs and gateways here, including the air and seaports. The proposed strategic road improvements will improve the flow of traffic, including public transport and freight, across the region and contribute to competitiveness and economic growth here.

In addition all Ireland cooperation to develop a more integrated transport network can significantly contribute to the development of both the local economy and the economy of the island as a whole. Work is well advanced in upgrading the Belfast – Dublin road corridor as well as the Belfast – Dublin Enterprise service. There are also plans for improved roads provision for the Derry – Letterkenny North – West Gateway.

Modern Rolling Stock on the Belfast to Larne Line

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to advise of the estimated costs of providing modern rolling stock on the Belfast to Larne line, to a similar standard as that introduced to other rail services throughout Northern Ireland. (AQW 58/08)

Mr Murphy: Services on the Larne line are provided by a fleet of 9 x 3-car class 450 trains. Whilst these are older than the new C3K trains used elsewhere on the railway network, they are currently being refurbished at a cost of £3.5 million to provide a better standard of passenger comfort. To date 8 of the 9 class 450 trains have been refurbished, with the last one due to be completed by the end of November 2007.

The estimated cost of replacing the class 450 trains on the Larne line is £41.8 million. A further 2 new trains would be needed if passenger numbers on the Larne line increased at a similar rate as on other lines since the introduction of the new C3K trains, bringing the total estimated cost to £54.4 million.

The Department for Regional Development has bid for additional funding for new trains as part of the second Investment Strategy.

Impact of New Train Sets

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the impact of introducing the 23 new train sets to Northern Ireland, in terms of increased passenger numbers on the (i) Belfast to Bangor line; (ii) Belfast to Portadown line; and (iii) Belfast to Derry/Londonderry line. (AQW 59/08)

Mr Murphy: The Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company is in the process of producing a project benefit evaluation of the introduction of the 23 new train sets and, within this evaluation, an attempt will be made to isolate the passenger journey increases attributable to the new trains. It may, however, be difficult to make an accurate estimate of the increases due to the introduction of the new trains as there are many factors that influence passenger demand (economic conditions, fares, disruption through maintenance, road congestion).

Total passenger journey increases since the new trains were introduced are as follows:

- (i) Belfast to Bangor line – new trains were introduced between February and April 2005. Between 2004/05 and 2006/07 total passenger journeys increased from 1,517,000 to 1,957,000, an increase of 29%. Passenger journeys in 2004/05 were, however, depressed due to track relay on the line.
- (ii) Belfast to Portadown line - new trains were introduced between February and April 2005. Between 2004/05 and 2006/07 total passenger journeys increased from 1,941,000 to 2,505,000, an increase of 29%; and
- (iii) Belfast to Derry/Londonderry line – new trains were introduced between January and September 2005. Between 2004/05 and 2006/07 total passenger journeys increased from 850,000 to 1,020,000, an increase of 20%.

PPS 14

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made on the review of Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside; and to detail the number of meetings of the Executive Sub-Committee that have been held to date. (AQW 62/08)

Mr Murphy: The 5 July meeting of the Executive Committee agreed to undertake a review of rural planning policy. The review is being taken forward by an Inter-Departmental Group of Ministers. As a first step meetings with key stakeholders were held on 29 and 30 August. The first meeting of the Inter-Departmental Group is due to be held shortly.

Irish on Road Signs

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress his department has made in facilitating the legal use of Irish on road signs.

(AQW 63/08)

Mr Murphy: Road signs are authorised or prescribed by my Department under the Road Traffic Regulation (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, but the legislation does not make provision for signs in languages other than English. My Department's Roads Service officials are currently developing policy proposals to enable the authorisation of road signs in other languages, with a view to introducing amending legislation in line with the normal procedures and timetable for an Assembly bill.

I should point out that the Department had been in the process of working towards legislative change on this issue in 2005. However, the decisions arising out of the Review of Public Administration (RPA) meant that the relevant staff were directed to work on the legislative changes necessary to achieve the transfer of responsibility for local roads to the proposed new councils. The review of the local government aspects of RPA which is now underway has created a period of opportunity for Departmental officials to resume work on the detailed policy proposals for legislative change to allow the introduction of bilingual signage.

A draft operational policy has been prepared for the inclusion of Irish or Ulster Scots on certain road signs, as part of the Department's response to the European Charter on Regional and Minority languages. This policy will be consulted upon as part of the wider legislative development process and implemented once the necessary primary powers are in place.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will detail to which Northern Ireland Government department the government-owned company, Northern Ireland Water, is accountable.

(AQW 90/08)

Mr Murphy: Northern Ireland Water (NIW) was appointed as the water and sewerage undertaker by the Department for Regional Development under Article 13 of the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006.

NIW has direct responsibility for the delivery of water and sewerage services and is subject to regulation by the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation. My Department and DOE's Environment and Heritage Service also have some regulatory roles. These matters are set out in the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006. My Department is also NIW's sole shareholder.

Parking Fines in Warrenpoint

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of motorists who have been financially penalised to date, since the introduction of a one-hour parking time limit at Church Street, Warrenpoint.

(AQW 94/08)

Mr Murphy: Since October 2006, when my Department assumed responsibility for on-street parking enforcement, a total of 71 Penalty Charge Notices have been issued at Church Street, Warrenpoint for limited waiting contraventions. Details prior to this date are unavailable as this function was undertaken by the Police Service of Northern Ireland.

Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Train and Commuters

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to give the timetabled, and average actual, arrival times of morning trains arriving in Derry/Londonderry, that are designed for people commuting to work; and to outline any proposals by Northern Ireland Railways to encourage people to use the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry train for commuting to work.

(AQW 108/08)

Mr Murphy: The first train departure from Great Victoria Street, Belfast is at 06:50, arriving in Derry at 09:10. This is currently operated as an intercity service as opposed to a commuter train. In the last three months this train has had a punctuality of arrival of 84% on time or within 10 minutes, as allowed for by the Passenger Charter. In the same period overall punctuality on the Derry line stood at 90%.

Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) has immediate plans to improve running times by carrying out repair work to the track between Ballymena and Coleraine, with work already having commenced at a number of locations. It also has detailed plans to carry out comprehensive track life extension work between Ballymena and Coleraine and track repairs between Coleraine and Londonderry. These are due to be undertaken from late 2007 to 2009 subject to funding approval.

For the longer term NIR has outline plans to procure additional train sets and upgrade infrastructure in order to facilitate hourly departure frequencies between Belfast and Derry. This would include two commuter services scheduled to arrive into Derry before 08:00 and 09:00 respectively. However these plans are dependant upon funding being made available and could not, in any case, be implemented before 2012.

Rail Transport and Sustainable Development

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the role and importance of rail transport in promoting sustainable development. (AQW 109/08)

Mr Murphy: It is widely accepted that the increased use of public transport helps reduce harmful emissions and reduces the carbon footprint per passenger journey. The Regional Transportation Strategy seeks to encourage greater use of public transport and other sustainable ways of travelling such as walking and cycling. My Department is working with transport providers to make public transport more attractive and a real alternative to the private car. Rail transport has an important role to play within the public transport sector. Whilst rail transport requires significant investment in infrastructure and rolling stock, and thus has to compete for resources with other transport modes, it has still been possible to make significant investment in rail in recent years. For example, the procurement of 23 new train sets has helped to achieve an increase in rail patronage of 31% between 2002 and 2007. For the future, my Department has submitted bids within the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) exercise for additional funding to allow for an upgrade of to the Derry line and to enhance rail services generally with the purchase of more new trains.

PPS 14

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline, in light of Mr Justice Gillen's decision of 7 September 2007, in relation to Draft Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside, what policy will now apply from 16 March 2006 onwards. (AQW 123/08)

Mr Murphy: The recent Judgement by the Courts of the Judicial Review of PPS14 found in favour of Omagh District Council on the grounds that DRD did not have the statutory authority to promote PPS14. I shall consider fully all aspects of this Judgement in conjunction with other Ministerial colleagues. The Court has however given both parties one week (from Friday 7 September) to consider if they wish to provide evidence on the issue of remedies before finalising the judgement. Draft PPS14 will continue to be taken into account in the decision making process until the final outcome of the legal proceedings.

Parking Fines in Enniskillen

Mr Tommy Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline whether Roads Service (i) recently granted approval to National Car Parks to impose penalties for off-street parking at Head Street, Enniskillen, at the rear entrances to the Darling Street properties; and (ii) consulted with the property owners and businesses affected by this decision, prior to granting any approval for the imposition of fines for off-street parking and business usage. (AQW 126/08)

Mr Murphy: As you will be aware NCP Services Ltd is contracted by my Department to enforce the parking and waiting restrictions placed on public roads. The location to which you refer consists of a carriageway marked by a double yellow line and a footway area to the side of the carriageway. A double yellow line restriction means "no waiting at any time" and it applies not only to the carriageway but also to the adjacent footway or verge. Therefore vehicles are not permitted to park on the footway at this location.

NCP Services Ltd was instructed by Roads Service to carry out normal enforcement in this area because it is believed to form part of the public road. No consultation took place with adjacent property owners or local businesses due to the fact that this is not a new restriction and has been in place for some time.

However, business owners in this street have recently claimed that the footway area to the side of Head Street is privately owned and does not form part of the public road network, therefore the waiting restriction does not apply.

Roads Service officials are currently trying to establish the exact boundary between the public road and private ground to clarify the situation. Until this is complete Traffic Attendants will only enforce against vehicles parked on the carriageway.

I have asked Roads Service to write to you when a boundary has been established and to inform you of the impact it will have to parking in this area.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Child Support Payments

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister for Social Development to advise on what time limit exists within which the Child Support Agency must pursue additional payments, when the Agency has admitted that it has been responsible for the error. (AQW 57/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): There are no time limits within which the Child Support Agency must pursue additional payments, regardless of who is responsible for the error.

Where arrears are due to a parent with care, the Child Support Agency will always try to negotiate the best possible arrears agreement between the non-resident parent and the parent with care. Any agreement will aim to ensure a reasonable payment is made towards outstanding arrears, taking into account the financial circumstances of both parties, and, at the same time, not creating hardship for either party. Where the arrears are due to the Department, the Agency will negotiate a reasonable agreement with the non-resident parent. When agreement cannot be reached, the Agency will continue to pursue arrears using the full range of legislative powers available to it.

Benefit Fraud

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total cost of, (i) benefit fraud; (ii) housing benefit fraud; and (iii) the total percentage of monies paid out in benefits that this represented, in each year since 2001. (AQW 72/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is set out in the attached tables. Table 1 shows the estimated cost, since 2001, of fraud in benefits administered by the Social Security Agency. Table 2 shows the estimated cost of Housing Benefit fraud for the years where figures are available. Costs are expressed as a percentage of the relevant benefit expenditure. The data quoted in Tables 1 and 2 was produced on a financial year basis until 2004/2005. The survey period moved to a calendar year from 2005.

Ballycraigy Bonfire

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total cost of cleaning up and securing the site of the Ballycraigy bonfire; and how exactly this money was spent. (AQW 114/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has spent £9800 following the bonfire at Ballycraigy, Antrim. The required works involved clearing the site, renewing top soil and levelling the area.

Clearances of bonfires identified are dealt with as part of the NIHE Grounds Maintenance contract.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 21 September 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

RUAS and the Maze Site

Mr David McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to advise on the current status of the interest of the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society (RUAS) in moving to the proposed Maze development site; and, if the interest is confirmed to be of a positive nature, if he can confirm that the RUAS's intention would be to include in its plans provision for an international competition area for promoting equestrian sports events. (AQW 1/08)

The First Minister and Deputy First Minister (Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness): In March 2007 the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society (RUAS) reaffirmed their interest in moving to the proposed Maze development site, and in particular the possible purchase of the area identified as the rural excellence zone in the Maze/Long Kesh Masterplan. This will be a matter between RUAS and potential Development Partners and OFMDFM cannot at this stage confirm the RUAS's intentions as regards an international competition area for promoting equestrian sports events.

Northern Ireland Priorities and Budget 2006-08

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail, broken down by government department, the objectives and targets stated in the Northern Ireland Priorities and Budget 2006-08 that remain incomplete at this stage; to give a timescale for their completion; to identify any which it is envisaged will not be completed by March 2008; and to outline the pressures causing difficulty in completion. (AQW 26/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: A monitoring report on progress against the objectives and targets stated in the Northern Ireland Priorities and Budget document was carried out by the Department of Finance and Personnel in September 2006. With the restoration of Devolution, responsibility for monitoring progress has now reverted to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. OFMDFM officials are in the process of consulting with Departments to update progress against targets up to September 2007. It is expected that this report will be completed and available before the end of the year.

The Executive will set out its priorities for 2008 and beyond, including its objectives and targets, in its draft Programme for Government document which will be published later in the year.

Single Equality Bill

Mrs Dolores Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the cost to the department and its agencies in relation to administration, staffing and consultations on work related to the Single Equality Bill, in each of the last seven years. (AQW 36/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness:

Year	Cost (£'000s)
2000/01	Not available
2001/02	96.1
2002/03	182.3
2003/04	233.9
2004/05	198.4
2005/06	47.0
2006/07	196.3
Total	954.0

The costs stated relate to expenditure on issues dealing specifically with single equality legislation. It has not been possible to extrapolate the cost of work undertaken by the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland on legislative reform (including single equality legislation) as part of its statutory duty. This formed part of more comprehensive work on equality issues. Departmental costs directly associated with the progression of single equality legislation in 2000/01 were included in the Divisional spend and are not available separately.

Northern Ireland Executive: Name Change

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it proposes to follow the example of the Scottish Executive, and change the name of the Northern Ireland Executive to the Northern Ireland Government. (AQW 55/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: There are currently no plans to change the name of the Northern Ireland Executive to the Northern Ireland Government.

Attacks on Orange Halls

Mr Billy Armstrong asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what assessment has been made of the impact of the recent spate of attacks on Orange Halls on the department's strategic objectives of promoting better community relations, a culture of equality and rights, and promoting social inclusion. (AQW 82/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: We totally deplore these acts and condemn utterly those people who carry out such attacks, which are a scourge on our society. We are totally committed to moving society forward; to make a real difference to the lives of all our people. We have already confirmed our commitment to challenging sectarianism and racism. We wish to see a future based on tolerance; equality; mutual respect and respect for the law. A monitoring and evaluation framework has been developed to assess the impact of good relations (including race relations) policies. The framework includes data on attacks on symbolic premises which include churches and chapels, GAA/AOH/Orange Halls and schools.

Efficiency Review Panel

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will commit to the early establishment of an efficiency review panel with the widest possible remit. (AQO 2/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: The establishment of the Efficiency Review Panel to examine efficiency and value for money of aspects of the Strand One institutions is an important issue which needs to be carefully considered.

We have given a commitment to consult with the Assembly and Executive Review Committee on our proposals for the establishment, remit and work programme of the Panel before bringing proposals to the Assembly for approval.

Historic Crimes Investigation

Mr David Burnside asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, pursuant to its answer to AQW 86/08, if it will list the times and dates of any interviews that have taken place between Ministers, officials and policy advisers and the Police Service of Northern Ireland, with reference to any historic crime investigation, since the First Minister and deputy First Minister affirmed the Pledge of Office on 8 May 2007. (AQW 246/08)

Rt Hon Dr Paisley and Mr McGuinness: No such interviews have taken place.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she will take in relation to her department's policy not to cull new-born or young calves born to cows that have been culled from a herd because they tested positive for bovine tuberculosis. (AQW 32/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): A recent DARD Veterinary Epidemiology Unit report showed no evidence that the progeny of dams infected with tuberculosis are at a significantly higher risk of becoming infected with Tuberculosis than other cohort calves, unless there are specific risk factors in the herd.

However, if in the opinion of the Veterinary Officer the circumstances pertaining to the herd which has suffered a tuberculosis breakdown are such that the offspring should be classed as a disease risk, they will be removed, culled and compensation paid.

The Department has no legislative powers to pay compensation for the removal of calves for welfare reasons, so these animals must usually remain the responsibility of the herd keeper.

Beef Marketing

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will undertake to have locally-produced beef marketed as 'Irish beef'; and if she will give her assessment of Northern Ireland's attachment to the United Kingdom in relation to beef marketing. (AQW 34/08)

Ms Gildernew: I believe it is in the best interests of the North's beef industry to determine how best to position its products in the markets they serve and I will continue to support industry in this respect in order to achieve the best returns possible.

An International Image Group consisting of experienced representatives from export businesses in the North was established by my Department and DETI to oversee research into the image of the North's food and drink in international markets.

The research found that 'Northern Ireland' was underplayed and unknown but had potential for development. It also suggested that the North may be best served by being marketed as part of the island of Ireland in international markets. However, to gain optimum advantage of its unique position, the Image Group felt that the North's agri-food industry should utilise all options at its disposal, and, depending on the market and customer, market itself as NI, island of Ireland or UK.

Ultimately however, labelling will be determined by two areas: Legislation and the marketplace.

You will be aware that the EU beef labelling Regulations require the name of the member state or third country (i.e. country outside the EU), where the animal was born, raised and slaughtered, to be recorded on the label. Because of this requirement, all beef from the North is labelled as UK beef and, as this information is compulsory, I have no latitude to deviate from these requirements. However, these Regulations also contain a voluntary scheme which provides scope to have other claims about beef, approved for use on the label. Claims in relation to the region in which the animal was born/reared etc. require approval under this part of the beef labelling rules. This scheme has proved very worthwhile for local processors in marketing beef and more than 50 claims are currently approved.

The Food Strategy Implementation Partnership, currently under the chairmanship of Dan Flinter, past CEO of Enterprise Ireland, have recommended that NI should have a cohesive Food Development entity to represent all food sectors in NI. If this recommendation was implemented (it is currently being considered), then NI would have a single voice that could interact with An Bord Bia on joint development in international markets.

We are fortunate in that products from the North of Ireland are sold in a wide range of markets and, as such, branding is tailored for specific markets in a manner that optimises the benefit of the North's multiple identity.

Biofuels

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures she has introduced to promote the growth of crops for use as biofuels; and if she proposes to introduce any additional measures in the near future. (AQW 53/08)

Ms Gildernew: Currently, the growth of crops for use as biofuels, is promoted by DARD under the EU Aid for Energy Crops Scheme. Aid of €45 per hectare is payable for all crops used for the production of energy products, with the exception of those grown on set-aside land. Crops eligible under the Scheme, which may be used in the production of biofuels, include oilseed rape, sugar beet and hemp.

The scheme, although modest in terms of its rate of payment, does represent an additional incentive and income stream for those growers contemplating renewable energy crops. There have been a small number of applicants in relation to growing crops specifically for production of biodiesel.

However the farm-gate price for cereals will make the growing of these crops a greater attraction to the arable sector than the growing of energy crops.

There are no plans to introduce additional measures to support the growth of crops for use as biofuels in the near future.

However, College of Agriculture Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) are continuing to raise awareness of renewable technologies and efficiencies to the land based sector by way of continued training and technology transfer.

Tree Coverage

Mr Alex Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the amount of tree coverage across Northern Ireland; and to outline how this compares with the rest of the United Kingdom. (AQW 97/08)

Ms Gildernew: The North of Ireland contributes 86,000 Ha which represents 6.3% of the total surface area. Tree cover for Britain is 2,743,000 Ha which represents 12.0% of the surface area of Britain. This comprises 1,337,000 ha in Scotland (17.1% of surface area of Scotland); 1,121,000 ha in England (8.6% of surface area of England); and 285,000 ha in Wales (13.7% of surface area of Wales).

Proposed Staff Reductions

Mr Trevor Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will advise what financial savings will be made in relation to the proposed staff reductions in each of her department's three Rural Development Offices in Ballymena, Newry and Omagh, to make way for a centralised Rural Development Payments Unit in Dundonald House; and if she will detail the proposed staffing numbers, grades and costs of this new unit. (AQW 149/08)

Ms Gildernew: Firstly there will be no savings made “to make way for” a centralised Rural Development Payments Unit in Dundonald House.

Financial savings made in relation to the proposed staff reductions in the three Rural Development Offices are:

Omagh Office	£250k
Ballymena Office	£406k
Newry Office	£242k

Number	Grade	Cost
1	Staff Officer	£37k
2	EOI	£67k
2.6	EOII	£70k
4.	AO	£98k
9.6		£272k

It is worth noting that the unit has been running since January 2007.

The Department would not be opposed to the dispersal of Civil Service posts and this is something we may look at in the future.

Rural Development Payments Unit

Mr Trevor Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will detail the consultation that took place with rural stakeholders prior to the decision to establish a new centralised Rural Development Payments Unit in Dundonald House, with particular reference to those stakeholders who will be most affected by the new arrangements, e.g. funding beneficiaries. (AQW 157/08)

Ms Gildernew: Staff were made aware and there has been consultation with the Trade Union NIPSA. Other than this there was no requirement to consult with stakeholders because the decision has no relation to any central policy on decentralisation by government; no jobs are being lost, nor are there any policy changes involved.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Indigenous Artists and Public Procurement

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline any strategies and actions taken by his department to ensure that indigenous artists are able to tender to provide works of art via public procurement, with particular emphasis on the hospital sector. (AQW 48/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): The Arts Council’s guidance on the commissioning of new artwork for the public realm, including integrated art commissions in healthcare environments, is that an open competition process should be adopted. This guidance is articulated in the Arts Council’s ‘Public Art Handbook’. Competitions are advertised in the main all-Ireland arts journals, websites and e-bulletins. These publications are well known by indigenous practising artists as the main sources for learning about commissioning opportunities.

The Arts Council also financially supports Visual Artists Ireland to perform the role of a support vehicle to enable indigenous artists to develop their practices and keep informed about new opportunities.

Procurement of art works for the hospital sector is a matter for the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. However I am advised that current procedures for the commissioning of artwork for integration into health projects are implemented by the Health and Social Care Trusts in whose areas the project is located.

The Health and Social Services Trusts take advice from the Health Estates Agency, the Centre for Procurement Expertise for capital projects in the Health and Social Services sector.

The process involves public advertisement seeking expressions of interest from artists. Advertisements are usually placed in an arts journal with a wide distribution as recommended by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland.

Creative Media Sector

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will outline his department’s strategies to promote partnership working within the creative media sector in Northern Ireland. (AQW 117/08)

Mr Poots: My Department leads on the over-arching strategy for Creativity and the Creative Industries and chairs an Inter-departmental Creativity Group in partnership with the Departments of Education, Employment & Learning, Enterprise, Trade & Investment and Invest NI.

A Creative Industries Working Group, comprising representatives from government Departments, Invest NI, Belfast City Council, NESTA and the University of Ulster was set up to enable the industry, government and academia to work in partnership to produce an action based plan to develop and support the creative industries in Northern Ireland. This work is in progress.

My Department is working closely with Invest NI, which is developing a strategy for the growth of the digital content sector in Northern Ireland, which will include the development of networks, partnerships and clusters.

My Department is also supporting work by DETI, Invest NI and the Special EU Programmes Body to develop a creative industries support programme, in which partnerships and creative media will feature.

Creative Media Sector

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will outline his department's strategies to promote partnership working between the creative media sector in Northern Ireland and the creative industry in the Republic of Ireland and Great Britain. (AQW 120/08)

Mr Poots: My Department maintains contact with the Department of Culture, Media and Sport on its Creative Economy Programme, which aims to make the UK the world's leading creative hub.

We are in liaison with the Scottish Executive and Scottish Arts Council on their respective strategies for the creative industries and have met officials from the Dundalk Institute which is working in partnership with the University of Ulster on a project to develop a 'digital corridor' for Ireland's eastern seaboard.

My Department is also supporting work by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, Invest NI and the Special EU Programmes Body to develop a creative industries support programme, involving creative businesses in Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland and Western Scotland.

IFA Income

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail Irish Football Association's income from the sale of shirts and other merchandise, for each of the last three years. (AQW 150/08)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) does not retain information on the Irish Football Association's income from the sale of shirts and other merchandise. This is a matter for the Irish Football Association.

Shortfall in National Lottery Funding: Remedial Measures

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what remedial measures are being taken to address the shortfall in funding caused by the National Lottery's decision to transfer £42 million of funding from Northern Ireland to the London Olympics. (AQW 197/08)

Mr Poots: Policy and legislation in respect of the National Lottery is a reserved matter with the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) as the lead Department in Whitehall.

I have not made an assessment of potential job losses or projects that are at risk in the community, arts and sport sectors due to the National Lottery's decision to transfer £42million of funding from Northern Ireland to the London Olympics.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is making bids for funding, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, to support the development of sport and the arts in Northern Ireland. These bids will seek to take account of reductions of funding resulting from prioritisation of lottery spending on the London Olympics.

The Olympics will also provide modest funding opportunities for cultural and arts projects associated with the Cultural Olympiad. I would be keen to see arts organisations make the most of these opportunities when they arise.

In relation to community groups the Big Lottery Fund has made a public commitment that, providing forecasts of Lottery income are maintained, current funding programmes to community groups will not be materially affected by the diversion of funds to the Olympics. The Fund advises that its undertaking to provide 60-70% of its funding to the voluntary and community sector will be unaffected.

DCMS has recently confirmed that an agreement has been reached with the Mayor of London under which DCMS should, in time, be able to refund the £675m additional contribution to the Lottery Distributors throughout the UK. It is hoped that this will come from the proceeds of Olympic Park land sales post-2012.

Shortfall in National Lottery Funding: Job Losses

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment he has made of potential job losses in the community, arts and sport sectors, due to the National Lottery's decision to transfer £42 million of funding from Northern Ireland to the London Olympics. (AQW 198/08)

Shortfall in National Lottery Funding: Projects at Risk

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment he has made of projects that are at risk in the community, arts and sport sectors due to the National Lottery's decision to transfer £42 million of funding from Northern Ireland to the London Olympics. (AQW 199/08)

Mr Poots: Policy and legislation in respect of the National Lottery is a reserved matter with the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) as the lead Department in Whitehall.

World Pipe Band Championships

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to his answers to AQW 1262/07 and 1264/07, if he would provide an update on efforts by his department to bring the World Pipe Band Championships to Northern Ireland. (AQW 206/08)

Mr Poots: I met with representatives of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association on 25th July to discuss the opportunities for hosting the World Pipe Band Championships in Northern Ireland.

Following this, officials are liaising with representatives of the Northern Ireland Events Company, Ulster Scots Agency and Arts Council of Northern Ireland to take this forward.

Irish Football Association Salaries

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total salaries of the Irish Football Association's Chief Executives and Directors, for each of the last three years. (AQW 297/08)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) does not retain information on the total salaries of the Irish Football Association's Chief Executives and Directors for each of the last three years. This is a matter for the Irish Football Association.

EDUCATION

All-Island Centre of Excellence for Children with Autism

Mr John McCallister asked the Minister of Education to detail whether a business plan was in place when her predecessor announced, in April 2002, the decision to establish an all-island centre of excellence for children with autism at Middletown; and if she will place a copy of this business plan in the Assembly Library. (AQW 7/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): An Economic Appraisal for a Centre of Excellence for Autism Disorder at Middletown was approved in September 2001 and in place when an announcement was made in April 2002. Copies of this appraisal were placed in the Assembly Library in August 2005.

St Joseph's Adolescent Centre, Middletown

Mr John McCallister asked the Minister of Education to detail whether a new or updated business plan was in place in June 2004, when the former St. Joseph's Adolescent Centre in Middletown was purchased by a holding company funded by her department; and if she will place a copy of the business plan in the Assembly Library. (AQW 10/08)

Ms Ruane: The Economic Appraisal, which was in place for the Middletown Centre for Autism in June 2004 when the Holding Company purchased the former St. Joseph's Adolescent Centre, was that approved in September 2001. A revised Economic Appraisal was completed and approved in July 2006. This updated Economic Appraisal was placed in the Assembly Library on 12 February 2007.

Bain Report: ELB Expenditure

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the expenditure of each Education and Library Board in relation to the implementation of the Bain Report. (AQW 11/08)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Report sets out 61 recommendations covering a wide range of education issues, including funding, strategic planning of the schools estate, and sharing and collaboration. Some of the recommendations require further consideration and detailed work and consultation and it should be possible to progress others as part of the Department's and education authorities' existing responsibilities. It is too early at this stage to identify savings and expenditures associated directly with implementation of the Report.

Bain Report: School Closures

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools that have been closed, to date, as a direct result of the recommendations of the Bain Report. (AQW 12/08)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Report was published in December 2006. Since then development proposals have been approved to close nine primary schools, two post-primary schools and one special school. The relevant school authorities had commenced work on each of these proposals in advance of the publication of the report.

Bain Report: Savings

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the savings made as a result of implementation of the recommendations of the Bain Report. (AQW 13/08)

Ms Ruane: The Bain Report sets out 61 recommendations covering a wide range of education issues, including funding, strategic planning of the schools estate, and sharing and collaboration. Some of the recommendations require further consideration and detailed work and consultation and it should be possible to progress others as part of the Department's and education authorities' existing responsibilities. It is too early at this stage to identify savings and expenditures associated directly with implementation of the Report.

School Closures

Mr George Savage asked the Minister of Education to list the schools earmarked to close in the current financial year. (AQW 14/08)

Ms Ruane: The following closures have been approved for the current financial year:

Controlled
Mount Gilbert Community College closed 31 August 2007.
English PS, Dungannon and Tullymacarett PS, Dromore closed 31 August 2007.
Ballyduff PS, Newtownabbey closed 31 August 2007.

Controlled
Dungiven PS closed 31 August 2007.
Groomsport PS, Charley Memorial PS, Drumbo PS, Hillhall PS and Lambeg PS closed 31 August 2007.
Crossgar PS and Drumaghlin PS closed to form a new school on the Crossgar PS site at 1/09/2007

Maintained
St Mary's PS, Ballygowan and St Joseph's High School, Plumbridge closed 31 August 2007.
All Saints PS, St Joseph's PS, St Louis' PS and St Mary's PS, Ballymena closed to form 2 new schools at 1/09/2007
St Joseph's PS, Poyntzpass and St James' PS, Tandragee closed to form a new school on the St Joseph's site at 1/09/2007.
Irish Medium Unit at St Patrick's Primary School Gortin, closed 31 August 2007.

Special Schools
Lindsay Hospital School, Forster Green Hospital, Belfast closed 31 August 2007.
Beechgrove, Dunfane and Loughan Special Schools, Ballymena closed to form a new school at 1/09/2007 using existing accommodation pending the building of a new school.

Nursery Schools
Ballycastle Nursery School closed to be replaced by a nursery unit at Ballycastle Primary School at 1/09/2007.

In addition, a development proposal for the amalgamation of St Joseph's PS, Ahoghill and St Patrick's PS, Aughercloney was approved.

Single Education System

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education what estimate she has made of the cost to the public purse of maintaining different education systems; and of the amount that could be saved by having a single education system for the whole of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 17/08)

Ms Ruane: Information is not available on the estimated costs of maintaining different education systems. The diversity of the education system reflects long established traditions and the principle of parental choice. The Review of Public Administration in education will introduce a common administrative structure for all schools here, but it will not introduce a single education system. Government will continue to support a diverse range of schools giving parents and young people a real choice in the type of education available to best meet their needs.

Unoccupied Desks: Estimated Savings

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail the estimated annual savings associated with reducing the number of unoccupied desks in (i) controlled schools; (ii) maintained schools; (iii) integrated schools; and (iv) Irish language schools, by having one system of education in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 22/08)

Ms Ruane: The information is not available. Given the complexity of factors which impact upon enrolments at schools, and the varying costs of surplus places which can be unique to each school, the overall costs and savings would be difficult to quantify. The Review of Public Administration in education will introduce a common administrative structure for all schools here, but it will not introduce a single education system. Following the Bain Report, the improved planning of the schools' estate will help to address the issue of surplus capacity.

Unoccupied Desks: Estimated Costs

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail the estimated cost of unoccupied desks in (i) controlled schools; (ii) maintained schools; (iii) integrated schools; and (iv) Irish language schools, in each of the next five years.

(AQW 23/08)

Ms Ruane: The information is not available. Given the complexity of factors which impact upon enrolments at schools, and the varying costs of surplus places which can be unique to each school, the overall costs and savings would be difficult to quantify. The Review of Public Administration in education will introduce a common administrative structure for all schools here, but it will not introduce a single education system. Following the Bain Report, the improved planning of the schools' estate will help to address the issue of surplus capacity.

Academic Selection and Public Opinion

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail the process that will be used to determine how much weight to give to public opinion when determining how pupils transfer from primary to secondary education.

(AQW 25/08)

Ms Ruane: I am continuing the search for a way forward on the issue of new arrangements for transfer from primary to post-primary education. I am not in favour of applying weights to different viewpoints, as I believe that the focus should be on the strength of arguments put forward and the interests of the children affected.

School Meals Contracts

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail, for each of the last three years, the tendering process for the school meals contracts for catering equipment, including all companies that have tendered for the work; the total budget within the tenders; and the successful contractors, in the North Eastern Education and Library Board area. (AQW 27/08)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is not readily available in the requested format.

Light and heavy school meals catering equipment is purchased from five-Board negotiated contracts. The Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) administers the contracts for heavy equipment and the North-Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) is responsible for light equipment.

The contracts are advertised in the European Journal and the local press. The tenders are assessed by an Inter-Board panel of representatives from the Purchasing and Catering Managers and ratified by the relevant Board.

Since 2004 the following companies were involved in the tendering process:

Carrick Primary School, Warrenpoint

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Education what is her assessment of the cause of the delay to progress on the construction of the approved primary school at Carrick, Warrenpoint; and what action she will take to have the project started. (AQW 41/08)

Ms Ruane: I understand that after initial delays, planning for a new school for Carrick Primary School is now well advanced. Final sketch plans and costs were approved by the Department. A submission from the School Trustees setting out the contract document information and costs is now awaited. Once it is received and considered, and all the necessary statutory approvals have been granted, it is anticipated that tenders for the scheme could be sought in the autumn.

Free School Meals

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) primary; and (ii) secondary school children who have been entitled to free school meals, in each of the last five years. (AQW 60/08)

Ms Ruane: Details on the number of school children entitled to free school meals plus the number taking school meals over the last five years are as follows:

ENTITLEMENT TO FREE SCHOOL MEALS

	Primary	Post-Primary
2002/03	35,672	31,818
2003/04	34,500	30,839
2004/05	32,805	30,399
2005/06	31,558	28,714

School Meals

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children who have taken school meals in (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools, in each of the last five years. (AQW 61/08)

Ms Ruane: Details on the number of school children entitled to free school meals plus the number taking school meals over the last five years are as follows:

ENTITLEMENT TO FREE SCHOOL MEALS

	Primary	Post-Primary
2002/03	35,672	31,818
2003/04	34,500	30,839

Cost of School Repairs and a Single Education System

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail the estimated annual savings that having one education system for the whole of Northern Ireland would have on the cost of repairs to school buildings. (AQW 68/08)

Ms Ruane: Information is not available on the difference it would make to the costs of repairs to buildings if we did not have a multi-sector education system.

Cost of School Repairs

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail the cost of repairs to school buildings in Northern Ireland (i) in total; and (ii) broken down by sector, for each of the last five years. (AQW 69/08)

Ms Ruane: The expenditure information available does not distinguish between maintenance and repairs. The total cost of maintenance and repairs, and a breakdown of costs by sector, in each of the last five years is as follows:

EXPENDITURE ON MAINTENANCE AND REPAIRS £'000

Sector	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Controlled	£25,095	£22,990	£13,973	£10,708	£11,191

Teachers' Salaries

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail the cost of teachers' wages in Northern Ireland, (i) in total; and (ii) broken down by sector, in each of the last five years. (AQW 70/08)

Ms Ruane: The cost of teachers' wages in the North of Ireland, (i) in total; and (ii) broken down by sector, in each of the last five years is detailed in the attached table.

Single Education System: Estimated Savings

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail the estimated saving in relation to expenditure on teachers' wages, by having one education system in Northern Ireland. (AQW 71/08)

Ms Ruane: Information is not available on the estimated costs of maintaining different education systems. The diversity of the education system reflects long established traditions and the principle of parental choice. The Review of Public Administration in education will introduce a common administrative structure for all schools here, but it will not introduce a single education system. Government will continue to support a diverse range of schools giving parents and young people a real choice in the type of education available to best meet their needs.

Teaching of Theories other than Evolution

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 928/07, under the revised curriculum, to detail the teaching materials that will be made available to teachers in Northern Ireland wishing to teach scientific theories of origins other than evolution. (AQW 73/08)

Ms Ruane: It is up to schools to decide what teaching resources they wish to use to deliver the curriculum, in accordance with the needs of their pupils and the ethos of the school. A range of organisations produce teaching materials that schools can choose to avail of.

Teaching of Theories other than Evolution

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 928/07, under GCSE science specifications allowing for the explanation of theories other than evolution to explore the development of life on earth, what resource material will be made available to teachers wishing to explore other such scientific explanations with pupils.

(AQW 74/08)

Ms Ruane: It is up to schools to decide what teaching resources they wish to use to deliver the curriculum, in accordance with the needs of their pupils and the ethos of the school. A range of organisations produce teaching materials that schools can choose to avail of.

Teaching of Theories other than Evolution

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 928/07, if she will confirm that pupils who answer examination questions outlining (i) creationist; or (ii) intelligent design explanations for the development of life on earth, will not be marked lower than any pupil who answers giving an evolutionist explanation.

(AQW 75/08)

Ms Ruane: I am not involved in the setting or marking of public examinations. I am informed by the Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment that public examinations are based on specifications which form the basis for teaching and learning throughout the two years of Key Stage 4. These stem from criteria agreed across the Regulatory Authorities. However, not every area of a specification lends itself equally well to an examination question. Therefore every pupil's examination answers are marked solely in accordance with the awarding body's Mark Scheme for the relevant question.

The Mark Scheme sets out the range of answers and valid alternatives that pupils have to include in their answer to gain marks for it. The number of marks a pupil receives for any answer will therefore depend on how well their answer matches the Mark Scheme.

Teaching of Theories other than Evolution

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 928/07, what training will be given to teachers to help them to explore scientific explanations for the development of life on earth, other than evolution.

(AQW 76/08)

Ms Ruane: Teachers are currently involved in a phased programme of training to support the introduction of the revised curriculum. Any in-service training for teachers follows the requirements of the statutory curriculum and GCSE specifications which do not include any specific reference to alternative explanations of the origins of life. The Education and Library Boards have not received requests from any school or teacher for support on this issue.

Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse by Teachers

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of complaints of child sexual abuse by teachers that have been made in each education sector, for each year for which there are records; and to detail the number of teachers in each sector against whom these allegations were made.

(AQW 77/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department does not collect this information from schools.

Where a complaint is made about a member of staff and is pursued either as a formal referral to the investigating agencies or under the school's disciplinary procedures, a short summary must be entered by the Principal on a Record of Child Abuse Complaints. The summary must include:

- The date and brief details of the nature of the complaints;
- By whom and against whom the complaint is made;
- If the complaint was formally referred, to whom it was referred and the date of referral; and
- If the complaint was dealt with under the school's disciplinary procedure.

The school's Record of Child Abuse Complaints must be made available to the Board of Governors termly but at least annually. The Education and Training Inspectorate will ask to see the Record during inspections.

The Department only becomes involved if the employer decides to make a referral to us following disciplinary action or when the Department is notified that the individual has been convicted of a specified offence, not necessarily of a sexual nature. The Department will then consider whether or not to include the name on its list of persons unsuitable to teach or work with children.

Academic Selection

Mr Basil McCrea asked the Minister of Education what methods she is considering in relation to the transfer arrangements between primary and post-primary schools for the academic year 2009/10; and to indicate when she expects to make an announcement on her final decision. (AQW 84/08)

Ms Ruane: The current transfer arrangements will still apply for the 2009/10 cohort. For transfer from 2010/11 onwards I intend bringing forward proposals that are capable of attracting widespread support. The ways in which this might be achieved are currently under consideration. I am not prepared to be rushed into making a decision unless it is the right decision for the children affected.

Local Business Needs

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Education what priority she has given to ensuring that Northern Ireland's education system meets the needs of local businesses. (AQW 91/08)

Ms Ruane: The revised curriculum focuses on developing the skills young people need for life and work in the 21st century. Employability, incorporating Entrepreneurship, is also an important part of the revised post-primary curriculum.

In addition, the Entitlement Framework will guarantee all pupils access to a greater range of vocational courses, equipping them with the professional and technical skills that business and industry needs. Pupils will be able to access courses appropriate to their individual needs, interests and aspirations, providing a wider choice at age 14 and an even wider choice at age 16.

To support pupils in making their choices and decisions about their futures, we are working to develop high quality careers education, information advice and guidance.

All of this will be set within a broader strategic framework for 14-19 provision, on which DE and DEL are currently engaged, ensuring that our young people are equipped with the knowledge and skills to take their place in an increasingly global workforce.

Educational Welfare Officers

Mr Alex Easton asked the Minister of Education if she will explain why educational welfare officers with social work qualifications are not paid the same salary as social workers in the health service. (AQW 95/08)

Ms Ruane: This is an employer matter.

The Education and Libraries Boards, as the employers, have advised that the grading of Education Welfare Officers is largely determined by a national and agreed process of Job Evaluation. This process takes account of a range of factors relating to the job including supervisory responsibility, creativity, contacts, decision making, knowledge and skills (including qualification), and work context and is regarded as much fairer than a determination solely based on qualification.

Staff employed in the Health and Social Services are engaged under different terms and conditions of service from staff in the Education and Library boards, Councils and other NJC employers - (a full list of these employers is contained in the Redundancy Payments (Continuity of Employment in Local Government, etc) (Modification) Order (Northern Ireland) 1999 - and salaries and gradings are agreed through an entirely different negotiating machinery as indeed is the case for teachers.

Children Attending Grammar Schools in North Down

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children attending a grammar school in the North Down constituency, who were living outside the constituency, in each of the last five years. (AQW 111/08)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

YEAR CHILDREN ATTENDING A GRAMMAR SCHOOL IN NORTH DOWN WHO LIVED OUTSIDE NORTH DOWN CONSTITUENCY

2002/03	484
2003/04	459*
2004/05	546
2005/06	550
2006/07	560

Note: * Postcoded data for Bangor Grammar were not available for 2003/04.

Free Transport Expenditure

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the expenditure on providing free transport for grammar school students who resided in the North Down constituency, but attended school outside the constituency, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 112/08)

Ms Ruane: The South-Eastern Education and Library Board has confirmed that the following expenditure was incurred transporting Grammar School pupils out of the North-Down constituency:

Year	Expenditure
2003/04	£228,160
2004/05	£249,944
2005/06	£258,416
2006/07	£277,760

* This information is not available prior to 2003/04

Children Attending Grammar Schools outside North Down

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children living in the North Down constituency, who attended a grammar school outside the constituency, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 113/08)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

YEAR CHILDREN FROM NORTH DOWN ATTENDING A GRAMMAR SCHOOL OUTSIDE NORTH DOWN CONSTITUENCY

Year	Expenditure
2002/03	1,316
2003/04	1,251
2004/05	1,209
2005/06	1,161
2006/07	1,142

Bus Passes in the Crumlin/Glenavy Area

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of bus passes that were issued to school children in the postcode district of BT29 4XX (Crumlin/Glenavy area) for the forthcoming academic year of 2007/2008; and to detail the total amount that this cost.

(AQW 116/08)

Ms Ruane: The North-Eastern Education and Library Board has confirmed that it has not received any applications for home to school transport assistance for 2007/08 from families residing in the postcode district of BT29 4XX. As such, no expenditure has been incurred in this area.

Expenditure on Business Education

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's expenditure on business education; and to provide a breakdown of the funding received by the various providers.

(AQW 129/08)

Ms Ruane: It is not possible to provide a breakdown of all expenditure on business education as many schools, particularly in the post-primary sector, will use funding from their delegated budgets to support business education. However, my department does hold a specific business education budget and I can advise that, in 2006-07, expenditure from that budget totalled £826,000.

That expenditure represents allocations made in support of a range of business education interventions, including those delivered by external organisations, as follows:

Charter Work Experience	£118,000
Foyle School and Employer Connections	£100,000
Business Education Partnerships	£88,000
Consultancy Study	£20,000
Sentinus	£400,000
CCEA Employability Pilots	£100,000
Total	£826,000

Business Strategy Unit

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to outline the work that will be done by the Business Strategy Unit in the future; and to detail how this will link with employability and careers education in the curriculum.

(AQW 130/08)

Ms Ruane: The Business Education Strategy Unit will continue to be involved in identifying, implementing and evaluating policy approaches designed to ensure better co-ordination between education and the world of work. It will also be involved in work to ensure a coherent approach to the delivery of the curriculum to young people, especially in the 14-19 age groups, and to ensure that young people leave school equipped with the literacy, numeracy and ICT skills that employers need and ready to play their full part in the local economy.

The unit is already working closely with its colleagues in the Department for Employment and Learning to develop a new strategy for Careers Education, Information Advice and Guidance (CEIAG) designed to support pupils in making their choices and decisions about their futures. That strategy will reflect the direction of the revised curriculum and will be designed to develop effective career decision makers, leading to increased participation in education, training and employment. It will also ensure that business-related issues such as employability and work related learning are central themes.

Careers Education

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail how her department will work with the Department for Employment and Learning to ensure that there is a coherent strategy for careers education. (AQW 131/08)

Ms Ruane: My Department already works very closely with the Department for Employment and Learning on a wide range of issues. Our joint work to develop a new strategy for Careers Education, Information Advice and Guidance (CEIAG) is a good example of this.

The overall aim of the proposed CEIAG strategy is to develop young people as effective career decision makers leading to increased participation in education, training and employment.

The joint DE/DEL Strategy will issue for consultation in early October – the Education Committee will receive advance copies for information and will be consulted again once responses have been received and analysed by both DE/DEL.

All of this will be set within a broader strategic framework for 14-19 provision, on which DE and DEL are currently engaged, with the aim of ensuring that our young people are equipped with the knowledge and skills to take their place in an increasingly global workforce.

Teaching of Theories other than Evolution

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 928/07, if she will confirm that, under the revised curriculum, teachers wishing to do so may teach theories of origins other than evolution as credible scientific explanations in science class. (AQW 135/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not tell teachers how to teach. The revised curriculum sets out the statutory minimum to be covered and the learning outcomes to be focused on. It provides greater flexibility for teachers to tailor provision for their pupils and greater opportunities for creationist views to be explored, particularly in the context of the exploration of other beliefs and viewpoints. Pupils and parents can inform how the delivery of the curriculum in their school accommodates that exploration through the Board of Governors.

Teaching of Theories other than Evolution

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 928/07, if, under the revised curriculum, (i) pupils may request on behalf of themselves; and (ii) parents may request on behalf of their children, that they are taught theories of origin other than evolution as credible scientific explanations in science classes. (AQW 136/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not tell teachers how to teach. The revised curriculum sets out the statutory minimum to be covered and the learning outcomes to be focused on. It provides greater flexibility for teachers to tailor provision for their pupils and greater opportunities for creationist views to be explored, particularly in the context of the exploration of other beliefs and viewpoints. Pupils and parents can inform how the delivery of the curriculum in their school accommodates that exploration through the Board of Governors.

Hygienic Drinking Water

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Minister of Education what consideration she has given to issuing guidance to individual schools and local education authorities on the availability of hygienic drinking water facilities for pupils. (AQW 161/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education's New Nutritional Standards for School Lunches and Other Food in Schools which issued to all grant-aided schools in June 2007 state that pupils should have easy access at all times to free, fresh drinking water. In addition, the Department ensures that fresh water dispensers are located in appropriate circulating areas within a school. Also, as drinking water is no longer permitted in school toilets, water fountains located in these areas are removed.

Newborn Hearing Screening Programme

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister of Education if she will give an update on her department's input into the development of an inter-departmental strategy on early years support services for deaf children identified through the Newborn Hearing Screening Programme, introduced in 2005.

(AQW 171/08)

Ms Ruane: Under the auspices of the Newborn Hearing Screening Programme (NHSP) Steering Group, the Department of Education (DE) commissioned an audit of existing provision in relation to the impact of the NHSP on Educational Services for the Hearing Impaired. The key findings of the DE Audit, which was completed in March 2006, indicate that existing Education and Library Boards Hearing Impaired Services can cope with an increased demand. DE has asked the education and library boards to continue to keep the resources required for the impact of the NHSP under review.

Co-operation with DCAL

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Education, in light of her recent announcement that the Irish Football Association and the Gaelic Athletic Association are to receive funding for sports coaching in schools, if she will make a statement on co-operation between her department and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure in this regard.

(AQW 177/08)

Ms Ruane: My Ministerial colleague Edwin Poots and I both know from work within our departments the positive impact a healthy lifestyle can have for young people in many areas, such as their mental health, and their development across the curriculum. It is this curricular benefit which provided the starting point for my sports programme, which will take place within school hours to support the PE curriculum, and tie-in to other curricular areas. Clearly there are wider links which will grow over time and this is why I wrote to Edwin Poots at an early stage about the programme.

Both the curriculum sports programme and the draft Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation recognise the importance of physical literacy skills, especially when developed at a young age. There are exciting opportunities within the Departments of Education and Culture, Arts and Leisure to make a real difference to young people's lives through sports, and I look forward to seeing the benefits on the ground coming through from the work of both departments.

Transfer Test Appeals

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of grammar schools that have indicated to her that they will break away from the main education system rather than accept the ending of academic selection.

(AQW 219/08)

Ms Ruane: I have received no direct communication indicating the number of grammar schools that are considering independent arrangements if agreement can not be reached on new admissions arrangements for the transfer of children from primary to post-primary education from September 2010 onwards.

Academic Selection

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister of Education how many appeals of transfer test results there have been in each of the past five years; and how many of these resulted in legal action.

(AQW 221/08)

Ms Ruane: The number of requests for a re-mark of Transfer Test grades for each of the last five years is recorded in the table below, along with the number of occasions that a grade has been revised upwards. Downward revisions are not permitted. There are no legal actions to report in relation to these figures.

Year	Pupils Sitting The Transfer Test	Requests for a Re-Mark	Up-Grades
2006/07	14,944	1,157	3
2005/06	15,255	1,144	2
2004/05	15,373	1,095	0
2003/04	15,716	1,007	3
2002/03	16,537	1,352	2

Literacy and Numeracy Levels

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail her strategy for ensuring that no child leaves primary school with levels of literacy and numeracy that fall below her own targets.

(AQO 9/08)

Ms Ruane: I am determined to improve standards of literacy and numeracy. It is important for me that all children leave school with the appropriate levels of literacy and numeracy. It is the essential basis of their future lives as citizens and as contributors to social and economic progress.

From this September the revised curriculum is being introduced in our schools. I think this is an exciting development, bringing in a more flexible curriculum which is right for our young people and which has literacy and numeracy at its very core. Schools should understand the focus on these skills and use the methods available to them to focus on raising standards in these areas. The revised curriculum provides the opportunity for teachers to focus on skills development as well as on knowledge and understanding.

I intend bringing forward a range of measures in the coming months designed to support schools in bringing about improved outcomes for children. These include a revised school improvement policy; a revised literacy and numeracy strategy; and a targeted intervention programme focused initially on raising achievement levels in low attaining schools in Belfast and Derry.

In addition, the policy proposals emerging from the review of special educational needs and inclusion will be issued for public consultation early next year. They too are intended to support, and be an integral part of, our work to raise standards and to ensure that every child reaches his or her full potential.

In relation to literacy and numeracy targets the targets for 2007 were achieved in 2006. Our targets for 2008 are for 80% of primary school children to be at the expected level in English and 83% in Maths. Targets beyond 2008 and the strategy for achieving them will be set out in the revised Literacy and Numeracy Strategy.

Dickson Plan

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Education if she will make a statement on the Craigavon-based Dickson Plan for education. (AQO 85/08)

Ms Ruane: I note that the arrangements currently operating in the Craigavon-based Dickson Plan are well established. Research into the impact of the Dickson Plan published in 1998 produced inconclusive findings.

Bullying in Schools

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister of Education what steps have been taken to tackle the problem of bullying in schools. (AQO 101/08)

Ms Ruane: Bullying behaviour has no place in our schools and I mean bullying in all its forms – pupil on pupil, staff on staff, pupil on staff and staff on pupil. Its presence is not conducive to a positive learning environment and must be tackled.

In tackling the pupil on pupil aspect of bullying the following specific steps have been taken:-

- All schools are required by law to have measures in place to prevent all forms of bullying among pupils. The detail of the policy is a matter for each school to determine, in consultation with pupils and parents.
- The Department has issued guidance to schools on developing measures to address bullying. Racist, homophobic and sectarian bullying has been specifically identified as forms of behaviour to be tackled.

- The effectiveness of a school's anti-bullying measures is monitored through the regular cycle of school inspections of pastoral care arrangements. The Inspectorate seeks the views of parents and pupils on how effectively school staff deal with bullying as part of these inspections.
- The Department published the research report on "The Nature and Extent of Bullying in Schools in the North of Ireland" in June. The findings show little change in the level of bullying behaviour reported by pupils compared to an earlier study completed in 2002. Regardless, the research confirms that although the problem of bullying appears no worse, the problem still remains, and must be tackled.
- Following this report, the Department will be carrying out a survey of schools' anti-bullying policies drawing on the expertise and experience of the local Anti-Bullying Forum and NICCY. The results will be published and used to inform future action.
- The elimination of bullying behaviour from all schools is a long term aspiration and requires a sustained programme of co-operative working across all statutory and voluntary agencies to support schools. This is facilitated through the local Anti-bullying Forum. The Forum has also established formal links with similar bodies in the South, England, Wales and Scotland.
- The Education and Library Boards have established an Inter-Board Group, which is developing a common approach to tackle bullying in schools. Each Board has a designated officer who works with schools to tackle bullying through assisting in the development of whole school policies and supporting individual pupils who have been victims of bullying.
- The Department funds Childline NI to provide a dedicated anti-bullying telephone helpline for pupils and young people.
- The independent schools' counselling service is now available in all grant aided post-primary schools allowing pupils to speak to a trained counsellor about their concerns or fears around bullying.

Substitute Teachers

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister of Education what progress has been made in reducing the number of teachers on the substitute teachers' roll, who have not yet been in full-time employment in teaching. (AQO 17/08)

Ms Ruane: It is important to note that the substitute teachers' register includes not only young teachers but teachers of all ages who wish to be employed on a substitute teacher basis, together with teachers who no longer wish to be full-time members of the teaching profession. Figures obtained from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for June 2007 show that 240 job seeker allowance claimants specified teaching as the occupation sought, of which 72 were under age 30.

The Department recognises the impact which demography is having, and will have, on the number of teachers that we need here. We need to get the balance right between having a ready supply of appropriately qualified teachers and ensuring that, as with any career choice, young people have a realistic understanding of the factors affecting teacher recruitment levels. As part of that process, we have also reviewed and reduced approved intake numbers to the initial teacher education institutions by over 20% in the past three years. I will be keeping under review the number of initial teacher education places needed in future years to make sure that, in future, there is a better balance between supply and demand.

Teachers are highly qualified professionals and, as such, have skills that would prepare them for other jobs in related areas. For example, my sports and languages programmes for primary schools offer another means for newly qualified teachers to gain experience of working in a school.

It should also be recognised that teachers trained here have the opportunity to apply for teaching posts in the South of Ireland, England, Wales and Scotland, where they are highly regarded.

The recruitment of teachers is the responsibility of teachers' employers. However, the Department has issued guidance to employers advising them that preference should be given to newly qualified teachers and experienced non-retired teachers seeking employment. Schools have also been advised that they should recruit to vacancies on a permanent rather than a temporary basis unless the vacancy is clearly of a temporary nature. Furthermore, the capping of the levels of the central reimbursement of the costs of substitute cover also provides an incentive to employ newly qualified teachers.

Primary School Sports Coaches

Mr Francie Brolly asked the Minister of Education what the response has been to the scheme, developed in conjunction with the Gaelic Athletic Association and the Irish Football Association, for the provision of forty new posts for primary school sports coaches.
(AQO 93/08)

Ms Ruane: The response to this programme for sports coaches in primary schools has been very positive as people can see the real benefits this can have for our young people.

As you know both the GAA and IFA will be recruiting 20 coaches each to work with teachers in schools. There was a very good response to the GAA recruitment advert recently, and the IFA is also close to placing recruitment adverts. Schools are starting to ask how they get involved.

This programme provides an opportunity for pupils, including our youngest, to develop their physical literacy skills and supports development across the curriculum. It also supports teachers in developing their skills and confidence in delivering the PE curriculum.

Low Educational Attainment

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister of Education what steps she is taking to address low educational attainment in Protestant inner-city areas of Belfast, and large re-location estate areas in towns surrounding Belfast.
(AQO 30/08)

Ms Ruane: I am determined that we will tackle under-achievement wherever it occurs, and in doing so am anxious that the debate on poverty and disadvantage does not become sectarianised. Our efforts must be targeted on the basis of objective need.

I shall therefore be bringing forward in the coming months a range of measures designed to support schools in bringing about improved outcomes for children. These will include a new school improvement policy; a new literacy and numeracy strategy; and a targeted intervention programme focused initially on raising achievement levels in low attaining schools in Belfast and Derry. I shall wish to consider rolling this out to other areas as evidence of success emerges.

In addition, the policy proposals emerging from the review of special educational needs and inclusion will be issued for public consultation early next year. They too are intended to support, and be an integral part of, our work to raise standards and to ensure that every child reaches his or her full potential.

Sustained Education Encouraging Diversity

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Education what proposals exist to train teachers in the resources available from the Sustained Education Encouraging Diversity programme.
(AQO 62/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department is currently carrying out a 'Review to Identify Teacher and Youth Worker Training Needs for Delivery of Community Relations in Schools.' During this review all resources which are currently available will be considered and, on completion of the Review, the Department will be in a better position to determine future proposals.

However, currently schools can determine what resources they feel are appropriate for their teachers to utilise in addressing community relations.

North/South Ministerial Council: Education Sectoral Meeting

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Education if the issues of educational psychology and school transport services will be on the agenda of the next education sectoral meeting of the North South Ministerial Council. (AQO 94/08)

Ms Ruane: The next educational sectoral meeting of the North South Ministerial Council is expected to take place in November 2007 and, while an agenda has yet to be agreed between the two Departments, we expect a wide ranging discussion of issues of mutual interest. The agenda will be advised to the Executive and the Assembly in due course.

Academic Selection

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister of Education to indicate what progress has been made on a replacement selection procedure for the 11+; and in what academic year the replacement will be operational. (AQO 29/08)

Ms Ruane: I am aware of the need to put in place suitable transfer arrangements in time for the cohort transferring from primary to post-primary education in 2010. As members are aware I am not in favour of selection on the basis of ability. I am conscious, however, of the need to engage with those who hold opposing views to determine new post-primary admissions arrangements for this cohort. I would stress that I am not prepared to be rushed into making a decision. The priority must be to make the right decision for the children affected, within a broader view of the shape and nature of post-primary education.

Cross-Border Enrolment

Ms Martina Anderson asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to take a regional cross-border view of the issue of pupil enrolment, whereby children can apply to enrol for the most suitable primary or post-primary school for them in their vicinity, even if it lies within another jurisdiction. (AQO 100/08)

Ms Ruane: I personally consider that children should be able to attend their nearest suitable school, be that in the North or South of Ireland. That would be very much in the spirit of the Good Friday Agreement. There are obviously legal considerations, however, which have to be taken into account. The Department is currently subject to a Judicial Review which may include a consideration of this matter. I will reflect on any legal judgement and determine my response in due course.

Grammar Schools and Exam Results

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Education to acknowledge the major contribution of grammar schools in putting Northern Ireland at the top of the United Kingdom's examinations results tables year after year; and what steps she is taking to identify, safeguard and extend the good educational practices in grammar schools that lie behind these results. (AQO 31/08)

Ms Ruane: I readily acknowledge good teaching practice at any school, and the good results that have been produced by all types of school. There is no doubt that grammar schools have played their part by producing good results for the children they admit. I am determined to ensure that, over time, all schools are capable of delivering a good standard of education for their pupils, and increased levels of collaboration in support of the Entitlement Framework will add to the opportunities for the sharing of good practice.

Special Schools: Integrated Status

Mr Alban Maginness asked the Minister of Education if she will introduce a change in legislation to allow special schools, who may wish to do so, to transform to integrated status. (AQO 55/08)

Ms Ruane: There are specific reasons why the legislation prohibits Special Schools from attaining Integrated status. The current intake criteria to Special Schools are based on the special educational needs of each individual child. Integrated schools can include community background as an intake criterion in order to have a reasonable mix of children from each community background. This would mean that, if they were to be developed, Integrated Special Schools would allow some children to be admitted, or not, based on their religion rather than their educational needs.

Economic Benefit of Education

Mr Paul Maskey asked the Minister of Education to give her assessment of the role of education in delivering a strong economy. (AQO 98/08)

Ms Ruane: Education is fundamental to delivering a strong economy and investment in education and skills is vital to achieving economic growth through higher rates of productivity and increased competitiveness. The importance of education to the economy is reflected in the education reforms which represent a fundamental refocusing of the work of schools in support of the economy.

The importance of the role of education has been recognised within the draft Regional Economic Strategy, where skills are identified as one of the four key drivers of productivity.

Priory College, Holywood

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Education to report on the proposed new capital build for Priory College, Holywood. (AQO 76/08)

Ms Ruane: The capital scheme for Priory College is one of six schemes that were put on hold following the review of capital projects, by the previous administration. These schemes are still being assessed by the Department and the position will be confirmed as soon as possible.

Additional Finances

Mr Sammy Wilson asked the Minister of Education what estimate she has made of the additional finances required by her department, in each of the next three years. (AQO 53/08)

Ms Ruane: Additional finances required by the Department of Education in each of the next three years are estimated to be £401 million, £580 million and £682 million in each year respectively. The additional amounts sought will be considered by the Executive in the forthcoming Budget 2007 exercise.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

NI Students: Applications to UK Universities

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is his assessment of the latest published Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) figures on Northern Ireland student applications to universities in the United Kingdom. (AQW 2/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): My Department has examined the figures published by UCAS on 19 July 2007 which showed a 5.5% fall in the number of NI domiciled students applying to UK institutions between 2006 and 2007. This however needs to be set in the context of a decline in the school leaving age population. The latest estimates show that the number of 18 year olds in NI declined by 5.4 % over the last year.

Further provisional figures published by UCAS on 29 August 2007 show that there has been a 0.4% increase in the number of NI domiciled students accepted to UK institutions over the same period. My Department will continue to monitor UCAS figures as further information becomes available.

Higher Education Funding

Mr David McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, following the restoration of devolution, what consideration he has given to conducting a fully independent review into higher education funding in Northern Ireland. (AQW 15/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department works closely with the other UK funding bodies in an ongoing process of review and development of all aspects of higher education funding strategy, ensuring parity, where possible and appropriate, for institutions and students alike.

An independent review of the current student finance arrangements is planned to commence in 2008/09. This will inform the future shape of student finance arrangements in Northern Ireland and will be premised on the need to ensure we maintain world class institutions and secure equitable access to higher education for all who are able to benefit.

NI Students: Applications to UK Institutions

Mr David McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment he has made of the figures published by the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) on 19 July 2007, regarding applications by Northern Ireland domiciled students to institutions in the United Kingdom; and what consideration he has given to making changes to the funding package for students, based on the current level of applications. (AQW 16/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department has examined the figures published by UCAS on 19 July 2007 which showed a 5.5% fall in the number of NI domiciled students applying to UK institutions between 2006 and 2007. This however needs to be set in the context of a decline in the school leaving age population. The latest estimates show that the number of 18 year olds in NI declined by 5.4 % over the last year.

Further provisional figures published on 29 August 2007, show that there has been a 0.4% increase in the number of NI domiciled students accepted to UK institutions over the same period. My Department will continue to monitor UCAS figures as further information becomes available.

A review of variable fees and student support arrangements is planned to commence in Academic Year 2008/2009. The review will take account of participation in higher education since the introduction of variable fees.

Further Education Enrolment

Mr Robin Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of people who have been enrolled on courses in each of the Further Education Colleges; and to list the courses that have not met full enrolment capacity. (AQW 78/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The table below provides the requested data for part 1 of the question for the period 2003/04 to 2005/06, the latest year for which data is currently available. The Department does not hold information pertaining to the courses that have not met full enrolment capacity.

Merger of Further Education Colleges

Mr Robin Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the financial cost of merging the Further Education Colleges into six bodies; and what financial savings have been achieved through the merger strategy. (AQW 79/08)

Sir Reg Empey: While the colleges have merged formally from 1 August 2007, the restructuring process has only been completed at senior management levels. The wider re-organisation of the colleges will be implemented during the course of the current academic year. Therefore, a complete analysis of the financial cost and savings is not yet available.

It is anticipated that the costs associated with the college mergers, many of which will be one-off costs - for example IT and other restructuring costs, will be offset by efficiency savings in subsequent years.

Over 65s in Further Education

Mr Robin Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the total number of people over the age of 65 who have enrolled on courses in each of the Further Education Colleges. (AQW 80/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The tables below detail the requested data for the period 2003/04 to 2005/06, the latest year for which data is currently available.

Further Education Means Business Strategy: Equality Proofing

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail whether or not his department's new 'Further Education Means Business Strategy' has been equality proofed. (AQW 168/08)

Sir Reg Empey: 'Further Education Means Business', which set out the high level strategic direction for the Further Education Sector, was the subject of a major public consultation exercise in March 2004. The consultation period closed in August 2004, and the response to the strategy proposals was, broadly, very positive.

The Strategy is now being implemented through a programme of twelve separate, but inter-related, projects. As part of the overall Programme Management approach being adopted, further consultation, and equality proofing in line with the Department's Equality Scheme, is carried out on these individual projects if and when appropriate.

Disablement Advisory Service

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline whether or not internal changes within the advice-giving structures at Jobs and Benefits Offices, and, in particular, the restructuring of the Disablement Advisory Service, have been subject to an equality impact assessment or consultation with disability organisations; and, if so, to list the organisations consulted and the outcome of the assessment of impact upon disabled people.

(AQW 170/08)

Sir Reg Empey: It is the responsibility of each Further Education College to determine whether it wishes to offer a particular course. In line with the implementation of FE Means Business and the Skills Strategy, my Department is reviewing the curriculum offered by colleges to ensure an increasing emphasis on provision that meets the skills and qualification needs of employers and the economy. However, the policy will also facilitate wider community education provision programmes.

Further Education provision is generally accessible to those with disabilities whilst colleges will also continue to offer provision for those with learning difficulties. Proposals for a revised FE curriculum will be issued for public consultation later this year.

Further Education Means Business Strategy: Disabled People

Mrs Michelle O'Neill asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to ongoing concerns regarding the future of community education in light of his department's 'Further Education Means Business' strategy, what provision will be available for community education programmes (non-accredited) accessible to disabled people. (AQW 172/08)

Sir Reg Empey: It is the responsibility of each Further Education College to determine whether it wishes to offer a particular course. In line with the implementation of FE Means Business and the Skills Strategy, my Department is reviewing the curriculum offered by colleges to ensure an increasing emphasis on provision that meets the skills and qualification needs of employers and the economy. However, the policy will also facilitate wider community education provision programmes.

Further Education provision is generally accessible to those with disabilities whilst colleges will also continue to offer provision for those with learning difficulties. Proposals for a revised FE curriculum will be issued for public consultation later this year.

University Enrolment outside Northern Ireland

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of Employment and Learning to detail the number of A-level students in Northern Ireland, who have accepted university places outside Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 189/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The number of Northern Ireland domiciled first year students enrolled on Higher Education (HE) courses at Great Britain (GB) HE institutions whose highest qualification on entry to HE included an A level is provided in the table below. Figures for the 2006/07 academic year will not be available until early 2008.

University Enrolments: Students from Disadvantaged Backgrounds

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the number of students from disadvantaged backgrounds that are attending university; and (b) the number of students from disadvantaged backgrounds who leave university during their courses. (AQW 216/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department classifies Higher Education (HE) students who come from socio-economic classification (SEC) groups 5-7 as being from disadvantaged backgrounds.

- In 2005/06, there were 5,975 enrolments on HE courses at Northern Ireland institutions whose SEC background was in groups 5-7.
- Non-continuation data are available for students enrolled on full-time undergraduate courses only. For 2005/06 there were 1880 full time undergraduate entrants from SEC Groups 5-7. Of these, 235 were no longer in HE in 2005/06.

Students from the Republic of Ireland

Mr Paul Butler asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the number of students from the Republic of Ireland that are attending university in Northern Ireland; and (b) the number of students from the Republic of Ireland that attended university in Northern Ireland prior to the introduction of tuition fees. (AQW 217/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The latest data shows there were 3,905 students from the Republic of Ireland enrolled on courses at universities in Northern Ireland in the 2005/06 academic year. Data for the 2006/07 academic year (ie the year variable tuition fees were introduced) will not be available until early 2008.

Hospitality and Tourism Training

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to make a statement on the present funding, facilities and infrastructure for training in the hospitality and tourism sectors. (AQO 28/08)

Sir Reg Empey: There is a considerable and extensive range of training provision currently available to the tourism and hospitality sector. The greater majority of this provision is administered through the Department for Employment and Learning. The Department considers that the range of training provision continues to meet the needs of the sector.

Educational Guidance Service for Adults

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline his plans for celebrating 40 years of the Educational Guidance Service for Adults, and for the future involvement of this organisation in relation to literacy and numeracy skills. (AQO 10/08)

Sir Reg Empey: This is an important milestone in the development of the organisation and I congratulate the Educational Guidance Service for Adults on their contribution to introducing adults to learning and developing adult guidance over the last 40 years. I look forward to participating in the conference to celebrate 40 years of the Educational Guidance Service for Adults.

The Educational Guidance Service for Adults is currently under contract with the Department to deliver services in relation to introducing adults to learning and in particular literacy and numeracy skills learning. This contract is due to end at the close of the current financial year. Plans are underway to review the contract specification and complete an open competition for services in line with Departmental and Northern Ireland Civil Service policy.

Apprenticeships: Uptake and Completion Rates

Mr Paul Maskey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what difficulties have been identified in increasing the uptake and completion rates of apprenticeships and similar schemes. (AQO 104/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Young people often consider training as a return to the classroom rather than a route to employment or career. Employers see training as an additional cost or conflicting with busy work schedules. Training for Success will offer individualised training suited to the needs of the young person and the employer. There will also be financial incentives to the trainee, the training organisation and the employer to encourage completion.

Armagh College of Further and Higher Education

Mr Dominic Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give an update on the capital development proposals in respect of the former Armagh College of Further and Higher Education, which was promised a £20 million development two years ago. (AQO 19/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Armagh College submitted an economic appraisal which was cleared as being technically compliant at April 2005. Funding was not available at that time, and since then Armagh has become part of the new Southern Regional College. The new college will now need to review its future accommodation needs across all of its campuses.

Masters Architectural Courses

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the admissions criteria for Masters Degree Architectural Courses at Queen's University, Belfast and the University of Ulster. (AQO 95/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Applicants to the Bachelor of Architecture postgraduate course at Queens must hold a 2:1 Honours degree, have twelve months practical experience and may be called for interview. Applicants to the Masters of Architecture course at the University of Ulster must hold a 2:2 Honours degree, have a professional portfolio and will be interviewed.

Economically Inactive People

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he plans to set a target for reducing the number of economically inactive people, as a proportion of the working-age population, by 2010. (AQO 47/08)

Sir Reg Empey: I have no plans to set such a target. My Department has a target to contribute to increasing the employment rate. Increasingly, we are focusing on assisting those deemed to be furthest from the labour market, including the economically inactive, to move towards and into work.

Skilled Labour Supply

Mr Billy Armstrong asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what steps he is taking to ensure that there is a sufficient supply of skilled labour to meet the needs of the manufacturing sector. (AQO 118/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department's Skills Strategy, Success through Skills, places a strong emphasis on providing a demand led skills system with employers articulating the volume and level of skilled people they require through mechanisms, such as the 25 Sector Skills Councils. There are five Sector Skills Councils whose 'footprint' includes the manufacturing sector, SEMTA, Proskills, Skillsfast-UK, Cogent and Improve. Sector Skills Councils are contracted to set standards within their industries and as a result have an increasing role in influencing both the development of new qualifications and the curriculum at all levels of post 16 year old training.

Once the demand for skills has been ascertained, my Department works with training providers, Further Education Colleges and universities to ensure that provision is in place to supply a suitably skilled workforce.

In terms of the Manufacturing sector, the Department for Employment and Learning supports training at all entry levels including:

- Training for Success, offers a range of professional and technical training opportunities for those people between 16-24 years of age. Apprenticeships provide people with the opportunity to train as they work in the Manufacturing sector, gaining industry-led qualifications in the skills the sector requires;
- Higher level training and education is offered through our Further Education Colleges and Universities. Much work has been done to ensure that our graduates have qualifications and skills relevant to the needs of the Northern Ireland economy; and
- Management and Leadership provision which aims to promote best practice at middle and senior levels of company management.

Essential Skills Strategy

Mr Ken Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of persons that have received qualifications through schemes operating under the Essential Skills Strategy.

(AQO 22/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Between the commencement of the Essential Skills programme in October 2002 and 31 July 2007, 15,605 learners had gained an Essential Skills qualification in Literacy, and 11,877 learners had gained an Essential Skills qualification in numeracy.

Top-up Fees

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, given the continuing decrease in student enrolment since the increase in student top-up fees, how he intends to reverse this trend, particularly in light of the skills requirement in the employment market in Northern Ireland. (AQO 82/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Enrolment data from the Higher Education Statistics Agency, for 2006/7, will not be available until January 2008. This will be the first set of comprehensive data that will show if there has been a decline in enrolments due to the introduction of variable deferred tuition fees in 2006/7. I will be happy to respond fully to the member at that time.

Board of South Eastern Regional College

Mr Jeffrey Donaldson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give a timescale within which he hopes to announce the composition of the Board of the new South Eastern Regional College; and to detail the number of Board members that will come from the city of Lisburn. (AQW 313/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The names of nine governing body members of the South Eastern Regional College, drawn from the business, industry or professional category of governor, were announced in July 2007. This follows the announcement of the chair of the Governing Body in September 2006. Two of these members live in the Lisburn City Council area. I would hope that the remaining categories of governor, including the staff and student members, which are filled through processes of election and nomination, will be filled by the end of the year. It is not possible to say how many of those members will come from Lisburn.

The composition of the college governing bodies is presently under review and formal consultation with interested parties was undertaken earlier this year. I hope to make an announcement on the outcome of that consultation in the near future with a view to putting the matter before the Assembly.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

CO2 Emissions

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the estimated average CO2 emissions (in grams) per KWh useful output, for

(i) home heating oil; (ii) mains electricity; (iii) natural gas; and (iv) wood pellets. (AQW 49/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

(Mr Dodds): The table below represents the average CO₂ emissions in kg per kWh of delivered energy, which is the recognised normal reporting format. Determining grams per kWh of useful output requires the system efficiency to be taken into account. As no verifiable source of system efficiency exists the figures quoted are on the basis of the normal format of kg of CO₂ per kWh of energy delivered.

Energy Source	Estimated Average CO ₂ Emissions kg/kWh delivered	Source of Information
(i) Home Heating Oil	0.258	UK Greenhouse Gas Inventory for 2005
(ii) Mains Electricity	0.43	UK Emissions Trading Scheme
(iii) Natural Gas	0.206	UK Greenhouse Gas Inventory for 2005
(iv) Wood Pellets	0.00936	Wood Fuel Strategy for England, Biomass Energy Centre.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is his assessment of the efficacy of, and requirement for, the strategic and operational coupling of both energy efficiency and renewable energy across a range of sectors, as a way of reducing greenhouse gas emissions in Northern Ireland. (AQW 50/08)

Mr Dodds: DETI energy policy currently promotes both energy efficiency and renewable energy, as a means of not only contributing to a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions in Northern Ireland, but also to enhancing security and diversity of our energy supply. A more competitive and sustainable energy mix is a key goal and as such my Department has recently commissioned a review of the Sustainable Energy market in Northern Ireland. The strategic and operational coupling of energy efficiency and renewable energy across a range of sectors will be examined as part of that process.

Renewable Energy

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, (i) to detail the renewable-source electricity production capacity required to meet Northern Ireland's renewables obligation by 2012; (ii) to give an estimate of the power in GWh that will be generated by wind turbines; and (iii) to give an estimate of the number of on- and off-shore wind turbines that will be necessary to produce the required amount of electricity. (AQW 51/08)

Mr Dodds: NI's renewable obligation in 2012-2013 will be 6.3%, representing the proportion of sales of electricity that suppliers must account for under the NI Renewables Obligation Order. This is different from our renewables energy target which is that, by 2012, 12% of electricity consumption will be from renewable energy sources, of which 15% will be from non-wind sources.

Estimated electricity consumption in 2012/13 is 9980 GWh, implying 1200 GWh from indigenous renewables to meet the 12% target with 15% from non-wind sources which implies around 29 MW of non-wind capacity. The remaining 85% would require 332 MW of wind capacity. A total of 361MW estimated production capacity would therefore be required to meet the 2012 target.

The number of wind turbines needed to meet this demand depends on the capacity of each turbine, which can be as much as 3MW. Based on an average of 2MW however, this would equate to 166 turbines. These would all be on onshore farms, as there are currently no offshore NI wind farms.

'Energy: A Strategic Framework for Northern Ireland'

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will explain the method used to assess whether Northern Ireland is achieving the goal of 1% reduction in electricity consumption each year from 2007 to 2012, as stated in 'Energy: A Strategic Framework for Northern Ireland', published in June 2004; and if he will indicate whether this year's target will be met. (AQW 118/08)

Mr Dodds: We are collecting electricity savings data from the complete range of energy efficiency programmes supported by Government. From this "bottom-up" approach we will be able to monitor the performance against the reduced consumption target which is 1% of the Northern Ireland electricity demand for 2006/07 adjusted to include an allowance of 1.8% for economic growth.

Further detail on the methodology, which is that favoured by the EU Directive on Energy End-Use Efficiency and Energy Services, is contained in a paper "Delivering Northern Ireland's 1% Energy Efficiency Target" which is available on my Department's web site on the Sustainable Energy page at www.energy.detini.gov.uk

We are currently almost 6 months into the first year of the 5 year period to achieve this target and an indication of performance will not be available until early 2008. However the scoping work indicates that the 1% target reduction in electricity consumption is achievable given the high level of energy efficiency activity across all sectors in Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland Electricity

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will undertake to investigate (i) Northern Ireland Electricity's charging of business and industry for mains supply connections; (ii) the reason for the time delay in having a new mains supply connected; and (iii) to detail the comparable cost of supply and timing of delivery in the Republic of Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales.

(AQW 154/08)

Mr Dodds:

- (i) Regulation of Northern Ireland Electricity's ("NIE's") connection charges is a matter for the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation ("NIAUR"). NIE's licence contains an obligation requiring it to issue a statement for connection charges which must first be approved by NIAUR. If a customer has a dispute about the size of the charge quoted by NIE they have the right to refer the case to NIAUR who will carry out an independent assessment.
- (ii) Before a connection can be made by NIE, some or all of the following may be necessary in order to meet the customer's requirements:
 - approval from other landowners for the electricity infrastructure, including formal agreement to wayleaves or easements (which can potentially take several months);
 - planning permission from DoE Planning Service;
 - permission from DRD Roads Service to carry out work on public roadways;
 - NIE design the works (which may require a detailed site survey);
 - construction of the connection (which can take 4-12 weeks, or 4-6 months if specialised items of equipment need to be procured by NIE);

NIE cannot make any new connection live until it has received a connection card filled in by the customer's electrical contractor. New business customers must also have entered into a contract with an electricity supplier before the supply can be made live.

- (iii) While NIE has a straightforward and transparent charging schedule, the information available from distribution companies in the Republic of Ireland ("RoI"), Scotland, England and Wales in relation to the cost of making electricity connections is complex and varied. This does not readily allow like for like comparisons with the position in Northern Ireland. In relation to the time taken to make a connection, the position in Northern Ireland is broadly comparable to that in the Irish Republic, Scotland, England and Wales for the same reasons as are detailed in (ii). NIAUR does not compare the connection costs with Great Britain and the Irish Republic when regulating NIE's connection charges, but does seek to ensure that they are broadly cost reflective.

Household Programme

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the number of applications received under the Household Programme to install solar, PV, biomass, wind or geothermal energy systems to date; (ii) the number of these applications that have been approved; and (iii) the total amount of grant that has been issued. (AQW 156/08)

Mr Dodds:

- (i) The total number of applications to date to under the household programme, now known as Reconnect, to install solar, PV, biomass, wind and ground source heat pumps (geothermal is not actually supported under Reconnect) is 2,695.
- (ii) The number of applications approved is 2,557 (137 applications were withdrawn and 1 was rejected).
- (iii) The total amount of grant issued to date under Reconnect is £2.77 million.

Household Programme

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of applications that have been received under the Household Programme under the headings (i) solar; (ii) PV; (iii) biomass; (iv) wind; and (v) geothermal. (AQW 158/08)

Mr Dodds: The household programme, now known as Reconnect, was officially opened to applications on 24 July 2006. The numbers of applications to date are as follows:

(i)	Solar:	1,187
(ii)	PV:	56
(iii)	Biomass:	1,012
(iv)	Wind:	176
(v)	Geothermal*:	264
	Total:	2,695

* Geothermal is not actually supported under Reconnect and the number given is for ground source heat pumps.

Invest NI: Overseas trips

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the overseas trips that Invest NI has financed for members of staff in 2004; 2005; 2006; and 2007; the amount that each trip cost; and the reason for each trip. (AQW 166/08)

Mr Dodds: Given the nature of Invest NI's work, there is quite a significant amount of information which has to be processed to fully answer this question. The current systems in Invest NI do not allow for this information to be collated and produced centrally. Therefore, Invest NI has to conduct a large-scale coordination exercise across its Divisions to gather all of the requisite information.

I will write to the member following the conclusion of the coordination exercise to provide him with a full response to his question. I will also place a copy of this final reply in the Assembly Library

Agrifood Industry

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he has identified export markets where Northern Ireland's agri-food industry is currently at a competitive disadvantage, compared to that of the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 173/08)

Mr Dodds: There are no specific export markets where I have identified a competitive disadvantage for NI agri-food companies against their Irish Republic counterparts.

Tourism in Craigavon

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will make a statement on tourism in the Craigavon area. (AQO 70/08)

Mr Dodds: Craigavon received 55,700 visits in 2006. This was 1.8% of visits to Northern Ireland and involved spending of £11.8 million, representing 2.4% of total tourism spend in Northern Ireland. Oxford Island and the Lough Neagh Discovery Centre are the two most visited attractions. Oxford Island received 260,000 visits in 2006 and Lough Neagh Discovery Centre received 66,241 visits. Craigavon has 305 bed spaces which is approximately 1% of the Northern Ireland total.

I will be visiting the area in the near future when I look forward to visiting some of its tourism attractions and discussing opportunities to develop tourism further.

Financial Services Sector

Mr David Burnside asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has for assisting the development of a financial services sector in Northern Ireland. (AQO 27/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI has already developed a strategy to target this sector globally and is actively cultivating relationships at a very senior level with a number of key accounts in Europe and the United States. This is a growing sector with the potential to provide significant new opportunities for Northern Ireland.

During 2007, Northern Ireland has seen strategic investments by two high-profile financial institutions. Citi, one of the world's largest financial corporations, has established a Centre of Excellence in Belfast promoting 716 jobs. This facility includes 117 jobs in capital markets and banking operations as well as 39 jobs in legal and compliance. These jobs attract average salaries of circa £25k, well in excess of Northern Ireland's private sector average. In July 2007, Bank of Ireland Securities Services announced its intention to promote 149 jobs creating its first UK hedge fund administration centre. These jobs will attract average salaries of £35k per annum and is evidence of the sustainable economic growth opportunities provided by the financial services sector.

In addition to offering selective financial assistance, Invest NI is working closely with Department of Employment and Learning and the education sector to develop a supply of suitably qualified people to avail of these employment opportunities.

Key Industries

Ms Anna Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline three key industries in which he believes Northern Ireland can become a world leader over the next decade. (AQO 63/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI's focus is on developing our companies into world leaders within the niche markets in which they operate. At present, Northern Ireland has companies operating with key niche strengths in the advanced manufacturing sectors, such as Seagate and Bombardier, life sciences sector, such as Almac and Norbrook, and the software development sector, such as Meridio and Northbrook. Our companies have also demonstrated growing strengths in the services sector, particularly ICT and financial services. With a continued focus on capability and innovation development, the companies operating within these sectors can further increase their competitiveness and be successful in winning orders against global competitors into the next decade.

Economic Development Indicators

Dr Stephen Farry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to report on the indicators used by his department to assess economic development in Northern Ireland. (AQO 65/08)

Mr Dodds: My Department collects data on a range of indicators to monitor the performance of the NI economy. Areas covered include the labour market, exports, R&D and innovation.

Over the CSR period, as part of its Public Service Agreement, the Department will continue to track performance in the key areas of Productivity; Employment and Tourism.

The Department has also developed - in partnership with the Economic Development Forum - a set of monitoring and forecasting indicators for the Northern Ireland economy. These are aligned to the Economic Vision for Northern Ireland and the latest report was published in October 2006

Invest NI: Advance Sites in West Tyrone

Mr Barry McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to clarify whether advance sites located in West Tyrone, that are under the control of Invest Northern Ireland, may be made available to indigenous companies planning to expand their operations. (AQO 105/08)

Mr Dodds: Property sites owned by Invest NI are sold or leased to its client companies, both locally or externally owned, based on demonstrable immediate need and an approved business case.

A business needs to meet certain criteria on turnover and export capability to qualify as an Invest NI client. Clients generally operate in the fields of manufacturing and tradable services and have a strong export focus.

Invest NI has identified a shortage of available Industrial land in the area and is working with Planning Service to identify suitable land for industrial zoning in the emerging West Tyrone Area Plan. It is also resisting change of use applications in order to protect remaining industrial sites.

Visitors' Centre at the Giant's Causeway

Mr Declan O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to indicate the date for completion of a permanent Visitors' Centre at the Giant's Causeway. (AQO 4/08)

Mr Dodds: The Member is aware of Minister Foster's 10 September statement and my statement of the same date. The issues relating to the Giant's Causeway were explored during the Adjournment Debate on 11 September. The completion date for a permanent Visitor's Centre will depend on the resolution of planning and related issues. Much will depend on all key Stakeholders taking a constructive and co-operative approach to the delivery of a facility that does justice to the importance of the Giant's Causeway as a heritage and tourism asset

Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly

Mr John Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW1374/07, if he will engage directly in discussions relating to the future development of Shackleton Barracks, Ballykelly, as a centre for economic enterprise, trade and investment. (AQO 11/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI's current landholding in the surrounding areas of Londonderry, Limavady and Coleraine is considered to be sufficient for the medium to long term needs of its clients and prospective clients in the North West. There is also significant private sector industrial landholding in the area.

Invest NI holds over 50 acres in Limavady Council area. 35 acres are already occupied by client companies leaving 15 currently available for lease. Adding the figures for Londonderry and Coleraine, over 170 acres remain available for lease out of a total landholding in the area of almost 550

Manufacturing Sector

Mr Roy Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he is taking to boost the manufacturing sector, considering that in 2000 the sector accounted for 16% of the Northern Ireland workforce, whereas today it stands at 12%. (AQO 89/08)

Mr Dodds: Manufacturing continues to play a vital role in the Northern Ireland economy and both DETI and Invest NI continue to actively promote and support the sector. The trend in Northern Ireland and elsewhere in the world is for further erosion of employment in the sector but with rising productivity as companies move up the value-added chain, become more knowledge-intensive, higher skilled, develop products for niche markets and compete more on quality and less on price.

Innovation is the key to the future success of the manufacturing sector and Invest NI continues to assist its manufacturing clients to improve their competitiveness and boost export growth through programmes aimed at capability development. This is demonstrated by the significant resources Invest NI allocates to manufacturing where the majority of its sector teams are focused. Invest NI is also seeking to secure mobile manufacturing investments in Northern Ireland by encouraging clients to invest in HQ activities such as R&D centres and administrative support functions

Potential growth of Tourism Industry

Mr Paul Maskey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give an assessment of the potential growth of the tourism industry in Northern Ireland, and its potential contribution to economic growth. (AQO 106/08)

Mr Dodds: Research based on 2003 figures indicates that tourism contributed some £783 million, or 3.5 per cent of Gross Value Added, and supported more than 28,000 Full Time Equivalent jobs. By establishing Northern Ireland as a world class visitor destination we will further increase tourism's contribution to the economy. We have already had significant success in this regard with out-of state visitor numbers to Northern Ireland increasing by 33.7 per cent during the period 2000-2006, and visitor spend increasing by 48.1 per cent over the same period. My Department has very recently received corresponding figures for 2004 and indicative figures for 2005. These have to be verified before they can be published. I will write to the Member shortly to provide him with this update and place a copy of that letter in the Assembly Library.

Smithsonian Festival: Financial Benefits

Mr Kieran McCarthy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to report on the financial benefits to Northern Ireland of his attendance at the Smithsonian Festival in the United States of America, in late June 2007. (AQO 48/08)

Mr Dodds: The trip was to support an Invest NI trade mission, to undertake a series of inward investment engagements, with potential and existing investors, and to speak at the Tourism Ireland event that followed the launch of the Titanic Exhibition in Washington on 26th June. The mission was planned to coincide with the Smithsonian Festival and I was invited to the opening of the Festival. The trip also allowed me the opportunity to meet with the US Administration and other key influencers and business people to discuss the forthcoming US NI investment conference next spring. I am confident that these activities will generate significant financial benefits for Northern Ireland in the fullness of time.

Invest NI and Industrial Development Agency

Mr Seán Neeson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to report on the performance of Invest Northern Ireland in comparison to the Industrial Development Agency in the Republic of Ireland.

(AQO 56/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI is not directly comparable to the Irish Industrial Development Authority, either in terms of functional responsibility or product offering. For example, the IDA focus is solely on foreign direct investment whereas Invest NI's clients comprise both locally and internationally owned companies. Since 2002, Invest NI has performed strongly in the area of foreign direct investment, supporting 164 inward investment projects, leveraging almost £1.1 billion of investment; promoting over 13,200 new jobs and safeguarding almost 10,500 existing jobs.

Indeed, between April 2003 and January 2007, Northern Ireland, with 2.8% population share, secured 7% of contestable projects into the UK; or 14% if projects locating in SE England are excluded.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Danny Kennedy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he has undertaken any assessment of the likely impact of a reduction in well-paid public sector jobs, through the Review of Public Administration, on the service and retail sector and, if so, what conclusions he has reached.

(AQO 35/08)

Mr Dodds: The Review of Public Administration is a wide ranging initiative and it will have impacts on most if not all Ministerial portfolios. However, some of its key decisions are under review and final decisions on location associated with RPA reforms have not been taken. I will, of course, be interested to ensure that any final decisions pay due regard to their potential impact on the local economy across all of its sectors. It is clear, however, that the economy needs rebalanced towards greater value added private sector activity and employment. Only by growing the more prosperous and wealth generating private sectors of the economy, can we ensure growth across all sectors including service and retail.

Roaming Charges

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made, and what further steps are planned, on the issue of eradicating mobile phone roaming charges on the island of Ireland. (AQO 109/08)

Mr Dodds: Last year my Department, working in conjunction with the then Department of Communications Marine and Natural Resources in the Republic of Ireland and both Regulators, made significant progress in addressing the mobile roaming issue. This work led to the introduction of all-island tariffs and special tariff initiatives for phone users which significantly reduced the scale of the problem.

In August this year the EU capped roaming tariffs across Europe. Whilst welcome for those travelling across Europe it does not fully address the inadvertent roaming issue for those living and using mobile phones close to the border. It is too early to gauge the impact it will have.

My Department will continue to monitor the situation, liaising with the industry and the regulator, were appropriate, and consider the scope for further action.

ENVIRONMENT

Article 40 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment if she intends to make greater use of Article 40 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991. (AQW 54/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): The Department currently makes full use of Article 40 agreements, where appropriate, to facilitate, regulate or restrict the use of land.

If, however, there is a choice between imposing planning conditions and entering into a planning agreement, the practice is that the Department will normally opt for conditions.

The Semple review recommended that planning obligations under Article 40 should be used to secure developer contributions to affordable housing. This will be considered as part of a review of PPS 12, since a new policy direction would have to be provided through PPS 12 and new legislation may be required.

Article 40 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail each occasion upon which Article 40 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order

1991 had been used by her department, in each of the last five years. (AQW 56/08)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that 8 Article 40 Agreements were processed in 2002, 10 in 2003, 7 in 2004, 6 in 2005, 10 in 2006 and 11 to date in 2007. Details of these Agreements are shown in the attached table.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail her department's consideration of, and position on, the introduction of an Environmental Protection Agency. (AQW 64/08)

Mrs Foster: I remain open minded about the recommendations of the Review of Environmental Governance, including whether or not there should be an Environmental Protection Agency.

I will carefully consider my approach to environmental governance. In so doing I will take account of the Review recommendations and of resource considerations, the views of the Environment Committee and of any points which stakeholders wish to make.

I expect to make a public statement on the way forward towards the end of the year, following discussion with my colleagues on the Executive.

Underground Slurry Tanks

Mr Billy Armstrong asked the Minister of the Environment to advise which government department or body is responsible for setting the criteria governing the construction of underground slurry tanks, and if she is aware of any plans to review these criteria. (AQW 83/08)

Mrs Foster: The criteria governing the construction of underground slurry tanks are set out in The Control of Pollution (Silage, Slurry and Agricultural Fuel Oil) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003 (SSAFO). The Regulations were made by the Department of the Environment in exercise of the powers conferred on it by Article 14 of the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999. I am in discussion with my officials with regard to the criteria.

Bangor Sportsplex

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment if she will confirm that the land at Bangor Sportsplex, which is being sold by North Down Borough Council, will be subject to the provisions of Planning

Policy Statement 8: Open Space, Sport and Outdoor Recreation. (AQW 87/08)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that Planning Policy Statement 8: Open Space, Sport and Outdoor Recreation is one of a number of material considerations in the determination of the current application.

High Hedges Legislation

Mr Alex Easton asked the Minister of the Environment if she will give a timescale for the introduction of high hedges legislation. (AQW 96/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department confirmed in 2005, through public consultation, that the nuisance high hedge problem here is on a par with that in England and Wales where legislation is already in place and in operation to address the problem.

I wish to bring forward similar legislation as soon as possible, starting with a policy consultation on the detailed operation of the legislation. However, the timing will be subject to consideration of other competing priorities.

Drink Driving

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline her plans for a Christmas and New Year advertising campaign, to reduce the incidences of drink driving on Northern Ireland's roads. (AQW 132/08)

Mrs Foster: It is planned to run an anti drink drive television advertising campaign from 20 November 2007 until 6 January 2008. The campaign will be supported by increased PSNI enforcement. Research undertaken to identify when road safety campaigns are likely to be most effective has indicated that incidences of drink driving increase over the Christmas and New Year period.

The principal message of the television advertising campaign will continue to be "NEVER EVER DRINK AND DRIVE".

Outstanding Planning Enforcement Cases

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning enforcement cases that are presently outstanding in each of the Divisional Planning Offices. (AQW 147/08)

Mrs Foster: The total number of planning enforcement cases that are presently outstanding throughout Planning Service is 5653.

The breakdown of this total for each Divisional Planning Office is shown in the table below.

Divisional Office	Total No. of enforcement cases presently outstanding
Ballymena	460
Belfast	683
Craigavon	1363
Derry/Coleraine	680
Downpatrick	1453
Omagh	536
Headquarters	478
Total	5653

Seals in Northern Ireland

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of seals in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years. (AQW 152/08)

Mrs Foster: The peak monthly count for all seals (including pups) for each of the last three years (2004, 2005 and 2006) is 526, 580 and 636 respectively. The count for the current year is not yet complete.

Seals in Strangford Lough

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of seals in Strangford Lough. (AQW 153/08)

Mrs Foster: The peak monthly count for all seals (including pups) for each of the last three years (2004, 2005 and 2006) in Strangford Lough is 244, 282 and 251 respectively. The count for the current year is not yet complete.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Government Carbon Offset Fund

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail whether CO2 emissions resulting from Northern Ireland Ministerial and Government Official air travel will be included in the Government Carbon Offset Fund, which is used by the United Kingdom Government. (AQW 5/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Robinson): DFP have been in contact with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA), which has lead responsibility for the Government Carbon Offsetting Fund (GCOF), to enquire if the Northern Ireland Civil Service could participate in the GCOF.

DEFRA have responded that they have exceeded their carbon credits budget for the current financial year and therefore the GCOF cannot accommodate the NICS, at least in this first reporting year. DFP has asked to be considered for next year's project but in the interim are researching alternative carbon offsetting funds through which the carbon emissions from official NICS air travel can be offset.

It is generally acknowledged that offsetting in itself is not a solution to climate change and the priority should be to reduce carbon emissions. DFP will be pursuing with all departments the ways and means to reduce all official travel, including air travel, looking to alternatives such as video-conferencing and conference calls wherever possible.

Policing and Criminal Justice Budgets

Mr Alex Attwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when he intends to commence discussions with the Northern Ireland Office and HM Treasury to safeguard the policing and criminal justice budgets, in the event of the devolution of justice and policing powers. (AQW 40/08)

Mr Robinson: Discussion on this issue will take place when the devolution of policing and justice is being considered. No discussions have yet taken place on this matter but a satisfactory resolution of this issue will be required before the powers are devolved.

MRSA

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail, broken down by each hospital in Northern Ireland, the number of people who died and subsequently had MRSA listed on their death certificate, for each of the last five years. (AQW 231/08)

Mr Robinson: Cause of death statistics are classified by the International Classification of Diseases, the current version of which does not include a specific code for MRSA. However, statistics on deaths where MRSA was a contributing factor can be obtained by identifying deaths registered with specific conditions likely to be linked with MRSA and then checking whether MRSA was actually recorded on the death certificate.

The table attached gives the number of deaths registered in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years, 2002-2006, where MRSA was mentioned on such death certificates. The figures relate to all deaths where MRSA was mentioned on the certificate, regardless of whether it was the main cause of death or not. The figures presented are classified by place of death, which need not be the place where an infection was first contracted.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of people who have died in each of the last five years, where hospital-acquired infections other than MRSA were listed on the death certificate. (AQW 232/08)

Mr Robinson: It is not possible to give reliable figures on the number of deaths involving all hospital-acquired infections as information on whether an infection was acquired in hospital or elsewhere may not be available to the doctor certifying the death.

However, in Northern Ireland statistics on deaths registered where MRSA or Clostridium difficile are mentioned on death certificates are routinely published. The attached table gives the number of deaths where Clostridium difficile was mentioned on the death certificate by registration year from 2002 to 2006.

Subarachnoid Haemorrhage

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail, broken down by each hospital in Northern Ireland, the number of people who have died as a result of a subarachnoid haemorrhage, in each of the last five years. (AQW 233/08)

Mr Robinson: The attached table gives the number of deaths registered due to subarachnoid haemorrhage 1 each year between 2002 and 2006^P in Northern Ireland. The figures are broken down by place of death as recorded on the death certificate. Place of death figures may be influenced by the medical/surgical specialties available in each hospital.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Bonfire Costs

Mr Daithí McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the costs incurred by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service in relation to call-outs associated with 11 July bonfires, in each of the last four years. (AQW 93/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The costs are shown in the table below:

Year	2004	2005	2006	2007
Cost	£5,122	£10,045	£12,193	£7,860

The Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service (NIFRS) calculates the costs on the basis of the number of fire appliance hours expended attending bonfire-related fires. These were 43, 86, 108 and 67 respectively for the years in question.

Accident and Emergency Waiting Times

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time for treatment in each Accident and

Emergency department in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 139/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the average time that patients wait for treatment in Accident and Emergency departments is not collected centrally.

A new electronic system is currently being developed which will have the capability to provide this information. It is now estimated that unvalidated data on accident and emergency waiting times should be available from this new system by the end of November 2007.

A target has been set to ensure that 95% of patients are treated and discharged, or admitted to a ward, within four hours of arrival at A&E by March 2008. Progress towards this target is being closely monitored and my Department is supporting Trusts through a programme of reform and modernisation.

Complaints against GPs

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of complaints that were made by patients against GPs; (ii) the number, in total and as a percentage, of these that were upheld, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 141/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information is not available in the format requested. The following represents the number of complaints made by patients against GPs in each of the last five years across HSS Boards.

Compensation to Patients

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount that was paid out in compensation to patients, broken down by each hospital in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 142/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is not readily available by hospital, but is available by Legacy Trust and is set out in the table below.

The five new Health and Social Care Trusts came into operation on 1 April 2007. Since the information relates to the years 2001/02 – 2005/06, the answer has been given in relation to the nineteen Health and Social Services Trusts which existed prior to that. Information for 2006-07 is not yet available.

Biofuel Health Risks

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment he has made of the health risks associated with the gases released when biofuels burn; and if he will make a statement on his assessment, from a carcinogenic perspective, of the combustion gases produced by biofuels and the gases contained in carbon dioxide.

(AQW 169/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has not made an assessment of potential health risks associated with emissions from the burning of biofuels.

MRSA

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to detail the number of outbreaks of MRSA, broken down by Health and Social Services Board area; and (ii) to list the exact location of each incidence of MRSA, for each of the last three years.
(AQW 180/08)

Mr McGimpsey:

- (i) Information on the number of outbreaks of MRSA, broken down by Health and Social Services Board area for each of the last three years for which information is available is given in the table below. Due to the complexities involved in defining an MRSA outbreak, MRSA outbreaks are not an appropriate measure to use to monitor the incidence or prevalence of MRSA infection.

- (ii) the exact location of each incidence of MRSA are not available centrally but information is available on the number of patient episodes of MRSA bacteraemia reported by year and Trust and where possible by hospital over the last three years. These are detailed in the table below.

MRSA

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of cases of MRSA that have been recorded in each of Northern Ireland's hospitals, in each of the last three years. (AQW 184/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of patient episodes of MRSA bacteraemia reported by year and Trust and where possible by hospital over the last three years are detailed in the table below.

Community Care Packages

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people currently awaiting community care packages in the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust area. (AQW 185/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information is not available on the number of people awaiting community care packages by areas smaller than Health & Social Services Trust (AQW 186/08). However, information is available on the number of people awaiting community care packages by Health & Social Care Trust, in respect of quarter ending 31 March 2007, the latest date for which such information is available.

At 31 March 2007, 188 people were waiting for community care packages in South Eastern Health & Social Care Trust, of which 137 were waiting in the community and 51 in an acute setting. (AQW 185/08).

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of cases of clostridium difficile that have been recorded in each hospital in Northern Ireland, in each of the last three years. (AQW 187/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of episodes of clostridium difficile that have been recorded in each hospital in Northern Ireland, in each of the last three years is not available.

The number of episodes of clostridium difficile for patients aged 65 years and over that have been recorded in each Health Trust and where possible by hospital in Northern Ireland, in each of the last two years is available and is presented in the table below.

Performance of Northern Ireland Ambulance Service

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 101/07, if he will make a statement on his department's fortnightly monitoring of the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service's performance.
(AQW 193/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) is required to respond to an average of 65% of life threatening (Category A) calls within eight minutes in 2007/08, improving to 70% from March 2008.

My Department meets fortnightly with NIAS to monitor progress towards the achievement of these targets, and to review the measures being put in place by NIAS to ensure they are achieved.

Since the commencement of these meetings in May 2007, performance has improved from 55% of Category A calls responded to within eight minutes to 61.8% for the month of August 2007.

I believe this focused performance management by both my Department and NIAS will ensure the continued improvement in performance and achievement of the targets.

Northern Ireland Ambulance Service: Benchmarking

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 101/07, what improvements the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service has shown since it was benchmarked against Staffordshire Ambulance Service. (AQW 194/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I refer to my answer to AQW 193/08 which details the recent improvement in the performance of the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS).

Since the benchmarking exercise, NIAS has worked with my Department in a number of initiatives to improve its performance such as tactical deployment, additional deployment locations, better 999 call prioritisation and the modernisation of communications and control technology.

Injuries Received in Hospital

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many (i) males; and (ii) females, were treated in each hospital in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years, for injuries received while they were in (a) an out-patient clinic; (b) Accident and Emergency; (c) a male general ward; (d) a female general ward; (e) a mixed general ward; (f) a male mental health ward; (g) a female mental health ward; and (h) a mixed mental health ward. (AQW 209/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of patients who were treated in hospital for an injury received whilst in an out-patient clinic, Accident & Emergency Department, general ward or mental health ward, in each of the last five years is not available.

Treatment of Severe Relapsing Remitting Multiple Sclerosis

Mr David McClarty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will consider providing, on the NHS, the use of the drug natalizumab

(Tysabri) for the treatment of severe relapsing remitting multiple sclerosis. (AQW 226/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Additional funding of £24 million has been allocated in 2006-07 and 2007-08 for specialist hospital drugs. It is for Health and Social Services Boards, as commissioners of services, to prioritise how funding is used, taking into account local circumstances, the strategic objectives established for the Health and Social Care (HSC) sector and demands and pressures generally for access to a wide range of new effective drug therapies.

On 22 August 2007, the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) published guidance recommending natalizumab as a treatment option for people with rapidly evolving severe relapsing-remitting multiple sclerosis. All guidance published by NICE from 1 July 2006 is reviewed locally for its applicability to Northern Ireland and my Department is in the process of considering the guidance on natalizumab. The Department expects to issue advice on the status of the guidance in Northern Ireland, and its implementation, later this year.

Satellite Radiation Unit for the North-West

Mr Brian Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will meet with Co-operating for Cancer Care North West to discuss the establishment of a cross-border satellite radiation unit for the North West. (AQW 235/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Unfortunately due to demands on my diary it will not be possible for me to meet with Co-operating for Cancer Care North West (CCCNW). However, Noelle Duddy Spokesperson for CCC (NW) has written to me on the issue of cross border radiation services and I am aware of her views.

I believe that the possibilities for cross border cooperation and collaboration on health issues which have the potential to deliver real benefits for patients in both jurisdictions should be explored.

My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Health and Children, is currently assessing the potential for further collaboration and co-operation to improve the health of the population and the provision of health services for people in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Also I intend to meet with the Minister for Health and Children in the Republic of Ireland, Mary Harney, in the near future and I expect that cross border cooperation across a range of health issues, including radiotherapy, will feature strongly in those discussions.

Proposed Health Village in Banbridge

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to explain the delay in completing the proposed health village on the site of the former Banbridge Hospital, taking into account assurances provided to Banbridge District Council by senior health service officials in 2004 that this scheme was ranked as the most significant for the then Craigavon and Banbridge Trust area; and how he will intervene to bring this project to an early completion.

(AQW 238/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Banbridge community health village has been under ongoing development since 2004. The final element, a new Health and Care Centre and Learning Disability Day Centre, on this site is included in Phase 1A of the Southern Health and Care Trust's Primary and Community Care Infrastructure (PCCI) Programme and has been recommended by the Trust as high priority within the PCCI Programme. The project business case is currently being assessed by the Department and it is expected this will be completed by December 2007, thus enabling decisions on approval to be then taken. This would then allow the project to progress to the procurement stage. This will, of course, be subject to the availability of the requisite capital and revenue resources that remain to be confirmed in the current Comprehensive Spending Review and associated review of the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland.

Expenditure by HSS Boards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total amount spent by each of the Health and Social Services Boards, in each of the last three financial years.

(AQW 258/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is set out in the tables below.

TOTAL AMOUNTS SPENT BY EACH OF THE HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES BOARDS IN EACH OF THE LAST THREE FINANCIAL YEARS

Health & Social Services Board	2006/07 £000	2005/06 £000	2004/05 £000
Northern Board (Revenue expenditure)	790,307	727,617	681,528
Northern Board (Capital expenditure)	941	1,139	614
Total	791,248	728,756	682,142

Health & Social Services Board	2006/07 £000	2005/06 £000	2004/05 £000
Southern Board (Revenue expenditure)	595,925	554,556	517,642
Southern Board (Capital expenditure)	1,029	906	495
Total	596,954	555,462	518,137

Health & Social Services Board	2006/07 £000	2005/06 £000	2004/05 £000
Eastern Board (Revenue expenditure)	1,379,493	1,300,051	1,224,609
Eastern Board (Capital expenditure)	1,955	2,010	1,318
Total	1,381,448	1,302,061	1,225,927

Health & Social Services Board	2006/07 £000	2005/06 £000	2004/05 £000
Western Board (Revenue expenditure)	561,217	513,089	480,697
Western Board (Capital expenditure)	924	938	632
Total	562,141	514,027	481,329

The figures above are taken from the 'Total Revenue Expenditure' line and the 'Total Capital Expenditure' line from each Board's annual accounts.

Spending on Artwork

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the highest expenditure on a single piece of art by each Health and Social Services Board, in each of the last three financial years.

(AQW 259/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested in relation to the healthcare sector is not held centrally. The review, which I announced on 24 August 2007, will look at the pattern of spending on artwork in healthcare facilities. In particular, I have asked that clear guidance is produced on how resources should be found for works of art.

Disability Access to Government Buildings

Mr David Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will make a statement on disability access to buildings for which his department is responsible.

(AQW 329/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department does not have responsibility for any Government buildings.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Roads Service's Moratorium on Expenditure

Mr Patsy McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the extent and duration of the Roads Service's moratorium on expenditure, broken down by divisional office. (AQW 89/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that there is currently a £36million pressure on its capital budget and that a contingency plan, which includes the delay of some capital schemes, is in place pending the outcome of the October Public Expenditure Monitoring Round.

As capital expenditure is managed centrally by Roads Service Headquarters, it is not possible to provide a breakdown by Divisional Office.

A20 Newtownards Southern Distributor

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the start date for commencement of the construction of the A20 Newtownards Southern Distributor. (AQW 101/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the tendering process is progressing satisfactorily with tenders returned on 13 September 2007. Subject to the successful conclusion of tendering procedures it is anticipated that the contract will be awarded during November 2007 and that construction work will commence shortly thereafter.

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Commute

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an estimate of the number of people commuting from Derry/Londonderry to Belfast by road, on a daily basis. (AQW 106/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to questions AQW 106/08 and AQW 110/08, my Department does not hold information on the number of commuters (i.e. drivers and passengers) travelling daily by car from Derry to Belfast. I can advise, however, that Translink has estimated the numbers of persons travelling by bus/train during the morning peak period at 450 and 218 respectively.

In relation to question AQW 107/08, the most recent journey time information available for the A6/M2

Derry to Belfast route during the morning peak period is as follows:

Mode of Transport	Average Time
Car	1 Hour 40 Minutes
Bus	2 Hours

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Commute

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to give typical journey times for people commuting by road between Derry/Londonderry and Belfast, where the traveller works normal office hours. (AQW 107/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to questions AQW 106/08 and AQW 110/08, my Department does not hold information on the number of commuters (i.e. drivers and passengers) travelling daily by car from Derry to Belfast. I can advise, however, that Translink has estimated the numbers of persons travelling by bus/train during the morning peak period at 450 and 218 respectively.

In relation to question AQW 107/08, the most recent journey time information available for the A6/M2 Derry to Belfast route during the morning peak period is as follows:

Mode of Transport	Average Time
Car	1 Hour 40 Minutes
Bus	2 Hours

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an estimate of the number of people who commute from Derry/Londonderry to Belfast, on a daily basis. (AQW 110/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to questions AQW 106/08 and AQW 110/08, my Department does not hold information on the number of commuters (i.e. drivers and passengers) travelling daily by car from Derry to Belfast. I can advise, however, that Translink has estimated the numbers of persons travelling by bus/train during the morning peak period at 450 and 218 respectively.

Derry/Londonderry to Letterkenny Rail Link

Mr Pat Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he has given to the feasibility of establishing a cross-border rail link between Derry/Londonderry and Letterkenny; and to the availability of additional funding from the European Union, to allow such a project to take place.

(AQW 127/08)

Mr Murphy: There are no plans to establish a cross border rail link between Derry and Letterkenny and consequently no application for additional funding from the European Union has been made to allow such a project to take place.

I would of course be happy to consider any feasibility study on such a line but would stress that my immediate priority is to secure the appropriate level of funding for rail services in the North.

Former Ministry of Defence Sites

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will indicate whether or not his department will adopt the water, sewerage and road infrastructure on former Ministry of Defence sites, to ensure that these sites remain viable for development.

(AQW 134/08)

Mr Murphy: Following the introduction of the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order, 2006, the Department for Regional Development does not have the power to adopt the water and sewerage infrastructure. This is now a matter for Northern Ireland Water.

In relation to the road infrastructure, my Department's Roads service advises that sites can be considered for adoption under Article 9 of the Private Streets (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 as amended, where:

- The majority of landowners or occupiers so request it;
- The roads or streets are first brought up to adoption standard, normally at the expense of the landowners or occupiers; and

- The Department is of the opinion that the street should become a public road.

Double-Cut Trimming Programme

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake to reintroduce a double-cut trimming programme on rural roads; and if he will make a statement on the current single-cut policy.

(AQW 143/08)

Mr Murphy: Firstly I should explain that the objective of my Department's Roads Service, in cutting grass on its lands, is to prevent overgrowth onto carriageways and footway surfaces and the obstruction of sightlines and traffic signs. Grass cutting operations are therefore carried out for road safety reasons and not for cosmetic or amenity purposes. This was confirmed following a review of grass cutting policy, undertaken in 2002, following a request by the former Assembly's DRD Committee.

The present policy provides for two cuts per year in rural areas and five cuts in urban areas. The area to be cut is one swathe width (1.2m), with the complete area required for sightlines to be cut as necessary. This maintains the balance between road safety and environmental protection.

I am sure you will appreciate that there are many demands on the Roads Service budget, and that any additional amount spent on grass cutting and verge maintenance, could result in the reduction of funding on other essential areas, many of which are related to road safety measures. At present Roads Service has no plans to increase the width of grass cutting.

Pedestrian Crossing in Dundrum

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will consider the provision of a pedestrian crossing at Main Street, Dundrum, Co. Down.

(AQW 165/08)

Mr Murphy: An assessment for the provision of a pedestrian crossing facility in Dundrum village was carried out by my Department's Roads Service in February 2007. It was concluded that the criteria for the provision of such a crossing were not met at that time. I would refer the Member to my answer to his earlier Question on the criteria for the provision of pedestrian crossings (AQW 59/07), for further information.

Roads Service will, however, carry out a further survey before the end of September 2007, to determine if there has been any change in vehicle flows or pedestrian activity.

I have asked the Divisional Roads Manager to write to you when the results of the additional assessment are known.

Accident Rate on the Mountstewart Road, Newtownards

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to address the continuing accident rate on the Mountstewart Road, Newtownards, taking into account the assurances given that work would be done. (AQW 167/08)

Mr Murphy: While I am aware that there is some evidence of collisions occurring on the Mountstewart Road, particularly at a specific bend close to house number 24, not all of these collisions are being reported to the PSNI. Consequently, it is difficult for my Department's Roads Service to determine the cause of the problem.

However, work has recently been carried out to enhance the signage at the bend in an effort to increase drivers' awareness.

It is also Roads Service's intention to carry out improvements works at this location. However, I should point out that financial pressures are such that it is necessary to prioritise work on the trunk road network. I can assure you that Roads Service remains committed to this scheme and it is intended that it will proceed whenever finance becomes available.

Pedestrian Crossings in Newcastle, County Down

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will consider the provision of pedestrian crossings at Dundrum Road, Castlewellan Road, and Shimna Road in Newcastle, Co. Down. (AQW 174/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the Dundrum Road in Newcastle meets the criteria for the provision of a pedestrian crossing. Subject to the availability of finance and pending the identification of a suitable location, Roads Service intends to provide such a facility in the 2008/09 financial year.

Both the Castlewellan Road and the Shimna Road in Newcastle have been assessed for the provision of a pedestrian crossing, but neither currently meets the necessary criteria. However, I understand that the Tesco store in Newcastle will be relocating on the Castlewellan Road and once this happens, Roads Service will re-assess the situation.

Dual Carriageway between Randalstown and Castledawson

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the benefits of having a dual carriageway between Randalstown and Castledawson, as opposed to a single lane highway. (AQW 175/08)

Mr Murphy: The current single lane carriageway on the A6 between Randalstown and Castledawson, which forms part of the North Western Corridor linking Belfast to Derry, has numerous junctions and many private and agricultural entrances, contributing to conflicting traffic manoeuvres. This type of single lane carriageway can provide few overtaking opportunities, thus increasing the platooning effect of traffic being held up behind slow moving vehicles, resulting in driver frustration.

A dual carriageway between Randalstown and Castledawson (as opposed to single lane carriageway) will have the following benefits:

- Increased capacity to reduce the serious congestion presently experienced by drivers on this route;
- Improvement in road safety by reducing the number of junctions and eliminating all right turning and crossing traffic ;
- The separation of some strategic traffic from more local traffic, which will continue to use the existing A6; and
- Improvement and increased reliability of journey times for users of this route.

The proposed new dual carriageway will deliver improved road safety for both strategic and local road users and will facilitate further expansion of local industry.

Upgrade of the A6 between Randalstown and Castledawson

Mr Thomas Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total cost of the project to create a dual carriageway (upgrade of the A6) between Randalstown and Castledawson; and to give the estimated completion date of this scheme. (AQW 176/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service have advised that the project to dual the A6 between Randalstown and Castledawson is currently estimated to cost £69.5million at 2005 prices. However, now that greater development work on the scheme has been carried out, this estimate is under review and will take account of the level of detail now known, together with inflation in construction and lands prices.

Commencement of this scheme will be dependent on the outcome of the Public Inquiry, due to be held in November 2007 and the availability of finance, with construction taking two to three years.

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to convene meetings with farming organisations, district councils and other interested parties to discuss planning policy for sustainable development in the countryside, in light of Mr Justice Gillen's decision on Planning Policy Statement 14. (AQW 178/08)

Mr Murphy: The 5 July meeting of the Executive Committee agreed to undertake a review of rural planning policy. The review is being taken forward by an Inter-Departmental Group of Ministers. As a first step meetings with key stakeholders were held on 29 and 30 August which included representatives of Ulster Farmers Union, Northern Ireland Agricultural Producers Association, Young Farmers Clubs, and the Northern Ireland Local Government Association as well as other key interest groups. I will consider plans for further meetings after the conclusion of current Judicial Review proceedings.

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr Jim Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which he will make a statement to the Assembly on Mr Justice Gillen's decision on Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside. (AQW 179/08)

Mr Murphy: The recent Judgement by the Courts of the Judicial Review of PPS14 found that DRD did not have the statutory authority to make draft PPS14. The Court did however give both parties one week (from 7 September) to consider if they wish to provide evidence on the issue of remedies before finalising the judgement. The Court heard this evidence on Friday 14 September when the Department were afforded a further week within which to gather additional evidence. A further hearing is scheduled for 27 September when Mr Justice Gillen will make his final decision.

Winter Gritting in Leitrim, County Down

Mr Willie Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will consider including the village of Leitrim, Co. Down in the winter gritting schedule. (AQW 181/08)

Mr Murphy: The hamlet of Leitrim lies on the C323, close to Castlewellan. My Department's Roads

Service will arrange for a traffic survey to be carried out to ascertain whether this route meets the criteria for inclusion in the schedule for routine salting.

This will be undertaken at the earliest opportunity and I will write to you when the results of the assessment are known.

A37 Limavady to Coleraine Road

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the current position in regard to the construction of the crawler lane on the A37 Limavady to Coleraine Road. (AQW 188/08)

Mr Murphy: The Gortcorbies Climbing Lane scheme on the A37 Limavady to Coleraine Road, is included in a programme of widened single carriageways to improve overtaking on parts of the Regional Strategic Transport Network, where traffic flows do not justify the construction of dual carriageways.

Detailed design of this scheme is well advanced. However, construction cannot start until environmental concerns about the disposal of the substantial volume of surplus material arising from the scheme have been resolved and funding is available.

Portadown to Belfast Rail Fares

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of all rail fares between Portadown and Belfast, in each of the last three years. (AQW 195/08)

Mr Murphy: The cost of rail travel between Portadown and Belfast over the last three years is set out in the table below.

	Single Fare(£)	% Change from Previous Year	Return Fare(£)	% Change from Previous Year
April 2005	£5.50		£9.80
April 2006	£6.00	+9.1%	£11.00	+12.2%
April 2007	£5.90	-1.7%	£10.00	-9.1%

	Weekly Fare(£)	% Change from Previous Year	Monthly Fare(£)	% Change from Previous Year
April 2005	£36.00		£128.00
April 2006	£41.00	+13.9%	£145.00	+13.3%
April 2007	£41.00	0%	£145.00	0%

Fares are expressed in actual terms. Allowing for the effects of inflation, the decision to hold some fares constant and to reduce others in 2007 has actually resulted in real fares decreases larger than the percentages shown.

Major Road Schemes and Completion Dates

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQO 226/07, what measures have been put in place to decrease the number of major road schemes that exceed their expected completion date. (AQW 202/08)

Mr Murphy: Firstly, in relation to AQW 202/08, the table below details the amount of time that each of the subject schemes listed exceeded their original expected completion dates. The table also provides a brief explanation as to the cause of the overrun in each of the schemes.

Scheme	Explanation For Delay	Overrun
A1 Loughbrickland to Beech Hill	Archaeological finds, unforeseen ground conditions and delays in utility service diversions.	8 months
A5 Omagh Throughpass - Stage 3	Contractual Difficulties	5 months
Foyle Bridge, Derry – Strengthening/ painting/ resurfacing	A shortage in high quality steel caused delays in procuring raw materials for strengthening works, which were completed in December 2004. This had a subsequent effect on painting, which could not commence until strengthening was complete, and which was suspended over the winter period to ensure optimal conditions for application. To minimise traffic delays resurfacing was confined to the July/August period and as strengthening was not complete by July 2004 this work was postponed until July/ August 2005.	10 months
A1 Underpass at Hillsborough Road junction, Dromore	An authorised contract extension of 4 weeks was granted to accommodate additional works comprising extra street lighting and installation of a safety fence.	5 weeks
Bann River Bridge, Portadown - strengthening	Additional works comprising extra street lighting and flood lighting to the structure, plus work to adjoining pleasure gardens. Note: 3 lanes over the bridge, which replicated the layout prior to the scheme, were opened to traffic a week before the original contract completion date at the end of November 05 (with the fourth lane opened mid January 06)	7 weeks

A8 Belfast to Larne Road - dual carriageway from Doagh Road to Hillhead Road	BT + NIE Utility works and adverse weather conditions led to an authorised contract extension of 12 weeks.	3 months
M1 Blacks Road to Stockmans Lane	Investigation and repair of an embankment slip and the enhancement of temporary traffic management arrangements were authorised through a contract extension of 4 weeks.	4 weeks

In relation to AQW 203/08 Roads Service officials continue to set deliberately challenging targets so that road users will derive maximum benefit from major road schemes as soon as possible.

In order to encourage early completion of the works, various activities are carried out in advance of the main contract to avoid overrun of programme timescales.

These include:

- detailed site investigation works carried out by competent geotechnical consultants;
- examination of records from the Department of the Environment's Environment & Heritage Service to investigate any known areas that may be of archaeological interest;
- advanced archaeological investigation contracts have been procured to resolve foreseen archaeological issues where considered necessary;
- Utility Authorities are trawled and existing services charted, with any alterations agreed and programmed into the works;
- procurement processes and guidelines are in place to ensure the selection of appropriately skilled Contractors and use of the most appropriate procurement methods; and
- risk management regimes to mitigate against other unforeseen events.

That said there are legitimate contractual reasons why schemes exceed their original expected completion dates, and which may be permissible under the terms of the contracts. For example, unforeseen ground conditions; adverse weather conditions; archaeological discoveries; and additional works which have accrued additional benefits to road users.

Major Road Schemes and Completion Dates

Mr Stephen Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQO 226/07, to detail the amount of time by which each of the major road schemes (i) A1 Loughbrickland to Beech Hill; (ii) A5 Omagh Thoroughpass - Stage 3;

(iii) strengthening of the Foyle Bridge; (iv) A1 underpass at Hillsborough Road junction, Dromore; (v) strengthening of the Bann River Bridge, Portadown; (vi) A8 Belfast to Larne Road - dual carriageway from Doagh Road to Hillhead Road; and (vii) M1 Blacks Road to Stockmans Lane, have exceeded their expected date of completion. (AQW 203/08)

Mr Murphy: Firstly, in relation to AQW 202/08, the table below details the amount of time that each of the subject schemes listed exceeded their original expected completion dates. The table also provides a brief explanation as to the cause of the overrun in each of the schemes.

Lead Water Supply Pipes

Mr George Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the funding that will be made available for the removal of all lead water supply pipes to domestic residences. (AQW 205/08)

Mr Murphy: It is recognised that some properties built before 1970 may be connected to the public water mains by a lead service pipe. The part of the service pipe from the customer's tap to the property boundary, which is known as the supply pipe, is the responsibility of the customer while responsibility for the part of the pipe from the property boundary to the water main, which is known as the communication pipe, rests with Northern Ireland Water. Under its current policy, Northern Ireland Water will, at the request of a customer, replace the communication pipe free of charge provided that the customer replaces the supply pipe.

In each of the last 3 years Northern Ireland Water, and its predecessor DRD Water Service, has replaced approximately 1,000 lead communication pipes at a cost of £500,000 per year. It is expected that a similar amount will be spent in the current financial year.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Houses Sold by the NIHE in Ards

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development if she will identify all land and houses sold by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Ards area, and the prices received from such sales, in the last three years. (AQW 102/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie):

Completed House Sales – 1 April 2004 – 31 March 2007
Total number of completed house sales	261
Total discounted sales value	£10.5m

Completed Flat sales – 1 April 2004 – 31 March 2007
Total number of completed flat sales	31
Total discounted sales value	£743,000

Sales of Vacant properties – 1 April 2004 – 31 March 2007
Total number of sales of vacant properties	10
Total sales value (no discount)	£1,681,000

Land sales – 1 April 2004 – 31 March 2007
6 plots of land were sold at a cost of £573,000

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Waiting List: Saintfield

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list, who have identified Saintfield as one of their areas of choice. (AQW 103/08)

Ms Ritchie: Ninety six applicants have indicated Saintfield as a 1st or 2nd preference area for housing. Sixty of these have more than 30 points and are therefore considered to be housing stress.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Waiting List: Comber

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list, who have identified Comber as one of their areas of choice. (AQW 104/08)

Ms Ritchie: Two hundred and eighty five applicants have indicated Comber as a 1st or 2nd preference area for housing. One hundred and eighty three of these have more than 30 points and are therefore considered to be in housing stress.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Waiting List: Comber

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list who have identified Comber as one of their areas of choice, and who currently reside in Comber. (AQW 105/08)

Ms Ritchie: NIHE records show that, at 31 March 2007, a total of 139 applicants (82 of which are in housing stress) with an address of origin in Comber, had Comber as one of their areas of choice.

Properties Owned by the NIHE in Comber

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties currently owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Comber area. (AQW 138/08)

Ms Ritchie: In Comber the Northern Ireland Housing Executive owns 438 dwellings, 757 former NIHE properties having been sold to sitting tenants.

Properties Owned by the NIHE in Saintfield

Mr Simon Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties that are currently owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Saintfield area. (AQW 140/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive currently owns 111 dwellings in Saintfield, 206 former NIHE properties having been sold to sitting tenants.
