Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly expresses its commitment to securing training and employment opportunities where appropriate for young people with disabilities; and calls on the Minister for Employment and Learning to review the provision of such training.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

2.45 pm

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

The Future of the Conflict Transformation Initiative

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister for Social Development that she wishes to make a statement on the conflict transformation initiative.

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): As Minister for Social Development, I have been reviewing the programme funded by my Department known as the conflict transformation initiative (CTI). As Members can appreciate, there has been considerable public interest in that initiative and in my Department's position in relation to the continuing funding of the programme.

On taking office, I made a pledge in the Assembly to the people whom we represent. That pledge requires me to promote the interests of the whole community. It is not only the guiding premise of my contract with the people who put me here, but it is the benchmark and standard of what is expected of me and of all Ministers in the Executive.

As Members will know, this initiative was established under the previous Secretary of State, Peter Hain, during the tenure of my direct rule predecessor, David Hanson. From the outset, considerable concern was expressed across the entire spectrum of political opinion about the rationale behind this project, its proximity to an illegal terrorist organisation, as well as its monitoring, evaluation and fairness. Indeed, with the benefit of hindsight, it appeared to many to have been very hastily introduced before devolution returned.

Before returning to the context of the programme, I want to point out that any initiative that targets socially and economically deprived hard-to-reach communities will have worthwhile aspects. The legacy of our violent past has left many of the most disadvantaged people in the grip of paramilitary activity. Therefore, I recognise the need for creativity and flexibility in the provision of such programmes. I am therefore putting on record my confidence in the Farset organisation as a managing agent for a programme funded by the Department for Social Development.

It is important, at this stage, for Members to understand the distinction between the role of Farset Community Enterprises as a managing agent and the return expected from those at whom the initiative was specifically targeted through the actual programme. That distinction is important because there has been much misinformation circulating in relation to my view on the role of Farset Community Enterprises. There has also been the deliberately misleading suggestion that CTI was simply about targeting social need and not connected to a reduction in criminality, paramilitary activity and violence by the UDA. Those who initiated this programme, and those who were to benefit from the programme's outreach, knew full well from the start what was expected from them.

Notwithstanding the problems arising from the hurried nature of the introduction of CTI by direct rule Ministers, it is a matter of record that, at the time, both Secretary of State Hain and Minister Hanson expected that that funding would lead to, in Minister Hanson's words:

"a quickening in the pace of"

decommissioning.

They also pointed out that that funding would be stringently monitored and reviewed for evidence of progress and breaches. It was very clear that progress was contingent on good faith throughout.

In my view, this initiative was risk-prone from the very start, as it appears that the political will never existed in the direct rule Administration to see through the implementation of penalties, even if the UDA defaulted through continued involvement with criminality, violence and paramilitarism.

Every Member of this House is aware of the circumstances that led to my announcement on 10 August 2007, and, in particular, the assessment of the Chief Constable, following the violent incidents in Carrickfergus and Bangor, who said that he would not give the UDA 50p if the violence that we witnessed was an example of the return on our investment. Indeed, at this stage, I would like to put on record my personal appreciation for the efforts of the PSNI in trying to manage an escalating and difficult situation, which has been brought about by the continued involvement of various UDA factions and their internecine violent feuding.

I would also like to convey the best wishes of the House to the constable who was shot in the back during the incidents in Carrickfergus, while trying to uphold law and order. I would further like to express my admiration for the people of Carrickfergus who spoke so powerfully about their experiences on the radio this morning.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Ms Ritchie: It has been my hope that our new Administration would adopt a significantly different approach to that of the direct rule Administration by ensuring that the integrity of our institutions was safeguarded, and that it would recognise the supremacy of law and order. That is still my hope. By setting a deadline for the UDA to begin meaningful engagement with the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning (IICD), and make a start to decommissioning, I wanted to support not only the Chief Constable in his attempts to make our streets safer, but to remind everyone of the background to this project.

I had hoped that the UDA would use that as an opportunity to draw a line under its unlawful activities, and its use of violence, which has ensnared entire communities in its grip. The UDA could have grasped that opportunity by responding to the will of the vast majority of people in Northern Ireland and demonstrably starting the decommissioning process.

In the past few weeks, the UDA has met again with the IICD. We are told that there are those in the UDA who have tried to engage more meaningfully with General de Chastelain than they have over the past two years since commencing talks with the commission, or over the past 13 years since the UDA first called its ceasefire in 1994. I welcome those moves, but the context of Northern Ireland — politically, economically and socially — has shifted so positively over the past 12 months that the onus is now on the UDA leadership to deliver fully on its responsibilities to the entire Northern Ireland community.

Those who live in communities in which the rod of paramilitary rule still reigns are often among the most disadvantaged and poorest in society, whose dreams are being trodden on by an organisation that has not recognised that the world has moved on.

Over the past number of months, I have considered carefully what the Chief Constable and his senior officers have said. Following each of the outbreaks of violence, I have listened to the comments of the First Minister and other elected representatives of the affected areas, and I have consulted widely.

I offered a CTI options paper to my Executive colleagues in early July. They indicated that they were content for me to decide the way forward on this challenging issue. I have studied intensely the recent reports of the Independent Monitoring Commission, and I have met and spoken with a broad range of interested parties, including highly-respected and well-meaning intermediaries, locally elected representatives, British and Irish Government Ministers, community organisations, General de Chastelain, and, indeed, the UPRG (Ulster Political Research Group) and the UDA. I would like to emphasise to the House that, on each occasion, I listened very carefully to what was said, and factored that into my overall thinking.

More importantly, perhaps, I have been out and about, visiting people in some of the areas that have been targeted. Although I can appreciate the difficulties of programmes aimed at conflict transformation, it is not surprising that the people who live in the estates at the receiving end of paramilitary violence and dominance were united in their view.

They felt that, no matter how well intentioned, the CTI initiative was being undermined by the continuation of violence and paramilitary attacks and was not delivering what was expected of it. I should add that I was delighted personally by the warm welcome that I received from the people in those disadvantaged loyalist areas. Whatever can be said about CTI, I will not abandon those neighbourhoods. The views of people who live there are shared by citizens the length and breadth of Northern Ireland, who are subjected to media reports of violence, pipe bombings, shootings, and beatings. I do not believe that any law-abiding or right-thinking citizen in Northern Ireland considers that the continued use of illegally held weapons for illegal purposes by members of an illegal organisation does not constitute a breach of the good faith or risk taken by the Government's initiative.

I am aware that there are people who think that that type of initiative should never have been embarked upon. I know that there are people who say that the funding should have been cut the day that the police officer was shot, or when the Chief Constable made his scathing remarks. I am aware that there are people who think that Ministers should treat deadlines as though they were elastic bands. I am also aware that there are people who think that I should carry on regardless. I understand the diversity of opinions and the frustrations on all sides. Of course, there is also the argument that any initiative that hastens the dismantling of a paramilitary group should be given the chance to do just that. It would have been wrong for me to completely close my door on any such opportunity. However, it would also be wrong if I were to fail now to show determination and resolve.

I cannot stand over programmes that are aimed at quickening the pace of decommissioning and reducing paramilitary activity when those same paramilitaries are prepared to flaunt their criminality in the face of the police and the rest of our community. The UDA seems intent on doing that by its continued use of violence. Its fractious nature suggests that the organisation is presently unable to meet the objectives of CTI.

I have obligations to people who are working on the ground, to the managing agent, and also to the continued problem of extending outreach to hard-to-reach communities and devising the most appropriate vehicle to get there. CTI has produced some outcomes, but its primary aim, for its primary target audience, does not seem achievable at this time. I am sympathetic to the people who are involved in CTI; they are totally unconnected to the UDA, and the failure of others is no reflection on them. However, now is the time for me to exercise political judgement and leadership.

Such is the ill-thought nature of the initiative, I am aware that there are people who would seek to judicially review any decision to withhold the funding. There are others who are planning to judicially review, under equality legislation, any continuation of the funding. Therefore, I have had to consider the options available to me. I have considered the legal opinion of senior counsel, both in-house and externally, on the aims of the CTI programme and the Department's obligations to the various parties.

Although others may view recent events differently, or may decide that law and order is not a priority, I beg to differ. My political compass is fixed, and it does not involve prioritising the illegal over the legal, or the lawbreaking over the law-abiding. The cycle of community involvement equating to paramilitary involvement will have to be broken, once and for all.

3.00 pm

I do not believe that the CTI project can be justified any longer, and I propose to end it immediately. Furthermore, at a time when budgets are keenly contested and numerous groups are having their applications for relatively minor sums turned down, I cannot continue to justify the funding of a programme that is unable to deliver. I pledge that no community will be left behind or disadvantaged, and I will talk to elected representatives and others in the target areas to consider how to achieve that objective together. I will also come to the Committee for Social Development to have discussions.

Above all, I will make every effort to ensure that additional funds are allocated to deprived loyalist communities. I have instructed my officials to ensure that any employees who are affected by my decision are given due consideration, but the CTI initiative now ceases to exist as a DSD-funded project.

Contrary to some comments, I have not simply been waiting for 60 days to elapse before axing the CTI project: I do so with regret and after long and arduous consideration. However, I have heard contradictory comments from some UPRG spokespersons. They argue that the project has nothing to do with the UDA, but that any interference with it could derail the peace process. I entirely reject that argument. The UDA must not use today's announcement as an excuse to go backwards. There is only one way to go, and that is forward. The UDA should proceed with its good plans for November and, if there is tangible evidence of a positive move on decommissioning and a decrease in criminality, I am confident that my Executive colleagues will not be found wanting in their support.

It has been a difficult and pressurised time for me. There has been a sustained campaign of briefing against me and attempts to destabilise those around me. Ultimately, however, over and above the complexities of assessing CTI, I know in my heart and in all conscience that my decision is correct.

Under the new political dispensation, the Executive seek to make a real difference for our people. The first step is to set higher standards for justice and democracy. Staying true to the position that I announced over 60 days ago and terminating CTI is my modest contribution to that process.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr P Robinson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Today, Members are observing one of the most absurd, if not bizarre, parliamentary experiences for many generations, and I seek your advice on how to handle the next hour.

Members have heard the statement from the Minister for Social Development, and the whole House will share her sense of outrage at the activities of the UDA. Moreover, I have no doubt that Members will agree entirely with her on the need for that organisation to catch up with the rest of the community and move forward in a peaceful and democratic fashion. However, her announcement is contrary to a process set out by the Executive —

Mr F McCann: That is not a point of order —

Mr P Robinson: I am on a point of order.

The announcement she has made is contrary to a process set out by the Executive, and the decision is not consistent with the advice offered by the Departmental Solicitor's Office and senior Crown counsel. I believe her decision is also a breach of the ministerial code and the Pledge of Office. In such circumstances, I wonder whether it is sensible for Members to ask questions based on such a statement.

Mr Speaker: I thank the Member for his point of order. Some of the issues that Mr Robinson has raised in his point of order are extremely serious to the House. Due to the point of order, and the manner in which it was raised, I intend to suspend the sitting.

Mr Durkan: Mr Speaker, not one of those —

Mr Speaker: Order. There are some very serious issues —

Mr Durkan: The point of order is not based on any Standing Order.

Mr Speaker: Order until I am finished. Some very serious issues have been raised on that point of order. I want to be absolutely — [Interruption.] Let me finish. I want to be absolutely sure that the House is safeguarded legally and in every other way. I intend to suspend the sitting for 20 minutes in order that I can get some clarity through legal advice on the issue. If all sides of the House can wait for 20 minutes, we can possibly bring clarity to the matter. Under Standing Order 60, I intend to suspend the sitting for 20 minutes.

The sitting was suspended at 3.06 pm.

On resuming (Mr Speaker in the Chair) —

3.41 pm

Mr Speaker: I apologise to the House. I said that we would suspend for 20 minutes, but we ran slightly over that. Meetings have been held with a number of people and groups in order to try to bring some clarity to the issue. I have spoken to Nigel Hamilton, the head of the Civil Service, who has some concerns. In fact, he expressed some serious concerns on the issue's legality. I have also spoken to other members of the Executive, who also expressed some serious concerns about the matter and about the Minister's statement.

However, I have considered Mr Robinson's point of order, and I am satisfied at this time there has been no breach of Standing Orders. I will take no further points of order until after questions to the Minister. I call the Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development, Mr Gregory Campbell.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development (Mr Campbell): I have no questions, Mr Speaker.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I have heard what the Minister said. Does she agree that, as someone who is in the public eye, she, as Minister for Social Development, and her Department funded the UDA? Moreover, does she agree that, had the UDA behaved itself and decommissioned, she would have continued to fund the UDA and provide it with resources? UDA decommissioning should have happened because it was the right thing to do. If the UDA decommissions, will the Minister continue to provide it with funds?

Ms Ritchie: The statement that I have made today still stands, and its content is quite clear.

Mr McNarry: After the proceedings earlier, it is important for the Minister to confirm to the House that all previous contractual arrangements entered into will be honoured. Will she tell the House whether she had any communication with her Executive colleagues on her final decision on the matter in advance of making her statement?

Ms Ritchie: As agreed, I furnished the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Minister of Finance and Personnel with two sets of legal advice on the matter.

In response to the other point that the Member raised, my officials will today be exploring all issues with the managing agent, Farset Youth and Community Development Ltd.

3.45 pm

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas a rinne sí agus go deimhin déanaim comhghairdeas léi as an ráiteas. Tá ceist amháin agam uirthi. An dtiocfadh liom a fhiafraidh di cad é a tharlóidh anois do Airgead Chiste Chlaochlaithe na Coimhlinte?

I thank the Minister for her statement and congratulate her on the stance that she has taken. I am sure that she, like me, is taken aback by the willingness of some Members to jump to the defence of the UDA. What will happen with the CTI money now?

Ms Ritchie: From the financial and accounting perspective, the money will stay in the Department's budget for community development. The bulk of the money pays development officers' wages.

I hope to direct funds to some of the most hard-to-reach and disadvantaged areas, and I will consider the best way to do that by holding discussions with MLAs and councillors from those target areas. I am aware of the needs of those communities and the fact that they differ from one another. I will talk as soon as possible to Assembly colleagues who represent disadvantaged loyalist communities about those communities' needs, and I will then consider how to meet those needs within the criteria of existing DSD programmes.

Before making today's announcement, I spoke to the Chairperson and the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development, and I have attempted to reflect their concerns and wishes.

Mr Ford: On behalf of the United Community Group and many other people in the community, I thank and congratulate the Minister for her statement and for her willingness to stand up for integrity in the political process, despite all the pressure to which she has been subjected, inside and outside the House. I also wish to thank the Chief Constable and other police officers for the roles that they have played in combating terrorism.

The Minister said that she will ensure that areas that were previously part of the CTI scheme will not be neglected and that she is willing to engage with elected representatives from those areas to determine how to move matters forward. On behalf of the Alliance Party, and Naomi Long in particular, I assure the Minister that we will engage with her in those discussions. In that context, how does the Minister intend to target the needs of disadvantaged unionist areas without creating different gatekeepers in the future?

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mr Ford and his party for their support. First, I wish to talk to all representatives from the various target areas about their perceived issues of need. Funding equates with need, and I want to meet those needs. I want to hear what Members have to say about this matter, and I want to correct past problems in order to ensure that money is directed towards building communities, targeting disadvantage, deprivation and poverty and reaching those most in need.

In the months since being appointed as Minister, I have had various opportunities to visit Protestant, loyalist communities — the Village, Ballyclare, Coleraine, north Belfast and Kilcooley. People in those communities told me that they want the yoke of paramilitarism lifted from them. They want to be liberated, to have funding directed at projects that address needs such as poverty, disadvantage and deprivation, and help to rebuild their communities. I am passionate about helping them to do that, because I want to help all people. As a Minister in the Executive and the Assembly, my Pledge of Office commits me to strive towards that.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr O'Dowd: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The Chamber has seen many twists and turns, and we have just seen another one. Wider society may find the matter difficult, and Members must be conscious of that in their deliberations.

I must ask again whether the Minister agrees that the UDA should not be funded by public money. Will she say whether the statement means that she intends to fund the UDA in the future? The Minister may have stopped funding what she described in the statement as a UDA organisation — and there is no other way to read it. However if the UDA does the decent thing and puts its guns beyond use, stops intimidating the loyalist communities and moves into a peaceful mode, regardless of all that is she prepared to fund such an organisation?

Ms Ritchie: I am not at all clear what the Member's question is. However, I will make it clear that my intention is to target disadvantage, poverty and deprivation, and the statement that I made to the House still stands.

Mr Durkan: I assure the Minister that people who are watching today's events will recognise that, although her critics have some neck, she, at least, is showing backbone in dealing with an important issue.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Ms Ni Chuilín: Is she funding the UDA?

Mr Durkan: I heard some questions that were asked from a sedentary position. Sinn Féin is giving clear advice and conclusions. Was that the sort of advice that the Minister received from the deputy First Minister, the Minister of Education, the Minister for Regional Development, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development or the junior Minister in the Office of the First Minister and the deputy First Minister when her Executive colleagues received the circular about the issues in the summer? Were her colleagues content? Did the Sinn Féin Ministers offer the sort of advice that is coming from the Sinn Féin Benches today, or did they say something else?

Ms Ritchie: I thank my colleague and party leader, the Member for Foyle Mr Durkan, for his question. I will be absolutely clear about that issue. When I circulated a paper to the Executive way back at the end of June and early July, notwithstanding my reservations about the project, I outlined that I was prepared to go ahead with it. The response that I received from the First Minister and deputy First Minister was that they did not see a need for a decision to be taken, that it was not a matter for the Executive, and that they left it solely to the Minister for Social Development.

I clearly remember comments from the Minister for Regional Development and the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, which clearly recorded that they had no comment to make. That is all that was ever said to me.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr F McCann: When all is said and done, I was alarmed when I found out that the Minister was considering funding the UDA. I must touch on one policy that has been mentioned several times — that of targeting social need. The Minister has been selective in her targeting — [Interruption.]

A Member: Big talk.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr F McCann: She has been selective in targeting social need. Why did the Minister go against her Department's policy of targeting social need and abject poverty, by funding one community over the other, when social need stretches across the community?

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mr McCann for his question. There is some confusion in the House. I am trying to correct problems that were created by the direct rule Administration, which insisted on using funding from the Department for Social Development for that project. It is clear to me that it was a policing and community safety project, which, if it required funding, should have been funded by the Northern Ireland Office. It was nothing to do with the Department for Social Development.

I have already stated to the House my earnest desire to target deprivation and poverty, and to build communities right across Northern Ireland, irrespective of whether the problems lie in a loyalist, Protestant area or in a nationalist, republican area. The most compelling issue for me is that need, disadvantage and deprivation must be addressed, and that we must build communities; we must make a difference if the new devolution is to mean anything to the people of Northern Ireland.

I want to build those communities, and I want to be able to build those communities. I want to ensure that all the people to whom I have talked over the past months — from whatever community they come — are given the freedom to live.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Ms Anderson: Go raibh maith agat. The Department for Social Development's role is to eradicate poverty wherever it exists. Without doubt, Sinn Féin will support the Minister if she uses that criterion to allocate funding. However, I remain concerned, as do other Members in the Chamber, that the Minister's statement clearly indicates that it has been left open for the UDA to receive funding should it decommission. The Minister is setting out funding criteria for decommissioning that is not being done on the basis of objective need. That is wrong, and the Minister should provide Members with clarification.

Ms Ritchie: Sinn Féin never proposed a motion in the Executive, or even in the Assembly, to suspend or terminate funding for the conflict transformation initiative.

I have made it absolutely clear in the House, during Question Time and various debates, that my earnest desire is to eradicate poverty through addressing disadvantage and deprivation.

I look forward to support from my Sinn Féin ministerial colleagues for my bids to address disadvantage and deprivation in social housing, where an urgent and compelling need exists. I hope that their voices will not fall silent on those particular issues, because poverty must be addressed, irrespective of the community in which it is found. That is my earnest desire.

Mr P Robinson: Will the Minister share with the Assembly any advice that she received from the Departmental Solicitor's Office on the matter? Does she accept that every Minister must act in accordance with the law? Does she accept that no Minister can act outside their legal competence? Will the Minister share with the Assembly the advice that she received from the Executive's secretary, the head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service?

Ms Ritchie: I am not sure whether Mr Robinson is asking the question as Minister of Finance and Personnel or as the person who likes to think that he controls the Executive.

Mr P Robinson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Order. I understand that the Member is speaking as a private Member.

Ms Ritchie: I was simply seeking clarification. [Interruption.]

Mr P Robinson: That is why I am sitting here.

Mr Durkan: The Member was on the Front Bench. The DUP is good at changing position.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Ms Ritchie: As I outlined at the beginning of my statement, I fully adhere to the principles of the Pledge of Office. Of course, the Member was not present when I said that. I was very careful — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. The Minister has the Floor.

Ms Ritchie: I stated clearly that I had sought internal and external legal advice on the matter. I am perfectly satisfied that I have legal support for the decision that I have taken. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mrs D Kelly: I heard comments earlier about advice from Mr Nigel Hamilton. Certainly, the review into the appointment of the Interim Commissioner for Victims, and the shenanigans surrounding that appointment did not stand up well to scrutiny.

4.00 pm

It may come as a surprise to some, but people in the nationalist community — if not the wider community — are aware that the UDA was not a proscribed organisation until 1993, much to the shame of the British Government at that time.

The Minister has clearly given her commitment that funds to address social need will target deprived communities across the North. Will the Minister again confirm, for slow learners and Sinn Féin, that that is the case and that there will be a level playing field for all community groups to apply for funding under the criteria as set out by her Department?

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mrs Kelly for her question. I agree with her. It is my intention to address the issues of social deprivation and poverty. I will ensure that funding is directed where the need lies.

Mr McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Will the Minister agree that the kernel of this debacle is the initiative, taken by the direct rule Ministers, to direct funding towards the UDA, and which she has continued? Will she also agree that lessons should be drawn from this unfortunate experience? If the policy of targeting social need on an objective basis were the only criterion, the UDA would never have been granted money, either in the past, the present or the future.

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mr McLaughlin for his question.

I do not disagree with the issues that he raised about the direct rule Administration. It is unfortunate that many Ministers inherited policies that were not rightly placed or correctly implemented by that Administration. Many Members in this House, including members of his own party, and members of his party in the Executive, have been silent on these issues over the last number of months. I hope that there will be support for proper standards in Government and for tackling deprivation, disadvantage and poverty. The purpose of the Department for Social Development is to build communities through tackling deprivation, disadvantage and poverty, irrespective of where they lie.

Dr Farry: I add my congratulations to the Minister for her courageous stand and for showing integrity, despite the challenges coming from outside and especially from some quarters of the Chamber.

Will the Minister join me in recognising that the vast majority of people, especially in the unionist section of the community, want the UDA off their backs? Will she also recognise that, in allocating resources to address need, that is distorted by self-appointed middlemen? Will she recognise that the Pledge of Office requires Ministers to act to uphold the rule of law and that this decision is consistent with the rule of law in our society? Will she ask the Northern Ireland Office, which referred this matter to the Department for Social Development, to respect the decision that she has taken?

Ms Ritchie: I thank Dr Farry for his question and for his support. I fully agree with what he has said. I am anxious that resources are targeted where the need lies.

All Members should uphold the rule of law. When I found out that a policeman had been shot — and I am sure, and hope, that nobody would disagree with this — that a community was being held to ransom in Kilcooley and that similar acts were taking place, and are still taking place, in Carrickfergus, I had to take action to ensure that the best possible principles of democracy — the very principles that this House holds dear — are upheld, and that money is directed to those who need it and used to tackle disadvantage and deprivation. Once again, I thank the Member for his support.

Mr Donaldson: On this side of the House, it has been our long-held objective to see paramilitarism removed from everywhere in Northern Ireland, regardless of its manifestation. That remains our objective. Nevertheless, we cannot fight unlawfulness by taking unlawful decisions. We need to be absolutely clear that the decision taken today is legally competent.

In the interests of transparency, the Assembly must be clear about the advice that the Minister has been given by the Departmental Solicitor's Office. However, the Minister has not told the Assembly what advice she was given. The Assembly is entitled to know what that advice was, because that is essential if Members are to be able to defend the decision that has been taken. Therefore, can the Minister clarify what advice she was given by the Departmental Solicitor's Office?

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mr Donaldson for his support. Everyone in the House agrees that the yoke of paramilitarism must be removed. I do not believe that anyone disagrees with that. The information that was provided to me internally by the Departmental Solicitor's Office and by senior Crown counsel, and that which I received from an independent legal person, is privileged information. Therefore, I shall leave it at that.

Mr Attwood: Does the Minister agree that people who have long been silent on this issue have suddenly found their voices in the Chamber? Those people gave advice, the height of which was, "no comment", when the Minister sought guidance from her Executive colleagues. The people whose advice amounted to "no comment" now have all sorts of advice for the Minister on how she has handled this matter. Does she not find that contradictory and somewhat insulting to the people of Northern Ireland, who have a clear view about how this matter should be handled, unlike members of Sinn Féin and its Ministers in the Executive? Has the Minister consulted General de Chastelain to seek his assessment of the situation in respect of decommissioning by loyalist paramilitaries?

Ms Ritchie: I thank my colleague Mr Attwood for his comments and questions. First, I wish to point out that I am happy to share the legal advice that I have been given with the Committee for Social Development.

I have had a meeting and a telephone conversation with General de Chastelain. I can assure the House that I fully and carefully considered the information that he provided. I am sure that the House will understand that I cannot share what I have been told. However, I can tell the House that no one to whom I have spoken during the past weeks and months has told me that the requirement for decommissioning would be fulfilled as I had requested, and which is so evidently required by the people of Northern Ireland.

Everywhere that I have visited throughout Northern Ireland during the past several months, people have told me that they want the yoke of paramilitarism removed from their backs; they want deprivation and disadvantage addressed, and they want illegal weapons removed from society and decommissioned — they were very clear about that and they were also clear that they want criminality, violence and terrorism to be removed from society. There is a new political dispensation. In view of the fact that the dial on the political compass has changed, the public must see UDA decommissioning and the yoke of paramilitarism and criminality removed from our society.

Mrs Long: I thank the Minister for Social Development for her statement. I am pleased that she has shown a degree of integrity that was lacking in that area under direct rule. Given that the programme was brought in under direct rule, has the Minister received any assurance from the Northern Ireland Office that those who have, for so long, lectured local representatives to get on with the job for which they were elected, will now respect the Minister's decision, having made the choice for which she was elected, and will desist from further interfering in the matter?

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mrs Long, a Member for East Belfast, for her support and for her question. However, I very much regret that I am not in a position to provide her with a clear answer. I hope that the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and Minister Goggins will support me in my decision — and support me publicly — and ensure that any side briefing is stopped.

I want to clear up two things. First, for the benefit of ministerial colleagues and Sinn Féin Assembly Members, I will not be funding the UDA now or in the future. Secondly, for the benefit of my DUP Assembly colleagues, my decision has an entirely robust legal basis. The Departmental Solicitor's Office has observed that I am behaving entirely legally.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr McCartney: Thank you, and go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle.

Given that some of the Minister's party colleagues cannot distinguish the difference between criticism and clarification, she has cleared the matter up. We sought clarification of one issue and one issue only. [Laughter.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr McCartney: We sought clarification of one issue and one issue only. Will the Minister guarantee the House that she will never in the future fund the UDA?

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mr McCartney for his clarification. For the benefit of ministerial colleagues in Sinn Féin, for Sinn Féin Members and for other Members, I will not fund the UDA either now or in the future.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Minister for her statement, at least. I assure Members and place on the record that the Ulster Unionist Party has neither sanctioned nor supported the actions of any illegal paramilitary organisation, loyalist or otherwise.

In her statement the Minister drew attention to the work of the managing agents, the Farset organisation. I ask her to clarify beyond any doubt that, as a result of her decision, its integrity is in no way affected, nor will it be affected or impeded in the future as it continues to carry out important community work in that entire area.

Ms Ritchie: I thank Mr Kennedy. I fully agree with him about paramilitarism. Neither I nor my party have ever supported paramilitarism, irrespective of where it may have come from. I want to put that on public record. My statement also expressed my support for the Farset organisation. I have never, at any time, said anything different. On the day that I made the original statement, I said that I supported the good work that was undertaken by Farset and what they have done for community development in Belfast over the past 35 years.

Mr Speaker: Order. That concludes questions on the ministerial statement.

Mr Campbell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. In circumstances where a Minister gives a briefing to the Chairperson and Deputy Chairperson of a scrutiny Committee of the House immediately before an important decision that that Minister is about to announce, what redress do the Chairperson and Deputy Chairperson of that Committee have in ensuring that they get satisfaction in the future? That occurred today, 30 minutes before the Minister for Social Development made a statement on the important decision on which she has just been taking questions. That briefing included a specific reference to legal advice that she obtained that supported her decision. However, it has transpired that that was not the case.

A Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr Campbell: It is a point of order.

A Member: What are you worried about?

Mr Speaker: Order. I have listened to the Member, and that is not a point of order in which the House should become involved.

We will now move on to the next item of business.

4.15 pm

Mr Ford: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. The issue of legal advice to Ministers was raised on a previous occasion, and it concerned the appointment of an interim Victims' Commissioner by OFMDFM. Surely that must be taken into account now, because, on that occasion, the House conducted its affairs very differently, and there was a very different ruling.

Mr Speaker: Again, I hear what the Member is saying. However, it is not an appropriate point of order for the House. It is certainly a matter for the Executive, but not for this House.

Mr A Maginness: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. At the end of the Minister's statement, Mr Peter Robinson raised a point of order. I have checked the blue book, the 'Northern Ireland Assembly Companion', which contains a ruling by Speaker Alderdice on such matters. That ruling was that no point of order would be taken during the course of a statement, or during the course of questions following a statement.

Mr Speaker, I am in no way criticising the Chair. However, in view of the precedent established by Speaker Alderdice, can you consider whether the point of order made by Mr Peter Robinson, was, on reflection, out of order and should not have been taken at that point? Mr Speaker, I ask that you reflect on that matter and report back to the Assembly on what I believe was an improper point of order — and Mr Peter Robinson should, of course, have known that.

Mr P Robinson: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker. Based on the terms used by the Member himself, is it not true that I did not make a point of order during the statement or questions?

Mr Speaker: I will clarify the issues raised in those two points of order. Mr Robinson is correct in saying that he did not make a point of order during the ministerial statement. He waited until the end of the statement before he made his point of order, which is appropriate. I have continually reminded Members that I will not take points of order during a statement, but that I am happy to do so after a ministerial statement is made and before questions to the Minister are taken.

Rev Dr Ian Paisley: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Will you give some consideration as to how long the rulings of previous Speakers abide? Are those rulings eternal? Do we hold forever to the rulings of a person who sat in the Speaker's Chair but was never elected to it by this House? Does there come a time to say "Amen" to those rulings and bury them?

Mr Speaker: I am very happy to report back to the House on that point of order. I must remind Members that, as always, the Speaker's decision is final. It is important that Members remember that.

I ask Members that if they intend to leave the Chamber, to do so quickly, and if they intend to stay, to please take their seats.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Fiscal Reform

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to two hours for this debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for a winding-up speech. All other Members who speak will have five minutes. One amendment has been received and has been published on the Marshalled List. The proposer of the amendment will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for a winding-up speech.

Mr Neeson: I beg to move

That this Assembly recognises the complexity of the global economy and calls for fiscal reforms, and other measures, to ensure that Northern Ireland is competing on a level playing field.

The events of this afternoon will be a hard act to follow; I hope that they will not overshadow the content of this debate.

The real purpose of the motion is to keep the question of the economy to the fore in the Assembly. Members will recall that before the restoration of devolution the Subgroup on the Economic Challenges facing Northern Ireland reported back to the Transitional Assembly. The main purpose of the subgroup was the creation of economic advantage as part of the peace dividend. However, the Chancellor's pre-Budget statement last week clearly showed that Alistair is not the Darling of businesses in Northern Ireland. Despite that, I want this debate to be a positive one. I am aware that the US ambassadors have been to Northern Ireland in recent days, preparing for next year's economic conference in America. That will provide a major platform for the exploitation of opportunities and the development of Northern Ireland's economy.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Molloy] in the Chair)

The unemployment rate in Northern Ireland currently stands at 4%. I remember that when I was Chairman of the Economic Development Committee of the 1982 Assembly, unemployment was over 20%. It is somewhat ironic that that Assembly was elected 25 years ago later this month; there are very few survivors from that time. The days of the culture of economic development grants are gone, which is to be welcomed. That Committee had to deal with issues such as DeLorean and Learfan, which, ironically, were not total failures.

We must realise that we are now living in a global economy, and that new challenges are coming from new economies such as India and China. The real issue that faces us now is competitiveness; we have to recognise that there is a structural imbalance between the private and public sectors. The challenge is to strengthen the private sector and reduce our undue dependence on the public sector.

Although the focus of the motion is on fiscal reforms, there are other issues that must be addressed in order to assist the growth of the economy here. The reform of corporation tax is an obvious priority, and the Assembly and others have made submissions to Sir David Varney on that subject. It is to be hoped that his report will be presented to the Assembly sooner rather than later.

Last year, the Subgroup on the Economic Challenges facing Northern Ireland heard from a wide range of organisations and individuals — as has the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment this year — who expressed their concerns about the unfair competition coming from the Republic of Ireland as a result of its lower rate of corporation tax. There is no doubt that that lower rate has attracted a substantial amount of foreign direct investment into the Republic of Ireland, particularly in high-value industries. Other areas of the UK do not share a land border with another country that has such fiscal advantages.

I am aware that there are issues in the EU over the Azores ruling. Those issues could be overcome if the Assembly had tax-varying powers in line with those devolved to the Scottish Parliament. That would give us greater fiscal flexibility to grow our economy and expand the private sector. Research and development tax credits must be closely examined. The evidence shows that there is a lack of take-up of those incentives, especially by SMEs (small and medium sized enterprises).

It must be asked: do those tax credits need to be enhanced? Could the universities do more to encourage that? I have been greatly impressed by the work that has been carried out in the science parks and other research institutions in Northern Ireland. It would be remiss of me not to take account of the excellent lobbying work carried out by the Northern Ireland Manufacturing Focus Group on the question of industrial derating. The Assembly has already debated the issue, and I know that it is a matter to be considered in the comprehensive spending review. I remind Members that industrial derating was first introduced here to compete with the lower rates of corporation tax in the Republic of Ireland.

Last week, the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment heard a submission from the Department on its regional innovation strategy. In fact, the Committee discussed that matter at its meeting today. The success of the strategy is dependent on close co-operation between Northern Ireland Departments. It is important that joined-up government is developed. It is clear that we live in a changing world and a changing global economy, so we must develop the skills and expertise to meet the needs of today and the future. That is why a regional innovation strategy is so important.

Flexibility and responsiveness are also needed in regulation and planning. Fiscal reform alone is not the panacea for the future. However, there are many challenges ahead for the Assembly to make Northern Ireland a competitive country in today's global economy.

Although I accept the spirit in which the amendment was made, it does not take into consideration all of the issues that I hope are included in my motion. Therefore, the Alliance Party will not support the amendment.

Mr Beggs: I beg to move the following amendment: Leave out all after "Assembly" and insert

"calls upon the Executive, on receipt of the report of the Varney Review, to work in conjunction with Her Majesty's Treasury to provide a competitive fiscal framework for business in Northern Ireland."

I am sympathetic to much of what the proposer of the motion has said, but I have sought to improve what I believe to be the spirit of the motion.

First, I like plain English. The first part of the motion says:

"That this Assembly recognises the complexity of the global economy".

That is wonderful language, but I am not sure what it conveys or what its purpose is. The relevant word that I have used is "competitive"; we must be competitive, and not simply recognise the complexity of the global economy.

The motion continues:

"calls for fiscal reforms, and other measures, to ensure that Northern Ireland is competing on a level playing field."

It is unclear what the intention is. What is meant by "a level playing field"? I presume that it refers to corporation tax, but many of our EU neighbours have higher corporation tax levels. We do not necessarily want a level playing field with those countries; again, the important word is "competitive". I presume that everyone in the Assembly wants lower levels of corporation tax, not the same levels as other countries.

Secondly, in the latter part of Mr Neeson's speech he called for tax-varying powers. That was not specifically contained in the motion, although I feared that it might be mentioned.

Income tax is an important tax in any economy. Income-tax levels would increase if they were brought in line with other European countries. There is no doubt that a rise in income-tax levels would have an adverse affect on the Northern Ireland economy. It would disincentivise individuals from working, and we need to encourage more people to move from incapacity benefit to employment in order to improve the efficiency of our economy. There must be no disincentives that limit what might occur. The use of the term “level playing field” is wrong, so I have used the word “competitive”.

The Varney Review is particularly relevant to the current fiscal framework in Northern Ireland and is another glaring omission from the motion. Members look forward to hearing the outcome of the review, and it would be helpful for the Minister to indicate whether Sir David Varney has submitted his report to him and the devolved Administration. If so, when will that report be made public?

4.30 pm

My amendment calls on the Executive:

“to work in conjunction with Her Majesty’s Treasury to provide a competitive fiscal framework for business in Northern Ireland.”

Members must remember that when business performs well, there are genuine, sustainable jobs, and everyone prospers and has more opportunities. To achieve that, a reduction in the level of corporation tax could play an important role, although it is not yet known whether that will be considered or implemented.

In the United Kingdom, the Northern Ireland economy is unusual in that it relies heavily on small businesses. To date, the Chancellor has introduced to the Northern Ireland economy an increase in the tax on small businesses from 19% to 22%. Rather than giving advantages to the Northern Ireland economy, he has penalised it particularly harshly.

Among the other options that must be considered is industrial rating, which is in the Assembly’s grasp. The industrial rates escalator in which the direct rule Administration have placed Northern Ireland would be disastrous for the economy. Given the additional electricity, energy and transportation costs, many employers have indicated that an increase would lead to a reduction in R&D, investment and, ultimately, local jobs. It is important for Northern Ireland not to be tied to that escalator.

An increase in tax credits for R&D is important. In a survey, the Federation of Small Businesses found that 65% of its members were unaware of them. Progress must be made by improving advertising and ensuring that employers are better informed of the opportunities that tax credits offer to their businesses. As with many other systems that Government operate, it must be made easy for businesses to apply for tax credits. The advantages that they bring allow local businesses to make improvements. Additional investment in R&D can improve their competitiveness and increase sustainability and job opportunities.

Capital allowances also offer opportunities. My amendment states that the Executive must work in conjunction with Her Majesty’s Treasury on the development of various areas to create a “competitive fiscal framework”. Capital allowances enable businesses to make significant investments rather than paying tax, and they must be encouraged.

Rates relief for rural post offices and isolated convenience stores exists in other parts of the United Kingdom, and its application to Northern Ireland must be considered. Why should that benefit only be available elsewhere?

My amendment enhances the intention of the motion by removing the doubt created by Mr Neeson’s use of the phrase “level playing field”. Rather, the Assembly wants to create a more competitive playing field in which businesses can operate and thereby create more job opportunities. Therefore, I ask Members to support my amendment.

Mr Storey: I welcome the opportunity for the Assembly to debate the health and growth potential of Northern Ireland’s economy, and I support the amendment.

I concur with the Member for East Antrim Mr Beggs that it is crucial for the Assembly to ensure that competitiveness is at the heart of fiscal policies.

Every time I speak on this issue, it is in the full knowledge that some of us lack the relevant expertise, especially following the loss that our party experienced with the sudden passing of my dear friend and trusted colleague George Dawson. His maiden speech in the Assembly was on the Northern Ireland economy, which was dear to his heart. Therefore, we are discussing the subject today with mixed emotions.

When we are considering the problems facing the Northern Ireland economy, we must have all the relevant tools at our disposal to ensure that Northern Ireland is a prosperous place for everyone. We are developing a model of devolution — which gives us some autonomy to make responsible decisions that will have a positive, or, depending on the decisions that we make, adverse effect on our local economy. That is the single biggest challenge facing the Administration.

The economy is our key priority, particularly if we accept the prevailing view among some economists that Northern Ireland does not pay its way. It is not alone in that respect. When we look across this island, we see a contributor to our economic difficulties, namely the lack of what has been described as the cornerstone of industrial development policy — a competitive corporation tax.

At first glance, Northern Ireland’s economic performance has been impressive. We have an unemployment rate of 5% — lower than the UK as a whole and well below the rate of unemployment in Europe, which is at 8.4%. In the past 10 years, the employment rate has grown by around 20%, which is double the UK rate.

We have innovative companies that can compete with the best in the world, and I am always mindful of companies such as Wrightbus Ltd, which I have mentioned in the past, in my constituency of North Antrim. That company has been exemplary in how it has faced up to its challenges. Such companies have proved that they are well able to compete with the best in the world. However, they and many others who may be encouraged to set up base and invest here need realistic and competitive incentives. We are unenviably limited, due, in part, to our inability to competitively entice substantial inward investment.

Our fiscal deficit, which is funded by the Treasury, is around £7 billion. That is almost double the figure for Scotland, which has the ability to vary income tax by three pence in the pound but has never done so — for sound fiscal reasons. Surely, a one-size-fits-all approach for the UK is inappropriate for the Northern Ireland economy.

The Westminster Government must recognise the unique circumstances in Northern Ireland and acknowledge that now is the time to permit a measured degree of diversity. A strong one-off case can be made for corporation tax. However, we should be cautious about departing from UK-wide policy and we should consider the implications of doing so in such cases. We would probably be left to meet the financial burdens for a policy that could backfire economically. After all, there are strong arguments for continuing to benefit from the protection that comes from being part of the UK-wide tax system.

The report of the Varney Review, which is due to be made public soon, has been mentioned. The Executive will carefully consider their response to that report, as part of a wider directional change to stimulate our economy.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I listened carefully to the proposal that my party supports and to the comments of Roy Beggs in moving the amendment.

I acknowledge that both Members attempted to address an issue that the House must confront at some stage. To some extent, Roy Beggs allayed my initial concerns about the amendment when he elaborated on his reasons for tabling it. His contribution was, therefore, constructive and helpful.

The issues that were raised in the debate were addressed by the economic subgroup that the Preparation for Government Committee established during the Hain Assembly. The subgroup carried out its work on the basis of an all-party consensus. That united front was evident when the parties went to see the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Gordon Brown, and his Treasury team. The hostility of the Treasury to any modification of the one-size-fits-all approach, to which Mervyn Storey referred, was made clear at that meeting.

However, the issue remains a conundrum for the Executive. This island has an economy that performs competitively in the global economy. Therefore, a level playing field would compel one to examine the reasons for that hostility and, perhaps, apply circumstances that were more suitable to an island-wide approach. What clearly works in London and the south-east of England does not necessarily work in the north of England, Scotland, Wales, and it definitely does not work in this economic region.

Statistics that cover a long period demonstrate the failure of the policy of convergence. The draft economic projections that were prepared under the direct rule Ministers, and that continue to underpin the Department of Finance and Personnel's economic approach until such times as the Assembly can impose itself, predicted a 0.5% improvement in the divergence of performance and productivity for the next six to seven years. That was a policy of failure, which, in addition to the fact that the advocates of the status quo are not arguing that the situation will improve, means that the Assembly has an inescapable responsibility to secure as much flexibility and as many fiscal instruments as possible to enable the Executive to do their work and deliver on the Programme for Government. However, the current arrangements do not facilitate that.

We will study the Varney Review, but there is no expectation that it will challenge the orthodoxy that has governed the Treasury's approach up to now. Therefore, it appears that the failure of our efforts to regenerate, broaden, deepen and make the local economy competitive will continue.

The motion deserves support. I do not know whether the Alliance Party will respond to Roy Beggs's amendment. The movers of the motion and the amendment presented arguments of merit that could be supported. My party supports the motion and looks forward to the Minister of Finance and Personnel's response. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr O'Loan: Although it is customary to compliment a Member for moving a motion, I am reluctant to do so because this debate is artificial, repetitive and will not add hugely to human wisdom or to the contribution that the Assembly can make for the betterment of our economy. I support the general purpose of the motion, as anyone would, but I am not hugely enthusiastic about its wording.

Neither do I have any great enthusiasm for the amendment. The views of the SDLP on fiscal measures will not be limited by the outcome of the Varney Review: the party will continue to pursue constructive solutions on fiscal matters that are specific to our situation. There are some good examples of that in relation to variations that have been achieved on climate change and aggregates levies. However, I prefer the objective of the motion because of the inclusion of the phrase “and other measures”, because it is important to recognise that the betterment of our economy will not be obtained solely by fiscal means; that fact has been well recognised. Therefore, the Ulster Unionist Party should withdraw its amendment, because it does not help the motion. It is certainly not something on which the SDLP will seek to divide the House; the addition of a pointless Division to a pointless debate will not contribute anything. However, the debate will have some significance if the Assembly shows unity on issues raised in the Varney Review.

4.45 pm

I said previously that I had no great enthusiasm for the original motion; it is vague on what fiscal reforms and other measures it is proposing. I am particularly concerned about the phrase “a level playing field”, because I do not think that such a concept exists. The business world here and throughout the world could be better compared to a jungle. The use of such phrases invokes the idea that there is some sort of deus ex machina that will solve all our business problems. That view is commonly held, and I detect some special pleading around the business community and this discussion of our economy.

All companies — including what is sometimes referred to as “Northern Ireland plc” — must look for a niche in which they have a competitive advantage. The ground is always shifting, so companies must be one step ahead and be ready to move if it seems that their niches might disappear. The Government have a vital role in creating a favourable environment for business and in giving direct appropriate assistance, but we cannot expect some magic bullet from the Government. Success for our businesses will require hard work, initiative and the courage to take risks. The broad cultural attitude to business is important, and I am not convinced that the attitude in our business community is absolutely right; I detect that from what I hear in the Chamber.

I submitted an amendment to the motion, the intention of which was to initiate a discussion on the comments made by the Minister of Finance and Personnel that North/South co-operation is essential for global success. It also sought to ask the Assembly to consider a recent proposal by Dr Alan Gillespie, the chairperson of the Ulster Bank, to merge Invest NI and the Industrial Development Agency Ireland. That proposal appeared in ‘The Irish Times’ on 3 October 2007. The article not only dealt with that specific issue but broadly discussed the state of our economy and what it requires to go in the right direction. It is an important article, and it is perhaps no harm that my amendment was not selected, because the issue deserves wider debate. In the meantime,

I will circulate the article to all Members, because it is worthy of their study, and I hope that we will find a methodical way of discussing it.

Mr Hamilton: I support the amendment. I am confused by the text of the original motion, as were other Members: it is unclear what exactly it is calling for. I share the concerns of others that it is about the introduction of blanket tax-varying powers in a somewhat less subtle fashion than the Sinn Féin motion from a couple of months ago.

The text of the motion could best be described as naïve in some respects. Anyone who does not appreciate that the global economy is complex should not be in this Building. Some concentration has been placed on competing on a level playing field, but one of the complexities of the global economy is that there is no such thing as a level playing field. One of the problems that comes with globalisation is the movement of heavy-labour jobs to low-wage economies. I am sure that the Member who proposed the original motion is not advocating that Northern Ireland should have the same low wages as China, India or some of the other Far East economies. The amendment offers more clarity on that important issue, not least because it puts the debate in context.

A global economy means that Northern Ireland, and other Western economies, cannot now easily compete with low-wage economies for heavy-labour jobs. Most Members know of towns and villages in their own constituencies — and my constituency of Strangford is no different — where traditional heavy-labour jobs in textiles and engineering have moved to other parts of the world. That is a fact of life in the global economy. For a long time, we have been told that the muscle that we must engage is not in our arms and legs, but between our ears, and that innovation is the key to competition in a global economy. However, it is now no longer even as straightforward as that.

Low-wage economies such as India and China are now investing heavily in education, skills, research and development, and innovation. India has around 300 universities and over 15,000 colleges generating 2.5 million graduates every year, 350,000 of which are in engineering. That is twice what the USA produces each year. The OECD recently described China’s investment in research and development as “stunning”. The number of researchers in China has increased by 77%, and its investment in innovation has doubled. China is now spending more on research and development than countries such as Japan, which used to be considered to be at the cutting edge.

The DUP has long supported fiscal reforms for Northern Ireland that can retool our economy and allow us to — as Roy Beggs said — compete in the global economy. There has been an understandable fascination during the debate with retooling our economy through measures on corporation tax, and the Varney Report's conclusions are awaited with keen interest. However, corporation tax itself was never going to be the panacea, or the silver bullet, for all of our ills. We must not lose sight of the fact that there is much that the Assembly and the Administration can do to make Northern Ireland competitive, which does not necessarily require Treasury support or tax incentives — although both of those would be helpful. I refer particularly to research and development, skills, and education in general.

Indeed, whatever the Varney Report states, our economy must have skilled workers in place to seize the jobs that Northern Ireland may attract. There is little point in telling the world that we have a competitive business-tax regime if, when companies wish to set up here, we do not have the people who are capable of taking up those high-value jobs.

Our indigenous companies also need to be supported, and there have been some suggestions that that could be done by encouraging them to engage in research and development. I hope that the Programme for Government will ensure that the economy is at the heart of the Assembly's work. There are some encouraging signs in our economy, and it is important that the message that is sent out is upbeat about our economic prospects. We are seeing growth, not least in financial business services, tourism and software, in which we are now developing a critical mass of expertise. The economic future of Northern Ireland is bright, especially now that we have a locally accountable Administration that can respond to the needs of our economy.

I have some sympathy for the comments made by the previous contributor. However, I welcome this debate and the opportunity that it offers to once again highlight the important issue of economic development in Northern Ireland.

Mr F McCann: A LeasCheann Comhairle, go raibh míle maith agat. I support the original motion. The North of Ireland's economic performance has been — and continues to be — poor in comparison to the rest of Ireland, and compared to Britain. The lack of economic development is due to political instability, deep societal divisions, over 30 years of conflict, and deep patterns of discrimination and disadvantage. Deeper problems are exacerbated by an artificial border — the real cost of division on this island.

The case for fiscal reform in the North of Ireland rests on the fact that existing policy measures are inadequate. Several economic challenges have been identified in a report by the Committee on the Preparation for Government. The local economy has an imbalance when it comes to the contribution of the public and private sectors to economic activity. Inward investment is sluggish, the growth of local business is low-key and employment, with low-paid, low-skilled jobs, is not concentrated around the service sector.

Public spending is responsible for 63% of our gross domestic product, and although public-sector spending should be maintained, private-sector growth must be encouraged. Economic output here is about 20% below the British average and has also been falling steadily behind the Twenty-six Counties. Low unemployment figures of 4% conceal the fact that the levels of economic inactivity are far higher. The number of people on incapacity benefit is 74% higher than the average. There is a clear deficit of skills, and university graduates continue to leave, exacerbating that deficit.

Something different must be done in order to create a strong and vibrant economy. Competitive fiscal incentives, alongside other measures, will encourage investment and growth in foreign direct investment and SMEs. While there is no doubt that the lowering of corporation tax is important to the economy, and a level playing field on the island of Ireland would go a long way towards attracting and sustaining foreign direct investment, we must do more to deliver investment in people, skills and the infrastructure.

Initiatives such as marketing the island of Ireland to investors in key areas such as agriculture and tourism, and the opening up of the debate around the benefits of merging Invest NI with IDA Ireland, would see a single inward-investment strategy — a move towards effective marketing.

Other tax reforms, such as targeted tax relief for local and rural businesses, the manufacturing sector and small and medium-sized enterprises would be beneficial. A crucial aspect of strengthening enterprise is the nurturing of new businesses. Part of that should involve lightening the financial burden on those businesses during their start-up period, and a system of tax relief for new businesses on the basis of a compulsory, agreed and accountable action plan, particularly for those that locate in TSN areas.

Those fiscal freedoms could unlock our potential to set our own funding priorities. They would also be an essential component in developing a radical plan of action to tackle deprivation and ensure long-term economic development.

There are many tough choices facing us. If there is no move to develop greater fiscal freedom and strengthen the local economy, there will be many difficulties ahead. Go raibh míle maith agat.

Mr McQuillan: The impact of being part of a global economy has been clear to us all over the past few weeks. Rocketing oil prices and the international credit crunch arising from loan defaults in the US housing market are having a knock-on effect across the globe, and we in Northern Ireland are not immune.

Although the 'Northern Ireland Economic Bulletin', published at the end of June 2007, highlighted higher-than-ever levels of employment and a low rate of unemployment, it also pointed to significant areas of continuing structural weakness in our economy — lower levels of productivity than in the UK as a whole, higher levels of economic inactivity and, of course, the relatively small private sector.

Like all modern, developed economies, the challenge facing us is to manage the transition to high-value-added activity and to be competitive locally and, most importantly, internationally. We need a better-qualified workforce and a re-energised private sector that embraces innovation and develops a culture of enterprise in our young people.

Further encouragement in the economic bulletin was in tourism, where it is recognised that 3.5% gross value added to the economy in 2003 has the potential to grow and improve on the 24,000 jobs already supported in that sector.

I recognise growing trends in my constituency of East Londonderry, where tourism is such a vital part of the local economy right across the north coast. Indeed, money invested in projects to improve the infrastructure for tourism would be a wise investment and would provide a healthy return in both jobs and economic activity.

However, I am not sure that this is the best time to launch a series of fiscal reforms such as those suggested in the motion. The Executive have been in place only for a matter of months, and they must concentrate on establishing the scale of the various economic and policy issues that must be faced, and then prioritise them. Meanwhile, Members anticipate the publication of Sir David Varney's report — particularly its recommendations on corporation tax.

5.00 pm

Frequently, during the period of direct rule, business leaders emphasised the need for political stability. As the business sector attempts to create new industries and grow existing businesses, the Assembly must demonstrate a measured and considered approach to the economy that will inspire confidence. In the coming months, I know that my colleague the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment will ensure that the economy is at the forefront of Members' minds.

It is premature to talk of fiscal reforms before examining and prioritising the range of issues that we face. I support the amendment.

Mr Cree: The motion is well intentioned, but it provides no clear vision of a way forward. Members are aware of the term "global economy", but do we fully understand its implications? There has never been a global economy before. The closest example might be the Marshall Plan of 1947, which few Members would remember. Following the destruction of Europe in the Second World War, that plan was an attempt to create a more balanced international economy.

Members have seen what a market economy can do to encourage growth, particularly over the past two decades, when people witnessed perhaps the greatest ever increase in living standards. That is the success of globalisation, which amounts to an economic revolution. With it, however, come significant risks.

Much of the world's manufacturing industry has gone to China and the Far East. It is estimated that China's exports account for 70% of the world's GDP. Members have referred to the wording of the motion. That is an illustration of how Northern Ireland can never compete on a level playing field with low-wage economies such as China, India and other Far East countries. We must accept that reality and fundamentally reappraise our economy and its future.

Members have referred to the large amount of work was carried out in the past year by the Subgroup on the Economic Challenges facing Northern Ireland. The reports that that subgroup produced still make good sense and should be implemented. The Varney Review is about to publish its report, and it may contain good news about corporation tax. More likely than not, it will be unhelpful. In any event, we must move forward.

Closing the gap in living standards with the rest of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland is a key challenge for Northern Ireland. In order to do that, there must be a major increase in productivity, performance and economic growth, and that growth must be geared towards export markets.

The United Kingdom Government have a policy that is designed to achieve economic convergence in the regions. That has not worked and must be revisited. In a fiscal union such as the UK, a one-size-fits-all policy operates, and devolution has made little difference. The Treasury must address the failure of that policy. It seems to be content to continue to subsidise regions that are in deficit, such as Northern Ireland, at the rate of £6 billion to £7 billion per annum, instead of allowing additional policy flexibility or fiscal autonomy. Only three of the 12 UK regions operate at a surplus. The other nine spend £60 billion more than they pay in taxes.

As part of a competitive fiscal framework, more mundane issues must also be addressed. Research and development credits must be enhanced to raise the low level of business R&D in Northern Ireland.

Fuel excise duty is a major problem, and the large disparity between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland has encouraged crime, harmed commerce, deprived the Exchequer of many millions of pounds and is a source of revenue for organised crime.

Capping industrial rates would help existing manufacturing businesses, and a highly-educated and skills-based pool of workers is required in order to attract foreign direct investment. To create a world-class economy in Northern Ireland, entrepreneurs, inventors, financial services, technologies, transfer processes, venture capitalists, higher and further education, the universities, and the IT and software sectors must be brought together.

We need the full support of HM Treasury to provide a competitive fiscal framework for business in Northern Ireland, and that is why I support the amendment.

Mr G Robinson: All Members must acknowledge that Northern Ireland is at a major disadvantage in comparison with the rest of the United Kingdom and Europe due to its peripheral location. That location means that businesses here must pay a higher tariff for the electricity they depend upon to produce goods, because the fuel for the generating stations must be imported.

Also, our employment base seems to be anchored in the public sector; and the difference between the rates of corporation tax in Northern Ireland and in the South does us no favours when trying to attract investment from global companies and puts us at a distinct disadvantage.

However, Northern Ireland has some positive features, the main one being this Assembly. The political stability that was brought about through the strong leadership of the DUP sees Northern Ireland enjoying a global good-will factor that we must capitalise on fully.

We have an opportunity to attract employers who will bring well-paid jobs to Northern Ireland; reduce our labour market dependence on the public sector, and become a wealth-creating part of the United Kingdom. To do that, we must ensure that our workforce has the skills to fill all employment opportunities, whether they are in research and development, tourism or finance.

However, some areas of fiscal reform contain policy matters that the Assembly cannot control. The main issue is the difference in the rate of corporation tax between Northern Ireland and the South. Considering the South, statistics show that the low rate of corporation tax has helped the Government there to attract high-productivity businesses, for example, in the chemical, electronics and IT sectors.

We want and need those types of industries to be established in Northern Ireland. We want them for the employment and the opportunities they provide, especially for our young graduates, many of whom have to leave their home soil.

We must also remember those who do not have the opportunity to enter third-level education. According to reports, 25% of the adult population of Northern Ireland have a literacy or numeracy skills deficit, which undoubtedly contributes to the 27% figure for economic inactivity. Therefore, it is essential that fiscal reform must incorporate the direction of moneys to help people obtain essential skills for a marketplace increasingly dominated by global, transnational companies that demand the highest skill levels from their employees. It is also essential that programmes that aid people to retrain or obtain new qualifications at all stages in life are maintained.

Northern Ireland may have an education system that is the envy of many countries, but with one quarter of our population having difficulty with the basics, we must remain aware of the need to address problems with literacy and numeracy.

Furthermore, it is necessary to ensure that our infrastructure is up to the standard that transnational companies expect. The road network has some clearly identified weak spots, such as the A26 Belfast to Coleraine corridor, the A8 from Belfast to Larne and the A4 from the M1 to Enniskillen, all of which allow access to those areas of the Province and provide cross-border links.

Upgrades to the rail network are required, and the lines from Belfast to Londonderry, Dublin and Larne all require investment. There should be stops at Aldergrove and Eglinton airports to facilitate business and tourist traffic. Those are just some items that a fiscal reform project must examine for the development of Northern Ireland plc.

For Northern Ireland to benefit fully from fiscal reform, we must work with the Westminster Government to seek funding levels that will allow us to take advantage of the present global good will. I mentioned a few areas in which we can make Northern Ireland a more appealing place for investors. I support the amendment.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): I have listened with great interest to the debate, and it is clear to me that the days of ducking and weaving have gone, and that the days of hiding behind NIO Ministers are over. The time for mature politics has clearly arrived. Every Minister in the Executive and every Member of the Assembly will have to avoid the routine of political adolescence, which allows calls for more resources without coming clean and acknowledging that that will either require higher local taxation or the reduction of resources elsewhere. The test for the Assembly will be found in its willingness to confront those hard decisions in the coming months and years.

The challenges and threats posed by the global economy have been acknowledged for some time. The Chancellor highlighted last week in his pre-Budget statement the importance of improving UK competitiveness, and that applies ever more so to Northern Ireland. With GVA per capita in Northern Ireland lagging behind the UK average by some 20 percentage points, there must be a concerted effort to improve our international competitiveness.

The key issue for the Executive now is to ensure that it creates a policy environment that will facilitate economic growth and development in Northern Ireland. That growth and development will be achieved only by delivering the 2015 economic vision of an outward-looking, export-orientated, innovative, wealth-generating economy.

A domestic market of 1·7 million is not alone going to provide the basis for higher growth and productivity. Our private sector, with a few notable exceptions, is too insular and reliant on local demand. That has to change. How can we effect such change?

Clearly the Executive will have an opportunity to create an environment that is conducive to economic growth. We need to encourage those sectors and activities that can provide a foundation to compete internationally. That means assisting those individuals and companies who are enterprising and innovative and who have skills and talents that are valuable in a global context; and providing an environment that is attractive as an investment location, with quality infrastructure such as good transport, energy, and communications systems.

The draft Budget that the Executive will shortly issue for public consultation will highlight our commitment to growing the economy. I make that commitment in an environment of ever-tightening public expenditure resources because I believe that a strong and vibrant economy offers the best prospect for enhancing wealth and living standards for all the people of Northern Ireland.

The Executive will obviously consider all proposals that offer the prospect of additional resources, but Members need to appreciate the limited room to manoeuvre that a devolved Administration has when working within the framework of the Treasury's statement of funding policy.

Fiscal policy remains a reserved matter for determination solely by the Chancellor. He jealously guards that role, and the level of tax revenue is closely monitored to ensure that the stability of the UK fiscal regime — including the so-called golden rule — is maintained.

A number of Members have referred to the Varney Review. The Executive has presented a robust case to Sir David Varney, calling for a corporation tax dispensation for Northern Ireland, which would indisputably transform the attractiveness of the region as a place in which to invest.

I understand that Sir David Varney is expected to release his report in the coming weeks. I have not seen any of the emerging findings, but the concerns that the Treasury will have on issues such as repercussiveness and revenue loss should not be underestimated.

If it is any guide to Members, I can say that I have a feeling that there are suggestions that the Varney Report will be more concerned with analysis than recommendations. I also believe that Sir David Varney is likely to leave it to the Chancellor to respond, based on the economic assessment that he has made. Time, of course, will tell.

There are some, limited, policy levers that the Executive can use to generate resources for deployment in the Budget process. Determination of rates and water charges resides with the Executive. Obviously, a balance needs to be achieved as to what people can afford and what is fair on both issues.

5.15 pm

Members will be aware of the release last Friday of the Independent Water Review Panel's report. It covers some complex issues, and I will consider its implications with my Executive colleagues over the next few days. As with many other financial issues, there is a need to adopt a balanced approach in that area.

Members have debated the need for fiscal powers, but we need to appreciate that they represent a double-edged sword. Increasing the tax take in Northern Ireland would generate additional public expenditure, but possibly at the expense of constraining regional competitiveness, making this a high-cost region for companies to operate in. Alternatively, we might decide to lower rates and water charges, but that would reduce available public expenditure, impacting directly on public services for which many Members have lobbied vociferously. Perhaps some Members think that HM Treasury will provide the additional funding, but with a regional fiscal deficit of somewhere between £7 billion and £8 billion, I do not think that there is much hope for help from that quarter.

Let me turn to some of the specific comments made by Members. The proposer of the motion indicated that it was his purpose to keep the spotlight on the economy. That is a worthy purpose, and he set out with the best and most altruistic of motives. However, I think that other events today may have dimmed that spotlight a little. I suspect that the 'Belfast Telegraph' has not held its front page for the outcome of this debate. Nevertheless, he rightly indicated the importance of strengthening the private sector and redressing the imbalance that exists between public and private sectors. That must be a key consideration in the policies advocated and implemented by the Executive.

Mr Neeson and a number of other colleagues referred to industrial derating. I will say a word about that. The Economic Research Institute of Northern Ireland (ERINI) is finalising its report on industrial derating. I have some knowledge of the conclusions that it is moving towards; however, the institute has still some macroeconomic analysis to carry out. I hope that that report will be published before too long, and that the Committee for Finance and Personnel will consider its contents.

However, I have made it clear elsewhere that I accept the strong arguments that are being put forward in relation to the level of industrial rates. I recognise that there would be some contradiction if, on the one hand, we wanted economic growth and sought to encourage industry in Northern Ireland, while at the same time laying a heavy burden upon it. Those issues will have to be considered by the Executive, and I hope to make a statement on that subject to the House within the next month or so.

The Member for East Antrim Mr Beggs made some comments about what he considered to be the inadequacy of the wording of the original motion. For many Members, there is much agreement on the general issues relating to the economy. There is an agreed analysis of where our economy stands, what needs to be done and what the drivers are. I could support either Mr Beggs's amendment or the motion. The proposers of both want the same thing. However, the amendment will be taken first and, if it is made, the other choice will not fall to us.

Mr Beggs made specific reference to the Varney Review. I have touched on my early feeling for what the eventual shape of that report might be. Mr Beggs and others indicated that they are not exactly holding their breath for the answers to our economic questions to come out of the Varney Review.

At any rate, Members must recognise that the report itself will not be the key element but the consideration and decisions that fall to the Treasury as a result of Varney's findings. Of course, as the amendment suggests, the Executive want to work with the Treasury on the outcomes of the Varney review.

The Member for East Antrim Roy Beggs also raised the issue of small-business rate relief. During a previous Question Time, I believe that I told the Assembly that I had asked ERINI to consider the matter of small-business rate relief. It will do so when its current consideration of other rate matters has concluded. However, it will probably be further down the line before that work is completed. We are all mindful of the important role that small business plays in Northern Ireland. Although a recent ERINI report suggested that business costs in the region are not uncompetitive with those of other UK regions, it is a concern that the Chancellor's proposals on business taxes appear to hinder small businesses disproportionately. Small businesses in Northern Ireland make up a considerable part of the economy, so that will have a detrimental effect. I will highlight that matter and express the Assembly's concern in my engagements with Treasury Ministers.

The Deputy Chairman of the Committee, Mr Storey, appropriately reminded the House of the loss of our former colleague, Mr George Dawson. Mr Dawson made many contributions to economic debates, which, I am sure, are missed by all Members. I certainly miss his wise counsel.

Mr Storey also mentioned the role of Wrightbus Ltd in his constituency — I am not sure whether that was advertising. Having visited its plant in North Antrim, I am convinced that the business has considerable export potential. Indeed, its StreetCars can be seen in Chicago and elsewhere around the world. That is exactly the kind of business that can lift the Northern Ireland economy.

Mr Storey also referred to the need to stimulate the economy, and pointed to corporation-tax reduction as being one of the mechanisms for doing so. I have consistently warned the House that, although the lowering of corporation tax would be a step change that would significantly encourage economic growth, other mechanisms could be used that may not have such an immediate or powerful effect but that would, nonetheless, be useful. As some of his colleagues have indicated, the Assembly has the power to take certain steps in order to stimulate the economy.

The Chairman of the Committee, Mr Mitchel McLaughlin, referred to economic forecasts. He is correct: the economic forecast until 2015 shows only marginal economic improvement in GVA per capita. However, he and I will agree that that is a reflection of the direct-rule policy framework, which the Executive and Assembly are keen to leave behind. I confidently expect the Executive to set more ambitious targets. If they are not, I am pretty sure that the Chairman and his Committee would ask why. Therefore, we must ensure that the policy delivers those material improvements, which I hope will start with the Budget, the Programme for Government and the investment strategy for Northern Ireland.

Moreover, the Chairman also expressed some doubts, which, I suppose — in a quiet moment — I would share, about the extent to which Sir David Varney might separate himself from some of the thinking that has been a pattern in the past. However, we shall have to wait and see.

The Member for North Antrim Mr Declan O'Loan referred to the fact that our economy can grow by other than fiscal means. There are a whole range of mechanisms that can be employed by the Executive. I take, very strongly, the point made by Mr George Robinson that there is a feel-good factor. However, I warn everyone that the window for a feel-good factor — as regards to Northern Ireland — does not stay open for long, especially in a global economy. Therefore, it is essential that we make full use, and take real advantage, of that window while it is open.

The Member for North Antrim urged me to endorse the policy of merging the IDA and Invest Northern Ireland. He will not be surprised that I do not jump to take him up on his suggestion. Leaving aside the political issues involved, there are a number of other matters that I ask the Member to consider. We have talked about some of those differences during the debate. The Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland have different tax regimes. There are different accountability processes, different legal remits, and different funding sources. We need to remember that we are often in competition.

As I said week before last to the Irish Taxation Institute, there is much advantage in greater collaboration and co-operation with the Republic of Ireland in economic matters. However, we should remember that, in many cases, we will be seeking the same jobs and the same type of development. Nevertheless, there will be occasions when working in collaboration with the Irish Republic will be to our mutual advantage. We do not want to miss out on that.

Mr O'Loan: Will the Member give way?

Mr P Robinson: I am short of time, so please forgive me for not giving way. I want to try to cover everyone's contributions to the debate, as far as time allows me.

The Member for Strangford Mr Simon Hamilton referred to the drivers of growth in our economy — skills, innovation, enterprise and infrastructure. He is absolutely right. They go to the heart of our ability to compete in the global economy. He, too, warned that we should not put all of our eggs in the one basket and wait for them to be delivered as part of the Varney Review. There is a lot that we can do for ourselves. That must be the important role that the Executive and their Ministers play.

Mr McCann gave an accurate analysis of the present economic situation in Northern Ireland. He, properly, drew attention to the need to increase the role of the private sector. He said, rightly, that the Assembly needs to do something different. If we continue to do what the direct rule administration did in the past, we can expect the same results. That is why we must consider more radical ways of dealing with those issues. I hope that we will see that in the weeks to come.

Mr McQuillan also referred to the North/South economic issue. I say to him that we in Northern Ireland can have the best of both worlds. We are an integral part of the United Kingdom and of its economy. At the same time, we can take the advantages of the North/South economy. If we can get the best of both worlds, we should by all means do so. In my own community — the unionist community — there exists sufficient confidence to take full advantage of that.

Mr Adrian McQuillan referred to the views of business leaders, particularly, as regards corporation tax. He felt that it was too early to talk about fiscal reforms before the Executive's trajectory had been set. The Executive's policy must be unveiled. We must see the direction that the Executive takes before we begin to look at some of the wider issues that might come under the heading of fiscal reform.

5.30 pm

Mr Cree made a very worthwhile speech in which he talked about low-wage economies elsewhere in the world.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Minister draw his remarks to a close?

Mr P Robinson: I will.

Mr Cree also mentioned the need to find our own niche market to help the Treasury to create a competitive economy in Northern Ireland.

I trust that Members will continue to remain focused on the economy in Northern Ireland. Over the next few weeks, the Executive will certainly give Members opportunities to debate the matter further.

Mr Beggs: I again thank Mr Neeson for bringing the motion to the House. As we move towards the Budget process, it is important that this issue remains foremost in our minds. However, it is regrettable that Mr Neeson once again advocated tax-varying powers. I remind Members that nearly every time that that term is used, tax-raising powers are often meant. For that reason, I will stick with my amendment, and I hope that the House will support it.

Mr Mervyn Storey noted that the Scottish Parliament has wisely chosen not to use its tax-varying powers because of its fear of the implications that they may have on the Scottish economy. I welcome his recognition of the importance of the word "competitive" in my amendment.

Mitchel McLaughlin highlighted the poor projected growth in our economy that past direct rule administrators set out. There is an obvious need to improve that situation and to introduce changes to enable such an improvement.

Given that Declan O'Loan had no enthusiasm for the motion or the amendment, it is disappointing that he did not table an amendment himself. Should any Members find themselves in that situation in future, I advocate that they consider tabling an amendment.

Mr O'Loan: I did table an amendment, but unfortunately it did not appear on the Marshalled List.

Mr Beggs: Fortunately, the Member did not table a competent amendment. [Laughter.]

He advocated merging Invest NI and the IDA, but he did not explain how that would bring about the supposed miraculous change. His argument seems to be stuck in the North/South, all-Ireland agenda, and he does not appreciate the risks and dangers that could arise were companies to experience the tax advantages of another jurisdiction. In fact, some of the companies that could have chosen to come to Northern Ireland could relocate elsewhere.

Like myself, Simon Hamilton recognised the lack of clarity in the motion and the confusion about the meaning of the expression “level playing field”. He highlighted the importance of the economy’s being at the heart of the Programme for Government. I am sure that we all look forward to learning more about the final shape of the Programme for Government.

Fra McCann highlighted the fact that the level of incapacity benefit in Northern Ireland is 74% higher than average; however, he then advocated supporting the motion rather than the amendment. The proposer of the motion advocates tax-raising powers that will make it more difficult for people on incapacity benefit to return to work. Thus, there is some inconsistency in Mr McCann’s comments. I imagine that he also predictably believes that our problems would be miraculously solved should the IDA and Invest NI merge. Again, however, I did not hear any facts to support that argument.

My colleague Leslie Cree spoke of the global economy, and it suddenly struck me how much the economy has changed in recent years. There is much more world trade and freedom to trade throughout the world than ever before, and we can all take cognisance of that. Mr Cree also highlighted the challenge to the Treasury. Either it will allow devolved regions such as ours the freedom to compete more successfully, or three regions of the United Kingdom will continue to subsidise the other nine, as presently occurs. However, we hope that we will be able to create a more sustainable Northern Ireland ourselves and that subsidisation will not remain forever.

George Robinson highlighted the fact that lower corporation tax levels had attracted high-value industry, high levels of productivity and foreign direct investment to the Republic of Ireland. I am sure that we all wish that we could attract additional spending here.

I thank the Minister of Finance and Personnel for attending the debate and giving us his insight. Like him, I look forward to seeing the detail of the Varney Review. I appreciate his comment that it may well be the Chancellor or the Prime Minister from whom we will subsequently eagerly wish to hear. I hope that Members will support the amendment, as I believe that it proposes better solutions for Northern Ireland’s economy than does the original motion.

Dr Farry: Discussions of the economy have been rare in this Chamber over the six months since devolution, which may be surprising, given the importance accorded to it by so many parties, and indeed, the Minister of Finance and Personnel. I hope that this debate has gone some way to addressing that imbalance. It is not without significance that a special subgroup was set up alongside the Committee on the Preparation for Government this time last year to examine the economy.

To set the debate in context, the local economy is improving and there have been very respectable levels of growth over the past decade. The current rate of unemployment is as low as it has been for 40 years, and there are tangible signs of growing wealth across society. There are signs of increased investment, and there is no doubt that there has been a peace dividend.

Nevertheless, as other Members have said, there are major structural problems in our economy that must be addressed. Overall, our economy is too small, and on a per capita basis, compared with the Republic of Ireland, we are well behind. At an incredibly high and unsustainable 71% of GDP, our public sector is too large and is well out of line with all the other regions of the UK and other European Union countries. A very interesting table in ‘The Times’ last Thursday set out all those figures in some detail.

Our public sector has been badly distorted by the legacies of conflict and division, and we have a very small domestic market. Northern Ireland’s huge subvention from the UK Treasury currently stands at over £7 billion; over 40% of public spending in Northern Ireland depends on money that is raised elsewhere. The level of economic inactivity stands at an unsustainable 26%, which, again, is well out of line with other regions of the UK. Although there has been growth in recent years, it has tended to be in low-added-value jobs and low-added-value investment.

The fundamental problem was set out by Mitchel McLaughlin: the lack of convergence of Northern Ireland with the rest of the UK economy. Our GVA per capita is around 80% of the UK average. Indeed, it is well short of the GVA of the Republic of Ireland. As Leslie Cree said, the British Government are committed to regional convergence, but more in theory than in practice. There is a “one size fits all” approach that allows nothing to jeopardise the status of London and the south-east of England as the main drivers of the UK economy. My party believes that the British Government are happy to leave the regions of the UK financially dependent, rather than give us the powers to compete on a more level playing field. That would allow us to address social and environmental problems more effectively.

The current capacity of the Assembly permits us to examine issues such as infrastructure, skills improvement, the encouragement of enterprise and entrepreneurship, and the promotion of research and development. As Mr Hamilton said, those are the drivers of the economy that we can control.

The draft regional economic strategy, which was a legacy of direct rule, did not foresee any meaningful convergence of our GVA with the UK average based on the powers that we have.

I appreciate that the Minister of Finance and Personnel will bring forward a comprehensive spending review, and he has already told the House that that will include a revised regional economic strategy. However, without fiscal powers, I am not entirely sure how those underlying predictions can be any different on any tangible and real basis.

Fiscal powers will provide a greater capacity to attract high-value investment, high-value well-paid jobs, to grow the local tax base and to make the local economy more sustainable. Fiscal powers do not relate solely to corporation tax; they might also include powers such as research and development tax credits, — which, admittedly, have not been taken up as effectively as was hoped — fuel excise duty, climate-change levy and also the concept of enterprise zones. Members have also referred to industrial derating, which could also be part of fiscal reforms. If the Assembly were to have fiscal responsibility for tax-varying powers, it could consider other taxation policies. For example, it might wish to raise green taxes that would allow the regional rate to be lowered. That could be done on a tax-neutral basis.

The problem with the amendment is that it restricts the issue of fiscal reform to the Varney framework and, as Sean Neeson and Declan O'Loan said, much more can be done outside the context of corporation tax. Tax-varying powers are a prerequisite if the Assembly is to have the ability to vary corporation tax.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member recognise that the Varney Review entails much more than just corporation tax? It will consider R&D tax credits and capital-investment tax advantages. The review will address more than corporation tax.

Dr Farry: Although that is factually true, Mr Beggs, on the one hand, states his party's support for corporation tax and, on the other hand, rubbishes tax-varying powers. How does he envisage that the Assembly will exercise its ability to vary corporation tax? The Azores ruling is clear; the Assembly will have to take on the power to vary tax in order to deliver a differential rate of corporation tax from the rest of the United Kingdom. That would lead to a loss of revenue, which would need to be made up from local expenditure. The issue is becoming rather confused; some people say that they want corporation tax but are against tax-varying powers. Such a position does not add up. To be straight about the matter: if we want a differential rate of corporation tax for Northern Ireland, we must support tax-varying powers.

Tax-varying powers can mean higher taxes; equally, they can mean lower taxes. Taxes can be lowered with the acceptance that there is less money to spend on public services. As an Assembly, we may wish to make that choice in order to encourage growth in the short term, rather than investing in public services. That is perfectly fine. Equally, tax-varying powers can produce a tax-neutral outcome. The Assembly may wish to increase green taxes and lower the regional rate. That would be an example of using fiscal powers for a good outcome.

I echo the contribution that was made by the late George Dawson on this subject, and I pay tribute to his economic knowledge. Mr Storey and Mr McQuillan took a conservative approach; they seemed to want to put off the Assembly's setting its stall out for an economic vision of what must be achieved in society. I found that disappointing.

Mr McLaughlin set out the one-size-fits-all approach of the British Government, which is to the detriment of Northern Ireland. I am surprised at Mr O'Loan's lack of enthusiasm, given that he is usually enthusiastic on such matters. He would recognise that the Assembly must discuss the economy much more.

Mr Hamilton and Mr Cree both talked about globalisation and the importance of competing on the basis of high wages, not low wages. I have no argument with that. For Mr Cree's benefit, the Marshall Plan was not a precursor to a global economy on today's scale. The Marshall Plan was about creating political stability in Europe and creating a market for US exports. However, the Marshall Plan took place, not in an open world economy, but in very much a closed world economy.

Perhaps the best comparison is with what happened between 1870 and 1914, a period sadly ended by the outbreak of the First World War.

5.45 pm

These are interesting times as the Assembly awaits the results of the Varney Review. I appreciate the scepticism that many Members expressed about the outcome of that review. However, it is incumbent on us, as an Assembly, to challenge that outcome and any further statement by the Chancellor, should either be disappointing. The Assembly must have fiscal powers in order to make a step change to the economy.

I appreciate the spirit of the amendment, and the Alliance Party will not force a Division on it. It is important that the Assembly sends out a united message, albeit that the amendment is somewhat deficient. A united voice from the Chamber would be most helpful to the interests of the economy.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly calls upon the Executive, on receipt of the report of the Varney Review, to work in conjunction with Her Majesty's Treasury to provide a competitive fiscal framework for business in Northern Ireland.

Motion made:

That the Assembly do now adjourn. — [Mr Deputy Speaker]

ADJOURNMENT

Traffic-calming Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to introduce limits on speaking times for Adjournment debates. The proposer will have 10 minutes and other Members will have approximately five minutes, depending on how many wish to speak.

Dr McDonnell: I will be brief, and I hope not to take the full 10 minutes, but thank you for the kind offer.

The main reason for seeking today's Adjournment debate is that I was approached by several of my constituents, who are parents of children attending Loughview Integrated Primary School. There are serious road-safety problems in the area, and parents are extremely worried that a major accident is waiting to happen. An accident could easily occur and cause serious injury to one of their children — or, God forbid, even worse. Thank God that there has been no serious accident so far, but anyone who has surveyed the road layout around the school would realise how dangerous it is.

Most of my colleagues have seen the area, but I will briefly describe it for those who have not. Some 10 or 15 years ago, the area was rural, but it is now becoming urbanised. However, the contour of a narrow country road remains and carries heavy urban traffic. The school is on Church Road in Castlereagh, which is not far from Stormont and close to the boundary between the South Belfast and East Belfast constituencies. It is a highly successful school with a wide catchment area, and it attracts children from both constituencies.

In the past decade, the school has grown immensely from a small base of 26 pupils in 1993 to a 2007 enrolment of some 435 children. The grounds at the side of the school include a well-spaced turning circle off the main road. It can accommodate buses and some limited short-stay parking areas for parents to drop off or pick up their children.

A few children arrive on foot, but the vast majority arrive by bus or car. That generates a massive additional amount of traffic in the area and on the adjacent Church Road during school starting and finishing times. As Members can imagine, it takes many cars and a few buses to transport 435 children. It is almost too dangerous for children to arrive on foot. I plead with the Minister to try urgently to create the circumstances whereby children living in the vicinity or within half a mile of the school can access it on foot.

In the immediate vicinity of the school, there are two day-care facilities that double up as after-school facilities.

One of those, the Learning Tree, has a roll of over 120 children. The other day-care facility is in the Orange Hall, and over 50 children attend. Both are situated about 30 or 40 yards away from the school, so that creates a complex that is attended by 600 to 650 children every day. In addition, Castlereagh Borough Council's Henry Jones memorial playing fields are opposite the school, so it is a busy junction when the school and the playing fields are in operation. I repeat my earlier point that Loughview Integrated Primary School is on a narrow, winding, country road, close to the junction of Church Road and Manse Road, and about half a mile from Lagan College. It is situated between two bad bends, where the road rises and there is no footpath, so all the hazards are present.

A few hundred yards away, a 30 mph speed limit is in place, where the Church Road meets the Ballygowan Road, near the junction with Upper Newtownbreda Road. A 40 mph speed limit is in place about half a mile on the other side of the school, from Manse Road to Garland Green at Four Winds, to facilitate children going to Lagan College. However, the speed limit for the stretch of road in between, which is the vital part of road for Loughview Integrated Primary School, is 60 mph. Even if the road were clear and there were no children around, traffic travelling at 60 mph would be at risk of having an accident due to the poor road conditions. Thank God, there has never been a serious accident involving a child, and I pray that there never will be. We should not wait until an accident happens — we must do everything in our power to ensure that the circumstances for an accident are avoided before they arise. Parents are worried, and they are right to be.

I reiterate the risks: there is no footpath in the vicinity of the school, which is located on a hill between two bends, on a narrow road. Between 600 and 650 children attend the complex every day; and the Henry Jones memorial playing fields are located across the road, adding to traffic entering and leaving the school at particular times. Like the parents, I am concerned that cars and lorries travel along the road with impunity at speeds of up to 60 mph.

As winter approaches, there is always the added risk of a slippery road surface caused by falling leaves or ice. A long-term solution is necessary, but that would require discussions with the school principal, the board of governors, the parents, and everyone else concerned. The road may need to be widened and the bad bends removed, but that would entail cutting into approximately 20 ft of the Henry Jones memorial playing fields. Such measures would take a long time; however, in the short term, the speed limit on the road must be reduced to 30 mph, or, preferably, 20 mph, in the immediate vicinity of the school. That limit must be introduced as soon as possible. In fact, I would go further and say that perhaps we should look at other schools in similar circumstances and take —

Mrs I Robinson: Does the Member recall that when members of Castlereagh Borough Council lodged objections to the location of Lagan College and of Loughview Integrated Primary School, we were accused of sectarianism? We said that the locations were unsuitable because the roads infrastructure was hazardous. Improvements costing hundreds of thousands of pounds have now been made to Lagan College. Pavements have been laid, trees have been removed, and a road widening scheme has been introduced. Surely it is unfair that the integrated sector gets the schools where it wants them — in very unsuitable areas — and, when those have bedded down, looks for money to improve the neighbouring roads, which was the very reason we objected to the location of the schools in the first place.

Dr McDonnell: I am happy to debate all aspects of education with the Member on another occasion. However, we are where we are. Fourteen years ago the school was located there. It now has 450 pupils, with around 170 children also attending nursery and after-school facilities nearby. I was not privy to any of the decisions that were made in 1993; therefore, I can consider only the current situation. The school has proven itself and is one of the biggest in the area, so it must be doing something right. Credit for that success must go its principal, the board of governors and the parents. I am all in favour of parental choice, and parents are voting for that school with their feet.

Whether the school should be moved is a moot point. It would be cheaper, and simpler, to widen the road and erect some speed-limit signs rather than relocate the school. Although I specifically mention the speed limit, we must ensure that there is a general improvement in safety outside schools, and we must do that by looking at all schools. Safety outside many schools is very good, but there are some outside which it could be improved. Other traffic-calming solutions may exist, and I compliment the Minister for Regional Development, his Department and Roads Service on their contribution to finding some ingenious solutions. I urge the Minister to do everything possible to make Loughview Integrated Primary School and its nursery school a safe place for its pupils to attend.

Mr Spratt: As a Member for South Belfast, I am speaking on the issue because several of my constituents have contacted me about it. However, the matter concerns the constituency of East Belfast, and I know that its local Member of Parliament has, on a number of occasions, raised issues concerning the school. A little bit of me — the cynical part — suspects that the reason why the Assembly is debating Loughview Integrated Primary School is that Dr McDonnell thought that there might be a general election campaign under way. Many of the parents of children at that school come from South Belfast, where he would be fighting for his political survival, so he may have thought the school would have been a good topic to debate.

Dr McDonnell: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. The Member should not be allowed to make those accusations and degrade what is a sensible and intelligent debate about school safety.

Mr Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. Mr Spratt, you may continue.

Mr Spratt: I stand by the point that I made. That said, I support the parents' campaign, because the road in question is very dangerous and its safety has been debated for a number of years. I can speak with some authority on the issue, because I am a councillor for the area concerned. I know that the issue has been raised on many occasions, including in meetings of Castlereagh Borough Council. Every party on the council has raised the problems that are associated with the road over a number of years.

As Dr McDonnell mentioned, Church Road is a rural road that must cope with a great deal of traffic. He also mentioned the car park at the Henry Jones memorial playing fields, which belongs to Castlereagh Borough Council and is used by parents of pupils at the school in the morning, at lunchtime and in the afternoon during the week.

That car park was not open on Friday morning for some reason, and one of the parents told me that that created a lot of problems because cars were parked everywhere. It is a dangerous area, as Dr McDonnell said, but that matter has been raised before over the past several years — as I am sure the Minister will confirm. The Roads Service has examined the matter, and I hope that the Minister can confirm that some traffic-calming measures will be put in place. There is a need for more traffic-calming measures around the school, and I hope that the Minister can inform the House that road surveys have been carried out, because the road in question is dangerous, with a considerable amount of traffic, particularly at busy times when the school and the two playschools are operating.

6.00 pm

The need for traffic-calming requirements in that area has been raised on a number of occasions with the Roads Service district manager. He briefs Castlereagh Borough Council every three months, and I have been present at council meetings when members from all political parties have supported the taking of additional measures in the area of Loughview Primary School. There is no doubt that a footpath would be helpful, because children, some of whom are very small, have to walk 60 or 70 yards from the school to the car park at the Henry Jones playing fields. That is dangerous. Flashing lights have been fitted, but no speed limit is currently enforced in that area. A Presbyterian church, its car park and hall are also beside the school. Occasionally, there is a funeral or a wedding at the church during the day, and that increases the traffic in the area.

As Dr McDonnell said, no one has been injured thus far — thankfully — but a number of minor accidents have taken place, and some folks have told me that there have been many near misses. It is right that the parents have raised this issue, and I know that they have raised it with the school principal, the parents' council and the board of governors. There has been a concerted campaign to do something about this matter.

I urge the Minister to have his officials examine the traffic situation around Loughview Primary School in particular, and to see what additional measures can be put in place to alleviate the problems that are affecting small children who are going to and from school. I support any action that will be taken to address this issue.

Mr A Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I support the comments that have been made. Regardless of motivations, concerns or objections, I commend Alasdair McDonnell for securing this debate. I commend the parents and the representatives of the school who have long been determined to raise the issue of traffic management around the school, bearing in mind the danger to the children.

Like the previous two contributors, I am thankful that no children have been injured as the result of any accidents. However, there is a chaotic traffic situation in close proximity to Loughview Integrated Primary School, and, as Alasdair McDonnell said, the Learning Tree day-care facility and the Young Ones nursery are alongside the primary school, and Leadhill Primary School is only slightly further down the road.

Within that small geographical area, are three speed-limit zones: 60mph; 40mph; and 30mph. The Member for South Belfast Councillor Spratt has hit the nail on the head. Representatives of all parties on Castlereagh Borough Council, other elected representatives, the school principal, representatives from the school, and the board of governors have been campaigning for a long time for effective traffic-management provisions at that school. Very often, elected representatives and others are frustrated at the length of time that it takes for decisions of this nature to be taken. I do not wish to rehearse the arguments that have been made, because they have been well put, but there is a danger to the children of that school.

The turning circle at the school facilitates only about 50 or 60 cars and, as has already been pointed out, the school and the two facilities beside it are growing fast, with increasing enrolments. That is good and should be encouraged.

Will the Minister have the Department consider restricting the speed limit around the school to 20 or 30 miles per hour, perhaps on a part-time basis when the children are coming and going? Will the Minister also consider the provision of a footpath outside the school? As Alisdair McDonnell said, it is really a semi-rural area.

Will the Minister also have his officials broker further measures? The school is adjoined on either side by two nurseries, so walkways could be established that might ease pedestrian traffic throughout the day. Those are three simple measures.

Flashing pedestrian lights were installed on the road after previous representations were made, but they have either not been working, or they have been covered. Why have those lights not been repaired? Why do the school and elected representatives persistently have to make representations to have those matters addressed?

I thank the Minister for being in the Chamber this afternoon, and I look forward to hearing his response to long-standing basic demands from the parents and representatives of the area for reasonable speed limits and traffic-management measures to be established around the school to ensure the children's safety.

Mr McGimpsey: I speak as a representative for South Belfast, although I am aware that the school is located geographically in east Belfast. However, a number of the pupils live in south Belfast, and I too have been lobbied and approached by parents over the years about the difficulties of traffic and congestion in that area at busy times during the school day.

I am grateful to Alasdair McDonnell for raising this matter, and I strongly support his view, which was also expressed by Mr Spratt and Mr Maskey, that a modest amount of traffic calming will go a long way to meeting the needs of the area. The road, which was once a rural one, is now in a built-up area with no footpaths and a 60 miles-per-hour limit, and the school currently has well over 400 pupils. That is an awful lot of traffic coming and going to the primary school and the facilities on either side of it. The Roads Service could deal with that matter with a modest amount of investment.

I am grateful that the Minister is in the House, because he could make a lot of people very happy with a modest amount of expenditure. Traffic-calming measures, changing the speed limit, and ensuring that traffic that passes the school does so at a safe speed, are all that is required.

The best people to indicate where the dangers and perils lie are the users of those facilities. The headmistress, the staff of the school and, above all, the parents should be listened to when they point out the dangers in taking children to and from school. The children's safety is the key priority, and that requires intervention by the Roads Service. Plans for the improvement of the road probably exist, and they could be brought forward for a comparatively modest amount of investment. Speed limits and traffic calming will go some of the way towards making the school safer for the people who use it — above all, the children.

Mrs Long: I am speaking as a representative of East Belfast, where the school is located. What Mr Spratt has said about Castlereagh Borough Council's activity must be recognised, as quite a number of demands and requests have been made to Roads Service.

I will outline the history of the situation. The school is located — as other Members have said — on a relatively rural stretch of road. However, it is rural only in the sense that, historically, it was a rural area; the volume of traffic is certainly not of a rural nature. Indeed, the road is a cut-through to what has now become the "outer outer ring" along Manse Road that takes traffic off the main dual carriageway and across from east to south Belfast without having to come as far as the Knock Road junction. Therefore, it is an extremely busy part of the road network.

As regards the work that has already been done, other councillors in Castlereagh, from my party and from other parties, have been campaigning on the matter for a long time, and I will outline some of the stuff that we have been doing of late.

In 2001 and 2002 a petition for the extension of the 30 mph speed limit on Church Road to cover both Loughview Primary School and Leadhill Primary School, both of which were outside the 30 mph speed limit area, was presented to Roads Service. Mr Maskey has referred to the need for quick decisions — there has been no shortage of decisions, but unfortunately they have all been negative. There was also a request for fixed speed cameras. Both requests were turned down at that time, on the basis that it was a rural road and that the fixed speed camera scheme would not extend to it, although mobile patrols were put in at that time to try to control some of the speeding.

In 2002 and 2003 the matter was raised again, and there was a site meeting between Castlereagh councillors, Roads Service and the police. Again, in 2003, any request for traffic calming was refused. In 2004 I again raised the issue, in a letter this time, asking that traffic calming — not necessarily speed humps, but some form of traffic calming — be considered, and that at least a 40 mph speed limit should be extended beyond the schools. Again, that was refused. We also again requested fixed cameras, and that was refused for the third time.

In 2005 we made enquiries about pedestrian facilities — both crossing facilities and footpaths — on Church Road. Again, that was refused. Roads Service said that it recognised that there was a cluster of activities in the area from schools, play facilities, churches and so on. However, Roads Service said that there was low pedestrian demand, and that the need for land acquisition ruled out a footpath at that time. The issue of pedestrian demand is controlled by the fact that no one in their right mind would walk along that stretch of road at the moment and, therefore, it would be hard to note any footfall along it. If a pavement were there, people would certainly use it.

Roads Service initially agreed to put in flashing lights on the signs for Leadhill Primary School, and that was extended to include Loughview Primary School as part of the safer routes to schools scheme, and I welcome that. There was further correspondence, and Roads Service upgraded the street lighting along Church Road with new lanterns as an interim measure, while it waited for further upgrades of street lighting. Again, the road's being poorly lit was a further concern.

In 2006 there was a further request for some kind of speed-reduction measure. Surveys had been conducted in 2002 and 2005, but again Roads Service said that the road was not wide enough to sustain anything other than traffic humps, which would not be suitable on what it called a rural road. Roads Service did, however, move the 30 mph speed limit by about 100 m towards Manse Road, so it now covers Leadhill Primary School, but not far enough to cover Loughview Primary School. Roads Service did install the flashing warning lights under the safer routes to schools scheme at both schools.

Unusually, I want to pay tribute to some people. Normally when people's names are mentioned in the Chamber, it is to say less than pleasant things. However, I want to pay tribute to John Kee from the Castlereagh section office, who has done a lot of work and dealt with a lot of enquiries over the years on the issue. I also want to pay tribute to Tom McCourt and his predecessor Joe Drew, both of whom have been very active, along with Alan Micklethwaite, who dealt with the issue of street lighting.

Having received further enquiries earlier this year, I talked to the parents who had contacted me. I went through the requests that had already been put and explained the history of the site. I suggested that I was happy to lend my continued support, but that it would be more appropriate to progress the matter through the board of governors and the parent council at the school, as there might be other local solutions that could be introduced. While I welcome this opportunity to raise the issue again, that might be a more appropriate mechanism to get a resolution. It is important to ensure that whatever measures are suggested have the full support of the parents and the board of governors, and also the involvement of the transport officers from the two education and library boards.

In cases such as Lagan College, which was mentioned by the Member for Strangford, road safety improvements led to the removal of free school transport for a small number of children. They did not benefit from those road-safety improvements because the exceptional hazard was deemed to have been removed. Therefore, the board's transport officers must be involved in discussions.

6.15 pm

Mr Newton: Naomi Long is a councillor who, like me, represents East Belfast. I say "Amen" to the comments she made about those in the Roads Service, and I hope that I get the same favours that she is now bound to get, having paid tribute to them in such a manner.

All Members are concerned about the safety of children as they go to school and all other road users, including pedestrians. We are calling for traffic calming. However, we are not specifying what we mean by that term, which covers a wide range of issues. Devon County Council states that:

"Traffic calming consists of a package of measures affecting the movement of vehicles and other traffic for the purpose of promoting safety, or preserving or improving the environment. The essence of traffic calming lies not so much in the use of specific measures, but in the achievement of the objectives of improving driver awareness and behaviour. Traffic calming is a generic term used in reference to tools used to change the horizontal and/or vertical alignments, introduce narrowing/build outs, roundabouts, entrance gateways or coloured surfacing."

In my experience, traffic-calming measures are usually introduced only after a long campaign to have them incorporated into budgets. Hull County Council states that:

"Traffic calming is usually introduced as part of a local safety scheme or outside schools in an attempt to reduce injury accidents or vehicle speeds. Traffic calming is often part of a 20 mph speed limit zone and can in some cases include traffic calming measures such as speed humps or cushions."

When the Minister and his officials are applying their minds to the introduction of traffic-calming measures, according to East Sussex County Council, they should consider the following factors:

- "the number of reported crashes resulting in injury;
- the speed and volume of traffic;
- whether there are schools nearby;
- the width of the road."

Although I support the need for action in the vicinity of the school, it would be wrong to identify traffic calming as important only for that school area. I am interested to hear from the Minister about how much money Roads Service has spent on road realignment and traffic-calming measures in the vicinity and what is planned. No single solution can be applied to make the roads safer for everyone; indeed, the potential for several solutions must be considered.

Members have referred to the use of the Henry Jones memorial playing fields and the local Presbyterian church. However, at times when sporting activities or church services, weddings or funerals are occurring, people must be cognisant of the needs of those associated with those facilities. Before any changes are made to roads or footpaths, each factor that I have highlighted must be considered holistically to include all people in the area who use the facilities. It is wrong to isolate and encourage changes only for the benefit of a school.

That, in itself, is probably not the best way forward. The school would obviously benefit, and we are all concerned about the safety of parents and children on their way to the school. We want to make all roads as safe as possible for all road traffic and pedestrians.

Mrs Hanna: Like other representatives for South Belfast, I have been approached by parents who have children at Loughview Integrated Primary School. As has been said, those parents know the bad traffic situation inside out.

I welcome the Minister's being present in the Chamber, and I wish to reiterate what my colleague Alasdair McDonnell has said and add my concerns to the debate. Alasdair painted an accurate picture of the geography of the area and the traffic situation. He mentioned that there is a 60 mph speed limit and that there is no footpath near the school. It has also been said that there is a long history of campaigning with very little to show for it.

Roads Service is aware of the debate, and I hope that officials will report back to us with positive news in the near future. Parents are very concerned about the possibility of a serious accident's occurring. A recent accident reignited the safety campaign, so we must do all that we can to reduce the risk to children.

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome this debate, and I thank Dr McDonnell for tabling the Adjournment topic. I thank all the Members who have contributed; they are all familiar with the difficulties that the school has experienced. Most of them have been working to resolve those problems for some time.

I will address in my contribution some of the issues, but I have also asked my officials to take note of some of the points that were raised. For example, Robin Newton asked how much money had already been spent. If there are any points that I am unable to deal with now, I will write to the Member concerned.

I acknowledge Jimmy Spratt's point that, over time, many people have contacted the Department about the need for traffic-calming measures at the school. Yesterday, I received a letter from the school, and I will respond to that in due course. I will also respond to correspondence that I received from parents and other interested parties.

Alasdair McDonnell described the geography, and I am sure that other Members are more familiar with the location of Church Road and Loughview Integrated Primary School than I am, so I do not propose to go over it. As Members have said, the school is on a semi-rural part of the road that has changed over time. The area around the school is subject to the national speed limit from the junction between Church Road and Manse Road for approximately 800 metres towards Ballygowan Road. A 30-mph speed limit is in place between that point and Ballygowan Road, which is a residential area, unlike the upper section of Church Road.

Carmel Hanna referred to accidents. No personal injury collisions had been recorded around the school in the past three years until March of this year, and I accept that recent collisions have heightened concerns.

Over the past few years, my Department's Roads Service has carried out several measures on Church Road that are aimed at improving road safety, including the repositioning of the 30-mph speed-limit signs on the lower part of Church Road to make them more conspicuous and, under the Safer Routes to School initiative, the provision of flashing warning signs and associated bands of red road surface to highlight the presence of the school.

Some Members mentioned the introduction of traffic-calming measures on Church Road, such as road humps. Those are normally only considered for residential streets in a 30-mph area, where the main objective is to reduce the average vehicle speed to approximately 20 mph. Such severe measures would not be regarded as appropriate for a road such as Church Road. Other forms of traffic-calming measures, such as central-hatching road markings with pedestrian-refuge aisles are not possible because of insufficient road width. I know that some Members have argued for widening the road.

Several Members mentioned the provision of a footway. Roads Service has carried out a preliminary investigation into extending the existing footway from the urban portion of Church Road to Manse Road, and Naomi Long mentioned that. I note from the school's survey that few, or no, children walk to school. However, one might say that that is a chicken-and-egg situation — if there were a footpath, more children might avail themselves of it. I accept that that is a valid argument.

However, the initial survey into the provision of a footpath has indicated that such a proposal would be costly due to the extent of accommodation works that would be required at a number of properties; the considerable earthworks that would be required due to the topography of the area; the extensive land take due to the existing steep side slopes at the road edge; and the severe environmental impact there would be, with the loss of mature trees and hedges.

Roads Service also carried out a recent site inspection, which highlighted that one of the flashing school signs was partially obscured by foliage. An arrangement has been made to have that rectified. It was also reported that school flashing signs were not operating properly — Alex Maskey referred to that issue — and I have asked for those to be inspected and reprogrammed to ensure that they are fully operational.

Several contributors mentioned reducing the speed limit. The character of the road is such that a speed limit of 30 mph is not warranted. However, Roads Service officials, in association with the PSNI, have reviewed that section of the road, and I am pleased to advise Members that it has been proposed — subject to completing the necessary legislative process — to introduce a speed limit of 40 mph along the upper section of Church Road, which includes Loughview Primary School.

I also fully appreciate the concerns raised by parents about their children having to walk between the school and the adjoining nurseries: again, Mr Maskey referred to that. However, both nurseries share a common boundary with the school, which would permit the construction of access to and from the school without the need to use the public road. Provision of such access facilities are the responsibility of the owners of the nurseries and the school authorities.

Since entering office, I have received many requests to reduce the speed of traffic outside schools. As a parent, I appreciate that this is a very sensitive topic; and parents are quite rightly concerned about the safety of children going to and from school and the increasing volume and speed of traffic and how that contributes to those concerns.

I assure Members that my Department and I take child safety at schools seriously. Roads Service has installed a range of measures outside many schools to improve safety and has been researching the possibility of introducing part-time speed limits around schools at key times, such as when the children are arriving or leaving. Such a proposal would be aimed especially at roads where the national speed limit applies and where traffic speeds are high.

As part of its studies, Roads Service has investigated experiences in Scotland, where a comprehensive system of part-time speed limits has been introduced outside many schools. Following its positive findings, Roads Service has been preparing to install pilot schemes at a couple of schools here to determine their effectiveness in reducing speeds. The PSNI has agreed to ensure enforcement at those locations, where the proposal is that a speed limit of 20 mph will be applied.

Depending on the legislative process and the availability of suitable electronic signage, Roads Service hopes to have the system operating in this financial year. Following a comprehensive assessment of the trials, including speed surveys, Roads Service will consider bidding for resources to roll out a more extensive installation programme.

I hope that all the concerns and points raised by Members have been addressed. If not, my Department and I will address them in writing. I certainly intend to respond to the school and to any parents or representatives who have contacted us in writing.

With Roads Service, I am happy to discuss the idea — suggested by several Members — that a holistic approach is required to deal with the issue. There are implications for some of the measures that may be adopted — Naomi Long pointed that out — and we need to ensure that we have a proper consultation process and discussions with schools authorities; transport authorities; Roads Service; the PSNI; and whoever else may have an interest in travelling on that length of road, to enable us to address all those concerns.

I have asked my officials to take note of the Hansard report. Therefore, if I have missed any points that Members raised, I will write to them.

Adjourned at 6.29 pm.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Monday 22 October 2007

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

ASSEMBLY BUSINESS

Mr Speaker: Members will have noted that the interim Clerk and Chief Executive to the Northern Ireland Assembly, Carol Devon, has taken up her post and is in the Chamber. I am sure that Members will join me in wishing Mrs Devon every success in her new role at the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Durkan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. At last Tuesday's sitting, you accepted a point of order from Mr Peter Robinson, who was sitting on the Front Bench as Minister of Finance and Personnel. I and at least one other Member sought to challenge whether Mr Robinson's point of order should have been accepted. You ruled us out of order and did not allow us to make the point that the blue book — 'The Northern Ireland Assembly Companion' — clearly addresses the matter of points of order during ministerial statements or questions. The blue book quotes a ruling by a previous Speaker on 3 July 2000:

"I have already ruled that points of order will be taken after ministerial statements and questions." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 5, p373, col 2].

That ruling was changed by the ruling that you made last Tuesday, Mr Speaker. I note that last Tuesday's Hansard report includes your ruling that it was appropriate to take a point of order after a statement, but not during questions.

Mr Speaker, I have read the blue book; I have noted that it refers to a ruling of a previous Speaker on 3 July 2000; and I have looked up that ruling, which is clear:

"I have already ruled that points of order will be taken after ministerial statements and questions. [Interruption]"

No, the ruling is that points of order will be taken at the end." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 5, p373, col 2].

That clearly meant that points of order would be taken only after questions on the statement had been concluded. Will you enlighten us on the basis of the new ruling?

Mr Speaker: I say to the Member, and I said it here last Tuesday, that the Speaker will decide which points of order he will take and when he will take them. I have made it absolutely clear that the Speaker's advice on all matters in the House is final. I decided — and explained after the issue was raised again — when I would take a point of order. I made it absolutely clear that I would take the point of order after, not during, the ministerial statement or after questions on the ministerial statement.

Mr Durkan: Mr Speaker, do you accept that the previous ruling was that a point of order would be taken only after the questions that followed a statement and that it clearly meant at the end of that process?

There is a further issue in that the point of order that was raised was not a point of order: no Standing Order was cited. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. I ask the Member to take his seat. I will not answer any more questions on this particular — [Interruption.]

Mr Ford: Mr Speaker —

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Durkan: Mr Speaker —

Mr Speaker: Order. I made it absolutely clear last week. When the point of point of order was made, I adjourned the sitting for 20 minutes. Everybody in the House would have agreed with adjourning the sitting on the very serious point of order that was raised on a number of legal issues. I felt that it was my duty, as Speaker, to protect this House, and I believe that it has been protected as regards that particular point of order.

Mr Durkan: I have further questions to ask on that matter. When the sitting resumed, you sought to relay to the House the views of the head of the Civil Service. Those views very much had the effect of influencing what some Members may have thought about the statement that had been made. Will you tell the House whether the head of the Civil Service contacted you during that break in proceedings or whether you contacted him? Has a precedent been set that you, as Speaker, will relay advice to the House on behalf of the Civil Service?

Mr Speaker: I am going to move on to the next item of business; I am not prepared to answer any other points of order on this issue. Last Tuesday was a difficult time in the House. I sought to protect the House, which I believe I have done, and to calm people down, which I think also happened. Those were my only interests. When Mr Robinson raised the point of order, my interest was in making absolutely clear that this House was protected legally. I believe that it was, and I ruled accordingly when I returned to the House. Therefore, I am taking no further points of order on this particular issue, and I am going to move on to the next item of business.

Mr Attwood: On a different point of order.

Mr Speaker: Is the point of order on a different matter?

Mr Attwood: Yes. At the end of the debate on 16 October on the future of the conflict transformation initiative, the First Minister asked, in relation to the rulings of previous Speakers:

“Does there come a time to say “Amen” to those rulings and bury them?” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 24, p394, col 1].

At that time, Mr Speaker, you said:

“I am very happy to report back to the House on that point of order.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 24, p394, col 1].

When do you intend to report back to the House on that matter, given that, to my knowledge, there has never been on the Floor of either this Assembly or any previous Assembly such a fundamental challenge to the good conduct of business than when a First Minister says that it is time to “bury” previous rulings?

Mr Speaker: The Member well knows from his own experience that many procedures in Parliaments and Assemblies are based on previous decisions from the Speaker. He also knows that Speakers, Members and staff are guided by such procedures until they are superseded by further decisions. I am going to leave those particular points of order where they are and move on to the next item of business.

Mr Ford: On a point of order.

Mr Speaker: Is your point of order on a separate issue?

Mr Ford: Yes. On 11 September 2007, under Standing Order 18, you ruled:

“I intend to call members of the Executive to ask questions following a statement from a ministerial colleague only in special circumstances. I may still call them as private Members”. — [Official Report, Bound Volume 23, p255, col 1].

On 16 October, in response to the Minister for Social Development’s statement on the conflict transformation initiative, you called Mr Peter Robinson — it was certainly in unusual circumstances, and Mr Robinson was seated on his party’s Back Benches. However, the line of questioning that he adopted related to advice that was available only to Ministers. He referred to the Departmental Solicitor’s Office and the Executive secretary. I ask you to consider whether it may be necessary to amplify your ruling for Ministers’ benefit in future, or perhaps you should advise Ministers to keep their arguments to the Executive table.

Mr Speaker: On the afternoon of Tuesday 16 October, it was made absolutely clear that Mr Robinson was speaking as a private Member, which is why he sat on the Back Benches. I have continually said that I cannot control what Members say in the Chamber. It was made clear that Mr Robinson was speaking not as a Minister or on behalf of the Executive but as a private Member, which is why he sat on the Back Benches.

Mr Ford: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker, I entirely accept that you called Mr Robinson as a private Member. However, his line of questioning was that of one Minister to another Minister. Will you consider whether your ruling was complied with adequately?

Mr Speaker: I cannot be privy to the information that any private Member may have on any issue. When Mr Robinson spoke, I was not privy to what he might say. The difficulty is that, on many occasions in the House, neither I, as Speaker, nor the Deputy Speakers know what Members may say or do. In procedural terms, I am satisfied that on the afternoon of 16 October, Mr Robinson spoke as a private Member.

Mr Durkan: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker, when you resumed proceedings after the suspension, you told the House that you had spoken to Nigel Hamilton, the head of the Civil Service, who had some concerns. You also said that you had spoken to:

“other members of the Executive, who also expressed some serious concerns about the matter and about the Minister’s statement.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 24, p389, col 1].

I understand that that included the Minister of Finance and Personnel, Mr Robinson. Surely the points that he raised, supposedly as a Back Bencher or an ordinary Member, were exactly the same points that he raised as a member of the Executive.

Mr Speaker: That is not at all correct. I made it absolutely clear that I had spoken to my officials and to a number of people; the protection of the House was uppermost in my mind, and I had to be absolutely clear that the House was being protected. The legal advice was that no procedures had been broken and that the ministerial statement, and questions from Members, could continue.

Mr Durkan: With due respect, Mr Speaker, that still does not answer my question on whether the points that were raised by Mr Robinson as a private Member were the same points that he raised when he spoke to you during the suspension of proceedings as a member of the Executive, and he did speak to you during the suspension as a member of the Executive

Mr Speaker: What Members say to me in my office will not be discussed in the House. All Members, on all sides of the House, would respect that.

I am not taking any further points of order on the issue.

Mr Durkan: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker —

Mr Speaker: I am taking no further points of order on this issue.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Review of Water and Sewerage Services

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister for Regional Development that he wishes to make a statement regarding the Executive's response to the Independent Water Review Panel's strand one report.

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): Thank you, a Cheann Comhairle. Before I make my statement, I offer my condolences, and the condolences of the House, to the Quinn family in Cullyhanna on the tragic death of their son Paul. I unreservedly condemn what was a brutal murder, and I call on anyone who can provide any assistance to the investigation into that criminal act to make that information available to either An Garda Síochána or the PSNI.

12.15 pm

I wish to make a statement on the review of water and sewerage services and, in particular, the Independent Water Review Panel's strand one report. On 11 June, I announced the terms of reference for a review of water and sewerage services, following the Executive's decision not to impose direct rule water charges in 2007-08 and to conduct an independent review of those services. The terms of reference set out a two-strand approach. The first strand, to be reported on in the autumn, concerned the costs and funding of water and sewerage services. The second strand of the review, covering the structures and governance necessary to deliver water and sewerage services, will be reported on in December.

Following receipt of the independent panel's strand one report on 1 October, I consulted the Committee for Regional Development and the other statutory partners, and briefed trade union representatives. I am grateful to all those to whom I spoke for their constructive comments and for the speed with which they made written contributions. I must pay particular tribute to the Chairperson, Deputy Chairperson and members of the Regional Development Committee for their constructive approach.

The report and the comments of the consultees were discussed by a subcommittee established by the Executive to oversee the process. The subcommittee, comprising the Finance and Personnel, Employment and Learning, and Social Development Ministers and me, met on 15 October. A further discussion involving the full Executive took place on 18 October.

Before turning to what has been decided, I must also pay tribute to Paddy Hillyard, who has chaired the independent panel with great commitment and integrity. He has been admirably supported by Joan Whiteside, Charles Coulthard and Professor John Fitzgerald. Through the collective application of their knowledge and experience, they have produced a report that offers us an opportunity to reform our water and sewerage services in a better way than that proposed by direct rule Ministers. The panel has taken great care in its work, and the report bears careful reading.

I particularly want to draw attention to Paddy Hillyard's foreword. Referring to the floods that caused so much hardship in June, he concludes:

"we need to reduce our carbon footprint and develop sustainable ways of delivering clean water and disposing of our sewerage. As a society, we will have to pay more in the short term to achieve these objectives: but we must do so for the sake of future generations."

That is an important message that we must not and cannot duck. We were elected because our people had had enough of being governed from a distance. We were elected because people had confidence in our ability to take hard decisions on their behalf. Now that we have been elected, we must repay that trust by having the courage and commitment to make those hard choices.

Turning to the report, the Executive have welcomed the finding that ratepayers have paid a substantial annual contribution towards the cost of water and sewerage services. The panel found no evidence that the change in the rules in 1998 that removed the direct link between the regional rate and water and sewerage services was ever properly explained to the public. That vindicates the position that all the local parties took during direct rule.

The Executive have accepted the recommendation that, from 2008-09, there should be full recognition that domestic regional rates revenue makes a contribution to the funding of water and sewerage services. The panel has estimated that amount, based on an uplift of the 1998 position to today's prices, at around £109 million. That equates to an average household contribution of around £160. That figure is consistent with the Finance Minister's own projections of what domestic ratepayers are contributing to the funding of water and sewerage services. In 2008-09, that will be the only household contribution to those services, the balance being paid from the Northern Ireland block grant. That represents the Executive's commitment to tackling the inequity of double charging.

The review report notes, however, that the revenue from the regional rate does not cover the full costs of water services. To deal with that, the report proposes that consumers should make an increased contribution to cover the costs of water and sewerage services. The report makes the case that, without the uplift of what people currently contribute, other public services will be deprived of funding. The Executive have recognised that and agreed that, from 2009-10, there will need to be additional contributions from householders. The panel has suggested that these additional contributions should come into effect in full for domestic households from 2009-10. We have concluded instead that they should be phased in, with domestic households paying two thirds of their full liability in 2009-10 and the full liability the following year. However, the amount due to be collected from domestic households will be reduced by the amount of the contribution that households already make via the rates: £109 million, or an average of £160 per rates bill. That means that there will be no double payment.

The Executive have noted the proposal that a single bill should be issued to consumers, with rates and water and sewerage charges separately identified. Further analysis by the Regional Development and Finance Departments will be necessary in order to determine how that might be done and to assess the implications for existing billing arrangements and contracts.

The Executive have also noted the panel's recommendations on the way in which payments for services should be made in the future, but have reserved their final decision until the panel has completed the second strand of its report. The panel will have more to say in its second report on the detail of affordability arrangements for vulnerable groups. All that has been agreed now is that additional contributions from households will be necessary from 2009-10, but that there will be robust arrangements to protect the vulnerable in society from hardship and water poverty.

The proposals put forward by the direct rule Administration entailed the extension of water charges to all non-domestic customers, the phasing out of the current domestic allowance and the introduction of sewerage charges for all non-domestic customers. For 2008-09, that would have entailed charges of two thirds of the full level. However, the Executive recognise the challenges and difficulties faced by the non-domestic sector and have decided to phase in the new charges more slowly at 50% of the full charge in 2008-09 and 100% in 2009-10.

The Executive will also endeavour to reduce the burden on consumers, both domestic and non-domestic, through delivering efficiencies and by attracting further revenue sources.

In conclusion, the Executive have been committed to not privatising water and sewerage services and to tackling the injustice of double taxation. On behalf of the Executive, I am happy to reiterate that commitment today and to confirm that it is from that standpoint that we have considered the report of the independent panel. The position that I outline today, on behalf of the Executive, provides a firm basis for delivering a better deal for all water customers than that proposed by the direct rule Administration. There is, however, a great deal of work to be done by the Executive, the independent panel, the Committee for Regional Development and all the stakeholders. With goodwill and commitment from all parties, I am confident that we will achieve our goal of better services at an affordable cost. Go raibh mile maith agat.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Regional Development (Mr Cobain): I thank the Minister for his statement. The Committee has written to the Department to say that, in its scrutiny of the report, it finds that there is insufficient information in the review for the Committee to be able to form a view on it. Until the Committee sees the second report of the panel in December 2007, no final decision can be taken by it.

For the Minister to announce today the introduction of water charges without any debate in the Assembly is absolutely ridiculous. It is a new tax, and there is no indication of the basis on which the tax will be charged or of how much will be collected by those charges. There is no doubt that tens of thousands of those people on the lowest incomes will be worse off and will face water poverty. That is what has been announced today.

Will the Minister give a guarantee to the House that individuals who at the moment are free from any charges through the regional rate will not be any worse off when water charges are introduced?

Mr Murphy: I thank the Chairperson for his question. I must note that the Committee welcomed the report as an important first step in dealing with the issues, particularly those that he outlined with regard to the vulnerable and the less well off. It is, of course, open to the Chairperson and to any other Member if they wish to debate the issue and bring a motion to the Floor of the House. If the Chairperson of the Regional Development Committee were to do so, it would be particularly relevant. I am quite happy to debate any such motion.

I am obliged, under the programme that was outlined and agreed with the Committee and other stakeholders, to make a statement to the House following the Executive's decision on the budgetary implications of the panel's first report. The Chairperson knows well that the members of the panel — particularly the chairman, Paddy Hillyard — are people with great experience in dealing with issues of water poverty, who know how the imposition of the direct rule proposals would have affected the most vulnerable in our society. They have undertaken, as part of the second strand of their report, to focus on affordability issues and on how such propositions might be mitigated to ensure that those who are least able to pay do not suffer. I fully expect the panel to bring forward very robust propositions, and I expect the Executive to concur with them.

The direct rule proposals, as we have said from the outset, were unfair and unjust and would have imposed a double taxation on people. This Executive set the panel a job to do and have endorsed its key recommendations. I believe that we are tackling the injustices of privatisation and double charging, and we will ensure that those who are least able to pay are protected in whatever measures are recommended in the second report.

Mr Wells: Is the Minister aware that a motion has been put forward in the name of the Chairperson of the Committee for Regional Development to debate this very important issue? It would have been preferable had that debate been held before his statement on the decision. Will the Minister accept that some of what he has told the Assembly today is predicated on a very stretching efficiency target of 40% having been set for Northern Ireland Water? Has he taken into account, in the figures that he gave us today, that that is an extremely difficult target, which it may not be possible to meet?

Furthermore, the major item of the review panel's report was that future payments should be based on the capital valuation of the individual's property. Will the Minister accept that that proposal will cause enormous problems to those who are asset rich but income poor and that it will simply repeat the earlier problems when it was proposed that rating should also be based on capital valuation? With regard to the review panel's second report, will he assure the House that adequate protection is built into any proposal for an affordability tariff to ensure that those who are unable to pay do not bear an unfair brunt of this new tax?

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for his question, and I note that a motion for debate has been put forward. The method for rolling out the process was discussed with the Committee for Regional Development, and I outlined my intention to make a statement following the Executive's decision. At that stage, there was no mention of a debate; however, I am happy to come to the House and debate the issues with members of the Committee.

The targets concerning efficiencies are demanding. One implication of the Executive's decision to roll out progressively the possible domestic contribution gives an additional year to reach some of those targets. Therefore, there may be scope for discussing them with the water company.

On many occasions, I have heard Mr Wells's points on those who are asset rich and income poor, and there is a debate on basing contributions on the capital valuation of houses. As part of the second phase, the panel has undertaken a particularly focused exercise in relation to affordability and will look in particular at how its proposals will impact on those least able to make a contribution. There will be an opportunity for the Committee, and any other party or individual Member, to discuss those propositions with the panel. I expect the panel to bring forward robust propositions in December, and those will be debated by the Executive and by the House.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom mo chuid buíochas a thabhairt don Aire do a ráiteas agus ár gcuid buíochas don Roinn don chuid oibre atá déanta aici. I thank the Minister for his statement and put on record Sinn Féin's appreciation of the review panel's work. It is an important and positive first step in the rolling back of the proposals of direct rule Ministers. Will the Minister assure the Assembly that the misuse of the regional rate will never happen again? Furthermore, I ask him to reassure the House that the implementation of the report will herald the end of paying twice for water and an end to water poverty.

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for his question. The Executive's statement, when they had agreed the panel's terms of reference, was very clear. One of the issues that had poisoned the direct rule propositions on water were — if Members will pardon the pun — suspicions about the privatisation of water and sewerage services. Moreover, people felt that the contribution historically made by households through the regional rate was not recognised in what they were being asked to contribute for water and sewerage services and that their having to pay twice was deeply unjust.

The review panel's report and the decisions taken by all the Ministers in the Executive address those concerns. The issue of privatisation was dealt with from the outset, and all the parties expressed manifesto commitments to tackling the injustice of a double taxation for water. That issue has been addressed, will continue to be addressed and will not reappear on the agenda.

12.30 pm

Mr Dallat: I too welcome the Minister's statement, particularly his undertaking to support the Committee's tabling a motion for a take-note debate and its seeking an assurance that he will be influenced by the outcome of that debate.

I note that the Minister has not referred to metering. Does that mean that he agrees with the panel that, although metering is an environmental issue, it would increase the cost of water considerably but have no real benefit for those who can least afford to pay?

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for his comments and for his welcome of the panel's report.

I firmly believe that metering will have to be debated publicly over the next few weeks and months. It will certainly have to be discussed in the lead-up to the publication of the second phase of the panel's reports. There are issues to discuss: for example, some people assume that capital value is an unfair means by which an assessment can be made, and that metering is fairer. Metering was very much part of the direct rule propositions, but I suppose that it must have got lost among them.

Several parties, including the Member's and my own, had concerns about metering. It is assumed that it will lead to greater water conservation and reduced water charges. All those assumptions can be challenged. I look forward to talking about the matter over the coming weeks and months, and perhaps the take-note debate that the Member mentioned would be a useful place to start such discussions. I have asked other stakeholders to discuss metering in the few weeks and months that lead up to the publication of the panel's second-phase report.

A debate on the matter is necessary, given that several challengeable assumptions were made about metering, such as what it can contribute to the environment, the reduction to bills for water and sewerage services that it will cause, and its tendency towards encouraging water conservation. All those assumptions can be challenged, and I look forward to that take-note debate.

The Executive have not taken a view on that position. However, they can — and I expect that they will — do so when the second phase of the panel's report is published in December.

Mrs Long: I thank the Minister for his statement. However, it is premature, given that the Assembly has not had the opportunity to debate the outcome of the report. However, I am at least grateful that the Minister was able to clarify that we have a situation in which a Minister is speaking on behalf of the Executive.

Does the Minister not agree that any charge that is linked to the value of property is, by definition, a regressive form of taxation? Does he further agree that, even with affordability adjustments, vulnerable groups and those who are on fixed incomes, and whose house prices are rising, will be hit? Will he comment on how the proposals meet the requirements of the EU Water Framework Directive, which is aimed at encouraging the conservation of natural resources?

Mr Murphy: The reason for my statement on the review is that the Executive's discussions on the Budget have meant that they had to make several key decisions; Members will know that such key budgetary decisions must be made this week. Therefore, there was real pressure on the Department. We announced at the start of the process that there would be a two-phase review, one of which would deal with the clear financial implications of the panel's recommendations.

As a result, we had to make decisions this week on how we would proceed with paying for water and sewerage services over the next few years. Therefore, the time frame for discussing the matter was constrained. We acknowledged that at the outset, and that is the reason that we held discussions with the Committee for Regional Development, in particular. Obviously, the parties that are represented on the Executive speak for the majority of Assembly Members, although I appreciate that they do not do so for those on whose behalf Mrs Long is speaking. Therefore, the time frame in which we could have held meetings was constrained. However, such constraint was necessary, given that decisions had to be made.

The Member mentioned bigger issues such as capital values and metering. We will now have the opportunity to debate those in the House. The panel made it clear that the second phase of the report will examine very closely affordability and how an increased contribution from domestic consumers towards water and sewerage services can be mitigated in order that the worst off do not suffer as a result of the charges. As I said, the panel comprises people who have a broad range of experience — particularly the chairperson — on matters that relate to water poverty. I am confident that the panel, in engagement with the parties that have an interest in the matter and with all the other stakeholders, will draw up robust affordability propositions that the Executive can consider and that the Assembly can decide on.

Mr Moutray: Given that many thousands of senior citizens throughout Northern Ireland have indicated that they wish to have water meters installed in their homes, will the Minister give an assurance that that option will still be available to those people who are over the age of 60 who wish to avail themselves of it?

Mr Murphy: That option is enshrined in current legislation, and it is to that legislation that the water company operates. Until the Executive decide otherwise and introduce their own legislation, that will remain the case. The Executive must decide whether they wish to pursue a different objective for pensioners, and it would be up to the House to agree any new legislation.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his statement and the review panel for its strand one report. Can the Minister assure us that the panel will have adequate resources to complete strand two, given that the original consultants had £7 million with which to carry out their review?

Mr Murphy: The panel has been allocated a sufficient budget in order to carry out its work, and I appreciate the fact that the panel was allocated that budget. Great credit is due to the panel: we gave it an onerous task, which it got down to very quickly. Panel members applied themselves, with great integrity, to their work.

A budget was set aside that we considered sufficient. The fact that the panel has yet to eat significantly into that budget shows that it has sufficient resources to carry out the remainder of its task.

Mr G Robinson: Does the Minister feel that to levy water rates based on the value of a property alone is a fair system? Does it take into account people's ability to pay?

Mr Murphy: I beg your pardon, Mr Speaker, but I did not hear the Member's question. If he repeats it, I shall answer it.

Mr G Robinson: Does the Minister feel that to levy water rates based on the value of a property alone is a fair system? Does it take into account people's ability to pay?

Mr Murphy: The panel looked very hard at the issue and considered payments based on that system to be fairest. The Executive had to make a number of decisions about the panel's budget and about how that would roll out over the next number of years. The Executive have not concluded the discussion on the issue that the Member has raised. They will discuss the matter further with the panel and with other interested parties.

Naomi Long is still in the Chamber; I thought that she had left. Mr Speaker, I neglected to deal with a point that she raised about the EU Water Framework Directive. Article 9 of the directive says that pricing policies should promote a sustainable use of water. The panel's proposals will enable us to achieve that aim.

Mr McCallister: In the light of his saying that he does not want a double taxation, does the Minister accept that households that have a private well and a septic tank would be paying for a service that they do not receive? I refer particularly to farming families. Considering that they will be paying a standing charge for the use of a water meter anyway, will the Minister guarantee that such families, and their businesses, will be allowed to pay using a meter after he removes their domestic allowance?

Mr Murphy: The Member may be straying into areas that will be dealt with in the strand-two report. Suffice it to say that we wanted the fairest proposition for all customers, both domestic and non-domestic. The Executive were very keen for some of the savings that have been identified in the panel's report to be spread between domestic and non-domestic customers. We are looking at ways in which to reduce the burden right across the board.

Therefore, some of the affordability issues that the Member has raised into the specifics of non-domestic use must be looked at, because we do not want to ignore one section of our community, in particular the farming sector. We are straying into what will be considered in the strand two report, but I look forward to hearing the Member's views when that analysis kicks off.

Mr O'Loan: I notice that, in his statement, the Minister accepts the panel's figure of £109 million already being built into the rates to cover water charges. That figure equates to £160 for each household. Those calculations go back to a time when an hypothecated figure for water was included in our rates.

A lot has happened in the meantime, including an increase of as much as 19% in one year in the regional rate. Will the Minister ensure that there is independent analysis of that figure before he commits to it? It may well be that a greater figure ought to be built into the calculation.

Mr Murphy: I consider the panel to be independent assessors. The figure it came up with concurs with that proposed by the Department of Finance and Personnel, as regards expressing the 1998 figure in today's values. Therefore, I assume that it is accurate. The fact that the panel, which is independent and outside Government, came up with the same figure gives us confidence in it. That is not just my analysis. Last Thursday, the Executive agreed that that is the figure that will be considered as part of the contribution.

Mr W Clarke: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Will the Minister assure the House that moneys gained from the sale of surplus assets already identified will be reinvested in the water infrastructure?

Mr Murphy: Assets should be disposed of in order to maximise benefits to customers. We will ask the regulator to undertake a review of the assets of the water company. I note that the Committee for Regional Development, on which the Member sits, observed that it is not in anyone's interest to indulge in a fire sale. Nonetheless, it is important that surplus assets are disposed of properly and that the resulting money is reinvested in public services.

Mr Irwin: I have problems regarding the levels of water wastage through system deficiencies. Will the Minister give an assurance that every effort will be made to deal with that problem?

Mr Murphy: The water company needs to address water wastage. When talking about water metering and the volume of water that households use, some Members observed that there was a primary responsibility on the water company to ensure that wastage was addressed. The company has set out a programme to achieve that and is on course for substantial improvement. However, we will need to keep an eye on that. I have no doubt that the panel will examine the issue closely during the second phase of its assessment. The Department is keen to ensure that the water company lives up to the expectations of the public, the Assembly and the Department and that it will address the issues seriously.

Mr Beggs: The Minister has referred to article 9 of the EU Water Framework Directive. Will he explain how basing charges for water on house values will encourage conservation? I do not see how it will. Has he received written confirmation from the European Commission that it is willing to accept basing charges for water on house values? In my opinion, it is a breach of the European directive.

Mr Murphy: The Department has its own analysis of the EU Water Framework Directive, which is that it is not necessarily in breach of any European directive. Further discussions about what may come from Europe on that matter are ongoing.

The Member assumes that the only way of conserving water is through a metered system. There are contrary views: there are other ways to conserve water and encourage the conservation of water. It is appropriate that, in the coming weeks and months, we have a debate about what people presume to be the benefits of metering — water conservation, lower bills and contribution to the environment — as opposed to other measures, which may also encourage water conservation.

Mr Durkan: I welcome the Minister's statement and join him in paying tribute to the work of the panel. My party was the only one to make a submission to the panel and to meet with it.

I return to the point raised by my colleague Declan O'Loan. The Minister's statement says that the amount estimated from the regional rate to contribute to water and sewerage services is around £109 million, which equates to a household contribution of £160, and is based on an uplift of the 1998 position to today's prices. I ask the Minister and the Executive to address the fact that the increases of 7% in three successive years, introduced by direct rule Ministers in the late 1990s, were justified entirely on the basis of increasing water costs. The 19% increase last year was justified in similar terms. There is, therefore, reason to question that figure.

Can the Minister assure the House that the measures that will be taken on affordability will not be temporary? Under direct rule, the indication was that the Treasury would do away with the affordability tariff after a few years. Similarly, although the Minister has given the right assurances on privatisation, is he aware of Treasury plans to pursue and press for subsequent privatisation? What assurances can he give the House on that?

12.45 pm

Mr Murphy: I will repeat my previous response: the panel is independent. It approached its review from outside the Department. It was important, when it was established, for the panel to be given independence from Government in order to allow it to carry out the necessary scrutiny. It employed economists to assist in its analysis, which concurs with the figure that the Department of Finance and Personnel provided.

Robust work must be done on the affordability tariff. The panel contained people who have a strong knowledge of water poverty and how it can affect the most vulnerable in society. The Assembly has a duty to protect those vulnerable people. It must ensure that people can make increased contributions in order to meet the necessary investment in water services. People have accepted the panel's assertion that if the money were to be taken from the Budget, that would have severe implications across all Departments. Therefore, the proposition is that those services must be paid for through increased contributions. The Assembly has a duty to ensure that that does not adversely affect those who can least afford it.

The Department had to make a clear statement on privatisation even before the panel had started its work, because part of that work was to bring a degree of public confidence to the discussions that had not previously been present. The panel members are people of integrity, and it is a great credit to them that they have managed to achieve a degree of public confidence in how they are dealing with the issue. As long as I am the Minister for Regional Development, it is my intention, and that of the Executive as long as they are in position, that privatisation will not, and never will be, back on the agenda. I expect that that will continue to be the position and that any attempt by the British Treasury to revisit the exercise will be resisted accordingly.

Mr B Wilson: I thank the Minister for his statement and welcome the fact that there will be no separate water charges. However, I am concerned about the figures for 2008-09. It appears that there may be a black hole in the figures and that additional revenue can be raised only through a large increase in the regional rate. That is unacceptable. Rates are aggressive, and no account is taken of ability to pay. The burden falls heaviest on pensioners and people who are on fixed incomes. Therefore, can the Minister assure the House that there will not be any increase in the regional rate to meet any shortfall, and that any shortfall would not be met through cuts in other services?

Mr Murphy: The Member has asked a question that strikes me as being rather contradictory. If a shortfall is not picked up by the customer or by the Department, where does he expect it to be picked up? He cannot take both sides of the argument at the same time. He has asked that I ensure that neither the public nor Departments have to pay for the shortfall. Does he expect Santa Claus to come along and pay for it in the interim?

If Members want to approach the debate rationally, they must be honest and upfront. How can a service not be paid for either by Departments or through the proposition that the shortfall be met by the block grant for 2008-09? That has implications for Departments, and how could it not? Therefore, we must be upfront and honest, which I have tried to be in the debate, about the difficult choices that are to be faced and must be taken. Those who try to play both sides of the argument at the same time will be exposed as not having a sensible argument for the way forward.

Dr McDonnell: The Minister has rightly said that there will be robust arrangements to protect the vulnerable in our society from hardship and water poverty. Can he guide the House on what those robust arrangements might be? I accept that Santa Claus will not pay for any shortfall. However, last night, a letter was posted through my door from Mr Howard McKeown, who is a retired civil servant. It is an impassioned and pleading letter in which Mr McKeown says that he will be forced to leave his home because of water charges and rates.

I return to the point that, while there are those at the bottom end of our society economically who are in hardship and who need to be protected, equally there are those on the other side of the coin who may be asset-rich — living in a highly rated house — but living on meagre pensions, like that man on his Civil Service pension. Are we going to ask him to leave his home as those charges build up? It is a challenge for the Assembly to try to keep our society stable and — whatever way the charges are introduced, whatever way water is paid for — to ensure that people do not have to lose their homes. What answer can I give to Mr McKeown as I sit down this afternoon, or tomorrow, to write him a letter?

Mr Murphy: Far be it from me to compose the Member's letters for him. Perhaps the central point in my statement — and I am surprised that it has not been picked up before — was that affordability tariffs will, of course, have to be considered in a robust fashion. That is part of the second phase. The report recognises, and the Executive recognise, that there was a historic contribution being made from the rates towards water and sewerage services. That contribution has been recognised and accepted. That means that, when that contribution goes towards water and sewerage services, the rates bill will fall by the measure of that contribution. I presume that when people have read the report, they will recognise that as a central factor. The fact that the Executive have taken that decision is very welcome.

I heard other people talking on the radio — including some people who are sitting in the Chamber today — about the propositions in the report, and they had got the sums completely the wrong way round. The rates will be reduced by the contribution that has been made over the years towards water and sewerage services. I fully accept what the Member has said: we have a responsibility for ensuring that, as we struggle to finance necessary investment in water and sewerage services — and all the other programmes that the Executive must try to find money for — that does not impinge in a negative fashion on those who are least able to afford to pay. That is a challenge for us all. It will pose a challenge to us throughout the Budget discussions and the second phase of the panel's work.

Nevertheless, it is a challenge that we are well capable of meeting, because people here have a genuine concern about those who are least able to pay in our society. We have a duty to protect them.

Dr Farry: Further to the answer given to my colleague Mr Wilson, I remind the Minister that the financial situation inherited by the Administration made no provision for water charges within the rates — on the contrary, there were to be separate water charges. Therefore, there is a financial black hole that has to be addressed. Will the Minister be straight with the public of Northern Ireland and tell them that the only way in which those costs can be met is by a subsequent rise in the regional rate or a cut in public services? Otherwise, the sums simply do not add up.

Mr Murphy: It is interesting that Dr Farry talks about the sums adding up. He is the person whom I heard on BBC radio getting the sums completely and utterly wrong. He talked about £160 being added to the regional rate bill, rather than recognising that £160 would be taken off the average regional rate bill. He is not in any position to lecture us about the sums. When he was on 'The Stephen Nolan Show' pontificating on the matter, I was tempted to ring in myself. However, I was obliged not to comment publicly on the report until the Executive had dealt with it. I was tempted to ask Dr Farry to go back and read the report properly and to do his sums properly.

The central feature of the issue is that there is a recognition that people paid for water — that they made a contribution towards water — out of the regional rate bill. That will be accepted and recognised. If that is moved towards a contribution to water, the regional rate bill will fall accordingly.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): On 22 May, I commissioned a review of the problems that were encountered as a result of the recruitment process for junior doctors into speciality training. Many of you are familiar with the well-publicised difficulties that centred on the use of the national online recruitment process, the medical training application service (MTAS). That process was heavily criticised across the UK as it was felt to exclude highly qualified candidates from successful appointment. In addition, there were widespread concerns that the new process would lead to hundreds of junior doctors' being unemployed and that, as a result, hospitals would be thrown into crisis.

Further, it was predicted that hundreds of doctors would be permanently locked out of speciality training and left in limbo.

As a result of those concerns, I took urgent action to address the problems locally. The first step was the abandonment of the MTAS process. We then secured consultant commitment to extending the local interviews process to complete recruitment as a matter of urgency. Later, I will detail how those concerns have been fully addressed.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

On 22 May, I made a commitment to a full examination of all the difficulties arising from the recruitment process. I set up a review and asked Professor Randall Hayes of Queen's University to chair the review group, to look at the difficulties and to chart a way forward. The review group drew its membership from across the Health Service, the British Medical Association (BMA) and the Department, thereby reflecting a wide range of backgrounds and expertise. In keeping with my commitment to report back to the Assembly before the end of October 2007, I have today placed in the Assembly Library copies of the Review of Recruitment into Speciality Training in Northern Ireland 2007.

As Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, I wanted to be assured that patient care had not suffered because of the deficiencies in this process; that our Health Service continued to operate safely and effectively at the traditional junior doctor start date of 1 August; and that a way forward for 2008 would be determined involving a recruitment process that enjoyed widespread confidence throughout the service and, locally, from the medical profession. I also asked Professor Hayes to examine the wider concerns that arose from the recruitment process, the perceived inflexibilities of the new training programmes and the effectiveness of medical workforce planning. I was also keen that he took account of developments elsewhere in the UK, including the Independent Review of Modernising Medical Careers, which is currently being carried out by Sir John Tooke.

The review team was set a challenging timescale. It met and took evidence from all key stakeholders over the summer months. Professor Hayes met Sir John Tooke, who, on 8 October, published the interim findings of his review of modernising medical careers. I want to express my gratitude to Professor Hayes for his leadership, to the review team for their commitment to completing this review in a short time, and to those who gave of their time and expertise in contributing to the work of the review.

The report contains 29 separate recommendations under the following headings: recruitment, speciality training and medical workforce planning. I want to outline today the main findings and the actions that I will take. First, the review found no evidence of any detrimental impact on patient care. Nearly 700 junior doctors with the necessary skills and expertise to provide high-quality treatment and care were recruited and in post by 1 August 2007.

Secondly, there was no significant unemployment of junior doctors. On 1 August, only 22 doctors had not secured posts. That figure has now fallen to six, and arrangements have been made to allow those six doctors to remain in post pending further recruitment rounds. Thirdly, Professor Hayes's review addressed the inflexibility in the process that could result in highly qualified doctors being locked out of the process.

Nevertheless, significant flaws in the process have been identified. They relate mainly to the online recruitment system, the application form and the shortlisting process used this year. The evidence that the review took from junior doctors detailed difficulties around the lack of robustness of the computer system, which was prone to crashing. Also mentioned was insufficient training to familiarise doctors with a radically different process, and the fact that shortlisting did not take enough account of individual experiences.

In addressing those matters, 18 of the review's recommendations cover the recruitment process, setting out advice in regard to person specifications, application forms, interviews and communication. I will supply a little more detail on those recommendations. There will be a local recruitment process for 2008. Junior doctors will complete a different style of application form that will allow them an opportunity to have all their experience taken into account. The person specifications, which caused so many problems in relation to inflexibility and concerns over permanent lockout from the process, will be revised to remove limits to previous experience, and they will be speciality specific.

1.00 pm

Junior doctors will not apply through a national computer system. Applications will be submitted to the local deanery — the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency. There will be local longlisting and shortlisting of candidates. The interview process that was used in 2007 was well received by all junior doctors and by the consultants who conducted the interviews. That process will continue for 2008. The concerns that junior doctors had this year, should, therefore, not be repeated in 2008. They will be allowed to demonstrate experience and how they strive for excellence. Those important areas will be taken into account in the shortlisting process.

There has been widespread agreement among junior doctors and training committees that the recruitment process in Northern Ireland should remain synchronised with the national timetable. Having listened to the profession, I concur that we should remain part of the national network in relation to timescales. Recruitment for general practice will continue to follow a separate process, but I want the timing of offers of training places to coincide with those for speciality training in line with Professor Hayes's recommendation. The number of offers to general practice doctors awaiting alternative offers caused difficulties this year. Undue pressure was brought to bear, which is something that I want to avoid next year.

All of these changes will be communicated to junior doctors by the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency. The agency has been examining the feasibility of a local online application service to support the recruitment process. As I told the Assembly in May 2007, I want to be assured that any such service would truly support the process before agreeing to its use, but I am content that such an option should be explored.

Professor Hayes has made it clear that his recommendations on speciality training have to be viewed in the wider context, and for very good reasons. We must not do anything locally that disadvantages our young doctors with regard to recognition of their training and qualifications and, as a consequence, jeopardises their future prospects for consultant and GP principal appointments. As a result, the review's recommendations on specialist training are for the longer term, for 2009 and beyond, and are very much dependent on the outcome of Sir John Tooke's recommendations.

As I said, Sir John's interim findings were published at the beginning of last week and are out for consultation until 20 November 2007. His proposals for speciality training involve the fundamental restructuring of postgraduate medical training to allow greater flexibility. My Department will respond to that consultation, drawing on Professor Randal Hayes's work. However, I assure those who secured a place on a training programme in 2007 that that commitment will be honoured.

Many of the recommendations on medical workforce planning are already in train. Since August 2007, for example, the number of doctors in GP training programmes has increased by 20%. As a result, the intake to GP training has risen to 65. Again this year, recognising the growing number of women in the medical workforce, flexible training opportunities will be doubled to 15 to begin to meet the growing demand for part-time working among doctors in training. Although that is a relatively small increase, it should be seen as the latest step in an ongoing approach.

A further critical element in this process is the provision of careers advice that is objective, meaningful and of relevance to young doctors at a critical stage in their career. My Department has provided funds to the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency to develop its career advisory role. The agency recently advertised a post dedicated to that role, in line with Professor Hayes's recommendations. I want to see the agency work with the university to extend that role into the undergraduate years in a meaningful way.

In summary, the review has identified that there was no evidence of a detriment to patient and client care caused by the recruitment process used this year. There is no evidence of significant unemployment of junior doctors.

There were significant flaws in the recruitment process for speciality, run-through training. A way forward for 2008 allows experience to be taken into account, prevents doctors from being locked out of training, and introduces more flexibility to the process. Proposals will be introduced with the aim of restoring the confidence of the service in speciality recruitment.

A great deal of work is to be done as a result of the review. I have set out, in broad terms, the approach that the Department will adopt for this year. The Department will put in place a process to implement in detail all the local review recommendations. Further work will be necessary for 2009 and beyond. Sir John Tooke's interim report points to fundamental changes to speciality recruitment that were identified by Professor Hayes. My Department will work closely with other UK countries over the coming months to ensure that a process is developed that meets the needs of the service and allows junior doctors to compete fairly and flexibly. We all want to be cared for by doctors who are trained to the highest standards and who are experts in their area of practice. The profession can provide that service if the right people are recruited into the right speciality. I am determined that the professionalism and dedication that is shown by doctors locally is not let down by a poor recruitment process.

Mr Buchanan: I welcome the Minister's statement on the problems that have been encountered. It is good that the review of the speciality training for junior doctors is underway and that there has been no detrimental impact on patient care.

I also welcome the fact that 700 junior doctors were recruited by 1 April 2007. Can the Minister confirm whether salaries paid to doctors who are being trained under the new MMC (Modernising Medical Careers) scheme are less than those that have been paid in previous years?

Mr McGimpsey: I am not aware whether the salaries are lower; I did not expect that question. Although I can check specifics, I am not aware that junior doctors are suffering as a result of being paid lower salaries than they would have been in previous years.

Mrs O'Neill: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I congratulate the Minister on his statement. All parties had been lobbying on the matter, and I am glad that he has taken all the issues on board. Will the Minister give a commitment to honour the places of people who have secured a place on a speciality training programme in 2007?

Mr McGimpsey: I can give Mrs O'Neill exactly that commitment: those training places will all be honoured in full.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Minister for his statement and for honouring his commitment to report to the House by the end of October. Does he agree that the experiences of a great number of junior doctors were stressful? Will he indicate the timescale of the process for the next year, bearing in mind that the Tooke Review has just been published?

Mr McGimpsey: I understand the stress that junior doctors experienced during the early part of this year. However, as I said, the Department adopted a local solution to a local problem and dealt with the situation. No junior doctors were unemployed, and there was no chaos in the hospitals.

The recruitment process opens in January 2008 with local interviews, which will be completed by the middle of April. Job offers will be issued shortly after that. That is the anticipated timeframe, and I expect that the Department will meet it.

Mrs Hanna: I also thank the Minister for his statement and for bringing the matter back to the Assembly. Given that he has talked frequently about the local situation, will a system be introduced that has been tailored to the Northern Ireland service?

The Minister has made it clear that the process will not be exclusive to Northern Ireland. Will he elaborate on that, and will the balance between supply and demand be ensured?

Mr McGimpsey: Overwhelmingly, the advice received during the course of the review was that the process in Northern Ireland must be synchronised with, and be part of, a national process. It is a local solution to a local problem, but it is also an integral part of the general recruitment pool. As I understand it, Professor Tooke's review will indicate the way forward for England, Scotland and Wales, and my Department will carefully examine the outcome. Professor Hayes has had meetings with Professor Tooke. Randal Hayes's recommendations are close to some of those of Professor Tooke.

Mrs Hanna asked me about supply and demand, and, as I indicated in my statement, there has been an increase to 686 in the number of GP training posts this year. That increase reflects the need for additional GPs and for planning for medical careers. Among that number, any decrease in training places for certain specialities is balanced by an increase in training for other specialities. Overall, the number of available training places has increased.

Dr Deeny: I thank and commend the Minister for dealing with the problem so quickly and professionally. As a doctor, I had two major concerns: my primary concern was patient care, and, secondly, I was concerned about the loss of young doctors from Northern Ireland.

The Minister stated that the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency will communicate all changes to junior doctors. When will that happen? I suggest that it should be as soon as possible, so that Northern Ireland does not lose its highly skilled and qualified professionals.

Almost 60 GPs work in the Western Health and Social Services Board area. Bearing in mind that many of our medical graduates are female, I suggest that the number of GP training places be further increased, perhaps to 100 eventually.

Mr McGimpsey: As I indicated in my statement, there are an additional 15 GP training places this year, and the Department will carefully consider any future requirement. Now that the review is complete and I have reported to the House, I am now in a position to begin communication with junior doctors, and I will do so as soon as possible. A number of the recommendations can be communicated almost straight away, and that will be done through the local deanery.

There is no evidence that the process will be the cause of any detriment to patient care. The Department was able to move quickly enough to ensure that hospitals were able to recruit their complement of junior doctors on 1 August, as normal.

The training of doctors in specialities is a competitive process. Since the process began, local doctors have chosen to leave Northern Ireland to complete their training. That happens as a matter of course, and there is no guarantee that an individual who starts his or her undergraduate training in Northern Ireland will finish it here. Of the posts filled on 1 August, three quarters were filled by local doctors and one quarter by non-local doctors, by which I mean doctors from other EU countries and further afield. Last year, 87 international medical graduates were in the system, and I record the Department's gratitude for their work in supporting the Health Service.

Doctors who were born in Northern Ireland can be found working in hospitals almost all over the world, and that has always been the case, because it is a matter of individual preference. It is crucial to have flexibility in the system, so that doctors can return to Northern Ireland if they so wish.

1.15 pm

The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mrs I Robinson): I welcome the Minister's statement on the recruitment of junior doctors, and I apologise for missing the first part of it. This issue greatly concerned members of the Health Committee earlier this year, and we raised it with the Minister many times. The Minister acknowledged that there were flaws in the process for recruitment in speciality medical training. Those flaws caused months of untold anxiety for many junior doctors throughout Northern Ireland. However, I welcome the assurance from the review that there was no evidence of any detrimental impact on patient care. I am pleased to learn that major changes will be made in time for next year's recruitment process and, in particular, that a different style of application process will be used that will give greater weight to previous experience.

The Minister has confirmed to Dr Deeny that there is much work to be done and that the full implementation of the review recommendations will be carried out without delay. However, I wish to seek further assurance that we will not be faced with a similar situation in the future.

Mr McGimpsey: Much of last year's problems related to the MTAS recruitment process, which was an online application form that was accessed through a computer system that was prone to crashing. There is no anticipation that we will go back to that system. We will follow the same steps for 2008 that we took in 2007 when we abandoned MTAS: local interviews, longlisting, shortlisting and curriculum vitae will play a part. Therefore, experience will be given its appropriate weight. I do not anticipate that the position will be similar in May 2008 to what it was in May 2006. In fact, as I stated in an earlier answer, I expect that offers will be issued at the end of April 2008.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank and commend the Minister for his robust response, and I look forward to the same robustness when we consider the Agenda for Change policy. Will the Minister outline whether the Department has made any attempts to encourage speciality training? I am thinking specifically of areas where there are gaps, for example, in the field of reconstructive surgery for breast cancer survivors and burns victims, and in the provision of mental-health care. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr McGimpsey: That is a matter of preference and of competition. Some courses are oversubscribed, for example, cardiology is consistently the number-one speciality to which young doctors apply. Regrettably, near the bottom of the list are accident and emergency, and paediatrics — which has much to do with child-protection legislation. There are disincentives in some specialities, and that is where we meet shortages in areas such as mental health. We have discussed that matter on a number of occasions and, therefore, we are well aware of the shortages of doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists and nurses in the mental-health sector. That remains a major problem. I shall keep this matter under constant review so that we can try to find ways to solve the problem.

Mr Easton: I welcome the Minister's statement. He has broadly answered my question, but will he give us further information on how many junior doctors leave these shores every year? Does he believe that the new measures will help to reduce the numbers of those who leave?

Mr McGimpsey: I do not have figures for the number of junior doctors who leave our shores each year. Some students apply to the School of Medicine at Queen's University Belfast.

The Department is also aware of the large number of students who apply to other universities. For example, at one stage 10 of the University of Dundee's rugby team were medical undergraduates from Northern Ireland. There are certain universities that our youngsters are inclined to apply to. I do not have a specific figure, but there is a brain drain. I am happy to write to the Member on the issue of junior doctors' going abroad. It is something that has been traditional and par for the course in medical training; it has happened for generations.

Mr Elliott: I welcome the Minister's announcement. He will be aware of representations that I made on the matter locally. Can the Minister assure me that the recruitment process for junior doctors will be administered locally to meet the specific needs of the local hospitals involved?

Mr McGimpsey: Yes, I can. Mr Elliott will recall that, on a number of occasions, I have said that this is a local solution to a local problem. Three quarters of the junior doctors that the Department is recruiting are from Northern Ireland. I bear that very much in mind.

Mr Durkan: I welcome both the Minister's statement and the work of the review group and Professor Hayes. The report honestly reflects the causes of the problem and provides welcome assurances that its effects did not lead to significant unemployment for our young doctors or damage to patient care.

Although the Minister is trying to ensure that there will be a new system in place that fits local needs, it will also need to fit the national framework. Achieving those two purposes might lead to some tension or difficulty in implementation, so I would appreciate any assurances that he can provide.

Similarly, as well as trying to synchronise the local scheme with the national framework, the Minister is saying that he wants to ensure that recruitment for general practice is synchronised with speciality training. What steps can he take to ensure that that happens?

Mr McGimpsey: Last year, offers for GP speciality were sent to those who may have also been waiting for other specialities and were then left wondering if they would receive any other offers. It is important that all offers be synchronised so that junior doctors can weigh up exactly what they are being offered and what their potential is.

There must be interchange in the national system, because we do not want our junior doctors — when they are qualified and trained — being excluded from employment and professional qualifications simply because they were trained here as opposed to in Scotland, Wales or England. Therefore, it is important that we ensure that our new system fits the national one. Our problem is primarily in how the recruitment took place and the effects of that, which we can sort out. In their discussions, Professor Hayes and Sir John Tooke shared a number of ideas on recommendations. The Department will look at changes to speciality training and how those changes should be implemented. Those changes must be universal, and we cannot exclude ourselves from them.

Mr Ford: I also thank the Minister for his statement and for taking this issue seriously. Immediately after taking office, the Minister met a number of us, and junior doctors, and ensured that we now have at least the makings of a local solution to our local problem. I declare my interest as a parent of two junior doctors in training who both — I am happy to say — secured full training posts in this year's round. I welcome the Minister's statement that those training posts will be honoured. I would, however, like to tease out what is not currently in the statement.

The Minister has given us full details of the unemployment of junior doctors, but I am concerned about the underemployment. Will the Minister provide details of how many people are currently only in single-year, short-term, unrecognised posts, because they are the casualties who could be forgotten?

In the context of the Minister's reference to Professor Hayes's recommendation about the inflexibility in the process, which could result in highly qualified doctors being locked out, will he tell us a little bit more about how those who have had difficulties this year will be able to regain training posts in future years?

Mr McGimpsey: One of the stipulations of the Hayes Review was that if doctors missed out on training posts for one year, they would not be precluded from applying for the speciality of their choice when they reapplied at the end of the year, thereby ensuring that experience would not count against them.

The position is different when a doctor misses a speciality, but there are other posts available that need to be filled over the next number of months — that happens continually. I cannot give Mr Ford a definitive answer, or numbers, on the underemployment of doctors. I can write to the Member on that, although I am assured that the problem is getting cover for patients, not underemployment of doctors.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE BUSINESS

Children (Emergency Protection Orders)

Bill: First Stage

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): I beg leave to introduce to the Assembly a Bill [NIA 6/07] to repeal article 64(8) of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Bill will be put on the list of future business until a date for its Second Stage is determined.

Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): I beg to move

That the Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007 (S.R. 2007/347) be approved.

I am seeking the approval of the Assembly for regulations relating to child support, which were laid before the Assembly on 27 July 2007. It may be helpful if I begin with an explanation of why the confirmatory procedure, which is the strongest form of Assembly control over regulations, is being used.

The long-standing principle, whereby Northern Ireland makes corresponding legislation to that for Great Britain in relation to child support, includes bringing regulations into operation on the same date here as in Great Britain. The Great Britain regulations to which those regulations correspond were approved by Parliament shortly before they were made by virtue of the affirmative resolution procedure. It is not possible for the Assembly to approve the Northern Ireland regulations before they are made and match the operative date. The use of the confirmatory procedure ensures that the regulations are made and come into operation, but must be approved by the Assembly within six months of the operative date, otherwise they fall.

The regulations correspond to regulations for Great Britain that the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions made following their approval by the House of Lords on 26 June and the House of Commons on 5 July.

1.30 pm

The making of child support regulation packages is a fairly regular process to ensure that legislation is kept up to date, transparent and in step with wider Government legislation. In this package of regulations, we are updating and amending child support legislation to bring it into line with changes that have been made to other Government legislation. The amendments are largely technical and make a number of amendments to various sets of regulations that govern child support.

The regulations cover two issues: first, they change the way in which the Child Support Agency calculates the net earnings of a self-employed non-resident parent; and, secondly, they increase the time allowed for a non-resident parent who lives abroad to make an appeal and increase the notice period that the agency must give such a non-resident parent before commencing certain enforcement proceedings.

The changes to self-employed income became necessary following a House of Lords judgement. The Lords ruled that the meaning in legislation of taxable profits, which provide the basis for calculating such earnings, was ambiguous. The Law Lords ruled that the agency's interpretation of taxable profits was incorrect. We have, therefore, taken this opportunity to clarify what we mean, by providing a definition of taxable profits, which corresponds to that used by Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs, and to change the information that the agency used to calculate self-employed earnings. The result is that self-employed earnings as assessed by the agency will now more closely match those of Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs.

The second change is to increase the time allowed for a non-resident parent who lives abroad to appeal a deduction-from-earnings order. The agency can obtain a deduction-from-earnings order should a non-resident parent not co-operate with the payment of child maintenance. That allows the payment of maintenance to be taken directly from the non-resident parent's earnings. Before the amendment to the legislation, a non-resident parent could appeal a deduction-from-earnings order within 28 days. That period applied to all non-resident parents, both those living in Northern Ireland and Great Britain and those living abroad. The amendment extends the period in which to appeal to 56 days for non-resident parents living abroad, in recognition of the fact that it may be more difficult to make representations or bring an appeal within the same time frame as UK residents can.

I brought the regulations to the Committee for Social Development, which considered them at its meeting on 13 September 2007 and recommended that they be approved by the Assembly.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development (Mr Campbell): The Committee for Social Development considered The Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007 on 13 September 2007. The regulations are a parity measure and amend various pieces of legislation on child support maintenance payments. They update and amend child support legislation to bring it into line with changes that had been made to other pieces of Government legislation, but specifically they amend the definition of taxable profits and extend the period in which appeals against certain orders are permitted.

At its meeting on 13 September, the Committee agreed to recommend that the regulations be confirmed by the Assembly.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The Minister has confirmed that she intends to wind up the existing Child Support Agency and deliver the new arrangements directly through the Department for Social Development. Can she confirm that none of the new arrangements will be privatised and that they will continue to be administered by civil servants? How effective does the Minister consider that the new scheme will be, in light of the fact that we have been told that up to 40% of social security staff may lose their jobs?

Ms Ritchie: I presume that there will be no further comments about those orders. Therefore, I thank Members for their contributions to the discussions about the regulations.

The Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007 make small but important changes to the current child support scheme. Protecting and safeguarding children is pivotal and crucial and, above all, is the attempt to deal with child poverty by ensuring that those responsible for the maintenance of those children are addressed and live up to expectations.

The Member for Newry and Armagh Mr Brady raised a significant issue relating to the future delivery of child support in Northern Ireland. I decided that staff in the Department for Social Development, should be brought into the mainstream of the Civil Service, thereby safeguarding their needs and ensuring that they remain part of the Civil Service.

Regarding the other aspects of his comments, I have concluded that the existing Northern Ireland Child Support Agency should be wound up and that the delivery of its services should be brought under the direct control of my Department. In reaching that decision, I took account of the different scale of service that is provided here, as well as the need to maintain a focus on improving services to clients.

On the matter of jobs, the size of the new child support organisation in the Department has not yet been determined. However, I will investigate and explore that issue and will, undoubtedly, address the Committee about it. Meanwhile, I have been conscious of the need to protect the jobs in a large part of my organisation by ensuring that staff were brought into the Civil Service. That decision reflects the recommendations that were made in 2006 in Sir David Henshaw's report, 'Recovering child support: routes to responsibility'. In this case, I felt that the requirement to put such a decision to a non-departmental public body was not justified.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007 (S.R. 2007/347) be approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE BUSINESS

Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill: Legislative Consent Motion

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie):
I beg to move

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of provisions of the Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill dealing with the use of information, which are contained in clause 39 of, and paragraphs 4 to 6 of Schedule 6 to, that Bill as introduced in the House of Commons.

The Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill was introduced in the House of Commons on 5 June 2007 and contains measures to take forward several proposals that were set out in the Government's White Paper, 'A new system of child maintenance'. The aim is to tackle child poverty by ensuring that more parents take responsibility for paying for their children and, consequently, that more children benefit.

Among other things, the Bill proposes the establishment of a new non-departmental public body — the child maintenance and enforcement commission — to promote parental responsibility and choice about how maintenance payments are arranged and, when arrangements break down, to improve the calculation, collection and enforcement of child maintenance. The commission's remit will not extend to Northern Ireland. However, in order to function effectively, it will be necessary for the commission to exchange information with its counterpart in Northern Ireland to ensure that non-resident parents who move between Great Britain and Northern Ireland can be held to account if they are seen to evade their responsibilities.

There is provision for the two-way exchange of information held by the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, the Department for Social Development and the Department for Employment and Learning, relating to social security, child support, war pensions and employment and training. New provisions are needed to ensure the continuing flow of that information when the child support function moves from the Department for Work and Pensions to the commission.

The Minister for Employment and Learning, the Member for East Belfast Sir Reg Empey, has indicated to me that he is content that information held by his Department relating to employment and training may be shared with the proposed child maintenance and enforcement commission.

As the subject is a transferred matter under the provisions of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, approval for the inclusion of Northern Ireland in the Bill must be sought from the Executive Committee, the Committee for Social Development and the Northern Ireland Assembly. The Executive Committee and the Committee for Social Development considered the matter and gave their approval on 13 September.

The Assembly must now consider the principle of extending to Northern Ireland the provisions in the Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill that deal with the two-way exchange of information. The exchange of information will benefit families in Great Britain and Northern Ireland as the two child support organisations will be able to work together to ensure that maintenance flows to the greatest possible number of children throughout Northern Ireland and Great Britain. I hope that Members will agree with me and support the motion.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development (Mr Campbell): The Minister wrote to the Committee for Social Development on 19 August to notify members of the Westminster Government's intention to legislate on a provision, included in the Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill, that would extend to Northern Ireland. The Bill will establish a new child maintenance and enforcement commission. Although, as the Minister has said, that commission will not operate in Northern Ireland, it will take over the child support function currently carried out by the Department for Work and Pensions.

At present, there is provision for the two-way exchange of information held by the Department for Work and Pensions, the Department for Social Development and the Department for Employment and Learning. That information covers social security, child support, war pensions and employment and training.

The provision in the Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill that extends to Northern Ireland is purely technical; it will simply enable the present arrangements for the exchange of information to continue between the Department for Social Development and the new commission. It will allow non-resident parents who move between Great Britain and Northern Ireland to continue to be held to account if they are found to be evading their financial obligations.

The Committee for Social Development considered the matter at its meeting on 13 September 2007 and agreed to support the inclusion of the provision in the Bill.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Does the Minister accept that the words "child maintenance" are much more relevant than "child support"? The Child Support Agency was an abysmal failure and did little to support those whom it was originally set up to help.

Ms Lo: I thank the Minister for bringing the legislation to the Assembly. Will she assure the House that the transition of the Child Support Agency into the Department will benefit from full consultation with staff and the Committee?

Mr Shannon: I welcome the Minister's statement about the legislation, and I wish to ask several questions. I am sure that she shared my great concerns about the Child Support Agency, not least the fact that every time one tried to contact that office, one spoke to a different person. It seemed as though there was a game of musical chairs going on there.

1.45 pm

During 2004-05, there were more than 9,000 applications for child maintenance, but just short of 2,500 calculations were completed. During 2005-06, there were, again, approximately 9,000 applications, but just short of 3,000 calculations were completed. Last year, there were 8,800 applications, but only 3,000 of those were cleared. Will the Minister assure Members that the new organisation will do a better job than the Child Support Agency has done in the past?

I have been receiving, as I am sure other Members have, a lot of correspondence on staffing issues. Will the Minister assure Members that — after the transfer of responsibility and the move of office — those who presently work in the Child Support Agency will be given other opportunities in the Civil Service in the Province? Is the Minister hoping to address the staffing issue through natural wastage? A lot of people want to stay in the Civil Service and want to be involved in that work. Members need an assurance that those issues are being considered.

Mrs McGill: Go raibh maith agat. The question that I wished to ask has already been answered.

Ms Ritchie: I thank Members for their contributions, and I also thank the Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development for his support and that of his Committee.

Micky Brady, Anna Lo and Jim Shannon have raised several issues. The purpose of the motion and the legislation is to ensure that child poverty is tackled; that people live up to their commitments in respect of child maintenance; and that every action is taken to ensure that that happens. Therefore, whether it is called support or maintenance, the important issue is that maintenance is paid, that maintenance is pursued, and that the people who deserve it actually receive it.

In response to Ms Lo's question, I want to ensure that Northern Ireland has the best possible system for delivering child maintenance/support, and, above all, that we have the best possible delivery to ensure that child poverty is tackled — that is the most significant issue.

As I said earlier, I have concluded that the existing Northern Ireland Child Support Agency should be wound up, and that relevant service delivery should be brought under the control of my Department. In reaching that decision, I took account of the different scale of the service that is provided in Northern Ireland, and the need to maintain the focus on improving the service to clients.

Members will recall that in GB, Sir David Henshaw was appointed to undertake a review into the operation and delivery of child support because of the very reasons that Jim Shannon referred to — the delays and the difficulties in the system in getting payments to children and to their respective parents. I wanted to be able to correct that, but I also wanted to reflect the Northern Ireland situation. That is why I decided, some weeks ago, to bring the Child Support Agency within the remit of the Department for Social Development.

Mr Shannon raised significant issues about employment. As I said earlier, the size of the new child support agency organisation has not yet been determined. Therefore, I am not in a position to assess the impact on staffing levels. I will come back to the Committee for Social Development and to respective Members who have raised queries about that particular issue.

I intend to introduce a Bill that will reform the present child support system, create a simple system that enables and encourages parents to make their own arrangements, but delivers firmly and more effectively for parents who need help in arranging maintenance.

There will be a consultation process on that Bill. As Minister, I want to do the best that I can to ensure that issues of child maintenance are addressed, that those who need to deliver that maintenance — namely, the absent fathers — do so, and that I have the staff and the capacity to do that.

Whatever happens, we must improve the system and dilute the causes of past criticism. We must deliver the payment to those who most need it.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of provisions of the Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill dealing with the use of information, which are contained in clause 39 of, and paragraphs 4 to 6 of Schedule 6 to, that Bill as introduced in the House of Commons.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Abortion

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for a winding-up speech. All other Members who speak will have five minutes. One amendment has been received and has been published on the Marshalled List. The proposer of the amendment will have 10 minutes to propose and five minutes for a winding-up speech.

Mrs I Robinson: I beg to move

That this Assembly opposes the introduction of the proposed guidelines on the termination of pregnancy in Northern Ireland; believes that the guidelines are flawed; and calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to abandon any attempt to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland.

I welcome the opportunity to have this debate, but I very much regret that I, as Chairman of the Health Committee, was not informed of the Ulster Unionist Party amendment as a matter of courtesy.

In our deliberations, it is essential that we recognise Lord Justice Nicholson's recent judgement, which endorsed the existing legislative position in Northern Ireland. He suggested that guidance be produced, and he stated:

"This judgment is written in the hope that the department will seek to reduce the number of women and girls going away to seek an abortion and to encourage those seeking an abortion in Northern Ireland to make a different choice. It must surely be the concern of all right-thinking persons in the United Kingdom that the number of abortions which are carried out is so high."

I also wish to point out that, before this afternoon's debate, my colleague Jeffrey Donaldson and I received a petition in support of our motion. That petition contained approximately 120,000 signatures. That petition started in early January in shopping malls, and so forth. I have no doubt that, had there been more time and more people available to collect signatures, there would have been a considerably greater number of signatures in support of the motion.

Owing to the recent postcard campaign in support of the motion, my mailbox has never been so heavy. I congratulate those who were responsible for that campaign, the sentiment of which we should all recognise. We must commit ourselves to changing the situation for the better. In order to see the number of abortions genuinely fall, a holistic approach is required, right across our society. Abortion is an issue on which I have strong Christian convictions. The sanctity of life is my overriding concern.

Better statistical records must be maintained on abortions. The current lack of information was criticised by Lord Justice Nicholson. Health workers admit that abortions occur solely on account of foetal abnormalities, but that is illegal under Northern Ireland law. No wonder some are suspicious that detailed records are purposely not being kept in order to conceal what is actually going on.

I urge that better records be kept on the physical and psychological complications that arise from abortions. I have been informed that, during a presentation given by Dr Harith Lamki in 2000, he stated that post-mortems are conducted after all abortions that are carried out for reasons of foetal abnormality.

I would like to discover the location of those records. As Chairperson of the Health Committee, I propose that the Committee seeks the records for those post mortems that have been carried out on fetuses. Dr Lamki from the Royal Victoria Hospital should appear before the Health Committee and give it some explanation about those records, which are being kept in secret.

Important child-protection issues are raised when under 14s seek abortions. There should be no secret abortions. Compared to all other rights and considerations, the confidentiality of young teenagers seems to have become paramount. Health professionals must fulfil their legal obligations towards the under 14s. Immature children should not be solely responsible for decisions that they may not have the competence or experience to make.

I am also informed that under paragraph 2.13 of the draft guidelines, which mentions forced abortions, in the cases of children who do not really want abortions, health professionals have the overriding right to insist that those children have abortions. It will cause all of us a great deal of concern to know that parents are not to be included in such decisions.

We must ensure that the Health Service gives strong protection to conscientious objectors who do not want to have any part in assisting with abortions either on grounds of faith or otherwise. That term is used on the mainland; however, it is important to flag up that such people should not be forced to carry out abortions.

Abortion hurts women. It hurts their minds, hearts, bodies, and relationships with other people. I emphasise that there are no maternal deaths in this jurisdiction due to not having an abortion. There are no unsafe abortions in Northern Ireland. There is no medical condition that requires direct abortion.

If we are really concerned about the experience and quality of life of women in Northern Ireland, we will do everything that we can to reduce the number of abortions that occur.

As I said earlier, I am committed to the sanctity of life, and I am determined to prioritise women's health. That is why I care deeply about abortion. Some people suggest that abortion offers a solution — I simply cannot agree. In truth, abortion does not bring solutions; it brings only pain, heartache, and loss. We can say that hindsight is a wonderful thing, but many women come to my surgery carrying guilt that, generally speaking, they will carry to their graves.

Abortion is bad for babies, women, families, and society. Women face potential safety issues as a result of having an abortion. The number of deaths is very small, but damage, or infection, to the uterus or fallopian tubes may occur and may lead to infertility. Menstrual difficulties can also result. Women may suffer significant emotional trauma. There is also some evidence that having an abortion may increase a woman's risk of getting breast cancer, although the results of studies on that are not consistent.

The Canadian Medical Association Journal was criticised for publishing data outlining the psychological side effects of abortion. In an editorial, the journal was forced to state:

"we cannot toss out data any time we don't like their implications".

An opinion piece by Breda O'Brien in 'The Irish Times' on Saturday reflected on last Wednesday's 'Dispatches' programme on Channel 4, which screened graphic images of abortions and their aftermath. A surgeon of a Marie Stopes International clinic, who carried out late-term abortions, was interviewed for the programme. Even at the relatively early stage of 12 to 13 weeks, foetuses had to be dismembered.

The surgeon admitted that he did not go into the details of what is involved when women have the procedure, because it is too upsetting.

2.00 pm

Mr Donaldson: Is my honourable friend and the House aware that a petition of more than 100,000 signatures opposing the guidelines was presented to the Assembly this morning? If Members wish to see those signatures from both sides of the community in Northern Ireland, they are in the Rotunda, stacked in boxes. Does the honourable Member agree that it is clear that there is overwhelming public opposition to the draft guidelines and that the Assembly should take that fact into account?

Mrs I Robinson: I thank the Member for that point. I totally concur with him that a vast number of people signed the petition. Earlier in my speech, I referred to the 120,000 signatures that had been collected and that were presented to the Assembly this morning.

Mr P Ramsey: The Member referred to Channel 4's 'Dispatches'. Does she agree that, if the guidelines were introduced in Northern Ireland, in one part of a hospital, doctors would be aborting children — dismembering legs and arms — while in another part of the same hospital, doctors in an intensive care unit would be trying to bring children back to life?

Mrs I Robinson: The Member must have read my speech, because I was about to refer to that issue. The contradiction is so sad; on the one hand, there are doctors who are fighting for the life of a child who has arrived prematurely —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member please bring her remarks to a close?

Mrs I Robinson: On the other hand, there are doctors who are dragging a foetus out of a woman's body. If that foetus had lived, it would probably have been a very healthy child.

Mr McCallister: I beg to move the following amendment: Leave out all after "Assembly" and insert

"calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following consultation with the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, to bring forward guidelines on the lawful termination of pregnancy, as defined by the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945, and the Bourne Judgment case law, and in accordance with the ruling of the Courts."

As we debate the motion and the amendment, I am sure that all sides of the House, including the proposers of the motion, will share my view that the difficult, painful and divisive issue of abortion should not be deployed for partisan political ends. I also trust that all Members who speak today willingly accept that, whatever debate we might have at some stage on the Abortion Act 1967, today is not the day for that debate. That is because, without the devolution of policing and justice powers, the House, under the provisions of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, does not have the authority to change or overturn the existing legal position on abortion in this part of the United Kingdom. The amendment clearly restates and reaffirms the existing legal position.

Mr Donaldson: Is the Member aware that the Secretary of State, in response to a question that I tabled in the House of Commons, stated clearly that Parliament would not legislate on abortion without having regard to the views of the Assembly? Does he accept that today is an opportunity to put down a clear marker on the issue?

Mr McCallister: I thank the Rt Hon Member for his intervention. My answer is yes, which will become clear later in my speech.

Mrs I Robinson: Does the Member also accept that the majority of people in Northern Ireland — from all faiths and none — would baulk if any Government or legislative assembly insisted on softening the 1967 Act?

Mr McCallister: I have no difficulty in agreeing with the honourable Member's comment. My speech will clarify that the UUP amendment is about obeying rather than softening the law.

Under the provisions of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945 and the Bourne judgement of 1939, abortion is illegal in Northern Ireland except where it is necessary to save the life of the mother or where continuation of the pregnancy would involve a risk of serious injury to her physical or mental health.

The amendment explicitly states that any guidelines issued by the Department of Health with regard to the lawful termination of pregnancy must be entirely consistent with that legal framework as it stands.

The vote in this House in June 2000 demonstrated that there is no indication that the Northern Ireland Assembly is minded to change the existing law on abortion. What is more, in another place, Her Majesty's Government have stated that it is not their intention to seek to bypass this House on the matter. As recently as July 2007, Her Majesty's Government declared:

"The Government have no plans to amend the law on abortion in Northern Ireland. We believe the best forum for discussion of these questions is the Northern Ireland Assembly, once it has assumed responsibility for the criminal law."

That is the settled position in law. "Law" — that is the word that is, or should be, central in today's debate. In October 2004, the courts instructed the Department to issue appropriate guidance on the lawful termination of pregnancy. That positive duty is mentioned nowhere in the motion that has been proposed by Mr Donaldson and Mrs Robinson. Members will rightly be concerned that Ministers are subject to the rule of law. None of us, I assume, wishes Ministers to exercise arbitrary power or to dismiss the courts as an inconvenience.

Whatever the merit of the motion's commitment to the existing legal position in respect of abortion, it has overlooked the fact that the Minister is not — and should not be — free to ignore the rulings of the courts. In his judgment, Lord Justice Nicholson stated that:

"In this case the court is only concerned with the ... department's responsibilities in regard to abortion under the legal framework established by Parliament ... The outcome of this appeal does not entitle anyone to claim that as a result the law should be liberalized."

The purpose of the guidelines that the Minister and his Department have been instructed by the courts to issue cannot and should not undermine the legal framework established by Parliament; that is, the existing legal position.

Let me make it absolutely clear, as the proposer of the amendment, that I do not support the extension of the 1967 Act to Northern Ireland, nor do I support abortion on demand.

Mrs Long: Does the Member agree that, although the concerns that were expressed by the proposer of the motion are shared by many in this Chamber, if we wish to have a formal debate on the specific matter of the Abortion Act 1967, it would be better to have it under that title, rather than debating around the guidelines for the current situation?

Mr McCallister: I agree, and I thank the honourable Member for that useful intervention.

The amendment calls on the Minister to work with the Health Committee in bringing forth the guidelines. It will be obvious to Members that one of the proposers of the motion is also the Chairperson of the Health Committee. Of course, I also am a member of the Health Committee. I am sure that, under her robust chairmanship, the Committee will seek to ensure that all the concerns of this House on the guidelines are addressed. As she rightly said, she will be guided by Christian values that are of course shared by others on that Committee.

The amendment has nothing to do with, in the words of the court, liberalising the law in Northern Ireland with regard to abortion. I would not be supporting or speaking for such an amendment. This amendment is about the rule of law. The guidelines issued by the Department must be consistent with the law on abortion as it stands. The Minister and the Department are not free to arbitrarily ignore the court's instruction to issue guidelines.

Mr Durkan: Can the Member clarify for the House whether he believes that the proposed guidelines, as published, are consistent with the legal provisions that his amendment mentions?

Mr McCallister: The proposed guidelines will come before the Health Committee, and that is where they will be subjected to serious scrutiny. At the moment they are only draft guidelines.

Mr Donaldson: I am trying to understand why the Member opposes the motion. The motion simply opposes the introduction of the "proposed guidelines" — he has just used that phrase. It does not prohibit the Minister from bringing forward other guidelines and taking those to the Health Committee. It says that the guidelines, as proposed, are unacceptable and that any attempt to make abortion more widely available is unacceptable. As I understand it, the honourable Member accepts both points, but I need to be clear: does he see the current guidelines as flawed? Does he oppose their introduction? If so, why can he not support the motion?

Mr McCallister: The Minister and his Department have no option but to bring forward guidelines that are within the law. As Lord Justice Nicholson said, it is not about liberalising the law. If the Member reads the judgment that I quoted, it will be clear to him that this is not about liberalising the law on abortion. I do not support liberalising the law on abortion.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: I had better.

Mr Wells: Does the honourable Member realise that an amendment has been proposed in the House of Commons by a Liberal MP, almost as we speak, to extend the 1967 Act to Northern Ireland? Whereas my party's motion will send a clear message to Westminster that that is not acceptable, his amendment, if passed, will send it a very woolly motion that will mean nothing.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Time is up. I am sorry.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Sinn Féin supports both the amendment and the motion.

It is hardly surprising that ethics and morality are at the heart of the debate. The guidelines that are the subject of the debate have yet to be tabled or discussed at the Health Committee.

The Assembly's debate on abortion in 2000 was primarily about the Abortion Act 1967. At that time, my colleague Mary Nelis remarked that we need an:

"honest and reasoned debate on what is a tragic dilemma for women." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 5, p221, col 2].

I concur with that.

The draft or proposed guidelines are a direct result of the Family Planning Association's application for judicial review, which obliged the Department of Health to produce a set of guidelines which will protect staff. The guidelines are not about the extension of the British Abortion Act 1967. The Family Planning Association initiated the judicial review process because there were too many inconsistencies in the provision of abortion in the North of Ireland. Those inconsistencies resulted in many years of confusion about legal protection for professionals who might be asked to participate in an abortion that could be deemed illegal, and who might then be open to prosecution. The draft or proposed guidelines will address those issues, which, for many years, it has been easier and more comfortable to ignore.

The purpose of any guidelines must be to outline the law relating to the termination of pregnancy in the North. Sinn Féin is not in favour of abortion. It is against the extension of the British Abortion Act 1967 to the North of Ireland. We believe that all possible education and support services should be put in place to protect crisis pregnancies. Sinn Féin does not support any attempt to make abortion more widely available; however, it accepts that health professionals working in that field need to have clear guidance. My party has been consistent in its approach. When the abortion issue was discussed in the last Assembly, Sinn Féin placed on record its firm opposition to the extension to the North of the British Abortion Act 1967. Sinn Féin believes that this complex matter should be referred to the Health Committee.

Irish society has a responsibility to address the fact that between 5,000 and 10,000 women travel from every part of Ireland to Britain for abortions each year.

Sinn Féin's view is that the way to tackle crisis pregnancies and abortions is through comprehensive sex education, full access to affordable childcare and comprehensive support services that include financial support for single parents.

2.15 pm

My party opposes the attitudes and forces in society that pressure women to have abortions. Equally, my party opposes those who criminalise women who make that tough decision. In cases of rape, incest, sexual abuse or when a women's life or health is in grave danger, Sinn Féin accepts that the final decision must rest with the woman.

My party supports the principle that there should not be any attempt to make abortion more widely available in the North. Guidelines should be discussed by the Health Committee in the first instance, a discussion that should be based on information and be within the parameters of current legislation. That position has guided my party's attitude to the debate. Therefore, Sinn Féin will support the amendment and, indeed, the motion. Go raibh maith agat.

Mrs Hanna: I support the motion. At the outset, I want to pass on my colleague Dominic Bradley's apologies to the House. He had hoped to be present to speak to the motion.

As a party that was born out of the civil rights movement, the SDLP believes that the right to life is the most basic right of all. That includes the right to life of the unborn. My party has been consistently opposed to the taking of life, whether it be the life of Paul Quinn, who was so brutally murdered in Monaghan at the weekend; life that was lost during the civil conflict that society has endured for the past four decades; or life that is taken by the state through capital punishment. It is for that reason that the SDLP opposes abortion, upholds the right to life of the foetus and opposes the extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

The Assembly must approach the matter of unwanted pregnancy with the utmost compassion and support for the pregnant woman. Fortunately, the stigma of illegitimacy has almost been banished from society. However, much more support must be provided for mothers and the family unit. I pay tribute to the care and compassion that has been shown by the statutory agencies, as well as voluntary agencies such as CURA and LIFE Ireland.

As the SDLP's health spokesperson, I responded to the Department's draft guidance on the termination of pregnancy in Northern Ireland that was issued in January 2007. I registered my concerns about the implications of the proposed new guidelines, particularly their non-specific nature, because I believe that they could lead to a relaxation of the restrictions on abortion in Northern Ireland. The Court of Appeal ruling in October 2004 ordered the Department to draw up the guidance on which abortions can be carried out under the law, on the foot of a challenge by the Family Planning Association. The court's judgement did not indicate that the law should be liberalised in any way, yet the draft guidance appears to do just that.

If the draft guidance is implemented, it will have significant moral, ethical and resource implications for the Health Service. At present, abortion is permitted in Northern Ireland only if the mother's life is in danger or if there is a serious long-term threat to her mental and physical health. Otherwise, abortion can be deemed a criminal act. Some case law has held that abortion is not always prohibited. Clear and concise guidelines are absolutely essential in order to end the current uncertainty. The draft guidelines are ambiguous and open to various interpretations. Terms such as "quality of life" and "serious adverse harm" are not defined. Interpretations will vary from one medical professional to another.

Not only do doctors need strong guidance, but the pregnant woman also needs as much information as possible on the support that is available to her during and after her pregnancy. If the woman's doctor considers that her condition warrants an abortion, she must understand clearly the reasons for that and what exactly the doctor proposes. The terminology is vague and uncertain. There is concern that the statistics that are provided by the Department have been underestimated. Closer monitoring and information gathering is needed in order to ensure that much more accurate data is available.

Finally, I express my concern that the draft guidance was not placed on the central consultation register for Northern Ireland Departments, nor publicly circulated, given the controversial nature of the issue.

I ask the Minister to ensure: that the draft guidance is re-drafted for clarity and to remove ambiguity; that there is much wider consultation, not just to the Health Committee, as stated in the amendment; and that there is no relaxation in the interpretation of the law.

Ms Lo: First, I wish to state that I am speaking in a personal capacity. The Alliance Party regards abortion as a matter of conscience for individual Members, who each hold their own views. I oppose the motion and support the amendment. As a former social worker and community worker, I have supported women and families who were faced with the stress and consequences of unplanned pregnancies, which are a reality in our society.

In 2005, 1,164 women from Northern Ireland travelled to England to have an abortion. Many others went to other parts of Europe for abortions. The Abortion Act 1967 does not extend to Northern Ireland. Abortion is only legal under certain circumstances — something which has caused confusion and ambiguities in Northern Ireland. There is confusion in communities — particularly among those people who come from other parts of the UK, or other countries — about what is and is not permitted under the law.

Depending on where one lives, there are inconsistencies throughout Northern Ireland about where abortion services may or may not be available. In addition, some health staff may have conscientious objections to abortion and may be unsure about their employment rights if they refuse to participate in performing a termination.

As we have heard, the Department issued draft guidelines to clarify the legal position and give guidance to health professionals on service provision following the Court of Appeal decision, which was instigated by the Family Planning Association. I have read through those guidelines, which were produced by a working group comprising representatives from a range of professional and specialist backgrounds. I welcome the guidelines. The Department has also received many responses from the public and from interested parties.

The guidelines are not about extending the provision of abortion to Northern Ireland or about bringing the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland. Lord Justice Nicholson made it clear that his ruling did not mean that the law should be liberalised. The guidelines provide clearer directions to health professionals on procedures and practice and, ultimately, will improve the quality of service to women who are often confused when facing such a situation in their lives.

Of course, there are criticisms from the voluntary sector about gaps on many issues such as informed consent, referrals, information giving and so on. The draft guidelines are a good basis on which to formulate guidance. The Department and the Health Committee should consider carefully the views from the consultation and should take into account all of the relevant suggestions that could be incorporated into the final guidelines.

Abortion is an emotive issue. The motion to oppose the introduction of the proposed guidelines is an attempt to whip up emotions and sabotage the aim of the Department and the Law Courts, which is to provide health workers with a better understanding of the principles of the law and guidance for better practice for all. It is important that we are clear that the House is not debating whether abortion should be legalised in Northern Ireland.

It is essential that the scrutiny of the draft guidelines be left to the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety. The Committee can call for evidence from relevant bodies, and thus ensure that it is well informed to make a sound judgement on the guidelines.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Members will be aware that Question Time will begin at 2.30 pm. I therefore ask Members to take their ease until then.

The debate will resume at the end of Question Time.

The debate stood suspended.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Oral Answers to Questions

FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Engagements

2.30 pm

1. Mr Brolly asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail what engagements have been carried out by the First Minister and the deputy First Minister in the past seven days.

(AQO 580/08)

The deputy First Minister (Mr M McGuinness):
On Monday 15 October, the First Minister and I met a group of senior diplomats from around the world who were on a one-day visit to Belfast. We also met Lord Ashdown and his team on the strategic review of parading.

On Tuesday 16 October, the First Minister and I hosted a lunch for the US ambassadors to Ireland and Britain and a group of senior business people as part of the preparation for the Executive's investment conference, due to be held in May 2008. The First Minister also hosted a meeting of leading church representatives to facilitate a discussion on the proposed charities Bill.

On Wednesday 17 October, we jointly met a number of representatives to discuss the Maze/Long Kesh regeneration. That was followed by a meeting with the Commissioner for Public Appointments and attendance at a lunch hosted by the Speaker to mark the visit of the President of Croatia. We also held a private meeting with the Croatian President and his delegation.

On Thursday 18 October, the First Minister was involved in the launch at Parliament Buildings of the 'Northern Corridor — Railway Renaissance' report by the Northern Corridor Railways Group. As scheduled, we chaired a meeting of the Executive Committee.

On Friday 19 October, we both carried out a range of non-ministerial engagements, including constituency business. In addition to those engagements, we dealt with a significant number of departmental policy and Executive papers, Assembly Questions and other matters relating to our ministerial roles.

Mr Brolly: Go raibh maith agat arís, a Cheann Comhairle. Will the deputy First Minister provide some detail about the meeting with the US ambassadors Tuttle and Foley?

The deputy First Minister: Last Tuesday, the First Minister and I hosted a very successful lunch for the representatives of 17 blue-chip US companies, accompanied by Bob Tuttle, the US ambassador to the UK and Tom Foley, the US ambassador to Ireland. Together with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, we had the opportunity to brief them on the exciting economic opportunities here and to encourage them to consider investing. The visit was initiated by President Bush's special envoy, Paula Dobriansky, as part of her very effective focus in securing support for the planned investment conference here next May. We believe that the conference will mark a massive step forward in helping to grow a dynamic and innovative economy, which is one of the key priorities in our draft Programme for Government. We look forward to debating the draft programme in the House later this week.

The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr Kennedy): Will the deputy First Minister join me in condemning without any equivocation the brutal murder of Mr Paul Quinn from Cullyhanna at the weekend? Given his own role as a major figure in the republican movement, will the deputy First Minister publicly use his position of influence to ensure that the individuals responsible for this murder are identified and dealt with by the lawful authorities in both jurisdictions, irrespective of their background or political leanings?

The deputy First Minister: I have no problem whatsoever in agreeing with everything that the Member has said. This was a dastardly murder, carried out by criminals in my opinion, and I speak with the full authority of the House when I say that we all send our sympathy to that poor man's family. It was disgraceful, and I appeal to anyone who has any information, no matter who they are, to give that information both to the Garda Síochána and to the Police Service here in the North; that is the only course that is open to them. Those activities are absolutely disgusting and have no place whatsoever in a civilised society.

Mr Speaker: Before I call Mr Ford, I say again to Members on all sides of the House that supplementary questions must relate to the original question.

Mr Ford: I associate myself and my colleagues with Mr Kennedy's remarks.

Given that the deputy First Minister and his colleagues have not found time between June and last week's Executive meeting to discuss the conflict transformation initiative, will the deputy First Minister now give a commitment to the House that the Executive will collectively ensure that funding of that initiative is brought to an end and that the wish of the great majority of people is carried through?

The deputy First Minister: That issue has been marked more by fiction than by fact. I speak on behalf of everyone on the Executive when I say that I am absolutely opposed to any funding whatsoever going to the UDA, whether it decommissions its weapons or not. The funding that was introduced by Peter Hain was irregular; it was wrong, and it should never have been introduced. The decision that was made by the Minister for Social Development was absolutely correct.

'Challenge of Change'

2. Mr Brady asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to give an assessment of the 'Challenge of Change' cross-border anti-racism initiative. (AQO 581/08)

The deputy First Minister: On behalf of the First Minister and myself, I had the pleasure of launching the Challenge of Change initiative on 3 October. I reiterate my congratulations to Newry and Mourne District Council and Louth County Council on securing significant European funding for that important work. Both areas, in common with many other areas here and in the South, have seen unprecedented growth in the diversity of their population over recent years. That offers enormous economic, social and cultural benefits. However, it also brings substantial challenges, in particular to ensure that all who choose to come and live here have the opportunity to participate fully in our society. Our public services face a particular challenge: if we do not promote racial equality in how we deliver services, we will risk promoting racial inequality. It is essential that everyone has access to opportunities and similar life chances. At the local level, the challenges must be met and the benefits of our increasing diversity must be secured. The Office of the First and deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) commends the initiative of both councils in establishing the Challenge of Change project. We are confident that it will yield benefits for service users locally and important lessons for us all.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Can the deputy First Minister give an update on when the Peace III operational programme funding will become available?

The deputy First Minister: I am pleased that we have secured a third special EU peace programme. Including matched funding, Peace III will be worth €330 million from 2007 to 2013. That is a shared allocation between the Executive and the Irish Government. The Peace III budget is smaller than those of previous EU peace programmes. Following enlargement, the EU has faced significant challenges of political and economic transformation in many of the new member states. To have secured funding for a third EU peace programme in those circumstances represents a significant achievement. The draft Peace III operational programme has been submitted to the European Commission for approval. We look forward to agreement with the European Commission on the new programme so that it can open for applications later this year.

Mr McNarry: Will the deputy First Minister agree that change in diversity will come only when the lead parties in the Assembly stop pursuing their linguistic agendas ahead of the economic agendas?

The deputy First Minister: There is a mighty responsibility, not only on the two larger parties but on all of the parties in the Assembly, to show leadership in the community. All parties must recognise that newcomers are arriving on our shores, North and South, and that that represents major challenges. To use the question to open up another debate on another argument — I presume about the Irish language — is a bit of a liberty and a mistake. Ensuring that people are treated with fairness and equality is the responsibility not only of the two larger parties but all of the parties in the Assembly. I am delighted to say that all of the parties in the Assembly, and many local government agencies, are now working hard to ensure that people who come here are not only welcomed, but given the essential support that they deserve.

Mrs Hanna: Can the Minister assure me that the anti-racism initiative will be part of a local strategy to promote racial equality, especially in hotspots, where racism must be proactively challenged?

The deputy First Minister: I absolutely agree. The initiative that Newry and Mourne District Council and Louth Local Authorities took demonstrates that local authorities and people in different parts of the country are facing up to the huge challenges before us. There has been a recent increase in racist attacks, and we have a huge responsibility to do everything in our power to ensure that we defend the rights of people who come here, many of whom feel isolated, lonely and vulnerable.

Plans to Promote Northern Ireland

3. Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what plans it has to promote Northern Ireland in the United States of America and in Europe. (AQO 503/08)

The deputy First Minister: Promotion in the United States and Europe is a high priority for OFMDFM. The bureau in Washington promotes several priority sectors to key audiences in the United States, including politicians, businesspeople, academics, research institutions and cultural organisations. We are also engaged in several major initiatives to encourage investment and visits from the United States.

Invest NI and the bureau are working with the US State Department and US businesses to bring over several economic missions in the next few months. We will travel to Washington, DC, and other major US cities to plan an economic conference for early 2008. OFMDFM will work with Minister Dodds and meet chief executives of major US corporations to promote the investment message.

The First Minister and I hope to travel to Brussels before Christmas to hear, at first hand, about the progress made by the European Commission Task Force, the establishment of which the Commission's President Barroso announced on 1 May 2007. Our planned visit follows on from a series of visits by Ministers over the past six months: several Executive colleagues, including both junior Ministers and I, have visited Brussels and met senior politicians and officials on departmental business. Such a level of personal engagement is important in keeping the North in the minds of our European partners. It demonstrates to those in the European institutions, in addition to potential investors, tourists and regional and industrial partners, that we are open for business.

I commend the work of the Executive's Brussels office, which supports Ministers and officials when they visit the city. To ensure that the North's interests are taken into account as policies are developed, it also assists Departments in their monitoring of policy and legislative proposals that are working their way through the institutions. The office works with other regional offices to promote a positive image, most recently by participating, with other regional offices, in the European open-day event that promoted Europe's regions and cities. The office also makes its facilities, expertise and advice available to local government and civil society representatives to assist them in their dealings with the European institutions.

Mr Shannon: I thank the Minister for his detailed response that outlined the situations in the United States and Europe. Does the Minister agree that there is tremendous goodwill in the USA and Europe towards the people of Northern Ireland and the Assembly? Does he agree that it is time to promote Northern Ireland and to encourage businesses to set up here and create employment, which would benefit everyone? Will stronger trade links be established between businesses in Northern Ireland and those in USA and Europe?

The deputy First Minister: I recently visited the United States at the same time as Ministers Poots and Empey. There, the phenomenal interest in the political developments over recent months is obvious. A tremendous sense of goodwill and support emanates from everyone that we meet on our visits to the United States. In all probability, the most important economic-investment conference ever to be held here will take place in about May 2008. In the lead-up to that conference, further economic missions will come over from the United States. That demonstrates that people in the United States have a huge interest in the situation here and are seriously considering investing in this part of the world.

2.45 pm

There is a limited window of opportunity because the presidential election campaign kicks off, big time, early in 2008. Therefore, the period between now and May 2008 is critical. We must take advantage of that opportunity, but we are being well supported. The visit by Ambassador Tuttle and Ambassador Foley and the level of interest being shown by Paula Dobriansky at the State Department clearly show that there is enormous goodwill for all the work that we are doing. If the economic investment conference is successful, and if we secure more highly paid, quality jobs for our young people, that will have a massive effect on the battle that we are fighting to ensure that the economic prospects for all our people are improved.

Mr Gallagher: Does the deputy First Minister agree that, in promoting any part of Ireland, a key target group is those of Irish descent, and that that is particularly true in the United States? Will the deputy First Minister provide an update of any discussions that he has had with the Dublin Government in relation to the promotion of the island? As a representative of a constituency that has been starved of foreign inward investment for many years, does he see any role —

Mr Speaker: Order. Supplementary questions should relate to the original question. I have to rule that supplementary question out of order. It does not, in any way, relate to the original question.

Mr McCallister: I will try to stay on the subject. Does the deputy First Minister agree that the fundamental purpose of our Washington office differs from that of the European office, in that it is primarily geared towards attracting new business and inward investment to Northern Ireland? To that end, does he believe that the office should, therefore, be business led rather than managed by the Civil Service?

The deputy First Minister: The experiences of recent years were a result of the circumstances of the time. However, we now find ourselves in a wholly new situation as a result of restoration of the institutions. As I said in an earlier answer, there is huge interest in the United States and in Irish America. Many Irish-American companies have shown tremendous interest. Much of the work that has been done by the Irish Government has assisted our efforts to generate interest in attempts to bring about an approach whereby everywhere on the island will benefit, but, particularly here in the North, because we have had such uneven development in recent times.

There are big questions for us to answer in respect of the Washington bureau and how we take its work forward. There will be a change in the leadership of the bureau in the next few weeks. On 1 November, Norman Houston takes up his position as director of the bureau. The challenges that lie ahead must take into account the points that Mr McCallister has just made.

North/South Ministerial Council: Institutional Format

4. Mr W Clarke asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail what arrangements have been made for the North/South Ministerial Council to meet in institutional format; and the issues that will be under discussion at that meeting. (AQO 579/08)

The deputy First Minister: At its plenary meeting on 17 July 2007, the North/South Ministerial Council agreed to hold a meeting in institutional format in October 2007. The North/South Ministerial Council secretariat is currently finalising arrangements for that meeting. We will give the Executive and the Assembly details of the date, agenda and ministerial attendance for the meeting when those have been finalised and agreed. Following the meeting, a report will be made to the Executive and to the Assembly.

Mr W Clarke: Will the deputy First Minister update the House on the establishment of the review of areas of North/South co-operation and of the all-Ireland implementation bodies? Furthermore, will he provide details of the two advisers from the Executive who will be appointed to that review?

The deputy First Minister: The review will be undertaken by a review group, which will report to the North/South Ministerial Council. The review group includes senior officials from the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, the Department of the Taoiseach, the Department of Foreign Affairs, and the North/South Ministerial Council secretariat. The review group will include an advisory panel of four expert advisers, two of whom will be nominated by the Executive and two of whom will be nominated by the Irish Government.

The two expert advisers appointed by the Executive are Peter King and Sean Oliver.

Mr Gardiner: Can the deputy First Minister confirm that the mode of operation of the North/South Ministerial Council, including meetings in the institutional format, remains unchanged from the protocol of the Belfast Agreement of 10 April 1998 and the British-Irish Agreement of 2 December 1999?

The deputy First Minister: The North/South Ministerial Council is what it is.

Mr Durkan: Would it be possible for Ministers representing both Administrations, meeting in the institutional format, to discuss the possibility of a new study of the obstacles to mobility to take account of new issues that are arising — particularly in, but not confined to, border areas — including access to and eligibility for services, as well as the question of residential requirements that are imposed on different services? That is a matter that must be looked at in the round if politicians are to find sensible answers for service providers and service users.

The deputy First Minister: I have no doubt that that issue, among a range of others, will be discussed. There is no doubt that many people on both sides of the border face huge difficulties and obstacles to mobility. There are some very human stories — none of which I will relate to the House today — of people experiencing massive difficulties as a result of the obstacles. There is a willingness on all sides, which was shown at the last meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council in Armagh, to discuss those matters with a view to resolving them.

Tackling Racism and Sectarianism

5. Mr McHugh asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the next steps it will take in tackling racism and sectarianism.

(AQO 582/08)

The deputy First Minister: The First Minister and I have consistently committed ourselves and the Executive to the elimination of sectarianism and racism. Hate crime, in any form, is unacceptable. Recent PSNI statistics show a mixed picture: although there has been a decrease in sectarian crimes and incidents, the number of racial crimes rose from 746 to 861, which is an increase of 15%. Racial incidents also rose from 936 to 1,047, which is a 12% increase. The issues that sectarian and racist attacks raise — as well as the broader issue of racial equality — concern all sections of society. No community can be complacent about this wickedness.

While criminal justice matters are not transferred, we are committed to working closely with the police service and criminal justice agencies to tackle sectarian and racist attacks. Over the next few months, we will bring forward detailed proposals for a programme of cohesion and integration — designed to build on some of the excellent work being done, particularly by district councils — to address the challenges that local communities face. The core of those proposals will be action to tackle racism and sectarianism. The Department intends to bring the proposals for discussion to the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and to the Assembly in the next few months.

In the meantime, the Department will continue its extensive work with councils and other key organisations to support the excellent work to address sectarianism and racism and build good relations in many local communities.

Mr McHugh: I am sure that the deputy First Minister will agree that, following a racist attack on a family in Enniskillen, it is important that the local community should actively show its opposition to those who carry out such foolish attacks. What information is given to migrants when they come to this part of Ireland, given that they are often inarticulate — due to language difficulties — and, often, badly represented?

The deputy First Minister: Attacks on anyone — particularly newcomers to our shores, many of whom feel isolated and lonely — must be utterly condemned by everyone, whether they occur in Enniskillen or anywhere else.

The Government is committed to protecting the rights of all workers. It is not in anyone's interests for new arrivals to be paid less than the going rate or have to put up with overcrowding in substandard and unsafe accommodation. It is clearly not in the interests of the migrant workers themselves nor those of the vast majority of the population.

OFMDFM has funded a number of welcome packs to address the information needs of new arrivals. We have also been pleased to have provided the funding, along with the Human Rights Commission, to produce a series of migrant worker rights guides. We have distributed thousands of copies, as well as making them available on the Internet. The guides are for workers from the EU/EEA member states, the so-called accession states, and for those outside the EU who arrive under work-permit and sector-based scheme arrangements. They provide comprehensive information on social security, housing, employment, health, immigration and other rights to help newcomers exercise their rights.

The Law Centre and the Human Rights Commission are to be congratulated on their work in producing the booklets, and we are pleased to have facilitated the extensive consultation between the authors and Government Departments to ensure the accuracy of the information. We will continue to fulfil that role, as the guides are updated periodically.

Mrs Long: I thank the Minister for his answer. Last week, departmental officials briefed the Committee about the proposed good relations priority in the Department. They said that no assurance could be given that that priority would be based on the shared future policy, but that the emphasis would be on tolerance. In light of that, will the Minister take the opportunity to reassure Members that the First Minister and deputy First Minister are fully aware of progress in community relations thinking since the 1970s? Will he also reassure us that they will shortly, and jointly, look at active promotion of community relations through less passive priorities, such as engagement in education, and that they remain committed to the promotion of a shared future?

The deputy First Minister: The First Minister and I, and our colleagues in the Executive, are consistently, through the responsibilities of our Departments, interested to ensure that we tackle the many grave issues relating to people who are being subjected to racial attacks and sectarianism. Obviously we want to move forward together.

By coming together in this Government, along with other parties, we recognise our responsibility to move forward in a shared way. We all know, and understand, that there are huge challenges — so these issues are a work in progress. During the course of our deliberations we will acquaint the Committee with those issues, and we will continually update our approach and attitude on how to tackle those very serious issues that have been identified.

Mr B McCrea: Is the deputy First Minister aware that in 2002 the University of Ulster produced research that indicated that one in three children aged from seven to 12 have received some form of sectarian threat, and if he has the run of himself, will he indicate whether that situation has become worse, better or stayed the same? Will he indicate if he is minded to do something about that himself, or will he bring the matter back to his Executive colleagues?

The deputy First Minister: We are all very conscious of our terrible past and the need to ensure, as we move forward, that we do not make the same mistakes that were made then. The restoration of these institutions on 8 May, alongside the North/South Ministerial Council and the British-Irish Council clearly signals that all of us connected with politics in the North of Ireland want to move forward together.

The leadership shown by all of the Members in this Assembly sets a good example to many people, but we are a society emerging from a very bitter conflict, and we have a duty and a responsibility, as we move forward, to show leadership at political level. I have no doubt that if we continue with that work, we will undermine the negative thoughts and agendas that are on the minds of some people and children within our society, albeit that they are in the minority.

As we all move forward, we much watch our language and lead by example.

3.00 pm

ENVIRONMENT

Drink/Drug Driving

1. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of drivers who have lost their licences as a result of drink-driving and driving while under the influence of drugs in 2005, 2006 and 2007. (AQO 576/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster):

For each of the calendar years 2005 and 2006, and for 2007 to date, the numbers of drivers who have lost their licences as a result of drink-driving or while driving under the influence of drugs has been 1,528 in 2005, 1,423 in 2006, and 970 to 30 September this year.

Mr Boylan: Has the Minister considered introducing a zero-tolerance approach to drink-driving and driving while under the influence of drugs? Will she share with the Assembly any other measures that she has to help in the detection of those offences?

Mrs Foster: The Member is probably aware that the limit in Northern Ireland is the same as that in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland, at 80 mg of alcohol for each 100 ml of blood. Most other European Union countries have a limit of 50 mg for each 100 ml of blood, and some countries have a limit as low as 20 mg for each 100 ml of blood. I am in favour of lowering the limit, and the Department is looking at that possibility. Exceeding the limit in Northern Ireland is punishable by a mandatory driving disqualification of at least one year, plus a fine of up to £5,000, and a possible maximum prison sentence of six months.

I am wary of saying this with the Minister of Finance and Personnel sitting beside me, but the Member will know that the Department has quite a considerable advertising budget. The Department will continue to look at the effectiveness of that advertising. We believe it to be effective, but it is a matter for our road safety strategy review, which is ongoing.

Mr Speaker: Before I call Mr Kennedy for a supplementary question, I remind him that his supplementary must relate to the original question.

Mr Kennedy: Mr Speaker, I am greatly cautioned by what you have said. I welcome the Minister's reply. On the issue of road safety, to which I believe my question is linked, will the Minister undertake to consult with her ministerial colleague, the Minister for Regional Development, with a view to identifying accident black spots on the Province's roads, and take specific action, where possible, to address any shortcomings in road surfacing and design in order to reduce accident risk?

Mr Speaker: Order. I warned the Member, and he is almost challenging the ruling from the Chair. The Member was allowed to get away with it on the first occasion, but he will not get away with it on what is the third occasion.

Mrs Foster: My Department has ongoing engagement with both DRD and the Police Service of Northern Ireland on what can be done to lessen the number of accidents on our roads. There is no such thing as bad roads causing deaths. Deaths are caused by other factors; although roads may be a contributing factor, they are not the only factor.

Mr Gallagher: Does the Minister agree that one of the frustrating problems surrounding convictions for serious offences such as drink-driving is that a ban in this jurisdiction does not have any effect across the border, and vice versa? Will the Minister provide an update on work to harmonise penalties across the island? Will she provide any dates for the introduction of legislation to that effect?

Mrs Foster: In February 2006, the then United Kingdom Minister of State for Transport, Dr Stephen Ladyman, and his then Irish counterpart, Martin Cullen, announced that the United Kingdom and Ireland intended to co-operate as soon as possible on the mutual recognition of driver disqualification.

In July 2006, the UK Cabinet Domestic Affairs Committee gave clearance, subject to discussions among officials on funding requirements for the courts, for proposals to proceed on the mutual recognition of driver disqualifications between the United Kingdom and Ireland. There was public consultation on the matter from 13 February 2007 to 8 May 2007, and all responses were positive. As a result, subordinate legislation is required in Northern Ireland and GB. Officials in the United Kingdom and Ireland are working closely together in order to initiate the mutual recognition of driver disqualifications as soon as is practicable. It is my hope that that will happen soon.

Unfortunately, the matter of penalty points is more complex. The question of whether it is possible to speed up the project was raised with me most recently at the North/South Ministerial Council. I am hopeful that we can push ahead and that the issue of driver disqualifications will be dealt with in the near future.

Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures

2. Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment, further to her recent comments following the publication of the Atomic Energy Authority Technology figures on Northern Ireland greenhouse gas emissions, what steps she is taking to ensure that the methodology and data sources used to measure emissions are accurate. (AQO 573/08)

Mrs Foster: The Member is referring to my comments about the recent publication, 'Greenhouse Gas Inventories for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland: 1990–2005', which was compiled by Atomic Energy Authority Technology, now known as AEA Technology. That report indicated that total greenhouse gas emissions were down by 6% in 2005 and that carbon dioxide emissions were down by 4% on 1990 levels. Previous publications indicated that figures for Northern Ireland were above the base year levels.

As the United Kingdom Government and the devolved Administrations bring forward the draft climate change Bill, with its UK target of a 60% reduction in carbon dioxide emission by 2050, Members are aware of the increasing significance that is attached to emission calculations. It is important, therefore, that there is a consistent and credible understanding of Northern Ireland's true position. Hence, my officials have initiated work with AEA Technology in order to examine the major data sources and the methods that are applied to calculate Northern Ireland's emissions across the energy, business, industry, domestic and agriculture sectors. That will provide for improved accuracy and an understanding of emission trends. It is also intended that that work will provide a methodology to estimate future levels of emissions relative to targets, and I hope that that work should be completed in March 2008.

Mr B McCrea: Linked to my original question about atomic energy and the need for proper questioning, the Windscale pile issue, the Republic's Health Research Board's figures that indicate that no environmental factors were at play in a cluster of Down's syndrome births and tackling the incidence of cancer in County Louth that was found to be normal by the National Cancer Registry in Ireland, will the Minister indicate whether she thinks it is safe for Ireland, Northern Ireland or any other part of the United Kingdom to consider atomic energy as a viable source of energy?

Mr Speaker: Once again, the Member's supplementary question relates in no way to the original question. The Member's question concerns health. Members — on all sides of the House — must link supplementary questions to the original question, and that supplementary question certainly did not do that. We will move on.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. What is the Minister's Department doing to ensure year-on-year decreases in carbon dioxide and other emissions?

Mrs Foster: That question applies across the entire Government. In May 2006, OFMDFM published 'First Steps Towards Sustainability: A Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland', and a supporting implementation plan was published in November 2006. That strategy's key objective is to reduce emissions, principally by promoting energy efficiency and the use of renewable energy, including biofuels in transport. Therefore, many Departments have a role to play in reducing emissions.

As Members would expect, my Department is making significant progress, particularly with the draft climate change Bill, consultation on the carbon reduction commitment and the promotion of the EU emissions trading scheme. The Department is also leading the way in getting its own house in order by improving the recycling of office waste from 32% in 2004 to 71% in 2006 and by reducing travel. Despite a 4% overall increase in staff numbers, the DOE has reduced the number of flights taken by its staff by 22% on the previous year — something of which the staff can be justifiably proud.

Lord Morrow: What, in the Minister's opinion, are the most significant sources of emissions in Northern Ireland?

Mrs Foster: Carbon dioxide emissions in Northern Ireland are mostly caused by power stations, transport and residential combustion. Those sectors accounted for approximately 85% of carbon dioxide emissions and just over 60% of the total emissions in 2005.

Agriculture is still a significant source of other greenhouse gases, such as methane and nitrous oxide, and has contributed to over 20% of the total greenhouse gas emissions in 2005.

Mature Garden Trees

3. Mrs Long asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to prevent mature garden trees being destroyed at weekends, particularly by property developers. (AQO 555/08)

Mrs Foster: I acknowledge that when mature garden trees are cut down, local residents would like to see intervention by an official from my Department, in the belief that that will immediately stop tree felling. However, it is not an offence to cut down a tree unless it is covered by a tree preservation order or is within a conservation area.

A provisional tree preservation order can be made relatively quickly, although it must be recognised that it still takes time to make such an order, particularly over a weekend. It is not possible to provide immediate, on-the-spot protection because various officers are required to check records to see whether the trees are protected, and, if not, to assess the condition of the trees and to draw up the appropriate documentation and maps required for a provisional tree preservation order.

Mrs Long: I thank the Minister for her answer and for correspondence that I have received recently from her. Given that tree felling is now literally clearing the way for the submission of planning applications, as opposed to construction, is it not worth looking at new legislation to allow intervention in order to make a timely assessment of the value of the trees before any further felling is undertaken? Many developers feel that they have complete free rein to clear sites at weekends and on bank holidays.

Mrs Foster: I said that a provisional tree preservation order could be made relatively quickly. Indeed, the law was changed some three years ago to allow that to take place. Also at that time, the legislation did away with clauses that allowed those who might be affected by a tree preservation order to claim compensation.

I appreciate residents' concerns about the issue. I spoke to divisional officers who told me that they get about two weekend call-outs a year. Although there is no dedicated emergency team, I understand that in the Member's constituency, emergency calls are usually fielded by the divisional planning office, and officers try to go out and deal with such issues.

The number of incidents of tree felling at weekends is, therefore, relatively small and does not warrant the level of resources that would be required to set up a dedicated, on-call, 24-hour team. I have been told that it takes four different members of staff, believe it or not, to make a tree preservation order, and therein lies part of my resource difficulties.

Mr P Ramsey: Will the Minister outline what she will do to improve the Environment and Heritage Service's enforcement rates, following the publication of the recent Criminal Justice Inspectorate report?

Mrs Foster: Enforcement is taken forward not by the Environment and Heritage Service, but by the Planning Service. I welcome the recent Criminal Justice Inspectorate report, which gives us an opportunity to examine areas that it has signposted. It would be wrong of me to refer to that before my Department has had a chance to take into account what it says in detail on that issue.

Mr Buchanan: The protection of trees in Northern Ireland is an important issue. Will the Minister explain to the House how a tree preservation order is made?

Mrs Foster: There are two ways of making a tree preservation order. Under article 65 of The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, the Department may give notice of intention to make a tree preservation order to the owner and occupiers of the land, who have 28 days from the date of the notice in which to comment.

3.15 pm

The order does not take effect until it has been confirmed by the Department. Alternatively — and this is the power that came in three years ago under article 65A — the Department may make a provisional tree preservation order that takes immediate effect on the date specified, providing protection for the trees. A tree preservation order with immediate provisional effect must be confirmed — rather like spot listing — within six months of the date of the order, otherwise the protection afforded to the trees expires.

Retail Development

4. Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to outline what steps have been taken to ensure that large-scale, and in particular, out-of-town retail development, does not impact negatively on town centres and neighbouring smaller towns and villages. (AQO 594/08)

Mrs Foster: Retail policy in Northern Ireland is presently contained in a number of documents, including the 'Regional Development Strategy for Northern Ireland 2025'; 'Planning Policy Statement 5, Retailing and Town Centres'; 'Draft Planning Policy Statement 5, Retailing, Town Centres and Commercial Leisure Developments'; and the development plans for the area to which the planning applications relate.

During July 2006, a revised draft of PPS 5 was published for consultation. The revised policy proposed in the draft strengthens the existing policy that tests what will control out-of-town retail development. Comments on the draft are presently being considered. Publication of the final policy is subject to the outcome of a judicial review hearing that is scheduled for the end of November 2007.

Mr Dallat: I welcome the Minister's response. The Minister is aware that up to 50% of towns and villages in Britain have been left without a single shop, post office or bank. When will the Minister bring forward planning proposals that will offer fair and decent protection for independent and small retailers, who are still the heartbeat of rural communities, towns and villages?

Mrs Foster: The Department of the Environment believes that what the Member outlined is being provided through PPS 5 and the consultation process that is ongoing. There are approximately 75 applications for out-of-centre or out-of-town retail developments.

The Department has recently spoken to people in Banbridge and Lisburn regarding out-of-town development. Those people believe that it is helping the town and city involved, and they think that both Banbridge and Lisburn are doing well. Although I take on board what the Member has said, it is not always the case in particular towns.

Mr K Robinson: I noted the Minister's answer to the previous question. Will the Minister undertake to take steps to establish a comprehensive and reliable footfall figure for all town centres and out-of-town shopping centres across the Province so that an accurate assessment of the impact of out-of-town shopping centres can be made?

Mrs Foster: PPS 5 requires that all applications for out-of-centre or out-of-town retail developments over 1000 sq m gross retail floor space should be accompanied by information in the form of a retail impact assessment. The Member will know that that includes: the applicant's approach to site selection; the availability of suitable alternative town centre sites; its likely trading impact on existing centres; consideration of the accumulative impacts of the proposal; recently completed retail developments; and outstanding planning permissions for retail developments.

Some people may point out that that is all very well, that the applicant could submit that retail impact assessment, but no one knows that it is not going to favour the applicant. That retail impact assessment is carefully analysed by officials from my Department who undertake a series of checks and tests to assess the acceptability of the information provided. Those are carried out before the application is approved, and provide a fair and balanced assessment of the retail impact.

Mr Simpson: Will the Minister give details on how the recruitment process is progressing for new planners, and approximately how many her Department needs to deal with the long waiting list?

Mrs Foster: It is no secret in the House, or, indeed, outside it, that we have had some difficulties in retaining staff in the Planning Service over the past number of years.

The professional and technical officer (PTO) grade is the normal recruitment grade for specialist planners. Promotion boards are generally used to fill vacancies at other levels. Currently, the Planning Service has 29 vacancies at that grade, representing 17% of the PTO staff complement. A competition for casual PTOs has just concluded, and 44 candidates were considered suitable for posting in the agency. Pre-appointment checks are under way, and the first of those staff should be available in early December. A casual appointment lasts for 51 weeks.

Environment and Heritage Service

5. Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking to increase funding for the Environment and Heritage Service. (AQO 556/08)

Mrs Foster: Last year, the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) secured additional funding of £0.75 million to curb the growing threat of illegal activity in waste management and to enhance the programme of designation of areas of special scientific interest. Next year, the grant-aid budget for listed buildings will increase by £1.5 million. As part of the Budget 2007 exercise, I have bid for further resources to develop EHS environmental-crime and better-regulation teams. The Executive Committee will discuss the proposals from all Departments, and it will then agree the overall allocations for the three Budget 2007 years. As the Member knows, the draft Budget will be published very soon.

Following a period of consultation, the final Budget will be published later in the year. It should be noted, however, that the Budget requires Departments and their agencies to deliver efficiency savings over the next three years. That is a matter for EHS, and the funding must be viewed in that context.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for her answer. Does she agree that urgent action is required on matters as diverse as delays in the planning process, the protection of areas of special scientific interest, which she mentioned, and the promotion of biodiversity and climate change? How does she intend to direct her Department's spending to meet those needs?

Mrs Foster: I am sorry that the Member was not with me when I was in a Budget bilateral with my friend the Minister of Finance and Personnel. We have made various bids in relation to the matters he has raised. Those will become clear in the near future.

Mr Ross: Will the Minister indicate what impact EHS has had in combating environmental crime?

Mrs Foster: EHS has had a significant impact on dealing with environmental crime. The environmental crime section is responsible for investigating illegal waste incidents and deals with upwards of 1,400 reports of alleged illegal waste activities per year. In 2006, the number of successful prosecutions taken against those committing waste offences was 112. Six of those were at Crown Court level; they were the first convictions for environmental offences in the Crown Court in Northern Ireland.

Additionally, EHS has referred a number of cases to the Assets Recovery Agency for criminal-confiscation and civil-recovery proceedings. Through the efforts of EHS, the number of water-pollution incidents has also fallen from 1,560 in 2001 to 1,170 in 2006. The number of incidents in 2006, which have been referred to the Public Prosecution Service, currently stands at 42.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Does the Minister accept the criticism in the Criminal Justice Inspectorate report, to which she has already referred, that EHS is failing to protect the environment? Does she now recognise the need for the establishment of an independent environmental protection agency in the light of that report?

Mrs Foster: I do not remember reading those words in the Criminal Justice Inspectorate report. However, in relation to his question about an environmental protection agency, I remain open-minded about the recommendations of the review of environmental governance, including whether there should be an independent environmental protection agency. I will carefully consider my approach to environmental governance and, in so doing, take account of the review recommendations, resource considerations, the views of the Environment Committee on which the Member sits, and of any points that stakeholders would like to make. As the Member is aware, I made a commitment to Mr Ford that I would allow him to have those figures before Christmas. That commitment still stands and we should be in a position to make more headway towards the end of the year.

Mr Armstrong: Is the Minister satisfied that EHS has sufficient funding to ensure that it can protect the integrity of Northern Ireland's only World Heritage Site, the Giant's Causeway?

Mrs Foster: The World Heritage Site issue does not really come under the subject of EHS resources. However, I am sure that there is no Minister in the Executive who would not say yes to more resources. I am certainly one Minister who would.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

7. Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment if she will provide the full Planning Service report and recommendations in relation to the planning application for the Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, to the Northern Ireland Assembly Committee of the Environment.

(AQO 572/08)

Mrs Foster: A letter was written to the Environment Committee on 10 October 2007 that explains why I am withholding the report at present and assures the Committee of my commitment to make the report available when a final decision on the application is reached.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Can the Minister confirm whether UNESCO was ever supportive of the private application and whether it approved and was impressed by the proposal, as was suggested by Ian Paisley in a letter to the Heritage Lottery Fund?

Mrs Foster: The Member knows fine well that the only time that UNESCO will comment on an application is when one is brought to that particular body by a Government. I have not yet done that. When I do, the Member will be in possession of all the relevant information.

Mr Neeson: I remind the Minister that the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment also has great interest in this issue. Can the Minister tell the House whether the other major stakeholders that are involved in the visitors' centre project, particularly Moyle District Council and the National Trust, have been included in discussions?

Mrs Foster: Yes, indeed. After 10 September 2007, the Planning Service engaged in a process with the applicant and the other major stakeholders that the Member has rightly identified. I understand that those meetings are continuing. When the initial round of discussions is complete, I expect to speak to Planning Service officials in order to find out how matters have progressed. When they believe that matters have come to a conclusion, Planning Service officials will provide me with a final report. I will then make my decision.

Mr O'Loan: On 11 September 2007, the Minister expressed her amazement that the planning application for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway had been outstanding since 2002 and that, therefore, she felt obliged to consider it immediately. It is now known that 23 article 31 applications, which are even older than that, have not yet been decided on by the Minister. Does she understand that Members are even more amazed by the total incompatibility of those positions? Will she attempt to reconcile those quite contradictory positions?

Mrs Foster: I am happy to reconcile those positions, which are not at all contradictory. The Member is quite right: when I came to office there was a large backlog of article 31 applications. The Member is aware of that because I sent him the figures in a written answer. One of those applications goes back to the 1960s. I have asked the head of the strategic projects unit to write to all of the applicants whose pre-1999 applications have not been dealt with to ask them to provide information that will allow Planning Service to determine the outcome of those applications. If that information is not provided, the applications will be refused. That is the situation.

Planning Regulations

8. Mr McHugh asked the Minister of the Environment for her assessment of the protection of built heritage within towns, villages and the countryside; and to make a statement on over development and the enforcement of planning regulations.

(AQO 571/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department seeks to protect and conserve the built heritage of towns, villages and the countryside by listing buildings of special architectural or historical interest and by designating conservation areas and areas of townscape character. PPS 6, 'Planning, Archaeology and the Built Heritage' and its addendum on areas of townscape character set out my Department's planning policies for the protection and conservation of built heritage. Both documents embody my Department's commitment to sustainable development and environmental stewardship.

In respect of concerns that have been expressed about overdevelopment, I can confirm that policy provisions, specifically on the intensification of development in existing residential areas, are currently being considered by a group of officials from my Department and the Department for Regional Development (DRD). More recently, the Planning Service issued a circular on my instruction to all its professional planners in order to remind them of the need to consider fully the impact of development on established residential character when processing applications for new residential development.

As for the enforcement of planning control, there are dedicated enforcement teams in each divisional office. Unauthorised works that would adversely affect a listed building or the character of a conservation area or an area of townscape character are given high priority by those teams.

3.30 pm

Mr McHugh: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her answer. I am delighted that that amount of work is ongoing on the matter. Will the Minister say whether she has been able to work with EHS to ensure that the enforcement, and that all development —

Mr Speaker: I apologise for interrupting the Member. Perhaps he might like to put his question in writing to the Minister and get a written answer.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Public Expenditure

1. Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he was taking to ensure the most efficient and effective use of public expenditure.

(AQO 502/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): It is the responsibility of all Ministers, and their Departments, to ensure that resources are used in the most efficient and effective manner possible. As part of the 2007 Budget process, each Northern Ireland Department will achieve a minimum of 3% per annum cash-releasing efficiencies over the period 2008-09 right through to 2010-11. The resources that will be made available will be used to fund improvements in public services. In order to facilitate the delivery of further savings, my Department has formed the view that there should be a performance and efficiency delivery unit (PEDU) to examine the scope for further efficiencies — and for improvement in delivery and performance — both within Departments and across the wider public sector.

Mr Easton: Has the Minister made any estimation of the increased amount that could be made available in the comprehensive spending review (CSR) period through the work of PEDU?

Mr P Robinson: I am reluctant — and it might be inappropriate — to set a specific figure in case people believe that I am setting an upper limit. Instead, it is my intention that the performance and efficiency delivery unit would facilitate an increase in the overall rate of annual cash-releasing savings to be delivered by Northern Ireland Departments over the CSR period from 3%, under current plans, to a minimum of 5%, which is in line with the upper end of the scale for Whitehall Departments. However, I say to the Member for North Down that it is not solely an issue about efficiency. The “P” in PEDU stands for “performance”. Therefore, it is also an issue of getting more for the same, more for less, or the same for less.

The Chairperson of the Public Accounts

Committee (Mr O’Dowd): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I would like to explore this performance and efficiency delivery unit further with the Minister of Finance. Its title and remit are areas that I would like to explore. In a recent speech to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountability (CIPFA), the Minister said that:

“PEDU will have authority to scrutinise and review, critically, the nature of spending in all areas ... Membership will be limited to a few respected individuals ... I am particularly keen that the PEDU will look at how we spend our money at present and what we achieve in terms of quality public services.”

Is the Minister in danger of setting up a unit that will undertake the work of the Assembly’s scrutiny Committees? How will the unit report back to the Assembly? It appears that — and I await explanation of it — we are in danger of setting up a quango at the heart of Government.

Mr P Robinson: The functions to be carried out are functions that are already held by the Department. Therefore, we are getting a specialised unit to examine a particular area of activity. I do not believe that there is an issue that should concern the Member, particularly for someone who comes from an Audit Committee background. I have already agreed that I will bring details of the unit to the Committee for Finance and Personnel. When it comes to the consideration of the panel members, I will be happy to talk to the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of that Committee about those who will be involved. The unit’s role is the role of any responsible Department of Finance and Personnel — looking to see that we are getting value for money, and that the Departments are delivering in accordance with the allocations that have been made to them.

I would have thought that the Member would have rejoiced about that, rather than expressing doubts about the process.

Mr Beggs: Concentrating on the words “efficient” and “effective”, which were used in the original question, does the Minister acknowledge that, in the past, children’s services here have been underfunded compared to services in the rest of the United Kingdom? That underinvestment was highlighted in a report by the Commissioner for Children and Young People. Is the Minister aware of the considerable international evidence that shows how it is both efficient and effective to invest in —

Mr Speaker: Order. I do not how many times I need to say this, but once again I remind Members that they must as far as possible ensure that their supplementary questions relate to the original question. I will rule supplementary questions out of order if they do not relate to the original question.

I now call Mr Durkan to ask a supplementary question.

Mr Durkan: The original question asked about the efficient and effective use of public expenditure, and the Minister’s answer touched on the fact that that is the responsibility of all Ministers. Given that, does the Minister further agree that it is the responsibility of the entire Assembly, including, as Mr O’Dowd has said, the various departmental Committees?

I accept the need for a performance and efficiency delivery unit in the Department of Finance and Personnel such as the one that the Minister described. However, there is also a need for the Assembly to address more effectively, in real time, issues that involve the efficient and effective use of public expenditure. I ask the Minister to address that. It is not enough for us to rely on the very good work that the Public Accounts Committee carries out on accounts and past matters. Additional Committees in the style of the Public Accounts Committee could be established that could interrogate particular people and investigate incidences of waste of money, cost of government, inefficient use of resources, and non-performing programmes.

Mr P Robinson: I accept that the Assembly has, through its scrutiny Committees and other Committees, a considerable role to play in examining the performance and efficiency of each Department. The latter part of the Member’s questions flows from a question — which I did not quite get to answer — that his colleague from East Londonderry asked at a previous Question Time. That question was about the ability to respond — in real time, as the Member has put it today — to some of the issues that arise. The Member’s suggestion seems to make good sense. However, the difficulty with his proposal is that if members of the Audit Committee, or anyone who is involved in the audit process, become involved while matters are ongoing, it becomes more difficult for them to be critical of what has happened at the end of the process — they are sucked into the system. Perhaps, therefore, the Assembly and its Committees have more of a role to play in calling in ongoing projects. I am certainly quite happy to facilitate the work of any Committee that wants to get involved with financial details on an ongoing basis.

Mr Speaker: Questions 2 and 3 have been withdrawn.

Rating Reform

4. Mr Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide an update on rating reform.
(AQO 563/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Executive review of domestic rating, which I commissioned in May this year, is now well under way. The consultation finished on 31 August 2007, and a report outlining what people and organisations said was published on 25 September 2007. We are working closely with the Committee for Finance and Personnel, which is scrutinising the consultation report and taking evidence of its own. Once we have the Committee's response, I intend to bring proposals to the Executive as a matter of priority so that decisions can be announced later this year.

However, earlier this year, my Department engaged the Economic Research Institute of Northern Ireland (ERINI) to undertake a study into the effectiveness and impact of the policy to phase out industrial derating. A preliminary draft report has been received from the institute and is being considered by my officials. I expect a final report by the end of the month, and following consideration by the Finance and Personnel Committee and the Executive of that report, I will make a statement to the Assembly of my intentions for the longer term.

In the meantime, I will have to outline my short-term intentions as part of the Budget process. ERINI's final report will not be available before then, but its preliminary report takes a hard look at the import of those measures and identifies concerns about their potential long-term effect on some firms.

There is enough evidence contained in that report, which I have to hand, on which to base my early decision. I will not say much more about that until the Budget statement. However, Members will be aware of my line of thinking on the matter. If the focus and centrepiece of Government policy is economic growth, it would be inconsistent to make life more difficult for business. The Economic Research Institute of Northern Ireland is also considering the case for a small business rate relief, and I hope to have its findings on that by the end of the year.

Mr Ford: We look forward to seeing a detailed statement on industrial derating soon. On domestic rating specifically, does the Minister agree that the capital value of a person's home on 1 January 2005 is not sufficiently reliable as an indicator of ability to pay to be used as the sole basis for determining the rates?

Given that that statement is taken from his party's manifesto, does he agree that we need to move towards a system that is more firmly based on ability to pay than the current rating system, even with modifications, is likely to be?

Mr P Robinson: I am glad that the leader of the Alliance Party is such an avid reader of Democratic Unionist Party policy documents. Naturally, I agree entirely with that document; indeed, I may have had some part in its drafting. I would go beyond that; I do not believe that capital value provides for a proper assessment of peoples' ability to pay — not just for rates but for water charging. There are wider issues at stake, and we must examine those issues, in the interim at least, in order to achieve some changes without the requirement for new legislation. We must find a way to have reliefs that will take ability to pay into account.

Mr McCallister: Will the Minister indicate whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer has advised him that rates relief would be available on that part of the rates that is being attributed to water charging?

Mr P Robinson: The movement of any portion of the rates to cover water charging would not be allowable under the rules governing annually managed expenditure, and, therefore, would not be subject to the reliefs that are currently available. However, the Minister for Regional Development is examining other types of relief in relation to the water-charging system.

Mr Dallat: Will the Minister give the House a flavour of the most significant views emerging on rating reform, and will he tell us how he intends to protect people on low incomes who are not in receipt of housing benefit?

Mr P Robinson: I could do that quite easily. However, if I go down that road, the Member and the Assembly will very quickly learn the direction from which my decisions will come. He is right. The area of activity that is most important to me is to examine, through the consultation, the means to assist those in greatest need. By and large, that means senior citizens, and we must examine ways in which to give assistance to people who, in many cases, have reduced incomes but live in large homes with a high capital value. We are considering those issues, but our overarching purpose should be to examine ability to pay no matter which section of the community is affected.

Mr Speaker: Question No 5 has been withdrawn.

Water Charges

6. Mrs Long asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to report on the implications for the level of the regional rate, if additional water charges are added to the overall rates burden.
(AQO 566/08)

Mr P Robinson: Consideration of the level of the regional rate and the way forward in respect of water and sewerage charges are being taken forward by the Executive as part of the ongoing Budget process. However, as the Minister for Regional Development said in his statement earlier today, the amount due to be collected from domestic households through the regional rate will be reduced by the amount of the contribution that households already make through the rates for water and sewerage services. That would amount to £109 million each year, or an average of £160 per rates bill.

3.45 pm

Mrs Long: I thank the Minister for his response. Without giving anything away — he clearly wants to surprise us all on Thursday — can the Minister elaborate, in light of the Minister for Regional Development's announcement to the House today, on his intention to incorporate water charges in domestic rates bills? Does the Minister believe that the current review into domestic rating needs to be fundamentally reassessed in light of that decision, given the changes that are likely to occur, particularly in the level of rates in future years? Is that specifically included in the short-term measures that he referred to earlier in today's sitting?

Mr P Robinson: At their last meeting, the Executive, when dealing with the report provided by the Minister for Regional Development, saw that the issue was significantly complex that a number of decisions had to be taken. We determined that we had to take the step of considering the size of the overall envelope — in other words, the amount that needs to be put into the three years of the CSR process, under the heading of water.

The figures that were indicated in the statement by the Minister for Regional Development indicate the global parameters within which the public will be asked to address the issue of water. As the Minister said this morning, there will be no requirement for the public to pay for water services in the first of those three CSR years. In the second year, the public will be asked to provide two thirds of the remaining amount, after £160 is taken out of rates and handed over to water. In the third year, they will pay the full amount.

There is some confusion over the rates bill. It is more likely that at the end of the process there will be a household bill, which will comprise a number of elements. One of those elements will be the regional rate, another will be the district rate and another will be the water charge. The community has demanded transparency, and that type of outcome would be transparent as it would show people exactly what they were paying for.

Mr Storey: Can the Minister indicate what the likely level of local taxation would have been in 2008-09 if direct rule had continued?

Mr P Robinson: In the current financial year, 2007-08, the community would already have been paying one third of the water charge bill as a result of the decision that was made under direct rule. Mr, Mrs and Ms Average currently pay £404 for a regional rate and around £300 for a district rate. On top of that, they would have had to pay around £100 for a water charge.

In the year that the Member refers to, 2008-09, given the 10% increase on average in the last five years on the regional rate, the regional rate would be, on average, in the region of £444 as well as two thirds of the water charge, which would have been around £200. As there will be no water bill during the course of the next financial year, the consumer will be saving that amount of money.

Northern Ireland Civil Service: Sick Absence

8. Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give his assessment of the rise in the level of sick absence in the Northern Ireland Civil Service, from 13.4 days lost per worker in 2005-2006 to 13.7 days in 2006-2007; and what action he was taking to ensure that the current target for reduction will be met. (AQO 545/08)

Mr P Robinson: As I indicated to the Assembly in June in response to a question from Mr Sammy Wilson, I regard sick-absence levels in the Northern Ireland Civil Service as totally unacceptable. I also advised the Assembly that the final figures for 2006-07 would be available in September, and that provisional estimates indicated a higher overall absence level for 2006-07 than for the previous year. The Civil Service was heading in the wrong direction, and I made clear my intention to take urgent and immediate action to address that situation.

I am pleased to report that recent figures indicate that the trend of increasing sick absence has stopped and that absence levels are reducing. Nevertheless, I want to see absence levels reduced beyond that turnaround to make better progress towards the current targets.

I plan to meet all permanent secretaries before Christmas to discuss progress and to ensure that reducing sickness absence remains a top priority in all Departments. As promised, I presented a paper to the Executive in July. Its recommendations, which all ministerial colleagues endorsed, included the robust and consistent application of existing absence-management policies, the need for strong leadership and early intervention by management, and consideration of whether existing policies would deliver the radical shift required.

Recent analysis of sickness absence points to long-term absence as the reason for targets not being met. In the light of the progress made between 2003-04 and 2005-06, that is hugely disappointing. I have convened a small working group specifically to examine long-term absence, with a focus on psychiatric and psychological illnesses, and to explore new ways in which to tackle the problem. I am satisfied that the current targets are appropriate, and there is a strong determination in all Departments to achieve the targets, particularly that of reducing the average sickness absence to 9.5 days by 2010.

Mr O'Loan: I thank the Minister for his interesting answer, and I am pleased to hear the tentative good news. I am sure that everyone supports his efforts to address the issue. No one considers slack management to benefit those at work or those not at work.

In an earlier answer, the Minister mentioned the 3% and 5% efficiency cuts. He has also said that some parts of the organisation can easily stand such cuts but others cannot. Will the crude application of 3% and 5% cuts across the board not significantly contribute to work stress in certain areas, and, consequently, to sickness absence?

Mr P Robinson: The Department has not received any evidence to suggest that the 3% or 5% efficiencies cause absence. However, I set up the working group because some 30% of absences are down to psychiatric or psychological illness.

The performance and efficiency delivery unit exists to ensure that the fairly blunt instrument of applying the same cut to all Departments does not result in merely trimming the fat from one Department and making such an impact on another that it places people under more pressure than they should have to endure. The PEDU will consider that issue, and the working group will specifically examine sickness absence.

Mr Ross: Will the Minister detail how absence in the Civil Service compares with other sectors?

Mr P Robinson: I will detail the comparison with other parts of the public sector and with the private sector. In local government, the average sickness absence for local councils, as measured in March 2007, was 13.73 days, although there was a wide spread of sickness absence. Two councils that deserve mention are Castlereagh Borough Council and Lisburn City Council, which have made a significant reduction of four days in their absence rates over recent years. If the Civil Service could effect similar change, that would be a considerable improvement.

Absence rates in other parts of the public sector are much higher than those in the private sector. However, I sound a note of caution because, although the single figure of days lost in the private sector makes it appear significantly more efficient, its means of calculation differs from that used in the public sector. Although that may put the figures out of kilter, there is a significant and unacceptable gap between absence levels in the public and private sectors. I have asked officials to ensure that Northern Ireland Civil Service policies and procedures reflect organisational best practice.

Capital Investment

9. Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he had to maximise the sale of surplus assets to allow further capital investment.
(AQO 500/08)

Mr P Robinson: The departmental capital allocations in the draft Budget will be predicated on the delivery of capital receipts by Departments throughout the Budget period.

Although Departments have identified a significant level of capital receipts, there is scope to go further. There are strong grounds for a focused approach to asset realisation and a need for a fundamental review of departmental asset bases to ensure that we make the best use of the public assets at our disposal.

Mr Buchanan: What level of asset disposals have the Departments identified over the Budget period?

Mr P Robinson: In the CSR period, £400 million has been identified in the first year, £200 million in the second year and £500 million in the third year. Unquestionably, £1.1 billion is a considerable amount of money to assist us in looking at new assets. Some people, unthinkingly, have suggested that we are selling the family silver, but if you sell assets that you are not using and buy assets that you will use, that is not selling the family silver — it is simply good common sense and a prudent way to use the resources that are available. The various Departments have identified £1.1 billion, and they have worked hard to identify that amount. It is more than has been identified in any other three-year financial period. There are further Government-owned assets that could be disposed of, as they are not being utilised, and we will consider how we ought to deal with such issues. The Executive have made an attempt to thrash that out, and they are examining proposals to address the matter.

Mr P Ramsey: Further to the Minister's response on freeing up assets, will he outline whether all Departments are working co-operatively with him to ensure that there is free land for social and affordable housing across Northern Ireland? Are any public bodies reluctant to co-operate?

Mr P Robinson: The Executive cover 11 Departments. Therefore, it should not be simply up to the Minister for Social Development to release her assets to provide funds for social and affordable housing. If we are joined-up in our Government, assets can be released from other Departments for that purpose, but, again, one would expect a lead from the Minister for Social Development. Over the period that we are looking at and the work that will be done, we can identify land that can be used for that purpose not only in her Department but in other Departments.

Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary Implications

10. Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the budgetary implications for 2008-09, as a result of the current review of rating policy. (AQO 524/08)

Mr P Robinson: No decisions have yet been made on any changes to the rating system. Analysis is ongoing, and preferred options have not yet been identified. In light of that, it is not yet possible to detail the budgetary implications for 2008-09. Nevertheless, assumptions have been made and a range of scenarios have been modelled to inform the draft Budget, which is due to be published shortly. Furthermore, the outcomes of the review will be announced later this year, and they will be available to inform final decisions on the Budget which will be taken early in 2008.

Mr McNarry: As a result of the proposed additional water element of rates, how much of the additional revenue over and above current rates will be raised by water charging during 2009-10 and 2010-11?

Mr P Robinson: Hopefully, that will be a matter for the Executive to discuss tomorrow. On Thursday, we are supposed to announce the Budget and to take the final decisions on those matters. The steps that we have taken thus far have been taken by all parties in the Executive. There was widespread agreement that people should not be asked to pay twice for water and, therefore, that there should be a reduction from the rates bill, having identified that portion of the rates bill that had been hypothecated for water in the past.

There is a real difficulty in getting exact figures for either water or rates bills because the Independent Water Review Panel indicated a level of efficiencies. The Executive must decide whether they believe that that level of efficiencies can be realised in the suggested time frame, or even realised at all.

Another principal issue in the panel's report is the £25 million that is presently being charged to water consumers for road drainage. We have to look at whether that £25 million can be subsumed within DRD so that it frees up that part of the bill. Currently, there are a number of imponderables, which is why I indicated earlier that we had, in effect, agreed the overall funding envelope rather than the specific details of water charging.

4.00 pm

Mr Speaker: Order. Time is up for questions to the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

Mr Gallagher: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Shortly after business commenced today, there was discussion about a conversation that you had with the Minister of Finance and Personnel. You stated that you treat all Members in exactly the same way. However, during questions to the First Minister and deputy First Minister, Mr Danny Kennedy asked a supplementary question that had nothing to do with the original question. Not only did you allow him to ask that question, but you called the deputy First Minister to respond. The leader of the Alliance Party, Mr Ford, then also asked a supplementary question that was totally unconnected to the original question. However, I asked a supplementary to question 3 on the promotion of Northern Ireland in the United States, and not only did you rule me out of order, but you did not call the deputy First Minister to respond. On another supplementary question later, you again acted out of step.

As a Member of this House, I am entitled to be treated in the same way as every other Member. More importantly, the people who elected me to represent them are entitled to fair treatment. I want your comments on that, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I hope that I am fair to Members on all sides of the House, during what are sometimes difficult debates, and that I have demonstrated that many times. When I called Mr Kennedy, I was conscious of his position as Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. Also, his question related to engagements of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, which meant that a supplementary question could be wide ranging. As the Member knows, I checked a number of Members from all sides of the House today when their supplementary questions did not relate to the original question. Members can make a judgement on that for themselves.

Mr Gallagher: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker. I do not want to single out Members but the facts are the facts, and the Hansard report will reflect that Mr Danny Kennedy's question went unchecked by you.

Mr Poots: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker. Is it in order for the Member to challenge rulings of the Speaker?

Mr Speaker: It is not. I allow as much latitude as possible in particular debates. Question Time can also sometimes be very emotive. When I asked Mr Kennedy to speak, I was conscious of his position as Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. I also said, not so long ago, that I am prepared to give Committee Chairpersons some latitude in Question Time. That is exactly what I did today. Given that some Members then decided to ask wide-ranging supplementary questions that did not relate to the original question, I ruled them out of order.

As I said in response to the previous point of order, Members are, once again, coming close to challenging the ruling of the Chair.

I remind Members once again that I hope to be fair, as far as possible, in keeping order in the House. That is vitally important, particularly during emotive debates or Question Time. I get complaints from all sides of the House about supplementary questions, and I am happy to listen to those, but I hope that the Member understands my point of view.

Mr Gallagher: Will you read the Hansard report of the proceedings and reflect on that?

Mr Speaker: That is always done. I am happy to read the Hansard report and reflect on the matter.

Mr Kennedy: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I confirm that, after my initial supplementary question to the deputy First Minister, the Speaker issued a caution to me in respect of its relevance. I felt that my supplementary question was relevant because of the way in which the original question, which concerned current events that involve the deputy First Minister, was posed. However, I am happy to confirm that later in the proceedings, the Speaker very wisely warned me — almost issuing a yellow card — about a supplementary question that I attempted to ask the Minister of the Environment. I am satisfied, Mr Speaker, that you act fairly and properly.

Mr Speaker: The House has heard what the Member has said.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Abortion

Debate resumed on amendment to motion:

That this Assembly opposes the introduction of the proposed guidelines on the termination of pregnancy in Northern Ireland; believes that the guidelines are flawed; and calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to abandon any attempt to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland. — [Mr Donaldson, Mrs I Robinson.]

Which amendment was:

Leave out all after “Assembly” and insert:

“calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following consultation with the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, to bring forward guidelines on the lawful termination of pregnancy, as defined by the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945, and the Bourne Judgment case law, and in accordance with the ruling of the Courts.” — [Mr McCallister, Mr Kennedy.]

Mr Buchanan: I rise to support the motion and to be a voice for the unborn child.

To many, 25 October 1967 passed into history without any special significance, and yet, to one section of our population, that date would have the most devastating consequences. On that day, 40 years ago, the Parliament at Westminster passed what was to become known as the Abortion Act 1967 — a most ungodly Act that legislated for the murder of the unborn child.

Under that legislation, it became legal for pregnant women to have an abortion, which has become an everyday occurrence in the United Kingdom. Many who opposed that ungodly Act were told that abortion could take place only in certain circumstances and within strict guidelines, which were: in cases in which the physical or mental health of the mother would be placed in great danger if she were to continue the pregnancy; in cases in which the physical or mental health of her existing children would be placed in greater danger if she were to continue with the pregnancy; or in cases in which there was a risk of serious abnormality in the child. It was claimed that those safeguards would prevent abortion becoming widespread.

Many believed those carefully worded assurances, but it soon became clear that the Abortion Act 1967, amended by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, permitted abortion on demand. If any one of the aforementioned reasons were cited and accepted by two doctors, there was nothing to prevent a mother from legally ending the life of her unborn child.

Although that law was passed at Westminster, we give thanks to almighty God that, thus far, this Province has been spared from becoming home to such ungodly legislation, which legitimises the murder of the unborn child, on demand.

There is a strong pro-abortion voice from women's rights organisations and various other groups and individuals, which is asking that legislation be standardised so that abortion can be carried out locally. However, the fundamental right of the unborn child must be established. It is important to note that the child in a mother's womb is a real and distinct person. Pro-abortionists describe the unborn child in the early stages of pregnancy as a foetus, an embryo, a collection of cells, the potential for life, or mere human tissue in their attempts to dehumanise the child and reduce it to the status of a removed tonsil or a discarded fingernail. Therefore, it is important to establish where, and when, the life of the child begins. That is not when the child is born, or when it reaches a certain stage in the mother's womb, or even at the point of implantation. Life commences at conception, and it is at that point that the child becomes a real person.

I want to lay some facts before the House. At day 20 the child's brain, spinal cord and nervous system are established; at day 21 the heart begins to beat; at day 28 the baby's limbs begin to show and backbone and muscles begin to form; at five to six weeks the baby's fingers are discerning, its eyes begin to darken and the brainwaves can be detected and recorded; at six to eight weeks, although only one inch in length, the baby's brain begins to control the movements of the muscles, the jaw is already formed, tooth buds are in place, the stomach produces digestive juices and the kidneys begin to function. That all happens at two months into the pregnancy.

At nine to 13 weeks the baby can respond to touch. It can swallow, squint and wrinkle its forehead. At the end of 16 weeks it has grown to eight to 10 inches in length, the ears are formed, and it is believed that the child can hear its mother's voice, its own heartbeat and external noises.

With such facts — and more could be produced if time permitted — no one can claim that the baby in the womb is not a distinct person full of life. While various medical terms are used as a cloak in an attempt to justify abortion, the facts remain that 600 unborn children across the United Kingdom's hospitals are being slaughtered daily. Virtually none of those abortions are performed on women who become pregnant through rape or incest, or because the babies are unhealthy or handicapped or because those pregnancies may cause a threat to the life or health of the mother.

During the course of this one-and-a-half-hour debate, 70 to 80 unborn children will have been murdered through abortion. The methods of abortion are often horrific, with up to 80% carried out by suction curettage, which virtually pulls the baby apart limb by limb.

As we look back, we cringe at the number of Jews who were gassed or murdered by Hitler, and rightly so, yet in today's so-called civilised society, we witnessed 200,000 abortions across the UK last year, which is 600 a week and 50 to 60 children an hour.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Buchanan: I support the motion and call on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to abandon any attempt to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland.

Mr O'Dowd: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I rise to speak in favour of the motion and the amendment. However, we need clarification on what exactly happens if the motion, on its own, is adopted by the House. It is understandable that people can become emotional when such issues are debated, and the previous Member has done so. The subject of abortion reaches the deepest feelings of people's personal, religious and other beliefs. While I am not sure if a legislating, debating Chamber is the correct venue for some of today's debate, it is understandable that people will use emotive language.

Sinn Féin, despite some propaganda to the contrary, does not support abortion. The simple fact is that it does not support the Abortion Act 1967 being introduced here. The guidelines being discussed today clearly do not have the support and the endorsement of either the House or people in the wider society. In that sense, they are flawed.

However, we are legislators, and we must introduce legislation. It is our duty to ensure that the people we task to carry out work in our public services are protected under the law, regardless of our personal views on the subject. If the motion is agreed today, our medical professionals will be left in limbo. While we do not have the power to annul the draft guidelines, we ask the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to forget about the guidelines, flawed as they are, and to take no further action.

The amendment calls for further action to be taken through Committee discussions on guidelines as defined by several Acts, which seems a common sense course of action.

I am not an expert on the Offences Against The Person Act 1861, the Criminal Justice Act 1945 or the Bourne judgement case law; therefore, further discussion will be necessary in the Committee. That is not the fault of the amendment's proposers — it is the way the system works and is something that the Speaker is examining as he considers how the House formulates its business.

4.15pm

Setting emotion to one side, what do we do if we pass this motion today? The proposers of the motion must clarify the Assembly's next course of action. The buck stops here — if not today, in several months or in a year's time. Members will be required to legislate, based on the guidelines that relate to the termination of pregnancies.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Mrs Iris Robinson, outlined her understanding of situations in which terminations took place in the past. The reasons for a termination — if there are any — are disputed. Members are not medical professionals; medical professionals carry out medical tasks in the remit of the law, which we will set. We have a duty to those medical professionals to ensure that they are protected by the law, and we cannot abdicate that responsibility.

The best way forward is to send the matter back to the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, and for its members, as local legislators and people who know the moods of the communities that they represent, to draw up guidelines to cover legislative restraints in which they might find themselves, whether from national or international laws. That is the task that we must undertake — unpalatable as that may be to some people.

The proposers of the motion must clarify where they believe that this debate will take us and what measures we must next take. The sentiments expressed in the amendment are laudable, and they too call for the involvement of the Health Committee. I await the comments of the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety on the subject.

Members will have to act. Legislators must legislate, and — whether in a month, six months or in two year's time — legislate we must.

Mr Easton: This is a matter of critical importance — literally, a life or death matter. Members are aware that abortion legislation in Northern Ireland is different from that in the rest of the United Kingdom. The Act that permits abortion on demand does not apply here. Abortion must be considered only if the life or health of the mother is in critical danger. A moral, and Christian, principle is embedded in the heart of the vast majority of people in Northern Ireland, who consider a child to be a precious gift from God and believe that every child has a right to life from the moment of conception in the womb. Anyone who has witnessed a perfectly formed child, born prematurely and totally dependent on dedicated doctors and nurses, fighting for its life in an incubator, and who then sees the same child later as a perfectly formed young person, could have no doubt about how precious life is.

We have all seen television pictures of a child growing inside his or her mother's womb. Could anyone who has watched such pictures conclude that that was anything less than a functioning person, growing and maturing, physically and mentally? What we witnessed is the miracle of creation, and we have no right to interfere by terminating that process — except in exceptional circumstances.

The guidelines that we debate are the result of a determined, and highly organised, campaign by the Family Planning Association, which supports abortion on the grounds that every woman has the right to end an unwanted pregnancy. They are the opening shots in a campaign to make abortion on demand freely available in the Province. The people who legislated in the past — in this Building — resisted such a situation, and it is incumbent on us to resist again. Any legislative body that endorses and provides for abortion on demand has totally lost its way.

The Family Planning Association believes that every woman has the right to end an unwanted pregnancy. That is a coded message, which means that every woman, for whatever reason, has the right to take the life of an unborn child. A pregnancy might not be ended because the life or health of the mother was in danger; rather, continuing with the pregnancy would be socially inconvenient. If Members want to develop a just and moral society, we must be concerned about the justice that we administer to children in the womb.

We are here to speak on behalf of those who are unable to speak for themselves, and we are here to represent every child's right to life. It is terrible to contemplate how many abortions have been carried out in the United Kingdom since 1967.

A living, breathing child in the womb might one day change the course of history; win a Nobel Prize for literature; become a world leader, doctor, teacher, sports star, or a Minister in the Assembly. Perhaps he or she might live in relative obscurity and be content to be a good father, mother or friend to someone.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for giving way. I speak as someone who has a close family member with a disability. Will the Member agree that those who support abortion on the basis of a child being born with a deformity are devaluing that child before it is born? Will he also agree that — given that almost seven million children have been aborted since the 1967 Act was passed and that almost two million have been terminated since the House last debated the issue — future generations will look back on this period in the way that we look back on the period when children were used to clean chimneys and people were kept as slaves?

Mr Easton: I thank my honourable friend for those comments, and I fully support his views.

We are here to defend every child's right to life, and I call on the Assembly to oppose the introduction of the guidelines on the termination of pregnancies. They are flawed, and they will damage and undermine the moral framework of our society. I call on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to abandon any attempt to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland.

Mr B McCrea: Everyone in the Chamber would agree that abortion, and anything to do with it, is a tragedy. My party's purpose in tabling the amendment was in no way to engage in that particular debate, which causes a lot of hurt and concern to many people.

My colleague who proposed the amendment overgenerously allowed many interruptions to his speech in order to try and assure Members that our amendment was well-meaning. However, I must address a couple of questions that were asked. The Rt Hon Jeffrey Donaldson asked what was wrong with the original motion. I will explain, because Members talked about correct language and terminology. The motion reads:

"That this Assembly opposes the introduction of the proposed guidelines".

The problem is that that wording could imply that the Assembly is opposed to any guidelines — although I have heard different views. It could, through the way it has been drafted — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. The Member has the Floor.

Mr B McCrea: I am attempting to explain how we view the issue. I have heard several interesting interventions. I commend Mr O'Dowd on his speech and how he put forward his case. The question is what will happen if we vote in favour of the motion? The simple fact is that the Minister is required to produce a set of guidelines. He must do so, or he will fail in his ministerial responsibility: it is a legal imperative.

The amendment seeks to set out a way in which consultation can be undertaken. I understand that some Members would say that we ought to carry out better, or wider, consultation. However, the real issue is that the point of the amendment is to set out, first, that it is right and proper to ask the Health Committee to consider draft proposals — and I know that its Chairperson proposed the motion. Secondly, the amendment calls on the Minister and the Committee to take on board the legal requirements as they stand. Those requirements have been cited in the amendment, and I am assured that they are correct. The Assembly might want to overturn those laws, but that is an issue for Westminster, and there are Westminster MPs in this House who can go and do that.

I pay tribute to Mrs Long who said that if the Assembly wanted to discuss the 1967 Act, Members should have framed a motion in such terms.

This debate is not about the Abortion Act 1967 — that Act does not apply in Northern Ireland. The motion is about ensuring that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety can meet his legal obligations and his ministerial responsibility.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member has missed, to some degree, the whole point of the motion. The motion deals not only with the regulations but is clear and unambiguous in calling on the Assembly to oppose any further liberalisation of abortion in Northern Ireland. If the amendment is supported, that part of the motion completely falls, and we will fail to send the clear message to Westminster that the people of Northern Ireland do not want the liberalisation of abortion in Northern Ireland in any shape or form.

Mr B McCrea: I thank the Member for trying to explain the motion to me. I assure him that I did not miss the point. My point is that the amendment was tabled because the motion has led to the wrong debate at the wrong time.

The legal position needs to be sorted out. I am sure that the Minister will speak for himself, but I am happy to debate, at any time, the 1967 Act. Everyone that I have heard speaking during this debate has said that they are not in favour or anything like in favour of extending the Act. However, we need to follow proper procedure. What is the right way in which to do that? It is absolutely right for draft proposals to be brought to the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, that the Committee can oversee those proposals and that, if necessary, those proposals can be brought back to the House for a full debate.

If, and when, it is appropriate for Members to discuss those issues further — whether that discussion be to extend the 1967 Act to Northern Ireland, to introduce something in its place or to reduce its powers — it should take the form of a proper debate at a time when the Assembly has the appropriate responsibilities.

I believe that we would be unanimous in saying that people want to see a fall in the number of abortions. However, will there ever be a time when there will be no abortions? Abortion in Northern Ireland is illegal except in cases in which it is necessary in order to save the life of the mother or in which continuation of the pregnancy involves the risk of serious injury. That is the law. Whether it is right or wrong, it is the law.

The amendment is an attempt to ensure that, as a first step, there is a proper basis on which to ensure that those professionals who must carry out abortions are in a position to do so legally. It was read out —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr P Ramsey: I support the motion but not the amendment. For clarification, the text of the amendment is far too narrow. It makes no reference to the flawed guidelines that were being presented or to a wider extensive consultation that will be required to obtain facts on the abortion debate.

Members have talked about being pro-life, but I would not like to hear some of them talk about being against life — that comment is directed at John O'Dowd. I do not understand why he said that he was supporting the motion, only for him to talk against it for five minutes.

For the vast majority of people in Northern Ireland, this is the most important debate that is taking place in Northern Ireland at present. I preface my remarks by saying that the SDLP acknowledges the sensitivity of the issue. We are aware that there are many women who have had pregnancies terminated for many reasons. Many of those women are still grieving, and many still question the decisions that they made. It is important to say that we are not here to judge or condemn. In fact, quite the opposite is true, because it is our job to ensure that women who find themselves in that position have help available to them. Groups and agencies that are set up to give support must be given adequate resources to do that particular job.

It is also important to acknowledge honestly that people hold spiritual and religious views on the issue. There is no doubt that many of us have religious beliefs and that our religious backgrounds influence our social thinking and actions.

Mr Shannon: Does the Member agree that a basic human right is that the strong must protect the weak and the vulnerable, and, in this case, the unborn? Does the Member also agree that the pro-abortion myths should be discarded and that the anti-abortion reality should be taken on board?

4.30 pm

Mr P Ramsey: I agree. Anyone who saw the 'Dispatches' programme on Channel 4 last week would have been appalled. If any part of that liberalisation were brought into Northern Ireland, people would be appalled by it.

For me, as a Christian, the God that I believe in has hopes and a plan for each of us. He loves and values all of us equally, from the moment of conception and right through our lives. We are in the business of upholding — as Jim said — and enabling human rights.

The SDLP position is based on human rights criteria, and the fundamental human right to life clearly takes precedence over all other rights. The SDLP is for the right to live; therefore, it is opposed to any extension of direct termination of pregnancy in Northern Ireland. That opposition is based firmly on the unarguable case that, from the point of conception, the child is a human being, and is therefore entitled to human rights. For that reason we are opposed to any extension of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland. We are also clearly opposed to any liberal interpretation of the law on the matter. That is a point that Members who support the amendment do not understand.

In England and Wales, according to National Health Service figures, there were 193,700 abortions and over 650,000 live births in 2006. In other words, for every three live births, there was one abortion. We lose one child in four as a result of abortions in Britain. Most people in Northern Ireland find those figures appalling; however, they indicate clearly the consequences of liberalisation in practice or attitudes.

I want to talk specifically about the draft guidelines. The SDLP asserts that the medical profession should have a clear working policy based on the law on termination of pregnancy. However, there is ambiguity in the guidelines. The SDLP is deeply concerned that there are any circumstances, other than where extreme medical circumstances leave the mother and medical profession with no other reasonable choice, in which the life of an unborn child can be terminated.

The SDLP is very concerned that the draft guidelines do not adequately clarify the legal position for medical practitioners in a number of areas. For example, in paragraph 2.9, there is a basic legal mistake with reference to when the baby is capable of being born. That section is highly ambiguous and legalistic and does not clarify the position in practical terms but is actually misleading and dangerous to babies. While the child's right to life is implicit in that paragraph, it is not explicit, and it should be. The Department of Health should have been able to produce a clear guideline — a clear policy statement — thoroughly tested against human rights criteria that recognise equally the lives of the child and the mother.

The SDLP has other concerns in relation to the position of young people, where a court may make a decision that a termination of pregnancy should be carried out against the wishes of the young person. That is stated at paragraph 2.13 of the guidelines. Where are the rights of young girls considered there?

I call on the Department of Health to reinvestigate the matter. As Mrs Hanna said earlier, it is necessary to start the process again. The courts asked for guidelines, but these draft guidelines are clearly flawed. Some Members made the point that we should let legislators draft the guidelines. That is why I am standing here today, as a legislator, trying to protect the interests of children across the board. A number of organisations — and I say this, Mr Speaker, to the Minister — such as Precious Life and Care, have made serious representations to the Department outlining their concerns about the proposed guidelines. I ask the Minister to confirm that those representations were taken on board in framing the Department's proposed guidelines, and that they will be considered in any future consultation process.

Mr Speaker: I must say to Members that the time for this debate is almost up. However, given the subject of the debate, it is important that we hear from the last Member who is listed to speak, Dr Deeny.

Dr Deeny: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I was getting worried there.

The debate is not about whether Members are pro-choice or pro-life; it is about the draft guidelines. I am here in a personal capacity to give my views as someone who has been a doctor for 27 years. I have witnessed an abortion. I make no apologies for being pro-life; I am a pro-life doctor. Our lives — the lives of mothers and children — are our most precious gift. Thankfully, like most of my doctor colleagues in the North, I am totally opposed to the introduction of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland, or indeed any relaxation of legislation that would make abortion more available.

I mentioned the Abortion Act 1967. People say that the Assembly should not oppose relaxation of the legislation. However, I support the motion and reject the amendment because, as a doctor, I believe that the amendment will liberalise the law and will make abortion more likely in Northern Ireland.

Most doctors and, indeed, nurses join their noble professions to save and improve lives, not to take them. Human life must always be given priority and precedence over choice. We hear about pro-choice, which is a misnomer. It is the wrong description, because unborn children are not given a choice. In the medical profession, abortion is referred to as “termination of pregnancy”, which is, perhaps, a more precise term.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

A mother's life is paramount during pregnancy. As has already been pointed out, current legislation allows an abortion to be carried out when there is a serious threat to a mother's life or, indeed, if there is a 100% certainty that the child will have an abnormality that is incompatible with life. I want to stress that that in no way means a disability: an abortion should never take place when a baby has Down's syndrome, for instance. An example of incompatibility with life is anencephaly, when there is no brain development whatsoever.

Unfortunately, over 20 years ago, I witnessed two maternal deaths. It is a complete and utter disaster and tragedy. At the time, I remember calling it “whole family devastation” because other children were also involved. It was an awful situation. Pro-life doctors place paramount importance on the mother's life. Let that be remembered by those who would accuse us otherwise.

As a doctor, I want to make the point that section 1 of the Abortion Act 1967, which deals with the mother's mental health, has been used to cover a range of problems, including insomnia, anxiety, undue stress, and so on, which account for more than 90% of the reasons that terminations can take place. This afternoon, I read the draft guidelines again. Paragraph 3.6 outlines the reasons that can be given for terminations to be carried out. I reject them as flawed because they will put doctors in an impossible position. Mr O'Dowd, who is not here at present, quite rightly said that the job of legislators is to protect medical professionals and not to put them in a position in which they are forced to carry out procedures against their will.

The guidelines indicate that the reasons that can be given for terminations include: suicide threats; family history of mental-health problems; personal history of mental-health problems; absence of a support structure in the family or outside of it; and history of mental-health problems with previous pregnancies, such as post-natal depression. I know many women who fall into one of those categories. In future, those reasons could be used to justify the taking of an unborn, helpless life. Those reasons are outlined in the flawed guidelines, which is why I have rejected them.

I am one of many conscientious doctors who do not agree with abortion on demand. We would be put in an impossible position because, if we did not go through with those procedures and adhere to the law of the land, we would be prosecuted. Therefore, as a doctor, I urge the Assembly to reject those guidelines. I have heard that people can get terminations in Northern Ireland depending on where they live. That is illegal. Evidence of that must be sought and the Assembly made aware of it.

Last week's ‘Dispatches’ on Channel 4 has been mentioned. I did not see it, although I know a woman who did. It showed the remnants of an abortion. I challenge the media to show an abortion on television to let the pro-choice people and everyone else see how horrific it is. They will see that it is a procedure that should never be allowed to happen in our society.

I support the motion and reject the amendment because I believe that the guidelines will bring us closer to the day when that awful procedure will be allowed in Northern Ireland.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): It is clear that abortion is an issue that inspires a range of emotions and strongly held views. There are many interested groups and members of the public who have strong and opposing opinions on the emotive subject of abortion. At the outset, let me make it clear that I will not change, or do not propose to change, the law on abortion in Northern Ireland — nor could I, even if I wished to. The purpose of the guidance is not to make it easier or more difficult to obtain an abortion in Northern Ireland; the reason for producing the guidance is to clarify the existing law on abortion and to provide clinical and good practice guidance to health professionals. Those are actions that my Department has been directed to take by the Court of Appeal.

Application of the guidance, when it is finalised, will be a matter of informed clinical judgement that will be made by medical professionals. The Abortion Act 1967, as amended by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990, constitutes abortion law in Great Britain. That has never been extended to Northern Ireland and does not apply here. Abortion law in Northern Ireland is contained in the Offences Against the Person Act 1861, the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945, the Bourne judgement of 1939 and subsequent case law.

The Bourne judgement is one of the key legal points. In 1938, Dr Alex Bourne, a London gynaecologist, tested the existing law in order to clarify the circumstances in which abortions may be carried out. He was charged under the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 of unlawfully carrying out an abortion on a 14-year-old girl who had been raped by a group of soldiers. The Bourne judgement — given in a lower court and never challenged before higher courts — confirmed that under common law it had always been the case that an abortion that had been carried out in good faith for the purpose of preserving the life of the mother did not constitute an offence.

It was also established in case law that abortion was not an offence if carried out in good faith to prevent the risk of serious damage to the mother's physical or mental health. The proposed guidance does not change any of that. It is in no way an attempt to introduce the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland by the back door. Let me also make it clear that, under the law of Northern Ireland, abortion is permitted only where it is necessary in order to save the life of the mother or where continuation of the pregnancy would involve the risk of real and serious injury to her physical or mental health, which would be permanent or long term. Those grounds are narrower than those that exist in the rest of the United Kingdom under the Abortion Act 1967. As a result of that, unlike the rest of the UK, abortion in Northern Ireland is a relatively uncommon occurrence.

In 2005–06, the last year for which figures are available, 80 medical abortions were carried out in Northern Ireland. In each of those cases, the law requires the decision to carry out an abortion to be a matter of clinical judgement by medical professionals. In 2006, 1,300 Northern Irish women are recorded as having travelled to Great Britain to undergo an abortion. That year, the number of abortion procedures carried out for women resident in England and Wales was 193,700.

Let me also make it clear that there is no question of my bringing about a situation where abortion is available on demand in Northern Ireland. It is important that Members bear in mind the fact that abortion law falls within the category of criminal law and is a reserved matter. Abortion law is an issue for MPs at Westminster and not one for the Assembly. It is for Parliament at Westminster to legislate on. The Northern Ireland Assembly can only legislate on abortion law with the consent and approval of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, Shaun Woodward.

During the passage of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Government gave assurances that there would be no change to abortion law in Northern Ireland without the consent of the main parties. More recently, in a parliamentary answer in July 2007, Paul Goggins MP, Minister of State for Northern Ireland, gave the commitment that the Government have no plans to amend the law on abortion in Northern Ireland.

4.45 pm

There appears to some confusion about where we stand in respect of the guidance and how it was arrived at. I would like to clear that up. The background to the development of the guidance is that, in 2001, the Family Planning Association instigated a judicial review that sought to have the Department issue guidance about the circumstances in which abortion provision may be obtained in Northern Ireland and to investigate the alleged difficulties in obtaining services for the termination of pregnancy.

First, in November 2004, the Court of Appeal ruled that it required my Department to consider what steps it should take to inquire into the adequacy of termination of pregnancy services in Northern Ireland, including aftercare. The Court of Appeal further required that, following such an inquiry and after appropriate consultation with concerned organisations, my Department should issue appropriate guidance.

The next step, following a clear instruction from the court, was for my Department to set up a group, chaired by the Chief Medical Officer, to take that matter forward. A wide range of professional advice was sought. There was a consensus that guidance should be produced for clinicians and GPs that should cover issues such as: clarification of the legal opinion; conscientious objection; informed consent; standardisation of pre-abortion and post-abortion care across Northern Ireland; counselling services; and good clinical practice.

The third stage was the development of draft guidance, with input from a wide range of health professionals, including obstetricians, psychiatrists, midwives, GPs and legal advisers. As I have already stressed, the purpose of the guidance is to clarify the existing law on abortion in Northern Ireland, and to provide guidance on good clinical practice.

Mrs I Robinson: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGimpsey: No. I am reading a statement — it is an important statement, and I want to read it straight through.

The fourth stage was to issue draft guidance to interested parties on 9 January this year, for comment by 20 April. Officials from my Department met and received written responses from groups and individuals representing a wide range of opinions and positions, including pro-life and pro-choice groups, religious organisations and medical professionals. Among the issues raised in the responses were: the interpretation of current law and legal principles; provision of information for women; clinical assessment, particularly in respect of mental health; conscientious objection by health professionals; consent and confidentiality arrangements for minors; and information on referral procedures and access services.

We all know that the range of opinion on this matter is wide and varied. It is an issue that has been the subject of heated and lengthy debate for many years. It is an issue of the utmost seriousness — indeed, it is too serious an issue with which to play party politics. I want to ensure that the matters raised are given the most careful and balanced consideration. The Court of Appeal's direction to produce guidance gave us an opportunity to at least provide some clarity for those people, including women and clinicians, who have to deal with this issue on a personal level. Indeed, many clinicians have welcomed the move to provide a clear framework within which they have to take those most difficult decisions.

I have therefore asked the Chief Medical Officer to convene and chair a departmental group — which will include the relevant professional and legal advisers — to consider the way forward, taking into account the responses to the draft guidance. That group will have completed its deliberations and developed further drafts in the first half of 2008, which will form the basis for the next stage. Responses from interested groups and individuals will be sought before the redrafted guidance is put to the Assembly Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety. The Committee will have an opportunity to scrutinise the draft guidance and make its views known before final adoption. My point is that the guidance as it currently stands is very much a work in progress.

Again, it is important to stress that there has been no change, nor is there any proposed change, to the law on abortion in Northern Ireland. When we produce finalised guidance, it will simply restate the existing law and also provide clinical and good-practice guidance for health professionals.

It is to be hoped that the guidance will provide clear directions for clinicians who are faced with requests for abortions.

Mr Kennedy: Members on all sides of the House have clearly expressed their opposition to any extension of the Abortion Act 1967. I welcome that because it concur with my own strongly held personal views. I also welcome the clarity of the Minister's statement. I hope that all Members heard it and listened attentively to the important points that were raised.

In moving the amendment, my honourable friend Mr McCallister drew attention to the 8 October 2004 judgement of Lord Justice Nicholson. Lord Justice Nicholson said:

"This case does not involve an attempt to liberalise the law on abortion. It is no part of the court's function to lend itself to such an attempt. The Westminster Parliament or the Northern Ireland Assembly is the proper forum for any debate on abortion. The available evidence supports the view that the vast majority of people in Northern Ireland do not wish to have the Abortion Act 1967 which applies in Great Britain to be extended to Northern Ireland."

I strongly agree with those sentiments. It is abundantly clear that when instructing the Minister and Department to issue guidelines on the lawful termination of pregnancy, the court did not regard itself, in any shape or form, as allowing an attempt via an administrative decree to undermine Northern Ireland's law on abortion. As the amendment makes clear, the guidelines must — and I emphasise the word "must" — be consistent with the existing legal position on abortion. If that were not the case, I could not support the amendment. If, in a fit of unwarranted judicial activism, the court had given carte blanche to the Minister and the Department:

"to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland."

by means of guidelines, I would speak against their introduction. I say that as a strong opponent of any attempt to extend the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland.

The amendment explicitly reaffirms the existing abortion law in Northern Ireland. It states, as did the court, that the guidelines must be consistent with the existing law. In my view, therefore, it opposes any attempt to use the guidelines as a means of bypassing or undermining the existing law. As my honourable friend Mr McCallister said, the amendment is about the rule of law. That requires the Minister and his Department to issue guidelines on the lawful termination of pregnancy.

The court's intention in instructing the Minister and the Department to issue guidelines was not to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland. In fact, the opposite is explicitly the case. I respectfully draw that to the Minister's attention; I know that he has already given due regard to that aspect of the court's judgement. It is right that we approach the guidelines with the determination that the law in Northern Ireland should not be undermined. The purpose of the amendment, in reasserting the legal position of abortion in Northern Ireland, is to ensure that no such slippage occurs in this jurisdiction.

The debate has provided us with a good opportunity to examine the issue. The texts of the motion and the amendment have clouded the overall issue slightly, but it is abundantly clear that there is no support for any extension of the Abortion Act 1967. That is very welcome.

I am aware of the existence of the new pro-life group in the Assembly. Perhaps it will have an early opportunity to bring forward a suitable motion on a cross-party basis that the Ulster Unionist Party can give unanimous support to.

Mr Donaldson: I thank all of the Members who participated in the debate, which has been measured and considered. Clearly, there are strongly held views on abortion, and it was right that the motion was brought forward at this time. I apologise that I had to be temporarily absent from the Chamber for a short time and that I missed some of the comments that were made by other Members.

It is clear that there is strong public opposition to the draft guidelines in their current form and to any move to liberalise the law on abortion in Northern Ireland. That is also the clear view across the Chamber. However, the purpose of the motion is twofold. First, it is to establish that the guidelines, as currently drafted, are fundamentally flawed. Secondly, it is to send out a clear message to the Parliament at Westminster that the Assembly opposes any attempt to liberalise the law on abortion in Northern Ireland.

I have listened carefully to the points made on the amendment by Members from the Ulster Unionist Party John McCallister, Basil McCrea and Danny Kennedy, and by the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. However, the amendment does not reject the current draft guidelines as the basis for further consultation. In fact, the Minister intends to take the guidelines in their current form as the basis for going forward to the Health Committee.

I cannot recommend such a course of action when I have two legal opinions stating that the guidelines, in their current form, are deeply flawed. Therefore, before the Minister brings forward any further proposals to the Health Committee, he must go back to the drawing board on the draft guidelines.

There is clearly a problem. If Sinn Féin is going to support the amendment, then that party must be clear that the amendment does not reject the draft guidelines in their current form. More than 100,000 people in Northern Ireland have lodged their objection to the proposed draft guidelines in a petition, and there are legal concerns about the draft guidelines themselves.

Mr McGimpsey: In my speech, I made the point that the draft guidelines are work in progress and are being reviewed by the Chief Medical Officer and a group in the Department. When they have completed their deliberations, they will develop further draft guidance in the first half of 2008. That draft guidance will go out for consultation, and the results of that consultation will go to the Assembly Committee.

Mr Donaldson: I thank the Minister for that clarification. In those circumstances, why on earth is the Ulster Unionist Party bringing forward an amendment when the motion does nothing to prevent the Minister from doing precisely what he has said he will do?

Mr O'Dowd: The Member appears to be suggesting that we go back to the Health Committee with a blank piece of paper. If that is not the case, then what is he suggesting? Is the Health Committee to be involved in the process? This is important to Sinn Féin. Local people and local legislators should be involved in drawing up the guidelines. If that is what the Member is suggesting, then Sinn Féin is more than happy to support the motion.

Mr Donaldson: The motion does not prevent the Minister from bringing forward new proposals to the Health Committee. The current proposals are fundamentally flawed and should not be the basis for further consultation. Unfortunately, the amendment does not make that clear. It fails to clarify that position, which is why I cannot support it. I urge Members opposite to bear that in mind when deciding how they vote.

5.00 pm

The motion does not prevent the Minister or the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety from examining the issue. The DUP's view is that what is on the table now is fundamentally flawed.

My second point, which I direct particularly to the Member for Lagan Valley Mr Basil McCrea, relates to the timing of today's motion: at this precise moment, a House of Commons Committee is debating the draft human tissue and embryology Bill. As it deliberates, a Liberal Democrat MP Dr Evan Harris proposes to table an amendment, the effect of which would be to extend the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland. Therefore, what better time than now for the Assembly to send a clear signal that it is not in favour of liberalising the law on abortion?

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Donaldson: The Assembly is not in favour of extending the Abortion Act 1967 to Northern Ireland, and the amendment fails to send any such message to the national Parliament. The DUP cannot accept the amendment, because it does not send out the signal that local legislators should deal with abortion. As the Secretary of State has said, it would be wrong for Parliament to legislate without the consent of the Assembly. Today, the Assembly must put down a clear marker on its position: that is precisely what the motion does and precisely what the amendment fails to do.

I thank the Member for Foyle Mr Pat Ramsey, who is the vice chairman of the all-party pro-life group, for his excellent contribution to the debate. I thank the SDLP for its support of the motion, which is much appreciated, because it proves that the issue transcends political and religious beliefs in Northern Ireland and that there is cross-party and cross-community support for the Assembly's stance today.

I commend the Member for West Tyrone Dr Deeny for his excellent exposition, from a medical perspective, on the guidelines. He outlined why it is important that the Assembly approves the motion and not the amendment: the motion seeks to ensure that the medical profession receives the correct guidance that is truly within the current law. In contrast, should the Department proceed with the draft guidelines, they would go beyond the current law.

I could talk at length about the flaws in the guidelines, but I will mention only a couple. Members have been told that the guidelines attempt to clarify the existing law but, as currently drafted, they do not even get the basic law right. The second part of the statute, section 25 of the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945, which deals with child destruction, is completely omitted from the guidelines. It is unlawful for a medical practitioner, in certain circumstances:

“to destroy the life of a child”.

Yet the guidelines offer no guidance to medical practitioners on the consequences of that Act.

Mr Shannon: A few years ago, 194,000 unborn children were murdered across the water, and only 1% of those deaths resulted from emergency operations. Will the Member and the Assembly agree that it is not a figure that we want to be emulated here?

Mr Donaldson: I thank the Member for his contribution, and I agree entirely with him. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the draft guidelines, and particularly the clinical guidelines at annex C, are those issued for England and Wales by the Royal College of Gynaecology. If there is not an agenda to extend the availability of abortion in Northern Ireland and the 1967 Act is not supposed to apply here, will someone explain to me why the draft clinical guidelines that apply to the Act in England and Wales are simply being imported into the guidelines in Northern Ireland? That is why the draft guidelines are fundamentally flawed, and the amendment fails to recognise that.

Mrs I Robinson: Will the Member agree that the Assembly should have access to the results of post-mortems that are carried out in Northern Ireland on the basis of foetal abnormality? Should Members not have a definition of foetal abnormality?

Mr Donaldson: The Member for Strangford is absolutely right, and the guidelines are flawed in that respect too. The Assembly has a duty to protect the right to life, which must include the rights of the unborn child. The amendment fails to reject the current deeply flawed guidelines.

Mr Durkan: Does the Rt Hon Member recognise that none of those Members who spoke in favour of the amendment recognised or conceded any of the flaws that other Members had identified in the guidelines? Members who are content with the guidelines will vote in favour of the amendment, but anyone who has any reservations about them should not vote in favour of it.

Mr Donaldson: I thank the honourable Member for that contribution. He is absolutely right, and that is why we cannot accept the amendment. It does not address the flaws in the draft guidelines. The motion that is before us —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Donaldson: The motion standing in my name and in that of my honourable friend Iris Robinson recognises that the guidelines are flawed and that we must go back to the drawing board. It also recognises that we need to send out a clear signal to Westminster that we are not in favour of liberalising the law in Northern Ireland. The amendment fails to send out that clear signal, but the motion succeeds in doing so. Therefore, I ask Members to support the motion.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and negatived.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly opposes the introduction of the proposed guidelines on the termination of pregnancy in Northern Ireland; believes that the guidelines are flawed; and calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to abandon any attempt to make abortion more widely available in Northern Ireland.

Abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Elliott: I beg to move

That this Assembly calls on the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to bring forward the required legislation to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board.

This motion never should have been brought to the House, and I am disappointed that we must debate it today. In early 2006, the Secretary of State agreed to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board (AWB), only then to overturn his decision almost immediately. The issue has been around for some time.

The success and profitability of the agriculture sector reverberates throughout rural communities and throughout the entire Northern Ireland economy. Red tape in the agrifood sector has been well highlighted by the Ulster Farmers' Union campaign. It has run a high-profile, high-impact campaign, which calls on the Government to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board. The issue predates the restoration of the Assembly in May. We debated the issue earlier in the year before the restoration of devolution, and representatives from all parties spoke in that debate.

The Ulster Farmers' Union met all parties, and it was keen to progress the issue of reducing red tape and bureaucracy in the agriculture sector. The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board was one of five recommendations that all parties at that time supported. The excessive levels of unnecessary bureaucracy in the agriculture sector show little sign of abating, and, frankly, they are unworkable.

I pay tribute to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and her Department, and to the Minister of the Environment, for proposing a review of the red tape that affects Northern Ireland's agriculture sector. The bureaucratic tipping point has been reached in many areas of the sector.

The damage that is being done to the sector far outweighs the benefits. Recently published Government statistics show that the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development issued 18 business surveys last year, at a cost of over £318,000 to farm businesses. Only the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment issued more. That £318,000 is probably just the tip of the red-tape iceberg that local farmers have to deal with.

Unnecessary layers of bureaucracy must be pared away to reduce impediments to businesses and, putting it bluntly, to save money. The former Secretary of State's about-turn on the future of the Agricultural Wages Board does not sit well with his party's pledge to reduce bureaucracy. When that quango was established, it performed the essential task of safeguarding the right of farm workers to a fair wage. It also offered a benchmark for farm owners and managers. However, it is no longer required, and the Government must carry out their original pledge through the Department.

The Agricultural Wages Board in Northern Ireland does not run on its own; it costs a significant amount of money to run. The national minimum wage already protects all workers in Northern Ireland. An Agricultural Wages Board grade 1 wage, which is paid for an employee's first year in agriculture employment, is equivalent to the national minimum wage.

Red tape, bureaucracy, equality and discrimination are all words frequently heard in Government and, quite often, in this Chamber. Why should the agriculture industry and agriculture employers be treated differently to any other industry? No other industry has a wages board; every other industry relies on the national minimum wage. I have heard that the Agricultural Wages Board exists to protect people from ethnic minorities who work in the agriculture industry. Why is there no protection for those groups in the education sector, the Health Service, the construction industry, the engineering industry, restaurants and supermarkets? Why is there not similar protection in those industries, if that is what this is about? I do not believe that it is. The Agricultural Wages Board is just another layer of bureaucracy. Again, I emphasise that agriculture employers are being discriminated against by the Agricultural Wages Board. If that is the case, let us cut it out because there is no need for it. It is another part of bureaucracy in Northern Ireland that costs money.

I have not brought this issue to the House to have a bash at the Minister. However, on 8 January in this Chamber, Ms Gildernew, who was not the Minister at the time, said:

"Without a local Minister in charge, and without the Assembly and its scrutiny Committee in place, DARD is not fully accountable. The result of that is that farmers are being short-changed ... All parties have voiced widespread concerns in the debate about the way in which DARD operates. Its methods have caused unnecessary hardship. The culture of red-tape bureaucracy and the lack of support and flexibility offered to farmers are the hallmarks of the way in which DARD does business in the North." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p225, col 2].

She continued:

"The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board is also one of the UFU's five priorities. Sinn Féin endorses all five priorities and gives its commitment to champion them." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p226, col 2].

She also said:

"We need a local Minister — there is no question about that. Sinn Féin has argued consistently that farmers in the North are not getting a fair deal. The Department has not been their champion. A local Minister would do a better job than any direct-rule Minister, and, as I have said many times before, it does not matter to which party that Minister belongs.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p227, col 1].

Ms Ruane also spoke in the debate, stating that:

“My party supports the removal of the Agricultural Wages Board (AWB) because, with the introduction of the minimum wage in 1999, the AWB has become yet another layer of unnecessary bureaucracy.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p216, col 1].

All I ask is that that policy from January be adopted, so that we get rid of another layer of bureaucracy and red tape and another quango from the system.

5.15 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that mobile phones must be switched off completely; otherwise, they interfere with the recording system.

Dr W McCrea: I thank Mr Elliott for placing the item on the agenda for debate, because it is a worthy issue.

There is anger and frustration in the farming community that this matter has not been dealt with effectively and honourably by the Department and by the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

During the transitional Assembly, there was a debate on over-bureaucratic administration in the agriculture industry. I refer Members to the motion that was tabled on Monday 8 January 2007.

The reason for today's debate is that many thousands of farm businesses across the Province are being hampered by numerous tiers of unnecessary bureaucracy, especially at a time when the success and profitability of farms is under tremendous strain. The farming industry is facing major challenges, and the recent 'Northern Ireland Red Meat Industry Task Force: Strategy Review' shows how understandable it is that farmers are angry with the Minister, because she refuses to actively assist them in their plight. I assure the House that the farming community has enough to think about without the constant burden of bureaucracy and form-filling, especially when every word written appears to be nit-picked by a few over-zealous civil servants.

I understand that safeguards and standards must be adhered to, and that the highest level of traceability is essential for the protection of the industry. No one is seeking to remove those relevant and helpful measures, but that cannot be said about the Agricultural Wages Board.

During the debate on 8 January, the Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone's colleague the Member for South Down Caitríona Ruane said, and I quote:

“The Ulster Farmers' Union's policy document 'Five Steps to a Better Future', puts forward a number of workable and extremely practical measures, that, if implemented, would go some way to addressing the excessive amount of red tape.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p215, col 2].

She went on to say:

“My party supports the removal of the Agricultural Wages Board (AWB) because, with the introduction of the minimum wage in 1999, the AWB has become yet another layer of unnecessary bureaucracy.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p216, col 1].

What does the Department not understand about that clear statement by Caitríona Ruane?

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, speaking as a Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone at that time, said:

“The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board is also one of the UFU's five priorities. Sinn Féin endorses all five priorities and gives its commitment to champion them.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p226, col 2].

The Minister now has the audacity to try to remove the commitment to one of the very priorities that she, when she was a Member of the House, said she was going to champion.

She also went on to say that a Minister in Northern Ireland would do a much better job than any direct rule Minister. Let me address that point, because under direct rule, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, Peter Hain — whom I certainly have no bouquets for — said on 21 March 2006, during his statement on the review of public administration, that the Agricultural Wages Board would cease to exist.

Therefore, under a direct rule Minister, the Agricultural Wages Board was going; the current Minister told us that the job would be better done by a Minister from Northern Ireland; and we now find that she has turned that decision on its head. I understand the anger of farmers. However, I cannot understand the Minister's blatant refusal to put her own words into action, which is in defiance of the review of public administration recommendation.

The Ulster Farmers' Union has consistently highlighted to all the local political parties the need for the abolition of the Northern Ireland Agricultural Wages Board, and it believed that it had their support.

The Minister's excuse for her somersault is worthy of contempt and proves once again that rather than being the champion of the Northern Ireland farmers and freeing them from the burden of bureaucracy, she has decided to grind the industry into the ground. There is no justification for the Minister's action. She must now change her decision on the Agricultural Wages Board or rest assured that she does not have the confidence of the House. I support the motion.

Mr W Clarke: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The motion has nothing to do with bureaucracy and dealing with red tape, but is a blatant attempt to cut the wages of farm workers in the North, which would, in turn, open the door to more poverty in rural Ireland. Sinn Féin believes that the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board would lead to further lower wages and the exploitation of agriculture workers in the North of Ireland, particularly migrant and temporary workers who are used as a source of cheap labour. The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board would pave the way to make the North the agricultural sweatshop of Western Europe.

I am opposed to any measure to reduce take-home pay and the standard of living for agriculture workers — and all workers — in Ireland. Sinn Féin is opposed to the exploitation of workers, whether they are native, migrant or temporary workers. It is opposed to the North of Ireland becoming the agriculture slavery capital of these islands.

Mr T Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr W Clarke: I have only a couple of minutes.

Many of our farm workers are among the lowest paid of the workforce in the North, and it is essential that they have the strongest legal protection.

The biggest challenge for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to tackle is the falling farm-gate prices that make it hard for farmers to improve labour standards while staying in business. We all have a duty to the people who supply our food. The Irish people must be conscious that the food that they choose at the supermarket ultimately affects the lives of farmers and farm workers.

I also believe that we can learn a lesson from the Fairtrade Foundation. We need a similar system in Ireland, where prices for certified products include a social premium that consumers know will go towards improving the welfare, pay and conditions of workers. Farm workers have the right to good working conditions and a living wage. No one in the House could disagree with that statement — I hope not anyway.

The House should be in no doubt that our farming community is under immense pressure, particularly the beef sector, which has been clearly identified in the recent report by the Red Meat Industry Task Force. Farmers are under pressure to cut costs, and the only area where that is possible is in their workforce. The result has been a drastic reduction in the number of permanently employed agriculture workers worldwide, and that creates the perfect conditions for exploitation. It is essential, therefore, that mechanisms are in place to promote the protection of vulnerable sections of our community, particularly migrant labourers and women workers, who continually face lower wages and a reduction in employment.

Although everyone involved in farming wants to see red tape cut, it should not be at the expense of the low paid. Given the remote nature of the agriculture labour force and the strong links between home and job, there must be extra protection. The AWB sets a minimum wage rate for agriculture workers that provides reasonable earnings for workers, but that is affordable for the industry. The North of Ireland Agricultural Wages Board's rate is lower than that in England, Wales or Scotland.

The abolition of the AWB would ensure that agriculture workers in the North would be at an even greater disadvantage. The current standard rate for the England and Wales AWB is £6 an hour, the standard rate for the Scotland AWB is £5·96 an hour, and the standard rate for the Northern of Ireland AWB is £5·70 an hour. Workers in the agriculture industry could face an 18p an hour cut in their wages if the motion is passed, as the minimum hourly rate for a person over 22 years of age is £5·52.

Agriculture labour has always been hard, dangerous and dirty work, and it remains so in Ireland. The migrant workers who drive the crop sprayers, harvest the vegetables and fruit, pack and process the vegetables and mushrooms, and work in the abattoir slaughter sector, work long and unsocial shifts for very low wages. It is down to us, as elected representatives, to scrutinise the way in which industry deals with the exploitation of migrant workers.

Mr T Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr W Clarke: I have only a couple of minutes.

The AWB has set up a new working group to examine issues of the exploitation of migrant workers, particularly excessive rents for overcrowded accommodation. A truly sustainable agriculture industry treats workers with respect, pays them a fair wage and protects them from unnecessary dangers. Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle.

Mr P J Bradley: I support the motion in the hope that our efforts in the Assembly will reduce the amount of red tape associated with DARD's responsibilities.

Red tape and duplication are bad enough, but, considering that the Agricultural Wages Board is financed by a levy on the farming industry, it is high time to abolish it. Of course, that thinking is not new or unique. On 8 January 2007, when the Transitional Assembly debated the eradication of red tape in DARD, everyone who spoke in the debate agreed to the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board.

Members have heard from the Chairperson of the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee about the contributions on that day from two members of Sinn Féin. Those contributions are relevant to this debate and are worth repeating. Ms Ruane, a Sinn Féin Member for South Down, said:

“My party supports the removal of the Agricultural Wages Board (AWB) because, with the introduction of the minimum wage in 1999, the AWB has become yet another layer of unnecessary bureaucracy.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p216, col 1].

The Minister, Ms Gildernew, then a private Member of the Assembly, is recorded in the Hansard report as saying:

"The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board is also one of the UFU's five priorities. Sinn Féin endorses all five priorities and gives its commitment to champion them ... It seems that DARD's policy is 'do as I say, not as I do.'" — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p226, col 2].

She continued:

"We need a local Minister ... A local Minister would do a better job than any direct-rule Minister." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p227, col 1].

That was a mere 10 months ago, and questions must be asked about the Minister's U-turn. Was that a direction from her party, with which, perhaps, she does not agree, or is the withdrawal of her commitment of 8 January 2007 to the Ulster Farmers' Union campaign a decision of her own making?

However, Members must not lose sight of the key issues. Although I generalise, we must consider the worker in the field. Every worker, from unqualified to highly skilled, should be paid an honest and meaningful wage — no ifs or buts: a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. Perhaps highly skilled workers can demand an acceptable income for their labour, but that is not the prerogative of unskilled workers. Fortunately, minimum wage legislation that deals with this issue is in situ.

Anyone who takes an interest in farming knows that farm incomes have been almost non-existent for most of the past decade and that farmers' sons and daughters have moved away from the family farm because it could not give them a decent wage. Most of those people did not even expect the minimum wage.

The poor financial returns that are currently being experienced by farmers — particularly full-time, self-employed farmers — is an issue that, if taken seriously enough by DARD and the Minister, could, one day, see a return to the days in which farmers were only too pleased to share profits with their farm workers.

I repeat my concerns about the additional red tape that surrounds the minimum wage. Surely, in this day and age, it must be possible for the Minister and the Department to compare the two systems and how they apply to the agriculture industry and then report their findings to the House. The Minister should monitor the minimum wage legislation in order to ensure that it is being applied and that rights and privileges are afforded to all workers, indigenous and migratory, in agriculture and all sectors of industry.

I note the Minister's concern that some immigrant workers could be disadvantaged if the Agricultural Wages Board were to be abolished. Will the Minister tell Members about the sector, or sectors, of the agriculture industry that she has identified as blatantly taking advantage of immigrant workers?

Mr Ford: I restate my support for the Ulster Farmers' Union campaign against red tape and, specifically, the five-point plan. If my constituency colleague Dr McCrea had not done so, some of his researchers would have checked what I said during the Transitional Assembly's debates on this matter. Therefore, earlier today, I read my speech and found that, although I supported that plan at that stage, I made no mention of the Agricultural Wages Board. For the majority of farmers, I considered it to be the least important aspect of the five-point plan. Now, for the majority of farmers, there is no question of having employees. As P J Bradley said, the question now is whether there is an option to make a living off the farm for a single family.

Many other aspects of red tape have been highlighted; those bear greater consideration and are more important to the lives of the majority of farming families in Northern Ireland. If Members cannot ensure that individual family farms make a living for a family, there is little point in worrying too much about the minority agriculture employees. That is how the situation has dramatically changed since the establishment of the Agricultural Wages Board.

When the board was established, there was a significant number of employees; many small family farms would have employed one or more people. In those circumstances, individuals would have had few negotiating rights if they were the sole employees of small farm businesses in areas of high unemployment.

5.30 pm

It is understandable why the AWB was established; it was necessary, and it served a valuable purpose. However, not only has agriculture changed, but other circumstances in society changed with the introduction of the minimum wage legislation. Members have established that the minimum wage legislation parallels the AWB. It is completely unnecessary to have a separate layer of bureaucracy to deal with a matter that is dealt with elsewhere in a way that meets the needs of workers in every part of the UK and in every sector of the economy. That is clearly far beyond the remit of the existing operation of the AWB.

I fully support the motion, but I repeat the point that the Minister has more work to do to address the other four points in the UFU's five-point plan. I hope that the Minister, if she is not here to enthusiastically support the motion, will deal with some of the other aspects. People should not have nightmares because of a minor miscalculation, or misplaced decimal point, in field sizes or numbers on their single farm payment claim forms. Such matters cause many problems for people, and the Minister must deal with that. The Agricultural Wages Board is an important issue, but it is not the most important one.

On that basis, I find myself in almost total agreement — possibly unusually — with everything that Mr Elliott, Dr McCrea and Mr PJ Bradley said. I was somewhat amused by Mr Clarke's Marxist analysis of the exploitation of the working classes by the wicked capitalists, because I certainly did not recognise that portrait of farmers in Northern Ireland.

There is undoubtedly a problem in Northern Ireland, as in other parts of these islands, with the exploitation of migrant workers. However, that is not an issue that the Agricultural Wages Board can address effectively, because the problem is that the minimum wage laws are not enforced. The unfair treatment of migrant workers, a minority of whom might be forced to pay ridiculous rents, for example, must be addressed. However, the Agricultural Wages Board is not the place to address such problems. It has not addressed them, so it fulfils no useful function, and it should go.

Mr Bresland: I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board, as I welcome any opportunity to support the demise of an unaccountable quango. The introduction of the national minimum wage should have effectively abolished the Agricultural Wages Board. Northern Ireland's farmers are being choked by an unacceptable amount of red tape, and the Agricultural Wages Board is another example of such bureaucracy.

Other industries are legally bound to accept the national minimum wage, yet the farming industry in Northern Ireland is further bound by the Agricultural Wages Board. I call upon the Minister to listen to the farming industry and to take proactive measures to cut red tape and bureaucracy.

In seeking to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board, I am not advocating a return to the hiring fairs that operated until the 1940s. However, I am advocating the adoption of the national minimum wage for all workers. Many of my farming constituents in West Tyrone would be only too happy to receive £5.52 an hour for their labours instead of having to sell lambs, suckler calves and beef cattle at early 1980s prices while their input costs continue to rise.

The Northern Ireland farming industry is struggling to adapt, as was clearly shown in the red meat task force's report, which was published earlier this month. The industry faces many challenges ranging from disease control, environmental issues and the dreaded bureaucracy to reduced income and high input costs.

I fully accept that the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development must address many important issues, including nitrates management, the future of the red meat industry, environmental issues, the delivery of the rural development programme and the task of ensuring that Northern Ireland has a sustainable agriculture industry and a vibrant rural community.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development must make effective moves to cut red tape for farmers, as advocated by the Ulster Farmers' Union. The demise of the Agricultural Wages Board can play a positive role in that process and in offering farmers the freedom to farm. Farm workers should have nothing to fear from that move, as they have the full protection of the national minimum wage. I support the motion.

Ms Anderson: Ba mhaith liom caint i gcoinne an mholaidh seo. I oppose the motion. At the core of this debate are issues of equality and human rights. I know that the NICEM and the trade union representatives — who have joined us and are seated in the Public Gallery — will agree with that assertion. On behalf of Sinn Féin, I welcome them here today.

Members have a moral and statutory duty to ensure that the needs of the most vulnerable in society are protected.

Mr T Clarke: On a point of order. Is it in order to refer to people sitting in the Public Gallery?

Mr Deputy Speaker: No, it is not. It is not in order to make reference to them, but since it passed, I thought it best to leave it.

Ms Anderson: Go raibh maith agat. That is exactly the role that the Agricultural Wages Board performs. Having examined in greater detail the Board's role, remit, and functions, it is a role that Sinn Féin agrees is required.

There should be no mistake, those who argue for the abolition of the board on the grounds that it is only a further, unnecessary and inconvenient level of bureaucracy do the board a disservice. Despite what Tom Elliott says, abolition is not about inconvenience or bureaucracy; it is about dismantling protection and basic standards for all farmers and agricultural workers.

It has been argued that wages of workers in the agriculture sector are too high in comparison with a small farmer's own weekly wage, which statistics estimate at £88 a week. However, the motion is aimed at dismantling the protections of the vulnerable in society and at lowering the real wages of agricultural workers.

The task of the Assembly is to use the opportunities — now that Ministers at Westminster no longer make the decisions for agriculture — to create the vibrant, agriculture sector in which farmers' incomes are considerably higher.

At last, Members are in the position to give agriculture its central place in the development of the economy. The Sinn Féin Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Michelle Gildernew, will work with the Irish people in our common interest to foster and nurture the agriculture sector across Ireland, which has for so long been neglected here in the North —

Mr Ford: Will the Member give way?

Ms Anderson: Suigh síos — under British rule and the cheap food policies of Westminster.

We live in a world of global warming, in which food prices are expected to rise at unprecedented rates. Recent increases in grain prices are indications that those changes have just begun. Members have a responsibility to ensure that those price rises are managed properly and that the benefits do not accrue to middlemen or multi-national wholesalers, but are used —

A Member: Will the Member give way?

Ms Anderson: Suigh síos. Those benefits should be used to ensure that urban dwellers are not faced with huge, unaffordable food price rises, but also to ensure that farmers' incomes rise, and that the conditions of farm workers are improved.

A challenging time lies ahead for the agriculture sector. Members need to manage it — for food producers; consumers; farmers; and agriculture workers — to ensure that everyone gains and that small farmers' weekly incomes are not £88 a week. What use are declarations of minimum wage rates unless there is a means to monitor and oversee conditions in that sector and to ensure that those conditions are observed?

We have heard stories of wives, daughters, and relatives of farmers who tirelessly work long hours without rights and without social protection. They are people who do not even exist in the employment data, or enjoy rights such as pensions, inheritance, healthcare, holidays, social security or the right to attend further education.

Many of the people whose wages are regulated by the Agricultural Wages Board are at the lower tier of the industry. Often they are migrant workers who are low-paid and vulnerable.

There are existing protections in the minimum wage legislation, but those workers are often new to the country. They are faced with language and cultural barriers, and they are, all too often, unaware of their rights. Often the work is seasonal or casual and, therefore, not as tightly regulated as other areas of industry or of the economy as a whole.

We all remember the horror that we felt when 18 Chinese cockle-pickers drowned in Lancashire. That almost unimaginable tragedy was followed by widespread demands for more protection for migrant workers. Such an incident must never happen again. Yet, just three years later, the Assembly is asked to remove what little protection migrant workers have.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Time is up. For those who were puzzled, suigh síos means "sit down".

Mr Irwin: I also thank Mr Elliott for tabling the motion.

The minimum wage legislation has been very practical and welcome and has safeguarded many people, most importantly, the youth of our society, in securing a fair wage. The fact that there is still a separate organisation to oversee the pay structures in the agriculture sector can only be described as another ball and chain around the ankle of the farming industry.

Agriculture is the only industry that has a wages board. In 'Five Steps to a Better Future', the Ulster Farmers' Union lists the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board as one of those five steps. It ties in with another of the steps: the reduction of red tape and form-filling. The Minister herself, in this very Chamber, voiced her support for the Ulster Farmers' Union document. I invite the Minister to confirm that, since taking her position as Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, she has performed a spectacular U-turn.

Mr T Clarke: Does the Member agree not that the Minister has necessarily done a U-turn, but that since January she has had an elevation to Minister and is now a puppet on a string for the Department?

Mr Irwin: It looks very much like that.

She now refuses to champion all five priorities laid out by the Ulster Farmers' Union in 'Five Steps to a Better Future'. She said, on 8 January in this Chamber:

"The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board is also one of the UFU's five priorities. Sinn Féin endorses all five priorities and gives its commitment to champion them." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p226, col 2].

The Minister appears to have broken her word on that.

In addition, I invite the Minister to confirm either that her party is divided on the issue, or that Caitríona Ruane was wrong when she suggested the removal of the Agricultural Wages Board. My honourable friend the Member for South Antrim has already quoted her words; however, given that the previous Member has just been speaking, I will reiterate them:

"My party supports the removal of the Agricultural Wages Board (AWB) because, with the introduction of the minimum wage in 1999, the AWB has become yet another layer of unnecessary bureaucracy." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p216, col 1].

Why such a monumental change of heart by the Minister of Agriculture? It is somewhat rich that, in the Chamber on 8 January, other Sinn Féin MLAs related the lack of a devolved Administration to the lack of proactive decision-making on agriculture. The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board would be a great step forward in assisting local industry, yet, when the opportunity exists, the Minister refuses to take it. I support the motion and call on the Minister to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board as soon as possible.

Mr McHugh: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I did not expect to be allowed to speak so soon. However, this is an opportunity to debate a very important subject. I say to the Members opposite that there is no division in my party on the issue. They might scrap for little pieces here and there, but that is all that they will get. Sinn Féin will always be foremost in respecting and defending the issues of workers, whatever about anyone else. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker, do I have to take a running commentary from others while I try to make my few points?

Several of the unions have shown that they support the Minister. In today's 'Irish News', a letter written by a member of Unite congratulates the Minister on her decision. Many other people are prepared to say the same.

5.45pm

Ultimately, a Minister is entitled to change her mind — even in the Chamber — on an issue that is of such importance to average workers. Let us consider some of the comments that were made. P J Bradley mentioned the hiring fairs. That is what people had to put up with in the past. Historically, the position of agriculture workers has always been one of low pay, exploitation, awful conditions, and, indeed, abuse of women and sometimes children. David Ford mentioned the farm family. That was the least of the five points that were made. The Minister will defend her decision on the one on the other four, which are of immense importance to the agriculture industry.

The motion has been used to simply target the Minister. Having listened to Members' comments, I consider the issue to be fairly unimportant. The board has existed for years, yet no one has sought its abolition before now. The Assembly should not seek to remove any board lightly that protects the position —

Mr T Clarke: Can the Member explain, therefore, why, in January 2007, his party endorsed all five principles and advocated that the board should be removed? The Member has refused to answer that question when it has been barked across the Chamber at him.

Mr McHugh: I have already mentioned the reason that the Member might have a different view on the matter. When scrutinising the entire situation, care must be taken not to remove workers' protection. Several Members, including Tom Elliott, made various points about the raft of protections that exist, including the national minimum wage, section 75, and equality legislation. In general, politicians pay lip service to such issues in councils and elsewhere. There is precious little support for either section 75 or equality with regard to immigrants, whether they are migrant workers or otherwise. Those measures were only put in place because people were being exploited.

Dr W McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr McHugh: I do not have time to give way; I want to make a few other points.

At present, the mistreatment of migrant workers is widespread. It has been said that £187 is a much better wage than the £88 that farmers receive. However, there are a fair number of large farms and, indeed, rich farmers who get sizeable single farm payments — in some instances as much as £200,000 plus. Regardless of whether they are nationals or people from further afield, that is the situation in which workers find themselves, and £187 is a low wage for anyone. Therefore, there is no problem with keeping the issue on the radar for future scrutiny.

It is important that quangos are questioned and, if necessary, removed. Sinn Féin is in favour of that; so, too, is the Minister. However, the members of the Agricultural Wages Board are unpaid. Some people might say that the board is a costly item that farmers must carry. However, the multiples, processors and big manufacturers have cost farmers millions of pounds every year, yet what have some of the unions done to remove them? That is the important question that we must ask ourselves.

I am against the motion because it is a blatant attempt to make a political point and does not support ordinary workers. Go raibh maith agat.

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank Mr Elliott for securing the debate. It is clearly important to those who are involved in agriculture, including both employers and employees. Although it is not top of the agenda, as Mr Ford pointed out, it merits debate nonetheless. I welcome the fact that the Assembly has had the chance to discuss it.

I have listened to the points that Mr Elliott and other Members raised. I recognise their concerns, most of which are not new to me. Before I deal with Members' points, I will set out some of the background to the Agricultural Wages Board, the cases for and against the board's abolition, and the rationale for my recent decision not to abolish the board.

The Agricultural Wages (Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 established the AWB's structure and statutory authority. Under the Order, the AWB sets a minimum wage rate for agricultural employees over a range of grades. It also sets holiday pay and entitlement, sick pay, and the maximum charge that an employer may make for accommodation provided to employees.

Protection for minority workers in other industries has been mentioned during the debate. I am the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, and it is my job to look after the rights of the people for which my Department has responsibility. However, I fully support protection for minority workers in any industry. The maximum charge that an employer may make for accommodation has been a pertinent issue over many years, particularly for migrant workers.

The Agricultural Wages Board comprises 15 members: six are nominated by the Ulster Farmers' Union, representing employers; six are nominated by the Amalgamated Transport and General Workers' Union, representing employees; and three are independent members.

In addition to the board here, there are two boards in Britain. A similar arrangement for determining agricultural wage rates exists in the South. The board has no staff, and does not expend a budget. Board members do not receive a salary, but receive attendance fees and travel expenses amounting to less than £5,000 for the year 2005-06. That represents a minimal amount of money for the protection of workers' rights.

My Department is responsible for the enforcement of the legislation associated with the board. In practice, that tends to be reactive, in response to complaints that are received from agriculture workers. I am glad to say that there have been very few complaints, which is an indication of compliance by employers. Workers' rights are also supported by enforcement work and inspections of employers undertaken by the Gangmasters Licensing Authority.

Since its establishment, the board has consistently balanced the needs of, and maintained a stable relationship between, agriculture employers and employees. If, in line with the motion, I were to bring forward the necessary measures to abolish the board, primary legislation would be required to repeal The Agricultural Wages (Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 1977. That would take some time and would require a legislative vehicle.

On my arrival in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, one of the first issues that crossed my desk concerned a recommendation from the Ulster Farmers' Union to abolish the board. That is one element of the UFU's five-point plan, which has been rehearsed several times during the debate. I will not go through the comments that were made in January, other than to say that we stand over what was said. However, and on full exploration of the facts, I decided not to abolish the board. However —

Mr Irwin: Will the Member give way?

Ms Gildernew: No. I will not give way.

Dr W McCrea: Why not?

Ms Gildernew: I do not want to.

Dr W McCrea: This is a debating Chamber.

Ms Gildernew: Dr McCrea has had his chance to speak.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Minister, I shall take this opportunity to go through a ritual that we must perform. If the business on the Order Paper has not been disposed of by 6.00 pm, in accordance with Standing Order 10.3, I will allow business to continue until 7.00 pm, or until the business has been completed.

Ms Gildernew: Mr Elliott, go raibh maith agat, I did not say that I did not have time to give way. I said that I chose not to give way, and I stand over that decision. I do not have to give way, and I prefer not to.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I did not, in any way, misinterpret what you said in the debate. You have the Floor, so you may continue your speech.

Ms Gildernew: Thank you, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The Ulster Farmers' Union argued, and continues to argue, that with the national minimum wage structure in place to protect the rights of all farm workers, the board is an unnecessary level of bureaucracy for farmers, and that the higher wage rates that are set by the board burden the agriculture sector through the imposition of higher costs. My initial view, in line with my own party's view at the time, was to support that recommendation. Much has been made of that.

I believe that it takes a bigger person to change a position. When the full facts were presented to me, I realised that I did not have all the information required in order to make a decision.

However, in an effort to consider the impact of the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board on all sectors — [Interruption.]

I did not interrupt the Committee Chairman when he spoke.

In order to consider that matter in line with the equality agenda, I considered the balanced views presented by my officials of the potential impact on employers and employees. I also, importantly, consulted with the ATGWU (Amalgamated Transport and General Workers Union), which represents the employees. The ATGWU argued that abolition of the board would place employees here at a financial disadvantage when compared with other workers on these islands, and that it would have wider implications as the board is used as a benchmark for the wider agrifood industry and other rural occupations here.

The strength of feeling at my meeting with the ATGWU representatives was illustrated by their remark that they feared that the loss of the board might result in the North becoming the sweatshop for agriculture workers on these islands. That is surely not what Members want for the North's agriculture employees — or any employees, for that matter.

Having listened to the views expressed, I subsequently considered the case for and against abolition of the board. The national minimum wage structure does not offer a similar level of protection to that offered by the board. The loss of workers' rights is evident where the board's remit exceeds that of the national minimum wage structure — that is the case in respect of wage rates and leave entitlements. Let me illustrate that point. When I considered the matter in May of this year, the board's minimum wage rate was set at £5.35 per hour, the same level as the national minimum wage rate, but the board also allowed for a higher standard rate of £5.70 an hour for employees with more than 40 weeks' cumulative employment in agriculture. The difference in the two rates is 35p, which, based on a 40-hour week, represent a total weekly difference of some £14. Members will agree that that is not an insignificant amount of money for low-paid agriculture workers.

While I accept that there is a perceived burden on the employer as a result of those marginally higher wage costs, that has to be considered in the context of low-paid agriculture workers and the need to retain them within the agriculture industry in the North. In addition, the farmers faced with higher wage costs tend to be the larger and more profitable farmers, as has already been mentioned by Gerry McHugh. The board also provides for further skills-related wage rates, rising to £7.70 for farm-management grades, aimed at encouraging suitably skilled people in the industry. The national minimum wage structure does not allow for those higher rates.

Let me make it clear that it was my intention at the time of the decision, and remains my intention now, to ensure that regulation and bureaucracy that is imposed is necessary, fit for purpose, proportionate and delivered in a way which best allows the industry to get on with its business.

As regards the additional bureaucracy associated with the Agricultural Wages Board, I note that it is limited to determining whether the work is considered agricultural activity and therefore falls within the remit of the board, and to compliance with the wage rates in place, which differ depending on age, skills and experience. Of course, farmers can opt to pay the higher rate, thereby avoiding that level of bureaucracy completely. Interestingly, the complexity of the board's wage rates, which have the potential to increase the bureaucratic burden, is agreed by all members of the board, including by the representatives of the Ulster Farmers' Union.

In considering the case for and against abolition, I reached several conclusions. The first is that the national minimum wage structure does not offer farm workers the same protection afforded by the board, particularly in terms of wage rates. Secondly, while wage costs under the board are slightly higher, that has to be balanced against the need to retain suitably skilled agriculture workers in the North. Thirdly, the level of bureaucracy associated with the board's rate is not significant and is no different in the North than anywhere else on these islands. Finally, the board is a valuable forum for wage negotiations, and, as I have said, is an important benchmark for the wider agrifood industry and other rural occupations. In those circumstances, I decided that the board should not be abolished.

In conclusion, I am of the firm view that the abolition of the board would place agriculture workers here at a disadvantage when compared with workers elsewhere on these islands. In the absence of an alternative mechanism to protect the rights of agriculture employees in line with the equality agenda, I remain of the view that the board should not be abolished.

I believe that my decision is in the interests of sustainable farming and protects the rights and continuing availability of farm workers, including migrant workers, in the North. This is a time of significant influx of migrants to the North; in fact, I have just received a letter from the Northern Ireland Council for Ethnic Minorities expressing the view that the abolition of the board would have adverse impacts on migrant workers and those from ethnic minorities who take agricultural jobs.

6.00 pm

Furthermore, I do not believe that it is in the interests of the agriculture industry to allow the North to become, as suggested by the ATGWU, the sweatshop for agricultural workers on these islands. Now is not the time to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board. Accordingly, I cannot support the motion. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Savage: I commend my colleague and friend the Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone Mr Elliott for securing the debate. I support the motion and declare an interest as a farmer.

It is hard to believe that the Agricultural Wages Board costs the Government approximately £25,000 a year. Surely the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development can find a better way of spending that money.

The existence of the organisation has been questioned many times over the years. Outrage followed a headline in the 'Belfast Telegraph' on 15 March 2003, which said that farm workers in Ulster were better off than their bosses. That was a very serious situation, which came about because an above-inflation wage hike of 3.75% meant that farm workers were earning more than their employers — a complete scandal. When we consider the bad press that farmers have received over the years, I ask myself: what did the Agricultural Wages Board do about that? There are many people who have a lot of questions to answer on that score.

It was then that the Ulster Farmers' Union called for the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board. It continues to do so, arguing that the national minimum wage is in place and is a fair and sufficient basis on which to proceed. A member of the board at that time, who was an Ulster Farmers' Union representative from County Down, said that it was something from the past. The fact that a member of the board said that left a big question mark in my mind.

The Agricultural Wages Board is yet another of Northern Ireland's litany of unelected quangos that waste taxpayers' money hand over fist, and they should be done away with. We now have the opportunity to do that and make savings for the taxpayer, thus ensuring that money can go to front-line services where it is needed most.

We have been elected to take decisions, unlike those who sit on quangos. I recall that in the first Assembly a Minister, who was a very influential person, said that people had been elected to the House and that we did not need unelected people in quangos to tell us what to do. We are here now, and we have a job to do. Let us do the work and take on our responsibilities. We are here today, but we have not moved on one bit.

Although there are opportunities to save taxpayers' money, we also have the opportunity to listen to the representatives of our farming organisations. We are not the first to debate the existence of the Agricultural Wages Board. As was said earlier, the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, Peter Hain, announced in March 2006 that the Agricultural Wages Board in Northern Ireland was to be scrapped. That announcement came in the wake of Government plans to reduce bureaucracy.

However, in April of the same year, Mr Hain backtracked on his statement and decided that the board would not be abolished. If the contents of the statement had been implemented, Northern Ireland would have been the first UK region to abandon its Agricultural Wages Board and thus would have taken a lead on many issues.

When people are trying to get elected, it is easy for them to make statements that please the general public. However, it can be difficult to stand over those statements when those people are in a position of power. Hindsight is a wonderful thing and, sadly, under devolution, the new Minister has decided to keep the Agricultural Wages Board, contrary to the views and wishes of many Members of the House.

The duplication of legislation in the House, and in Departments, borders on red tape. I have known a number of the officials in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development for many years, and I am not criticising them. However, the Minister has been wrongly advised not to scrap the Agricultural Wages Board. The farming industry has come through difficult times in the past few years, but it has survived. The Department now has the opportunity to move forward.

Dr W McCrea: The basic issue of trust is at stake. On 8 January 2007, the Minister, as an elected Member — and she is an elected Member along with everyone else — said:

“The abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board is also one of the UFU's five priorities. Sinn Féin endorses all five priorities and gives its commitment to champion them.” — [Official Report, Bound Volume 21, p226, col 2].

The priority of the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board is as important as the rest. If the Minister cannot be trusted to keep that promise, how can the farming community trust and rely on her to keep any of the other four promises?

Ms Gildernew: Will Mr Savage give way?

Dr W McCrea: No. [Laughter.]

Mr Savage: I have given way to one Member, so I have to give way to another.

Ms Gildernew: Some people are losing the run of themselves this evening.

I was not given bad advice. When I became Minister, I considered the issue of the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board, and I soon realised that I had heard only one side of the argument. When I considered the rights of the people who are the most vulnerable in society and the issues concerning the protection of agriculture workers, I knew that I was doing the right thing. As a republican, I have no doubt that I made the right decision. I stand over that decision, and I do not regret it for a minute. I want to look after the rights of the most vulnerable and low-paid people in society, and the Member will know better than most how concerned I am about farmers and their profitability. I took the action that I did because I knew that it was the right thing to do. I stand over that, and the Member will recognise that I will do my absolute best for farmers, their employees, and the rural community.

Mr McNarry: Will the Member agree that the Minister's comments go beyond what we have been hearing all week about collectivity and collective Executive decisions? Does the Member agree, on behalf of the Assembly, to ask the Minister whether she is taking the matter to the Executive? Is the matter worthy of Executive referral? As the House is apparently divided, should she seek corporate backing and support, or will she get into trouble, as another Minister has done?

Mr Savage: I can only ask the Minister to consult the Executive, because that is her prerogative, but I hope that she will.

Mr Deputy Speaker, I do not want you to tell me that I am not sticking to the subject of the debate, because I am serious about this matter. Northern Ireland's Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has come through a tough time, and it faces an even more difficult time in the coming months.

Over the past 10 days, a dispute has been raging about the Red Meat Industry Task Force report. Will the Minister do everything in her power to bring all sides together to discuss that dispute and to ensure the survival of a viable industry in Northern Ireland? I hope that the Minister will take that extremely serious matter on board. Remember one thing: the agriculture industry is the backbone of Northern Ireland, whether Members like it or not.

Question put.

The Assembly divided: Ayes 37; Noes 28.

AYES

Mr Beggs, Mr P J Bradley, Mr Bresland, Lord Browne, Mr T Clarke, Mr Craig, Mr Cree, Mr Dodds, Mr Donaldson, Mr Easton, Mr Elliott, Sir Reg Empey, Dr Farry, Mr Ford, Mr Hamilton, Mr Irwin, Mr Kennedy, Ms Lo, Mr McCallister, Mr McCausland, Mr B McCrea, Mr I McCrea, Dr W McCrea, Mr McFarland, Mr McGimpsey, Miss McIlveen, Mr McNarry, Lord Morrow, Rev Dr Ian Paisley, Mr Poots, Mr G Robinson, Mrs I Robinson, Mr P Robinson, Mr Savage, Mr Spratt, Mr Storey, Mr Wells.

Tellers for the Ayes: Mr Bresland and Mr Elliott.

NOES

Mr Adams, Ms Anderson, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Brady, Mr Brolly, Mr Butler, Mr W Clarke, Mr Doherty, Mr Durkan, Ms Gildernew, Mrs Hanna, Mr G Kelly, Mr A Maginness, Mr P Maskey, Ms J McCann, Mr McCartney, Mr McElduff, Mrs McGill, Mr M McGuinness, Mr McHugh, Mr McLaughlin, Mr Murphy, Ms Ní Chuilín, Mr O'Dowd, Mr O'Loan, Mr P Ramsey, Ms Ritchie, Ms Ruane.

Tellers for the Noes: Ms Anderson and Mr McCartney.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly calls on the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to bring forward the required legislation to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board.

Adjourned at 6.23 pm.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Thursday 25 October 2007

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS

Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland

Mr Speaker: I remind Members that the first three items of business this morning are statements and will follow the normal format. Therefore, after each statement is made, Members will have the opportunity to ask questions of the relevant Minister.

I have received notice from the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister that they wish to make a statement on the draft Programme for Government and investment strategy for Northern Ireland. Before I call Dr Paisley, I remind Members that the First Minister will deliver the first half of the statement and the deputy First Minister the second half. They will then answer questions alternately, with the First Minister answering the first question.

The First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley): This is another momentous day for the Executive. The deputy First Minister and I are today announcing the Executive's first draft Programme for Government and draft investment strategy. Immediately after this statement, the Minister of Finance and Personnel will announce the Executive's draft Budget to the Assembly.

It is worth pausing for a moment to remind ourselves of the sea change that has taken place since 8 May 2007.

Northern Ireland governance is now in the hands of local politicians. Those politicians were elected by the people here to be their representatives; they were born and bred here, and they know and understand the concerns of our people. They have a long-term interest in the Province and its people — our constituents. Our destiny is now in our own hands. We have a tremendous opportunity to shape our future, and we are determined to seize that chance with both hands.

However, we cannot fulfil our potential without engaging with all the people of Northern Ireland. We want to work with the business people who generate wealth and who want to provide more highly skilled and better-paid jobs. We must engage with the young people who are looking for jobs and homes and a stake in a better future. We must consider the young parents hoping for a better future for their children, just as they should. What parent does not have high hopes for his or her children? We must engage with older people, to whom we owe so much and who often suffer in their retirement as a result of ill health and poverty. We want to bring comfort and security to them — that is the only decent way for people who are in their twilight years to live. Farming families are important: they struggle with falling incomes and rising costs. We are all conscious of the difficulties that the farming community faces. We must also acknowledge the newcomers to our Province and the growing ethnic minority communities who are already making a positive contribution to our economy and who are full of hope for the future. However, let us not forget the victims in our community who have suffered — and who are still suffering — as a result of the legacy of the past. They, too, need to be engaged with and cared for.

As an Executive, we are determined to make a difference by building a better future for all, and we will focus our energies on achieving that. We shall not be satisfied unless we produce results that far supersede all that has happened over recent decades in Northern Ireland. We want to deliver those results through our Programme for Government and our investment strategy.

The Executive agreed a draft Programme for Government and a draft investment strategy for Northern Ireland on 23 October. Later this morning, the Minister of Finance and Personnel will reveal the draft Budget, which was agreed at the same Executive meeting. This process marks a significant milestone for the Government of Northern Ireland. We are now laying the draft Programme for Government and the draft investment strategy before the Assembly for scrutiny and future approval once the Assembly Committees have examined them.

Through the launch of those documents, we are announcing the start of a consultation process that will last until 4 January 2008. It is fewer than six months since 8 May 2007, when devolution was restored. On that day I said:

“Today, at long last, we are starting upon the road — I emphasise starting — which I believe will take us to lasting peace in our Province.”

At the time, we recognised that it would be a long and sometimes difficult journey, and one on which we must not falter if we are to build a Northern Ireland in which everyone can live in the sort of peaceful society that we all desire.

In May, many doubted the Executive's ability to work together and to reach agreement on our priorities, key targets and spending plans for the next three years.

The achievement of the early publication of these three draft documents — just over two weeks after the Chancellor announced the outcome of the comprehensive spending review and the precise spending allocations for Northern Ireland — is no mean achievement. That has required considerable effort on our part, and today's publication of this suite of documents is clear evidence that this Executive can and will work together in the interests of all our people.

I turn to our approach to the Programme for Government. The publication of these documents together will no doubt emphasise the close linkages among them. Taken together, they set out the Executive's long-term vision and direction; they also explain how our priorities and goals will be resourced and delivered.

The draft Programme for Government represents a very different approach to that which was adopted by the last Executive. We have facilitated the creation of a more focused set of priorities and a smaller number of key goals. The Executive feel that it is important to be clear about our priorities and what we are trying to achieve.

I commend all Executive Ministers for the committed and co-operative approach that they have adopted in agreeing our priorities and key goals. I believe that we have produced a draft Programme for Government that addresses the real challenges that face Northern Ireland today. We believe that the Programme for Government offers a clear framework at a strategic level for us to develop our policies and programmes over the next three years.

Although the Programme for Government offers a clear steer, it is, of course, not set in stone. We will have the opportunity each year to review the Programme for Government and to make any changes that we may consider necessary. We hope that any such changes will be marginal, but that flexibility exists, should we need to deploy it.

The Programme for Government also indicates our longer-term aspirations and intentions in some areas. However, the immediate focus relates to 2008-11, which are the years that are covered by the comprehensive spending review. In simple terms, we know how much we will have to spend over those years, and we can, therefore, set detailed goals, targets and outcomes for what we intend to achieve over that period.

As Members will hear later from the Minister of Finance and Personnel, this has been a difficult budgetary settlement, and hard decisions have been made. We simply do not have the funding to do all that we would wish to do.

In developing our draft Programme for Government, we have also been conscious of the need for the Executive to look outward and to seek the help of our friends in Europe, the United States, and elsewhere. We cannot prosper without constructive links outside Northern Ireland. We will be working to foster and promote our North/South and east-west linkages to take forward mutually beneficial and practical co-operation with the British and Irish Governments.

We will continue to work with the European Commission Task Force that was created by the European President to consider how our region can participate more effectively in any new initiatives. We are also planning an investment conference for spring 2008, which will provide an opportunity for us to position ourselves as a competitive business location for US companies in information and communication technology, and in the financial and business services sector. On the wider world stage, we are also looking forward to the World Expo 2010 — we will make the most of that opportunity and participate fully in it.

The document that we are publishing today is strategic and high level. We are also publishing a series of public service agreements as an annex to the draft Programme for Government, and the deputy First Minister will say more about that shortly.

10.45 pm

The overarching aim of the Programme for Government is to build a peaceful, fair and prosperous society in Northern Ireland, with respect for the rule of law, and where everyone can enjoy a better quality of life now and in years to come. The Executive face many challenges in achieving this overarching aim. Therefore, we have decided to focus on five key priorities, which are interconnected and cannot be pursued in isolation.

Our approach to delivering our priorities will be underpinned by two cross-cutting key themes. First, all our policies and programmes must work towards building a better future; they must demonstrate fairness, inclusion and equality of opportunity. Secondly, the need to build a sustainable future will also be a key requirement for our economic, social and environmental policies and programmes.

Growing a dynamic economy will be our top priority during the lifetime of this Programme for Government. Sustainable economic growth and increased prosperity will provide the opportunities and the means through which we can enhance quality of life, reduce poverty and disadvantage, increase health and well-being, and build stronger and more sustainable and empowered communities.

To underpin our commitment to developing the economy, we have set ourselves a goal of halving the private-sector productivity gap with the UK average — excluding the greater south-east — by 2015. It is an ambitious target. However, we believe that we must have high aspirations if we are to make the kind of progress that we desire.

As an Executive, we recognise the characteristics of a successful economy: a highly skilled and flexible workforce; and employment growth. To that end, we will work to increase the employment rate from 70% to 75% by 2020. We will introduce measures that are designed to address the structural weakness in our economy, and that will help to develop a dynamic business culture in Northern Ireland. We will create an environment that will support 45 new businesses and 600 existing companies to become exporters for the first time by 2011.

We will seek to secure inward investment commitments, promising more than 6,500 new jobs by 2011 and ensuring that at least 75% of those jobs will provide salaries above the local private-sector average.

We aim to increase the number of tourists visiting Northern Ireland and by 2011 to increase tourism revenue from £370 million to £520 million each year.

We want to support business and create a culture in which enterprise can flourish. We will work with the business sector to deliver widespread access for businesses to the next-generation broadband network by 2011.

I have mentioned the importance of a well-skilled workforce. We aim to ensure that by 2011, some 70% of school leavers will achieve five or more GCSE passes at grade A* to C. By 2015, we aim to ensure that 80% of the working-age population is qualified to at least GCSE level or equivalent. We will increase the number of adult learners achieving a qualification in literacy, numeracy, and information and communication technology by 2015. In particular, we will seek to develop the science base that is vital to the economy. By 2015, we will increase by 25% the numbers of students, especially from disadvantaged communities, at graduate and postgraduate level, studying science, technology, engineering and mathematics. By 2010, we will increase the number of PhD research students at local universities by 300, and we will introduce a new programme to increase the commercialisation of university and college research by the same date.

We will take steps to address problems of economic inactivity and to promote greater employment opportunities in rural areas and in disadvantaged communities. We will invest £45 million by 2013 to improve the competitiveness of the rural sector.

If we are to create the conditions for economic growth and deliver real improvements in health and well-being, we must continue to advance social transformation and the inclusion of all. We want everyone in Northern Ireland to be given the opportunity to contribute to and benefit from, a better future. Promoting tolerance, inclusion and health and well-being is, therefore, our next priority. Too many people, particularly the most vulnerable, live in communities that continue to experience high levels of poverty, disadvantage and exclusion. Those communities face higher levels of poor health and low educational achievement and, as a result, they fail to enjoy the benefits of progress. Therefore, a key goal for the Executive will be to reduce child poverty by 50% by 2010, and to eradicate it by 2020.

By 2011, some 30% of school leavers who are entitled to free school meals will obtain five or more GCSE passes at grade A* to C. By 2011, we will increase to 125,000 the number of children and young people who participate in sport and physical recreation. By 2012, we will reduce by 50% the number of children killed or seriously injured on our roads.

At the other end of the age spectrum, I am delighted to announce, as part of the draft Programme for Government, the extension of free public transport during 2008 for everyone aged 60 and over.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

The First Minister: I must say that I have an interest in that.

We aim to support the most vulnerable, to create strong, vibrant, sustainable communities and to build community capacity and leadership. We will continue our efforts to address divisions in our society and to eradicate sectarianism, racism and intolerance. We will regenerate our urban and rural areas and will invest over £500 million in regenerating disadvantaged communities, neighbourhoods, towns and cities by 2012.

We are also announcing a £10 million package to combat rural social exclusion and poverty. We will seek to remove the barriers to employment and independent living for the most vulnerable and disadvantaged. In 2008, we will introduce a new employment and support allowance to enable those unemployed due to ill-health or disability to return to work. By 2010, we will also put in place a careers advice service to meet the needs of people with disabilities.

We will seek to address the health of the population by reducing treatment times and improving treatment outcomes, as well as taking steps to improve physical and mental health. We will work towards reducing mortality from strokes and bowel cancer by 15% by 2013, and by 2009, we will introduce a screening programme to improve survival rates from bowel cancer. We will help people with chronic illnesses to live more active lives and will reduce unplanned hospital admissions for such patients by 50% by 2013.

Our rich and varied natural heritage is a key asset for the people of Northern Ireland, and, as our next priority, we will seek to protect and enhance our environmental and natural resources for future generations. We recognise the links between a healthy environment, a thriving economy and high quality of life. Therefore, we are determined to take action to protect our natural and built heritage.

I am sure that many Members will be delighted to learn that we are now committed to delivering a fundamental overhaul of the planning system by 2011 to ensure that it supports economic and social development and environmental sustainability.

The Executive recognise clearly the potential impact of climate change. We will deliver a new sewer project for central Belfast by 2010. We are also determined to play our part in protecting the environment by reducing our carbon footprint by 25% by 2025. We will seek to promote greater use of renewables by ensuring that 12% of Northern Ireland's electricity is generated from indigenous renewable sources by 2012. Finally, we will enable up to 4,700 farmers to comply with the nitrates directive of 2009.

We must also invest to build our infrastructure. Through making this a priority, we will invest to build a modern, efficient, twenty-first century infrastructure, which will help to deliver economic and social development. This priority will ensure that businesses can compete more effectively and will help to attract investment and skilled workers. It promotes inclusion and access to services, and raises the quality of life for everyone. The deputy First Minister will say more about this priority in detail when he presents the investment strategy to the House.

Our final priority is to deliver modern, high-quality and efficient public services, demonstrating our commitment to world-class public services that meet the needs of the people of Northern Ireland. We will take forward key reform programmes in areas such as water, planning, health and education, and establish a library authority and an education and skills authority by 2009.

11.00 am

To ensure that we have the most appropriate structures in place, we will review the overall number of Departments by 2011. We will also modernise the structure and powers of local government by 2011 and seek to modernise the infrastructure and processes of the Civil Service. I am pleased to be able to tell the farming community that we will reduce by 25% the administrative burden on farmers and agrifood businesses by 2013. Our aim in doing that will be to bring the Government closer to the people, revitalise public services and achieve greater efficiencies. We will introduce a single telephone contact point for public services by 2009 and streamline 70% of Departments and agency websites by the same date.

The draft Programme for Government represents a blueprint for Ulster's future. We are building the foundation for a vibrant and successful future for the people of Northern Ireland. The deputy First Minister will continue by outlining the fifth priority and presenting the draft investment strategy. I strongly commend the draft Programme for Government to everyone in the House, and I intend to live to see it through.

The deputy First Minister (Mr M McGuinness):

A Cheann Comhairle, with your permission, I welcome the presence of a sizeable delegation of Iraqi parliamentarians and politicians to Parliament Buildings. Some of them are in the Gallery listening to Members' deliberations, and I am sure that I speak for all Members when I say that we wish them well during their stay.

The First Minister has highlighted the progress that the Executive have made in agreeing their first draft Programme for Government and given Members an indication of what we plan to achieve under four of the five priorities. I want to echo the First Minister's comments about the seismic shift that we have seen since 8 May. This place is truly under new management. Who would have believed how far we have come in so short a time? The draft Programme for Government marks a real difference from what has gone before. Its presentation and content are different from that published by the previous Executive. We have tried to clearly set out the Executive's key priorities along with the high-level goals that the Executive are working to achieve.

The First Minister referred to his speech of 8 May. Similarly, I commented on that day that we would:

"strive towards a society moving from division and disharmony to one which celebrates our diversity and is determined to provide a better future for all our people."

Those sentiments are captured and expressed in the draft Programme for Government. There is much hard work to be done if the Programme for Government is to be delivered, but its publication after less than six months in Government shows that we are determined and able to apply ourselves to that task.

The First Minister mentioned that we are today publishing for consultation the draft Programme for Government, the draft Budget and the draft investment strategy. Today's announcement marks the beginning of a 10-week period of consultation that will conclude on 4 January 2008. I know that many Members would like a longer time for consultation, but it is important that the Budget in particular be agreed in sufficient time to enable detailed spending plans to be drawn up and put in place by 1 April. There is, therefore, an imperative to finalise and agree the documents as early as possible in January so that the Executive's plans can be put in place and we can ensure that the business of Government runs smoothly into the next financial year.

As the First Minister has already explained, the documents will be subject to revision as necessary as our policies develop and as we respond to changing needs. However, we must be clear about the goals that we are working to deliver, agree them and move forward collectively towards their achievement. The close linkages between the three documents mean that we have decided to undertake the consultation process in a co-ordinated fashion.

The consultation will be led by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, but will also involve the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Strategic Investment Board (SIB), which will be responsible for the Budget and the investment strategy respectively.

The documents will need to be agreed by the Assembly in due course. The Assembly Committees will have an important role to play in putting forward their views for consideration, and will form an integral part of the consultation process. We will be asking the OFMDFM Committee to play a co-ordinating role in liaising with the other Committees and gathering their views. We will also be seeking a take-note debate in the Assembly at an appropriate point in the consultation.

Separately, we will consult key stakeholders and social partners, as well as members of the public. We look forward to active engagement with key interest groups throughout the consultation period. Once the consultation process has concluded and we have had an opportunity to consider the comments received, we will present a final Programme for Government, Budget and investment strategy to the Assembly — we hope to do that before the end of January.

The First Minister has provided the Assembly with an indication of some of the contents of the draft Programme for Government, and I do not intend to repeat what he has said. However, I want to emphasise that these are the Executive's agreed priorities, and they provide the basis on which we plan to move forward in the future.

The First Minister has also referred briefly to the draft public service agreements that we are publishing today as a separate annex. Those 23 public service agreements, or PSAs, confirm the key actions that the Executive plan to take in support of our priorities alongside the outcomes and targets that we are seeking to achieve. Again, they seek only to capture the high-level targets and key cross-cutting issues and challenges. They will provide the framework through which the Executive as a whole will monitor progress, delivery of priorities and key objectives.

I will now provide some detail on the infrastructure priority, which the First Minister referred to earlier. Investing to build our infrastructure will be an important priority through which we will invest to build a modern, twenty-first-century infrastructure. All Members of the Assembly will know of the significant challenges we face in this area: schools that have gone on beyond their useful life; children who are still being taught in temporary classrooms or schools in dire need of refurbishment and modernisation; communities in need of new healthcare facilities; young families looking for social and affordable housing; a business community that needs better roads and modern information and communication links; and the legacy of a long history of neglect and underinvestment in our basic water and sewerage infrastructure, which we are all living with. All of those issues are fundamental for the health and well-being of everyone.

Members will know that we have inherited those huge challenges from direct rule. However, as an Executive, we are rising to meet those challenges. We are grappling with all of those issues and are determined to address them and to give our people the modern services and facilities that they need.

We will support infrastructure development, which will, over time, address the major deficiencies in key areas such as roads, public transport, water and sewerage infrastructure, and social and affordable housing. We will prioritise more balanced regional development, ensure compliance with EU directives, and address the backlog of maintenance in the health and education estates.

This will be delivered through the draft investment strategy that we are announcing today. The investment strategy will put in place a modern infrastructure that will provide a platform for us to achieve our key economic, social and environmental priorities, which will enable businesses to grow, tackle social and economic inequalities, and improve the quality of life for everyone.

Recognising that Government procurement can play an active and effective role in tackling socio-economic disadvantage, we have ensured that we will seek opportunities to promote social inclusion and equality of opportunity in the procurement of infrastructure programmes. That will impact through employment plans, by building opportunities for apprenticeships into major delivery contracts, and through a tendering process that prioritises the most economically advantageous option in this context.

Similarly, the quality of our environment is important, and our investment strategy will ensure that we protect and enhance it.

Those will be important considerations as we invest £5.6 billion into infrastructure over the next three years and at least £18 billion over the next 10 years. In those first three years, 25% more will be invested than in the preceding three years, which represents a further step change that the Executive is leading.

Strategic Investment Board Ltd — a wholly-owned company of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister — has taken the lead in working with Departments to prepare the draft investment strategy for the Executive's consideration. That document was agreed by the Executive at its meeting on 23 October.

The first three years' figures in the strategy are consistent with those in the Budget, which the Minister of Finance and Personnel will announce shortly. The figures for later years fall outside the current Budget period but have been formulated within a financial framework that has been agreed with the Department of Finance and Personnel.

However, in order to provide a comprehensive picture of anticipated future investment, the investment strategy reflects the impact of additional sources of funding that lie outside of what is, by convention, included in the Executive's normal public-expenditure Budget. That is clear in the published document, and all sources of funding are included in the figures that I am announcing today.

The draft investment strategy demonstrates our approach to infrastructure investment and clearly links the major £18 billion programme of investment to the key priorities that are set out in the draft Programme for Government. That is a significant funding envelope, which will enable us to embark on what is, by any standards, an ambitious programme of infrastructure development.

Although £18 billion is a considerable sum of money, it is not enough to fully meet the needs that we wish to address. The Executive, with the crucial advice of the Assembly, must come to a view on the optimum investment package that can be achieved using the available resources. However, it is also essential for the Executive to explore additional funding sources that would enable us to deliver a more ambitious programme of capital investment.

I cannot do justice to the full scope of what the Executive are setting out to accomplish for all of our communities through these investment programmes. Members will carefully study the draft investment strategy and, through the Committees, will formulate the Assembly's views.

I will mention several areas in more detail to illustrate how we aim to build a peaceful, fair and prosperous society, beginning with an overview of how funding will be allocated up to 2018.

We intend to invest £3.8 billion in the strategic road network and in public transport. Key transport corridors will be upgraded to connect towns and cities to regional getaways, the Belfast metropolitan area and the Southern road network. The development of a modern rapid-transport system for greater Belfast will begin, and rail services will be improved by the introduction of new services and rolling stock.

We will invest £3 billion in the water, waste water and waste management infrastructures, which will produce high quality water and waste water systems that will be capable of meeting EU requirements. We will work in partnership with district councils so that by 2011 we will deliver a new waste management infrastructure that will recognise our EU regulatory obligations and make use of more sustainable technologies.

There will be £3.5 billion invested in schools and youth services and a further £632 million in further education and libraries. Schools are at the heart of communities, and our aim is to substantially modernise the schools' estate, enable schools to link better with the further education sector and allow them to become better aligned with the needs of the population and the skills that will be required in the future. Between 2008 and 2011, we will progress major works in more than 100 schools.

The universities will be supported in order to help them increase their research and teaching capabilities.

Further education colleges will be modernised, with a new campus for Belfast Metropolitan College and new accommodation at the North West Regional College to open by 2010.

11.15 am

There will be investment of £3.5 billion in health and social care. The Executive recognise the increase and changes in the need and demand for health and social services that we can expect over the next 20 years. Therefore, we will make substantial investments across the key sectors of primary and community care and acute and local hospitals.

We will develop a regional network of primary- and community-care facilities to bring services to the heart of the community; an acute hospital network that can deliver the best health outcomes; local hospitals that will form a crucial bridge between acute hospitals and primary and community care.

We plan to designate £1.4 billion for social and affordable housing, together with more than £600 million for regeneration and £500 million for culture, arts and sport. High quality and well-managed housing is a cornerstone of sustainable communities. Throughout the lifetime of the investment strategy, we will invest in socially rented and affordable housing to address the needs of communities across the region. Our programme of investment in social housing will enable us to work towards our ambitious target of completing up to 10,000 new social housing units over the next five years.

We will continue with major public-sector-led regeneration initiatives that will have a positive impact on social and economic issues. We will also invest in the Ilex regeneration plan for Ebrington and Fort George and in the Crumlin Road jail and Girdwood sites.

Investment in arts and culture infrastructure will enable us to keep pace with the artistic and cultural expectations of a modern society. We will have invested £100 million in our sports facilities by 2011, thereby ensuring a lasting legacy from the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games.

We are also supporting the potential of our inland waterways, where development is an area of practical North/South co-operation.

Although that represents a significant and ambitious programme of investment by any standards, it still does not represent adequate resources to meet all needs. Therefore, we have decided to create a capital realisation task force. The first stage of the task force's work will be complete in December 2007, when it will report on immediate additional disposals that could impact on the capital affordability envelope for the CSR years by increasing the available resources.

We hope that the task force's recommendations can be taken into account when finalising the investment strategy in January 2008. The Executive have agreed that social housing and schools will be priority areas for consideration, if additional funds are identified as part of that work.

As I explained, the documents published today will be subject to consultation before being finalised in the new year. I ask all those who read the draft Programme for Government and the draft investment strategy to look for the positives in them; to set aside narrow sectional interests and naysaying; to pursue the general good, to understand the difficult choices that we have had to make about priorities; to be optimistic and enthusiastic about the future, and to join us in this great enterprise of shaping our future. In short, I ask everyone to bend their energies to helping us to build the better future that we all want.

The Executive consider that our approach and plans mark a radical change from direct rule and from the previous Executive. The style of our plans is very different; we have adopted a more strategic and outcome-focused approach. We have also adopted a more integrated and complementary approach with the Programme for Government at its centre.

In the documents, readers will find more details of our goals, targets and spending plans than we have been able to cover today, and which will demonstrate the course that we are on. The plans provide a framework within which we will work. The Executive must lead the development of our policies and the delivery of our plans, so that we can demonstrate in practice the difference that we can make.

A Cheann Comhairle, the First Minister acknowledged that we cannot fulfil our potential without engaging all of the people.

I wish to reinforce that point.

We must strive to connect with all people, particularly those members of society who are marginalised and disadvantaged and those who are new members of society. It is absolutely right that Government should be close to the people and should operate in their interests.

We want to make a positive difference in people's lives, and we want to make a difference for everyone. As an Executive, we are committed to the promotion of inclusion and a shared future built on equality and respect for diversity, in which sectarianism, racism and other forms of intolerance are a thing of the past. We want people to feel confident and secure in their identity and in their place in society. We must build a future in which people are cherished for their rich diversity and many talents, and in which we all share in economic growth and prosperity. We want a future that is fit for our children and our children's children. We believe that, by working together, and harnessing the talents of all sectors — public, private, voluntary and community — we can build a better future for all.

Those are the challenges that we have set ourselves, and those are our commitments to those who elected us to represent them. We are determined to fulfil those commitments. We owe nothing less to the people who elected us to this House.

Mrs Long: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. The Programme for Government has just been introduced to Members, and questions are about to be taken on it. However, a significant number of pages appear to be missing from the documents that have been circulated. The documents are exceptionally thin, and those sections to which the First Minister and the deputy First Minister referred in respect of a shared future and good relations appear to be absent — certainly from the copy that I have. Is there a chance that those pages have been left at the printers, and will it be possible to have them circulated later?

Mr Speaker: I understand the point that Mrs Long is making. However, that is certainly not an appropriate point of order.

Before I call the Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, I inform Members that more than 40 Members wish to ask questions. That is understandable, considering the business of the House this morning. I remind Members that if their questions are short, that will enable their colleagues to also ask questions.

The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr Kennedy): That is timely advice, Mr Speaker. As Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, I welcome the publication, for consultation, of the draft Programme for Government 2008-11, and the draft investment strategy. I also welcome the clear indication of the First Minister, confirming the status of the document — that it is a draft Programme of Government, for consultation, which may be subject to change.

Given the importance of the proposals, I have some concern that, taking into account the Christmas holidays, the consultation period will effectively last for a shorter period than normal. It is a pity that the proposals could not have been published earlier to ensure that there is a full 12-week consultation period.

I inform the First Minister and the deputy First Minister that, yesterday, my Committee — in the historic location of Magee College, Londonderry — received an informative and thought-provoking presentation from representatives of Save the Children on the level of child poverty. That presentation was part of the Committee's inquiry into that matter.

I welcome the commitment in the Programme for Government that it will be a priority of the Executive to tackle the levels of poverty in Northern Ireland in general, and, in particular, the intention to halve child poverty by 2010, and end it by 2020. What are the specific actions that have been included in the draft Programme for Government to achieve those aims?

In respect of the co-ordinating role of my Committee, which was outlined by the First Minister and the deputy First Minister, I can advise the House that early indications suggest that my Committee will welcome the opportunity to fulfil that role and work with other Committees.

Mr Speaker: I ask the Member to take his seat. I know that he is speaking as Chairperson of a Committee, and I have always said that I will try to give Chairpersons some latitude. However, this morning, as is appropriate, other Members wish to speak in their capacity as Committee Chairpersons. Therefore, I ask them to be as brief as other Members in asking their questions.

Mr Kennedy: Given the criticisms of the first investment strategy, will the First Minister and deputy First Minister indicate how the fundamental issues that are connected to the ability of the public sector to deliver the proposed investment strategy in full have been addressed? Full delivery of the strategy is essential in order to prevent the year-on-year high levels of capital underspend that have been a regular feature.

Speaking not in my capacity as a Committee Chairman but as a Member, I ask the First Minister and the deputy First Minister to describe the progress that has been made in securing an adequate financial deal from the Treasury for Northern Ireland. Both parties have placed importance on such a deal being a prerequisite for the re-establishment of devolution in Northern Ireland. Bearing in mind that the people were promised the mother and father of a financial deal to go with the mother and father of a political deal, when can Members expect to receive details of the package?

The First Minister: I am surprised that the honourable gentleman thinks that a 10-week consultation period is not long enough. The Executive has to make a move. With every week that passes, poverty and difficulties in the Health Service remain. The time has come for us to put on our running shoes. The Assembly has been criticised for doing nothing: now we are being criticised for moving too fast. As far as I am concerned, we could not move fast enough on those issues.

Does the Member not have any words of comfort for people? We have said that we will overhaul the planning system fundamentally. What does he have to say about that? He has forgotten about it. From today, all large-scale investment planning proposals will be decided within six months, provided that a pre-application consultation has taken place. The Member does not have any words of comfort about that. He has forgotten all about the poor old people such as me who want a free bus ride, and he has forgotten all about the rapid transit system and many other things that we have mentioned. Does he not have any words of comfort at all, or is he here just to make a cheap political point?

Mr McQuillan: What priority will the Executive give to inward investment?

The deputy First Minister: Securing high-value inward investment is a key objective for the Executive. The draft Programme for Government includes the key goal of securing commitments on inward investment, promising over 6,500 new jobs by 2011. We want at least 75% of those jobs to provide salaries that are higher than the local private-sector average.

Given the events of the past six months, it is clear that there is tremendous international interest in the political developments that have occurred here. Many Ministers have already visited the United States, particularly during the Smithsonian festival. It was obvious from that visit, and from all the visits that have taken place, that the Irish-American, Scots-Irish and Ulster-Scots business communities are phenomenally interested in everything that happens here. We hope that the build-up has commenced to what will probably be the most important economic investment conference that has ever been seen in the North, which will take place in May next year. We hope that further delegations will arrive to tee up the agenda for that conference to ensure that it will produce results and real jobs — particularly for young people — rather than aspirations or fine words.

11.30 am

Ms S Ramsey: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I welcome the statement from OFMDFM and the publication of the draft Programme for Government. I welcome the commitment from the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and the Executive to make a positive difference in people's lives.

Can the Minister advise how the Programme for Government will address the needs of children and young people? Which specific programmes for children and young people have been included?

The First Minister: I thank the honourable lady for her question. Northern Ireland's children are our future, and it is right that we support them and help them to realise their potential. We are determined that our children will receive the support and help that they need through the PSA framework. The Executive have outlined clear commitments to eradicating child poverty, improving educational outcomes, particularly for the most disadvantaged, and ensuring that all our children are cared for, live in safety and are protected from abuse.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Durkan): I thank the First Minister and the deputy First Minister for the statement, and the Executive for the draft Programme for Government. As Chairperson of the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee I welcome both the commitments to enterprise and innovation and the interventions designed to ensure that Northern Ireland has a competitive economy. The commitments are welcome, but they are not new, as they are exactly what we had in the Committee on the Preparation for Government and the Programme for Government Committee. The saccharine jargon does not differ much from what went before, including during direct rule. Most of the same phrases are there in statements by the former Secretary of State Peter Hain. The deputy First Minister said that the Executive had inherited challenges from direct rule — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. The Member has the Floor.

Mr Durkan: It has also inherited some policies from direct rule.

The Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment looks forward to using the consultation period for both the draft Programme for Government and the Budget to contribute ideas that might amplify the plans to create a more articulate and effective outlook. The deputy First Minister said that he did not want naysaying, but both the deputy First Minister and the First Minister have naysaid the achievements of the previous Executive. The previous Executive put in place the basis for the investment strategy for Northern Ireland and the Strategic Investment Board, against opposition from Sinn Féin and the DUP. Now, those are the centrepieces of their draft Programme for Government. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

The deputy First Minister: The First Minister and I have both made it clear that we plan to do things differently. We made no criticism of the previous Executive. The big difference is that we have decided to take —

Mr Durkan: Our ideas. [Laughter.]

Mr Speaker: Order, order. I remind Members that the business conducted in the House today may give rise to strong emotions among some Members. [Laughter.] However, when Members are speaking on the Floor they should not be interrupted, but should be allowed to speak.

The deputy First Minister: As I said, we have made it clear that we plan to do things differently, and that this Executive are adopting a more strategic approach to the Programme for Government, the Budget and the investment strategy over the course of 10 years. People should accept that this is a good day for everyone. After only five months in office, the Executive have set out their Budget, Programme for Government and investment strategy, which is a remarkable achievement. I pay tribute to all of my ministerial colleagues, including those from the SDLP, the Ulster Unionist Party and the DUP, for the good work that they have contributed towards bringing us to this position.

The Programme for Government and the investment strategy offer: a good future for everyone, North, South, east and west; thousands of new jobs; new schools and hospitals; new roads; better public transport; better support for farmers and rural communities; and better support for business. The Executive are determined to make a difference. We will not be satisfied unless we produce results that far supersede everything that has happened in the past.

Mr Ford: I thank the Ministers for their statement. The deputy First Minister has urged the House to look for the positives in the Programme for Government and the investment strategy. I have tried to do that, but there is little to be positive about in those fairly thin documents.

I remember when the previous Programme for Government was presented to the House. I criticised it for its failure to take community relations seriously, but at least it contained a reference to — and a commitment on — that issue. This draft Programme for Government contains nothing on that matter except a passing reference by the First Minister and the deputy First Minister. Is a weak statement about promoting tolerance not completely inadequate when one considers the community-relations problems that we face? Why is there no objective to implement the shared future action plan alongside the racial equality action plan, if the Executive are serious about making a difference in solving the problems that we face?

The First Minister: The honourable Member either needs a new pair of glasses or a new earpiece. I remind him about the inward-investment commitments, which promise to create over 6,500 jobs by 2011. Is that not positive? Is the commitment to halve the private-sector productivity gap with the UK by 2015 not new and concrete? There are commitments to increase the number of tourists who visit Northern Ireland each year to 2.5 million, and tourism revenue to £520 million; to reduce child poverty by 50%; to ensure that every child leaves school with a level of literacy and numeracy that will, at least, equip them for work and life; and to make record investment of £5.6 billion in infrastructure during the next three years. I could continue. I deeply regret that the honourable gentleman has neither listened to nor read the commitments that have been made. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. I remind Members that they are not permitted to make an intervention from a sedentary position.

Mr Hamilton: I congratulate the First Minister and the deputy First Minister on the draft Programme for Government, which was unanimously agreed by all parties in the Executive. I welcome the centrality of economic development in the draft Programme for Government, which was glaringly missing from the previous programme. That fact has not been lost on anyone in the House or beyond; except, perhaps, Mr Durkan. It is essential that economic prosperity benefits everyone in Northern Ireland. What priority have the Executive given to the promotion of economic growth in all areas of Northern Ireland?

The deputy First Minister: I thank the Member for his question. The Executive have recognised that, during recent years, investment in business and industry has tended to focus on the greater Belfast area. A key aim of the Programme for Government and the investment strategy is to promote and facilitate economic growth and social progress everywhere. In particular, the Executive are determined that investment in networks and roads infrastructure will increase the attractiveness of the wider region as a destination for business investment and will enhance the competitiveness of businesses that are based outside the greater Belfast area.

Like other Members, I am somewhat surprised at the negativity of some Members. Recently, the Executive have been criticised for not taking decisions.

Today, we have taken £18 billion-worth of decisions that will address the needs of our society, and our people, over the course of the next 10 years. That is rapid progress.

Ms Anderson: Go raibh maith agat. I, too, thank the First Minister and the deputy First Minister for their statements. Will the First Minister confirm that the Executive's collective decision to mainstream the equality agenda, Section 75 duties, and the equality impact assessment process into all strategic-level Executive functions — including the draft Programme for Government and the draft Budget — is now a demonstration that the delivery of equality and social justice can, and should be, the central premise for governmental spending?

The First Minister: I thank the lady for what she has said. The equality impact assessment of the draft Programme for Government, and accompanying PSAs, is in accordance with our statutory duties, which we will carry out to the full.

Lord Morrow: I draw Member's attention to page seven of this hefty document, where it states that there will be:

“free public transport during 2008 to everyone aged 60 and over”

I am sorry that Mr Ford has left the Chamber. I have no doubt that — [Laughter.]

Mr S Wilson: He has been banished to the Back Benches for being bad.

Lord Morrow: I see that he is in the Chamber. Since he is such a naysayer and a begrudger, I ask him to take note of that item in the document. Will the First Minister and deputy First Minister tell us, in more detail, the exact extent of the draft Programme for Government that they intend to implement? The programme will be greatly welcomed by the community.

The deputy First Minister: I agree that it is an excellent announcement that should be welcomed by all right-thinking people. Reducing the age at which people can avail of free transport from 65 to 60 means that women who reach retirement age will no longer find themselves being penalised unnecessarily. This is only one of a series of measures to improve public transport. We will also be introducing concessionary fares on rural services and increasing public transport provision for rural areas and rural communities.

Mr B McCrea: The deputy First Minister and the First Minister started off by asking that we should, perhaps, have some words of comfort. Those of you who are familiar with the television programme ‘Yes Prime Minister’ will be aware that Sir Humphrey used the famous phrase: “a courageous speech, Minister.”

A question that is closer to hand — and perhaps in line with the points raised about the planning process — is that talk is cheap but it takes money to buy land. What we are hearing are aspirations. Will the First Minister, with his laudable aims to increase economic participation from 70% to 75%, tell me exactly how many people that represents? How will that figure compare with the figure of 140,000 that Pricewaterhouse-Coopers said that we needed to reach over the next 10 years? How does the First Minister intend to achieve that figure if, as stated in his document, he is only going to create 6,500 jobs?

The First Minister: This is not an Official Unionist document, which would be published and then be forgotten. The 'Draft Programme for Government 2008-2011' will not be forgotten, for we will carry out the measures set out in the document. The Member should look carefully at the overarching aim, which is to build a peaceful, fair and prosperous society in Northern Ireland, with respect for the rule of law. That is where we hang our colours in today's debate. If the honourable gentleman does not like what is done, the process will move on and he will be left behind.

Mr B McCrea: So, you do not have an answer.

The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment (Mr McGlone): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I have two questions. First, what measures or procedures will be put in place to deliver, monitor and oversee the sustainable development strategy and ensure that it is delivered on a cross-departmental basis?

11.45 am

I welcome the commitment today to delivering an effective Planning Service by 2011. There was mention of the delivery of draft and full area plans by 2011. However, how will those plans be delivered, given that the Planning Appeals Commission, which is involved in public inquiries into those plans, is under severe pressure as it stands? In fact, this morning I was told that an individual appellant can wait as long as three years for a decision. I would like clarification of how the expectations that were created today will be met and delivered on.

The deputy First Minister: Sustainable development is built on three pillars: economic growth, social progress and environmental protection. As our Programme for Government states, sustainability will be a key cross-cutting theme that will underpin our approach to delivering our priorities. Building a sustainable future will be a key requirement for all our economic, social and environmental policies and programmes. We believe that sustainable development is not simply about resources; it is about changing the culture and doing things differently.

As regards planning, we all know and understand that workload pressures have been building for some time. Over the past five years, the overall trend in the volume of appeal cases has turned sharply upwards. Figures show that appeal intake in 2006-07 has increased by over 600% since 2002-03. There are a number of reasons for that. There are increasing demands in relation to major planning applications and non-determination appeals, which are cases taken to the Planning Appeals Commission because the Planning Service and DOE have failed to reach a decision within the permitted time.

The commission is also required to take on the public inquiry work associated with the DOE's development plan programme, as well as a range of other non-planning-related appellate functions that have been assigned to it over the years. Planning Policy Statement 14 (PPS 14), which was announced last year and which introduced a presumption against development in the countryside, has also contributed to the surge in appeal applications.

We recognise that the planning system is a key mechanism for delivering sustainable development and for enabling the delivery of jobs, homes, better transport and lively communities. We are committed to securing the additional resources to tackle the backlog. In recognition of the backlog, we supported a case made by the Planning Appeals Commission for additional resources and submitted a bid. I accept that this issue represents a real challenge, and it is a challenge to which we must rise.

Mr McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I welcome the statement by the First Minister and deputy First Minister. This draft Programme for Government is a positive development and an improvement on the first Programme for Government in so far as we have prioritised goals that have attached timetables. All Members, not just those in the Executive, have a responsibility to match that programme with delivery, and people are entitled to judge us on our performance.

My question is about the priority entitled 'Invest to build our infrastructure' and procurement policy. Will the First Minister and deputy First Minister assure the House that local companies will not find themselves in difficulty or at a disadvantage when competing to provide services to the Executive as part of the delivery of the programme?

The First Minister: I can give the honourable Member the assurance that local companies will have every opportunity to participate, in all fairness, in that development. I would like to see the people of Northern Ireland engaged in such work. As the Member knows well, laws have to be observed with regard to procurement, but I give him assurance on that matter today.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mrs I Robinson): I very much regret that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is absent from the Chamber. It shows little respect for the draft Programme for Government.

I welcome the statement on the draft Programme for Government and the investment strategy for Northern Ireland.

I am reminded of the words of Franklin D Roosevelt:

"The test of our progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have much, it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little."

What reassurance can the deputy First Minister offer that issues such as the prevention of illness and the promotion of a healthy lifestyle will now be addressed in a much more holistic manner through a Programme for Government that is fully meshed and dovetails with the Budget priorities to ensure the best possible outcomes for our people?

The deputy First Minister: In formulating the Programme for Government, we identified health as a major issue. Huge challenges face us as we move forward. I have no doubt that the ambitious targets that we have set ourselves can be reached, given the will of the Assembly and the ability of the Executive to deliver. We are moving forward with a joined-up approach, which will see all Departments — not least the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety — recognise the huge responsibilities that we have to improve the health and well-being of all our people.

Mr O'Dowd: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I congratulate not only the First Minister and the deputy First Minister but the whole Executive on introducing a draft Programme for Government for consultation with the general public. Although some Members are looking through the programme for words about a shared future, etc, the best way to advance a shared future is through the example shown by the Executive in bringing forward a draft Programme for Government for the future, instead of some fluffy document that inevitably ends up in the employment of serving and former members of the Alliance Party.

In their statement, the First Minister and deputy First Minister said that the restraints on fiscal policy meant that the Programme for Government has not been as adventurous as it could have been. What restraints has a lack of fiscal independence placed on the Programme for Government?

The First Minister: I am sure that the honourable gentleman will be in the Chamber when the Minister of Finance and Personnel makes his statement, which will bring even more comfort to him.

Continual pressure will be exerted on the Westminster authorities to do what is right for the people of this Province.

As the Member is well aware, there are certain military installations that are not going to be used in the future. I have demanded and will continue to demand that the money from the sale of those properties is not taken out of the country.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Storey: In welcoming the announcement of the Programme for Government, I am somewhat amused at the emergence of Pontius Pilate politics from Members who had previously lectured us about collective responsibility and governance. Now it seems to suit their political agenda to wash their hands of any responsibility, bearing in mind that their Ministers did not table any amendments in the Executive. I would appreciate it if the deputy First Minister would indicate the thinking behind the choice of the strategic priorities that are set out in the Programme for Government.

The deputy First Minister: We have aimed to produce a Programme for Government that addresses the big challenges facing us all. Our overarching aim is to build a peaceful, fair and prosperous society in which everyone can enjoy a better quality of life, now and in the future. In support of that aim, five emerging strategic priorities have been identified: growing a dynamic and innovative economy; promoting tolerance, inclusion and health and well-being; protecting and enhancing our environment and natural resources; investing to build our infrastructure; and delivering modern high-quality and efficient public services.

Growing the economy will be our top priority over the period of this Programme for Government. However, the priorities are all interconnected, and we recognise that they cannot be achieved in isolation. For example, we cannot grow the economy in isolation from determined efforts to transform our society and enhance our environment. Those priorities will be supported by our key goals and public service agreements, which will help to ensure that the Executive can focus on the key issues and outcomes to which we are all committed.

Mr Elliott: I thank the First Minister and deputy First Minister for bringing forward the draft consultation. Will they give the House an assurance that, following the consultation period, if any specific proposals come forward that Committees believe should be included in the priorities, the Executive will give them due consideration and include them?

The First Minister: I can assure the Member absolutely that that will take place.

Mr O'Loan: I thank the Ministers for their statement. The programme contains much detail, and it will require analysis, scrutiny and public consultation. The SDLP will be heavily involved in that. The content is significant, and our party has no objection to our good ideas being built into the programme — as indeed they are.

The First Minister described the announcement as “momentous”. We will know that it is momentous when it is delivered — that is the challenge for OFMDFM. The programme contains ambitious plans, and we want to see them happen. Rather than seeing today's announcement as momentous, the Assembly will breathe a heavy sigh of relief that, at last, real business and work is coming before it. It has been an arid time here.

The overarching aim of the programme is for a peaceful, fair and prosperous society, and nothing is more important than that. The deputy First Minister referred to truly new management and to setting aside sectional interest. Those are also good sentiments. However, much of the content of debates in the Chamber, and the manner in which those have been debated, has been contradictory.

Mr Speaker: Order. I ask the Member to come to his question now.

Mr O'Loan: Much of that divisive content has come from the two parties that are represented in OFMDFM. What contribution will those parties make to ensure that the matters brought forward, and the manner in which those are debated, make a genuine commitment to a shared society?

The deputy First Minister: It never ceases to amaze me how out of touch some members of the SDLP are with the mood of public opinion. It is quite clear that the parties that lead the Executive enjoy overwhelming support from the community, as was clearly identified in the outcome of the Assembly elections. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

The deputy First Minister: People are delighted at the progress that has been made over the course of the last four or five months. After today's announcement, people will be even more delighted that we have taken, in the course of our deliberations today, huge decisions that affect their lives. Those decisions are taken for the betterment of our people, not to worsen the conditions under which people live. The time has come for some Members to waken up and smell the coffee. They must waken up and recognise that people are really pleased and delighted at the efforts that are being made to move forward to put in place a real future, not only for themselves, but for their children and their children's children.

Mr G Robinson: I welcome the Programme for Government. How have the First Minister and deputy First Minister decided on the key announcements and key goals?

The First Minister: We are determined to make a real difference. We will not be satisfied unless we produce results that far supersede all that has happened over recent decades in Northern Ireland. Our goals and key announcements are ambitious, and rightly so. They show how we have listened to our people, and how we will drive forward the type of change that is long overdue in our society. I trust that when the Committees deal with the issues, and we take our consultation from all outside authorities, we will be able to speed the Programme for Government on its way as quickly as possible.

12.00 noon

Ms McGill: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the First Minister and the deputy First Minister for their statement, and I welcome the many positives that it includes. How does the draft investment strategy address regional imbalance, particularly west of the Bann?

The deputy First Minister: We sought to identify balanced regional development as a key element in the cross-cutting strategic objective of the draft investment strategy. In seeking to prioritise more balanced regional development, there will be a particular focus on cross-border links and on developing infrastructure in the border areas.

The development and upgrade of transport links along the Dublin/Belfast corridor will ensure that it forms a major axis for economic development on the island. In the north-west and Donegal, we will tackle regional disparities by further improving road links, enhancing the capacity and resilience of energy support networks, strengthening telecommunications infrastructure and developing the City of Derry Airport.

I also highlight the investment in health care: there will be a developing network of health and care centres across the region and new hospital facilities in the south-west. Schools will also receive a boost, which will benefit communities across the region.

The list goes on. We have taken important steps in the right direction. During the public consultation that is being launched today, I look forward to hearing about what more should be done with the resources that we have available.

Mrs Long: Before asking my question, I want to reassure Members that I have read all 17 pages of the document. I noticed that when Lord Morrow referred to a "hefty document", he was holding a 25-page speech, not the 17-page document.

In the document, I cannot find any substantive reference to many issues, such as a shared future, good relations, community relations, post-primary transfer, sustainable schools policy, free personal care or the environmental protection agency — amongst others. How long do the First Minister and deputy First Minister intend to dine out on the feel-good factor created on 8 May 2007? When will they back it up with substantive action to deliver on a shared future and make that hope a reality?

Some Members: Hear, hear.

The First Minister: I am sure that the honourable lady enjoys dining out herself.

She should read from page 3 of the document:

"our approach to delivering our priorities will be underpinned by the two cross-cutting key themes:

A better future: fairness, inclusion and equality of opportunity will be watchwords for all our policies and programmes.

This places an overarching responsibility on the Executive to proactively change the existing patterns of social disadvantage by using increased prosperity and economic growth to tackle ongoing priority."

I am sorry that the lady does not read more carefully before making such statements.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Buchanan: I too welcome the Programme for Government, particularly its commitment to supporting businesses and helping the entire business and enterprise culture to flourish. How do the Executive propose to support local businesses across Northern Ireland, particularly the small to medium-sized enterprises west of the Bann, which are the life and soul of the rural economy?

The deputy First Minister: The Executive are totally committed to supporting local businesses. There is a long history of business ingenuity and leadership. We are determined to create the conditions that will unlock potential and to assist local businesses to succeed in an ever more competitive global market. That commitment is reflected in the priority that we have attached to developing the skills base and investing in infrastructure

The Programme for Government also includes specific commitments to supporting local businesses to enter the export market and increasing expenditure on research and development. As one of the elected representatives from west of the Bann, and the Speaker is another, I assure the Member that, as we move forward, the Executive are committed to ensuring that everyone gets a fair share.

Ms Ni Chuilín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. My question on the promotion of equality has been answered.

Mr Craig: I also welcome the draft Programme for Government. Given the commitments in the programme to reform the planning process, can the Assembly be assured that, as part of that reform, private developers will be forced to tackle the social housing problem that this Government face?

The First Minister: Yes; I can say that in the Programme for Government, we have made an undertaking that there will be 10,000 homes built in order to address the very grave situation that we have. We all acknowledge its gravity, and we have a good foundation on which to build.

Mr Gallagher: It is good to have the Executive's priorities set out, and they appear to be framed by an overall aim of building a fair and prosperous society. The message is coming through loud and clear that there is to be massive investment in infrastructure in Belfast and in Northern Ireland Railways. I am sure that there are possible justifications for that, but given the neglect of infrastructure in the west, particularly in Fermanagh and Tyrone, where we rely on the roads network, is the west in that frame? There is to be a move to second-generation broadband by 2011, but parts of the west, despite claims to the contrary, still do not have first-generation broadband. May I have a commitment that that infrastructural problem will also be addressed?

The deputy First Minister: We refer to that issue and the need to ensure that broadband is accessible to everyone. There are plans to do that specifically in the Programme for Government. On the situation west of the Bann, we all accept that, over the course of the years, many elected representatives have commented on the state of the roads in different counties. No doubt, when the Minister for Regional Development makes his contribution to that debate, he will outline his plans to ensure that all areas get their fair share.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I want, first of all, to put on record our appreciation that OFMDFM recognises that the environment is an important asset and that it is to be protected and enhanced through the investment strategy. Will the First Minister assure the House that that will remain a key priority for the Executive?

The First Minister: I refer the honourable Member to the statement. We will strengthen the protection of key areas. That will apply to all parts of the report; everything will be strengthened in the way that it should be, with fair play for everyone in the community.

Mr Spratt: I too thank the First Minister and deputy First Minister for this morning's statement. How will the overarching aim to build a peaceful, fair and prosperous society in Northern Ireland, with respect for the rule of law, guide the work of the Executive over the next three years?

The deputy First Minister: It is a very positive development that all Executive Ministers have agreed that overarching aim. It sets out the type of future that we all want to see here, and I am proud that, as an Executive, we have agreed on the aim of building a peaceful, fair and prosperous society, with respect for the rule of law. That represents huge progress for all of us. I want the Assembly to understand that every one of the priorities and key goals in the Programme for Government will contribute to the achievement of that aim. That is how it will guide the Executive's work.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I welcome free public transport's being extended in 2008 to those who are aged 60 and over.

A Member: That is a matter of self-interest.

Mr Brady: It will be a matter of self-interest shortly.

What other measures that will benefit older people are contained in the draft Programme for Government?

The First Minister: The draft programme rests on protecting all sections of the community, especially those who, in the past, have not done so well. No one will be left out; everyone who has a right to be included under our propositions will be included. We could not say that we want a fair and just society in which the rule of law is acknowledged, but then not bring that to everyone. Therefore, we are pledged to bring that society to all those who rightfully should benefit from certain aspects of life that they do not currently have.

Mr S Wilson: I also welcome the announcement of the draft Programme for Government. I noticed that the First Minister and deputy First Minister talk about investment in schools. Direct rule Ministers, and, indeed, the previous Executive — which Mr Durkan seems to think did such an excellent job in investing in schools — delayed the schools building programme. That has meant that work on some school buildings that was announced five years ago has not even started. Given that, will the deputy First Minister tell us what plans have been included in the draft Programme for Government to ensure that finance, but, more importantly, procurement are such that the new building programme will not face the same delays?

Secondly, will the deputy First Minister tell the House whether the final Programme for Government will include a clear date for the implementation of the new transfer arrangements from primary to post-primary school? That matter is causing grave concern among teachers and parents.

The deputy First Minister: All those who have been involved in the education world in recent years understand some of the difficulties that the Member outlined. However, it is fair to say that committing £3.5 billion to our schools and youth services clearly represents a massive investment in schools. The reason for that investment is that schools are at the heart of our communities. Our aim is to modernise substantially the schools estate in order to align better the links between further education, the needs of the population, and the skills that we will require in the future. Therefore, we will proceed with major works on over 100 schools between 2008 and 2011.

Transfer mechanisms are a matter for the Department of Education in consultation with the Committee for Education and all the different interest groups. We all know and understand that the transfer system is a vexed issue; however, it is not beyond us. Here we are, after four or five months in Government, having completed a massive amount of work to bring the draft Programme for Government to the Assembly today. If we can do that, I think that we can do nearly anything.

Mr McCallister: The deputy First Minister has stated that he believes in working together to harness all the talents that exist in our society. Does that apply to all Members of the House? Will he guarantee that we will all be represented and that he will not merely continue to work ever more closely only with his Rt Hon friend the First Minister to achieve a more inclusive House?

The First Minister: I would just like to say to the Member: better luck next time. [Laughter.]

Mrs M Bradley: Will the Executive confirm that children and young people remain a priority for the Government? If so, how have they evidenced that in the draft Budget? What overall level of investment are the Executive making in early intervention and prevention services for children and young people?

The deputy First Minister: The Executive's overarching aim in the draft Programme for Government is, as I have already said, to build a peaceful, just and prosperous society in which everyone, including our children, can enjoy a better quality of life, now and in years to come. We recognise that action is required to ensure that all our children receive the support that they need to achieve their full potential, become more independent, and grow into well-adjusted adults who can take their place in the community.

12.15 pm

The needs of children are taken into account in our Programme for Government. In the PSA framework, the Executive have outlined clear commitments to eradicate child poverty, improve educational outcomes — particularly for the most disadvantaged children, and to ensure that all our children are cared for, live in safety, and are protected from abuse.

Mr Newton: I join other Members on this side of the House in welcoming this morning's statements. In response to the remarks of the Alliance Party Member for East Belfast: yes; there is a feel-good factor, certainly on this side of the Chamber. That comes from enjoying the confidence of the electorate, as is evidenced by the growth of our party.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Newton: I particularly welcome the underpinning of the political process through investment in the economy. That is essential, particularly in preparing the way for more jobs, including the provision of skills training. With that in mind, how will the investment strategy benefit the Northern Ireland tourism sector's drive for more visitors to the Province, which will increase the potential for job creation and prosperity?

The First Minister: I thank my honourable friend for his words. We will provide investment to enhance tourism infrastructure and will work with key partners to continue to advance the implementation of our tourism signature projects. We will also invest in our rural areas, which offer real opportunities for growth in job creation and tourism.

Mr Burns: I welcome the Programme for Government. Do the plans for the rapid-transport system for the greater Belfast area include any proposals to reopen the Lisburn to Antrim railway line and to build a new railway station at Belfast International Airport to enhance our tourism industry?

The deputy First Minister: The Minister for Regional Development will outline his view of how those matters should be taken forward.

Mr I McCrea: I also welcome this morning's announcement of the Programme for Government. Will the First Minister inform the House how the Executive will ensure that the proposed overhaul of the Planning Service contributes to economic growth?

The First Minister: A key objective of the proposed overhaul of the planning system will be to examine how we can speed up the decision-making process and create more certainty. That is essential if we are to be successful in promoting business investment. Moreover, we are giving a commitment that, from today, decisions will be made on all large-scale investment planning proposals within six months, provided that a pre-application consultation has taken place. That is the current position.

Dr Farry: The Programme for Government of the previous Executive, despite all their faults, ran to 144 pages. The current Programme for Government runs to 17 pages. Either the Executive believe that all the problems that face Northern Ireland have been solved, or they are condemning Northern Ireland to three wasted years. The Executive made great play of the fact that they have had only since May to prepare that document. Did the Northern Ireland Office not fund the appointment of special advisers since January, specifically for the purpose of preparing the Programme for Government? Will the Northern Ireland Office be getting that money back?

The deputy First Minister: That is a ridiculous question.

In formulating this Programme for Government, the Executive have adopted a strategic and joined-up approach, which will be welcomed overwhelmingly by everyone in our society.

Mr A Maginness: Like others, I welcome this draft document, and we do take hope from it. However, I emphasise that we do not have to buy the hype contained in the document. As regards hope, there are 36,000 families on the waiting list for houses in Northern Ireland. The document makes reference to investment, but will the First Minister and deputy First Minister assure me, and the people who are waiting for houses, that the finance for those houses will be made available to the Minister for Social Development?

The First Minister: It is all very well to be critical, but the Member's party, after all, was associated with the last Executive, and they did not do very much.

Their record was despicable, and those in glass houses should not throw stones.

We have made it a point that our Programme for Government and investment strategy are bound to be good news for the people of Northern Ireland. We are going to tackle the issues: North, South, east and west. There will be thousands of new jobs, new schools, new hospitals, new roads, better public transport, better support for our farmers and rural communities, and better support for business. What more does the Member want? We are determined to produce the goods, and I look forward to the day when he will be able to enjoy the plum pudding on his plate.

Mr T Clarke: I join others in welcoming the statement. Following almost 40 years of conflict, my question is about victims. What priority are the Executive giving to the needs of victims and their families, the vast majority of whom were brought about by the party opposite?

The deputy First Minister: We recognise the need to support victims and survivors as we seek to move forward and build a better future for all our people. That is clearly reflected in the PSA framework and in our commitment to develop a new and comprehensive strategy and approach to victims and survivors. More details will be made available in due course.

The Government are committed to making a real difference to the lives of victims and survivors, and we made a public statement on 8 October concerning the appointment of a new Commissioner for Victims and Survivors. The post has been re-advertised, and we hope that we can announce the appointment before Christmas. Re-advertising the post against the background of a fully-functioning Executive will bring forward a greater number of candidates. We will bring forward detailed proposals shortly that will represent a comprehensive approach to victims and survivors. In doing so, we will be focusing on three important areas: services and practical help for victims; dealing with the legacy of the past; and building a better future.

Draft Budget 2008-2011

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister of Finance and Personnel that he wishes to make a statement on the draft Budget 2008-2011.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): I am pleased to present the new Executive's first draft Budget. Lest anyone tuning in is beginning to wonder — it should be pointed out that that is a four-party Executive. I am sure that all four parties in the Executive, who unanimously agreed the Programme for Government that has already been outlined, will want to promote Northern Ireland rather than talk it down.

At the outset, I thank my officials for the assistance that they have given me in the preparation of the draft Budget. I also thank the Ministers and officials from all the other Departments, as they have assisted remarkably over recent weeks and months.

The draft Budget marks a clear break with the past and a new direction for the future. The days of direct rule Budgets with Labour Party priorities are over. This draft Budget comes with the proud stamp: "Made in Northern Ireland". The primary focus on economic growth is an indication of our long-term commitment to build a better future for the people of Northern Ireland. At a time when the public expects greater public services, this is a Budget that demands more from Government and more for the people. Now is the time for Government to respond and for devolution to deliver.

For almost 10 years, we have seen increases in public spending in Northern Ireland. Now it is for the Executive to set a course that will meet the needs of the people, not simply by spending more, but by ensuring that we get value for money for every pound that we spend. Our future success lies in our hands, and we must seize the opportunities that are before us. This is the first draft Budget of a new era, and it must lay the foundations for a better future for everyone in Northern Ireland.

The First Minister and the deputy First Minister have set out the Executive's proposals for a Programme for Government for the next three years. They have also provided a draft investment strategy that will define our priorities for investment over the next decade. Those documents set the context for the public expenditure proposals that the Executive also agreed on 23 October to submit to the Assembly and to the public for consultation. The draft Budget document published today provides details of proposed expenditure allocations to Departments for the next three years. Those are the resources that they will need and use to deliver the priorities and targets that are highlighted in the draft Programme for Government and in its annexes.

The last occasion on which a Finance Minister in a devolved Administration confirmed public spending plans for Northern Ireland was in December 2001, when Mark Durkan announced plans for 2002-03. On that occasion, he announced plans for current and capital expenditure totalling just over £6 billion. The spending proposals that I will announce today will total almost £10 billion next year, growing to almost £11 billion by 2010-11.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr P Robinson: Those figures reflect the growth in public spending that has occurred in recent years. Our current spending will be over 28% higher in real terms than it was in 2002. For capital investment, the increase has been even more dramatic, with a real terms increase of over 60% in annual public investment in new infrastructure in 2010-11, compared to seven years ago. We now have more money to spend in real terms than ever before. However, we also face many new demands on those resources.

During recent discussions with Executive Ministers on the draft Budget, they highlighted the real pressures that they face in maintaining and improving the public services for which they are responsible. However, the challenge that we face here is no different from the challenge that confronts every democratic Government around the world. Expectations of public services are rising everywhere, but people do not want to pay more tax than is necessary, and they certainly do not want the taxes that they do pay to be wasted on inefficiency or on programmes whose purpose and value are no longer relevant.

The First Minister highlighted the Executive's wish to focus on a small number of key priorities and goals. That is the right approach, if we are going to make differences that matter to the community. That is the direction in which the Assembly should move.

It is also the right approach to take when we consider how best to allocate the use of public expenditure. Consequently, that means that we have taken some difficult decisions on how best to allocate resources across Departments. However, I believe that the draft Budget proposals, agreed by the Executive for consultation, are fully consistent with the key priorities as set out in the draft Programme for Government.

12.30 pm

I will now set out some of the basic facts about the amounts of money that will be available to us over the next three years. Greater detail is provided in the draft Budget document published today; Members and Committees will want to examine that document further over the coming weeks. Our main source of funding for public services is the Northern Ireland block grant, which will be increased by the Treasury over the next three years on the basis of changes in comparable spending programmes in England, using the Barnett formula.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the outcome of the comprehensive spending review on 9 October 2007. As part of that review, he announced that after the application of the Barnett formula, the Northern Ireland departmental expenditure limit would increase in real terms by an average of 1·7% per annum over the next three years. I must, however, clarify that Treasury figure by highlighting that it is predicated on a reduced baseline figure for Northern Ireland that emerged just before the comprehensive spending review announcement, and after adjustments were made to baselines of some Whitehall Departments, particularly the Department of Health. The Treasury made similar adjustments to baselines in Scotland and Wales.

After taking account of those adjustments, a more accurate figure for the average real-term growth in expenditure in Northern Ireland over the next three years is an average of 1·2% per annum. However, after that adjustment, our total resources over the next three years will be £443 million more than the position we had reached in our negotiations with the Chancellor just before devolution in May.

In total, our departmental expenditure limit will increase by £254 million, £622 million and £1·661 billion over the next three years. I want to make it clear that we did not apply any reduction to our health baseline to match the reduction made to the Department of Health in England. In addition to those amounts, we will continue to have access to borrowing for investment in infrastructure. The amounts available to us will be £260 million, £246 million and £200 million over the next three years, to include amounts of available borrowing not drawn down in previous years. This borrowing is a valuable source of additional spending power for infrastructure investment.

Thanks to the negotiations leading up to restoration, it is now also borrowing without strings attached. The era of taxation for its own sake is over. The agreement that the previous Executive negotiated with the Treasury included a punitive clause that required us to increase domestic rates each year, year-on-year, above the average council tax increases in Great Britain. That had to be done whether or not we needed the extra revenue, and led to regional rate increases of up to 19% per annum. What householder does not remember that bill falling on the mat? The removal of that linkage was a key priority in our negotiations with the Treasury, and I am pleased that we succeeded in having that imposition removed by the Chancellor earlier this year. Instead of our regional rate effectively being set by local government in England, we are now free to make our own decisions on how much we must raise from domestic rates.

An additional source of spending power for the Executive and the Assembly over the next three years will be our capacity to draw down funds under the end-year flexibility arrangements. I stress that those sums reflect the amounts of money that were left unspent in previous years, and, in that sense, is not new money. However, it is money that is now tightly controlled by the Treasury. By gaining access to those funds now, on a one-off basis, we can address some of the costs facing Departments as they move to restructure and reform public services over the next few years.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Chief Secretary to the Treasury previously restricted our access to those funds. Members will recall the position that we reached with the Chancellor in May — a position that I regarded as unfinished business. I am pleased to report to the Assembly that after further negotiations with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, I have secured access to our full stock of end-year flexibility over the next three years. That represents an addition of some £295 million over the next three years, which is greater than the position that we reached in our negotiations with the Chancellor in May. I have also been able to secure the significant front-loading of those resources to enable us to address the costs that Departments will face as we move to restructure and reform the way in which we organise and deliver public services.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Molloy] in the Chair)

Finance Ministers in the previous Executive introduced the use of planned over-commitment to manage the implications of rapid growth in public expenditure and to reduce year-end underspends. The use of planned over-commitment continued under direct rule. We have reviewed its future under the new Executive and concluded that although it will still have some use, the size of the over-commitment must be reduced to below the levels that we inherited from direct-rule Ministers. That is essential if the Executive are to have greater flexibility to respond to the new and unexpected financial pressures that can arise in the course of any financial year. Therefore, the draft Budget is based on a planning assumption that the level of over-commitment will be reduced to £100 million in 2008-09 and further reduced to £80 million and £60 million over the following two years.

Taking account of those funding sources, the total current expenditure that is available for allocation by the Executive across the three years is £8·28 billion, £8·55 billion, and £8·93 billion. In addition, public expenditure allocations of £1·64 billion, £1·5 billion, and £1·83 billion are available for investment in infrastructure over the same three years. In addition to those amounts — and under the direct control of the Executive — we will receive funding to support social security and other expenditure that is managed directly by the Treasury. If those sums are added to the above figures, we will receive total public expenditure allocations that exceed £19·7 billion by 2010-11.

Before explaining how our proposed financial allocations have been deployed, I will say a few words about how we will work to make our public services more efficient. The outcome of the comprehensive spending review (CSR) has confirmed that the years of rapid growth in public spending across the United Kingdom are over. We can look forward to continuing real increases in public spending over the next few years, but at a much reduced rate of growth. That means that we must place a renewed emphasis on ensuring that we deliver maximum value for money from every penny that we spend on behalf of the people of Northern Ireland. Our public services will suffer if we do not take that challenge seriously. The formula is simple: if we free up resources through greater efficiency, they will remain in Northern Ireland for reinvestment in improving front-line services. However, if we allow inefficiencies to remain unchallenged, the people who will suffer will be the young, the old, and the vulnerable in every community across Northern Ireland. The only people who benefit from public-services inefficiencies are those who have a vested interest in resisting change and maintaining a status quo with which they have grown comfortable.

I want to serve notice today to the Assembly and to the wider community that I am determined to take the drive for greater efficiency in public services to a new level. I am not prepared to simply stand back and leave unchallenged the countless instances — large and small — across all our public bodies in which taxpayers' money is being wasted on overstaffing, absenteeism, poor working practices, and a resistance to radical change in the way in which we go about delivering services. We owe that not only to those who use and need our public services, but to the many public servants who want changes to and improvements in how they can do their jobs.

I have also asked my officials to examine the recent report published on the cost of division, to see whether there is any scope to free up resources. Their work is not yet complete, but the indications are that the areas in which there would be most potential to make savings are also those areas where there is little realistic prospect of radical change in the short term.

Clearly, we can make savings with different arrangements to educate our children, and new arrangements for local government could free up money, but it seems unlikely that those reforms will deliver significant savings in the CSR period. However, that does not mean that we should not start the journey now. We have made a giant political step forward, and we must examine the benefits that can flow from the resultant growth in community stability.

Other costs associated with the division in our society fall to policing and security budgets, which, of course, fall outside the scope of the present Budget.

I have already announced my intention to create a new high-level public sector efficiency task force — the performance and efficiency delivery unit (PEDU) — to examine the scope for generating new cash-releasing efficiencies and improving delivery and performance across the public sector. The unit's membership will be limited to a few respected individuals with a strong track record in overseeing successful organisational change, and it will be supported by a small number of staff. The unit will include individuals from outside the public sector, and it must be prepared to challenge even the most widely accepted assumptions about how we go about the business of delivering public services.

The Executive have already agreed that Departments and public bodies here should deliver cash-releasing savings of 3% a year over the next three years, including a 5% per annum real-terms reduction in administration costs. That will produce an additional £790 million by 2010-11 for reinvestment in our public services. However, I believe that we can go further than that in finding ways to free up more resources for reinvestment in public services.

Between now and my announcement of the final Budget in January 2008, I want to finalise and publish details of how Departments will deliver on their efficiency programmes. I also want to examine the scope for delivering even higher levels of efficiency beyond the 3% a year targets already set —

Mr Deputy Speaker: A mobile phone is interrupting the audio recording. I apologise, Minister.

Mr P Robinson: I will announce new targets for reductions in the size of the Civil Service over the next three years. What we are going to do to release funds from current expenditure for better use, we also intend to do to increase funds for capital investment. We want to maximise the opportunity presented in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's financial package to retain receipts from asset disposals for reinvestment in our local infrastructure.

To that end, we have set up a task force to identify further opportunities to dispose of surplus and under-utilised assets. We believe that with a professional and focused approach to asset realisation and reuse, we can plan for even higher levels of investment in new infrastructure beyond the figures in the draft investment strategy published today. The capital realisation task force has been asked to report its initial findings to the Executive by December so that they can be incorporated into the final Budget and investment strategy to be published in January. Therefore, a glance at departmental allocations will not reveal the full extent of the new Government brand. We are not content to simply accept the present resources at our disposal and dole them out. We are actively and aggressively seeking to grow the pot.

Moreover, it is not simply the amount of funding each Department will enjoy that counts. The key to success will be the use to which those resources are put. The Executive intends to squeeze value out of every pound spent. That means cutting out waste; getting more for the same or more for less; doing things differently and better; challenging the worth of staid programmes; testing the way things are done; and reforming the public sector so that it delivers services of a kind and in a manner that people deserve.

12.45 pm

The Executive are committed to delivering the economic vision of an innovative, entrepreneurial, wealth-generating, export-orientated economy. In order to achieve that, we must ensure that policies are in place that will encourage private-sector growth and enterprise. For too long, the local private sector has been constrained by the dominant influence of the Northern Ireland public sector. Now is an opportune time to change the focus of economic policy.

We have the lowest unemployment rate of the UK regions, and employment growth is at unparalleled levels. Despite that favourable transformation in the labour market, there has been no material improvement in our relative prosperity. Indeed, our GVA (gross value added) per capita, when benchmarked against the UK average, has actually deteriorated in the past five years.

That is confirmation of the fact that we must change tack in economic development policy, and it is a warning that we cannot be complacent about the serious economic challenges that confront us. The focus should now be on creating better jobs — not just more jobs. We must encourage private-sector growth in sectors that deliver high-value employment. Although Invest NI and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) have a key role to play in that transformation, co-ordinated input will be required from many other stakeholders, inside and outside the public sector.

The private sector has signalled that it understands the nature of the challenge that it faces. The challenge for the Executive and the Assembly is to ensure the delivery of the infrastructure, skills and communication networks which are essential in order to raise regional productivity.

Particular emphasis will also be placed on ensuring that innovation funding promotes new and innovative ideas that can be turned into opportunities for wealth creation in the economy. There must be a co-ordinated, cross-departmental approach to the management and targeting of innovation funding sources, including the Chancellor's financial package, EU competitiveness and employment programmes, and Irish Government support for collaborative research and development.

In highlighting the implications of the proposed budget allocations for Departments, I will not attempt to repeat the details that were published today in the draft Budget, and which, during the coming weeks, will be subjected to separate and detailed scrutiny by the Assembly's Committees.

In line with the priority given to economic growth, it is proposed that the reductions experienced by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in recent years be reversed. Over the Budget period, there will be average growth of 4.8% in the amount available to spend. That additional funding will be used to support Invest Northern Ireland's efforts to stimulate exports, promote higher value-added activity in firms that already operate in Northern Ireland, and attract high-quality foreign investment. That Budget proposal will also allow for increased investment in marketing Northern Ireland as a tourism destination, as well as visitor servicing and tourism signature projects.

Recognising our responsibility to minimise the impact of climate change, DETI will be able to provide support for sustainable energy projects and to meet the legal and consultancy costs of planned energy initiatives that promote a greater use of renewable energy sources.

The additional £87 million allocated in the draft Budget will enable the Department for Employment and Learning to complete its roll-out of the Pathways to Work scheme and support the introduction of the employment support allowance, which will enable people who suffer from ill health or a disability to return to work.

In order to underpin our commitment to promote a dynamic, innovative economy, a highly-skilled and flexible workforce must be created. An outcome of the draft Budget allocations will be that support will be provided to help 42,000 adult learners to achieve a recognised qualification in numeracy, literacy or ICT — or in all three. In addition, by 2010, a comprehensive careers advice service will be introduced to meet the needs of all — including disabled — people.

The Department would also be able to provide comprehensive support to enable people to overcome the obstacles that they face in finding employment. The capital allocations in this draft Budget will fund new further education colleges in Belfast and the north-west, along with the modernisation of existing colleges, in recognition of the importance of those institutions and their contribution to equipping our future workforce with the skills that it will require.

Turning to education, over the next three years, the challenge will be to continue to raise overall educational standards while reducing the gap in achievement between those who have the highest and lowest levels of attainment. The proposed allocation will increase the Department's budget by 4.3% per annum over the period to 2010-11, with further resources coming from efficiency savings, which allow for a significant increase in the aggregated schools budget.

In addition, the allocation will support the implementation of the various elements of curriculum reform to give our youngest pupils an improved start to primary school, as well as placing a greater emphasis on developing the skills that young people need for life and work and to provide greater flexibility for schools to tailor what they teach to best meet the needs of their pupils.

To ensure that our children are properly equipped for the future, it is essential that we have a modern and sustainable schools estate that provides them with the opportunities to excel that they deserve.

The draft Budget allocation will enable over 100 major schools projects to be taken forward — along with 18 PPPs over the period, including those for eight special-needs schools — as well as providing for continued investment in the youth estate.

I have told the Minister of Education that I share her ambition to add to her Department's capital resources from funds freed up by further asset disposals to enhance her capital programme.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has not only the largest spend of any Northern Ireland Department, but it has also been allocated an increasing share of the overall resource budget in recent years.

The proposed Budget allocation of an additional £450 million by 2010-11 will enable the Department to meet all of its very substantial cost pressures over the Budget period, including inflationary pressures in respect of pay, non-pay and pharmaceuticals.

That will be the largest amount of money ever invested in the Health Service in Northern Ireland and the largest share of available resources ever allocated for investment in the health and well-being of our community, which reflects the importance that the Executive attach to that key service.

The proposed allocation will address many of the key determinants of ill health as well as issues of actual illness. That includes reducing the number of persons institutionalised in learning-disability and mental-health hospitals, as well as a reduction in hospital admissions for those suffering from severe chronic disease, such as heart disease or respiratory conditions.

There should also be increased access to specialist drugs, as well as improvements in cardiovascular and cancer services, with the aim of reducing the mortality rates associated with those illnesses. The proposed allocation will also enable the Department to provide additional resources to public-health programmes, including those aimed at reducing the level of suicide in society.

The draft Budget provides significant capital resources for investment in the Health Service. That recognises the importance of providing a complementary service with investment in primary- and community-care programmes, acute hospitals and local hospitals.

The proposed Budget allocation for the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) will enable it to continue to support the improved performance of local farmers in the marketplace through lifelong learning at the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise, the provision of processing and marketing grants, and the delivery of agrifood scientific programmes by the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute.

The allocation will also enable DARD to provide full funding of the 2007-13 Northern Ireland rural development programme and to address rural poverty.

The programme is worth £500 million and is aimed at improving the competitiveness of the agriculture and forestry sector, improving the environment and the countryside, and contributing towards improving quality of life in rural areas and the diversification of the rural economy.

DARD will continue to develop a more sustainable environment through: further increasing the public and private forest area; developing more sustainable fisheries; and producing flood-protection measures through the Rivers Agency.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure will want to attend to matters that concern the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games. The proposed Budget allocation of an additional £18 million by 2010-11 to that Department should enable it to increase participation of local people in sport and physical recreation through the phased implementation of the strategy for sport and physical recreation. As I have indicated, that allocation will help to realise significantly the benefits that the 2012 Olympic Games and Paralympic Games will bring to Northern Ireland.

Furthermore, the proposed Budget allocation will enhance the accessibility of information on our cultural assets, enabling as many people as possible to experience, and, I hope, appreciate the excellence of our cultural assets. The proposals should facilitate growth in the activities that are funded by the Ulster-Scots Agency in line with what was negotiated at St Andrews.

The Department for Regional Development will experience average annual growth in its budget of 6.4% over the period to 2010-11. That growth does not include the funding for water and sewerage services, which is being considered separately. The growth will enable the Department to implement a range of measures, in particular the extension in the incoming financial year of the concessionary-fares scheme to those who are over 60 years of age. Like the First Minister, I appreciate that particular project, and I am glad that I have been able to comment on it before I need to use it and am required to declare an interest.

The draft Budget allocation will also allow continuation of work on a number of major roads schemes on the key transport corridors, most notably the improvement work on the Westlink, as well as completion of the dualling of the A1 Belfast-border route, and the A4 from Dungannon to Ballygawley. In addition, further funding will be available for structural maintenance, reversing the short-sighted decision that direct rule Ministers made in reducing funding for that essential activity.

The draft Budget also makes provision for a major bus- and train-replacement programme to ensure that a modern, high-quality service is provided. Preparation on the introduction of a rapid transit scheme in the greater Belfast area will be advanced, and the draft Programme for Government sees the Executive setting their target for work starting on that project.

The proposed allocations should allow the Department of the Environment to implement an enhanced approach to road safety and to establish an environmental crime team. Although my statement says “environmental crime team”, I hope that we have set up an anti-crime team. The purpose of that team will be to combat the illegal dumping of waste, which is a serious issue.

In addition, and in direct response to concerns that Members and other stakeholders have raised, the proposed draft Budget allocation will allow the Minister of the Environment to further reform our planning system. The aim is to develop reforms that will enable the planning system to play its part in delivering on our Programme for Government priorities, particularly by contributing to growing a dynamic, innovative and sustainable economy. The Minister of the Environment wants to advance proposals to fast-track job-related planning applications. That initiative should be encouraged, and it needs to be properly resourced.

The draft Budget will part fund the capital costs that district councils will incur in complying with the EU landfill directive targets, thus reducing the financial burden on local ratepayers.

The draft Budget allocation for the Department for Social Development will facilitate the continued modernisation of social security services and welfare reform over the period to 2010-11. That will enable the provision of improved services to clients.

1.00 pm

In respect of the voluntary and community sector, the draft Budget will enable the establishment of a charities commission for Northern Ireland.

With regard to capital, the Department will be able to make some progress towards the achievement of the target of delivering 10,000 new social housing completions over the next five years, in conjunction with its goal of eradicating fuel poverty in the most vulnerable of households. Moreover, I am a fully signed-up member of the Social Development Minister’s club, which aims to aid her in identifying further land disposals that may become available in order to increase the number of affordable and social housing units that she can deliver.

On the matter of town and city-centre regeneration, the draft Budget provides significant resources for a number of initiatives that will have a positive impact on social and economic issues. The draft Budget allocation will allow the Office of the First and deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) to deliver a new comprehensive approach to victims and survivors, including the appointment of a Commissioner for Victims.

My Department will also work to enhance the rights of older people. The higher-than-average increase in the OFMDFM budget is linked to the additional costs associated with the restoration of devolution.

As far as my own Department is concerned, the main focus over the Budget period will be to advance the process of Civil Service reform and to set the foundations for modern, high-quality and efficient public services that will allow further resources to be redirected to front-line services.

We must ensure that public services match the standards that our community now expects. That means investing in new technology and the new systems that are required to support modern and more efficient ways of delivering high-quality services. The Department will also enable the necessary preparations for the delivery of the 2011 census, and allow Land and Property Services to conduct a revaluation of non-domestic properties.

I will also introduce Northern Ireland’s equivalent to New York’s “311” scheme. When it is fully rolled out, that scheme will enable the public to reach all Government Departments by using the same three-digit telephone number.

The draft Budget proposes new financial allocations for Departments. In every case, Ministers would like to have been allocated more, had more been available. However, that also underlines the importance of ensuring further improvements in the quality of financial management in Departments. If Departments have argued successfully for more money, they must ensure that they spend that money when they said they would. I will therefore be monitoring Departments' underspend figures in the future, and will report those figures to the Finance and Personnel Committee and to the Assembly.

The spending proposals contained in the draft Budget will now be subject to consultation with the Assembly, its Committees and the community. The Committees and the wider community will want to examine those proposals and comment on them. However, this exercise needs to be earthed in reality if it is to be worthwhile. There is no point in simply stating that more money must be spent in this Department or on that project, without recognising that some other allocation will have to be reduced to make way for such additional funding.

We also need to ensure that consultation includes scrutiny of how Ministers allocate money to priorities in their Departments. Setting a new direction for public spending cannot just mean spending more money — it must also mean spending existing money more effectively, in line with our priorities. It is not just a question of how much we spend; it is also a question of how well that money is spent.

Earlier this year, I informed the Assembly that I would carry out a review of the policy on industrial derating that we inherited from direct rule Ministers. Like other Members, I have met representatives of the manufacturing sector to hear their concerns. The Department commissioned a study from the Economic Research Institute of Northern Ireland (ERINI), and I have received its preliminary report. The final report is expected within days. In the light of that preliminary report and, in particular, of the institute's assessment that there is a risk to some of our manufacturing firms in phasing out derating, the best approach would be to hold the current level of rates at 30% over the CSR period.

There is simply no point in making economic development our top priority while, potentially, making life even more difficult for certain key businesses. I would have preferred it if the Committee had been able to address the subject before I had to make any judgement but the timing of the Budget has intervened and I am required to make the call. However, before our final Budget position is agreed in January 2008, the Committee for Finance and Personnel will have considered ERINI's final report, and the Executive will have had the opportunity to take a strategic look at the whole issue in light of the evidence presented. I believe that the Executive must demonstrate their encouragement for our manufacturing industries with more than words.

My final announcement is on the regional rate. In the last three years there have been regional rate increases of 9%, 19% and 6% respectively. Under direct rule, similar increases were planned for the years ahead. In fact, the average regional rate bill has increased by 62% since 2002, and, too often, that additional money has funded Government inefficiency rather than front-line services.

The cushion of above-inflation regional rate increases encouraged the Government to avoid tackling bureaucracy and waste. Now is the time to remove that comfort blanket and demand that the Government share the strain that ratepayers have borne for years.

Our approach must reflect the decisions on water that were outlined in the statement to the Assembly by the Minister for Regional Development last Monday. We have given the commitment that households will see the benefit of the contribution that they already make to the cost of water through their regional rates payments, which is an average of £160 per rates bill. I believe that we need to go further. We must ensure that each household sees the full benefits of that in their rates bills as we introduce new arrangements for increased contributions from households towards the cost of water over the next three years.

If we were to introduce parallel increases to regional rates bills, no matter how small, at the same time as we are phasing in the new water arrangements, we would be seen as giving with one hand and taking away with the other.

Therefore, in addition to the reduction of an average of £160 per rates bill from 2009-10 I propose that we should freeze the domestic regional rate for the next three years. This represents a cut in real terms in the regional rate and offers much needed relief to every ratepayer.

Devolution is about making a difference. In the area of local taxation, during the coming four-year Assembly term the average householder in Northern Ireland will be more than £1,000 better off than would have been the case if direct rule had continued and direct rule proposals had been implemented.

The position is different for the business regional rate as there have been more modest increases in their bills, averaging about 3.3% over the past five years. However, over the next few years, businesses will also face increased water costs, therefore, I propose that we commit to reduce the average increase in their rates to 2.7% a year for the next three years. That is the level of inflation forecast for the next three years, and will maintain their contribution at present levels in real terms.

The first draft Budget for the new Administration sets a new direction for Northern Ireland. It is the first step in a new journey that we are all embarking upon together. The challenges and opportunities facing Northern Ireland have never been greater and will increase in the years ahead. The old answer of ever-increasing public spending is no longer available. Yesterday's solutions will not solve tomorrow's challenges. Only a relentless commitment to delivery, innovation and efficiency will allow public spending to deliver the kind of outcomes that we all wish to see.

This draft Budget not only seeks to move Northern Ireland in the right direction for the next three years, but seeks to set its trajectory for decades to come.

Even though, as a result of the comprehensive spending review, growth in public spending in Northern Ireland is lower than has been the case in recent years, the draft Budget announces the highest-ever level of public spending in Northern Ireland. However, the real success or failure of the draft Budget will not turn on what is spent, but on what is delivered. It is not the input, but the output, that will count with the public.

I have announced the highest-ever spending plans for Northern Ireland; made the economy the number-one priority; and delivered a freeze in the regional rate. The draft Budget offers some much-needed relief to householders and a platform on which to grow the economy. Ultimately, devolution will be judged on its ability to make a difference to people's lives.

The draft Budget will allow the Executive and the Assembly to deliver for the people of Northern Ireland during the next three years. It will allow Northern Ireland to build a stable, fair and prosperous future. I commend the draft Budget to the Assembly.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel (Mr McLaughlin): I congratulate the Minister on the presentation of the new Executive's first draft Budget. I welcome the draft Budget and the Minister's statement, which together are an important step forward for the Assembly, setting out the clear intention to map out a social and economic step change for everyone in the community. That is why people have such hope for this Executive.

The Committee for Finance and Personnel, in concert with all the scrutiny Committees, will examine the minute detail of the draft Budget. My Committee will also take the views of the other statutory Committees on the draft budgets of their respective Departments and will produce a co-ordinated report on the draft Budget before the Christmas recess. Clearly, all of that is predicated on the timeline laid down by the Minister for final decision being met.

The Committee will also table a motion for full debate on the draft Budget and hopes that the outcome of its report will inform and influence the Executive when they produce a revised Budget statement in January. One key issue among many that have exercised my Committee is the culture of underspend, which has persisted for years in Government Departments. The Minister has addressed that issue, both in the Budget and in his statement. What steps does he envisage can be taken to improve financial forecasting, monitoring and spend in Departments in order to eradicate the culture of underspend and to ensure that there is delivery on the strategic spending priorities?

Mr P Robinson: I thank the Chairman of the Committee for Finance and Personnel for his comments. I hope that, in the coming weeks and months, my officials and I can work with the Committee to examine the documentation with which it has been provided and to answer the searching questions that I have no doubt it will ask. Of course, the Executive will be happy to participate in any debate that the Committee may seek to bring to the Assembly.

In relation to underspending, the Chairman has put his finger on a key issue that will affect the Executive's ability to do the job that they have outlined in the draft Programme for Government and, indeed, in the draft Budget. As I said in my statement, it is absolutely essential that, when Ministers come to me to make a strong case for spending programmes and projects — and convince me to the extent that they are provided with money — they actually spend that money within the timeframes that have been set. The backcloth against which that issue must be considered is the fact that there is no automatic access to end-year flexibility. Money that is not spent during the course of the financial year is tightly controlled by the Treasury. That brings the Executive to a position where we must bid for that money and argue for it, and we will not always get it when we want it or in the quantity that it is needed.

Therefore, it is absolutely essential that each Department can meet the type of spending proposals that it has indicated that it wishes to take forward. It will be impossible for every Department to be able to meet exactly — on a pound basis — the allocation that has been made to it. Nevertheless, Departments must substantially work towards that. That is a matter on which I want to recruit the Chairman and members of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, who will play a powerful role in that exercise.

Unlike the situation under direct rule, the Assembly's Committees have a scrutiny role. That means that the Committee for Finance and Personnel will be able to monitor departmental spending throughout the year, thereby ensuring that Departments meet their targets. I hope that the Committee will be tough on Ministers — including me — if they do not meet those targets. Together, we can ensure much better performance than has been the case heretofore.

1.15 pm

Mr Hamilton: I congratulate the Minister of Finance and Personnel on his Budget. He will know that people in constituencies such as Strangford were hammered hard by direct rule's double-digit regional rate increases. I am sure that those people will warmly welcome the Minister's announcement that he intends to freeze the regional rate over the next three years, effectively providing a cut in the regional rate.

I am also sure that Northern Ireland's manufacturers will particularly welcome the Minister's announcement that industrial rates will be held at their present level. Will the Minister explain to the House how the average householder in Northern Ireland will be better off by £1,000 a year over the Assembly's current mandate, compared to direct rule?

Mr P Robinson: Already, householders in Northern Ireland are considerably financially advantaged by the existing devolved Administration. The first step that the direct rule Administration would have taken — if there had not been devolution — would have been to introduce the first phase of water charging in the current financial year. That would have constituted one third of the overall expected bill. That charge would have increased to two thirds in the following year, and would have increased to the full charge in the year after that. Under the proposal announced by the Minister for Regional Development, there will not be a charge for water in the current financial year, or in the next. Already, for water alone, there is a significant saving, and a consequent reduction thereafter.

As for rates, the pattern is — as indicated in my statement — that rates had increased in Northern Ireland by over 60% in a five-year period. There has been an increase of 37% in the regional rate in the past three years. That is why the ratepayer in Northern Ireland deserves some relief. However, I would not like to see local government taking advantage of the regional rate being frozen by increasing the district rate. I hope that, rather than take advantage of that, local government will attempt to mirror what has been done by the Executive, and that we can keep down the burden on ratepayers in Northern Ireland.

Mr Beggs: The Budget is one of the tightest that we have experienced in Northern Ireland in recent years, with only a 1·2% increase in real-terms spending. Will the Minister agree that, although the regional rate will be frozen over the next three years, in the long term significantly more money will be raised from householders when regional rates and water rates are combined?

Will he also give some indication on how the Varney Review can have a significant impact in achieving his primary focus in the Budget — economic growth? Are there any indications yet of significant changes that will help businesses and job creation in Northern Ireland?

Mr P Robinson: The Minister for Regional Development set out the agreed position of each of the four parties in the Executive on phasing in water charges. Rightly, he indicated that — in line with all our commitments during the election campaign — we will not allow people to be forced to pay twice for their water.

We have therefore reduced the rates bills by £160 for the year in which payment will begin; the Consumer Council for Northern Ireland, my Department and the review panel have all agreed that that is an appropriate figure. The very reason why I want to freeze rates over the period is to take account of the phasing-in of the water charge and allow it to be assimilated, rather than applying further pressures through the regional rate.

The Member asked about Sir David Varney's review. I have not yet seen the report. Bits and pieces of information have started to vibrate around the system, and, as I understand it, the report is likely to take the form of an economic analysis that indicates the strengths and weaknesses of our economy, rather than providing a set of recommendations. It will therefore be left to the Chancellor to determine what action will be taken on that matter.

My best guess is that, in responding, the Chancellor is likely to deal with the kind of instruments that would help our economy, rather than simply consider financial inputs. We are likely to be talking about schemes and projects to encourage investment in our economy and to improve skills and training. I hope that the Chancellor will consider those types of issues. The First Minister indicated earlier that no stone will be left unturned as regards the pressure that the entire Executive will apply to get the best deal possible from the Chancellor, and from the United Kingdom Government as a whole.

Mr O'Loan: I thank the Minister for his statement on the draft Budget. It is very important that we not talk down our potential. I want to say clearly at the outset that I believe that this is a real Budget that involves real decisions.

As the Minister has said, rises in public spending have been very substantial in recent years, although they are now much less so. Nonetheless, there has been a real rise in public expenditure. I am sorry to hear that the increase is 1·2% per annum in real terms rather than the previously publicised figure of 1·7%. Nevertheless, it is an increase.

I congratulate the Minister on his welcome emphasis on efficiency in Government. Inefficiency has been a perennial problem that has not been easy to crack. We must all play a part in addressing that issue through our different roles in the Assembly. It has been too easy to simply raise more revenue. I welcome the Minister's freezing of the domestic regional rate to cushion the imposition of water charges and the similar restriction on the rise in the business regional rate.

I have three brief questions. First, can the Minister assure me that the end-year flexibility (EYF) figure of £295 million is not included in the 1·2% increase in real terms in departmental spending?

Secondly, I note that the Minister said that the Department will:

“make some progress towards the achievement of the target of delivering 10,000 new social housing completions”.

That language strikes me as being somewhat more cautious than that which was used in the earlier statement on the draft Programme for Government. Can he give me a clear assurance of his commitment to providing those much-needed social houses?

Thirdly, the Minister referred to the report on the cost of division, and then immediately went on to say that:

“we can make savings with different arrangements to educate our children”.

Can he assure me that he is not planning an onslaught against the Catholic education system?

Mr P Robinson: I thank the Member for his generous comments about the draft Budget, particularly the proposals on the regional rate and industrial derating.

The Member’s first question was about EYF, and I can give him an assurance that the additional amount that we managed to secure from the Chancellor is not included in the 1.2%. The collective figures are provided in the draft Budget, although I accept that Members must trawl through 120 pages to find them. However, in my view, the figure of 1.2% reflects the real-term growth — the Chancellor might say 1.7%, but he adjusted the baselines. In my view, the honest figure for the Assembly to work from is 1.2%, which does not include the EYF figure.

The Member commented on my more cautious use of language when talking about social housing. He will know that I am always very cautious in my use of language. However, that says nothing about my determination to address the need for social housing.

I am at one with the Minister for Social Development in seeking to secure every pound possible to meet our targets. I have indicated to her that putting the targets in the Programme for Government places responsibility on the whole Executive to provide the funding necessary to ensure that they are met. The targets will not be met just by supplying cash to build houses; there are other important aspects, not least the use of article 40 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to ensure that a proportion of each large development is set aside for social and affordable housing. Releasing additional land by all Departments — not just the Minister for Social Development’s — will give us the flexibility to move towards those targets, which are undoubtedly challenging. A target is of no value unless it requires us to stretch.

Dr Farry: I am not sure that Mr O’Loan should have been so welcoming of the Budget, given that the SDLP’s Minister’s Department is one of the few that will have its budget cut in real terms over the three-year period. Nonetheless, I welcome the economic thrust of the Budget while stressing that delivery is critical.

What are the projections for the public share of GDP over the lifespan of the Budget, given that we are starting from a baseline of 71%? This morning, the First Minister said that gross value added (GVA) conversions were a target for OFMDFM and the Executive. However, the goalposts are being moved towards us because the south-east of England is being excluded from GVA calculations. Will the Minister confirm that we are lowering our sights?

The Budget was also supposed to contain the regional economic strategy: has that been included in the Minister’s statement? I note that we are still focusing on essentially the same four drivers that were in the draft regional economic strategy and that attracted so much criticism by the business sector. How does the Minister anticipate making a step change in our economy if we do not have the tools to do so?

There is no provision in the Budget for a differential rate of corporation tax in the event of that being granted by the Varney Review. Under the terms of the Azores ruling, that provision must be made. Does the Minister’s statement do what it says on the tin?

Mr P Robinson: The Member’s questions would have been better if he had been given more time to think of them and some assistance in their compilation. The Executive, in their Programme for Government, quite rightly felt that the proper GVA comparison that we should make is with that of the UK after the south-east of England has been removed. That is the level that we hope to achieve. We have already moved ahead of Wales, in GVA per capita, and Scotland is in our sights, but the average UK level is our target. It will not be achieved in one year or three; the target set by the direct rule Administration was a 0.5% increase in GVA over a 10-year period, so we are being considerably more ambitious.

I thought that the Member was someone who wanted to encourage the additional productivity that is needed to increase GVA; encourage exports from Northern Ireland, and encourage foreign direct investment (FDI). If bad-mouthing every document produced is all that the Alliance Party has to offer, then that is a fairly poor contribution to make to a very serious debate. The Member is usually much more positive on matters — perhaps he got out of the wrong side of bed this morning.

Regardless of whether that is a party line that the Alliance Party feels it must take, Northern Ireland has an excellent opportunity over the next number of years to grow its economy considerably. It gets that opportunity on foot of the stability and progress that is being made. The fact that our business community is indicating its enthusiasm and confidence in the economy to DFP shows that we have that opportunity. I say to the Member for North Down: do not talk Northern Ireland down.

1.30 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that the Speaker has asked that the questions be brief and to the point so that the Minister can answer as many questions as possible. We must move in that direction.

Mr Weir: I am sure that the Minister will be delighted to hear that I will ask him only one question, rather than five or six. I welcome the Budget — it is clear that it is a Budget for economic growth, which will be welcomed by ratepayers and manufacturers.

The Budget will also be welcomed by prudent local councils. Over the last several years, councils that have sought to be efficient and prudent, such as my own council in North Down, have been overwhelmed by massive regional rates rises and found that all their good work was somewhat undone. The Budget will be welcomed not simply because of the freezing of the regional rate, but for the support that has been given to help meet EU targets. In his statement, the Minister rightly highlighted that the link between the level of council tax in England, and our ability to borrow under the RRI initiative —

Mr B McCrea: This is a short question?

Mr Weir: I will obviously aspire to —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member ask a question?

Mr Weir: I always aspire to the level of brevity of the Member for Lagan Valley, although I do not always succeed.

The Minister said that the link between the level of council tax in England and our ability to borrow under the RRI initiative was successfully removed during the negotiations with the Chancellor in May and earlier this year. Can the Minister indicate what the implication of that change is for the Budget, compared to what was negotiated by the last Executive?

Mr P Robinson: I thank the Member for North Down; I am glad that there are some optimistic people living in that constituency. I have announced a business-friendly Budget; the business community will welcome it, as it has long wanted to see an Executive that are prepared to put the economy at the centre of their priorities, to seek growth in the economy and to encourage the business community by reducing some the pressures on it.

The reinvestment and reform initiative was introduced by the previous Executive, and it is a good initiative. It provides additional borrowing capacity, which is welcome to the Executive. The constraint that the Chancellor applied to the previous Executive was that they could not have access to the reinvestment and reform initiative unless they narrowed the gap between local taxation here and in Great Britain. Therefore, Northern Ireland's rates rises were governed by the level of rises in Great Britain. That is what caused our rates to go up by 19%. That was not because we needed a 19% rise here, or because people could afford it, but because people in Great Britain had that rise and it had to be mirrored in order for the Executive to have access to RRI.

If that link had not been broken in our negotiations with the Chancellor, there would not have been a freeze on the regional rate. Over the next three years, under direct rule, the rates were set to increase by more than 10% per annum. Anyone who wants to consider that, on top of the additional water charges that people would already be paying, will know the real benefit that devolution is bringing to the pocket of Mr, Mrs and Ms Average.

Ms Anderson: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his statement. I also thank him for his answer to the last question because I welcome the fact that the Executive have been able to abolish what became known as the "Durkan tax".

The draft Programme for Government clearly states that the resources from public expenditure and economic growth should be used to tackle existing patterns of disadvantage and target those in greatest objective need. Will the Minister detail how the draft Budget meets that objective?

Mr P Robinson: From my earliest days at the Dispatch Box, I have made it clear that a massive imperative has, unquestionably, been placed on the Executive to work towards economic growth in Northern Ireland, particularly at a time when there is a window of opportunity. However, we should not be unmindful of the vulnerable in society who need the most help, whether they are young people, older people or other sections of the community. Unless the Assembly makes a difference to the lives of everyone in society, it is not making the best use of devolution.

I cannot micromanage the Departments that are responsible for dealing with issues at the coalface, but the increase in departmental allocations enables the Ministers to put in place the necessary funds that will make the biggest possible difference.

The draft Budget is based on the current available funding. However, there are, potentially, two additional sources of income. The first arises from the work of the PEDU, which will examine the resources of every Department to establish what additional efficiencies can be made to allow money to go to the front line, where it is of greatest value. The second potential source of further income comes from the consideration of whether there is more of an asset base that can be used to fund new projects.

Potentially, they have a critical role in providing the cherry on top of the cake, by enabling Ministers to do what they urgently want to do, but are constrained from doing by the size of the current cake that the Assembly has been given.

Mr S Wilson: I too congratulate the Minister on bringing forth a draft Budget, the prudence of which will help to alleviate the pressure on hard-pressed taxpayers. At the same time, it introduces innovative spending programmes that will help to improve infrastructure and, I hope, the economic structures.

I have three questions for the Minister. Funding from the Irish Republic will be available for several road projects. However, one such project, the upgrading of the A8, is not included in the draft Budget. Has that project now been ruled out of receiving funding for the next three years of the comprehensive spending review?

The Minister made much of the fact that Departments have underspent. Often, it was capital underspending, which is partly due to difficulties with public finance initiatives. What steps is his Department taking to ensure that the delays in PFI schemes are not due to the procurement method that is used, which subsequently leads to an underspend?

Finally, given that the draft Budget is based on the Barnett formula, which included an increase, in real terms, of 2.5% in spending on education in GB, why is that not reflected in the spending on education in today's proposal?

Mr P Robinson: I will deal with the questions in reverse order. None of the spending plans that the Chancellor provided for GB are reflected here because of devolution. We decide our priorities; we slice up our cake to reflect local interests and our knowledge of where the need lies. The Assembly does not mirror the percentages that are attributed in GB.

Were it to do so, the Health Minister would be extremely upset today at the significant reduction in baseline spending on health in Great Britain. However, that reduction has not been passed on to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety here. That is just one example of how essential it is that we take decisions, as a devolved Government, based on the priorities in Northern Ireland.

I recognise that the Member has not had a great opportunity to look at the documents in detail. However, if he looks at the draft investment strategy, he will see reference to the A8 there. Happily, therefore, he will be able to get into the 'East Antrim Times' to tell people that progress is going to be made.

Mr S Wilson: And I will give the Minister the appropriate praise.

Mr P Robinson: I welcome that; coming from the honourable gentleman, it is praise indeed.

As regards PFI schemes, the Member is well aware — as he worked very closely with me in east Belfast before going to greener pastures — of my misgivings about PFI. It is not a concept that I am ideologically connected to. I look at PFIs and PPPs to see whether they are the right solution for a particular set of circumstances, or whether other procurement methods would be better.

The Member has put his finger on one of the issues that has caused massive problems. In my own constituency, there have been massive delays because of PFI schemes. That is something that the Ministers who are pushing those forward — and particularly, in OFMDFM, the SIB — need to tackle. We must oil those wheels to ensure that we do not have inordinate delays in the rolling-out of those schemes. The Member has, rightly, identified an issue that has to be tackled. It has not been tackled in the past, and it is a challenge for this Executive to do it effectively.

Mr McCallister: I welcome the Minister's announcement on the regional rate and industrial derating.

Turning to health, the Minister will know that there has been a 4% increase in spending in GB, yet Northern Ireland's spend is only increasing by 1.2%. Does he feel that that divergence is sustainable? Does he accept that the Barnett formula may now be working against us in the area of health spending?

Also, if children and young people are to be a priority, can the Minister guarantee that he will address the 30% underfunding of Northern Ireland's children's services?

Mr P Robinson: I think it might be worthwhile to put the health debate into a proper context. I have to provide allocations for 11 Departments, three minor Departments and this Assembly. The funding total for all of those together is such that almost 48% of the total amount goes to one Department: the Department of Health. It is very clear that health is a very significant priority for this Executive. Not only that, but the Minister of Health will have more money at his disposal in the next three years than any of his predecessors have ever had.

Mr Poots: Where is he?

Mr P Robinson: I hope that he is using the allocations to good effect and opening new health provisions around the Province. I recognise that we cannot have all the Ministers here at all times; however, it would show some solidarity with the Executive as a whole if each Minister could be here at some point.

As far as health is concerned, I also want to point out that not only does the Minister of Health have the highest health budget ever in Northern Ireland, he also has the largest-ever percentage of the Northern Ireland block for his Department. That indicates the priority that we have given to health.

There is no question that, with Health as with every other Department, the ambition of the Minister outstrips the resources available. During the course of the next three years, at in-year monitoring rounds and whenever any other money may be freed up through the work of the two new units that we have established, we will obviously look at the pressures that every Department faces.

As far as children and young people are concerned, the previous Administration had the Secretary of State set up a fund that particularly identified children and young people and allocated money to them.

This Executive's decision — and I believe it was the right one — was that along with the establishment of funds from the centre goes a duplication of bureaucracy. That simply wastes money; therefore, it was felt that the best people to deal with those issues were the Ministers in the appropriate Departments. OFMDFM has a particular function in relation to children and young people, and it will exercise that function in a co-ordinating way in putting forward policies that can be pursued. However, delivery of those policies will come from the various Departments.

The money previously set by the direct rule administration and identified particularly for children and young people was allocated as part of the overall Budget to all of the Departments; as a result, therefore, the water rose for everyone. It was then up to each Minister, particularly those who had responsibility for that matter, to determine its priority in his or her funding. Having looked at some of those rankings, I decided, in the allocation of additional money received from EYF and as a result of the Barnett consequentials, to recommend to the Executive that I put in a further £21 million pounds, specifically identified to help the Ministers in relation to children and young people. Therefore, I take the matter very seriously, and I hope that, throughout the year, I can be of even further assistance to the various Ministers in that regard.

1.45 pm

The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Durkan): I congratulate the Minister on his statement and on a very good Budget plan, in the context of what has been a very tight CSR round, not only with regard to this year's allocations but over the three-year period. I commend the Minister for what he has set out today and, through him, his Executive colleagues. It involved decisions that were not always easy, and implementing them will not be easy. All of us who are tasked on Committees must, therefore, bear that in mind over the next few years.

A week is a long time in politics. Last week, the Minister of Finance seemed to want to “club” the Minister for Social Development. Today, he joins her club, and I welcome that.

As Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, I particularly welcome the indications of the budget increases in that area over the coming years; however, again, I agree with him that we must make sure that that money is used to get real productive impact in the economy and not just extra activity at Government level.

With regard to cash releasing, in his statement, the Minister identified £790 million that will be delivered by 2010-11. Is that in addition to the £800 million that the Chancellor indicated in his package, or is it that the same £800 million? Similarly, with regard to the capital realisation task force that was announced in an earlier statement, will that be aimed at making sure that we actually get the £800 million in asset sales that was identified in the Chancellor's package, or was that about identifying extra asset sales?

Mr P Robinson: I thank the Member for Foyle for his kind comments about the Budget statement. He is right to identify that setting a programme out is one thing, and implementing it is another. It will, I hope, be the task of all Ministers and all parties to ensure that we can make good the commitments that were made in this House today.

I assure the Member that I am quite happy to be in the same club as the Minister for Social Development. In no circumstances would I want to “club” the Minister; I simply want her to operate by the same club rules as everyone else. I may return to that theme in future — to do so now would be to break the harmony of this occasion.

I assume that the Member refers to the £790 million from efficiencies. Those efficiencies have been identified by our Ministers, and not by the direct rule administration.

People will read the publication, and they will consider the fact that there will be a real terms increase of approximately 1.2%. However, if the Departments make the efficiency savings that are required, the outcome over three years will be significant. All the Ministers have proposed efficiency savings, therefore the percentage for each of the Departments, including those savings, will increase to the high teens and the low twenties, as those efficiencies will be released within the system.

There was a comment, snide or otherwise, from the Alliance Benches, that Mr O'Loan should not have thanked me for the draft Budget, considering the allocation that has been given to the Department for Social Development. Nevertheless, three Departments will receive allocations beyond the figures that are provided here. The Department for Employment and Learning and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment will receive innovation funding, which is not included in our global figures. We also hope that the Department for Social Development will receive benefits that will accrue through the Pathways to Work scheme, from the Department for Work and Pensions in the UK to our block in Northern Ireland. I hope that I am not leaking one of the great Executive secrets — if there are any left — but they made it clear that they would look favourably on directly passing those benefits to the Department for Social Development. That would have a substantial impact on its budget.

Mr O'Dowd: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I congratulate the Executive and the Minister of Finance and Personnel for bringing forward the draft Budget. I doubt whether this time last year anyone would have believed that we would be debating a draft Budget and a future Programme for Government today, but it is good to be in this position.

The draft Budget will now go out for public scrutiny and for scrutiny by Assembly Committees. Earlier in the week, I touched base with the Minister on the proposed performance and efficiency delivery unit. When will he be in a position to give us the full remit and scope of that unit? How will those “respected individuals” will be selected? What reporting mechanisms will the unit have to the Assembly?

Mr P Robinson: This morning, I met with the Chairperson and the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel. I told them that it would be worthwhile if the Committee, or its Chairperson or Deputy Chairperson, were to meet those who will be involved in the performance and efficiency delivery unit and those who will be involved in the capital realisation taskforce. Their representatives will be happy to talk to the Committee about the task ahead and about how they intend to undertake it. Ultimately, I am responsible for such issues, so I can be brought before the House or the Committee at any time.

I hope that I am wrong, but I get the impression that the Member fears the existence of a performance and efficiency delivery unit. I believe that it is overwhelmingly in the interests of everyone in the Assembly that such a unit is encouraged, that it goes about its job, and that it finds cash-releasing savings that can be pumped into front-line services. There is nothing for anyone in the Assembly to fear. Within days, we will provide the Committee for Finance and Personnel and the Executive with the remit for the performance and efficiency delivery unit. The Office of the First Minister and the deputy First Minister has issued letters to Committee members regarding the establishment of the capital realisation taskforce.

The Member has a particular interest from an audit point of view, and my Department will be happy to copy him into that correspondence. However, Members must encourage those two units to do their jobs, because they can release funds that can be used on top of the draft Budget that has been announced today.

Mr Storey: I welcome the Minister's statement and the challenge that he has issued to local government to play its part in ensuring prudence in the financial management of Northern Ireland plc. I also welcome the establishment of the capital realisation task force and the performance and efficiency delivery unit, and look forward to engaging with those units to identify further resources that can be released.

The Minister said in his statement that some progress had been made in the negotiations with the Treasury in recent months. Will the Minister tell the House how this Budget announcement compares with the Chancellor's package earlier this year?

Mr P Robinson: Comparisons with the Chancellor's package can be made in several ways. We can compare it with where we are now, and the additions that have been made to that package; or we can compare it with the past. We can compare it to packages that were brought to the table by others when they entered negotiations. If those are the criteria for comparison, then the Assembly will see that the package obtained from the Chancellor on the two occasions that we met him in Downing Street and the additions that we have now received, considerably improve our position.

None of our negotiations with the Chancellor would have resulted in a package that would have met all of our requirements, but Members will be aware that £100 million was immediately made available, £70 million of which was used to forestall the payment of water charges in this financial year. The remaining £30 million will be allocated in this year and over the next three years to innovation funding, all of which will help to stimulate Northern Ireland's economy. We were able to secure a significant change in the operation of the reinvestment and reform initiative. That has allowed me to hold rates rather than increase them by probably more than 10%, which would have been the outcome if we had not negotiated that change in the Chancellor's package.

Furthermore, we have been able to secure a significantly higher level of block grant than was offered by the Chancellor. I have already outlined those figures in my statement and do not want to go through them again. The Chancellor allowed us to use resources obtained from asset disposal, which we have taken full use of, and which amounts to about £1.1 billion of disposal already identified in the investment strategy. As the Member knows, we are not satisfied with that, and will look for more.

Several other issues arose from the overall package. The Government of the Irish Republic advanced proposals amounting to about £400 million to assist us with two particular road programmes. Those proposals are progressing, although one of them is unlikely to fall within the period of the current comprehensive spending review. However, it will begin as soon as the legal and other processes have been completed.

The Government of the Irish Republic provided funding that we will be able to use as part of our innovation initiative, and will add to that provided by the UK Government. Along with European funding, it will create an overall package that will be meaningful for the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Department for Employment and Learning.

Ms J McCann: A LeasCheann Comhairle, I thank the Minister for his statement on the draft Budget. It is a big document, which I have only glanced through, but there appears to be a significant focus on the promotion of the role of the private sector in building the economy.

Does the Minister agree that the public sector also has a vital role to play in building the economy? Can he assure the House that the much-needed front-line services that the public sector delivers — particularly to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged — will not be affected by any cuts to that sector?

2.00 pm

Mr P Robinson: The debate about the balance between the public and private sectors has been long. There will be no greater defender of the public sector than the Minister of Finance and Personnel. I have the highest regard for our Civil Service. Its officials act impartially and provide us with the best of information. Civil servants' ideas help Ministers to form their policies. I will defend our Civil Service against attacks, no matter whence they come. Civil servants are objective and thorough in their work; however, the Civil Service is at the forefront of a campaign to reform the way in which it works. The essential element of reform in this modern day is to ensure that we interface meaningfully with the public and provide information on services in the responsive manner that that public deserves.

The reform package that is coming through my Department will suggest better ways of providing information. Technology, particularly information technology, will be better utilised for storing and accessing information on accounts and other data in Northern Ireland; however, I will not go into that today in any great detail. The Department has also dealt with Workplace 2010, which is concerned with improving the conditions of the Civil Service. The implementation of a New York-style "311" system has been proposed. That would mean that anybody in Northern Ireland who wants to contact the public services will not have to go through 12 pages of the telephone directory to find out who they need to contact; they will merely need to remember and dial three digits. Staff at a centre who have been tasked and trained to deal with such queries will put the customer through to whatever public service they wish to contact. That will make communicating with the Government much simpler for people.

The reform package goes to the heart of the Executive's draft Programme for Government, which aims to achieve better interaction and communication between the Government and the public. The proposed system will further provide us with data that will inform the decisions that Ministers will take, for example, on issues such as potholes that must be filled or roads that need to be resurfaced. It will provide us with the necessary information on a series of areas of Government life. That data will come through the system so that we can better serve the public. A bigger public sector does not necessarily mean a better public sector, and it is a better public sector towards which we are working.

Mrs I Robinson: As one would expect, I welcome the statement on the draft Budget. Since the Health Committee's establishment last May, the implementation of the findings of the 'Bamford Review of Mental Health and Learning Disability (Northern Ireland)' has been identified as our top priority. There is universal agreement — not only in the Committee, but among other Assembly Members and the community — that services for people who have mental-health and learning disabilities have been seriously and gravely neglected over many years, and it is only now that the needs of those people are getting the attention that they deserve. I, therefore, wholeheartedly welcome the identification of specific resources in the Budget that will begin to address those issues over the next three years. Will the Minister assure the House that the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety will be able to retain any efficiency savings that it identifies to further robustly tackle this issue over the coming years?

Mr P Robinson: I have already described the significant portion of the Budget that will be allocated to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and, therefore, will not repeat it. However, one must recognise that people are living longer, their expectations are rising, and new drugs are coming on to the market. Those developments open up possibilities that previously were not considered.

There is continuing pressure on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to do more and to do it better, and I recognise the need for funding. I must hold the position that if efficiencies are made in Departments, they come back to the centre, and that relates to efficiencies beyond those that have already been identified by 3% of the Budget or 5% of administration costs.

However, I believe in incentives for Ministers — as for others. I would have thought that if a Minister were to come to the Executive after identifying further efficiencies, he or she would be in a strong position to argue with colleagues that, having made those efficiencies from the existing Budget, at least part of those efficiency savings could be used to fund new programmes. That would be significant, but the Executive must allocate whatever resources are available. The Minister of Finance and Personnel cannot give an overall guarantee that a Minister could do that.

However, the Health Minister knows my mind on efficiencies. If he examines the Appleby Report, he will find that there is a significant fall in productivity among healthcare staff in Northern Ireland, as opposed to that in England, Scotland and Wales. If we could get ourselves up to the same level of productivity as that in GB, that, in itself, would generate substantial savings in the region of £150 million to £200 million.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Mr B McCrea: There are several measures that I welcome. I welcome the attention on the economy as the number one driver for the Executive. Further — and I have already notified my interest on industrial derating — I welcome the fact that the Executive and the Assembly have listened to the plight of the manufacturing industry, and that more will be done.

I turn to the fundamental point — and I am interested in what the Minister will have to say: if we are experiencing lower levels of employment along with lower productivity, in essence, we are working harder for less. If, as the draft Budget states, the problem is not really the size of the public sector, but the comparatively smaller size of the private sector, where will we find the people to create that step change in our economy?

Given that the Minister is the champion for the public sector — as he has just said — and that the premium of 18% for pay rates is the highest in the United Kingdom, how will he convince people to leave the security of the public sector to go to work in the private sector? That must happen in order to generate the wealth that we require to provide for all the people of Northern Ireland.

Mr P Robinson: I thank the Member for his remarks, particularly those about growing the economy, his agreement with that as the prime objective, and his remarks about industrial derating. I have asked my officials to examine a series of options on industrial derating.

The Assembly, in its pre-devolution mode, sought to have industrial rates for manufacturing pegged at 25%. I asked for several options, including whether industrial rates could be reduced to 25%, or whether they could be reduced to zero. Neither of those options was legally allowable because of EU state-aid rules. Industrial derating is rather a blunt instrument to give some assistance to the private sector. However, as I have said to colleagues on several occasions, it is the only instrument that we have. Therefore, it is right for us to use it, and to use it to the best extent that we can, within the law.

The Member's remarks about the public and private sectors allow for only one logical conclusion — and I hope that he will take note of the danger — which is that public-sector pay must be reduced. The Government have no control over private-sector wage levels. However, the public sector is tied up by wage agreements that are largely dictated by the Treasury, which identifies pay policy as a macroeconomic variable that it wants to control. Therefore, public-sector pay policy is outside the remit of the Assembly. We could take such decisions, but we would be punished if those decisions caused any repercussive effects.

To address the disparity highlighted by the Member, if the public sector is the only sector that we can control, we must encourage the private sector as best we can. The conditions that the Member described, in which there are fewer people to do the jobs, will result in increased wages. Where are those people to be found? It is a step process.

People with university degrees, who currently have low-value-added jobs, could be doing much more productive work that would repay society for its investment in their education. However, those people are stuck in low-value jobs, such as those found in call centres. A healthy private-sector economy would enable such people to move into higher-value jobs.

We must also help those who could be working to get out of economic inactivity. DEL and DETI are considering schemes to help such people. Those are the areas in which the private sector will find the people that it requires.

Other people will come into our society from outside Northern Ireland. They should be considered as adding to the overall wealth, productivity and prosperity of Northern Ireland rather than being seen as coming to take our jobs. The current generation is experiencing the highest ever levels of employment in Northern Ireland, which has the lowest level of unemployment of any part of the United Kingdom. That is a good base from which to move forward to the next stage.

Mr Speaker: That ends questions to the Minister of Finance and Personnel on his Budget statement.

Mr Durkan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. When you were absent, I consulted with the Chair about making this point of order.

During the Minister's statement, and in several questions, pointed references were made to me and to the supposed role of the previous Executive. People have a right of reply if they are criticised or challenged and in my question to the Minister of Finance and Personnel, I did not seek to use that right of reply.

Ms Anderson spoke about the “Durkan tax” and suggested that rate increases came from the borrowing power negotiated under the reinvestment and reform initiative. First, the reinvestment and reform initiative was agreed by the entire Executive. Secondly, at no point did that Executive agree, impose or even propose a rates increase —

Mr Speaker: I have given the Member some latitude. That is not an appropriate point of order. The Member may be about to raise a point of order about a right of reply. He does not have a right of reply on that issue.

Mr Durkan: When can I exercise my right of reply? The Deputy Speaker told me to do so at the end of the debate on the Minister’s statement.

Mr Speaker: The Member’s comments have been noted. However, he does not have a right of reply on that issue.

Mr Durkan: Do I not have a right of reply?

Mr Speaker: That is exactly what I am saying.

Mr Durkan: Does no one have a right of reply any more?

Mr Speaker: The Member has been around this House for a long time — and for a longer time around another House. He knows that the issue that was raised is not serious enough to warrant a point of order and a reply.

Mr Durkan: In another House, if a Member is named, or where it is clear that a Member is being personally identified, he or she has a right of reply.

Mr Speaker: The Member should read page 32 of the Northern Ireland Assembly Companion, because the answer is there.

2.15 pm

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister of the Environment that she wishes to make a statement on the judicial review of Planning Policy Statement 14.

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): I am making this statement, with the agreement of the Minister for Regional Development, to advise the Assembly that, from today, my Department is assuming responsibility for rural planning policy, as set out in draft Planning Policy Statement 14 entitled ‘Sustainable Development in the Countryside’ and commonly known as draft PPS 14. I will lead cross-departmental work to review draft PPS 14 and develop new policies.

The review will be focused and short in timescale. Until then, the Planning Service cannot operate in a policy vacuum, and speculative development is still a real threat to our countryside.

The extent of that threat is demonstrated by the fact that approximately 4,500 applications under draft PPS 14 were received between 16 March 2006 and early September 2007. Following the initial judgement given by Mr Justice Gillen on 7 September 2007, a further 1,900 applications for single dwellings in the countryside were received. Most of those were in the Omagh planning division, which covers Fermanagh, where almost 1,200 applications were received by the end of September. Therefore, I consider it prudent to reissue the policy provisions of draft PPS 14 today and to continue to apply them to planning applications received after 16 March 2006 until a review has been completed and new policies have been developed. I will publish a new draft PPS 14 within six months, and that will be followed by a period of consultation.

My statement today is an expression of my Department’s policy made under the powers conferred by article 3 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991. It is the duty of planning decision-makers to regard relevant statements of planning policy as legally material considerations, and this is such a statement.

Draft PPS 14 was published on 16 March 2006 by the Department for Regional Development. It was accompanied by a ministerial statement by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland with responsibility for the Department for Regional Development, Sean Woodward, which advised that the provisions of draft PPS 14 took immediate precedence over existing rural planning policies and should, therefore, be accorded substantial weight in the determination of planning applications received after 16 March 2006.

The planning policies contained in draft PPS 14 were introduced to address the significant development pressure affecting rural Northern Ireland. Sean Woodward concluded that, in the public interest, action designed to minimise irreversible environmental damage could not be delayed, and, through his statement, he sought to address substantial concerns that the policy direction of draft PPS 14 could be seriously frustrated by a large influx of planning applications.

The introduction of draft PPS 14 provoked a widespread debate about rural planning and more than 8,500 responses were received in the public consultation. A judicial review challenging draft PPS 14 was subsequently lodged. In his judgement of 7 September 2007, Mr Justice Gillen concluded that the Department for Regional Development did not have the statutory power to prepare and issue draft PPS 14.

In light of the court judgement, which was finalised today, I am issuing this statement to advise that, from today, my Department is assuming responsibility for PPS 14 and its ongoing review.

Before the restoration of devolution, all parties on the Preparation for Government Committee agreed that draft PPS 14 should be subjected to a fundamental review and new policies developed. The Minister for Regional Development's proposal to establish an Executive subcommittee to review rural planning was agreed by the Executive in July. The Minister started the review process by meeting a range of stakeholders and, with his agreement, I have taken over as Chairperson of the subcommittee.

Conor Murphy will continue to be involved in that Committee, along with other Ministers who have a policy interest in rural planning.

In taking forward this review, my Executive colleagues and I wish to develop a policy based on the principles of sustainability that strikes a balance between the need to protect the countryside from unnecessary development and supporting rural communities so that they can flourish both socially and economically.

It is my intention, prior to publishing the final rural planning policy document, that there will be an opportunity for all those with an interest in this matter to make their views known through a further public consultation exercise.

In assuming responsibility for PPS 14, I am conscious of the large numbers of people who responded to the public consultation last year, and of the variety of views that were expressed. However, the policy review process remains incomplete, and, in the meantime, there continues to be evidence of a significant threat to the rural environment from development. Therefore, there is still good reason to proceed as previously with a precautionary approach, pending the completion of the review process.

Taking all those matters into consideration, I have decided — in the public interest, and as a short-term interim measure — to today reissue the policy provisions of draft PPS 14 under the powers conferred by article 3 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991. Furthermore, I consider that those policy provisions should continue to take precedence over the existing policies of 'A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland' — which are listed in an annex to my statement, copies of which have been posted in Members' pigeonholes — and should be accorded substantial weight in the determination of any planning application received after 16 March 2006.

In taking this course of action, my officials have carefully reviewed and considered all the steps and procedures followed by DRD in the preparation and publication of draft PPS 14. In addition, I am aware that in the judicial review, there was no challenge of any kind to the substance or the merits of draft PPS 14. I am also conscious that the due process and procedural challenges that were made were all dismissed by the court.

Finally, I note that Mr Justice Gillen, in his judgement of 7 September 2007, observed that:

"had PPS 14 been issued by the DOE the contents might well have been unobjectionable."

The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment (Mr McGlone): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her statement, a copy of which I have received.

Draft PPS 14 has been judged to have been unlawful. A number of cases that fell specifically under the remit of draft PPS 14's farm viability, farm retirement, replacement, and/or infill categories were subsequently refused. As we have found out today, that refusal was based on an illegality. The Minister stated that she considered it:

"prudent to reissue the policy provisions of draft PPS 14 today and to continue to apply them to planning applications received after 16 March 2006".

What advice has the Minister sought regarding the retrospective application of a policy in the context of today's decision? There are numerous people who, having had applications refused under a policy now deemed to be illegal, have justifiable and fair grounds to seek to have those cases reviewed.

I realise that the Minister's first meeting as Chairperson of the Executive subcommittee will in fact be the first meeting of that subcommittee. Will the Minister give an assurance that diligence and some refreshing new enthusiasm will be given to the application and the pursuit of developing a rural planning policy for a rural society? Will the Minister also give some indication as to the timescales that she has in mind for that?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Chairman for his comments. He knows that I approach everything with enthusiasm, and we will be doing so in the subcommittee as well. I pay tribute to the work of the subcommittee to date. There has been a lot of work carried out with stakeholders, and I know that that will continue.

I have already said that I want the review to be focused and time limited. I take the view that we should have a draft policy ready in six months' time. Therefore, what I have announced today is an interim short-term measure which — from a Planning Service and an environmental point of view — is a necessary measure. I am sure that the Chairman will agree with that.

I have taken legal advice in respect of the Member's first point about the legality of decisions that were taken between 16 March and 7 September. The judicial review litigation included no challenge of any kind to the substance or merits of draft PPS 14. All due processes and procedural challenges that were raised on behalf of the applicant for judicial review were dismissed by the court. Bearing that in mind, cases decided during that time under draft PPS 14 will stand.

The judgement that was handed down today by Mr Justice Gillen was a continuation of his judgement of 7 September. He has added a number of paragraphs and, in those, he seeks to distinguish between declaratory relief, which is what he has granted today, and an order quashing draft PPS 14. He explained why, in the public interest, he decided not to make an order quashing draft PPS 14. Much work had been carried out by the Department for Regional Development. Mr Justice Gillen considered all the work that went into drafting PPS 14 and its four-year gestation period. He stated very clearly that that still stands.

Mr Weir: I thank the Minister for her statement, and for the speed with which it has been brought to the House, given that the final judgement on draft PPS 14 was delivered only this morning. In view of the planning and legal mess in which we have been left by direct rule Ministers, people will realise that the interim measure that was announced today is the only feasible option that was open to the Minister, and that that measure will help in getting things right in the long term.

My question follows on from that asked by the Chairperson of the Environment Committee. How will the Planning Service deal with fresh applications in cases where the Planning Appeals Commission has turned down an application on the grounds of draft PPS 14?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his comments. Final judgement was made today, but the Department had a clear view as to where the matter was going because we received 74 paragraphs of the judgement in September.

As for the Planning Appeals Commission, the Planning Service can decline to consider a repeat application if the original one was refused and, within the previous two years, was also turned down by the Planning Appeals Commission. However, that is a discretionary power, and I will be directing the Planning Service to exercise discretion and accept fresh applications. Therefore, if an application has been turned down by the Planning Appeals Commission in the past two years, I will direct Planning Service to reconsider any new application for that site.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her statement. She is aware that, before the restoration of devolution, parties now represented on the Committee for the Environment reached a consensus on rural planning and rejected draft PPS 14. I hope that Members' remarks reflect that.

Sinn Féin has completely rejected draft PPS 14, and responded to it in a document of June 2006. As a matter of priority, will the Minister outline her immediate plans for dealing with this issue, not only in the forthcoming review, but in the development of a new policy? When will the Executive subcommittee meet? Are resources in place to ensure that a proper planning policy for sustainable rural communities is developed?

Mrs Foster: I am well aware of the difficulties of all the political parties with draft PPS 14; the Member's party is no exception to that.

2.30 pm

It may be helpful to set out the list of policies that the Executive have asked the subcommittee to consider during its review. Those include whether we should have a localised policy; farm viability, which was mentioned by the Chairperson of the Environment Committee; the role that replacement dwellings should have in a new policy; the role that social and affordable housing will have in a new policy; farm clusters; whether environmentally friendly housing should be addressed by a new policy; health and personal circumstances; and economic development. Moreover, the issue of kinship has been raised several times. We are considering that and whether we should continue with the language of presumption in favour of, or against, a development.

The subcommittee is examining those issues, and much good work has been done. It is not the case that the subcommittee has not been working, and we will continue in partnership to make a policy of which everyone in the Chamber may have ownership. Part of the difficulty with draft PPS 14 was that no one felt any ownership of it, and people, therefore, felt that they could attack it.

We must take into consideration the environmental impact and those who live in the countryside, bearing in mind what we can do for them on a social and economic basis. Furthermore, we must be aware of our environment and, this morning, that was referred to as one of the key strategic aims of the draft Programme for Government. We would do well to recognise the importance of the environment from the perspective of both the natural and built heritages, and I will give cognisance to that in any new draft PPS 14.

Mr Gardiner: I thank the Minister for bringing her long-awaited statement to the House. There has been great confusion in the Planning Service, particularly in relation to applicants. Will the Minister ensure that a revised rural-planning policy takes account of the needs of the rural economy, the social cohesion of rural communities, and a sustainable rural environment? Following the court ruling, will the Minister also consider refunding those people who were turned down by PPS 14, or will the Department of the Environment write to all the refused applicants and ask them to resubmit their applications for further consideration?

Mrs Foster: I addressed the first issue in my last question when I said that I will look at economic development in the countryside and environmentally friendly housing. Sustainability must be at the heart of a new planning policy to be endorsed by the Assembly. Undoubtedly, any such policy will cause great debate in the Assembly in the near future.

The honourable gentleman has raised the issue of fees before. I have no provision in law to waive the fees of those who made applications between 16 March 2006 and 7 September 2007. The cost of processing their applications is unrecoverable and has already been used. Those people may reapply in relation to their site; however, they may wish to reapply after the new draft PPS 14 is in place, rather than under the current draft.

Those people who have submitted applications since 7 September, of which there are a considerable number, will have the option to withdraw their applications, and will be offered refunds. The Department is taking that exceptional measure in unusual circumstances. There was a hiatus between the first and final judgements, during which many people rushed to submit applications as they thought that PPS 14 had ended. In such exceptional circumstances, it is fair that they should be given the opportunity to withdraw their applications and wait. The measure is exceptional, and planning officers will write to all those concerned to ask them whether they want to withdraw their application.

Mr Ford: On behalf of my party, I thank the Minister for the content of her statement, particularly the recognition of the necessity of the precautionary approach at this stage, and her recognition of the courts' decision that there is nothing fundamentally wrong with PPS 14.

I want to correct a minor mistake that the Minister made when she said that prior to the restoration of devolution, parties on the Preparation for Government Committee agreed on the need for fundamental review. She will find that it was the four parties that were on the Programme for Government Committee that agreed on that; the fifth party, which was excluded from that Committee, most certainly did not agree.

First, given the current pressures on the Planning Service, particularly with regard to staffing, can the Minister tell the House what implications the decision will have on other planning policy statements that are currently the responsibility of the Department for Regional Development rather than the Department of the Environment? Secondly, what resources will be transferred as a result of today's statement? Lastly, what further resources may be needed in order to ensure that those other planning policy statements can also be dealt with properly?

Mrs Foster: The Member is absolutely right: that was, of course, a mistake — I should have said “the Programme for Government Committee”. I recognise his party's view on the matter. I hope that my statement reflects all the views of all parties in the Chamber.

My Department is currently in discussion with DRD about which of the other planning policy statements that remain with it at present should be transferred and which resource allocations should follow them. Obviously, the regional development strategy will remain with DRD. However, the Departments are actively discussing what should happen to the other planning policy statements.

Mr I McCrea: I thank the Minister for her statement. It is about time that the policy found its way home to the Department of the Environment, which is where it should have been in the first place.

I am concerned at the number of applications that have been lodged since 7 September 2007, and I welcome the Minister's announcement that those applicants will have the right to withdraw them and that refunds will be given. Given the Minister's legal background, can she outline for the House exactly what the judgement means for planning, particularly with regard to PPS 14?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question — I think. [Laughter.]

As the Member will be aware, and as Mr Ford has already mentioned, there was no challenge during the judicial review litigation to the substance and merits of draft PPS 14. The court dismissed all due process and procedural challenges that were raised. The judge has in effect concluded that the Department for Regional Development did not have the statutory authority to promote draft PPS 14, and that only the Department of the Environment has that power under article 3 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991. In fact, the judge said that had DOE issued draft PPS 14, it may have been unobjectionable. Essentially, the judge is saying that the DOE should have issued draft PPS 14 in the first place, if that was what it was minded to do.

I do not wish to pass the buck to Mr Justice Gillen. However, it would be helpful to tell the House what he said in court, because it makes a distinction between the effect of declaratory and certiorari relief. He said that the former is:

“a formal statement by the court pronouncing upon the existence or non-existence of a legal state of affairs. It is not capable of being coercively enforced. It states the existing legal position and opens the way to the use of other remedies for giving effect to it, if that should be necessary. It is particularly appropriate where it is undesirable for a decision to be rendered a nullity for all purposes.”

In other words, the judge said that draft PPS 14 was not null and void but that it is now being declared illegal.

In contrast, certiorari is a quashing order in the sense that it destroys the legal validity of the action that is quashed by the order. The remedy given by Mr Justice Gillen was a declaratory order that states that draft PPS 14 is illegal for the reason — and for no other reason — that it was made by the wrong Department.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her statement. Given the fact that draft PPS 14 lacked public input and was so contentious, what format will the public consultation on the new PPS 14 take? How comprehensive will that exercise be?

Mrs Foster: Part of the difficulty was that there was no devolved Government at that time, and no input from locally elected Members who knew Northern Ireland's countryside and how it works. In that respect, the situation has been remedied, and the subcommittee has already spoken to stakeholders. We will take that work forward and I hope that in six months' time, we will be able to publish our new draft PPS 14 for consultation. I have no doubt that it will reflect the views of the Chamber given that the Ministers involved are broadly reflective of the Chamber.

Lord Morrow: I, too, welcome the statement because it brings closure to an unsatisfactory situation that has been ongoing for some time. I also note in the Minister's statement that she felt it worthwhile to bring to our attention that 1,900 planning applications for single dwellings in the countryside have been received. Furthermore, she said that most were for dwellings in the Omagh planning division, and that almost 1,200 had been received for dwellings in Fermanagh by the end of September. What significance does the Minister draw from those figures? In addition, will she tell the House that she will be assuming responsibility for all planning policy statements as of now? Will she also tell the House whether that is a tidying-up exercise? Will she tell us that her Department will deliver on all planning policy statements — something that the direct rule Minister with responsibility for planning, but who seldom got anything right, could not do?

Mrs Foster: The Member has highlighted one of the reasons why it is important to stop the confusion that the general public feels about the status of draft PPS 14. I am sure that many Members will agree that there have been wild rumours circulating about there being an opportunity to submit planning applications that would not be judged under any rural planning policy — that it would be, basically, a free-for-all. I was determined that that would not be the case.

The judgement was given on 7 September 2007. As the action was brought by a council in the west of the Province, it is no coincidence that many planning applications are sitting in the planning office in that division. The applicants will be written to and will be given the opportunity to withdraw their applications at no cost to themselves. They will be able to get a full refund, and each of them should consider the matter carefully.

I have indicated that there is ongoing discussion about my Department taking responsibility for all planning policy statements, and we will have to come to a decision quickly. My Department will also have to be given the resources to undertake that function. The regional development strategy will remain with the Department for Regional Development. However, there is a need to bring clarity as regards the other planning policy statements.

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Minister for making her statement to the House. What is the position regarding those planning applications that were refused under, what might be described as the original PPS 14? Potentially, those applications were subject to appeal. Will the Minister and her Department consider allowing people who were refused planning permission under the original PPS 14 a concessionary fee when re-submitting an application when a new planning policy has been established?

Mrs Foster: The planning applications that were determined during the period 16 March 2006 to 7 September 2007 were determined under the policy that pertained at that time. The application fee has been expended as far as the Planning Service is concerned.

If the Member is asking me whether people will be able to lodge fresh planning applications and whether they will be dealt with as if the site were blighted, the answer is that the site will not be blighted under the old policy. We will look at the prevailing policy at the time of the determination — that is the new policy that will be in effect when the new applications are lodged.

2.45 pm

The Member mentioned the possibility of a reduction in fees. Some Members believe that I do not charge enough for planning applications and that the fees should be increased. I have no facility to ask for a lesser fee if a decision has already been determined under draft PPS 14.

Mr Gallagher: I welcome the fact that the Minister has made a statement on PPS 14, but I have some criticisms of the content of the statement. Most Members will know that, for people in rural areas, one day of PPS 14 is one day too many. Although I have some sympathy for the Minister's position, she has told us that PPS 14 will, in effect, be extended for another six months, after which there will be a consultation period — that could mean an extension of nine months, in total. Moreover, the legislative stage will follow the consultation period, and that could take a further nine months. Thus, the time frame will be longer than has been portrayed in the statement.

I ask the Minister to reconsider this matter. How long will the consultation period be? It does not have to be three months. Reference has been made to the report of the Committee on the Preparation for Government, which will help to shorten that process and ease the waiting period for so many.

The Minister also mentioned the earlier consultation period and the variety of views that were expressed. Can the Minister clarify some of those views? As I understand it, the majority of views expressed were very clearly opposed to draft PPS 14, and I would like some confirmation of that.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his comments — I think. I thank him for his initial comments, at any rate.

I want to explain the matter to the Member. I have already said that the review of draft PPS 14 will be focused and time-limited. The new policy will go out for consultation in six months' time, and, at that stage, the new policy will become draft PPS 14. The current PPS 14 will then fall. The Member is right; the new draft PPS 14 will go out to consultation, and it will be confirmed. I hope that the Member appreciates that I am trying to make the timescale as short as possible. I think that he will agree that we have to get the policy right this time.

Some of the issues involved are very complex, and it is important that we take on board the views that will be expressed by the Executive subcommittee and other stakeholders. The decisions that we hope to put before the people in six months' time will have far-reaching consequences for the environment, rural people and anyone with an interest in the future of the countryside. Although I want the review to be focused and time-limited, I am aware that we must get on with the job and ensure that the policy that goes out to consultation is the right one.

Like myself, Mr Gallagher is from a rural background, so I know exactly where he is coming from. However, a variety of views have been expressed, many of which have been aired in the Chamber today. Concerns have been raised about environmental issues and, as Minister of the Environment, I must take all those views into account. Each view will be given its due weight and will be considered by the Executive subcommittee. Indeed, I am sure that many Members will also put their views to me.

Mr Buchanan: I am glad that PPS 14 now falls within the remit of the Department of the Environment — the Department that should have responsibility for it. I am glad that the matter has been cleared up. I thank the Minister for bringing this statement to the House so swiftly.

I ask the Minister to clarify whether the new policy will allow for any flexibility in respect of vernacular buildings. That issue is currently causing a conflict between the Housing Executive and the Planning Service.

Also, will any clear guidance be given to Planning Service divisions regarding applications of that nature that are already in the system?

Mrs Foster: I will answer the Member's last point first. If there are applications in the system that come before councils prior to the new policy's being implemented, I will allow councils to defer them until it is implemented. That includes vernacular buildings, which are part of the subcommittee's discussions and have been mentioned to me by a wide range of councillors and MLAs from rural areas. That will form part of our deliberations. At present, the role of vernacular buildings in the countryside is — as the Member rightly said — covered by draft PPS 14 and is within the ambit of the review. The Department will continue to discuss the matter with stakeholders and interested Members.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Given her rural background, the Minister will be well aware that she carries the rural community's hope that the unlawful draft PPS 14 will be succeeded by a policy that is more sympathetic to them. Draft PPS 14 has had a hugely negative impact on rural communities. Will the Minister take full account of the rural stakeholder consultation events that have already taken place in the Ballinascreen and Draperstown area and in county Armagh? Those events were hosted by the Minister for Regional Development, Conor Murphy, and I hope that the Minister takes full account of what was said at them.

Will the Minister begin to look at a policy that gives some advantage to family members — the "kinship clause" that has been referred to? Personal circumstances are also a big issue. I am thinking about specific families where one family member has a major health requirement; they are very worried and want the Planning Service to adopt a more sympathetic attitude.

Finally, there are many applications that were submitted to the Planning Service before March 2006 but returned to the applicant because of minor errors in the application — for example, the misspelling of a townland name. When those applications re-entered the system after 16 March 2006, they were subject to the rules of draft PPS 14. Will the Minister consider revisiting those applications, which were submitted before 16 March 2006 but validated after that date?

Mrs Foster: The Department will take all the rural stakeholder events, and the issues that emerged from them, into account. As I said, Conor Murphy will continue to sit on the subcommittee, as will the Members who have been sitting on his subcommittee. I have already met the GAA — a body close to the Member's heart — to discuss draft PPS 14.

The Member also mentions health, personal circumstances and kinship, which are matters that are being addressed, and will continue to be addressed, by the subcommittee. The Member made a specific point about applications validated after 16 March 2006 — there were a number of such applications in the Omagh area, and in other areas. Any planning application that was not validated before that date was treated under draft PPS 14. There is nothing that I can do about that because the date was set by the previous Administration.

Mr Shannon: I thank the Minister for her response; she has taken the policy out of no-man's-land and into her Department. With no disrespect to anyone else in the Chamber, she has made sure that draft PPS 14 will be reviewed and new policies developed by her Department, which is good news. Does the Minister agree that PPS 14 has been draconian and discriminatory, and the quicker that it is replaced the better?

Out of the 8,500 responses that the Minister said that the Department received to the public consultation, can she tell the Assembly how many were opposed to draft PPS 14? I understand that a vast number of people were against it. Is the Minister carrying out a review of all draft PPS 14 regulations as part of the review, or just the operation of draft PPS 14 in the first six months?

The consultation that the Minister is establishing will include local councils. Sometimes, local councils need to be reassured. Can the Minister assure us that, when the consultation documents are sent to the local councils, and they reply, their viewpoints will be taken on board and that the consultation process will not be the subject of mere lip service?

Mrs Foster: The Member probably asked about 10 questions, but that is no surprise. First, DRD would not like to be characterised as no-man's-land, but I am sure that the Minister for Regional Development will take that up himself on some occasion.

The Member is right to state that a higher number of consultees complained about draft PPS 14 from the point of view of not being able to develop in the countryside, than from an environmental perspective.

However, I want to get away from the divisive argument that if someone is pro-development, they are anti-environment, and vice versa. The Department wants a policy that everyone in the countryside can buy into. It is divisive to get stuck on terms such as “pro-environment” and “anti-developer”. I do not want to engage in the use of those types of terms when introducing any new policy.

The Member is a councillor, and he knows that I have been working closely with local government in another area — the review of public administration — and we have been working well in partnership. Any time local government brings me an issue, I seek to address it, and I will do the same in respect of consultation on planning policy.

Mr Wells: I welcome the Minister's statement. Did the Minister see the pain on the face of the Minister for Regional Development at having responsibility for rural planning policy torn from his bosom and brought to the Department of the Environment? Can she see his angst at the prospect of other contentious planning policy statements being torn from his Department and taken to the DOE? Perhaps that is not as evident as some Members might suspect.

On a more serious note, I welcome that development, and I refer to three written answers that the Minister has given me in recent weeks, which graphically illustrate the difficulties that her Department faces in dealing with that policy. First, in the year leading up to the introduction of draft PPS 14, 15,000 applications for single dwellings were lodged at divisional planning offices in Northern Ireland. No one will convince me that all 15,000 of those were deserving cases; there must have been a large element of speculation among those.

Secondly, since 7 September, when Mr Justice Gillen made his initial judgement, there have been 1,900 applications for single dwellings on the mere hint that draft PPS 14 may collapse.

Thirdly, in a written answer to me, the Minister stated that the Planning Service is short of 72 members of staff. Does she agree that any decision other than the one that she made today would have opened the floodgates and put the Planning Service under the most enormous pressure, which, given those statistics, would have been impossible to sustain.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his comments. I will not make any comment on the state of mind of the Minister for Regional Development about the policy passing to DOE; I will let him do that himself during his next ministerial statement or at Question Time.

The Member well knows, along with the rest of the House, that there are considerable pressures on the Planning Service. That is something that the Programme for Government seeks to address, and, hopefully, those pressures can be relieved soon. However, that is not the main reason for my statement; rather it is to protect the environment in Northern Ireland and to ensure that the speculative development to which the Member referred does not take place, and that there is no window of opportunity for people to do whatever they like.

3.00 pm

It is vital to have a balance, and that will be achieved in six months' time. The difficulties of the Planning Service were secondary to what I was charged to do in my ministerial role.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

IVF Fertility Waiting Lists

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one and a half hours for the next debate. The proposer of the motion has 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for the winding-up speech. All other Members are allowed five minutes to speak. One amendment has been received and published on the Marshalled List. The proposer of the amendment will have 10 minutes to propose and five minutes for the winding-up speech.

Mr Attwood: I beg to move

That this Assembly calls for a review of the policy on IVF fertility waiting lists, including urgent consideration of the introduction of age-weighting criteria.

I thank those who agreed to the motion's being debated in the House. I give particular thanks to the British Medical Association (BMA), the researchers in this Building and the Infertility Network UK for their briefings.

I must walk gently when talking about IVF, because I walk on the hopes and disappointments of many families in this part of the world. At the start of the debate, it is important to record that, prior to 2001, there was no publicly funded fertility treatment in Britain or Northern Ireland. Therefore, the situation is much better now than in the latter years of the twentieth century. In the past year, changes to the criteria governing treatment mean that women up to the age of 40 can now receive treatment.

When the policy was changed a year ago, the Department stated that it would request that:

"Boards monitor referrals and waiting times for treatments over the next 12 months. This will facilitate assessment of the demand for services and the capacity of the RFC to meet that demand."

I met the Minister in September to urge that his Department conduct that review. Earlier this month, he replied that he would ask the boards to review the impact of the new criteria for access to publicly funded fertility services and specifically report on referrals, patient activity and waiting times. Although I welcome that commitment, I urge the Minister to instruct his Department to conduct a fully fledged review into all matters arising from access to fertility services in the North, rather than leaving it to the boards. Whether the review is conducted by the Department or the boards, several matters must be addressed, and I ask the Minister to comment on them during the course of the debate.

The National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) recommends that couples receive three cycles of IVF treatment. However, in September 2007, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in Northern Ireland issued guidance that offered only one cycle. Therefore, I ask the Minister to confirm whether he and his Department will work to achieve the NICE recommendation of three cycles. In July 2007, the Department of Health in England sent a note to primary care trusts advising that they work to a three-cycle treatment programme. Has the Minister's Department issued any similar advice here? The clinical evidence is that one cycle of treatment is often a trial run and that the second and subsequent treatment cycles are those that may deliver success.

I ask the Minister to explain what is meant by a cycle of treatment. When a woman's eggs are being harvested, additional valid eggs are often stored for potential use.

There is a view that, in addition to a first implantation of an egg or eggs, a cycle of treatment should enable subsequent implantation of a further egg or eggs, given that they are in a valid state, where there is as a consequence limited cost to the Department's budget as the subsequent treatments have reduced drug requirements. I ask the Minister to confirm whether the review, however it is constructed, will address that matter.

I also ask the Minister to confirm whether the review will deal with the issue of waiting lists generally. As of May, there were 27 patients in Northern Ireland who had been waiting for more than 24 months; 48 patients who had been waiting for between 18 and 24 months; and 63 patients who had been waiting for between 12 and 18 months. There is some guidance in England that there should be an 18-week waiting time for all medical interventions. Can the Minister confirm whether the review will address the length of waiting lists? Will it address the issue of an 18-week limit on waiting lists and, if not, will resources and capacity be built up to enable women who have been waiting for many more than 18 weeks for treatment to have it in much less than 18 or 24 months?

In September 2006, the Department confirmed that an additional £50,000 per annum would be allocated towards the enhancement of existing counselling services, with the requirement that access to the services be equitable across Northern Ireland. Some people who have knowledge of these matters advise me that that money may not have been spent. In any case, the intention behind building up money for counselling services to provide better services across Northern Ireland, and in particular in the north-west, has not been fulfilled, and is not fulfilled by having a counselling outreach facility in Cookstown.

My interest in this issue was prompted by a couple who came to me anxious that the woman in the relationship was approaching the age of 40 and would, therefore, be "discharged", as hospital people say, from the medical regional waiting list. It so happens that, in the past two weeks, she has passed 40 and been discharged, when she was around tenth on a waiting list of 500. I have the authority to refer to those people's circumstances in this debate. I have to say to the Minister, to the Department and to the House that that situation should not have arisen.

It seems to me that, during the stewardship of the current Minister and that of the previous, direct rule Minister, Paul Goggins, this issue was not properly addressed. Why do I say that? If the criteria were changed in September 2006 to enable women to get treatment up to the age of 40, when the previous limit was 38, it should have been anticipated that there would be a spike of people going on the waiting list who may have been over the age of 38, in advance of their turning 40. In those circumstances, it seems to me that the Department should have legislated to legally and properly accommodate those couples and those women. However, in correspondence to me, the Department maintains that:

"a process that awarded priority to any particular group of women would have a negative impact on others awaiting treatment and would seriously compromise the ability to ensure that the population have equitable access to specialised fertility services."

I agree with that. Of course, if you treat older women approaching the age of 40 before they fall off the list and ahead of any other age category, it has a negative impact on younger women, because they have to wait longer. However, the test is not about what the negative impact on younger women is; the test should be whether that impact is disproportionate compared with the impact on the older women who get treatment.

I have said to the Minister that earlier treatment of a woman because of her age, and who is, therefore, disadvantaged, does not have a disproportionate impact upon the treatment of a younger woman. If the older woman does not receive treatment, she will never receive it. Over recent months, I have put that issue to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, but there has been no concurrence.

I urged the Department to run a computer programme whereby all details and profiles of the women on the waiting list could be compared to determine whether there was indeed a disproportionate impact upon younger women. As far as I know, that simple exercise has not been conducted.

Moreover, I outlined a series of measures by which, legally and properly, women who approach the age of 40 could have treatment without significant disadvantage to women of any other age group. None of those proposals was accepted by the Department.

I urge Members to support the motion and encourage the Minister to introduce legal and proper mechanisms to ensure that the example of a couple who, two weeks ago, lost out on IVF treatment, is not duplicated in other parts of the North.

Mrs M O'Neill: I beg to move the following amendment: Leave out all after "calls" and insert

“on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to commence a comprehensive review into the current criteria used to assess eligibility, including the age weighting criteria, the ongoing problem with waiting lists, and the number of IVF treatments available on the NHS, with a view to establishing a more equitable and accessible policy.”

Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Member for bringing this very important topic to the House. The amendment has been put forward with a view to establishing a more equitable and accessible policy. It enhances the motion, and calls for a comprehensive review of the criteria currently used to assess eligibility, including age-weighting, the ongoing problems with waiting lists, and the number of IVF treatments available on the NHS. I recognise, however, that there have been recent improvements in criteria and availability.

I immediately took an interest in the motion, because friends and members of my family have been in that situation. They have made numerous hospital visits and undergone test after test. They have described the experience as an emotional rollercoaster — a journey that was, from start to finish, painful.

It took six years for one couple that I know to find the courage to visit their GP. Surely that is not acceptable. We must ensure that that is not allowed to continue. The overall impact of a couple's inability to conceive cannot be underestimated. We must be concerned about the effect on the couple's mental health and the knock-on effect on their family circle. As elected representatives, we have a duty to ensure that an adequate support service is in place to meet their needs.

3.15 pm

In 2001, my party colleague Bairbre de Brún announced her intention to consult on the future of fertility services and, thankfully, she introduced interim criteria to carry us through until the outcome of the consultation process. For the first time in the North, IVF became available as a publicly funded service.

Although those measures were not ideal, they were an improvement on the previous situation and were carried forward on the recommendation of the Regional Medical Services Consortium. They continued until 2006, when the British direct rule Minister Paul Goggins introduced revised criteria as the outcome of the process that had begun five years earlier.

The changes impacted on several areas; for example, the upper age limit for women who use their own eggs was changed from 37 years old to 39. That was a welcome improvement. Couples with dependent children who live with them are now able to access publicly funded services. That, too, must be a welcome development, because the previous criteria led to an inequitable situation that discriminated against a partner in a new relationship who had no children from a previous relationship.

Another welcome development is that couples who have been diagnosed as infertile will no longer be subject to a qualifying period before being eligible for publicly funded treatment. However, those with unexplained infertility still have to complete the three-year waiting period, and that must be disappointing for them.

As Alex mentioned, one of the main downsides of the revised measures is that couples will be offered only one cycle of publicly funded IVF treatment.

The flexibility to provide more than one cycle of treatment will depend on the demand for the service and on the funding available. We should all share that concern, as it may mean a return to the postcode lottery for those who need to access the service. If there is a high demand in a trust area, couples may suffer. We should not stand by and allow that to happen: we must nip it in the bud now. The issue must be addressed through a review.

The Infertility Alliance has broadly welcomed the new changes. However, it is deeply disappointed that the NHS will now only guarantee one cycle in contrast to the two-cycle minimum under the interim arrangements. We call on those boards that provide two cycles to resist the temptation to cut their service levels. Two or three cycles of IVF are normally regarded as the optimal treatment approach, and the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence advises providing three cycles of treatment. A senior lecturer in reproductive medicine at the University of Bristol has said that three attempts would be acceptable, as that would offer couples a 50% chance of conceiving. Surely, we must take those comments on board, and the Department must take them into account in taking forward a review.

The other area that must be addressed is support and counselling for couples who are going through the IVF process. There are many pressures on couples as they go through the process. We must ensure that sufficient resources are in place to support groups such as the Stork infertility support group, the Tiny Feet infertility support group, and the Craigavon patient support group. I am sure that those groups offer wonderful support, but we must ensure that we further develop that and identify whether new groups are required.

In conclusion, I ask the House to support the motion and amendment. In doing so, we will send a clear message to the Minister that we want a consistent, equitable and accessible service for those who need it. I have outlined some of the concerns. There is a common thread in what I have said and in what the proposer of the motion has said.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mrs O'Neill: I am nearly finished anyway. I hope that the Minister takes on board what has been said in the debate. We have an opportunity in this new Assembly to carry out a comprehensive review that reflects the needs of those who are going through this difficult process.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mrs I Robinson):

I support the amendment because it includes more detail. The matter before us is, undoubtedly, very emotive. Some complex issues must be considered. There are difficult questions about how and where precious resources ought to be directed. Fertility services occupy a particular category in the health care sector, as they do not deal with life threatening illnesses and the patients are not in pain — physically anyway. Some would question the degree to which such treatments should be freely available through public money. Undoubtedly, however, fertility services are incredibly important, and denial of such treatments can prove traumatic to the couples affected. Furthermore, we must consider how we should manage access to treatments that are considered to be expensive. We must also predict the expected level of demand in the future, and the services that we will need to deal with that.

I am always saddened when I hear about young couples who have difficulty in conceiving a baby, especially when they are unable to avail of fertilisation services due to the great expense. Raising the money to pay for IVF treatment presents a terrible dilemma for individuals, as success can never be guaranteed. Indeed, success in the first attempt at anything is always unlikely. Recent statistics indicate that the success rate for IVF is as low as 15%, with only 19% of women who embark on such treatment ever having a baby. Couples who have experienced unsuccessful attempts have the added fear that they will be deemed unsuitable for further attempts.

It is absurd that, for a long time, access to IVF treatment has been variable across the United Kingdom. Depending on where someone lived, they may have been entitled to free IVF treatment on the National Health Service, while their neighbour a few hundred yards away may have had to fund the treatment themselves. The total cost of providing IVF treatment often extends to many thousands of pounds, which puts it beyond the reach of many couples.

Recent improvements in the success rates of fertility treatments are encouraging, but a wide disparity in results remains between different clinics. The UK public ought to be able to expect more standardised fertility service outcomes. Many young couples in Northern Ireland are unable to avail of IVF treatment because of the cost. I have sympathy with the suggestion that special consideration should be given to how women at the upper end of the permissible age spectrum can be accommodated. Couples are frustrated that waiting lists and waiting times have been so long.

Reaching the stage at which treatment is eventually obtained tends to follow a number of appointments to assess suitability and carry out further investigations. Patients can feel as if they have been dragged from pillar to post, and all the while, time is moving on, and the cut-off age at which certain treatments are allowed is coming closer. A couple who contacted my constituency office described a sad catalogue of experiences. When they were referred by their general practitioner, they were comfortably within the appropriate age range for all treatments. However, long waits and cancelled appointments meant that when they were finally deemed ready to be treated, the upper age limit for the only treatment that would make a difference had been exceeded. Appointments had to be cancelled because the consultant was ill, or on holiday, and the couple missed the age deadline to receive treatment.

Imagine the resources that had been used to get that couple to that point, all to no avail. If we are to place a special emphasis on those women who reach the upper age limit for treatments, we must consider other possibly relevant criteria. For example, some might make a distinction between couples who have no children and those who seek fertility treatment having already had children. One partner in some couples may have had children in a previous relationship. I hope that the Minister will investigate the procurement practices and use of particular drugs and treatments at the regional fertility centre as part of any review that may occur. In previous years, there would appear to have been a preoccupation with particular drugs when less expensive versions were available and proven to deliver equally successful outcomes.

It is crucial that the resources directed towards fertility services are used wisely. Excessive spending for no gain only reduces the number of couples who can be treated over any given time frame. I support the amendment.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Member for West Belfast Mr Attwood for securing a debate on such an important subject. It is recognised that once people get access to IVF treatment, the vast majority of recipients are delighted with the quality of care that they receive. In 2006, Northern Ireland's fertility clinics obtained extremely high satisfaction scores, with more than 80% of recipients having had satisfactory experiences and outcomes. However, despite the excellent quality of care in fertility clinics and the sterling work of their staff, access to such a clinic is a very different matter.

Waiting lists have already been mentioned. They are far too long, and remedies must be found to ensure that all those women who require this provision can receive it. As I understand it, there seems to be a postcode lottery for IVF treatment across the UK, with wide variations in waiting times for that treatment. I use the word "treatment" deliberately, because infertility is an abnormality that can, for many, be addressed successfully. Everyone, regardless of postcode, should be entitled to receive fertility care. However, the UK is the poor relation of Europe for fertility treatment. That is why many Spanish clinics, for example, are making a good profit from treating couples from the UK, including people from Northern Ireland, who cannot get treatment at home.

Infertility is not a rare problem. As many as one Northern Irish couple in six are affected by fertility issues. What can be done to change the situation? Some people say that donors are put off by the lack of anonymity, while others point to the lack of investment in NHS clinics and the insufficient numbers of embryologists. Those are good points: supply cannot meet the current demand for treatment. Neither is it acceptable to continue the current situation, where many people are told to opt for private healthcare — a course of action that many cannot afford to pursue.

I understand that the cost of private IVF treatment in the United Kingdom can be as much as £100,000, and that is certainly beyond the reach of a lot of people. One relatively low-cost step that might be taken is a public awareness campaign to highlight the length of IVF waiting lists and to challenge the social stigma surrounding donation and infertility. With such a poor donation rate in Northern Ireland, we must look at what steps other European countries have taken to encourage donation.

I thank the Member for West Belfast Mr Attwood for raising the issue of age-related criteria. Ageism in all its forms is unacceptable and should be a thing of the past. We must ensure that our waiting lists are managed properly. As long as we are short of capacity, we must ensure that the couples who are in most need — particularly those who are in the upper age range for eligibility for the treatment — are given some sort of priority access.

The best long-term solution is to encourage more donors and train more embryologists, as has proved possible in other European countries. To do that, we must challenge the stigma surrounding donations; raise public awareness of the need for donations; and learn from our European neighbours how to encourage people to become donors or train as embryologists. I support the motion and the amendment.

Mr McCallister: This is an emotive topic to bring to the Floor. It might well be useful for the Health Committee to discuss it in greater detail and hear from the Minister, the Department and the relevant experts — the clinicians.

The subject of IVF waiting lists is, as I said, emotive, particularly for couples affected by fertility problems. However, in a world of health budgets, it is unfair to raise false hope among infertile couples and lead them to believe that an Assembly motion, proposed by a Member with no Executive responsibility for health matters, will somehow change things. Is that even the best way forward?

Today, we heard some of the figures for the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety's budget, and they will hit these types of services hard. I am sure that the Health Minister will say more about that in his speech.

IVF treatment has been available on the National Health Service in Northern Ireland since December 2001. Its associated costs are a major reason for not expanding the service. The NHS estimates that the average cost of one cycle of IVF treatment is £2,771. Since 2001, the interim service has been provided with a cost envelope of expenditure of £1.4 million per annum. It has, therefore, been necessary to restrict access to the service. This lack of resources is the main reason why IVF treatment is not more freely available.

The upper age limit at which female partners using their own eggs can access publicly funded IVF treatment was raised from 37 to 38 in October 2006 and from 38 to 39 in April 2007, and an additional £50,000 was made available for counselling services in 2006.

That is, of course, an important measure.

3.30 pm

Health and social services boards do not always have detailed figures for fertility service waiting times. The Department has proved to be responsive, with a tranche of reforms and measures over the past few years. However, the Committee could look at the subject in much more detail than the Assembly would be allowed to do. The Member has raised an important issue.

Mr McCarthy: Not that long ago — possibly in August — I proposed that the Department for Regional Development should provide free transport to the over-60s. Thankfully, the announcement on that matter was agreed today. Does the Member not think that by bringing this important subject to the Floor of the Assembly that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety might be minded to do something similar in the not too distant future?

Mr McCallister: First, it probably was not in August —

Mr McCarthy: It was in August — 19 August — that I brought the matter to the Floor of the Assembly.

Mr McCallister: In here?

Mr McCarthy: Yes.

Mr McCallister: Was the Assembly not in recess? I doubt that it was in August. However, if the Member says that it was — [Interruption.]

Mr McCarthy: It was on the Floor of this Assembly anyway.

Mr McCallister: That is probably why the Member got it passed. [Laughter.]

I take the Member's point. We were all very supportive of that measure — particularly my colleague for North Belfast Fred Cobain, and I am sure that he will welcome it.

We are looking at a fairly meagre increase. Taking inflation into context, there may almost be a cut in health spending. Set against a backdrop of delivering the other measures that the Assembly has made it clear that it wants, such as free personal care, and given that the Minister and the Department may not have the resources to deliver, we do not want to be raising false hopes.

Mr Buchanan: I support the amendment, as it is fuller and gives more detail on the way forward. The motion will generate interest in many couples across Northern Ireland. In 2006, a leading Belfast doctor estimated that 40,000 couples in Northern Ireland suffered from infertility. For many couples seeking to start a family and who are faced with the difficulty of infertility, few Members, if any in the House, can begin to identify with them or understand the frustration, anxiety and pressure that that can bring to bear on a relationship or on a married couple.

Many couples see IVF treatment as the lifeline to resolving their problems. However, it must be noted that IVF is successful in only a percentage of cases. Although 30,000 women in the UK undergo IVF treatment each year, statistics show that it results in approximately 8,300 births, which is less than a 30% success rate.

However, it must be acknowledged that there is a growing demand for IVF treatment. Although demand for treatment among women in their forties has soared, statistics show clearly that older women have a lower overall success rate. For example, in 2004, women who underwent fertility treatment at 28 years of age had a success rate of 25·7%, while women of 40 years of age had a success rate of only 11·8%. Therefore, in light of that, it is important that the waiting lists should be addressed urgently.

It is a dangerous scenario for couples to think that simply because IVF treatment is available, they should delay their attempts to start a family until later in life when they have finished a career or feel more ready to settle down.

The matter of IVF treatment is complex. It presents difficulties for some Members because it is so expensive and is not always successful. During IVF treatment, many embryos are created in the laboratory. They are then graded, and at least two or three are transferred into the womb. The remainder are frozen or, if they do not look healthy, they are discarded.

Some of us believe that life begins at the point of conception. Therefore, life has begun before the embryo is implanted in the womb in order for it to complete its development. As soon as an embryo exists, it has the full status of any other person. To disregard the embryo in that way is to kill it, which, in reality, is abortion. Nevertheless, some fertility clinics in Northern Ireland have enrolled infertile couples in IVF programmes on the proviso that only two or three embryos would be produced for implantation. None would be frozen, meaning that there would be no question of any fatal reduction in numbers.

With that in mind, it is important not only to address the issue of waiting lists and age-weighting criteria but to consider the wider aspects of such treatment. The NHS was founded on the principle of fair and equal access to healthcare services for all, yet, clearly, current IVF-treatment policies are neither equal nor fair and are failing many people in Northern Ireland. I support the amendment.

Mr Easton: It is ironic that earlier this week the Assembly dealt with the subject of abortion and that today, Members are discussing the availability of IVF treatment. It was interesting to hear how those who campaign to make abortion more widely available reacted to the Assembly's call to protect the lives of unborn children. Today, we are speaking in support of those who are anxious to have a child and who can offer the love, happiness and security of a caring family.

For many people, the inability to have a child is a colossal blow that causes great sorrow and unhappiness. That often goes unnoticed because other people are concentrating on their own concerns. It is difficult to imagine how couples who cannot conceive feel when they realise how many abortions occur every day.

Members may not be surprised to hear that the United Kingdom is a world leader in the scientific research and technology that is involved in IVF treatment. In spite of that, however, the United Kingdom is at the bottom of the European league on the availability of treatment. In Denmark, the chances of receiving treatment are three times higher than in the UK, and they are twice as likely in France and the Netherlands. In addition, there is a postcode lottery in the United Kingdom for the provision of a service that will materially change people's lives.

It is an interesting exercise to go on the Internet and find that all over Europe, IVF treatment is privately available at a moment's notice at a fraction of the UK cost from highly skilled and qualified physicians. Therefore, it is vital that we here in Northern Ireland do all that is in our power to emulate our European neighbours.

In the Province, the numbers seeking IVF treatment are relatively small; therefore, I appeal for sufficient resources to be made available to the Health Service in order to help those people.

The Assembly is committed to developing a society that puts the needs of people to the forefront of its thinking, to supporting the family and family values and to creating a future in which children grow up in a loving and caring family relationship. It is of paramount importance that Members unequivocally support those who require IVF treatment in order to have children. I support the call for resources to be made available to bring the Province in line with countries such as France, Denmark, and the Netherlands. It is vital that special consideration is given to that relatively small percentage of people who require treatment in order that they can know the joy of having a child of their own.

With 48% of Northern Ireland's overall Budget being spent on health, and considering that so much of the health budget is spent on art — a policy that I know that the Minister is reviewing — perhaps some of that money could be redirected and made available for IVF treatment. I hope that the Minister will perhaps consider that today. I support the amendment; it is a much better proposition than the motion.

Mrs Hanna: I support the motion in the name of my colleague Alex Attwood, and I thank him for bringing it to the House. The Floor of the House is the first port of call for such a debate, not to give false hope, but to raise awareness of the issue, which can then be matched against need and availability of resources.

In vitro fertilization via the National Health Service is characterised by long waiting lists and a restricted number of treatment cycles. Important issues that have been raised by patients include the lack of understanding of what it means to be on a waiting list. Initial predicted waiting times can be greatly underestimated. When patients eventually receive treatment, they consider it worthwhile, but they have legitimate concerns about the time that they had to spend waiting for it. For many, the wait is too long and too uncertain.

Concerns have also been raised about the fact that IVF waiting lists involve hidden costs for patients and for the National Health Service. IVF creates a human dilemma. Although the Assembly talks up the idea of supporting families, it must give them more practical support.

Dozens of couples are struck off the waiting list every year, and they either give up trying to get treatment or pay for it privately. Fertility experts have concluded that conception rates for women who use their own eggs decline after the age of 39, and that was the reason for raising the bar to 40. However, most women turn to IVF treatment only after trying to become pregnant for several years. Naturally, they may be approaching the age of 40 by the time they apply for IVF.

For women using donated eggs, IVF is permissible up to the age of 49. However, access to the treatment is patchy, and, as a result of delays and inconsistencies, many couples, despite meeting the age qualification, miss out.

Some experts recommend that the current rules for those on NHS waiting lists should be relaxed. Infertility can have devastating effects, and, after years of trying unsuccessfully to have a family, many couples face very long waits. For many, as I said, the treatment comes too late.

Although I appreciate that a cut-off point is necessary, it is important to take all factors into account and to consider that couples who want to conceive children go through an emotional and anxious time, particularly those who are growing older and facing their last chance to have a baby.

Medical science is moving on, and many women in their 40s have children. Doctors can do much more these days, and I hope that medical advances will continue in that area. Infertile couples need better services. Reducing waiting lists and extending the age limit for IVF might not be the whole answer, but cutting the waiting time is extremely important. If people are fortunate enough to join a short waiting list, they will have a greater opportunity to avail of IVF treatment.

As has been said, our fertility treatments are falling behind those of our European counterparts, as has the number of babies born as a result of IVF. I know women who have gone abroad to receive treatment, but that option is not open to everyone because of the cost.

The NICE guidelines, 'Fertility: assessment and treatment for people with fertility problems', which have been mentioned, recommend three cycles of treatment. However, despite that recommendation, only one cycle of treatment is currently available.

In September 2006, the then Minister with responsibility for health, Paul Goggins, announced new criteria for assessing Health Service IVF treatment under the headings of waiting lists, counselling services, and intra uterine insemination (IUI) treatment, but, at present, there is a lack of guidance from the Department on how to prioritise treatment for patients, and the social criteria vary.

I call on the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to consult interested parties with a view to renewing the criteria in order to overcome the current inequalities, which can restrict some couples from receiving the same treatment as others.

Access has to be fair and equal. During what is an already stressful and traumatic time for those involved, couples are still being forced to wait for up to three years — that is unacceptable.

3.45 pm

Motherhood, and preparing for motherhood — whether through pregnancy, adoption, surrogacy, or IVF — has many challenges, which are often unsatisfactorily dealt with by contradictory plans and treatments that are in place. I have contacted the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety regarding some of those issues.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mrs Hanna: Finally, we need to have a comprehensive review to get better and fairer access.

Mr Shannon: Thers naethin laek tha feilin that ye git whun ye furst haud yer sinn' er dochter in yer erms. It jist canny be explained an tha experience is a real ee' apener. An as a' prood fether o' three strappin sinns' aa' cann sae this tae ye: the feelin disnae gaun awa wi' mare wanes er tha passin o' tiem. It is fer this raison that whun aa' think o' tha yins that his nae hed this apertunity. It is my desire tae help them in tha yin wae aa' caun — an that is tae be ahint ther claim fer IVF in tha Provance.

There is nothing like the feeling that you get when you first hold your son or daughter in your arms; it cannot be expressed or explained. It is an experience that cannot be equalled and as the proud father of three strapping boys, I can tell you that the strength of feeling does not diminish with subsequent children or, indeed, with the passing of time. For that reason, when I think of people who do not have such opportunities, it is my desire to support them in the only way that I can — and that is to support their claim for IVF in the Province.

The proposer of the motion made a good case, but I am supporting the amendment, because it is more detailed and gives the issue the focus and attention that it needs.

The figures are clear. It is estimated that over 40,000 couples in Northern Ireland have problems conceiving a child, and one in seven couples have problems with fertility. As elected representatives, we are aware of the stress, trauma and heartbreak that results from those cases. People go to their GP, only to learn that in order to qualify for IVF treatment, they must have been infertile for up to three years. That is an issue that I have a problem with. The modern age must be considered. People are no longer necessarily getting married at 18. These days, women have careers that they want to pursue. Therefore, they put off having children until well into their 30s, instead of their mid-20s. That can mean that when it comes to having children, their opportunity — without their knowing — may have passed.

It is important to realise that the prerequisite of having three years' infertility recognised by GPs will carry some women over the desired age range. The age limit for IVF treatment of 38, which was previously in place, should rightly be upped to 40. That would mean that women who have chosen a career without realising that they have a problem would be able to take advantage of the treatment.

Couples are currently offered the opportunity of three cycles of treatment. That gives a 50% chance of success. Some ladies that come to my office have had successful IVF treatment, which resulted in wonderful experiences, but others have been unsuccessful, and it has cost them a small fortune. I know of ladies who — rather than buy a house, as some of them could have done, and perhaps should have done — spent all of their money on IVF treatment that was unsuccessful. Real trauma and disappointment can be seen in those people's faces. I know of one lady who spent £13,000 on unsuccessful fertility treatment.

It may seem that three cycles is more than generous. However, it is hard to tell that to a couple whose third pregnancy has failed and who are heartbroken. I know people who have gone to Bulgaria and Istanbul for treatment — again, at great personal cost. Some of them have been successful, and some have not. Those are issues that must be focused on.

In Denmark, more cycles per million couples are offered — these are technical issues, but Great Britain is far behind, having only 600 cycles per million couples. Those figures need to be considered.

The Scottish Executive have suggested that five cycles should be offered, in order to boost the success of IVF treatment. That is something that the Assembly should ask the Minister to consider. The waiting lists are too long, the opportunities are too restricted, and the medical professionals are too far stretched.

There are, of course, couples who cannot carry a child, which is heart-rending. However, we have got to try to help those who want to find out whether fertility treatment can help them.

Northern Ireland must have more NHS facilities with the capacity to carry out fertilisation programmes. I urge the Minister of Health to recognise the lack of facilities suffered by this field of medicine, in the UK as a whole, and in Northern Ireland in particular. He must put in place the makings of change.

I support the amendment and ask Members to do likewise. It is important for a woman to experience the unparalleled joy of having a child.

Mr Durkan: I commend my colleague Alex Attwood for bringing this important issue to the Assembly. Like other Members, I acknowledge that the amendment is a positive contribution. This is not a contest between the original motion and the amendment; it is such an important issue, and Members should reinforce what they hear each other say, to amplify our concern for the people who need those services.

As politicians, we often say that we are doing something for our children and our children's children. We heard it said today. It is natural for people to presume that every adult or married couple has children, or, if it is their choice, that they will have them. Often, in a glib and natural way, when we use such phrases, we unintentionally remind people who go to all sorts of lengths, and cope with infertility and stress in the absence of children, of the pain that they suffer. Because we make that assumption, people who wait, hope and make all sorts of endeavours to have a child find the way in which we talk about these things painful and — literally — thoughtless.

Yet again, the Minister is present to hear Members' concerns on important issues. As well as addressing our remarks to him and his Department, it is important that we all look at the way we talk about families, at the assumptions we make and, sometimes, at the jokes we make about infertility and its treatment. All of us could be more sensitive in that regard. I speak as one with experience. It was nearly 12 years before my wife and I were blessed with a child. At times, the way in which things are said can hurt. For that reason, I am always open to people who raise these issues.

That is also why I pay tribute to the former Minister of Health in the previous phase of devolution, Bairbre de Brún, who took an important step back in 2001 in commissioning a consultation about fertility treatment. Because it involved financial implications, I, as Minister of Finance and Personnel, had to agree that with her. In 2006 we finally obtained an outcome from the document 'From People to Parents: A Public Consultation Document on the Future of Fertility Services in Northern Ireland'. I was pleased with some of the changes that emerged. It was realised that the limit on the number of cycles that people could have was a grave disappointment. Many people had campaigned for a good outcome from that consultation; many had spent years waiting for its outcome; and many others had spent years waiting for treatment or working with people waiting for treatment. As so often the case in this situation, the success that they saw was tinged with other sadness and frustrations.

I felt, in late 2006, that the Minister responsible, Paul Goggins, did not go as far as his predecessor had seemed to promise me in the House of Commons. That predecessor was Shaun Woodward, the current Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, who talked up a much bigger and more sensitive outcome to the 'From People to Parents' consultation.

It is right, therefore, for the Assembly to ask the Department to look at this again. In supporting the amendment, I do not direct this to the Minister alone, or suggest that the Committee should have no role in this.

As we have heard today, both the Health Minister and the Health Committee can make a serious, sensitive and purposeful contribution to ensure that we make progress and achieve good outcomes.

We must create a situation in which people can access the services that they have been told are available, and can understand the criteria. Neither the couple nor the professionals who are dealing with them should find that they must cope with gobbledegook, as though they are a problem or an unwarranted demand on a system that has better things to do and better people to look after. This issue is fundamental to people's ambitions for themselves, not only as private couples and individuals but as people who want to be part of a wholesome, healthy society — the type of society that Members have talked about aspiring to today. Families are at the centre of that.

Those people who are struggling to become a family need every bit of support that we can give them. Those for whom treatment does not succeed also need support, so there must be more emphasis on counselling services for those who are awaiting treatment, and for those who have had treatment and have been disappointed.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): For those affected, infertility can be a shattering problem that affects every area of their lives. It is important that their concerns in relation to its treatment are addressed openly and fairly, and that everyone is clear about who may have publicly funded fertility treatment. It is also important that people know why there are conditions on access to services. Therefore, I shall briefly outline how those conditions were decided.

In April 2001, there was no publicly funded IVF service in Northern Ireland. As Mr Durkan has said, in response to increasing demand, the then Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Bairbre de Brún, initiated a public debate on the future of publicly funded fertility services and, specifically, which services should be funded by the Health Service.

While proposals were prepared for consultation, interim arrangements were put in place in order to allow access — albeit limited access — to publicly funded services. In the light of other competing priorities in healthcare services, limited funding was allocated to the provision of IVF. In 2001, that funding was £1.2 million, which was to allow for two cycles of treatment for women up to 37 years old. The consultation document 'From People to Parents' was issued for public consultation, and that document sought views on a wide range of matters in relation to IVF treatment. Opinions were sought on the specific conditions for access to the service, and those included, among other issues, the upper age limit at which the female partner could be provided with publicly funded treatment.

An analysis of the responses to the consultation was used, along with NICE guidance, where applicable, to develop revised access criteria. Those criteria were introduced in October 2006, and all the proposed changes were subject to a full equality impact assessment to ensure that they did not unfairly disadvantage any patients who wished to access the service. Many of the changes that were introduced were designed to make IVF treatment accessible to a larger number of women. The upper age limit for women using their own eggs was raised from 37 to 38 on 1 October 2006, and from 38 to 39 on 1 April 2007. That was in line with the NICE guidelines, and with the latest advice from the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, the body that regulates such services. Restrictive criteria on couples with dependent children, who until then had not been eligible, were also removed. In addition, a previous policy was removed that had forced women to wait for three years before they could join the waiting list if they had an appropriately diagnosed cause for infertility.

Members will have heard me say many times that funding for health services remains very tight, and will become tighter. We have not been able to allocate additional funding for fertility services, and could do so only at the expense of other high-priority services.

Before my time as Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in order to allow a greater number of women to avail of treatment, the decision was made to reduce the number of fertility treatments from two to one per woman.

NICE guidelines recommend that three treatments should be provided. However, at the time, the number of treatments was two, which was then reduced to one. Although that is not ideal, the argument was that priority be given to making the opportunity for publicly funded treatment available to the largest number of women possible. During transition to the new policy, qualifying couples who were already on the waiting list and who had had one unsuccessful cycle of treatment were offered a further cycle in order to honour assurances that they had been given.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

4.00 pm

I recognise that NICE guidance recommends the provision of three cycles. Approximately 420 cycles are provided each year. However, 590 patients are waiting for IVF treatment. Therefore, even though one cycle per person is provided, there is still a shortage. That is why there is a waiting list. The waiting list depends purely on resources, rather than on capacity, the number of doctors, and so on. To provide three cycles on the current resource level would reduce the number of women who can avail of treatment by two thirds.

The policy is also based on age considerations. It is, however, not an ageist policy; it has had an equality impact assessment and equality assurance. The chance of a live birth for each IVF treatment cycle drops as women get older; from 20% to 15% after the age of 35, to 10% aged 39 and to 6% aged 40. Therefore, the argument is that to skew resources towards women who are at the upper end of the age limit would be less likely to achieve a successful result.

That is the current context in which the waiting list operates. Patients are dealt with chronologically from the date on which they go on the list. Waiting times are determined by the date of the consultant's referral to the fertility clinic. Waiting times for appointments with the consultant are determined by the date of the application. In order to ensure equity, patients are added to the waiting list from the date on which their consultant at the regional fertility centre decides that they are suitable for treatment. They are then treated strictly in chronological order, in line with the systems that are in place for all other health services.

It has been suggested that women who are likely to reach the upper age limit for treatment before they reach the top of the list should be prioritised so that they are treated before their fortieth birthday. That is difficult to justify. Moving women up the waiting list can only be done at the expense of other couples who may have been waiting considerably longer for treatment. It is also recognised that the likelihood of fertility treatment being successful decreases with age, as I have explained. Therefore, skewing resources accordingly would cause a delay that could affect the chances of others who have effectively been leapfrogged on the waiting list. As I have said, those chances reduce to 6% by the age of 40. Those are the proven outcomes of fertility treatment.

It is also important to point out that when annual resources have been allocated to individual patients, no further publicly funded treatments can be provided during the financial year. In other words, when resources are used up determines when treatment is no longer offered; not other reasons, such as doctors' time, and so on. The issue is purely one of resources. In those circumstances, it would almost always be the youngest patient on the list who would be disadvantaged.

Therefore, it is recognised practice that when the date for treatment is set, the revised policy is not applied retrospectively, nor should exceptions normally be made. I must ensure that service provision is equitable and accessible to as many women as possible and that it provides the best possible chances of successful pregnancy.

As regards a postcode lottery, and the issue of differential treatment in different parts of Northern Ireland, funding is provided by the four area boards on a capitation basis — in the same way that all other Health Service funding is provided — in order to ensure equity of access and spend. The current policy — and all of this went through the review — encourages early access to treatment. Therefore, it is possible that the access criteria that we currently have on offer provide a fair and equitable chance for all women who need publicly funded services.

Moreover, at the time when the new criteria were introduced, boards were asked to monitor referrals and waiting times over the first year in order to assess demand for services and the capacity of the regional fertility centre. The first year in which the boards have been operating under the new criteria is now complete, and the boards have been asked to report on the situation. That report will be made available at the end of November. I must emphasise that, in reviewing the policy, we are always going to return to the issue of available resources and the resources to be devoted to that service. That, of course, in times of limited resources means that there must be prioritisation of services.

There has been a review and a consultation. Criteria have been set, and they have been widespread. They do not follow NICE guidelines as regards three-cycle funding. Rather, they follow NICE guidelines on one-cycle funding. The risks were taken into account during that review. It has only been in operation for a year. The Department is about to undertake monitoring and referral of the scheme.

Having said all that, I hear the views of the House, and I understand the points that have been made. Mr Attwood has spoken to me about the issue on a number of occasions, as have Mrs O'Neill and Mrs Hanna. If it is the will of the House, I will be happy to revisit the review. In due course, I would return to the House and report on the matter. However, I would need to wait until November, by which time the referrals will have come through — that is only another four weeks. I would then be in a position to consider undertaking a review, specifically, of the issues of waiting lists, skewing for age and — the key factor — funding limitations. With regard to funding limitations, whatever the UK Government says, the trusts throughout the UK operate a funded single cycle of treatment for each patient. That is the situation. If Members request a review, I will be happy to accede to that request.

Mr O'Dowd: Go raibh maith agat. I apologise for being late in joining the debate. I had been chairing the Public Accounts Committee meeting. I came to the Chamber as soon as possible.

I declare an interest in the motion. I am one of the lucky people; I have a two-year-old daughter as a result of IVF treatment. I am doubly lucky, because my wife is expecting a second child as a result of IVF treatment. So, we are doubly blessed in that matter. We have been through the mill over the past six to eight years. It is an experience that is not unique to us as a couple — or, perhaps, to others in the Chamber — and it is definitely not unknown to those in wider society.

Anyone who has experienced infertility, and the treatment for it, has been through hell. That is the only way in which I can describe it. At one level, I would not wish IVF treatment on anyone, because of the physical and emotional demands that it places on the woman, firstly, and the tremendous emotional demands that it places on the couple and their relationship. The treatment is very difficult for the woman. In this debate I have heard terms such as “ICSI”, “donor eggs”, “donor sperm”, “harvesting of eggs”, “hyperstimulation injections” and “frozen embryos”.

Many a time, my wife and I have said that we could write a stage play based on the humorous side of IVF treatment. Humour was what got us through the darkest days of the treatment. The many situations in which people who are receiving IVF treatment find themselves are often a source of humour, and that humour gets people through the dark days.

We underwent a number of treatments under the original system, and those treatments were free. However, we ended up having to opt for private treatment. The average cost of treatment is £2,700, but that cost can rise to as much as £3,500. The costs of individual treatment and the specific drugs, and so on, all add up. If Members consider the physical and emotional pressures that people who are going through the treatment are under, and then add to those the worry that is experienced about bank loans, credit-card repayments and overdrafts, it becomes clear that the pressure on couples is great.

Moreover, that tension and pressure does not help the woman when she is receiving treatment. When the eggs are put back in at the start of the process, the woman is told that she must relax. However, she cannot do so because of the worry about whether the treatment will work and whether the couple can afford it. My wife and I were lucky because we were in reasonably paid jobs at the time of our treatment, so we could meet the bills. However, many couples cannot do so. Many find it impossible to afford the repayments on a £3,500 extension to a loan or mortgage, and that means that they cannot have children. That is not fair.

I know that the Minister's budget is very tight and that he has to apportion funds where they are needed and in response to high-profile demands. However, the fact that Mr Attwood has brought this motion to the House shows that there are wider concerns in society about infertility and that further action is required to address the issue. I welcome the motion, and I clearly support the amendment, which adds to the motion. The views that have been expressed in the Chamber show that wider society wants a more concentrated approach to be taken to infertility and for couples who cannot have children to be given more support.

I particularly noted Mr Durkan's remarks on the comments that are sometimes made to couples who do not have children. I have heard them all — both the well-meaning ones and the smart-alec ones. People should take a step back and think about what they are saying. Such comments are like a stab through the heart. People sometimes intend their remarks as a joke, but they are not funny. I appeal to anyone who is listening to this debate to think twice before making comments to couples without children, as there may be a deep-seated reason for why they do not have any.

I welcome the Minister's saying that he is prepared to take on board Members' views and report back to us in mid-November. I applaud the Minister for that.

I have one criticism of counselling services. I appeal to counsellors to remember that a man is involved in the process, too. I have the greatest respect for those who work in the regional fertility centre at the Royal Maternity Hospital in Belfast. From the moment that we walked in the door, we were struck by how brilliant the staff were — from the first person we met to the highest-level medic in the building. They are all brilliant people. However, when accessing and receiving counselling services, men sometimes feel that they are an add-on. They must be fully included in the counselling process.

Mr Attwood: I say at the outset that the SDLP will, of course, support the Sinn Féin amendment. The amendment is welcome, as is any amendment that enhances a motion and that adds detail and direction.

I shall focus on some themes that have run through the debate. Mrs O'Neill was the first Member to mention the three cycles of treatment, which other Members, including Mr Durkan and Mrs Hanna, also mentioned later. The provision of three cycles of IVF treatment is a touchstone of fertility services in Northern Ireland, and it must be dealt with if progress is to be made. I welcome the Minister's remarks, but, given the flavour of the debate and the fact that so many Members spoke in favour of a three-cycle outcome, I believe that the Assembly will ultimately be judged, and must judge itself, on whether it works to achieve that outcome. This issue, as much as any other, will be a touchstone as to whether there are benefits to devolution.

I welcome the comments of Iris Robinson. After reading the House of Commons Hansard reports, I know that she has been diligent on this issue over a long period, and has asked many useful and probing questions — as has my colleague Mark Durkan — in trying to advance this issue. I agree with her that there have been problems in the administration of regional fertility waiting lists.

Although I acknowledge Mr O'Dowd's comment about the good work that is carried out in the regional fertility clinic, there are problems of management and bureaucracy, which I have experienced. I wrote a letter to the regional fertility clinic in November 2006, asking about the number of people on waiting lists in the North, and whether there could be any indicative time frame for those people to receive treatment — I did not receive a reply until 1 June 2007. I suggest to the Minister that any forthcoming review looks at how to enhance the capacity and management of the regional fertility clinic so that couples know when they might anticipate treatment.

I welcome the comments of Kieran McCarthy and John McCallister. I suspect — although it is not for me to say — that there is a role for the Health Committee in all of these matters. We can also learn from the European experience. If — as Mr McCarthy says — we are the poor relation in Europe in respect of the provision of fertility treatment, is it beyond the wit of the Assembly, the Minister and the Committee to become a shining example, rather than remain behind the game?

I concur with Mrs Hanna's response to Mr McCallister; I do not attempt to build up the hopes of couples who come to see me. The advice that I gave to women to whom I spoke on the phone yesterday afternoon was based on a premise of "expect little and hope for much". I know from the experience of the couple that I mentioned earlier that couples can have their hopes completely dashed. Therefore, there is a need for a high level of caution when Members speak to constituents about this matter.

4.15 pm

The Department, the Minister and the Assembly must be challenged to turn this issue around. Mr Durkan and Mr O'Dowd were quite right to remind the Assembly that, for all the joy that people experience from having children — I have a young child — we cannot forget that that same joy is not enjoyed by many people. On my behalf, and that of the Assembly, I wish Mr O'Dowd and his wife well in the time until their second child is born. The content of Mr O'Dowd's speech was a personal, intimate and compelling narrative that should be a guide for Members, the Minister, and the Department in how to advance the issue.

I welcome the fact that the Minister is present and I welcome much of what he said. I particularly welcome his statement that, if it were the will of the Assembly, he might be minded to look again at how a review is carried out. I very much welcome that, and I hope that the Minister acts accordingly.

The Minister noted that, ultimately, these matters — and all such matters — are subject to constraints on funding. I was reminded that the Minister of Finance and Personnel mentioned greater end-year flexibility in today's statement on the draft Budget.

There would be greater end-year flexibility when it came to financial opportunities during and at the end of the financial year. I suggest that, given that that now appears to be the case, it might be opportune to consider, as soon as possible, how to front-load some of that funding to provide additional flexibility for fertility services in order to try and achieve the target of three cycles of treatment.

I ask the Minister, when he is considering how to take forward the review, to take into account the questions that I and other Members have asked, and that he has the opportunity to respond to, because those questions will inform how the review is constructed. There is a range of issues to be considered, some of which might be dealt with if they were in the review's terms of reference. I do not believe that the Department has proven the case that a woman who is about to attain the age of 40 is leapfrogging, as the Minister described it, a younger woman. I do not think that it has been proven that the older person gets an advantage that is disproportionate to the disadvantage of the younger woman.

Hard cases do not make good law, but in recent days I have been speaking to women, one of whom attained the age of 40 and was unable to get treatment. I spoke to another woman, aged 27, who last month completed her first cycle of treatment and is now looking for a second cycle. I suggest that treating women who are approaching 40 does not materially disadvantage those who are 27, 26 or 25. The clinical and medical judgements are difficult, because every case is different. However, it has not been proven to me, or to the couple who spoke to me about the matter, that they would have been disadvantaged in a way that was disproportionate to other categories of people. Given that nothing can be done about the couple that I have spoken about, I ask the Minister to reconsider the matter and find another way for women who are about to attain the age of 40 in the next few months to be accommodated properly and legally.

I thank everyone for their contributions to the debate; the tone and character was proper. I urge Members to support the motion, as amended.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to commence a comprehensive review into the current criteria used to assess eligibility, including the age weighting criteria, the ongoing problem with waiting lists, and the number of IVF treatments available on the NHS, with a view to establishing a more equitable and accessible policy.

Windscale/Sellafield

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one and a half hours for this debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes for the winding-up speech. All other Members will have five minutes. Two amendments have been received and have been published on the Marshalled List. Members who move the amendments will have 10 minutes to propose and five minutes for their winding-up speeches.

Mr McKay: I beg to move:

That this Assembly expresses concern at the findings of the report on the impact of the Windscale Piles accident at the Sellafield nuclear plant and the implications that this has for the health and well-being of people living on these islands and in Europe; and calls upon the Government to discontinue all operations at the Sellafield nuclear plant.

Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Sinn Féin has brought the motion to the Assembly, not only out of concern for the public health of people who live on the east coast in places such as Antrim, Down and Louth but also because it is concerned at the threat that Sellafield poses to the well-being of people who live throughout Ireland, as well as in Britain and western Europe. Sinn Féin will not be supporting either amendment.

The DUP amendment supports nuclear power, which directly contradicts the motion, and the SDLP amendment adds nothing substantive to Sinn Féin's motion. A motion to the same effect has been passed in the Dáil. Today, the Assembly has an opportunity to send a clear message to the British Government that all the major political institutions on this island want the nuclear plant at Sellafield to be shut down.

Fifty years ago, there was radioactive fallout from a major accident at the Windscale nuclear reactor. New research shows that the incident generated twice as much radioactive material and caused dozens more cancers than was previously thought. At the time, the Windscale fire was the world's biggest nuclear disaster. The methods used to extinguish the fire could have caused an explosion, but, fortunately, they did not.

Tom Tuohy, who was the deputy general manager on the site, led the team that had to contend with a nightmare that no one at that time had thought possible. He said:

"Mankind had never faced a situation like this".

However, the Windscale accident was not a one-off. Just two years ago at Sellafield, there was a leakage of highly radioactive nuclear fuel. Approximately 20 tons of uranium and plutonium — enough to make 20 nuclear weapons — dissolved and escaped through a cracked pipe. Nordic parliamentarians recently met the owners of Sellafield and told them that safety procedures at the nuclear plant needed to be tightened up. The British authorities have granted permission to resume reprocessing of nuclear waste at the THORP, which was closed several years ago because of a radioactive leak. The controversial THORP has aroused strong feelings in Nordic and Irish politicians. Ministers with responsibility for the environment from Norway, the Twenty-six Counties, Iceland and Austria have demanded that it not be reopened.

A devastating official inquiry recently found that safety alarms had been routinely ignored, operating instructions flouted and safety equipment left broken at the controversial plant. The inquiry report, one of the most damning ever of a British nuclear installation, condemned the Cumbrian complex for its "alarm-tolerant culture". It also identified:

"long-standing failings in some key safety arrangements" and a

"failure to learn from previous events".

The accident at the THORP was disclosed by 'The Independent on Sunday' in 2005 and was the focus of the investigation. Some 83,000 litres of highly radioactive liquid leaked at the plant for at least eight months before the spill was detected.

The daughter of a man who died at the Sellafield reprocessing plant in the 1960s condemned the secretive nature of the British nuclear industry. In 1962, Jean McSorley's father died from a heart attack at the nuclear plant at the age of 39, and his body was taken for an autopsy without his family's consent. The body parts of 65 other workers who died at the plant between 1962 and 1991 appear to have been secretly examined for evidence of radiation. Ms McSorley said:

"Openness and transparency and the nuclear industry are mutually exclusive. They are always looking for reasons not to be fully open with the public."

Indeed, the nuclear industry has never been open with the public.

Sellafield remains a significant threat to people on this island, particularly to those who live in the north-east. Ministers as well as private Members should press the British Government on the issue at every opportunity. Irish people have been living with the consequences of the fire at Sellafield for many years, and there are particularly high rates of cancer and birth defects in County Louth and south Down. Sinn Féin has called on the Irish Government to convene round-table talks on Sellafield. Those invited should include non-governmental organisations, environmentalists, campaign groups and northern European states, particularly Norway, whose representatives have been highly vocal on the issue. Assembly representatives should also be involved in such a process.

An independent group has taken meter readings in the Twenty-six Counties. Recent readings show that the highest levels of nuclear contamination are to be found in areas of County Louth, County Meath and along the north Dublin coast — all are a stone's throw away from Sellafield. A similar exercise should be carried out in the Six Counties to establish how much nuclear contamination has affected the entire east coast.

Sinn Féin has consistently called for the closure of Sellafield. Reprocessing there must end immediately. It is a discredited plant and remains the most dangerous and unstable nuclear facility in western Europe. Sinn Féin will continue to fight for its immediate closure and calls on the Assembly to back the motion. Go raibh maith agat.

4.30 pm

Mr Hamilton: I beg to move amendment No 1: Leave out all after first 'plant' and insert

“; notes the improving safety standards within the nuclear power industry; believes that the United Kingdom should have a safe, secure and diverse energy supply that takes account of the need to address the issue of increasing carbon emissions and the need to end dependency on fossil fuels; recognises that nuclear power plays an increasing role in power generation in several EU states; and calls upon the Government to consider carefully a well-regulated nuclear sector, operating to the highest safety standards, as one element of the United Kingdom's energy supply.”

The general opinion of nuclear power is sometimes clouded by our thoughts or media images of disasters such as Windscale Piles, Three Mile Island and Chernobyl, and, although they are unrelated, Hiroshima and Nagasaki. There is undoubtedly concern about what has happened in the nuclear industry in the past, not least in the Windscale Piles accident, which forms part of the original motion. There is warranted concern, especially in the underestimation of the fallout, and in some of the insinuation of cover-up at that time.

However, we cannot judge the nuclear industry of the twenty-first century by 1957 standards. Even Chernobyl, which is regularly used as an example in debates of this nature, collapsed when the Soviet Union was on the verge of collapse and people were barely able to get a loaf of bread in the shops, never mind properly run nuclear power plants.

We should recognise the marked improvement in safety standards in the nuclear industry. Windscale Piles happened when there was little knowledge of reactor physics, and there was a rush to build the facility at that stage. Simon Taylor, a noted academic at Cambridge University, said that if there was any benefit in that accident, it was that it focused minds on safety issues. A safe, secure and varied energy supply will surely be our common objective, and nuclear power can help to achieve those aims.

Great strides have been made in other countries, such as South Africa and China, who are pioneering the development of well-recognised, safer, smaller, pebble-bed reactors.

The security of supply is an important aspect, as it is essential. We are sourcing our oil from volatile regions around the world, such as Saudi Arabia and Venezuela. Europe gets its natural gas from countries such as Russia. We all remember the recent example where Russia literally turned off the taps to the supply in the Ukraine and left the country with nowhere to go. We must avoid that sort of situation. Nuclear energy can perhaps play a part in solving that problem.

A varied energy supply is also important. We need less fossil fuel and more renewable energy, whether that be wind, wave or biomass. Nuclear energy must also play a part.

Another benefit of exploring the possibility of expanding nuclear power is that it creates lower carbon emissions and contains almost no carbon dioxide. Such an expansion would assist the United Kingdom in reaching its targets and in combating climate change. Reducing our dependence on fossil fuels is an essential element of any energy strategy. We are currently sourcing fossil fuels from volatile regions round the world, but that is a dangerous policy in the longer term. Fossil fuels are a finite resource, and they will run out at some point. Various targets suggest that, even in this century, some of those sources may dry up and disappear. There is the spin off that if we were to reduce fossil fuels, we would reduce pollution. No notable sulphur dioxides, nitrogen dioxides or other particulates are present in nuclear fuel.

It would be unwise in a debate on nuclear power not to pay attention to what other EU states are doing. We have heard mention of attitudes in other countries, but I do not think that that typifies what is going on among our near neighbours in Europe. France generates 78% of its electricity from nuclear sources, and that figure is set to rise. Finland started a nuclear power renaissance in 2002, and other countries in Europe, such as Lithuania, are also exploring that option. There are 300 nuclear reactors in over 30 countries across the world. The amendment in my name and in the name of David Simpson accepts the reality of the situation.

Nuclear power is already being used to produce 20% of the UK's energy. I imagine that the proposers of the motion and the SDLP amendment want to do away with nuclear energy altogether. If we got rid of Sellafield, what would we replace it with? To get rid of one fifth of the UK's energy overnight has consequences, not least in the cost of, and dependence on, other sources of energy, some of which are finite or dangerous to the environment.

Although there are alternatives, some of which I have already mentioned, the Northern Ireland grid is currently unable to cope with any further input from renewable sources. Expansion into that sphere is not without its problems. Furthermore, the fact that there is considerable opposition in Northern Ireland and elsewhere to some forms of renewable energy, such as wind or wave power, is sometimes ignored when nuclear power is discussed. Whether it is because someone's view is obscured, or because birds or seals are affected, some people are opposed to the introduction of those sources of energy. That is a problem that we have to face.

Nuclear power is already used in our energy system, through the Moyle interconnector, and will also be used in the proposed interconnector from the Republic of Ireland to Wales. Both interconnectors will be attached to the mainland UK national grid. The lights in this House could conceivably come from a nuclear power station in the future; the reality is that nuclear power is already part of the system: it cannot be ignored or easily done away with.

Public opinion on the issue is beginning to turn because of those realities. The most recent edition of 'The Economist' published an Ipsos MORI poll, which showed that public support for nuclear energy has risen over the past six years to a point at which more Britons are in favour of nuclear power than oppose it. That poll is backed up by other support, sometimes from strange sources. The Royal Society has gone on the record in support of nuclear power, as well as some leading environmentalists. Patrick Moore, a co-founder of the Greenpeace movement, is now on record as saying that he regrets his opposition to nuclear power 20 years ago. James Lovelock, a supporter of an organisation named Environmentalists for Nuclear Energy, said that:

"We have no time to experiment with visionary energy sources; civilisation is in imminent danger and has to use nuclear - the one safe, available, energy source - now or suffer the pain soon to be inflicted by our outraged planet."

We must ask some questions in this debate. Is it desirable to have an energy source that is cost-effective, efficient, low in pollution, produces little or no carbon emissions, is not dependent on overseas imports, and is, possibly, infinite? Surely the answer is yes. We must consider the development of a safe, well-regulated nuclear sector and overcome issues of safety, disposal of waste and health.

The proposer of the motion concentrated on health issues in his speech, but, inevitably, there is a counter-argument. In 1991, the National Cancer Institute in the United States announced that a large-scale study that it had carried out of nearly one million cancer deaths in American counties close to nuclear facilities —

Mr McKay: I thank the Member for giving way. Given the fact that the Member is more comfortable with the security of nuclear plants than I am, would he have any problem supporting the establishment of a nuclear facility in his constituency?

Mr Hamilton: Given that it is a reserved matter, there is little point in having any position, which, perhaps, shows the flaws in having a debate at all. It is not a matter that we can give any opinion on. There are no plans to have a nuclear power plant anywhere in Northern Ireland at this stage. We must recognise that there are counter-arguments to the propaganda that has been put about over the years that nuclear energy is all bad, and there is no other argument to be had. Studies, not only in the United States, but in Britain and Ireland, have shown that there are no particular problems related to health in areas in the vicinity of nuclear power plants. Those studies have been ignored, but I accept that concerns exist that must be overcome in an educated debate about the issues, not least the issue of safety, which has been highlighted already.

Anyone who is an avid fan of the American political TV drama 'The West Wing' will remember that a politician who ran for president completely ruined his chances by saying that nuclear power was completely safe. I would not say that it is completely safe, but a well-regulated and safe nuclear sector would bring immense benefits for us all.

Mrs Hanna: I beg to move amendment No 2: Leave out all after "Europe" and insert

"... calls upon the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make public any data, which it may have available in relation to this matter; and further calls upon the Government to discontinue all operations at the Sellafield nuclear plant within an agreed timescale, acceptable to the Government of the Republic of Ireland and the Northern Ireland Assembly."

I thank Mr McKay for proposing the motion. I am disappointed that he does not accept my amendment, which makes the motion much more specific.

The amendment comprises two parts. First, it calls on the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make available any information that it may have in relation to the Windscale disaster in 1957. Secondly, it seeks an agreed timescale for the closure of the Sellafield nuclear plant in Cumbria — formerly Windscale — which has bedevilled relationships between two sovereign Governments — the Irish and the British — for decades. Moreover, the amendment foresees a role for the Assembly in agreeing such a timescale.

Today's debate is on health-and-safety matters, not on nuclear power — that debate is for another day. In that case, I do not believe that amendment No 1 is relevant to the debate.

It is said that sunlight is the best disinfectant. The political fallout from Windscale has continued for more than 50 years, thanks mainly to good investigative journalism over those years. The recently published academic research by Professors Garland and Wakefield suggests that the radioactive debris spread by the Sellafield fire in October 1957 may have been twice as widespread as was reported at the time. It may also have caused 240 more cancers across Britain and northern Europe than originally estimated.

Of particular concern at the time was the release of the radioactive isotope of iodine, which is taken up and stored in the thyroid gland and often leads to cancer of that organ. I note that there is no specific health data in the Garland and Wakefield research for Ireland, but that there is considerable information for England and Wales.

It has become increasingly clear that for over 50 years, there has been a cover-up at many levels concerning Windscale, and that has been admitted. It was the worst nuclear disaster in the world up to that point, and was at least as bad as the Three Mile Island incident in 1979, although not as catastrophic as Chernobyl. The international nuclear event scale has eight levels, ranging in seriousness from 0 — the least — to 7; Chernobyl was rated at 7 and Windscale was rated at 5.

In 1957, the world was in the grip of the Cold War and Macmillan was Prime Minister. The United States did not trust the British, and Macmillan gave orders to cover up the disaster. I was 10 years old and living in Warrenpoint at the time of Windscale. Belfast is directly across the Irish Sea and about 60 miles from Windscale. Towns such as Warrenpoint, Newry, Dundalk and, of course, Dublin are within a 100-mile radius of Sellafield across the Irish Sea. People remember a very high level of sickness that autumn. That was ascribed to the Asian flu, but some people still wonder if that was really the cause.

Cancers have had a devastating effect in my family in the decades since 1957. Six of my siblings and I have had cancer, and four of them are dead. However, I accept that there may be genetic or other reasons for those cancers.

Sellafield is owned by the Nuclear Decommissioning Authority in the UK and it was previously owned by British Nuclear Fuels Limited. It provides reprocessing facilities, not only for the UK but for other countries. It is no exaggeration to say that Sellafield is the nuclear bin for much of the world. It separates the uranium, plutonium and fission products from spent nuclear fuels. The uranium can then be used in the manufacture of new nuclear fuel, and the plutonium can be used in the manufacture of mixed-oxide fuel.

4.45 pm

In 1957, at Windscale, a fire in pile 1 destroyed its graphite core and radioactive material was released into the atmosphere. It beggars belief that the UK Atomic Energy Authority only commenced plans in the 1990s to clean up pile 1. Even now, that job is unfinished and there is no timetable for its completion.

Since 1957, Sellafield has had well-documented appalling safety record. There have been hundreds of safety breaches, including the falsification of data, the release of radioactive substances into the environment, and the contamination of workers and equipment. Consequently, it has been necessary to classify 60% of the buildings on the site as nuclear waste. Every day, the Sellafield reprocessing plants discharge 8 million litres of nuclear waste into the sea — the Irish Sea is the most radioactive in the world. Nuclear waste remains radioactive for tens of thousands of years.

Ireland has been contaminated by radioactive material from Sellafield. On the east coast, measurable amounts of plutonium can be found in seaweed. Most of that is from discharges over the years from Sellafield. Given that THORP and the MOX plant are operational, discharges will increase, not only into the sea, but in gases that are discharged into the air as a result of the burning of radioactive materials. Among other radioactive isotopes, there is more than half a tonne of plutonium in the silt of the Irish Sea. Traces turn up in fish catches and in seaweed off the Irish coast.

Following the events of 9/11, there is also a risk that terrorists could target somewhere such as Sellafield for bombing, releasing energy and toxins. The vulnerability of Sellafield and other nuclear plants is increased by the transportation of radioactive materials on land, air and sea. An attack or a hijacking could net enough material to make a crude nuclear bomb.

After 50 years, I appreciate that medical statistics that might be relevant to the situation may not be available; however, I ask the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to search his Department's archives and to place in the public domain any relevant information — particularly data on leukaemia, lymphoma and stillbirths.

Amendment No 2 calls for the United Kingdom Government:

“to discontinue all operations at the Sellafield nuclear plant within an agreed timescale, acceptable to the Government of the Republic of Ireland and the Northern Ireland Assembly.”

I pay tribute to the constancy and consistency of my SDLP colleagues in South Down — Eddie McGrady, Margaret Ritchie and P J Bradley — who have campaigned against Sellafield for decades, as well as the British-Irish Inter-Parliamentary Body, with whose members I have visited Sellafield.

All shades of political opinion in the Republic, and many in Northern Ireland, are opposed to the continued operation of Sellafield. The majority of the population on the island of Ireland is concentrated on the east coast, with the two major conurbations — Belfast and Dublin — accounting for approximately half that population. Any big disaster would have a catastrophic impact on the island of Ireland, and, indeed, on a large part of Britain, which would lead to death and material destruction. Sellafield is a risk with which we should not have to live.

The Irish Government have repeatedly complained to the United Kingdom Government, and it is the policy of all parties in the Dáil that Sellafield should close. Recently, the Radiological Protection Institute of Ireland and, significantly, an Garda Síochána have been permitted access to the Sellafield site. One could ask why the police should be allowed access.

The Norwegian Government have also demanded that the United Kingdom Government close Sellafield, even though Norway is many hundreds more miles than Ireland away from it. They are particularly concerned about the potential effect on their fish stocks. Thanks to the institutions that were set up as a result of the Good Friday Agreement, there has never been greater democratic accountability for all the people of Ireland. We now have representative institutions, although we await the meeting of the British-Irish Council, at which Assembly parties will be represented. I hope that Members can build the widest possible cross-party consensus, and use our democratic clout, the EU institutions and the British and Irish Governments in order to secure a firm timetable for the closure of the disaster that has been Sellafield.

Mr Gardiner: As Ulster Unionist environment spokesperson, I have a natural disposition to support environmentally friendly suggestions. As a resolute human being and a public representative, I also have a duty to react sensibly to certain situations of public concern. I am a committed environmentalist, but, like many environmentalists, I am aware that some people spoil our credibility by citing dubious evidence and making outlandish claims. That does not help the environmental cause; rather it brings it into disrepute.

The incident referred to in the motion occurred in 1957 — that was 50 years ago. Surely no one in the Assembly is seriously suggesting that nuclear safety is of the same standard as it was in those days, when Anthony Eden was Prime Minister, our Queen had been on the throne for only five years, Charles de Gaulle had yet to become president of France, and Eisenhower was still president of the United States.

The nuclear option for our future energy needs is now regarded by many environmentalists as a safe option, when burning fossil fuels is out of date, and power stations, which are belching carbon emissions and greenhouse gases, are contributing to global warming.

New nuclear plants could use generation III+ reactors, which would create less than one tenth of the waste produced by current nuclear generators. Many environmentalists now regard the nuclear option as safer, cheaper, cleaner, and — it must be said — inevitable, given that the United Kingdom is unlikely to be able to put any other viable option in place before our present power stations must be replaced. In fact, if we do not take that option, we are a great deal more likely to face an economic meltdown than a nuclear meltdown.

Of course, we must express concern at the nuclear accident in 1957, but that must be done in the same way as we might express regret at the Holocaust of 1939-45, the Vietnam war or the First World War of 1914-18. It is a fact of history, of times past, not of the present.

Although many environmental groups, such as Greenpeace and Friends of the Earth, have rejected the use of nuclear power as a solution to global warming, former leaders of such organisations have come out in support of nuclear power. Patrick Moore, the co-founder of Greenpeace and chairman and chief scientist of Greenspirit, commented in 2005 that nuclear energy — combined with the use of other alternative energy sources, such as wind and hydro — remains the only practical, safe and environmentally friendly means of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and addressing energy security, saying also that:

“The time for common sense and scientifically-sound leadership on the nuclear energy issue is now.”

The point to note is that nuclear power is combined with other renewable energy sources.

In truth, a detailed discussion of those options in the relevant Committee would be a far more rational way for the Assembly to proceed rather than debating a motion in the House. The language used by many will, in such circumstances, be erroneous, when what is really needed is cool, rational debate in an atmosphere where scientific evidence is evaluated sensibly and reputable expert opinion is sought.

I can share the hurts and feelings of the past, as Mrs Hanna did. I also lost a mother and two sisters through cancer. Both of my sisters died, one of whom was 50 and the other 53. However, thanks to their Christian faith they are in the Glory today. I support amendment No 1.

Mr B Wilson: I welcome the motion. I have no problem in supporting it, given that opposition to nuclear power and the risks that it poses to human life and our environment is one reason that the Green Party came into power — I am sorry; I mean existence. [Laughter.] We are in power.

We have always been concerned about the activities of Windscale at the Sellafield nuclear plant, owing to its proximity to the Irish coast and to the secrecy with which those activities have been carried out. We are particularly concerned about the activities of the BNFL ship the Atlantic Osprey and the reason that it spends a great deal of time around Beaufort's Dyke. That raises serious safety issues: a ship that is carrying nuclear fuel is spending so much time in an area in which large quantities of munitions have been dumped.

The Green Party was not surprised to learn that the initial estimates of the radioactive contamination that spewed into the atmosphere from Windscale were grossly underestimated. The Windscale/Sellafield site has been shrouded in a mist of lies, misinformation and outright fraud from the day of its inception. For example, after the Windscale fire in 1957, the men who risked their lives to prevent that fire spreading were made scapegoats by the Government's inquiry into the cause of the accident.

The name of the site may have been changed to Sellafield, but the Windscale legacy of deception has persisted. In 2000, a damning Nuclear Installations Inspectorate report painted an alarming picture of management incompetence and a culture of complacency at the Sellafield site. The scandal concerned safety procedures in a factory that produced batches of uranium and plutonium. One batch that was bound for Japan was found to have had false records, and that prompted the investigation. Indeed, British Nuclear Fuels later admitted that the records had been deliberately falsified.

We are particularly concerned that earlier this year the nuclear safety authorities in Britain decided to reopen the facility for reprocessing at THORP in Sellafield. That plant is considered to be a nuclear dustbin, taking in nuclear waste from all parts of the world. Even if one supports nuclear power, the waste from the rest of the world should certainly not be taken in at that plant, which is what currently happens.

THORP has been out of operation since April 2005, when a major leak of radioactive material was discovered. My Green Party colleagues and I have spoken to representatives of the Nordic Council, and they share our grave concerns about the prospect of THORP reopening.

I ask the Assembly to support the Nordic Council's call to the Government to permit a full, independent and international investigation into the safety culture at THORP at Sellafield.

Despite years of campaigning for the closure of the nuclear facilities at Sellafield, the prospect of its closure is distant. Indeed, a new master plan that was drawn up by the west Cumbrian authorities sets out proposals for the further development of nuclear power. Those proposals include the construction of two third-generation, 1.6 gigawatt nuclear reactors and the development of fourth-generation reactors at Sellafield. Discussions have also taken place between Cumbria County Council and the Government about the future storage of highly active radioactive waste, even though, at present, Sellafield already holds 70% of the country's most dangerous nuclear waste.

The Green Party is opposed to any expansion of nuclear activity. When the joint agreement between the Scottish Green Party and the SNP was drawn up, the first point that was agreed with the new Scottish Administration was that there would be no support for new nuclear power in Scotland.

Nuclear power is not the answer to the energy crisis. It will restrict investment in alternative technologies, and it does not make economic sense. It produces radioactive waste that will create problems for generations for thousands of years to come. Despite improvements in technology, it is not totally safe.

Accidents can happen, and if one does, it will be a disaster.

5.00 pm

As many terrorist groups try to obtain nuclear weapons, Sellafield's security has become an issue. We must look to alternative energy sources. Sellafield serves no useful purpose — it should be shut down.

Mr Simpson: Were I to go around every MLA and ask each about his or her knowledge of nuclear physics, I would probably be met with a few blank faces.

Mr Hamilton: You speak for yourself.

Mr Simpson: I include myself in that. Yes, my face, too, would be blank, if asked my knowledge of nuclear physics. If a Member were to tell me that he or she had a degree in that subject, I would ask what the heck he or she was doing in the Assembly. [Laughter.]

I welcome the debate. I understand the concerns that have been raised in the motion. Other Members have spoken about timescale, referring to events of 50 years ago. Whatever view we take on this issue, or on that of climate change — and there are a variety of sincerely held views — there is universal agreement that the world is at a crossroads when it comes to the whole issue of energy supply. We need viable and safe alternatives to fossil fuels. That is the bottom line, whether we like it or not.

I am encouraged that we have set a target, under the Northern Ireland renewables obligation (NIRO), to obtain 12% of electricity from renewables by 2012. We must do all that we can to encourage use of renewable energy sources such as wind, water and the sun, and that must be a priority. However, we must be realistic. In February 2003, the Royal Society warned:

“in the short to medium term, it is difficult to see how we can reduce our dependence on fossil fuels without the help of nuclear power.”

The previous Secretary of State, Mr Peter Hain, expressed the view that he did not see nuclear energy as being a feasible option for Northern Ireland. That was also the view of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment in its 2002 report into its energy inquiry. However, whether we like it or not, we have a duty to take a serious look at the potential that nuclear power offers.

Nuclear power is a frightfully powerful phenomenon. The very use of the word nuclear, given its association with the horrors of nuclear war, is enough to send shivers up anyone's spine. However, it can be channelled and used in a way in which mankind will benefit. Amendment No 1, which stands in my name and that of my colleague Simon Hamilton, states that we need to:

“consider carefully a well-regulated nuclear sector, operating to the highest safety standards, as one element of the United Kingdom's energy supply.”

My colleague also mentioned that the grid is nearly at maximum in my constituency. Members who represent that constituency — those who sit opposite, as well as alongside me — will know that, in part of that constituency, we have the third-largest manufacturing base in Northern Ireland. We are running out of electricity; there is not enough electricity to feed the factories. Eventually, some other source will have to be looked at — something that is well regulated and conforms to the highest safety standards — in order that that we can generate electricity for our companies and create employment in future. It is vital that we also consider price.

Following publication of the UK White Paper on energy, ‘Meeting the Energy Challenge’, a consultation paper on nuclear power was issued on 23 May 2007 by the Rt Hon Alistair Darling MP, in his former role as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. That Department is now known as the Department for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform (BERR).

That UK-wide consultation concluded on 10 October 2007, and its purpose was to seek views on nuclear power from industry, non-Governmental bodies and any other organisation or public body in the United Kingdom, including the general public. I am glad that Northern Ireland was included in that consultation, which asked whether the private sector should be allowed to build new nuclear power stations, and I await its outcome with interest.

Mr P J Bradley: I support the amendment proposed by Carmel Hanna. I ask Sinn Féin to consider the fact that the amendment does not take away from the motion in any way; rather, Carmel's speech added to it. As Alex Attwood said earlier, amendments of value are often helpful, and Carmel's amendment was helpful.

The UK Government's consultation process on the disposal of radioactive waste closes on 2 November 2007. It is important that the Assembly, the Executive, or, at least, the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, or the Committee for the Environment should make a submission on the matter. Such a submission should remind the British Government in no uncertain terms of the nuclear catastrophe of 8 October 1957, which was not made public until 10 October 1957 and was brought under control only on 12 October. Fifty years later, many believe that the contaminated material is still piled up at Windscale — or Sellafield, as the Government renamed it in an effort to make us forget the disaster that has been with us since 1957.

The volume of contaminated material is also a subject of concern. Only the British Government knows how large that pile is, and, given the secrecy that surrounds Windscale, it is unlikely that we will ever be told.

For centuries, the British have intruded in the affairs of countries around the world by putting down what they term as insurgents and by becoming involved in arms issues and decommissioning processes, as we know. Back in the heart of Britain, the biggest decommissioning problem remains in Windscale/Sellafield, right on our doorstep. Since October 1957, that major weapon of mass destruction has remained piled up in Cumbria and successive Governments have failed to address the problem. All we know is that, in 1957, the British Government carried out a massive “Widgery” in relation to the catastrophe and covered up its own records on the wind direction in the area at the time of the incident. At the time, reports that were backed up by the Meteorological Office stated that the wind was blowing seawards towards the Isle of Man and beyond to the Dublin area. However in 1974, 17 years after the disaster, a Government agency claimed that the winds at the time came from the northwest, thus blowing the radiation inland. The prime purpose of that announcement was to create the belief that no significant radiation made its way to the Isle of Man or Ireland.

When members of the Low Level Radiation Campaign (LLRC) went to the Meteorological Office in Windscale to find the truth, they found that the original reports detailing the westerly direction of the wind, and its speed, had been tampered with. Record sheets for 1957 had been removed and replaced with new sheets that were slightly different in colour from the sheets of previous and subsequent years. The new pages for 1957 read: “No Record – Mast Dismantled”

According to the records, the mast reappeared in November 1957, which perhaps says something.

It may be wrong to despair, but I fear that we will never learn the true facts about the catastrophe, or be able to prevent a reoccurrence of the event at Windscale. As individuals we have no chance of discovering the truth, and, as much as we might try, I doubt that the Assembly as a body would fare any better. However, we must continue to try. I pay tribute to my colleague Eddie McGrady MP, as did Carmel Hanna, for his endless efforts to keep the Sellafield debate alive. I am sure that successive British Governments have wished that Eddie McGrady would ease up on the issue, when they should have been admitting failure and warning their people of the constant threat that exists.

As we have heard, the people of Dundalk, many people on the east coast of Ireland and the people of the Isle of Man do not need a Government admission to confirm the facts. The death rate on the Isle of Man soared in the decade following the incident at Windscale, and many mothers in County Louth believe that they know only too well of the consequences of the radiation clouds that descended on their area in 1957 — consequences that they live with to this day.

The motion and the amendment correctly refer to the threat to Europe. I would like to be slightly more parochial and remind Members that the County Down coastline, as Mrs Hanna has said, is only 60 or 70 miles from Cumbria. That is around the same distance as from Stormont to Limavady or Derry, and should another catastrophe occur at Sellafield, that short distance would place us at the heart of the danger zone.

In supporting my colleague Carmel Hanna’s amendment, I believe that everyone present would agree that all information about Sellafield should be made public. It is important that the Assembly and the Governments in the Republic of Ireland and the Isle of Man agree on a timescale for the closure of Sellafield. The only acceptable action that the Assembly can demand is that the ticking time bomb that is Sellafield is defused and that there is immediate clearance of the contaminated material that is still stored at the plant in Cumbria.

Mr Shannon: I support the DUP amendment. There is little doubt that the production of fuel and energy is a risky business. That is a fact. There are massive oil rig fires; coal-mining explosions; the effect of renewable energy sources on the surrounding countryside; and the dangers that are linked to the production of nuclear energy. There are hazards with each and every method of production, and there comes a time when each method must be evaluated to ensure that the benefits do not outweigh the costs of the venture. Perhaps, now is the time for the Assembly to decide on that matter.

At the outset, I want to stress that I am not living in a bubble; nor do I have my head in the sand. I am aware of the dangers of nuclear-energy production. I have read the newspapers and I have listened to those with more scientific understanding. However, that cannot be the only determining factor. My colleague, David Simpson, mentioned nuclear physicists. I suspect that there is probably no one in the Chamber with that particular knowledge.

Mr McElduff: Will the Member give way?

Mr Shannon: Barry, I will give you a chance, boy — that is all you are getting. [Laughter.]

Mr McElduff: A LeasCheann Comhairle, I have visited Sellafield. Is the Member surprised to learn that inside the plant there is a poster stating that it has been 21 days since the last minor accident? It is as though the poster is exhorting the workers to persevere towards the magic figure of 40 days. Is the Member surprised that such a poster exists inside the Sellafield plant?

Mr Shannon: I have visited the Sellafield plant and I have seen the poster. Every business in the country has a book in which it must record accidents that have taken place. That happens everywhere, and it is no different from what staff must do in factories in West Tyrone or South Down. I thank the Member for his intervention. I was a bit worried when I gave him a chance, but it was not that bad.

The benefits of nuclear energy must be taken on board. They far outweigh the risks, which is contrary to what my colleague across the Chamber is saying. The fact is that as much as every Member would prefer all energy to come from green sources — and I mean “green” in the best sense of the word — that would neither harm people or the environment, provision is nowhere near that stage.

Provision of energy from water turbines is being tested in Strangford Lough. That is an example of what can be done. However, the turbines can produce only enough energy for 1,000 homes. There are 20,000 homes in Newtownards and 40,000 in the whole of Strangford. Undoubtedly, the time will come when renewable energy sources can and will provide the necessary energy for the future. However, that is not in the foreseeable future, so other sources, including nuclear power, must be considered.

If nuclear power is dismissed, that leaves us with fossil fuels, which will create a dilemma for us in the near future. The first environmental problem is obvious, and the UK Government have pledged to lessen carbon dioxide emissions. However, were Northern Ireland were to be completely reliant on fossil fuels, that would significantly increase rather than decrease our carbon dioxide emissions. Therefore, that is not a viable option.

Another problem is that if Northern Ireland were dependent on fossil fuels, it would be more dependent on other nations. That could be used against us, and the stronger the hold that oil-rich countries would have on us, the more we would be held to ransom.

We cannot always rely on the Middle East if we are to do without nuclear energy. If we rely only on fossil fuels and renewable energy we will undoubtedly pay the price on the world stage. That is something that we should not even contemplate. I am conscious of the time, Mr Deputy Speaker.

There are problems associated with nuclear energy production; however, those, and safety issues, must be taken in context. For example, when someone goes to the dentist, his or her teeth might be X-rayed. In hospital, there is a probability that he or she will be X-rayed. The microwave in a kitchen is another example. All of those factors contribute. Nuclear facilities account for only 0.4% of total exposure. We must consider all the issues involved in nuclear energy production. We must not ignore the safety issues, but we must learn from them. Windscale and Chernobyl were awful disasters. However, the lessons on safety have been learned, and safety is paramount.

In a perfect world we could do without nuclear energy and use only renewable energy. However, we are not yet in that perfect world — far from it. For that reason, the benefits far outweigh the risks. I support the DUP's amendment. I urge the Members on the Benches opposite to me to do the same.

Mr Deputy Speaker: That intervention generated a lot of energy.

5.15 pm

Mr W Clarke: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. It is foolish to dismiss the relentless quest for nuclear power that seems to drive current British Government policy. It is presented as a panacea that will address future energy shortages and — somewhat perversely — is marketed as a clean, green alternative to the burning of fossil fuels, and as a way of meeting EU directives on pollution. Therefore, it is ironic that support for nuclear-generated energy is gaining momentum in Britain and the EU on the 50th anniversary of the serious fire that occurred at Windscale nuclear power plant, now better known as Sellafield.

A recent report into that incident found that at least twice as much radioactive material was released into our atmosphere than was initially thought. People living in south Down and on the east coast of Ireland have had to live with the consequences ever since. Nuclear power can never be a viable option. The devastation caused 21 years ago at Chernobyl, and its after-effects which will be felt for many more years, should be enough to make us all stop in our tracks and think again. Sinn Féin is favour of a nuclear-free Ireland. We should seek to decommission existing nuclear facilities, not build more of them.

Mr Kennedy: Is the Member aware that the local government district area of Newry and Mourne is a nuclear-free zone?

Mr W Clarke: Thank you for that contribution. Sinn Féin favours a shift towards efficient and cost-effective renewable energy, with particular emphasis on solar and wind power. Major investment should be directed towards hydrogen technology. There are growing concerns that there is, currently, an attempt to repackage nuclear energy and to present it as a safe, green alternative. It is anything but that. Anyone who has examined the safety record of the Cumbria-based Sellafield nuclear processing plant will be horrified by what the British Government proposes. Communities up and down the eastern Irish seaboard will be concerned about the re-opening of that debate, considering that the majority of Britain's current nuclear facilities are sited a few short miles from the Irish coastline — a few short miles from my home in south Down.

Sellafield remains the most unsafe nuclear site in western Europe. Its history has been characterised by a catalogue of errors, safety lapses and failure to comply with EU inspections. Sinn Féin will continue to build alliances to force the closure of the Sellafield facility and to promote a clean, green alternative to nuclear power. Public opinion is the key to closing Sellafield and ensuring the entire shutdown of the British nuclear industry. By adopting the motion we will send a clear message to the British Government that there are viable and safe alternatives to nuclear energy.

However, British public opinion must be brought to a point at which it demands such measures from its Government. The time for ignoring the dangers of Sellafield and other installations must be brought to an end. In whatever we do, it is important that we are mindful of the fact that influencing British public opinion is essential to undermining the efforts of British Nuclear Fuels plc to present nuclear energy as an acceptable alternative to renewable energy. Nuclear power stations are expensive, difficult to build and maintain and are a threat to public health, as well as being considered key legitimate targets for extremists.

Nuclear energy has been used in England, Scotland and Wales for more than 50 years, and there is still no agreed plan for the disposal of highly dangerous nuclear waste that poses a massive health risk.

Energy policy, North and South, must focus on developing efficient and renewable energy sources. Shifting policy from the inefficient use of fossil and nuclear fuels towards energy efficiency and renewable energy sources is imperative if runaway climate change is to be addressed. The nuclear industry spin machine has put a lot of effort into promoting nuclear energy. However, regardless of how effective their lobbying has been, the fact remains that nuclear energy production is not safe, secure, financially viable or reliable. We must get that message to the public loud and clear. People are rightly fearful of the dangers posed by nuclear power; I urge Members from every political party to support the motion. Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle.

Mr G Robinson: Once again, the Assembly is debating a topic in which it may have a genuine interest but over which it has no jurisdiction — it is a reserved matter. Therefore, while the topic is extremely important, I wonder whether our time would not have been better spent debating an area of policy for which we do have direct responsibility. Having read the motion and considered its implications, I suspect that it is nothing more than an attempt to provide a big stick with which to beat the British Government.

There is much disagreement about whether, 50 years ago, Northern Ireland and the South were touched by the cloud from the fire in pile 1. As recently as this month, reports in the South's press mentioned that disagreement. Indeed, they went further and stated that a cloud of pollutants may just have touched the east coast, and that if it had been affected, it would have been affected very slightly. A 2005 study went further by stating that no radioactive materials reached the east or the north-east coast. Most Members will take from those statements that the accident 50 years ago is unlikely to have had the health effects implied in the motion.

There has been mention of raised levels of cancer in isolated pockets, but if the levels are as high as has been implied, the statistical evidence would be much greater. However, that is not to take away from the distress that has been experienced by the families who have suffered.

The press have also quoted John Garland, formerly of the UK Atomic Energy Authority, as saying that any radiation has now decayed and poses no ongoing risk. That is a welcome assurance.

There is a further concern, no doubt regarding water pollution, especially the effect of pollution on the Irish Sea. A UK Marine SACs (special area of conservation) Project report on radioactive substances stated that seaborne pollutant levels around Sellafield were below the level that would be expected, and that there was no conclusive proof that any pollutants had damaged the environment. However, that does not mean that there should be any relaxation in the monitoring and testing of seawater to ensure continued safety. Only by requesting constant independent monitoring and research can we be sure that pollution levels are kept to an absolute minimum. It is worth noting that in June a significant milestone in the decommissioning progress of the Windscale site was reached, with the removal of the 42 isotope cartridges from pile 2. That, along with other moves, will help reduce the levels of pollutants in the sea, which are already at a lower level than expected. That is very welcome progress. I support the amendment.

Mrs Hanna: I will briefly outline some of the comments that were made in the debate. Simon Hamilton moved the amendment and made a good argument for nuclear power. That is fine, but I did not come to the Chamber today to debate nuclear power — I came to debate Sellafield and Windscale. I would be quite happy to discuss nuclear power on another occasion, if Mr George Robinson would not consider it too much of a waste of our time. The issue should be discussed. However, I came to discuss Windscale and Sellafield because of the new report, and because of the scientific data that has continuously been coming on stream for the last 50 years.

Sam Gardiner questioned the facts that I presented. I cannot remember the exact words that he used, but anything that I said is based on scientific fact. I know that it happened 50 years ago, but Members should talk to experts about contamination in the Irish Sea from radioactivity because that is still happening. I hope that I did not go on too much about hurt and pain — I was talking about the fallout from cancer and leukaemia.

Unsurprisingly, Brian Wilson of the Green Party said that he supports the closure of Sellafield and is against nuclear power. David Simpson made a good argument for nuclear power, and there may be a debate on that in the future. My colleague from South Down P J Bradley obviously feels strongly that there is evidence that Sellafield should close. Jim Shannon always makes interesting comments, hedging his bets both ways. He said that the production of fuel and energy is a risky business, which impacts on wildlife — before comparing it to my microwave oven. If it is so risky, perhaps it should be taken really seriously. It is a serious issue, which I take very seriously.

Willie Clarke, one of the proposers of the motion, was obviously strong in his support of the closure of Sellafield. George Robinson suggested that we should not waste our time on debates such as this. I hope that the Assembly continues to debate serious health-and-safety issues, otherwise there is no point in our being here.

Even if Members cannot support the motion or amendment No 2, they should at least think about Sellafield and what happened there. Go and visit the site and ask about the contamination of the Irish Sea. It is important to keep an open mind on this matter. I am happy to have a debate on nuclear power, but today's debate was on the closure of Sellafield, which I want to happen in the near future. There must be an agreed timescale between the British Government and Irish Government for the closure of Sellafield, as well as a serious investigation of the health implications that still exist for those who live within a radius of 100 miles.

Mr Newton: The comments of my colleague David Simpson in the early part of the debate were very telling: who in this Chamber actually understands nuclear physics? I regret the implications of Carmel Hanna's comments because the motion represents an old and backward-looking argument. If we are debating Sellafield and Windscale, why are we not looking forward to the future of energy production? David Simpson pointed out that, in his constituency — never mind the whole of the United Kingdom — an energy crisis is approaching, which must be addressed.

Mrs Hanna: Will the Member give way?

Mr Newton: No; I have only five minutes. The Sinn Féin proposer of the motion used glib phrases about the concerns that exist throughout continental Europe about nuclear power, when roughly 70% of energy in France is derived from nuclear fuel. There is no reason why we cannot all express our concerns about nuclear fuel, and we should do. However, concerns should also be expressed about the risks involved in all forms of energy generation. Whether those are risks to the individual or to the environment, there are always risks.

It is also telling that Carmel thought that Simon Hamilton and David Simpson made a good argument. However, that is not an argument that she is willing to take on board, because she did not want to discuss nuclear fuel. Simon Hamilton highlighted the fact that nuclear fuel is inexpensive; that the energy is derived from the most concentrated source; that the waste is more compact; that it is easy to transport; and that it has no greenhouse or acid-rain effects.

5.30 pm

Sam Gardiner, in his contribution, quite rightly pointed out the environmental advantages of nuclear fuel and called for a rational debate on the subject. That would be extremely welcome.

I have sympathy for the point that Carmel Hanna raised about health concerns, as there are concerns from various sources. She referred to her own family, and I am sure that there are no Members whose families have not suffered. Carmel Hanna was willing to admit that other sources may have caused those health problems.

Mrs Hanna: I acknowledged that in my speech.

Mr Newton: I agree with the Member, and I pay tribute to her on that point.

I am not sure what Brian Wilson was saying. He said that an alternative to nuclear power should be considered, but he did not say what that alternative should be.

Barry McElduff said that he went to the Sellafield plant to have a look around. He saw a poster saying that it had been 21 days since there had been a minor accident. I am not sure what point he was making, but it is common in industry to post the health and safety record so that people can see it — the greater the number of days without an accident, the better.

Danny Kennedy said that Newry and Mourne was a nuclear-free zone; I did not realise that, so at least I have learned something from the debate. It is good to know that the councillors in that area have voted to keep the area nuclear free.

Willie Clarke's contribution was all about bashing the Brits. He had no argument at all, and his comments were quite spurious. A report in 'The Economist' says that more Britons support nuclear power than oppose it.

Nuclear energy is here to stay and must continue to be monitored as professionally as possible. Although it is not a devolved matter, the House should consider ways of ensuring that it continues on everyone's behalf. To call for power station closures is to be like the fantasy character of old Spanish literature, Don Quixote, who attacks windmills because he believes them to be ferocious giants. Such a call is just as much of a waste of time.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Clearly, we have a lot of bright sparks.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The subject that has been discussed is an emotive one. As someone who represents a constituency on the east coast, it has a personal resonance. George Robinson said that, possibly, the accident in 1957 at Windscale touched the east coast slightly. If Mr Robinson had taken the time to read the statistics he might have thought differently. For instance, within two years of that accident, 28 babies in the Dundalk Bay area were born with Down's syndrome. That was way above the national average.

In the Newry and Mourne area, a study done by the Mayo clinic around 20 years ago indicates that the incidents of multiple sclerosis in our area is one of the highest in the world. As someone whose brother died from MS, I can empathise with that. Congenital health defects, such as Friedreich's ataxia, Prader-Willi syndrome and Pierre Robin syndrome, which is an extremely rare congenital condition, are all found in our area.

Therefore, although the incidence of such illnesses may be dismissed as insignificant, the people who are directly affected do not consider that to be the case.

The high rates of cancer, which continue to grow, have been mentioned. Twenty years ago breast cancer affected about one in nine women in my area; it now affects one in four. There seems to be a cavalier attitude towards nuclear power, as was most recently illustrated in America when live nuclear warheads were flown across the USA at the behest of the United States Air Force.

Simon Hamilton said that safety is built in to the nuclear power system. However, that does not necessarily mean that it is safe. On the contrary; there is no proof that it is particularly safe. The health-and-safety rules at Sellafield have been mentioned, and Barry McElduff referred to the poster there that told of the last accident being 21 days before his visit — I wonder whether the poster in Chernobyl stated that disaster was imminent.

The political fallout since 1957, which Mrs Hanna mentioned, has continued. Investigative journalism has targeted the industry. A recurrent theme of Members' contributions was the shroud of secrecy that surrounds the nuclear industry. If Windscale or Sellafield — or whatever they want to call it — is so safe, why was it not built in the south of England instead of on the Cumbrian coast? I have represented at tribunals people who have particular medical problems. All but one of the approximately 40 people suffering from ME who I represented comes from Kilkeel, Rostrevor or Warrenpoint, which are all located along the same stretch of coast. As the crow flies, Sellafield is about 67 miles from Warrenpoint and Carlingford Lough. That is another example of the impact of the Sellafield accident.

Mr Gardiner talked about being a committed environmentalist, and he referred to the "dubious evidence" concerning the 1957 incident. He spoke about the improving standards in nuclear plants. I wonder what "dubious evidence" he has to show that that is the case. He talked about economic, rather than nuclear, meltdown. He referred to the First World War, the Holocaust, and the Vietnam War: those are all man-made disasters, as is nuclear power.

One of my relatives was a prisoner of war in Nagasaki when the second American bomb was dropped. Mr Simpson said that nuclear power is "of benefit to mankind." If Mr Simpson had spoken to my relative, he would have found that he disagreed. He lived into his eighties and suffered mental-health problems as a direct result of the bomb.

Mr Simpson also talked about nuclear physics. However, one does not need to be a mechanic to know how a car works. Everyone can attest to the dangers of nuclear power and the results of nuclear accidents. It has been portrayed today as a safe form of energy. I totally disagree, and I support the motion. Go raibh maith agaibh.

Question put, That amendment No 1 be made.

The Assembly divided: Ayes 36; Noes 39.

AYES

Mr Armstrong, Mr Beggs, Mr Bresland, Lord Browne, Mr Buchanan, Mr T Clarke, Mr Craig, Mr Cree, Mr Dodds, Mr Easton, Mr Elliott, Sir Reg Empey, Mrs Foster, Mr Gardiner, Mr Hamilton, Mr McCausland, Mr I McCrea, Dr W McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr McQuillan, Lord Morrow, Mr Moutray, Mr Newton, Mr Paisley Jnr, Rev Dr Ian Paisley, Mr Poots, Mr G Robinson, Mrs I Robinson, Mr P Robinson, Mr Ross, Mr Shannon, Mr Simpson, Mr Spratt, Mr Storey, Mr Weir, Mr S Wilson.

Tellers for the Ayes: Mr McQuillan and Mr G Robinson.

NOES

Ms Anderson, Mr Attwood, Mr Boylan, Mrs M Bradley, Mr P J Bradley, Mr Brady, Mr Brolly, Mr Burns, Mr Butler, Mr W Clarke, Mr Durkan, Mr Ford, Mr Gallagher, Ms Gildernew, Mrs Hanna, Mrs D Kelly, Mr A Maginness, Mr P Maskey, Ms J McCann,

*Mr McCartney, Dr McDonnell, Mr McElduff,
Mrs McGill, Mr McGlone, Mr M McGuinness,
Mr McHugh, Mr McKay, Mr McLaughlin, Mr Molloy,
Mr Murphy, Mr Neeson, Ms Ni Chuilín, Mr O'Dowd,
Mrs O'Neill, Mr P Ramsey, Ms S Ramsey, Ms Ritchie,
Ms Ruane, Mr B Wilson.*

Tellers for the Noes: Mr Brady and Mr McKay.

Question accordingly negatived.

Question put, That amendment No 2 be made.

The Assembly divided: Ayes 39; Noes 37.

AYES

*Ms Anderson, Mr Attwood, Mr Boylan, Mrs M Bradley,
Mr P J Bradley, Mr Brady, Mr Brolly, Mr Burns,
Mr Butler, Mr W Clarke, Mr Durkan, Mr Ford,
Mr Gallagher, Ms Gildernew, Mrs Hanna, Mrs D Kelly,
Mr A Maginness, Mr P Maskey, Ms J McCann,
Mr McCartney, Dr McDonnell, Mr McElduff,
Mrs McGill, Mr McGlone, Mr M McGuinness,
Mr McHugh, Mr McKay, Mr McLaughlin, Mr Molloy,
Mr Murphy, Mr Neeson, Ms Ni Chuilín, Mr O'Dowd,
Mrs O'Neill, Mr P Ramsey, Ms S Ramsey, Ms Ritchie,
Ms Ruane, Mr B Wilson.*

Tellers for the Ayes: Mr P J Bradley and Mr A Maginness.

NOES

*Mr Armstrong, Mr Beggs, Mr Bresland, Lord Browne,
Mr Buchanan, Mr T Clarke, Mr Craig, Mr Cree,
Mr Dodds, Mr Easton, Mr Elliott, Sir Reg Empey,
Mrs Foster, Mr Gardiner, Mr Hamilton, Mr McCallister,
Mr McCausland, Mr I McCrea, Dr W McCrea,
Miss McIlveen, Mr McQuillan, Lord Morrow,
Mr Moutray, Mr Newton, Mr Paisley Jnr, Rev Dr Ian
Paisley, Mr Poots, Mr G Robinson, Mrs I Robinson,
Mr P Robinson, Mr Ross, Mr Shannon, Mr Simpson,
Mr Spratt, Mr Storey, Mr Weir, Mr S Wilson.*

Tellers for the Noes: Mr McQuillan and Mr G Robinson

Question accordingly agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly expresses concern at the findings of the report on the impact of the Windscale Piles accident at the Sellafield nuclear plant and the implications that this has for the health and well-being of people living on these islands and in Europe; calls upon the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make public any data which it may have available in relation to this matter; and further calls upon the Government to discontinue all operations at the Sellafield nuclear plant within an agreed timescale, acceptable to the Government of the Republic of Ireland and the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Adjourned at 6.02 pm.

Committee Stages

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Thursday 27 September 2007

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr David McNarry (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Francie Brolly
Lord Browne
Mr Nelson McCausland
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Pat Ramsey
Mr Jim Shannon

Witnesses:

Mrs Anne Connolly	}	North Eastern Education and Library Board
Mr William McCartney
Mr Gordon Topping
Ms Patricia McKeown	}	UNISON
Mr Jonathan Swallow
Mr John Corey	}	Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance
Ms Mary McVeigh
Ms Alison Millar

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): I welcome the delegation from the North Eastern Education and Library Board — Mr Billy McCartney, Mrs Anne Connolly and Mr Gordon Topping.

Mr William McCartney (North Eastern Education and Library Board): I thank you for your invitation.

Mr Gordon Topping (North Eastern Education and Library Board): Thank you for inviting us. We are delighted to be able to present our views on the Libraries Bill. As an introduction, we will present four or five issues that will give an overview of our position.

The Library Service is primarily an education service, and its origins in the nineteenth century show that it was designed to be education for the masses and was an opportunity for second-chance education. The synergy between the Library Service and the education service is the key determinant. Therefore, during the consultation we expressed the view that the Library Service should be part of the education authority. We did not believe that there was a need to establish another quango. We believed that amalgamation could deliver enhanced economies of scale and that it would be more efficient and avoid some of the problems that we will face, such as the separation of the schools' library service from the public library service.

That was our original view. However, direct rule Ministers decided that a regional library authority would be created, and once that decision had been made, we worked closely with the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure to bring about the Libraries Bill. We have been fully consulted, and I pay tribute to the Department's officials for the way that they have worked with us on that.

There are four other issues to which we would like to draw to your attention and which are important in relation to the Bill. First, there is the implementation date. Until a few days ago, we had serious concerns about that, but I understand that the Assembly has given the Committee more time to consult and to conduct additional research and investigation into, and scrutiny of, the Bill. I believe that the extension is until the end February 2008, and if that is the case then I assume it will be difficult to meet the implementation date of 1 April 2008. Therefore, although we have issues about the deadline of 1 April, that may not be a problem in the near future.

Secondly, there are staffing issues. Obviously, this is a time of uncertainty for many Library Service staff, and the board wishes to reduce that uncertainty as far as possible. We must enhance staff morale, create certainty where there is uncertainty and ensure that library staff know what they will be doing and where their jobs will be located.

Thirdly, there is the issue of savings versus costs. I am sure that the Committee will want to follow that up. The board believes that an initial investment must be made to produce savings and that the scale of that investment may be significant.

Finally, we would like to draw the Committee's attention to the size and composition of the library authority's board and are prepared to discuss the governance arrangement with the Committee. Those are our concerns, and we are willing to discuss them with the Committee.

Mr McNarry: I am absorbing your report. I wonder whether you share the Committee's concerns about certain problems it has perceived. In your submission, you state that start-up costs must be properly identified and funded. The Department stated that it has set aside £670,000 for start-up costs. Do you agree with that figure? Do you think that that amount will not be enough, and that further money will be required for start-up costs in the second year?

Mrs Anne Connolly (North Eastern Education and Library Board): We have concerns about start-up costs. The chief executive said that in order to divest, the Department must invest, but we are concerned that £670,000 is not enough. We understand that the money is to cover part-year salaries for the chief executive designate and other senior staff, a support team, the rent of temporary premises and other consultancy costs.

However, we believe that other major start-up costs have not been brought into the equation. For example, the establishment of the identity of the new authority will cost quite a bit of money; so, too, may the implementation of a new staffing structure. At present, it is not known whether recruitment and redundancy costs have been factored into the start-up costs. The establishment of permanent headquarters and a regional structure will have to be funded. Activities to unite staff and help them to identify with the new authority must also be considered. Six hundred and seventy thousand pounds is a paltry sum of money with which to do what must be done.

Mr McNarry: How much is required? That question does not need a response immediately. Part of the problem with discussions is that they do not always provide enough information; for example, as to whether 10% or 20% or more is needed. Therefore, if the question is asked, the Committee must be able to state the amount that will be required. I understand that I may be asking you to stick your necks out. However, if you are prepared to do so, the Committee would be grateful to receive the information.

The Chairperson: With regard to the point that Gordon raised, extension of the Committee Stage of the Bill has been granted until 25 February 2008. I do not believe that anyone around the table anticipates that it will take until then to complete the business; however, there is flexibility. The Committee is confident that the Bill will be dealt with before that date.

Mr Topping: From our point of view, there may be an issue as regards the implementation date and ensuring that the authority is set up properly. There are also other cost factors.

Mr P Ramsey: Following on from Mr McNarry's comments about the savings that the Department has declared will be made, and taking on board your concerns about the overestimation of those savings, what is the North Eastern Education and Library Board's budget for staffing and revenue costs?

Also, the Department of Education funds the education and library boards' early years development programmes. How will your delivery of programme be affected when the changeover occurs?

Finally, what about the money relating to the literacy and numeracy programmes? Will the new board be able to provide the same product and remain a centre of excellence for education?

Mrs Connolly: We have concerns about the proposed savings for several reasons, not least because they are based on assumptions, and we cannot be sure that all the assumed scenarios will happen.

I am the chief librarians' representative on the Northern Ireland steering group, and we work closely with our colleagues in education to access funding for early-years learning. The North Eastern Education and Library Board has also accessed funding through the Northern Ireland Pre-school Playgroup Association to employ an extra member of staff for the early-years scheme. However, there are concerns. For example, funding for Bookstart will rest with the Department of Education, and we are concerned that we will not be able to continue to deliver the quality of service that we have now.

I missed the beginning of your question.

Mr P Ramsey: It was about the overestimated costs.

Mrs Connolly: The costing has been based on assumptions, and one example that worries us is the assumption that a number of people will choose retirement. They might not, because there is no compulsion to do so, and therefore that assumption cannot be backed up.

I am also concerned about the figures that have been cited for redundancy costs. Even if that money is put up — and we do not yet know whether there will be any money — the payback time will be at least two years, as we know from experience, so the savings have been overestimated. Additionally, the figures for planning for next year show a £1 million shortfall overall among the five boards, and given that we must add on the cost of corporate services, savings look less and less likely.

Mr P Ramsey: What is your budget for library provision?

Mrs Connolly: Our budget for the current year is £5.3 million, and we spend 62% of that on staff. That is quite generous, because we have increased our library opening hours. We have 29 ordinary static libraries and we have increased the opening hours for all of the big libraries.

Mr Topping: We are also the lead board for the electronic libraries project, and our budget for that is about £4.3 million.

Lord Browne: You seem fairly confident that the Bill will bring about the changes necessary to deliver a modern, efficient library service; but do any specific clauses give you concern? Is there anything that you think should be included?

Mr Topping: I mentioned in my initial statement that we have concerns about several issues: one is about the governance arrangements. Originally, in the draft Bill, 10 people were supposed to be involved in the new board, and that number has now been increased to 15. It could be argued that that number is still rather small, particularly if an adequate committee structure is to be set up.

Another issue worrying us about the governance arrangements is the composition of the board. The anticipated arrangements will follow the Nolan principles and will go through the normal Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments process. However, the Bill is not establishing any type of representation requirement; for example, the new board might not be representative geographically or take into account local interests. We would like that provision to be included, so that stakeholders can become involved in the new governance arrangements.

We are also concerned about the need to move rapidly on the staff-transfer scheme, in particular. I mentioned the problems that staff face, such as uncertainty, low morale and concerns about their future. The sooner we can get the staff-transfer scheme under way, the better. We have always regarded all our staff as being board staff, whether they work in the Library Service or the Education Service. However, the difficulty is that some staff will go to the education authority while another group will go to the library authority, and perhaps at different times.

Over the past 15 years, we have been developing a system that manages staff in a corporate way across funding boundaries. Therefore, one of the difficulties will be in separating the staff because if the transfer systems develop at different speeds library staff could find themselves being transferred before education staff, or vice-versa, and we would be left to pick up the pieces. We could end up with staff for whom we have no funding, or we could have education staff who will have nothing to do.

Lord Browne: Would there be an adverse effect on staff if the library authority were not formed by 2008?

Mr Topping: Not necessarily. However, more certainty must be built into the system to ensure that the date for the library authority's formation becomes a deadline. That must be a realistic date. I did not believe that 1 April 2008 was ever an achievable target. All staff must be treated equally and at the same time. That would allow us to manage the transfer more effectively.

Mr P Maskey: I am not sure whether my question has already been asked. In your submission, you have stated your concerns about the Libraries Bill. You said that you were concerned that the library authority will be established before the education and skills authority. What are the problems with that? What risks are there to your board if the new library authority is not established by 1 April 2008?

Mr Topping: When the library authority and the education and skills authority are established, we will have to split the services — the schools' library service is funded by the Department of Education, and the public library service is funded by the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. In addition, some people are currently being paid from two separate budgets. However, they are board staff and are being paid partly by the Library Service and partly by the education service. For example, Mrs Connolly is the director of library and corporate services, and part of her salary comes from DCAL and part of it comes from the education service. When the new library authority is set up, we will have to divide the staff so that they are paid by one Department. If, for example, a member of staff decides that they do not want to transfer to the library authority, or if it is not appropriate for them to do so, we could be left with a person whose salary is transferred to the library authority. That could be a major issue.

Mr P Ramsey: You could also have two redundancies.

Mr Topping: Yes; that is another matter. There are issues around staff being treated with equality and how the service would be delivered by the new library authority if staff do not have enough time to set up the systems, processes and structures when it comes into operation. As an organisation, we will be facing problems such as paying staff, processing accounts, monitoring finance, and purchasing materials.

I do not think that there are any risks if the transfers to the library authority and the education and skills authority are managed simultaneously and through the same process.

Mr Shannon: Thank you for your presentation. Concern has been expressed, not only by yourselves but by others, about how support-services costs for the new authority have been calculated. The fear seems to be that those costs will be greater than anticipated. Do you have any figures indicating the cost? Also, do you have a view on the best location for support services?

Mrs Connolly: We are examining the Deloitte report, and we hope to have discussions with DCAL and colleagues about the concerns that the report has raised. On initial reading, we believe that the costs have been underestimated. We have no figures, but we are prepared to work on that. Also, if we are thinking about efficiency, support services should be at a shared location.

In our view, sharing support services with the education side would be an option. Another option would be to share support services with other agencies in DCAL.

Mr Brolly: The fundamental concern in your submission, and in others, is that the new library authority may become clinical, with officials living in an ivory tower and losing contact with developments on the ground. How can we ensure that the library authority keeps close contact with the education side and local councils and maintains the kind of “warmth” of the Library Service, as opposed to becoming an organisation that may become clinical?

Mr McCartney: As a user of the library service, as well as being chairman of the library committee, I connect with my local library. I know the staff; they know me, and that essence must be maintained. There has to be a local connection. I hope that whatever happens as regards the councils they will take a keen interest in the libraries in their area.

I visited a library in the United States in which local volunteers had formed a “Friends of the Library” group. Establishing such groups here, with the help of the local councils, would maintain the local connection. I foresee that the new library authority will be large and efficient, but it will need to maintain a local dimension. There should be a subregional dimension, since, in order to cover the whole of Northern Ireland, the library authority has to be quite large. Councils will have a role to play in that. The original concept of coterminosity should be revisited to assist in that process.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your presentation.

I formally welcome Patricia McKeown and Jonathan Swallow from UNISON.

Ms Patricia McKeown (UNISON): The Committee has UNISON’s written submission in which, of necessity, we have adopted a twin-track approach. Members will know from the first part of our submission that we do not believe it right to proceed with a separate library authority for a number of reasons. We want to return to the original concept of the review of public administration (RPA), which was about achieving better, more effective delivery of public services.

We were very concerned when we saw a proposal in the RPA that would lead to the establishment of a separate quango for libraries, because we could not see sense in that. The proposal seemed to be more about that part of the public service fitting in with the administration of the state rather than looking for the most sensible location for library services.

From an early stage, members of UNISON who work in and service the education and library board sector have been of the clear view that libraries should be part of the education system, and that, whatever type of education structure Northern Ireland ends up with, that is where they should stay.

The fairly widespread public view is that we need to address the existing proliferation of quangos instead of creating new ones. That has been pretty much an all-party argument for a very long time, and for UNISON it is still extremely valid.

We looked at how library services are constructed in Great Britain — where we are the main union in the library sector — and in the Republic of Ireland. Neither jurisdiction has anything vaguely resembling a single authority for libraries. Library services in both of those jurisdictions are constructed in such a way that they are within democratic control, and elected representatives and the community are involved in delivery.

The other issue for Northern Ireland is that the small scale and geographic spread of our libraries do not easily lead to the creation of a single authority to control them. There are a number of reasons for that. The proposed authority would face very significant challenges in building critical mass. There would be particular problems in how corporate overheads, and any other support costs, would be absorbed. The financial and explanatory memorandum did not address that subject in any detail, which UNISON found disappointing. Undoubtedly, that will bear down on the service and employment.

The strength of public feeling in local communities has been seen recently, with the proposed closure of branch libraries. UNISON cannot see how the establishment of a stand-alone body, which would then be required to deal with a range of overheads and other support services, would not end up with a future programme of library closures in order to fund the existence of that body. That concept is completely opposite to that of the RPA, which is about how resources can be channelled down to the front-line services and into communities. An effective structure for doing so already exists in the education and library boards. People are already employed to carry out overhead and support tasks for a very large critical mass of education workers, and they deliver that service in a very cost-effective way for our libraries.

UNISON also has very clear views about the critical links among libraries, wider education and lifelong learning. Those links will be damaged if libraries are taken out of the education sector and left to stand alone. Education reform is outside the brief of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure. I realise that the Committee is concerned about the funding of libraries, but we have consistently argued that there needs to be greater crossover among Departments in matters relating to public-service delivery. That is how we should proceed to achieve the most effective services. We saw the recent ministerial announcement about the delay of the education reform structure, and that will have an immediate bearing on the work of the Committee.

The Committee should advise the Assembly that it should not proceed with the draft legislation that proposes a stand-alone library service. That is not in the best interests of the public — particularly in local and rural communities — and it will not achieve a cohesive, all-embracing delivery of education in schools, the workplace and the wider lifelong learning agenda. That is not the best way forward, and it would be better for the Library Service to remain within the education sector. We do not believe that the draft legislation is capable of being amended to that effect, and its recommendations should be set aside.

If that is not the view that is arrived at by the Committee or the Assembly — and I hope that that is not the case — we will make other proposals about the legislation as it stands. In particular, we will make proposals regarding the protection of the workers we represent. We have said some technical things about that in relation to the current draft.

Mr Jonathan Swallow (UNISON): If the legislation proceeds, there are two issues about which we are concerned. Health reform — the creation of the five trusts — proceeded without an agreed transfer scheme and framework. By the time it happened, we were on the forty-eighth draft. That was a fundamental deficiency, and it was not on the trade union side — we were trying to get it right. That creates a risk of litigation and concern for all involved in the health sector. An agreed transfer scheme would be of enormous benefit to all parties in the process, not just the trade union side. There can be statutory provision for that through the use of the word “agreed” and its definition in the explanatory memorandum.

I am also concerned — and it is the wider policy of the trade union movement on all such reform — that Northern Ireland is clogged up with so many industrial tribunals, with enormous waiting lists. That is not a good way of solving problems. UNISON is proposing a third-party process — unique to the RPA — whereby any individual or group could take an issue in respect of transfer, or failure to abide by transfer schemes or frameworks, and have a speedy resolution. The legislation — if it proceeds — would be enormously strengthened by the inclusion of such provisions.

Mr P Ramsey: It is important to look at the library provision in the legislation, and we are questioning a number of the submissions that have been made. You have expressed concerns on literacy and lifelong learning, and the important role of early-years development. How do you feel about those areas coming under a single authority that would be funded exclusively by the Department of Education, rather than DCAL or the education boards? Your submission also expresses your concern that there is no grievance procedure in the existing library provision; I am also concerned about that.

How would you like to see the Bill amended to ensure that different mechanisms will be in place to give resolution and comfort to employees with grievances?

Lord Browne: Are you concerned that setting up the library authority before the education and skills authority will have adverse effects for your members? How will that affect morale? Should the two bodies be set up in synchronisation?

Ms McKeown: I will answer Lord Browne’s question. We do not want the Assembly to set up a separate library authority, but setting it up on a different timescale to the reorganisation of the education sector would be a disaster. We are already experiencing problems in the Health Service, where there has been some reorganisation in a significant part of the service while the other part has been, quite rightly, stalled — and we were advocates of that stalling. The difficulty is that there are big morale issues for a large number of staff who are uncertain about the future.

Low morale and uncertainty have a knock-on impact on service delivery, and we hope that that will be put right. However, there is a big lesson to be learned when it comes to the education and library sector. Somebody else has already got a mess on their hands, and we do not want to see the same thing replicated in the education and library sector. We have made that very clear. The current employers feel exactly the same way, and it would be as big a nightmare for them as it would be for the unions.

Mr Swallow: I shall pick up the point on literacy. I had the privilege of working with the Belfast Education and Library Board and the unions on a review of literacy provision. The clear outcome of that review was that we should get all hands on deck, get focused, and integrate services, because the review found that 25% of pupils in Belfast were functionally illiterate when they left school. Devastating statistics require urgent responses. However, we found that, although we could form partnerships with other bodies, the more issues we had under direct control and under direct inclusion in the literacy strategy, the more effective that strategy could be. Losing that organic link with the Library Service would be profoundly damaging. Let us remember that literacy is a central part of the health equality strategy: people who are literate are also healthier. This is a fundamental policy issue that crosses several Departments and we must be careful that we do not weaken the cohesion to focus through the education service.

We work with employers on lifelong learning literacy training for people who have been let down by the schools system. We should not be doing that; we should be running other forms of training jointly with employers, and the schools system should be producing pupils with literacy skills.

As for grievances, trade unions will negotiate effective internal grievance systems, whatever structures emerge. That issue arises if the system were to fail during the transfer process. We are seeking a fail-safe third-party mechanism across the review of public administration as the best way of giving people confidence and belief that they will be treated fairly during the difficult circumstances of merging.

Ms McKeown: That is also very detailed work. The Committee has documentation of the work being done under the auspices of the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions in the central RPA negotiations. That work is at a fairly advanced stage and involves the type of amendment that would be necessary to give effect to it in the legislation — which we hope will not proceed anyway.

Mr Shannon: We probably all agree that the new library authority is unlikely to be established before 1 April 2008. If that were the case, would there be any risks or disadvantages for your members?

Ms McKeown: I cannot see any risks at all in the status quo.

Mr Brolly: Mr Swallow mentioned cohesion. Everyone is worried that the new library authority may become separated from the grass roots. Ms McKeown said that the legislation is not capable of amendment anyway, but if the worst comes to the worst — in Ms McKeown's terms — and there is a new library authority, how could cohesion be retained, and how could legislation ensure that we keep in touch with the grass roots in education, local authorities and so on?

Ms McKeown: One way would be for the new library authority to have democratic representation of communities and elected representatives on its board, and other interest groups, such as other public-sector providers.

We must be much more imaginative when considering new structures. We are fearful of unaccountable quangos — there is no imperative on them to do business collectively and cohesively.

Mr Brolly: Do you also welcome the inclusion of members of trades unions and their representatives?

Ms McKeown: Yes. However, we believe that we ought to be included as of right, rather than go through a vetting system that requires us to measure up to somebody else's standards.

The Chairperson: Could you address Jim's question, Patricia?

Ms McKeown: We do not think that there are risks with the status quo. Obviously, people are nervous because everyone wants to know of what the new structures will consist. The sensible decision is to wait, rather than put anyone in the position that approximately 60,000 health workers found themselves in. We are still dealing with the fallout from that.

Mr Swallow: On the question of risks, education boards provide corporate support services such as payroll, asset management and cleaning to libraries. The mood music in some circles is that both the library authority and the education and skills authority want to go their own way on those matters — almost like a clean-break divorce, heaven help us.

That leaves people at risk, because we do not have whole-time equivalents. Therefore, for example, the library authority would have no one to manage cleaners. As a result, the inevitable contracting out would follow. Regarding the payroll, asset management and other corporate sections, there is no way of transferring any individual — under The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 legislation — as no one is identified with the work. However, there is a substantial loss of workload, and, as a result, there will be redundancies.

There are knock-on effects. It is disturbing to see the emergence in both organisations — even in preliminary discussions on new structures — of a culture in which people want to make a clean break and go their own way.

Mr McNarry: I share your overview on quangos. Unfortunately, we are not here to discuss quangos; we are here to discuss a Bill. With any new authority, start-up costs need to be properly identified and funded. The Department has stated that it has set aside £670,000 for start-up costs. Do you have any reason to believe that £670,000 is sufficient, or will further money be required to meet start-up costs?

Ms McKeown: We strongly believe that further money will be required for start-up costs — if not immediately, soon. However, if the functions that still have to be carried out, such as the delivery of services and the employment of staff, are properly dealt with, further money will be very quickly required in the short term.

We cannot understand why a crazy proposal to replicate what is already in place should be on the cards at all. The Department would be better served by putting that money into the reform of education per se.

Mr McNarry: What will the costings be? Are you in negotiations about costings to cover the issues that you have identified?

Ms McKeown: We do not know what size the proposed empire will be — that is how we regard it.

Mr McNarry: Empires grow. It would be useful to gauge your opinion about how costs might escalate. If costs are to be challenged, the obvious question is: how much will those costs be?

Ms McKeown: We will be very happy to give our opinion in consultation with the education and library boards. They will tell us the extent to which their staff provide core and support services on the delivery side — I think that that is a quantifiable figure.

Mr McNarry: Will you provide the Committee with that information when it has been completed?

Ms McKeown: Yes, I would be pleased to do that.

Mr McNarry: I would be grateful to receive it.

Mr Swallow: In a divorce, an inventory of assets is usually produced. In this case, the inventory of assets consists of buildings, people and their work. I would start by counting heads and asking what proportion of each person's time is occupied by library work. I would then estimate the effect of the divorce, should two separate identities be opted for or support continue to be provided. The Department has not carried out enquiries in any detail, and we have had no evidence from our members of such a census approach being taken. If a sound baseline for start-up costs is to be established, those enquiries are essential and must happen.

Mr Brolly: It is strange that you have not done that.

Mr McKeown: That is not our responsibility. The proposal came from the Government and from Departments, which have all the resources and knowledge to make those enquiries.

Mr Brolly: On the basis that you question the figures —

Ms McKeown: We question the figures on the basis of experience. We have lived through so many public-sector reorganisations — not least in health — and have seen the consequences.

Mr McNarry: Will you have a crack at it for us?

Ms McKeown: The existing employers should do some work on that matter. They know, in detail, the extent to which the existing workforce provides services that keep an efficient, first-class library service operating.

The Chairperson: I thank Patricia McKeown and Jonathan Swallow from UNISON for attending and presenting evidence. The Committee is grateful.

I formally welcome the deputation from the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA), which comprises John Corey, Mary McVeigh and Alison Millar. John, please introduce your team.

Mr John Corey (Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance): I am joined by Alison Millar, who is the NIPSA official responsible for approximately 800 members from the Library Service. We represent more than 70% of library staff. Mary McVeigh is the chairperson of our library subgroup and a real live librarian. That is the team; I am the general secretary of NIPSA.

The Chairperson: Please present your evidence. Incidentally, thank you for your detailed submission, which we have all read twice. [Laughter.]

Mr Corey: I am pleased to hear that. I understand that the convention is that I should present for five minutes and allow time for questions. However, if the Committee agrees, and given the technical nature of the points that we have raised, I do not intend to speak for five minutes. There are two parts to the evidence that we have submitted and to the issues that concern us.

There are general issues regarding a library authority in the first part of the Bill and in schedule 1. The Executive made it clear that the schedule 2 provisions will become the model for all RPA transfers. The provisions of schedule 2 go significantly beyond the proposed library authority.

Alison Millar will deal with the first part of our evidence about the provisions of the Libraries Bill, which Mary will comment on. I will deal with schedule 2. The Committee has helpfully identified the main issues and some questions from our submission, which we are happy to deal with.

Ms Alison Millar (Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance): NIPSA suggests that the ancillary powers of the library authority be widened. Not all libraries are established by statute — the Linen Hall Library is an example — so NIPSA wants to ensure that the new library authority can work and co-operate with other relevant bodies without impediment. The ancillary powers are too narrow; we should ensure that the authority is inclusive rather than exclusive.

The legislation on charges for certain library services is narrow and could give rise to discriminatory procedures. The legislation could be interpreted in several ways: could one person be charged more than another? Will individuals and corporate bodies be charged differently? Will a foreign national be charged differently? The legislation is ambiguous. Those are NIPSA's main concerns.

The size of the library authority's governing board is one of the issues that arise from paragraph 2 of schedule 1, which deals with membership. Eight members is too few, and NIPSA suggests extending that number to between 12 and 18 because a board of between eight and 12 would not provide the necessary breadth of knowledge, experience, and fair representation of interests.

There should be fair representation for all sections of society — elected representatives, trade union nominees and representatives from the business community — in the allocation of seats. That is not reflected in the established bodies, which do not have trade union nominees or elected representative as of right. Each of those sections should receive a third of the seats.

The question was asked whether trade unions have seats on the education boards — we do not, which is due to the current regime. Historically, the education and library boards always had elected representatives and trade union nominees present as of right. That was fair and reflected the aspirations of those that we represented on the education and library boards.

NIPSA is trying to ensure a turnover in tenure of office in line with current recommendations so that a chairperson does not serve more than two terms of three years. That is to ensure that there is some turnover, but also allows for consistency. No one will be able to serve more than six years as a chairperson.

We also raised the issue of secondment. We are not opposed to how that is treated in the Bill, but we want to broaden the provision to have a two-way process, allowing for Civil Service secondments between the education and skills authority and the library authority, and between the library authority and the education and skills authority. Provision in the Bill is too prescriptive, and it needs to be broadened so that secondment arrangements that are appropriate for everyone are in place.

We raised the issue of the schools' library service with Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure officials over the past few months. At present, the library service itself is small and receives a small funding allocation, yet the schools' library service has to be funded from within that. It is proposed that the schools' library service be placed under the aegis of the education and skills authority, and the public library service placed under the aegis of the Northern Ireland library authority. Staff should be able, for career-development purposes, to transfer between the two organisations, and in the case of redundancy, for example, staff could be protected by redeployment from the schools' library service into the public library service, and vice versa.

I raised that matter at an informal meeting with the chief executive designate, who was appointed only recently. Expressions of sympathy were made by her and by the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. I again raised the matter informally with Mr Gavin Boyd, the chief executive designate of the education and skills authority. Although those concerns were noted, they were in a long line of issues that the chief executive will have to deal with, and we are concerned that they will fall off the agenda. That is why we particularly want to protect staff. I should explain that staff are not appointed to the schools' library service; they just end up there. People could be transferred from the schools' library service a week before the Bill is enacted and then find themselves in the Northern Ireland library authority. Those are most of the issues that we wanted to cover in respect of schedule 1 to the Bill.

The Chairperson: Mary, do you wish to add to that?

Ms Mary McVeigh (Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance): No.

The Chairperson: Then we will proceed to questions.

Mr Corey: Yes, and we will deal with schedule 2, if that is acceptable.

Mr McNarry: I am unsure about the schedules, but I will ask some questions because we are short of time.

I welcome the witnesses. You are all busy people and I wish you well with your course of action. I will ask about savings, and then about costs. In your submission, you state an obvious concern about the way in which the savings predicted for 2009-10 and 2010-11 have been calculated. You do not accept that these figures are accurate. Do you think that the Department has overestimated the savings that can be made?

My next question is about start-up costs, which need to be properly identified. Some £670,000 is set aside for start-up costs. Have you any reason to believe that that will be enough? Will further money be required because the start-up costs have been underestimated?

Ms Millar: We had raised the issue of cost, and mentioned it to the Department and the Minister when we met him in July. Subsequently, I received a letter dated 2 August. However, the information in that letter left me none the wiser.

The first part of your question was about the estimated savings over those two years. Although any new organisation would not need five chief librarians, we were concerned by the proposal to have fewer staff at senior- and middle-management level. However, more importantly, a degree of natural wastage is expected among staff from 2008 to 2011 by way of retirement, but, as I have already said, some of that cannot be absorbed without replacement.

There have been significant cuts in the libraries budget over the past three or four years, and many posts in the Library Service have been lost. We expected that a new library authority would need a capital injection at the start to ensure that it got off to a good start — everyone around the table would want the new library authority to be successful. However, my concerns are that the letter was saying to us that, as staff leave, they would not be replaced. I wonder how that will be received.

We are also concerned about the figure of £670,000, which has been divided — including staff salaries of £380,000 — into £385,000 and £200,000 for consultancy work. We have asked for a further breakdown of the figures so that we can see how they were arrived at and can make a judgement as to whether they are enough. That request was sent to the Department on 13 August. Unfortunately, we are still waiting for a response. We are very concerned that almost one third of the money set aside will be used to pay consultants. That is a huge amount of money for a relatively small organisation.

Mr McNarry: I sense that NIPSA is set to challenge the Department on its start-up cost figures. Would that be on the basis that it has had costs prepared that indicate that £670,000 is not enough?

Ms Millar: We have not received that information. We have asked the Department to explain how it arrived at the figure of £670,000. Without knowing that, as a starting point, it is difficult for us to challenge the figure. We only have three short paragraphs, which do not provide us with the information that would allow us to move forward.

Mr McNarry: If that information is forthcoming, and NIPSA has an opinion on it, would you apprise us of that? That would be very useful. I am not too sure where NIPSA stands on the setting up of the new authority. Are you in favour, mildly in favour, against, or mildly against?

Mr Corey: My colleagues can comment on that point. However, I would like to quickly deal with the finances. The Department has said that £380,000 of the £670,000 is for staff salaries; £85,000 is for premises and computer set-up; £6,000 is set aside for support for board members, and £200,000 is for consultancy, which we are concerned about.

We have come through a process of considering all the options for a new library authority, but the current view of Library Service staff, the majority of whom are NIPSA members, is that they favour a single library authority as the best option for the delivery of a library service in the future. However, there is a significant concern about the interface between the schools' library service and the new library authority.

On the question of the timing of the establishment of a new library authority, and whether we have a problem with a delay until 1 April 2008, the simple answer is no. It makes sense from an employment-relations point of view to introduce the education and skills authority and the library authority at the same time.

Mr McNarry: Thank you for that answer.

Mr Brolly: It is interesting that you are in favour of the establishment of a single library authority, but that you also have concerns about how that authority may lose contact with the educational establishment. What recommendations would you make to ensure that the new library authority keeps in touch with the grass roots in the way that the current library system does?

Mr Corey: We have not come prepared to answer that specific question, but I will ask my colleague Mary McVeigh from the Library Service to comment on that. It is fair to say that our members in the Library Service feel that it has been the Cinderella service of the education and library boards. They feel that when difficult times come, the Library Service always suffers most. They believe that the creation of a clear single library authority in Northern Ireland would remove that difficulty and enable the service to stand on its own. Mary may wish to say more about that.

Ms McVeigh: Our members are very much in favour of rural libraries and libraries in the community. I would say that they are 100% behind maintaining the links that already exist in communities. They do not envisage that the establishment of a single library authority would change that.

Mr Brolly: I disagree slightly. There is always a possibility that when a service becomes strongly centralised —

Ms McVeigh: We would want to make sure that —

Mr Brolly: That is exactly the question that I asked. John said that you might not have been prepared for the question, so it would be useful if you could send the Committee a written submission on that matter.

Ms McVeigh: I am in charge of the Irish and Local Studies Library in Armagh, which is part of the Southern Education and Library Board. We hope that a library such as ours would not be caught up in a central body in Belfast, and that we could maintain those types of local facilities.

Mr Brolly: I understand that.

Lord Browne: I congratulate you on your full and good submission. You said that, in general, you had no objection to the provision for secondments between the new authority and the education and library boards. You also say that the Bill does not mention the schools' library service and that staff should retain the right to move between the public library service and the schools' library service. As the Bill stands, paragraph 6 of schedule 1 mentions only secondments from the Civil Service. Have the staff of the boards expressed any view on that, and have you had any indication from the Department whether such secondments and moves would be allowed?

Ms Millar: As I have already said, sympathy has been expressed, but sympathy expressed at informal meetings does not necessarily translate into action in reality. At this point, our concern is that because staff in the schools' libraries service make up quite a small group within the Library Service, they will be forgotten about until it is too late. We want to ensure that the schools' library service is taken into account. I do not know how that matter sits within a legislative framework.

The education and skills authority will be responsible for the schools' library service, and I am not sure how it will interact with the new library authority. I will bow to those who know more about writing legislation than I do, but does a specific provision need to be written into the legislation to allow for the transfer of staff for career development purposes, and, perhaps, for a redundancy situation? When I have raised the issue, sympathy has been expressed, certainly by DCAL officials and Irene Knox, but we have seen nothing formally in writing. Obviously, there must be liaison with the Education Committee and the chief executive of the proposed education and skills authority.

Lord Browne: How would you describe staff morale at the moment? Are they anxious?

Ms Millar: They are very anxious. The one question that is asked at every single meeting I have with staff is about the schools' library service — it is even asked by those who do not currently work in the schools' library service. That gives an indication of the level of anxiety.

Mr Shannon: I commend NIPSA on its presentation and on the information that it has provided. I also commend it on its campaign for classroom assistants, and we hope that that will be success. NIPSA certainly has our support.

Alison, you answered many of the questions before they were even put to you. You mentioned the membership of the authority. Keep me right, but I believe that NIPSA's proposal was that one third of board members should comprise business representatives, another third should be community representatives, and the final third should be elected representatives. Is that correct?

Ms Millar: No. One third should comprise business and community representatives, another third should be elected representatives, and the final third should be trade union nominees.

Mr Shannon: I may have missed your comments about the number of members on the new library authority board. How many would you recommend should be on the board? You are not agreeable to there being only seven and, to be fair, I think that some of us are not happy with that either. I am interested in your opinion on that.

Ms Millar: There should be between 12 and 18 members on the board.

Mr Shannon: You also mentioned tenure of office. Again, my opinion may differ slightly from yours, but I am keen to learn your opinion on the matter. You said that a chairperson should serve for a maximum period of one term. I am not saying that a person should be a chairperson for life, or even that he or she should be like the Chairman of this Committee. [Laughter.] However, if the library authority's board had a good chairperson, whoever that might be, would it not be better, for the sake of consistency, to be flexible on the maximum term for which that person could serve?

Ms Millar: We said in our submission that the reappointment of a chairperson should be for a maximum of one term. Therefore, the total period in office would amount to two terms. Normally, a chairperson would be appointed for three years. Consequently, the maximum time for which a chairperson could serve would be six years. After that time, it is only fair that the post be advertised and that the same chairperson not be reappointed. Such a turnover would allow for fresh thinking to be brought to the post. That is why NIPSA suggests a maximum period of six years — that is, the original term and the additional term.

Mr Shannon: Are you saying that a chairman who has been in post for six years could put his or her name forward for reappointment?

Ms Millar: No.

Mr Corey: NIPSA broadly accepts, and this is now the norm for public appointments, that people should not serve any more than two terms. Furthermore, those terms should last for three or four years. We have accepted that broad point.

NIPSA believes that it is right that the library authority, the education and skills authority or the health authority should include elected public representatives. That is consistent with the review of public administration's principle on democratic accountability — now accepted by the Executive — which states:

“elected representative, both locally and regionally, can play their full role. That role includes decision making about services”.

However, NIPSA also says that representatives of employees, and of employers, in the sense of social-partnership representation, should be included.

Mr Shannon: Are trade unions represented on the education boards?

Mr Corey: They used to be represented on the education boards. However, the current public-appointments system tends to exclude representational groups. That is not in the best interests of the authority, or public services. Some public bodies are no longer wholly representative of society, because different sectors of society are not represented.

The Chairperson: John, may I ask you to move on to the second part of your submission?

Mr Shannon: May I ask another question, quickly? Mr Corey, you have expressed concerns about your staff. Do you feel that enough of your members will apply for redundancy packages and, therefore, make the savings work?

Mr Millar: No. We want the jobs to be retained. We will not encourage people to leave the organisation.

The Chairperson: John, could I ask you to move on to the second part?

Mr Corey: I would like to mention schedule 2 to the Bill, which provides for transfer schemes. NIPSA has provided some comments on the schemes in our written submission. We have submitted those comments to the Committee in a separate appendix.

The points that we have raised in our submission are all based on advice from senior legal counsel Mr Frank O'Donoghue QC. The facts are that those points have not been resolved to our satisfaction. The Committee asked whether those points had been resolved in negotiations with the Department. The answer is no, and that is because the parliamentary draftsman's response to all the points that were raised was that he did not think that any of our suggested amendments were necessary. We remain in disagreement, so we have come before the Committee to put those points at the Bill's Committee Stage.

I apologise that the matter is so technical; I may struggle to get everything across. The first point relates to paragraph 1 of schedule 2. Paragraph 1 provides for a scheme, the three elements of which are set out at 1(a), 1(b) and 1(c). Our legal advice is that paragraph 1 is deficient, because it does not also create any rights or liabilities for the employee or between the employee and either the transferor or the new authority.

The legal advice is that there should be wording in paragraph 1 to create rights and liabilities between employees and the transferor or the authority.

The response from the parliamentary draftsman is that that is not necessary because of paragraph 4(2), which states that The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 (TUPE) apply:

"The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 (S.I. 2006/246) apply to the transfer whether or not the transfer would, apart from this paragraph, be a relevant transfer for the purposes of those regulations."

The parliamentary draftsman's argument is that additional wording is not needed because of that provision. Our legal advisor's concern has been that, even though there is a provision in paragraph 4(2) — which he refers to as an antonymous paragraph; in other words, its meaning is opposite to the rest of the scheme — an industrial tribunal could still face a challenge from an employer that a particular transfer is not a relevant transfer for the purposes of TUPE.

The underlying reason behind this is that TUPE legislation does not apply to public-sector reorganisations — they are excluded. Therefore paragraph 4(2) has been included in the Bill — as an antonymous provision — as an attempt to make TUPE legislation apply to public-sector reorganisations.

Nonetheless, our legal advisor is concerned that that could be challenged in an industrial tribunal. His point is that the whole of schedule 2 should make it clear that the transfer scheme includes employee rights and liabilities by adding appropriate wording to paragraph 1 of schedule 2. That is the point that carries through from the other points made in paragraphs 6 to 8 of appendix 1 to our submission. The same point is made in those paragraphs and, hopefully, they have explained the underlying factors. That is part of the complexity of TUPE legislation and transfer legislation.

To move on to other points that were raised in our submission: we raised a concern about paragraphs 4(3)(c) and 4(3)(d) of schedule 2. We believe that paragraph 4(3)(c) should include a reference to incorporating independent arbitration. Currently, the paragraph refers to procedures designed to resolve grievances, but we believe that that should be extended to include the phrase "incorporating independent arbitration". We were also concerned that paragraph 4(3)(d) should include a clear reference that the determination of the compensation should be subject to the procedures under grievance and independent arbitration.

Again, the parliamentary draftsman's response was that those amendments are not considered necessary, and he went on to argue that if anyone was dissatisfied with the compensation that they received, they could go to an industrial tribunal. With the greatest respect, we believe that that misses the whole point of why the legislation for a transfer scheme exists. The point is that we are trying to secure a statutory duty on all employers under the review of public administration to provide for transfer arrangements for employees that are additional to TUPE.

That is the entire purpose of this. It is not a satisfactory response to say that the changes do not have to be made because if anyone were dissatisfied about compensation, he or she could go to an industrial tribunal, presumably under TUPE legislation. The key point is that one can only go to an industrial tribunal under TUPE legislation if one has constructively dismissed oneself or been otherwise dismissed. The procedures that NIPSA wants to set up under a transfer scheme are to enable employees to pursue complaints in order to be paid compensation and grievances, but remain in their employment. That is the fundamental difference. There has been no resolution on that. In our submission, we proposed specific amendments that could be made to paragraphs 4(3)(c) and 4(3)(d). We stand by those suggested amendments. We believe that they are reasonable because they are based on other models of legislation that use the same type of phrases.

I would now like to refer to paragraph 4(6) of schedule 2. I apologise if members were misled by paragraph 11 of appendix 1 of our submission, which refers to “paragraph 6”. It should have read “paragraph 4(6)”. That sub-paragraph deals with grievances and who will hear them. NIPSA is concerned that the sub-paragraph, as drafted, does not make it sufficiently clear that grievances will be heard by an independent person or body. It will be left to the authority or the employer to nominate any person or body that it wishes to hear a particular grievance. That person or body does not necessarily have to be appointed by the Labour Relations Agency in line with independent arbitration arrangements.

Therefore, we believe that paragraph 4(6) should be revised in line with the wording that we have suggested:

“Procedures under paragraph (3)(c) and (3)(d) above shall include a mechanism for grievances to be referred to independent arbitration under the aegis of the Labour Relations Agency.”

I must say that I have never before seen the formulation of words that appears in the Bill in legislation that relates to employees, grievances and independent arbitration. I am not sure of the background from which it came.

In passing, I want to point out that the Public Service Commission has requested that the order of paragraphs 4(3)(c) and 4(3)(d) be reversed in order to make it clearer that the consideration of compensation is a matter that falls under grievance procedures. At present, the mention of grievance procedures comes before compensation. The commission has suggested that paragraph 4(3)(c) should deal with compensation and that paragraph 4(3)(d) should deal with grievance procedures. However, we stand by our suggested amendments.

Finally, paragraph 4(5)(b) deals with pension protection. We are concerned that it does not adequately protect pension benefits. The draft legislation states that:

“‘pension protection’ is secured for a transferring employee (‘T’) if after the change in T’s employer T has, as an employee of the Authority, rights to acquire pension benefits”.

In law, it could be argued that there is a difference between rights to acquire pension benefits and actual pension benefits. NIPSA made that point to the parliamentary draftsman but it was rejected as being unnecessary. Our understanding is that it was rejected because the Department was unwilling to make the change on the basis that, in law, a person has the right not to opt into an employer’s pension scheme. In law, a person can decide that he or she does not want any pension benefits. The Department is saying that it cannot write in a provision that implies that a person must take the pension benefits that will be available in the new authority. That is not right, nor is the idea that the principle — that a person can decide not to have pension benefits — is in any way nullified by the amendment that NIPSA is suggesting.

NIPSA’s written submission suggested amending the paragraph to follow the wording that was used in one of the most recent examples of such legislation, the North/South Co-operation (Implementation Bodies) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999, which dealt specifically with transfer of staff and pension entitlements. NIPSA can see no reason why the same legislative point could not be repeated in the Libraries Bill.

However, as an alternative, NIPSA suggests an even simpler amendment to paragraph 4(5)(b) which currently states:

“as an employee of the Authority, rights to acquire pension benefits and those rights are the same as”.

We suggest removing the words:

“and those rights are the same as”.

The paragraph should be amended to read:

“rights to acquire pension benefits which are the same as”.

That would meet NIPSA’s point. I want that suggested amendment to be put on the record. The first suggestion was to follow the North/South implementation bodies’ legislation model. However, I have made the further suggestion that NIPSA’s point of concern would be met by the above amendment.

Those are the key points of the legislation that are of concern to NIPSA, and we have not resolved them with the Department. As I said at the outset, they are critically important, because they are not relevant to the library authority alone. The Executive have made it clear that this will be the model for all review of public administration transfers, so we must get it right.

The Chairperson: Given the time pressure that the Committee is under, I will allow two contributions. However, we will study everything that NIPSA has said today and its written submission. Thank you.

Mr McNarry: We were with you all the way until you mentioned schedule 2. I am glad that the Committee Stage has been extended until February to allow us to consider it all — that was positive thinking on the Committee's part. Normally, technical arguments put us to sleep, but you have woken us up, John. It is heavy material, and you have almost taken the Committee through a training exercise. The Committee will scrutinise the Bill line by line, and we are glad of your input.

As the Chairperson said, the Committee will need to examine in depth what you said and the amendments that you are asking for. Will you be blunt and tell the Committee where you are going with this, and what you want the Committee to do? Are you looking for sponsors, or for someone to assist you in what you are doing? I am not clear about that. You have made your points; do you then have to convince someone in the Assembly to argue those cases? Have you started that?

Mr Corey: Yes. We have started the process in that this Committee will be considering the Bill at its Committee Stage. As you have said, that involves a line-by-line scrutiny of the clauses, and NIPSA is seeking to influence the Committee in that examination.

Mr McNarry: I understand that.

Mr Corey: If NIPSA must make further representations in order to get the legislation amended, it will try to do so. It would have been better had the parliamentary draftsman agreed with NIPSA's written representations, which were based on senior counsel advice. However, that was not achieved. The Committee has a copy of the response that NIPSA received from the Department, which more or less says —

Mr McNarry: Have you met officials from the Department about it?

Mr Corey: We have not met the parliamentary draftsman directly. However, NIPSA is open to having a discussion with the draftsman, or his staff, to see whether we can resolve our differences on those points.

Mr McNarry: That would have been helpful.

Mr Brolly: We could meet the parliamentary draftsman to talk about that.

Mr McNarry: The parliamentary draftsman will have to talk to the Committee. There is no point in the Committee acting as a mediator.

Mr Brolly: I am intrigued by the notion that someone might not want their pension transferred.

Mr Corey: I am not an expert on pension law, but any employee can now tell their employer that they do not wish to participate in their pension scheme. It would be foolish to do that, but that is one of the legacies of Thatcher's laws on public-sector pensions.

The Chairperson: I thank John Corey, Alison Millar and Mary McVeigh for their attendance and for giving us plenty to think about.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Thursday 27 September 2007

TAXIS BILL (NIA 4/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Patsy McGlone (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Billy Armstrong
Mr Trevor Clarke
Mr David Ford
Mr Alex Maskey
Mr Ian McCrea
Mr Daithí McKay
Mr Peter Weir

Witnesses:

Ms Barbara Fleming Mr Michael Lorimer	}	Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee
Mr Richard Daniels Mr Andrew Overton	}	London Taxis International
Mr Sean Smyth	}	T&G Section of Unite
Mr James Beckett Mr James Matier	}	Transport and General Workers' Union
Mr Anthony McCloskey	}	George Best Belfast City Airport Taxi Rank

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): Ms Fleming and Mr Lorimer, you are very welcome. The Committee tries to keep these evidence sessions as informal as possible, and they focus on legislation. Witnesses are invited to take between 10 and 15 minutes to make their submissions. The Committee has your written submissions; if there are aspects of those that you want to emphasise particularly, or other issues that you want to raise, please feel free to do so.

Mr Michael Lorimer (Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee): Thank you, Mr Chairperson. I will set out the position of the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC) on the Taxis Bill, and Barbara Fleming will then speak on the experiences of disabled people who use taxis.

IMTAC is the main source of advice to Government — and others — on transport issues for disabled and older people. It is sponsored by the Department for Regional Development to perform that function. IMTAC works towards an inclusive transport system on the basis that disabled people should have access to the same goods and services as everyone else, which is current Government policy. There should be a move to change the transport system from one of segregation to one of inclusivity.

Taxis are a key service for disabled people. Before I go into detail, I wish to record that, for many years, taxis have provided a vital service for disabled people; taxi drivers provide a door-to-door service, and many drivers go the extra distance to help disabled people — for example, by carrying shopping into passengers' homes. Taxis are often available when other transport is not. Historically, because of the inaccessibility of public transport, taxis have often been the only available source of transport for some disabled people.

Despite that, disabled people have had extreme problems using taxis. I will highlight some of those as a background to IMTAC's position on the Taxis Bill. The number of taxis suitable for disabled people is low, including wheelchair-accessible taxis. There is a particular problem outside Belfast; however, the problem of access to those taxis in Belfast is huge.

There is a lack of availability of taxis at the times when disabled people want to travel. Many vehicles that are wheelchair accessible — again, particularly outside Belfast — are hired by Departments for home-to-school transport. Therefore, disabled people are restricted in the times that they can travel.

To illustrate this point, we had a meeting with one of the direct rule Ministers at Stormont Castle around a year and a half ago, and we had to be there at 4.00 pm. One of our members is disabled, and, because of school transport, the only time that a taxi could take him was around 12.00 noon. Therefore, he was at Stormont three hours before the meeting and had to hang around for an hour afterwards, and he had to pay £70 for the privilege. His journey was from Bangor to Stormont. Those are the type of issues that disabled people face.

We also have real concerns about vehicle standards. Again, London-style taxis are being used in Belfast, and standards are set for those vehicles, and they are safe. However, we have grave concerns about the safety of some of the vehicles outside Belfast that purport to be accessible vehicles. Many of them are van conversions, and we have grave concerns about whether the people being transported in them are safe.

Staff attitudes are a big issue for disabled people. That can permeate in a number of ways. A common problem is that disabled people are refused taxis. Once they say that they are wheelchair users or are disabled, the answer from the taxi firm is that it does not carry disabled people. There are also issues around language. Basically, disabled people are often treated with lack of dignity by taxi drivers.

Last week, I had a case in Dungannon in which a young girl being transported to school by taxi was verbally abused by the taxi driver. The disappointing aspect of that case was that when the parents complained to the Department of Education, they were told that unless the daughter could prove it, the Department would do nothing about the matter. Attitudes are a big issue for disabled people.

The final issue is the cost of services. There is a premium to be paid, particularly if you are a wheelchair user and need an accessible taxi, on many services in Belfast, and there is clear evidence of extreme discrimination as regards charging.

A man from Derry spoke to me yesterday about his mother, who was dying of cancer. In the last weeks of her life, she had to use a wheelchair and needed to travel a quarter of a mile. She had to use an accessible taxi and was charged £70 for the privilege of doing so. There is a lot of anger among disabled people about charges for wheelchair-accessible vehicles.

IMTAC broadly supports the Taxis Bill. The Department has sought to consult with the taxi trade, taxi users and stakeholders. In particular, it has sought to be proactive in gauging the views of disabled people and older people. IMTAC facilitated several public meetings in Derry and Belfast, and there were focus group meetings comprising disabled people in places such as Dungannon. The Department got real first-hand accounts from disabled people about the issues that they faced when using taxis. There were people attending who were blind, had learning disabilities, were deaf, were wheelchair users and those who had other impairments.

The Department has clearly listened to the views of users as well as those in the trade and has come up with a balanced approach on the requirements of taxi users and operators. I would like to stress that the solution is for all of Northern Ireland. It is not a solution for the centre of Belfast, where much of the focus on these issues tends to be.

There is much debate about the tiered systems. There is a good deal of merit in having a one-tier system, the reason being that the only place where the current two-tier system makes a difference is in Belfast, where there are public- and private-hire vehicles.

The public-hire system does not work for disabled people. It may be that there are 450 accessible taxis available from ranks, but the message that we hear from disabled people is that they cannot access those services. The public-hire sector has not done enough to engage and promote its services to disabled people. Why is there no contact or dispatch service so that disabled people can phone to access those vehicles? We also have anecdotal evidence of disabled people trying to access taxis at ranks, only to be told that those vehicles do not accommodate wheelchairs.

There are difficult issues around the availability of the public-hire fleet in Belfast. I know of very few disabled people who use public-hire taxis in Belfast. Those who do use taxis do so on a private-hire basis. Predominantly, the wheelchair users to whom I have spoken use the main private-hire operators in Belfast: Value Cabs, fonaCAB, and so on.

There are difficulties with the current two-tier system for disabled people in Belfast. Outside Belfast, the one-tier system is the only one that addresses accessibility issues. In a two-tier system, public-hire taxis will migrate into the private-hire sector, and accessibility issues would not be addressed. The one-tier system is crucial to increasing the number of taxis that are accessible to disabled people. There is no point in having 450 accessible taxis if they are not available to disabled people.

We support operator licensing, and we particularly support the link between operator licensing and accessible vehicles. Accessibility of vehicles should be tied to operator licensing. We support the link between accessibility and the provision of taxis at ranks. We stress that that should apply to all ranks.

One big issue that was identified early in the review process is taxi provision at Belfast International Airport, the main point of entry for visitors to this country. There are very few accessible vehicles there, and that sends out a message to visitors that we do not take seriously the requirements of disabled visitors. We understand that that is not part of the contract, but contracts can stipulate levels of accessibility, and they should. Obviously, other taxi ranks should also connect to the transport system.

We support the measures relating to fares, particularly the provision for a maximum fare. That will not end discriminatory charging, but it will end the extreme discrimination encountered by some disabled people. Some have been charged as much as £70 for a quarter-of-a-mile journey. A maximum fare will end that type of discrimination. We support the use of taximeters; a clear display of fares will give all passengers greater confidence in the use of taxis.

We support proposals to give the Department powers to prescribe driver training. That is important.

Unless we challenge the attitudes of some drivers, disabled people will not be able to access taxis. Better training of drivers and driver development will bring benefits to the taxi system in general, and that should be available to drivers with disabilities. We do not want to discriminate against drivers with, for example, learning disabilities.

We want vehicle standards to be addressed; people need vehicles that are safe. The Department should establish vehicle accessibility standards throughout Northern Ireland. We are assured that the Bill includes the powers for the Department to do that. As it stands, the Taxis Bill will improve standards for all consumers, particularly for consumers with disabilities.

Other transport services, both large and small, have had to become accessible because of legislation and Government policy, as have service providers such as hairdressers and café proprietors. The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 has affected all such businesses. We have seen massive changes to public transport. Taxis have been left behind somewhat, and that must be addressed. It is essential that the powers in the Taxis Bill that change how taxis are regulated are not watered down any further.

I will hand over to Barbara Fleming, who has been an IMTAC member for eight years and has been a taxi user for a long time. She is connected to nearly every disability group in Belfast, so she has talked to many people about their experiences of using taxis.

Ms Barbara Fleming (Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee): I will switch myself off the loop because I cannot stand my own voice. [Laughter.] As Michael said, I am not speaking just on behalf of myself; I have talked to many disabled people across the board. For example, I am heavily involved in 18 organisations; I am the principal chairperson of the board of Open Arts, which serves more than 300 disabled people; and I am the secretary of the Northern Ireland Neurological Charities Alliance (NINCA), which is an alliance of all the charities that support people with neurological conditions. Despite being a qualified interpreter, I am hard of hearing, so I serve on a rota basis as chairperson of the regional division of the British Deaf Association.

I am representing disabled people with every conceivable impairment, including the deaf sign-language-using community. Everyone to whom I have spoken has had the same experiences as I have had, so when I speak for myself, I am speaking for them as well; not just wheelchair users but people with mental-health issues, visual impairments or people like me who have multiple impairments. I cannot tell you how excited we are about the Taxis Bill, because it is a giant leap forward in resolving many of the issues that Michael has addressed. It is especially exciting for disabled people in rural areas, where it is next to impossible to get a taxi. The lack of taxis means that we have to go with what is available, which has led to exploitation and attitudinal difficulties that disabled people have experienced.

For example, I represented a friend whose husband was the first deaf chairperson of the bowling club on the Malone Road. I know how much taxis cost; it amounts to a fare and a half, and there is also a minimum charge. I had worked out that the taxi from my home would cost me about £15 either way. I was charged £35 one way, and so had no money to get home. I could not tell my friend, because I was there to support her and did not want to upset her. I cannot explain to you what that did to me physically as well, because of my heart condition. I had to get through that night without knowing how I was going to get home.

I have had taxi drivers shout at me and swear at me. I have had to sit cramped; I have been shoved into a taxi that I was told was accessible and have had to sit doubled-over because I am too tall. My chair reclines backwards and has to be put into that position, forcing me to bend over in agony. I have been charged extortionate rates for those privileges.

Why do I not complain about that treatment or report it? The answer is simply because the firm would refuse to take me; therefore, I am not in a position to complain. A colleague and I were asked to talk about this on the radio, but we could not — if we did, we would no longer have a taxi service to use. There is only one main taxi service in Belfast that I can use. There have been only two journeys in the past 11 years during which I have not been exploited. As a wheelchair user, one really depends on the taxi drivers. When the taxi driver that I mentioned earlier charged me £35, I told him that that was not what the meter said, and he simply cleared the meter. He was a big man, and, as a woman, what could I have done? I did not want to make a big scene and alert people to the situation, because I was there as a support and I did not want to worry or stress anyone.

On Monday evening, a friend of mine booked a taxi to travel to an Open Arts event. She explained to the driver that she was travelling with another wheelchair user with whom she lived. However, she could not get into the taxi because it was too high. She was a wheelchair user, but she could transfer from the wheelchair into the car, so the taxi driver just thought she was being awkward. When she transferred to the backseat, the driver shouted at her. He folded up her chair and just set it down without securing it, meaning that the chair fell on top of her and injured her knee.

On a few occasions, I have tried to get a taxi at a rank. I have been ignored, but, thankfully, on two occasions, I was recognised by a taxi driver from a firm that had transported me a couple of times, and he said that he would take me. I had to wait until his taxi came down the queue at the rank, and then I knew that I was going to get home.

Like Michael, other people have told me that they have been refused by a taxi driver. The drivers have said that they are sorry, but they do not transport disabled people. Sometimes drivers have said that their taxis are not accessible when it is very obvious that they are accessible. In some ways, taxi drivers are a bit fearful, or perhaps they do not know how to work the ramps. Again, the Bill is a giant step forward because it means that training will be provided that will tackle that fear. Equality training is not like disability-awareness training: it does exactly what it says. It enables people to see disabled people as they are: members of the public and a very important part of society. We are contributors. If we do nothing else, we supply a vast amount of employment; if disabled people are taken out of society, it will collapse, and a lot of people would be unemployed.

As members of the public, we have the right to travel as other people do. Not only that, our money is worth the same as anyone else's. If a driver makes a taxi wheelchair accessible, wheelchairs users will get in it and will pay. Setting a maximum rate will not mean that taxi drivers will be poverty-stricken. They will have more clients, especially when the one-tier system comes into effect and there are more accessible taxis. There are many disabled people in rural areas who cannot access any form of transport whatsoever; they are just waiting to use this service. Therefore, it will pay in the long run. If the system is established correctly, the cost of setting it up will be recouped in fares that drivers receive from the increased number of clients using the service. It will go a long way.

For disabled people who are totally dependent on others, getting out and about will have a knock-on effect in many areas. The Bill will cut down on abuse and the exploitation of them as people. It will open up opportunities for friendships, employment, and so much more than I have time to talk about today. You have no idea about the knock-on effect that the proposed legislation will have on the disabled community and the deaf community in Northern Ireland.

I have deaf friends who have been charged a ridiculous amount of money for taxi journeys. They do not have a mobility impairment, but because they are deaf, speak with a monotone voice and are difficult to make out, they are classed as having a learning difficulty. Consequently, they are charged an extortionate amount for their taxi journeys. Unfortunately, they are afraid to complain.

People with learning difficulties and mental-health difficulties have been exploited. I feel that the Bill will resolve many of those problems. It will supply more taxis, so it will even out the ground a bit more by providing more competition. The training will enable taxi drivers to interact with disabled people and other members of the public, including older people. Overall, I think it is a very positive step.

The Chairperson: Thank you for that, Barbara. I am sure that, like other Committee members, I am shocked to hear, at first hand, people's experience of that type of exploitation, unacceptable practice and behaviour. It provides a human focus on why we should be here today and dealing with the Taxis Bill. Thank you for your evidence.

Mr Weir: First, thank you for your presentation. If we hear no other evidence, the evidence that you have given today shows, at least, the need for some degree of reform of the current system to ensure that disabled people are put on a level playing field with everyone else. You highlighted, principally from your own experiences, a number of problems that wheelchair users, in particular, have with the current system and the level of exploitation that they suffer. You touched on the deaf community as well. Do you have any other information, from your own experience, of the levels or types of discrimination or exploitation that any other disabled groups are suffering?

As you have said, wheelchair users are vulnerable to exploitation. Similarly, a deaf person's voice may make them vulnerable to exploitation. Could you give us any information on the impact on any of the other disabled groups?

Ms Fleming: Certainly. I have a few colleagues and friends who have a visual impairment and who have guide dogs. There have been occasions when a taxi driver has said that he could not carry a guide dog in his taxi. Although the new policy has helped in some ways, there was an incident, a couple of weeks ago, when a taxi driver said that he could not carry a guide dog in his taxi because he was allergic to dogs.

A married couple, who each have a dog, because the man works and the woman is a housewife, had to give up one of their dogs. The taxi could have carried two dogs but the driver, nevertheless, refused to carry both. That left one person at a disadvantage. In that case, the woman gave up her dog because her husband needed to travel by taxi. That left the woman at a disadvantage because she did not know how she was going to get into the building at the end of the journey. Thankfully, it was arranged by mobile phone that someone would wait for her at the other end.

Mr Lorimer: Blind people who do not use guide dogs have also expressed concerns about drivers who treat blind people as stupid and take them on the scenic route, thereby building up a healthy fare. That is a fairly common experience for blind people. People with mobility impairments who are not wheelchair users have problems accessing saloon taxis.

Earlier, we talked about vehicle accessibility: the focus tends to be on wheelchair users but we must look at the standards of vehicle accessibility for a broad range of people, including those with walking difficulties. For instance, fitting a swivel seat in a saloon vehicle can make it much more accessible to people with a walking difficulty. There are taxi accessibility issues for disabled people apart from wheelchair users.

Mr A Maskey: Thank you for your illuminating presentations. In your written presentation, you said that you had held meetings with taxi drivers' representatives and others in the trade at which you addressed areas of common concern, such as enforcement and accessible vehicle standards. Was there clear dissent between you and the taxi operators on any issue? Was there anything that you did not agree on that may or may not be covered by the Taxis Bill?

Mr Lorimer: The vehicle standards favoured by taxi operators and those favoured by disabled people differ. Ideally, we want a standard of vehicle that everyone can access. However, that aspiration may not be achievable, as we must be realistic about the nature of the industry and the costs of developing such a vehicle.

There are issues about Belfast public-hire taxis, and there has been a great deal of publicity about the Bill affecting taxi accessibility for disabled people. We said in strong terms that that will not be the case, because, at present, disabled people cannot access many Belfast public-hire vehicles. It is a bone of contention for us that some representatives of the public-hire sector say that they are the defenders of disabled people.

We also want a higher percentage of fleets to be of a disabled-access standard, whereas the taxi industry probably wants a lower percentage; but that is life. We will have to compromise on that as much as the taxi trade in the outcome of the Bill.

There are differences, but there is common ground as well. We share Belfast public-hire representatives' concerns about enforcement and vehicle standards, and we would like to see those issues addressed.

Mr Ford: Thank you both for your presentations. Your written submission highlights several issues that will come up only in secondary legislation, such as the percentage of fleets that should be disabled-accessible. You both talked about the attitude of taxi drivers and training. Should training be compulsory for all drivers or solely for new drivers?

Mr Lorimer: We would prefer that all drivers go through some kind of disability equality training, but some already have. In the past, as the disabled persons' Transport Advisory Committee, we were connected with Disability Action and we trained taxi drivers, so there are 300 to 400 drivers who have done that training. There must be flexibility in recognising that some drivers have already undertaken training, but, ideally, we would like all drivers to go through periodic refresher training, because issues change.

Mr Boylan: Thank you both for your presentations. Over the past weeks, the Committee has heard from taxi drivers, so it is good to hear the customers' perspective, and that is all part of social inclusion.

You mentioned a one-tier system in rural areas. Is accessibility even more difficult there?

Ms Fleming: Very much so.

Mr Boylan: Can you clarify the issues?

Mr Lorimer: There are fewer accessible vehicles outside Belfast. Saloon taxis are predominantly used in rural areas. Since there are no standards for those vehicles, many vehicles in rural areas are van conversions that have been done by local firms, and that presents serious safety concerns. Taxi firms in rural areas tend to do a lot of work for Government agencies, such as ferrying patients to medical appointments and providing home-to-school transport, so their vehicles are not readily available to disabled people in any case.

Therefore, they are not available to disabled people anyway. Furthermore, because there are so few of them, companies can charge whatever the heck they want for the use of those vehicles by disabled people. The low number of accessible vehicles is a huge problem in rural areas. Imtac has received a lot of feedback about the absence of any other form of transport in rural areas from older people and disabled people who rely on taxis.

Mr Boylan: It is hoped that the Bill will deal with that problem.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for giving your time to attend the meeting. It is an important matter, and you have made compelling arguments. I am sure that you have gathered that from the members' comments.

Mr Sean Smyth (T&G Section of Unite): I am Sean Smyth of the T&G section of Unite. There appears to be an administrative error on the agenda. Representatives from London Taxis International (LTI Vehicles), which manufactures London-type taxis, are present. LTI and I would like to address the Committee as one group. Afterwards, Mr Beckett and Mr Matier, as the T&G, will address the Committee.

The Chairperson: That is permissible if you can compact your presentation into ten or fifteen minutes.

Provision has been made for several people to speak. Others must be included in the schedule.

Mr Smyth: We are on the agenda twice.

The Chairperson: I have not seen the notification to which you refer.

Mr Smyth: I refer to today's agenda, on which we appear twice. We are referred to first as Unite and then as the Transport and General Workers' Union (TGWU). If Mr Chairman agrees, I will speak first on behalf of LTI. Afterwards, my colleagues will address the Committee.

The Chairperson: Mr Smyth, can you clarify that you are with the union, Unite, and your colleagues are with the TGWU?

Mr Smyth: TGWU and Unite are now one union. TGWU merged with Amicus, which is now the T&G section of Unite.

The Chairperson: I see — sorry about that.

The Committee Clerk: The confusion has arisen because the Committee received two submissions, rather than just one.

Mr Smyth: That is quite possible. I am aware that the Committee is under time constraints. Therefore, rather than drag out the matter, LTI Vehicles and I shall address the Committee for fifteen minutes.

The Chairperson: Can you clarify for the Committee who LTI Vehicles is?

Mr Smyth: LTI Vehicles manufactures the London-type taxis that are well known throughout the world. Its representatives are present to voice the concerns of its customers.

The Chairperson: The Committee has not received a submission from LTI Vehicles.

Mr Smyth: We have put forward a joint submission.

The Chairperson: The Committee has not received a submission from LTI Vehicles for today's meeting. Today's agenda includes Unite and the TGWU.

Mr Smyth: As part of my presentation, may I call LTI Vehicles to give a detailed response on —

The Chairperson: The Committee's agenda is to discuss the submission that it has received and all members have read. The Committee has received a submission from TGWU, which is also on the agenda. Clearly, any submission that may have been made by LTI Vehicles is not on the agenda. That may be for another occasion.

Mr Boylan: Is the submission from LTI Vehicles incorporated in Unite's submission?

The Chairperson: No.

Mr James Beckett (Transport and General Workers' Union): Mr Chairman, perhaps I could clear up the matter.

The Chairperson: Perhaps you could indicate who you are.

Mr Beckett: I am James Beckett of T&G. I was asked by Mr Overton, who is very busy, to make his presentation for him.

The Chairperson: Just for clarification, because there may be people here who have travelled a considerable distance, and we have little time, are you saying that the other company should make part of its submission in your allotted 15 minutes?

Mr Smyth: Yes. I imagine that we will take no more than five to seven minutes each. Then we will take questions.

The Chairperson: I will limit you to 15 minutes. Bear in mind that the Committee has your submissions, so if you want to curtail your presentation, that is up to you. We have the submissions in front of us, although you might want to emphasise aspects of them to the Committee. If the representatives of LTI Vehicles wish to speak, they will have five minutes each. I understand that they have come all the way from London.

Mr Smyth: I thank the Committee for the opportunity to speak on this emotive subject. As we heard during the previous submissions, there is a great deal wrong with the taxi industry. I am a regional industrial organiser with Unite, with responsibilities for transport that include representing 2,000 bus drivers in Translink. For the past 12 months or more, I have been trying to organise public-hire taxi drivers in Belfast.

Unite believes in striving for a fully inclusive public-transport service for the whole of Northern Ireland, not just Belfast. After consulting its members in the taxi industry — Unite represents some 30% of the public-hire taxi drivers in Belfast — it put forward nine proposals for a root-and-branch reform of the industry. The industry must be pruned hard and re-grown to develop the affordable, safe, accessible taxi service that everyone wants for the whole of Northern Ireland.

Unite entirely supports the Department's endeavours to rectify the taxi industry. I am a taxi user, and I too have been ripped off. We want to stop people being charged £40 to travel to Bangor at a certain time of night, for example. However, it will not be easy to change that without changing the very foundations of the industry, as I intend to show the Committee.

It is difficult to argue against the balanced and reasonable expectations of taxi users who want a higher-quality taxi service that has the flexibility to adopt new ways of thinking and working in order to provide that service. However, those ideas must be balanced against economic realities and must allow those who work in the industry to make a reasonable return on their considerable investment.

Although Unite agrees with most of the points raised, it has serious concerns about certain issues. There are approximately 450 public-hire taxi drivers in Belfast who enjoy a two-tier system. As the Committee will have learned, another two-tier system operates outside Belfast between town and country taxi services. In the country, there are private operators, and the Committee will know about Belfast's two-tier system.

Most of our disabled-accessible vehicles are of the London Taxi type. The newer models can cost more than £30,000, which is a large investment for the taxi driver. If the system were changed, as proposed, it would be to the detriment of public-hire taxi drivers. I will explain that as I go on. It would lower the number of accessible taxis in Belfast. Rather than reduce, we want to expand the number of accessible taxis outside Belfast and throughout Northern Ireland. Unite believes that its proposals will do that.

We oppose the delimitation of public taxis. My union also represents 4,000 cabbies in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Glasgow, Edinburgh and Southampton; it has vast experience of organising public-hire taxis in those areas. We must keep the specialised conditions under which public-hire taxis operate. That is the only way of making the industry viable. We propose that the number of public-hire taxis operating, not only in Belfast but in the whole of Northern Ireland, should come under the constraints and control of the Department of the Environment. The Department should allocate plates for public-hire taxis according to need. The number of taxis would be increased so that the availability of taxis would grow in accordance with the expansion of a town or city.

There are major problems with accessibility. If I were to buy a new taxi tomorrow morning, I would have to wait two to four weeks to get it tested. I would then have to wait a further four to six weeks to get the plate issued: the vehicle cannot operate without a plate. We propose that the driver be given a plate on the day that he receives his licence and that that plate would go on any vehicle that the driver bought. On the day that the driver retired from the service, his plate would not be sold but returned to the Department. Therefore, if I were to upgrade my vehicle after three years, I could transfer my plate immediately after the vehicle had passed its test. At present, a driver can spend £30,000 on a vehicle and then be unable to work for four weeks. That is expensive for a driver and cannot be maintained. Changes in the plating system would alleviate the lack of vehicles on the roads.

We support the proposals requiring all taxis to have taximeters. However, rather than setting a maximum fare for all taxis, it would be better to have a uniform, single rate that would vary at different times of day. Getting people home from nightclubs at the peak times between midnight and 4.00 am on Friday and Saturday nights is a major problem. We suggest that fares be adjusted to cope with that.

If the two-tier system is kept in Belfast, the city should have a limit. If a driver was required to operate outside that limit, a penalty fare would be incurred, of which the passengers would be aware. All fares would be set in conjunction with the Department of the Environment, the Consumer Council and non-governmental organisations, such as ourselves. That way, the customer would know exactly what had been charged and why they had been charged. People would know that the fare from Belfast city centre to Bangor town centre, for example, was £20. They would not be charged £40 because the fare would be in black and white. That would reduce the activities of rip-off merchants and eventually stop them. More easily identifiable plates would enable the culprits to be more easily identified. I will return to the issue of plates later, but I will press on as I know that the Committee is pushed for time.

The Unite proposal would ensure that Belfast and Northern Ireland would have a first-class public-hire taxi service that would be fully integrated with all other forms of public transport. From arrival to departure, people would have access to reasonably priced, accessible public transport. Achieving that would be a first for any city in the European Union; we would be setting standards instead of playing catch-up. Restrictions on the number of licence plates would enable drivers to work an average working week, instead of having to work excessive hours.

Drivers in Belfast work in circuits on a radio system. Drivers pay between £100 and £110 a week to rent their radio systems. If they go on holiday or are on sick leave, they must continue to pay the operator or they will lose their radios. Unfortunately, some people coming into the taxi industry do not have the finances to buy a cab, so some operators rent cabs to them. Therefore, those drivers must pay for cab rental, radio rental and diesel, and they must make more than £350 a week before they can earn a shilling.

Many drivers work more than 90 hours a week to earn a living, and the Bill does not address that. It is dangerous to work such hours, and drivers have caused crashes by falling asleep at the wheel, but those crashes have been put down to accidents. The Bill does not address that. In fact, we are concerned that the introduction of the Bill will worsen the situation.

All public-hire taxis must have disability access, and all drivers must be trained to deal with disabled people. I have not met any drivers who are trained to assist blind people. Fortunately, when I was a bus driver, I was trained to work with disabled people through the minibus driver awareness scheme (MiDAS). I strongly recommend that training, because it gives participants a whole new focus on how to work and live with disadvantaged people, from those with slight disabilities to those who are more severely disabled. The MiDAS system must be introduced for all taxi drivers in Northern Ireland who want to operate a public-hire taxi service. All fares should be set via negotiations involving the Department of the Environment and the Consumer Council, so that there is third-party involvement, and the PSNI should have full enforcement rights on taxi legislation.

We have heard stories today about getting access to a taxi. If people are shopping in the centre of Belfast, in CastleCourt, they cannot get access to a public-hire taxi unless they walk for half a mile in either direction. We do not have access to shopping areas, ports, airports or train stations. It is difficult for a disabled person to get a public-hire taxi. We also do not have access to hospitals. If a disabled person phones for a taxi to collect them from a hospital appointment, a saloon car arrives, they are pushed from the rear into the back seat of the car, and their wheelchair is put in the boot. I have witnessed that. Public-hire taxis must have disability access. Give us the tools to do that job, and I will guarantee that our taxi charter will deliver for Northern Ireland.

Mr Andrew Overton (London Taxis

International): London Taxis International (LTI Vehicles) supplies the majority of purpose-built taxis in Northern Ireland. I have been in the business all my life and have been coming to Belfast for 20-odd years, and we are passionate about the taxi trade that operates in this city. We support the intentions of the Taxis Bill and the fact that it addresses matters such as professionalising the taxi trade. Many good intentions are represented in the Bill. We support training for taxi drivers, and we will help to provide that, as we manufacture accessible taxis. There is a need for better standards for taxis, and the standard of conversions that was mentioned by Michael Lorimer is an issue that must be addressed. New accessible taxis should be introduced outside Belfast.

My comments relate to Belfast city. Officials from the Department of the Environment have said that their public consultations have shown that a one-tier system is the way forward. We have considered that conclusion and the Department of the Environment's documents, and we find that there serious concerns in Newry, Cookstown, Enniskillen and Armagh about the impact of the Bill. Certainly, the taxi trade in Belfast is concerned about the impact of the Bill. There is an impression that there will be no financial impact on the taxi trade. However, there are 450 purpose-built vehicles operating as public-hire taxis and 2,000 private-hire taxis, and, if those 2,000 private-hire taxis can suddenly pick up in the street, that will have a dramatic impact on the drivers' incomes. I am sure that drivers have informed the Committee of that. It is similar to one shop opening up in a street and, suddenly, four other shops open up in the same street selling exactly the same thing. That will have an effect.

Our concern is that the number of accessible cabs will decrease. I accept as valid the point that IMTAC made earlier that people need to be able to contact accessible taxis. The public-hire taxi drivers to whom we have been talking accept that they may have to use a radio. However, were their income to drop substantially, they would return to driving saloon cars, so the overall number of accessible cabs would fall. That is contrary to what is happening in the rest of the UK. My role in LTI Vehicles is to liaise with local authorities across the country on implementing accessible taxi policies. Public-hire taxi companies everywhere else in the UK are increasing their number of accessible taxis, not reducing it.

The Bill may be a charter for the private-hire industry. That industry will view the Bill as being wonderful, because those who drive saloon cars must sign up to a radio circuit. One private-hire operator told me that private-hire drivers want to make life as difficult as possible for black-cab drivers, and, for that reason, he supports the Bill.

The legislation will have a serious effect on the trade's livelihood and on the number of accessible cabs in Belfast, which will go down, not up. I am not saying that private-hire operators will not rub their hands and put on more taxis, but that is not the issue. The issue is that people are trying to earn a living. LTI Vehicles pleads with the Committee to take that point seriously.

My colleague Richard Daniels will propose a couple of amendments to the Bill. Those amendments would enable the Department to preserve the current system, because we do not believe that the rank-only pick-up point will work. There are only 31 permanent rank spaces in Belfast city, and taxi drivers will be unable to earn a living solely from working on those ranks. It will also be very difficult to police the exclusion zone that the Bill provides for, and we do not think that that proposed system will work properly. My request is that the Committee take that point seriously.

Mr Richard Daniels (London Taxis

International): We are essentially looking at the regulatory framework that will be adopted. Andrew's point is that we must ensure that regulation is proportionate. To that end, I wish to propose two amendments, both of which apply to clause 20.

My first amendment would secure the provision of disabled-accessible vehicles that can be held on the street. If accepted, clause 20 would include:

“The Department may make regulations to apply to taxis of a specific class or to taxis of a particular class of use to operate within a designated geographic area in standing or plying for hire or reward or to carry passengers for hire or reward.”

The second amendment would secure the provision of non-accessible taxis that can operate a pre-booking service. As a result, those vehicles would remain accessible. The proposed amendment reads:

“The Department may make regulations to taxis of a specific class or to taxis of a particular class of use to operate within a designated geographic area as vehicles which are used (a) solely in connection with a hiring for the purpose of carrying one or more passengers; or (b) are immediately available to an operator to carry out pre-booked work.”

Those definitions are taken from the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Act 1998. Those amendments would secure the provision of an accessible taxi service, which should be a right in a city such as Belfast, as it is in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Manchester, London or Liverpool. It is important to state that. The comments that the IMTAC representatives made earlier are also valid.

Mr Weir: I appreciate that the Committee will have a record of the proposed amendments, because members will want to absorb their content and return to them at a later date.

You have concerns about Belfast’s moving from a two-tier system to a one-tier system. Why do you think that Belfast should be different to anywhere else in Northern Ireland?

Mr Smyth: Belfast is the only place in Northern Ireland in which public-hire taxis as we know them operate.

Mr Weir: That is a circular argument.

Mr Smyth: We are proposing that the whole of Northern Ireland has access to accessible taxis, but, unfortunately, we are dealing with Belfast now.

Mr Overton: The issue is pertinent to Belfast; it is not an issue outside Belfast. All taxis outside Belfast are, for the most part, public-hire taxis. There is a two-tier system in Belfast, so there is an economic balance between the taxis that ply for hire at taxi ranks and on the street and those that are not allowed to do so. If the rules for Belfast are changed, and five times as many vehicles are permitted to pick up fares along the street, the taxi operators’ business model will be undermined completely.

Mr Weir: Regardless of the system, should there not be a level playing field across Northern Ireland?

Mr Overton used a good analogy: someone sells a product in a shop and other shops open on the same street and sell the same product. I understand that markets change suddenly, but that is how business operates. Are you suggesting that shops on a street should be banned from selling fruit and vegetables merely because another shop is already doing so?

Mr Smyth: I am a self-employed taxi driver and I operate a public-hire taxi. I want to be self-employed. However, under the new legislation, I will be forced into a circuit, and I do not want to work for one. I do not want to have to give backhanders to radio operators to ensure that I will get my fair share of work; nor do I want to have to pay depot rent when I am sick or on holidays. I want to be self-employed. Why am I being forced to join a circuit?

Mr Weir: I understand why someone who is working in public-hire taxis, particularly in Belfast, will have concerns about the legislation and, perhaps, be opposed to it. However, I am still not convinced that Belfast should be treated differently to the rest of Northern Ireland.

Mr Smyth: Competition is good, but this legislation will mean that our drivers will not be permitted to pick up fares at locations such as the George Best Belfast City Airport or Belfast International Airport. However, taxi drivers operating at the airports will be able to come to Belfast and work the ranks.

Mr Weir: There should be equality for all taxi drivers, but we will hear from the airport taxi drivers later, and the issue will be dealt with then.

Mr Daniels: In urban areas, disabled people have the right to hail a taxi and get a taxi from a rank. After a while, because these proposals will unbalance the economic model, they will have to phone for taxis. In rural areas, there is no justification for having all vehicles as disabled-accessible vehicles. However, in urban areas it is justified, because disabled people should have the right to hail taxis on the street or at a rank. That is what happens in many other cities.

Mr Weir: Belfast is much smaller than many of the cities that you have used in your examples. Glasgow and Edinburgh would be closer in size to Belfast whereas London would be larger.

Mr Daniels: London is bigger, and I would not draw on that analogy too strongly.

The Chairperson: We have spent enough time on that question.

Mr T Clarke: It was feared that people would go for the cheaper taxi if the one-tier system were introduced. You are from London: why not make your taxis cheaper so that everyone can buy them — that is, if you are really concerned about disabled people in Northern Ireland?

Mr Overton: Let me give you a simple answer. If we were selling saloon cars that were non-accessible, we could make them cheaper. Today we have heard about the standard of accessible taxis, and IMTAC has said that it wants good-quality, safe vehicles for use by disabled people. Michael Lorimer praised London-style taxis, and we have spent much time and effort developing a purpose-built taxi that is safe for the passenger and the driver and that is accessible for wheelchair users and non-wheelchair users. It costs more to build such a vehicle.

Mr T Clarke: Perhaps we let Mr Lorimer off with his comments about some taxis being converted vans. Vehicles in Northern Ireland go through a more rigorous test than those on the mainland, and converted vans have been inspected by DOE vehicle-testing centres and approved for the purpose for which they were built. We let Mr Lorimer off with his comments about van conversions, because those vans have to be brought up to a standard.

Mr Overton: Even the DOE officials have said that they want to address accessibility and safety standards for vehicles. They have said that the Bill will enable them to address those issues. The argument was about whether we have saloons or whether we have accessible cabs at all.

Mr T Clarke: Some vehicles may need to be improved. If the Government have set a standard for van conversions, and if those vans pass the test, it is unfair to say that they are not up to standard. However, if the Government now believe that their standard could be tightened to make the test more rigorous, that would be welcome. It is unfair on the owners of such vehicles for the Government to assume that they are not up to standard.

Mr Daniels: To be fair, there are different standards. There is European Community whole-vehicle-type approval, which we and companies such as Peugeot 07 and Allied Vehicle Contracts have, and there are lower standards within the EU framework, so there is a separation. Some of the vehicles mentioned come under low-volume small-series-type approval, which is a lesser standard.

Mr Overton: I do not want to lose the focus. If a saloon car can pick up a fare off the street, why would a taxi driver have a purpose-built vehicle? He would not. If he can pick up off the street — and there are only 31 rank spaces — the 400 accessible cabs would diminish. As the vehicles get older, drivers will replace them with saloon cars. I am not debating the quality of accessible taxis: they will not be accessible at all; drivers will go back to saloons. Therefore, the overall fleet of accessible cabs will decrease.

Mr Boylan: I will not get into the debate about rural and city taxis. It seems strange that you want to reduce the numbers. You also referred to additions, tests and training levels. Are they referred to in the Bill? Can you elaborate on that?

Mr Overton: We would support taxi-driver training, as taxi drivers benefit from training in handling and dealing with disabled passengers. As the manufacturer of accessible taxis, we are happy to help authorities to set up training courses for drivers to learn how to use the facilities that we provide in our vehicles. We are aware that drivers do not always load wheelchair passengers into our vehicles in the best way, so we would be happy for taxi drivers to have training in that. I have spent years dealing with disabled people who complain about some of the issues that we have heard today, and we must move that issue forward.

Mr Smyth: Who would provide the training? Belfast Metropolitan College advertised for tutors, but it was unable to fill the position. The problem is that the training needed, which is part of the certificate of professional competence (CPC) training, has been extended to taxi drivers, and they must obtain seven hours' training a year. Bus drivers have to obtain 35 hours' training and, when that is complete, their licence will be renewed. Taxi drivers will have to train for 21 hours.

Will I, as a taxi driver, invest in my training this year, not knowing whether I will be in the taxi trade in three years' time, or will I wait — as I suspect most people will do — until year three when there will be a mad rush to get the training in order to get my licence renewed? The T&G Section of Unite has 12 registered tutors, fully competent in delivering the training programme, with the North West Regional College. The West Belfast Taxi Association is developing a training course for its drivers. However, that will add additional charges, and in the circuits they will pass those on to drivers, incurring more hours to pay more depot rent.

Mr Armstrong: My statement may be a bit unfair, but taxis are not very visible. On the subject of safety, ordinary saloon cars are more visible, better lit up and can be easily seen at dusk. However, the lighting system on black taxis is poor and does not come on automatically when it becomes dull during the day.

Mr Overton: I was referring to the safety of the people inside the vehicles —

Mr Armstrong: I know what you were referring to —

Mr Overton: I take your point. There is nothing to stop drivers from deciding to have a colour code. For instance, in Derby —

Mr Armstrong: I am not talking about colour codes; I am talking about lighting systems.

Mr Daniels: It is not something that we have come across with any regulatory authority that we have spoken to.

Mr Armstrong: I know that.

Mr Overton: I will be happy to consider any proposals that you have. It is not an issue that has been raised before, but I take your point.

Mr Smyth: On that point of safety, a number of years ago Dublin Bus instructed all its drivers to drive with their headlights on at all times — day, night, summer and winter. That reduced accidents by 50%. All public-hire vehicles should drive with their headlights on at all times. Personally, when I am driving my car — day or night — I always have the headlights on.

Mr Armstrong: I have noticed that black taxis do not have lights on when every other car does.

The Chairperson: I thank the witnesses for attending. We explored many issues, and I was quite generous with the time allocation. Needless to say, your comments will be considered by the Committee.

Mr Smyth: In closing: we want to work in partnership with the non-governmental organisations, the Government and elected representatives for the future of public transport in Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: We have a submission from Mr James Beckett in his capacity as vice-chairman of the Transport and General Workers' Union (TGWU).

Mr James Matier (Transport and General Workers' Union): I am a committee member of the TGWU also.

The Chairperson: Are you giving the presentation?

Mr Matier: Yes.

The Chairperson: The submission that has been given to the Committee is very detailed. Your presentation should last no longer than 10 to 15 minutes. Members will then ask questions.

Mr Beckett: Chairman, we believe that the Taxis Bill is a personal baby for Adele Watters.

The Chairperson: Hold on a minute, James. Irrespective of the personalities involved in this, Adele Watters is a civil servant who is acting on behalf of the Department of the Environment. We are here to discuss the Department's Taxis Bill. Please focus on the context and the content of that Taxis Bill. Thank you.

Mr Beckett: No disrespect to Adele, sir.

The Chairperson: Sorry, sir. I do not want to emphasise the point again, and I will not say it again. We are here to focus on the Taxis Bill.

Mr Beckett: Right, OK. I will focus on that. Our main concern is public safety, the cost to the public and accessibility to the public. Mr Boylan asked a question about the views of rural areas on the Taxis Bill. There was a public meeting in Newry, and the people there were critical of the Bill and rejected it —

The Chairperson: You have referred to an issue that Cathal raised earlier. We are here to discuss the Taxis Bill; we are not referring back to what was said earlier. After your presentation, Mr Boylan will have the opportunity to question you on aspects of that submission.

Mr Beckett: That was part of my presentation. Can I not present my evidence?

The Chairperson: Just to be clear, if you are referring to the issue of rural isolation, that is fair enough. Please address the issue of rural isolation and the difficulties with rural taxis. Mr Boylan asked a question; however, it does not refer to your submission. Please stick to the subject of your submission.

Mr Beckett: My submission deals with his question. I submitted the 10 findings that emerged from the public consultation meetings. There was opposition in nine of those meetings to the Taxis Bill. That is why I provided those statements.

We met the Minister of the Environment on 12 September, and she gave us assurances. We received an immediate response from the Department. On Tuesday night, I spoke to an official in the Department who told James Matier and me that the provisions in the Bill could not — and would not — be policed. That official told us that there was no way that the Department would police the provisions.

I wish to mention a past Member of the Assembly, the late David Ervine. He was greatly respected in the political world. He worked with us on the Taxis Bill for three years, and I have a copy of his response to it. He met us regularly, used our contributions and fought our corner. The closing words of his response are:

“The Department had the opportunity to make this taxi industry work for the benefit of the public and the driver. We believe they have failed miserably. This is mainly a money-making exercise.”

Mr Weir: With respect, I appreciate those sentiments; however, to take evidence from someone who has died is a difficult road for us to go down.

The Chairperson: I listened carefully to determine the relevance of that evidence to the Taxis Bill. Mr Beckett, I hear your point, but please confine yourself to the opinions of your organisation.

Mr Matier: I wish to explain the reason that the one-tier system will not work in Belfast and the reason that my income will drop by 75% if that mechanism is introduced and private-hire taxis are allowed to pick up on the street. There are not enough taxi ranks to enable us to earn back that 75%.

I know of four proposed taxi ranks, which we believe are to be approved in Stormont today. Of those, the proposed taxi rank in Donegall Street, near the John Hewitt bar, is out of the way and unsuitable for disabled people. Taxi ranks must be at shopping centres such as CastleCourt and the new Victoria Square development. We asked for 12 taxi ranks, but only four have been proposed. That will not enable us to regain that 75% drop in our incomes.

I wish to submit a proposal to the Committee that would benefit disabled people and the public in Belfast. I have submitted a map that highlights the existing taxi ranks as well as our proposed additional ranks, which we believe will bring the taxi industry into the twenty-first century.

On 12 September, Adele Watters admitted that we were 20 years behind —

The Chairperson: Please stick with your own submission.

Mr Matier: The taxi industry is behind, and it has always been classed as a terrorist threat. Drivers have asked for ranks within the city limits in places such as CastleCourt, but we have been told repeatedly that we are a terrorist threat. More than 10 years after the ceasefires, we should be growing with the city, but we have been unable to do so. It took more than two years to get those four taxi ranks.

They are a waste of time. There is a proposal for a taxi rank on the Lisburn Road at Hunter's bar. Do disabled people drink there? No. There is one proposed for Chichester Street, near the new shopping centre. The other two are proposed for the Dublin Road and Donegall Street — disabled people do not go there. Accessible taxis should have unlimited access in the city, and there should be taxi ranks throughout the whole city.

The two-tier system should be retained because if a one-tier system were implemented, I would lose 75% of my income, which will mean changing my vehicle to an ordinary saloon car. My taxi cost £32,000, whereas I can buy a saloon car for £10,000. Over a three-year period of payments, I would save £21,000 by changing my vehicle to a saloon car.

If the Taxis Bill passes, it will ruin accessible-taxi provision in Belfast. I have raised my misgivings about the taxi ranks, and I have an Equality Commission report on working with the taxi industry. To my knowledge, the Taxis Bill was never discussed with anyone in the black-taxi industry — yet they are the people who are concerned about it. Adele Watters and Disability Action should come and talk to us. The taxi branch of the Transport and General Workers Union (TGWU) opened 12 months ago. We tried to talk to people about the Taxis Bill before it got to this stage, but the doors were closed in our faces. The Taxis Bill might increase the number of accessible taxis in rural areas, but it will not in Belfast — it will decrease them, and put me in financial difficulty.

Mr Weir: I appreciate your point about the lack of taxi ranks. That is something that the Department should be addressing through regulations rather than in the Bill; presumably, the Bill will not list where the new taxi ranks will be.

Mr Matier: Under the Bill, private-hire taxis will not be allowed to pick up a fare within a certain distance of taxi ranks. Pick-ups cannot be enforced now — how will that be enforced in future? Currently, the taxi rank at Belfast City Hall has 35 spaces; how are 400 of us supposed to fit into that? If disabled people say that there is a lack of accessible taxis, it is down to a lack of taxi ranks.

Mr Weir: Again, I will ask a question that has been posed to many bodies. Much of the debate will centre on whether there should be a one-tier or two-tier system. I appreciate that a one-tier system would have a detrimental impact financially on public-hire taxi drivers. The flip side of that is that the private-hire taxis would pick-up a lot more trade. Objectively, although I understand the impact on public-hire taxis, it would be a case of swings and roundabouts. Why do you think that Belfast — particularly the city centre — should be treated differently from anywhere else in respect of the regulation of taxis?

Mr Matier: That is because there is already a sizeable number of accessible taxis in Belfast. If the Taxis Bill is implemented, it will decrease the number of accessible taxis in Belfast. There needs to be an increase in accessible taxis in rural areas. If the Taxis Bill is implemented, with a one-tier system, my income will drop.

Mr Weir: Do you not think that the whole of Northern Ireland should be on a level playing field?

Mr Matier: No, because there is already a sizeable number of accessible taxis in Belfast.

Mr Beckett: The Department created the two-tier system, not us. When applying for a vehicle licence, a driver has a choice between public hire or private hire. It is the driver's choice whether he wants to work the streets or work from a depot. There is choice and competition.

Mr Matier: I understand what Barbara was saying; some of the things that I heard made me feel sick. I understand the training issue — I started the taxi branch of TGWU because I understand that training is necessary. I do not have disability training — I learnt how to put a wheelchair in a taxi myself. I understand that all fares should be shown on the meter.

If Belfast public-hire taxis have to leave the city limits, there should be a surcharge for returning;

however, taxi ranks and other matters are 20 years behind. I totally agree on the training. I disagree with people's being ripped off. That is why our proposals for the taxi industry go into the twenty-first century. If DOE and DRD give us taxi ranks, we will be able to provide a service for all disabled persons, no matter whether they are blind, wheelchair-users or whatever. We all know that, because of the Troubles, the industry, in every part of the city, is 20 years behind. The industry needs to grow; it needs to have the chance to grow. The two-tier system should stay in Belfast to give us, as the Belfast public-hire taxis branch of TGWU, a chance to grow with the city.

Mr Boylan: My question has been answered; however, I am concerned about the issue with Belfast and the surrounding area. Many rural taxis that service regular runs and weekly work are saloon cars. Those will all, therefore, have to become accessible taxis. For those drivers to argue that they have saloon cars, and a regular run during the week, with a bit of extra work at the weekend, is the same as your arguing the case to secure your business in your area. It should be fair.

The Committee has listened to submissions over past two weeks and, apart from the Consumer Council, we have heard mostly from taxi associations. We listened to a customer this morning, and when I heard —

Mr Matier: May I point out —

The Chairperson: Had you finished?

Mr Boylan: No. From the point of view of that passenger, I understand that people are trying to secure a one-tier fares system that applies to everyone, or, if not that, then a two-tier system.

My other concern was taxi ranks. Stakeholders have the opportunity to discuss the problems and to challenge some of the clauses in the Bill, and you say that there are not enough taxi ranks.

Mr Matier: There are not enough taxi ranks. There are 31 to 35 spaces in Belfast to hold 400 Belfast public-hire taxis. Every day, the NCP give out tickets for double parking. The eyesore opposite Belfast City Hall is not our fault; we are trying to ply for work. There are eight spaces there, and six at the side of the City Hall. Some days, probably 20 to 30 taxis sit there, trying to get into those spaces. The NCP warden comes around, leaves a ticket and goes. It is the same at the side of the City Hall: that space is for public transport, and we are not allowed in there. On occasions, the traffic wardens and the police are at the City Hall. They make us drive up Howard Street, past Jury's Hotel and back down again. We are Belfast public-hire taxis, but we are not looked upon as a public service.

If a disabled person in a wheelchair gets into my vehicle, I am not allowed to charge any more than the meter price, whereas other taxi companies in Belfast charge a minimum of £8 or £10. I get out, put the wheelchair into the car, strap it up, get back into my vehicle and put on the meter. We do not rip people off. We charge whatever amount is on the meter.

Mr Ford: You made it clear in your written submission that a major concern is regulation, and Jimmy quoted a department official as saying, "We cannot police this Bill". I am well aware of your concerns at the moment, as well as the proposals. How do you see regulations alleviating those concerns? Clearly, elements of the Bill require regulations to ensure that taxi ranks are used appropriately, and so on. What is the appropriate body to do that? If it should be the Department, and if there are issues concerning resources, are you prepared to see an increase in the cost of licences to pay for that?

Mr Beckett: The Department did away with taxi-driving tests. I did a test, but many of the new drivers have not done a test. Six years ago, my licence fee was £26. It is now £75: it has increased by 200%. The cost of an MOT test for a taxi has increased twice in six months and is now £126.50. However, the MOT test for a car — which is, more or less, the same test as for a taxi — costs only £30. We do not know what the Department proposes to charge for the test but it has inserted a clause into the Bill enabling the fee to be paid in instalments, which suggests to me that it will be substantial.

Another major concern is the use of taximeters. A fare at 9.00 am might cost £8, and the same fare at 11.00 am might cost £3 because there is no traffic or waiting around at that time. When, at my depot, one company introduced taximeters, a fare of £3 rose to £4.50, and at peak periods became £5 or £6. As a result, the public took its custom elsewhere. The depot owner had to remove the taximeters and return to the set fare structure.

Taxis are regulated by the Department, and the Bill states that all taximeters will be required to be sealed by the Department. The Department has also said that it does not have the manpower to seal all the taximeters. If that is so, then how does it expect to be able to police the new proposals?

There is another major issue. When I was invited to attend today's meeting, I received the Committee's rule booklet explaining what I should do. However, taxi drivers have no rules to guide them: there is no code of conduct. For the past year, I have been asking for a book of rules and regulations for taxi drivers. The Department's response has been that it has no book. However, day after day, taxi drivers are pulled in and accused of breaking this rule or that regulation. I have asked that taxi drivers be shown the rules or regulations, but that is not done. The Department produces no guidance.

For example, I was prosecuted for picking up someone from the street without a booking. I had a white plate on my vehicle, which authorised me for public hire outside Belfast. I was fined £56 and a further £28 in costs. The two sections of the Department work side by side. The licensing section sent me a letter asking me to attend a meeting or my licence would be revoked because I did not tell them about my conviction. However, they were the very people who prosecuted me; they had sat in the courtroom during my hearing. That is what we are up against daily.

As I said, on 12 September, the Minister spoke to DOE officials and said to them that if these are the facts, she is not surprised that taxi drivers are angry. That was on 12 September. On 14 September, we got action from the Department because Arlene Foster had intervened directly.

Mr I McCrea: You mentioned taximeters. What opinions do you have on a maximum fare?

Mr Matier: A maximum fare will create chaos, especially in the area served by the Belfast public-hire taxis. The driver at the front of the rank might charge the maximum fare; if I am second or third in the rank, I could charge less than that. The passenger will go down the taxi rank asking drivers how much they will charge. The way we work the rank, the first taxi there is the first one away. The maximum fare will create chaos; the minimum fare should stay. It is understandable that a maximum fare could be imposed in certain circumstances, but, in general, it will create chaos in our industry.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for your time; your contribution has been very useful.

Mr Beckett: Mr Chairperson, may I say that all the evidence that I have given is publicly available.

The Chairperson: Thank you.

Mr Matier: May I submit these supporting documents? There is also a map of the proposed taxi ranks.

The Chairperson: Thank you. Will the representatives from the George Best Belfast City Airport taxi rank please come forward? Mr McCloskey, thank you for coming today. You have probably sat through the whole session, so we will try to make this as relaxed as possible — although within certain guidelines.

Mr Anthony McCloskey (George Best Belfast City Airport Taxi Rank): I have only a few questions to ask and a short submission to make. I made most of my proposals in writing, and I am here only to highlight a few of them.

I have been a Belfast public-hire taxi driver for more than 34 years and have had very little help or protection from the Department of the Environment in that time. The franchise for George Best Belfast City Airport runs a fleet of 50 taxis, all of which are wheelchair accessible. We do not charge anyone extra.

All our taxis are in pristine condition, and we would advocate to the Committee that all ports, airports, bus and train stations, and city centres, should have wheelchair-accessible taxis; in fact, I would suggest extending that to every town and city in Northern Ireland.

We agree with a one-tier system, as long as it includes wheelchair-accessible taxis. All our taxis at Belfast City Airport are metered, and we set a fair rate in conjunction with the airport. We would like all taxis in Northern Ireland to be metered, those meters having been calibrated and sealed by the Department of the Environment or its appointed agent.

We want a maximum fare to be set at the highest rate possible in order to accommodate people such as us who pay a high premium to stand and ply for hire at Belfast City Airport. At the moment, our minimum fare is £5, which is scarcely enough.

Rather than running backwards and forwards looking for rises every year or every second year, if the maximum fare was set at a high rate, drivers could get a price rise and it would not take up a lot of time — it would be within the maximum fare, if you understand what I mean. In the past, we have found getting a fare rise to be a very laborious task, and by the time the rise was passed and implemented, it was time to look for another one. It took about a year to get the rise, and we were kicked from Department to Department and then to the Consumer Council. I was a wee bit bemused as to how we ended up at the Consumer Council. I wish that the process for getting a fare rise was more accessible, and that it was easier, rather than harder, to get one.

Our taxi licences are too cheap — licences should be expensive. Getting a licence should involve going on a four- or five-day course that includes a driving test, an aptitude test, a knowledge test and Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (Imtac) training. The majority of our drivers carry have such training; they have paid for it themselves. Such training and testing should be part of the licence-application process. In layman's terms, the drivers should be told the rules, regulations and penalties, so that when they are sent out to ferry the public around, they know exactly what they can and cannot do, and they go out to do a professional job.

We have different types of vehicles, all passed by the Department. Some of them do not carry the Belfast public-hire specification, which includes a partition. That should be an optional extra for the driver — if he wants it for his own safety, depending on where he works. Manufacturers are now producing wheelchair-accessible vehicles, which are readily obtained. We have a variety of such vehicles at George Best Belfast City Airport.

Finally, I suggest only one amendment to the Taxis Bill. I would like to see a zone in Belfast in which the only type of taxi that is allowed to ply for hire is an accessible vehicle. That could be amended slightly to allow outside taxis to come in to the city at the weekend, say from midnight Friday to dawn on Saturday and from midnight Saturday to dawn on Sunday. Those are the only times when there is a scarcity of taxis in Belfast. Other than that, a zone should be in operation in which only wheelchair-accessible taxis are allowed to pick up or ply for hire.

The Chairperson: Thank you for outlining your case with such clarity.

Mr Weir: Thank you for your evidence. Other witnesses have mentioned the situation at the airport. How do things operate at George Best Belfast City Airport? Is there some sort of franchise system? Do drivers pay a particular premium? I was going to use the word “accessible”, but that might be the wrong word in this case. How open is the system, and who can avail of it?

Mr McCloskey: The committee advertises when it needs drivers. We interview them to see whether they meet the criteria, and we explain to them the way in which we operate.

I omitted to mention enforcement. We work at George Best Belfast City Airport, which, as you know, is part of Belfast harbour industrial estate and has its own by-laws. I would like enforcement powers to be extended to the Belfast harbour police.

In answer to Mr Weir’s question, we carry out interviews and we run the scheme on a committee basis. We do not make a profit.

Mr Weir: I am trying to clarify the way in which the scheme operates. Is it almost like a form of licensing that permits taxi drivers to operate at the George Best Belfast City Airport? If so, do those taxi drivers have to pay a fee?

Mr McCloskey: We pay the George Best Belfast City Airport a substantial fee for the franchise to operate at the airport.

Mr Weir: If a taxi driver has not gone through your process, would he be able to drive into the George Best Belfast City Airport and pick up a fare?

Mr McCloskey: No.

Mr Weir: Some people feel that there is not a level playing field inasmuch as the range of taxi drivers that can operate at George Best Belfast City Airport is restricted. Presumably, taxi drivers who work at the airport are free to pick up fares outside the airport.

Mr McCloskey: No. Airport taxi drivers have a restricted public-hire plate for use outside Belfast. We do not operate in the city centre. We operate only at the airport.

Mr Weir: Is that because you are restricted by regulations?

Mr McCloskey: Yes.

Mr Weir: Finally, as regards the proposed legislation, do you see any particular implications for taxiing at George Best Belfast City Airport, over and above anything that applies elsewhere?

Mr McCloskey: No. Our boss — for want of a better description — is the director of the airport. If he tells us to reverse around the airport, we would do that because he is the king of the castle.

Mr Weir: It would be interesting to see you reversing around the airport.

Mr McCloskey: I read about a court case in Birmingham in which the judge said that the director of the airport was akin to the king of the castle who ruled over all he surveyed. The Belfast harbour estate has its own by-laws. However, the harbour police do not have any by-laws that control taxis. In addition to the airport, there is the harbour, and many types of transport, including cruise ships are coming into Belfast. Therefore, the harbour police should be involved in enforcement.

Mr Ford: Are all your vehicles, rather than just a proportion of them, wheelchair-friendly? I know that some of the vehicles are of an MPV-style.

Mr McCloskey: We have purpose-built taxis. We have Volkswagens, Mercedes’ and Peugeots that are in pristine condition. They have to be below a certain age.

Mr Ford: Are you operating a 100% accessible fleet of taxis?

Mr McCloskey: Yes.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for your time, Mr McCloskey. Your attendance at today’s meeting has been very useful.

Mr McCloskey: I must tell Mr Armstrong that, after 35 years, I found the lighting at Stormont to be not too bad. I managed to get around all right.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Thursday 4 October 2007

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr David McNarry (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley
Mr Francie Brolly
Lord Browne
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Kieran McCarthy
Mr Nelson McCausland

Witnesses:

Mr Noel Kelly	} Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure
Ms Julie Mapstone
Mr Paul Sweeney

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): I welcome Julie Mapstone, Noel Kelly and the permanent secretary of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, Paul Sweeney. Would you please introduce yourselves? Is Paul here yet?

Ms Julie Mapstone (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Mr Sweeney has been detained at another meeting, but he is in the Building and is expected to join the Committee soon.

I am head of the libraries restructuring branch of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. Noel Kelly is legal advisor from the Departmental Solicitor's Office. He is an expert in employment law and has been involved in many of the staffing issues that are connected to the RPA changes.

The Chairperson: There is no formal presentation, so we can move immediately to questions or comments.

Mr P Maskey: I will ask a three-part question on trade union concerns. NIPSA is concerned that clause 3 of the Libraries Bill does not allow for the proposed library authority to co-operate with other bodies. First, will you explain the thinking behind clause 3 and give examples of the kinds of bodies that you envisage the library authority co-operating with? Secondly, does clause 3 allow the library authority to co-operate with bodies that have not been established under statutory provision? Finally, has the Linen Hall Library been established under statutory provision?

Ms Mapstone: Partnerships are key issues for the library authority and are covered in clauses 2 and 3.

Clause 2(3) states:

"The Authority may make such arrangements with other bodies whether inside or outside Northern Ireland which it considers necessary in order to enable it to carry out its duty".

Co-operation is reiterated in clause 3(2)(h).

The library authority will be required to work with other organisations in developing and delivering its services. A single library body is in a better position to develop such key partnership arrangements. The Bill will leave the library authority at liberty to effect partnership arrangements with whichever bodies it sees fit including, for example, the education and skills authority, the Linen Hall Library and any other sorts of organisation whose provisions it feels that it can use effectively to deliver services to the public.

Mr P Maskey: The authority is allowed that freedom?

Ms Mapstone: Yes.

Mr D Bradley: Could you explain what lies behind clause 4, which concerns the power of the authorities to undertake commercial activities? Can you assure the Committee that the Department will not judge libraries on their commercial success, or otherwise?

Ms Mapstone: That is not actually a new provision; under the current legislation, libraries have the authority to carry out commercial activity. That might include assisting on a commercial basis with research, production and sale of books of local interest, or providing coffee shops, which several libraries have begun to do. It is not new, but we wanted to make it absolutely clear, because many senior library staff were interested in developing some of those aspects.

The performance of the library authority will not be measured by reference to those commercial activities, because they are not expected to be a highly significant part of the Library Service's work. Performance will be measured, in the usual way, by the extent to which the service meets, or surpasses, the policy guidelines set out in 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries', by its achievement of the public library standards and by its stewardship of public moneys.

Mr D Bradley: Would it be helpful to include in the Bill clarification that libraries will not be judged on their commercial activities or success, given that that was one of the anxieties of the Chartered Institute of Libraries and Information Professionals?

The Chairperson: Do you want to pursue that any further, Dominic, or are you happy enough for now?

Mr D Bradley: I am happy with that.

Mr McCarthy: Many, if not all, of the witnesses were extremely concerned that the current wording of clause 6 does not guarantee free core services. Some were of the view that the current legislation is clearer, as it specifies what exactly can be charged for. Others suggested that the core services described in ‘Delivering Tomorrow’s Libraries’ be specified in the legislation as being free. Why has the Department not specified clearly in clause 6 that core services will be free of charge? Would the Department consider amending the legislation to make the commitment to free core services more explicit?

Clause 6(2) permits different charges for different people, localities and circumstances, and that could, potentially, be discriminatory. What is the intention of clause 6(2), and why is it included in the Bill?

Ms Mapstone: The proposed legislation is not intended to change, in any way, the current charging regimes in the Library Service, but it is intended to simplify the existing statutory provision. That part of the current legislation has pages specifying in great detail what can and cannot be charged for.

In the Department’s policy-guideline document ‘Delivering Tomorrow’s Libraries’ its commitment to the public library service, as a universal service that is free at the point of use for its main provisions, is made quite clear. There is no intention whatsoever to change that, but it needed to be simplified. Indeed, in the explanatory and financial memorandum that accompanies the Bill, the commitment to a free library service is stated. That could be made more specific, but it would be very lengthy and structured and the Department wanted to get away from that. If the Committee has a view on how it could be better worded, we would be interested in hearing that.

A point was raised on clause 6(2), referring to the fact that:

“The scheme of charges may make different provision for different cases, including different provision in relation to different persons, circumstances or localities.”

That reflects the current, different, practice in the Library Service where, for instance, members can use the Internet free, but non-members are charged.

A fine for late return would not be levied from senior citizens or children, whereas it would be levied from adults. It is to make sure that that sort of different practice is covered.

Mr McCarthy: All the representations that the Committee has received have been concerned about the lack of commitment to continue with free services. Will you consider changing the wording of the Bill to convince us all that library services will be free at the point of delivery?

Ms Mapstone: We will consider that.

Mr Brolly: My point is supplementary to Mr McCarthy’s question. People are concerned about the sums of money that will be saved and the start-up costs that will be required. That adds to the concern that the library authority will be forced into a situation where it will have to slip in some charges that the Committee would not want to see happening. That is why Kieran’s point is important: the Bill should state explicitly that core services should be free at the point of delivery.

Mr D Bradley: Ms Mapstone, why would there be different charges in different localities?

Ms Mapstone: I cannot recall the reason for that. There are differences in certain charges; for example, libraries can hire out rooms to community groups and they can levy different charges according to the type of group involved. For a charitable body, there would be a reduced charge. We will come back to the Committee on that.

Mr McCausland: As regards co-operation with other bodies, Ms Mapstone mentioned the education authority and the Linen Hall Library. What other bodies might the library authority co-operate with, and what bodies outside Northern Ireland would be involved?

Ms Mapstone: I do not anticipate that there would be many bodies outside Northern Ireland involved. On a professional level, there could be connections with library services in other parts of the UK or in the Republic. There could be scope for joint activities.

Mr McCausland: Is the Linen Hall Library established by statute?

Ms Mapstone: It is. I do not have material relating to that point with me, but the Linen Hall Library is grant-aided by the Department for certain aspects of its provision.

Mr D Bradley: Mr McCausland mentioned the Linen Hall Library. What sort of relationship do you envisage the authority having with more independent libraries such as the Armagh Public Library and the Cardinal Tomás Ó Fiaich Memorial Library and Archive?

Ms Mapstone: Are you talking about partnerships between the library authority and those libraries?

Mr D Bradley: Yes. What partnerships or relationships could the library authority develop with those two libraries?

Ms Mapstone: That would be up to the library authority. Much of the Bill provides enabling measures, which will allow the authority to develop good relationships and partnership arrangements with other libraries and public bodies for better provision of public library services. The Department is not saying that the authority should or should not do something: we intend to make the provision available, should it be relevant.

Mr McCausland: Picking up on that point, does clause 3 allow the library authority to co-operate with bodies that are not established under statutory provision? That is why I asked about the Linen Hall Library. I am not sure, but I do not think that there is any legislation establishing that library — there may be some ancient provision from 1790 or so. However, there is no statutory provision for the Linen Hall Library. If that library is a body with which the authority might have a partnership relationship, and a funding role, then an issue arises about funding roles for other independent libraries such as the Armagh Public Library or others that might emerge.

Can you clarify that? Is that what would be anticipated?

Ms Mapstone: Any partnership arrangement that is useful for developing the service to the public would be allowable under the proposals. Nothing is being ruled out.

Mr McCausland: What about a funding role, not just a partnership? Does partnership imply a funding role?

Ms Mapstone: We do not anticipate altering the current arrangement whereby the grant to the Linen Hall Library goes directly from the Department.

Mr McCausland: It is funded directly from the Department?

Ms Mapstone: Yes.

Mr McCausland: I could understand that happening when there were separate education and library boards. Is there any reason why the funding will come directly from the Department, rather than through the library authority?

Ms Mapstone: The library authority's prime concern will be the public Library Service. The Department could choose to delegate other funding to it, if there was capacity in the legislation to do so. However, the Department has no intention of doing that.

Mr McCausland: I understand that the library in the Ulster American Folk Park is supported by the Western Education and Library Board. That responsibility would pass to the library authority, I presume?

Ms Mapstone: The funding of it would; yes.

McCausland: I presume that other independent libraries that exist, or might emerge, would follow the example of the Linen Hall Library, whereby they would seek funding from the Department?

Ms Mapstone: If they were seeking funding from the Department, they would come to the Department.

Mr McCausland: Public funding for other independent libraries would come from the Department, rather than the authority?

Ms Mapstone: Yes.

Mr McCausland: In the current legislation, the phrase “comprehensive and efficient”, which refers to the standard of service, is not included in the Bill. Some people suggested in their submissions that it would be useful to have some reference to the quality of the service in the legislation. The suggestion was made that the annex from ‘Delivering Tomorrow’s Libraries’ could be incorporated in some way. Would the Department consider strengthening the wording of clause 2 by incorporating a set of standards? If not, why not?

Ms Mapstone: As members know, standards appear in the ‘Delivering Tomorrow’s Libraries’ policy guidelines document, and that is the first time that standards have been set for the public Library Service in Northern Ireland. Progress towards achieving those standards will be monitored as part of the monitoring arrangements between the Department and the library authority. The expectation is that the authority will reach, or even surpass, those standards in the next few years. At that stage, the Department intends to review the standards to see whether they are still relevant or whether they might be changed or upgraded in order to continue the improvement and development of the service.

If the standards were to be included in the legislation, the Department would have to go back through the whole legislative process in order to amend them. We do not think that that is appropriate or necessary. Standards can be part of the relationship between the Department and the authority.

Mr McCausland: Is there any reason for not including the phrase “comprehensive and efficient” in the legislation? That would not have to be amended.

Ms Mapstone: The Department considered that phrase long and hard. That is a common phrase that is used about public library services across the UK — however, it is not terribly meaningful. What is meant by “comprehensive” must be spelled out. That is what the Department tried to do in redrafting the legislation. Having to legislate for efficiency is a little strange, because one would expect that to be monitored anyway.

We strengthened the duties of the authority in respect of the provision of a comprehensive service in clause 2(2)(a), which states that the specific task of the public Library Service is to provide:

“materials sufficient in number, range and quality to meet the general requirements of adults and children”.

That is an attempt to define what we mean by “comprehensive and efficient”.

We will look at that issue again. I recognise that witnesses have raised that concern in their evidence to the Committee.

Lord Browne: Most of the witnesses have expressed the opinion that establishing the library authority and the education and skills authority at the same time would be to the advantage of staff — it would maintain their morale and give them certainty. They have also said that 1 April 2008 is not a realistic date for the setting-up of the library authority. Has the Department had any discussions with the Department of Education about the timing of the establishment of the library authority and the education and skills authority? If so, what were the outcomes of those discussions?

Mr Paul Sweeney (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Obviously, the Department of Education’s decision on 19 July to announce that the establishment of the education and skills authority would not now take place on 1 April 2008, but at a time between then and April 2009, has had a material impact on all of these matters. Likewise, the Committee’s decision to seek a four-month extension to allow for further consultation — and rightly so; it was the Committee’s prerogative to do so — has had an impact.

As a result of all that, we have, as you might imagine, engaged with the Department of Education to work out in what way the timescales will have to be aligned. The Minister has obviously also reflected on that, and he has raised the issue with his Executive colleagues. My understanding is that he will come before the Committee on 18 October, and he wishes to engage specifically on that issue in the light of the decision about the education and skills authority and that fact that the legislation now needs more time at Committee Stage. The Minister wishes to specifically engage on the need to realign, and establish certainty about, the timescales for those two processes. Meanwhile, we and our colleagues in the Department of Education are working very closely on the practical tasks that need to be addressed.

Lord Browne: Do you foresee a realistic date for setting up the library authority? Is it possible that it will be set up not by 1 April, but at a later date?

Mr Sweeney: From the Minister’s point of view, April 2008 was the DCAL position. Some might say that it was an aspirational date, but until the Minister makes an official decision — and, in the first instance, advises the Committee of that decision — officials have to continue to work towards that date. As I say, I know that the Minister has given the matter very serious consideration, and he will engage with you specifically on the issue of timescales on 18 October.

Mr McNarry: Forgive me for being late, and please stop me if this has been raised already. The Committee has heard evidence from witnesses who have taken legal advice on the Bill that suggests that there are obvious elements in the Bill that are open to legal dispute. They have informed us that the reply to the advice has been that that may be the case, but any dispute should be sorted out at a tribunal. The rest of the Committee and I found that quite disturbing. What issues have been pointed out to you that indicate that a dispute is already taking place? Are you aware of a response to the effect of, “We recognise that disputes will arise, but rather than resolve them at this stage, we will let them go and allow them to be dealt with in tribunals and the courts.”?

Mr Sweeney: That may relate specifically to schedule 2 and the transfer schemes.

Mr McNarry: It does, yes.

Mr Sweeney: With the Committee’s approval, I will defer to my colleague from the Departmental Solicitor’s Office.

Mr Noel Kelly (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Certainly, as far as I am aware, no response has ever issued to anyone from NIPSA or UNISON or anyone else along the lines of, “We recognise that there is a dispute, but we will leave it to the tribunals to sort it out.” That simply would not be the way in which we would approach it. Various issues were raised in the NIPSA document, of which you are aware.

We take a different legal view on those issues. To answer your specific question, nobody that I am aware of has responded in a way that suggests that we would leave the tribunals to sort out a mess that we had created.

Mr McNarry: I am grateful for that response. However, I will pursue the matter.

The drafting of the Bill is also a concern. You are telling the Committee that the two legal opinions are different — yours differs from someone else’s. That seems to link directly to an existing dispute. I need to know that you are confident that your opinion is right, that the other opinion is wrong, and that you will put yours in the legislation and allow it to be tested in the courts.

From a layman’s point of view, I am asking you to have another crack at the legislation and come back and let the Committee know that you are doubly sure that you are right and that they are wrong. That would reassure those of us who have to legislate on the matter and — somehow — agree the Bill, which is what we want to do. I am not suggesting that this would happen, but the Committee will take a dim view of being misled by anyone, particularly where legal opinion is concerned, when we are reliant upon advice. Given that, would it not be better to take on board what I have said? Would you take an opportunity to resolve the matters that I have mentioned to avoid a scenario in which the dispute may be hanging in abeyance, with the only course of action left being to go to a tribunal?

I say that because, when the matter comes before the Assembly — and even when the Committee scrutinises the minutiae of the Bill — I, and I am sure that other members will agree, will need to be satisfied that the legal advice that we are getting is correct. At the moment we have contrary legal advice. I will not flip a coin to decide which one I believe. However, I am sure that you appreciate where I am coming from. Given that a legal dispute is ongoing, I do not want schedule 2 to be included in the Bill in the knowledge that at the first opportunity the Bill will be tested in court. I do not think that the Minister would want that either.

Mr N Kelly: I understand your point. There are two differing legal opinions, and I am fully prepared to reconsider the issue. However, it will come as no surprise to the Committee to hear that in the run-up to today's Committee meeting we went over the legislation again thoroughly. My opinion is still that it is correctly drafted. That will be of no immediate comfort to the Committee because another senior counsel has a contrary opinion. The opinion of Frank O'Donoghue QC has not been disclosed to me, but both in writing and in person, John Corey indicated what he said and what he was taking out of that opinion.

Certainly, I will reconsider each of the issues that have been raised. It would be helpful if we could see the full opinion that NIPSA obtained. The Committee may also find it helpful, but perhaps it has seen it already.

Mr McNarry: I appreciate Noel's leading me, which makes a change — I was coming on to that matter. Given that a dispute has been signalled, it is important that those who created that resolve the matter by getting together.

I hope that the Committee would support such a request to those who have highlighted the prospect of a dispute.

It should be put on record that the Committee may need to seek a third legal opinion — an outside opinion. That is no disrespect to Mr Kelly, and I am reluctant to do so, because the money that it would cost could be spent on a school or on a hospital patient. I am taking a cross-cutting perspective, in that I would like to believe what you say, but I have heard a different opinion. If you and Mr O'Donoghue cannot get together, the Committee may need to take some action, but the matter must be resolved. .

Mr Brolly: In the ongoing argument between the two legal opinions, paragraph 15 on page 4 of NIPSA's submission may be significant: "Trade Union Side has sought further legal advice on these matters." "We remain strongly concerned that the current provisions in the Bill may not provide the necessary protection of staffs' rights and we believe all the disputed clauses in Schedule 2 should be subject to further detailed scrutiny at Committee stage."

It is significant that, in the second sentence, NIPSA uses the words "may not provide", whereas its officials' expressed a much stronger opinion when they first appeared before the Committee.

Mr N Kelly: The difficulty arises when a lawyer is asked to scrutinise a Bill, or any piece of work, and to try to punch holes in it. I stress that I have not seen Mr O'Donoghue's opinion, but it may have been along the lines of recognising the possibility of a dispute. I suspect that his opinion is not couched in as definite terms as was initially suggested to the Department. However, it would have been extremely helpful to have seen his opinion.

The issues are complex, and my instructions throughout, when considering this Bill and throughout the work that I have done for other Departments on RPA, have been to ensure that the interests of staff are fully and properly protected in line with Cabinet Office guidance and TUPE protection. That is what I sought to achieve. However, if there is doubt, I want to see the full opinion and I would give it careful consideration. I know Mr O'Donoghue: he is an extremely able lawyer, and I would be interested to hear what he has to say.

Mr McNarry: In order to provide clarity to the Committee, is it the case that the contrary legal opinion has not been discussed with you?

Mr N Kelly: It has been discussed but not disclosed. I have seen paraphrased extracts.

Mr McNarry: Is there no way that you can agree with the suggestion that the response was that in that eventuality, the case would simply have to go to a tribunal?

Mr N Kelly: I am absolutely certain that that suggestion was not made by me, in my hearing, or, as far as I am aware, by anyone else. As at least one person in this room knows, I chair the tribunal, and I would not drum up extra work.

Mr McNarry: I accept that.

The Chairperson: I will move on to Dominic, who, I hope, will include the issues raised in paragraphs 2 and 3 of schedule 1 to the Bill in his question, such as how many board members the authority should have and the rules governing the tenure of office.

Mr D Bradley: That is exactly the point that I was going to raise. The Bill states that the board should have between seven and 14 members. Many witnesses who have appeared before the Committee have questioned the ability of such a small board to handle the workload involved, particularly as the nature of the work means that the board often has to set up subcommittees. A board that has between seven and 14 members would find that extremely difficult.

Did the Department look at the size of other boards in Northern Ireland and compare its proposal with those, or try to benchmark the board by comparing it to similar boards in other parts of the UK and the Republic?

Witnesses have expressed anxiety about the make-up of the board: they believe that it could be more representative and could include public and union representatives, and library interest groups. Have you considered inserting a clause into the Bill to deal with the make-up of the board? What are the pros and cons of introducing legislation to do that in comparison with leaving it to a public appointments process?

Ms Mapstone: The Department examined other boards in Northern Ireland for benchmarking purposes. We did not look outside Northern Ireland. We looked at the size of board membership, with particular reference to some of DCAL's sponsor bodies such as the Arts Council and the Sports Council. There is a general move towards having smaller boards that work more effectively and efficiently, so we were trying to reflect that. The text of the Bill also reflects advice from the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments (OCPA), which recommends having smaller boards. However, the Minister is on record as saying that he wishes to reconsider all questions relating to the board: he has made that point to the Committee and wants to hear its advice.

OCPA recommends open appointments on the basis of merit and the need to reflect the width of experience required. The Department does not believe that the new library authority will need to have the range of committees that is currently required by the education and library boards. As the new board will be dealing only with the Library Service, fewer committees will be necessary. An audit committee and a finance committee will be needed: after that, the situation is quite open; therefore, we do not think that the need for committees will necessarily drive up the number of board members. As I have said, the Minister wishes to reconsider much of the detail.

Mr D Bradley: You said that the general feeling is in favour of having smaller boards, but is there any evidence that they are more efficient? You also said that appointments would be based on merit; but how will you ensure that you get board members who have the experience and level of interest needed?

Ms Mapstone: I am not aware of any specific research demonstrating that smaller boards are more effective than larger ones. The Department has followed the views and guidance of OCPA.

The information and documentation for the advertisement for the recruitment of board members will be crucial in ensuring that appointments are based on merit. The advertisement will need to specify the types of experience being sought. Criteria will be set for the recruitment of members and will ensure that all areas of required expertise are covered.

Mr D Bradley: I can see what lies behind the process, and that you will be able to attract suitable candidates through the advertisement. Would it be useful for a balance to be built into the process so that some of the interests that I mentioned earlier could be represented on the board?

Ms Mapstone: Getting a balance will be crucial. The Department does not want the board to comprise people with just one type of experience or who come from just one area. It wants the board to reflect broadly the population that will be served by a universal public library service. Care must be taken in drawing up the recruitment documentation so that the range of applicants will be wide.

Mr McCausland: To pick up on your use of the word "reflect"; the constitution of the current education and library boards does not oblige them to reflect the areas they serve, and in some cases, there has been great disparity in the appointments that have been made. The only two bodies that are bound, by legislation, to reflect Northern Ireland society in their appointments are the Equality Commission and the Human Rights Commission. If that is an example of good principle, and if the Department has endorsed the need for the new board to reflect the area it serves, is there value in considering whether to include provision in this legislation?

Ms Mapstone: We will give that matter further consideration.

Mr Brolly: I have a question about the composition of the new board, particularly as regards geography. At present, local councillors are members of each of the five education and library boards that represent their areas. Does the Department envisage that the new library board will include members from the new councils, however many there are? The Committee has asked previously how the Department intends the new library board to associate, and have a close relationship, with local authorities so that it does not become centralised. Of course, being a country fella, by that I mean Belfast-based.

Ms Mapstone: The authority will be a regional body with a single board, and it will be challenge for that board to reflect local issues. In the interests of balance, how that will be done must be considered. It will be difficult to set up a board that reflects the interests of local areas within a single, regional body. The chief executive designate, Irene Knox, is concerned to ensure that local relevance is achieved in the delivery of the library service and is considering how to go about that.

Mr McCausland: If I were to sit on the library authority, and it were suggested that the library in Dromara should be closed and a new one opened in Drumnahunshin, I would not have a clue what to do, because I do not know those places. However, I would be able to make a decision on whether to transfer services from Skegoneill Avenue to the Shore Road. Local input is important. Later, the Committee will be discussing the subregional structure of the library authority. I am yet to be convinced that there will be good decision-making on local issues within a single library authority when, in practice, those on the board will know little about certain areas. If I were asked whether a library should be situated in Londonderry, Strabane or somewhere else in the west of the Province, I would not have an answer. How will that be dealt with?

Ms Mapstone: Something as significant as a library closure would require a great deal of interaction with local people. As members are aware, the Department requires the education and library boards to engage in lengthy consultations on any proposal to close a library.

Mr McCausland: However, the board of the single library authority, which would not have local knowledge, would make the ultimate decision.

Ms Mapstone: Yes; the final decision would be taken by the board, but it would have to ensure that it gained local knowledge.

The Chairperson: I agree with Mr McCausland that Strabane would be a suitable location for a new library.

Mr Brolly: You have used the phrase, “interaction with the local authorities”. How would that be written into the legislation? Who, from a local authority, would you interact with? If your face were set against having representatives from each local council on the new board, what type of structure could be set up that would allow you to have close contact and deal with situations such as those that Nelson McCausland mentioned.

Ms Mapstone: Much will depend on what emerges from the review of public administration. In particular, community-planning responsibilities will fall to the new councils, and we have had conversations with the Department of the Environment specifically on whether the responsibility of the library authority to interact, under those community-planning guidelines, should be put into legislation. We believe that it should not. The library authority would then be named in the relevant local government legislation as a body that would be part of those community-planning responsibilities. Until that arrangement is set up, the library authority must develop relationships at a local level, through its senior library staff.

The Chairperson: I would like Members to turn to general issues for the next 15 minutes. Paul Maskey, Kieran McCarthy and Wallace Browne will each ask a question, and I would ask Julie and her team to give a composite answer.

Mr P Maskey: Why is there is no provision in the Bill for secondments between the library authority and the education and skills authority or between the schools’ library service and the library authority? Why are secondments being limited to the Northern Ireland Civil Service? Will you consider broadening the opportunities for secondments?

Mr McCarthy: My question is about money and estimated savings. The majority of witnesses have been concerned about the predicted savings for the library authority in 2009-10 and 2010-11, and, in particular, the assumption that there will be savings through reducing the number of management-level staff. The boards have said that they do not have a large number of senior staff and that cutbacks in backroom staff have already been made. Witnesses have also pointed out that savings from redundancies are not normally realised until at least two years after they occur, and that corporate services will mean ongoing additional costs for the new authority.

In detail, and with supporting figures, how does the Department envisage making those savings? You may wish to provide a written answer to that important question.

Lord Browne: I return to my original theme — the link between the library authority and education services. Many people are concerned that, when the services are separated, the strong links and experience that has been built up will be put at risk. How does the Department intend to maintain those links? In addition, how will the new library authority deliver on the literacy and lifelong learning programme?

Ms Mapstone: There is already scope for secondments in the legislation. Paragraph 5(1)(b) of schedule 1 states that the library authority, including its chief executive, shall have: “such other employees as the Authority may determine.”

There is no insistence that those employees would come through direct recruitment — there could be secondments. Paragraph 8(1) of schedule 1, under the heading “Arrangements for assistance”, states:

“The Authority may make arrangements with such persons ... as it considers appropriate for assistance to be provided to it.”

No attempt is being made to deny other types of secondments, particularly on the education side, with the schools’ library services. Secondment arrangements will apply to the library authority. Civil Service secondments are specified because they may not otherwise have been allowable, and there may be a need for a civil servant with specialist skills to implement financial systems or accounting procedures to work in the library authority. That is the only reason why that measure been included in the schedule.

Mr Sweeney: The financial effects of the Bill are, to some extent, set out in paragraph 13 of the explanatory and financial memorandum, which estimates savings of £600,000 in 2009-10, rising to £1.2 million in 2010-11, under the review of public administration. Some of those savings are contingent on when the new library authority goes live. The figures were predicated on the body's going live on 1 April 2008, so the actual starting date will have some effect.

Corporate services are dealt with in paragraph 14 of the explanatory and financial memorandum. That is important, and the Department has made Deloitte's work available to the Committee. At present, it costs almost £1 million to deliver corporate services to the five education and library boards. That money comes from the five education and library boards, but, as the new library authority will be a stand-alone body, that indirect cost must be identified and factored in. Deloitte's work was useful because it quantified that cost. I needed to know the current hidden cost. Deloitte said that it was £956,000, which I will round up to £1 million for the sake of this discussion. Therefore, I know that I will have to find around £1 million. Taking guidance from the chief executive designate, we will have to find the most cost-effective way in which to deliver the corporate services that are currently being delivered through the five boards. If the Chairperson approves, perhaps the Department could provide the Committee with a succinct couple of pages outlining the ramifications of the Deloitte study.

The Chairperson: The Committee would welcome that.

Ms Mapstone: The Department of Education and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure keep in regular contact on issues relating to the creation of the two new bodies and the development of a common approach to staff-transfer issues between the education and skills authority and the library authority. Contact is maintained using implementation teams from both bodies. That will ensure that staff who are currently employed in the education and library boards have the same cover when they transfer to the two new bodies.

We have been asked about the continuation of relationships — there is a strong historical connection between the public library service and the education service. For example, library assistants deliver initiatives such as Bookstart, which is a literacy programme, to preschool children. Library staff are involved in primary-school visits that demonstrate the library's value to young children through storytelling sessions and other initiatives. We will ensure that that service continues, and it can include any sort of partnership arrangement. Service level agreements could be developed between the education and skills authority and the library authority. A great deal of debate is ongoing between the two sides, and that will continue.

The Chairperson: Several witnesses have expressed concerns about the assumption that a reduction in managerial staff will result in savings. Will you comment on that? Some people have said that the education and library boards do not have a large number of staff at senior level and that the number of back room staff has already been reduced. Is that the case?

Ms Mapstone: Yes. Some education and library boards have been quite successful in reducing their staff numbers. Streamlining is involved when combining five library services into one, and we expect that that will have an impact on the Library Service headquarters and its administrative staff. The specific costings associated with that streamlining are based on the assumption that there will be efficiencies in combining five library services into one.

The Chairperson: We shall move to general issues.

Mr D Bradley: We have already covered a few of the general issues. There have been concerns raised about the location of the library authority's headquarters. Has a decision been made about its location and, if not, when will it be made? What will the Department take into consideration when making its decision? Also, where will the library authority's temporary premises be located? Finally, what steps have been taken to ensure that reference materials and archives will be protected by the new library authority? The Chairperson knows that the Irish and Local Studies Library in Armagh is at the forefront of my mind when I ask that question.

The Chairperson: And why would it not be?

Ms Mapstone: The chief executive designate and her immediate support team are based in Belfast, pro tem. However, in November 2007 they will move to temporary premises in the centre of Lisburn. Nothing has been determined about a permanent location for the library authority's headquarters. We are waiting for final advice to emerge on the relocation of public-sector jobs and the extent to which that will direct us. We also need to consider the library authority's location in the light of decisions that will be made about the location of the new bodies that will be formed as a result of the review of public administration. As there may be a timing issue, we may need to make our decision first. At present, I cannot tell you anything about the longer-term location of the new authority.

Nevertheless, it will be the subject of consultation and an equality impact assessment.

Mr Sweeney: The actual model through which the new library authority will be delivered has yet to be determined. The critical issue will be in ensuring that we achieve business continuity. I do not envisage a situation whereby the new body will have huge headquarters — it will be a small, lean group. Perhaps, later on, we will talk about exploiting the subregional structure. The notion of a headquarters — with hundreds of people being consolidated into one geographical space — is not one that has entered into my business plan or processes at this stage.

It will be the new board's responsibility to bring proposals to the Minister. The Minister will operate within statutory and Public Service Commission guidelines on the location of public-sector jobs. I do not want to leave the Committee with the impression that several hundred people might be located in one place. Rather, a small group will probably be housed. We will have to identify — using all available guidelines — the most cost-effective location.

The Chairperson: I recall the Minister making the same point.

Mr McCarthy: Dominic has pre-empted my question. I invite you to find a suitable site on the Ards Peninsula, which is absolutely beautiful. We could fit you in there, just fine.

Mr McCausland: Or a caravan site in Ballywalter.

Mr McCarthy: Some witnesses have suggested that a separate advisory council should be set up to provide specialist advice to the library authority. Has the Department considered that option? What would the Department see as being the pros and cons of having such an advisory body?

Ms Mapstone: The Department has considered the matter. A separate statutory advisory body would involve considerable expense, and would be an extra statutory body in a situation where similar bodies are being streamlined.

Such an advisory body also carries certain disadvantages. As a standing body, there would be recurrent costs for a function that may not be needed frequently. It would also be static, in that it would not necessarily be a repository of good practice in library services.

We accept that the library authority will need access and recourse to advice, but there are existing relationships, networks and bodies to provide that advice. The authority will have access to the work of the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council, which undertakes research in library studies and makes that research public. As a separate, dedicated body, the library authority will be in good position to develop strong networks with public library services across the water and in the South, and with professional associations such as the Chartered Institute of Library and Information Professionals and the Association of Chief Librarians.

Once good networks are established, all sorts of benefits spin off from them, such as systems of peer-review, and joint activity to examine certain aspects. On an ad hoc basis, anything that has worked elsewhere, or anything that might be causing a problem might be discussed within those networks. That is a much more dynamic picture; and that arrangement is more likely to offer the library authority advice that is current and reflects current good practice.

Mr Brolly: I will follow up on Paul's point. Various people who submitted representations to the Committee were worried that the library authority would be placed in an ivory tower somewhere, and that it would be distant. That is why the Committee is concentrating on the local impact of a central library authority. May I suggest a location for it? Mid Ulster would be grand; and there is nothing wrong with East Derry either.

Mr McCarthy: That is too far away.

Mr Brolly: Toomebridge.

The Chairperson: No questions have been asked. [Laughter.]

Mr McCausland: What does Ms Mapstone think might be the role of local government in any subregional structure? Should the Bill not refer to the subregional structure of the library authority?

Ms Mapstone: The Department sees the subregional structure as an operational matter and one that should not necessarily be reflected in the legislation. The issue is about how the library authority will operate at the local level, and that is still under consideration by the chief executive designate. She regards it as an important matter. The Department accepts that delivering local relevance is of key significance, but the issue is about how the library authority will operate in a practical way at ground level.

Mr McCausland: Will the incoming chief executive have that matter worked up in the next couple of months?

Ms Mapstone: I know that she is proposing to do that, as far as possible.

Mr McCausland: That was one of the issues that the Committee took into account when it asked for an extension of the Committee Stage. There was uncertainty, and that element was thrown in at a late stage. There had been no mention of it before then.

How many staff would be in a central executive administrative team? I know that they will be lean and fit.

Mr Sweeney: I can answer that question only at a very high level. My discussions with the chief executive designate have been predicated on having a very small executive team that might comprise the chief executive, a directorate team — a handful of people or less — and some support or administrative staff. Please do not hold me to that model.

The principle is to exploit all of the talent that exists throughout the library network in Northern Ireland, and to ensure that the headquarters' core function will be to support and empower that network, rather than becoming some sort of ivory tower. As yet, we have not submitted a business model to the Minister, but the impulse in the Department has been to predicate it on the idea of having a small, multidisciplinary executive team.

Mr McCausland: There is no national library in Northern Ireland. Therefore, unless one travels to Scotland, Dublin or London, one cannot get access to the wealth of material that is important for the development of some of the cultural life in Northern Ireland. Should the legislation not make it the responsibility of the library authority to ensure that there is a collection of all the relevant material about Northern Ireland, and what I would term the Ulster diaspora? I am not saying that there should be a national library collecting everything under the sun.

Individual libraries in Northern Ireland will have books about local villages or the history of some organisations, and so on. However, one cannot get access to material about people from Ulster who have travelled around the world and who have made their mark in various areas of life. I have found several examples of where one has to go to the British Library to find information about people from Northern Ireland. It is bizarre that the material is not available in places such as Omagh, Belfast Central Library, or the Linen Hall Library.

No one can get access to the material because no one knows that it exists, unless, like me, they are weirdoes or sad people who go on holiday in order to search for that sort of material. Can a provision be included in the legislation to pick up on the idea of having a collection of material that is relevant to Ulster and the Ulster diaspora? If I travel to Dublin, I can get easy access to material about any place in Ireland. There is a gap to be filled.

The Chairperson: I presume that that point can be absorbed, because it does not really have a legislative base.

Mr McCausland: It could be included as a responsibility of the library authority.

Ms Mapstone: We will consider it.

Mr McCausland: OK, that is fine.

The Chairperson: My question concerns the tenure of the chairperson of the new library authority. NIPSA expressed the view that the legislation should specify that the chairperson of the new board should be permitted to serve a maximum of only two terms. Have you any views on that?

Ms Mapstone: We agree. However, it does not necessarily belong in the legislation but rather in the terms of appointment and the operating rules of the board.

Mr Brolly: I am worried about operational issues not being included in the Bill. Obviously, coming from a rural area, I am worried about the library service not providing a comprehensive service across a wide geographical area. I do not accept that the matter should be left to the operation of the library authority when it is established. It should be written into the legislation that there should be contact and interaction with local authorities, and how that could be managed and achieved.

Ms Mapstone: We will consider that point. As I said, the Minister wants to consider board membership issues. The difficulty with putting operational matters into legislation is that the legislation would become huge and would start to limit the new authority's freedom and flexibility, and it would make it more difficult for the authority to deliver the best possible service. Therefore, it is a question of selecting the key operational issues that are required.

Mr Brolly: This reflects again on one of the earlier questions about having comprehensive and efficient provisions. To me, the word "comprehensive" refers not only to material but also to a wide geographical spread. It is important that that should be included somewhere in the Bill. I am not insisting on there being representation on the board, but geographical spread should be written into the legislation in a viable way.

The Chairperson: I thank the team from the Department; Julie Mapstone and Noel Kelly; and, of course, Paul Sweeney the permanent secretary for attending the Committee. We look forward to reading and rereading the Hansard report.

The Committee intends to write to the Department about issues that were not completely covered this morning, such as start-up costs, around which there are several issues to be clarified.

Thank you all for coming.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Thursday 4 October 2007

TAXIS BILL (NIA 4/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Patsy McGlone (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr David Ford
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mr Samuel Gardiner
Mr Ian McCrea
Mr Peter Weir

Witnesses:

Mr Raymond Dempster	}	Accessible Taxi Association NI
Mr Eamon Grogan
Mr Terence Maguire
Mr William Black	}	International Airport Taxi Co Ltd
Mr James McVeigh
Mr Brian Press

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): Today we shall receive oral evidence from Mr William Black; the Accessible Taxi Association NI; Mr Terence Maguire; and the International Airport Taxi Co Ltd. Members will find all the submissions in their members' pack.

One further evidence session is scheduled for next Thursday. The witness will be Monica Wilson of Disability Action, and, unless we receive any late requests, that will be the final oral evidence session. Departmental officials should be in attendance for that.

We will now begin to take formal evidence. Is Mr William Black here? He is not. We will move on. Are Mr Eamon Grogan and Mr Raymond Dempster here? They are.

You are both very welcome. We try to keep evidence sessions as informal and relaxed as possible. We have received your submission. We will allow 10 to 15 minutes for you to present to the Committee. Please try to keep within that time frame. You do not have to repeat everything that you have already said in your written submission, but if there are particular points that you wish to emphasise, please feel free to do so. After that, Committee members will indicate whether they have further questions to ask or points that they would like you to clarify. Please stay focused on the Taxis Bill. The floor is now yours, so I thank you very much for giving up your time to be with us today.

Mr Eamon Grogan (Accessible Taxi Association NI): I wish to thank the Committee for the Environment for its invitation and the Committee Clerk for the work that she has done on our behalf.

I want to talk about the Department's proposal for an operator's licence and how that will affect me as a driver.

Mr Raymond Dempster (Accessible Taxi Association NI): I will be helping Eamon. We have put together our notes, and obviously Eamon will need some help with what he is saying. Basically, that will be my role.

As Eamon has said, the association's first problem with the Taxis Bill is operator licensing. The association feels strongly that that licence is not suitable for Belfast public-hire taxis. It is widely known that that type of licence is used to regulate the private-hire taxi industry. The operator's licence requires drivers to take and maintain records. Eamon wants to explain exactly what that would mean for him.

Mr Grogan: The Department stated that Belfast public-hire taxis would always be exempt from having to hold operator's licences. However, the Taxis Bill will require all taxi drivers to hold an operator's licence. Therefore, someone such as myself, who cannot read or write, will be unable to keep the records required by the licence. As the driver of an accessible taxi, I will no longer be able to meet the required standards. Therefore, I feel that there is no legislation to help people such as myself.

On the health and safety issue, public-hire taxis are of the highest standard — M1 type approval standard vehicles — and they are wheelchair accessible. Public-hire taxis have always been exempt from holding an operator's licence.

Mr Dempster: Association drivers are sole traders — self-employed people who do not work for companies. As sole traders, we feel that an extra burden will be placed on us. For example, we will have to pay for the operator's licence — whatever the cost — and that cost will be set by the Department. However, taxi drivers who work for companies will have that cost paid by the company owner, who may then pass the cost on to the taxi driver. The association feels that drivers' having to pay for the licence themselves is an extra burden, and that that has not been fully recognised by the Department.

As Eamon also said, before the Taxis Bill was drawn up, an early consultation included an exemption from holding an operator's licence for our type of taxi. However, when the later consultation document on the Taxis Bill was issued, that exemption had been removed. We spoke to the Department about that, but were given no firm answers to our questions. We would like the Committee to amend the Taxis Bill to allow that exemption to remain in place. The Committee should remember that an operator's licence has never before been used in respect of a public-hire taxi service.

Mr Grogan: The Department proposes to put in place a one-tier system that will allow all taxis, when hailed, to pick up passengers on the streets of Belfast. The public have always been able to recognise easily that public-hire taxis can be hailed in the street. However, the new legislation will make it easier for any taxi to pick up people on the streets — the public will not be able to recognise that they could be getting into anyone's car and that that is not a safe situation. Therefore, the association wants the two-tier system to remain in place.

Mr Dempster: As an association, we are aware that there is a need for more taxis at peak times and, has already been discussed with the Committee, those times are between 1.00 am and 3.00 am at weekends.

There is no need for extra taxis in Belfast outside those hours. Taxi industries in every town and city have the same problems at the same times; the situation is not unique to Belfast or anywhere else in Northern Ireland. It is at that time of night that taxis are used most.

Drivers of Belfast public-hire taxis have serious concerns about the amount of work that will be taken away from them if the Assembly passes the Taxis Bill. The booking of private-hire taxis has grown beyond anyone's expectations. In Belfast, the system works very well, and private-hire taxis provide a good service when the public want to phone and book a taxi.

However, the proposal to allow private-hire taxis to pick up people in the street without a prior booking goes against what has always been normal practice in Belfast and will put public-hire taxis at a distinct disadvantage. The rest of the industry can work in the public- and private-hire arenas whereas, by definition, our type of taxi can work only from taxi ranks. The Bill will, therefore, push our association into doing something that it does not want to do. Our taxi drivers do not want to work for private-hire companies through phone booking. They want to continue to work from taxi ranks and be hailed in the street. I am aware of the fact that to limit ourselves to that type of work could be detrimental to us, but we believe that there is no level playing field and that proposals in the Taxis

Bill, at the risk of repetition, will allow saloon cars to work in the public- and private-hire arenas. The Taxis Bill will create a huge movement towards private-hire companies.

Another problem posed by the Bill and the one-tier system is the provision of designated areas, which are to be regulated by the Department of the Environment. That greatly concerns us because our association has never been told what distances those areas will cover or how they will be enforced. The Department will regulate that private-hire cars cannot pick up passengers in designated areas around a taxi rank, but passengers being picked up by private-hire taxis without a prior booking has been one of the main problems in Belfast to date.

The proposal in the Bill is for private-hire taxis to pick up people in designated areas. The association does not feel that that measure can be enforced effectively. The authorities have never been able to enforce it in Belfast city centre in the past, and we feel that they would be unable to do so in the future. We cannot expect to have complete enforcement in every designated area. As representatives of our industry, we believe that the more designated areas there are, the better; but a bigger problem is going to be created.

The association's other concern is based on the requirements for accessible taxis under the one-tier system. Eamon will take up that point.

Mr Grogan: Drivers of accessible taxis have always been told that permission to pick up passengers on the street relies on our vehicles being wheelchair accessible. The Department is now saying that it will allow private-hire vehicles to pick up people on the street and is easing the current requirements about permission. Taxi drivers in the association have had to go to the expense of buying wheelchair-accessible public-hire taxis, and now the standard is being lowered; that is wrong.

Mr Dempster: As Eamon said, the association's taxis have to meet the highest standards to gain M1 type approval. We want the specific standard of M1 type approval to remain as the classification for an accessible taxi, simply for the safety of passengers. It is the highest standard, and to go below it might be detrimental to the industry and, later, probably to the Department too. We ask the Committee to be mindful that the best taxi industries in the world use our type of taxi and that regulation for accessible taxis in Belfast is in its infancy. There should be a sustained period of stability and enforcement, so that the public can gain confidence in the public-hire, wheelchair-accessible taxi service.

Eamon will now explain what the training that all drivers must undergo means to him.

Mr Grogan: The training means that drivers of accessible taxis will have to meet certain requirements. The Department will train drivers on issues specific to taxis. I feel that if I do not meet the requirements, I will be out of a job.

Mr Dempster: When the association had a meeting with GoSkills, the company that will develop the training schedule, I raised a concern about the training. It is proposed that drivers be trained to BTEC level, but how can someone in Eamon's position, or someone like him, comply with that? How will he be trained? That problem must be recognised now, and he must be given the same rights as other drivers to receive training, attain qualifications and better himself as a professional driver.

The association knows what those rights mean to Eamon. We asked the Department about the scenario of keeping records relating to operator's licences and were told that Eamon may be able to use a Dictaphone. That simply does not seem right: to say the least, it is a poor suggestion. Eamon, do you want to say anything else about training?

Mr Grogan: No.

Mr Dempster: I remind the Committee that Eamon has been forced to go public, as at today's meeting, on having trouble with reading and writing. That has never happened before and is happening now only because the Department has offered nothing to help drivers in Eamon's position.

A dedicated taxi-enforcement team was created as a result of a previous presentation to the Committee by the association's chairman and other members of the association. We warmly welcome the establishment of that dedicated team and praise its work. The level of compliance by taxi drivers in our industry in Belfast has never been higher. They are now starting to do their job as they are required to do, and that is positive.

Our concern is with the level of priority or commitment that the dedicated taxi-enforcement team has been given. Since the new plating system was introduced several years ago, the enforcement team has not grown at all. Provisions must be made to expand the team.

The association wants consideration to be given to the possibility of more localised enforcement throughout the Province. It believes that that would be of great benefit to the entire taxi industry. The team could respond much quicker if enforcement were more localised. The association agrees with the proposal that the DVA could use its own test-centre facilities. The Committee is aware that, at present, the dedicated enforcement team has only five officers. More officers are needed. Recently, the association was informed that one of the officers must leave the dedicated team tomorrow to work in enforcement elsewhere. That is absolutely wrong. I want to take the opportunity to mention that because the team should be getting bigger rather than smaller. That is what the taxi industry needs.

Mr Grogan: There are over 19,000 licensed taxis in Northern Ireland. There are 11,000 plated taxis. The five members of the dedicated enforcement team must enforce regulations for the entire plated-taxis industry. As Raymond has mentioned, the licence fee went from £61.50 to £120 when the new plating system was introduced in November 2004. The association was told that £20 from the cost of each licence would be used to take on more enforcement officers. However, there has not been an increase in the number of officers. How are only four enforcement officers expected to enforce the Bill, which regulates on operators, licences, training, ensuring that meters are on, and so on, for 11,000 taxis across Northern Ireland? That is impossible.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your evidence, particularly the information on enforcement, which brings the Committee right up to speed. It is a burning issue, on which, I am sure, members will pick up.

Mr Weir: I thank you for your evidence. How many drivers and taxis does the Accessible Taxi Association NI represent in Northern Ireland?

Mr Grogan: Around 150 drivers are represented by the association.

Mr Weir: The Committee receives different evidence from different parties. Therefore, it must ensure that the weight of evidence from each party is at the right level. Does the association believe that all taxi drivers should be regulated in the same way?

Mr Grogan: No, not unless they drive vehicles that are of the standard to provide passengers with a hail-and-ride service. The association does not believe that it is acceptable to let private-hire vehicles pick up passengers on the street.

Mr Weir: The association has said that drivers of the type that it represents are the principal providers of the service to disabled passengers in Belfast. The Committee has heard evidence from representatives from IMTAC, who said that disabled people are often ripped off by taxi drivers. Is that not a strong argument for proper regulation of all taxi drivers, which would ensure, for example, that all passengers get receipts and that all journeys are metered, and so forth?

Mr Dempster: I do not believe that drivers of the type that the association represents are involved in ripping off passengers. Drivers of that type of taxi cannot overcharge: the driver must use the taximeter when he or she picks up a disabled passenger, whether the taxi has been booked privately or hailed for immediate hire on the street. Drivers cannot charge any extra; they can charge only the metered fare for that passenger's journey. Private-hire companies are charging extra fares.

Mr Weir: I do not suggest that disabled passengers are overcharged only by the type of drivers that the association represents. However, they are the drivers of the type of taxis that are most used by disabled people. The evidence from IMTAC has been that those people have suffered from having been ripped off by taxi drivers.

Mr Dempster: They have suffered at the hands of private-hire companies. When disabled people phone to book a taxi, they are told that because of —

Mr Weir: With respect, that was not necessarily the evidence that was given. The evidence that we heard mentioned taxi drivers in general. That clearly means that although such incidents may have involved drivers of private-hire taxis at times, they also involved drivers of public-hire taxis.

I want to raise a few issues about the one-tier system. Why should Belfast be different from Banbridge, Bangor or Enniskillen? Why should there be a special rule that allows a two-tier system in Belfast but not anywhere else in Northern Ireland?

Mr Dempster: Belfast should have enjoyed proper regulation for public-hire taxis, given that those taxis are the only ones in Northern Ireland with a regulated fare structure. This service should be given the utmost chance to succeed because it is the best taxi service. If you consider other major cities in which taxis of this type operate, you will agree that it is a very good service. People sometimes do not want to book a taxi; they want one straight away. That is the service that we provide.

Mr Weir: Why should Belfast be different from anywhere else in Northern Ireland?

Mr Dempster: Belfast should be seen as a capital city. If Belfast had been given the proper regulation that it deserved, it would be in a very different situation today.

Mr Weir: You said that a number of drivers in your association operate only out of taxi ranks, and that if private firms are allowed to pick fares up on the street, it would, in one sense, mean that there would not be a level playing field. I appreciate that point. However, everyone would have the opportunity to make some form of arrangement to receive phone bookings — public-hire taxis and private-hire taxis alike — and under no circumstances would private-hire taxis be allowed to operate out of a taxi rank. Do you therefore agree that a level playing field would not exist for self-imposed reasons? There would be the same opportunities for everyone.

Mr Dempster: My understanding of the Taxis Bill is that if drivers want to accept private-hire bookings — in other words, get work via telephone calls — they will need an operator's licence. The association's taxi drivers should be given a choice; if they want to accept such bookings, they must get an operator's licence, and, if they do not, they will not need that licence. That is the way that it is everywhere else.

Mr Weir: My point is that, to the extent that there would be a non-level playing field, it might be described as a self-imposed non-level playing field, in that your drivers would have the option to avail of those arrangements under the Bill, but some of them would simply choose not to do so.

Mr Dempster: Yes, some of them would choose not to do so. The association's taxis make up probably less than 5% of the total taxi population. When the Taxis Bill is passed, you can imagine that the other 95% will point their cars towards Belfast, because they will be allowed to lift passengers from the street there. That is where the Bill will be detrimental to us.

Mr I McCrea: I thank the witnesses for coming here today.

In every evidence session to date, witnesses have raised the issue of how enforcement will be administered. It was mentioned that, from tomorrow, there will be only four enforcement officers. Obviously, the Committee cannot answer for the Department, but I am sure that the Department could find someone else to replace the officer who is leaving — I cannot see why not, because it said that there should be five officers. You talked about the need for more enforcement officers, and I agree with you.

Mr Dempster: I think that everybody would agree with that.

Mr I McCrea: How would that work? Given that there is talk about the need for a number of extra ranks, how many officers do you realistically feel would be needed — and how many are needed even now?

Mr Dempster: Belfast certainly needs many more enforcement officers. I would like the Committee to consider the possibility of localised enforcement across the Province. As I said, DVA test centres could be used as bases for a localised enforcement team. That would mean that the enforcement teams would be much smaller and could respond more quickly. I am not in a position to state actual numbers, but I am certain that more than five officers are needed to look after Belfast. I have listened to the problems that others have experienced across the country, and it is clear that more officers are needed elsewhere, too.

In the event of localised enforcement, taxi drivers might choose not to go outside Belfast. For instance, if taxi-enforcement teams were active in Belfast, taxi drivers might choose to hunt for a job outside Belfast where they would be able to work more freely. However, if localised enforcement were introduced, those taxi drivers who go out of Belfast illegally might run into a taxi-enforcement team in a different town. That is another reason why I feel strongly about enforcement. I do not know how many officers would be required, but they should be spread across the Province.

Mr I McCrea: Do you accept that training is necessary?

Mr Dempster: Yes.

Mr I McCrea: I understand the circumstances that you are describing, and the Department must do something in respect of the drivers who are unable to read or write. How can we ensure that all drivers are trained to the same standard?

Mr Dempster: That is correct. Eamon deserves the same rights as me as regards training and the ability to receive a qualification in passenger transport.

Mr Ford: Thank you both for attending the Committee, and I especially thank Eamon for talking about his personal circumstances. With regard to the operator's licence, Raymond, you said that there should be exemption for your type of taxi. Is that on the basis of vehicle type or because you are a sole operator?

Mr Dempster: We are entitled to exemption on both counts. It is unfair that sole operators will have to foot the bill for the operator's licence whereas drivers working for private-hire companies will not. Furthermore, the licence is not suitable for our type of taxi. Some of our immediate hires are picked up late at night when the passengers are rowdy — you can imagine the scenario. Black taxis accommodate up to seven people, so I can only imagine what would happen when the passengers are rowdy and the driver starts taking their names, addresses and destinations. That exercise has not previously been tried in black taxis.

The operator's licence is, by design, more suited to private-hire taxi operators. Belfast always had such a scheme, until its removal in the past few years. It was never enforced for private-hire operators and now, suddenly, it is being reintroduced under the guise of an operator's licence. Belfast has always had a licence for private-hire operators, but it was never regulated or enforced properly.

Mr Ford: I have two views on record keeping. First, everyone should be required to maintain proper records so that customers are not ripped off. Eamon, you are working satisfactorily even though you have problems with reading and writing, and I have sympathy with your position. Are you suggesting that a method of record keeping should be introduced that would not depend on a driver's ability to read and write, or are you suggesting that there should be an exemption for existing drivers who cannot meet those standards? How do you want the situation to be handled?

Mr Grogan: Amendments should be made to the operator's licence requirements. We have always been exempt from holding an operator's licence, and the Department said that we would continue to be exempt.

Mr Ford: Do you mean that the entire group of current public-hire drivers should be exempt?

Mr Grogan: Yes.

Mr Dempster: Especially sole operators, because that is where the disadvantages will happen.

Mr Ford: If I have sympathy with Eamon because he has difficulties with reading and writing and no sympathy with Raymond's position, and do not buy the argument for complete exemption, can anything be done to make life easier for drivers who have particular disabilities?

Mr Grogan: I hope that the Department will put something in place for people in my circumstances.

Mr Ford: Do you have any specific proposals?

Mr Grogan: No.

Mr Ford: You are, therefore, looking for appropriate measures to be put in place.

Mr Grogan: Yes.

The Chairperson: No one else has indicated a wish to speak, so I thank Mr Grogan and Mr Dempster for giving of their time today.

I welcome Mr Terence Maguire to the meeting, which will be quite informal. The Committee has received submissions, which have been placed in front of members. Please feel free to add to those submissions. You will have 10 to 15 minutes in which to make a presentation. Members will ask questions for the purpose of clarity and will, perhaps, invite you to expand on the points that you have raised.

Mr Terence Maguire (Accessible Taxi Association NI): Thank you, Mr Chairman. I represent around 15 public-hire taxi drivers. Belfast public-hire taxi drivers ply for hire within a five-mile radius of Castle Junction. Public-hire taxis are the only taxis that are allowed to be hailed or to sit in ranks.

Currently, a hard core of illegal taxis work within that five-mile radius, and that presents a big problem. The Department of the Environment is not addressing that matter. It is not that the Department cannot do anything about it — the taxi drivers are known to the Department — but it seems incapable of enforcing current legislation. I would like the Department to make a better effort to enforce the legislation.

The Department's team of five enforcement officers has been reduced to four. It is impossible for a team of that size to enforce regulations in Belfast, never mind Northern Ireland, and I am worried about how it will enforce the proposed legislation. I suggest that the five-mile zone in which we operate be reduced to a two-mile zone if an adequate number of taxi ranks could be made available in Belfast city centre.

I suggest that there are plenty of public- and private-hire taxis in the whole of Northern Ireland except, perhaps, during the early hours of Sunday morning between the hours of 1.00 am and 3.00 am. At all other times, lots of public- and private-hire taxis are available. Mr Ford was driven around Belfast one night by a couple of public-hire taxi drivers, and he saw the number of taxis that were parked and waiting for work.

Permitting people to hail private-hire taxis in the street will create a problem for taxi depots. While private-hire cars are on the streets, lifting people willy-nilly, their depots will be receiving phone calls from other people who are trying to book taxis — and those taxis will not be available. By allowing that situation to happen, the number of taxis on the street will not be increased — there will still be the same number of taxis on the street. However, a different problem may be created whereby the depots will not have enough cars, at times, to cover work because their drivers will be out on the streets trying to pick up fares.

The one-tier system, which is under discussion today, is unfair to public-hire taxi drivers who work in Belfast. Private-hire taxi drivers will be working from the depots when the depots are busy, and they will be working on the streets when the streets are busy. By contrast, my colleagues and I will be sitting at taxi ranks whether they are busy or not. We do not take phone calls. Therefore, private-hire taxi drivers will have more opportunity to get work.

A taxi-rank system should be put in place around Belfast. At present, there are virtually no taxi ranks in Belfast. Last week, Barbara Fleming from IMTAC talked about access to public-hire taxis. There is virtually no access to public-hire taxis in Belfast for disabled people. Currently, there is taxi rank at the City Hall, and another outside Great Northern Mall, beside the Europa Hotel. The only way that a disabled person can get a public-hire taxi is if they go to one of those ranks. Otherwise they have to phone the private-hire depots, which is when the rip-off begins. When the major private-hire companies in Belfast carry disabled people in their cars, the minimum fare is £8 — that is before the engine is turned on. By comparison, the minimum fare for a public-hire taxi is £2.70. Private-hire companies are discriminating against disabled people.

Many private-hire depots do not want work from disabled people. We can talk until we are blue in the face about how many private-hire taxis should be wheelchair-accessible, but if disabled people ring depots for taxis, nine times out of 10 they will be told that there are none available — or that all the taxis with wheelchair access are fully booked or are off the road. Most of the depots do not want fares from disabled people. However, all public-hire taxis in Belfast are wheelchair-accessible, and if there were sufficient taxi ranks around the town, disabled people would have no problem getting wheelchair-accessible taxis.

That brings me on to another point: all taxis in Northern Ireland should be wheelchair-accessible. That could be achieved in a three-year period and would mean that disabled people could order taxis without mentioning their disabilities. Disabled people are being discriminated against, because if they phone for a taxi, they have to specify that they are disabled, which would not be the case if every taxi were wheelchair-accessible.

Finally, control and enforcement of the taxi industry should be transferred from the Department to local councils. Local councils would be able to take a more hands-on approach and enforce penalties for any misdemeanours, which would make taxi depots and taxi drivers more accountable. That transfer could be financed by revenue from the fees that all taxi drivers pay for PSV tests, and the fees for the proposed licence for operators. The councils could also charge private-hire depots for an operator's licence. That would enable councils to be more hands-on in their approach. The Department has been in charge of the taxi industry for 30 years, which is why we are in the current mess. The Department does not seem to be capable of looking after the taxi industry.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much, Mr Maguire; you have raised major issues about enforcement. The Committee needs to hear from the Department about why there has been a downgrade in the number of enforcement officers available. The Committee needs to seek clarity from the Department on that immediate problem, irrespective of what may happen as regards the legislation.

Mr Gardiner: Thank you for your presentation, Mr Maguire. You stated that private-hire depots are discriminating against disabled people by telling them that no wheelchair-accessible taxis are available, or that they are booked or out of order. I wonder if, as a Committee, we could have that allegation investigated. If a taxi company is discriminating against disabled people, the Committee wants to know about it. Its licence should be withdrawn. People with disabilities should be treated equally. I would like that matter investigated, Chairman.

Mr Maguire: That is why I brought up the idea of all taxis being wheelchair-accessible, because that type of situation would not occur.

The Chairperson: Mr Gardiner, the Committee can return to that issue when it has heard all the other questions.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for the presentation. I was also concerned about the allegation of discrimination. You have said that all taxis should be wheelchair-accessible. In rural areas, many taxi drivers make a living by driving saloon cars. You say that private-hire depots are ignoring disabled people.

Mr Maguire: I am suggesting that disabled people who phone for taxis are being ignored. I know that that is the case from past experience of working in depots.

Mr Boylan: You are calling for more taxi ranks. However, if there were more ranks, and more taxi drivers moved in, would it not be fair to say that they would still be doing the same thing?

Mr Maguire: No.

Mr Boylan: It may not be a solution; I am only making a suggestion.

Mr Maguire: If we had more taxi ranks in Belfast, a disabled person could come along to one of those ranks. There are only two taxi ranks in Belfast at the moment.

Mr Boylan: Surely a disabled person should go to whatever rank is available.

Mr Maguire: Yes, if there were more of them. In that event, there would be greater choice.

Mr Boylan: Are they not entitled to go to the ranks that are already there?

Mr Maguire: Yes. However, if a disabled person is at the Wellington Park Hotel, the nearest taxi rank is at the Europa Hotel.

Mr Boylan: That is something that can be looked at later. However, I feel strongly that disabled people should be able to access taxi ranks.

You referred to taxi drivers being out doing other work and not being available from the depots. Would you clarify that please?

Mr Maguire: Private-hire taxi drivers who are permitted to lift fares in the street could get hailed once the city centre starts to get busy on a Saturday night. That would mean that their depot would be short of cars. The depot would not be able to take phone bookings because no drivers would be available; they would all be out on the street trying to get flagged down.

Mr Boylan: Having one regulation for an operator's licence would curb that behaviour.

Mr Maguire: In what way?

Mr Boylan: There has talk of one-tier and two-tier systems? What is your view on that? Should there be a law that allows Belfast drivers to lift fares in the street but requires people in rural areas to phone for accessible taxis?

Mr Maguire: There are public-hire taxis and taxi ranks outside Belfast. Drivers do not have to be in Belfast to sit in a taxi rank.

Mr Boylan: Yes, but you are talking specifically about taxi ranks.

Mr Maguire: I am speaking as a public-hire taxi driver, and I am suggesting that we need more taxi ranks. However, you are asking me about drivers who work in depots.

Mr Boylan: You are saying that you want the taxi ranks; but people still want to use taxis outside taxi ranks. Is that correct?

Mr Maguire: We need taxi ranks, and we need —

Mr Boylan: I am only asking you the question. The reason that I am asking is so that the Committee can bring forward your suggestions at the overview. You specifically said that there may not be enough taxi drivers at the ranks —

Mr Maguire: In the depots.

Mr Boylan: Sorry; in the depots.

Mr Maguire: If I am working in a depot and my depot is quiet, and if Belfast city centre is busy, I will go into the city centre and try to earn some money. If people then phone my depot, I will not be there, and the depot will find it hard to get its work covered. This legislation will not put more taxis on the street; it will shift the problem from one area to another.

Mr Boylan: So with that in mind, are you saying that the number of taxi drivers should be restricted? What happens if new people come in?

Mr Maguire: I did not say that.

Mr Boylan: I am only asking the question.

Mr Maguire: That is not for me to say.

Mr Boylan: That would be a lead-on question.

Mr Maguire: I think that there are plenty of taxis. Personally, I would like to see a cap put on the number of taxis. As I said earlier, there are plenty of taxis for everybody except for about two hours on a Saturday night, and that is when private-hire taxis will flood the city centre, leaving their depots exposed.

Mr Weir: With regard to leaving depots exposed at peak times — especially on Saturday nights — when private-hire taxi drivers head in the direction of the city centre, and I appreciate that there is likely to be a lot of cars going in that direction, surely what is more likely to happen is that a depot would hire in more drivers for those peak periods.

Mr Maguire: The depots could not do that. They could not hire people to work for only two hours on a Saturday night.

Mr Weir: Why not? Surely they would earn money; they are providing a service.

Mr Maguire: If you were a taxi driver, would you work for two hours a week?

Mr Weir: Presumably, any business that experiences a massive increase in trade at a particular time will bring in more people to cover that period.

Mr Maguire: What would taxi companies do with those people for the rest of the time — tell them to go home without any wages?

Mr Weir: Presumably, not every driver works 40 hours a week. Some drivers must work flexibly or part-time.

Mr Maguire: There is no work for those people for the rest of the week.

Mr Weir: Surely, as in any profession, some people work part-time and do something else for the rest of the time.

Mr Maguire: With respect, Mr Weir, you are stretching the point by suggesting that people would work for just two hours at peak time on a Saturday night. Let us be realistic.

Mr Weir: I appreciate that, but the reality is —

The Chairperson: We are veering from the legislation into the management of private companies.

Mr Weir: To be fair, the witness raised that point to illustrate a repercussion of the proposed legislation. I am suggesting that the problem will not be as bad as he fears.

I have two further questions. On the subject of increased accessibility for disabled people, you mentioned concerns about the potential for disabled people to be ripped off by private-hire taxis. The Committee has heard evidence on that issue that suggests that disabled people have been ripped off by a minority of drivers in the system as a whole, not only by one section of it.

Mr Maguire: I agree. It is not just one section. The disabled girl, Barbara Fleming, who gave evidence to this Committee last week, said that the taxi driver from the depot that she normally uses charged her £35 for a journey from the city centre to upper Malone, which left her with no money to get home. She should be asked to name the company responsible for that. Her friend was charged £70 for a journey of a quarter of a mile. Those are people who —

Mr Weir: The problems appear to be across the board. May I ask you —

Mr Maguire: Can something not be done about that?

The Chairperson: Again, we are veering into investigations.

Mr Weir: You said that the taxi-rank system works fairly well in areas outside Belfast. Why do you believe that a two-mile radius —

Mr Maguire: If we had more ranks.

Mr Weir: OK, assuming that there were more ranks, why do you believe that a special system, which does not apply anywhere else in Northern Ireland, should operate within a two-mile radius of Belfast city centre? Why should it have a different system?

Mr Maguire: Do you mean that public-hire taxis in Belfast would be the only taxis allowed to —

Mr Weir: Why do you believe that there should be a two-tier system in the centre of Belfast, when such a system does not apply anywhere else in the Province?

Mr Maguire: In comparison with, say, Banbridge, on a Thursday night, Belfast is much busier than any of the outlying areas. In Belfast, there is a need to have 450 taxis waiting for people to jump into to go home. In Banbridge or Coleraine, there is not.

Mr Weir: If there is that volume of business in Belfast, and I agree that, on any Thursday night, there is —

Mr Maguire: That is the difference between Belfast and other areas.

Mr Weir: Hold on. Given that volume of business, would it not still be there if there were a one-tier system and anyone could pick up from the streets?

Mr Maguire: There would still be the same number of people; however, as has been said, the number of taxis would not increase. Currently, people are being picked up illegally, by illegal taxi drivers. The DOE is doing nothing about that. In order to turn its back and wash its hands of the problem, the DOE intends to legalise the illegal drivers. That is the Department's solution.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Mr Maguire, for bringing your practical experience to the Committee, and for your time.

I welcome Mr William Black and thank you for giving the Committee your time. The Committee already has your written submission and, as you have probably gathered, the meeting is pretty informal and relaxed, so please be at ease. If you wish to highlight particular points of your submission to the Committee, please do so, and the members will ask for clarification or further details, as required.

Mr William Black (International Airport Taxi Co Ltd): Thank you, Mr Chairman. My name is William Black, and I have been in the taxi industry for just over 25 years, during which time there have been many changes. Fifteen minutes is not long, and I do not want to waste time, so I will start with the matter of the operator's licence.

The operator's licence was introduced on the mainland so that there would be some sort of accountability for private-hire vehicles, which they call minicabs. As far as I am aware, hackney cabs did not need an operator's licence.

The Department of the Environment was informed about a case on the mainland in which a council had decided that hackney cabs working for a private-hire company should require an operator's licence. The case went to the High Court, which ruled that a hackney cab did not need an operator's licence. Brentwood Borough Council took the case to the Court of Appeal, but the previous ruling was upheld.

I have been in touch with the Department, which has sent me some material stating that that case falls under a particular category. The bottom line is that the High Court and the Court of Appeal stated that a hackney cab does not need an operator's licence — that sector is already regulated.

The Department intended to allow certain exclusions from the operator's licence clause, which would include Belfast public-hire cabs. However, the proposed legislation was changed, because when all stakeholders and other interested parties were asked about the operator's licence, the response was that all taxis should be covered by an operator's licence. That goes back to consultations in 2005 and 2006.

There are 512 public-hire hackney cabs working in Belfast, according to information supplied by the DOE licensing office on 18 September 2007. There are 7,841 public-hire vehicles, 2,782 private-hire vehicles and 272 taxi buses outside Belfast. If we compare the 512 drivers in the Belfast public-hire sector with the 10,895 other drivers in various categories, who are, at present, unregulated, it is safe to assume that the Belfast public-hire cabs will not have any real opportunity to be exempted from the operator's licence, because the other sectors that never had to pay before will now have to do so.

Hackney cabs are still regulated by the Department, but they will fall foul of the regulations through sheer numbers. The Belfast public-hire cab must conform to certain standards and can cost anything up to £35,000. That is a massive price difference in comparison with the average price of £10,000 to £14,000 for a private-hire vehicle.

The Department was a bit clever in changing the proposed legislation in July 2006 to state that the Belfast hackney cab and all other taxis, private or otherwise, would be classed as a taxi. I have that document with me. The minutes of evidence that were presented to the Committee on 31 May 2007 state:

“Northern Ireland is the only part of the UK where what we call a ‘private-hire taxi’ is allowed to be known as a taxi. Everywhere else in the UK, they are called private-hire vehicles”.

The evidence from DOE officials goes on to state:

“Under many licensing authorities in the rest of the UK, private-hire vehicles are prohibited from carrying roof signs because that makes them look like public-hire taxis.”

The Department decided to call every type of vehicle a taxi. That is a somewhat confusing decision. If that is the Department's idea of progress, I find it totally amusing.

My next point concerns the proposal to allow taxis that are not accessible to wheelchairs to pick up passengers in Belfast. That proposal, in my opinion and those of many others, will destroy Belfast public-hire cabs. Some 512 hackney cabs operate in Belfast, but not all of them work at peak times, as the Department of the Environment told the Committee on 31 May 2007. However, I am disappointed that the minutes of evidence do not record the fact that the two largest companies working in Belfast have more than 500 drivers who are available for work, but they also do not have a full complement of taxis working during peak periods.

The Department went on to state that vehicles licensed for private hire, or public hire outside Belfast, pick up much of that demand illegally. That is true, but one of the main reasons for so much illegal “p-uing”, as we call it, is that drivers would rather work off the street so that they can choose whatever work they want. If they work for a depot, they have to take the job that is allocated to them, but if people phone a taxi depot during peak periods and are told that there is a two-hour waiting time, they will go out and try to hail a taxi illegally on the street. If those taxis worked for depots, it would cut down on the number of people trying to hail a taxi illegally on the street. That is a fact.

On Friday and Saturday nights between 1.00 am and 3.00 am, taxi demand reaches saturation point, not only in Belfast but all over the UK. That is six hours out of 160 hours a week — 3.57% — during which accessible taxis are still working. That seems to be an unjustified reason for the drastic changes that the Department has proposed. In evidence to the Committee, the Department said that people do not know or care about differences in taxi plating — they just want to get home. It appears that departmental officials are saying that if enough people are prepared to break the law, the law will be changed to suit them.

The Department carried out an impact assessment, which states that allowing other taxis to pick up on the street would have no detrimental effect, financially or otherwise, on any part of the industry. For those members who know central Belfast, take the scenario of someone walking out of Fountain Street onto Wellington Place, he or she can obtain a taxi by phoning for one, walking to the nearest taxi rank or hailing a hackney cab. If there is permission for private-hire taxis to pick up on the street, people will not need to walk to the taxi rank, and those taxis will sit in the ranks for longer.

We have been told that the Belfast public-hire cab is an integral part of the public transport system, but taking away part of my business and telling me that it will not affect me is ludicrous. Of course it will affect me, because this will happen all over Belfast. Public-hire taxis in Belfast need protection to maintain the current system and the facilities that they provide.

The Department says that it wants more accessible taxis operating throughout Northern Ireland. If Belfast does not keep the two-tier system, there will be fewer accessible taxis available for immediate hire. I have spoken to many drivers in my sector of the business, and they have stated that if they were to lose a percentage of their business in such a way, they would be better going into private hire, taking into consideration the cost of the cab, the extra charge of £25 for having a PSV-accessible vehicle just for the test, as well as the loss of business. The business would be unsustainable and drivers could not cope with it. There are not many taxi ranks around Belfast, but they are all full, considering that they are 24-hour ranks operating successfully during daylight hours. What with National Car Parks (NCP), the PSNI and the enforcement officers, drivers cannot get into the ranks. Are drivers supposed to drive round the city in the hope that they will eventually get in?

The enforcement team working in the taxi industry does a remarkable job, considering that there are only five officers who cover the whole of Northern Ireland. I understand that we are about to lose one of our enforcement officers. I say “our” enforcement officers, because I believe that they have done a great job.

Recently, I discovered which enforcement officer was being moved. I suggest that the Committee for the Environment approach the enforcement office and stop that transfer, if it has the power to do so. Losing enforcement personnel who know their job in order to bring in new personnel is a waste of money and manpower. We need those personnel.

The Committee has been informed that there are 21 officers who may be called on to carry out sting operations, if requested. Can the Department tell the Committee how many times since the taxi plates were introduced in 2004 more than five enforcement officers have been used in an operation? In November 2004, changes were made to legislation that were aimed at substantially reducing the number of illegal taxis in order to minimise the risk to the travelling public. Legislation is only as good as its enforcement.

When the plates were introduced, the fee was increased to up to £120 a cab; currently, the fee is £126.50. At the time of the increase, we were informed that the Department would take £20 from each application to use for enforcement. There were 9,000 taxis in 2004, and that number has increased to 11,470. A levy of £20 per person adds up to a lot of money, so why has there not been an increase in enforcement? That is more than £750,000. Where is that money going?

The money that has gone into enforcement seems like a large amount, although, after it is spread out, perhaps it is not. In either case, five officers is not enough. I would like the Department to explain where the money has gone, and whether the other 16 officers have been called on to become involved in sting operations at any time in the past three years. If they have, I do not think that that would have cost £750,000.

At present, a two-tier system protects the Belfast public-hire cab sector. To change to a one-tier system would devastate that part of the industry. I refer to the Committee’s minutes of evidence of 31 May 2007, when departmental officials stated:

“When we asked directly whether respondents would prefer a one-tier system or a two-tier system, the two-tier system was narrowly preferred if the alternative was that all taxis — public hire and private hire — must be accessible.”

The costs of making those taxis accessible would be astronomical. The vast majority did not want to make their vehicles accessible, and the simple reason was cost. I refer members to the same minutes of evidence:

“When the Department examined the outcome of the policy consultation, it set out to revise its key proposals. Respondents were asked: ‘Do you agree with the proposal to keep a revised two-tier system as described?’

Respondents came down narrowly on the side of a two-tier licensing system. However, they also stated that they wanted all taxis to be able to pick up fares, have roof signs, work to regulated fares and have taximeters.”

That sounded like a one-tier system to the Department, which decided to push for a one-tier system.

Any licensed taxi that has a meter must have it sealed by the Department, regardless of whether the taxi is private hire, public hire outside Belfast or Belfast public hire. Currently, the only vehicles that have had their meters tested and sealed are Belfast public-hire taxis. Private-hire and public-hire vehicles outside Belfast have never been tested or sealed. The Department’s explanation is that it does not have the manpower. That is not my problem.

The question is: a one-tier or a two-tier system? In my opinion, by virtue of the numbers involved, the Belfast public-hire cab is becoming a scapegoat. If the Belfast public-hire cab, as we know it, is to survive, the two-tier system within a five-mile radius of Belfast must be retained. That is paramount to its survival. If the Belfast public-hire cab is to be part of an integrated public transport system, the Department must keep the two-tier system for Belfast.

In any review, all parties involved should gain something, but if certain amendments are not made to these proposals, public-hire cabs in Belfast will lose substantially. There will be loss of revenue, because no one is going to pay an extra £25 for a cab simply because it is wheelchair accessible. In addition to that, the cultural identity of the hackney, or black, cab, will be lost. There will also be charges: approximately £242 for receipt printers; £400 to install meters in taxis that do not already have them; a separate fee for calibrating those meters; the cost of courses up to, possibly, NVQ level; the cost of an operator's licence, which has not even been discussed; the paperwork that must be kept to comply with "due diligence"; and the cost of renewal of the licence. A separate fee for processing applications for licences is currently £75, and that includes a repute check. Under the new proposals, an extra £30 will be added for the repute check, which will bring the licence fee up to £105. For new applicants, a licence will cost £110, plus a £30 repute check.

There will also be a reduction in the number of years that a licence covers. A five-year licence now costs £75, and over a period of 15 years, taxi drivers would buy three licences, which would cost £225. However, if the period of the licence is going to be reduced to three years, the cost, over a period of 15 years, would be £375 — an increase of £150.

The PSV test costs £126.50, and a retest costs £19.50. There has been talk about splitting the categories of PSV testing; therefore, there could be a charge of £40 for documentation, £30 for the meter test and £40 for the mechanical test, and so forth. Currently, if a taxi fails in any, or all, of those categories, the cost of the retest is £19.50, but that would not be the case if the categories were split — it may be £30 for the meter test and £25 for the mechanical test. That is another increase that taxi drivers would have to pay. When a PSV test is booked, a date and a time are given, but if I am told that my test can only be undertaken on a Friday evening at 7.00 pm, I have to pay extra.

At present, when a taxi is being sold, the new owner receives a V36 on the vehicle, which means that the seller takes the taxi to the PSV centre for a quick check for which there is no charge. However, that practice will stop, because the Department is seeking powers to charge for processing the change of ownership, registration and the type of hire and plates.

The Chairperson: I am conscious of the time.

Mr Black: I have just one more matter to mention.

A one-tier system will result, in all probability, in a substantial reduction in the number of accessible taxis available for people with different types of disabilities. I was distressed to hear a number of respondents saying that people with disabilities have enough transport supplied for them and that there is no need for more accessible taxis. It is disgraceful that anyone in public or private hire would say that. People with disabilities have the same right to have transportation as any other person, and there is already legislation, which states that overcharging someone with a disability will result in the loss of a licence. I would like to see that legislation enforced.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much. You put your evidence very comprehensively.

Mr Weir: Thank you for your evidence, Mr Black. I apologise to the Chairperson — I will have to leave in a few minutes to attend a briefing.

I agree with the witness. What was said about enforcement is valid, and that point has been made by a number of witnesses. There is a need for greater levels of enforcement and for more resources. It is nonsense to suggest that the measures will not have any grave detrimental impact on the public-hire sector in Belfast. They will clearly have some effect in that some business will be shifted away from the public-hire sector into the private-hire sector.

I will play devil's advocate. Mr Black, you mentioned that, already, many taxis are breaking the regulations and picking people up from the street when they should not. You also said that the public does not care who picks them up, as long as they get home. How do you respond to the suggestion that what the legislation proposes simply reflects the economic reality on the ground? That is how things are operating in practice, and the Department is trying to regulate what is happening.

Mr Black: Taxis are operating illegally in Belfast. Private-hire taxis are doing that outside Belfast too, so it is not just in Belfast that that happens.

The regulations exist. When people apply for a plate, they can choose what type of plate they want and in what type of business they want to work. The number of taxis that are picking up illegally is clear to anyone who travels around Belfast at peak periods. Those taxis should be working from their depots. However, when a customer telephones a depot, he or she may be told that there is a two-hour wait. If that were not so, taxi drivers would not have to go out and do something illegal. Drivers would prefer to be able to pick up on the streets and turn away business that does not suit them. When a customer wants to go to Bangor late at night, the driver might then charge him or her £40.

Mr Weir: I would have thought that taxi drivers would have considered such an opportunity a gold mine.

Mr Black: That is the point. When drivers choose a licence, they should abide by its rules. If drivers do not like it, they should get out of that business. I want to work in one type of business, and I buy a type of vehicle that complies with that. However, someone else with the same licence might decide that: the depot is not that busy; a customer will give him a job that will earn him £3; or he has to travel from the Hollywood Road to Ballysillan to pick up his next fare. Those things happen regularly. Those are the reasons that taxi drivers in private-hire companies — and the public-hire sector — come in, pick up people from the street and refuse whatever work they do not want.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation. With respect to the point about taxis working from the depot, did you have an opportunity to submit anything during the consultation period?

Mr Black: I did.

Mr Boylan: I would like to hear your thoughts on enforcement.

Mr Black: Our enforcement team — I am sorry — I refer to it as “our enforcement team” because I believe that enforcement is necessary for the industry and for my benefit. That team has operated since 2004, when the plates were introduced, but, with five officers, it is not nearly adequate. However, they do an excellent job.

I was disgusted to hear this morning that we were losing an officer. When I found out which officer we were losing, I was even more upset. The person concerned is not merely good at the job, the person is excellent at it. In my opinion, that is why that person has been removed. If I can get enough people to phone up and complain about someone, it will not matter whether that person is innocent or guilty — rather than take the heat, that person will be swept under the carpet. It is as simple as that. That is what is happening. The enforcement officer has been moved —

The Chairperson: I am sorry. The Committee cannot get into that issue.

Mr Black: The Committee should get into it.

The Chairperson: I am sorry. That is a matter for the Department. We will raise the general question of enforcement with the Department. Specific issues about staffing are not the Committee’s responsibility. The Committee is here to examine the legislation.

Mr Black: Enforcement is not good enough. At £20 a driver going towards the costs of enforcement, over the past three years, where has the money been spent? I cannot get an answer to that question.

Mr Ford: In your written submission, you referred to the need to increase the number of accessible vehicles.

What would you see as an appropriate proportion of fully accessible vehicles for any operator to have, if we are moving in the direction that the legislation proposes?

Mr Black: The proposed legislation is for each depot to have a percentage of accessible vehicles.

Mr Ford: What would your percentage be in that context?

Mr Black: My percentage, for private-hire vehicles, would be around 10%. That begs the question of who has the right to give you a job or make you buy an accessible taxi. If the law were to be that 10% of taxis had to be accessible, for example, and another gentleman and I were to buy two Mercedes and both of us wanted to work for the same company, we could not both be employed if that left the company with less than 10% of its fleet being accessible taxis. Who gives an owner, or anyone else, the right to give someone a job on the condition that they have a wheelchair-accessible vehicle? The Department would call that a grey area.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your time, Mr Black; we covered a lot of ground today.

Mr Black: Thank you.

The Chairperson: Are all of the representatives from the International Airport Taxi Co here?

Mr James McVeigh (International Airport Taxi Co Ltd): I apologise for Mr Kennedy, who has been unable to make the meeting.

The Chairperson: So there are just the two of you? Thank you for being with us. As you can see, the format is informal, but within certain guidelines. Our focus is on the Taxis Bill that is in front of us, and we already have a submission from you. It is not necessary to go over the whole submission again, but if there are particular aspects of it that you wish to add to, please do so. Committee members will then seek clarity or ask for further detail.

Mr McVeigh: First of all, Chairman, I want to thank the Committee for the opportunity to come here. I have listened with great interest this morning. This has been much talked about in the taxi industry.

Can I say, as someone who moved to Randalstown 10 years ago, that there is life outside Belfast? I would like to point out that there is a three-tier system in operation, not a two-tier system. There are two tiers in Belfast, and we have no problem with that. Neither has any driver who works in a country town or village. The third tier is public and private. It provides people who live in a small village, whether in County Fermanagh, County Down, County Armagh, or even somewhere such as Bangor, with the opportunity to expand their business. They can work off a taxi rank, through a depot, or by mobile phone, as most people do. We work outside Belfast at the international airport, and we feel that there is a need to retain that third tier, which no one seems to have mentioned. It is private hire with limited public access, which is represented by white plates.

I will not go too deeply into my second point, as it has already been covered and I am conscious of the time — the overheads that will arise from the legislation. As the gentlemen before me said, no one has any idea how much the operator's licence will cost. There is talk about different structures for sole traders, but any taxi drivers that I know in Belfast, Randalstown, Antrim or wherever are sole traders. They may, at certain times, work through a depot, they may work off a taxi rank; but they are sole traders.

If they work from a depot, they pay a fee. However, they are responsible for their own vehicle, their insurance, the running costs of the vehicle, and, if they are out of work — tough. The introduction of an operator's licence will mean that all drivers will have to pay for it; depot owners will not necessarily pay for it because they can simply offload the costs.

An increase in test fees for the cars will be introduced. The fee is currently £126.50. I recently changed my vehicle, and I was fortunate that the bank did not own the one that I had been driving. I could not get a test date for my new car, which resulted in it having to sit in the car showroom for four weeks. When I eventually did get a test date, I had to torture the people in Corporation Street to get the plates ready.

Officially, I could not drive my new vehicle. Had I had an accident while driving my old car, or if the engine had blown, it would not have been worth while getting it fixed. Therefore, technically, I would have been out of work for approximately six to eight weeks. I would have had no earning power, which would have been bad for me as I have a mortgage, and so on. Why should I pay £126.50, when the cost for a coach that is capable of carrying 75 passengers is virtually half of that? I do not think that that is fair.

The fee for a taxi licence is increasing again. At present, after a five-year period, taxi drivers have to reapply for a licence. The Department, because of business and management problems, advises people to apply six weeks prior to the end of that five-year period. I, like most of the drivers, apply at least three months ahead. Those of us who are over the age of 45 have to complete a medical, and that too has to be paid for. Furthermore, we have to pay for a taxi test, on top of which will now be added the cost of the operator's licence. We feel that that is unfair, because we get nothing in return.

There is also talk that all taxis that work off a rank system will have to be wheelchair accessible. As a small private company, we feel that that will put us at a distinct disadvantage. Working at Belfast International Airport, we offer an across-the-board taxi service. Foreign dignitaries or businessmen can book an executive car in advance of their arrival. If they arrive and have not booked one — maybe their secretary has made a mistake — we can still supply one.

We also supply wheelchair-accessible vehicles, and we do not charge any extra for those facilities. If people book those vehicles in advance, they pay the standard rate. I agree with the chaps who represented Belfast public-hire taxis that that should not be an issue.

We also run a general taxi service, which enables anyone to get a taxi at their convenience. All of our customers are supplied with written receipts, which are printed with our company logo, and our company is registered with Companies Registry. The driver's number is at the top of the receipt, and the office address is included in case anyone wishes to make a complaint. We have set fares. We feel that we meet quite a lot of the Department's criteria, and some of the legislation.

For two hours on a Friday night, and two hours on a Saturday night, Belfast taxi drivers are under pressure. We may be wrong, but we feel that it is unfair for taxi drivers who work in small country towns, such as Magherafelt, Banbridge, Bangor, Holywood — where my colleague comes from — and Randalstown, to be classed the same as those who work in Belfast. Given that there is a system that works in the country areas, why fix what is not broken?

Making all taxi drivers drive wheelchair-accessible vehicles would affect small country areas — the villages and towns. The information note that accompanied The Draft Taxis (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 stated:

“Accessible taxis will, in due course, become the only taxis that will be allowed to stand for hire in taxi ranks”.

It goes on to clarify the locations at which they can do so:

“(airports, ferry terminals and railway stations and the like) but also areas such as shopping centres and entertainment complexes.”

Does that mean, for example, that if taxi drivers want to sit outside the Buttercrane shopping centre in Newry, they will need wheelchair-accessible vehicles? Does every person who comes out of the Buttercrane centre want a wheelchair-accessible vehicle? The answer is no.

In the past four years, we have had four — or possibly five — requests for wheelchair-accessible vehicles at the airport. I will give one example. One Saturday night when we were under severe pressure, a passenger on a diverted British Midland flight from London wanted a wheelchair-accessible vehicle, and one of our drivers was instructed to do the job. The flight was delayed, and the driver had to wait for 30 minutes for the lady to come out. He got the ramps out and pushed the wheelchair into the back of the vehicle, and the lady then got out of the wheelchair and walked to the front seat of the car. Those things happen.

I am not saying that disabled people are not entitled to a service: they are. However, as Dr McCrea said to Stephen Peover when they met in Clarence Court, the legislation must be examined on a broader scale, and we must examine what all our customers need. We agreed that that should happen. A blanket decision cannot be taken based on what is happening in Belfast. The problems in Belfast do not necessarily equate to those in country areas. I think that the country is a brilliant place to live; it is a bit more laid-back and, people are more easy-going Belfast is very fast and is becoming more like Dublin, suffering similar traffic problems. My daughter said that she has banged on the windows of taxis outside the Bot on more than one Friday night and asked to be taken up the road, but the drivers do not want to know.

Those are my views on the plating system. People in country areas should still have the choice of using the white plates.

Mr Brian Press (International Airport Taxi Co Ltd): To verify what Jim McVeigh said, we try to work to passenger needs at Belfast International Airport. We find that, as Mr Gardiner said, there is a demand for wheelchair-friendly vehicles. However, we have found that that percentage is not very high, as Jim said. As a company, we try our best to keep around 20% of our vehicles that are on the rank wheelchair-friendly to ensure that disabled people will be catered for. We have found that to work quite well, and we have not had any problems. Our franchise arrangement at the airport states that we cannot keep a wheelchair-bound person waiting for more than 20 minutes. We have never exceeded that time; in fact, we have never come close.

I sometimes wonder whether the people who use the industry — passengers — have been consulted about their needs. Has the Committee met with the Consumer Council or similar agencies? We find that a lot of business people use the back of the taxi as an office. They prefer to travel in saloon cars, and we also use those cars for tourists who have large amounts of luggage. We have Mercedes cars for executives and celebrities, and around 20% of our vehicles are wheelchair-friendly. Our company tries to cater for all needs.

From a business perspective, we are concerned that if people come out of the airport and cannot get the vehicle of their choice, they will phone the local private-hire companies. Consequently, our company and our drivers will suffer a loss of income. At that point, the question would be: are we needed? That scenario is occurring quite often at the George Best Belfast City Airport, which is now completely wheelchair-friendly. You will see private-hire taxis waiting outside in large numbers, but people will phone for a saloon car rather than travel in a wheelchair-friendly vehicle. Our business could be adversely affected while, at the same time, passenger interests are not being considered.

Ours is a country depot, and, therefore, the Belfast taxi drivers' argument does not really affect us as such. However, we understand their concerns. The enforcement issue needs to be looked into. There should be a more robust complaints procedure as regards overcharging. We know that overcharging happens and, undoubtedly, there are still cowboys in the industry. We have a very strict disciplinary code. Any driver who overcharges a customer is dismissed — and there is no going back on that. Our disciplinary code works well and perhaps could be considered by the industry. By adopting a better complaints procedure and stricter disciplinary codes, the industry could be cleaned up.

Our main concern is that the one-tier system — which some companies are arguing for — would be unfeasible in a country location such as Aldergrove. Why change something that has worked well over the years?

Mr McVeigh: Recently, our company went to the expense of developing a website. It will be activated in the next two or three months. Aer Lingus has now come to the airport, which has created a lot of problems down below.

The Chairperson: You will be the beneficiaries of that.

Mr McVeigh: We had similar problems here when British Airways and British Midland pulled out. We will be advertising an across-the-board service on our website, and undoubtedly, we will be expecting a lot of tourists to visit next year. We are a small company, and we are all shareholders. No one makes any money out of it. We are not like the big guys.

The Chairperson: Those of us from rural areas would regard Belfast International Airport as a cosmopolitan area — I have to point that out to you. However, on a serious note; while we may be more able to present our views, nonetheless the rights and entitlements that we expect as public representatives should be exactly the same as those of our cousins in urban areas such as Belfast. That is a point well worth making. In your submission you referred to exemptions for the airport area — is that a public area?

Mr McVeigh: I am not an expert on the legal aspects. The airport is on private ground, but there is public access, and there are certain criteria to be followed. For example, I cannot access the taxi park unless I have a gizmo in the car. We also have to be security-cleared by the Department and checked out by the airport police. Therefore, not just anyone can access the taxi park. Each taxi driver must display the airport badge and must have a transponder in his vehicle before he can access the taxi parking area.

Mr Ford: Following the eulogy for Randalstown and Aldergrove, I must declare an interest as MLA for South Antrim. Mr McVeigh raised interesting comments about the status of the international airport, given that it is privately owned, but semi-public — but the Chairperson has followed up on those comments. Have you had discussions with the Department about its attitude to the taxi rank at the airport?

Mr McVeigh: I met the MP for South Antrim, the Rev William McCrea, who was interested in that issue. He and I had a meeting with Mr Peover — the permanent secretary in the Department of the Environment — and I subsequently received a letter from Bill Lavery. That letter stated:

“As was advised in the course of the meeting, the Taxis Bill, subject to the approval of the Northern Ireland Assembly, would give the Department enabling powers to introduce regulations which may require certain classes of taxi to meet accessibility standards. These regulations would be subject to public consultation and also the approval of the Assembly. It is expected that such regulations will take some time to draft and in doing so the Department would take fully into account the representations made by your Company about the way taxis are currently operated under the airport contract.

I can therefore assure you that the passing of the Taxi Bill into law of itself will not automatically mean that all airport taxis will have to become accessible nor will the way that taxis are presently operated be immediately affected.”

Mr Ford: This is another instance in which we will have to wait for regulations, rather than expect measures in the Bill.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation. I was glad to hear mention of the customers in rural areas. You mentioned the variety of services that you offer. Do you follow a code of practice that is governed by the airport?

Mr McVeigh: Taxi drivers who work at the airport are security vetted by the airport authorities. We have to supply a certain standard of vehicle, and it must not be more than six years old. Every driver is subject to checks by the police — if the authorities wish — and our insurance and PSV certificates must be 100% up to date. A complaints procedure is also in place. If a complaint is made against one of our drivers, it is immediately acted on. We have a training and employment agency in Ballymena to look after those affairs, and that keeps us completely right. If a complaint is made against an airport driver — through the international airport — a representative from the training agency gets in touch with one of the management team on the taxi rank, who will strictly monitor the service.

Mr Boylan: Customer care is very important in your line of work.

Mr Press: Complaints — when they are made — come through to us via the airport authorities. We know how important it is for our type of franchise to have a proper disciplinary procedure in place. However, that is something that is sadly lacking in other private companies and, perhaps, even in the public sector. Some organisations do not have effective complaints procedures, and proper disciplinary procedures might not be taken against those who fall foul of the legislation. People care so much about their jobs that they do not step out of line. In the past two years, only two drivers have left because they have overcharged passengers.

Mr Boylan: You deal with many different nationalities.

Mr Press: We look upon ourselves as ambassadors for our country, because there are lots of tourists. Last year, seven million visitors came through the airport, and we are the first people that they meet. There has been talk about training, but we are already there. We direct, advise and give people estimates of the cost of their journeys, for instance. I am not being big-headed, but we lead by example. We are further ahead than some private companies.

The Chairperson: Thank you both very much for coming here today. You are quite right; you are the ambassadors meeting people who have just arrived in the country.

Mr Gardiner: They work at the airport, but they seem to run a tight ship.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE ARTS AND LEISURE

Thursday 11 October 2007

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr David McNarry (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley
Mr Francie Brolly
The Lord Browne
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Kieran McCarthy
Mr Nelson McCausland
Mr Ken Robinson
Mr Jim Shannon

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): This section of the meeting will comprise a review of the evidence collected to date on the Libraries Bill, with the aim of the Committee's coming to an agreement on the position that it intends to take on various clauses when Minister Edwin Poots gives evidence at next week's meeting.

Independent legal advice, relating to staff transfers in schedule 2 to the Libraries Bill, was mentioned at the Committee meeting on 27 September. The Committee Clerk raised the issue informally with the Director of Legal Services. She advised the director that at the meeting on 4 October, an official from the Departmental Solicitor's Office (DSO) said that in light of NIPSA's proposed amendments, he was prepared to review again the provision in schedule 2 to the Bill. The official said also that it would be helpful if he could have sight of the full legal opinion that NIPSA had received from senior counsel.

The Committee agreed to ask NIPSA to make available a copy of the legal opinion, which, when received, will be forwarded to the Department for onward transmission to the DSO official. When the DSO official has communicated final views on the matter, the Committee will be better placed to decide what — if any — legal advice is required from Assembly Legal Services on the interpretation of schedule 2.

The Committee Clerk: This morning, I received from NIPSA the letter from Frank O'Donoghue QC. The letter provides all the evidence that NIPSA referred to when it gave evidence to the Committee.

Mr McNarry: I welcome the fact that we have Frank O'Donoghue's letter, because we can now look at it in conjunction with the evidence that we received from NIPSA. However, why we are giving it to the Department is slightly beyond me. Why are we doing the Department's work? I seem to recall two things — although I need to be sure that my recollection is correct, so if it is wrong someone can pull me up on that. First, the legal gentleman who came to the Committee — and whose name eludes me — said that he had not had any discussions on the legal side of the situation.

However, he was quite adamant that he was right and everyone else was wrong. Despite not having had any meetings with him, he said also that he understood that Mr O'Donoghue had altered his opinion somewhat since drafting the letter to his clients. The letter from Mr O'Donoghue to NIPSA's solicitors is dated 2 February. We need to know whether Mr O'Donoghue's opinion has altered, because we have a legal man telling us in an evidence session that he understands — and we have to take people on trust — that it has altered. He was not able to substantiate that assertion, but it is now in the mix.

Therefore, if Mr O'Donoghue's opinion has altered, how crucial is that to the Committee? In other words, is it wise or safe for us to consider the opinion that the Committee was given as being the endgame? Do we need to check whether Mr O'Donoghue has altered his opinion? On the basis of what he had heard and understood, the legal man did not give any indication that Mr O'Donoghue was either more right than he was or less wrong than he was. The situation is too grey for me.

The Principal Committee Clerk: Certainly, we will check straight away whether there have been any changes to the document containing Mr O'Donoghue's opinion. If there have not been any changes, a reasonable way forward would be to present the advice to the Departmental Solicitor's Office. Given that DSO commissioned the legislation, it is right to give its officials the opportunity to comment on it.

If there have been any changes, either we will inform the Departmental Solicitor's Office or we will ask the Department to inform the Departmental Solicitor's Office. Only when the Departmental Solicitor's Office responds will we be in a position to ask our legal advisers whether they are content with any dispute that has arisen between the two parties.

We will check out fully whether any changes or amendments have been made to the document.

The Chairperson: It is my understanding that the document has not been altered. The name of the official from the Departmental Solicitor's Office is Mr Noel Kelly, but that will also be checked.

Mr McNarry: That information was recorded in a previous Hansard report. Until we have that information, we cannot consider the issue properly. If the Committee finds that it needs independent legal opinion, whom would it approach? Would we approach the same people who are providing the Department with legal advice or would we look elsewhere? Can we look elsewhere, because that seems to be the direction in which we are heading?

Mr Bradley: On page 10 of the document at tab 4, there is a report of Mr Kelly's evidence. He said that: "There are two differing legal opinions, and I am fully prepared to reconsider the issue."

The Chairperson: He is prepared to reconsider the issue?

Mr Bradley: Yes. He says also: "I will reconsider each of the issues that have been raised."

Mr McNarry: Dominic is right. I cannot see any movement for the minds of Frank O'Donoghue and Mr Kelly to meet.

Mr Bradley: At that stage, he says also: "The opinion of Frank O'Donoghue QC has not been disclosed to me, but John Corey has indicated what he said."

That reflects accurately what Mr Kelly said last week — that he was prepared to reconsider the issue and that he had respect for Mr O'Donoghue's views.

Mr Shannon: If the Committee refers the matter to the legal advisers for consideration, will their opinion come back to the Committee?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr Shannon: I wanted to ensure that that would happen.

The Principal Committee Clerk: Frank O'Donoghue's advice will be copied to the Department, which will forward it to the Departmental Solicitor's Office. DSO will respond by stating whether or not it agrees with the advice and by giving reasons if it does not agree. That opinion will come back to the Committee. At that point, the Committee will be free to take further, independent legal advice on any outstanding issues by liaising with the Assembly's in-house Director of Legal Services. Therefore, if required, the Committee has access to independent legal advice.

Mr McNarry: As a final word on that matter, I am uncomfortable with the Committee's copying Mr O'Donoghue's letter of advice to the Department. The Department should get its own copy. If it is prepared to consider the advice, why do its officials not get off their backsides and ask for it? I would vote against the Committee's sending Frank O'Donoghue's letter to the Department. Let the Department go its own way and get its own advice. By sending our advice to the Department, the Committee will be sucked into a situation in which it has both asked for and supplied evidence. It is not a clean process.

Mr D Bradley: If the Committee disagrees with Mr Kelly and has access to another opinion, it would be churlish not to pass that on. NIPSA is Mr O'Donoghue's client; therefore, the Committee might be the only conduit that is capable of supplying Mr Kelly with the information that he needs.

Mr McNarry: In that case, we should ascertain whether NIPSA is happy for us to pass on a document that it submitted to the Committee.

The Chairperson: We have that understanding from NIPSA. However, if David wishes to record his dissatisfaction with the notion of forwarding —

Mr McNarry: I am dissatisfied, and I want to make that clear.

The Chairperson: Members should now give their attention to the web article, which was sent to the Committee by Ms Julie Mapstone, who works for the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. Ms Mapstone has highlighted paragraph 3, which states that libraries: "more than doubled their book spend for the second year running".

Mr McCausland: The article suggests that things are wonderful; however, the background is that over the past few years, the amount of money given to libraries has remained unchanged, increased slightly or, in some cases, decreased. In certain years, because it could not get money from anywhere else, the Library Service took money from the book fund in order to spend it on buildings and staff. Staff levels have been cut to the bone; therefore, there is a little bit of extra money for books. The sentiment of the article is disappointing — it is spin of the highest order. Total library expenditure has certainly not gone up.

However, there is no point in fighting with anyone about library spend — no one would listen.

The Chairperson: You have vented your spleen on the matter.

Members should now refer to the chief executive designate's reply to the Committee's request for an update on staff recruitment and the notion of developing a sub-regional structure for the new library authority.

Mr McCausland: The letter states that the proposed sub-regional structure would, in practice, equate to having an area manager. The person who was to fulfil that role would go to any local community-planning meetings.

The Chairperson: That can be noted for now.

Mr McNarry: I have a comment to make — I am sorry if I sound like I got out of the wrong side of bed this morning, but my day was going well until I arrived here.

Mr Shannon: I thought that that was every morning, David.

Mr Brolly: His bed only has one side.

Mr McCausland: David's bed has two wrong sides.

Mr McNarry: To get out of the other side, I would have to climb over the wife. [Laughter.]

I cannot believe that a body that does not deserve the title “designate”, has now got a fancy title, which is the Northern Ireland library authority implementation team. It has an office and so on, and the chief executive designate has written to the Committee. I cannot believe that recruitment is being carried out for that body.

The Chairperson: It is also setting up a temporary headquarters.

Mr McNarry: This will come back and bite us; and that is crap.

The Chairperson: Your views have been well noted. You have made them known on more than one occasion.

Members should know that we will be having a working meeting with the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure next week. It was thought originally that there would be time for the Assembly Research and Library Service to brief the Committee on its background paper on the Bill, which was provided to members during the meeting of 13 September 2007. I draw members' attention to that.

However, given that we are also receiving a briefing next week from the Department on the budget process, there may not be sufficient time to allocate 30 minutes for a presentation on the background paper. Do members wish to receive a briefing on the background paper at another time?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: I want to draw members' attention to the issues that have been raised by witnesses and the Committee during the course of the evidence sessions, along with the response from the Department, which we heard last week. I remind members that the Committee needs to agree its position on each of those issues and decide whether we want to attempt to persuade the Minister to make amendments to the Bill. It was great to discover that, sometimes, Committees can persuade Ministers to make amendments on their behalf before Bills go to the House.

It is best to discuss each issue systematically. I want to examine clause 2 of the Bill — “Duty of Authority to provide library service”. If we cannot add value, and if we are content, we will move on. The Chartered Institute of Library Information Professionals was concerned that the term “comprehensive and efficient” is not included in clause 2. It also suggested that the clause should make reference to the standards set out in the document ‘Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries’.

Last week, departmental officials said that if standards were included in legislation, the Department would have to go through the whole legislative process in order to upgrade or amend them. The officials said that using the term “comprehensive and efficient” would not be particularly meaningful, and that it has set out what it means by “a comprehensive service” in clause 2(2)(a). However, the officials also said that they would be prepared to reconsider the issue.

I draw members' attention to the memo from Julie Mapstone, which reinforces the points that she made at the evidence session. The memo states that:

“It was considered inappropriate to legislate for efficiency. The service will be measured via the standards set out in Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries and through additional targets which may be set from time to time.”

It seems reasonable not to include standards in legislation, as they can change with time. For example, on a different subject, charges for fishing licences are not included in primary legislation because they change through time and are, therefore, dealt with under secondary legislation.

Are members content with the Department's position on that issue? Do members want to ask the Minister to include the phrase “comprehensive and efficient”, or to specify standards in clause 2? That would run contrary to the advice from the Department. Do members wish to further question the Minister on this clause?

Mr McNarry: There was good reason for the term “comprehensive and efficient” to be included in the Bill, mainly because we are the legislators; we will not write the Bill, but we, or whoever follows us, will be the fall guys for anything that goes wrong.

If one is to believe the leaks that are coming from another Committee, which deals with water, the amazing figure of 40% efficiency savings will be used as a means to pay for that Department's proposals. An efficiency saving of 40% seems to be immense, and if you were to ask the electorate, their major criticism would be focused on the efficiency of the system and the civil servants and people who service the Assembly. I am keen to keep the word “efficient” in the Bill because if we take a backward step on efficiency, we will slide.

Mr Brolly: People referred to operational matters outside the legislation, and that should have been raised at the time. I have made the point about whether the new library authority should be an institution or an operation. Fundamentally, we want a library operation. We have all expressed concern that the proposed centralised library authority might live in an ivory tower and that it would be clinical, losing touch with the people who most need the service. Operational matters should definitely be part of the legislation. The absence of the words “comprehensive and efficient” from the legislation cannot be used as an excuse for operational matters not being covered.

The Chairperson: From time to time, the Department advises the Committee that certain matters will be covered in the rules of operation. David McNarry and Francie Brolly want “comprehensive and efficient” written into the legislation.

Mr McCausland: I support that.

My other point is on the suggestion that the standards that are set out in ‘Delivering Tomorrow’s Libraries’ should be drafted into the Bill. I accept that the legislation would have to be changed to reflect basics, such as targets. Is there a halfway house that allows a mechanism for the Assembly to have influence over standards so that they cannot be arbitrarily changed by the library authority, without its taking the Assembly’s views into account?

Mr D Bradley: In its response, the Department said:

“Having to legislate for efficiency is a little strange, because one would expect that to be monitored anyway.”

Are there any indications of how efficiency will be monitored? The Committee needs to know the answer to that.

The Chairperson: The Department said that it will judge efficiency against the standards set out in ‘Delivering Tomorrow’s Libraries’ and through additional targets, which may be set from time to time. That is not a firm answer. Do you have a question for the Minister?

Mr D Bradley: How will efficiency be monitored, and by whom? Education, for example, is monitored by the Education and Training Inspectorate, which is independent from the Department of Education. That can give an objective view of what is happening in schools and colleges.

The Chairperson: Does that inspectorate have any jurisdiction over Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure matters?

Mr D Bradley: Only in as far as that a school library can be assessed as part of a school inspection. The inspectorate can assess the range of books available, how often the library is used by pupils and how well it supports learning in the school.

Mr McCausland: My question for the Minister is: is there some way of having influence over changes that might be made to the standards? Dominic Bradley’s point is about how the standards will be measured.

Mr D Bradley: My question is: how will the standards monitored and by whom?

The Chairperson: Those questions will inform the Committee’s approach to its engagement with the Minister next week. Are we happy to move on to clause 3?

Mr McNarry: As we are going through the Bill line by line, can I ask you to re-cap what we are happy with when we decide that we are happy with it?

The Chairperson: I will do that: we will ask the Department to include the words “comprehensive and efficient” in the Bill; and Committee staff will capture the spirit of the questions that we are raising today to ensure that we ask them of the Minister next week. Do members agree that we want the term “comprehensive and efficient” to be included in the Bill?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: NIPSA was concerned that clause 3 might not allow the library authority to co-operate with other bodies. Last week, the Department said that the legislation allows the library authority to make partnership arrangements as it sees fit; NIPSA disagreed. In response to a question raised by Nelson, the Department said that independent libraries, like the Linen Hall Library, would still be able to apply to the Department for funding. I refer to Julie Mapstone’s memo. She explained that clause 2(3) of the Bill gives the library authority the power to co-operate with other bodies and to develop partnership arrangements. That includes the Linen Hall Library. For information, that library is a private subscription library, which operates under a scheme framed under the Educational Endowments (Ireland) Act 1885, a very archaic piece of legislation.

Mr McCausland: It is an archaic place.

The Chairperson: Clause 8 gives the Department power to continue paying grants for library services provided outside the library authority. That would include the Linen Hall Library.

Mr McCausland: That is fine.

The Chairperson: Are any members of the Committee collectors for the Linen Hall Library? I know some people who collect for it; Councillor Tom Hartley does.

Mr McCausland: He has made a collection for it; a very large and sad collection.

The Chairperson: Are members content with Department's position on the issue? Do members wish to ask the Minister to amend the clause or are they happy to move on. I see that members are happy to move on.

Clause 4 gives libraries the power of authority to undertake commercial activities. The Chartered Institute of Library Professionals was concerned that clause 4 implies that libraries will be judged on their commercial success. Last week, the Department said that this provision is included in the current legislation and that it is not a new thing. It explained that it allowed the libraries to sell local books or to run coffee shops. The Department confirmed that the performance of libraries will not be measured by reference to their commercial activities. That seems a reasonable explanation.

Are members content with the Department's position on this issue?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clause 6 refers to charges for certain library services. All the witnesses were concerned that clause 6 does not guarantee free core library services. Some suggested that core services should be defined in the clause. In relation to clause 6(2), NIPSA was concerned that there was scope for discrimination if different people were charged different costs, depending on their locality or circumstances. I remember that you posed that question, Dominic.

Mr D Bradley: Yes.

The Chairperson: Last week, the Department said that the legislation was intended to simplify the existing statutory provision for charging. It pointed to the explanatory and financial memorandum of the Bill, which states that core services will remain free of charge. The Department said that it would consider amending the clause and asked the Committee to suggest proposed wording. I refer members to an extract from the current legislation, which deals with charging for library services. It specifies where charges can be made. The Department's proposed legislation turns that around, specifying where charges cannot be made.

Do any members wish to propose alternative wording or a different approach?

Mr McCarthy: My recollection is that all the witnesses thought that the wording was not strong enough, and even the Department's officials appeared to agree with that. I do not have alternative wording.

However, if any other member has a strong wording, he should suggest it.

The Chairperson: You want it specified in the Bill that "core services shall be free."

Mr McCarthy: Absolutely. No messing about.

The Chairperson: Yes, Kieran, you have quizzed every witness on that point.

Mr McCausland: The best form of words was produced by the witness from the Chartered Institute of Library Professionals.

The Chairperson: We will have look at that evidence and form of words in order to incorporate Kieran's sentiment. Are members agreed that we take that approach?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The Department offered an explanation for different charges for different persons' circumstances and localities. The Department said that that reflects current practice, whereby, for example, senior citizens and children do not pay fines, whereas adults do. However, the Department could not provide an explanation for why people in different localities would be charged differently. The Department agreed to come back to the Committee on that matter.

I refer Members to the memo from Julie Mapstone. Julie explains that in respect of locality, some public libraries have rooms that are let to the community for meetings and events, charges may differ depending on the size of the room, the demand in a particular area and whether the users are from commercial or voluntary bodies.

Mr D Bradley: Should a regional library authority not have regional charges?

Mr McCausland: In Belfast, a library in, for example, Ligoniel would charge a different rate for the hiring of a room than would Belfast Central Library, which could charge more because of its city-centre location, and the increased value added by that location. Therefore, flexibility is important.

Mr D Bradley: New ageism legislation may be relevant in regard to not charging fines for children and senior citizens. For example, the Southern Regional College has increased its fees because it is not allowed to charge pensioners less except on the basis of the benefits that they are in receipt of. Given that that legislation applies to the Southern Regional College, would that not also be applicable in this instance?

The Chairperson: That is a good question which will be recorded and put to the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure during next weeks' meeting.

Mr Shannon: To elaborate on Dominic's point, it would be wise to have a Province-wide charging system. Nelson's point is valid: hiring a small room or a large room will incur different charges. Is there a way to implement a Province-wide charging system that is in proportion to the size of the rooms that are to be hired? Is there the scope for a system that would be the same whether in Londonderry, Newry, Strabane or Newtownards? Charges must be similar across the Province.

The Chairperson: Do you take Nelson's point about charging differently for rooms in Belfast?

Mr Shannon: Yes.

Mr McCausland: The rental of an office in Belfast city centre is more expensive per square foot than in somewhere such as Ballysillan. There must be flexibility because otherwise money may be lost.

The Chairperson: Do you accept that, Jim?

Mr Shannon: That puts a different light on the matter. The situation in the centre of Belfast will be different to that in Ballywalter.

Mr Maskey: It is a difficult issue. The charge could not be calculated per square foot because that could not be written into legislation. A library should set out standard charges from an early stage. However, those charges would go up on a yearly basis; therefore a certain degree of flexibility should be included.

Mr McCausland: There is the competition factor: if someone wants to rent public space in a library in Belfast city centre, he or she has the choice of the Linen Hall Library or Belfast Central Library, and there will be competition between those two for certain events. The money will go back into the library, so its users will benefit, and it is not in the libraries' interest to charge themselves out of the market, so librarians should be trusted in that regard.

Mr Shannon: It may be possible to put like with like: similar charges for a library in Strabane and a library in Newtownards would make sense; it would not make sense to charge the same for a library in Belfast and one in Ballywalter — where there is no library, of course. A library in the centre of Belfast could not be compared with a library in Newtownards or in Strabane.

Mr D Bradley: Are there plans for a library in Ballywalter?

Mr Shannon: Not that I am aware of.

The Chairperson: Do you want it written into the legislation that there should be a library in Ballywalter?

Mr Shannon: No, I will not make that claim.

The Chairperson: If there are no issues regarding the different wording then we will move on, however, questions will put to the Minister next week.

Schedule 1 to the Libraries Bill concerns membership of the library authority. The majority of witnesses agreed that a board of between seven and 14 members was too small. Witnesses were concerned that the Libraries Bill did not require elected representatives or unions to be represented, or to be on the board, and that geographical representation was not assured.

Last week, the Department said that the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments has a tendency to recommend smaller boards, which is advice that the Department is following. The Department explained that the library authority will not need many subcommittees. However, it said that the Minister is prepared to reconsider the number of board members. Does the Committee feel that there should be more board members than the current provision of between seven and 14?

Lord Browne: Although the board should be kept small, the suggested number of members is too small. I recommend approximately 20 members, but do not recommend expanding the numbers much more; otherwise, they would affect effective efficiency.

Mr K Robinson: I agree with that. I have been a member of an education and library board, like yourself, and know the subcommittees that are set up, which put quite a strain on members, particularly if they are trying to cover a wide geographical area or, as in this case, a sub-regional area. I agree with Wallace's recommendation of roughly 20. I feel strongly that elected representatives and union representatives should be on the board. I am worried about "the great and the good" from the public appointments point of view, but the number of those people available must be running out.

The Chairperson: Maybe some of those people are on several bodies.

Mr D Bradley: At last week's Committee meeting, when I asked Ms Mapstone whether she had any evidence that smaller boards were more effective and efficient, she said that there was no evidence to that effect.

Mr McCarthy: I support what Wallace said; the board should be a bit bigger because, as members know, it is difficult to get a quorum in any situation. Also, elected representatives should be on the board.

Mr McNarry: What category of elected representatives do Committee members mean?

Mr K Robinson: I meant elected representatives at council level, including those from the new councils in whatever form that they take. I certainly did not mean folk from this august Assembly.

The Chairperson: We are talking about members of local government authorities.

Mr McNarry: I thought that that was what was meant. Any changes to local government through RPA must be considered.

Mr McCausland: I am fully supportive of that proposal. If a 20-member board is opted for, how many members from local authorities should there be, and how would they be selected?

Mr K Robinson: That issue was touched on before, and we thought that a body such as Northern Ireland Local Government Association (NILGA) could co-ordinate the selection process.

The Chairperson: The Committee will conclude on the matter in a second. Ken, will you think about formally wording an insert for the Bill about elected representatives and unions representatives being on the board?

The Department said that advertisement and criteria for board members would ensure that appointments were based on merit, and would specify the experience required. The Department also said that it will try to attract applications from a wide range of people. The Committee has suggested that the Department includes a clause, which states that the board must be totally reflective of society, as is the case in the Equality Commission and the Human Rights Commission. The Department said that it would consider that.

Does the Committee want the requirement that the board reflects the composition of society to be written into the Bill? Also, does the Committee want the requirement of elected representative and union representation on the board to be expressly included in the Bill?

Mr K Robinson: I support a requirement for elected representatives and union representatives to be on the board. I have a difficulty with what constitutes being reflective of society; sometimes I see bodies that certainly do not represent society in my area.

Mr McCausland: I favour the idea of the board being reflective of society. The problem is that these boards take reflective to mean getting representatives from east and west of the Bann, who are protestant and catholic, and are male and female, and leave it at that.

Mr K Robinson: It finishes up as a strange box.

Mr McCausland: As the composition of these bodies is usually made up of “the great and the good”, the east-of-the-Bann representation tends to solely consist of people who live in North Down. Given the cultural nature of this body — the cultural importance of libraries has been stressed — it should reflect the cultural diversity of Northern Ireland, and not end up filled with middle-class and upper-middle-class Anglo-Irish types from North Down.

The Chairperson: Could you be clearer? [Laughter.]

Mr D Bradley: Would you like to name those people?

The Chairperson: Is this Committee a North-Down-MLA free zone? [Laughter.]

Mr McNarry: Sometimes, where I live is included in North Down.

Mr McCausland: That is because you are a snob. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Do you speak for Peter Weir on the matter?

Mr McNarry: Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr McCausland: He attempts to speak for Peter Weir.

Mr D Bradley: All areas will be represented, except North Down.

Mr McCausland: Precisely; all areas will be represented, except North Down.

The Chairperson: We are agreed on the need for elected representative and union representation on the board. We will have to consider further whether the clause should include reference to the fact that the board must be fully reflective of society.

Mr Shannon: That would obviously include rural areas. Nelson’s point is very valid, and many of the representatives of the boards made that point when they appeared before the Committee. Those of us who represent rural areas are very conscious of that as well. It is important that the rural community is not forgotten about to the advantage of urban dwellers. I mean no offence to those who live in urban areas, but it is important that we ensure that there is a balance.

Mr K Robinson: In particular, the Southern Education and Library Board seemed to be very fearful of that happening, and I can understand its concerns.

The Chairperson: Of course, the Western Education and Library Board would cover a very rural area, too.

Mr McNarry: I have a suggestion that I feel would be useful, and I wonder whether the Committee would agree. Could there be some form of user representation on the new board? Many such boards do not have any user representation.

Mr McCausland: Any councillor who would sit on it would be a user.

Mr McNarry: That may be so, but I am thinking in particular of the elderly, who frequently use libraries. It would be nice for them to have a voice.

Mr D Bradley: The Committee may recall that, some time ago, I asked whether there was any representative body for library users. I believe that the Committee Clerk reported back that there was not. Therefore, that might create a difficulty.

The Chairperson: Were you surprised that there was no such body?

Mr D Bradley: Yes, I was. I thought that there would have been a group that represented readers and library users.

Mr Brolly: Could the new library authority consider setting up such a group? That would be useful to the authority for the purposes of consultation — it could consult the group on issues — and for the purposes of information-gathering.

Mr McNarry: That would be very useful.

Mr McCausland: The number of people who actually attend meetings of consultative panels is small. For example, we have such a panel in Belfast, and although over 40 people may be invited to attend a panel meeting, we are lucky if four turn up.

The Chairperson: There needs to be emphasis on getting feedback from users in some way or another.

Mr McNarry: Such a group would provide a means of channelling users' complaints and requests. As elected representatives, we hear from users that their local library service does not supply such and such. It would be better if there were a voice to represent those views. I take Dominic's point, but it would be better if such a voice could be found.

Mr McCausland: I know that this is an operational matter, but one approach might be for the library authority or local library service to hold meetings with users in a given area twice a year. The readers could be invited to attend that meeting when they come in to borrow their books. That situation would be easy to manage.

The Chairperson: I feel that if departmental officials were present, they would suggest that that be put in the explanatory and financial memorandum, where the rules of operation are listed. It would not be linked to —

Mr McCausland: I am not suggesting that for a moment.

Mr McNarry: My constituency office is beside Newtownards Library, and we get a lot of people coming in —

Mr Shannon: Looking for books. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: You hear people's views.

Mr McNarry: They are looking for the truth.

The Chairperson: That is valuable.

Let us move on to paragraph 1 of schedule 3, which refers to "Tenure of office." NIPSA stated that the chair of the board should only be allowed to hold that office for a maximum of two terms. Last week, the Department said that it agreed with that. However, it feels that the matter should not necessarily be included in the legislation; rather it believes that it should be included under the rules of operation for the board. Is that adequate?

Mr McCausland: Will the library authority draw up its own rules of operation or will the Department draw up those rules?

The Chairperson: We will have to record that question. It is another query about who will do what.

Members will note that paragraph 6 of schedule 1 to the Bill deals with secondments. NIPSA was concerned that the legislation might permit secondments from the Civil Service only, and that it would exclude the schools' library service and the education and skills authority. Last week, the Department pointed out that paragraph 5(1)(b) of schedule 1 permits the authority to have such employees as it sees fit to have, which includes seconded staff as well as direct recruits.

The Department also highlighted clause 8(1) of schedule 1, which permits the authority to provide assistance to persons as it sees fit. The Department clearly stated that there is no attempt in the legislation to deny secondments, particularly from the education side and the schools' library service. The Department explained that Civil Service secondments are specified because they may not have been allowable otherwise.

As that appears to clarify the legislation on secondments, are members happy to move on?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Schedule 2 deals with staff transfer schemes, and I remind members of our earlier discussions on seeking a final view from the Departmental Solicitor's Office. Paragraphs 13 and 14 of the explanatory and financial memorandum detail the start-up costs and estimated savings involved. Many witnesses were concerned that the start-up costs are inadequate and that the Department has overestimated the savings that can be made. Last week, the Department did not adequately explain how the figures for start-up costs or savings were calculated.

The Committee wrote to the Department seeking detailed answers, and I understand that its response is due tomorrow. I suggest that members await that before deciding to pursue the issue of costs with the Minister. Members who are not content with that response may wish to ask the Minister to amend the explanatory and financial memorandum to provide a more realistic estimate of costs and savings.

Mr D Bradley: Did you skip a page? Did we cover all the points on the staff transfer scheme?

The Chairperson: Yes, I think so, but tell me why you think otherwise, Dominic.

Mr D Bradley: I do not remember covering all those points.

The Chairperson: I moved through them swiftly because I have a time-management plan for the rest of the meeting, but let me know if something jumps out at you.

Mr D Bradley: We need to cover some of the legal issues.

Mr K Robinson: Further to Dominic's point, we do not want to sleepwalk into creating a situation similar to that of the classroom assistants at some stage in the future. Therefore, when we revisit the staff transfer scheme and related issues, we must be extremely careful not to set a precedent that could hang, draw and quarter one group or advantage another. We went through the staff transfer scheme fairly quickly, and, therefore, we must revisit it.

The Chairperson: I agree. Given that much has already been said about reaching a proper conclusion on the legal advice, it is an extremely difficult area. However, we agreed earlier to revisit the matter, as Ken and Dominic suggest.

Mr McNarry: As two items — the legal report and start-up costs — have been identified as requiring further discussion, it may be prudent to suggest that the Committee does so before meeting the Minister. I cannot understand why the Department's reply will arrive tomorrow, given that its officials know that the Committee is meeting today, and I find that unsatisfactory.

All the witnesses who were questioned on the subject made it clear that they did not consider the start-up costs to be adequate, and that will become a major issue. Therefore, if you permit it, Chairperson, we should meet earlier to go through whatever correspondence we receive from the Department as a Committee, rather than as individuals.

If we have evidence that the new authority cannot be established for the cost estimated in the Bill, we would be foolish to state that we will proceed with it — and the evidence of everyone that we have asked is overwhelming. It is a major issue, particularly because we are heading towards the Budget. Are we to allow a Minister to submit bids and compile budgets on the basis that we, as a Committee, do not think that he has enough money? It seems that the Executive do not have enough money to do anything.

The Chairperson: What do you suggest is the way forward?

Mr McNarry: The jury is out on the subject, because we do not have the necessary information. Can we meet half an hour earlier next week, before our meeting with the Minister, to come to a conclusion, as a Committee, on costs?

The Chairperson: OK. That is what we will do.

On David's point about discussing certain issues "in Committee", I am disinclined to go down that route. An open Committee is open to the public.

Mr McNarry: I meant that the Committee should gather earlier. I do not want to remove the issues from the public domain, or from Hansard. Perhaps Hansard's services can be arranged for that earlier meeting too.

The Chairperson: Thank you. That is fine; let us move on.

The need for an advisory council to the authority is not in the Bill. The Library and Information Services Council suggested that an advisory council should be established to support the authority. Last week, the Department said that it had considered that option, but that creating a separate body would involve considerable expense and that it would have recurrent costs. The Department suggested that a better option would be for the library authority to develop strong links with other public library services, as detailed. That seems to be a cost effective solution. Members will note also that only the Library and Information Services Council suggested establishing an advisory council. Are members happy to move on?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The timing of creating a library authority is also not in the Bill. Members and witnesses are concerned about the timing of creating a new authority, particularly in relation to the establishment of the education and skills authority and staff morale.

Last week, the Department said that the Minister will discuss the matter with the Committee when he comes to give evidence on Thursday 18 October. What are members' views on the timing issue? When does the Committee think that the library authority should be established? That could be as soon as practically possible or at the same time as the education and skills authority. Are there any views on that?

Mr McNarry: We need to tie that down. The Minister must tell us his view, and we can decide whether we agree with him. To leave the issue hanging in the air does not seem sensible to me. The Committee must consider RPA, the Budget and the many pressing issues that will come on top of that issue.

At one stage, the Minister indicated to the Committee that he would establish the authority, and it was not very important. Suddenly, he sped the matter up. There must be a reason why he is pressing ahead so quickly. It is probably because he is spending money on employing people in an authority that does not yet exist and for goodness knows what other reasons.

The Committee needs to tie him down. It is not for the Committee to stipulate when it wants the authority to be established. We need to ask the Minister when he is going to do it, and we can decide whether that is right or wrong.

Mr D Bradley: It is probably impossible to synchronise the establishment of the library authority and the education and skills authority. It seems to be desirable that the two bodies be established in as close a time frame to each other as possible.

The Chairperson: OK. The Committee can raise the matter again next week. Are members agreed?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Links with the schools library service and the Department of Education are not in the Bill. Some witnesses and members were concerned that literacy and life-long learning programmes would be impaired by splitting the public library service from the Department of Education. There was also concern that the links with the schools library service would be endangered.

Last week, the Department said that it was in regular contact with the Department of Education on issues relating to the creation of the library authority and the education and skills authority to ensure a common approach to staff transfer. Officials said that in relation to links between the library service and the Department of Education on, for example, the Bookstart programme, the Department would ensure that services continue and that service-level agreements could be established with the education and skills authority. Are members content with that response? Do members wish to press the Minister to address any of those issues by including them in the Bill?

Mr McNarry: I am reasonably satisfied that those issues are not included in the Bill. However, I need more guarantees from the Department. For the Department simply to say that it will ensure that this or that will happen is not good enough, particularly on the links between the library authority and the education and skills authority. I want those assurances to be strengthened through some sort of written agreement that the Department will be tied to, so that, at least, the Department can be held accountable for its actions.

The Chairperson: OK. Is that agreed?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The sub-regional structure is not in the Bill. Members and witnesses have expressed concern about whether the library authority will have a sub-regional structure and, if so, what form that structure will take. The Committee wrote to the chief executive designate to ask for an update on her progress in establishing a sub-regional structure. A response is expected tomorrow. As David will be glad to hear, Friday follows Thursday.

Last week, the Department said that it sees the sub-regional structure as an operational matter. When the Department says that, one knows that it does not want the matter to be reflected in legislation. The Department does not want the sub-regional structure to be reflected in legislation as it considers it to be an operational matter.

The Committee suggested that contact and interaction with local authorities could be written into legislation. The Department said that it would consider that. Do members wish to pursue the matter with the Minister and suggest that he specifies elements of the sub-regional structure of the authority in the Bill, or are members happy that it remains in the rules of operation? Shall we consider that matter and return to it next week?

Mr McNarry: May I ask a naïve question? The matter may have been discussed when I was out. The problem is that the Committee does not have clear indication of what the operational structure will be. Will all those promises be built into it? The Committee must tie down the Department. Is it the right time to ask the Department how far it has got with the operational structure, what it is and whether it can give the Committee a blueprint of it? The Committee has gone blind on that matter.

The Chairperson: OK.

Mr D Bradley: If the sub-regional structure will not be specified in the Bill, the Committee must have sight of the chief executive designate's proposals for it. At present, the Committee has not heard anything about the structure, and it has not taken shape. The Committee must have an idea of what it will look like when it is completed.

The Chairperson: The Committee must get more than a promise about the inclusion of the sub-regional structure in the rules of operation. We must have sight of the proposed rules. Is that correct?

Mr D Bradley: I would not go that far. However, the chief executive designate of the education and skills authority has provided the Committee with the operational structure of that body. The Committee must also see the sub-regional structure of the library authority.

Mr McCausland: It seems that the sub-regional structure will end up being local officers or managers for particular council areas. Those people will represent the library service at community planning meetings. Is that sufficient local input, bearing in mind that although there will be councillors on, for instance, a 20-member board, they will not be able to reflect the interests of different communities in that council area? It would not be possible for one individual to do so. Even if there were councillors on the board, it may be that there are none from a particular community.

Although there is a need for a library authority that will have a co-ordinating role between libraries, is the Committee satisfied that there is sufficient local input in the library authority that is envisioned? In a sense, the Committee was bounced into accepting a single library authority at first, because it had been put through quickly in the Chamber. Is the Committee satisfied that the current vision for the library authority provides enough local input, or should there be a single library authority that has a strategic role and a much more enhanced role for local authorities than simply to attend community planning meetings? That question has not been answered.

The Chairperson: The local dimension troubles everyone who sits around the table. We do not believe that it is adequate.

Mr McCausland: Now is the time to deal with it. We can tinker around with details on other matters. However, we must answer that question.

Mr D Bradley: The Department is basically saying that there will be a local officer who will have input into community planning?

Mr McNarry: That is what we think.

Mr McCausland: We do not know that for certain. However, it could not be anything more than that. Will there be a local board in each area in the same way that there is a library committee? Will the officer meet with councillors in the area?

The Chairperson: Those are key issues for the Minister.

Mr McCausland: Yes. In a sense, the onus has been put on Irene Knox who introduced the sub-regional structure. It is a damning indictment of the people who came up with the scheme years ago that they never even considered introducing a sub-regional structure.

Mr McNarry: That brings us back to the fact that there is a great need to see the operational structure, or even to see a draft of it. It worries me that if that work is not done, what are we buying into?

Mr K Robinson: The actual model has yet to be determined. The departmental response on 4 October states: "Perhaps, later on, we will talk about exploiting the subregional nature of libraries".

That should worry us all, as it is so vague.

The Chairperson: Does the Committee wish to write to Irene Knox to request a copy of the operational structure?

Mr McNarry: No, we can ask the Minister next week. We can put him on the spot then.

Mr McCausland: It may seem that we are being cantankerous at this late stage. The problem is that all of this was done during direct rule when there was no opportunity for proper input and scrutiny.

The Chairperson: We have every entitlement to request to see the structure.

Mr Brolly: Nelson is saying is that the library authority was in place before we had any opportunity for input. There is an obvious anomaly, because the idea of a library authority was to centralise the library service, and what we are talking about now is how best we can decentralise it. We will probably end up believing that we would have been better to stick with the education and library boards.

The Chairperson: The location of the library authority headquarters is not mentioned in the Bill, and some witnesses and members were concerned about that.

Mr K Robinson: Would you favour Omagh, Chairperson?

Mr McNarry: I want to put in a plug for Newtownards: the new headquarters should be in Newtownards. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: East Antrim lacks public-service jobs.

Mr K Robinson: Yes, East Antrim is very low down the list of priorities.

Mr McCausland: Jim, get in quick with Ballywalter.

Mr Shannon: I would vote for Newtownards. I would support my colleague in his bid for Newtownards.

Mr McNarry: There is a majority of three for Newtownards.

Mr Shannon: As long as it is not Omagh.

The Chairperson: Last week, the Department informed the Committee that the chief executive designate and her team would move to temporary premises in Lisburn in November.

Mr McNarry: Is that at the Maze?

The Chairperson: Maybe it is at Long Kesh. [Laughter.]

The Department is waiting for final advice on the location of public-sector jobs before making a decision on the headquarters' location. However, it is interesting that the team is moving to Lisburn in the short term. Are members content with that response or do they wish to pursue that matter with the Minister? Is the Committee content that the location of headquarters will be put into the context of the location of public-sector jobs?

Mr P Maskey: What constituency does the Minister represent?

The Chairperson: That is a good point.

Mr McNarry: The point is that the Minister has said that the headquarters will not be a huge building, but I do not know of any small buildings in Lisburn.

Mr P Maskey: They could use the Minister's constituency office.

Mr McCausland: Or maybe they could use Ulster Unionist Party headquarters?

Mr McNarry: Aye, we have a big building in Lisburn.

The Chairperson: Last week, the Committee suggested to the Department that the legislation should include a provision making it the responsibility of the library authority to ensure that there is a collection of relevant material that may be described as being of national importance. Nelson raised that point, and departmental officials said that they would consider the matter. A memo from Julie Mapstone explains that for such collections held by public libraries, there is a need to set the collection of materials relating to one subject or region in the context of the requirement set out at clause 2(2)(a) for the library authority to make available:

"library materials sufficient in number, range and quality to meet the general requirements of adults and children."

That includes materials for lending and reference purposes to facilitate research and study. Senior library staff would judge how collections should be developed, bearing in mind their library budget.

Mr McCausland: Is that Julie Mapstone's answer to that question? I do not think that that is much of an answer, because, at present, that does not happen. We have left that duty with librarians, but nothing has happened, so how do we ensure that it will happen in the future?

Mr D Bradley: The definition in clause 2(2)(a) could be interpreted in a very narrow way.

The Chairperson: It is minimal.

Mr D Bradley: The definition could be interpreted in that way — just what is necessary and no more.

The Chairperson: It is very minimal and provides food for thought for the session with the Minister.

Mr K Robinson: We must have a more comprehensive look at the Bill. There is a lot of material that a librarian might know about today, but he or she may well retire rather than deal with the new system. A new librarian may come in and look at the dusty old store and decide to clear it out. The whole archive could go, and that might include very important material for a district, a part of society or whatever. We must insist that that is a very important part of the role of a public library. Not only should there be public access, but there should be the realisation that librarians are holding history in their hands. Libraries hold much more than material: they hold social and individual history. Nevertheless, I have seen documents being sent to the shredder many times.

Mr D Bradley: There may be a need to expand clause 2(2)(b)(ii) of the Bill to ensure that it is not given a minimalistic interpretation.

The Chairperson: In the absence of any dispute, we will agree to seek further discussion on clause 2(2)(b)(ii).

The Northern Ireland Publications Resource has established a non-statutory national bibliography by collecting all locally published material since 2000 — this is all very interesting. That is the Linen Hall Library collection and the Belfast Central Library.

Mr McCausland: It is across all libraries. The weakness with is that it applies to locally published material. For example, I know that the founder of Los Angeles was born Belfast, and a book about him was published in America — because the book was not published here, it has not been collected by the Northern Ireland Publications Resource. A huge number of stories are missing.

By the way, you might be interested to know that the founder of Los Angeles was educated at a Christian Brothers School in Dublin.

The Chairperson: That is not so bad. That is very magnanimous of you, Nelson. [Laughter.]

Have any of the libraries collected any books on the Fintona tram?

Mr McCausland: I am sure that you would find something in the Linen Hall Library.

The point is that the collection facility needs to be more comprehensive than that provided by the Northern Ireland Publications Resources: we are losing the diaspora element about people from here. Many American tourists trail round the Linen Hall Library on a wet day trying to find information. There should be information of wider significance and not just locally published material.

Mr D Bradley: What document are you reading from? We do not appear to have a copy of it.

The Chairperson: Are members content with the information provided by the Department, or will we pursue the matters as Nelson described? We can pursue matters further next week.

Mr McCausland: Is there consensus that we should broaden our vision beyond locally published material? What about information published in Glasgow or Dublin? We should not just have locally published material.

The Chairperson: OK: so that part should be reworded or reconsidered.

Mr D Bradley: Libraries should seek information that is relevant to our local situation.

Mr McCausland: Absolutely.

The Chairperson: This part of the meeting has come to a conclusion.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Thursday 11 October 2007

TAXIS BILL (NIA 4/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Patsy McGlone (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Trevor Clarke
Mr David Ford
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mr Ian McCrea
Mr Peter Weir

Witnesses:

Kevin Doherty	}	Disability Action
Mr John McMullan	}	Department of the Environment
Mr John Martin
Mr Stephen Spratt
Mrs Adele Watters

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): There was no written submission from Disability Action, but members may recall that at our meeting on 27 September, we agreed that it was important that the Committee hear an oral brief from a Disability Action representative. I also advise members that unless the Committee receives and accepts any late requests, today is our last day for oral evidence.

Mr Doherty, you are very welcome. Our proceedings are informal; you will have 10 or 15 minutes to explain your case and any views you may have on the Taxis Bill. Members will then ask questions seeking further detail or clarity.

Mr Kevin Doherty (Disability Action): Thank you. Our chief executive, Monica Wilson, sends her apologies. I am here to present evidence on behalf of Disability Action, which is a pan-disability organisation that works to create an inclusive Northern Ireland with, and for, people with disabilities. There are currently more than 330,000 people in Northern Ireland with a declared disability. The most recent census survey in Northern Ireland has identified certain barriers to social and economic inclusion for people with disabilities, and transport is one of those barriers. Disability Action urges the Committee to examine the results of that survey as part of any inclusive strategy for transport in Northern Ireland.

Disabled people's experiences of using taxis are very mixed. The vast majority of taxis are private, and can be used by some with mobility impairments, but are often difficult for wheelchair users in particular.

Disability Action represents 180 different disability organisations throughout Northern Ireland, and the evidence I am giving today is of specific examples that have been given to us. The issues faced by disabled people using taxis that are private include: extra charges for carrying luggage; extra charges for waiting the few extra minutes that a disabled person may need to get into the taxi; taxi drivers complaining that walking aids have scraped paintwork on cars; refusal of some drivers to move seats to give extra leg room; difficulty with storage of mobility enhancements, such as crutches; and extra charges for guide dogs for the blind, or, as is more often the case in Northern Ireland, refusal to transport them.

For wheelchair users who can transfer into a private car issues include: refusal to allow the wheelchair user to put their chair as close as possible to the car to facilitate ease of transfer in case of damage; extra charges for waiting; extra charges for storing the wheelchair — I will give examples of that later; rough handling, and subsequent damage to wheelchairs, which is an ongoing issue that has been highlighted to us; refusal to allow the wheelchair user to travel by themselves by some companies who insist that they have an escort; and the driver's attitude, language and lack of experience in transporting disabled people can make the journey uncomfortable.

Comfort and safety are key issues with self-styled accessible transport, although there are a small number of examples of good practice in transporting wheelchair users with knowledge, sensitivity and confidence, but they involve a select number of drivers who specialise in services for disabled people. Disability Action urges that those services should be used as the benchmark for good practice.

Examples that are reported to Disability Action include; lack of knowledge on the use of ramps; wheelchair users not being restrained; being forced to travel facing sideways, or sometimes, the wrong way; lack of driver training and knowledge of effects of impairment, including poor balance; and inability to stay in the chair due to the driver's poor braking or turning.

There are key concerns over the consistency of service, safety and comfort for the disabled person. However, the key significant issue that is often reported to Disability Action is the exorbitant fares imposed on disabled people. I will give two specific examples: a return journey from Lisburn Road in Belfast to Carrickfergus, where there was a ten-minute wait, resulted in a fare of £86, and a return journey of one mile in County Derry with a 20 minute wait was £70. Many disabled people find it difficult, and are afraid to challenge, such discriminatory practice, and pay the fare for a quiet life. In addition, deaf and blind people experience the barriers of lack of accessibility and information, and poor attitude of dispatch and driving staff.

In effect, disabled people often rely on taxis as their only means of mobility, but attitudes, safety, charging, inaccessibility of information, and lack of communication make journeys dangerous, uncomfortable and overly expensive.

The Taxis Bill must secure significant changes for the 20% of Northern Ireland's population who are disabled.

I recommend that several clauses of the Taxis Bill be amended. Clause 2(5) should include a reference to the number, or percentage, of taxis in each taxi fleet that should reach an agreed level of accessibility. Clause 3(2) should contain the provision that licensed operators be required to have a designated SMS number, text phone or other device that enables deaf people to access the booking system. I also suggest that clause 3(9) recommends accessible methods through which disabled users may make complaints to the licensed operators, for instance, a person with a learning disability may wish to make an oral complaint and a deaf person may wish to communicate his or her complaint by text. Clause 13(3)(a)(ii) should include accessibility as a condition for the taxi to be granted a taxi licence, and we ask that the exorbitant fares imposed on disabled people be challenged by clause 16(1)(b). With regard to clause 16(3), the highest penalties should be imposed for overcharging. Disability Action urges the comprehensive enforcement of clause 20(2)(c). If strong enforcement measures are not in place, the situation will become even more difficult for people with a disability.

With regard to clauses 20(2)(h) and 20(2)(j), we seek assurances that accessibility will be the key elements of a future DOE regulation. Even though clause 50 is another enabling clause, the Department recommends that disability and equality training is made mandatory. That would eliminate the lack of disability knowledge that some taxi drivers have — as I mentioned earlier. A further clause should be added regarding the carriage of assisting animals to bring Northern Ireland into line with the rest of Great Britain.

We welcome the introduction of the Taxis Bill, however the overall needs and basic rights of disabled people must be taken into account at the Bill's Committee Stage. This is an opportunity for the Department of the Environment and the Committee to set the benchmark that future Bills will have to reach if society is to be made more inclusive for people with disabilities.

Mr I McCrea: Thank you for your evidence, Kevin. It is always important to hear from someone who is speaking on behalf of people with disabilities and who wants to ensure that the needs of disabled people are catered for. It is also important that the legislation caters for disabled people. At the beginning of your evidence, you talked about the extra charges faced by disabled people — regardless of their disability. Have you evidence to show the differences in charges imposed by public-hire and private-hire taxis?

Mr K Doherty: Taxi firms in small rural villages, for example, are unlikely to have accessible vehicles. Therefore disabled users have to get taxis from firms in bigger places, such as Belfast, Derry and Newry, which have accessible transport, and pay exorbitant fares for taxis to travel to the individuals. However, the problem would be eliminated if all licensed operators were to have some accessible vehicles — as recommended in my proposed amendment to clause 2(5).

Mr Ford: Thank you for your evidence. I hope that you will send the Committee a written list of your suggested amendments to the clauses because I did not have time to note them all.

Mr K Doherty: I will.

Mr Ford: Can drivers' attitudes and ignorance be improved through regular training? Should such issues be part of the licensing procedure? How should they be dealt with?

Mr K Doherty: It is a training issue. Working with and being with people who have disabilities often requires a lot of understanding of the disability.

Training should be mandatory across public transport in general, not simply for taxi drivers. There should be mandatory disability and equality awareness training so that those in the transport industry are aware of issues that may face those with a disability, because often such needs are inadvertently not recognised.

Mr Ford: Last week, a driver who has the disability of reading and writing with difficulty gave evidence. Have you discussed the significant requirements for record-keeping with any of the drivers who may be similarly affected?

Mr K Doherty: The taxi drivers themselves?

Mr Ford: Yes, or are you solely concerned with issues relating to passengers?

Mr K Doherty: Currently, in regard to the Bill we are solely concerned with issues related to passengers.

Mr Ford: In a sense, a number of points that you highlighted about the legislation may be regarded as beefing up the existing Bill, which is, as you have said, overwhelmingly an enabling Bill. Have you had any discussions with departmental officials about that? It appears that you are proposing a fundamental change to the concept of the Bill. You are seeking to have issues that would normally be regulated included in the Bill.

Mr K Doherty: We are open to discussion on the issues.

Mr Ford: Have you discussed them yet?

Mr K Doherty: Not at this stage.

Mr Weir: The Department has provided the Committee with a list of potential regulatory amendments. Certain witnesses, including Mr Doherty, have given us a list of specific amendments. It would be useful if a full list of amendments were drawn up relatively soon. Also, it would be useful to have the Department's opinion on the workability of those amendments. Some issues raised by Mr Doherty could be dealt with through amendments, some through regulations, and others through obtaining assurances. The Committee could break that information down for the Department and seek confirmation that there would be amendments or satisfactory regulations put in place. It may be helpful to Mr Doherty's organisation to get written responses from the Department to confirm, for example, that certain clauses will be enforceable in certain situations. The issue of amendments is separate, but it would be helpful to get written assurances and clarification from the Department on the regulations. That is a role that the Committee could play.

The Committee Clerk: A lot of work is going into producing a single document that will break down the legislation, by clause, to outline the key issues. That work will be ongoing until next week. The document will include suggested amendments to clauses and subsections in the Bill. The Department is working hard to put its comments in a third column, so that the information that members need will be contained within a single document.

Mr Weir: The potential impact and merit of suggested amendments will vary. On the one hand, everyone will agree that some suggestions make common sense while, on the other hand, a proposal by an individual taxi driver, for example, could amount to a pet theory that no one else agrees with. It will be important for the Committee to make distinctions between suggested amendments; and, therefore, unless the Department comments on workability, it will be difficult for the Committee to make value judgements on what may be sensible improvements to the Bill and what may constitute pet theories that will not work in practice.

It was not really a question; I was just seeking clarification.

The Committee Clerk: The Clerk of Bills is here today. He will explain the process of clause-by-clause scrutiny to members. I hope that the document that we are going to use will answer all of the questions that members may have. The Committee will examine the clauses, the issues that were raised during oral and written evidence, and the Department's responses. There will also be an opportunity to discuss the responses with the departmental officials. The document is very large; we have tried to provide members with all the evidence as best we can.

Mr Ford: I have one further question. Mr Doherty highlighted clause 2(5) and the issue of the percentage of taxis that should be disabled-friendly. Does Disability Action have a figure in mind?

Mr K Doherty: It is difficult to say; in some rural communities there may only be two taxis. I could not say, for example, that 50% of the Value Cabs fleet in Belfast should comprise disabled-friendly vehicles. The question is whether opportunities exist for disabled people to avail of accessible taxis.

Mr Ford: I suspect that when we come to the regulations we may have to set a figure.

The Chairperson: Mr Doherty, thank you for coming along and giving of your time.

We shall now move on to the proposed amendments. We are going to be briefed by Adele Watters and John McMullan from the Department of the Environment. I have been advised that the proposed amendments are minor and do not involve any policy changes. Adele and John will probably clarify that for us.

Members have been provided with a copy of the proposed amendments.

Mr John McMullan (Department of the Environment): Thank you for the opportunity to address the Committee on the Department's proposed amendments to the Taxis Bill. Although it may appear slightly odd that the Department wishes to propose amendments so soon, the tight drafting deadlines that were imposed, initially for Westminster and then for the Assembly, allowed our lawyers only the summer recess to reflect on the legislation. It is probably inevitable that when lawyers look at draft legislation they will always find something that they want to change.

We have described the proposed amendments as minor drafting improvements. No policy changes are being suggested in any of the amendments, save one or two, and even then the overall integrity of the Bill will not be greatly affected. The amendments iron out certain ambiguities and uncertainties in the legislation. Although the changes may look small or even insignificant, they are the sorts of issues that can come back to haunt us in years to come, and the Department invariably ends up in Court trying to defend such legislation.

At the beginning of the oral evidence session, Mr Chairperson, you stated that the Committee was determined to get the legislation right. We share that objective, and the amendments will assist us in that regard.

To understand the proposed amendments fully, it will be important to read the clauses; identify the offending wording; examine the replacement wording, and try to read the whole thing afresh as an amended version. The process is rather tedious, but I hope that I can get through the proposals without being too legalistic. If the Committee requires more detail, I am happy to discuss individual amendments. The Chairperson mentioned the list of proposed amendments, which has been provided to members, and I propose to go through those individually.

The first amendment is to clause 6, which deals with compliance with a departmental taxi-sharing scheme. The clause contains a catch-all provision for the Department — under subsection (1)(c) — when making legislation, to create taxi-sharing schemes.

Clause 6(1)(c) states that the Department shall:

“include such provision, or provision of such description, as may be specified in the scheme for the purposes of this paragraph.”

That is a rather clumsy way of saying that the Department shall include such other provisions as it thinks fit. The amendment will make that clear: it will tighten up the initial draft.

Clause 6(3) states that:

“The Department may vary any scheme made by it under this section.”

That is the same as saying that the Department can change subordinate legislation, which goes without saying as the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 enables all Departments to change subordinate legislation. Sometimes, stating something in legislation that is unnecessary can lead to legal arguments that it must mean something different. In this case, it does not mean anything different from what is in the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954, therefore, the safest approach is to omit clause 6(3) altogether. That is what is being proposed.

The next amendment is to clause 10, which refers to functions in relation to operator’s licence authorising separate fares. This refers to taxi-operators who wish to provide a bus-type service. At present, they must obtain a Roads Service licence, which is basically a bus licence. They must also satisfy fairly rigorous criteria set out in the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967.

The Taxis Bill means that it will be no longer necessary for them to obtain such a licence; they will get all their licensing under the Taxis Bill. We have imported the same criteria from the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967 into the Bill. Our intention is that someone who holds a Roads Service licence will not need to meet all the criteria again — there is no point in making someone jump through the same hoops twice.

Inadvertently, we exempted them from only one criterion, which was the suitability of routes. This amendment will restore the policy intention that those drivers who want to operate a bus-type service are exempt from all of the various conditions in clause 10. We have also included additional power to enable the Department to make further exemptions in regulations if it is thought to be necessary.

The next amendment is to clause 27(3), which outlines the time during which a licence will be suspended or curtailed. The amendment simply removes the reference to “curtailment”. The reason for that is that clause 26(4) already covers curtailment. Therefore, the amendment is not only removing duplication, there was actually a contradiction between the two clauses. Clause 27(3), therefore, will be left as the clause that deals solely with suspension.

The next amendment is to clause 37, which refers to powers of entry. The legislation states that:

“an authorised officer or a constable may ... inspect those premises and other item”.

However, clause 37(8) states that the powers of seizure extend to:

“any equipment or other items”.

Equipment had not been mentioned when the powers of inspection were referred to. Therefore, the amendment will ensure consistency in that it will make it possible to also inspect equipment.

Clause 42 refers to dealing with taxi touts. It provides an exemption to the offence of touting if it is permitted in regulations made under clause 20(2)(c). Clause 20(2)(c) refers to regulations dealing with taxi marshals. Taxi marshals, by their nature, will be touting; they will be trying to get people into taxis in order to clear the streets. Therefore, it is right that they should be exempt.

We also felt that there may be other situations and regulations where someone could be exempt. For example, we provide regulation powers for advertising. Therefore, in clause 42(3) we want to leave out “20(2)(c)” and insert “20.” If something is legally permitted, it should not be an offence under taxi touting.

Mr T Clarke: Could I get an explanation of that amendment? Can it be explained from the start again?

Mr McMullan: The Bill makes it an offence for someone to be touting for a taxi.

Mr T Clarke: What do you mean when you refer to “touting”?

Mr McMullan: I mean someone shouting for business on the street — letting people know that a taxi is available. That is not permissible at the moment, and it is not permissible in the Taxis Bill. We are including an exemption in the clause for taxi marshals. In future years, if they are brought in, they will be regulated by the Department, and their role will be to get people into taxis.

Mr Weir: At present, are there any taxi marshals, or is that a role that will be introduced in the future if the legislation is adopted?

Mr McMullan: There are currently no taxi marshals. The proposal is to introduce them in the future.

Mr Weir: Does the law on touting also include taxi drivers? Presumably, they are not allowed to roll down their window and shout that their taxi is available. If they did, would they be guilty of an offence?

Mr McMullan: Yes, that is correct.

Mr T Clarke: There is a problem with the wording of the Bill. Surely, it should make it clear that marshals are allowed to solicit taxis. The Bill appears to state that taxi drivers can solicit business. Who is to deem whether a taxi driver is doing that correctly or incorrectly? The wording is a bit loose.

Mr McMullan: If a taxi driver were to do that, he would be committing an offence.

Mr T Clarke: That is not what the Bill says.

Mr McMullan: Clause 42(1) of the Taxis Bill states that:

“a person who solicits any person to be carried for hire or reward in a taxi is guilty of an offence.”

Mr T Clarke: Yes, but we are talking about clause 42?

Mrs Adele Watters (Department of the Environment): Yes. Clause 42, subsection 1.

Mr McMullan: The word “person” covers taxi drivers.

Mrs Watters: The Bill intends to recognise the fact that certain situations in which someone solicits persons to be carried for hire or reward would be permissible. Mr McMullan’s point is that, in focusing on ensuring that the Bill does not criminalise taxi marshals, we lost sight of our policy aim, which was to ensure that advertising on a taxi or an advertising hoarding were permitted. Potentially, advertising could be regarded as soliciting also.

The Chairperson: Clause 20(2)(c) states:

“enforcing order at and regulating the use of places referred to in paragraph (a)”.

What does it mean by “places”?

Mrs Watters: The word “places” means taxi ranks.

The Chairperson: The Committee has heard that there are not enough taxi ranks. When the Bill refers to “enforcing order”, it does not refer specifically to taxi marshals. Potentially, anyone could solicit a taxi and claim that they were enforcing order.

Mr McMullan: They could only claim that if the Department makes regulations to allow them to do so. The regulations will stipulate who will be legally entitled to enforce order.

The Chairperson: Those enforcers of order will regulate and tout legally. How will it be ensured that they are not touting on behalf of a company or a person?

Mr McMullan: The Department will regulate for that. It may be that departmental marshals are appointed and that they will be only people allowed to enforce order.

Mrs Watters: Alternatively, representatives from a local council might carry out that role. Their training, type of uniform and activities would be tightly regulated. Regulating the enforcement of order at ranks means that that activity can be controlled. Currently, people may try to enforce order by claiming to be a taxi marshals, although were they to do that, they would be at risk of breaking the law on touting.

The Chairperson: Will you explain what taxi marshals would do? I am intrigued by the notion of how their role would work in practice, particularly if the number of taxi ranks is limited. Would taxi marshals be designated to work from specific taxi ranks?

Mrs Watters: In many British cities, queues generally develop at taxi ranks around closing time, when the city is busy and people are leaving — it is a night-time phenomenon. Many of those people have taken alcohol, which can result in allegations of queue-jumping. Taxi marshals, who are appointed by the taxi-licensing authority, the local council, or a combination of both, are on the scene, wearing high-visibility gear. Part of their role will be to ensure that the queue is orderly and that people get taxis as quickly as they become available. That makes it possible to tackle issues such as a driver refusing to take someone to Bangor unless he is paid £40. The aim will be to match people with available taxis as efficiently as possible.

The Chairperson: If you wish to build some elbow room into the legislation in order to introduce marshals in the future, what provisions would give them the necessary authority, and what powers would you conceive of them having? In addition, for the issues you raised, such as overcharging, would it be necessary to introduce a two-tier approach requiring enforcement officials — albeit reduced by 20% — as well as marshals, and would that result in the replication of, or an overlap in, work?

Mrs Watters: We envisage distinct roles for both jobs. The marshal's role would be to keep order at the rank, match passengers to taxis and help to clear the town at night. Enforcement officers would enforce the regulations. To have enforcement officers marshalling at taxi ranks would not be a good use of that resource.

The Chairperson: I am intrigued. Perhaps you did not anticipate this question; however, if you build-in provisions for marshals and, in the future, they are dealing with issues such as keeping order or overcharging, which someone else is empowered to do, would there not be an overlap in duties, and what potential legal role — other than simply herding people into taxis in order to keep them moving — do you envisage for those marshals? Why should the concept of such a role be introduced at this stage if they would not be empowered to do anything?

A further element is that if marshals are employed by councils, as you said, some people might consider that to be an attempt by the Department to offload some of its responsibilities onto the local authorities — particularly in light of the oncoming review of public administration.

Mrs Watters: I do not envisage the marshals having any enforcement role. For potential issues, such as overcharging, the presence of marshals would be a deterrent. If a driver arrives at the rank and the next customer is waiting, the inference is that they will take that customer. The issue of refusing to take them unless they pay £40 will not arise. The idea is that the most a driver could charge would be the maximum fare. The marshal's role would be to act as a deterrent, rather than one of enforcement.

The Chairperson: But, if he cannot do anything about it —

Mr T Clarke: As soon as the industry gets to know that that marshal cannot do anything, he will be as useless as a sleeping policeman.

The Chairperson: They will just laugh at him.

Mrs Watters: The marshal may not be able to do anything at the time. However, information could be passed to the Department if specific companies refuse to carry customers because they are not prepared to pay more than the maximum fare or if a particular pattern of behaviour being is displayed at taxi ranks. There are ways to tackle such issues without giving enforcement powers to marshals.

Mr McMullan: We do not envisage marshals being enforcement officers. They would be used more in taxi-sharing schemes — to match people to taxis that are going to particular areas. They would not have a specific enforcement role. They would keep order at the ranks. They would not enforce licensing or taxi regulations.

Mr T Clarke: However, you are portraying the marshals as having an enforcement role by saying that they would be at taxi ranks to deter certain acts from taking place. If that is the case, then there must be a perception that they have power to act. Once the industry knows that marshals have no power to act, they will be useless. Either they are at taxi ranks to get people into taxis and clear the streets, or they are there with an enforcement role. It has to be clear. If they have such a role, it must be clearly defined.

Mrs Watters: Their role will be clearly defined in regulations.

Mr T Clarke: We started by talking about touting and what the marshals can and cannot do. I do not think that the proposed amendment makes that clear.

In other Committees, we are trying to make things easier for organisations. I must admit that I am at pains to understand this provision, and taxi drivers will have difficulty in understanding it too. There will be problems if this is left the way it is.

The case is clear-cut: either taxi drivers are permitted to tout for business or they are not. If they are allowed, that should be clearly defined. Perhaps marshals should be allowed to tout for business at a taxi rank, but not drivers.

The Chairperson: Clause 42(1) states that:

“a person who solicits any person to be carried for hire or reward in as taxi is guilty of an offence.”

The issue is: if that person is guilty of an offence and he is observed by a marshal, the marshal should be able to do something about it. That is the problem.

Mr T Clarke: However, the effect of the amendment is to make it clear that a person may be exempt from a taxi touting offence if it is permitted in regulations made under clause 20.

The Chairperson: That is under clause 20(2)(c):

“enforcing order at and regulating the use of places referred to in paragraph (a)”.

That is where the concept of the marshals comes from.

Peter, you have been trying to get in for a while.

Mr Weir: I will perhaps add to the confusion.

I agree with Trevor and with the Chairman. More confusion is being caused than clarity given. I do not know why this amendment has come from legislative counsel, saying that clause 42 should include all regulations made under the whole of clause 20 rather than those made under paragraph 20(2)(c).

A wide range of potential regulations could be made under subsection 20(2) as a whole or under clause 20 as a whole. Why does the Department want to address the issue of marshals in any provision other than paragraph 20(2)(c)? It strikes me that that paragraph is directly relevant; the others are not. I cannot envisage any set of circumstances in which the Department would want to make regulations for marshals in any other part of the Bill.

Mr McMullan: I agree. Marshals are covered under paragraph 20(2)(c). The other one we thought of was —

Mr Weir: If marshals are covered under paragraph 20(2)(c), then none of the other paragraphs in subsection 20(2) are relevant to marshals. Why change from a specific reference to paragraph 20(2)(c) to clause 20 as a whole?

Mr McMullan: The other one we thought might be caught was clause 20(2)(l), which relates to advertising. There could be an argument that someone advertising is actually soliciting for business.

Mrs Watters: Mr McMullan is suggesting that a more appropriate amendment, rather than reference to regulations in the whole of clause 20, should be to paragraphs 20(2)(c) and 20(2)(l).

Mr Weir: If it were paragraphs (c) and (l) there might be a little more logic to it. This might be pedantic of me, but I am not sure that regulations for advertising would be confused with touting for business. I do not think anyone would confuse the two: they are different. There remains, however, the separate point raised by the Chairman and Mr T Clarke, which is that people might find the wording that we now have confusing. It might create a situation where we have marshals who are virtually powerless.

Members must give a great deal of thought to that in order to ensure that we get it right. I did not see the point of opening the provision out from paragraph 20(2)(c) because that does not add anything.

Mr McMullan: It may be useful for members to ask questions as I go along, rather than leaving them all to the end.

Clause 53 is a technical savings provision for the existing taxi by-laws. The Taxis Bill will disapply the power under which a plethora of taxi by-laws were made. Therefore, the taxi by-laws must be underpinned by legislation to ensure that they will continue to be in force until such times as regulations replace them. Our amendment simply states that taxi by-laws will be treated as though they had been made under provisions in the Bill.

Mr Weir: May I have a point of clarification on taxi by-laws, because I do not know a great deal about them? Do those by-laws cover all of Northern Ireland or to specific areas?

Mr McMullan: Generally, they relate to taxi ranks, and they differ from one local council area to another.

Mr Weir: Therefore, the by-law for taxis in Fermanagh may differ, in part, from the one that applies in Magherafelt?

Mr McMullan: Yes.

Clause 55 is the interpretation clause to which we propose to add a definition of the word “notice” to clarify that we mean notice in writing. If a driver’s licence is to be revoked, suspended or curtailed, the Department must give “notice”. As the driver’s rights flow from that notice, it is an important legal document — from date of receipt, a driver has 21 days to appeal before the decision takes effect.

There is a small amendment to clause 57, which the commencement clause. It is normal drafting practice for commencement and interpretation provisions to come into effect immediately, or shortly after, a Bill receives Royal Assent. We missed that point when the Order was converted into a Bill for the Assembly. Therefore, as things stand, the clause is potentially embarrassing to the Department because without the power to make commencement orders, even if we get the legislation right, we may not be able to act. It is one of those critical amendments I mentioned earlier, and we definitely want it to be included.

Mr Weir: The proposed amendment will exempt four sections. Does the wording of the amendment have a bearing on when those four sections will come into effect?

Mr McMullan: Yes, the amendment means that those four sections will come into effect when the Bill is granted Royal Assent — and every other section will come into effect on such day, or days, as the Department may by order appoint.

Mr Weir: Presumably it is standard practice that if no provision is made for a section to come into effect on a named day, it comes into effect immediately?

Mr McMullan: Yes.

Schedule 2 to the Bill details minor and consequential amendments. Paragraph 2 refers to Article 66A(1) of the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1981, which relates to car-sharing arrangements. This amendment clarifies that the definition of the word “taxi” will be as defined in the Taxis Bill. When cross-referencing legislation, it is important to ensure that a wrong definition is not referenced: for example that the definition of taxi is not taken from the 1981 Order.

We are adding one more repeal in schedule 3 of the Bill. This is a provision from the Road Traffic (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, which deals with taxi licences. That provision is no longer needed, because the taxi licence will be covered in the Taxis Bill. It is a repeal that was not spotted first time round.

There is then a run of amendments relating to all references to offences in the body of the Bill. We have referred to the mode of trial and the penalty for each offence in the body of the Bill. However, the drafting convention for road traffic legislation is that the penalties are set out in schedule and should be put into a road traffic offenders Order. It is handy for practitioners to know that all the road traffic offences and penalties are listed in that Order. We have done both in the draft: we have set it out in schedule 1, and we have also set it out in the body of the Bill.

On several occasions, the Bill refers to a person who is:

“guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 3”, or whatever. However, it is unnecessary to state that wording in the body of the Bill when it is also at schedule 1. While the duplication is not wrong, the amendment will make the Bill consistent with all other road traffic legislation.

The final amendment is a consequential amendment to section 37A of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and relates to the carrying of assistance dogs in private-hire vehicles. The concept of private-hire vehicles is no longer in the Taxis Bill and, therefore, the terminology has to be changed to cover the new legislation that will be introduced.

The previous witness mentioned assistance dogs. The Department has already drafted regulations under section 37, and the SL1 will be coming to the Committee in the next couple of weeks, which will basically say that no one can charge to take an assistance dog in a private-hire taxi.

Mr T Clarke: Can drivers refuse to do that?

Mr McMullan: No.

Mr T Clarke: Do the regulations deal with refusing to carry an assistance dog as opposed to charging?

Mr McMullan: Yes. Drivers cannot refuse and they cannot charge extra. That is all part of the regulations.

That completes the proposed amendments. Most of them are fairly small, but they iron out some ambiguities and will help us in future.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Adele and John. If members do not want to add anything or seek clarity on any issue, we will move on to the enforcement issue that arose last week.

I thank Mr Stephen Spratt and Mr John Martin for attending. I understand that you work in the enforcement section of the Department — so that section will be 50% down today. I invite you both to say something about enforcement and how you are fixed at the moment. I presume that you have been briefed before coming today. Time and again, when the Committee has been taking oral evidence, enforcement has cropped up as a major recurring theme. Last week a witness said that the enforcement section was down another member — and it was a small team to begin with, which is another issue. The Committee would like to hear about your role, and members will raise concerns about current and future enforcement. Much of the Taxis Bill rides on having proper and adequate enforcement and dedicated resources. Do you have any sequence for speaking?

Mr John Martin (Department of the Environment): We will give the Committee a 10- to 15-minute talk on the background of enforcement and what we are doing. We will then take the Committee through the Bill and how we see enforcement being taken forward. We will present four key topics and then answer any questions that members might have. The issue of having four members of staff will be covered in the presentation.

The Chairperson: OK. Please go ahead.

Mr Martin: First, I would like to thank the Chairperson and the Committee for giving us the opportunity to give an insight into enforcement and to show what we have been doing to date and what we will be doing after the Taxi Bill becomes law.

The first key subject is the utilisation of additional resources made available to DVTA enforcement in 2003. Members who were in the Assembly then may recall that the taxi-licensing fee increased by £20 to provide additional funding.

Prior to 2003, taxi enforcement was undertaken by the DVTA on an ad hoc basis, and it was given a relatively low priority in comparison to goods vehicle or bus enforcement. Concerns about the lack of enforcement were elevated to a political level by the industry, which set out that DVLA did not have effective strategies to deal with the unlicensed sector, estimated to be around 40% in 2003.

The industry also felt that enforcement was too focused on volumetric targets, which involved the systematic checking of licensed taxis, while illegal taxis drove past because they had no signs on them. To improve the situation at that time, additional funding was made available to DVTA through an increase of £20 on the cost of the taxi-licensing fee and an overall increase in the budget was provided by the core Department. As a result of the additional revenue, DVTA established a dedicated taxi enforcement team in 2003. One of its main focuses was to deal with the unlicensed sector of the industry.

The team, which consisted of four full-time dedicated officers, was based in Belfast. However, it had another 21 enforcement officers to call upon. Those 21 officers dealt mainly with goods vehicle and bus enforcement. However, the team was able to call upon them to undertake larger-scale operations around the Province.

I will provide details of the number of taxis that have been licensed over the last four years and the income generated from that, because some concerns were raised about the amount of revenue being generated from the extra £20 and the use to which it was being put.

I will give a couple of examples: in 2003-04, 7,167 taxis were tested. The actual income from that equated to £143,000, while the Department spent £267,000 on taxi enforcement. In the financial year 2006-07, 10,334 taxis were tested and the income from that — which included the £20 extra on the licensing fee — was £206,680, and the Department spent £294,000 on taxi enforcement.

Over the past four years, 35,475 taxis have been tested, generating a total income of £709,000, and the total expenditure on taxi enforcement has been more than £1 million. More has been spent on taxi enforcement than has been received in revenue from the extra £20 taxi-licensing fee.

The Chairperson: Will you be expanding on those figures, because a substantial amount of money has been spent on enforcement? The Committee would be anxious to hear how that money is being spent. If four members of staff are engaged in enforcement, is the rest of the money being spent on administrative costs or elsewhere?

Mr Martin: Spending involves a combination of the salaries for the full-time enforcement officers; the cost of administrative support; the cost of processing prosecutions, and the costs of travel, subsistence, overtime, equipment, vehicles and some management charges that are built in.

The Chairperson: How many members of staff is that for in total?

Mr Martin: In 2003, there were four permanent members of staff who dealt with enforcement for the taxi industry.

The Chairperson: That amounts to £250,000 apiece.

Mr Martin: When one considers the four members of staff and all of the ancillary activities; such as processing prosecution cases, administrative support and accommodation costs —

The Chairperson: Do other staff process prosecutions?

Mr Martin: An enforcement officer's role is to investigate levels of non-compliance and complaints. He will make detections at the roadside and gather sufficient evidence. If there is sufficient evidence to warrant prosecution, the officer will generate the initial file. The file must go through an administrative process and is then passed to the Public Prosecution Service (PPS). When the enforcement officer completes the initial file, it goes through an administrative process and a management process in order to ensure that when it reaches the PPS —

The Chairperson: Is that a departmental process, rather than that of the specific section? In other words, is all the money that is spent classed as central departmental expenditure, which is not specific to the branch that deals with enforcement of taxi regulations?

Mr Martin: The money has always been spent by the enforcement branch of the Department, which completes the entire process.

The Chairperson: How many staff would be involved from the initiation of the process; for example, from when an enforcement officer stops a driver because there is a problem? How many enforcement branch staff would be involved in the process to deal with the matter before it is passed on elsewhere? How many staff would be employed by the branch?

Mr Martin: The total staff complement for enforcement is 32.

The Chairperson: Does that include administrative staff and officers on the ground?

Mr Martin: That includes administrative staff, officers on the ground, the management structure, policy staff, and so on, to cover the enforcement section's full remit. The section is not solely staffed by the officers who stop vehicles at the roadside. There is a support structure of administrative staff, management staff, staff who develop policies for stopping vehicles and for dealing with investigations. A large amount of money is associated with non-productive activities.

There are four full-time members of staff. However, staff are regularly brought in from other teams to supplement the four full-time staff during, for example, large-scale operations in Belfast, Derry or Newry, or perhaps during covert operations that require more than four staff. Therefore, there might be eight staff during such operations, four of whom were from the taxi team and the other four from the goods teams. That is the cost for all staff, taking into consideration all of their salaries, when they have been involved with taxi enforcement. It is not just the salaries of the four full-time staff, but also includes costs for the time spent by additional staff on taxi enforcement.

In 2003, the DVTa realised that the previous approach to enforcement did not deal with what was required. Officers were carrying out high visibility checks while wearing yellow coats. The legal taxi industry — those drivers who had signs, licences, and so on — had nothing to fear. However, they got caught up in the checks, while the illegal drivers, who did not have signs, were harder to identify and simply drove past.

Therefore, in order to utilise the new taxi enforcement team effectively, it was necessary to move the focus from working in a high-profile capacity to working in a more covert, investigative unit. That proved to be an effective approach towards securing reliable, first-hand prosecution evidence. Previously, passengers were reluctant to provide statements of evidence or to attend court as witnesses.

The team also adopted a more proactive and reactive management approach in response to complaints and intelligence, using the national intelligence model to grade and prioritise high-level work priorities. An example of high-priority work in 2003 was to target illegal taxi drivers, disqualified drivers, and drivers who operated poorly-maintained vehicles.

The enforcement office received a number of complaints that enabled us to target particular taxi depots that were reportedly operating illegal taxis. Since April 2003, the DVTA, working in partnership with the PSNI, has carried out 641 taxi operations and checked around 13,000 taxis. That has resulted in 291 commercial taxi radio sets being seized by the police, under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, on behalf of enforcement officers. Upwards of £150,000 in fines has been generated; 1,650 penalty points have been awarded to taxi drivers; and 80 drivers have received a driving ban in that period. In total, there were 824 prosecutions for taxi drivers who had no public-service licence, 513 prosecutions for those who had no driving licence, eight prosecutions for those driving while totally disqualified and 742 prosecutions for those who had no insurance. That gives the Committee an indication as to what the enforcement office's activities have been since 2003.

In addition, we see education and communication as key in addressing the problems that exist. Best practice has traditionally been developed through experience coupled with a combination of internal and external training. The DVTA has made a significant investment in training taxi-enforcement officers; all officers are required to obtain the Advanced Professional Certificate in Investigative Practice, which is equal to NVQ level 5. That is a high standard, which all our taxi-enforcement officers have attained.

Introducing effective systems of educating drivers and operators was also made a high priority, which resulted in the introduction of advice being routinely given during roadside spot checks. Frequent meetings have been hosted with the industry at all levels so that people are aware of their legal requirements. The DVTA also committed resources to promotional events, which aimed to raise awareness of taxi compliance in the greater public arena. Examples of those include the 2005 Motorplus show and the 2006 DVA Roadworthiness Open Day, in which the taxi industry participated.

It must be remembered that the police can enforce all taxi regulations as part of their normal activities. The enforcement office has also undertaken a number of training sessions with the PSNI to train existing officers and new recruits on taxi regulations.

We are also focusing on forging a strong alliance with the taxi industry; to that end our enforcement officers have established a professional relationship at all levels with industry representatives.

I am aware that taxi-industry representatives have submitted oral evidence to the Committee, which included the claim that the DVA intend to reduce the number of dedicated enforcement officers from five to four — something that the Chairperson mentioned earlier. The DVA recently completed an evaluation of its high-level business priorities in the enforcement section. That exercise identified strong business grounds for a temporary restructuring of the section. That was done by reducing the number of enforcement teams dedicated to goods-vehicle enforcement from two small teams to one large team based in Craigavon. The evaluation also supported increasing the number of enforcement officers presently attached to the taxi-enforcement team; so as opposed to its members going down to four it has now gone up to over five.

The Chairperson: How much over five?

Mr Martin: Five plus an allocation of 0.3; one person, who manages the team, has a third of his time dedicated to being an enforcement officer.

The Chairperson: But he is a manager, not an enforcement officer. Is he doing that for one third of his time?

Mr Martin: That is correct. So the complement has not gone down to four; it has gone up slightly.

The Chairperson: The complement is the same as it was before.

Mr Martin: Not exactly; the team used to have four members.

The Chairperson: It had four members, but before that the team had five members. That is what the Committee is discussing.

Mr Martin: In 2003 there were four members. Between 2003 and 2007 the number of members rose to five, which is the level it is staying at. We are also allocating an additional resource of management.

The Chairperson: To be fair, the Committee is discussing the situation in the last year, not about what it was four or five years ago.

Mr Martin: It is currently sitting at five plus, with a management resource of one third.

Mr T Clarke: Can we get into this matter before we hear the rest of the presentation? I am grey, and I am going to be completely bald before this is over? I am totally frustrated. The Committee has had various presentations from the taxi industry that have reported consistently that there are not enough enforcement officers. With no disrespect to the two gentlemen here, because they are only the messengers, they are going to be shot today, because they are telling us what a wonderful job they are doing, and yet we have had the whole taxi industry saying what a poor job is being done by the enforcement section. Can we look at that matter, Mr Chairman?

The Chairperson: Yes. Please complete the presentation, Mr Martin, and we will come back to that point.

Mr T Clarke: Do you have any tablets, Mr Chairman?

Mr Martin: One of the key weaknesses within the existing taxi legislative framework is that anyone wishing to operate a taxi depot can do so provided they obtain adequate planning permission and a commercial taxi radio licence so that they cannot operate out of just any depot. Officers have encountered illegal taxis operating and controlled from an array of premises that range from Portakabins to private dwellings in residential housing developments. Those businesses operate free from regulatory control and often from premises that do not meet suitable accessibility standards.

The big weakness with the existing system is that there is no regulatory provision to make taxi depots accountable for the types of taxis that carry passengers on their behalf, or keep records of customer bookings, etc.

Enforcement officers are currently powerless to stop repeat offenders. We stop taxi drivers on a regular basis who have flouted the regulations on two or three occasions, and continue to do so. We cannot physically put them off the road. All we can do is gather sufficient evidence and process the cases through to prosecution stage. That is another serious weakness.

We do not have any jurisdiction over taxis that are sitting in the Harbour Estate, for instance, where they service a lot of the cruise liners, or at the Odyssey complex, which is part of the Belfast Harbour Commissioner's land. We have no authority to deal with taxis operating illegally at those venues. There are also not enough taxis to deal with public demand on Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights between the hours of 8.00 pm to 4.00 am, and that entices people to operate illegally.

Enforcement officers also do not have the authority to issue fixed-penalty notices. Currently, if we detect an offence at the roadside we have to go through the court process, which is long, costly, laborious and time-consuming. We are in the process of looking at introducing a fixed-penalty system.

The enforcement office's strategy in combating future illegal activities includes proposals to recruit additional staff to enable us to deal with the issues in the taxi industry. We have had only between four and five members of staff over the last few years, and that is not sufficient to deal with the problems. Our staff have been successful, but there are nowhere near enough of them, and that is recognised and appreciated. We intend to establish a more regionalised approach to deal with the problems, with teams in Belfast, the north-west and the west of the Province.

As I have already said, we hope to adopt a fixed-penalty and deposit-scheme approach, which will allow us to deal with offences more efficiently and effectively, as opposed to all our cases going through the courts, which takes a lot of time and money.

We also intend to introduce live access to data at the roadside through the use of laptop computers, and will be investing in new equipment and technology. We have purchased two high-visibility liveried vehicles, which have proven to be quite effective at the roadside, in highlighting to the industry that enforcement officers are trying to deal with the problems. We have also recently purchased two automatic number-plate recognition cameras that will enable us to target the unlicensed sector of the industry.

As I have said, we are hoping to recruit 15 to 18 members of staff.

We are currently working with the Department to determine how those staff will be funded to enable us to deal more effectively with the issues in the industry. One of the main reasons for having the Taxis Bill in the first place is to strengthen the regulatory framework for taxis and enforcement. If regulations and powers were in place to enable us to deal with the problems in the industry, and if we had the necessary staff, we would not need the Taxis Bill. That is one of the main reasons why we are here.

The Chairperson: I would like some clarity on recruitment. You said at one point that you were hoping to recruit, and then, on another occasion, you said that you were proposing to recruit. At what stage is the recruitment process, and what type of staff would be recruited?

Mr Martin: The current position is that we have assessed the provisions in the Bill. We are fully aware of the difficulties in the industry with unlicensed and defective vehicles. We have worked up figures in relation to the number of staff that we perceive that we need to deal with those issues and to enforce the new licensing regime effectively. We have identified the number of staff that we need and that that they will work on a regionalised basis, and we are in the process of considering how the salaries for those staff will be funded.

The Chairperson: At this stage, no recruitment process has been started, then.

Mr Martin: No recruitment process has started because the Bill has not come into effect yet. We are simply carrying out the initial development work.

The Chairperson: So your recruitment is based solely on the Bill?

Mr Martin: Yes.

The Chairperson: So, at the moment, you do not identify any weaknesses or shortcomings in enforcement?

Mr Martin: No, that is not what I am saying. My point is that the current regulatory framework is deficient. We recognise that to bring this matter forward, we need additional powers. That is one of the main reasons for the Taxis Bill. We need additional staff to ensure that when the enhanced licensing regime is introduced, it can be effectively regulated. At the moment, we do not have sufficient funds to recruit additional staff. We will make representations to the Department that we need x amount of money to effectively regulate the provisions of the Bill.

The Chairperson: Let me just get this clear; at this stage, you are working up a case, but you have not yet made that case to the Department?

Mr Martin: It is at an advanced stage. I cannot say what stage it is at exactly, but it is a very advanced stage. We are hoping for a positive response from the Department on funding.

The Chairperson: With the greatest of respect, you cannot get a positive response from the Department if you have not submitted a proposal.

Mr Martin: It has been submitted.

The Chairperson: It has? Sorry, but I thought you said that the case was at an advanced stage.

Mr Martin: Yes, but it is not finalised.

The Chairperson: Sorry, but what part is not finalised?

Mr Martin: The actual approval.

The Chairperson: Do you mean the approval from the Department?

Mr Martin: Yes.

The Chairperson: So, you have submitted a bid to the Department for extra funding, and the Department has not responded yet.

Mr Martin: Final approval has not been given.

The Chairperson: OK, that is a bit clearer.

Mr Boylan: I was just trying to make some sense of the whole issue, to be honest.

Mr Martin, you gave figures over a four-year period, and you mentioned the cost of enforcement and the money generated by enforcement. You also said that 500 people were caught taxiing without a licence. Could you go through those figures again, please? Can you tell me how much, on average, has been generated through enforcement, and whether that money has been put back into enforcement?

Mr Martin: We have carried out 641 taxi operations since April 2003. We have also checked 12,926 taxis. During that period, 291 commercial radio sets — the radio sets that they use to communicate — have been seized from taxi operators. Some 997 drivers have been reported for prosecution.

During that time, fines totalling £147,000.97 were imposed. Payment of fines does not go into enforcement but into the consolidated fund. The courts awarded 1,654 penalty points for various offences. Immediate driving bans were given to 80 drivers, either as a result of an offence or because they already had sufficient penalty points on their licence to lead to a licence suspension.

Of the 997 drivers who were prosecuted, the range of offences was as follows: 824 did not have a public service vehicle licence, which is the licence for the taxi; 513 did not have a taxi driver's licence; eight did not have a driving licence as they had been disqualified from driving, and were prosecuted again for not having a licence, and 742 had no insurance.

Mr Stephen Spratt (Department of the Environment): The figure of 742 uninsured drivers is a good benchmark, as they did not have a PSV licence either. Therefore, 742 drivers were working as taxi drivers in private saloon cars and carrying out a stealth activity in the black economy, which the normal eye could not detect.

That re-emphasises the amount of resources that it took to enable officers to collect satisfactory evidence for the higher reward test. We are highly visible when we stop a vehicle; normally, the driver will say that the passengers are his friends, and the passengers will say that the driver is giving them a lift. In cases where passengers have disclosed that the vehicle is a taxi, and have asked us to get them another taxi, they were not prepared to take the case to the next stage and go to court. In order to thwart that, our staff must operate in a stealth capacity so that they can gather evidence first-hand. Using legislation such as the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 and putting undercover operatives on the ground is expensive and convoluted, and has resulted in this process.

Pre-2003, we made detections that resulted mainly in apparent offences. We had enough evidence to strongly suggest that the offenders were operating illegally, but such cases did not go to court because they did not pass the evidential test. We are seeking to impress upon the Committee that the 742 drivers who have been picked up operating without insurance also did not have a PSV licence, and that the vast majority of them did not have a taxi driver's licence. However, because that licence is so easy to obtain they could get it in any case. Some of them do not want a licence because that may compromise them by alerting the authorities to the fact that they work elsewhere. There are various reasons why some have driving licences and some do not.

The Chairperson: How many of those 742 drivers were exclusively picked up by the police, with no involvement from your organisation?

Mr S Spratt: None: those figures represent our staffing resources.

The Chairperson: Therefore, there is a bigger problem potentially, and other offenders could have been picked up by the police.

Mr S Spratt: The figures do not reflect detections by the police. From the perspective of our operational protocol the role of the police is to provide operational support. When we put operatives on the ground to travel in taxis, the police are there to uphold the law and to provide operational support. In certain areas, detecting bandit operators involves going through a plethora of proper planning and preparation before the operation take place.

As John has highlighted, we also have to draw in resources from other sections and utilise 21 other members of staff: in certain operations there may be four staff on the ground and an additional eight in the background who carry out pre-surveillance work, provide surveillance, and give support by speaking to passengers after the event. There is a lot of work involved to support the four staff on the ground. The back-end is much bigger than the just the four staff who are upfront.

Mr Martin: To give the Committee an insight into some operational tactics; prior to 2003 staff used high-visibility jackets. They stood on the roadside and, essentially, only checked vehicles that looked like taxis.

It is a more resource-intensive activity now. We are in plain clothes; we are phoning depots and posing as passengers, and taking rides in taxis because that is the only way that we can obtain evidence that people are operating illegal taxis.

Whereas, if we are wearing high-visibility jackets and speak to a driver, he might say that the vehicle is not a taxi. We might speak to the passengers, who will say that the driver is just a mate. However, because there are about 15 complaints in the system, we know that the driver is providing a taxi service but we cannot get the evidence to take a case to court. It is a resource-intensive activity.

Mr Boylan: I wondered where the money to finance that operation was coming from. You mentioned a strategy. Are you thinking about including the taxi marshals in the enforcement system? Taxi marshals were mentioned earlier, but who is going to stop a person touting for one firm or another? Would it not be better to give the marshals enforcement powers, rather than having to employ enforcement officers to go and stand up to those people. At the minute, you cannot operate from the Harbour Estate and at the Odyssey.

Mr Martin: Hopefully, the Taxi Bill will change all that.

Mr S Spratt: I would like to comment on the role of the marshal, having given serious consideration to the work that our staff do. For example, if one person is sent out to marshal a taxi rank and carry out enforcement activities in the city centre at 11.00 pm, midnight or 1.00 am — when there might be many intoxicated people and serious potential for public order offences to be committed — health and safety considerations will limit what he or she can do.

I see the marshal's role as being partly to interface with the customer; he will exist predominately to bring order to the taxi ranks. He can also provide an interface between drivers and the Department. We can build into our strategy a reactive strand whereby, following consultation with marshals and drivers on local issues that build up at ranks, we can enforce those issues.

If the marshals were to take up enforcement responsibilities — given the splits and different views and factions in the industry at the moment — it would quickly become difficult for them to carry out that role on health and safety grounds alone. They would probably require permanent police support eventually.

Mr Weir: Before I move onto the crux of the matter, which is the potential recruitment of new staff, I want to clarify a point that confused me slightly during the evidence. In answer to a previous question, you mentioned that you had more success when you switched from a high-visibility approach to a more subtle approach. When enforcement officers wore the high-visibility jackets they had limited success, whereas officers in plain clothes were more successful. It strikes me that, when tackling crime, you can go down one of two routes. For example, if there is antisocial behaviour in an area, sometimes the high visibility of police can act as a deterrent or shift people on. However, it strikes me that the most productive route in your case is that of plain-clothes, undercover enforcement.

What surprised me was that you mentioned that you intended to get two high-visibility vehicles. I would have thought that, rather than leading to more prosecutions, that would be counterproductive. If I were an uninsured or unlicensed taxi driver, and I were to spot a high-visibility vehicle and enforcement officers, I would get offside very quickly.

Mr T Clarke: You would probably tell others too.

Mr Weir: Yes. What was the thinking behind that intention?

Mr Martin: We can use an array of possible tactics when we are planning operations. For example, if we are going into Belfast to detect unlicensed taxis, we might deploy a covert approach and phone an operator or try to pick up a taxi on the street. The benefit of using the high-visibility vehicles is that, just as you and your colleague said, we can go into an area two or three times a week, and unlicensed or uninsured drivers, or those with defective vehicles, will see the vehicle, and they might go home. If they see the vehicle regularly, it may deter them from operating illegally. We would use a combination of the two approaches.

Mr Weir: When the police have been highly visible in a specific area to try to — for want of a better term — scare off crowds of young people, it can work for that specific area. However, the crowd congregates elsewhere. The danger is that those high visibility vehicles will simply shift the problem elsewhere. For example, if there is a problem outside Antrim railway station, would that problem not simply be shifted elsewhere?

Mr Martin: We are not saying that the high visibility vehicles are a sole approach; they are used in conjunction with other approaches.

Mr Weir: Problems have been raised about enforcement. To be fair, several witnesses made complimentary remarks regarding the work that the enforcement officers were doing. However, owing to a lack of resources, they are unable to stem the flow.

What is the scale of the bid for the 15 to 18 members of staff? Is it simply going to involve the relocation of existing resources in the Department, or is a bid going to the Department of Finance and Personnel? Having been involved with another organisation, my experience has been that when one Department eventually gives a green light for a bid, a business case then also has to be approved by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

How many of the 15 to 18 members of staff would actually be enforcement officers out on the ground? You have been getting favourable responses from the Department, but, as yet, you have not got approval. If you get approval, what would be the likely timescale for the new members of staff to become operational?

Mr Martin: Those staff will be on the front line dealing with the issues at the roadside. We are not ashamed to say that we have done a reasonably good job. However, it has to be taken into consideration that we have had extremely limited resources, and have been working with legislation that was inadequate. However, a number of staff will be working on the front line.

We are hoping to appoint staff and to have them ready for duties prior to the implementation of the Bill. In other words, when the Bill becomes law, the staff will be trained and ready to roll.

Mr Weir: When do you think that that will happen?

Mr Martin: That depends on the progress of the Bill. We think that it may be late 2008 or early 2009. We are hoping appoint the staff in middle or latter half of 2008.

Mr Weir: What is the overall value of the bid? What is the amount in the business case that you have submitted?

Mr Martin: The business case not only reflects additional resources for taxi enforcement; it also reflects additional resources for other enforcement vehicles that we have to increase our activities on. It is in the region of 15 to 18 members of staff.

Mr Weir: Will you tell the Committee what the monetary resource is?

The Chairperson: It may be useful if the witnesses provided the figures to the Committee in writing.

Mr Weir: I do not want to get approximate figures. Will you provide those figures in writing? The figure of £1.5 million was mentioned. I presume that that will be being requested from the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Mr T Clarke: Can I get clarification; are you both enforcement officers?

Mr Martin: Yes, we are enforcement officers and managers. We have come through the enforcement field as operatives, and we are now managers in the enforcement regime.

Mr T Clarke: Therefore, are you no longer enforcement officers?

Mr Martin: We still undertake enforcement activities.

Mr T Clarke: I am getting confused again. Are you still one of the four enforcement officers?

Mr Martin: Stevie is the one third — he is the senior manager in charge of the enforcement section.

The Chairperson: Were you in the enforcement section before?

Mr S Spratt: Yes, I was an enforcement operative a few years ago.

The Chairperson: Have you been there all along?

Mr S Spratt: I still invest my time going out with the staff on occasions.

The Chairperson: Have you consistently been in enforcement?

Mr S Spratt: Yes.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for giving us your time. We look forward to getting further detail from you.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

18 October 2007

HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE BILL (NIA 2/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mrs Iris Robinson (Chairperson)
Mr Thomas Buchanan
Dr Kieran Deeny
Mr Alex Easton
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mrs Carmel Hanna
Mr John McCallister
Ms Carál Ní Chuilín
Ms Sue Ramsey

Witnesses:

Mrs Joyce Cairns	} Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety
Dr Norman Morrow

The Chairperson (Mrs I Robinson): I welcome the departmental officials, who are here to brief members on the forthcoming Health and Social Care Bill. The officials will brief the Committee, and then members may ask questions if they wish.

Ms Joyce Cairns (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): We are here to bring before the Committee a proposal to include certain devolved matters in a Westminster Bill. The provisions of the Bill that involve devolved matters are the abolition of the National Biological Standards Board, the regulation of the healthcare professions, and the creation of a new health and adult social care regulator — OFCARE — which will be for England only. We should also mention a proposal for a health and pregnancy grant, which will be a matter for DSD. We mention that because the Bill straddles the roles of a couple of Departments, and that must be mentioned in respect of any composite Bill that will go forward.

Two substantial reviews, one of medical regulation, and one of non-medical regulation, have taken place.

Recommendations were drawn from those reviews, and they appeared in a White Paper, which was published in February 2007. Regulation of all the healthcare professions, except pharmacy, is currently carried out on UK-wide basis. Pharmacy is the only healthcare profession that is currently regulated on a Northern Ireland basis. The Bill is intended to allow harmonisation.

Northern Ireland must be included in the legislative base to enable detailed provisions to be taken forward at a later stage. The legislative provisions relate to enabling powers. The detail of what will be put in place to take forward the recommendations of the White Paper will be worked up by groups that the Department of Health in England is establishing. Those working groups will include representation from all of the devolved Administrations. There will be a few years of work in all of that, and no detailed measures are contained in the Bill — those are at a higher level. The Bill is enabling legislation; subordinate legislation would be taken forward at a later stage, when it is decided what particular measures will be put in place in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr Gallagher: I presume that this is enabling legislation and that any further changes to it will be made after consultation with the Committee.

Ms Cairns: Yes, the matter would be brought to the Committee again at a later stage.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Is the legislation already in place in England?

Ms Cairns: It is planned that the Bill will go forward in early to mid November, so it is currently a draft Bill. The abolition of the National Biological Standards Board and the other measures are included in the draft Bill, but it is not yet finalised.

The Chairperson: The briefing paper on the Health and Social Care Bill states that the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland has been informed that the Minister is strongly minded to adopt the approach of the establishment of a general pharmaceutical council, covering the profession throughout the UK. Does that mean that that measure will be implemented?

Dr Norman Morrow (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The Minister has since had a discussion with the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland, which involved a presentation that it made to the Committee. He has indicated that he is minded in favour of a UK regulatory arrangement, which would bring all of the health professions into harmony because pharmacy is the only health profession that sits outside of such an arrangement. However, he has indicated clearly to the society that he has not yet made a final decision. He also said that it is his intention to seek the enabling legislation, but that is without prejudice to a final decision. The Department has since had some correspondence from the society that states that it understands the need for regulatory provision, but has emphasised the point that that is without prejudice to the Minister's decision. It is enabling legislation.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I assume that this process is similar to the one that would apply to any other Bill. We are bringing together the enabling legislation in order to allow for a decision one way or the other.

Dr N Morrow: Yes. If we do not have the enabling legislation, a decision cannot be taken, unless, at a later date, legislative assent is required from the Assembly in order to introduce the elements that affect Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: If members have no further questions, I thank Dr Norman Morrow and Joyce Cairns for their time in what was a relatively short and simple exercise.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE ARTS AND LEISURE

Thursday 18 October 2007

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr David McNarry (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley
Mr Francie Brolly
Lord Browne
Mr Kieran McCarthy
Mr Nelson McCausland
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Pat Ramsey
Mr Ken Robinson
Mr Jim Shannon

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): The meeting is open to the public.

The earlier starting time was agreed because the Committee needed time to prepare before taking the Minister's evidence on the Libraries Bill. The Minister, Edwin Poots, is due around 10.45 am. Hansard will be in attendance at that session and this one. We need to discuss a number of issues and to agree our position and the line of questioning that we wish to pursue with the Minister.

The first issue is start-up costs. Many of the witnesses were concerned that the start-up costs specified in the explanatory and financial memorandum are inadequate. The figure has been put at £670,000. In a consistent line of questioning, led sometimes by the Deputy Chairman, we have asked about start-up costs.

The Committee wrote to the five education and library boards and the two unions asking them to estimate those costs. Responses have been received from three of the boards and from UNISON. UNISON states that it is not in a position to estimate costs. The Western and South Eastern Education and Library Boards have provided a breakdown of the areas that need to be costed; however, without knowing the staffing structure of the library authority and other matters, they say that they cannot provide estimated figures. The Western Education and Library Board indicated that the cost of releasing one chief librarian under the 104-week scheme would be at least £120,000. The North Eastern Education and Library Board has provided costings under separate headings — its estimated total for start-up costs is £1.5 million. That is more than double the amount that the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has set aside. The Southern Education and Library Board had no comments, but said that it agreed with those made by the western board. The boards all referred to the Deloitte report, which indicates start-up costs of £965,000 in respect of support services; these also need to be taken into account as part of the overall start-up bill.

Other evidence that the Department may have underestimated start-up costs comes from the bids made in the October monitoring round. The Department submitted a bid for £550,000 to cover corporate services. The Committee wrote to the Department on 1 October 2007 pointing that out and asking whether it acknowledged that its original estimate was inadequate and whether it intended to alter the explanatory and financial memorandum accordingly.

We also asked whether the Department has made any provision for start-up costs beyond 2007-08. The response, dated 16 October, advises that anticipated expenditure on start-up costs — comprising salaries for the chief executive designate and her team, temporary premises and consultancy — amount to £350,000 up to the end of March 2008. There is a lot of detail about what we have discussed so far.

The Department also advises that:

“Ahead of a firm decision on the operational date for the Library Authority, we cannot be sure whether £670k is an under- or over-estimate; it will depend on the length of the start-up period and hence the length of time salaries and rent need to be paid. The proportion of these costs which fall in 2008-09 will be considered within the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) allocations.”

The Department was asked to say whether it would consider amending the explanatory and financial memorandum in the light of the issue around start-up costs. It has not answered that question. It refers to paragraph 14 of the explanatory and financial memorandum, in which it is noted that the Department:

“was undertaking an exercise to establish the options for future provision of corporate services to the Library Authority and the associated costs, both running costs and start-up costs. Figures for these start-up costs were not specified in the EFM because it was not possible to make an estimate until this exercise had been completed.”

The Department advises us that:

“The October monitoring bid for £550,000 for corporate services is to enable us to move ahead on establishing corporate services in this financial year if required. Start-up costs for corporate service provision which fall in 2008-09 will be considered within the CSR.

You also raise two other possible areas of start-up funding: for establishing the identity of the Library Authority, and for a redundancy scheme. An exercise to develop certain identity measures for the Library Authority is being considered at present. The case for redundancies will be considered in the light of the organisational structure which the Chief Executive (designate) is working on with senior library staff. This consideration will include the extent to which a redundancy scheme offers value for money.”

The key question this morning — and I do not think that I will get a “yes” to it — is: are members content with the Department’s response? Members will have the opportunity to discuss these issues with Minister Edwin Poots this morning. Does anyone want to make an initial comment?

Mr McNarry: From where I am sitting, the answer to your question is no. How deliberate or penetrable can we be with the Minister on this? We have asked the question — we know the answer. How big a point are we allowed to make? What the Department is telling us is a joke. It says that £350,000 has been set aside for something that is not in place yet, allowing this chief executive designate to recruit, to secure temporary premises and so on. Are we to believe that that is what start-up costs are about? Then it goes on to say that it does not know what the start-up costs will be. How clear do we have to be, as a Committee, in bringing our views to our colleagues in the Assembly on this matter?

Mr P Ramsey: I will do my utmost to be brief in questioning the Minister. However, there are a series of questions about consistency that I have asked the boards and that I propose to put to the Minister as well, particularly in relation to the provision of services and a range of other areas, such as literacy, the early-years programme and support services.

Mr McCausland: I wanted to ask a question about provision for the idea of a national library or reference library. In addition, are we convinced that a single library authority, as currently envisaged, is the best model and that it provides local input? We touched on that in our discussions on subregional structure, but perhaps we are not pushing it hard enough. We need answers because it is a process that we were not involved in.

Mr P Ramsey: Those are good questions.

The Chairperson: There is a series of other issues —

Mr McNarry: If I am reading the material correctly, the draft Budget will be launched in the Assembly on 25 October. Hip hip hooray. Where do we sit on that, Chairman? As a Committee, what is our position regarding that Budget? I am not deeply appreciative of the UNISON letter, but it is to the point in that it says that the union does not have the information to be able to provide the Committee with estimated start-up costs. That sums up my view; I do not have the information to be able to tell myself.

However, the draft Budget will be published soon. What is the Committee’s job regarding that? Do we point out to the Department that as a result of the draft Budget, the departmental budget regarding start-up costs is up the shute?

Mr P Maskey: The Committee will not get the chance to address those issues until 15 November 2007. The Minister said in his letter that he is happy to come back and discuss the detail of the draft budget proposals for DCAL on 15 November. It will already have gone through at that time. Therefore, by 15 November, it will be a bit late.

The Chairperson: Let us focus on the questions that we are going to ask the Minister regarding the Libraries Bill. David, I presume that you are going to go strong on the start-up costs?

Mr McNarry: With the indulgence and help of the other members, I certainly want to take up the issue of start-up costs. I also want the legalities of this issue to be examined. Following the episode in the House on 16 October 2007 regarding legal issues, I want to be absolutely clear what the Committee’s position is.

Mr McCausland: Regarding the start-up costs, the letter from the Minister states: “The anticipated expenditure on this group of start-up costs up to the end of March 2007 is £350,000.”

Therefore, what the Minister is saying is that it depends on how fast people move. The assumption was that there was a start-up date of next year. The figure has now to be amended because the library authority has asked for extra money. Whether that extra money is actually needed depends on how quickly the authority can get up and running. How did the Department manage to get it so badly wrong?

The Chairperson: That is a good question. It does seem badly wrong.

Mr McCausland: Yes. I was watching the Committees at Westminster the other night on television. We are quite gentle; they are savage people.

The Chairperson: There are honourable exceptions. Some people are tough enough here as well.

Mr McNarry: We should pretend that they are the Northern Rock boys sitting facing us. That is the Committee that I was watching, and I thought that it was brilliant.

Mr McCausland: It was like blood sport.

The Chairperson: Good luck to both of you.

We will move on to detail the second general issue that we will be considering with the Minister this morning, which is the estimated savings that are specified in the explanatory and financial memorandum. The estimated savings are £0·6 million for 2009-10 and £1·2 million for 2010-11. Witnesses are concerned that the Department is overestimating the savings that can be made, and underestimating the start-up costs.

The Committee wrote to the Department asking for a breakdown of the savings. The Minister stated in his response that:

“No further breakdown of the estimated efficiency savings is available. The estimate was not based on specific costings; therefore, it will not commit the new Library Authority to particular decisions. Projected savings on administration and possible surplus premises will become clearer when the organisational design and staffing structure of the Library Authority is determined.”

The Committee’s letter of 8 October 2007 asked the Department to provide a detailed explanation of how the estimated savings for the library authority were calculated, with a breakdown of the £0·6 million for 2009-10 and the £1·2 million for 2010-11. The Department responded, stating that:

“Estimates of efficiencies were required in 2006 for the Reform Programme, which anticipated savings in administration from the RPA, and transferred to the planning exercise for the Comprehensive Spending Review. The estimate for efficiencies —£600k for 2009-10, rising to £1·2 million in 2010-2011 — was based on a set of assumptions, which were set out in earlier correspondence to you, related to merging 5 library services into one. It was recognised that it would take time to deliver on efficiencies, and none were taken for 2008-9, the expected first year of operation of the Authority.

The estimate was not based on specific costings and therefore does not commit the new Library Authority to particular decisions. The savings are separate from the additional monies which will be required by the Library Authority to cover the corporate services functions.

Projected savings on administration and from possible surplus premises will become clearer when the organisational design is determined.”

Members may wish to ask the Minister to remove from the explanatory and financial memorandum the claim that efficiency savings will be made, given that the figures are not based on any specific costings and that the Department will not commit the new library authority to particular decisions. Have members any comments on that?

Mr McCausland: The Committee received that letter only this morning. It says that the figures were set out in earlier correspondence, but it does not give the date of that correspondence. How are we meant to know what it said?

Mr Shannon: I would like to see those figures on the first- and second-year savings. I believe that they were £0·6 million and £1·2 million. Is that right?

The Chairperson: That is correct. The estimated savings are £0·6 million for 2009-10 and £1·2 million for 2010-11.

If there are no other questions, members will want to focus on that second broad area, using their own initiative and instinct. Those broad areas and the suggested questions will all inform the Committee’s approach.

The third issue is schedule 2. After last week’s meeting, a copy of the NIPSA legal paper was passed to the Department for onward transmission to the Departmental Solicitor’s Office. A response was requested from the Departmental Solicitor’s Office for today’s meeting.

The Department has provided a response advising that it separately requested the legal paper from NIPSA and that it is seeking a meeting between its legal adviser and that of NIPSA to discuss differences of opinion. The Department states that politeness demands that it waits for a reply from NIPSA and that time must be factored in for any meeting to take place before the Departmental Solicitor’s Office official will be in apposition to respond.

Mr McNarry: That is a time bomb, and the Department is playing pass the parcel with it. If I remember correctly, the Committee agreed — although I disagreed — that it would furnish departmental officials with the information that it had. I understood that there was urgency surrounding that, and I would have thought that the discussions that must take place between the two legal gentlemen were a done deal.

I do not want the Committee to get involved in a legal wrangle without knowing what it is doing. What advice is the Committee being given that would indicate whether or when it would be necessary to get its own legal advice to ascertain which of the two eminent lawyers is correct? The Department’s lawyer is saying that he is right; the other is not saying that he is wrong, but the issue is hanging in the air, and it is a game of pass the parcel. It is a time bomb, unless we get it right.

What I mean is that I see no sense in the Committee taking the risk to approve a Bill when it has evidence that the Bill may be sufficiently flawed that, as soon as it hits the streets, the Department will be taken to court. I am not prepared to do that. I am prepared to take certain risks, but that is a risk too far. I cannot, as a Committee member, pass a Bill knowing that there is already a legal challenge waiting outside the door.

At present, I am not satisfied that the situation has been dealt with.

The Chairperson: The fourth, broad area for scrutiny is the number of board members. Last week, Ken Robinson proposed that there should be 20 members, which achieved consensus around this table. It is thought that 20 members is a reasonable number. However, the Bill specifies that there should be a minimum of seven and a maximum of 14 members. How does the Committee propose to deal with that?

Mr K Robinson: Last week, we exercised the argument that given that the Committee wants to achieve geographical spread and range of interests, the practicalities of board meetings and the certainty that subcommittees will need to be set up in order to deal with issues such as finance. I still maintain that a membership of around 20 would allow for geographical spread, a range of interests and will allow the board to carry out its functions more effectively.

The Chairperson: Have members any further views on membership of elected representatives? The Committee has agreed that the board should include elected representatives — whom we understand to be members of local government authorities, such as councillors — and union representatives. Members are asked to consider further how many of each should be on the board. Does the Committee recommend, for example, that they should make up a third of the board's members?

Mr K Robinson: The document suggests that elected representatives and trade union representatives should each make up one third. I am not sure that I totally agree with that.

The Chairperson: Mr McCausland, perhaps you would agree that that should not be prescriptive.

Mr McCausland: I would not want that to be prescriptive. If the board is to be locally accountable, local authority members should make up a substantial section. There are a range of other interests. Is there a suggestion that trade unions should make up a third?

Mr K Robinson: Yes. That seems too high.

Mr McCausland: That is far too high.

Mr Ramsey: There has been discussion on whether the subregional mechanism will be made up of offices or a structure. That must be completely clarified. The Committee does not know whether there will be a board in each region.

The Chairperson: That is another key area. I am not surprised that you have raised the issue of the subregional structure, Mr Ramsey, as you are bound to be concerned about the north-west.

Mr Shannon: Obviously, the number of members who are councillors will depend on the size of the board. If there are 20 members, as the Committee would prefer, perhaps three or four elected representatives would be appropriate. If the Minister holds firms to his proposal of seven to 14 members, where does the Committee stand on that? Obviously, the board's size will affect what the membership should be from councils.

The Chairperson: It is useful to challenge every aspect of that.

Mr Brolly: I can envisage difficulty in there being a clash between achieving the desired geographical spread and having a workable, viable number of members.

I do not know how a third of councillors could be selected and how it would be decided which areas would be represented and which would not. We should consider the use of some of the representative bodies of councillors, such as the National Association of Councillors (NAC) or Northern Ireland Local Government Association (NILGA), on the board to represent councils and keep the numbers of board members down.

Mr McCausland: I am not in favour of those organisations being represented. The NAC is a strange body at the best of times and its role is not quite the same as NILGA. Furthermore, there is a range of opinions across councils about the strengths or otherwise of NILGA.

Mr Shannon: Not everyone has that opinion; some councillors may be happy with NAC.

Mr McCausland: Yes, but its role is concerned with the rights of councillors. It is a trade union for councillors.

The Chairperson: Mr Ferguson is a champion for councillors.

Mr Brolly: A solution is needed in which councillors are represented, without having all the councillors there or having to choose which councillors are represented.

The Chairperson: The general consensus is, without being prescriptive, to uphold the important principle of local accountability of and representation by elected representatives — councillors.

I refer members to the table in their pack, which gives details of the Committee's position on the issues of concern that we wish to raise with the Minister. I expect Kieran McCarthy to zone in on clause 6(1), which refers to free core services and charging. Other members will, of course, want to talk about that issue, but Kieran has been pursuing it rigorously in successive weeks.

Mr Brolly: Are we looking at the questions, or at the issues of concern on the Libraries Bill?

The Chairperson: I have to go through a long introduction into the general themes that are being raised this morning.

The Department said that it would be prepared to consider amending clause 6(1) and it asked the Committee to come up with alternative wording. The suggested wording was proposed by the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SELB).

The Committee Clerk: Nelson McCausland referred to a form of wording, which might be acceptable, that one of the witnesses proposed.

Mr McCausland: Yes, a man from the professional body proposed it, but I cannot remember what the form of words was.

The Committee Clerk: The wording that we have lifted came from the South Eastern Education and Library Board, but if there is another form of wording, we can use that.

Mr McCarthy: The wording used by SELB is fairly strong: “the Authority may not make any charges”.

That reflects the Committee’s view on the matter.

The Chairperson: Do you think that the wording used by the South Eastern Education and Library Board is strong?

Mr McCarthy: Yes, I think that it is. It covers all of our concerns.

Mr McCausland: Can we compare it with the wording that the other individual, to whom I referred, came up with? The wording may be similar.

The Chairperson: Do you want to do that now, or revisit that shortly?

Mr McCausland: We can revisit that.

The Chairperson: Obviously, we need to strengthen the wording.

I remind members, prior to the arrival of the Minister — which is scheduled to happen in the next five minutes — that you are required to declare any interests that are relevant to the Committee’s consideration of the Libraries Bill. Those will be recorded in the minute. Members should also note that they are required to declare an interest when asking a witness a question that might related directly to that interest. Again, I state that I am a member of the Western Education and Library Board.

Mr McCausland: I am the Chairperson of a board of school governors. However, since we work under the aegis of the boards, I have to declare that.

The Chairperson: I know. I will work my way around the table and ask members about their interests. David, do you have any interests?

Mr McCausland: I am Chairperson of the BELB library committee and am a member of the board of governors of three schools.

Lord Browne: I am on the board of governors of two schools.

Mr K Robinson: Similarly, I am on the board of governors of two schools.

The Chairperson: Pat, have you any interests to declare?

Mr P Ramsey: I have no interests to declare.

The Chairperson: Francie, do you have any interests to declare — apart from your genius?

Mr Brolly: No one is interested in me.

Mr Shannon: I am on a board of governors. I am not sure if it is necessary to declare that, but I must tell you about anything that I think might be relevant.

The Chairperson: Shall we focus on Mr Shannon rather than the Minister?

Mr Shannon: He is on the big money.

Mr D Bradley: I am a governor of a primary school.

The Chairperson: Members should also be advised that we will have welcome assistance from the Bill Office. Intervention is always welcome. We are ready to speak to the Minister if he is ready to speak to us. We can chill out for a minute.

Mr Shannon: I have a young fellow with me who is on work experience. He is here to see how the Assembly and, in this case, the DCAL Committee works.

The Chairperson: He is welcome.

Mr Shannon: He is shadowing me for a week, and, so far, he has had a busy time.

He knows how hard I work. Ask him afterwards.

The Chairperson: Nelson, the Committee staff are trying to locate the wording that you felt strengthened the point.

Mr Shannon: Next Thursday is Budget day. This Committee is also scheduled to meet then. How will members juggle those commitments?

The Chairperson: It will be difficult. I will take advice from the Committee Clerk about other Committees’ plans. Members of this Committee may have strong opinions about what should or should not happen on Thursday. I understand that the Programme for Government, the ISNI and the Budget are to be discussed in Committees next Thursday.

Mr McNarry: It will only be the commencement of consultation on the Budget. There will be no vote or major debate about the Budget statement, which will be followed by a one hour discussion about what has been said.

The Chairperson: David, do you think that the Committee could run alongside the plenary session?

Mr McNarry: It might be a problem for management. The decision to hold the meeting will be a matter for the Committee members. If we attend the Committee meeting, we will have to rely on Hansard in order to find out what happened in the plenary sitting.

Mr P Ramsey: Next Thursday will be the first time that Members will have a chance to discuss the Budget and the comprehensive spending review. It would be inappropriate to hold a Committee meeting at that time.

Mr McNarry: I agree with that. Kieran McCarthy sits with me on the Business Committee, and it might benefit members of the Committee to check with their party Whips to find out which party members will participate in the Budget debate and to arrange for all parties to have a fair chance in the time allocated. That is the best way to approach the matter.

The Chairperson: What is the Committee Clerk's advice?

Mr McCausland: The Budget statement is scheduled to take place between 10.30 am and 11.30 am —

A Member: No, there are two —

Mr McNarry: A debate on the Programme for Government will be tabled tomorrow.

The Chairperson: Replies to the Budget statement take the form of questions rather than debate.

Mr Shannon: Will there be an hour set aside for that?

The Committee Clerk: There will be one hour set aside.

Mr Shannon: David's point is valid. Obviously, each party will have its pecking order for speakers. We could attend the Committee and other people could ask questions in the Chamber.

The Chairperson: The Committee meeting will therefore run alongside the plenary session; although, members might get distracted for other reasons and have to go to the plenary session.

Mr McCarthy: The Budget is important. Could the Committee meet on Tuesday? I know that that would put pressure on staff, but Tuesday seems to have been forgotten.

The Chairperson: The Minister will be attending the Committee on Thursday of next week.

A Member: Other Committees will also be meeting on Tuesday.

The Committee Clerk: Next week, the Minister will be attending in order to discuss the Irish language.

Mr McCausland: There is nothing to discuss about that.

Mr Shannon: The discussion is over.

The Chairperson: That will happen next week. Are there any other items on the agenda, or is that the only subject for the Minister to discuss?

Mr Shannon: David is right about the speaking order in the Chamber following the Minister of Finance and Personnel's statement about the Budget, and, given that the Minister will be coming, I suggest that we go ahead with the Committee meeting. In order to ensure that we have a quorum, members should indicate whether they will be able to attend.

The Chairperson: Next week we will continue our ongoing discussions on the Libraries Bill. As scheduled, we will hold the Committee meeting next Thursday. Members must do their best to attend.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE ARTS AND LEISURE

Thursday 18 October 2007

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr David McNarry (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley
Mr Francie Brolly
Lord Browne
Mr Kieran McCarthy
Mr Nelson McCausland
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Pat Ramsey
Mr Ken Robinson
Mr Jim Shannon

Witnesses:

Mr Edwin Poots	}	The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure
Mr Colin Jack	}	Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure
Ms Irene Knox	}	Proposed Northern Ireland Library Authority

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): I welcome the Minister for Culture, Arts and Leisure, Edwin Poots, to this morning's Committee meeting to discuss the Libraries Bill. I do not think that Mr Poots plans to make a statement. Is that the case, Minister?

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): I have a speaking note.

The Chairperson: The session will take the form of questions after you have made your introductory statement. I welcome your senior colleagues, Mr Colin Jack and Ms Irene Knox.

Mr Poots: I thank the Chairperson and members for inviting me to address the Committee on the Libraries Bill. Officials from the Department spoke to you recently, and since then I have passed information on to the Committee. I am aware that you have some outstanding concerns, and I hope that some of those concerns can be addressed today.

The deliberations of the Committee have caused us to look carefully at the legislation and our approach to it. It is worth noting that I remain convinced that this is the best model for the Library Service. The public Library Service is not one of the big beasts of public expenditure — schools, hospitals, roads and social security fall into that category. Nevertheless, it is a key service that has the capacity to contribute significantly to quality of life. It differs from much specialised public provision at this time; it is universal and not targeted; it is driven by the user and is not monetary; it is free at the point of use for its core services; and it can be adaptable and flexible, modifying services to meet new demands or changes in modern society. Despite being a relatively old service, those attributes make it acutely modern and useful in these changing times, and puts it in a position to support a range of other priorities — economic, educational and community development.

A good public library service is the mark of a civilized society. How it is run and the quality of a library service says something about the values of the society it serves. The amalgamation of Northern Ireland's five library services into one service is primarily about improving the quality of the service to the public.

A single library service is in a better position to establish partnership arrangements with other bodies to ensure relevance. I can ensure equity of provision across Northern Ireland; that should enable the transmission of best practice, so that all areas come up to the same level, namely the best. The library service should be able to raise its profile and market itself appropriately.

The library authority and its board will have sole responsibility for the library service alone, ensuring that it is focused and undistracted by other matters. Compared to other services in the UK and Ireland, this is an innovative idea, which has excited interest elsewhere — as the Committee will know from some of the evidence that has been presented to it.

I want to address the timing of the establishment of the library authority. The extension of the Committee Stage of the Libraries Bill now makes establishment impossible to achieve by April 2008. I have been considering the implications of that in a new timetable. I have also listened to the views of stakeholders in the education and library boards, who recognise that the two services, education and libraries, are separating, and though their preference is to move at the same time, they accept that that may not be possible. Their chief concern is that the processes for the transfer of staff are common and developed at the same time in order to minimise disruption to the boards and ensure that all staff are treated equally.

My Department has taken those considerations on board and is working closely with the education and skills authority (ESA) implementation team and the Department of Education to ensure commonality of approach. A mid-year start poses practical difficulties for the library authority in the 2008-09 financial year, not least with corporate and financial issues and reporting. I have, therefore, decided to put back the date for the establishment of the new authority to 1 April 2009. That is a later start than I had intended, and there will be some cost implications as a consequence, but it reflects the views expressed to me about the technicalities of moving ahead.

I intend to proceed with the appointment of the board of the library authority as soon as possible after the passage of the legislation so that it can operate in shadow mode from the middle of 2008-09. That would allow the authority to prepare fully for the transfer of powers and ensure the board's full involvement in the preparation of the authority's first corporate plan.

I am happy to listen to the views of the Committee and answer questions.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Minister. Some interesting news has been brought to the table this morning.

Lord Browne: I welcome the Minister. Clause two of the Libraries Bill deals with the duty of an authority to provide a library service. Many people have expressed considerable concern that the standards expected of an authority in providing such a service have not been specified in the Bill. In particular, they have pointed out that the words "comprehensive" and "efficient", which are used in the current legislation, do not appear in the new Bill at all. The Minister's officials have already explained to the Committee that they did not regard the words "comprehensive" and "efficient" as meaningful; in their opinion it would be unusual to legislate for efficiency. However, the Committee is generally agreed that those words should be included in the Bill. We feel particularly that efficiency should be made clear in this piece of legislation.

What are the Minister's views on this matter?

Mr Poots: I am happy to consider your suggestion. Terms such as "comprehensive" and "efficient" add meaning, so the Department will be happy to examine that. The Committee Stage of Bills is about identifying those kinds of issues. The Department will examine that, and we will come back to the Committee on it.

Mr P Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I wish to ask some questions on efficiency savings. As you have said, you intend to postpone the establishment of a library authority until April 2009. How will the efficiency of the library service be monitored, and who will monitor it? Will it be monitored by an independent body?

The Committee recognises that it would be inappropriate to include standards in the legislation, because if the Department wanted to amend those standards it would have to go through the entire legislative process again.

However, is there some way in which the legislation can provide for the Assembly to have a role in approving changes made to performance standards set for the library authority?

Mr Poots: Ultimately, the library authority will have a chief executive who will report to the Department's accounting officer — who is the permanent secretary. The permanent secretary will report to me, and I will report to the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, on behalf of the Assembly. Those are the normal accounting mechanisms that are in place for a public body. I am satisfied with those mechanisms, without going out to an independent body. If you find that accountancy procedures are not working out, people may be asked to come before the Public Accounts Committee, something which has been done in the past. Once again, that is provided for in the current Assembly. That is a fallback position for dealing with those who do not adhere to good financial strictures. I am satisfied that we do not need to have an independent body over and above the current arrangements.

Ms Irene Knox (proposed Northern Ireland Library Authority): With regard to standards, the 'Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries' policy framework currently contains standards. Standards must be continually reviewed. What is appropriate now may not be appropriate in a year's time or in two years' time. One of the things that I would like to lead, in the new library authority, is a continuous improvement process. I am happy to liaise with the Committee with regard to standards that have been established for the current Library Service, and standards that we will need to look at in the future. There is a role for the Committee, the Department, and consumers of the Library Service to determine throughout that process the standard of performance to which the Library Service should adhere.

Mr P Maskey: Therefore, the Assembly has no role in approving changes?

Ms Knox: There is a role for the Assembly, through the Committee. I will report on standards and the Committee will comment on whether those standards are appropriate or not. Standards would then be revised as a result of discussion and consultation.

Mr Colin Jack (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The current policy framework for the Library Service was drawn up in 2006 after quite a lengthy period of consultation on a previous document. We expect to update and revise the policy framework and standards every few years. As part of that process, the Department will be working for the Minister. We would expect the Minister and the Department to bring proposals for any revised policy framework to the Committee for consideration. That is the way in which the framework for accountability will work in the future.

As well as that, I expect that once the library authority is established that the Committee will be in a position to call the chairman of the library authority to account — accompanied by the chief executive — with regard to their corporate plans. Therefore, there would be an opportunity for direct accountability between the Committee and the library authority.

Mr P Maskey: I do not want to labour the point. However, is there any way that that process, as you have described it, can be strengthened through legislation. It is OK to say, at the present stage, that there will be an opportunity for direct accountability between the Committee and the library authority. However, the Committee could be by-passed on any decision that has already been made. It may be all right for us to request a role, but it does not mean that our request will be granted. The Committee wants its role in the process to be strengthened, somewhere in the legislation.

Mr Poots: I ask the Committee to be cautious about what they are asking for, in that instance. If the Committee want to put the process into a legislative framework, it will bind the flexibility of the process. We have a system whereby, if changes were to be introduced, the natural thing — and the way in which the Assembly operates — is that those changes are reported to the relevant Committee by the relevant Minister. We engage in discussions such as those and try to reach a common sense approach, working with each other.

If the process is put into legislation, the Committee will have to bid to enter those processes. It must be remembered that the current Assembly is in an early stage, and that there is not much legislation on the table as yet. I have no doubt that in two or three years' time we will be wading our way through a pile of legislation. As a consequence of that, the Committee may want to see changes being implemented quickly. However, if the Committee has to bid to get into the legislative process for fairly minor changes, then real difficulties will be created in the flexibility of the process that we have.

Mr McCausland: I want to pick up on the fact that there is no national library and that it would be unrealistic for a small place such as Northern Ireland to have one. However, my concern is that material relating not only to life in Northern Ireland and the province of Ulster but to the Ulster diaspora is not available for a range of reasons. The Northern Ireland Publications Resource was mentioned, but I understand that it collects only locally published material.

Many books about emigrants from Northern Ireland, who have gone around the world and done various things, were published elsewhere and are not available here. People have to travel to a London library to access those books and make arrangements to borrow them. Could it somehow be included in the legislation that there should be a strengthened collection of material with specific relevance to Northern Ireland and the province of Ulster, regardless of where it has been published?

Mr Poots: I am not sure whether that would come under legislation or policy, but perhaps Irene can brief us on that.

Ms Knox: I take on board Mr McCausland's point. There is an onus on the library authority to collect material that is relevant to Northern Ireland. The difficulty with including something such as that in legislation is that it is not always possible to identify material unless someone points it out. Therefore, the authority could be placed in a difficult position should it miss a publication.

However, the library authority will have a stock policy and a collections policy. Bear in mind that it will also have to develop a range of policies that are Northern Ireland-wide, and beyond. Mr McCausland's point could be taken on board in the stock policy. It could include consideration also of how to make sure material is available, without always purchasing necessarily, for instance by collaborating much more closely with others to ensure the availability to people here of the materials that they need. Such collaboration could be with the Linenhall Library or Trinity College Library Dublin, which, as national library, collects a great deal of relevant material. Any such policy should ensure that there is no duplication but that there is access to whatever materials people need.

Mr McCausland: I accept your point about collaboration with other libraries. The Mitchell Library in Glasgow is another that comes to mind, and other libraries in Scotland should also be considered. However, I am thinking about some form of words that would not necessarily tie the library authority to strengthening its collection, but allow it some flexibility and still serve as a constant reminder of the need to do so. In the past, when I raised the issue with various librarians, action was not always taken. It would be good to have a general phrase to stress the point, and perhaps something could be considered on that basis.

Ms Knox: I am sure that the Department would be happy to consider it.

Mr D Bradley: As an example of what Mr McCausland mentioned, part of the stock of the Irish and Local Studies Library in Armagh is being stored in the basement of library headquarters and, therefore, is not readily available to the public. Furthermore, that library is on the lookout for the type of material that Nelson mentioned earlier. How can we be sure that, under the library authority, such material will still be collected and readily available to the public?

Mr Jack: Should a specific aspect of collections policy be included in the legislation, it would tie the library authority to it. Potentially the library authority could find itself in court due to a failure to collect a particular piece of material. However, you would expect the strengthening of collections to feature strongly in the policy of the new authority and in any policy guidelines issued by the Department. We will reflect on the matter and see what we can come up with.

Mr McCausland: Surely it is not beyond the wit of man to come up with a form of words to emphasise and focus on the issue without being prescriptive.

Mr Jack: For example, the new library authority will want to work on that aspect in its mission statement and through the development of its first corporate plan. Those are all ways that we can consider.

Mr McCausland: We should reflect on the terminology that was used in the old legislation on museums. They were to collect or have material relevant to the region. There is a growing emphasis on that in tourism and cultural connections around the world, even through Tourism Ireland. It is from that material that many of those ideas can be generated.

Mr Poots: I am aware of the issue that Mr Bradley has raised, because it has been raised locally with me. There is an excellent stock of literature that is not being made publicly available, and we must look into that.

Mr McCarthy: My question is about clause 6, and charging for core services. Many of the witnesses, if not all, were concerned that the current wording of clause 6 does not guarantee free core services. Your officials said that they would be prepared to consider amending the clause, and they asked the Committee to put forward alternative wordings.

The Committee proposes the following wording for clause 6(1), which was originally suggested by SELB:

“The Authority may not make any charges for any library services provided by it”

— and this is new —

“including the borrowing of books and free access to information, except for — those services specified in a scheme of charges approved by the Department and published by the Authority; and the charges are made in accordance with that scheme.”

First, what are your views on that form of wording?

Mr Poots: This is the first time that I have heard that form of words, so I can give no commitment on it. In essence, it does not appear unreasonable. However, we will have to look at all the ramifications. We will take that away, consider it and come back to the Committee.

Mr McCarthy: To follow on from that, clause 6(2) permits different charges for different persons, circumstances or localities. In relation to the question of locality, the Committee has considered the idea that there should be some thought given to producing a standard set of charges, which would apply throughout Northern Ireland. What are your views on that? Do you foresee any difficulties?

Mr Poots: One of the reasons for introducing a single library authority is to have a service that is consistent throughout Northern Ireland, so that the user gets the same service in Castlederg as in Coleraine, and the same in Belfast as in Enniskillen. That is what we are aiming for. In my view, there would be no benefit in having different charges in different regions or parts of Northern Ireland.

Mr McCarthy: Again, in relation to different charges for different persons, your officials explained that that referred to current practice, whereby children and senior citizens are not charged for late returns, whereas adults are charged. The Committee is aware of educational colleges who say that they cannot give a reduced rate to senior citizens as that is incompatible with legislation on ageism. Can you assure the Committee that the provision for making charges for different persons is within the law?

Mr Poots: We cannot give you that assurance. We would have to get the relevant people to look at that aspect on our behalf. One of the disadvantages in pushing the whole issue of ageism may be that some of the benefits that older people enjoy at present may be denied to them in the future.

Mr McCarthy: However, you agree that this is a very important question?

Mr Poots: Yes, it certainly is.

Mr D Bradley: I would like to comment on that. The issue that the Minister has just mentioned has come up with respect to provision of evening classes in colleges of education. In some cases, the privileges enjoyed by older people have been withdrawn on the basis of new legislation, which is supposed to protect them.

When you are looking into the question, Minister, will you raise that issue with the Office of First Minister and deputy First Minister, with a view to retaining the protections that older citizens currently enjoy?

Mr Poots: I am certainly happy to look at that. I must point out, however, that some of the wealthiest people I know happen to be over 65, and they do not necessarily need to have financial support to do those things. Others, who are younger, might have greater need.

I am happy to discuss the issue, but we must bear in mind that it does not necessarily meet all the equality regulations that we have. In addition, there are probably older citizens who do not receive benefits and are, therefore, deprived of opportunities. It is not my Department's responsibility, but perhaps we need better means of identifying people's ability to pay for services. Some older people would not miss the money, while other people who are not on benefits might struggle to pay for some of the services.

Mr Shannon: Minister, the Committee is asking for consideration to be given to the matter. I am aware that the Library Service in my constituency is mainly used by elderly people. They are not affluent people or millionaires with big houses; they are mostly people on benefits and income support, and money is not a luxury that they have.

Mr Poots: Absolutely. People whose incomes are just above the level of entitlement to income support miss out on everything. That is an area that we really must look at.

Mr Shannon: Kieran McCarthy is 63 at the minute, but he is chasing 65.

Mr McCausland: He is a very wealthy man.

The Chairperson: Let us move on to one of the more youthful Committee members.

Mr K Robinson: Thank you, Chairman. The brown envelope is on its way to you.

Thank you, Minister, for your presentation. I noticed that, in your opening comments, you referred to the Library Service as being a key service that is universal and user driven. You said also that the society that it will serve will be reflected in its provision and that there would be equity of provision across Northern Ireland. Although I welcome those comments, the Committee has concerns about the number of members on the library authority board, about how that board will reflect society, and about the geographical spread from which members will be drawn.

The Bill suggests that the board might have seven to 14 members. The Committee thinks that 20 or 21 might be a more realistic figure, based on the evidence that has been presented to it. We feel that that number would provide a better reflection of urban and rural areas and give a better social and geographical spread that would represent every section of society, whether they have or do not have money, such as those people on the Ards Peninsula to whom Jim Shannon referred.

The Committee is concerned that local representatives — especially when the RPA creates new super councils — ought to be included in the new board. We are grateful that, under the education and library boards, local representation was well reflected and seemed to work well.

Minister, will you review the number of board members? You referred only to audit and finance committees, but, if the board comprises only seven members, by my calculations, three and a half members will be on each committee. That is not an ideal situation. More committees and subcommittees will be required to enable the new authority to operate properly, but there will be too few members. Will you comment on that?

Mr Poots: The original proposal for seven to 14 board members was based on advice given to the Department by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments, which makes recommendations for the appointment of boards. That advice indicated that there is strong evidence of greater efficacy of a smaller board. Therefore, it was thought that a figure between seven and 14 would be the best model. I am open to the Committee's views on the matter, particularly on how we might bring in the local-authority dimension and how we deal appropriately with that issue.

There are questions about whether we should have people from local authorities on the board, which would not reflect the current trend in public appointments, whether we should go down the route of community planning, with special responsibilities associated with the new councils, about how closely the library can be linked with community planning, and whether there is another option.

There needs to be further work carried out in order to identify whether there should be a number of councillors on the board. If there are to be seven councils, that would require seven more councillors. If there are to be 11 or 15 councils, every council would not be represented on the board. Therefore, those issues also have to be taken into account.

The matter is still open for discussion. However, there should be a proper consideration of the community-planning responsibilities that district councils will have, and how that may feed into the library process in local areas.

Mr K Robinson: We are mindful of the situation some years ago when local councillors were removed from the health boards. We are all aware of the disaster that eventually turned out to be. Therefore, that was one of the reasons behind our thinking that the board should have local political representation in order to give them a better steer.

The Committee supports the merit principle, and we think that that is the way to proceed. However, the new library authority is in danger of becoming a rarefied body, in which all the professionals will be knowledgeable in their own particular subject areas, but may be oblivious to the comments that you made in your opening remarks about serving the wider society.

Mr Poots: I am aware that local councillors, in particular, will bring a dimension to public bodies that no one else can — interactivity with the public. Public bodies are supposed to serve public interests, and I am aware of the role that public representatives, and particularly local public representatives, can have in bringing those public interests to mind.

Mr K Robinson: The Committee is keen that the new library authority is structured in such a way as to allow it to operate and engage at a local level in a meaningful way — and it stress the term “meaningful way”. The chief executive designate of the education and skills authority (ESA) has presented its operational structure to the Committee for Education. Will the Minister provide this Committee with a copy of the proposed operational structure for the library authority? Furthermore, will there be a library board or a library committee — subregional, presumably — in each council area under the review of public administration (RPA) proposals?

Mr Poots: Perhaps Irene could update us on that issue.

Ms Knox: Work is currently under way to produce that draft operational structure. It is important that the people on the ground — the chief librarians, assistant chief librarians and other staff — who will need to have buy-in to this new authority, are involved in that process. I am working through that at the moment with them.

I do not envisage that I will be in a position to bring that draft to the Committee until the middle or end of November. However, at the stage when I have a draft that has been discussed with the staff, I am happy to come to the Committee, via the Minister, with proposals for the operational structure of the new authority.

Mr K Robinson: Thank you for that answer. I also thank the Minister for reviewing the timetable. That is helpful to the Committee, and I hope that it will be helpful to the new authority also.

The Chairperson: Ken, you might agree that in a previous evidence session, the Committee did ask the question about the size of the board. There was no evidence presented that suggested that a smaller board would be more efficient.

Mr Jack: We have an article that was written earlier this year by David Nicholl, who is head the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) in Northern Ireland. It rehearses the arguments regarding the size of boards and makes a strong case for a board having a maximum of 12 members. We can make that article available to the Committee to allow it to consider that point of view.

The Chairperson: I welcome that.

Mr K Robinson: If there is a board of 12 members and a subcommittee of probably six members — and it has to be considered that one or two members could be struck down by illness — how many members will be required to make a quorum? That figure would have to be extremely low. If that is the case, would it have the required representation?

Mr Jack: The quorum would be likely to be low in comparison with the size of quorums of the much larger boards that exist in some bodies in Northern Ireland. However, the quorum would be expected to be approximately half the membership of the board.

Mr K Robinson: I am concerned that people from Belfast area, for instance, would have to travel through Dungiven to get to the new board headquarters in Omagh or Londonderry. Adverse weather conditions, illnesses, and other factors could result in the board being inquorate at that stage.

Mr Jack: One of the issues that Mr Nicholl raised in his article is about the onus on the board members to attend. If there is a small board then there is more of an onus on members to attend.

Mr K Robinson: That does not account for adverse weather or illness. That has been pointed out to us in other places. In fact, the Scottish Executive, as some of us found out recently, have to make special arrangements to make sure that they are quorate for certain bodies.

The Chairperson: We will welcome a copy of Mr Nicholl’s paper.

Mr Brolly: My question is complementary to Ken’s. It is about geographic spread of representation, which raises some concerns. Your officials explained that the way in which the advertisement for the recruitment of board members is framed will be crucial in ensuring that appointments are based on merit, which is good, and that the recruitment documentation will be drawn up in such a way as to attract applications from a wide range of people. There should be something in there about the need to have a good geographic spread of people on the board.

There is no guarantee that we will get people from all areas, and it seems that there is too much reliance being placed on the wording of an advertisement. Will the Minister consider stipulating in the legislation that the board must contain a good mix of people from different areas?

The second question is about accountability prompted by Irene's mention of consumers, who are a very important part of this. Will there be some mechanism for consumers to feed their views back to the library authority on the library service? Will the Minister consider setting up a users' forum for the library authority?

Mr Poots: With regard to geographical spread, I think that it comes down to appointment of members. If you do it on merit alone you run into problems, because you have to look at other issues. As far as geographical spread is concerned, that is where liaison with the local authorities or with the representation from local authorities may bring some benefits.

In fact, I had to re-advertise the most recent appointment of new members to the Arts Council of Northern Ireland because, in terms of geographical spread, we did not get further south than Lurgan. There was some representation from Londonderry, but the south and west of the Province was wholly unrepresented, so I asked for those positions to be re-advertised, because of those concerns. Hopefully, applications will come in from those areas, but if they do not, we may have to re-advertise again to ensure that there is some equity across the Province and that things do not become city-centric. People in rural communities remain unrepresented on many of the boards across Northern Ireland. Again, I am not sure that we need legislation. We can have very clear guidelines and principles on a lot of those issues and identify the way forward.

On the suggestion about a users' forum, I think that that goes back again to community-planning issues that local authorities will be doing. I will be honest with you: I am not sure that we fully understand what community planning means. There are many different interpretations of what community planning might be. It is something for the Department of the Environment (DOE) to tie down, as part of the review of public administration, what community planning is going to mean exactly. I would have thought, Mr Chairman, that the issue that was being referred to with the end-users' forum is something that is ideally fitted for community planning. That would be the best place for that to come from. I am open to the Committee's views on that in due course.

The Chairperson: Jim, you had a related question?

Mr Shannon: Mr Chairman, I just want to make one point to the Minister. It is in relation to the number of board members. The reason that the Committee has asked for 20 members is really to do with the practicalities of calling a meeting. No matter how good you are, you can take sick or you can have family engagements. There are distances to cover and weather conditions to contend with. Is it not more sensible to have a committee structured around 20 members so that you can use the councillor-level representation as well as having a geographical spread of representatives, as Francie has said? That would ensure that you have a good mix of people to deliver the services. From a practical point of view, it is more sensible to have 20 members rather than seven or 14. If three people cannot attend, where are you then?

The Chairperson: Nelson, I expect you to stand up for rural areas too.

Mr McCausland: I was going to stand up for equality. What strikes me about representation on public bodies is that the only two bodies that are required by law to be reflective of Northern Ireland society are the Human Rights Commission and the Equality Commission, which does not speak very well for the requirements of the legislation, as neither body is particularly representative.

However, there is merit in considering wording that says that the board should be reflective of Northern Ireland society, particularly as it is a cultural body, which should reflect our cultural diversity. Although that has not worked in the two cases I mentioned, I believe that it could work.

Mr Poots: In relation to Mr Shannon's point, it is fairly clear that the Committee wants to move to having a greater number than the one that is currently in the Bill. That will be looked at, but there are issues around having a bigger board.

The old Fire Authority for Northern Ireland, for example, used to have a board, and perhaps the current Fire and Rescue Service Board still does, of around 19, so I will have a look at some of those boards and see how well they operate. I suffered the effects of a large membership when I was Chairman of the Committee of the Centre. A few people thought that, because that was the largest Committee, they did not have to pull their weight. Sometimes in a smaller group people are more focused and determined about the work that they have to do, whereas with a large group people think that someone else will do a job, and it ends up that no one does it.

There are benefits in having a larger group, such as ensuring a quorum. However, I remember, quite often, at 2.00 pm on a Wednesday afternoon, at meetings of the former Committee of the Centre — with a membership of 17 — waiting for five people to turn up so that we could start proceedings. When I sat on the Committee for the Environment there were 11 of us, and it always started on time. People do not always take their responsibilities as seriously when there are others to share the load.

The Chairperson: You could not accuse this Committee of not taking its work seriously, Minister. Wallace, you were going to make a related point.

Lord Browne: It was on the equality issue. This Committee, being all male, is not reflective of females. Will there be any mechanism to ensure that they are equally represented?

The Chairperson: Would you like to put your question about tenure of chair while you have the floor?

Lord Browne: My next point is on the tenure of chair. This Committee, along with the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA), believes that the chair of the board should only be able to hold the post for a maximum of two terms — serving one term and then being re-appointed for a second term. Your officials agree with that, but it is not in the legislation. It is dealt with under the rules of operation of the board. Will the library authority draw up its own rules on the operation of the board, or should that be included in the legislation?

Mr Poots: I thank bachelor Browne for his interest in the fairer sex on the issue of equality. [Laughter.] He obviously wants to keep in with them.

It is probably better if we can set out very clear policies, as opposed to introducing a lot of that into legislation. I personally believe that legislation is not a very manoeuvrable beast; it is a large ship that requires a lot of turning. If policy documents are agreed through a system like this one, with a Minister reporting to a relevant Committee, that introduces a great deal more flexibility. Therefore, if changes happen in the future — and I do not think that there are any prophets in the room — you can address those changes and meet the challenges as they come along, whereas you cannot do that if everything is buried in the legislation..

Mr McNarry: I welcome the Minister. Although it falls to me to say the following, my views are shared with the general consensus of the Committee.

I want to deal with the staff transfer scheme in schedule 2 and then, separately, with start-up costs. Before I begin, I have to say that it is clear that we needed to have a discussion this morning, as well as questions.

You appointed a chief executive designate who is, in turn, appointing designated staff. At the time, I said that that appointment was premature. You now inform us that the new authority will operate in shadow mode, as things have been put back until April 2009. It seems that my case is being made for me. It also appears that you are floating on the issue.

That action introduces more uncertainty. Although it is good to identify issues now, it also explains why the Committee has found itself floating in an atmosphere of uncertainty about where we are going. Perhaps you will deal with our concerns about those shadow arrangements, because we need to know more about them.

At this stage, I will not question your competency — you will make the decision. However, those decisions are bound to involve costs, and you are already frittering away money on a chief executive designate's salary, and so on

On the issues arising from schedule 2, Minister, your people asked to see the legal advice that we received, and we gladly passed that on. Following a delay, we were informed in a letter from your Department that, despite having received the legal advice, on the basis that the Department was unable to ask for it directly, your people had written to John Corey to request a copy of NIPSA's advice on schedule 2 from its QC. The Department is now seeking a meeting between the Department's and NIPSA's legal advisers in order to discuss the differences in opinions. What possible differences in opinion do your people expect to find between the legal advice that we passed on and that which the Department is requesting now from the same QC — or is that just a delaying tactic?

The letter continues that, until the Department has received the requested information and a follow-up meeting has taken place between NIPSA's QC and Noel Kelly from the Department, and Noel Kelly has then reported to the Committee, you require more time and will not be able to respond to the Committee's deadline. That was not really a deadline. It was a simple request, made last week, in order to have the information for today. You have not provided the Committee with any information. How do you expect us to proceed if we cannot investigate what we have identified as a potentially serious issue? Letters such as that cause us to be even more suspicious.

The issue that we have flagged up is a serious contention that if the Bill were to proceed in its current form — and a senior counsel has told the union that is employing him that it would be flawed — there is every likelihood that that union, and perhaps others, will be in the courts.

The Committee is very reluctant to accept only clear and concrete legal advice that we are not going to be agreeing to a Bill in the secure knowledge — or even in the doubting knowledge — that in taking it through the Assembly, it would be walking the Assembly, the Department and everybody into court because of the flaws in the Bill.

It seems to us that this is a very serious issue. Also, Noel Kelly told us that he was right and therefore everyone else was wrong; he is an excellent person and I am not challenging his ability, but that is a concern. The Committee urgently needs to know the Minister's take on that, in order to decide which legal opinion it accepts — Mr Kelly's, that of the eminent counsel employed by NIPSA — or if it needs to hire, with public money, an independent legal opinion to explain the situation. That is a very important issue, which I ask the Minister to respond to.

Although the Minister cannot respond to what he calls our deadline, when does he intend to respond to us on the issue, and how does he see the situation between the legal eagles and this Committee panning out? Many witnesses mentioned that there may be problems in categorising the current education and library board staff either as library authority staff or ESA staff because currently some staff salaries are part funded by DCAL and part funded by the Department of Education. How does the Minister intend to deal with that issue? Is it a major issue? Is it a serious issue? Can you expand on that for us?

Mr Poots: I thank the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for his questions; he always adds to the colour of events and it is good to hear from him. Shadow boards do not operate in shadow mode, in the same way that the RPA spoke of putting shadow councils in place for a year. Shadow boards will deal with all the issues put before them and smooth the way so that whenever full responsibilities are transferred to the new board, it should be a seamless operation.

I cannot be accused of creating uncertainty; I was aiming for 1 April 2008. I am no longer aiming for that date because this Committee has extended its scrutiny process to eight months.

Mr McNarry: So it is our fault?

Mr Poots: I am making it very clear that I was aiming for 1 April 2008, which is now impossible because of the Committee's decision to opt for an extension and take eight months to go over the legislation.

Mr McNarry: Are you denying that the reason for the Committee needing more time is because of a failure to supply information by the Department, which has led to uncertainty over the legislation?

Mr Poots: The legislation could have been dealt with more quickly — I have laid that fact on the table.

The Chairperson: Minister, are you not being disingenuous? You said that the timetable had slipped prior to the motion for extension, and that it would appear some time between April 2008 and April 2009. You were not proscriptive or specific, but you did suggest that the timetable had slipped prior to the extension motion.

Mr Poots: I certainly had not changed the date from 1 April 2008 at that time — I said that I would consider it. The extension of the Committee Stage from four months to eight months made it impossible for me to proceed before 1 April 2008. I am not taking any responsibility for any additional costs.

Mr McNarry: The Minister should take responsibility for the appointment that he made, which was premature even for April 2008. That is the point that he fails to grasp.

Mr Poots: The appointment was not premature. If you want to go into an operation in a seamless way that does not lead to a staff being undermined, adequate preparations must be made. The Deputy Chairperson may think that it is possible to build a house without any plans — that is not a wise thing to do.

We were putting the plans and processes in place so that we could move forward smoothly and seamlessly, and in a way in which would cause fewest problems to the public and the people who provide the services. As a consequence of the new arrangements, we cannot now proceed according to those plans. I could have footed around and perhaps suggested a vague date, say in July or October or another time. Instead, I have been very clear and definitive. I have said that the library authority will not be set up in April 2008, but that the date will be moved back a full year until April 2009, and that we will be ready to proceed in April 2009. That may present a challenge for the Department of Education; will it be ready to move with my Department? I remind members that it was the Department of Education that pushed the date back from April 2008 in the first place. However, we will be ready, and a board will be in place. That board will not cost a great deal of money to establish because shadow boards are not expensive to run. Thus, we will be ready to move ahead. I am not delaying or holding back.

As regards the legal advice that was received, Government operate on the basis of legal advice that is provided to them by the Departmental Solicitor's Office. We have to work within those confines. I have confidence in the Departmental Solicitor's Office and in the advice that it gives to us. Often, we find that those in the legal profession have differences of opinion with one another. Half a dozen lawyers could be asked for an opinion on a particular case, and half a dozen different opinions would be given. It seems sensible to me to put the unions' lawyer and the Department's lawyer into one room to see if they can agree on a position — if that is possible to achieve. That is what we are doing. If an agreed position is reached, we will be in a good position to move forward, and we will report back to the Committee at the earliest opportunity.

The Chairperson: David, are you satisfied with the Minister's answer?

Mr McNarry: I will not argue too much with him, but I am pleased to hear him say that it seems sensible to put the two lawyers in a room. It is a pity that it did not seem sensible to him a month ago. The problem seems to be that people could not even lift a phone to one another to say that they have a difference of opinion. Instead, an erroneous type of protocol had to be followed. The Minister talks about plans and business management and so on, but there is something lacking in a system if people cannot even lift the phone to talk to one another. Perhaps that is just how things are done.

I also want to take the Minister up on another issue and defend the Committee. This morning, Minister, you announced your decision on the date of the establishment of the library authority. However, when the Committee asked the Assembly for an extension of Committee Stage, it was felt necessary to inform you that the Committee would report as soon as possible; we were informed that you wanted to hear that. Nevertheless, you have not waited for that. Since that day, you have given the Committee no further opportunities to see how it could move the programme on. You have now said to the Committee members that it is OK. Therefore, you have relieved us of the time pressures that were placing on ourselves. We said to you that we would report as soon as possible, but you have made your decision and you were obviously not prepared to wait to see how soon as soon as possible might be.

Mr Poots: I do not assume that the Deputy Chairperson is going to tell me how long a piece of string is.

Mr McNarry: That is an erroneous comment. The phrase “as soon as possible” was recorded in the Hansard report, and you should have allowed us the opportunity to at least try to improve on the matter, which is what we were trying to do.

Mr Poots: I can set definitive dates only on the basis of the last definitive date that was given to me.

The Chairperson: I want to focus Committee members’ minds on start-up costs and estimated savings.

Mr Shannon: Minister, you have given us the start date for the library authority, which is 1 April 2009. Is it fair to assume that now that that date has been confirmed and you have a timescale to work towards, you have some idea of what the predicted savings would be? I appreciate the reply that you gave to the Committee, but it by no means ties down the figures. It refers to a figure over or under £670,000. The Committee is concerned that some of the savings could be made by reducing management-level staff at the boards. I am not sure how that would work. Have some backroom staff perhaps already been paid off? That is a matter of concern to the Committee.

The witnesses who have appeared before the Committee have indicated that redundancy savings are not normally realised for two years.

If that is correct, can you give a more comprehensive figure on what is going on? It has been intimated to the Committee that corporate services will be an ongoing additional cost for the new authority. With all those figures in the melting pot, the Committee deserves and needs an answer on the costs involved. The Committee has written to the Department seeking a breakdown of the estimated savings. Considering that the estimates are not based on specific costings and the amount of savings and staffing structure are unknown, can the Minister inform the Committee of the costs that will be involved?

Mr Poots: The Department stated that it was seeking to achieve savings of £600,000 for 2009-10 and £1.2 million for 2010-11. Mr Shannon is right to state that there is an initial cost to achieving those savings, because redundancy packages usually amount to more than the individual’s annual earnings: a more attractive package will encourage people to consider redundancy. The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure can apply for year-end flexible funding, which allows for one-off bids. Therefore, while there are real pressures on this year’s resource budget — and all Departments are finding it difficult — there will be opportunities to introduce funding to the Department through the end-year flexibility, and that money can be used for staff redundancies, for instance. There will be additional costs at the outset, but they will lead to savings in the longer term, and that is what we are looking to achieve.

Ms Knox: If we are to make long-term savings in the administration of the Library Service, we must look at an invest-to-save approach — we must find money through the process that the Minister talked about. The Department must also have the funding required to release the staff at senior levels in current boards who wish to take voluntary redundancy, and that will, therefore, release funding in the longer term. I want to reinvest in front-line services. The whole point of having a single library authority is that we can streamline the administration and release funding into the front line. In order to do that, we must take an initial invest-to-save approach.

Mr Shannon: When do you hope to have more concrete figures? Ms Knox, are you saying that you will not be able to provide us with accurate figures for some time?

Ms Knox: There will have to be consultation with trades unions when the organisational structure is developed, because the new structure may well impact on current staff. Following that process, we will cost the structure, examine what savings can be released and consider how to do that and establish what initial investment will be needed to achieve longer-term savings.

Mr Shannon: I asked my question because the Committee is not convinced that there will be savings: that is our worry. It has been intimated to us — right down the line — that there will be savings, but, from what I hear, I am not sure that there will. We would like to think that there will be.

Mr Poots: The Department of Finance and Personnel has already agreed to the figures that will be involved if we go down that particular route. If we were to move away from those figures, it would only be with the agreement of the Finance Department. I assure the Committee that once the Finance Department thinks that it has got something, it is not keen to return it. Ultimately, savings have to be made, and they cannot be made in front-line services — they must be made through administration. I will be honest: it will cause difficulties, particularly for the people who work in administration, and I have no doubt that the unions will have difficulties with that. However, we, as public representatives, are running the country, and we will have difficult decisions to make. The unions are entitled to make their cases on behalf of the people that they represent, but if there are savings to be made, they will be made in administration and personnel. That is harsh, but it is the reality.

The Chairperson: Does that mean that you will change the explanatory memorandum, Minister?

Mr Poots: In what respect, Chairman?

The Chairperson: I refer to the start-up costs that appear in the explanatory and financial memorandum. Would you like to take up that point, Mr McNarry?

Mr McNarry: Will the explanatory and financial memorandum be changed to reflect more realistic start-up costs? Having heard about the new date, I assume that the staff involved will be aware of that as soon as possible, if they are not already. It will also affect their plans. It will have a major effect, particularly on those who face retirement or are thinking about it. I am sure that their concerns are uppermost in the Minister's mind.

Mr Poots: Yes.

Mr McNarry: Has the Minister informed his Executive colleagues — in particular, the Minister of Finance and Personnel — about the new date? What bearing will shifting the date have on the start-up costs with regard to Budget bids, et cetera? The Minister has made an announcement to the Committee, which has come as a surprise. Until now, the Committee has worked on the basis that it had reasonable time to catch up with the Department.

People who have given evidence to the Committee have referred to the Deloitte & Touche report's estimate of start-up costs of £965,000, which goes against the Department's original estimate of £670,000. The Committee still does not know where the estimation should sit. In fact, even the Department is not sure whether its original figure is an overestimation or an underestimation. Where will that estimation bounce to if the start date is April 2009? Where does the current bid for £550,000 for corporate services now sit? Surely the Department cannot spend the money, but must it still bid for it?

To return to the point that the Chairman made; it, therefore, seems reasonable that the financial and explanatory memorandum be amended to provide a more realistic estimation of the start-up costs. Can the Minister tell the Committee that it will be amended; that the Committee will be advised about that; and that the Department will do so quickly? The matter is crucial to the Committee's deliberations. I understand that the Minister's announcement has given the Committee more time. However, it must still work at its own pace.

Mr Poots: I informed the Executive that the Committee Stage of the Libraries Bill would be extended by four months and that that might have implications for the introduction of a single library authority on 1 April 2008. Therefore, Ministers are aware of those implications. After the Committee, I will inform them of the current situation. I will ask the chief executive designate to inform the chief librarians immediately, so that they can inform their staff forthwith. My reporting responsibilities are to the Committee and the House. Therefore, I gave due courtesy to the Committee by making the announcement here.

With regard to the £550,000 for corporate services, those costs will be elongated as a result of the process. The costs include the salaries of the chief executive designate and her current team and the accommodation exercise. However, there are other appointments that the Department would have made earlier in the process that will now be delayed due to the change of date. That figure will, therefore, be different for those reasons. The Department has taken the decision to change the date this week. It will, therefore, need time to work on some of those figures before it can provide the Committee with more concrete estimations.

Mr McNarry: I must press the Minister again about whether he will amend the explanatory memorandum.

Mr Poots: The Department will still aim to make the savings that appear in the memorandum unless it negotiates different figures with the Department of Finance and Personnel. At present, however, I cannot amend it.

If we find that those figures are stretching things a little, we will have to go back to the Department of Finance and Personnel and indicate that there are no savings to be made.

Mr McNarry: When we move to the Budget discussion and the consultation process, will those figures remain the same?

Mr Poots: We are working to those figures. If we find that they are unreasonable and we cannot work within those figures, we will seek to have them amended.

Mr McNarry: Will you inform the Committee of any change?

Mr Poots: Yes.

Mr P Ramsey: Minister, you are very welcome. It is always good to see you at these discussions. The Committee is uncertain about the way forward. I have missed some of the presentations to the Committee, but, at every meeting that I have attended, the utmost concern has been expressed about the value of a library authority. Are you persuaded that a single library authority is the best way forward to provide services that will match the existing services? Officials from one board told us that the start-up costs are £1.5 million, but someone else quoted a different figure, so David's points are valid and consistent in terms of the agreement that members have reached.

When witnesses address the Committee on the matter, we find that six more questions need to be answered by the end of it. Hansard provides a report of the meetings and representatives from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure attend the meetings, therefore, one would imagine that the Committee would have a better way of getting answers, rather than getting the Minister to attend to ask him the questions. A series of questions have been raised, but the answers could be found in an easier way. Your time is precious, Minister, and the Committee's time is precious, therefore, there must be a better way of giving the necessary comfort and responses to members. Morale and motivation will be low now, as the introduction of the library authority has been postponed by a year. Again it is all about savings.

What are the redundancy costs? What will be the branding of the new organisation? What is the cost of establishing a new regional office or subregional offices? The subregional facility has been talked about, but none of us knows what it means. We do not know whether it be coterminous with the new local authority. We need to question the validity of the library authority and settle arguments in order to be convinced to move forward and take ownership of a new single library authority, because, at the moment, too many questions remain unanswered.

This is not directly related to legislation but, under existing arrangements, there is a formula to ensure that each area is guaranteed appropriate funding in targeting social need. Will that continue to be the case? That has not been discussed. In the present Library Service we have potential to access external funding, such as European peace moneys. Some senior librarians may be encouraged to leave the Library Service if they are offered a good lump sum, so we may lose those specialist skills and capacity.

The Library Service is an excellent resource for providing lifelong learning and early years programmes. It also assists the Department of Education to deliver targets in literacy and numeracy skills. I have raised this question continuously with the boards: will there be joined-up thinking and a separation of the library authority from the schools section? Economies of scale enable the Library Service and the Department of Education to operate collectively, but what will happen when they separate? Will there be costings involved? Will there be separate buildings? Will there be a continued role for the Department of Education in the early years programme? For months, the Committee has had questions and been uncertain about it. There is good reason to extend the consultation period, so that we can be certain and support you in bringing forward the legislation. At the moment, I do not think that anyone in this room is certain.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for that. The review of public administration will create uncertainty across virtually all of the bodies that are affected by it. That goes with the territory. Those who have vested interests will come to the Committee and they will not want to change anything or do things differently, because they are protecting their own interests. However, I have to take a more global look at it.

There are three options: first, to allow libraries to stay with education and, rather than becoming the education and skills authority, have them become the education and library skills authority instead. In my opinion, that would mean that libraries would play second fiddle to the big players. Libraries would be the tail of the dog, and they would not get a fair crack of the whip.

Libraries have a much better case with a single library authority than with the education authority.

The second option is for local authorities to have responsibility for libraries. Having spoken to people who work in libraries and people from the main union, NIPSA, there is total opposition to that. One trade union with a substantially smaller number of members would consider a move to local authorities. Overall, the people who work in libraries are clear that they do not want the local authority scenario. It would result in seven, 11 or 15 bodies overseeing libraries and would multiply, instead of reducing, the number of people that are involved in administration.

The third option is the creation of a single library authority.

Those are the three options. Doing nothing is not an option, because the education and library boards are going. Of the three options, I am convinced that a single library authority is the best option for libraries and for staff. It would mean the creation of a public-service body, which would have a clear and definitive role for libraries in Northern Ireland, and which would be accountable to the Department and the Committee. That is preferable to the responsibility for libraries being buried somewhere else, or a multiplicity, rather than a reduction, of administration.

I am acutely aware of the problems that uncertainty creates among staff. That is why I did not change the decision to set up the library authority in April 2008 at an earlier point. I have now decided on April 2009, and I will stick to that rather than pick another date during the year and then find that there are additional problems. The extra year leaves adequate time to deal with the changes, and staff know that they can work to the April 2009 date with some comfort.

Mr P Ramsey: I asked a number of questions to the Minister, and I do not suggest that he will have all the answers today. In light of the information that he has already given, can the Committee have a more detailed response to those questions?

Mr Poots: I am quite happy for a more effective system of communication exchange to take place. If you are telling me that there has been a fall down in communication, I am happy for questions to be posed directly to the chief executive designate. I expect to see the questions and responses so that I can keep my finger on what is going on and so that the Committee does not have greater knowledge than what I have. I am happy for a better form of communication to take place.

The Chairperson: We might discuss the detail of some of Mr Ramsey's particular issues.

Mr D Bradley: Minister, you did not say whether or not you would amend the explanatory and financial memorandum to take into account the adjusted start-up costs.

Mr Poots: I am not saying that I would not do that, but I am not in a position to say that I will. The Department will have to identify whether the proposed finances are reasonable and can be delivered. If the finances are reasonable, I will not amend the explanatory and financial memorandum; but I will consider doing that if the finances cannot be delivered.

Mr D Bradley: How far are you from final, complete and reliable costings? What external studies have the Department commissioned to help you formulate the costings?

Ms Knox: DCAL is working on the final, complete and reliable costings, and I am not in a position to consider that. However, I have had discussions with the Department about the likely implications of a delayed start date. As the Minister said, he only made that decision this week. DCAL is working on the cost implications of that.

Mr D Bradley: Do you have any figures?

Ms Knox: I do not have figures; perhaps Mr Jack has figures on that. The Deloitte report, of which members have copies, is an external study that was commissioned by the Department to help it formulate the costings.

I have looked at that report, tested some of its assumptions about external costs and spoken to the Department about the costings in order to find out if there is flexibility.

Mr Jack: We will need to carry out more work on the detail of the costings. The main impact of the change to the timing is the period that the chief executive designate and her immediate team need to be paid for as the designate, rather than the affirmed chief executive and senior team of the substantive library authority. The main costs are for salaries and premises for that additional year.

Having said that, the corporate services costs of the full library authority will be incurred later; however, the significant costs of setting up the corporate services and the new organisation are of a one-off nature. Those one-off costs will not differ because of the change to the timescale, so the main impact will be that some elements of salaries will be required for a longer period, and others will be delayed. As mentioned earlier, it will take time for savings to be realised: to an extent that element is delayed. We have some more detailed modelling to do. It is a complex exercise to work out what the staffing structure of the new authority will be. We are working constantly to refine the figures. So far, the main basis that we have for estimating the costs is the Deloitte report, and it is simply about looking at how changing the timing changes the phasing of the figures in that report.

Mr D Bradley: What timescale are we talking about for the final costings? Will it be three months, or six months?

Mr Jack: That will be heavily dependent on the new structure that the chief executive designate will draw up.

Mr D Bradley: What intrigues me about this is that the costings for the Bill are far from complete. Therefore, I am surprised that the Minister came to the House on Tuesday and rejected the Irish language legislation, which is further down the legislative schedule than this Bill. He rejected that legislation largely on the basis of costings, so why is it taking so long to cost the library authority when the Irish language legislation was rejected in a much shorter timescale? The consultation stage had hardly been finished.

Mr Poots: Well, I —

Mr D Bradley: Please allow me to finish, Minister. It appears that there is a contradiction in the Department's actions, and a lack of consistency in approach. On the one hand, there is a Bill that is going through the Committee Stage, which has not been fully costed even with external professional help, and on the other hand there is a proposed Bill that has not even reached the Committee Stage, but has been rejected largely on the basis of costings, and without any external professional help.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for his questions. First, we are working on assumptions in relation to costs of the Libraries Bill. Irene must identify how she is going to set up the structure, and, hopefully, we will reach a more definitive point in considerably less than six months. I would like to see that completed in closer to three months, by the end of this year.

The other issue is not on today's agenda. I asked for assumptions on cost to be made for that as well, and I asked that that should be done at a high level. Therefore, the assumptions that were made will give a reasonable indication of what those costs would be. In addition, I gave the costs exclusively for the Civil Service, and I did not cover education boards, health trusts, councils or other bodies for which there would be a cost issue.

I will never apologise to the Committee or the Assembly for seeking to save money on administration. I believe that public money saved on administration can be directed towards front-line services. That is key to what we, as public representatives, do, and the public will hold us accountable for the delivery of those services. Northern Ireland has a poor level of front-line services across a whole range of Departments, and we would do well to seek to put as much money as possible into those front-line services — the casualty units, the sports facilities provided around the country and the libraries, many of which fall short of standards that we could be proud of. We should go forward and see how money can be saved, so that it can be distributed to the public in the most effective way.

Mr D Bradley: I am not asking the Minister to apologise for anything. He is entitled to make savings, and we would all support him in that. We must be sure that the figures that we get are accurate. Will the Minister not accept my point that there is a lack of consistency in approach between those two pieces of legislation? The Department should be consistent in its approach. The Minister said earlier that he would welcome an improvement in the exchange of information or communication between the Committee and the Department. However, some members of the Committee knew the previous week the content of the statement that the Minister made on Tuesday morning, and he did not come to the Committee. I believe that the Chairperson asked to meet him. There are issues around communication.

The Chairperson: Mr Bradley's point is noted. We will have one or two final comments on the Libraries Bill.

Mr McCausland: The difficulty for the Committee, and the Minister in many ways, has been that the legislation started under direct rule, and the Assembly became involved in the middle of the process. Many of the earlier stages were badly handled under direct rule. However, things have improved dramatically under devolution.

Can I have clarification of the timeline? Legislation will be passed and we will know how many members a shadow board will have, and then it will have to be constituted. There will then be the process of recruitment to the board, and it will then kick in. What is the timescale for those procedures?

Mr Poots: I would hope to have the legislation through by the summer recess, and if that is the case we could go ahead and appoint a shadow board in the autumn. We aim to appoint the shadow board in October, so the chief executive would, to some extent, be reporting to the board in shadow mode.

Mr McCausland: So it would be mid-financial year, roughly?

Mr Poots: It would, and then it would move forward in the new financial year. Setting up such a board or authority in mid-year would ensure that the financial impositions and corporate governance standards would immediately apply for the full year, but you would only be getting a number of months out of it.

Mr McNarry: I thank the Minister for coming. I want to emphasise that the Committee has great doubt about his figures stacking up. The evidence is to the contrary from every source that we have looked at. If the Minister can show that his figures stack up or, indeed, if he can come clean and say that they are wrong, then the Committee could get to grips with the issue better and quicker. Will the Minister let the Committee know as soon as possible if there are any changes in his figures or assumptions? The Committee thinks that the figures are way out.

Mr Poots: That remains to be seen. Assumptions have been made, and I cannot say that those assumptions are wrong. If Mr McNarry is talking about the figures being way out, and the difference is £200,000 of savings instead of £1.2 million savings, then the figures are way out. I would not anticipate that the figure will be £1.2 million exactly. I am sure that there will be some difference. Nonetheless, as soon as I have those figures, and as soon as we can move from the basis of assumptions to something more definitive, I will be happy to keep the Committee informed. However, we have not yet reached that point.

The Chairperson: I thank the Minister and his senior colleagues for appearing before the Committee this morning to discuss the Libraries Bill.

Minister, do you intend to make a brief statement on the Budget?

Mr Poots: Budget issues are still being discussed at the Executive Committee. There will be further discussions today about ISNI. It has been a difficult negotiating round. I have fought hard for this Department and will continue to do so. Year 1 is a difficult year for all Departments. Years 2 and 3 will also be difficult, if we decide to ignore the recommendations of Water Reform NI. Years 4 and 5 will be difficult for capital development, if we do not examine what the Government have land banked and offload some of the assets that we do not currently use.

In all of this, difficult decisions must be taken. My duty is to fight for my Department. I will try to obtain the best possible result for the service of culture, arts and leisure over the incoming year.

The Chairperson: I thank the Minister, Mr Jack and Ms Knox.

Mr Poots: Mr McNarry is away. I did not get an opportunity to thank him for the opening rounds. I am going to see Noel Thompson, so it was good for a warm-up.

The Chairperson: Members, having heard the Minister's evidence on the Libraries Bill, are there any issues on which further clarification is required from any of the witnesses? We can write to the Department.

Mr K Robinson: I wish to make a general point. There was a point in the Minister's presentation when he appeared to be a bit peeved with the Committee. I hope that, by the end of the exchange, he realised that the Committee has had real difficulties. We are not dragging our feet. We have been dropped into the middle of a process, and we are trying to establish where the firm ground is, so that we can build it up and get it right. It is not just a matter of getting it done. That is what seemed to be coming through at one stage. We are trying to get it right; and that is a difficult process. I hope that the Minister realised that from the questioning.

Mr D Bradley: I would like further clarification, if possible, on what conversations the Minister may have had with the Department of Education about possible synchronisation of the establishment of the library authority and the education and skills authority. Also, I would like clarification on how links between the public library service and the schools' library service will be maintained and developed and what type of service level agreement there will be and what issues it will cover.

The Chairperson: It is agreed that the Committee will request that information.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Thursday 18 October 2007

TAXIS BILL (NIA 4/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Patsy McGlone (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Trevor Clarke
Mr David Ford
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mr Samuel Gardiner
Mr Ian McCrea

Witnesses:

Mr Bill Lavery	}	Department of the Environment
Mr John McMullan
Mrs Adele Watters

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): I welcome Mr Bill Lavery, Mr John McMullan and Mrs Adele Watters from the Department of the Environment. I believe that you are going to give the Committee a short introduction and that John will then provide a short summary of each clause.

Mr Ford: On a technical point; when they were with us last week, the officials were referring to the printed copy of the Bill, which contains line numbers. Committee members have before them what appears to be a printout from the website, which does not have line numbers. That makes it difficult to follow what the officials are talking about in detail. Could we all have the same version of the Bill when we are doing clause-by-clause scrutiny?

The Committee Clerk: The master file and copies of the Bill should be here.

The Chairperson: Do members have a photocopy of the original Bill?

Mr Ford: The problem is that each version we have been given has not been a copy of the original Bill.

The Committee Clerk: We will get that version for members.

Mrs Adele Watters (Department of the Environment): I will make a few brief introductory comments on two matters. The first is a preamble to today's proceedings, and the second will pick up on some of the matters that the Bill Clerk mentioned concerning the enabling nature of the Bill. The Bill team is happy to be here today, and we will try to assist the Committee in any way.

First, we have been working with the Committee Clerk and her staff to provide the Department's comments on the key issues identified in the written submissions and in the oral evidence. Although the Department has not attempted to respond to every comment, we are happy to answer questions on anything raised in the written submissions and oral evidence or on any other points pertaining to the Bill. We will try to answer members' questions as fully as possible, but, if there are questions we cannot answer, we will try to respond before next week's meeting.

Secondly, the Bill is enabling legislation: its purpose is to put into place a new framework for taxi regulation. When the proposed legislation was being brought forward as an Order in Council, the Department issued an information note with it at consultation stage — that note has been circulated to members. It set out the Department's vision and described the key elements of the new system when fully in place. The Department is pleased with that approach because it was open and transparent and helped us to engage stakeholders, particularly the taxi industry, in the issues. It has also meant that the Committee has received a number of responses, some directly on the Bill and many others on the implications of the future reform programme.

As the Bill Clerk said, there will be a lot of detail in the implementation of the Bill, and we will be returning to the Committee with consultation papers, regulatory impact assessments and, of course, regulations. We will be able to engage with the Committee on detail at that time. We look forward to engaging with the Committee over the coming years in that programme and are happy to start today by assisting with the clause-by-clause scrutiny.

Mr John McMullan (Department of the Environment): Part 1, Chapter 1 of the Bill deals with the regulation of taxi operators. Clause 1, which deals with the requirement for operator's licences, is one of the Bill's fundamental clauses. At the moment, there is no regulation for taxi operators in Northern Ireland. Clause 1 will make it a requirement for a person to have an operator's licence before he or she can operate a taxi service. Operating a taxi service without such a licence will be an offence with a maximum fine of £5,000. The exception to that requirement will be for the "affiliated driver", who is a person who works for an operator and therefore comes under the umbrella of that operator's licence.

The term "operate a taxi service" is defined in the Bill and encompasses the present modes of taxi business, which are: accepting a taxi booking and standing or plying for hire. It is worth mentioning that, at the top of page 2 of the Bill, the definition of the term "operate a taxi service" is "subject to such exceptions as may be prescribed." That phrase will allow the Department to make exemptions to the requirements of an operator's licence. Basically, that is the set-up.

The Chairperson: Will you clarify where that provision may be found in the Bill?

Mr McMullan: It is the last few words of clause 1. The wording reads:

"subject to such exceptions as may be prescribed."

The Chairperson: Did you say exceptions or exemptions?

Mr McMullan: The word is "exceptions". It allows us to except — or exempt, I suppose — certain activity that does not equate to operating a taxi service.

Mrs Watters: Does the Committee want officials to address the key issues raised?

The Chairperson: I apologise. Do you mean as regards to how the Committee wishes to deal with the issues at today's meeting?

Mrs Watters: Yes.

The Chairperson: We would like you to present a brief overview of each clause, then, if members wish to raise an issue based on some of the written or oral evidence that the Committee has received, they can do so. Questions can also be based on the departmental comments that have been included in the synopsis. Members have the key issues before them, which they can peruse as you present details of the clauses. John, have you dealt with clause 1, completely?

Mr McMullan: Yes.

The Chairperson: Do members have any issues that they would like to raise from the evidence that has been received? I asked about "exceptions" or "exemptions" because of an issue that was raised by undertakers. They suggested that vehicles used for mourners should be granted an exemption from the licence. What is the Department's view on that?

Mrs Watters: Traditionally in Northern Ireland, funeral cars have been regarded as public service vehicles and have been licensed as taxis. They are granted many exemptions from certain requirements, such as those for signage, taximeters, and so forth. The Department has always taken the view that if a vehicle is being provided for hire and reward then, in the interests of those who pay for those services, it is important that such a vehicle is regulated.

The situation in GB is different, and that is partly why the National Association of Funeral Directors suggested the exemption. We do not know much more about the funeral directors' position other than what is in their written submission. We invited them to meet us, as did the Committee, to explore their position in more detail. Without pre-empting the outcome of that meeting, the Department's starting position is that it would prefer them to remain covered by the legislation rather than exempted on the face of the Bill. If a strong case were to be made, there is provision in the Bill for an exemption.

The Chairperson: Are there any other queries?

Mr Boylan: Are affiliated drivers who work for a firm but also work privately required to obtain an operator's licence?

Mrs Watters: I am not sure whether that issue comes under clause 1. Is the member content for us to return to the matter when it is dealt with under a later clause?

Mr Boylan: I just wondered, because affiliated drivers are mentioned in clause 1.

Mrs Watters: There may be occasions when the detailed comments have been correctly linked with a clause and other occasions when they relate to other clauses.

Mr T Clarke: To be seen as a totally reasonable person, given our last debate, I would say that clause 1 is fine. My only query relates to the smaller operator. Could the cost of an operator's licence be banded according to the size of a business? That would help small businesses and act as an incentive for them to ensure that they operate within the law.

Mrs Watters: Yes, there is that flexibility. In the information note to which I referred, we were conscious that the industry would be concerned about the size and structure of the fees. Feedback from the industry should that it would be happiest for the fee to reflect, roughly, the size of the business. Therefore, small operators would pay a greatly reduced fee.

The Chairperson: Are members content? Before moving on to clause 1(2) —

Mr McMullan: We have covered all subsections in clause 1. Perhaps we should move on to clause 2.

The Chairperson: Sorry, I did not realise that. In that case, is the Committee broadly happy with clause 1?

Mr T Clarke: During the oral submissions it was suggested that an operator's licence should be required at places such as Belfast City Airport. Would that form part of the legislation?

Mrs Watters: The legislation will cover every taxi business, irrespective of its size or where it operates.

Mr T Clarke: Therefore, a business operating there should have an operator's licence.

Mrs Watters: Yes, absolutely.

The Chairperson: Are members broadly content with clause 1?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 2(1) provides that: "Any person may apply to the Department for an operator's licence."

Clause 2(2) states that the applicant must state the name and address of an operating centre in Northern Ireland. Clause 2(4) states that the Department will grant an operator's licence if it is satisfied that the person is a fit and proper person and meets any other requirements that may be prescribed. The Department may impose conditions on a licence, and the important point to note in clause 2(5) is that it may specify a percentage of vehicles that must be of a particular class. The Department wants to be able to set a percentage for operators as regards accessible vehicles.

Clause 2(7) states that the licence will be granted for five years, and any refusal of a licence will be subject to appeal to the magistrates' court.

The Chairperson: Members will recall Mr Grogan, the driver with literacy problems, who provided evidence to the Committee. He is probably a brilliant driver, but he queried the obstacles that may be placed in the way of his being able to fulfil that role and how he — and people like him — could be accommodated. I am not sure where that is covered in the Bill, but it is an important issue.

Mrs Watters: I agree. Those points are reflected under clause 1. Mr Grogan said that drivers who cannot read or write should be exempt from holding an operator's licence — and I think that he said that in response to a question from Mr Ford. I believe Mr Grogan had two main concerns: first, he was concerned about whether he would be able to meet the training requirement; and, secondly, whether he would be able to maintain the required records. The Department's feeling is that the duties for an operator should be proportionate and take account of circumstances. A sole operator's recording requirements will be different from those required by a driver from a larger depot, for example. In discussion with Mr Grogan, we suggested that there would be different ways of recording the information that he was required to keep. The meters used in taxis are sophisticated small computers, and they may be able to keep a lot of the information that the driver is required to keep. The Department wants to explore various workarounds for operators' record keeping.

As regards training requirements, the Department has been working closely with GoSkills — part of the Sector Skills Council for Road Passenger Transport — and the Department for Employment and Learning. They will soon commence a specific programme to develop essential skills training for taxi drivers, who will be trained in reading, writing and ICT. It is intended that a number of drivers will undertake the training in the next couple of years. The Department, therefore, is taking a number of positive steps to accommodate such people as Mr Grogan.

Mr T Clarke: One of the issues arising was that a sex offender should not be able to obtain a taxi operator's licence. The Department's view is that:

"it would not be appropriate to amend the Taxis Bill to automatically bar any category of offender from obtaining a licence. Such a provision would potentially conflict with the Protection of Children and Vulnerable Adults Order (Northern Ireland) 2003".

Surely the opposite applies. Barring any category of offender would protect children, would it not?

Mrs Watters: That is correct. However, the Department is saying that the rules and arrangements for vetting and barring are set out in legislation relating to the protection of children and vulnerable adults, which came out of the Bichard inquiry into the Soham murders.

The Chairperson: Therefore, you are saying that there is other legislation to oversee those issues?

Mrs Watters: Yes. The Taxis Bill may state that a person must be fit and proper in order to get an operator's licence, but the Department can only go so far in stating what constitutes a "fit and proper person" before someone steps in and says that the arrangements for all occupations and professions are set out in other legislation.

The Chairperson: Therefore, other legislation would provide that definition for all Departments.

Mr T Clarke: However, the wording of the Department's response is not good.

Mrs Watters: I apologise if it looks as if there is some conflict.

Mr T Clarke: The response states that such a provision would potentially conflict with the protection of children, but the contrary is true.

Mr Ford: It says that it would conflict with the Order.

Mr T Clarke: That is not what it says.

Mr Ford: It is what it is says.

The Chairperson: We know now what the position is, so we have clarity.

There is a suggestion that provision should be made for an internal or independent review of DOE decisions before appeal to the courts. Is the Department going to provide for that?

Mr McMullan: The Department sees merit in this. A similar provision is included in clause 11, which I hope we will get to today. As occurs in other legislation, the first tier of appeal is to the Department. If a person is still dissatisfied, the appeal then moves to the magistrates' court. There are several benefits, in that cases that go to the courts unnecessarily can be filtered out and dealt with more quickly. Depending on the Committee's feelings, the Department would not object to a two-tier appeals system; the first being to the Department, and the second to the magistrates' court.

The Chairperson: Are members content with that?

Mr Ford: I want to refer back to the point made by Eamon Grogan. Does the Department see its provision as applying to existing taxi drivers only, or would it be a continuing provision?

Mrs Watters: It would be a continuing provision.

Mr Ford: I welcome the fact that the Department is saying that it sees merit in the informal appeal mechanism, but there needs to be a little bit more than merit. It is slightly anomalous that clause 11 has a specific provision for one area only. I would have thought that there needed to be a bit more spelling-out as to how such an appeal mechanism might operate, although I accept that most of it will be covered by subordinate legislation. One of the things that the drivers are looking for is an assurance that they will get some sort of hearing without having to end up in court.

The Chairperson: Is it appropriate for the Committee to ask for that to happen as a recommendation or an amendment?

Mrs Watters: The matter has been raised in written and oral evidence. As has been pointed out, there is an anomaly. The Bill was read across and was drafted from one piece of legislation in such a way that that provision only applied in one instance. Now that it has been brought to our attention, there is merit in applying it more broadly.

Mr Ford: Given the complexity across a range of different areas, I hope that the Department will return with a comprehensive set of amendments, rather than leaving us to do it. And, for the purposes of Hansard, I see the officials nodding in agreement. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content that this is a proposed amendment that could be agreed?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 3 places certain duties on licensed operators. First, an operator must use only licensed drivers and vehicles. Failure to do will result in a maximum fine of up to £5,000. An operator must also:

"keep such records as may be prescribed";

and those records are set out at clause 3(3)(b). An operator must be able to produce those records for departmental inspection. Records of complaints must also be kept, and complaints must be dealt with in such a manner as may be prescribed. Contravention of that provision could also lead to a fine of up to £1,000.

The point made by Mr Boylan is covered by clause 3(7), which deals with affiliated drivers.

"Subject to such exceptions as may be prescribed, a person shall not be an affiliated driver of more than one licensed operator at any one time."

Exceptions can be worked in under that provision.

The Chairperson: Are there any questions?

Mr Ford: How will that provision apply to a sole-operator who may, at times, want to work in a wider grouping and be affiliated to another operator while remaining a sole-operator? That point was raised in one of the submissions.

Mrs Watters: The Department is saying that the general rule should be that someone can work for only one operator at a time, and that if they are a sole-operator, they are working for themselves. In general, they would not be able to work for themselves and work for a depot as well. In a sense, they would have to make that election.

Through consultations with the industry, we are aware that there may be situations in which a person whose main work during the week comes from school contracts wants to work at the weekend for his brother who has a taxi company. Alternatively, he may want to be available for wedding services. Provided the case is made for such an arrangement, and that it does not undermine the overall intention of operator licensing and is not difficult for operators to control, such activity will be allowed.

However, it should be borne in mind that if someone is working for one operator, and is also working for himself or another operator, the difficulty could be that it may be unclear who that person is actually working for at any given time.

We have provided for exceptions in the Bill to cover situations such as that. The Department cannot foresee any definite exceptions, but has left it open for a case to be made.

The Chairperson: I see merit in the suggestion that the Department should take into consideration the recommendations of the General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland (GCCNI). I know that the Department is meeting with the GCCNI next week. If the GCCNI is to have a role, what shape or form would that take?

Mrs Watters: It could take the form of an amendment, which would be written into the Bill and would give the GCCNI a statutory role that would require the Department to consult with it on the arrangements for passenger complaints.

Alternatively, it could be the case that the first line of complaint would be to the operator; the second line of complaint would be to the GCCNI, copied to the Department. We want to meet with the GCCNI to find out what they would like to happen in practice, and we will then ascertain how that may be translated into an amendment.

The Chairperson: Do members agree that that should be proposed as an amendment?

Mrs Watters: Would the Committee like us to return with details for an amendment that would be agreeable to all parties?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 4 can be described fairly simply. It provides that a licensed operator may only sub-contract a booking to another licensed operator. To do otherwise will be an offence that can result in a £1000 fine being imposed.

The Chairperson: Are members happy with clause 4?

Mr Ford: Mr Samuel Egerton asked whether it was legal for someone to ask an affiliated driver to cover a job. Presumably, officials are saying that it is legal only if drivers tell their depot they are doing so.

Mrs Watters: Yes.

The Chairperson: In practice, how will that work? Would they inform their depot via mobile phone, or maybe text messages?

Mrs Watters: Yes, with a mobile phone or a text message it would be very easy to tell the operator that one is doing a job.

The Chairperson: Yes, as long as you have the number at hand.

Mr T Clarke: The job could be done by the time a text message is sent.

The Chairperson: Are we agreed on the general thrust of clause 4?

Members indicated assent

Mr McMullan: At clause 5, we move into chapter 2 of the Bill, which deals with the hiring of taxis at separate fares. Clause 5 is a general clause, as members can see from the title. It is declaratory, and it states that the bidding of taxis at separate fares is permissible is three ways. The first is under clause 6 by way of a taxi-sharing scheme. The second is under clause 7, which covers the circumstance in which all the passengers book their journeys in advance and consent to sharing a taxi. The third is where the Department authorises an operator to provide a service for the carriage of passengers at separate fares. That sets out what happens in clauses 6, 7 and 8.

Mr Ford: The nature of the schemes that the Department may approve appears to be rather unclear. Analogous examples came up in the evidence from the North-West Taxi Proprietors and that from Mr Samuel Egerton, who pointed out that on a weekend night in the centre of Belfast, a taxi driver who finds a passenger who wants to go to Glengormley and two for Ballyclare cannot put them all in his taxi together. Surely to be able to do so would be entirely sensible and worthwhile, and would be in keeping with the Committee's desire to see large groups of people moved as fast as possible at night. Am I correct that as those clauses are currently drafted, the circumstances that I have outlined are not legal, unless the passengers pretend that they are friends?

Mr McMullan: That situation is permissible if they book the taxi in advance, because they all consent to sharing the fare. Again, the mobile phone may be useful.

Mr Ford: If our aim is to get taxi ranks and taxi marshals to operate as efficiently as possible in Belfast, surely people would be asked to share taxis in the interests of efficiency? It appears that the circumstances that I have outlined do not fit the bill, with the clauses as currently drafted.

Mrs Watters: They do not fit the bill, in the sense that that all sounds reasonable. However, that situation can become unreasonable, and abuse can occur when the person who is dropped off first is charged approximately the same fare as if they had had exclusive use of the taxi, and the customers who are dropped off second are charged in the same way. In that case, the taxi driver wins, but the passengers have not won.

Mr Ford: They have not lost either.

Mr T Clarke: How do you police that situation?

Mrs Watters: Many complaints have been received about such situations. It is all very well when passengers consent, and they are happy, but the problem arises in the situation when there is enforced sharing. If a taxi is going in a certain direction, it is assumed that all the passengers must share the fare, but the basis on which the fare will be divvied up is not clear to the passengers, and that is a situation where abuse can take place.

Mr T Clarke: If two people pick up a taxi in Belfast and are not friends but constitute separate fares, surely the taxi driver has nevertheless done a good job by taking two people or parties off the street rather than leaving one for another taxi, which may not turn up, especially late at night. Were two people, one going to Glengormley and the other to Antrim, to get in a taxi, they would know that if they were going on their own, they would pay from Belfast to Glengormley, or to Antrim. Why make it so complicated?

Mr Bill Lavery (Department of the Environment): Traditionally, taxis are hired as a whole, although in Northern Ireland the legislation is silent on that. We are trying to legitimise taxi sharing. One of the main stems is the setting up of taxi-sharing schemes. The scheme would be ordered by the Department from particular locations, for example from busy spots in towns and particular ranks. The regulations governing the scheme would state the destinations to which the taxis would go.

Mr T Clarke: You are complicating the issue. Let us get back to the situation on Saturday night in Belfast. We have heard from the taxi industry that not enough taxis are in operation at that time. Say, for example, four people, two couples, are waiting to get a taxi home. One pair wants to travel to Glengormley and the other wants to travel to Antrim. Under this legislation, what practice are you trying to promote?

Mrs Watters: Under this legislation, we propose the setting up of a taxi-sharing scheme that would clearly state that the fare to Glengormley would be x and the fare on to Antrim would be y. Both those fares would be cheaper for the passengers than a single separate fare to either destination.

Mr T Clarke: So if I was travelling to Antrim, the person who is being dropped off in Glengormley would subsidise my fare to Antrim. That is what you are saying, and that is unfair to the taxi industry.

Mr Lavery: No.

Mr T Clarke: I will go back to my example of the two couples and the two fares. If those two couples had taken separate taxis, the couple travelling to Antrim would not have had their fare subsidised. Why are we penalising the taxi drivers for clearing the streets more quickly? That is, in effect, what the scheme would do.

Mrs Watters: Passengers have complained to the Department about their experience of enforced taxi-sharing, where the taxi driver gets all the benefit. He basically gets all the fares —

Mr T Clarke: He is providing the service.

Mrs Watters: Yes, the driver is providing the service, but on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. Either the passenger shares the taxi with someone else and pays the full fare, or they do not get a taxi at all. We would like a scheme whereby passengers can have exclusive use of a taxi if they wish, but, if they avail of a shared service, they would be able to get a price discount.

Mr T Clarke: The Department is putting a provision in the Bill that it cannot police.

The Chairperson: I was about to make that point.

Mr T Clarke: Through this provision, the Department is trying to criminalise taxi drivers and make life difficult for them, yet it cannot even police the proposal.

The Chairperson: Let us say that the fare to Glengormley is 20 quid and the fare to Antrim is 40 quid. The Department believes that there should be a required stipulation for a shared fee, whatever it might be. However, how can the Department ensure that those fees are charged?

Mrs Watters: Situations may arise whereby the passengers and the taxi-drivers are agreed on a fare, and it is in the interests of all parties to come to that arrangement. In those instances, you are right, we cannot enforce any stipulation. However, we want to make provision for sharing schemes.

The Chairperson: We are back to the situation that was described in evidence that we heard from disabled people. I read last night about a person who had to attend a meeting in the Stormont estate with the NIO. That individual obviously had to be here at a set time. That person had to pay a fare of, I think, 70 quid and had to footer around Stormont for about three hours. No matter how much we legislate here, in practice, excessive fares will still be charged.

Mrs Watters: Yes. However, we want to at least make provision in the Bill for shared schemes that are properly controlled, and that are of benefit to both the taxi driver and the passenger.

The Chairperson: That brings me back to the issue of control and enforcement. Those words pop up throughout the Bill.

Mr I McCrea: You talked about how the scheme would operate from specific ranks. However, passengers may not be near those ranks when they want to go home. Again, it is a matter of taking people off the streets at night. Surely the same rules should apply when someone hails a taxi on the street. I find it difficult to understand how the scheme will be policed. Taxi-sharing will continue to happen in Belfast, whether we like it or not, and whether or not we provide for it in the legislation.

If the scheme were to apply to taxis picking fares up on the street, how would the metering system be factored in? The meter runs from point of pick up to destination. The idea seems to be to help passengers by giving them a fare concession, but no concession can be given if a meter is in operation.

Mr Lavery: Not every taxi would be allowed to participate in the taxi-sharing scheme. The Bill states that the Department may by Order make a taxi-sharing scheme.

That would be a scheme with a starting point. Taxis at peak times, for example on Friday and Saturday night, that are prepared to travel long distances and accommodate a number of passengers, could drop passengers off on the Antrim Road perhaps, on the way to Glengormley. The fares for the taxi-sharing scheme would be set in the regulations by the Department. There are examples of those schemes operating in London. The main one is at Paddington Station, where a number of taxis provide a zonal service that people can use, providing they are prepared to share a taxi. The fares are set by Transport for London.

Mr T Clarke: Sorry, I cannot wait any longer to say this: London is bigger than Northern Ireland, so it would be ridiculous for us to try to copy something that is happening in London.

The Chairperson: There is another aspect to this aside from enforceability. What incentive is there for a taxi driver, other than some currently unenforceable legislative imperative, to do that?

Secondly, I can see how a zoned area works. If you hail a taxi and you know that it is part of a shared scheme, it is your choice, and may be an easy way to get home. The big problem that we have, particularly in Belfast, is will the Department define zones within which such schemes will operate, and only taxis authorised to provide shared services will be available?

Mr I McCrea: Accessible zones.

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr T Clarke: You are going to put taxi drivers against each other if you go down that route. That is provided that the taxi drivers operate the sharing scheme correctly, because if Patsy and I were taxi drivers, and I was picking up, and Patsy was sitting at the rank waiting for the next fare, if I take two to get the price of one fare that would leave Patsy with nothing. Taxi drivers would not want to take the fares. Why would Patsy want to take a double fare — a Glengormley and an Antrim lift — if he is only being paid for one.

Mr Boylan: To be honest, if I was paying a certain amount to travel from Armagh to Belfast, and someone got into the taxi at Portadown and paid the same as me, I certainly would not object to that. The main problem that I can see is enforcement. I would like to hear how that could be done. I understand the concept of the proposal. A taxi driver can pick up two people, and get paid £40 for a trip to Bangor and £20 for the half distance as well. What we want is a system that is fair and gives value for money to the passenger as well. I am concerned about enforcement.

The Chairperson: To come back to that point — the issue of zoning has obviously at least been raised, but have you given any further thought as to how that would work out?

Mrs Watters: Not a great deal. Remember, the taxi-sharing schemes are something that the Department may put in place, so there is discretion. Where taxi-sharing schemes have been implemented in GB, initially they were on a pilot basis to see how they would work in that particular environment, to assess the demand and to see how they would work out for passengers and drivers. Before the use of those provisions could be ruled out, there could perhaps be one or two pilot schemes, and we would then work out the details and any difficulties over zoning.

Mr T Clarke: We are launching the space shuttle before we have it built.

The Chairperson: We need to reach some conclusion. There have been some reservations and caveats inserted around clause 5.

Mrs Watters: To summarise to ensure that we are agreed: there is an issue about the enforceability of taxi sharing at separate fares. Also, is it that members can envisage situations that although everyone has consented to sharing, advanced bookings would be a problem? Are members saying that that should be provided for in the legislation?

Mr T Clarke: I am more concerned about the taxi industry. Cathal referred to an Armagh to Portadown trip. If a taxi drives through Portadown, and it is teeming out of the heavens, a customer should not get into that taxi if they do not want to pay the fare. I am thinking of the taxi driver here. Much of the legislation is designed for everyone, but, at the end of the day, the taxi driver is running a business and if he wants to drive past a fare, he should drive past it rather than picking up the fare to share it with someone else.

The Chairperson: What incentives for taxi drivers are contained in the legislation?

Mrs Watters: A taxi driver could take one passenger from Belfast to Glengormley and it could cost, for example, £8.00. However, under a taxi-sharing scheme, they could take five passengers, each paying £5.00, and the taxi driver could get £25.00, so everyone wins.

Mr T Clarke: That scheme does not exist.

Mrs Watters: Yes, I know, but that level of detail to allow for such a scheme could be provided in the legislation. The idea is that both parties would win in the taxi-sharing scheme. At the moment, when there is taxi sharing, the taxi driver wins and the passengers do not — apart from the fact that they get home.

Mr T Clarke: That is a fair system, as they are the guys who buy the expensive cars and sit out late at night when we are asleep in bed. Having listened to some of them, they have problems even paying for that investment. Three people sharing a taxi is the norm on Friday or Saturday nights anyway, so the chances of taxis having any space are slim. We are talking about something that does not even happen very often. Anyone who is in business likes to get the icing on the cake. For the taxi driver, the icing on the cake is when they get a double run in the one journey. They should be allowed that icing; therefore, I am against that clause.

Mr Lavery: Under the taxi-sharing scheme, the taxi driver would get more and the passenger would pay less.

Mr T Clarke: We do not have a taxi-sharing scheme.

Mr Lavery: Clause 5 makes provision for that. Not all taxis will participate in the scheme. There is provision in this clause for taxis operating under such a scheme to be discretely identified as taxi-sharing taxis operating from a particular location.

The Chairperson: Do you have locations in mind, or is that subject to further regulation down the line? Perhaps there would be pilot exercises, subject to zonings, to specific locations and to the identification of such taxis.

Mrs Watters: Exactly, that is correct. There could be a taxi-sharing scheme at a bus station or train station, for example, particularly where a flood of people arrive at one time. It helps to match passengers to taxis.

The Chairperson: Will you summarise your view of our opinion?

Mrs Watters: The Committee feels that enforceability would be a problem, and you would like the Department's views on how a taxi-sharing scheme could be properly enforced. In essence, that is really the issue.

Mr T Clarke: What about the taxi driver?

Mrs Watters: That is where piloting comes in. If the Department were to agree that a taxi-sharing scheme could be set up at Central Station, but the industry were not interested in getting involved, the scheme would not run. It would only run if members of the industry wanted to get involved and, in practice, they often do.

Mr T Clarke: That is fine, but what about the taxi drivers who would work from other ranks? We need to be sure that we are not tying down that taxi driver in other areas of Belfast or wherever it may be. It is all very well to talk of a special scheme operating at Central Station or wherever, but we have already put something in the legislation that will prevent that from happening.

Mr Gallagher: Since the Department has an enabling power, it can try out a pilot scheme and develop the taxi-sharing schemes, if there is anything worth developing as a result of the pilot. We are agreeing only that the Department has the power to do that. The taxi industry may then avail of the opportunity; but it is for the industry to reflect on whether it is viable.

Mr T Clarke: Are we not also saying that they cannot do all the different scenarios that we have said that they are doing? Are we not preventing them from doing that by agreeing to allow taxi-sharing schemes?

The Chairperson: We are providing the legislation, but that does not mean that the schemes will happen.

Mr Boylan: If the operators and customers consent to it they will try it out. That is their choice. We are making it available. If it does not work, it does not work.

Mr T Clarke: It says here, under Departmental comments, that this is: "to protect taxi users from being overcharged".

Do we accept that? Central Station is the pilot scheme; so take that out of the equation. If a taxi driver lifts three customers at Belfast City Hall to go to Glengormley or Antrim, and charges three different fares for three different passengers —

The Chairperson: Can we arrive at an agreement? Is the Committee happy with the summary that Adele has presented?

Mr T Clarke: No.

Mr Gallagher: Yes.

The Chairperson: Please read it out one final time.

Mrs Watters: Some members are concerned that the provisions that the Department would like to put in place in relation to taxi-sharing schemes may be unenforceable. One member considers it unfair on taxi drivers to be subjected to any restrictions on when they can charge separate fares, because that is, as he says, the icing on the cake.

Mr T Clarke: I am happy with that.

The Chairperson: We will review this aspect again.

[Laughter.]

Mr Gardiner: The issue is how the schemes would be policed; that is the bottom line.

Mrs Watters: Yes.

The Chairperson: We have covered clauses 5 and 6. We will move quickly to clause 7. I want to speed up progress.

Mr McMullan: We touched on clause 7 as well. That relates to customers booking a journey in advance and then consenting to share that taxi. Mr Clarke's point that we should not get hung up on the booking. People can hail a taxi and consent to the fare. That is something we will have to consider.

The Chairperson: Can we move to clause 8?

Mrs Watters: I should say that there are some points relating to clause 6 that the Committee has not addressed. It is suggested that taxibus operators who already hold a roads service licence should automatically be permitted to operate taxi-sharing schemes. The Department's view is that that would discourage competition. It was suggested that, if the Department decided to run a taxi-sharing scheme, there should be open competition for taxi drivers who want to be involved.

The Chairperson: We are agreed on that bit. Let us move on then to clause 8.

Mr McMullan: We can link clauses 8, 9 and 10, which all do the same thing. This is the situation where the Department can authorise an operator to provide a service at separate fares. This is really the bus-type service which the West Belfast taxis presently operate.

Clause 8 sets out the framework. It enables the Department to authorise an operator's licence to provide such a service and can restrict it to a particular class of taxi, which the Department sees as accessible taxis, and such other conditions that may be prescribed.

The information that the Department will want from an applicant is set out in clause 9:

"such information as may reasonably be required"

It also includes information about the timetabling of the service. When the Department is deciding on whether to authorise such a licence, it should consider various criteria. Those criteria are based on the interests of people that are likely to use the service, the people that are providing such a service, the suitability of routes, the need for the service and the effect on other holders of the same type of licence or a road service licence.

Clause 10(3) contains an exemption. It states that "Subsection (2)(a) shall not apply". Subsection 2(a) refers to the suitability of routes. As we said last week, the Department intends that someone who, as the holder of a road service licence, has already gone through all those criteria, should not have to go through the process again. Rather than linking to one criterion, they should be exempt from the whole provision if they hold a road service licence.

Mr T Clarke: How does a taxibus work?

The Chairperson: Not mechanically, I hope.

Mr T Clarke: No, how does it collect its fares?

Mr Lavery: Taxibuses operate in seven routes in west Belfast and in north Belfast. For PSV purposes, they are licensed as taxis and they go through the PSV test annually. However, the service that they provide is not a typical taxi service. They do not respond to pre-booked calls, and they do not stand for hire as the black taxis in Belfast do. A number of years ago, in addition to licensing taxibuses as taxis, the Department decided to grant them a road service licence, which is a bus operator's licence, to operate the seven authorised routes.

Mr T Clarke: Taxibuses have various stops and they can lift more than one passenger at each of those stops. The person who gets on first pays the same price as the next person. That leads to the same point that I have just made about taxi drivers. It is unfair that there are any restrictions on when taxi drivers can charge separate fares. Taxibuses are exempt from those restrictions. A taxibus driver can go on a route and the first and last passengers may be charged £5 for a journey to the centre of Belfast; the passengers are charged separately. However taxi drivers cannot do that. That is a two-tier system, and I can understand the frustration in the industry towards taxibuses. That is why I asked you to outline exactly how they work.

Mrs Watters: The system is similar to any bus service. Currently, the standard fee on a Translink bus is £1.30, or 65p for a concession. It does not matter at what stage you get on the bus; everyone knows what the deal is.

Mr T Clarke: It is unfair that someone pays £1.30 and someone behind him also pays £1.30, no matter where they are going. It is considered unfair for taxis to charge separately but not unfair for buses to do it. It is considered unfair for someone to pay the taxi fare from Belfast to Glengormley, and for another passenger to pay the extra part of the fare to Antrim.

The Chairperson: The average punter does not see a distinction between taxis, whether they are black, blue or red.

Mrs Watters: The idea is that the deal should be transparent when someone gets a taxi. A taxibus is a type of bus, where the person pays, for example, £1.30 no matter at what point on the route they get on. If someone gets a taxi, they have exclusive use of it and they will pay what is charged by the meter at the end of the journey. Under a proper scheme, passengers would know that they would definitely get a discount if they shared a taxi. It would not be an icing-on-the-cake situation, where the passenger would pay the same if he or she had got the taxi themselves.

Mr T Clarke: That is unfair. If a person is travelling from Belfast to Antrim and knows that, because they are travelling alone, the fare will be £16. Why should the fare be different because the person is sharing that car with someone else? The person would have to share when travelling in a taxibus.

Mrs Watters: It is quite different. The general rule is that when someone opts to travel by taxi, the members of their party are going to be the only passengers. If someone opts to travel by bus, the deal is that they are sharing with other people and would pay a much cheaper fare.

Mr T Clarke: Are you saying that if someone gets into a taxi and there are two passengers in the back, they will not know that they are sharing it?

Mrs Watters: If there were no control over the sharing of fares, then one would have no way of knowing whether they are going to get ripped off.

Mr T Clarke: If it were made clear to the general public, then they would know. I draw a strong parallel between this clause and the one that the Committee discussed earlier. I have nothing against what is being said about taxibuses. However, I am trying to draw a comparison between taxibuses and taxi sharing, where people could be charged different fares.

The Chairperson: Will no taxibuses be participating in taxi sharing?

Mrs Watters: Operators may be licensed to provide taxibus services, and they may also want to work in a taxi-sharing scheme. This discussion is likely to get very complicated if we try to think of scenarios in which operators are doing both. However, it should be remembered that if a taxi is operating in a particular mode — for example as a taxibus — then there would be signage display requirements, which would state where the vehicle is going; for example from west Belfast to the city centre. Similarly, if the vehicle were part of a taxi-sharing scheme, it would be clear what scheme it is part of; for example, from Central Station to wherever. Therefore, taxibuses could potentially participate in taxi sharing.

The Chairperson: What are the Committee's views?

Mr T Clarke: It was suggested to the Committee that taxibuses should not be allowed to be used as normal taxis, yet the Department's response is:

"Such a rule would be unfairly restrictive particularly in areas where there are relatively few taxis."

The inference is that it is acceptable to be restrictive on taxibuses but unfair to be restrictive on taxis.

The Chairperson: Where are the areas with relatively few taxis? Taxibuses are a predominantly urban feature, are they not?

Mrs Watters: Taxibuses have been an urban phenomenon in Northern Ireland. However, in the Scottish highlands, for example, they are used in rural areas because although the local population may want a bus service, it may not be economically viable to use a large bus. For example, for journeys between an outlying village and a town, a taxibus might bridge the gap between having a weekly service using a large bus and a daily service using a smaller vehicle. The point being made in the submission was that a vehicle providing a taxibus service should never be used for any other service. That seems to be an overly restrictive measure to put in the Bill. A vehicle being used for taxibus services during the day — with proper signage — should be permitted to be driven at night by someone else for another purpose.

The Chairperson: That is fine. Is the Committee content?

Members indicated assent.

Mrs Watters: I do not think that there are any points that the Committee wants us to return with as regards taxibuses.

Mr Boylan: I think that they are fine. [Laughter.] Whatever way one looks at it, they are value for money. I know that Trevor is making a point —

Mr T Clarke: I am only using taxibuses to make a point about taxis.

Mr Boylan: I know that and totally agree.

Mr Gardiner: I am inclined to support Trevor, particularly when it comes to taxibuses. If a taxibus sets off from Lurgan to Belfast and a passenger gets in at Moira, which is eight miles down the road, for the sake of fairness, a meter should be fitted to help the driver calculate the lesser fare and allow the passenger to see how that has been done.

Mr T Clarke: In that case, you are not in agreement with me. In the example I used earlier, when the taxi leaves Belfast —

The Chairperson: The point that Mr Gardiner was making concurs with what Adele said, which would allow that elbow room and build in flexibility to allow taxis to travel outside zoned or urban areas.

Mr Gardiner: I am from Upper Bann, and was thinking about travelling from my area into Belfast, rather than coming from Belfast.

The Chairperson: As you should. Much of our focus has been on Belfast.

Mr Gardiner: There are six counties in Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with the discussion on clauses 8, 9 and 10?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We will move to clause 11. No issues have been raised.

Mr McMullan: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Presumably, by this stage, the Committee does not have any further issues. Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: We are now moving into Part 2 of the Bill, which covers the regulation of taxis. Clause 12 states that a taxi licence is required in order to use a vehicle as a taxi. Contravention of that requirement will result in a fine of £5,000.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 13 states that: “The owner of any taxi may apply to the Department for a taxi licence”.

Clause 13(2) is important because it allows the Department to grant a licence in respect of “(a) taxis of such different classes of use as may be prescribed; and

(b) such different classes of use”.

There has been a lot of talk about one-tier and two-tier systems of use, and I apologise if members have been searching through the Bill for those systems because neither of them is mentioned. Clause 13(2) will allow the Department to license different classes of vehicle. In theory, we could license vehicles as they are now — for public and private hire. However, we will be licensing vehicles as accessible or non-accessible within a single, clear system. Therefore, this is where the one-tier system resides in the Bill.

Clause 13(3) covers another important point. The Department will be able to set out in regulations the suitable type, size and design of taxis. That will give us the power to specify what is meant by an accessible taxi.

A taxi licence will be granted for one year, and, as mentioned earlier in relation to other appeals procedures, appeals will be to the magistrates’ court.

The Chairperson: Are there any issues?

Mr T Clarke: Will the Department clarify the last point? Moving to a one-tier system will undoubtedly affect Belfast public-hire taxis, which will still be allowed to use the ranks, but will they also be allowed to tout for other business?

Mrs Watters: Anyone who is allowed to use a rank will be allowed to pick up fares from the street.

Mr T Clarke: Thank you.

Mr I McCrea: If memory serves me correctly, there were concerns about reducing the term of the licence to one year.

Mrs Watters: The Bill proposes that drivers will be required to renew their licences every three years. Currently, that must be done every five years. We will come to that when we review clause 23, which will be for next week. [Laughter.]

Mr I McCrea: I am glad you pointed that out.

The Chairperson: Do you think so Adele? Of course, we would not assume that you are not ready for that. [Laughter.] We move now to clause 23. [Laughter.]

As regards clause 13, we received a suggestion on capping the number of public taxi hire plates and only increasing them in line with business needs. Is there any merit in that or, ultimately, is it down to the market finding its own way through?

Mrs Watters: It is down to the market finding its own level. It is very easy to get into the taxi industry, and there may well be an oversupply of taxis, although it may not feel like that at peak times. If the number of taxis were capped — and that is becoming less common across the UK — it would put a lot of power into the hands of the taxi industry. The moment it would be decided to raise the cap, taxi drivers would say that that affects the value of their licences. Licences would become tradable and transferable. In the South, licences were worth €130,000 before the industry was deregulated.

Mr T Clarke: How could a cap be imposed? How would someone bid to become included?

Mrs Watters: A limit of 11,000 taxis could be set.

Mr T Clarke: So those who are in, are in?

Mrs Watters: One would be pulling the ladder up, which is why the industry liked the idea.

The Chairperson: It is a bit like a pub licence.

Mrs Watters: Yes.

The Chairperson: The Committee received evidence that disabled people are being discriminated against. If they phone for a taxi they have to specify that they are disabled. That point was made during some very well articulated evidence from Mr Maguire. How can that situation be dealt with?

Mrs Watters: Mr Maguire went on to make the point that if all taxis were disabled-accessible nobody would have to say that they needed a taxi that meets their needs. If an operator has a mix of accessible and non-accessible taxis and it does not matter which taxi comes, that is fine. However, if someone needs a wheelchair-accessible taxi, they would have to request that from the operator. It is not a discrimination; it is an indication of the type of service that that person requires, and that an appropriate vehicle needs to be sent.

The Chairperson: Is there broad agreement on the issues regarding clause 13?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 14 places certain duties on the owners of licensed taxis. An owner will be required to present a taxi for inspection and testing through the Department. The taxi will not be required to be presented on more than three occasions in any one period of 12 months. Owners must report any accidents to their vehicles, particularly if it affects the safety or performance of their vehicle, and they must also report change of ownership and return the licence and the plates. Again, contravention of that will be an offence and incur a fine of £1,000.

The Chairperson: That brings things more or less into line with what the rest of us do with our own private vehicles.

Mrs Watters: Statutory off-road notification (SORN) applies to normal vehicles, and it would apply anyway if the vehicle were destroyed or sold on.

Mr I McCrea: I know that this question is going into details, but are you talking about any damage to a vehicle? Is it specific to any area, or damage, that could risk someone's health? Would it apply to any bump?

Mr Lavery: PSV regulations specify the extent of damage and define the word "bump". Strictly speaking, any accident should be reported and the vehicle should be taken off the road while it is repaired. It is a matter of standards of service to the public; it is a public-service vehicle.

The Chairperson: Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 15 deals with the identification of licensed vehicles. The Department will issue whatever identification plates, signs or distinguishing marks it decides to use. Driving a taxi without such identification will be an offence that carries a fine of £1,000. The plates must be exhibited in, "such manner as may be prescribed". That wording is important because it may be inappropriate to have taxi plates on wedding or funeral cars, for example, and it gives the Department some flexibility in dealing with such circumstances.

The Chairperson: There is nothing contentious there. Are members agreed?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 16 is one of the fundamental clauses in the Bill, and it deals with the regulation of fares. It allows the Department to set the maximum rates and fares to be charged for the hire of a taxi, and it will be an offence for a taxi to charge more than the maximum fare.

The Chairperson: The Committee Clerk has just pointed out to me that the General Consumer Council has raised some issues about the clause. Presumably, the Department will bring the General Consumer Council's recommendations back to the Committee.

Mrs Watters: Yes.

Mr T Clarke: I recall that there was talk about a maximum fare. I never use taxis, but does that refer to taxis that have a set fare for a journey before it begins?

Mrs Watters: That would be what people refer to as the minimum fare or the flag-fall fare.

Mr Clarke: OK. What is the maximum fare that was referred to?

Mrs Watters: There might be a tariff that could be tailored for different times of the day. For example, the maximum initial charge for a particular journey could be £2.50, with a further charge of £1 per mile thereafter.

The Chairperson: Sorry, do you mean that £2.50 would be the least that they could charge?

Mrs Watters: No, £2.50 would be —

Mr T Clarke: Is that the minimum charge?

Mrs Watters: It would be the maximum initial charge.

The Chairperson: The maximum —

Mrs Watters: It is the maximum minimum charge.

The Chairperson: Do you mean the maximum basic charge?

Mrs Watters: Yes. When a person gets into the taxi and the driver turns on the meter, that fare would be displayed.

The Chairperson: Therefore, that fare cannot go any higher before the taxi sets off?

Mrs Watters: Yes.

Mr T Clarke: Are we talking about the maximum fare?

Mrs Watters: What we are saying is that when the Department sets fares, it —

The Chairperson: It is the maximum minimum charge.

Mrs Watters: Yes. It is the maximum minimum charge.

Mr T Clarke: Is that where the word "maximum" is coming from?

Mrs Watters: The Department would set out fares and charges, which would show the most that a taxi could charge. We would not penalise anybody for wishing to charge less, for example by giving students or pensioners a discount.

Mr T Clarke: I cannot grasp that; the wording does not seem right. It is a minimum fare. Could we not give it a different name?

Mrs Watters: “Initial charge” might be a more useful term. There are people in the taxi industry who say that there should be a minimum charge. I am not sure whether they mean that there should be an initial fare or that, whatever the initial fare is, nobody should be able to undercut it.

Mr T Clarke: Could we say that there would be a standard charge to a maximum of such and such, or that a standard charge should not exceed a certain sum?

The Chairperson: Or, perhaps we could say that the initial fare shall be no greater than an agreed amount?

Mr T Clarke: Yes.

Mrs Watters: There is a concern in some parts of Northern Ireland — for example, in Derry/Londonderry — where some drivers say that operators are charging uneconomic fares. Ultimately, the drivers suffer because fares are their income, and they want to be guaranteed at least £3 for every journey.

Mr T Clarke: Some of them have referred to a maximum fare.

Mr I McCrea: Will meters be set to the highest possible minimum fare? Some drivers have asked that the highest possible charge for the minimum fare is set.

Mrs Watters: There are technical details with regard to the calibration of meters.

The Chairperson: The Committee is confused about the wording, and there appears to be a need to tighten the precision of the wording in order to ensure that it is not subject to other interpretations.

Mr Lavery: The Republic of Ireland’s Taxi Regulation Act 2003 provides for maximum fares. The Committee may be aware that, in September 2006, the Republic introduced a national taxi fare across the industry on the basis of the maximum fare described in the Act.

The Chairperson: That is precisely the issue under discussion. Perhaps there is an appropriate form of words from which we can learn in the Act.

Mr Gardiner: I believe that it is the “maximum minimum” bit that is confusing. I understand where you are coming from but —

Mrs Watters: The words “maximum minimum” do not appear in the legislation. There is no reference in the legislation to an initial charge.

Mr Gardiner: Joe Public will not understand that. If members are confused, how are the public supposed to understand it? Words must be selected that will convey the message.

Mr T Clarke: I understand the term. It was the industry that did not understand it. When drivers gave evidence to the Committee, they referred to minimums and maximums.

Being from a rural area, I know that there is no minimum charge when someone gets into a taxi. I am concerned that there should be a mandatory maximum initial charge.

Mrs Watters: The Bill’s provisions would not make that mandatory, although some people in the industry would like it to be.

Mr T Clarke: We need to agree a form of words that would mean that the minimum fare could not exceed a certain sum of money. People in the countryside, particularly the elderly, depend on taxis to take them on short journeys. Where I live, there is a charge of £2.50 from outside the town. However, if a senior citizen is charged £2.50 before they are even taken down the street, the eventual fare will be too expensive.

Mrs Watters: Often the initial charge will cover the entire journey because the meter does not start the minute that the taxi moves off. Sometimes, the initial charge will include a certain distance.

Mr Lavery: When the meter is engaged, the minimum fare shows up automatically.

Mrs Watters: That is not a requirement of the Bill.

The Chairperson: In order to reflect the Committee’s views, can the wording be tightened up in order to make it more precise and clear?

Mr I McCrea: Is it the Department or the individual driver who sets the tariff on meters?

Mr Lavery: Normally, each taximeter is calibrated.

The Chairperson: That matter will come up when we discuss taximeters during our consideration of clause 18. The Committee is seeking further clarification on clause 17. Are Members content?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: As you rightly pointed out, Mr Chairman, clause 18 is linked to fares. It will be a requirement for all taxis to have a taximeter and a receipt printer, and it will be an offence if a taxi is not fitted with those devices. The Department has the power to regulate the testing, sealing and operation of taximeters, the display of tariffs and the details that must be included on receipts.

The Chairperson: Are there any questions?

Mr I McCrea: It should be compulsory to issue receipts on request. In evidence to the Committee, it was clear that people were being overcharged. Therefore there should be a mechanism whereby passengers who ask for a receipt should get one. That would be evidence of whether they had been charged an amount between the recommended minimum and maximum fares.

Mrs Watters: Should receipts be provided only on request, rather than there always being an expectation that they will be issued, or are you saying that the onus should be on the driver to provide receipts rather than on the passenger having to ask?

Mr I McCrea: I do not mind not getting a receipt. However, if I wanted one, I would like to be able to get it.

Mr McMullan: The legislation covers that.

Mr I McCrea: I am happy to take it to mean that everyone will get receipts.

Mrs Watters: If every driver is required to have a receipt printer, the provision of receipts becomes less of an issue. The main thing is that drivers have the mechanism to create receipts.

Mr I McCrea: There would be a concern about the cost of the receipt printers to the taxi drivers.

The Chairperson: Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 19 states that each taxi may carry a prescribed number of passengers, and that is worked out in the regulations. To carry a greater number of passengers means a £1000 fine.

The Chairperson: Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 20 sets out the Department's regulatory powers. There has been much talk about the Taxis Bill being an enabling Bill, and this is the classic enabling clause. Clause 20(1) states that the Department can make general regulations relating to taxis. Clause 20(2) allows the Department to regulate on a wide range of issues. Some provisions look to the future, such as regulating the colour of taxis — and I do not expect to see yellow taxis on the streets in Northern Ireland any time soon. The clause simply details issues on which the Department may regulate.

The Chairperson: Are there any issues?

Mr T Clarke: I want to be clear about how clause 20 will work when the Bill is passed. I am not being facetious but should the Department decide to paint all the taxis yellow, how would it implement that decision? That is simply an example. The same applies to other issues, but you will kill my curiosity by answering that question.

Mr McMullan: The general procedure is the same as for making any regulation. We would consult with the industry, the Committee and other stakeholders before deciding whether the regulation is sensible.

Mr T Clarke: Would any new regulations become amendments to the Bill?

Mr McMullan: No. They would be made as separate sets of regulations that will be sent to this Committee to agree.

Mr T Clarke: Do not take this the wrong way, but does clause 20 give you a clean brush to do what you want?

Mrs Watters: No. Any changes require regulations. We would have to consult and carry out a regulatory impact assessment that we would share with the Committee.

Mr Gallagher: That is important to know.

The Chairperson: Adele, at the last meeting, an issue with respect to clause 20(2)(c) cropped up.

Mrs Watters: Yes. The taxi-marshal proposals.

The Chairperson: It was put to you then that a little more thought needs to be put into that concept to reflect the views of the Committee that someone could be standing at the kerb with absolutely no powers to do anything. The other aspect of that was that there was an overlap between any potential enforcement powers that may, or may not, be there, and lack of clarity on what the role of a marshal might be in certain circumstances, as opposed to the enforcement officers. To be honest, I am not a wild pile wiser after last week.

Can you come back to the Committee with some detail on how you envisage the taxi-marshal proposals being taken forward?

Mrs Watters: OK.

The Chairperson: Thanks for that. With that built in, can we agree, with that caveat, clause 20?

Mr Boylan: I want to raise the issue of seat belts. Some taxis have flip-down seats that do not have seat belts. I was thinking about that from the point of view of children using them.

Mrs Watters: The provision for seat belts in taxis is included in the legislation for seat belts in other vehicles, so that is not a Taxi-Bill issue directly, because it is already provided for. Recognition is taken of the fact that because of the nature of the journeys, not all taxis can be expected to have child seats or restraints available. Certainly, where restraints or seats are available, they must be used.

The Chairperson: Can we move to clause 21?

Mr McMullan: There is currently an anomaly between the Department for Regional Development (DRD) and DOE with regard to taxi ranks. DRD makes the policy for taxi ranks, but the legislative function rests with DOE. Clause 21 places the legislative function with DRD. An opportunity will arise, when total responsibility for taxi ranks moves over to DRD, to use the traffic attendants in an enforcement manner. We recommend that the traffic attendants should enforce the taxi regulation Order, which means that they will provide enforcement for incorrect parking at ranks and prescribe parking distances from ranks, etc. DOE can work out that transfer; it will require a small consequential amendment to a piece of DRD legislation.

The Chairperson: It says in the paper that you supplied on the proposed amendments to the Taxis Bill that:

“In the Department’s view, it would not be appropriate to extend the powers of traffic attendants to include the full range of enforcement powers.”

If they will not have the full range, what range will they have?

Mr McMullan: There is a distinction there in that the traffic attendants would not have any enforcement powers over the licensing of taxis. Their power would be confined to parking infringements at ranks. Their enforcement powers could be used, but only in relation to the parking of vehicles.

Mr T Clarke: Could that be clarified, because it is a bit of a grey area? I understand why they cannot have full enforcement powers — well I do and I do not, because we need a large degree of help with enforcement.

The Chairperson: I am not entirely sure that the first point squares with the second. Unless I am reading it wrong, it says:

“In future, DRD will make by means of ‘Taxi Regulation Order’” and then:

“DOE and DRD agree that it would be appropriate for traffic attendants to be able to enforce such regulation orders” .

Mrs Watters: The second sentence needs to come out. That is wrong.

“transfers the legislative function by making taxi stands from DOE to DRD by means of ‘Taxi Regulation Orders’.”

The Chairperson: Can we park clause 21 and get clarification on that. We can revisit it later. We will probably begin at clause 21/22 at our next session.

We are agreed that clause 21 needs further clarification? We have exhausted most of the matters that we wanted to address on the Taxis Bill today — unless anyone wants to ask another question.

Mr T Clarke: No, thank you.

The Chairperson: I thank members, and I thank Bill, Adele and John for giving us their time today. We will see you next week.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Tuesday 23 October 2007

TAXIS BILL (NIA 4/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Patsy McGlone (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Billy Armstrong
Mr Trevor Clarke
Mr David Ford
Mr Tommy Gallagher
Mr Samuel Gardiner
Mr Ian McCrea
Mr Daithi McKay
Mr Alex Maskey
Mr Peter Weir

Witnesses:

Mr John McMullan	}	Department of the Environment
Mrs Adele Watters

The Chairperson (Mr McGlone): Are the witnesses happy to continue with the process that we used last week?

Mrs Adele Watters (Department of the Environment): Yes. We have made available a short paper that addresses the issues that were raised on the earlier clauses. We can come back to that. I am happy to start with clause 22.

The Chairperson: Any member who has any interest to declare should do so now.

Mr John McMullan (Department of the Environment): Last week, we considered part 1, which refers to operator licensing, and part 2, which refers to the regulation of taxis. Today, we will move on to part 3, which refers to the regulation of drivers of taxis.

Clause 22 sets out a requirement that only the holder of a taxi-driver's licence may drive a taxi. Contravention of that requirement will be an offence, carrying a maximum fine of £5,000. It will also be an offence, carrying a fine of up to £1,000, for a driver to drive a taxi if he or she does not hold a licence for that class of taxi. For example, someone may be entitled to drive a non-accessible vehicle, but not a stretch-limousine. Basically, that is the general requirement as set out in clause 22.

Mrs Watters: Do you want to highlight the key issues, and I will respond?

The Chairperson: It worked well last week when members raised any issues that they had with the clauses. Therefore, members can do that again. Does any member have anything that he wants clarified in clause 22, or are members happy to move to the next clause?

Members indicated assent

Mr McMullan: Clause 23 is the main substantive clause in this part of the Bill. It provides that the Department shall grant a licence if satisfied that the applicant has been authorised to drive a car for three years prior to the application; is a fit and proper person; has undergone training; and has passed a test of competence to drive a taxi.

An important point to note on the taxi-driving test is that it will not apply to those who already hold a taxi-drivers' licence immediately prior to the provision's coming into effect. Therefore, it will apply only to drivers who are new to the industry.

The licence will be granted for up to three years; at present, it expires after five years. The licence will be granted for a specific class of taxi; for example, it may enable the holder to drive limousines only. The right of appeal, as it stands at the moment, is to a magistrate's court.

The Chairperson: Does any member have any queries regarding clause 23?

Mr Weir: Is the switch from licences expiring after five years to after three years in order bring that area into line with Department for Transport best practice?

Mrs Watters: Yes, both the Department for Transport and DOE are moving in the same direction on that issue. We were conscious that as drivers' licences lasted for five years, they were not in line with the period allocated for criminal record checks. We thought that it was important to bring those into line. At approximately the same time that we were deliberating on that matter, the Department for Transport issued its guidance to the 350-plus taxi-licensing authorities in England and Wales. That also influenced our decision.

Mr Gallagher: Why do UK criminal record checks not extend to the Republic of Ireland?

The Chairperson: That is relevant to where you live, Tommy.

Mrs Watters: I honestly do not have an answer for that at the moment. I will need to go back to check what occurs now, and whether any changes are proposed in relation to that.

The Chairperson: That is an important query; so you can come back to us on that.

Mr Boylan: One of the main issues regarding the switch from the five-year licences to the three-year licences is costs. That is one problem that was raised during the witness sessions.

Mrs Watters: Two issues were raised regarding costs. The first one was that drivers will have to pay a taxi-driver licence fee every three years. The second one was that people were afraid that they would have to pay for a medical examination every three years, instead of every five years.

Taxi drivers were concerned about those two costs. The Department's current position is that there are no proposals to change the requirement for taxi drivers to undergo a medical examination from every five years to every three years. Therefore, their fears about the level of increased cost are, perhaps, unfounded. The only change will be that taxi drivers will now have to pay a licence fee every three years rather than every five years.

The Chairperson: You make the important point that for people with a lower level of educational skills, the Bill need not be amended to implement training. However, the Department must have given some thought to the fixed provision that will be made for training. Although it is not a critical element of the Bill, the Committee will need clarification in order to be satisfied with that provision's detail.

Mrs Watters: We touched on that subject last week when we discussed the project that GoSkills and the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) is to undertake. They are working with the Department of the Environment to tailor training to taxi drivers' needs. Everyone who presents for taxi-driver training will be assessed, so GoSkills and DEL want to ensure that they are assessing drivers' essential skills and determining their current level of learning. The first stage of the project will be to raise drivers' essential skills to a level at which they could then undertake taxi-driver training. That is, by and large, the training provision that the Department sees itself creating. If prospective taxi drivers have a skills gap, we will work with them to address that skills gap and raise their skills level.

The Chairperson: If members have nothing further to add on clause 23, we can move on, subject to the requested detail being provided to the Committee.

Mrs Watters: OK.

Mr McMullan: Clause 24 deals with the issuing of drivers' badges. It states that the Department will issue badges and other evidence of identification to each person who has been granted a taxi-driver's licence. The badge must be worn and identification displayed at all times for drivers to be acting in accordance with their licence, unless they are specifically exempt. Drivers of funeral cars or wedding cars, among others, may be considered for exemption. Failure to comply with the wearing of the badge will result in a penalty of up to £1,000.

The Chairperson: No issues were raised, or comments made, about clauses 24 and 25. Are members happy to move on?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 26 is important. It gives the Department the power to suspend or revoke any licence under the Bill or to curtail an operator's licence for any reasonable cause. Moreover, an operator's licence can be suspended or revoked if the Department is no longer satisfied that the licence holder is a fit and proper person or if another condition or obligation imposed on the licence holder has not been complied with.

Should an operator's licence be curtailed, the Department can remove one or more vehicles from the licence, or it can reduce the maximum number of taxis or the class of taxis that the operator can use.

The Chairperson: If members have no points to raise, we shall move on.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: No issues were raised, or comments made, about clauses 27, 28 and 29. However, will you run through those clauses briefly, John? If any member wishes to raise anything, that is fair enough.

Mr McMullan: Clause 27 complements clause 26. It outlines the procedure that the Department will follow for suspending or revoking a licence. If the Department decides to suspend, revoke or curtail a licence, it must give notification and grounds for its decision. Suspension, revocation or curtailment will take effect 21 days after notice is served. Why 21 days? That is also the length of the appeal period, during which a licence holder or operator can appeal against a revocation or suspension.

Clause 28 allows an operator to apply to have his licence varied to add a new operating centre or to remove an existing centre, and to vary the number of taxis that he may operate. Owners or drivers may also apply to have their licences varied, and all have a right of appeal to the magistrates' court.

Under clause 29, the Department may also suspend or vary an operator's licence where it is satisfied that an operating centre no longer meets the necessary requirements. The Department must give the operator notice of such a decision, which would take effect 21 days thereafter; unless, in the interests of public safety, it should take effect immediately.

The Chairperson: Do members wish to seek clarity on those clauses? Is the Committee agreed on the content of clauses 27, 28 and 29?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 30 sets out all the various activities and services where the Department feels that it may have to prescribe fees. The fee regulations will eventually come before the Committee.

The Chairperson: Are members happy with clause 30?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We move on to clauses 31 and 32. No key issues were raised around these clauses. However, John will give us an overview.

Mr McMullan: Clause 31 is a typical clause found in Bills, and it relates to the production of documents. In this case, the documents include licences and certificates of insurance. Any other documents must be produced to an enforcement officer or to the police for inspection, and failure to do so would be an offence and incur a £1,000 fine.

Clause 32 deals with the return of licences. If the Department decides to suspend, revoke or curtail a licence, the licence plate or badge or other evidence of identification must be returned to the Department.

The Chairperson: Do members want any further information? Are we agreed on clauses 31 and 32?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 33 deals with the register of licences. It places a duty on the Department to maintain a register containing the details of each licence issued under the Bill. The Department must make that register available for inspection to members of the public free of charge.

The Chairperson: OK.

Mr Boylan: The major issue was the cost of the changes. Will that cost ultimately go to customers? Will there be any incentives?

Mrs Watters: There will be additional costs on operators and drivers, and some of them will be through licence fees and others through compliance costs. For example, if a driver does not have a taximeter and is buying one, it is expected that, ultimately, he will seek to pass any of those additional costs on to customers. If services and standards are being improved then, in a sense, the customer is getting more. However, we do not want operators to be in a position where they can put their fares up without limit, and that is where the regulated fares come in to play. The Department will set the maximum fares that the operator will be able to charge. We agreed that the Consumer Council will be involved in the setting of fares, and, therefore, consumers' interests will be looked after. We are trying to get a balance. It will cost more to provide better services, and we will have to take account of people's ability to pay.

Mr Weir: I suppose this is the flip side of the coin. We have talked about the various penalties that could be put in place for non-compliance, particularly where people would be acting fraudulently in various ways, and new revenue will come in as a result of that. What happens to the fines that will arise? Do they simply go back into the courts?

Mr McMullan: Yes, they go back to the courts.

Mr Weir: Therefore, there is nothing from the Department of the Environment?

Mrs Watters: No.

Mr Weir: To take Mr Boylan's point, in the case where there are costs, is it correct that additional fines could not be used to offset those costs?

Mr McMullan: That is correct, the fines go back to the courts but the fees are what we use to run the system.

The Chairperson: Are Members in agreement on clause 33?

Members indicated assent

The Chairperson: We move to clauses 34 and 35 for which there were no key issues, or comments made. John, please give the Committee a brief overview.

Mr McMullan: Clause 34 covers appeals to the magistrate's court, and sets out that an appeal to the court must be made within 21 days of receiving notice of the decision, and that the Department must inform the subject of their appeal rights and of the time limit when it gives that notice.

Clause 35 states that the decision of the Department will not take effect until the appeal has been heard, disposed of, or withdrawn. Therefore, the decision is in abeyance until the court hears the appeal. The clause is useful, as we have had certain drivers who cannot work during the time it takes for a case to go to court, which may be six months.

The Chairperson: Are Members in agreement over clauses 34 and 35?

Members indicated assent

The Chairperson: We will move to the clauses that deal with enforcement in part 5 of the Bill, starting with clause 36.

Mrs Watters: The first table is not in relation to clause 36. There were many general comments relating to enforcement that did not relate to any particular clause, and those have been grouped together. Therefore, the table is not clause-specific but deals with how effective the Department is at enforcement.

The Chairperson: Should we go through those page by page?

The Committee Clerk: That may be a more useful exercise to do after we look at the document as a whole.

The Chairperson: As members wish; I am seeing the information for the first time.

Mr Weir: It has been a long time since members have seen detailed legislation going through the Assembly. With our final position, in addition to having the power to make recommendations for amendments, may we make general comments?

The Committee Clerk: Yes, you may make recommendations and general comments on enforcement.

Mr Weir: I do not wish to be pre-emptive but I assume that the Committee is reasonably concerned about the lack of enforcement, or the lack of resources for enforcement.

The Committee Clerk: Last week, certain general, rather than clause-specific, enforcement issues were discussed. The officials will address those when we come to the end of part 5. They have provided a document that addresses some of those issues.

The Chairperson: As the document will address some of those issues, we may leave the discussion of part 5 of the Bill for now.

Mrs Watters: It may be best to deal with the table later.

The Chairperson: The Committee will now examine clause 36.

Mr McMullan: Clause 36 covers enforcement notices and applies where a licensed operator has failed to comply with certain record-keeping duties covered by the Bill. The idea of the enforcement notice is that the person will be granted up to 21 days to put his books in order, rather than going directly to court. If the person still does not comply, the case will go to court. A person may also appeal to the magistrate's court against an enforcement notice.

The Chairperson: There were no problems with that clause during consultation, and if no one has further comments to make, we will move on.

The Chairperson: Are members agreed on clause 36?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clause 37 provides powers of entry to licensed premises. Did that power not exist before?

Mr McMullan: The problem is that, previously, there was no operator licensing. Therefore, there was no provision for legal entry.

The Chairperson: I see.

Mr McMullan: Clause 37 provides that enforcement officers and the police might enter any licensed operating centre to ensure that the provisions of the Bill are complied with. Private dwellings can only be entered under the authority of a warrant.

Enforcement officers and the police can also enter unlicensed premises — again, under a warrant — where there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that a person is operating a taxi service. On exercising the power of entry, the officers may seize and remove any items or equipment that may be required as evidence in court.

The Chairperson: Does anyone have anything further to add?

Mr T Clarke: Someone suggested that an operator's licence should not be given to someone who is operating the business from his or her home. Is the place deemed as licensed premises if the operator's licence is for a private address?

Mr McMullan: Yes.

Mr T Clarke: Therefore, that place will be considered to be licensed premises?

Mr McMullan: Yes, and because it is a private dwelling, a warrant will be needed before anyone can enter.

Mr T Clarke: That is why I ask. What way are such properties dealt with as private dwellings or licensed premises? That seems to be a grey area. The point that I am trying to make is that to the taxi driver on the main street, clause 37 means that the Department has power to enter without a warrant. In the case of someone who deems himself to be operating a taxi business from a house, who has a taxi operator's licence, the Department should not need a warrant. If a person is setting up a business up as licensed premises, there should be no need for a warrant. Running a business from a private house makes it more difficult to enter the premises.

Mr McMullan: Our legal advice is that if the location in question is private premises, a warrant should always be obtained before entering. I take your point.

Mr T Clarke: There is also the difficulty of issuing an operator's licence to a private address.

Mrs Watters: The Department recognises that a number of operators, particularly in rural areas, run their businesses from their homes. If we were to rule that it is inappropriate to have an operating centre in domestic premises, they would either go out of business or they would have to set up some sort of office outside their homes. It would have implications for a lot of small operators.

The Chairperson: Are members agreed on clause 37?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: At this stage, perhaps we can park our proceedings, so that the Committee can welcome back Mr Billy Armstrong. It is great to see you back in good fighting form. You went through a traumatic event.

Mr Armstrong: I do not know about fighting form, but I am back anyway.

The Chairperson: That is good. I am glad to see you in good health again.

Mr Armstrong: Thank you very much.

The Chairperson: There was nothing on clause 38; we had no issues with it. Please give us a run through it in any case, John.

Mr McMullan: Clause 38 provides that enforcement officers and the police may stop and examine any licensed taxi. If they find that the condition of the vehicle is a danger to passengers, the officers may require passengers to leave the vehicle and the driver to make suitable arrangements for the passengers to be taken to their destination.

The Chairperson: Are members happy enough with that?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clauses 39, 40 and 41 are linked; they all have the same purpose. Under clause 39, officers may stop vehicles suspected of illegal taxiing, and may require drivers and passengers to provide information and documents as specified. Once an officer has stopped a vehicle in those circumstances, and he still feels that there are reasonable grounds to suspect illegal taxiing, he has the power to seize and remove the vehicle, as well as any other equipment or items found in it. As members will appreciate, seizure of a vehicle is a severe sanction. It must be tightly controlled, and that control is provided for in clause 41, which sets out conditions for removal of the vehicle, detention of it, release and disposal of it, notifying the owner, payment for release of the vehicle, and, where the vehicle is being disposed of, who gets the proceeds of the sale.

Those three clauses are similar, in that they all combat illegal taxiing.

The Chairperson: Are members content with clauses 39 to 41?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 42 deals with taxi touting. The Committee discussed that matter a couple of weeks ago. Clause 42(1) provides that:

“a person who solicits any person to be carried for hire or reward in a taxi is guilty of an offence.”

That is a fairly broad statement, and when creating an offence of that nature, it must be decided whether anyone should be exempted. The Department considers that clause 42(1) should not apply to taxi marshals because the nature of their job involves almost touting for business. We are moving into a discussion about taxi marshals, and I am aware that we have provided a separate paper on that matter, which relates more to clause 20(2)(c) and the enforcement of order at taxi ranks.

Clause 42 makes touting for taxi business an offence, although there is to be an exception.

The Chairperson: The public consultation did not throw up any issues relating to clause 42 or clauses 43 to 47, which deal with offences, obstruction and associated legalities. Will you give us a brief overview of those, John?

Mr McMullan: Those clauses are typical to many Bills. False statements and forgery are regarded as serious matters and will result in a £5,000 fine. Equally, clauses dealing with obstructing an officer or a police officer typically appear in Bills.

Clause 45 is peculiar to the Taxis Bill and serves a useful role. There is a strong interrelationship between owners, operators and drivers. Sometimes, an offence may be committed, which may be the fault of the operator rather than the driver. Clause 45 states that someone else may be liable if an offence is:

“due to the act or default of another person”.

Clause 46 links back to the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 and makes it clear that individuals and companies can also be liable for offences under the Bill. Clause 47 is simply a directional clause.

The Chairperson: Are members content with clauses 40 to 47?

Mr T Clarke: Is the Committee accepting clause 42 at this stage?

The Chairperson: Are we not accepting it?

Mr T Clarke: I thought that we were going talk about taxi touts in more depth.

Mr McMullan: The Department has prepared a separate paper on taxi touts and marshalling, which will be discussed later.

Mr T Clarke: It is a grey area.

The Chairperson: To my mind, touting is, potentially, an offence. How can it be said that marshalling and touting are similar? I am trying to establish a connection: one is supposed to be legal while the other is illegal.

Mrs Watters: John was explaining that clause 42 recognises that some people will be present at taxi ranks in order to legally enforce order and may be soliciting by matching taxis to passengers and that such people will not be guilty of an offence. John was highlighting that there is an overlap in the provision as regards taxi touts and marshals.

The Chairperson: I am getting a bit confused: the marshal would be performing a legal function, whereas touting is an illegal act.

Mrs Watters: Touting would be illegal if it were carried out by anyone other than a marshal who is doing the job in an official capacity.

The Chairperson: However, a marshal may not tout for individual companies.

Mrs Watters: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Therefore, marshalling would become touting when someone performs that role on behalf of an individual company.

Mrs Watters: That is exactly right.

The Chairperson: Therefore, a marshal who is doing his or her job should not be working for an individual company, in the same way that a policeman on the street should not be working on behalf of some of the security companies.

Mrs Watters: The only people who should be inviting passengers to be carried in taxis are marshals who are working under the provisions of the Bill — under taxi marshalling regulations that the Department would develop.

The Chairperson: I have not entirely grasped this matter. Should the marshal be touting?

Mrs Watters: The activity could be described as touting. Matching passengers to taxis becomes a difficulty only when it is being carried out by a person who is not working in an official capacity. Were somebody to carry out that activity on behalf of a particular company, it could well cause disorder at a rank. For example, a driver might object to the person who is telling passengers to get into taxis belonging to another company. The activity is fine if it is being carried out in a controlled and regulated manner. However, it would be illegal for such activity to be carried out in a partial fashion by drivers or companies.

The Chairperson: Forgive me for pursuing this matter, but why is touting being linked with marshalling when, under the law, marshals should not be touting?

Mr Boylan: It is the terminology.

The Chairperson: I know, but the terminology is critical to our examination of this matter.

Mr T Clarke: It seems that we are going to be accepting that terminology.

Mrs Watters: The term “touting” is commonly used throughout the UK. That is how the activity is being described and understood.

Mr T Clarke: But we are legitimising that activity.

The Chairperson: We are talking about illegal touting.

Mrs Watters: Touting would be legitimised only if it were carried out by a proper official marshal.

Mr T Clarke: However, that marshal could be touting for one particular business.

Mrs Watters: No, that would not be the case.

Mr McMullan: In clause 42, the Department is trying to set a wide net for the offence. The clause states that anyone who solicits someone to be carried for hire in a taxi will be guilty of an offence. In setting such a wide net, consideration must be given to whether too many fish may be caught. The one person that we do not want to be caught in the net is the one who is legally allowed to tell passengers to get into certain taxis, wait their turn, or whatever. We want the taxi marshal to be exempted from that provision.

Mrs Watters: It is not a taxi marshal’s job to provide business to a particular company. His role is to enforce order and get people home as quickly as possible. In carrying out his role, there should be no sense of favouritism for one company or driver over another.

Mr T Clarke: Who will marshal the marshals?

Mrs Watters: They would be marshalled by whoever employs them. I am sure that the Department and the local councils would play a role in that. The marshals would be working under regulations.

The Chairperson: I want clarification on another issue, which caused some confusion when it cropped up before. The marshals’ role is to enforce order, but the marshal has no enforcement powers — he can only call a taxi.

Mrs Watters: The use of the word “enforce” again raises the issue of terminology.

The Chairperson: The marshal’s role would be to facilitate a taxi service. That is about the height of it.

Mrs Watters: They would be there to facilitate, yes.

The Chairperson: They are not there to enforce anything.

Mr McMullan: Whether the use of the word “enforce” may be unfortunate —

The Chairperson: Their role is to facilitate order, but they cannot enforce it because they do not have the legal powers to enforce anything. That certainly seems to be the case, judging from what I have heard.

Mrs Watters: Yes; a marshal would not have the enforcement powers that an authorised officer of the Department or a police officer would have.

Mr T Clarke: We should be considering this matter with the enforcement section because we have all expressed concerns about it. In effect, a marshal would be a toothless tiger. Furthermore, at the moment there are five enforcement officers. How many marshals will there be who will have no real role to play?

Mr Weir: Just to clarify; would the marshals be employed by individual companies?

Mrs Watters: No.

Mr Weir: Who would employ them?

Mrs Watters: In GB, they are employed by local councils or city-centre community-safety group.

Mr Weir: Therefore, town-centre management would employ them.

Mrs Watters: Yes, exactly. It is that sort of role.

The Chairperson: Therefore, they are more like managers of order than enforcers of order?

Mrs Watters: Yes. Perhaps “management” is a better word.

The Chairperson: The Committee has been given a paper by the Department on enforcement, which it has not had time to peruse. Perhaps we could park issues of overlap, marshalling and touting, and, if the paper on enforcement is satisfactory, the Committee could examine those issues in that context.

Mr Clarke is correct. We will park clause 42 and consider it again in the context of further information. Is the Committee content with clauses 40 and 41, and with clauses 43 to 47?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 48 deals with access to information. To facilitate the Taxis Bill, a database will be set up containing all licensing information. The Department hopes to provide the police with access to the database, which happens in other road-traffic matters. Providing access to information must be controlled, and that will be done through regulations. People will not be able to undertake a fishing expedition to discover information about people other than for the purposes of prevention, investigation or prosecution of taxi offences.

The Chairperson: Are members content with the clause?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 49 states that:

“The Department may, with the approval of the Department of Finance and Personnel, pay such grants to such persons or bodies” in relation to the Act.

The important words are “The Department may”. We are not saying that we shall, or will, do that. The clause simply gives us the power to do so if moneys become available.

The Chairperson: Are members content with clause 49?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 50 gives the Department power to make regulations in relation to the training of any person in connection with the Bill.

The Chairperson: Are members content with the clause?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: No comments or issues were raised in relation to clauses 51 to 54, which seem to deal with regulatory matters. Perhaps John will give the Committee a brief overview of them.

Mr McMullan: You are correct, Mr Chairman, these clauses are typical of those that finalise a Bill. Clause 51 links back to the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 and allows notice to be served by ordinary post.

Clause 52 tidies up existing legislation and states that any mention of taxis in previous legislation will not apply when the Taxis Bill comes into force. There is one important point concerning the Belfast Harbour estate. At present, the Department has difficulty with enforcement in that area because the estate’s roads are deemed to be private. Clause 52(3) changes that situation by stating that the roads are to be deemed as being roads to which the public has access. Therefore, our enforcement officers will be able to enforce taxi regulations in the Belfast Harbour estate.

Clause 53 is a typical clause allowing the Department to make Orders and regulations that are incidental, or complementary, to the provisions of the Bill.

Clause 54 also deals with Orders and regulations. There is an important point in that clause, because the question of whether Belfast should be treated differently has been asked more than once by the Committee. Clause 54(3) allows the Department to make regulations that may be limited in their application to a particular area. If, for example, the Committee were to conclude that circumstances in Belfast were different, the Department could make provision for that by limiting regulations to that area.

Mr Weir: I appreciate what you are saying in that there might be a need for some sort of transitional arrangement. However, if the Department is allowed to make different regulations for different areas, does that not negate much of the core aim of the Bill, which is to have a system that applies everywhere?

Mrs Watters: The idea that Orders and regulations could be limited in their application to a particular area is something that we thought applied across the whole of the Bill. In fact, the provision was written into the Bill before the Department was addressing directly whether a two-tier system could be retained in Belfast. When that issue was raised, we looked at the Bill to examine whether we could provide for it if a strong case were made. However, that was not the reason why that provision is in the Bill. It was included for more general applications; for example, where we may wish to do things slightly differently in some areas.

The Chairperson: There was the issue of shared fares and the concept that you introduced of zoning areas in Belfast in which certain taxis could operate. Does clause 54 make provision for zoning?

Mrs Watters: That is not how we would provide for zoning.

The Chairperson: How would you provide for it?

Mrs Watters: It would be set out under the taxi-sharing scheme, which is a form of regulation. As regards zoning, it would be a case of having areas in which taxi-sharing schemes would apply. Other normal types of taxi services may also apply there. The idea would be, for example, that the centre of Belfast could be divided into north, south, east and west areas. Taxis could go to each of those zones, and the cost would be the same in each zone.

The Chairperson: Are members content with clauses 51 to 54?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Clause 55 is the usual clause that appears at the end of a Bill. It sets out the words and phrases that have been used in the legislation and provides definitions for them. Clause 56 allows schedules 2 and 3 of the Bill to come into effect. Clause 57 is the commencement provision, and it allows us to introduce provisions on particular days. Clause 58 relates to the short title of the Bill.

Schedule 1 sets out the offences and penalties in the Bill that will be inserted into the Road Traffic Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1996. Schedule 2 covers all the minor and consequential amendments when making legislation, whereby one must consider the knock-on effect for other legislation. Schedule 3 sets out the repeals of existing taxi legislation that will cease to apply when the Bill comes into force.

The Chairperson: Are members content with clauses 55 to 58?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: This is detailed stuff, so it may be helpful if you give us an overview of the schedules, John.

Mr McMullan: Schedule 1 sets out all the offences and penalties in the Bill, and will be inserted into the Road Traffic Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 for use by practitioners. That is where one will find all offences and penalties relating to road traffic legislation.

The Chairperson: Are members content with schedule 1?

Members indicated assent.

Mr McMullan: Schedule 2 sets out minor and consequential amendments. New legislation always has a knock-on effect on existing legislation. Schedule 2 tidies up legislation in which taxis are mentioned.

Mr T Clarke: Schedule 1 reminds me of our discussion on whether convictions have been spent. It has been said that some convictions are never spent. What is the difference?

Mr McMullan: All convictions come under the Rehabilitation of Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1978. Certain convictions will never be spent, such as life sentences or sentences that have lasted more than 30 months. Other convictions will be spent. When we ask taxi drivers whether they have any previous convictions, they are not required to state spent convictions.

Mr T Clarke: Would they be required to state whether they have had a sentence that has lasted more than 30 months?

Mr McMullan: Yes. Schedule 2 set out minor and consequential amendments to other legislation that may contain some reference or relevance to taxis. It tidies up all the other legislation as a result of this legislation coming into effect. Schedule 3 deals with legislation to be repealed.

The Chairperson: Adele, will you please take us through the summary table of responses?

Mrs Watters: Yes. We apologise that the Committee has not had an opportunity to read it. First, I will deal with the Consumer Council's involvement and its suggestion that the Bill should be amended to include its role on a number of matters. As we have set out in the paper, this will have implications for clauses 3, 16 and, potentially, will require a new clause in Part 6.

We met the Consumer Council on Friday and talked through its suggestions. The Department is happy to go along with amendments relating to passenger complaints, fares and passenger information. The Consumer Council, as a statutory body, is in a position to give expert recommendations to the Department on all those issues. The Consumer Council is interested in accessibility standards for vehicles but is not really a statutory body in that regard — many groups would be interested in accessibility standards. The Consumer Council is content to be consulted about those standards in the normal way and that its role should not be specifically outlined in the Bill.

The Department is happy to go along with a proposed amendment at clause 3(9) that will ensure that the Consumer Council will be involved in the complaints procedure that will be set out in regulations. The Department sees merit in a proposed amendment to clause 16 that would require the Department to take the Consumer Council's recommendations into consideration when determining the maximum rate of fares.

The Chairperson: Adele, I apologise for interrupting you. Your paper states:

“to ensure that the Consumer Council is involved in the complaints procedure”

Any of us could, potentially, be involved in the complaints procedure. How would one be involved, and to what extent? I would be surprised that if, during the course of your conversation with the Consumer Council, its role — rather than its involvement — would have been discussed.

Mrs Watters: The Consumer Council's recommendations would be taken into account when the Department is setting out instructions for operators on what they should be doing as regards their complaints procedures. Moreover, we would take into account the Consumer Council's recommendations about who should consider complaints after they have been dealt with by an operator and have not been resolved.

The Chairperson: Forgive me for asking about how individual deliberations or views would be taken into account. I am trying to get a handle on what shape the outworkings might take.

Mrs Watters: The Consumer Council deals with complaints from passengers who use other modes of road transport, and it is anticipated that it will be the official body that will deal with taxi passenger problems. Obviously, that will have a resourcing issue for the Consumer Council, and we are unable to resolve that problem at this stage. The Consumer Council is content to be consulted when we are designing best-practice guidance for operators on handling complaints. We will consider the council's recommendations on who should deal with complaints if the operator is unable to resolve them — which will be either the Department or the Consumer Council.

Wording in other legislation is often that the Consumer Council's recommendations will be taken into account. The Consumer Council has a consultative role and is content to be described as such.

The Chairperson: Is the Consumer Council happy with that?

Mrs Watters: Yes.

Mr McMullan: The Consumer Council has a lot of experience in dealing with complaints. The Bill might state that the Department will consider recommendations made by the Consumer Council. However, when we would be making regulations, we would consult with the Consumer Council on the best way to deal with individual items such as complaints. For instance, the Consumer Council would have ideas about time limits and how long someone should expect to wait before receiving a response. The Department would build those points into the legislation. Alternatively, as Adele said, the Consumer Council might want to be the complaints body, and if that were the case, it would be set out in subsequent regulations. However, that would depend on the Consumer Council's resources.

Mr T Clarke: If the Consumer Council is to be involved in the setting of fares, then I would be concerned that it would be acting in the interests of consumers and not the industry. There must be fairness for the industry. I would be concerned that the set-up is geared too much to the benefits for consumers.

Mrs Watters: Although the Department will take account of the Consumer Council's recommendations, the council does not have the final call. The Department wants to set fares by developing a taxi cost index that will examine the costs associated with running a taxi business and making a living from it. Significant increases in that cost index — from licence fees or an increase in fuel costs — must be taken into account. It is important that the consumer's voice is heard but does not override everything else.

The Chairperson: We will move on to issues relating to passenger information.

Mrs Watters: The Bill does not mention rights to, or duty and responsibility for, passenger information other than information relating to fares. That is why the Department is recommending the need for a new clause in Part 6 that will enable the Department to make passenger information available to taxi users following the consideration of the recommendations of the Consumer Council. The Department will be seeking advice from legislative counsel on whether that is the best way to proceed. This demonstrates the Department's willingness to give the Consumer Council a role in guiding it on the best way of producing passenger information and on what the contents should be.

The Chairperson: The Committee agrees with the principle, but what wording do you recommend?

Mr McMullan: The wording will have to be negotiated with legislative counsel. Everyone agrees with the principle, but one must consider how it will fit into the Bill. From an administrative perspective, the measures could be carried out, but it would be useful to have them included in the Bill. The wording will have to be right, and, following discussions with legislative counsel, we will establish where the provision would be best located in the Bill.

The Chairperson: We shall move on to discussion of the two-tier appeals system.

Mr McMullan: During the oral evidence sessions, there was a suggestion that instead of always requiring persons to go to court, the Department should consider the appeal in the first instance. We were not opposed to that, and a two-tier system of appeal is proposed in clause 11 of the Bill.

The Committee wanted to know how that would work in practice. At the moment, that system works in other transport appeals, such as those connected with road freight operators' licences and bus licences, whereby the first appeal is to the Department. The Department sets up an internal review panel comprising three senior officers who have no connection to the decision-making process.

The issues of the case are discussed with the appellant, who is usually accompanied by a legal representative, and the panel makes its recommendations to the Department. In practice, such recommendations are always accepted, and very few cases go to court after having been through the departmental panel process. We feel that that is a template that we could use for taxi appeals. If that principle is accepted, it will have a knock-on effect for those instances in the Bill in which it is stated that there is an appeal to the magistrates' court. We might have to build in provision for an appeal to the Department, followed by an appeal to the magistrates' court, if dissatisfied. That is the way in which we envisage that process working.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with that?

Members indicated assent.

We shall move on to clause 16, which deals with the regulation of fares.

Mr McMullan: There were some comments last week to the effect that clause 16 should be tightened up. The Committee discussed maximum and minimum fares, and that discussion became somewhat convoluted.

We examined the instructions that we had provided to counsel, and we asked counsel to provide a clause that would cover the maximum initial rate, subsequent rates and rates based on time and distance. A maximum fare is not just one rate; it is a combination of tariffs. At the time of drafting, counsel were content that they had provided tight wording. However, because we were already going back to legislative counsel with other amendments, we decided to run the clause past them again, just to be sure that the provision was open-ended.

The Chairperson: OK. As there are no questions on that matter, we shall return to the matter of taxi marshals. I will get my head around this yet. [Laughter.]

Mr McMullan: I was hoping that Adele would deal with this subject. [Laughter.]

Mrs Watters: I can make a start on it.

The Chairperson: It is a Mexican stand-off, marshals included.

Mr McMullan: As Mr Boylan has said, the starting point is the terminology. Clause 20(2)(c) gives the Department regulation-making powers in respect of:

"enforcing order at and regulating the use of places referred to in paragraph (a);".

In this case, "places" means ranks.

There is a distinction to be made, and the phrase "enforcing order" may cause confusion. The taxi marshal will not be given any enforcement powers under this Bill. As members can imagine, the enforcement officer must have detailed knowledge of all the licensing provisions in the Bill. He or she also needs technical knowledge of vehicles in relation to matters such as roadworthiness. The marshal does not have an enforcement role under the Bill. That role is more about managing or facilitating. We do not envisage the marshal having any role other than trying to get people into taxis at busy times of the day.

The Chairperson: Are you going to drop the phrase "enforcing order" from that paragraph?

Mrs Watters: The wording of that paragraph is intended to provide for the setting up of marshalling schemes. However, it also gives the Department other powers in respect of enforcing order at ranks, including, for example, the conduct of drivers at ranks; it is not simply concerned with marshals.

The Chairperson: Our discussion is dealing specifically with marshals.

Mrs Watters: OK.

The Chairperson: We are dealing specifically with taxi marshals in respect of clause 20(2)(c). It appears to me that the term "enforcing order", in the context of a taxi marshal, is not applicable. Their role will be to manage order, perhaps, but they will not be empowered to enforce. The term “enforcing order” is misleading.

Mrs Watters: In respect of the marshals?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mrs Watters: Are you suggesting that there should be a separate power for managing order?

The Chairperson: I do not think that that needs to be clarified that distinctly.

Mrs Watters: The marshal’s role would be a management role, rather than an enforcement role.

Mr T Clarke: We need to make it clear what their duties are.

The Chairperson: That would not be a primary legislative matter.

Mrs Watters: The marshals’ duties would be set out in regulations.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with that?

Mr Boylan: I think so. We must be very careful about whether or not the taxi marshals have powers. They would require a limited power to put people off the street, but they cannot enforce anything.

Mr T Clarke: The notes before us state that the marshals’ enforcement role is “limited”, which indicates that they do have some enforcement role.

The Chairperson: We are returning to the question of what their role entails.

Mrs Watters: It is really a management role.

Mr T Clarke: However, the briefing notes state that the enforcement role is limited. The word “enforcement” should not even be mentioned.

The Chairperson: Have accepted that point, Adele?

Mrs Watters: Yes. We understand why the wording is causing some difficulty.

The Chairperson: OK. We shall move to clause 21.

Mr McMullan: The provisions of clause 21 would have come forward, regardless of the Taxi Bill. First, it clears up an anomaly that currently exists, namely that DRD has policy responsibility for where taxi ranks should be sited, but legislative responsibility rests with DOE. We are placing the legislative and policy role with DRD. The result of that will be that DRD has control of the new traffic attendants. Through the Taxis Bill, we were considering whether traffic attendants could have a role, because they are already on the streets. However, that role would not include power over the licensing requirements that are laid out in the Bill, but they could handle parking infringements on the ranks or at a distance from the ranks, or any general parking offences by taxis. That would be very useful.

The Chairperson: Are members content with that?

Members indicated assent.

The charging of separate fares is covered by clauses 5 to 11 of the Bill.

Mrs Watters: The Committee asked for clarification on the concept of charging separate fares for taxi journeys, and how the proposals in the Bill to regulate the charging of separate fares will be enforced. There were concerns about how that would be policed.

Clauses 5 to 11 of the Bill provide for taxi sharing at separate fares in three circumstances. The first circumstance is when a taxibus is in operation, whereby a taxi operates in the same way as a bus, picking up and setting down passengers at stops along a route, and to a timetable. The second circumstance is the taxi-sharing scheme that is being set up by the Department. The third circumstance is when an advance booking has been made whereby all the passengers have agreed to share the taxi.

In particular, the Committee wanted to know how the Department could police situations other than those specified in the Bill whereby a number of different people want to travel in the same general direction by taxi, and pay separate fares. One basic premise of the Taxis Bill is that when someone hires a taxi, they have the right to the exclusive use of that taxi, which means that they cannot be expected to share it unless they wish to. Another fundamental principle of the legislation is that all fares should be regulated and charged according to what is shown on the taximeter. There are certainly circumstances when it is in the interests of both taxi users and drivers for passengers to agree to share a taxi and pay their own fares.

However, the Bill aims for — and the Department wants to see — the regulation of such situations. Otherwise, taxi drivers may not give any discount — and certainly not the full discount — to passengers, who will then complain to the Department about being ripped off. In all three of the circumstances provided for in the Bill for sharing — the taxibus, the taxi-sharing scheme, and advance booking — every passenger has agreed, explicitly or implicitly, to share. In return, they should have a right to a cheaper fare.

In taxibuses, passengers will pay a flat fare. In a taxi-sharing scheme or an advance booking arrangement, the Department will insist that the driver gives each passenger a discount on what the metered fare would have been, had they had hired the taxi without sharing. That amount would be regulated by the Department and would depend on how many people share the taxi. We have provided the Committee with an example of a shared-fare table, which I will return to.

Taxi drivers will also benefit from that arrangement, because the total fares that they receive from the passengers will be, not to play on words, a fair bit more than if they had only one passenger. In that scenario, everyone wins — not just the driver. How can that be policed? That is largely down to the passengers and whether they know their rights — that they have a right to exclusive use of the taxi, and that the meter should always be on, unless separate provision has been made.

If all the passengers agree to pay a separate fare that is more than that for which the Department has regulated, they can accept that. However, if someone feels aggrieved at having been forced to share and pay more than the regulated fare, they can complain to the operator, the Department, or the Consumer Council, and that complaint will be investigated. If shared-fare arrangements are not controlled, the principle of having regulated fares in the first place is completely undermined.

The Chairperson: You said that, in all three of the circumstances provided for in the Bill, each passenger will have agreed either explicitly or implicitly to share the taxi. What do you mean by agreeing implicitly?

Mrs Watters: When using a taxibus, no one asks the passengers whether they have agreed to share, but everyone knows the deal is that there will be a number of people in the taxi, and each passenger will pay their own bit. However, no one actually states that.

The Chairperson: That is an interesting concept.

Mr T Clarke: I made my opposition clear last week. I have no problems with taxibuses or the designated scheme, but if taxi drivers pick up two fares, with two different drops-offs, when they are on way from Belfast, the driver will lose out. My reason for asking about the Consumer Council earlier was because of the Department's response to the Committee's discussion on the charging of separate fares:

"It is the Department's strong view — and one which is shared by the Consumer Council — that allowing taxis to pick-up passengers going in a general direction" —

The best interests of the consumer are then referred to. Again, the taxi driver is not mentioned — it is always the consumer.

The Chairperson: I can understand why that is so, in those circumstances. If taxi drivers have one or two extra passengers going the same direction for the same 10 miles, they will get extra money.

Mr T Clarke: I look at it from a different perspective. If I were a taxi driver who was not getting any extra money to pick up a double fare, I would leave the last fare standing for my mate to collect them, so that he would have more work. This issue has to be examined from a taxi driver's point of view.

What incentive is there for the taxi driver to pick up the two fares? If there is a double fare that he can pick up from Belfast to go in a general direction, with two different drop-offs, surely it is better to leave the second fare for someone else to pick up.

Mrs Watters: That fare would not then be part of that driver's income. If the taxi driver takes the two fares, he gets more money than if he had picked up one.

Mr T Clarke: If the taxi driver leaves the second fare for his colleague Mr X, then Mr X will leave a fare for him the next day.

Mr Weir: If you scratch my back, I will scratch yours.

Mrs Watters: That fare will be long gone by the time the other driver comes for them.

Mr Weir: The drivers may not be too bothered about an individual fare, but if, for example, I let Trevor pick up the next fare on a Thursday night, perhaps he will return the favour a couple of nights later.

Mr T Clarke: To take it a step further, if a passenger is not willing to share a taxi, the person asked to pay the fare twice was going to have to pay the fare anyway to take the taxi on their own. How is the consumer losing out?

Mrs Watters: They are losing out because they have to share. When a passenger gets a taxi on their own they are paying for a different experience than when they have to share with several other people. That is a different proposition.

Mr Ford: The Department appears to be addressing some of the concerns that I expressed last week. However, I cannot make head nor tail of the table of sample fares that has been submitted.

Mrs Watters: That table is wrong.

Mr Ford: More fundamental is the matter of people's sharing taxis. If I remember correctly, in the example that Trevor Clarke and I discussed last week, we assumed that, of two people sharing a taxi, one person was going to Ballyclare and the other to Glengormley. You have not addressed the issues that would arise from that scenario.

Mrs Watters: The driver would still make more money from that deal, even if he did not take every passenger the full distance.

Mr Armstrong: That is not 100% true, because the driver must stop and, if he stops, it costs more.

Mrs Watters: OK.

Mr Ford: If you try to drive through Glengormley these days, you will get stuck anyway.

Mrs Watters: The reason that we submitted the sample fare table was to illustrate that the more passengers there are in a taxi, the less that they pay individually, although, ultimately, the driver is paid more, depending on the number of people that he carries. That fairly extensive table is based on figures that were provided by the Public Carriage Office in London. The idea is that the Department or the licensing authority will be seen to be regulating the levels of discounts. Based on the number of people in the taxi, each passenger should be capable of examining the meter and calculating his or her discount.

Mr T Clarke: In the example of the metered fare of £1.80, I would prefer to be the fifth passenger because I would pay less than everyone else.

Mrs Watters: The discount depends on the number of people who are sharing; it does not apply progressively to passenger 2, passenger 3, passenger 4, etc.

The Chairperson: Perhaps we should scrub that table.

Mrs Watters: I am afraid that the table seems to complicate the issue.

The Chairperson: Can you clarify that it is not an accurate guide, and that the statistics might be misleading?

Mrs Watters: I agree that the statistics might be misleading.

Mr T Clarke: Was the table drawn up to convince us?

Mrs Watters: To confuse you. [Laughter.]

Mr Gallagher: You would not go to Glengormley in the cars that are included in the table.

Mrs Watters: The figures are purely indicative.

The Chairperson: For clarity: as a result of these proposals, will more people share taxis?

Mrs Watters: Yes. We will certainly make provision for, facilitate and regulate taxi sharing, which should mean that passengers will be happier with that concept, and that it will become more popular. Currently, enforced taxi sharing is sometimes very unpopular.

Mr Ford: Can we assume that the penultimate paragraph of your submission refers to something other than the three scenarios of taxi sharing that you originally outlined in your presentation on the proposed Bill? That appears to be the case. In the third sharing scenario, people agree to share a taxi in advance; however, “in advance” may mean only 30 seconds before stepping into the taxi.

Mrs Watters: The key phrase in the final paragraph is: “with the driver charging fares at his discretion.”

We would not be happy for drivers to make things up as they go along. The Department and the Consumer Council are supportive of regulated and controlled shared-fare arrangements.

Mr Ford: No one sitting around this table is in favour of drivers making up fares. That is one thing that we are trying to get away from.

The penultimate paragraph of your paper creates a fourth sharing scenario — or adapts the third scenario — whereby the agreement to share occurs, literally, as people step into the taxi.

Mr McMullan: That is outside the terms of the proposed Bill.

Mr Ford: In order to get it right, should that scenario not be provided for in the Bill? I agree with Trevor Clarke, and I suspect that, for most of the week, such circumstances will be rare. However, I am considering the problems that might arise on Friday and Saturday nights, when the system will be attempting to deal as quickly as possible with large numbers of people who are on the streets. Taxi marshals could probably lend a hand in that.

Mr T Clarke: I suggest that it is stated in the Bill that David Ford and Trevor Clarke agreed. That would be positive. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: I do not think that we can legislate for that.

Mr Boylan: There are two arguments: Trevor Clarke is arguing for the taxi operator, but there is also an argument to be made on behalf of the consumer. Taxi sharing is about consumer choice. If the consumer wants to use the sharing system, that is fair enough. The only fear, as Trevor Clarke has said, is that there may be a reduction in the number of taxis that are required because there may be fewer taxis picking up single passengers. Surely to God, though, taxi sharing provides consumer choice, and that is why it should be introduced. Customers could decide whether they wish to share or not, but I take Trevor Clarke’s point.

Mr T Clarke: When a taxi leaves Belfast, for example, the passengers would know that they are sharing it, and if they do not wish to share, they should not get in the taxi. That is their choice.

The Chairperson: That is Mr Boylan’s point.

Mr Boylan: Yes, it is up to the customer whether to share or to hire a taxi on their own. I take Trevor Clarke’s point that two people might take the same car, and the taxi driver may charge them individually.

The Chairperson: What could be done about that?

Mr Boylan: That is understandable, but it is up to the consumer whether to get into a shared taxi or not.

The Chairperson: Does the Committee agree on this element of the Bill — the concept of taxi sharing?

Mr T Clarke: Could you summarise what we are agreeing to?

Mrs Watters: The Department does not propose to make any changes to the provisions of the Bill on shared fares.

Mr T Clarke: I cannot agree to that.

The Chairperson: For complete clarity, Trevor, what is your reason for not agreeing to the provisions of the Bill on shared fares?

Mr T Clarke: My reason is that that system would work for the consumer, but not for the industry. The taxi industry clears the streets of Belfast, but the Bill proposes to penalise taxi drivers for picking up two fares in one go, which would be deemed illegal.

The Chairperson: A balance must be struck between the interests of the consumer, and those of the industry. If a taxi travels in one direction on one journey and charges duplicate fares to more than one person, what is wrong with the concept of taxi sharing and allowing people to travel in that taxi at reduced rates?

Mr T Clarke: The Committee was told last week that a taxi-sharing scheme would only work with designated stops.

The Chairperson: People could choose places inside designated zones. Taxi drivers could choose to operate in those areas.

Mr T Clarke: When two passengers are travelling in the same direction from Belfast to Antrim, the journey is straight down the M2. However, if a passenger travelling from Belfast to Antrim were to share a taxi with a passenger travelling to Glengormley, the taxi would have to go off the M2. That would not result in the same fare as the journey from Belfast to Antrim.

The Chairperson: I am not entirely sure about your main concern — could you run through that again?

Mr T Clarke: All the representatives from the taxi industry have told the Committee that there are not enough taxis in Belfast on a Friday or Saturday night. A taxi driver with a queue at his rank outside a busy nightclub in Belfast on a Saturday night currently has a possibility of picking up two separate fares. Under a taxi-sharing scheme, two different passengers would realise that they were sharing a taxi, and were going to two different places, but the taxi driver would not be allowed to charge the fare twice. However, if those two customers had had to wait for an individual taxi, they would have had to have paid that fare anyway. The consumer does not lose out under the existing arrangements.

The Chairperson: The consumer would not lose out under the shared-taxi scheme.

Mr T Clarke: The shared-taxi scheme would not work everywhere.

The Chairperson: Correct me if I am wrong, but the shared taxi scheme would provide choice for the consumer, and for the taxi driver, in specific areas. The legislation provides for that further down the line.

Mrs Watters: That is right.

The Chairperson: Mrs Watters outlined that there would be pilot projects in various areas — to dip the toe into the water and see how that might work. There is no obligation whatsoever on either party, consumer or taxi driver, to use that scheme. They can if they wish; and if they do not, drivers can move 100 yards down the street to another nightclub, pick up people there and ferry them, backwards and forwards, in single journeys.

Mr T Clarke: Mr Chairman, you have alluded to the issue. We are discussing a taxi-sharing scheme that does not yet exist; and about a system that already operates in Belfast, whereby people are sharing taxis. We are going to make illegal something that is practised already and replace it with something that is not yet in place. We are discussing the piloting of a taxi-sharing scheme, but there is a practice taking place at the moment, which we recognise, and we are going to make that illegal, as opposed to legalising it.

The Chairperson: That is a matter of choice for both the taxi driver and the consumer. They can either operate in a particular area or choose to move 20, 30 or 40 yards down the street and operate from a different location.

Mr T Clarke: We are making illegal the situation where a double fare is picked up by one taxi.

Mrs Watters: At the moment, within Belfast, the taxi driver should be charging the regulated fare. That is all that should be charged: once, not twice. In Belfast, where fares are regulated, there is an element of practice that is already illegal.

The Chairperson: So a double fare should not be charged anyway?

Mrs Watters: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Does that allay your concerns on that issue, Trevor?

Mr T Clarke: No.

Mr Ford: This has further confused me too, Chairman. I thought that we were reaching the point of regularising something that we saw as useful at the busy times of the week. However, having just been told that the Department does not propose to make any changes, I was on the point of asking what its legislative draftsmen would suggest to further define clause 7(a):

“all the passengers carried on the occasion in question booked their journeys in advance”.

The logical meaning of “in advance” is not that bookings are put together by the taxi marshal in the interest of good order on the streets. However, that is what we have discussed as ideal: that we deal with the crowds by encouraging people to double book.

Mrs Watters has accepted that the sample fare table does not work; therefore, we need to know how such a scheme would work when people are not all getting out at the same place. It is fine to state how we would regulate the fares, and what proportion people would pay if everyone is making the same journey. However, in the circumstances that we have discussed — weekends in Belfast — that will not be the case. People will be travelling to a number of different, relatively nearby locations, but we need to work out how the fare structure will work.

The Chairperson: Owing to the confusion on this matter, could we be provided with a sample fare table that will show how the scheme will work in practice? Could you address the point that David has just made about a taxi driver who picks up from different locations, and drops off at different locations.

Mr Ford: On a journey from Glengormley to Ballyclare, for example.

Mr T Clarke: That was what I was trying to say, but David put it much better.

Mr Ford: I hope that Hansard has noted that.
[Laughter.]

The Chairperson: For use in an election: “endorsed by Mr Trevor Clarke”.

So, with that proviso, we shall move on to discuss the paper on enforcement. I ask members to turn to the second page of that document — the first is just a preamble about role and function.

Mrs Watters: Mr McMullan and I are not necessarily in a position to speak about that paper in detail. We are not the taxi enforcement team.

However, I could refer members to the summary table of responses, in which various comments on enforcement that not specific to clauses are brought together. That is where we set out the Department’s overall response on enforcement matters. That begins at page 139 of the summary table of responses.

The Chairperson: Are you referring to the synopsis?

Mrs Watters: On the summary document; yes.

The Chairperson: We have seen some of that information during a previous presentation. The Committee will suspend for five minutes to allow members to look through that information and ascertain whether it includes anything of relevance to the issues that we raised. I do not expect Mrs Watters to answer our questions; the taxi enforcement team can do that the next time we see them.

The Committee suspended.

On resuming —

The Chairperson: The paper before us informs some of the background to the Taxis Bill, but I am not sure that it adds anything. What are other members’ views? Does the paper add anything to the enforcement issues that we are discussing today?

We will go back to part 5 of the Bill, which deals with enforcement. The Department’s summary of responses states that:

“The Department has provided a detailed briefing to the Committee on both its current taxi enforcement activity and successful CSR bid to increase the number of enforcement officers from five to 18.”

Mrs Watters: That was written on the assumption that the Committee might have had an opportunity to consider it in more detail.

The Chairperson: Do members have any issues with the paper? The Committee should be in agreement that, in the eventual production of a report, it might include the caveat that the Bill would, by and large, be worthless unless sufficient resources were made available to enforce its provisions. Do we have general agreement and consensus on that?

Mr Weir: We should refer to the fact that there is a bid in to increase the number of enforcement officers, and that we regard that as being vital.

The Chairperson: Yes. Having dealt with all those issues, is there anything further that needs to be considered today?

The Committee Clerk: Perhaps it would be useful if I were to state the outstanding issues, so that members can be clear about what is left to do, and also to see whether there is anything that the officials feel that they could address. Would that benefit members or should we wait until our last meeting on 8 November?

Mrs Watters: The Committee had proposed to consider the Department’s amendments. Do we still intend to look through those to see whether the Committee is agreeable with them? We went through them during a previous session, but I do not know whether the Committee reached a consensus on them.

The Chairperson: There were issues around some of them, from what I can recall.

Mr McMullan: The main issue was the taxi marshals, which we have rehearsed again today.

The Chairperson: Many of the issues about taxi marshals were quite technical. I can remember that taxi marshals were discussed — it would be hard to forget. I do not recall any other outstanding issues. However, that is not to say that there were no peripheral or marginal issues that may have been important at the time. We can double check the Hansard report of that meeting and, if necessary, revisit those issues.

Mr T Clarke: How many taxis are there in Northern Ireland?

Mrs Watters: There are approximately 11,000.

Mr T Clarke: There has been a bid for 18 enforcement officers. The constant cry is that there are not enough enforcement officers. Part of the new legislation will require all taxis to have meters. With 11,000 metered taxis, how will the systems be implemented to ensure that that aspect is policed, and that the meters are not tampered with?

Five enforcement officers have not been sufficient to monitor the industry without taximeters. As 11,000 cars will now have to have taximeters, I imagine that the point of the bid to get the number of enforcement officers up to 18 is to enable them to carry out roadside duties.

Mrs Watters: The issue regarding meters is about getting them tested, calibrated and sealed. After that is done, any time a vehicle is stopped, the enforcement officer — if he or she is doing a thorough inspection — will check that the seal is still there. However, the actual meters would not cause the enforcement officers a great deal of extra work.

As it will be easier for people to prove when they have been overcharged, the installation of taximeters might cause the Department additional work in dealing with complaints, but that would not have direct implications for the enforcement officers.

Mr T Clarke: Overcharging will only be an issue if the taximeters are incorrect.

Mr Gallagher: I agree. Enforcement is important in carrying out checks.

Mrs Watters: The first thing that the enforcement officer would notice is whether the seal has been broken. If a difficulty is established, there may be an investigation and enforcement action. However, hopefully, enforcement officers will be able to establish — from quick visual checks — that in the vast majority of cases, there is nothing wrong with the meters — they have been properly set as tested by the Department.

Mr Gallagher: That is going to require 13 enforcement officers, but there will not be 13 for some time yet. It will take a long time to check half of the 11,000 taxis that are currently licensed. I know that the number of licences being issued has increased. Therefore, there may well be more than 11,000 taxis.

Mrs Watters: The number of taxis has been increasing.

Mr McMullan: Taxis also have to have an annual PSV test, which will include a check to determine whether meters have been installed.

Mr T Clarke: Will that be part of the PSV test?

Mrs Watters: The people conducting the PSV test will be able to check that taximeters have been installed.

The Chairperson: Thank you for that. Patricia, will you outline the next stage of the process for members?

The Committee Clerk: Last week, the Committee and the departmental officials considered clauses 1 to 21, and about seven broad issues were raised. The departmental officials have returned with a written response on those issues, which members have considered today. Although it has not been stated for definite that all the issues have been agreed to, it appears that there is consensus on the majority of them, but some issues have again been raised.

The next phase of the process, which will be worked through on 8 November 2007, is the formal clause-by-clause analysis and agreement of those clauses. The culmination of the Committee's deliberations on the clauses will happen on that day.

The Committee and the departmental officials have today also considered clauses 22 to 58 and schedules 1, 2 and 3, and a number of issues have been raised regarding those. Therefore, the departmental officials will address those issues on 8 November, and again, the Committee will have to form some sort of view prior to the clause-by-clause analysis.

Over the past number of weeks, the Committee asked for specific briefing on three areas: enforcement, which has been considered today; disability, which is an issue that Adele will address when I have finished; and, finally, funeral cars and whether they should be subject to exemptions.

Those are the key matters that have not been covered. I anticipate that, on 8 November, a lot of the clause-by-clause analysis will be worked through relatively quickly. At that stage, the Department may have a better idea about the actual wording of some of the amendments. However, I understand from the Bill Clerk that it is not absolutely essential to know the exact wording of those amendments by 8 November; the requirement is that the amendments are agreed in principle.

The other matters that the Committee will have to consider, and obtain broad agreement on, are the departmental amendments. The Committee must also agree final recommendations on issues such as enforcement and agree the broad wording of the clauses. Then, on 8 November, Sean McCann and I can start to work on the draft Taxis Bill, based on the Committee's deliberations. That will keep the Committee on time to agree the report by 7 December and to publish it by 16 December.

The Chairperson: Do members wish to seek further clarification from the Department or the Committee Clerk on any matters?

The Committee Clerk: Perhaps the officials could address the issues around disability and funeral cars, and let the Committee know when they will be able to deliver briefings on those matters?

Mrs Watters: The Department has undertaken investigations on the refusal of service to people with disabilities, and its reply is in the system and should be with the Committee shortly. We had hoped to be able to provide the Committee with a fuller written reply on funeral cars after meeting representatives from the National Association of Funeral Directors. They chose a date for that meeting, but it will not be until 15 November. Therefore, the Department will go ahead with a response, based on its current position, to clarify the points that the Committee raised.

The Chairperson: Thank you for that, Adele and John, and for giving the Committee your time. No doubt we will see you both again.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Wednesday 24 October 2007

DORMANT BANK AND BUILDING SOCIETY ACCOUNTS BILL: LEGISLATIVE CONSENT/SEWELL MOTION

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin (Chairperson)
Mr Roy Beggs
Dr Stephen Farry
Mr Simon Hamilton
Ms Jennifer McCann
Mr Adrian McQuillan
Mr Peter Weir

Witnesses:

Mr Neil Lambe	}	Department of Finance and Personnel
Mrs Agnes Lennon
Mr Richard Pengelly

The Chairperson (Mr McLaughlin): You are most welcome. Today's witnesses are Richard Pengelly, the head of the central expenditure division, his colleague Agnes Lennon, and Neil Lambe from the Departmental Solicitor's Office. As the Committee has a heavy agenda today, perhaps you would keep your evidence to half an hour, if possible.

Mr Richard Pengelly (Department of Finance and Personnel): In view of the time pressures, we have circulated a background paper. Therefore, rather than go through that, perhaps we could move straight to members' questions. The high-level issue concerns seeking a legislative consent motion to allow Westminster to legislate on dormant accounts. I hope that the fairly short background paper covers the relevant points. Unless members particularly want me to go through the paper, we are happy to take questions.

Mr Weir: I have some reservations about the legislation. I want clarification on how Northern Ireland would be included and what procedures would be involved. The process is such that whatever money is raised would be divided throughout the UK on a pro rata basis. Presumably, if the Assembly does not consent to the legislation, Northern Ireland would be excluded from receiving money, which would, consequently, be divided among the other parts of the UK. What is the exact position?

Mr Pengelly: We are not absolutely clear on that. We have had informal discussions with the Treasury, whose view ranges between either no money coming to Northern Ireland or, because it is a reserved matter, the Treasury would decide on distribution priorities and the programmes on which the money should be spent. The Treasury has not given serious thought to the matter. The crucial point is that, should they not consent to the legislation, the Executive would lose the ability to influence how the money is spent in Northern Ireland.

Mr Weir: That is a crucial issue. Despite my concerns, we should not necessarily cut off our nose to spite our face. My fundamental problem is with legislation that enables the Treasury to snaffle money that belongs to citizens, simply because it has been sitting in a bank account that has not been used for a certain period. To be honest, that is not far from being theft. By the same token, if the Chancellor is keen to be a modern-day Robin Hood —

Mr Hamilton: However, he may not give to the poor.

Mr Weir: Yes, he may not give the money to the poor.

Mr Hamilton: Nor would he be robbing from the rich.

Mr Weir: I am not sure that Northern Ireland should be deprived of the spoils of such theft.

Mr Pengelly: In advance of any distribution of the money, an extensive repatriation exercise will have taken place, whereby the banks and building societies will go through the accounts that have had no customer-initiated activity for 15 years. That will reduce the number of accounts to be included. Furthermore, any individual who comes forward will get their money back in full. There will be no question that the money will have been spent and that individuals will lose their money — that is guaranteed.

Mr Weir: I presume that they will not lose any interest on their money.

Mr Pengelly: My understanding is that money in dormant accounts does not attract interest. After 15 years, the banks move the money into dormant accounts that attract negligible, if any, interest.

Mr Weir: Therefore, is the idea to steal people's money and hope that they do not return to claim it at a later stage?

Mr Pengelly: I describe it as borrowing their money.

The Chairperson: I neglected to point out that Hansard is recording the session. Are there any other questions?

Mr Hamilton: I share Peter's views. I am deeply uneasy about the Bill's underlying principle. I do not care whether the account has been idle for 15 years or 50 years. I am not happy that money that is registered and belongs to an individual will be taken and distributed, in whatever fashion. I want clarification on the role of the Big Lottery Fund. The Department's paper refers to ethical concerns: for example, certain churches will not apply to that fund. Although I am uneasy, I take Peter's point that if the legislation is going to be passed, Northern Ireland should at least get its fair share.

I would be happier if the money were to go to the Executive to distribute to programmes and socio-economic schemes throughout Government, or to various nominated charities. What is the role of the Big Lottery Fund in Northern Ireland?

Mr Pengelly: During consultation with the Treasury on the significant unease that many in Northern Ireland feel about the Big Lottery Fund, the Minister of Finance and Personnel registered the points that you have raised. The Treasury's view was that the fund has established an efficient distribution mechanism, but it acknowledged the point about the links to gambling.

The current situation is that all money from the dormant accounts will go into a separate fund and will not be pooled with any of the normal lottery funding. That fund's branding will be separate and distinct from the Big Lottery Fund logo. In the new year, as part of the consultation process, the Department wants to carry out further work, specifically with the lottery, to ensure that its logo does not appear on any branding of that separate fund. Should branding be required, it will be based on unclaimed assets — not the lottery.

Mr Hamilton: That is vitally important. It is one thing to take money from the public even if they have forgotten about it, but then to have sections of society claiming that back for worthy schemes through a mechanism for distribution that is essentially the Big Lottery Fund —

Mr Pengelly: It will not be branded, and the money will be separate. If someone receives a cheque, not one penny of that cheque will have come from lottery proceeds.

Mr Beggs: I share the grave concern about the Government raiding personal dormant accounts. It is essential that individuals would have a right, should they become aware of it subsequently, to claim the money back. If they did become aware of the money, how would it be claimed back, and where would the money come from? Would it be from the Government?

Mr Pengelly: When the money is passed across from the banks after the repatriation exercise and the account has been identified as dormant, the money will be passed across to a reclaim fund. The fund will work on a risk basis and decide, for example, that if an account has been inactive for 20 years there would be a 20% risk of somebody coming back and claiming that. It will withhold 20% of the funds from accounts of that age. While that individual would still be entitled to 100% of his or her account, in the round, between the 20% that is taken off all such accounts, the funding that is held will be sufficient to honour any claims. In addition, funds held as security will be invested, and all the proceeds of the investment will come back into the reclaim fund.

Mr Beggs: There is a counter-argument. I take it that it is the banks that are benefiting from the money at present.

Mr Pengelly: At the moment the money is sitting with the banks.

Mr Beggs: The banks are benefiting, and that is not in the public interest. To pursue the Big Lottery Fund issue, in your briefing paper you say that the smaller banks and building societies could distribute to charities. However, you also say that the assets could be distributed by the Big Lottery Fund. Is there a conflict between those two statements?

Mr Pengelly: The small banks and building societies, defined as those with assets less than £7 billion, can identify the dormant accounts, but rather than pass those proceeds across through the normal distribution mechanism, they can pass the proceeds directly to charity projects. There is an acceptance that banks and building societies defined as small are particular to a specific geographical area.

Mr McLaughlin: They have assets of £7 billion and they are defined as small?

Mr Pengelly: I would not get out of bed for that myself. [Laughter.]

The theory is that the smaller banks and building societies are geographically based. Therefore, rather than passing the money into a big pot, which is distributed on a population basis across the UK, they can focus the money specifically in their geographical location.

Mr Beggs: I did not pick up all that was said earlier about the Big Lottery Fund.

Mr McLaughlin: Am I right in saying that it is not account location that determines distribution; it would be on a population basis?

Mr Pengelly: On a UK basis, it goes into the fund, and the amounts are apportioned.

Mrs Agnes Lennon (Department of Finance and Personnel): The small building societies or banks would have the option of paying the money to charities, in places where they have local branches, or to ones with which they have a special connection.

Mr McLaughlin: Is there an overriding distinction between where the original dormant accounts were located and where the assets are distributed in determining distribution, or is that disregarded and the assets distributed among the wider population?

Mr Pengelly: Dormant accounts in, for example, the Northern Bank, which is certainly not a small bank, would go into the UK fund, and the totality of the UK fund would be distributed on a population basis.

Mr Neil Lambe (Department of Finance and Personnel): The population-share aspect does not apply to the alternative scheme for the smaller banks and building societies. For example, the Leeds Building Society would identify dormant accounts in its branches across the UK, and then it would distribute a proportion of the dormant account money to the communities local to the branch network. There is no strict population share-out of the dormant account money identified in that scheme for the smaller banks and building societies.

Mr Weir: I can see that happening with the smaller banks. It seems that an initial assessment will be carried out. How would that affect, in particular, the smaller banks on an ongoing basis? Is the idea to carry out a yearly review of dormant accounts? Will the fund be set up and then be monitored throughout the year? The Act will apply to accounts that have been dormant for 15 years. When the initial trawl is completed, there will be some accounts that have been dormant for 13 or 14 years. What is the procedure for those accounts that will fall into the 15-year category in a year or two?

Mr Pengelly: There will be a review annually. At the starting point, the Act will apply to accounts that have been dormant for 15 years or more. The following year, accounts that were 14 years dormant at the time of the initial trawl will come under the scheme. Treasury expectations are that, across the UK, there will be an initial fund of several hundred million pounds, with an ongoing top-up of a few tens of million of pounds.

Mr Weir: I can understand the Government's reason for channelling the money through the Big Lottery Fund. However, what will happen when permission has been given to one of the smaller banks to distribute the money, and the customer wants to claim that money back? Who is going to be responsible for paying back that money? I am worried that there could be a situation in which a customer tries to withdraw money, only to be told that it is now being used to sponsor a donkey in Donaghadee.

Mr Lambe: As with the main scheme, a portion of the dormant account money identified by the smaller banks and building societies will be set aside and transferred to the national reclaim fund, which will be responsible for those claims.

Mr Weir: OK. That would be a one-stop shop regarding claims for money.

The Chairperson: Roy, I am sorry. I was not fair to you. I created a diversion, and Peter took full advantage of it.

Mr Beggs: I want clarification regarding money going to the Big Lottery Fund. There are many churches and youth organisations — for example, the YMCA — that do not believe in accepting money from the Big Lottery Fund. Have you sought reassurance that the money will go to a scheme that many laudable charitable organisations will avail of?

Mr Pengelly: As part of the consultation process, the Minister made the point to the Treasury that there were many organisations in Northern Ireland that would be uncomfortable with the use of the Big Lottery Fund. However, it is a reserved matter, and the Treasury has decided to pursue the use of the Big Lottery Fund, largely for efficiency reasons and because there is an established mechanism.

However, we have been assured that there will be complete separation of funds and distinct and unique branding. That is an issue that we want to pursue locally so that when voluntary and community groups in Northern Ireland seek funding from the scheme, they know that it will not have come from lottery proceeds and that they will not end up with a lottery plaque on the wall.

On a small point regarding potential local opt-out, there are two smaller building societies in Northern Ireland — the Progressive Building Society and the City of Derry Building Society.

The Chairperson: What are the consequences if the Assembly decides that it does not like this particular approach? What would the process be if the Assembly decided that it wanted to introduce its own Bill?

Mr Pengelly: It is financial services legislation; therefore, it is a reserved matter.

The Chairperson: OK. What is the consequence if the Assembly decides against giving its consent?

Mr Pengelly: We have not pursued the consequences in detail. As it is a reserved matter, Westminster would be able to legislate for Northern Ireland. The issue would be whether Westminster would implement legislation to put in place its own mechanism for distributing the money in Northern Ireland without any local flavouring of priorities. Alternatively, it may decide that nothing would be distributed in Northern Ireland. I doubt that it would be the latter option of no distribution in Northern Ireland. I suspect that there would be some mechanism to channel funds to Northern Ireland; however, the Executive would lose the ability to influence that.

The Chairperson: The issue certainly merits some exploration so that members understand it before it gets to the Floor of the Assembly. Will you need a question for written answer from the Committee regarding that?

Mr Pengelly: That would be helpful. We have raised that issue with the Treasury, and I think that it would regard that as a doomsday scenario.

Mr Weir: I appreciate what has been said about the rebranding of the funds regarding the Big Lottery Fund. I am still not particularly comfortable with that. Whatever way it is branded, I suspect that a lot of church organisations will be loathe to have to say that the money came from the Big Lottery Fund, even though it was not raised through the lottery. I suspect that there will still be a fair level of opposition from church organisations.

With regard to accepting money that the Government have taken from dormant accounts, I am not sure whether some organisations will see that as a more moral option. I appreciate that the decision on the funds is outside our hands, but I would prefer it if the money were separate from the Big Lottery Fund. I know that that is not the position that the Treasury has taken, but a rebranded version will not be satisfactory for a lot of organisations.

Mrs Lennon: It may reassure you to know that under the proposed legislation the Big Lottery Fund will have to prepare an annual report and an annual statement of accounts for that separate funding stream, and they will be laid in the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Mr Weir: Many of the organisations that will have problems with claiming money from the Big Lottery Fund will see those measures as relatively fine distinctions. However, I might be wrong, and many of them will avail of the money. I do not think that the compulsion imposed on the Big Lottery Fund by the Bill will provide the necessary level of reassurance to organisations — a lot of organisations will be put off. I do not know why the money cannot be divided between the regions and Northern Ireland be granted £5 million for this year, for instance. I am disappointed that the money cannot be given to the Executive. I appreciate that it is not our decision, but I do not see why it has to come through a separate organisation.

Mr Pengelly: The key rationale is the Treasury's view that the dormant accounts funding must be unique and additional to mainstream Government funding. That is why it wants a completely separate and distinct distribution mechanism. Rather than allocating the money to the Executive and that money being used to fund normal public expenditure programmes, the Treasury wants to see something unique and additional. We have discussed the issue with the Minister, and, as part of the consultation within the confines of the scheme as dictated by Treasury, we want to seek views on what steps can be taken to make people as comfortable as possible.

Mr Weir: Correct me if I am wrong, but have there not been times when granted money has been given to Northern Ireland and ring-fenced or hypothecated for a purpose?

Mr Pengelly: Possibly, yes.

Mr Weir: Therefore it seems strange that the money from dormant accounts cannot be treated differently.

Mrs Lennon: It is not public expenditure: it is a completely separate stream of money.

Mr Weir: There is a fine distinction. The Government have found a way to get money out of people, and they are finding a way to pass it on so that it gets spent for the public good. The Government are notorious for raiding pension funds and imposing various clever forms of taxation. I do not see a distinction between that and taking money from dormant accounts. It is dancing on the head of a pin, to be perfectly honest.

The Chairperson: The Dublin Government are more explicit and blunt in their approach. They merely passed the legislation and took the power.

Ms J McCann: Will banks be encouraged to be proactive in trying to find the holders of accounts that have not been used for 13 or 14 years? If the account holder is dead, will living relatives be entitled to claim the funds? If the Bill is not passed, what happens to the money in the dormant accounts?

Mr Pengelly: Banks will undertake a significant proactive exercise — the repatriation exercise — in advance of the start of the scheme in which they will correspond with the last known address of the account holder. If the account holder is dead, the account will form part of his or her estate and will pass directly to any living descendent. If the account holder never appears, the money will stay in the fund and continue to fund projects. It will remain there until someone claims it. If that does not happen, it will just reside there.

Mrs Lennon: An advertising campaign has also begun on the reuniting exercise. There were advertisements in the 'Belfast Telegraph' last week.

Mr McQuillan: I saw advertisements over the weekend.

Dr Farry: Will the threshold for someone seeking to reclaim money from the subsequent funds be different from that for a person who goes to the bank today to withdraw money from the account in year 16?

Mr Lambe: When you say “threshold”, do you mean the amount of money?

Dr Farry: I mean what the person must do to get his or her money. Does anyone have to jump through more hoops in year 16 than they would in year 14?

Mr Lambe: In both year 14 and year 16, after the specific dormant account money has been transferred, the person would have to establish proof of identity to the financial institution to prove that he or she is the person whose dormant account funds have been transferred.

Dr Farry: If I were to go into a bank today and prove my identity, I could withdraw money from my account today. Would there be a delay for a person seeking to claim his or her money back? Would he or she have to fill out more forms in triplicate or send an application off in the post and wait for six months or so?

Mr Lambe: I am not aware that the Treasury discussions have reached that level of detail yet. Although the dormant account money will have been transferred to a central reclaim fund, which will meet the claim, the customer will first approach his or her bank or building society, which will initiate the recovery process from the reclaim fund. I would imagine that the process is unlikely to be as straightforward as proving identity and receiving the money on the same day. There are likely to be additional administrative steps.

Dr Farry: Basically, the bank is not required to honour the request immediately by giving the customer his or her money, if the account has been dormant for 16 years. The bank will tell the customer that the money has been referred to a central fund, and although the customer is entitled to it, he or she will have to go through a certain process to get it.

Mr Lambe: Yes. The customer’s legal entitlement to have the money repaid is a right as against the reclaim fund and not the original bank or building society, because of the transfer.

Dr Farry: I recognise the argument for trying to use what is, for all intents and purposes, dead money. However, the unease comes because, essentially — with the person having taken no action — the Government interfere with the person’s access to his or her property by making it more difficult to retrieve. The circumstances under which a person can access his or her funds will have changed. That is a potential problem.

A second issue concerns the distribution of the funds. The Big Lottery Fund is separate from normal Government expenditure, but, in practice, core areas of life are covered by Big Lottery funding, allowing the Government to opt to offload responsibilities for arts funding, for example. Recently, money has been withdrawn from Northern Ireland by the Big Lottery Fund in anticipation of the 2012 Olympic Games.

My concern is that money might be allocated on the basis of population, as opposed to need. Need is not evenly distributed across the UK, and regions such as Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales and the north of England require a higher per capita expenditure than that required in London and the south east. If resources are allocated on the basis of population, rather than need, the money is re-weighted in favour of London and the south east at the expense of the regions.

Mr Pengelly: That debate goes far beyond the issues in the Bill; it goes to the core issue of funding the devolved Administrations in particular. Treasury’s approach to funding devolved Administrations is the Barnett formula, and it has no plans to review that. However, you make a valid point.

Mr Hamilton: I want to go over the point again about how the money is to be distributed. One criticism of the Big Lottery Fund, in addition to the difficulties of accessing funding for moral reasons, is that the quality of some of the projects has been somewhat dubious or they have been lacking in merit. Your paper refers to: “a general definition of ‘social or environmental purposes’”.

That is a fairly wide definition. The Executive cannot say that they want the money for priorities in the Programme for Government, such as roads or infrastructure. The money will be more likely to go to the donkeys in Donaghadee, as Peter said. It is more small-scale projects that would be involved, rather than large infrastructural projects.

Mr Pengelly: It is likely that, given the sums involved, the projects would be small. However, the legislation provides for “social or environmental purposes”, which is a pretty broad canvas, and the Executive can apply a level of detail as regards priorities. The legislation will also provide for the Department of Finance and Personnel to provide direction to the Big Lottery Fund. Thus, the Executive can drill down in as much detail as they choose. Again, that detail would be considered as part of the consultation process.

The original legislation was supposed to deal with just social issues, but I think that it was the Scots who pressed for the inclusion of environmental issues. Those two types of issues pretty much cover most of the activities in which Government would be involved. The Executive will want to drill down into this issue and provide the lottery fund with a pretty firm steer on distribution.

Mr Hamilton: Should the Bill become law, it would be important to use the money that comes back to Northern Ireland — however much it will be — for worthwhile projects, rather than for abstract projects of limited value.

Mrs Lennon: That matter will be consulted on after the legislation has been passed, and I presume that we will appear before the Committee again to discuss that. An Order setting out the Northern Ireland priorities will come before the Assembly, so the Assembly will have an input.

The Chairperson: The Committee will consider its position as regards endorsement of the legislation. The issues raised will be recorded in the Hansard report, of which you will receive a copy. It would be helpful if you could respond to the Committee in writing. If it is felt necessary, we could ask you to come before us and help us. As I understand it, 19 November 2007 is the next date on the timetable.

Mr Pengelly: That is the indicative timing.

The Chairperson: We have two meetings scheduled before that date, so there will be an opportunity to meet you again, if necessary. I would ask that you forward a written response as soon as possible.

Mr Pengelly: I will try to send that response early next week.

The Chairperson: Mr Pengelly, I thank you and your colleagues for your help.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Thursday 25 October 2007

LIBRARIES BILL (NIA 5/07)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Barry McElduff (Chairperson)
Mr Francie Brolly
Lord Browne
Mr Nelson McCausland
Mr Paul Maskey
Mr Pat Ramsey
Mr Ken Robinson
Mr Jim Shannon

The Chairperson (Mr McElduff): We will now begin the formal discussion of the Libraries Bill. The Bill Clerk is with us today, and he is always very helpful in these matters.

I refer members to the table of issues that they have identified as being of concern to them, and to a summary of the Minister's responses, which we heard last week. The Committee must consider the Minister's evidence and decide whether it is content with how he has responded to the Committee's concerns. That is best done systematically, and I will deal with each issue in turn.

First is clause 2, "Duty of authority to provide library service". The Committee's position is that it wants the term "comprehensive and efficient" to be included in the clause. Last week, the Minister said that such terms add meaning to the Bill, and that he is happy to consider the inclusion of the terms. He said that he would get back to the Committee on the matter.

The Committee also asked the Minister how the efficiency of the library authority will be monitored and who will monitor it. The Minister said that the library authority will be monitored by the chief executive, who will report to the permanent secretary, who, in turn, will report to the Minister. The Minister will then report to the Committee. The Minister said that he was happy with those mechanisms and that there was no need for an outside body to carry out the monitoring. Ms Irene Knox also said that she would report to the Committee on standards and that any proposal for the updating of standards would be brought before the Committee. The Minister said that he was not in favour of including that matter in legislation as it would result in a loss of flexibility. Does the Committee agree that we need to write to the Minister asking him to report back in writing on his deliberations on the inclusion of the phrase "comprehensive and efficient"?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with the Minister's response on how standards will be monitored? If not, we could write to the Minister asking him to consider making an amendment to require that the performance standards of the authority need to be improved by the Assembly. Are we agreed that we are happy with the response?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Last week, the Committee told the Minister that it was concerned that clause 2(2) does not provide adequate protection for reference material. We asked the Minister to consider expanding the clause to include reference to protecting material of regional and national importance. Nelson, you have consistently raised that point.

Ms Knox replied that the difficulty with including such a provision in legislation is that it is not always possible to identify such material unless someone points it out. Therefore, the authority could be placed in a difficult position should it miss a publication — in other words, it could be brought to court if it failed to collect a particular item. However, Ms Knox said that she would consider the inclusion of a general phrase in the legislation. The Department has indicated that we will have a response from the Minister by 16 November, in preparation for the clause-by-clause scrutiny on 22 November.

I now turn to clause 6, "Charges for certain library services". The Committee is concerned that this clause does not guarantee free core library services. Last week, we asked the Minister whether he would amend clause 6(1) in line with the wording suggested by the Southern Education and Library Board. The Minister said that he would consider the wording and report back to the Committee. A response is due by 16 November.

We also asked the Minister for his view on the idea of introducing a standard set of charges to apply to all libraries in all areas. The Minister said that one of the reasons for having a single library authority is to ensure a consistent service across the board, and that he saw no benefit in having different charges in different regions. Are members content with the Minister's response? Are members content that clause 6(2) should remain as drafted, as it seems that there is no intention to set different charges in different areas, even though the Bill, as currently drafted, makes provisions for different charges? Does anyone want to guide the Committee on how to deal with that matter? I hear no strong views, so I take it that the Committee is happy with the Minister's response.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The Committee also asked the Minister whether he was content that he had legislative cover to make different charges to people of different ages. The Minister said that he could not give that assurance and would need to ask the relevant people to look at that matter on his behalf. Again, we will receive more information by 16 November. Are members content to await the Minister's response?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We now turn to paragraph 1 of schedule 2, which deals with membership of the authority. The Committee is proposing a substantive change to this schedule. The Committee favours a board of 20 members. Last week, the Minister said that he was open to the Committee's views and that the issue was still up for discussion. However, he made the point that, sometimes, larger boards do not work as effectively as smaller boards because people do not pull their weight, and that smaller boards can be more focused. I take it that Members are still in favour of Ken's proposal of 20 members. Therefore, we are seeking agreement to specify that figure, and we will write to the Minister asking him to amend the Bill accordingly.

Mr McCausland: Is that with regard to making sure that the membership is reflective of Northern Ireland society?

The Chairperson: The item that I am referring to is the number of board members. What you have referred to is a further point that you may want to major on. Is it our considered view that the board should consist of 20 members?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The Committee told the Minister that we favour elected representatives and union representatives being included on the board. The Minister said that he recognised that local government representatives bring a unique dimension to public bodies because of their interaction with the public. Again, that is still up for discussion.

Does the Committee want to suggest to the Minister how many board members should be local councillors? Do we want to ask the Minister to specify that, and that union representatives should be on the board, in the Bill? If we do, we are going to have to write to the Minister regarding that. Or, do we want to specify another form of wording about the board's being representative of society and cultural diversity?

Mr McCausland: I think that that more general approach covers all of those bases.

The Chairperson: Are we agreed?

Mr McCausland: We should emphasise that there should be local government involvement.

Mr P Ramsey: And appropriate geographical balance.

Mr McCausland: Yes, the term "reflective" will cover that.

The Chairperson: Nelson, help us with a form of words.

Mr McCausland: "That the membership of the body should be reflective of Northern Ireland society."

The Chairperson: Is that agreed by members?

Mr McCausland: There is a form of words that is used by the Human Rights Commission and the Equality Commission. I do not know what it is, but we could consider that.

Mr Shannon: Are we going to specify the number of elected representatives, or are we saying that we are not going to do that?

The Chairperson: We are saying that the board should consist of 20 members. Do we want to be prescriptive, and say that one third, or less —

Mr Shannon: I am simply making the point. I am not proposing that by any means. A certain group of councillors could perhaps achieve the required geographical spread. Other members may have a different opinion.

The Chairperson: Other people have said that the Northern Ireland Local Government Association, for example, could provide the representation on the board and be the councillors' voice, but that may not be the case.

Does anyone want to be prescriptive regarding how many of the 20 members should be local councillors?

Mr McCausland: No. We do not have to do that at this point.

Regarding the point that Jim made, council representation would achieve a spread of people. However, there are dangers in that all the experts come from North Down. Therefore, it is good to get representativeness reflecting —

Mr Shannon: There are experts in other parts of the country apart from North Down.

Mr McCausland: Yes, but looking at the composition of the current boards, you would not think that.

The Chairperson: Are there any experts in the Ards area, Jim?

Mr Shannon: I can think of one or two. We have experts on lots of things.

The Chairperson: OK. Do we want to be specific and request that the legislation state that people from all geographical areas should be included on the board, or is that covered?

Mr McCausland: The term “reflective” covers geography, gender, cultural background, and so on.

The Chairperson: OK. Is that agreed?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Schedule 1, paragraph 3 refers to tenure of office. Wallace explored this last week.

Lord Browne: Yes. We were all agreed on that issue.

The Chairperson: Therefore, the Committee is content with the Minister’s response.

The Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance’s (NIPSA) view is that the chairperson of the board of the new library authority should be able to serve only a maximum of two terms of office. The Department agreed with that view, but said that it should not necessarily be included in the legislation, being covered instead by the rules of operation of the board.

Mr McCausland: Does the Department determine the rules of operation of the board?

The Chairperson: Do we want to ask that question specifically?

Mr McCausland: Yes. If it is the Department setting the rules, that is fine. However, if it is left to the board to set its own rules, it might decide —

The Chairperson: I am beginning to learn that if the Committee wants something written into legislation, the Department can say that it is not needed and that it can be included in the rules of operation or the explanatory and financial memorandum. Therefore, if we were being suspicious, it could be suggested that there are wee devices that the Department uses. However, we should not be suspicious.

Do we want it stipulated in the legislation that the chairperson of the board should hold office for a maximum of two terms, or are members content that it be included in the rules of operation? We will ask the question that Nelson proposed regarding who sets those rules.

Mr P Maskey: Ask the question first.

The Chairperson: OK. We can revisit that.

We have not received a response from the Departmental Solicitor’s Office regarding NIPSA’s proposed amendments. Last week, the Minister said that it seemed sensible for the Departmental Solicitor’s Office and NIPSA’s lawyer to find out whether they could agree a position. He said that he would report back to the Committee at the earliest opportunity.

With regard to the explanatory memorandum, the Committee had an issue with the start-up costs and estimated savings. Last week, we told the Minister that we believed that he was underestimating the start-up costs and overestimating the efficiency savings that could be made in the future. The Minister said that the predicted savings had already been agreed with the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP). If the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) were to move away from those figures, DFP approval would need to be sought. The Minister said that he is still aiming to make the efficiency savings, and therefore cannot amend the explanatory memorandum. Are members content with the Minister’s reasoning?

Mr P Ramsey: That is probably one of the most contentious areas, and there is a level of uncertainty there. The fact that the Minister conceded the appointment of an outside body to examine the overall costs indicates that there is a problem. The Minister confirmed today that Deloitte and Touche has been appointed.

The Chairperson: Should we press the Minister to amend the explanatory memorandum in relation to the savings?

Mr P Ramsey: Every presentation that the Committee has heard, particularly from the boards, has indicated expected costs two or three times higher than what the Minister indicated. We need more clarification.

The Chairperson: The Committee Clerk will explain the timing and the opportunity that remains to affect these amendments.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee is not meeting next week; the next meeting is on 8 November and that will be followed by a meeting on 15 November. Therefore, only a few meetings are left before the Committee begins its clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Libraries Bill. Today is the last meeting in which Committee members will be able to come up with questions, to query the Department and put questions in writing to the Department in time for it to come up with answers. The Department is already providing answers on 16 November, so anything that is sent today would have to be tagged on to those.

The Chairperson: The Committee will bear that in mind. Are we awaiting further information, or do we want to press the Minister to amend the explanatory memorandum in relation to the savings? Is there any conclusion on that?

Mr McCausland: Have we had clarity on the point that was raised in the research paper: that, up to now, corporate costs have been met largely by the Department of Education (DE) and that, when the library authority is set up, those costs will be met by DCAL? The research paper states:

“DCAL explain that for ‘historical’ reasons corporate and support services for libraries...have been financed by the Department of Education (DE), an arrangement which will end once the single Authority is set up.”

Has there been clarification that less money will be given to the Department of Education and additional money given to DCAL to meet those corporate costs?

The Chairperson: Is there a question there for the Department?

Mr McCausland: How did that influence the Department’s estimation of the savings? DCAL might feel that it will make savings in corporate costs, but it was not paying for those anyway; the Department of Education was.

The Principal Clerk of Bills: There will probably be a transfer of funds from that programme from the Department of Education to DCAL, as it is taking over that policy issue. The savings that have been quoted must be real savings, and the Department will have taken that into account.

Mr McCausland: The difficulty was that the previous system was run through the boards, which were funded by DE, and the man in charge of the accountancy section was responsible for libraries, schools and youth services. How does one apportion those costs? Perhaps that was considered by the consultants.

The Chairperson: Deloitte specified a figure of £965,000 for corporate services.

Mr McCausland: Was that its estimate?

The Chairperson: Yes, and I understand that the bid so far has been for £550,000. Presumably the Department will need to bid for that greater amount, should that estimate turn out to be accurate. Is there an action point, or are we just deliberating?

Mr McCausland: We are deliberating.

The Chairperson: The Minister said that the Department was still working on the start-up costs and that he was not yet in a position to say whether he would change the figures in the explanatory memorandum. The Minister said that he would inform the Committee when the Department had worked out more concrete figures. The Department is aiming to produce those figures by 16 November.

There is that point, again, about 16 November being the day after the Committee meeting. Does that matter, or would it be helpful if that were to be brought forward?

The Committee Clerk: The Department was proposing to answer the Committee’s queries in December, so that date represents an agreement to bring its response forward.

The Chairperson: That is fine.

I refer members to the correspondence from the Belfast Education and Library Board and NIPSA on start-up costs for the library authority. Neither organisation was able to provide concrete figures. Are members content to wait for the Minister to provide figures before considering the matter further?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The timing for the creation of the library authority is not in the Bill. Last week, the Minister told the Committee that he was setting 1 April 2009 as the start date for the library authority. Members had been concerned about the proposed start date of 1 April 2008, given that it was a year before the proposed establishment of the education and skills authority. Are members content with the start date of 1 April 2009?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The links with the schools library service and the Department of Education are not in the Bill. The Committee has written to the Minister to request information on what discussions his Department has had with the Department of Education on the synchronisation of the establishment of the library authority and the education and skills authority. We also asked him how the links between the public library service and the schools library service will be maintained and developed, what sort of service-level agreement will be made and what sort of issues will it cover. A response is due next week.

Another issue that is not in the Bill is the sub-regional structure. Last week, the Committee asked the Minister to provide it with the operational structure of the library authority. Ms Knox said that she was drafting the operational structure and that it would be ready towards the end of November. She offered to come to the Committee when she was ready to discuss it. Are members content to wait to see the operational structure before considering the issue further, or do they wish to ask Ms Knox to discuss it?

Mr P Maskey: I have no problem with waiting for Ms Knox to come back. However, when she comes back, if the Committee decides that there should be changes to the structure, can it ask her to make them, and will she have time to do so?

The Committee Clerk: We have drawn up a table in an attempt to help the Committee come to its final conclusions on the Bill before the end date of the extension. Therefore, we have a little bit of time.

Mr P Maskey: Then we will just wait.

The Chairperson: OK. The Committee has concluded its business for today. If there are additional comments, please feel free to make them now.

The Principal Clerk of Bills: On the question of rules, clause 9 of the Bill refers to the Department's powers of direction. The clause enables the Department to give general or specific directions to the authority on the exercise of its functions. It is likely that this clause relates to setting the rules of operation. Two terms are being used. In the legislation it is referred to as "powers of direction", and I suspect that that relates to setting rules. However, the Committee will have to write to the Minister for clarification of that.

As the Department is due to respond on 16 November, but the Committee is to meet on 15 November, may I suggest that the Committee considers writing to the Department for the sake of two days, so that the material could be with you the day before you have to address the issues.

The Chairperson: I take the Committee Clerk's point that the response was originally going to be given in December and that 16 November is some sort of concession. That said, perhaps the Committee should write to the Department to ask for that increased flexibility. Thank you for that suggestion.

Mr P Ramsey: Some of the questions that I asked the Minister and officials last week remain unanswered. Some of the questions were about legislation, but some related to operational matters, such as the total redundancy costs, the branding of the new service, the establishment of the new headquarters and whether there would be costs relating to sub-regional offices. All those questions were to enable members to be sure that we are going down the road that we want to go down. We know that significant savings will be made, but will the same service be provided?

I raise that point because there are occasions when the Minister or officials are unable to give the Committee answers. What is the follow-through mechanism for getting those answers? For example, I am not sure whether DCAL officials are present today. If they were, they could take those questions away and give the Committee an assurance that the questions that remained unanswered from weeks ago will be looked at. The Committee keeps coming back to the same questions. What is the point of asking questions if we are not given the appropriate answers?

The Chairperson: So there are unanswered questions?

Mr P Ramsey: I have consistently asked a range of questions, and they remain unanswered.

The Principal Clerk of Bills: Normally, officials will scour Hansard and pick up anything that —

Mr P Ramsey: Normally?

The Principal Clerk of Bills: You may want to have that relayed back to ensure that officials do that.

Mr P Ramsey: In light of the amount of effort that the Committee has put into the Bill, I would be happy enough, Mr Chairperson, if you were to send officials a letter requesting them to address the questions that have been asked and recorded in Hansard over recent weeks.

The Chairperson: That is a very general request, and it would be leaving it to the officials' interpretation as to what was asked and what was not asked. However, that is OK.

Mr P Ramsey: The problem is that we are forced into asking questions of the Minister outside the DCAL setting, which should not be the case. However, we have to do that because we are not getting answers.

The Chairperson: Pat, maybe you could refresh your memory and speak to the Committee Clerk about those issues later.

Mr P Ramsey: I will give the Committee Clerk the information.

The Chairperson: That is great; it is exactly what we need. Thank you very much, members.

Written Answers

This section contains the written answers to questions tabled by Members.

The content of the responses is as received at the time from the relevant Minister or representative of the Assembly Commission, and it has not been subject to the official reporting process or changed.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 28 September 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Equality Provision

Mr Simpson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it has identified any improvements that could be made to equality provision. (AQW 192/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley and Mr M McGuinness): The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister aims to develop policies and legislation that will better contribute to promoting equality of opportunity for everyone in Northern Ireland.

The existing framework of equality policy and legislation has been strengthened recently in a number of areas, for example on age and disability.

As you are no doubt aware, the Department is also considering proposals for Single Equality legislation. These will of course be brought before the Assembly for their consideration.

Policies to promote equality and social inclusion are currently being developed on a range of issues.

The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland has recently completed a major review of the effectiveness of Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act and has consulted on its findings. We will ensure that there is full consideration of the Review findings and recommendations when the final report is published.

Victims' Groups

Mr Bresland asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what funding has been made available for victims groups in West Tyrone in 2005, 2006 and 2007. (AQW 272/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

Records show that funding detailed in the table below has been allocated to organisations based in West Tyrone involved in providing support for victims between April 1998 and March 2007. A year by year breakdown of these figures is not currently available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

In addition to the amounts shown, victims' groups may also apply for funding from any programme or scheme, such as the District Council Community Relations Programme or European Union funding through the Local Strategy Partnerships, in cases where they can satisfy the relevant eligibility criteria.

Organisation providing support for Victims	Amount Allocated £
Co Tyrone Frontier Relief Society	2,000
Derry and Raphoe Action	347,229
Koram Centre/Strabane Befriending & Counselling Association	254,938
Omagh Support and Self Help Group	217,747
WAVE Omagh	193,771
West Tyrone Voice	820,085

Equality Legislation

Mr Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the meetings and correspondence it has had with other (i) regional assemblies; and (ii) legislatures, about improving equality legislation. (AQW 339/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister have not had any meetings or exchanged any correspondence with either (i) other regional assemblies; or (ii) other legislatures, about improving equality legislation.

However, as part of the work into developing proposals that might form part of any future equality legislation, officials remain in contact with their counterparts in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland.

North-South Ministerial Council

Mr McCarthy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give an update on the work of the North-South Ministerial Council. (AQO 206/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

On 18 September 2007 we provided a full statement to the Assembly on the fifth Plenary of the North/South

Ministerial Council (NSMC), which was held in Armagh on 17 July 2007. As outlined in our statement, the Plenary was significant in that it was the first meeting of the NSMC since 2002. Important decisions were taken in relation to investment in infrastructure matters and the restoration of a section of the Ulster Canal. The meeting agreed to invest £400 million in infrastructure improvements.

At the Plenary, the Council also considered and approved a schedule of NSMC meetings to take place over the coming months. The first of these – a Transport Sectoral – was held in Co Fermanagh on Friday 14 September. In accordance with the Ministerial Code, a full report on that meeting will be made to the Assembly tomorrow. Planning is under way for the other Sectoral meetings. Prior to these meetings, the Assembly will receive details of the date, agenda and Ministerial attendance.

Rights of Disabled People

Mrs O'Neill asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline how it intends to promote the rights of disabled people; and how it intends to mark the international and European 'disability days'. (AQO 163/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister is committed to promoting the rights of disabled people by ensuring that there is robust disability anti-discrimination legislation in place.

To that end, we are continuing to build on the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act through the implementation of the Disability Discrimination (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 which gives further rights to disabled people.

The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland also has a responsibility for promoting the rights of disabled people and has previously organised events to mark international and European 'disability days'. Officials from OFMDFM will be speaking to staff at the Commission in the coming weeks to discuss how best to mark these dates.

Investment Strategy

Mr Neeson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give a timescale within which it will report on the formulation of the next Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland. (AQO 205/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Executive is taking a co-ordinated approach to the development of the Programme for Government, the Budget and the Investment Strategy. We intend to publish the Investment Strategy in draft form for consultation during November and December along with the Budget and Programme for Government.

There will be a full 8 week consultation period following the publication of the draft Investment Strategy. Once this has concluded we will deliberate on the Assembly's views, and the views expressed through the consultation before seeking the agreement of the Assembly to the final Investment Strategy.

Civic Forum

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what plans it has to hold a Civic Forum meeting; and to detail how it will gauge public opinion and the opinion of elected representatives in respect of the role of the Civic Forum.

(AQO 197/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are agreed on the importance of continuing to seek the views of civic society in developing policy but we recognise that the nature of our society has changed considerably since the original Forum was set up.

Before we can take decisions about any reactivation of the Civic Forum, we need to ascertain how many of the existing members are still available and willing to serve, in an interim capacity, if it is decided to reconvene the Forum during the Review period. We have written to the members to establish their position.

Should the replies indicate sufficient interest among Forum members to return, we will then need to consider what they might usefully be tasked to do.

It is not possible at this stage to provide a detailed methodology for the Review, we have still to finalise the terms of reference, in consultation with the Committee of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and with Executive colleagues.

However, we intend the Review panel to canvass views as widely as possible with key stakeholders and engagement with the OFMDFM Committee and the Assembly.

Efficiency of Departmental Structures

Mr Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what consultations and discussions it has had on the rationalisation of the number of Northern Ireland departments; and when proposals on this matter are likely to be brought before the Assembly. (AQO 152/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: As we have already advised the Assembly, we are aware of concerns about the effectiveness and efficiency of the departmental structures we have inherited from the previous Executive. An examination of these structures could therefore be timely and we will be considering the most suitable mechanism and remit for such a review. At this time, however, no formal discussions or consultations have been initiated, nor is it possible to advise you of a date on which any proposals will be brought to the Assembly.

Programme for Government

Mr O'Dowd asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline the timeframe for the development of the Programme for Government; and to give a timescale within which the department intends to present it to the Assembly for agreement.

(AQO 162/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

Since devolution was restored on 8 May, the Executive has taken forward work to develop and agree a Programme for Government which will set out our priorities and plans for 2008 and beyond. In taking that work forward, we have sought to ensure that our Programme for Government is clearly focused on addressing the key economic, social and environmental challenges we face if we are to build a better future for all our people.

Recognising the need for close alignment between our policy and spending priorities, the Executive is taking a co-ordinated approach to the development of the Programme for Government, the Budget and the Investment Strategy. We intend to publish these documents in draft form for consultation by early November. This will enable the Executive to take full account of the outcome of the CSR exercise which will be announced in mid October.

Assembly members will have the opportunity to comment on the draft Programme for Government, draft Budget and draft ISNI during the consultation period. Once this has concluded we will consider the Assembly's views, and other views expressed through the consultation, before seeking the agreement of the Assembly to the final Programme for Government, Budget and Investment Strategy.

Lifetime Opportunities

Mr Elliott asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will give an assurance that it is fully committed to addressing rural poverty, as set out in 'Lifetime Opportunities' Government's Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy.

(AQO 196/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

Section 16 of the Northern Ireland St Andrews Agreement Act 2006 places a statutory obligation on the Northern Ireland Executive Committee, to adopt a strategy setting out how it proposes to tackle poverty, social exclusion and patterns of deprivation based on objective need.

It is acknowledged that while poverty and multiple deprivation tend to be concentrated in urban areas, rural communities here are also at risk with high levels of deprivation in less accessible rural areas.

To this end the Executive is committed to ensuring that any 'adopted' strategy will address the specific issues of poverty and social exclusion being encountered in both urban and rural areas here.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's (DARD) vision of a thriving and sustainable rural community and environment in Northern Ireland means that it is engaged in many activities that will directly and indirectly tackle rural poverty.

Agriculture continues to have an important economic role in the rural economy. DARD will strive to increase the economic sustainability of all farm businesses, and will work in conjunction with other Government Departments towards the elimination of poverty in rural areas.

DARD obtained EU approval for its 2007-13 Rural Development Programme on 24 July 2007. This programme will put over £500m into rural areas over the next 6 years, with a focus on improving the competitiveness of the farming industry, improving the environment, and improving the quality of life in rural areas.

North-South Ministerial Council

Mr W Clarke asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give an assessment of the recent North-South Ministerial Council meeting; and to give a timescale for action to be taken on any decisions made.

(AQO 160/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

On 18 September 2007 we provided a full statement to the Assembly on the fifth Plenary of the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC), which was held in Armagh on 17 July 2007. As outlined in our statement, the Plenary was significant in that it was the first meeting of the NSMC since 2002. Important decisions were taken in relation to investment in infrastructure matters and the restoration of a section of the Ulster Canal. The meeting agreed to invest £400 million pounds in infrastructure improvements.

At the Plenary, the Council also considered and approved a schedule of NSMC meetings to take place over the coming months. The first of these – a Transport Sectoral – was held in Co Fermanagh on Friday 14 September. In accordance with the Ministerial Code, a full report on that meeting will be made to the Assembly tomorrow. Planning is under way for the other Sectoral meetings.

Prior to these meetings, the Assembly will receive details of the date, agenda and Ministerial attendance.

Inward Investment

Mr P Maskey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline the measures being taken to ensure that the fullest potential for inward investment, arising from the new political climate, is realised. (AQO 164/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are already engaged in a number of major initiatives to encourage investment particularly from the United States.

Invest NI which is the responsibility of our ministerial colleague Nigel Dodds, also has an important role to market Northern Ireland in the United States and has invested considerable resources in this.

We intend to visit the United States later this year with colleagues to continue to promote Northern Ireland's interests and in particular to focus on this very important economic work.

We will be travelling to Washington, DC and other major US cities to develop and promote a US NI economic conference in Belfast for 2008 and will be working with Minister Nigel Dodds to meet with Chief Executives of major US corporations to market the investment message.

Nigel Dodds will undertake visits to Boston, New York, San Jose and other regions to promote interest. The Northern Ireland Bureau is working with Paula Dobriansky at the US State Department and seeking involvement from US business people.

The Bureau is working with other Departments and organisations on economic initiatives with corporate America, networking with Irish and Scots-Irish communities, education and research partnerships with universities and schools, cultural and sporting activities and promoting our expertise and best practice at federal and state levels.

Invest Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Bureau are working with the US State Department and US businesses to bring 3 economic missions to Northern Ireland and 2 to the United States before March 2008.

The Bureau is working with Tourism Ireland, Northern Ireland Tourist Board on a campaign to target the Scots-Irish communities in the southern states.

The Bureau is working with NI and US universities on a health symposium to promote our skills and research expertise.

The Bureau is bringing exhibitions to New York, Chicago, Nashville, Milwaukee and Atlanta.

Cultural connections between Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland, Scotland and Virginia were celebrated at a Bureau event and will be repeated in other areas of the United States.

In addition, Minister Nigel Dodds has agreed that Invest NI expand its overseas network with a new sales representative in India. The office will be within the British Deputy High Commission office in Mumbai and will develop opportunities with existing and potential investors.

Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists

Mr McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what progress has been made on representations to the Secretary of State for pension/gratuity payments to Royal Ulster Constabulary reservists. (AQO 133/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We wrote to the Secretary of State on 29 June 2007 enclosing a copy of the Official Record of the Assembly debate on Pension Provision for the Part-time RUC Reserve [Official Report 26 June 2007]. The Secretary of State has responded but it has been necessary for us to seek further clarification of some of the information provided.

Planning Appeals Backlog

Mrs Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it is taking to address the backlog of planning appeals.

(AQO 135/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: In recognition of the growing backlog of planning appeals facing the Planning Appeals Commission, we have agreed with the Department of Finance and Personnel to commission a review of the Commission's funding and pressures. This review is currently underway and will help inform future decisions on appropriate levels of support for the Commission.

OFMDFM Website

Ms Anna Lo asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what plans it has to provide a good relations section on its website. (AQO 208/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The department's website has been designed, developed and built to meet the world wide web consortium accessibility initiative standard. It is kept under review to ensure that it remains in line with departmental objectives and continues to benefit the end user.

The website has webpages on both community relations and racial equality and good relations. These pages will be reviewed and developed and given appropriate prominence as the Executive's policy on good relations develops. We very much welcome suggestions which improve and enhance our website and have asked our officials to discuss with you your ideas for improving this part of the website.

Child Poverty

Mr Cobain asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to provide an update on the most recent Government statistics on child poverty in Northern Ireland; and to detail how this reflects on the progress towards achieving the United Kingdom target of halving child poverty by 2010, and eradicating it by 2020. (AQO 195/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The basis on which child poverty is measured has been changed. The figures below reflect the impact of these changes and of course other impacts related to policy.

Based on the new methodology the number and percentage of children in relative income poverty in;

- 2002/2003 was 119,000 (27%)
- 2005/2006 was 122,000 (29%)

Based on the old methodology the 2002/2003 figure was 114,000 (26%).

It is not possible to indicate progress made as the estimates for the number of children in relative income poverty for the baseline year of 1998/99 are in the process of being revised in light of the new methodology.

There are no projections available to indicate whether the child poverty target is likely to be met in Northern Ireland by 2010.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Forestry

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made towards increasing the added value of forestry in Northern Ireland, by developing small-scale sawmills and biofuels, and by increasing the area of woodlands brought into active management on farms.

(AQW 159/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): In 2004, DARD's Forest Service established a three year Challenge Fund to encourage landowners to establish willow coppice for an energy end-use. Under this scheme 950 hectares of willow coppice were established (or approved for establishment) by 45 rural businesses. Under Axis I of the 2007-2013 Rural Development Plan, funding will be available for further short rotation coppice establishment.

Forest Service has worked with timber customers and signed long term contracts with both large and smaller sawmills, which has assisted in providing the confidence within the industry to invest in new wood processing technology. This has both strengthened the economic performance of sawmills and has underpinned the demand for home grown timber from both state and private forests. In addition, Forest Service continue to offer an appropriate volume of timber through a quarterly tendering process to accommodate very small sawmills not yet wishing to engage in long term contracts.

Agri-Food Industry

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what analysis she has carried out to establish the ability of Northern Ireland's agri-food industry to enable it to compete successfully against that of the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 160/08)

Ms Gildernew: Invest NI is responsible for supporting food processing companies in the North. Our food processing sector turnover was £2.5 billion in 2004 with 18,391 employees.

My Department undertakes extensive statistical analysis of the size and performance of the local agri-food industry. This information is published annually and represents the primary source of statistical information and performance indicators for industry.

DARD, in conjunction with Invest NI, has undertaken substantial consumer market research. This "Periscope Research" represents one of the most in depth evaluations of food consumption carried out within Ireland and Britain, involving a sample of 3,000 people. The results of this research will help local companies to target markets more effectively, especially those in Britain and the South.

A major diagnostic study of the export readiness of the food processing sector was also commissioned from Food from Britain under the auspices of the Food Strategy Fit for Market Report. This research produced a valuable assessment of the export capabilities of local companies.

The work carried out by my Department, along with Invest NI has not only given the industry the tools to further explore market opportunities, but it has also galvanised the sector to work together for the greater good of the entire agri-food industry.

Agri-Food Industry

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how she intends to increase the ability of Northern Ireland's agri-food industry to enable it to compete successfully against that of the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 162/08)

Ms Gildernew: One of the key aims of my Department is to help increase the competitiveness of our agri-food industry. As we export a majority of our meat and dairy produce we need to be competitive on a world stage taking account of all our competitors.

My Department, along with the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment, have been working together to implement over 20 recommendations from the Food Strategy Group's "Fit for Market" report. These cover four key areas, Marketing, Innovation, Supply Chain and Capability that will assist our agri-food industry to compete successfully in all markets including the South of Ireland.

DARD is involved in a number of initiatives designed to increase our competitiveness in export markets, including; the Supply Chain Awareness Programme, facilitating farmer and industry groups in examining how and why certain competitors are effective; the Beef Eating Quality Project, designed to improve the eating quality of our beef.

At primary producer level; knowledge and technology transfer, industry training programmes, and benchmarking, all contribute to improving the performance of farm businesses and assisting farmers and growers to produce the quality of product demanded by an increasingly competitive global marketplace.

I am currently engaged in discussions with the DETI Minister to ensure that the local agri-food industry has cohesive, fit for purpose support structures that will allow our quality products to continue to compete in the world marketplace.

Joint Afforestation Strategy

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to meet with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland to explore the development of a joint afforestation strategy. (AQW 163/08)

Ms Gildernew: I have no immediate plans to meet my counterpart, Mary Wallace, Minister at the Department of Agriculture and Food, about afforestation issues.

A Forestry Strategy was published by my Department in 2006, following two rounds of public consultation and an economic appraisal. The Strategy outlines main themes, one of which is a programme of afforestation, that the Department will take forward through the 2007-2013 Rural Development Programme approved by the European Commission on 24 July 2007.

I am aware, however, of a range of forestry issues that my officials deal positively with in co-operation with their counterparts in the South and further opportunities to develop the approach are being discussed. I will wish, therefore, to meet Minister Wallace in due course to discuss these matters. The possible opportunities around a joint afforestation strategy could also be usefully explored at such a meeting.

I recognise, however, that there is work to be done to increase forest cover in the North, in order to reach a comparable level with the twenty six counties and the rest of Europe.

Coastal Erosion

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures and investment are being introduced to protect the Irish coastline from sea erosion. (AQW 227/08)

Ms Gildernew: The North of Ireland does not have any legislation specifically related to coastal erosion. A licensing system under the Food and Environment Act 1985 (FEPA) is operated by the Environment and Heritage Service of the Department of Environment in which a licence is required for works involving a deposition of materials below the high water mean spring tide. A long standing inter-Departmental agreement known as the Bateman formula is in place whereby cost beneficial works to protect essential infrastructure from erosion may be undertaken by the Department or authority responsible for the asset at risk. DARD, Rivers Agency has sole responsibility for 26 kms of sea defences to protect against flooding and undertakes essential works when the cost of works satisfies the cost benefit criteria. The Rivers Agency also undertakes essential cost effective works to combat erosion, which do not fall within the functional area of other Departments or Agencies.

Coastal flood risk management and erosion policy is currently under examination in the light of an independent review of Rivers Agency Flood Management Policy and the impending EU Flood Risk Management Directive. Also proposals are underway to replace FEPA through the UK Marine Bill which seeks to put in place legislative and structural reforms to deliver integrated management of the coastal and marine area.

Mountain-Biking

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to provide funding for mountain-biking in forests in Northern Ireland and to detail any previous consideration given to the provision of such funding. (AQW 230/08)

Ms Gildernew: My Department is not currently dealing with any applications for funding of mountain bike projects. The Department is currently developing its rural development strategies under the rural development programme (2007-2013) and these will provide the basis for assessment and funding of projects. The Department has previously considered applications for funding under the Rural Development Programme Natural Resource Rural Tourism Initiative, for components of a cycling strategy for NI developed by CAAN. My Department provided the funding associated with the construction of 3 family cycling trails in 2006 in major recreational forests in counties Down, Fermanagh and Armagh. My Department remains committed to developing the recreational use of forests as outlined in the forestry strategy – A Strategy for Sustainability and Growth published in 2006.

Single Farm Payments

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will detail the number of apologies issued to farmers and land owners in the 2006 calendar year, due to computer or clerical errors made in her department's offices. (AQW 247/08)

Ms Gildernew: During the 2006 calendar year, four of the responses to complaints made under the Department's formal complaint procedure and letters to the minister in relation to the Single Farm Payment Scheme included an apology for administration errors made by the Department.

Single Farm Payments

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the proposed timetable for the hearing of all appeals against decisions made by her department in relation to 2005 Single Farm Payments. (AQW 248/08)

Ms Gildernew: Appeals are dealt with on a chronological basis. Their completion is subject to obtaining all relevant information some of which may be from third parties over which my Department has no control. In a number of cases we are awaiting additional information from the appellants and, again, these cases cannot progress until this is received.

However, I can advise that as of 19 September 2007 there were 31 Stage 1 and 162 Stage 2 cases outstanding.

Of the 162 Stage 2 appeals outstanding, 58 cases have been heard by the Panel (5 cases adjourned) and decisions on these will be issued in the near future. A further 53 cases are ready for consideration by the Panel and these will be heard over the coming months. There are 13 cases currently on hold pending information from third parties and there are 27 cases being processed to Panel stage. Processing of the remaining 11 cases will begin soon.

I can assure you that every effort is being made to clear the outstanding cases as quickly as possible.

Biofuels

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of food production being compromised by the growing of crops for use as biofuels. (AQW 249/08)

Ms Gildernew: Such a compromise is not envisaged.

Current market conditions are more attractive to the arable sector for the growing of cereal crops, rather than for energy crops.

As you will be aware, our agriculture is predominately grass based, with only around 5 per cent devoted to other, mainly cereal and vegetable, crops. Only 470 hectares of oilseed rape was planted as of June 2006 indicating that the overall impact on food production is negligible.

Although DARD modestly supports the growth of crops for energy under the EU Aid for Energy Crops Scheme, there are no plans to further support the growth of crops specifically for the purpose of biofuel production.

Biofuels

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of the long-term effect that the growing of crops for biofuels will have on quality agricultural land. (AQW 250/08)

Ms Gildernew: Growing biomass and biofuel crops should not lead to any fundamental change in the quality of our farmed land. The management of growing oilseed rape and cereals for biofuel purposes does not differ significantly from that involved where the crop is being grown for food purposes.

Biomass crops such as short rotation coppice willows (SRC) and miscanthus remain in the ground for 15 to 20 years and can build up a substantial root or rhizome system. However, this ground can be returned to grass production by the use of: an approved herbicide to kill the willows or miscanthus; rotavation to break up the roots or rhizomes; and resowing.

While Miscanthus ground can return to arable cropping immediately, it may take several seasons to return to SRC Willow ground to arable crop production. Where willows have also been used for the bioremediation of sewage sludge or effluent there will be a further delay before the land can be used for food production.

In summary there is no evidence that growing biomass crops leads to any decline in soil quality.

Land and Facilities at Castlederg Nursery

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline for what purpose she intends to use the current land and facilities at Castlederg Nursery, once the present nursery use ends.

(AQW 262/08)

Ms Gildernew: The land and facilities at Castlederg nursery are currently being managed with the main objective of growing transplants and this will remain the case until May 2008.

No decision has been taken on the long-term future of the land and facilities after the cessation of plant production.

Any decision taken will, however, be in line with the strategic objectives of DARD, the Forestry Strategy, and will also take account of the current review of Forest Service organisational structure to provide a more efficient delivery of services.

Farm Viability Criteria

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail, broken down by district council area, the number of applications it has received for farm viability criteria from Planning Service, and the number of these that were recommended to Planning Service as being viable, in each of the last five years. (AQW 264/08)

Ms Gildernew: The information provided details the number of requests for viability assessments received by DARD from DOE, Planning Service during the past five years. As our recording system does not hold this information by district council area, it is broken down on a county basis. Please note that the issue of whether permission for a dwelling should be given is a matter for the Planning Service and not DARD.

	Number viability assessments received from Planning Service	Number recommended to Planning Service as being viable
Antrim
2003	141	65
2004	119	79
2005	123	75
2006	76	47
2007	63	43
Armagh
2003 from July onwards	26	11
2004	60	33
2005	87	36
2006	62	31
2007	74	39
Down
2003	261	141
2004	200	124
2005	183	118
2006	130	93
2007	81	56
Fermanagh
2003	24	8
2004	21	11
2005	24	10
2006	25	13
2007	41	16

	Number viability assessments received from Planning Service	Number recommended to Planning Service as being viable
Derry/Londonderry
2003	59	31
2004	62	41
2005	118	57
2006	105	47
2007	54	23
Tyrone
2003	47	25
2004	58	37
2005	62	37
2006	94	46
2007	58	33

Organic Farming

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to promote organic farming in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 303/08)

Ms Gildernew: Under the Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme 2007-2013, which was approved by the European Commission in late July 2007, I hope to offer a new Organic Farming Scheme to assist farmers who wish to convert from conventional to organic production.

The new scheme should offer increased levels of support for the organic livestock sector, with additional support for the organic cereal and horticulture sectors. DARD proposes to pay the following amounts to farmers to cover the first five years of conversion to organic production:

Horticulture (including top fruit)	£670
Arable	£570
Other Improved Land	£470

These payments are on a 'per hectare' basis, and will be apportioned over the five years.

I also hope to offer an ongoing post-conversion payment of £30 per hectare per year for such land, which is certified organic, under the proposed Organic Option in the new Countryside Management Scheme.

In addition to this, CAFRE (Greenmount Campus) continues to provide education, advice and ongoing support in relation to organic farming. It also develops and tests new technologies appropriate to the local organic sector.

Development of Tullaghoge Fort

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the support that her department will make available, to assist the efforts being made by Cookstown District Council and other organisations to develop and improve Tullaghoge Fort, the inauguration site for the O'Neill's of Ulster.

(AQW 319/08)

Ms Gildernew: The site is currently owned by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

The monument is held in Guardianship by DOE and is also scheduled for protection under the Historic Monuments and Archaeological Objects (NI) Order 1995.

DOE is in the process of acquiring the site from DARD, to assist the protection and management of the site, and has been working with Cookstown District Council to facilitate recent Flight of the Earls events held at this monument.

Any potential development activity in respect of the Fort can only be undertaken with Environment & Heritage Service approval.

In that context, it may be possible for Cookstown District Council, as part of a council cluster/Local Action Group delivering rural development funding under the NI Rural Development Programme (NIRDP) 2007-13, to consider funding the development of Tullaghoge Fort.

There are specific measures in the NIRDP for conservation and upgrading of the rural heritage as well as for the development of tourism and recreation facilities. The council cluster/Local Action Group will need to consider if this is a strategic priority for the area to determine potential access to funding.

Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or Brucellosis to Livestock

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of ongoing fraud cases that involve the suspected deliberate introduction of tuberculosis or brucellosis to livestock.

(AQW 407/08)

Ms Gildernew: There are no ongoing fraud cases that involve the suspected deliberate introduction of tuberculosis or brucellosis to livestock.

The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development are however withholding disease compensation from a number of farmers for alleged breaches of legislation. Some of these cases are currently subject to investigation.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Funding for Karate Sports

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much financial assistance has been made available for karate sports, and in particular Taekwondo, in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. (AQW 207/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of financial assistance to sports organisations. SNI has made the following awards to Karate and Taekwondo in Northern Ireland over the last five years:

Financial Years	Karate		Taekwondo
	Lottery	Exchequer	Lottery	Exchequer
2003/04	0	9,350	0	18,811
2004/05	1,400	0	0	0
2005/06	6,500	0	0	7,645
2006/07	2,800	0	6,400	32,239*
2007/08	0	0	0	0
Totals	10,700	9,350	6,400	58,695

*Relates to three-year period 2006-2009

In addition to the financial assistance from SNI, the Department for Social Development has provided the following funding under the Local Community Fund to Cross Glebe Shotokan Karate Club in the Coleraine area:

2003/04	£15,950
2006/07	£11,000

It is not possible to ascertain specifically if any financial assistance was allocated to Further Education Colleges by the Department for Employment and Learning on karate sports or on Taekwondo in any of the last five years. Data submitted by the colleges does not allow for the identification of this particular provision.

Northern Ireland Library Authority

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to explain how the membership of the Northern Ireland Library Authority will reflect fully the democratic, regional and demographic situation. (AQW 210/08)

Mr Poots: Members of the Board of the new Library Authority will be appointed on merit following an open competition. Members will be chosen on the basis of the skills and expertise necessary to do the job.

On the basis of the guidance of the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments the principles of equality of opportunity will be inherent in the competition and I will ensure that my Department takes appropriate action to attract suitable candidates from all sections of Northern Ireland society.

Requests for Funding

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to his answer to AQW 91/07, if he will meet with organisers of (a) the Independent Orange Order 12 July celebrations; (b) the annual Sham Fight of Scarva; and (c) the Annual Royal Black Institution Black Saturday celebrations, with a view to extending departmental funding to include these events. (AQW 211/08)

Mr Poots: I will give consideration to all requests for meetings from any organisation and respond accordingly.

Libraries Bill

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether the delay in establishing the Education and Skills Authority until April 2009 has implications for the Libraries Bill, and to detail these. (AQW 212/08)

Mr Poots: No. The delay in the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority has no direct implications for the Libraries Bill.

Single Library Authority

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to comment on his plans to establish a quango for libraries in Northern Ireland, if an aim of the Review of Public Administration was to reduce the number of quangos. (AQW 213/08)

Mr Poots: The NI Executive approved my proposal for a single Library Authority at its meeting on 7 June 2007 and on 19 June the Assembly agreed that the draft legislation could go to the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee for scrutiny.

The Review of Public Administration had a number of aims amongst which was the desire for high-quality public services accessible to all. The consultation on the Review proposed a two-tier model with a regional tier encompassing the Assembly, government departments, and regional authorities, which would focus on policy development, setting standards and service delivery.

The establishment of a single Library Authority creates a new non-departmental public body in this regional tier to replace the existing 5 Library Authorities. This will lead to improved service delivery, clearer accountability and, amongst other things, more opportunities for integration and partnerships across the public, community and voluntary sectors.

Rally Ireland in 2007

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the support he is giving to Rally Ireland in 2007. (AQW 265/08)

Mr Poots: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has provided £16,685.21 to Rally Ireland to cover the cost of producing a business case for the 2007 World Rally Championship event and £200,000 to cover Northern Ireland's proportion of the cost of preparatory work for the event.

From 1 April 2007 Northern Ireland's funding for Rally Ireland will be provided through Sport Northern Ireland (SNI). It is expected that SNI will provide Rally Ireland with £696,955 for its 2007 event.

Fish Stocks

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list each occasion upon which (i) Killylane Reservoir; (ii) Altnahinch Reservoir; and (iii) Dungonnell Reservoir were stocked, and the number of fish that were put into each reservoir, in each of the last two years. (AQW 404/08)

Mr Poots: The stocking regime for these fisheries is set out in the Table below. Dungonnell Reservoir is operated as a wild fishery and is only occasionally stocked as there is a natural recruitment of wild trout.

Killylane and Altnahinch Reservoirs will have further stockings shortly. The Department's policy is to stock its fisheries on a regular basis but this is governed by operational matters at the Department's fish farm and water temperature effects on fish growth. These factors have affected the regularity of stocking at these fisheries.

EDUCATION

Priory Integrated College

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Education if, in light of the increased enrolment at Priory Integrated College, she is able to give approval for building to commence at the site of the new school. (AQW 6/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane):

Following a review of previously announced capital schemes in planning, the capital project for Priory Integrated College, Holywood was put on hold pending further examination of the proposed scheme with the South Eastern Education and Library Board. The school's enrolment is a factor to be taken into account as well as the sustainability of the projected enrolment of the school, enrolment trends for the area, and the potential implications of these trends for the scheme. I expect to be able to provide confirmation of the position on the scheme shortly.

TROUT STOCKINGS

Altnahinch				Killylane				Dungonnell
2006		2007		2006		2007		2006		2007
Date	No.	Date	No.	Date	No.	Date	No.	Date	No.	Date	No.
27 Jan	800†	12 Jan	1,800	15 Feb	1800	24 Jan	1800	21 Feb	700	2 Mar	900
3 Feb	800†	20 Apr	1,800	27 Mar	1000	8 Mar	900			22 Jun	600
14 Mar	700†	18 May	900	23 May	1000	19 Apr	1800
26 May	1000†	1 Jun	900	7 Jul	800	23 May	900
7 Jul	800			20 Jul	800	27 Jun	900
25 Jul	800			25 Jul	800
25 Aug	500			8 Aug	800
Total	5400		5400		7000		6300		700		1500

† Rainbow trout

Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education to detail the organisations with experience of working with those with Autistic Spectrum Disorder that were consulted about the Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown; and what was the advice received from Autism NI (PAPA) in relation to this issue. (AQW 29/08)

Ms Ruane: In December 2002 the views of the Chairperson and Chief Executives of the following organisations, with experience of working with children with Autistic Spectrum Disorder (ASD), were sought: the Education and Library Boards; the Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts; the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools; the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education; and Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta. In addition views were sought of the Principal Educational Psychologists and Special Education Officers of the Education and Library Boards. The views of a range of similar organisations were sought by the Department of Education and Science.

In August and September 2007 two stakeholder consultations were held at the Middletown Centre for Autism to canvass opinion about the building and refurbishment project. The following organisations, with experience of working with children with ASD, were invited to attend:

National Autistic Society, Autism NI (PAPA), Parents Education as Autism Therapists, Special Provision for the Education of Autistic Children, Disability Action, Mencap, the Chief Executives of each of the Education and Library Boards, Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY), NICCY Youth Panel, Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education, Comhairle Na Gaelscolaíochta, Association of Teachers and Lecturers, Irish National Teachers Organisation, National Association of Head Teachers, National Association of Schoolmasters Union of Women Teachers, Ulster Teachers Union, Inspection Services Branch from the Department of Education, Special Standing Conference, Camphill Community Glencraig, Appleby Trust, Allied Health Professionals from the Department of Health and Social Services, Lisanally Special School, Sperrinview Special School, Roddensvale Special School, Clifton Special School, Harberton Special School, Irish Autism Action, Irish Society for Autism, ASPIRE, Irish Progressive Association for Autism, St Patrick's College of Education, Association of Community and Comprehensive Schools, Catholic Primary Schools Management Association, Church of Ireland Board of Education, An Foras Patrúnachta, Educate Together, Irish Vocational Educational Association, Joint Managerial Body, National Association of Boards of Management in Special Education Schools, Secondary Education Committee, National Parents Council (Post Primary), National Parents Council (Primary), Association of Teaching Sisters, Association of Secondary School Teachers in the North of Ireland, Irish Schoolheads Association, Irish National Teachers Organisation, Irish Principals Network, National Association of Principals and Deputy Principals, Teachers Union of Ireland, Holy Family Special School and St Brigid's Special School.

Following the appointment of the Board of Directors, the Chief Executive Officer, and some of the senior management team, the Middletown Centre for Autism is planning an extensive consultation exercise for later this year. This will include those involved with children and young people with autism within the public, private and voluntary sectors. The purpose of this consultation is both to inform and invite comments regarding how the proposed services should be delivered by the Centre. The exercise is also designed to seek views in relation to the expectations of the Middletown Centre. The outcome of the consultation exercise will be to inform future developments at the Centre.

With regards to advice received from Autism NI (PAPA) on this issue, when the plans to open a Centre of Excellence for Autism in Middletown were first announced in 2002, they released a statement saying that:

'It is a milestone in the campaign for government recognition of the specialist needs of children challenged with the social, communication and behavioural difficulties associated with Autism.

The development of the Centre of Excellence provides a tremendous opportunity to make a wide range of interventions known to be effective in ameliorating the long-term effects of Autism, more accessible to the wider community.

PAPA, the Autism Charity for the North of Ireland and Donegal, believes that the Centre of Excellence will act as a catalyst for the enhancement of awareness, expertise and research activity regarding Autism throughout the island of Ireland. We look forward to playing our part and working with the Education departments, North and South, to ensure that the Centre of Excellence for Autism is second to none'

On the 18th January 2007 Autism NI (PAPA) addressed the Joint Committee on Education and Science at Leinster House in Dublin. In her address the Chief Executive referred to the Middletown Centre for Autism and highlighted the need to 'support a cross-border initiative to address the All-Ireland identification and sharing of best practice across all sectors'. She also emphasised the importance of ensuring 'effective representation of the Voluntary Sector in any strategy'.

At the stakeholder consultation meeting in August 2007 held to consider the building and refurbishment programme, Autism NI (PAPA) representatives provided a positive contribution to the discussion.

Suspension of Members of the South Eastern Education and Library Board

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Education if she will outline when she intends to lift the suspension imposed on the members of the South Eastern Education and Library Board. (AQW 88/08)

Ms Ruane: In the interests of local accountability I would be keen that the members of the SEELB Board take up their former responsibilities. However, it would be essential to ensure that there would be no return to the difficulties which the Commissioners inherited when they were appointed in July 2006 and that the stability which has since been achieved is sustained. I am therefore arranging to meet with a cross-section of Board members to explore their readiness to take up their former responsibilities and to deliver those effectively. That meeting will help inform decisions on how best to move forward.

GCSE and A-level Courses

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education what analysis she has made of GCSE and A-level courses, with a view to ensuring that Northern Ireland's education system creates a highly skilled workforce. (AQW 190/08)

Ms Ruane: New A-level specifications have been accredited for first teaching from 2008 and the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA), in its capacity as the regulator of qualifications here, is consulting on draft criteria which will be used in developing revised GCSE specifications to be introduced for first teaching from 2009/10.

Revised A-level and GCSE provision will take account of the introduction of the revised curriculum in schools and reflect the breadth of learning that is required by the Entitlement Framework.

The Entitlement Framework will guarantee all pupils access to a greater range of vocational courses, equipping them with the professional and technical skills that business and industry needs. Pupils will be able to access courses appropriate to their individual needs, interests and aspirations, providing a wider choice at age 14 and an even wider choice at age 16.

An individual school's curricular offer will be determined at local level, by schools discussing with each other, with their local FE colleges, with employers and the local community what the range of provision should be.

Creationism

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 637/07, if she would outline the nature of the scope provided by the science curriculum for pupils to explore other views about how the world came into existence.

(AQW 208/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not tell teachers how to teach. The revised curriculum sets out the statutory minimum to be covered and the learning outcomes to be focused on. It provides greater flexibility for teachers to tailor provision for their pupils and greater opportunities for creationist views to be explored. There are areas other than science in which these could be explored, for example, Religious Education.

Creationism

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 337/07, to comment on whether her department was informed about discussions that the Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) has held with interested parties in relation to the teaching of (i) evolution; (ii) creationism; and (iii) Intelligent Design, in schools in Northern Ireland, and to detail the recommendations made by CCEA to her department following these discussions. (AQW 215/08)

Ms Ruane: In carrying out its statutory duty to advise on curriculum matters, CCEA met with interested parties about these areas. Departmental officials were aware of the meetings, and the position remains that the revised curriculum provides the flexibility for suitable teaching opportunities to explore the theories of evolution, creationism and Intelligent Design as appropriate.

Youth Outreach Work

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to increase expenditure on youth outreach work, to be delivered on the ground, as a means of addressing the rise in anti-social behaviour. (AQW 229/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department allocates an overall budget of approximately £32 million for youth services. Of that, £1.82 million has been allocated in 2007-08 for outreach and detached youth workers.

The youth sector has an important role to play in helping to address issues of young people involved in anti-social behaviour. However, it is only one of a number of agencies and services dealing with this issue.

In recent years, the Department has earmarked additional resources to provide for outreach workers in each education and library board area. Over the next few months, the Department will be developing 'Priorities for the Youth Service' which will identify the priorities for the sector, and help determine any additional resources required to deliver front line youth services, such as outreach work. We will be in a better position to determine plans for expenditure when this work is complete.

It is essential however that the resources currently available for outreach are prioritised according to need. Therefore, I have asked departmental officials to re-examine, with colleagues in each education and library board, the deployment of outreach workers in areas of objective need.

Teachers' Pay and Pensions Branch

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of staff working in Teacher's Pay and Pensions Branch in Waterside House, Derry/Londonderry, who are currently on the Civil Service transfer list; and the number who have been waiting to be transferred for longer than 12 months.

(AQW 340/08)

Ms Ruane: A total of 130 staff work in Teacher's Pensions, Pay and Administration Branch in Waterside House, Derry. Of these 64 are currently on the Northern Civil Service Central Transfer List (CTL); 58 of whom have been waiting to be transferred for longer than 12 months.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Belfast Metropolitan College

Ms J McCann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in respect of the Whiterock campus of the Belfast Metropolitan College, (a) why no full-time co-ordinator is employed at the campus; (b) why no co-ordinator has been appointed to run the college for the last 2 years; and (c) what management structures are in place to run the college.

(AQW 222/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): I understand that some three years ago the then Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education introduced management changes to its Whiterock campus, to bring it into line with arrangements at the Institute's other sites. These changes provide for a line management structure to oversee academic and support services.

As a result of these changes, Whiterock has been managed on the same basis as all other sites in the former Belfast Institute, now part of the new Belfast Metropolitan College.

Belfast Metropolitan College

Ms J McCann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline plans for the long-term future of the Whiterock campus of the Belfast Metropolitan College; and whether there are plans to close it in the near future.

(AQW 223/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Further Education Colleges in Northern Ireland are autonomous organisations and their Governing Bodies determine how best to utilise their capital assets.

The newly appointed Governing Body for Belfast Metropolitan College will wish to consider all aspects of the College's estate, but, I understand that it has not, to date, made any decision regarding the retention or disposal of the Whiterock campus.

Belfast Metropolitan College

Ms J McCann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of full-time; and part-time courses being delivered at the Whiterock campus of the Belfast Metropolitan College; and to list all courses delivered at the campus.

(AQW 224/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Belfast Metropolitan College has not yet completed enrolment for the 2007/08 academic year. The numbers enrolling for any particular course will determine whether that course is viable. Therefore, it is not yet possible to provide final details of provision at any particular campus of the College. However, during the 2006/07 academic year there were 7 full-time and 65 part-time courses delivered at the Whiterock campus.

I have attached, at Annex A, a full list of the courses that were delivered at the campus during the 2006/07 academic year.

Annex A

Courses delivered at Whiterock campus during 2006/07

- Hairdressing Level 1
- Beauty Therapy (Levels 1, 2 and 3)
- NVQ Beauty Therapy
- NVQ Beauty Therapy (Level 2)

- NDLP Beauty Therapy (Level 2)
- International Hairdressing & Beauty Therapy
- Hairdressing (Levels 2 and 3)
- NDLP Hairdressing (Level 2)
- NVQ Nail Services (Level 2)
- Spanish Level 1
- Mathematics
- St Tropez Tanning Course
- Brazilian Waxing
- Motor Vehicle Maintenance
- Woodwork Special Needs
- Engineering
- Basic Cutting
- Cutting
- Text & Word Processing Stage 1
- Text/Word Processing (Levels 1,2 and 3)
- Audio Transcription 1
- Special Needs Computers (OCR Entry Level)
- Special Needs/Beginners Computers
- OCR Text and Audio Transcription (Level 2)
- Audio Stage 3
- SAGE Payroll
- Supported Skills
- European Computer Driving Licence
- Sports Massage & Injury Prevention
- Computerised Accounts SAGE (Levels 1, 2 and 3)
- Chemistry
- Biology
- History
- English Literature
- Occupational Studies (Single and Double Award)
- NVQ Level 1 Wood Occupations
- NVQ Level 1 Catering
- Construction & Catering
- NVQ Level 1 Food Preparation
- Occupational Studies Hair and Beauty

Belfast Metropolitan College

Ms J McCann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for a breakdown of the number of full-time and part-time students attending courses at the Whiterock campus of the Belfast Metropolitan College. (AQW 225/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Belfast Metropolitan College has not completed enrolment for the 2007/08 academic year. Therefore, final figures for the number of full time and part time students are not yet available.

However, during the 2006/07 academic year there were 112 full-time and 769 part-time students enrolled on courses at the Whiterock campus.

Student Bursaries

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Employment and Learning to detail (i) the number of applications for a bursary for university and/or college, broken down by Education and Library Board area, for the last year; and (ii) the number of these that were successful.

(AQW 242/08)

Sir Reg Empey: For academic year 2006/07, the total number of applications for a higher education bursary/maintenance grant, including successful applications, is as set out in the table below:

Education and Library Board	Total Applications	Successful Applications
Belfast	2,556	2,409
North Eastern	3,503	3,296
South Eastern	3,331	3,135
Southern	4,247	3,942
Western	4,596	4,358
	18,223	17,140

Student Bursaries

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of student bursaries that have not been paid out for this year, broken down by Education and Library Board. (AQW 243/08)

Sir Reg Empey: For the current academic year (AY) 2007/08, no higher education bursaries/ maintenance grants have been paid to date. Payments are released to the student in three instalments throughout the year, with the first instalment due for release in October 2007. The table below sets out details of total applications received to date and a breakdown of successful and unsuccessful applications.

Education and Library Board	Total Applications	Successful Applications	Unsuccessful Applications
Belfast	2,198	2,139	59
North Eastern	2,974	2,905	69
South Eastern	2,706	2,554	152
Southern	3,771	3,529	242
Western	3,692	3,457	235
	15,341	14,584	757

Independent Students

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will define the term ‘independent student’; and to outline what additional financial support is available to those categorised as an ‘independent student’ in third level education. (AQW 276/08)

Sir Reg Empey: For student support purposes, the definition of an independent student includes, amongst others, a person who on the first day of the academic year falls within one of the following categories: is over 25; married or in a civil partnership; has no living parents; or has supported himself/herself for at least three years.

A full list of categories is contained in paragraph 2 of Schedule 5 to the Education (Student Support) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007 (S.R. 2007 No. 195), which is available in the Assembly Library.

Eligible independent students may be entitled to additional supplementary grants such as adult dependants’ grant, parents’ learning allowance and childcare grant.

University Enrolment

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students entering the first year of undergraduate degree courses in Northern Ireland; the number of these that are from (i) Northern Ireland; (ii) elsewhere in the United Kingdom; (iii) the Republic of Ireland; and (iv) outside the British Isles. (AQW 354/08)

Sir Reg Empey: First year undergraduate degree enrolments at Northern Ireland institutions by domicile 2005/06

NI	Elsewhere in the UK	Republic of Ireland	Outside the British Isles	Total
11,185	110	665	205	12,165

Source: Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA) & Further Education Statistical Record (FESR)

Note: Figures are rounded to the nearest 5. Figures for the 2006/07 academic year will not be available until early 2008.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Invest NI

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the locations of the 32 acres of land held by Invest NI in the Ards Borough Council area. (AQW 307/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): Invest Northern Ireland holds land at 3 locations in the Ards Borough Council area.

The landholding at Ballyharry Business Park is 21.40 acres, at Corry Street/Forde Street it is 5.65 acres and at Jubilee Road Industrial Estate the holding is 4.45 acres.

Visitors’ Centre at the Giant’s Causeway

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, prior to his announcement of 10 September 2007, what was his assessment of the private sector proposal for a Visitors’ Centre at the Giant’s Causeway, with specific reference to the provision of a world-class facility, the necessity for which has been agreed. (AQW 324/08)

Mr Dodds: Prior to 10 September 2007, I was aware that a private sector planning application for a substantial visitor centre proposal was under consideration by the Planning Service. My statement of 10 September 2007 indicated that further expenditure on the public sector proposal would not, in the circumstances, be a prudent use of taxpayers’ money. It would require some £1m further expenditure to bring the public sector proposal to contract stage. My Department intends to meet with the private sector developer shortly to discuss his proposal and will keep the Department’s position under review in light of developments.

Visitors’ Centre at the Giant’s Causeway

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the role and status of his department in relation to the development of a Visitors’ Centre at the Giant’s Causeway; and, given that a grant of planning approval gives no guarantee that the approved development will be built, to state the reasons for his decision to withdraw his department’s financial support for the public sector scheme on the basis of a likely planning approval for a private sector visitors’ centre. (AQW 326/08)

Mr Dodds: As Minister responsible for tourism, I wish to see the delivery of a facility that does justice to the importance of the Giant’s Causeway as a heritage and tourism asset. DETI has sought to advance that objective since 2003, when direct rule Ministers announced Government involvement, effectively as ‘developer of last resort’.

In pursuance of my duty as Minister to ensure the prudent use of taxpayers’ money, I took the decision to suspend further expenditure on the Government’s proposal, in the circumstances created by Minister Foster's statement of 10 September. I will continue to monitor developments and will keep the Department's position under review in light of developments.

Regional Tourism Partnerships

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assurances he will give on the future funding of regional tourism partnerships, following the end of the 2007/08 financial year.
(AQW 350/08)

Mr Dodds: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) is fully committed to regional development as outlined in the Strategic Framework for Action (2005 – 2008). Local delivery and development of visitor services and servicing is a key element of raising the profile of the tourism industry across Northern Ireland and providing visitors with the quality of services and facilities they want and need.

In the current financial year, £500,000 has been allocated from the agency's core budget to Regional Tourism Partnerships (RTPs) to assist in the delivery of aspects of regional development. Any further bid for funding will be considered with other requests as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of client companies that Invest NI has on its database.

(AQW 366/08)

Mr Dodds: On 25 September 2007, Invest NI had 2,509 businesses recorded as clients on its database.

Invest NI

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of visits organised by Invest NI for inward investors in the South Down area, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 367/08)

Mr Dodds: From 2002/03 to 2006/07, the total number of inward visits to South Down in each year were as follows:

2002/03	2
2003/04	1
2004/05	0
2005/06	0

2006/07	2
Total visits	5

The content of a visit programme, the locations chosen to visit and ultimately the investment decision rests solely with the prospective investor.

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of (i) client executives; and (ii) staff, that are currently employed by Invest NI.
(AQW 368/08)

Mr Dodds: At 31 August 2007, Invest NI employed 590 staff (572 Full-Time Equivalent).

Some 268 staff are in direct client-facing roles. This is made up of 165 client executives and 103 programme executives delivering specialist advice and programmes in areas of research and development, process and technology, trade and export promotion, and business improvement.

For completeness, of the remaining staff, 199 are engaged in activities with some client interfaces and/or providing support for client-facing activities, and 123 staff are in corporate services functions.

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of staff currently employed by Invest NI, who are based overseas.

(AQW 369/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI employs twenty-five staff based in overseas offices (i.e. outside Northern Ireland). Seven of these staff are Invest NI employees recruited in Northern Ireland and temporarily relocated to the overseas offices to fulfil specific roles.

The other eighteen staff are locally engaged personnel, recruited on terms and conditions appropriate to the local market.

VAT-Registered Businesses

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of VAT-registered businesses in Northern Ireland, broken down by district council area, in the last year. (AQW 398/08)

Mr Dodds: The following table presents the latest available information (March 2007) regarding the number of VAT Registered businesses by district council in Northern Ireland.

NUMBER OF VAT REGISTERED BUSINESSES BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA

District Council Area	Number of VAT registered Businesses
Antrim	1,740
Ards	2,215
Armagh	2,795
Ballymena	2,410
Ballymoney	1,305
Banbridge	1,955
Belfast	6,365
Carrickfergus	565
Castlereagh	1,140
Coleraine	1,905
Cookstown	2,000
Craigavon	2,320
Derry	2,200
Down	2,445
Dungannon	2,925
Fermanagh	3,695
Larne	980
Limavady	1,195
Lisburn	3,195
Magherafelt	2,295
Moyle	765
Newry and Mourne	3,960
Newtownabbey	1,530
North Down	1,565
Omagh	2,900
Strabane	1,770
Northern Ireland	58,135

Note: All figures have been rounded to the nearest 5

Source: Inter Departmental Business Register, March 2007

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of companies that have accessed Invest NI's website in the last year.
(AQW 399/08)

Mr Dodds: From September 2006 to August 2007, there have been 160,596 visits to the Invest NI website which is an average of 13,383 per month. This represented 324,649 page views. It is not possible to identify individual companies as websites only record the digital footprint of those visiting.

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of companies that have downloaded information from Invest NI's website in the last year.
(AQW 400/08)

Mr Dodds: It is not possible to identify individual companies downloading documents, as websites only record the digital footprint of those visiting. However, since an upgraded Webtrends package was introduced in May 2007, 9,104 Portable document format (PDFs) have been downloaded from the Invest NI website.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will provide a comprehensive breakdown of how the £1.2 million expenditure to date, on the proposal for a publicly-funded Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, has been spent.
(AQW 425/08)

Mr Dodds: The Government proposal for a Visitor Centre at the Giant's Causeway has incurred the following expenditure to date:

2003-04	£129k	Options Appraisal of possible locations and scale of facilities.
2004-05	£156k	Options Development including the competition briefs and legal structures.
2005-06	£151k	Architectural and Interpretative Design Competitions.
2006- to date	£756k	Detailed Development of the architects winning design.

These total £1.192m. It would require some £1m further expenditure to bring the public sector proposal to contract stage.

ENVIRONMENTSustainable Development - Resource Efficiency

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment to explain the variables and methodology used to assess the resource efficiency of the Northern Ireland economy, in relation to the resource efficiency target referred to in the Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland.
(AQW 121/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster):

The resource efficiency target originated from the value calculated in the Northern Limits Report (NLR) published in February 2004. Among the variables considered were:

- The material intensity of goods and services;
- The energy intensity of goods and services;
- Dispersion of toxic materials;
- Durability and recyclability; and
- Service intensity of goods and services using the following calculation:

$$\frac{\text{Resources remaining in the community}}{\text{Resources consumed}} = \frac{\text{Resources consumed} - \text{waste}}{\text{Resources consumed}}$$

The eco-efficiency of Northern Ireland was calculated at 65%. The strategy target was to improve this to 85% by 2025

Pollution Enforcement Cases

Mr Storey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of (i) private individuals; and (ii) businesses in Northern Ireland that have been prosecuted following incidents of pollution from (a) heating oil tanks; and (b) septic tanks; and the total amount paid in fines for each of these offences, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 124/08)

Mrs Foster: (a) The Department of the Environment does not hold statistics on pollution from heating oil tanks, only on oil pollution. Since 2001, the Department has taken 29 prosecutions for pollution incidents involving oil contamination by businesses. Fines totalling £31,050 have been imposed by the Courts in respect of 23 of those incidents. A further 3 incidents of oil contamination caused by private individuals have resulted in fines totalling £1,800.

(b) Since 2001, no cases have been taken against businesses in respect of septic tanks. One case has been taken against a private individual, for an incident involving pollution from a septic tank which resulted in a fine of £2000.

Fly Posting

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to introduce legislation imposing stronger penalties for fly posting.

(AQW 133/08)

Mrs Foster: Flyposting is one of a number of issues presently under consideration by my Department as part of our work to bring forward stronger and more effective legislation to improve local environmental quality. We are considering a number of options to allow more effective control of flyposting. It is our intention to consult on specific proposals as soon as possible.

Planning Applications

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment if she will undertake to review the status given to planning applications in (i) the Newry and Mourne District Council area; and (ii) the Banbridge District Council area, that were lodged in the Craigavon Divisional Planning Office, prior to the first date when the term 'premature to the pending Area Plan' was given as the reason for refusal. (AQW 144/08)

Mrs Foster: There is no reason at present why I should review the status of such applications. Prematurity in relation to the draft Area Plan is one of a number of material considerations to be assessed in arriving at a decision on an application. All applications are decided on their particular merits taking account of the nature of the development, planning policy, area plan designation and other considerations such as site characteristics, the relevant planning history, consultee advice, personal circumstances and any public representations. That said, Planning Service is currently holding applications which would otherwise be refused on the grounds of 'prematurity' following the recent judicial review judgement on the Strategic Environmental Assessment of other Area Plans. This is because there is a similar judicial review in relation to the draft Banbridge, Newry and Mourne Area Plan which will be heard in October 2007.

Dibney River

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if she will carry out a survey of the Dibney River, to assess whether or not it has a high level of chemicals in the river and on the river-bed. (AQW 151/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) protects the aquatic environment through a variety of activities including targeted programmes to conduct water quality monitoring in waterways designated under the EC Freshwater Fish Directive (2006/44/EC). When I wrote to you about the Dibney River in July 2007, I advised you that this river does not have a large enough flow to be designated and monitored under this Directive. However I am pleased to confirm that it will be monitored chemically under the EC Water Framework Directive (2000/60/EC), commencing in 2008.

I also stated in my previous correspondence that, in a 1999 review of the river monitoring network, the Dibney River was investigated for inclusion in the freshwater biological river monitoring programme. For health and safety reasons related to sampling access, the river was not added to the monitoring programme at that time, and as a result has not been monitored biologically. This situation has been reassessed recently, and a sampling point has been identified where biological sampling will begin in 2008.

I am aware that Down District Council and the Dibney River Conservation Trust have also been corresponding with EHS. EHS staff would be happy to meet with those concerned to discuss these issues in more detail.

Beach Quality

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions she has had with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland in relation to the development of a national standard of beach quality. (AQW 164/08)

Mrs Foster: I have not held any discussions with my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland on this topic. A beach award scheme, the Blue Flag Award, which is recognised internationally, currently exists and is administered in both Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland.

Written Driving Test

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to liaise with the Minister of Education to introduce the written driving test into post-primary schools. (AQW 200/08)

Mrs Foster: While there are at present no plans to introduce the written driving test into post-primary schools, you may be interested to know that my Department currently offers a driver training scheme to pupils in post-primary schools and students in further education colleges aged 17 to 18 years of age. Pupils receive a series of 12 driving lessons from an approved driving instructor. The Department pays 50% of the cost of the lessons, with pupils sharing the remainder of the cost. In 2006/2007, 539 pupils from 76 schools participated in the scheme.

A number of post-primary schools also timetable Road Traffic Studies (RTS) while others provide Motor Vehicle and Road User Studies (MVRUS) at GCSE level. My Department's Road Safety Education Officers actively promote the timetabling of these subjects and provide teacher training, teaching resources, advice and support. In 2007-08, around 175 schools will be timetabling RTS and 77 will be offering MVRUS.

Driving Lessons in Schools

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to liaise with the Minister of Education about the introduction of driving lessons into schools, in line with motorcycle lessons. (AQW 201/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not provide or make provision for motorcycle lessons in schools. A number of post-primary schools timetable Road Traffic Studies (RTS), a non-examination subject, and practical skills training in moped riding can form part of that course. Practical moped skills training is also one of the elements of the GCSE subject Motor Vehicle and Road User Studies (MVRUS). My Department's Road Safety Education Officers actively promote the timetabling of these subjects and provide teacher training, teaching resources (including a moped), advice and support. In 2007-08, around 175 schools will be timetabling RTS and of these 77 will be offering MVRUS. Off-road practical skills training is delivered by the teacher, usually in the school playground. This provides a basic introduction to road craft and is quite different from on-road motorcycle lessons provided by an approved instructor.

For several years my Department has been offering a driver training scheme to pupils in post-primary schools and students in further education colleges aged 17 to 18 years, with the agreement of the Department of Education and the Education and Library Boards. Pairs of pupils receive a series of 12 on-road driving lessons from an approved driving instructor. My Department pays 50% of the cost of the lessons and pupils pay the remainder. In 2006-07, 539 pupils from 76 schools participated in the scheme.

Recycling

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment to provide details on (a) the amounts of paper/card and plastics that are being recycled for (i) 2005; (ii) 2006; and (iii) 2007; and (b) where these materials are being recycled. (AQW 228/08)

Mrs Foster: These details are recorded on a financial, rather than calendar, year basis. In 2004/05, 23,906 tonnes of paper and card and 1,712 tonnes of plastic were recycled. These figures rose to 65,568 tonnes for paper/card and 7,666 tonnes for plastic in 2005/06. The figures for 2006/2007 will be published later this year.

These materials are being recycled at a range of waste management facilities in the UK and beyond.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of Mr Justice Gillen's judgement of 7 September 2007, which indicated that there should be a separation between the Planning Service and Environment and Heritage Service; and of whether or not this would be resolved by the establishment of an independent Environmental Protection Agency. (AQW 234/08)

Mrs Foster: I note the ruling handed down by the court in respect of the Judicial Review of Strategic Environmental Assessments for the Draft Northern Area Plan and the Draft Magherafelt Area Plan. I will take time to carefully consider the judgment and its implications in consultation with our legal advisors.

Review of Planning Policy Statements

Mr Butler asked the Minister of the Environment if she will carry out a review of Planning Policy Statements relating to developments in existing urban areas, in light of the increase in planning applications for apartments. (AQW 237/08)

Mrs Foster: Strategic planning guidance in respect of housing development in urban areas is set out in the Regional Development Strategy and Planning Policy Statement 12 'Housing in Settlements'. Your question has been passed to me to answer.

Existing policy provisions related to the intensification of development within an existing residential area are currently being considered by a joint DRD and DOE group of officials.

In the meantime, the Minister for the Environment has asked all Planning Service staff to be reminded of the need to consider fully the impact on the established residential character when processing applications for new residential development. This was done in August 2007.

Dog Fouling

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of incidences of dog fouling, and the resulting number of prosecutions, broken down by district council area, in each of the last two years. (AQW 244/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not hold information on the number of incidences of dog fouling. However, information in relation to the number of Fixed Penalty Notices issued and the number of prosecutions taken in relation to dog fouling in each of the last two years is set out in the table below:

Council	No. of Fixed Penalty Notices issued for dog fouling		No. of Prosecutions for dog fouling
	01/04/05 to 31/03/06	01/04/06 to 31/03/07	01/04/05 to 31/03/06	01/04/06 to 31/03/07
Antrim BC	2	1	0	0
Ards BC	14	5	0	0
Armagh City & DC	0	0	0	0
Ballymena BC	2	3	0	0
Ballymoney BC	0	0	0	0
Banbridge DC	0	2	0	0
Belfast CC	234	143	18	25
Carrickfergus BC	1	4	0	0
Castlereagh BC	3	2	0	0
Coleraine BC	10	10	1	0
Cookstown DC	1	0	0	0
Craigavon BC	5*	9	1*	0
Derry CC	0	0	0	0
Down DC	6	4	1	1
Dungannon & South Tyrone BC	0*	0	0*	0
Fermanagh DC	0	0	0	0
Larne BC	10	14	0	2
Limavady BC	2	0	0	0
Lisburn CC	2	1	0	0
Magherafelt DC	0	4	0	0
Moyle DC	1	0	0	0
Newry & Mourne DC	0	0	0	0
Newtownabbey BC	7	90	1	6
North Down BC	14	6	0	0
Omagh DC	0	0	14	0
Strabane DC	0	0	0	0
Totals	314	298	36	34

* Figures for period 01/11/05 to 31/03/06 only.

Planning Application Fees

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the fees received in respect of planning applications for the Newry and Mourne District Council area, that included in the refusal documentation a reference to, (i) the regulations pertaining to Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside; or (ii) being premature to the outcome of the pending Banbridge and Newry and Mourne Area Plan 2015. (AQW 251/08)

Mrs Foster: The total fees paid for applications in the Newry and Mourne Area where draft PPS14 was a reason for refusal were £3,000. I regret that at present I do not have a figure for the planning fees paid in respect of planning applications where prematurity was a reason for refusal due to the larger number of cases affected. It is considered that the time and staff resources involved in obtaining from Planning Service records the information requested by you on prematurity would result in disproportionate costs for the Planning Service.

Review of Public Administration

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to advise on the progress towards ensuring that new development plans are prepared using boundaries 'coterminous' with the proposals emanating from the Review of Public Administration. (AQW 252/08)

Mrs Foster: As you are aware, I am at present conducting a review on the future shape of local government in Northern Ireland. In taking the review forward, consideration will be given to what local government is expected to deliver in the context of a fully-functioning devolved Assembly and Executive and, in the context of the strategic direction of the RPA, to consider the number of councils and functions that would be required. As part of my deliberations on this I am considering the role of planning and where it sits within this, including the function of producing development plans. An announcement will be made on the outcome of the review later this year.

Planning Applications

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications for housing that have been in the system, undetermined, for more than the 17 week target period set for such applications. (AQW 254/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department's Public Service Agreement target relating to application processing times changed with effect from 1 April 2006 and is now as follows:

'By 31 March 2008 to improve the time taken to process planning applications to decision or withdrawal against 2004/05 performance, as follows:

- 60% of Major Applications processed in 23 weeks (25 weeks 2004/05) – an 8% improvement);
- 70% of Intermediate Applications processed in 31 weeks (33 weeks 2004/05) – a 6% improvement;

- 80% of Minor Applications processed in 18 weeks (21 weeks 2004/05) – a 14% improvement.

Housing applications may be classified as major or intermediate. Applications for single houses including those in rural areas are classed as intermediate, while other housing proposals including housing developments in urban areas are classed as major.

At 17 September 2007, the number of applications for housing in the intermediate category which had been outstanding for more than 31 weeks was 3,145. The number of applications for housing in the major category which had been outstanding for more than 23 weeks was 2,474.

Grouse Numbers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if her department has carried out a count of grouse on the moors in Northern Ireland; and, if so, to detail the results. (AQW 255/08)

Mrs Foster: A survey of all habitats in Northern Ireland suitable for Red Grouse was carried out in 2003/4. The results estimated the population to be between 202 and 220 breeding pairs. The full report of the survey can be found at www.ehsni.gov.uk/redgrousesurvey

I have no plans to replenish Northern Ireland's grouse moors with imported birds; however, a Species Action Plan (SAP) for Red Grouse is being produced and will be published in 2008.

Shortly after its publication, a Steering Group of delegates from Government and non-governmental organisations will be set up to take the SAP forward. This Group will consider the various options for increasing the Red Grouse population in Northern Ireland.

Christmas lights on the Windows of Vehicles

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking to address the use of Christmas lights on the windows of vehicles. (AQW 256/08)

Mrs Foster: I have no plans to introduce legislation to prohibit the use of Christmas lights on the windows of vehicles or to undertake a campaign to discourage their use. My Department's policy is to contribute to casualty reduction by organising advertising and information campaigns to address the main causes of road traffic deaths and serious injuries. There is no indication from data provided by the PSNI that the use of Christmas lights on the windows of vehicles is a key factor in road traffic collisions.

The Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations (NI) 2000 stipulate the lighting requirements on vehicles in terms of front, rear and side lamps, reflectors, rear markings and devices etc. They do not deal specifically with lights fitted to vehicle windows. Regulation 30 prohibits the use of lamps that would cause undue dazzle or discomfort to other persons using the road.

Regulation 120 of the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations (NI) 1999 prohibits a person from driving, causing or permitting any other person to drive, a motor vehicle on a road if he is in such a position that he cannot have proper control of the vehicle or have a full view of the road and traffic ahead.

Enforcement of these regulations is a matter for the PSNI.

Grouse Numbers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to replenish the grouse moors of Northern Ireland with grouse from Scotland or elsewhere. (AQW 257/08)

Mrs Foster: A survey of all habitats in Northern Ireland suitable for Red Grouse was carried out in 2003/4. The results estimated the population to be between 202 and 220 breeding pairs. The full report of the survey can be found at www.ehsni.gov.uk/redgrousesurvey

I have no plans to replenish Northern Ireland's grouse moors with imported birds; however, a Species Action Plan (SAP) for Red Grouse is being produced and will be published in 2008.

Shortly after its publication, a Steering Group of delegates from Government and non-governmental organisations will be set up to take the SAP forward. This Group will consider the various options for increasing the Red Grouse population in Northern Ireland.

Planning Applications

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications in the Fermanagh area that were recommended for approval by the case officer, but subsequently recommended for refusal by the internal planning group of the Divisional Planning Office in that area, in each of the last five years. (AQW 263/08)

Mrs Foster: The formation of a development control group opinion which is contrary to the initial recommendation of the case officer is not an unusual occurrence. The three members of the development control group, which always includes an authorised officer at senior or principal planner level, collectively contribute a greater degree of experience of policy and practice which is influential in reaching a corporate view.

The number of planning applications in the Fermanagh area that were recommended for approval by the case officer but subsequently recommended for refusal by the development control group of the Divisional Planning Office in that area in each of the last five years are as follows:

Case Officer Refusals for Fermanagh
Year Application Received	No. of Case Officer Approvals	No. of subsequent Refusals by DC Group
2002	1098	56
2003	1409	51
2004	1769	209
2005	1850	237
2006	1444	83
2007 YTD	557	9

Source: MVM 2020 Planner

These figures have been extracted from a live dataset which is continuously updated and validated. They should therefore be regarded as indicative only at this point in time and should not be compared with any previous figures published by the Agency.

Development Plan Process

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of increased land costs and affordability issues, what steps he will take to speed up the development plan process to ensure the availability of land for development. (AQW 270/08)

Mrs Foster: Affordable housing issues and the recommendations for their resolution as set out in the Semple Review Report are being taken forward by a DSD-led Inter-Departmental Affordability Implementation Group chaired by the DSD Minister, Margaret Ritchie. The Department and Planning Service are represented on this Group.

There are a variety of factors contributing to rising land costs and affordability and the availability of housing land. Many of these factors are outside the direct control of the planning system and they are not solely the product of a slow development plan process or land supply issues.

While there already exists at least a five year supply of housing land in each District Council Area of Northern Ireland, the key issue is how this existing supply of land is made available for development.

With regard specifically to the development plan process, I am presently considering further reform of the planning system to identify areas where improvements may be made and this includes speeding up the plan-making process.

Town Centre Living Initiative

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the number of Town Centre Living Initiative applications made to Planning Service in the Cookstown area; and (b) the status of these applications, given previous agreement by Planning Service to prioritise such applications. (AQW 274/08)

Mrs Foster: Planning Service received 4 applications for developments in association with the Cookstown Town Centre Living Initiative / Living Over The Shops (LOTS) Initiative. Two of the applications submitted affect listed buildings and were accompanied by applications for listed building consent.

All the applications submitted were prioritised by Planning Service. The two applications affecting the listed buildings are still under consideration. Planning Service is currently liaising between the agent and EHS Protecting Historic Buildings on further information required.

The remaining two applications were submitted in the form of Certificates of Lawful Use for Proposed Development. One has been approved and was issued on 31st July 2007. The second was withdrawn and a planning application was submitted for the development on 14th August 2007.

This has been recommended for approval and will be presented to the Cookstown District Council Planning Meeting on 9th October 2007.

Planning Applications

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the process that will be put in place for dealing with planning applications that have been refused on the sole basis of prematurity to the relevant Area Plan. (AQW 275/08)

Mrs Foster: The current policy in relation to prematurity and emerging development plans is contained in the Joint Ministerial Statement (JMS) "Development Plans and the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy" (31 January 2005).

However, because of the recent reserved judgement on the legal challenge to the Strategic Environmental Assessment (SEA) to the draft Magherafelt and Northern Area Plans and pending hearing on a similar challenge to the Banbridge and Newry & Mourne Area Plan, my Department considers it prudent to hold refusal decisions on those applications which have been determined under these draft Area Plans and also will be proposing a deferral of all relevant refusal applications where plan prematurity is a potential reason for refusal until the final decision of the Court is known.

This decision will be reviewed following the final judgement in respect of the Strategic Environmental Assessments for the Draft Northern and Magherafelt Area Plans and if necessary new policy guidance will be issued.

High Hedges Legislation

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to give a timescale for the introduction of legislation on high hedges. (AQW 279/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department confirmed in 2005, through public consultation, that the nuisance high hedge problem here is on a par with that in England and Wales where legislation is already in place and in operation to address the problem.

I wish to bring forward similar legislation as soon as possible, starting with a policy consultation on the detailed operation of the legislation. However, the timing will be subject to consideration of other competing priorities.

Motorcycle Track at Nutts Corner

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to her reply to AQW 806/07, to outline whether the investigation into the potential breach of planning control which occurred during the construction of the motorcycle track at Nutts Corner has been completed; and, if so, what action will be taken against the owners of the land. (AQW 294/08)

Mrs Foster: Further to my Answer published in the Answers Booklet on 29 June 2007, I can confirm that the portacabin and signage have been removed from the site. The Department has been advised that there would be no more than 12 race meetings each year at this location. If this is the case, the use of the land for motorcycle racing would be deemed Permitted Development under the General Development Order and no action needs to be taken against the landowner. The Department will continue to monitor the situation to ensure the lawful use rights are not exceeded.

Noise Complaints

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of complaints about noise levels dealt with by her department, in each of the last two years. (AQW 365/08)

Mrs Foster: The Environment and Heritage Service is responsible for dealing with complaints about noise from certain industrial installations prescribed under Part A of the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003 and for facilities covered by waste management licences. Two noise related complaints were received in 2006 and twelve so far in 2007.

Motor Homes

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of motor homes that have been registered in Northern Ireland, in each of the last three years. (AQW 388/08)

Mrs Foster: The numbers of vehicles with the body type descriptor “motor home/caravan” registered in Northern Ireland in each of the last 3 years are:

01/09/2004 to 31/08/2005 = 519

01/09/2005 to 31/08/2006 = 575

01/09/2006 to 31/08/2007 = 649

Planning Applications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she will take to prevent the approval of planning applications for housing developments, when the necessary sewerage and drainage infrastructure is not in place. (AQW 426/08)

Mrs Foster: The provision of a means of sewerage and drainage disposal is a material planning consideration. My Department consults the relevant agencies with expertise in such matters and has regard to what they say as part of the planning application assessment process. In those circumstances where there is inadequate sewerage and drainage infrastructure or the prospect of it not being available in a reasonably short timescale, it will be necessary to provide a private treatment works. If this option is not available then planning applications may be refused on those grounds.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to comment on the recommendation referred to in a Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment memo regarding the Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, dated 2 April 2007, which stated that “a recommendation to decline the application is expected to go to the Planning Service Management Board this week”. (AQW 471/08)

Mrs Foster: In reaching my view I had regard to all the material factors and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on the content of a memo from the period before the devolved administration was established.

Motor Test Certificates

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made on the mutual recognition of the National Car Test (NCT) and Ministry of Transport (MOT) motor test certificates. (AQO 173/08)

Mrs Foster: There is no requirement for mutual recognition of vehicle test certificates between member states in the European Union, and I have no plans at present to bring forward such a proposal.

Although the underlying legislative requirements are the same, as set out in the relevant European directives, the vehicle testing regimes in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland have developed differently. For example, the regulations that govern the standards that vehicles are tested to differ in certain respects. Test fees are also lower in Northern Ireland, and in the Republic there is no test for motorcycles.

However, the key difference is that vehicles in Northern Ireland are tested after four years and every year thereafter whereas in Ireland they are tested after four years and then every two years.

The longer interval between tests in the Republic of Ireland would represent a significant barrier to mutual recognition even if there were such a proposal on the table. For example, by encouraging motorists to go to the Republic of Ireland mutual recognition would undermine the demand for tests in Northern Ireland and therefore increase the unit cost for customers here.

More significantly, a recent report by the Department for Transport in GB indicated that a two-year interval between tests would mean more unroadworthy vehicles, more road traffic collisions attributable to vehicle defects, and ultimately more deaths and injuries on the roads.

Review of Council Boundaries and Functions

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of the Environment to give a timescale for the announcement of the outcome of the current review of council boundaries and functions. (AQO 182/08)

Mrs Foster: The Executive initiated a review of local government aspects of the review of public administration on 5 July. The review has three strands; developing a shared vision for local government, revisiting decisions in relation to the number of councils, but limited to the three RPA options – that is 7, 11 or 15 and, finally, considering the functions that will transfer to local government, again limited to those functions identified for transfer in the final RPA announcements.

The review is led by an Executive subcommittee, chaired by myself and comprising Ministerial colleagues from DFP, DRD, DSD and DHSSPS. That subcommittee has met twice.

As part of the review process, we are engaging with key stakeholders on all the issues within the review's terms of reference, and that process of engagement will continue throughout the review.

We intend to complete the review by this autumn, with a view to the Executive announcing its decisions to the Assembly and the public in December 2007.

Development Plans and the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment if she will, in co-operation with the Minister for Regional Development, consider reviewing the joint ministerial statement of 31 January 2005, 'Development Plans and the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy', with a view to allowing development to take place under the existing Newry and Banbridge area plan until such times as the new plan is ready for implementation. (AQO 134/08)

Mrs Foster: The joint ministerial statement (January 2005) provides policy guidance for the consideration of development proposals in the context of published draft area plans. In applying this guidance, the decision-maker, in deciding whether or not a particular proposal is premature, must have regard to a number of factors, including, for example, the status of the draft area plan, the time frame for its completion, as well as the implications for regional development Strategy (RDS). In those circumstances, the joint ministerial statement remains a relevant material consideration and I have therefore no proposal to consider its review.

Public Consultation

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment what arrangements she is making for public consultation on Executive and administrative decisions. (AQO 181/08)

Mrs Foster: When carrying out public consultation exercises on policy proposals and draft legislation the Department follows central guidance which has been issued across the Northern Ireland Civil Service by OFMdfM. In relation to consultation exercises carried out under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Department follows guidance from the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment whether any representations have been made by Ministers or Members of the Northern Ireland Assembly on behalf of Seaport Investments Ltd, in relation to the planning application for a Giant's Causeway visitor and study centre. (AQO 189/08)

Mrs Foster: No, neither I nor my Department have received representations from Ministers or Members of the Northern Ireland Assembly on behalf of Seaport Investments Ltd in relation to this application.

Draft Area Plans

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of the Environment to give an update on the current status of the Armagh draft area plan and the Dungannon and South Tyrone draft area plan; and if she will give a likely timescale for a public inquiry into those plans. (AQO 158/08)

Mrs Foster: In the current business year Planning Service is giving priority to the preparation of the draft development plans for Antrim, Ballymena and Larne and for West Tyrone.

Since the publication of the Armagh Area Plan Issues Paper in April 2004, a significant amount of work has been carried out on the preparation of a draft plan. However, competing business priorities have resulted in a temporary redeployment of staff, primarily to assist in reducing the planning application backlog in the Craigavon divisional planning office. This will be reviewed before the end of this year. In the meantime, I regret that I am unable to provide a likely timescale for publication of the draft plan or for any subsequent stages in the plan preparation process.

It is not intended at the present time to begin work on a new Dungannon and South Tyrone area plan. This plan was adopted in March 2005 and will not reach its notional end-by date until December 2010.

Eastwood Envirowaste Facility

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the tonnage of waste that is currently stored at the Eastwood Envirowaste facility, located at 18 Crosshill Road, Crumlin BT29 4BQ. (AQO 170/08)

Mrs Foster: There are currently 100 kilos of asbestos waste on site. 9.1 tons were sent to Scotland on Saturday 8 September 2007. As a result there are four empty containers on site and these are due for removal.

There are approximately 8,000 tons of inert and reclamation material on site.

Northern Area Plan

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the overturning of the Northern area plan, to detail how she plans to take forward strategic planning in that region. (AQO 179/08)

Mrs Foster: I have noted the judgement of the court in respect of the judicial review of the strategic environmental assessments for the draft northern area plan and the draft Magherafelt area plan. I have also noted that the court has given the parties a number of weeks to consider the issue of remedies. My Department is currently considering the judgement and its implications in consultation with our legal advisors. Until the issue of remedies has been determined the draft northern area plan and the draft Magherafelt area plan remain as material considerations in the determination of planning applications in their respective areas.

As Minister for the Environment I remain committed to the proper planning of the area covered by the draft northern area plan. I am giving further consideration to how this objective can best be carried forward in light of the court's decision.

Biodiversity and the Environment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to work with the British Association for Shooting and Conservation on its 'Green Shoots' survey, in order to achieve maximum results for biodiversity and the environment in Northern Ireland. (AQO 203/08)

Mrs Foster: I am aware that my officials have had recent discussions with BASC with a view to building on the results of the 'Green Shoots' survey of its members in Northern Ireland through the development of projects at local level. I am encouraged by the desire of BASC members to build on these results and develop projects which would improve the biodiversity interest of lands which BASC members shoot over. I look forward to hearing of the success of those projects in due course.

Bonfires

Mr Butler asked the Minister of the Environment if she will consider introducing a bonfire policy, to ensure that anyone found burning toxic materials will be prosecuted under European Union guidelines on waste pollution. (AQO 171/08)

Mrs Foster: I have no plans to introduce any new policy measures on bonfires. At present there are a range of legal controls available to enforcement bodies to deal with the illegal disposal of waste. These controls have been outlined in the Interagency Working Group Report on Bonfires, issued in 2004. Where evidence exists, prosecutions can already be taken by the relevant enforcement body under existing legislation.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Special EU Programmes Body

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he can confirm that the Special EU Programmes Body has (i) produced guidelines as to how district councils should form partnerships with each other for the delivery of PEACE III; and (ii) to detail how these have been communicated to relevant stakeholders. (AQW 245/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): The delivery mechanisms for Theme 1.1, Building Positive Relations at the Local Level, of the PEACE III programme will adopt a partnership approach with local authorities invited to take a leadership role in partnership with local stakeholders. The Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB) has produced guidelines on the delivery of this theme. The guidelines encourage applications from self-defined cluster arrangements of councils until the new council areas under the Review of Public Administration are agreed by the devolved Administration. A draft of the guidelines was issued to council chief executives on 9 May 2007 for consultation, and final guidelines, taking into consideration comments received, were issued on 11 July 2007. SEUPB further communicated the outworking of the guidelines at a workshop for councils and local strategy partnerships on 19 July 2007 and in meetings with the local strategy partnership working group on 19 July 2007 and 14 September 2007.

Review of Rating

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give a timescale within which the consultation report into the review of rating will be published. (AQW 476/08)

Mr P Robinson: The public consultation finished on 31 August 2007 and the consultation report was published and placed in the Assembly Library on 25 September 2007.

The report has also been placed on the rating review website and will now be sent to the DFP Committee to scrutinise and take further evidence.

Following this I will bring proposals in relation to the review to the Executive.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to report on progress on the Comprehensive spending review. (AQO 186/08)

Mr P Robinson: The comprehensive spending review is a UK wide assessment of future spending priorities and will also determine the overall allocations for Northern Ireland for 2008-09 to 2010-11. The outcome of this review is expected in October, and will feed into our local Budget process.

As part of my ongoing work on this issue there has been a series of engagements with the Treasury at both official and ministerial level. This has included detailed discussion with the chief secretary to the Treasury in the course of the Finance Ministers' Quadrilateral in Cardiff in July, and I subsequently met separately with the chief secretary on 12 September to continue to make the case for the best possible outcome for Northern Ireland.

Full-Rate Liability for Industrial Rates

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what percentage of full-rate liability for industrial rates he is using in his planning and projections for the years 2008/2009 to 2010/2011. (AQO 194/08)

Mr P Robinson: In advance of full consideration of the ERINI Report, no change has been made to the percentages of full-rate liability as set out in the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (as amended), in paragraph 4(3) of Schedule 7. For 2008/2009 it is 50%; for 2009/2010, 75%; and for 2010/2011, 75%.

However, as I said recently when addressing the CBI, while it would be wrong to pre-empt any decision the Executive may reach, economic growth is a priority and we are hampered by EU state aid rules in delivering new ways of assisting business. Capping industrial rates may be an inefficient way but it may be one of the few options available to us.

The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he is taking to reduce the cost to public services of segregation, as set out in 'The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy'. (AQO 185/08)

Mr P Robinson: The cost of division research was commissioned by the previous administration on 29 March 2006 and was conducted and finalised during direct rule. Although commissioned by the previous Administration it is an independent piece of research.

The final report was presented by Deloitte in April 2007, prior to devolution. Whilst the report itself may be a material consideration and Departments may wish to have regard to it, the report itself does not form an agreed basis for future policy development.

I, and the Executive, believe that by working to tackle the causes of division in our society, including sectarianism and racism, we can move forward and make a real difference to the lives of all our people. It is anticipated that this will lead to a reduction in the costs in dealing with segregation.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what representations have been made to Her Majesty's Treasury in relation to the comprehensive spending review. (AQO 143/08)

Mr P Robinson: The comprehensive spending review is a UK wide assessment of future spending priorities and will also determine the overall allocations for Northern Ireland for 2008-09 to 2010-11. The outcome of this review is expected in October, and will feed into our local Budget process.

As part of my ongoing work on this issue there has been a series of engagements with the Treasury at both official and ministerial level. This has included detailed discussion with the chief secretary to the Treasury in the course of the Finance Ministers' Quadrilateral in Cardiff in July, and I subsequently met separately with the chief secretary on 12 September to continue to make the case for the best possible outcome for Northern Ireland.

Interreg IV Programme

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the role which the five local authority cross-border groups will have in the delivery of the Interreg IVA European programme, in keeping with European principles that the programme should be 'bottom-up' and seen as additional to mainstream Government spending programmes. (AQO 175/08)

Mr P Robinson: The local authority cross border partnerships will continue to have a strong delivery role for the INTERREG IV programme. The existing partnerships plus COMET, the North East Partnership and Scottish interests have been invited to submit multi-annual strategic projects that reflect local needs identified on a bottom-up basis. Cross border co-operation and partnership are cross cutting themes in the programme and the track record of the partnerships under INTERREG IIIA means they, taken together, are well placed to benefit under the proposed project selection arrangements at a level similar to now. All EU northern Ireland structural funds expenditure will fully meet EU additionality requirements and partnership expenditure will be additional to mainstream Government programmes.

Civil Service Recruitment

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what implications the employers' guidance on recruiting people with conflict-related convictions has for Civil Service recruitment. (AQO 138/08)

Mr P Robinson: As the guidance has not been applied there have been no implications for recruitment to the Northern Ireland Civil Service. As the Minister responsible for recruitment to the Northern Ireland Civil Service it is not my intention to apply the guidance as I believe the existing recruitment policies and procedures provide appropriate arrangements for dealing with candidates with criminal records.

Irish Central Border Area Network

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he has taken to investigate the use of public moneys by the Irish Central Border Area Network (ICBAN). (AQO 193/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Irish Central Border Area Network INTERREG Partnership acts as an implementing agent for three measures of the INTERREG IIIA programme for which DFP is the Northern Ireland Accountable Department. ICBAN conducts this role on a contractual basis with the Special EU Programmes Body who as managing authority for the programme have ensured that all necessary audit and financial checks are carried out in line with EU audit requirements. SEUPB also commissioned a full financial review of ICBAN which was received in April 2007. As a result of those reports, a number of recommendations for improvement were made. SEUPB continue to pursue these issues to ensure they are addressed.

Barnett Consequential

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will recommend to the Executive that the £11.3m received as a Barnett consequential from the United Kingdom Treasury's £340m allocation for disabled children, should be ring-fenced for the provision of disabled children's services throughout Northern Ireland. (AQO 136/08)

Mr P Robinson: Any and all allocations received from the Barnett Formula are unhypothecated, that is to say that they are available to the Executive to spend in correspondence with local needs and priorities.

The forthcoming Programme for Government and Budget will determine the priorities for Northern Ireland and associated public expenditure allocations.

Public Sector Jobs

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he is taking in respect of the decentralisation of public sector jobs. (AQO 147/08)

Mr P Robinson: The consultation on 'The Guiding Principles for the Location of Public Sector Jobs in Northern Ireland' which closed on 30 April 2007 is the first step in developing a framework which would facilitate future decision-making on the location of public sector jobs. Following analysis of the consultation responses the Executive Committee discussed the matter earlier this month and agreed:

- to develop a framework to provide a robust process for decision-making on the location of RPA-related bodies; and
- to undertake a time-bound review of policy on the location of public sector jobs in Northern Ireland

Gross Value Added in Northern Ireland

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he can take to increase the gross value added in Northern Ireland. (AQO 155/08)

Mr P Robinson: The key to transforming the Northern Ireland economy is to address the underperformance in terms of economic productivity. The 20% shortfall in GVA per head can be linked to the relatively low level of value added employment created over recent years. We need to put in place a policy framework that will enhance the quality of employment generated within the Northern Ireland economy.

Government Legal Services

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to transfer Government legal services to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. (AQO 146/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Government Legal Service for Northern Ireland is an umbrella for professional legal staff in six units in the devolved and non-devolved sectors. Membership of GLSNI does not affect the lines of political and administrative accountability of those units. As the largest unit, the Departmental Solicitor's Office provides professional leadership and support services to GLSNI.

I have no plans to transfer the Departmental Solicitors Office to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

Reduction in Corporation Tax

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to make a statement on prospects for a reduction in corporation tax in Northern Ireland. (AQO 188/08)

Mr P Robinson: On 19 July 2007 the Executive issued its formal response to the Varney Review's call for evidence. I currently have no further insight into Sir David's intentions on the issue of a reduction in corporation tax in Northern Ireland. I understand he will present his final report to the Chancellor in early October. In light of this I will be pressing for a further meeting with Sir David in advance of publication of his final report.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 20/08, to detail the total amount spent by his Department on hospitality and entertainment, in each of the last five years. (AQW 290/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The amount spent on hospitality and entertainment by my Department in each of the last five years is shown in the table.

EXPENDITURE ON HOSPITALITY AND ENTERTAINMENT: DHSSPS 2002 – 2007

Category	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Catering	49,802	64,547	58,590	60,336	64,000
Room hire etc	34,734	64,404	79,954	41,854	57,000
Strategies, reviews etc.	7,312	43,828	26,419	63,084	29,000
Ministerial hospitality	3,416	1,453	72	564	582
Other	1,340	14,234	5,496	5,242	11,231
Total	£96,604	£188,466	£170,531	£171,080	£161,813

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Flooding in Warrenpoint

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take to prevent a recurrence of the recent flooding that took place on a number of occasions at Clermont Gardens, Warrenpoint. (AQW 155/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): The out-of-sewer flooding that affected Clermont Gardens and Charlotte Street on 8 July and 11 August 2007 was caused by the intensity and duration of the extreme rainfall that occurred on those dates. It is generally acknowledged that no sewerage system could have coped with the volume of rainfall experienced.

Northern Ireland Water (NIW) is currently undertaking a major programme of drainage area studies throughout Northern Ireland to identify any deficiencies, assess future needs and to recommend solutions for any upgrades needed to meet development, environmental and structural requirements. A recently completed drainage area study for Warrenpoint identified the Clermont Gardens/Charlotte Street/Newry Road area as being at risk of out-of-sewer flooding during periods of heavy rainfall and made recommendations to alleviate the risk. NIW expects to implement the recommendations in spring 2008, subject to competing priorities and the availability of funding.

Road Signs

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he has given to displaying road distances in kilometres, as is the case in the majority of European countries. (AQW 182/08)

Mr Murphy: The conversion of road signs to metric measurements, which currently carry the distance in miles, would incur a significant capital cost, as all existing signs would need to be retrofitted or replaced. Those costs would be disproportionate to any overall benefit to be derived from the change and, given the current budgetary pressures on the Department, would be difficult to justify.

Westlink Upgrade

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the upgrade of the Westlink, to detail whether or not an obligation to include a percentage of long-term unemployed people in the workforce was placed on the successful contractor. (AQW 183/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that there was no contractual obligation placed on the successful contractor for the upgrade work to the Westlink to include a percentage of long-term unemployed people in the workforce. This contract was agreed under direct rule.

Sight-Lines Staff

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of staff currently employed in the sight-lines section at Roads Service's divisional office at Rathkeltair House, Downpatrick. (AQW 239/08)

Mr Murphy: The group of staff who deal with sight line matters within my Department's Roads Service's Southern Division, is the development control section. This section is deployed in two teams based at Marlborough House, Craigavon and Rathkeltair House, Downpatrick. There are currently seven technical officers and 3 admin support staff members employed in the Downpatrick based team which covers the Ards, Down, and Newry & Mourne District Council areas. In addition there is, at the present time, one vacancy at the technical grade.

The filling of this vacancy, together with a number of other similar vacancies at this grade throughout Roads Service, is currently being progressed by means of both an internal trawl and external recruitment. The internal process includes promotion opportunities for suitable candidates from technical assistant grades within Roads Service.

Sight-Lines Staff

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to increase the number of staff in the sight-lines section of Roads Service's Divisional Office at Rathkeltair House, Downpatrick. (AQW 240/08)

Mr Murphy: The group of staff who deal with sight line matters within my Department's Roads Service's Southern Division, is the development control section. This section is deployed in two teams based at Marlborough House, Craigavon and Rathkeltair House, Downpatrick. There are currently seven technical officers and 3 admin support staff members employed in the Downpatrick based team which covers the Ards, Down, and Newry & Mourne District Council areas. In addition there is, at the present time, one vacancy at the technical grade.

The filling of this vacancy, together with a number of other similar vacancies at this grade throughout Roads Service, is currently being progressed by means of both an internal trawl and external recruitment. The internal process includes promotion opportunities for suitable candidates from technical assistant grades within Roads Service.

ICBAN

Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Regional Development if he has carried out any investigation into the financial spending of ICBAN. (AQW 266/08)

Mr Murphy: In June 2006, officials from my Department's Roads Service carried out an investigation into financial spending by the Irish Central Border Area Network (ICBAN), pertaining to a previous minor roads improvement project in the border region. This project was part funded by the INTERREG IIIA community initiative and an element of it incorporated ineligible expenditure. Based on the outcome of this investigation, DRD has held further meetings with ICBAN and is currently trying to recoup the ineligible expenditure from them.

Housing Provision

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take, in light of increased land costs and affordability issues, to increase housing provision in the regional development strategy up to 2015. (AQW 269/08)

Mr Murphy: The regional housing need figure of 208,000 dwellings, which was published last year, is currently being reviewed. A revised figure will be published early in 2008. This is in line with my Department's commitment to review the regional housing need figure every two years to ensure that it is sufficiently up to date.

Parking Exemptions for Community Carers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take to provide exemptions to parking restrictions for community carers, similar to those in place for the emergency services.
(AQW 277/08)

Mr Murphy: I should explain that presently (and if no local restriction is in place), blue badge holders are the only road users permitted to use single or double yellow lines for general parking. This exemption is provided under the Disabled Persons (Badge for Motor Vehicles) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1993. Parking is restricted to three hours and the exemption is provided on the understanding that if reserved parking places are provided nearby, those should be used in preference to yellow lines.

Other vehicles can stop and wait on yellow lines but only for specific purposes; for example, a person boarding or alighting a vehicle, or for goods to be loaded or unloaded. Emergency vehicles such as fire, ambulance and police, are permitted to stop and wait, for the sole purpose of attending an emergency. Doctors' vehicles are not exempt from waiting restrictions, with no provision for doctors on call. However, if a doctor has been issued with a Penalty Charge Notice (PCN), and they can provide evidence that they were attending an emergency, then the PCN is generally revoked.

It is the case that a small number of authorities in England allow vehicles, displaying a doctor or nurse "On Call" badge, to park within the limits of a residents' parking scheme without the need for a permit. However, in areas where this exemption applies, the badge cannot be used for any other purposes on-street. All London boroughs and some GB local authorities operate a health emergency badge scheme. This is for people providing emergency healthcare in patients' homes. The scheme is applied solely at the discretion of the local parking authority, and has no legal status, but permits anyone displaying the associated badge to park on waiting restrictions, if there is no other on-street alternative. It is not for use for routine or non-emergency home visits, or for general parking – including parking at the surgery.

Waiting restrictions are generally introduced for either road safety or traffic progression reasons. Keeping the areas over which a restriction applies free of parked vehicles is therefore necessary to ensure the safe and effective management of the road network. For those reasons, I do not think that it is appropriate to introduce further exemptions to waiting restrictions, other than those already in place.

Resurfacing of the Road at Main Street, Greyabbey

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale for the resurfacing of the road at Main Street, Greyabbey, between North Street and the PSNI Station, following NI Water's recent installation of water pipes at this location.
(AQW 278/08)

Mr Murphy: I note that you raised this question with me in May this year. My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that the position remains unchanged from that stated in my previous reply (Ref AQW 105/07), namely that it continues to be committed to this scheme, however, funding is not currently available. I am unable, therefore, to provide you with a timescale for carrying out the works. As I advised previously, I have asked the Southern Divisional roads manager to write to you as soon as a start date for the scheme is established.

Dual Carriageway Between Comber and Newtownards

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to address the safety of vehicle users on the dual carriageway between Comber and Newtownards, at the Scrabo Road and Island Hill Road.
(AQW 291/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised that they are not aware of any specific traffic or safety related issues of vehicle users on the dual carriageway between Comber and Newtownards, at the Scrabo Road and Island Hill Road junction, with there being only one recorded 'damage only' accident at this location.

Roads Service have also advised that they expect the volume of traffic using this road junction to greatly decrease following the provision of the Newtownards A20 southern distributor road (contract to be awarded in November 2007) and therefore do not currently propose to take any remedial action.

Road Safety on the Ballyrainey Road

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he will take to reduce the speed of vehicles on the dual carriageway between the shopping centre and Ballyrainey Road, in light of the number of accidents and deaths on this stretch of road.
(AQW 292/08)

Mr Murphy: Following the tragic accident which occurred at the intersection of the Kempstones Road and the Ballyrainey Road in December 2005, my Department's Roads Service introduced a series of measures on the A20 both at the approach to, and at the junction.

The enhanced warning signs and edge of carriageway studs on the dual carriageway and the high friction surfacing on the Ballyrainey Road, coupled with measures implemented in previous years, have assisted road safety at this location.

While Roads Service will continue to give high priority to accident reduction and prevention measures, it is in agreement with the PSNI that speed has not been the principal factor in the accidents along this stretch of road and that a reduction in the speed limit is not considered to be appropriate.

Train Diversions

Mr Donaldson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of occasions on which trains have been diverted on to the Antrim to Knockmore railway line, due to temporary obstructions on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry line. (AQW 310/08)

Mr Murphy: The Antrim to Knockmore railway line ceased to be used by scheduled services on 29 June 2003. Since then, 24 passenger trains have used the line as a diversionary route in times of emergency or obstruction. The vast majority of these (80-90%) have been caused by disruptions on the Belfast to Derry service.

Train Diversions

Mr Donaldson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of occasions, during the last six months, on which Northern Ireland Railways has run a train along the Antrim to Knockmore railway line in each direction, to ensure that it can be maintained as a diversionary route. (AQW 311/08)

Mr Murphy: When the Knockmore line was closed to scheduled services it was intended that the route would be maintained for the purpose of driver training and emergency diversions. The Antrim to Knockmore railway line has remained unused by NIR during the last six months. The last time a journey was undertaken on the line was 9 February 2007 for driver training purposes. However, the line is patrolled by infrastructure staff in the same way as the rest of the network. Where defects are identified, action is taken to ensure that the problems are rectified and the line remains available for use.

Irish on Road Signs

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 63/08, to detail the timescale for consultation on, and implementation of, the operational policy in regard to this matter. (AQW 321/08)

Mr Murphy: As I indicated in my answer to AQW 63/08, my Department's Roads Service is currently developing policy proposals to enable the authorisation of road signs in languages other than English, with a view to introducing amending legislation in line with the normal procedures and timetable for an Assembly bill.

I would intend being in a position to consult on my proposals for legislative change in spring 2008, including consultation on the proposed operational policy for the provision of bilingual traffic signs. On the basis of the normal timetable for legislative proposals, the introduction of a Bill to the Assembly would follow around one year after the close of the consultation period. The date at which the policy could be implemented would be dependent on the subsequent progress of the Bill through the Assembly.

Review of Road Safety on the Frosses Road

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to carry out a review of road safety on the Frosses Road; and to improve this route over the next five years. (AQW 405/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has carried out a number of improvements to the A26 Frosses Road between its junction with the A44, Drones Road and Ballymoney over the past number of years. These have included a significant safety scheme carried out during the period 2001 to 2003 that provided better information for drivers on overtaking opportunities and better warning of the road layout. Significant improvements were made to road markings including double line systems, edge of carriageway markings, improved junction layouts to include the use of coloured surfacing, traffic islands, improved signage, street lighting and two stretches of 50 mph speed limit.

In addition, climbing lanes have been introduced at Glenlough to provide overtaking opportunities for traffic travelling towards Ballymena and at Ballinaloob for traffic travelling towards Ballymoney. The latter scheme also introduced a much improved junction layout at the Dunloy Crossroads junction. A roundabout has also been provided at the junction of the A26 Ballymoney bypass at the Kilraughts Road junction.

Roads Service has advised that it has no plans, at present, to carry out a further review of road safety on this length of the Frosses Road. You will however, be aware that plans are currently being progressed to provide a dual carriageway on a 7km section of this road from Glarryford Cross Roads to its junction with the A44 Drones Road.

Commencement of this scheme will be subject to timely and successful completion of the statutory procedures, detailed economic appraisal and the availability of funding at the time. Roads Service currently envisages that construction of the scheme will take 2 – 3 years.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Housing Energy Performance Certificates

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development to outline her plans to introduce housing energy performance certificates; and to indicate what measurement standards will be applied. (AQW 218/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): In conjunction with my Department, the Department of Finance and Personnel is finalising new regulations that will introduce the outstanding requirements of the EU directive on the energy performance of buildings, including the requirement to produce an energy performance certificate when a building is constructed, sold, leased or rented. The requirement for an energy performance certificate will be phased in throughout next year, starting with new buildings in early Spring, followed by sales of existing buildings in Summer and finally public and private rentals by the start of January 2009.

For new dwellings, the energy performance assessment will be calculated using the Government Standard Assessment Procedure software (SAP2005). For existing dwellings the assessment will be calculated using the reduced data version of SAP 2005 (rdSAP).

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Land

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail all land owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Comber, Ballygowan, Saintfield and their outlying areas. (AQW 261/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive owns the following sites in (or within the areas surrounding) Comber, Ballygowan and Saintfield.

- Lisbane Park, Saintfield (0.24 ha.) – A feasibility study is currently being completed to assess the development potential of this site.
- Upper Crescent, Comber (1.17 ha.) – Land is in the process of being transferred to BIH Housing

Association for a social housing scheme that is programmed to commence in the current year.

- Kathleen Drive, Ballystockard, Comber (0.07 ha.) – This land has the potential for a limited number of dwellings subject to planning approval. A feasibility study to assess the development potential of this site is imminent.

Local Community Fund

Mr Bresland asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to extend the local community fund beyond the current financial year; and to provide details of the method used to select target wards. (AQW 302/08)

Ms Ritchie: My Department is currently reviewing the local community fund. Decisions on the future of the fund will be made on completion of the review. Since April 2006, LCF has targeted those communities living in the 11-20% most deprived super output areas as defined by the Noble index of deprivation 2005.

Areas of Deprivation

Mr Simpson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what percentage of the population, broken down by (i) constituency; and (ii) district council area, has been assessed as living in the most deprived areas of Northern Ireland, in each of the last two years. (AQW 330/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information requested is set out in the attached tables.

Table 1 shows the percentage of the population in each Parliamentary constituency assessed as living in the most deprived areas of Northern Ireland. Table 2 shows the percentage of the population in each district council living in the most deprived areas of Northern Ireland. Figures are derived from the 'Northern Ireland Multiple Deprivation Measure 2005', and the data relates primarily to 2003. Information for other years is not available.

TABLE 1

Parliamentary Constituency	Extent (%)	Rank of Extent
Belfast East	23	5
Belfast North	60	2
Belfast South	19	7
Belfast West	79	1
East Antrim	8	10
East Londonderry	13	9
Fermanagh South Tyrone	8	11

Parliamentary Constituency	Extent (%)	Rank of Extent
Foyle	46	3
Lagan Valley	4	16
Mid Ulster	7	13
Newry and Armagh	23	6
North Antrim	8	12
North Down	2	18
South Antrim	4	15
South Down	6	14
Strangford	4	17
Upper Bann	18	8
West Tyrone	31	4

Notes: Extent means the proportion of the population living in the most deprived super output areas. For example, Belfast East parliamentary constituency has an extent of 23%. This means that 23% of the Belfast East parliamentary constituency population live in the most deprived super output areas in Northern Ireland. Extent ranks range from 1 (most deprived parliamentary constituency) to 18 (least deprived parliamentary constituency).

TABLE 2

District Council	Extent (%)	Rank of Extent
Antrim	6	19
Ards	3	22
Armagh	7	18
Ballymena	10	13
Ballymoney	1	25
Banbridge	0	26
Belfast	48	2
Carrickfergus	8	17
Castlereagh	5	21
Coleraine	10	12
Cookstown	11	11
Craigavon	23	5
Derry	46	3
Down	6	20
Dungannon	9	14
Fermanagh	9	15
Larne	8	16
Limavady	17	6
Lisburn	16	7
Magherafelt	1	24
Moyle	13	10

District Council	Extent (%)	Rank of Extent
Newry and Mourne	25	4
Newtownabbey	13	8
North Down	3	23
Omagh	13	9
Strabane	54	1

Notes: Extent means the proportion of the population living in the most deprived super output areas. For example, Antrim district council has an extent of 6%. This means that 6% of the Antrim district council population live in the most deprived super output areas in Northern Ireland. Extent ranks range from 1 (most deprived district council) to 26 (least deprived district council).

Staff Teambuilding Costs

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises carried out by her department, in each of the last three years. (AQW 332/08)

Ms Ritchie: The total cost of away days and staff team building exercises carried out by my department over the last three year period amounts to £276,318.75. The break down for each of the last three years is as follows:

2004/05
Away Days	£59,015.46
Team Building	£4,805.00
Total	£63,820.46

2005/06
Away Days	£63,076.63
Team Building	£25,578.14
Total	£88,654.77

2006/07
Away Days	£63,511.18
Team Building	£60,332.34
Total	£123,843.52

Land Acquisition at Loughgilly, Co. Armagh

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Social Development to confirm that all outstanding payments for which her Department is responsible are in the process of being paid to Gosford Housing Association, in relation to land acquisition at Loughgilly, Co. Armagh.

(AQW 345/08)

Ms Ritchie: I can confirm that there are no outstanding payments due to Gosford Housing Association (Armagh) Limited in relation to land acquisition at Loughgilly, Co Armagh.

Street Trader Legislation

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the legislation that governs street traders in Northern Ireland. (AQW 370/08)

Ms Ritchie: The legislation regulating street trading in Northern Ireland is contained in the Street Trading Act (Northern Ireland) 2001 and associated subordinate legislation. A copy of the guide to the Act has been placed in the Library.

Prosecutions of Illegal Street Traders

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of prosecutions of illegal street traders, taken in the last year. (AQW 371/08)

Ms Ritchie: Responsibility for the prosecution of offences under the Street Trading Act (Northern Ireland) 2001 rests with district councils. My Department does not hold records of prosecutions taken.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 5 October 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Sustainable Development Strategy

Mr P Ramsey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will make a statement confirming the Executive's commitment to targets set out in the Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland. (AQW 119/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley and Mr M McGuinness): We are fully committed to the overall principles contained in the Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland. They are also considering, along with Executive colleagues, how best sustainable development can be taken into account in the forthcoming Programme for Government.

In developing a further Implementation Plan to cover the period 2008-11, we will wish to review carefully the targets contained in the Sustainable Development Strategy to ensure that they are still appropriate.

European Directives

Mr Moutray asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what assessment it has made of the way in which other countries have (i) implemented European Directives on equality; and (ii) legislated on equality issues, over the last five years; and to outline how this has informed the implementation of European Directives in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 137/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: OFMDFM has not conducted a formal assessment of the way other countries have implemented EU Directives on equality or legislated on equality issues.

Each Member State has an obligation under EU law to implement EU Directives. Failure to implement will lead to infraction proceedings and the imposition of fines until implementation is achieved in full. Given that equality is a devolved matter, it is the responsibility of the devolved administration to bring forward legislation to implement EU Equality Directives.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Campbell asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline how it will ensure that each Government Department addresses poverty and social exclusion within its Comprehensive Spending Review bid, as outlined in the 'Lifetime Opportunities' Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy for Northern Ireland, and in anticipation of the Programme for Government.

(AQW 204/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We, and our Department, are determined to properly address poverty and social inclusion. 'Lifetime Opportunities' has not yet been formally adopted by the Executive Committee. Section 16 of the Northern Ireland St Andrews Agreement Act 2006 places a statutory obligation on the Northern Ireland Executive Committee to adopt a strategy setting out how it proposes to tackle poverty, social exclusion and patterns of deprivation based on objective need. This process has already begun and proposals are currently being prepared at official level with a view to the Executive Committee considering the adoption of an Anti-poverty and Social Inclusion Strategy later this year.

Part of that process will be the consideration by the Executive of how in the implementation of an agreed strategy, tackling poverty and social exclusion will be prioritised within the public expenditure and Programme for Government planning process.

Lifetime Opportunities

Mrs D Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what assessment it has made of Northern Ireland's progress towards the targets contained in the 'Lifetime Opportunities' document, published by the Secretary of State in November 2006.

(AQW 524/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Section 16 of the Northern Ireland St Andrews Agreement Act 2006 places a statutory obligation on the Northern Ireland Executive Committee, to adopt a strategy setting out how it proposes to tackle poverty, social exclusion and patterns of deprivation based on objective need.

The process to obtain Executive Committee agreement on an anti-poverty strategy has begun. Proposals are currently being cleared at official level, with a view to the Executive Committee considering the adoption of an agreed strategy later this year.

Considerations will inevitably include an assessment of the implementation of a strategy as well as examining the adequacy of existing targets in ensuring that major goals and objectives within the adopted strategy can be achieved.

No formal assessment of progress made towards targets currently outlined in 'Lifetime Opportunities' therefore has yet occurred.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Rural Development Council

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the role of the Rural Development Council in relation to the delivery of the new Rural Development Programme.

(AQW 301/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): There will be no formal role for the Rural Development Council (RDC) in relation to delivery of the new Rural Development Programme.

DARD funding for the RDC expires in March 2009 after which the RDC will become an independent voluntary organisation.

The delivery of an element of the new Rural Development Programme will be based on the LEADER methodology of "bottom up" working and will involve self defining Council clusters working in partnership with new Local Action Groups (LAGs). The Council clusters will establish the LAGs by way of an open call, and, together with LAGs, will be responsible for developing a strategy that will meet the needs of the area.

Tullaghoge Fort

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will ensure that no land surrounding Tullaghoge Fort will be disposed of by her department, if it is required for the future development of this historic monument.

(AQW 320/08)

Ms Gildernew: My Department is working closely with the Environment and Heritage Service (Department of the Environment) and Cookstown District Council regarding their land requirements to safeguard the future of Tullaghoge Fort and to facilitate public access to it. No firm decision has been taken on the future of any land not transferred to Department of the Environment and Cookstown District Council for this purpose

Dogs (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2001

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has for a review of the Dogs (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2001.

(AQW 322/08)

Ms Gildernew: I am currently discussing with my officials a number of options on how to tackle a range of dog control issues, including the enforcement of the current legislation and the All-Island dimension. Once I have decided on how best to proceed, I will bring my proposals to the Executive and the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee.

Staff Team Building Days

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises carried out by her department, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 333/08)

Ms Gildernew: The table below shows the total cost of staff away days and staff team building exercises carried out by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, in each of the last three years.

Year	Total Cost of Staff Away Days	Total Cost of Staff Team Building Exercises
2004/05	£53,698	£14,400
2005/06	£28,572	£400
2006/07	£28,023	£11,055

Fraud

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total number of staff in her department who are involved in the investigation of fraud cases; and to outline her department's expenditure on such investigations, over the past three years.

(AQW 406/08)

Ms Gildernew: There are 7 staff involved in the investigation of suspected fraud cases. The Department's expenditure on such investigations over the past three years was £562,135. Expenditure breakdown:

Year	Salaries	Miscellaneous and other costs
2004/2005	£170,282	£21,437
2005/2006	£167,069	£18,926
2006/2007	£171,277	£13,144

Potato Inspection Regime

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of the new Potato Inspection Regime, which has replaced the previous system; and if she will comment on the contentment of her department's employees, who have responsibility for potato inspections, with the introduction of the new regime. (AQW 412/08)

Ms Gildernew: There has been no change to potato inspection arrangements.

Farm Nutrient Scheme

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) what progress has been made in processing applications for the Farm Nutrient Scheme; (ii) the number of farms that have received approval; and (iii) the number of farms that are still awaiting confirmation of funding. (AQW 453/08)

Ms Gildernew:

- (i) Considerable progress has been made in recent months in undertaking pre-approval inspections in order that FNMS approvals can be issued. 2712 pre approval inspections have been completed.
- (ii) In respect of these, 1947 approvals have been issued as at 25 September 2007.
- (iii) Approvals have yet to be issued in respect of 2728 applications although in 765 of these, the pre approval inspection has been completed.

Disease Compensation

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what monies are being withheld from farmers in respect of disease compensation; and to detail the number of farmers that are involved in alleged breaches of legislation. (AQW 542/08)

Ms Gildernew: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development are withholding disease compensation in respect of bovine Brucellosis and bovine Tuberculosis from 25 farmers totalling £1.4m for alleged breaches of legislation.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Library Authority

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much it will cost to establish the new Library Authority; and how this will be funded, other than through further library closures. (AQW 214/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): The Explanatory and Financial Memorandum accompanying the Libraries Bill set out the estimated costs for setting up the Library Authority as £670,000, comprised chiefly of salaries for the Chief Executive (designate) and her team, temporary premises and consultancy. These resources were bid for and have been secured for this financial year. These costs may rise if the operational date for the Library Authority requires that salaries are paid over a longer period, in which case the proportion of costs which fall in the next financial year will be considered within the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Corporate and support services – eg. finance, human resources, IT, estates management – are currently supplied to the library service within the general administration of the Education and Library Boards, and paid from the DE budget. The Explanatory and Financial Memorandum noted that the Department was undertaking an exercise to establish the cost of libraries' use of these services as an aid to planning for the Library Authority (Deloitte has estimated total annual cost in respect of libraries across all five Boards is £956,000). In the same exercise, Deloitte also reported on the options for the future provision of corporate services to the Library Authority and the associated costs, both running costs and set up costs. The Department is still considering the Deloitte report to determine the most cost-effective way of providing these services to the Library Authority.

I apologise for the late arrival of this answer.

Titanic Quarter

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he is taking to acknowledge the contribution of Harland and Wolff, Bombardier Shorts and the people of East Belfast to the maritime and industrial heritage of Belfast; and if he will consider acknowledging this contribution within the Titanic Quarter. (AQW 236/08)

Mr Poots: I recognise that this Question was due for answer on the 27th September 2007 and I apologise to the Member for the delay.

National Museums, via the Ulster Folk & Transport Museum (UFTM) site, holds key archival collections in the form of technical drawings and photographs related to Harland & Wolff and has an ongoing relationship with the company in terms of collecting and making collections accessible. Additionally, UFTM has collaborated with the Titanic Made In Belfast exhibitions staged by Belfast City Council and more latterly has presented a profile-raising 'Titanic Built In Belfast' exhibition in Washington D.C. as part of the Rediscover Northern Ireland programme. Building on the collections, UFTM has created an innovative new website 'Titanic Built In Belfast' [www.titanicinbelfast.com] and has developed, in partnership with Bombardier Aerospace, a major interactive Flight Experience exhibition that presents and illustrates the Shorts story and the Northern Ireland aviation industry in an international context.

At a local community level the UFTM is also a lead partner in the Community Archive Network Northern Ireland (CANNI). This has facilitated several East Belfast community group websites providing an important tool towards community development. An example is the Wise Men of the East website [www.wise-men.org.uk].

In 2002/03 National Museums Northern Ireland commissioned a feasibility study on a Museum of Sea and Sky within Titanic Quarter. Discussions have taken place with National Museums on the possibility of revisiting these proposals for the interpretation of Belfast's maritime and industrial heritage within the context of the current plans for the regeneration of the Titanic Quarter.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland is to move to its new location in the Titanic Quarter by 2010 and will be immediately associated with its new location through its existing archive holdings. PRONI intend to build on that association in terms of acquiring appropriate archives, exploiting the existing relevant holdings and seeking opportunities to publicise the holdings thus attracting additional interest in their use. In addition, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is fully supportive of the proposed development of the Titanic Signature Project within the wider Titanic Quarter redevelopment. One of the main objectives of the Titanic Signature Project is to record and celebrate the maritime and industrial heritage of the city.

Museums Strategy

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the work that has been carried out on the development of a museums strategy since he took up office, taking into account the withdrawal of funding from the Northern Ireland Museums Council. (AQW 347/08)

Mr Poots: In the 'Better Government for Northern Ireland; Final Decisions of the Review of Public Administration' document published in March 2006 it was announced that the functions of the Northern Ireland Museums Council (NIMC) would transfer to Central or Local Government. The functions provided by the NIMC are varied and whereas there are some of those functions that would transfer readily to local councils there are others that should be handled by central government, the accreditation of museums would fall into this latter category. On foot of the announcement the Department sought a mechanism to categorise the functions of NIMC and where they would best fit. One of the mechanisms considered was the formulation of a museums policy/strategy which would set out the role of museums both national and local and the support structures required to facilitate these roles. Consideration included the drawing up of draft Terms of Reference and an estimation of the resources, both costs and manpower that would be required. Both the NMC and National Museums Northern Ireland provided comment on the terms of reference.

The internal manpower resources required to move forward on this option are not available at present within the Department and it looks increasingly likely that over the next CSR period it would be very difficult for my Department to prioritise the development of such a major strategy. In light of this I met with the Chair and Chief Executive of the NIMC in September and they indicated that they had some thoughts on how they could assist us to move this process forward with more limited resource inputs and I have asked them to prepare a paper for me outlining their proposals.

I have also extended the funding for the NIMC for a further year to enable the organisation to continue in operation pending definitive decisions on the way forward.

Burnavon Arts and Cultural Centre in Cookstown

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what financial support the Arts Council of Northern Ireland plans to provide for the future development and structural needs of key regional theatres throughout Northern Ireland, and, in particular, to fund the expansion needs of the Burnavon Arts and Cultural Centre in Cookstown. (AQW 392/08)

Mr Poots: I have referred your query to the Chief Executive of the Arts Council, and I understand that she has replied to you in the following terms:

“In response to your question to the Minister regarding the development of regional theatres, you may be aware that since the establishment of the National Lottery, the Arts Council has invested significant sums of money in the design and construction not only of new buildings, but in the refurbishment and extension of existing theatres and arts centres outside Belfast. Since 1994 the Council has invested £32.8m in the capital arts infrastructure, £24.8m of which was outside Belfast. This included an award of £1,125,585 to the construction of the Burnavon Arts & Cultural Centre. (A full list of the awards is attached for your information).

In addition to its capital investment the Arts Council supports the regional theatres through its Lottery Multi Annual Programme. Each regional theatre (Market Place, Armagh; Burnavon, Cookstown; Riverside, Coleraine and the Ardhowen Theatre, Enniskillen) currently receives £30,000 per year towards its programming costs. These grants are due to expire in March 2009.

The Council's Director of Operations, Lorraine McDowell, met with representatives of Cookstown District Council earlier this year to discuss plans for the expansion of Burnavon.

Whilst the Arts Council agrees that the Centre has proved extremely successful and that the plans for its expansion are reasonable and justified, Ms McDowell had to explain that, due to diminishing Lottery funds, the Arts Council no longer has a capital programme through which such a project could be funded. In the incoming year it is likely that the Council will have only a small budget of £250,000 to respond to applications for the purchase of equipment.

The Council's Lottery income has fallen from a high of £10m in 1997/98 to projected levels of £5.795m in 07/08, reducing further to £4.5m by 2011/12. This situation has been brought about, not only through a general reduction in Lottery ticket sales, but more recently through the announcement by the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport that the Arts Council is to lose £4.5m over the next 3-4 years to fund the Olympics 2012.

The Arts Council is working with the Department of Culture, Arts & Leisure to redress this loss through CSR 2007 and ISNI 2.

I hope you will agree with me on the need to ensure that funds are made available so that the Arts Council can assist local authorities to not only maintain, but develop their current assets to meet customer needs for up to date, state of the art facilities”.

Elite Facilities Capital Programme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will explain the reasons why Comber Shooting Club and Hollow Farm Shooting Club were not short listed for the Elite Facilities Capital Programme for the 2012 Olympic Games. (AQW 423/08)

Mr Poots: The responsibility for managing the Elite Facilities Capital Programme rests with Sport Northern Ireland (SNI). The programme is managed on a competitive basis against set criteria and those projects which satisfy the criteria will proceed to the next stage.

The actual detail of the strengths and weaknesses of the Comber Shooting Club and Hollow Farm Shooting Club bid is a matter between them and SNI. The applicants have been notified of the reasons why they were not short listed and of their right to appeal.

Elite Facilities Capital Programme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will explain the reasons why Dungannon Rifle and Pistol Club was not short listed for the Elite Facilities Capital Programme for the 2012 Olympic Games. (AQW 433/08)

Mr Poots: The responsibility for managing the Elite Facilities Capital Programme rests with Sport Northern Ireland (SNI). The programme is managed on a competitive basis against set criteria and those projects which satisfy the criteria will proceed to the next stage.

The actual detail of the strengths and weaknesses of the Dungannon Rifle and Pistol Club bid is a matter between them and SNI. The applicants have been notified of the reasons why they were not short listed and of their right to appeal.

Sport NI

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will explain the reasons for the Sport NI decision not to give funding to Wado Karate, with reference to the decisions by the Scottish Executive and Welsh Assembly to fund this sport directly. (AQW 434/08)

Mr Poots: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport within Northern Ireland, including the distribution of funding to sports organisations. SNI advises that it is unaware of any application from Wado Karate in the current financial year. It also advises that neither the Scottish Executive nor the Welsh Assembly provide direct funding to Wado Karate.

Illegal Fishing

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of people who have been apprehended by bailiffs for fishing illegally in (i) Killylane Reservoir; (ii) Altnahinch Reservoir; and (iii) Dungonnell Reservoir, in the last year.

(AQW 477/08)

Mr Poots: In the past year Fisheries Conservation Officers (bailiffs) apprehended two people fishing at Killylane Reservoir without the appropriate documentation in their possession. In both incidents they issued the angler with a production document. In the first incident the angler subsequently produced the relevant documentation. In the second incident the production of the relevant documentation is still outstanding but the angler is still within the permitted timescale to produce such documentation.

No one has been apprehended fishing illegally at Altnahinch Reservoir or at Dungonnell Reservoir by Fisheries Conservation Officers in the last year.

Illegal fishing

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action he will take in respect of illegal fishing in (i) Killylane Reservoir; (ii) Altnahinch Reservoir; and (iii) Dungonnell Reservoir, due to a lack of bailiffs at these locations.

(AQW 478/08)

Mr Poots: The bailiffing presence allied with other measures is considered adequate at this time. The Department does not rely solely on bailiffing visits to identify illegal fishing but also on reports of illegal fishing from other anglers and through visits of its own staff. The “whistleblower” approach is actively encouraged by Departmental officials and is promoted on the Public Angling Estate website.

As indicated in my reply to AQW 67/08 the Department can allocate additional hours if specific problems are identified. As a result of the reports frequency of patrols at Killylane and Altnahinch Reservoirs were increased but no illegal activity has been detected. Targeted information is more likely to succeed in reducing illegal activity and apprehending offenders than regular visits by Fisheries Conservation Officers. The Department will continue to pursue this approach.

Community Festivals Fund

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what financial support the Community Festivals Fund provided to festivals in the North Antrim constituency in (i) 2006/07; and (ii) 2007/08.

(AQW 479/08)

Mr Poots: To ask the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what financial support the Community Festivals Fund provided to festivals in the North Antrim constituency in (i) 2006/07; and (ii) 2007/08.

The table below gives details of festivals in the North Antrim constituency that have received financial support from the Community Festivals Fund:

Year	Festival	Amount awarded
2006/07	Rathlin Aírs Annual Traditional Music Festival 2006 (Rathlin Island)	£2,000
2007/08	Dunaghy Cultural and Community Festival (Ballymoney)	£2,250
	Heart of the Glens Festival 2007 (Cushendall)	£3,000

Shooting Sports

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of Northern Ireland’s participation in the 2012 Olympic Games and the World Police and Fire Games 2013, if he will review his decision on the prioritisation of shooting sports, as there are participants in Olympic shooting sports who currently practice at venues across Northern Ireland.

(AQW 503/08)

Mr Poots: The responsibility for managing the Elite Facilities Capital Programme rests with Sport Northern Ireland. The programme is managed on a competitive basis against a set criteria and those projects which satisfied the criteria will proceed to the next stage. Unsuccessful applicants have been notified of their right to appeal.

British and Irish Sign Languages

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) what progress his department has made in progressing British and Irish Sign Languages; and (ii) to give a timescale within which his department will publish proposals for the provision of more tutors of sign languages, better interpretation services and the installation of specialist equipment in public offices.

(AQW 522/08)

Mr Poots: My Department continues to work in partnership with organisations representing the Deaf community to promote British Sign Language (BSL) and Irish Sign Language (ISL) and to educate and inform the wider community. In addition my Department chairs a Sign Language Partnership Group bringing together representatives from Government Departments and the Deaf community to consider ways to improve access to public services for users of sign languages.

Through the Sign language Partnership my Department funded research to identify options to increase the number of qualified tutors and interpreters. The options identified in the report fall within the statutory remit of the Department of Employment and Learning (DEL).

DEL has secured funding from the Skills and Science budget for the current year for training provision for BSL and ISL tutors and interpreters and has made a bid via the Comprehensive Spending Review to fund training provision in subsequent years. DEL may be in a position to draw up proposals for further provision when the outcome of that bid is known.

DEL officials are currently examining costed proposals from Belfast Metropolitan College for the reintroduction of its NVQ Level 4 course in BSL. DEL officials also continue to liaise with colleagues in Wales regarding current and possible future provision there with a view to introducing appropriate proposals in Northern Ireland.

The installation of specialist equipment is a matter for consideration by individual Departments and offices in line with the needs of customers. While a number of systems, such as loop systems, are commercially available to assist those who use hearing aids, the range of systems designed to support sign language is currently very much more limited. Text based systems can be of benefit to both sign language users and the hard of hearing but by their nature use written text and therefore do not specifically support sign language.

EDUCATION

Counselling in Schools

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education, with reference to the announcement made by her predecessor in October 2006, to outline the arrangements that have been put in place to provide counselling in schools; and, in particular, to detail (i) who will carry out the counselling; (ii) what level of qualification will be required for the posts; and (iii) what will be the basis of the contract of employment for such counsellors. (AQW 128/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): Following a public tender in Autumn 2006, Contact Youth have been contracted to provide an independent counselling service to all post primary schools who wish it.

The tender specified that Contact Youth are required to employ counsellors who have attained a Diploma in counselling and who are accredited with a recognised counselling body or who are working towards the said accreditation. As well as having recognised counselling qualifications counsellors will have experience of working with children and young people.

The counsellors, who are employed by Contact Youth, are required to provide a total of 3500 counselling hours throughout the North of Ireland as specified by the Department.

Workforce

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail the meetings she has had with business leaders in Northern Ireland, to ascertain how best to enhance the ability of the education system to create a highly skilled workforce. (AQW 191/08)

Ms Ruane: Since taking up the post of Minister for Education, I have met representatives of the following groups on the dates specified:

Irish Association of Social, Cultural & Economic Relations:	03 July 2007
Confederation of British Industry:	25 July 2007
Ulster Farmers Union:	25 July 2007
Institute of Directors:	08 August 2007
Business in the Community	06 September 2007

Raising educational standards and ensuring young people have the necessary skills to progress into employment is crucial for the long-term economic success of the North of Ireland and I recognise that the Business sector has an important role to play in this process.

The revised curriculum focuses on developing the skills young people need for life and work in the 21st century. Employability, incorporating Entrepreneurship, is also an important part of the revised post-primary curriculum.

In addition, the Entitlement Framework will guarantee all pupils access to a greater range of vocational courses, equipping them with the professional and technical skills that business and industry needs. Pupils will be able to access courses appropriate to their individual needs, interests and aspirations, providing a wider choice at age 14 and an even wider choice at age 16.

To support pupils in making their choices and decisions about their futures, we are working to develop high quality careers education, information advice and guidance.

All of this will be set within a broader strategic framework for 14-19 provision, on which DE and DEL are currently engaged, ensuring that our young people are equipped with the knowledge and skills to take their place in an increasingly global workforce.

Assembly Questions

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education to provide a breakdown of the total cost of, and time spent on, answering Assembly questions for written answer submitted to her department since she took up office. (AQW 241/08)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is not collected. However between the 08 May and 14 September 2007 the Department of Education has had 344 assembly written questions tabled.

The table below shows the number of written questions tabled to each Department in the North of Ireland between the 08 May and 14 September 2007.

Department	No. of Written Question
OFMDFM	118
DARD	95
DCAL	153
DEL	102
DETI	99
DOE	197
DFP	86
DHSSPS	251
DRD	263
DSD	147

Note: figures supplied by the Assembly Business Office

Childminding

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what consideration she has given to the Northern Ireland Childminding Association's proposed childminder start-up package; and what action she will take in relation to these proposals. (AQW 260/08)

Ms Ruane: Officials from the Department met with the Director of NICMA on 21st August 2007. At this meeting NICMA was asked to undertake further work in order to demonstrate the benefits, in terms of increased uptake, of introducing a start up grant. NICMA was advised that future consideration may be given to establishing a minimum training standard for childminders.

It was agreed that this further evidence would be provided and when the information is available, I will be happy to convene a meeting with NICMA to discuss the proposals.

St. Colmgall's Primary School

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her reply to AQW 364/07, to advise whether or not the consultation exercise for a nursery unit at St. Colmgall's Primary School has been completed; whether or not the development proposal has been published; and, if so, what recommendations have been put forward in the development proposal. (AQW 293/08)

Ms Ruane: The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) has advised the Department that the consultation with the school's governors, staff and parents was completed by the end of June 2007 and that they intend to forward the proposal to the North Eastern Education and Library Board by the end of September for subsequent publication.

CCMS advise that the wording of the proposal will state that 'a single unit Nursery with 26 part-time places to replace existing reception provision be established at St Comgall's Primary School, Antrim, with effect from 1 September 2008 or as soon as possible thereafter.'

Ulster Scots

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education if she will explain why her letter dated 19 July 2007, to staff in the South Eastern Education and Library Board, provided an Irish translation but no translation into Ulster-Scots. (AQW 296/08)

Ms Ruane: The letter updating staff on the RPA developments was written in English, two paragraphs of which were translated into Irish. This reflects my commitment as an Irish speaker to respect the Irish language and reflect it in an appropriate way in departmental communications, consistent with the European Charter for regional or minority languages.

I fully respect Ulster-Scots and my department will be happy to accommodate, as far as is possible, those who wish to seek Ulster-Scots translations of departmental communications.

Disability Access

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education if she will make a statement on disability access to buildings for which her department has responsibility. (AQW 327/08)

Ms Ruane: Regarding school buildings, the Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 (SENDO) requires the Education and Library Boards and other school authorities to review and if necessary improve physical accessibility. They are required to prepare an access audit and access management plan which should prioritise the work required to the school. The first step in this process is to undertake an access audit of each school by a consultant specifically qualified to carry out such audits.

The Department has made funds available to enable access audits to be carried out and work agreed to improve physical access to schools. These audits are currently underway. Provision will normally take the form of toilets for disabled pupils and provision of access ramps, handrails, chair lifts and in some cases, the provision of lifts.

All new school buildings have to comply with the Building Regulations Northern Ireland 2000 and should be physically accessible to pupils with a disability.

Regarding the Department's buildings at Rathgael House, Bangor and Waterside House, Derry, both buildings are fully accessible and comply with the Disability Discrimination Act.

Financial Deficits

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools, broken down by sector, that have been running on a financial deficit, in each of the last five years. (AQW 337/08)

Ms Ruane: The number of schools in each of the last five years is as follows:

	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Controlled	210	224	219	216	165
Maintained	214	217	231	235	172
Irish Medium	4	5	6	5	7
Integrated	7	8	8	5	5
Voluntary Grammar	13	9	8	11	13

Air Quality at Anahorish Primary School

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Education, in relation to fumes being emitted from a factory in close proximity to Anahorish Primary School in Toomebridge, if she will confirm that an air quality assessment will be carried out at the school as soon as possible, to establish whether or not the fumes are harmful to children attending the school. (AQW 343/08)

Ms Ruane: My Department has commissioned a series of air quality tests to establish the origin and type of fumes reported at the school. It is expected the results will be known by the end of October.

Conlig Primary School

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 445/07, what plans she has to meet a delegation of parents and staff from Conlig Primary School, to discuss their development proposal to transform the school to controlled integrated status. (AQW 349/08)

Ms Ruane: My previous answer explained that I am content to meet with a delegation once the development proposal is published. The South Eastern Education and Library Board have advised that the development proposal is expected to be published shortly.

Commissioners

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Education to detail the total expenditure on each commissioner currently employed by the South Eastern Education and Library Board. (AQW 382/08)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that the total expenditure on the four commissioners from 6 July 2006, when they were first appointed, until the end of August 2007 is £114,383. The breakdown of the amounts paid to individual commissioners is £35,956, £28,067, £27,537 and £22,823.

Parkhall School, Antrim.

Mr Burnside asked the Minister of Education to provide an update on the progress of new buildings at Parkhall School, Antrim. (AQW 458/08)

Ms Ruane: Planning of a new school building for Parkhall College, Antrim is being taken forward by the North Eastern Education and Library Board. A revised Stage D submission (providing final sketch plans and costs) is expected to be submitted to the Department for consideration in the near future.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Cost of Staff Team Building Days

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises carried out by his department, in each of the last three years. (AQW 331/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey):

	Total
April 04 to March 05:	£50,275
April 05 to March 06:	£46,346
April 06 to March 07:	£62,439

Apprenticeships

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to renew interest in apprenticeships, in light of the decrease of 51 in the number of applications for apprenticeships in 2006/07, compared to the previous year. (AQW 420/08)

Sir Reg Empey: As at 25 September a comparison of Modern Apprenticeship start figures for 2005/06 and 2006/07 shows a decrease of 53, about 1.5%.

The new professional and technical training provision, Training for Success, introduces Level 2 Apprenticeships in addition to Level 3 Apprenticeships. As part of the 'Make it Happen' advertising campaign for Training for Success the Department also specifically targeted employers with 'Create a Prodigy'. It is intended that a level of promotion of apprenticeships will be maintained over the coming year.

Currently there are two pilots running for 14 to 16 year olds that will prepare school leavers to progress into apprenticeships. The Department is exploring with DENI, the Education Training Inspectorate and the Learning and Skills Development Agency how this approach can be advanced as part of the schools Entitlement Framework. My Department is also working with the Sector Skills Councils to develop Sector Skills Agreements and encourage greater employer engagement

Apprenticeships

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will outline how the number of apprenticeships awarded in manufacturing industry in Northern Ireland compares to those awarded in Great Britain, per head of population, in the years (i) 2004/05; (ii) 2005/06; and (iii) 2006/07. (AQW 436/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Overall, the structure of training differs throughout the UK. In Northern Ireland, apprenticeships are open to young people aged 16 to 24 who are either entering employment for the first time or meet specified criteria for existing employees. Under the former Jobskills programme, Traineeships were set at Level 2. Now, under the new Training for Success provision, there are both Level 2 and Level 3 Apprenticeships. Unlike the rest of GB there are no adult apprenticeships funded by the Department.

It is therefore not possible to compare training provision ratios on a like for like basis with GB. However, the table below shows 'apprenticeship starts' over the last three years throughout the UK. Figures for Wales for 2006/07 have yet to be published.

	2004 -2005	2005-2006	2006-2007
NI Level 3	3,410	3,325	3,278
NI Level 2	4,760	4,495	4,600
England Level 3	53,893	50,628	54,845
England Level 2	134,504	120,682	125,266
Scotland 16-24	13,957	13,106	13,259
Scotland 25+	6,209	5,685	2,415
Wales Level 3	9,360	9,245	Not Published
Wales Level 2 under 18	15,250	18,835	Not Published

University Applications

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to his answer to AQW 16/08, to outline the factors he has identified to explain the fall in applications from Northern Ireland domiciled students to universities in the United Kingdom, broken down by (i) those aged 21-24; and (ii) those aged 25 and over. (AQW 438/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department has examined the most recent figures published by the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) on 12 September 2007 which show that there has been a 0.9% increase in the number of NI domiciled applicants ie students accepted to UK institutions between Academic Years 2006/07 and 2007/08. Within the figures, those students in the 21 to 24 years and over 25 years categories represent a relatively small proportion, 14% of the total number, and the drop in their numbers of 151 is offset by an increase of 268 in the under 21 years category.

It should be borne in mind that these figures are provisional and it is too early to draw any firm conclusions from them. My Department will continue to monitor UCAS figures as further information becomes available.

Review into Higher Education

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to his answer to AQW 15/08, if he will give further details on (i) the progress made by his department in setting the terms of reference of, and remit for, the independent review into higher education; and (ii) whether or not such a review will have the same level of independence as that afforded to Dr Andrew Cubie's committee, established by the Scottish Executive in 1999. (AQW 439/08)

Sir Reg Empey: When government introduced variable tuition fees in AY2006/07, it made a commitment to review these arrangements, 3 years after their introduction, to inform future policy on the funding of students and the higher education sector.

In England, it is proposed to establish an independent Commission reporting to Parliament. As a substantial number of Northern Ireland students study elsewhere in the UK, I have asked my officials to liaise with counterparts in other jurisdictions operating variable fees to ensure that, when we are initiating the Northern Ireland review in AY2008/09, we take a consistent approach where appropriate.

Further Education

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to ensure that Further Education Colleges offer access to education for all, and in particular to financially disadvantaged groups such as the elderly and disabled. (AQW 469/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Through its six new colleges, comprising 48 campuses and 876 outreach centres, the further education sector offers an extensive range of professional and technical and recreational provision for adult learners from a wide and varied range of backgrounds and ages. My department is also developing a policy to further increase learner access and engagement, focussing particularly on those who are reluctant to enter further education, and consultation on these arrangements is expected to take place later this year.

Further Education colleges receive funding for students, including those students with a disability, through the Department's Further Education Funding Formula. In addition, the Department provides further financial assistance to colleges through the Additional Support Fund, which enables colleges to provide assistance to those students who need additional support on account of a disability, and through the Support Fund, which is designed to assist any student who may encounter financial hardship to access further education courses.

However, I would confirm that, as incorporated bodies, colleges are responsible for setting the level of fees, including concessionary fees, for the courses they provide. In doing this, colleges' fees policies take account of learners' ability to pay.

Student Loans

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students in Northern Ireland who took out student loans, in each of the last four years. (AQW 572/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The number of Northern Ireland students who took out student loans in each of the last four years is as follows:

Academic Year	Maintenance Loan	Tuition Fee Loan
2003/04	34,555	0
2004/05	35,256	0
2005/06	36,338	0
2006/07	36,380	17,965

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the total amount of land currently owned by Invest NI. (AQW 401/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): Invest NI holds 2,793 acres of land across Northern Ireland.

Approximately 1,973 acres of its estate is already occupied by its Client Companies leaving 820 acres currently available for industrial use.

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of land Invest NI has released for development in the last year. (AQW 402/08)

Mr Dodds: In the year ended 31 March 2007 Invest NI sold 75 acres of land.

At 31 March 2007 Invest NI had 862 acres of land available for sale or lease to its client companies

Tourist Events

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the co-ordination arrangements that exist between his department, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, the Northern Ireland

Events Committee and district councils, with regard to larger tourist events in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 432/08)

Mr Dodds: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) does not have direct responsibility for tourist events. However, as the sponsor Department for the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB), DETI is working with the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure on the merger of the Northern Ireland Events Company (NIEC) with NITB. This is due to take place on 1 April 2008.

The NIEC is the body responsible for delivering an Events Strategy for Northern Ireland. NITB currently supports it in this role and NITB's Chief Executive is represented on the NIEC Board. The NIEC also works closely with local Councils to facilitate sponsored events which take place in their respective Council areas.

Regional Tourism Partnerships

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to report on the future of Regional Tourism Partnerships, within the context of the Review of Public Administration. (AQW 445/08)

Mr Dodds: Local delivery and development of visitor services and servicing is a key element of raising the profile of the tourism industry across Northern Ireland and providing visitors with the quality of services and facilities they want and need.

With 26 councils there is a need for regional co-ordination which may be somewhat lessened if there were a reduced number of councils – proposals under the Review of Public Administration include responsibility for a number of local tourism functions to be transferred to the new councils.

Details of exactly what this means have still to be firmed up as does the number of councils. In the circumstances it would be premature to make a definitive comment about the long term future of regional development structures for tourism.

Broadband Internet

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail those villages and other rural areas in West Tyrone that do not have broadband access; and to outline his department's strategy and timetable for delivering 100% broadband availability in West Tyrone. (AQW 514/08)

Mr Dodds: Broadband access with speeds of no less than 512 kilo bits per second have been available to all of Northern Ireland since December 2005. This includes every village and rural area of West Tyrone and is delivered either through telephone lines, wireless or satellite services. Often consumers can choose from more than one provider.

Invest NI

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of businesses that have been assisted by Invest NI's business start-up programme that survive, after they have completed the programme. (AQW 523/08)

Mr Dodds: An independent evaluation of the Start a Business Programme carried out in 2006 showed that 78% of businesses surveyed were still trading 3 years after receiving the initial support. This 3-year survival rate is better than the UK average which is estimated at around 73%.

Asbestos

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of people employed in Northern Ireland, who are working in buildings that contain asbestos. (AQW 594/08)

Mr Dodds: As there is no legal requirement to notify government of the presence of asbestos in buildings, these figures do not exist.

ENVIRONMENT

Draft Area Plans

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost of preparing the following draft Area Plans: (i) Ards and Down; (ii) Magherafelt; (iii) Northern; (iv) Banbridge and Newry and Mourne; and (v) all other Area Plans in the earlier stages of preparation, including the cost of all Judicial Reviews, public inquiries, legal advice, consultation processes etc. (AQW 253/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): While I am not able to provide the cost of preparing individual draft Area Plans, I am able to provide estimates for the overall expenditure of Divisional Plan Teams, some of which are involved in the preparation of one or more draft Area Plans. The figures represent the best estimates available from current accounting procedures and obviously reflect the recorded position at this time.

Team	Period	Costs £ (exclusive of salaries and GAE)
Belfast Metropolitan Plan Team ¹	Sep 00 - Aug 07	1,488,905
Ballymena ²	Jan 00 - Aug 07	441,964
Craigavon ³	Feb 00 - Aug 07	693,503
Downpatrick ⁴	Jan 99 - Aug 07	565,938
Coleraine ⁵	Mar 01 - Aug 07	305,922
Omagh ⁶	Sep 04 - Aug 07	224,857
		3,721,089

¹ includes Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan and Belfast HMO Subject Plan

² includes Antrim/Ballymena/Larne and Magherafelt Area Plans

³ includes Banbridge & Newry and Mourne and Armagh Area Plans

⁴ includes Ards/Down Area Plan

⁵ includes Northern Area Plan and Coleraine HMO Subject Plan

⁶ includes West Tyrone Area Plan

These estimated costs also include legal costs where appropriate and plan production costs but exclude wages and general administrative expenditure.

The staff complement of Divisional Plan Teams varies depending on business priorities at any particular time and work of the teams includes other routine planning duties beyond plan preparation.

Dibney Rivers Pollution

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if she will give details of the ten incidences of pollution at the Dibney Rivers since January 2004; and if she will explain why the Environment and Heritage Service did not initiate prosecution. (AQW 299/08)

Mrs Foster: Where pollution occurs it is the policy of EHS to take formal enforcement action, if this is warranted by the severity of the pollution and the circumstances which led to it occurring. In deciding what, if any, action to take in each case, EHS aims to ensure that enforcement is consistent, proportionate and transparent.

In the period 1 January 2004 to date, no formal enforcement action was initiated in relation to the twelve confirmed pollution incidents impacting on the Dibney River, including two incidents which occurred since my previous correspondence. The enforcement action taken depends on the circumstances of each individual case and takes into account issues such as the severity of the incident, the sufficiency of evidence and whether or not a prosecution would be in the public interest.

Enforcement action will normally be progressed for medium severity pollution incidents. EHS does not normally initiate prosecution proceedings for water pollution incidents that are determined as being of low severity unless the incidents are from the same source over a period of time and they meet the criteria laid down in enforcement policy.

Eleven of the twelve confirmed water pollution incidents, in the Dibney River catchment since 1 January 2004, were determined to be of low severity; one was of medium severity. The source of the majority of the low severity incidents, and of the medium severity incident, was confirmed as being DRD Water Service. Enforcement action could not be taken forward as DRD Water Service was part of central Government and could not be prosecuted for pollution offences under 'crown immunity'.

On 1 April 2007 discharge consent documents were transferred to Northern Ireland Water Ltd (NIWL) under Article 29 of the Water and Sewage Services (2006) Order. From that date discharges made by NIWL have been regulated under the Water (NI) Order 1999 in the same way as other external or private bodies.

National Parks

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking to safeguard the rights of landowners and farmers, in relation to any proposals for National Parks. (AQW 300/08)

Mrs Foster: The Mourne National Park Working Party presented me last week with its recommendations about the proposed Mourne National Park. I will seek the opinions of the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside and the Environment and Agriculture and Rural Development Committees. The views of these bodies will help me decide how to proceed.

Planning Applications

Mr Donaldson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications that have been deferred for (i) an office meeting; and (ii) a site meeting, in each month since January 2005, broken down by district council area. (AQW 312/08)

Mrs Foster: The following table provides details of the number of planning applications deferred in each month between January 2005 and August 2007 by district council area. My Department does not record the reasons for deferrals on the IT system and it is therefore not possible to give details of the numbers deferred for office and site meetings respectively without checking each application file. This would entail disproportionate cost.

DEFERRED APPLICATIONS BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA JANUARY 2005 - DECEMBER 2005

	Jan-05	Feb-05	Mar-05	Apr-05	May-05	Jun-05	Jul-05	Aug-05	Sep-05	Oct-05	Nov-05	Dec-05
Antrim	58	60	46	40	46	38	36	30	15	0	34	18
Ards	17	60	50	69	0	62	17	22	27	6	0	5
Armagh	29	52	94	85	105	115	86	51	60	6	7	4
Ballymena	37	58	76	72	0	126	50	53	24	35	37	25
Ballymoney	33	85	50	70	0	77	39	49	37	9	34	15
Banbridge	34	67	53	48	0	94	0	71	46	11	11	14
Belfast	37	30	31	31	0	50	0	54	32	4	7	6
Carrickfergus	6	8	4	7	0	12	7	1	2	6	3	0
Castlereagh	9	6	7	0	11	9	8	1	6	7	0	7
Coleraine	19	41	75	62	2	87	33	69	28	30	23	24
Cookstown	29	35	47	59	62	33	42	0	65	39	37	37
Craigavon	10	55	26	1	0	55	60	14	27	7	11	5
Derry	22	18	22	29	0	34	19	0	23	14	18	12
Down	41	73	94	67	0	239	93	57	45	10	7	0
Dungannon	46	101	62	62	103	131	2	111	55	55	50	28
Fermanagh	43	96	101	48	2	210	52	1	110	39	39	35
Larne	11	17	7	7	0	31	12	8	24	7	10	2
Limavady	21	24	16	28	0	103	1	184	11	11	5	7
Lisburn	7	76	75	24	0	54	24	22	14	14	17	0
Magherafelt	120	204	116	0	0	338	0	136	77	37	42	31
Moyle	24	41	12	27	11	47	12	10	8	16	7	3
Newry and Mourne	82	176	118	118	0	244	129	72	95	12	17	21
Newtownabbey	8	3	7	1	4	0	3	0	1	0	0	0
North Down	7	12	15	11	0	16	10	8	10	3	2	3
Omagh	51	122	57	86	157	105	87	0	109	96	0	57
Strabane	29	39	33	43	38	49	0	33	31	19	21	39

DEFERRED APPLICATIONS BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA JANUARY 2006 - DECEMBER 2006

	Jan-06	Feb-06	Mar-06	Apr-06	May-06	Jun-06	Jul-06	Aug-06	Sep-06	Oct-06	Nov-06	Dec-06
Antrim	23	28	32	30	27	12	17	11	4	7	13	6
Ards	2	1	1	3	1	0	0	0	2	0	0	4
Armagh	9	21	13	6	10	21	6	0	13	16	6	8
Ballymena	46	22	27	37	12	34	20	9	14	6	9	10
Ballymoney	20	17	18	12	22	31	7	24	4	7	3	4
Banbridge	10	15	13	13	3	11	0	13	6	6	10	7

	Jan-06	Feb-06	Mar-06	Apr-06	May-06	Jun-06	Jul-06	Aug-06	Sep-06	Oct-06	Nov-06	Dec-06
Belfast	12	4	7	12	25	23	0	9	5	10	10	9
Carrickfergus	1	2	3	4	1	0	2	2	3	2	3	2
Castlereagh	5	3	1	6	0	3	2	2	7	1	1	3
Coleraine	27	33	26	22	26	38	37	19	15	9	24	15
Cookstown	20	42	32	40	14	42	25	1	139	48	1	37
Craigavon	4	3	4	2	5	7	5	7	4	4	4	6
Derry	20	18	8	3	19	12	13	0	15	5	15	12
Down	1	4	4	3	3	2	2	6	0	0	2	1
Dungannon	22	48	47	63	9	57	12	37	52	102	38	32
Fermanagh	47	47	77	91	71	52	66	0	108	21	30	73
Larne	8	7	7	5	4	5	11	8	6	5	6	8
Limavady	10	10	12	12	15	11	0	16	15	13	5	5
Lisburn	8	4	1	1	0	4	0	21	1	3	2	1
Magherafelt	26	27	24	36	15	34	0	0	19	21	10	8
Moyle	11	8	8	19	9	12	8	9	16	2	3	0
Newry and Mourne	14	13	18	21	4	16	17	24	4	7	6	8
Newtownabbey	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	1
North Down	1	7	3	4	3	2	1	2	2	0	3	4
Omagh	16	39	43	52	31	31	44	4	179	42	37	46
Strabane	22	34	27	16	5	26	0	50	48	9	8	0

DEFERRED APPLICATIONS BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA JANUARY 2007 - DATE

	Jan-07	Feb-07	Mar-07	Apr-07	May-07	Jun-07	Jul-07	Aug-07	Sep-07	Oct-07	Nov-07	Dec-07
Antrim	3	4	7	13	11	17	4	6
Ards	0	4	0	1	1	1	1	2
Armagh	7	12	6	15	19	13	17	2
Ballymena	9	2	22	0	2	8	6	2
Ballymoney	6	7	8	12	8	9	8	4
Banbridge	5	13	1	2	5	3	0	26
Belfast	10	11	12	12	14	12	0	12
Carrickfergus	1	0	4	2	3	3	2	3
Castlereagh	1	3	3	2	3	0	6	0
Coleraine	8	16	9	6	10	16	15	14
Cookstown	26	17	15	13	18	15	17	0
Craigavon	8	6	9	8	4	2	1	2
Derry	9	13	1	8	14	19	7	0

	Jan-07	Feb-07	Mar-07	Apr-07	May-07	Jun-07	Jul-07	Aug-07	Sep-07	Oct-07	Nov-07	Dec-07
Down	1	0	0	0	1	1	0	0
Dungannon	20	21	29	15	23	29	17	18
Fermanagh	30	21	46	40	22	44	53	1
Larne	3	6	1	8	2	9	4	6
Limavady	9	6	0	11	9	4	0	10
Lisburn	3	3	2	1	1	1	2	2
Magherafelt	9	11	25	8	9	10	0	18
Moyle	2	5	5	11	3	10	4	6
Newry and Mourne	5	8	6	16	16	21	16	10
Newtownabbey	0	2	0	1	0	1	0	0
North Down	1	0	1	2	0	1	1	3
Omagh	25	37	60	27	17	23	31	0
Strabane	11	10	7	7	5	4	0	9

Tullaghoge Fort

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has, including those for financial investment, regarding the improvement and enhancement of Tullaghoge Fort, given the significance of the 400th anniversary of the Flight of the Earls. (AQW 317/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department is in the process of acquiring the site from DARD at a cost of £20,000, placing the monument in State Care under Articles 13 and 18 of the Historic Monuments and Archaeological Objects (NI) Order 1995. This will help to ensure the appropriate management of the site for the future.

My department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) has been working with Cookstown District Council to investigate the potential upgrading of the car parking and access arrangements to the site. The EHS has also been working recently with the Council to facilitate events commemorating the Flight of the Earls that have been held at the site, and will continue to do so.

Tullaghoge Fort

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the amount spent by the Environment and Heritage Service on Tullaghoge Fort, compared to expenditure on other, similar, nationally recognised heritage sites throughout Northern Ireland, over the last five years. (AQW 318/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department's expenditure at Tullaghogue Fort over the past five years has been £6,497.86.

The Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) is in the process of acquiring the site from DARD at a cost of £20,000. This will assist us with the protection and management of the site.

EHS's expenditure over the past five years on 17 reasonably similar monuments in State Care range from £0 to £20,103.08.

Monuments that are scheduled, rather than in State Care, are, in some respects, comparable; total expenditure over the past five years for all of our scheduled monuments comes to a total of £87,658.69, of which £45,657.48 has been spent on 15 ringforts/ raths. The average spend on the latter category is £3,043.83.

Waste Offences

Mr Storey asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to her answer to AQW 125/08, if she will explain why the number of people prosecuted for waste offences has risen so sharply since the Environment and Heritage Service assumed responsibility for waste management. (AQW 374/08)

Mrs Foster: The rising number of convictions is a reflection of the extent of both current and historical illegal waste activities in Northern Ireland. While the number of convictions is rising, so is the seriousness with which they are viewed in the courts, with increasing finances and prison sentences. The Environment and Heritage Service's (EHS) dedicated Environmental Crime Section is using enhanced legislation, interaction with other law enforcement agencies, accredited investigator training and stronger public awareness to tackle the illegal waste issue and ensure that those involved in such criminal activities are brought to justice. This is, of course, underpinned by the professionalism and commitment of EHS's investigators, who operate in often difficult personal circumstances.

MOT Test

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail, broken down by MOT Test Centre, the number of vehicles that (i) passed; and (b) failed the test at first examination, in the years 2003/04; 2004/05; and 2005/06. (AQW 391/08)

Mrs Foster: The number of vehicles that passed and failed the first examination by test centre is detailed in the table below:

Test Centre	2003-2004		2004-2005		2005-2006
	Pass	Fail	Pass	Fail	Pass	Fail
Armagh	16,005	5,535	11,332	3,884	14,892	5,406
Ballymena	32,497	8,795	34,957	9,291	31,806	9,196
Belfast	43,369	13,206	34,767	9,923	44,409	15,400
Coleraine	30,573	7,805	31,459	8,161	32,623	10,515
Cookstown	23,948	7,971	24,965	9,904	25,776	12,908
Craigavon	24,862	10,277	16,528	7,127	19,741	8,983
Downpatrick	22,251	6,410	24,612	7,203	19,746	6,525
Enniskillen	20,249	4,842	19,718	4,742	21,127	6,374
Larne	20,607	4,262	19,128	3,131	20,818	4,322
Lisburn	25,369	9,178	19,416	6,030	24,696	8,500
Londonderry	25,772	8,040	19,067	5,992	26,528	9,178
Mallusk	27,374	8,028	30,012	8,855	34,578	13,172
Newry	23,511	6,420	20,647	5,985	31,354	10,447
Newtownards	42,838	12,533	42,371	11,867	46,789	15,665
Omagh	13,771	4,847	16,583	5,599	17,186	7,552
Total	392,996	118,149	365,562	107,694	412,069	144,143

Special Preservation Order for the Irish Hare

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to report on the outcome of the meeting with the Countryside Alliance, which took place on 16 July

2007, in relation to the Special Preservation Order for the Irish hare. (AQW 421/08)

Mrs Foster: Responding to a request from Countryside Alliance to discuss proposals for a new Special Protection Order (SPO) for the Irish hare, I met representatives from that organisation and the Irish Coursing Clubs on 13th August and a follow up meeting on 25th September. Discussions during these meetings were positive and gave me a valuable opportunity to understand the views of the country sports interests. I have advised the representatives of my decision to proceed with a new SPO for 2007/8 and this will be formally announced shortly.

Eel Grass in Strangford Lough

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the importance of eel grass in Strangford Lough, as a source of food for migrating wildfowl, what steps she is taking to preserve and enhance the eel grass in the Lough. (AQW 422/08)

Mrs Foster: A large amount of research and survey of eel-grass beds has been undertaken in Northern Ireland and the habitat is covered by a Northern Ireland Habitat Action Plan. In Strangford Lough eel-grass beds are well-protected through a number of designations. Strangford Lough is designated as an Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI), Special Area for Conservation (SAC) and Special Protection Area (SPA). There are management objectives, arising from these designations, for the maintenance and enhancement of eel-grass beds. This is being achieved through the regulation of activities which could damage the beds, through raising public awareness of their importance and, where necessary, through direct management, such as the control of the invasive cord-grass and improvement in water quality. This has the potential to restore the intertidal habitat to a condition in which eel-grass can thrive.

Planning Applications

Dr Farry asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking to ensure the efficient processing of planning applications with a significant economic, social, community or environmental benefit. (AQW 444/08)

Mrs Foster: A new division has been created within Planning Service to focus specifically on planning applications which are of social or economic significance to Northern Ireland –including, potentially, applications which offer significant environmental or community benefit. There is also now a protocol for dealing with such applications – a protocol which focuses on front-loading the planning process with constructive pre-application discussions and pro-active management of applications through the planning system. I am also developing proposals for a review of the whole planning system to address the delays which have created problems for applicants.

However, I would like to emphasise that an application can only pass through the planning process as quickly as the quality of the application and its supporting information will allow. To this end, there is clear onus on the applicant to ensure that any application is well prepared and is accompanied by all of the information that is necessary to determine it.

Control of Cormorants

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of licences that have been issued to control cormorants; and to list the rivers and loughs to which licences have been issued, in each of the last three years. (AQW 450/08)

Mrs Foster: 55 Licences to control Cormorants to prevent serious damage to fisheries were issued by Environment and Heritage Service between 2004 and 2006. Details of the areas these licences were issued for are shown on the attached Annex.

ANNEX

Year	No of Licences	Location
2004	18	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • River Bush • Brantry Lough, Dungannon • Upper River Bann – Katesbridge to Lanadarg Bridge • Boghill Dam, Mullusk • Brantry Lough, Dungannon • River Foyle – upstream of Craigavon Bridge • River Faughan • Dundrum Dam • Moneycaragh River • Lough Doo Fishery • From Ballynure Headwaters of the Six Mile Water downstream to Doagh bridge (Ballyclare) • Corbett Lough • Lough Creevy, Saintfield • Tullywest Fisheries • Margy River System, Ballycastle • Dorisland Reservoir, Carrickfergus • Brantry Lough, Dungannon • Myroe Fishery, Limavady

Year	No of Licences	Location
2005	18	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • River Bush • River Roe • Upper River Bann – Katesbridge to Lanadarg Bridge • River Maine – Glarryford to Corby • Dundrum Dam • Moneycaragh River • High Dam, Golden Glen, Glenvale • Upper and Lower Ballysallagh • Lower Bann and Tributaries • Loughs: Keenaghan, Navan, Forest Lakes, Scolban, Mill Lough, Bellanaleck, Corry & Corranarry • Corbet Lough • Lough Doo • Margy River System, Ballycastle • Donnybrewer Fishery • Lough Creevy • Lough Enagh • Ballysallagh Reservoirs • Upper Pond, Belfast Waterworks
2006	19	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • River Roe • Upstream – Doagh Road Bridge to River above Ballynure and Tributaries • Boundaries of Randalstown Angling Club • River Maine – Glarryford to Corby • Lower Bann and tributary rivers • Ballykeel Lougherne, Portavoe, Lough Money • Brantry Lough • Corbett Lough • Upper River Bann • River Bush Catchment • Coolyermer Lough • Moneycaragh River • Dundrum Dam • Newtownards High Dam, Glenvale • River Faughan • Lough Creevy, Saintfield • Whitewater River, Kilkeel • Margy River System, Ballycastle • Maydown Trout Fishery

Planning Applications

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to outline what reconsideration will be given to all planning applications that have been refused on the grounds of prematurity to the Draft Northern Area Plan. (AQW 491/08)

Mrs Foster: The Joint Ministerial Statement (January 2005) provides policy guidance in deciding whether or not a planning application is premature in the context of emerging plans. The decision-maker must have regard to a number of factors including for example the status of the draft Area Plan.

In the context of the draft Northern Area Plan my Department is considering the judgment in the legal challenge to the Strategic Environmental Assessment and its implications, in preparation for a remedies hearing. In the interim the draft Plan remains a material consideration in the determination of planning applications. In this context the judgement has no impact on applications refused on the grounds of prematurity issued prior to the judgement.

However my Department considers it prudent not to issue any further refusal decisions which have been determined under the draft Area Plan and also will be proposing a deferral of all applications where plan prematurity is a potential reason for refusal until the final decision of the Court is known.

This guidance will be reviewed following the final judgement and if necessary new policy guidance will be issued.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment if she will publish immediately the Planning Service's report and recommendations on the private planning application for a Visitors' Centre at the Giant's Causeway, which was sent to the Planning Service Management Board earlier this year. (AQW 563/08)

Mrs Foster: This planning application is still being considered by Planning Service officials and until such time as a decision is made on the matter, I do not believe it would be appropriate to release a copy of the Planning Service report and recommendation.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Competitiveness and Employment Programme

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to confirm what arrangements he has put in place to ensure (i) joined-up delivery of the overall EU structural funds for 2007/13 (Competitiveness and Employment Programme) between DARD, DETI and

OFMDFM; and (ii) effective communication with stakeholders. (AQW 267/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson):

(i) Joined up delivery

Northern Ireland's Competitiveness and Employment Programmes for 2007-13 will promote and support economic regeneration throughout the region including urban, rural and border areas. Complementarity and coherence between actions financed by the Competitiveness and Employment Programmes, the Cross-Border Programmes, the European Agricultural Fund for Rural Development (EAFRD) and the European Fisheries Fund (EFF) has been provided for in the draft operational programmes.

Arrangements are in place through the joint Monitoring Committee for the Competitiveness and Employment Programmes to ensure a joined up approach to the delivery of these programmes and the other EU funded programmes for the period:

- EU Programme for Peace And Reconciliation (Peace III);
- INTERREG IV (Northern Ireland / Republic of Ireland / Western Scotland Cross-Border Co-Operation Programme);
- Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme (NIRDP); and,
- Northern Ireland European Fisheries Fund Programme.

DFP will chair the meetings of the Monitoring Committee with officials from DETI and SEUPB as members, and DARD and OFMDFM officials as advisors. This will ensure that the authorities responsible for the delivery of EU programmes are involved in the monitoring of the Competitiveness and Employment Programmes, can share the experiences with their own Committees and contribute to ensuring best practice solutions to any issues raised relating to the delivery of the programmes.

DFP will also continue to hold regular meetings of the interdepartmental EU Steering Group. Under the current structural funds programmes, DFP established this group to allow officials from all Departments to consider the issues relating the development and implementation of structural funds programmes. This group will also consider issues relating to the 2007-13 programmes. DETI, DARD and OFMDFM officials regularly attend these meetings along with DEL (Managing Authority for the ESF Competitiveness and Employment Programme) and SEUPB (Managing Authority for Peace III and INTERREG IV).

(ii) Communication with Stakeholders

The Competitiveness and Employment Programmes have been developed through extensive consultation with stakeholders. Annex 1 lists the engagement with stakeholders throughout the period of developing the new Structural Funds programmes for 2007-13.

The proposals for draft delivery structures in the new EU programmes do involve different methods of engagement for stakeholders such as local government. These differing arrangements reflect the individual aims, objectives and criteria of the various programmes. DARD, as Managing Authority of the EAFRD and EFF programmes, will be dealing predominately with rural Councils in recognition of the specific priorities of the Rural Development Programme. DETI, as Managing Authority of the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) Competitiveness and Employment Programme, will engage with stakeholders on economic development issues along the lines of current arrangements such as existing structures for engagement with Councils through the Local Economic Development Network.

Communication with stakeholders will continue throughout the delivery of the programmes, primarily through the social and political partners represented in programmes' Monitoring Committees.

The joint Competitiveness and Employment Programmes Monitoring Committee will meet for the first time on 5 October 2007. Membership of this Committee includes nominated representatives from the following sectors:

- Community and Voluntary;
- Equality;
- Environment;
- Agri-rural;
- Trade Unions;
- Business;
- Education;
- Research; and,
- Local Government.

Civil Service Vacancies

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the location and number of existing vacancies in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at (i) Administrative Officer; (ii) Executive Officer II; (iii) Executive Officer I; and (iv) Staff Officer, in each Government department. (AQW 341/08)

Mr P Robinson: The location and number of vacancies in permanent posts in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at the grades of (i) Administrative Officer, (ii) Executive Officer 2, (iii) Executive Officer 1 and (iv) Staff Officer are set out in the attached table.

The figures, on a full time equivalent (FTE) basis, are broken down by each of the eleven NI Departments and their Agencies, and show the position at 20 September 2007.

Department	AO		EO2		EO1		SO
	No.	Location (posts)	No.	Location (posts)	No.	Location (posts)	No.	Location (posts)
Agriculture & Rural Development (DARD)	28	Belfast (17), Newry (1), Londonderry (7), Cookstown (1), Ballymena (1), Coleraine (1)	11	Belfast(9), Londonderry(2)	3	Belfast	7	Belfast
Culture, Arts & Leisure (DCAL)	7	Belfast	3	Belfast	3	Belfast	7	Belfast
Education (DE)	14.6	Bangor (11), Londonderry (3.6)	5.4	Bangor (4), Londonderry (1.4)	5	Bangor (4), Londonderry (1)	6.4	Bangor (5.4), Londonderry (1)
Employment & Learning (DEL)	23.04	Belfast (14.52), Ballymoney (1.42), Newtownabbey (0.39), Londonderry (0.66), Enniskillen (1.27), Omagh (0.39), Antrim (1), Dungannon (1.81), Lurgan (1), Portadown (0.58)	12.27	Belfast (10.66), Limavady (0.42), Londonderry (1.19)	22.31	Belfast (9), Outside Belfast (13.31)	13.88	Belfast

Department	AO		EO2		EO1		SO
	No.	Location (posts)	No.	Location (posts)	No.	Location (posts)	No.	Location (posts)
Enterprise, Trade & Investment (DETI)	6	Belfast	3	Belfast	2	Belfast	3	Belfast
Finance & Personnel (DFP)	4.82	Belfast	14.47	Belfast (13.51), Bangor (0.96)	5.79	Belfast (3.85), Bangor (1.94)	9.65	Belfast (7.72), Bangor (1.93)
Health, Social Services & Public Safety (DHSSPS)	9	Belfast(8), Londonderry(1)	4.5	Belfast	5	Belfast	9	Belfast
Environment (DOE)	62.5	Belfast (17), Lisburn (3.5), Coleraine (31.5), Omagh (3), Fermanagh (0.5), Enniskillen (2), Ballymena (1), Dungannon (1), Downpatrick (1), Armagh (2)	9	Belfast (8), Londonderry (1)	15	Belfast (12), Ballymena (1), Coleraine (2)	22	Belfast (19), Ballymena (1), Coleraine (1), Omagh (1)
Regional Development (DRD)	22	Belfast (14), Ballymena (1), Seaforde (1), Craigavon (2), Downpatrick (3), Coleraine (1)	12	Belfast(10), Ballymena(1), Coleraine(1)	12	Belfast(8), Downpatrick(1), Coleraine(1), Antrim(1), Omagh(1)	13	Belfast(12), Craigavon(1)
Social Development (DSD)	190.99	Greater Belfast (176.64), Outside Greater Belfast (14.35)	209.34	Greater Belfast (187.82), Outside Greater Belfast (21.52)	22.11	Greater Belfast (18), Outside Greater Belfast (4.11)	40.66	Greater Belfast (34.17), Outside Greater Belfast (6.49)
Office of the First & Deputy First Minister (OFMDFM)	5	Belfast (4), Londonderry (1)	3	Belfast	1	Belfast	8	Belfast
Total	372.95		286.98		96.21		139.59

DSD: Due to the diversity of Social Security Agency locations it was not possible, in the time allowed, to obtain details of vacancies by specific location. The information has therefore been provided within 2 broad categories.

DSD figures show position at August 2007; all other Departments as at 20 September 2007.

DEL: The locations of the EOI (Careers Advisors) vacancies listed as Outside Belfast are still to be determined but will be based in the regional network.

Peace III

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he is taking to ensure that collaborative partnerships between district councils for the delivery of Peace III are consistent with the outcome of the Review of Public Administration, in respect of local government. (AQW 443/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Special EU Programmes Body's (SEUPB) guidelines on the delivery of Theme 1.1 of the PEACE III Programme, Building Positive Relations at the Local Level, encourage applications from self-defined cluster arrangements of councils until new local government structures are agreed and put in place by the devolved administration. It has been necessary for SEUPB to operate in accordance with EU timeframes for the development and launch of the 2007-2013 Structural Fund Programmes, and therefore produce a strategy for the delivery of the PEACE III Programme in advance of an Executive decision on local government structures. Whilst the new local government structures and the date of their implementation are not yet known, it is expected that, the number of councils will be reduced. In the interim, SEUPB's approach is to encourage a move away from a 26 council model. The Body is therefore proposing that councils work together in anticipation of a reduction under RPA.

Rates Relief

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of applications received for disabled persons allowance in respect of rates relief, since the scheme began; and the number of applications that have been successful. (AQW 519/08)

Mr P Robinson: There have been 1,676 applications received under the revised scheme since 1 April 2007. To date 858 cases have been completed, of which 594 have been successful.

Rates Relief

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the criteria used to determine eligibility for disabled persons allowance in respect of rates relief. (AQW 520/08)

Mr P Robinson: The criteria to determine eligibility are set out in Article 31A of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, as inserted by Article 17 of the Rates (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order.

The criteria are based on the adaptations that have been made to the property in which the person with a disability lives. These are -

- A room other than a kitchen, bathroom or lavatory used mainly by the person with the disability.
- An additional kitchen, bathroom or lavatory for the use of the person with the disability.
- Sufficient floor space to permit the use of a wheelchair by, and which is required for, the person with the disability.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Ophthalmic Services

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total cost of ophthalmic services in Northern Ireland, for each of the last three years. (AQW 281/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey):

The total spend on General Ophthalmic Services for each of the last three years was:

2004\05	£14,395,215.71
2005\06	£15,867,844.74
2006\07	£16,279,840.66

It should be noted that this is Health Service spend only, as my Department does not hold information on spend by private optical practitioners.

Pharmaceutical Payments

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the total cost of pharmaceutical payments in Northern Ireland in the last three years; (b) the total net ingredient cost; and (c) the gross cost per person. (AQW 282/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is provided below.

	a	b	c
Prescribing Period	Total Cost of Pharmaceutical Payments Gross Cost	Net Ingredient Cost (Ingredient Cost After Discount)	Gross Cost Per Person
2004/2005	382,789,060.40	341,022,381.34	214.02
2005/2006	390,763,466.47	341,249,021.85	217.83
2006/2007	08,770,632.55	352,949,301.61	226.50

Source: Central Services Agency

The information provided relates to financial years

Patient Complaints

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 145/08, to detail the number of complaints made by patients against each hospital in Northern Ireland that were upheld; and what percentage of the total number of complaints about each hospital that this represented, for each of the last five years.

(AQW 283/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information is not available in the format requested.

Prescriptions

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the average cost per prescription item in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years; (b) the total number of prescription forms; and (c) the average number of prescription items per person in each year. (AQW 284/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is provided below.

	a	b	c
Prescribing Period	Gross Cost Per Prescription Item	Total Number of Prescription Forms	Average Number of Prescription Items Per Person Registered to a GP in Northern Ireland
2004/2005	13.97	15,283,064	15.32
2005/2006	13.75	15,859,772	15.84
2006/2007	13.81	16,393,109	16.40

Source: Central Services Agency

The information provided relates to financial years

Artwork Expenditure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 18/08, to detail the total amount spent by his department on art works, in each of the last five years. (AQW 285/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The asset registers for the Department and for Health Estates an executive agency of the department, do not have any art works recorded, nor were any recorded during the last five years. It is a requirement of the Departmental 'Capital Accounting manual' that any single asset costing £5,000 or more be recorded on the asset register.

A check of both asset registers show that over the last 5 years there have been no art works recorded.

Regional Respiratory Forum

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will provide an update on the formation and work of (a) the network of local multidisciplinary respiratory groups announced by his direct rule predecessor; and (b) the Regional Respiratory Forum. (AQW 286/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The document "A Healthier Future: A Strategic Framework for Respiratory Conditions" was formally launched on 15 March 2006. As recommended in the framework document, a network of local multidisciplinary respiratory groups has been set up to facilitate and co-ordinate the implementation of the strategy. The Regional Respiratory Forum recommended in the report has also been established.

The membership of the local multidisciplinary groups is drawn from a wide range of health care professionals and service users and they have drawn up work programmes based on the priorities for service development in their area. The work of these groups is overseen by the Regional Respiratory Forum which is comprised of representatives of the local groups, service users and regional voluntary and advocacy groups.

The Forum has also developed a full work programme to look at the development of regional and specialist services and is also working collaboratively with the Department to develop explicit standards to underpin the assessment, diagnosis and treatment services provided for people with respiratory conditions.

Respiratory Disease

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made on the 10-year strategy to reduce respiratory disease in Northern Ireland, announced on 9 June 2005. (AQW 287/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The document "A Healthier Future: A Strategic Framework for Respiratory Conditions" was formally launched on 15 March 2006. As recommended in this framework document, a network of local multidisciplinary respiratory groups was set up to facilitate and co-ordinate the implementation of the strategy. These groups are the key drivers for securing the achievement of the service goals set out in the strategy and they have drawn up work programmes to take forward a wide range of initiatives designed to improve the range of services available in their areas

A Regional Respiratory Forum has also been established and is developing proposals for the development of a number of regional services. The Forum is also working closely with the Department to develop standards to underpin the assessment, diagnosis and treatment services delivered by healthcare professionals. It is expected that this work will be completed by June 2008.

One of the key recommendations in the framework document related to the development of patient education programmes to help people with respiratory problems manage their own conditions more effectively. The framework also recommended the introduction of case management arrangements designed to deliver intensive health and social care packages to patients with the most complex conditions to help reduce the number of unscheduled and emergency admissions to hospital because of respiratory problems. In 2006/07 the Department allocated £3m to enable GP practices to provide self-management training to enable people with asthma or chronic obstructive pulmonary disease manage their own conditions more effectively. In 2007/08 the Department also allocated an additional £0.5m for the development of self-care and case management arrangements for people with respiratory conditions.

Gardening and Landscaping Expenditure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 19/08, to detail the total amount spent by his department on gardening and landscaping, in each of the last five years. (AQW 288/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The total amount spent by Health and Social Care Trusts on gardening and landscaping is set out below. Table 1 provides details of the revenue (or on-going) expenditure and Table 2 provides an assessment of the landscaping costs associated with capital projects.

TABLE 1: REVENUE EXPENDITURE ON GARDENING CONTRACTS, AND GARDENING EQUIPMENT AND MATERIALS

Year	Amount £000s
2002/03	1,064*
2003/04	1,048
2004/05	949
2005/06	1,138
2006/07	Not yet available

* Includes estimate for two Trusts

Note: The cost of gardeners employed directly by HSC Trusts could not readily be separately identified and are excluded.

The landscaping element of capital projects includes fencing, footpaths, paved areas, kerbing, earth levelling, top-soiling, all grassed areas and all planted areas surrounding the building. It would be disproportionately expensive to seek to establish the precise cost of this element within the construction cost of each capital project undertaken by HSC Trusts over the last five years.

However the average cost of the landscaping element of capital projects undertaken within the Health Sector is approximately 0.5% of the total cost of each project. Applying the average percentage to the capital expenditure in health on new projects for the last five years gives the approximate amount spent on landscaping across all Northern Ireland Health Projects.

TABLE 2: ASSESSMENT OF LANDSCAPING COSTS ASSOCIATED WITH CAPITAL PROJECTS

Year	Estimated Cost £000s
2002/03	350
2003/04	480
2004/05	620
2005/06	640
2006/07	810

Artwork Expenditure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 18/08, if the review into spending on artwork in healthcare facilities, announced on 24 August 2007, will require the total amount spent on artwork by each hospital to be made public. (AQW 289/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Review into expenditure on Art in the construction and design of health and social care facilities will establish a clear policy on the matter, especially in regard to sources of funding and the use of public expenditure. The Department will ensure that the implementation of that policy will be appropriately monitored and that all relevant information on public expenditure will be made publicly available.

Northern Ireland Produced Beef

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the amount of Northern Ireland-produced beef used in each of the Health and Social Services Boards, in each of the last three years. (AQW 298/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is not held centrally.

Agenda for Change

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give a timescale within which his department will conclude the Agenda for Change programme, and fund it accordingly. (AQW 304/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I have asked my officials to instruct Chief Executives within Health and Social Care organisations that the Agenda for Change matching exercise should be completed by the end of December 2007 and that all health and social care staff should be put on Agenda for Change rates by the end of March 2008. £101m has been provided to implement the Agenda for Change agreement in the current year.

Accident and Emergency Services at the Mater Hospital

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assurances he will give that the Accident and Emergency Services at the Mater Hospital will continue to function on a 24-hour basis. (AQW 305/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Mater Hospital has 24/7 Accident and Emergency service and there are no plans to change the current opening times of this service.

Breast Reconstruction

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time for full and complete breast reconstruction, for women living in North and West Belfast. (AQW 306/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The average waiting time for full and complete breast reconstruction, for women living in North and West Belfast, as of 30th June 2007, is 48 days.

Ambulance Service Employees

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of Northern Ireland Ambulance Service employees who are based at the Omagh station; and the number of these who reside in the Omagh and Strabane District Council areas. (AQW 314/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service currently has 40 employees based at its Omagh station comprising one Station Officer, 13 Paramedics, 12 Emergency Medical Technicians (EMT) and 14 Trainee EMTs.

NIAS does not hold exact details of the Omagh and Strabane District Council boundaries. However, from those which can clearly be identified, it is possible to say that 14 staff live in the Omagh and Strabane District Council areas and 26 staff live outside.

Blue Light Ambulances

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will clarify the protocol for blue light ambulances to stop at the Tyrone County Hospital, Omagh. (AQW 315/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Surgery and Trauma Destination Protocol implemented by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) on 31 March 2006 in response to changes in Tyrone County Hospital (TCH) acute services was agreed by the Western Health and Social Services Board (WHSSB), the former Sperrin Lakeland Trust (SLT) and NIAS. The protocol was also issued to local GPs.

The protocol stipulates that patients with abdominal pain, gastro-intestinal (GIT) bleeding, significant trauma or who are unconscious should not be taken by ambulance to TCH. Patients with medical problems, minor injuries including head injuries, simple fractures or nose-bleeds may continue to be taken to TCH. Where there is any doubt, the patient should not be taken to TCH.

In addition, a Paediatric Destination Protocol introduced in 2005 stipulates that children under 16 with anything other than minor injuries should not be taken to TCH but to hospitals with in-patient consultant paediatric services unless otherwise directed by a doctor.

Autism

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who have been diagnosed with autism in each of the last five years, broken down by Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 316/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is not available.

Child Obesity

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will make a statement on levels of child obesity in Northern Ireland. (AQW 328/08)

Mr McGimpsey: To inform the development of the Fit Futures: Focus on Food, Activity and Young People Strategy with its specific focus on childhood obesity and to measure progress against the relevant Public Service Agreement and Investing for Health targets, administrative data is gathered from the Child Health System in each of the four Health and Social Services Boards in Northern Ireland. Information relating to the percentage of Primary 1 children in Northern Ireland who are obese is presented in Table 1 below:

TABLE 1: % OF P1 CHILDREN THAT ARE OBESE

NI - Male & Female	1997-98	1999-00	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06
Northern Board	4.0%	4.6%	5.7%	5.0%	5.0%	5.0%

NI - Male & Female	1997-98	1999-00	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06
Southern Board	4.1%	5.6%	6.1%	6.6%	5.9%	6.0%
Eastern Board	3.2%	4.0%	4.8%	5.7%	5.1%	5.0%
Western Board	4.0%	5.6%	6.1%	5.6%	6.1%	5.5%
NI	3.8%	4.8%	5.6%	5.7%	5.5%	5.2%

Source: Child Health System (NI). The figures above are calculated using the International Standard measurement for Obesity.

Although the percentage of Primary One children who are obese in Northern Ireland has grown from 3.8% in 1997/98 to 5.2% in 2005/06, the last two periods where data was collected indicate a slight fall in the percentage of Primary One children who are obese. The collection of this administrative data is now embedded in the Inequalities Monitoring System and is subject to annual updates.

Further to this, the recent publication of the NI Health and Social Wellbeing Survey 2005 has collected data relating to children's height and weight. Applying the International Standard measurement for Obesity to the survey data nearly one in ten (8%) of children (aged 2-15 years) were obese. It is intended that future Health and Wellbeing Surveys will continue to collect this data.

In addition, from September 2007, this Department has provided funding to collect and record BMI measurements through the School Nursing Service, of all year 8/9 pupils. This additional data will allow my Department to assess the need for further interventions in regard to childhood obesity.

Staff Team Building Days

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises carried out by his department, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 334/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises in DHSSPS in each of the last three financial years is as follows:

	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Total cost of staff away days	£14,719	£30,082	£31,799
Total cost of team building exercises	£7,516	£11,037	£3,122

Stroke Units

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail all hospitals in Northern Ireland that have dedicated stroke units.

(AQW 342/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of hospitals in Northern Ireland that have dedicated stroke units, at 21st September 2007, is shown in the table below.

Hospital	Number of Dedicated Stroke Units Available ¹
Belfast City Hospital	1
Mater Infirmorum Hospital	1
Royal Victoria Hospital	1
Ulster Hospital	1
Antrim Area Hospital	1
Altnagelvin Area Hospital	1
Erne Hospital	1
Craigavon Area Hospital	1
Daisy Hill Hospital	1
Northern Ireland	9

Source: Northern Ireland Health and Social Care Providers

1 – This is the number of dedicated acute stroke units. A number of hospitals in Northern Ireland also have a dedicated stroke rehabilitation unit.

Stroke Research

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his department's expenditure on research into the prevention, treatment and management of strokes, in comparison to expenditure on heart disease research and cancer research.

(AQW 344/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The table below details the research expenditure for Stroke, Heart disease and Cancer committed by DHSSPS between April 1998 and March 2007.

Stroke	£509,073
Heart disease	£4,819,943
Cancer	£13,294,118
Total	£18,620,134

Source: Research and Development Office, Northern Ireland Health and Social Care Central Services Agency

Notes:

1. These figures detail expenditure on all associated projects up to 31 March 2007. It should be noted that some of the projects were still ongoing at this point.

Alcohol-related Illness

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide, for each of the last three years, (i) an estimate of the percentage of NHS expenditure devoted to treating alcohol-related illness; and (ii) a breakdown, by Health and Social Care Trust, of all alcohol-related admissions to hospital, including admissions to Accident and Emergency, in number and percentage terms. (AQW 351/08)

Mr McGimpsey:

- (i) An estimate of the percentage of NHS expenditure devoted to treating alcohol related illness is not available. Information is not currently collected regarding details of A&E, outpatient community, or personal social service expenditure or activity at a sufficient level of detail in order to identify NHS expenditure on people with alcohol related conditions. However, total expenditure on treating alcohol related illness in an inpatient or daycase setting in Northern Ireland was as follows:

Year	Cost (£m)
2005/06	10
2004/05	12
2003/04	13

Source: Trust HRG Costing Returns and Hospital Inpatient System

The above does not include the costs of treatment for such illnesses in primary, community, personal social service or outpatient settings.

- (ii) The number of admissions and percentage of total admissions to hospitals in Northern Ireland where there was a diagnosis of an alcohol related illness/condition, is presented in the table below:

HSC Provider	2003/2004		2004/2005		2005/2006
	No. of Admissions	%	No. of Admissions	%	No. of Admissions	%
Belfast HSC Provider	2,839	1.5	2,794	1.4	2,796	1.4
Northern HSC Provider	1,537	1.8	1,640	1.9	1,610	1.8
South Eastern HSC Provider	1,124	1.5	1,387	1.8	1,363	1.7
Southern HSC Provider	1,161	1.5	1,313	1.7	1,379	1.7
Western HSC Provider	1,096	1.4	1,207	1.5	1,241	1.5
Northern Ireland Total	7,757	1.5	8,341	1.6	8,389	1.6

Source: Hospital Inpatient System

Notes: This table includes those patients who presented at an Accident and Emergency Department and were consequently admitted to hospital with an alcohol related illness.

- 1 Discharges and Deaths are used as an approximation to admissions. It is possible that any individual could be admitted to hospital more than once in any year and will thus be counted more than once as an admission.

Autism

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQO 212/07, and in view of the increase in diagnoses of autism, if he can confirm that the review of service provision, gap identification, best practice and innovation has commenced; and to give a timescale within which he expects it to reach its conclusion. (AQW 359/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department is currently undertaking a review of autism service provision to identify gaps, share best practice and promote innovation. The Review Group will report to me by the end of December 2007.

Out-of-hours Care

Mr Brady asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the findings of the joint working panel of the Mourne area on out-of-hours care. (AQW 360/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The joint working panel, comprising representatives elected by the community in the Mourne and the Southern Health and Social Services Board, recommended a Satellite GP Out of Hours Service be provided in Kilkeel, operating 8pm to 11pm each evening and 11am to 2 pm at weekends and public holidays.

The new service will commence in November and the panel agreed it would be funded by the resources currently used to finance the Brooklands Minor Injury Unit.

Victims of Domestic Violence

Ms J McCann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, with reference to his comments in the Assembly on 29 May 2007, what systems he has put in place to strengthen measures to identify victims of domestic violence presenting at Accident and Emergency units and doctors' surgeries.

(AQW 361/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is currently developing a resource manual in consultation with a range of health and social services professional bodies which is targeted at health and social service professionals. The manual will contain routine enquiry-type questions about domestic violence for use in health and social services consultations, such as those in A&E and is aimed at identifying victims of domestic violence. The manual is scheduled to be completed by end of March 2008

This will be in addition to the routine enquiry already carried out by maternity units with pregnant women.

Caring for Carers Strategy

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the situation regarding the outstanding recommendations of the Caring for Carers Strategy.

(AQW 362/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is committed to an ongoing programme of action to address all the recommendations of the Caring for Carers. Since the publication of Caring for Carers my Department has issued detailed practical guidance and imposed specific requirements on all Health and Social Care Trusts to ensure the delivery of key elements of the strategy. We are currently carrying out a review of progress on those requirements. My Department has recently commissioned an in-depth study of the support services available to carers, which will make important recommendations about the type of support that will best meets carers' needs in the future. This and other important aspects of the Strategy are all being taken forward in partnership with carers' representative organisations.

Cross-border Healthcare

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the opportunities he will provide for more effective healthcare solutions to the problems faced by people living along the border; and to give an indication of the conclusions to be drawn from the cross-border pilot scheme, that is currently underway in the north-west.

(AQW 363/08)

Mr McGimpsey: It makes sense to pursue co-operation where it is in the mutual interests of the population on both sides of the border. The Belfast Agreement recognises this and has identified 5 areas of co-operation in health – Accident and Emergency services; planning for major emergencies; co-operation on high technology; cancer research and health promotion.

Co-operation and Working Together (CAWT) has conducted extensive work in taking this agenda forward. Also, my Department has been working closely with colleagues in Dublin on a number of healthcare issues, and we are currently undertaking an exploratory study to identify the potential of further areas of North South co-operation that could help enhance access to services and improve the health and wellbeing for the population of both jurisdictions.

An evaluation of the Cross Border Out of Hours pilot between Innishowen and Londonderry, which began on 10 January 2007, is currently being conducted, the outcome of which is expected in Spring 2008. Initial findings indicate that since the pilot started in January, 80 patients have used the service.

Carers

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what progress his department has made in relation to requiring Health and Social Care Trusts to put the interests of carers at the heart of decision-making, through measures such as nominating a member of these Trusts to take responsibility for carers appointing a carers' co-ordinator.

(AQW 364/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The carers' strategy, Caring for Carers, proposed that Health and Social Care Trusts should take a number of steps to put carers at the heart of decision making. Since then, my Department has imposed a requirement upon Trusts to establish carers' reference groups in local areas, to nominate carers' co-ordinators and to identify a board member with responsibility for ensuring that carers are afforded appropriate priority with the Trust as a whole. My Department is currently carrying out a review of how these requirements have been implemented across Trusts.

Organ Transplants

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of organ transplants for people in Northern Ireland, that have taken place in (i) England; and (ii) the Republic of Ireland, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 377/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of organ transplants carried out in England and the Republic of Ireland for recipients resident in Northern Ireland, over the last 5 financial years are presented in the table below:

Nation of Transplant	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
England	27	28	28	31	26
Republic of Ireland	0	0	1	0	1
Total	27	28	29	31	27

Source: UK Transplant

Information given in the table above includes both living and deceased donor organ transplants.

Organ Transplants

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, for each of the last five years, the number of organ transplants that have taken place in Northern Ireland, where the recipient was resident in Northern Ireland. (AQW 378/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of organ transplants carried out in Northern Ireland for recipients resident in Northern Ireland, over the last 5 financial years is presented in the table below:

Nation of Transplant	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Northern Ireland	47	53	47	30	45

Source: UK Transplant

Information given in the table above includes both living and deceased donor organ transplants.

Organ Transplants

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) children under 18; and (ii) adults, who have received organ transplants, in each of the last five years. (AQW 379/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of transplant recipients, by age group, for transplants carried out in the United Kingdom, over the last 5 financial years is presented in the table below:

Recipient Age Group	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Adult	2,503	2,548	2,407	2,481	2,711

Recipient Age Group	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Children Under 18	239	269	249	222	266
Northern Ireland Total	2,742	2,817	2,656	2,703	2,977

Source: UK Transplant

Information given in the table above includes both living and deceased donor organ transplants.

Organ Transplants

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of organs that have been donated for (i) heart; (ii) lung; (iii) kidney; (iv) cornea; and (v) other transplants, for operations in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) Great Britain; and (c) the Republic of Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 380/08)

Mr McGimpsey: At time of retrieval of the donated organ it is not possible to say in which country the organ transplant operation will take place.

- (a) The number of organs donated in Northern Ireland over the last 5 financial years is presented in the table below:

Organ donated	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Heart	12	6	11	4	7
Lung	14	13	9	7	15
Kidney	64	63	64	47	75
Cornea	26	32	14	30	30
Other	27	26	29	19	39
Total	143	140	127	107	166

Source: UK Transplant

Information given in the table above includes both living and deceased donor organ transplants.

- (b) The number of organs donated in Great Britain over the last 5 financial years is presented in the table below:

Organ donated	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Heart	156	175	157	136	151
Lung	229	288	270	259	245
Kidney	1788	1843	1818	1970	2130
Cornea	2963	3277	3124	3416	3729

Organ donated	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Other	760	742	731	774	849
Total	5896	6325	6100	6555	7104

Source: UK Transplant

Information given in the table above includes both living and deceased donor organ transplants.

Figures given for Great Britain include figures for the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands in addition to England, Scotland and Wales.

- (c) The numbers of organs donated in the Republic of Ireland over the last 5 financial years are presented in the table below:

Organ donated	Financial year
	2002-03	2003-04	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Heart	29	16	13	14	22
Lung	21	23	14	22	19
Kidney	158	155	130	139	156
Other	77	82	71	64	74
Total	285	276	228	239	271

Source: UK Transplant

Cornea data is not collected for the Republic of Ireland. Information given in the table above includes both living and deceased donor organ transplants.

Organ Donor Cards

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people in Northern Ireland who carry Organ Donor Cards; and what plans he has to increase this number. (AQW 381/08)

Mr McGimpsey: It is not known how many people in Northern Ireland carry Organ Donor Cards, however the number of Northern Ireland residents on the Organ Donor Register currently stands at just under 362,000 which equates to approximately 21% of the population.

Responsibility for promotion of the Organ Donor Register across the UK rests with NHS Blood and Transplant. Their national campaigns are supplemented locally by publicity organised through my Department and the transplant co-ordinators based in Belfast City Hospital.

Suicide

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will provide an update on his department's prevention of suicide policy, with particular reference to the Newry and Armagh constituency. (AQW 383/08)

Mr McGimpsey: A Suicide Prevention Strategy was launched on 30 October 2006, and it contains over 60 actions that aim to reduce the rates of suicide. I have allocated over £3 million annually to support the Strategy's implementation.

Significant work has already been initiated regionally to implement the Strategy, including:

- a pilot self-harm mentoring scheme and a pilot telephone helpline;
- research into the effects of the troubles on mental health and suicide rates;
- a new Depression Awareness Training Programme for GPs and frontline primary care staff; and
- a new joint North/South public information campaign.

In addition, £1.8 million of the Strategy's funding has been invested, via the four local Health and Social Services Boards, to support communities. In 2007/08, £406,840 was allocated to the Southern Health and Social Services Board, including £82,420 and £29,670 to specifically tackle the disproportionately high rates of suicide in the Craigavon & Banbridge and Newry & Mourne Areas respectively.

The Southern Health and Social Services Board has established a local implementation group, involving representatives from the statutory sector, local communities and bereaved families, to agree the local allocation of this funding. Types of work underway within the Southern Health and Social Services Board area include:

- needs assessment with churches, religious groups and faith based organisations to explore their attitudes to, role in and potential needs in the area of Suicide Prevention and intervention,
- needs assessment with Young Men, and those who work with them, to explore issues which may cause them crisis, for example violence, anger and sexuality issues;
- roll out of appropriate training courses;
- community awareness raising sessions on suicide and self harm;
- supporting rehabilitation and vocational opportunities to individuals experiencing mental health problems;
- additional counselling services for individuals at risk;

- support for an Interdenominational Church Service in Newry to remember those who have lost their lives to suicide and those who still mourn them; and
- funding to develop and facilitate a rural community based response to suicide and self harm in the South Armagh area.

Biofuels

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will undertake to assess the health risks associated with gases released through the burning of biofuels, including comparisons, from a carcinogenic perspective, between the combustion gases produced by biofuels and the gases contained in carbon dioxide. (AQW 413/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has no plans to carry out an assessment of potential health risks associated with emissions from the burning of biofuels.

The UK Biomass Strategy, published in May 2007, includes a commitment to ensure that when promoting the use of biomass, account is taken of combustion emissions and the impact of pollutants on public health. In order to do this, Government, led by Defra, will need to develop credible usage scenarios that identify what type of biomass will be used, where it will be used, the appliances to be used and what fuel it will displace. This work is on-going.

Health based standards and objectives for key air pollutants have been set in EU legislation and under the UK Air Quality Strategy. A national monitoring and assessment programme has been established to check compliance and identify trends. It is expected that any significant changes in emissions as a result of increased use of biofuels would be detected by the monitoring networks.

Section 56 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how his department will implement section 56 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001, in respect of the repatriation of patients in England, Scotland and Wales, to enable them to be close to their families in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 424/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Health and Social Care Act 2001 extends to England and Wales only. The transfer of care home residents from Great Britain to Northern Ireland is outside my jurisdiction and is a matter for each of the respective jurisdictions in Great Britain. My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Finance and Personnel, has developed a scheme to enable Northern Ireland residents to be placed in Great Britain. We are currently the only administration with a scheme to place care home residents in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Locally Produced Food

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what efforts his department is making to procure locally-produced food. (AQW 456/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Regional Supplies Service (RSS), the Centre of Procurement Expertise responsible for letting and managing contracts for Food Products on behalf of Health and Social Care Trusts, Boards and Agencies, has for some considerable time worked with agencies in Northern Ireland on initiatives to encourage local food producers to bid into the public sector. In the past 12 months RSS has sent senior level representation to a number of "Meet the Buyer" events across Northern Ireland. However, the majority of the contracts let for food contracts are above the EU thresholds and as such require the competition to be open, transparent and provide equitable treatment to bidders across the European Union.

Compensation for Medical Negligence

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 142/08, to detail the number of successful claims for compensation for medical negligence that were made against each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last five years. (AQW 485/08)

Mr McGimpsey: AQW 142/08 detailed amounts paid for clinical negligence for the years 2001-02 to 2005-06. Data for the 2006-07 financial year has recently become available and I have included details of claims for 2006-07 in this reply. These are contained in the following tables for each of the legacy Trusts.

ALTNAGELVIN HOSPITALS HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	43	15	7	21
2002/03	44	10	6	28
2003/04	54	6	10	38

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2004/05	31	4	1	26
2005/06	46	1	0	45
2006/07	35	0	0	35

ARMAGH AND DUNGANNON HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	4	1	2	1
2002/03	1	0	1	0
2003/04	3	0	0	3
2004/05	1	0	0	1
2005/06	5	0	0	5
2006/07	2	0	0	2

BELFAST CITY HOSPITAL HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	59	23	10	26
2002/03	37	11	4	22
2003/04	54	9	6	39
2004/05	50	5	2	43
2005/06	40	5	3	32
2006/07	41	0	3	38

CAUSEWAY HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	19	14	3	2
2002/03	15	8	1	6
2003/04	14	3	2	9
2004/05	11	2	1	8
2005/06	20	1	1	18
2006/07	19	1	0	18

CRAIGAVON AND BANBRIDGE COMMUNITY HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	0	0	0	0
2002/03	0	0	0	0
2003/04	1	0	0	1
2004/05	0	0	0	0
2005/06	0	0	0	0
2006/07	0	0	0	0

CRAIGAVON AREA HOSPITAL GROUP HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	38	10	21	7
2002/03	52	29	11	12
2003/04	40	14	9	17
2004/05	39	12	4	23
2005/06	36	8	4	24
2006/07	42	1	1	40

DOWN LISBURN HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	19	12	5	2
2002/03	38	25	5	8
2003/04	28	15	3	10
2004/05	55	6	26	23
2005/06	30	6	1	23
2006/07	35	0	1	34

HOMEFIRST COMMUNITY HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	2	2	0	0
2002/03	8	3	1	4
2003/04	5	1	1	3
2004/05	2	0	2	0
2005/06	1	0	0	1
2006/07	1	0	0	1

FOYLE HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	0	0	0	0
2002/03	3	1	0	2
2003/04	4	0	0	4
2004/05	3	0	0	3
2005/06	3	0	0	3
2006/07	0	0	0	0

MATER HOSPITAL HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	30	12	7	11
2002/03	20	10	3	7
2003/04	38	14	4	20
2004/05	20	7	0	13
2005/06	30	5	1	24
2006/07	28	0	0	28

GREEN PARK HEALTHCARE HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	16	14	0	2
2002/03	14	8	1	5
2003/04	10	6	0	4
2004/05	10	1	1	8
2005/06	18	0	1	17
2006/07	21	0	1	20

NEWRY & MOURNE HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	22	7	5	10
2002/03	21	8	2	11
2003/04	16	2	1	13
2004/05	14	0	2	12
2005/06	10	0	1	9
2006/07	1	0	0	14

NI AMBULANCE SERVICE HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	0	0	0	0
2002/03	1	1	0	0
2003/04	2	1	0	1
2004/05	2	0	0	2
2005/06	1	0	0	1
2006/07	1	0	0	1

SOUTH & EAST BELFAST HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	5	2	3	0
2002/03	1	0	0	1
2003/04	2	1	1	0
2004/05	1	0	0	1
2005/06	2	0	0	2
2006/07	0	0	0	0

NORTH & WEST BELFAST HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	7	3	4	0
2002/03	4	3	1	0
2003/04	1	0	0	1
2004/05	2	1	0	1
2005/06	7	1	0	6
2006/07	3	1	0	2

SPERRIN LAKELAND HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	17	3	6	8
2002/03	38	1	7	30
2003/04	20	3	3	14
2004/05	25	5	1	19
2005/06	26	1	0	25
2006/07	17	0	0	17

ROYAL GROUP OF HOSPITALS AND DENTAL HOSPITAL HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	77	37	12	28
2002/03	80	33	8	39
2003/04	82	26	9	47
2004/05	95	21	11	63
2005/06	77	6	1	70
2006/07	80	1	1	78

ULSTER COMMUNITY & HOSPITALS HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	42	16	7	19
2002/03	50	11	9	30
2003/04	39	4	4	31
2004/05	43	0	1	42
2005/06	49	5	2	42
2006/07	42	0	3	39

UNITED HOSPITALS HSS TRUST

Year	Number of claims for compensation for medical negligence made in each year	Current situation of those cases as at 30 September 2007
		Dismissed No.	Settled or successfully pursued No.	Pending determination No.
2001/02	58	19	12	27
2002/03	43	10	8	25
2003/04	34	7	4	23
2004/05	59	7	9	43
2005/06	37	8	3	26
2006/07	66	3	0	63

Hospital Treatment

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 209/08, to explain the reasons why the information requested is not available; and if he will instruct his department to keep such records. (AQW 506/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Pursuant to my answer to AQW 209/08, information is collected at Trust level to record type and severity of all reported adverse incidents including those where injury is caused to people, property, environment or reputation. The Department has no plans to collect information, as specified but will explore a possible link with the national reporting and learning system to improve reporting in the interests of developing safety solutions and learning.

Psychiatric Treatment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he has taken to provide psychiatric treatment to those identified with suicidal tendencies. (AQW 527/08)

Mr McGimpsey: A full range of services are provided to those identified with suicidal tendencies at a level proportionate to the assessed risk. These services include Mental Health Teams working in the community, Crisis Response Teams, Early Intervention etc including Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services, liaison mental health services into Accident and Emergency, out patient clinics, day hospital and inpatient services.

Care Matters Strategy

Ms Ni Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he has taken to maximise the opportunity for children and young people to contribute to the Care Matters Strategy. (AQW 537/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Care Matters Strategy is an innovative, wide-ranging, cross-departmental, cross agency approach to improving the outcomes of our looked after children population.

It is essential therefore that my Department obtain and take account of the views of care experienced children and young people to determine the final shape of this important initiative. To help achieve this goal a child-friendly version of the Care Matters Strategy was produced in conjunction with the Voices of Young people in Care (VOYPIC), a voluntary children's advocacy organisation with vast experience of working with looked after children. Copies of the document were distributed to children's residential homes and the homes of foster carers via the Health and Social Care Trusts. The launch of the child-friendly version of Care Matters was held in the Duke's Hotel, Belfast on Saturday 2 June facilitated by VOYPIC and attended by an audience of care-experienced children.

In addition, the consultation period for Care Matters was extended from the 15 June to the 3 September to ensure that everyone wishing to respond had adequate time particularly over the summer months. As we move forward I will wish to ensure that young people and their families have the opportunity to continue to contribute as we implement changes on the back of care matters.

Introduction of Fluoride into Drinking Water

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to approve the introduction of fluoride into Northern Ireland's drinking water. (AQW 538/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Currently there are no plans to approve the introduction of fluoride into Northern Ireland's drinking water.

Attacks on Fire and Rescue Service

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of attacks on Fire and Rescue Service personnel, in each of the last three years. (AQW 539/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Details of the number of attacks which resulted in injury to Fire and Rescue Service personnel is set out in the table below.

2004/2005	2005/2006	2006/2007
9	7	7

Alzheimer's

Ms Ni Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment he has made of the estimated impact on the quality of life of people with early stages of Alzheimer's if drug treatments were to be withdrawn from the NHS.

(AQW 540/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety has not assessed the potential impact on the quality of life for people in the early stages of Alzheimer's disease if drug treatments were to be withdrawn.

The Department is reviewing guidance on Alzheimer's drugs published by the National Institute for health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) in November 2006 and re-issued in September 2007 following judicial review. This guidance recommends certain anti-dementia drugs for the treatment of people with Alzheimer's disease of moderate severity only.

The local review process does not replicate the work of NICE or reassess the evidence and methodology used by the Institute to reach its recommendations. Rather, it considers the applicability of NICE guidance in the context of Health and Social Care services in Northern Ireland. The Department therefore relies on assessments of quality of life carried out by NICE.

Agenda for Change

Ms Ni Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to (i) detail how many completion dates have been missed due to lack of human and financial resources; (ii) explain the rationale for such occurrences; and (iii) outline the accountability arrangements within the Agenda for Change process.

(AQW 541/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I have set one final date of 31 March 2008 for the full implementation of the Agenda for Change arrangements. I expect the Chief Executives in each of the Health and Social Care organisations to ensure that the necessary staff and arrangements are in place to deliver on that deadline. The Chairs in each of these organisations will be accountable to me if this deadline is missed. . My Department has made over £100m available in the current financial year for the full implementation of these new rates of pay.

Workforce Planning

Ms Carál Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to produce a report from his department and NHS employers to indicate that appropriate workforce planning is in place to provide for future recruitment and retention.

(AQW 543/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department has established on-going workforce planning as a means of maintaining focus on the supply/demand of appropriately trained staff to meet service needs. The workforce planning cycle comprises a major review approximately every five years, with interim update reviews. These are carried out for each clinical professional group.

Published reviews can be found on the Departmental internet site at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/hrd/wpu/wpu-planning/wpu-publications.htm>

Coeliac Disease

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people diagnosed with coeliac disease, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 553/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of people diagnosed with coeliac disease in Northern Ireland is not available.

Information on the number of patients suffering with coeliac disease admitted as inpatients to hospitals in Northern Ireland is available and is shown in the table below.

Financial Year	No. of Admissions
1996/97	354
1997/98	332
1998/99	326
1999/00	331
2000/01	392
2001/02	516
2002/03	430
2003/04	478
2004/05	532
2005/06	624

Source: Hospital Inpatients System.

It should be noted that any individual could have been admitted to hospital more than once during any given time period and would therefore be counted more than once in the above figures.

North/South Regional Hospital Services Group

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to further the development of a North/South Regional Hospital Services Group in regard to all-Ireland organ transplants, as stated by the North-South Ministerial Council in 2002. (AQW 570/08)

Mr McGimpsey: It makes sense to pursue co-operation where it is in the mutual interests of the population on both sides of the border. The Belfast Agreement recognised this and identified 5 areas of co-operation in health – accident and emergency services; planning for major emergencies; co-operation on high technology; cancer research; and health promotion.

In order to ensure that all possible benefits are maximised, my Department is undertaking an exploratory study to identify the potential of new areas of North South co-operation that could help improve access to services and enhance the health and wellbeing of the population. This study will examine all areas where co-operation could be beneficial including the area of small volume specialties such as transplantation.

Pay Scales

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans exist to place medical secretaries on a band four pay scale, as recommended by an independent pay review panel; and what plans he has to intervene in this matter, in advance of planned industrial action on 10 October 2007. (AQW 571/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Medical secretaries cannot be placed on their Agenda for Change pay band until the implementation process is completed in partnership with staff side representatives. My officials are working with HSC employers and staff side representatives to finalise this process. Dialogue between HSC employers and staff side representatives is continuing in an effort to avert the planned industrial action.

Wi-fi Wireless Network

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to conduct a health and safety study, in advance of the introduction of the wi-fi wireless network in Belfast city centre. (AQW 590/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has no plans to conduct health impact studies in relation to individual proposals for the introduction of Wireless local area networks (WLANs) or Wireless computer networks (WiFi). The Health Protection Agency (HPA) provides support and specialist advice to DHSSPS on a wide range of health protection matters including radiation protection. The HPA statement on WiFi is available on the HPA website at: http://www.hpa.org.uk/radiation/understand/radiation_topics/emf/wifi.htm

Current HPA advice is that there is no consistent evidence to date that WiFi and WLANs adversely affect the health of the general population. The signals are very low power, typically 0.1 watt (100 milliwatts) in both the computer and the router (access point) and the results so far show exposures are well within the internationally accepted International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation (ICNIRP) guidelines. Based on current knowledge and experience, radiofrequency exposures from Wi-Fi are likely to be lower than those from mobile phones. However, with any new technology it is a sensible precautionary approach to keep the situation under ongoing review. On 20 September 2007, the HPA Board agreed to fund a programme of work on WiFi and WLAN installations such as those used in schools and homes. Discussions are underway with partner agencies, especially those in the education sector. This project aims to systematically investigate the types of WiFi equipment in use and produce information on exposures to radio signals from wireless computer networks. The results will be compared with established international exposure guidelines and also with exposures from other commonly used sources of radio signals, including mobile phones. Account will be taken of the proportion of the time that the equipment is transmitting in normal use and how it is positioned in relation to the body. The project is timetabled over two years and will include:

- A critical review and summary of existing information relevant to exposures from WiFi.
- Detailed measurements of the power density in the vicinity of WiFi terminals in a controlled laboratory environment using robotic scanning equipment and compare the results with exposure guidelines.
- Identifying the effect of equipment design on exposures in terms of the types of antennas used and where they are mounted on computers.
- Gathering information on how the equipment is positioned in relation to children and staff in schools including a small number of measurements with equipment installed in schools for comparison with the laboratory measurements.
- Performing a health risk review considering the results of the above exposure assessments and information from published studies relating to the effects of radio frequency exposure on health.

HPA are expected to make a public announcement shortly about planned research into WiFi.

Wi-fi Network

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what double blind peer reviewed published studies are held by the department, proving that pulsed microwave radiation from wi-fi is safe for the population of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 593/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has no plans to conduct health impact studies in relation to individual proposals for the introduction of Wireless local area networks (WLANs) or Wireless computer networks (WiFi). The Health Protection Agency (HPA) provides support and specialist advice to DHSSPS on a wide range of health protection matters including radiation protection. The HPA statement on WiFi is available on the HPA website at: http://www.hpa.org.uk/radiation/understand/radiation_topics/emf/wifi.htm

Current HPA advice is that there is no consistent evidence to date that WiFi and WLANs adversely affect the health of the general population. The signals are very low power, typically 0.1 watt (100 milliwatts) in both the computer and the router (access point) and the results so far show exposures are well within the internationally accepted International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation (ICNIRP) guidelines. Based on current knowledge and experience, radiofrequency exposures from Wi-Fi are likely to be lower than those from mobile phones. However, with any new technology it is a sensible precautionary approach to keep the situation under ongoing review. On 20 September 2007, the HPA Board agreed to fund a programme of work on WiFi and WLAN installations such as those used in schools and homes. Discussions are underway with partner agencies, especially those in the education sector. This project aims to systematically investigate the types of WiFi equipment in use and produce information on exposures to radio signals from wireless computer networks. The results will be compared with established international exposure guidelines and also with exposures from other commonly used sources of radio signals, including mobile phones. Account will be taken of the proportion of the time that the equipment is transmitting in normal use and how it is positioned in relation to the body. The project is timetabled over two years and will include:

- A critical review and summary of existing information relevant to exposures from WiFi.
- Detailed measurements of the power density in the vicinity of WiFi terminals in a controlled laboratory environment using robotic scanning equipment and compare the results with exposure guidelines.

- Identifying the effect of equipment design on exposures in terms of the types of antennas used and where they are mounted on computers.
- Gathering information on how the equipment is positioned in relation to children and staff in schools including a small number of measurements with equipment installed in schools for comparison with the laboratory measurements.
- Performing a health risk review considering the results of the above exposure assessments and information from published studies relating to the effects of radio frequency exposure on health.

HPA are expected to make a public announcement shortly about planned research into WiFi.

Mental Illness

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the support that can be provided for people living in the same area as a mentally ill person, whose lives are disrupted due to the person not receiving the necessary treatment for their illness.

(AQW 638/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department's policy is to enable those with disabilities, including mental illness, to achieve the highest standards of living possible and to be fully integrated into society. Anyone with a mental illness, living in the community, will have a package of care pitched at a level specific to their particular needs. This is aimed, inter alia, to minimise any disruption to their lives or others in the community.

Care Matters Strategy

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the funding his department is making available to implement the 'Care Matters Strategy' for the most vulnerable children in need of care.

(AQO 213/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Consultation on the Care Matters in Northern Ireland – A Bridge to a Better Future Strategy finished recently and the responses are being analysed and considered before determining the final policy. Funding for the initiative will be dependent upon the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review which is still under consideration. It is not possible therefore to give a more detailed answer at this time.

I would like to say however, that my Department is identifying those elements of the Strategy which have a neutral or moderate cost and is consulting with colleagues in the voluntary and statutory sectors about implementing these changes and improvements as quickly as possible.

Care matters will build on investments in recent years in foster care, leaving care and children's residential homes. This includes introducing Nationally agreed minimum foster care allowances, more foster care support workers and more resources to recruit foster carers from children's extended families. It also includes the appointment of personal advisers for care leavers and measures to enable care leavers to continue living with their former foster carer until they are aged 21. We have also continued to replace existing older children's homes with up-to-date better quality accommodation.

Investing for Health Strategy

Mr John O'Dowd asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will give an update on the current status of the Investing for Health Strategy. (AQO 290/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Investing for Health is acknowledged to be the first cross-cutting strategy published by the former Executive in 2002. The strategy's main aims are to improve health and reduce health inequalities by addressing the broad range of determinants which impact on health and well-being.

Implementation of the strategy is ongoing. At regional level the strategy is overseen by the cross-departmental Ministerial Group on Public Health which I shall chair. At local level the cross-sectoral Investing for Health Partnerships are implementing Health Improvement Plans which have been developed to address the identified health and well-being needs of people in their areas.

A review of the strategy is due to take place in 2008, the timing of which is opportune given the restoration of this Assembly. The areas and issues which Investing for Health aims to address are still relevant today, but it is envisaged that this review will provide an opportunity to refocus and re-energise.

Early preparatory work for the review has begun and I will continue to keep members informed and involved.

Hospital Pathology Services

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will provide an update on the progress of his department's review of hospital pathology services. (AQO 239/08)

Mr McGimpsey: On 28 November 2006 the Department issued the Review of Pathology Services in Northern Ireland, for a three month public consultation.

The consultation ended on 28 February 2007. 289 responses were received and my Department has been considering these in detail. A workshop involving Health and Social Care stakeholders was held in June 2007 to discuss key issues raised in the consultation.

I expect to make an announcement later this year regarding the final recommendations for the future of pathology services.

Hospital Services

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to engage with colleagues in the Executive and in the Republic of Ireland, regarding access to hospital services in the south-west of Northern Ireland. (AQO 234/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I am committed to ensuring people living in the South West of Northern Ireland have access to safe, high quality hospital services. Two new state of the art hospitals, one acute and one enhanced local, will be provided for the population South West. The decision to site the new acute hospital to the north of Enniskillen was supported by the previous Executive in 2002. Plans are now well advanced for the acute hospital to the North of Enniskillen, due to open in 2011 and the local enhanced hospital in Omagh, due to open in 2012.

It makes sense to pursue co-operation where it is in the mutual interests of the population on both sides of the border and I will wish to ensure that we continue to work in collaboration with colleagues in the Republic of Ireland. My Department has recently embarked on a North South Feasibility Study, working with colleagues in the Republic of Ireland to identify the potential of further areas of North South co-operation that could help improve health and wellbeing and access to services for people in both jurisdictions.

Stroke Strategy

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will give a timescale within which the updated stroke strategy, for the provision of services, will be brought forward. (AQO 267/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is currently finalising a Stroke Strategy for the provision of stroke services in Northern Ireland. This strategy will set out recommendations for improving all aspects of stroke care including prevention, treatment and rehabilitation. Its outcome will help inform the service framework on cardiovascular disease, which aims to set measurable standards for acute stroke services. I hope to issue the Stroke Strategy for public consultation later this year. The consultation will run for the recommended 12 week period and I would hope to announce the final recommendations in June 2008.

Organ Donors

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people from Northern Ireland who have donated organs in each of the last five years; and the amount of funding that has been set aside for the promotion of organ donation in 2007/08. (AQO 302/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Between 2002 and 2006 the number of deceased organ donors from Northern Ireland annually have totalled, 30, 26, 36, 20 and 31. Our donor rate for 2006/07 was 20.3 per million population compared to the overall UK rate of 13.2 per million population making us the best performing region during this period. Live donors across the past five years have totalled 36.

Responsibility for promotion of organ donation across the UK rests with NHS Blood and Transplant. Their national campaigns are supplemented locally by publicity organised through my Department and the transplant co-ordinators based in Belfast City Hospital. During 2007/08 NHSBT will be spending in excess of £1.7m on campaigning activity.

Ambulance Shortages

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are being put in place to address the shortage of ambulances in the Foyle constituency. (AQO 265/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Western Health and Social Services Board, which is responsible for commissioning ambulance services in the Foyle area, has advised me that there are currently 4 A&E ambulances providing day-time cover and 3 providing night-time and weekend cover which are based at Altnagelvin Ambulance Station. In addition, a single paramedic Rapid Response Vehicle and 4 other response cars are available. These ambulances are available all year round. The Board considers this level of cover appropriate to provide emergency response in the area.

The response performance in the Foyle area for Category A (life-threatening) calls for the month of August 2007 was 74%, having increased from 68% in March 2007. This is only very slightly less than the national response target for Category A, life-threatening, calls which is that 75% should be responded to within 8 minutes. It also exceeds the Ambulance Service's performance target in my ministerial Priorities for Action for 2007/08 which is that an average of 65% of Category A calls should be responded to within 8 minutes rising to 70% for the month of March 2008.

North/South Ministerial Council Health Sectoral Meeting

Mr Raymond McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the items that will be included for discussion in the North-South Ministerial Council health sectoral meeting. (AQO 266/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Whilst it is expected that a North South health sectoral meeting will be held in the Republic of Ireland during the Autumn, there have, as yet, been no decisions made on the agenda.

I would, however, expect there to be discussions on the 5 formal areas of co-operation: Accident and Emergency services; Planning for Major Emergencies; Co-operation on High Technology Equipment; Cancer Research; and Health Promotion; and I would also expect the Food Safety Promotion Board to be included on the agenda.

Binge-Drinking

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what action he is taking to address binge-drinking, particularly amongst young people. (AQO 218/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs which was launched in 2006 includes "Addressing Binge Drinking" and "Tackling Under Age Drinking" as Key Priorities. As part of the implementation process a Binge Drinking Advisory Group has been set up to ensure that the issue is kept as a high policy priority across Government. In recent years we have undertaken a range of measures to address binge drinking in Northern Ireland which have included a public information campaign about the risks associated with binge drinking.

Child Protection and Safety

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will give an update on the ongoing work of his department in relation to child protection and safety. (AQO 248/08)

Mr McGimpsey: On an ongoing basis Social Services work collaboratively with other Departments and Agencies to operate existing child protection services including those which have a statutory basis. In addition, my Department is bringing forward a wide range of initiatives to strengthen child protection arrangements within Northern Ireland, these include:

- the ongoing operation of arrangements set out in the Protection of Children and Vulnerable Adults (NI) Order 2003;

- the introduction of Safeguarding Vulnerable Groups legislation in conjunction with other government Departments to strengthen vetting requirements and more effectively exclude unsuitable individuals from working with children and also vulnerable adults;
- establishing a regional Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland;
- developing a Child Death Review Protocol;
- the development and implementation of a uniform Assessment Framework to assess the needs of vulnerable children along with regional thresholds for intervention and regional standards for the supervision of front line child protection staff;
- reorganising front line child protection services to ensure a consistent high quality and speedy response to referrals;
- identifying and taking forward arrangements to improve cross border cooperation with the Republic of Ireland;
- working with the Churches to strengthen safeguarding within the church sector;
- working with Health and Social Care Trusts in relation to implementation of the Laming recommendations;
- working with Departments and agencies within the UK on matters related to online child exploitation; and
- taking forward the recommendations from the multi-agency inspection of child protection services in Northern Ireland.

Alzheimer's

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to support early diagnosis, with effective care and treatment interventions, for people with Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia. (AQO 235/08)

Mr McGimpsey: A range of treatment and care is provided for people with Alzheimers disease and other forms of Dementia, across the primary, community, specialist and secondary care sectors.

The Bamford review on mental health issues for older people, which has been recently finalised, highlights the need for prompt diagnosis of dementia because it allows the person the opportunity to discuss their symptoms and treatment options, make informed choices about their future.

Departmental Officials are in the process of developing a response and action plan for the implementation of Bamford recommendations as a whole.

MRSA

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what targets he has put in place to tackle MRSA over the next three years. (AQO 215/08)

Mr McGimpsey: On 11 September 2007, I announced that for the first time targets on reducing two particular healthcare associated infections were being put in place in Health and Social Care Trusts in Northern Ireland. The first of the new targets will require a drop of 10% in the numbers of people in hospital with Staphylococcus aureus bloodstream infections (including MRSA). In the case of Clostridium difficile, I am seeking a reduction of 20% in hospital patients aged 65 and over. Both numeric reductions are to have occurred by the year ending March 2009.

The baseline for measurement is to be the financial year 2006/7. These two infections, which are already subject to mandatory surveillance, are considered to be markers for the general level of healthcare associated infections.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Septic Tanks

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to deal with the present backlog in the emptying of septic tanks. (AQW 308/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that there are presently 4,500 outstanding requests for septic tanks to be emptied. In order to address the issue, Northern Ireland Water's primary contractor has been working extended hours during the week and at weekends and has doubled the resources committed to the contract. He currently has 16 tankers in operation throughout the Province and has engaged 4 sub-contractors to assist with the work. Northern Ireland Water has engaged a second contractor to supplement the work of the primary contractor.

It is expected that the backlog will be cleared and normal standards of service restored by the end of October 2007.

Septic Tanks

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of homes currently waiting for septic tanks to be emptied, broken down by each of the 18 constituencies. (AQW 309/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that there are 4,500 homes currently waiting for septic tanks to be emptied. The location of these homes is not recorded by Parliamentary constituency and Northern Ireland Water is therefore unable to provide the breakdown sought.

Roads Maintenance Budget

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount of the total roads maintenance budget spent on roads in the Greater Belfast area, in comparison to the rest of Northern Ireland, in 2005/06 and 2006/07; and the proposed expenditure for 2007/08. (AQW 323/08)

Mr Murphy: For the purposes of answering this question, the Greater Belfast Area has been taken as covering the council areas of Belfast, Castlereagh, Newtownabbey, Carrickfergus, North Down and Lisburn.

The total expenditure incurred by Roads Service on maintenance activities in 2005/06 and 2006/07 is detailed below.

	2005/06 £000's	2006/07 £000's
Greater Belfast Area	33,000	31,000
Total for Northern Ireland	121,000	114,000

Maintenance expenditure includes all maintenance costs e.g. structural maintenance (which includes resurfacing, reconstruction, surface dressing, patching etc.), routine maintenance (grass cutting, gully emptying and environmental work), traffic management, street lighting and car park maintenance costs.

The current estimated expenditure on roads maintenance in the North in 2007/08 will be in the region of £109 million.

Road Infrastructure Between Craigavon and Banbridge

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Regional Development what are his plans to improve the road infrastructure between Craigavon and Banbridge, to allow industry and tourists better access to the A1 and the M1 to Dublin, and vice versa. (AQW 346/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised that there are already good strategic road linkages from Craigavon to the North and South via the M1/A1 and the A27 respectively. The A26 Craigavon (Lurgan) and A50 Portadown to Banbridge routes are not on the strategic route network.

Any requests for localised improvements along these routes will be considered and assessed to determine their priority status and allow them to be compared with other proposals competing for inclusion in Roads Service's Local Transportation and Safety Measures Programme.

Public Transport

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 45/08, to outline the nature of the efforts which have been made to raise awareness of (i) the economic, environmental and social benefits that reliable access to public transport offers; and (ii) the risks to safety, inconvenience and frustration to passengers that security alerts entail; and what is his assessment of the success of this work. (AQW 372/08)

Mr Murphy: Both NIR and Translink in general have undertaken a number of initiatives in order to help raise awareness of the benefits that reliable public transport offers and the inconvenience and disruption caused by security alerts.

- (i) Translink has proactive and ongoing media relations, public affairs and communications activity to highlight the contribution of public transport towards economic development and growth. Translink's published Corporate Plan stresses the positive impact which a good public transport network offers and illustrates performance against Departmental targets which have been set to ensure societal benefits e.g. average fleet age, accessibility and speed targets.

In order to raise awareness of social benefits, Translink publishes Passenger Charter Monitoring results on a bi-annual basis. Moreover, it demonstrates its commitment to environmental improvement through the publication of an Environmental Plan.

- (ii) In relation to security alerts, the public transport operator has an active media relations approach, which includes highlighting the impact any such incidents have on services. In general terms Translink and NIR have undertaken aggressive marketing campaigns in order to deter anti-social behaviour and highlight railway safety issues. The ongoing 'Dead Cert' campaign was launched in 2005 to reinforce the dangers of misusing trains and railway facilities. An additional 'C U in Court' poster campaign was designed to raise awareness of CCTV on trains as well as joint action with the police to run patrols on trains.

I am content that NIR and Translink are taking effective measures to raise awareness of both public transport benefits and the costs of disruption to services. Ensuring a high level of ongoing awareness of such issues is critical and Translink / NIR will continue with their efforts in this regard.

Flooding at Carrickdesland, Warrenpoint

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take to ensure that Roads Service and NI Water achieve a permanent resolution to the ongoing flooding problems at Carrickdesland, Burren, Warrenpoint; and if he will make a statement on the current situation in that area. (AQW 414/08)

Mr Murphy: Carrickdesland is a development site and the sewerage system is at present in the final stages of adoption by Northern Ireland Water. The sewerage system is therefore not the responsibility of Northern Ireland Water until adoption takes place. I understand Roads Service and Northern Ireland Water officials did attend site meetings about the flooding within the development. Northern Ireland Water again met the developer on 19 October 2007 and he has advised that the flooding may have been linked to work carried out by him on a piped water course, which is not associated with the sewerage system within the development. Northern Ireland Water has arranged to meet with the developer in the near future to establish the reason for the flooding and to ensure that any problems are addressed prior to formal handover.

Blocked Sewers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of 46 reported incidences of blocked sewers in the Westwinds housing estate, Newtownards, from 1 September 2006 to 30 June 2007, what steps he is taking to ensure that the number of occurrences of such blockages is reduced. (AQW 419/08)

Mr Murphy: I am advised by Northern Ireland Water that it is aware of the history of blockages in the Westwinds Estate in Newtownards and that it has responded to all reported incidents well within the timescales set out in their Customer Charter. Where necessary, the affected areas have been cleaned and disinfected. However, successive comprehensive investigations into the cause of the blockages have confirmed that the majority of the blockages were not associated with deficiencies in the sewerage system but were caused by inappropriate materials such as baby wipes, cotton buds and nappies being lodged in the sewerage system. Fat and grease from cooking has also been discharged into the sewers causing costly blockages, damage to filter screens at treatment works and leading to pollution in the local environment. Northern Ireland Water has assured me that the public sewerage system within the estate has adequate capacity and is operating satisfactorily under normal conditions and an upgrade to the sewer system is not considered necessary at this time.

Regrettably, it is not possible to guarantee blockages will not occur in the future, given the continued irresponsible discharges of inappropriate materials into the sewers. Northern Ireland Water is actively promoting a 'Bag It and Bin It, don't flush it!' campaign and proposes to distribute leaflets to all homes in the Westwinds Estate in an attempt to raise awareness of the problems that inappropriate discharges into the sewer cause.

Northern Ireland Water is also undertaking a major programme of Drainage Area Studies to identify any deficiencies, assess future needs and, if needed, to recommend solutions for upgrades to meet development, environmental and structural requirements. A Drainage Area Study for the Newtownards area is ongoing and any recommendations for upgrading works will be included in the Northern Ireland Water's Capital Investment Programme for implementation. Unfortunately, given current funding levels, it is unlikely that any required upgrading work identified by the study will be implemented before 2010.

Gortcorbies Climbing Lane

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 188/08, to outline the nature of the surplus material that will be produced during the construction of the Gortcorbies Climbing Lane; and to detail the reasons for the environmental concerns relating to this scheme. (AQW 465/08)

Mr Murphy: As I advised in my previous answer, the detailed design of the Gortcorbies Climbing Lane scheme on the A37 Limavady to Coleraine Road is well advanced. However, construction cannot start until funding is available and environmental concerns regarding the disposal of surplus material have been resolved. A substantial volume of surplus material, comprising alluvial silts, glacial tills, glacial sands and gravels, will come from the excavations associated with the removal of two significant crests on the existing road.

The environmental issues do not relate to the inert nature of this surplus material, but rather to the need to minimise any possible adverse environmental and ecological effects likely to occur from its disposal on the surrounding landscape.

Roads Service, in consultation with Planning Service and Environment and Heritage Service, is currently investigating options for the disposal of this surplus material, in compliance with current statutory requirements.

Sewage on Lough Park, Ballynahinch

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will investigate the reasons why sewage has remained on Lough Park, adjacent to Glenlough Park, Ballynahinch, Co. Down, despite assurances that the matter would be resolved four weeks ago. (AQW 512/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that it has been endeavouring to identify the source of the sewage problem, but investigations have been hampered by access problems due to heavy undergrowth along sections of the path at Lough Park, Ballynahinch. The affected area has been cleaned and disinfected regularly while investigations continue and Down District Council has been contacted to arrange for the undergrowth to be cut back.

It is thought that a section of the public sewer along the path at Lough Park may have collapsed and a CCTV investigation is being arranged to assist in identifying the source of the problem. Any necessary repair work to the sewer will be undertaken as a matter of urgency when the cause of the problem is confirmed.

Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which Northern Ireland Water will commence the drainage area plan for Newcastle, which includes improvements to the sewerage system. (AQW 551/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle has identified a number of deficiencies within the sewerage system. Remedial action to resolve these deficiencies includes the repair of structural defects, hydraulic improvements to the network, provision of a new storm water storage tank at Castlepark and work to provide new or upgraded sewage pumping stations.

Northern Ireland Water has already completed some of the required sewer network improvements and remedial work to repair major defects is ongoing. In addition, the advance construction of a sewer along Main Street, Newcastle, is planned to coincide with an Environmental Improvements Scheme being undertaken by Down District Council. The new storm water storage tank at Castlepark is currently at design stage and work is expected to commence in late 2008, subject to funding being available and the completion of all statutory processes. Upgrades to the upstream sewerage system, including the provision of new or upgraded sewage pumping stations, will not commence until this additional storm water capacity is operational.

It is envisaged that full implementation of the proposals contained in the Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle will not be completed until 2010, but Northern Ireland Water will continue to consult with all key stakeholders as work progresses.

Traffic-Calming in Rasharkin

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which the Roads Service will consult with residents in Rasharkin, regarding the possible introduction of traffic-calming measures and a one-way system; and to give a completion date for the finalised programme of work.

(AQW 562/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that it is currently examining a number of traffic management and road safety initiatives for the village of Rasharkin. These include the Moneyleck Road, where the existing footways require upgrading and where the introduction of a short one-way traffic system may be required to accommodate a new footway link. This proposal will require consultation, and meetings with the residents and elected representatives are likely to take place later this year.

For this financial year, there are works scheduled which include improvements to the junction of Bridge Street with Main Street, where plans for a mini roundabout and an associated traffic island to assist pedestrians crossing are currently being developed. Details of these proposals will be forwarded to Ballymoney Borough Council and also to Rasharkin Community Association for comment and consultation will also take place with local traders. Details of this scheme were included in the Roads Service report which was presented to Ballymoney Borough Council in June of this year.

As you are aware, the Department for Social Development is committing around £280,000 to an environmental improvement scheme for the village and contributions to the scheme are also being made by Roads Service and Northern Ireland Electricity. I understand that work on this scheme is likely to start later this financial year for completion during 2008 and will include the removal of British Telecom and Northern Ireland Electricity service poles from the footways along Main Street, prior to the resurfacing. Some landscaping is also being considered as part of the improvement scheme.

It would be Roads Service's intention to coordinate the Moneyleck Road footway works along with the environmental improvement scheme. However, as with all proposals of this nature, implementation is subject to the successful completion of residents' consultation and the associated legislative processes. It is not therefore possible to give a completion date at this time.

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link

Mr Simpson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the number of passengers using the Belfast to Dublin rail link in the last three years. (AQO 250/08)

Mr Murphy: Passenger journey numbers on the Enterprise service using the Belfast to Dublin rail link are detailed in the table below.

	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Belfast to Dublin	836,983	819,630	861,627

Since 2004/05 passenger numbers on the cross border line have grown by 24,644 (2.9%).

Companions of Disabled People

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he will take to address the situation, whereby companions of disabled people are eligible for free travel within the Republic of Ireland, but not in Northern Ireland. (AQO 268/08)

Mr Murphy: Following a review of the north's Concessionary Fares Scheme I have made a bid as part of the Budget 2007 process for additional resources to enable me to meet the increasing costs of the current scheme and to extend the Scheme in a number of ways. Free travel for companions of people with disabilities is not included in this bid. Although I appreciate that some people with disabilities require assistance when travelling, I must prioritise the resources that may be made available and I would give a greater priority to providing free travel for people with disabilities.

Whitebridge Road, Co. Tyrone

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to improve the safety of the Whitebridge Road, from Carrickmore to Ballygawley, Co. Tyrone. (AQO 226/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service does not consider the Whitebridge Road to be unsafe and believes that it is typical of the standard of many 'C' class routes on the road network throughout the North.

That said, Roads Service has identified a need for an improvement scheme in the vicinity of the Gleneeny Road junction, which involves verge widening and improving the forward sight distance. Funding has been set aside for land acquisition, in the current financial year, and negotiations with landowners are ongoing. If the land negotiations are successful and the necessary funding is available, it is planned to finalise the design and delivery of the scheme in the 2008/2009 financial year.

Further improvements on the Whitebridge Road are not currently considered to be as high a priority as other competing needs in the Omagh District Council area, and under current levels of funding, extensive improvements to this road are unlikely to be considered for inclusion in Roads Service's network development programmes in the short term.

Crystal Alliance

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the functions that have been contracted to Crystal Alliance by Northern Ireland Water; (b) the value of the contract; and (c) the expiry date of the contract. (AQO 240/08)

Mr Murphy: Northern Ireland Water has contracted three functions to Xansa, the lead partner in Crystal Alliance.

They are:

1. The handling of all telephone and written contacts from customers on operational and billing related matters;
2. The billing and collections service for non-domestic and domestic properties; and
3. The mobile work management system to support Northern Ireland Water's operational staff in the prioritisation and tracking of tasks.

The value of the contract is £92.4 million and the expiry date is 31 March 2013.

Rapid Transit Schemes

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will give a timescale within which the reports on the various rapid transit schemes for the Belfast area will be published. (AQO 237/08)

Mr Murphy: Following completion of the current studies, I will discuss the findings with Ministerial colleagues in the Executive as part of Budget 07 process.

Once that has been done, the studies will be made available through my Department's publication scheme. Copies will also be placed in the Assembly library.

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the work carried out by his department to enhance the Belfast to Dublin rail link. (AQO 247/08)

Mr Murphy: A major scheme to upgrade the Belfast to Dublin line from Belfast to the border was completed 10 years ago. At the same time, the Enterprise services were introduced using trains supplied and maintained by both NIR and Iarnrod Eireann. These enhancements resulted in significant increases in passenger usage leading to around 1 million passengers per year using the service. While numbers have since fallen back, partly as a result of major infrastructure work south of the border, they are now increasing again.

Newry Railway Station

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will provide an update on the proposals to upgrade Newry railway station. (AQO 291/08)

Mr Murphy: The Department has given approval to Translink to proceed with the project to construct a new railway station at Newry. It is expected that, following a tendering process and the award of the contract, work will commence on site early in the new year and will take 18 months to complete.

Road Safety

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what discussions he has had with the Minister of the Environment on matters relating to road safety and road deaths. (AQO 221/08)

Mr Murphy: Road Safety is a key priority for my Department's Roads Service and for many years, my officials have been working in partnership with officials from both the Department of the Environment and the Police in the delivery of the objectives of the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy.

On 10 July 2007, I had a very useful meeting with Minister Foster and officials from the PSNI to discuss the proposed forthcoming review of the Road Safety Strategy and to consider the methodology, timescale and options to be considered in the review. I was pleased to give my support for Departmental officials participating fully in the review of the Strategy.

European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages

Mr Brolly asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he is taking to promote and comply with the European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages in his department. (AQO 272/08)

Mr Murphy: The Department issued Codes of Courtesy for both Irish and Ulster Scots in 2004 to help to implement the Charter commitments. These are on the Department's website in English, in Irish and Ulster-Scots respectively. The Codes advise on the handling of meetings, correspondence and telephone calls in Irish and Ulster-Scots to ensure, as far as possible, that responses are in the correspondent's chosen language.

In addition, Roads Service is currently preparing a policy on the use of bilingual signing in certain circumstances, including:

- the erection by Councils of town/village place name signs bearing Irish or Ulster-Scots, in addition to English;
- the display of Irish or Ulster-Scots (in addition to English) on certain worded supplementary plates to standard warning signs; and
- the inclusion of Irish or Ulster-Scots (in addition to English) on signs funded by private premise owners (e.g. tourist destinations, churches, schools and certain commercial premises), in close proximity to the destination.

My Department is planning to amend legislation to remove a legislative doubt about the use of languages other than English on traffic signs to enable the policy to be implemented.

The proposed policy changes will be subject to consideration by the Executive, and subsequently to public consultation and to legislative scrutiny by the Assembly in line with normal procedures.

Funding Major Infrastructure Projects

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he has given to other means of funding major infrastructure projects, other than securing the entire funding from the public purse. (AQO 287/08)

Mr Murphy: I can assure you that my Department endeavours to consider all appropriate funding options for major infrastructure projects. The important overriding priority is to ensure that value for money is delivered for the citizen in all cases.

In terms of infrastructure projects, the Department for Regional Development has actively pursued supplementary investment through Public Private Partnerships, Developer Contributions, EU Funding, Asset Disposal, Congestion Charging and Road Tolling.

Resurfacing of Roads

Mr Cobain asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his department's targets in relation to time periods for the resurfacing of (a) trunk roads; and (b) classified roads; and to outline the performance of his department in relation to these targets.

(AQO 244/08)

Mr Murphy: In order to maintain and extend the life of a road, it is important that maintenance is carried out at an optimal time. Whilst my Department's Roads Service has targets which relate to the length of the road network resurfaced each year, they do not have published targets relating to the time period between resurfacing. You may, however, be interested to know how the actual resurfacing treatments compare with the recommended good practice frequencies. The table below illustrates the actual treatment frequencies applied during 2005/06 and 2006/07.

Road type	Treatment	Treatment frequency (years)
		Good practice	2005/06	2006/07
Trunk Roads	Resurface	1 in 20	1 in 29	1 in 43
Classified Roads	Resurface	1 in 25	1 in 33	1 in 40

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013)

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to confirm that financial support for town centre regeneration and marketing efforts will be removed from the new Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013), and if so, whether financial support for this activity will continue to be delivered by district councils, and increased in future years, through the Department's Financial Support Programme.

(AQW 273/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): Town Centre Management and marketing work specifically, had previously attracted funding under the EU Building Sustainable Prosperity (BSP) programme. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has informed me that no money has been set aside for town centre regeneration within the new EU Competitiveness Programme, which will replace the BSP programme. However, the programme will allow for strategic business development activities including urban and rural development.

My Department has recently started a review of its policy on the provision of funding for town centre regeneration, including all existing and potential delivery mechanisms. I will make the results of this policy review available to you as early as possible.

Energy Efficiency

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she has taken to ensure that people who are living in their own home, and landlords of privately-rented accommodation, are aware of all methods and schemes available to ensure energy efficiency; and to minimise the prospect of them, or their tenants, suffering from fuel poverty.

(AQW 352/08)

Ms Ritchie: My Department is committed to ensuring that information reaches those eligible for assistance under its measures for tackling fuel poverty. The Eaga Partnership, which manages the Warm Homes Scheme on behalf of the Department, achieves this through both targeted mailshots and partnership arrangements with a range of organisations in the voluntary and community sector and the health sector to disseminate key information. The Eaga Partnership also works with the Social Security Agency and the Rates Collection Agency to target householders who are in receipt of a qualifying benefit and who privately rent or own their own home.

The Housing Executive, in its role as Home Energy Conservation Authority for Northern Ireland has developed an energy improvement strategy and annual marketing plans to promote the concept of energy efficiency to the general public. They also fund voluntary bodies, such as National Energy Action and the Energy Saving Trust's Advice Centre, who raise energy efficiency awareness through their activities.

Cold Weather Winter Fuel Payments

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail her department's expenditure on Cold Weather Winter Fuel Payments. (AQW 356/08)

Ms Ritchie: Expenditure on Winter Fuel payments is as follows:

Financial Year	Expenditure
2004/2005	£49.9m
2005/2006	£50.2m
2006/2007	£50.6m

Expenditure on Cold Weather payments is as follows:

Financial Year	Expenditure
2003/2004	£620,000
2004/2005	£6,000*
2005/2006	£1,000*
2006/2007	£1,000*

* Payments were in respect of arrears for previous years but processed during the year payment was made. 2003/2004 was the last year in which the qualifying conditions for Cold Weather Payments prevailed.

Fuel Poverty

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development, in light of her announcement of 17 May 2007, which stated that, in 2006/07, £70 million was dedicated to tackling fuel poverty, to detail exactly how these funds were spent. (AQW 357/08)

Ms Ritchie: Funds were allocated as follows: £20.4 million for the Warm Homes Scheme and £50.2 million for Winter Fuel Payments in the 2006/2007 financial year.

The Housing Executive's Improvement and Maintenance Programme also contains a fuel poverty focus, namely through its Heating Replacement Programme and Multi-Element Improvement Programme. The funding for the 2006/2007 financial year was approximately £24.2 million.

Warm Homes Scheme

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development, in light of the £44 million provided to the Warm Homes Scheme, to detail the uptake of the scheme, broken down by parliamentary constituency; and to give a breakdown of how these funds were spent. (AQW 358/08)

Ms Ritchie: As stated at the Fuel Poverty Debate in the Assembly on 18 September, £44 million has been provided for initiatives such as the Housing Executive's Improvement and Maintenance Programme as well as the Warm Homes Scheme.

The Housing Executive's Improvement and Maintenance Programme also contains a fuel poverty focus, namely through its Heating Replacement Programme and Multi-Element Improvement Programme. The funding for the last financial year was approximately £24.2 million.

The Warm Homes Scheme funding for the last financial year was approximately £20.4 million. £1.7 million of this was spent on a range of services across Northern Ireland, including benefit entitlement checks and fees for scheme management. £18.798 million was spent on heating and insulation measures. The breakdown of this expenditure by parliamentary constituency is as follows:

HEATING SYSTEMS FITTED

Constituency	No. of Homes	Value of Works Completed
Newry & Armagh	431	£1,660,716.64
Mid Ulster	411	£1,614,661.46
Upper Bann	388	£1,431,288.27
Fermanagh & South Tyrone	333	£1,316,625.83
Foyle	312	£1,139,651.94
South Down	275	£1,065,753.34
West Tyrone	269	£1,085,294.01
South Antrim	181	£628,597.19
North Antrim	166	£563,573.00
Belfast West	158	£558,690.71
Belfast North	146	£459,429.07
East Londonderry	140	£500,008.91
Lagan Valley	131	£480,022.16
Strangford	97	£343,670.00
East Antrim	80	£266,079.00
Belfast East	70	£215,264.89
North Down	52	£173,313.00
Belfast South	36	£117,935.00
Total	3,676	£13,620,574.42

INSULATION MEASURES FITTED

Constituency	No. of Homes	Value of Works Completed
Newry & Armagh	876	£519,025.39
South Down	699	£414,854.17
Upper Bann	663	£340,828.35
West Tyrone	634	£354,671.31
South Antrim	611	£297,234.41
Belfast North	567	£224,490.28
Mid Ulster	557	£329,243.93
Belfast West	485	£166,830.53
Fermanagh & South Tyrone	476	£289,236.29
Foyle	467	£166,957.81
East Londonderry	418	£202,381.59
Lagan Valley	413	£218,588.55
East Antrim	401	£182,155.21

Constituency	No. of Homes	Value of Works Completed
Strangford	374	£184,093.85
North Antrim	339	£198,172.88
Belfast East	321	£134,933.19
North Down	315	£146,664.03
Belfast South	194	£807,744.04
Total	8810	£5,178,105.81

TOTAL VALUE OF WORKS

Constituency	Total Value of Works Completed
Newry & Armagh	£2,179,742.03
Mid Ulster	£1,943,905.39
Upper Bann	£1,772,116.62
Fermanagh & South Tyrone	£1,605,862.12
South Down	£1,480,607.51
West Tyrone	£1,439,965.32
Foyle	£1,306,609.75
South Antrim	£925,831.60
Belfast South	£925,679.04
North Antrim	£761,745.88
Belfast West	£725,521.24
East Londonderry	£702,390.50
Lagan Valley	£698,610.71
Belfast North	£683,919.35
Strangford	£527,763.85
East Antrim	£448,234.21
Belfast East	£350,198.08
North Down	£319,977.03
Total	£18,798,680.23

Child Support Agency

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development what is her assessment of how money lost by the Child Support Agency through fraud and error compares with that in other regions of the United Kingdom; and with the equivalent body in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 384/08)

Ms Ritchie: Current fraud and error figures are unavailable for other United Kingdom regions and therefore a comparative assessment cannot be made.

The Republic of Ireland does not have an organisation equivalent to the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency.

Child Support Agency

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development what is her assessment of the administrative cost to the Child Support Agency of recouping £1 in child maintenance, compared to that in other regions of the United Kingdom; and to the equivalent body in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 385/08)

Ms Ritchie: In 2006-07 it cost the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency £0.87 to arrange or collect £1 of child maintenance.

The Great Britain Child Support Agency has reported provisional figures for 2006-07. Based on these figures it cost the Great Britain Child Support Agency £0.57 to arrange or collect £1 of child maintenance.

The main reasons for the difference in cost of collection between the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency and the Great Britain Child Support Agency are:

- Northern Ireland has a higher proportion of non resident parents on benefit resulting in lower maintenance assessments. However it costs the Agency the same to assess and maintain these cases and as it does for private cases.
- The Great Britain Agency has the advantage of economies of scale.

As a result direct comparison between the two Agencies is not possible.

The Republic of Ireland does not have an organisation equivalent to the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency.

Housing Executive Properties

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties that are currently owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Newtownards area. (AQW 386/08)

Ms Ritchie: Northern Ireland Housing Executive has 4008 domestic properties in the Newtownards area. This includes 2121 properties in Newtownards town.

Housing Executive Waiting List

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list, who have identified Newtownards as one of their areas of choice. (AQW 387/08)

Ms Ritchie: 2951 applicants have indicated Newtownards as their 1st or 2nd preference area for social housing. 2062 of these have more than 30 points and are therefore considered to be in housing stress.

Housing Executive Properties

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Ballygowan area. (AQW 416/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31 March 2007, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive had 78 domestic properties in Ballygowan.

Housing Associations Property

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties owned by Housing Associations in (i) Newtownards; (ii) Comber; (iii) Saintfield; and (iv) Ballygowan. (AQW 417/08)

Ms Ritchie: The number of properties owned by Registered Housing Associations in the towns identified is as follows:

- (i) Newtownards – 134 self-contained units with a further 216 bedspaces.
- (ii) Comber – 69 self-contained units with a further 72 bedspaces.
- (iii) Saintfield – 10 self-contained units.
- (iv) Ballygowan – 1 self-contained unit.

A self-contained unit is a dwelling house and also an apartment in a sheltered housing scheme.

A bedspace is a unit in a building or scheme containing single or shared rooms which lack exclusive use of bath/shower, WC or cooking facilities.

Housing Executive Waiting List

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list, who have identified Ballygowan as one of their areas of choice. (AQW 418/08)

Ms Ritchie: 75 applicants have indicated Ballygowan as a 1st or 2nd preference area for social housing, 54 of these have more than 30 points and are therefore considered to be in housing stress.

Child Support Policy

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development if she will provide an update on the steps she intends to take in light of the changes being proposed for child support policy and delivery in Great Britain. (AQW 467/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill which was introduced by the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions at Westminster on 5 June 2007, seeks to put into effect changes recommended by Sir David Henshaw in his report, which would:

- remove the requirement for parents with care who claim benefits to be treated as applying for child maintenance;
- encourage parents to make their own arrangements by increasing the amount of maintenance which parents with care on benefit can keep before their benefits are affected (known as “disregard”);
- simplify and streamline the child maintenance assessment process by, for example, using the latest available tax year information as the basis for calculating child maintenance;
- improve collection and enforcement processes; and
- increase efforts to collect and manage debt.

The Bill also provides for a Non-Departmental Public Body (the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Commission) to replace the Child Support Agency in Britain as the deliverer of the new service.

Under the parity arrangements which currently apply, I would intend to bring forward similar policy changes for Northern Ireland and will be taking proposals to the Executive and Assembly later this year and consulting with the Social Development Committee.

In relation to the matter of service delivery, I have concluded that the existing Northern Ireland Child Support Agency should be wound up and service delivery brought under the direct control of my Department. In reaching this decision I took account of the different scale of the service provided here and the need to maintain the focus on improving the service to our clients.

Housing Executive Properties

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the addresses of the ten vacant properties sold by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Ards area between 1 April 2004 and 31 March 2007; and to identify the value received on the sale of each of the properties. (AQW 472/08)

Ms Ritchie: The details of the ten vacant properties sold by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Ards area between 1 April 2004 and 31 March 2007 are as follows:

	£k
2004/2005
17 – 33 Cedar / 2 – 22 Calmia Newtownards	410
32 Windmill Road Millisle	76
2005/2006
114 Killinchy Road Comber	179
106 Comber Road Killinchy	100
1 Murdocks Lane, Donaghadee	125
2006/2007
49 Portaferry Road Cloghey	100
51 Lisbarnett Road Comber	164
83 Newtownards Road, Donaghadee	180
6 Broadway, Ballywalter	127
2007/2008
22 Tullynakill Road Comber	220

Housing Executive Properties

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the addresses of the six plots of land sold by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the Ards area between 1 April 2004 and 31 March 2007; and to identify the value received on the sale of each of the plots. (AQW 473/08)

Ms Ritchie: The details of the six plots of land sold by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive are as follows:

LAND SALES

Details of Land	Value Received
2004/2005 Adjacent to 32 Dunsey Way Comber	£8k
2005/2006 12 East Street, Donaghadee	£101k
2006/2007 88-92 Moss Road Millisle	£105k
2006/2007 Comber By Pass	£234k
2006/2007 Playground at Boyd Ave Kircubbin	£85k
2007/2008 217 Killaughey Road, Donaghadee	£40k

Housing Executive Properties

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties that have been allocated in (i) Newtownards; (ii) Comber; (iii) Saintfield; and

(iv) Ballygowan, in each of the last three years. (AQW 475/08)

Ms Ritchie: The number of Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties allocated is as follows:

	Yr to June 2005	Yr to June 2006	Yr to June 2007
Newtownards Town	152	152	160
Comber	13	11	20
Saintfield	4	0	3
Ballygowan	0	2	1

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, for each of the last three years, the number of maintenance application forms that have been submitted to the Child Support Agency; and the number of these applications that have resulted in a maintenance calculation being carried out, excluding nil assessments. (AQW 500/08)

Ms Ritchie: The number of applications received in Northern Ireland Child Support Agency for the last three years and the number of these applications that have resulted in a maintenance calculation being carried out are as follows:

	2004-05	2005-06	2006-07
Number of applications	9175	8972	8848
Number of maintenance calculations	2408	2891	3001

Figures in relation to NIL assessments are not readily available and could only be obtained by means of a special administrative exercise that would entail a disproportionate cost. NIL assessments are therefore included in the overall totals.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people suffering from epilepsy who have been awarded the high rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance, in the years 2004/05; 2005/06; and 2006/07. (AQW 511/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Department does not hold the information in the exact form requested. The information set out in the table below reflects the number of customers awarded the higher rate of mobility component of Disability Living Allowance where epilepsy was the main disabling factor and where the award took effect from a date in the years shown. These figures may change if awards made in the future are backdated to an earlier year.

Financial Year	DLA Awards (High Rate Mobility Component where Epilepsy is the main disabling condition)
2004/05	95
2005/06	101
2006/07	77

Housing Executive Properties

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of properties owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and (ii) the number of people on the waiting list, in the Ballymena Borough Council area. (AQW 557/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31 March 2007 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive owned 2,909 domestic properties in the Ballymena Borough Council area.

At 31 March 2007 there were 1483 applicants on the waiting list in the Ballymena Borough Council area. Of these 816 had more than 30 points and are therefore deemed to be in Housing Stress.

Durlston Pastoral Care Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to explain the reasons for the delay in the hand-over of two vacant houses in Dunclug Gardens, Ballymena, to the Durlston Pastoral Care Centre, since it was offered the properties by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in spring 2007. (AQW 561/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Durlston Pastoral Care Centre initially requested three properties from the Housing Executive. The block in which the properties were located however also included one privately owned property and was within phase two of the regeneration strategy for the estate.

In pursuing an alternative Dunclug Gardens option, the Group also wanted a tenanted property. The tenant was however unwilling to consider alternative accommodation and so the transfer is proceeding on the basis of two properties in Dunclug Gardens. A planning application for change of use in respect of these two properties was made by the Housing Executive at the beginning of September 2007 and planning approval is awaited. Once this is received hand-over of the properties to the Pastoral Care Centre will proceed.

In the meantime I understand that the Durlston Pastoral Care Centre continues to operate from premises in Durlston House, Dunclug.

Mislaid Benefit Claim Forms

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to address the issue of mislaid benefit claim forms, and accompanying personal information, within the Social Security Agency. (AQO 212/08)

Ms Ritchie: Each year the Social Security Agency receives over 200,000 benefit claim forms and almost 3 million other items of benefit related correspondence. Given such volumes, unfortunately there are occasions when items are mislaid, which is usually due to human error. When such instances are brought to the Agency's attention urgent steps are taken to locate the missing item, and if necessary, action is taken to obtain a replacement from the customer. As current systems in general operate effectively, I have no specific plans to alter current arrangements for the handling of correspondence received from customers, though systems are kept under constant review.

Charities

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to tighten up the regulation and governance of charities in Northern Ireland. (AQO 264/08)

Ms Ritchie: The reform of charities legislation is a priority for me and I wish to introduce a Bill for consideration by the Assembly this autumn. I am presently awaiting the agreement of my Executive colleagues. This legislation will ensure that we have a robust regulatory framework in place for charities in Northern Ireland who do an immense amount of good work for some of the most disadvantaged in our communities.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to make the application procedure for Disability Living Allowance easier for those entitled to claim it. (AQO 228/08)

Ms Ritchie: Disability Living Allowance is an extremely complex benefit and the Social Security Agency is required by legislation to gather relevant information to assist in determining entitlement. The Agency works with the Department for Work and Pensions and the voluntary sector in an effort to simplify application procedures and this work is ongoing. For example a revised Disability Living Allowance (Adult) claim form, Crystal Marked by the Plain English Campaign, was introduced in April this year to simplify the form further. The Benefit Enquiry Line, which is a free phone service, provides the customer with the opportunity to discuss and obtain advice on claim form completion. Customers are able to complete a claim form in different ways. They can opt for a telephone interview, which can be arranged at a mutually agreed time; arrange an appointment to have the form completed at a face-to-face interview or, using the DSD internet site, complete and submit the form online.

Affordable Housing

Mr Attwood asked the Minister for Social Development if she will give an update on the introduction of the developer contribution towards affordable housing in new private housing developments.

(AQO 259/08)

Ms Ritchie: This issue is primarily a matter for my colleagues Arlene Foster MLA and Conor Murphy MLA. However, I have supported joint working between the Department for Regional Development, the Department of the Environment and the Department for Social Development to progress the relevant Semple recommendations. The Joint Working Group is chaired by the Department for Regional Development. To date members have explored other affordable housing solutions and developer contributions aspects. Work has started on the revisions required to Article 40 / HS2 / PPS12 to facilitate the inclusion of intermediate housing and to revise the policy to ensure delivery of the developer contribution element.

Whilst an assessment of affordable housing schemes in England, Scotland and the Republic of Ireland identified individual merits for each, it also highlighted that private finance alone will not deliver such schemes and there is generally a significant cost to the public purse. There is also a need for specialist teams to negotiate with developers, and in the other jurisdictions it has taken on average five years to bring housing on stream. Precise mechanisms to effect the developer contribution are key to an effective solution.

The necessary consultation process, and any legislative requirements, will extend the time taken from policy development to actual implementation and real effect. Recent Judicial Reviews serve as a reminder to adhere to the required consultation processes.

Woodside Forest Park

Ms J McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to outline her responsibility in relation to the Woodside Forest Park in West Belfast. (AQO 283/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Department for Social Development owns the land in question and it is managed by Belfast Regeneration Office. The 'Woodside Forest Park' is not a designated forest park as such but is rather an area of open space amenity land, which runs from the Stewartstown Road to the Bell Steele Road in the Poleglass area of West Belfast. The majority of this land is an attractive wooded glen with a pathway network running through it.

I am of course aware of the concerns about anti-social activities associated with the area and indeed the more recent, serious assaults which have taken place. My Department is working closely with others, including the Housing Executive, Lisburn City Council, the Colin Neighbourhood Partnership, and the Police Service, to try to tackle these problems.

As an interim measure the Department has commissioned Conservation Volunteers Northern Ireland to carry out some work in and around the main footways in the glen. This work commenced at the weekend past. A major programme of environmental improvement works is planned for the area next year subject to agreement on the extinguishment of a number of public rights of way which is being taken forward by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Decentralisation of Social Services

Mr Francie Molloy asked the Minister for Social Development what consideration she will give, as part of the Executive strategy to support rural communities, to the decentralisation of social services to local offices, and in particular Disability Living Allowance and Incapacity Benefit, to make these more accessible.

(AQO 260/08)

Ms Ritchie: I am committed to the Executive's strategy to support rural communities and I would highlight the fact that a substantial proportion of Social Security Staff is already deployed in local offices. I have no plans to decentralise the delivery of Disability Living Allowance or Incapacity Benefit to local offices. Customers who require information and advice or help with completing any benefit application form can call into their local Social Security or Jobs and Benefits Office.

Social Housing

Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Social Development what provision she is making to increase the number of social housing units in the Dungannon and South Tyrone area. (AQO 243/08)

Ms Ritchie: The current five year social housing development programme makes provision for 28 schemes totalling 302 units in the Council area.

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has set up an internal focus group to address the various social housing issues in the Dungannon District including the following measures –

- A revisit of the programme to confirm sufficient units programmed.
- A dedicated Housing executive resource for three months to supplement the Housing Association focus on site search.
- Direct contact with local estate agents to raise awareness of site requirements.
- Reconfirming the full extent of Housing Executive land assets in the local area.
- Examining potential use of infill sites.
- Maximising the use of “existing satisfactory” purchase schemes.

I have also asked the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to draw up and cost a strategy for bringing back into use the empty homes mentioned in the Semple report. I have also asked Government Departments, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Local Councils to rigorously examine their current land-holdings and to advise me of any surplus land they may hold which would be suitable for social housing schemes.

Social Housing

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development if she will give an update on the waiting list for social housing in North Belfast. (AQO 284/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31 March 2007 there were 2354 applicants on the waiting list for North Belfast, made up of 1,151 singles, 618 small families, 329 elderly, 108 large families, 122 small adult households and 26 large adult households. Of the overall total, 1,359 applicants have more than 30 points.

Child Poverty

Mr Cobain asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to monitor and report on severe child poverty in her department’s Households Below Average Income Report 2005-2006, using the methodology applied in Save the Children’s report ‘Severe Child Poverty in the United Kingdom’.

(AQO 238/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Households Below Average Income Report for 2005-06 was published by my Department on 2 August 2007. It was accompanied by a press release and is available on the Department’s website.

I am aware that there is a great deal of academic debate concerning the definition and analysis of poverty. Academics, charities and government departments amongst others, make use of data from this report to carry out their own research and to develop experimental methodologies. Whilst the assumptions applied from these experimental methodologies do not necessarily reflect current policy, they do contribute to the wider discussion on tackling poverty and in particular, child poverty. In particular the recent report from Save the Children, ‘A 2020 Vision’, highlighted the challenge ahead for the Executive if we are to eradicate child poverty in the North by 2020.

Within my own Department I am determined to do all that I can to tackle Child Poverty. This year the Social Security Agency will target 5,000 families in an innovative Benefit Up-Take programme aimed specifically at families with either three or more children or a child with a disability. In addition forthcoming changes to the work of the Child Support Agency will seek to reduce poverty and disadvantage by ensuring that parents who live apart maintain their children. I look forward to seeing what impact these initiatives make on the level of child poverty in the North.

Housing Crisis

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the timeframe for the development of the Housing Taskforce’s response to the recommendations of the Semple Report; and if this response will form the basis of the strategic departmental response to the housing crisis. (AQO 282/08)

Ms Ritchie: I set up and chair an Interdepartmental Affordability Review Implementation Group for the specific purpose of developing and delivering on an affordability implementation plan. The Group has made an initial assessment of the recommendations, identifying those recommendations which are acceptable, acceptable in principle or not acceptable. A draft implementation plan has also been developed and will be finalised by Christmas 2007. I have also established as Advisory Panel of Experts. I have asked them to present a full progress report before Christmas 2007.

Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy

Mr P Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail her commitment to the neighbourhood renewal strategy; and to outline what new resources she and her Ministerial colleagues will make available to ensure the success of this strategy.

(AQO 281/08)

Ms Ritchie: I am fully committed to the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy which works across Government to tackle the key causes of deprivation and disadvantage in a strategic and joined up way. I am determined that the implementation of this Strategy will make a real difference to the life chances and quality of life of people living in the most deprived areas of Northern Ireland.

Government Departments, alongside their Non-departmental Public Bodies, are considering how they might respond to locally developed action plans, which detail the needs and priorities for each Neighbourhood.

A Neighbourhood Renewal Investment Fund of £60 million has been available for the period 2005 until March 2008, to supplement the very significant existing Government funding in Neighbourhood Renewal areas. I believe that additional funding needs to be found to support the delivery of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy.

I have therefore made a bid under the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland for additional resources to be used to support Neighbourhood Renewal over the next budget period. I have also asked other departments to consider how they might best meet the priorities set out in Neighbourhood Action Plans. Future funding will, of course, be dependent on the outcome of the Executive Committee's discussions on the budget.

Regeneration

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development if she will give an update on the regeneration process at the Crumlin Road and Girdwood sites in North Belfast.
(AQO 256/08)

Ms Ritchie: The site of the former Crumlin Road Gaol and Girdwood Army Barracks in North Belfast is the subject of a masterplanning process at present.

I have recently taken receipt of a draft Masterplan for the site prepared by consultants, under the auspices of the Crumlin Road Gaol and Girdwood Park Advisory Panel. The plan is illustrative and demonstrates the potential future uses of the site. At this stage, no prospective use has been precluded. In keeping with its mixed-use zoning, the site could be used for tourism, leisure, business development or housing, including social housing.

I expect to issue the draft Masterplan for public consultation and will then wish to take full account of all views expressed in relation to the development of this key regeneration site.

When coming to decisions on the way forward, I will take account of a variety of factors, including the need for regeneration and obligations contained in Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act.

In advance of such decisions, a £1m programme of repairs and restoration has been completed recently to maintain the fabric of the Grade A listed Gaol building. In recent weeks I have also agreed to open the Gaol for tours to provide public access through to December 2007. Both the recent works and the Gaol tours will hopefully help to highlight the longer-term development potential of this wonderful landmark building and the opportunity that exists to regenerate the overall 27 acre Gaol and Girdwood site.

Child Poverty

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development to outline her dissemination policy for the Households Below Average Income Report 2005-2006; and what plans she has for public engagement on such issues, in particular the level of child poverty.
(AQO 211/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Households Below Average Income Report for 2005-06 was published by my Department on 2 August 2007. It was accompanied by a press release and is available on the Department's website.

I am aware that there is a great deal of academic debate concerning the definition and analysis of poverty. Academics, charities and government departments amongst others, make use of data from this report to carry out their own research and to develop experimental methodologies. Whilst the assumptions applied from these experimental methodologies do not necessarily reflect current policy, they do contribute to the wider discussion on tackling poverty and in particular, child poverty. In particular the recent report from Save the Children, 'A 2020 Vision', highlighted the challenge ahead for the Executive if we are to eradicate child poverty in the North by 2020.

Within my own Department I am determined to do all that I can to tackle Child Poverty. This year the Social Security Agency will target 5,000 families in an innovative Benefit Up-Take programme aimed specifically at families with either three or more children or a child with a disability. In addition forthcoming changes to the work of the Child Support Agency will seek to reduce poverty and disadvantage by ensuring that parents who live apart maintain their children. I look forward to seeing what impact these initiatives make on the level of child poverty in the North.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Assembly Shop

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission to outline whether or not the Assembly shop can accept all visitors' credit and debit cards, with particular reference to American visitors. (AQW 393/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): The Assembly shop can accept all U.K. credit and debit cards and American Express has been available for customer transactions from March of this year. To-date no American Express transaction has been sought by customers.

Assembly Shop

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission what plans it has to extend the gift selection in the Assembly shop. (AQW 394/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): Eures are currently exploring new and innovative ideas to extend the current gift shop selection. Such as:

- new range of quality chocolate;
- new N.I. Assembly crested cuff links;
- wine - N.I. Assembly crested wine;
- CD Picture Postcards - a full DVD/CD picture postcard which is very light weight and easy to carry;
- a new range of business gifts, folders, pens, credit card holders etc.; and
- N.I. Assembly tie pin; and ladies brooch.

Eures are also considering a new on-line ordering system that could be accessed via the N.I. Assembly web page. Eures management are keen to encourage a greater use of the shop by both internal and external customers and extending the gift selection forms part of this. Of course, any new lines will require Assembly Commission approval.

Assembly Shop

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission to detail the sales figures for each stocked item sold in the Assembly shop, broken down by month, in each of the last two years. (AQW 395/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): The Assembly Commission awarded the Support Services contract from Mountcharles to Eures in April 07 and as such we do not hold retrospective sales figures by stocked item over that period. Eures are currently in the process of implementing a computerised stock system which will collect information in this manner. However, to assist with your query, we attach a table of net sales figures for stock sold from the Assembly Gift shop by month over the previous two years.

Net Sales figures for the Assembly Gift Shop from March 2007 are as follows:

Month	Net Sales	Month	Net Sales
August 2005	£285.40	September 2006	£1639.86
September 2005	£629.80	October 2006	£1116.83
October 2005	£272.49	November 2006	£856.85
November 2005	£95.50	December 2006	£903.13
December 2005	£221.69	January 2007	£605.94
January 2006	£61.30	February 2007	£319.20
February 2006	£121.11	March 2007	£222.38
March 2006	£608.22	April 2007	£1040.78
April 2006	£703.04	May 2007	£1590.86
May 2006	£1364.16	June 2007	£4232.10
June 2006	£2003.77	July 2007	£1510.64
July 2006	£1204.82	August 2007	£1935.72
August 2006	£404.97

Assembly Shop

Mr Leslie Cree asked the Assembly Commission to provide a list of the stock currently available in the Assembly shop. (AQW 396/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): Full list of Stock

- Confectionery - Crisps, chocolate bars, soft drinks, boxed chocolates.
- Stationery - Greetings cards, wrapping paper, money wallets.
- Post - 1st and 2nd Class postage stamps.
- Papers - Sale of eight morning newspapers and the Evening Belfast Telegraph.
- Toiletries - Headache tablets, ladies tights, body spray, toothpaste and toothbrush.
- Assembly Gifts - Pencils, rulers, erasers, postcards x 2 type, books, Parker pens, roller ball pens, handkerchiefs x 4 type, mounted pictures, framed pictures, Tyrone Crystal paperweight, Assembly crested cuff links, Credit Card holders, A4 folders, bookmarks, tinned mints, boxed toffee, boxed fudge, jars of sweets x 3 varieties, crested thimbles.

Assembly Shop

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission what plans it has to meet with tour bus operators visiting the Stormont Estate, with a view to allowing passengers on such buses to visit the Assembly shop.

(AQW 397/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): At present there are no plans to meet with tour bus operators. However, as Parliament Buildings is open to the public, visitors are entitled to access the Great Hall and the Assembly gift shop during the hours of 9.00am – 4.00pm.

Security Arrangements for Parliament Buildings

Mr McCallister asked the Assembly Commission to provide an update on security arrangements for Parliament Buildings.

(AQO 198/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): Following the Commission's approval of the security review's recommendations, work has been progressing on all fronts. You may already be aware that a number of the recommendations have already been implemented; such as:

- upgrading exterior lighting;
- updating the public address system;
- devising crisis management plans; and
- improvements to plant room security and mail screening.

With regard to other recommendations the current position is as follows:

- the service level agreement with PSNI is nearing completion and will be brought to the Commission for consideration before final sign-off. This will provide a permanent police unit in Parliament Buildings and its environs on all week days from October with particular emphasis on sitting days. This will increase the police complement to one sergeant and eight constables. Currently cover is provided by two permanent officers with additional support from outlying police units.
- Work on the external search facility has commenced and this will provide the impetus to complete all perimeter and associated security measures.
- Work on traffic flow and pedestrian restrictions is also being progressed.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 12 October 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Planning Appeals

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline the decision-making process for planning appeals, with specific reference to the role of each individual Commissioner responsible in making decisions on appeals, and the involvement of the Chief Commissioner in reaching such decisions. (AQW 435/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley and Mr M McGuinness): The Planning Appeals Commission is a statutory appellate body established under Article 110 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to decide a wide range of appeals against decisions of the Department of the Environment's Planning Service and to report on various matters under planning and other legislation.

Given the independent tribunal status of the Commission, it is appropriate that the Chief Commissioner should provide a response regarding the information being sought and we understand he has written to you as follows.

"I have been asked to provide you with information requested in the above Assembly Question.

The process for determining planning appeals is set out in the Commissions publication, "Procedures for Planning Appeals", which is available on our website under "Publications". Please refer to paragraphs 6 and 46 to 48 of this document, which clearly explains our procedures.

The evidence presented in each appeal is considered by the appointed Commissioner who determines the appeal, if making an individual decision, or who reports to a group of not less than 4 Commissioners, if a collective decision is required. In the latter circumstances the appeal is determined by the majority of the group.

The Chief Commissioner is involved in appeals as an appointed Commissioner to determine appeals and also as a member of the collective decision-making group.

I would be happy to provide any further information you require arising out of this response or to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable."

Planning Appeals

Mr McKay asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the backlog of planning appeals at the end of August 2007, in (i) the Moyle District Council area; (ii) the Ballymena Borough Council area; and (iii) the Ballymoney Borough Council area; and to detail the number and percentage of these appeals that were successful in the 2006/07 year.

(AQW 480/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The Planning Appeals Commission is a statutory appellate body established under Article 110 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to decide a wide range of appeals against decisions of the Department of the Environment's Planning Service and to report on various matters under planning and other legislation.

Given the independent tribunal status of the Commission, we have asked the Chief Commissioner to provide a response directly to you. We understand the Commissioner has responded to you in the following terms:

"I have been asked to reply to the above assembly question.

2006/07
Council Area	Backlog at 31 August 2007	No. of Decisions Made	No. Successful	% Successful
Moyle	35	11	3	27.3
Ballymena	145	38	14	36.8
Ballymoney	46	21	7	33.3

I would be happy to provide any further information you require arising out of this response or to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable."

Gender Equality Strategy

Ms J McCann asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to indicate when a date will be set for a meeting between the Gender Equality Unit and the Gender Advisory Panel, in order to further the implementation of the Gender Equality Strategy. (AQW 550/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The Unit plans to meet with the Gender Advisory Panel in November 2007 to take forward the implementation of the Gender Equality Strategy.

Annual Remembrance Ceremonies

Mr Cree asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what discussions it has had with the Royal British Legion in regard to this year's Annual Remembrance ceremonies and appeal.

(AQO 359/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has had no discussions with the Royal British Legion in regard to this year's Annual Remembrance ceremonies and appeal.

Inward Investment

Mr P Maskey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it is taking to fully realise the potential for inward investment in the improving political climate. (AQO 345/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

We refer the member to the recent answer given to his Assembly Question AQO 164/08 on Monday 24 September which sets out our engagement in a range of major initiatives designed to encourage investment, particularly from the US.

North-South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr McElduff asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail arrangements and emerging agenda items for the next meeting of the North-South Ministerial Council, and to outline the schedule of North-South Ministerial Council meetings to take place over the coming months.

(AQO 367/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: At the Plenary meeting on 17 July 2007, the Council considered and approved a schedule of North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) meetings to take place over the coming months. A copy of the Schedule has been placed in the Library.

The NSMC Secretariat is working with relevant Departments to agree precise dates for these meetings.

Prior to each NSMC meeting, the Executive and Assembly will be given information on the date, agenda and Ministerial attendance. Following the meeting, a report will be made to the Assembly.

Undocumented Irish

Mr P J Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it will take to assist the 'undocumented Irish' in their desire to attain legal status in America. (AQO 306/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The issue of undocumented Irish people living in the United States is one that the Northern Ireland Bureau is watching carefully. The term "undocumented" describes the immigration status of people who do not have the federal documentation to show that they are legally entitled to work, visit or live in the US. Some of the undocumented come from Northern Ireland although the numbers are not known.

The Embassy of Ireland has taken the political and diplomatic lead on this issue in Washington DC and keeps the Bureau fully informed of activities.

In June 2007, the Comprehensive Immigration Reform Bill sponsored by Senator Kennedy was debated by the Senate. This Bill would have addressed the status of the undocumented in the United States. The Bill which offered a pathway to citizenship for undocumented immigrants and future arrivals was defeated by a procedural vote.

The Bureau maintains contact with organisations in the US looking after the needs of the 'undocumented'.

Attacks on Orange Halls

Mr Campbell asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what action it has taken following the debate on attacks on Orange Halls.

(AQO 364/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

On Tuesday 11 September the Assembly debated the motion: 'that this Assembly condemns all attacks on Orange Halls and calls on all political parties to use their influence to stop such sectarian attacks.'

It was a very good debate and the motion was unanimously supported by all the political parties in the Assembly. Junior Minister Kelly, who responded to the debate, undertook to forward to the Secretary of State the report of the debate for his attention since policing and justice generally, is still a reserved matter.

We wrote to the Secretary of State on 3 October enclosing a copy of the report and reiterating our strong condemnation, and that of the House, to such attacks.

Economic Development

Miss McIlveen asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to confirm that economic development is a key priority for the Executive Committee. (AQO 387/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The Executive is determined to seize this opportunity to deliver a better future for all our people. That future must be built on the foundation of a dynamic and competitive economy if we are to deliver a peaceful, just and prosperous society which benefits all our people. In this context, addressing the economic challenges we face, and providing the conditions for economic growth will be a key priority for the Executive.

European Union Agenda

Mr Ross asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail what action is being undertaken in Brussels, to ensure that Northern Ireland remains high on the European Union agenda. (AQO 336/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The visit of the European Commission's President Barroso on 1 May 2007, demonstrated that there is a reservoir of interest and goodwill in Europe towards Northern Ireland and one of the main challenges facing us is how we can best make use of that goodwill to make Northern Ireland a better place to live, work, study and invest.

Since President Barroso's visit, the deputy First Minister and both Junior Ministers have visited Brussels and met with senior European Commission officials and the UK and Irish Permanent Representatives. We plan to visit Brussels together later this year to hear at first hand of the progress being made by the European Commission Task Force that was established following President Barroso's visit.

The Task Force provides a unique opportunity for Northern Ireland to engage with Europe, both in formulation of policy and in accessing the financial assistance that is available to regions with our needs. The European Commission is committed at the highest level to making the work of the Task Force a success and we are committed to ensuring that the Executive responds with equal vigour. Senior officials from each Department have now been asked to work with the Task Force to ensure we maximise the opportunity that has been offered.

In addition to the Task Force work, we are aware that a number of Ministerial colleagues have visited Brussels and met with senior political and official figures on Departmental business. This level of engagement is important in keeping Northern Ireland in the minds of our European colleagues and we cannot emphasise enough the value of personal contact with those people in the European Commission and other bodies who are leading on the matters that are important to us.

We must also mention the work being carried out by the Office of the Northern Ireland Executive in Brussels, which is an integral part of the OFMDFM. The Office supports visiting Ministers and officials and promotes Northern Ireland's interests in the EU. As well as working to keep Departments and Ministers advised on European policy matters, the Office takes an active role in engaging with contacts within the European Institutions, other National and regional offices and civic bodies based in Brussels.

As part of this active engagement the Brussels office has managed Northern Ireland's participation in the Committee of the Regions and European Commission 'Open Days' events. Along with partners from Spain, Portugal, France, Ireland and other UK regions, Northern Ireland, through the Department of Social Development and Belfast City Council, is participating in a seminar showcasing the regeneration of Belfast's former shipbuilding areas. In a separate event, the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Special EU Programmes Body are hosting a seminar on the lessons learned from the EU Peace Programmes.

We have also engaged with Members of the European Parliament's Regional Development Committee in their recent visit to Northern Ireland and Ireland and we would pass our thanks to our colleagues in that House for their work in promoting the visit and ensuring that Northern Ireland remains high on the agenda in that important Institution.

Civic Forum

Mr Hilditch asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what plans it has to re-convene a meeting of the Civic Forum. (AQO 334/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

We are agreed on the importance of continuing to seek the views of civic society in developing policy but we recognise that the nature of our society has changed considerably since the original Forum was set up. We have therefore decided to commission a fresh review to examine the structure, membership and role of the Forum.

When this review has been completed we will present our proposals to the Executive.

Development at the Maze Site

Mr Elliott asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what discussions it has had with the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society in regard to development at the Maze site. (AQO 358/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The multi-party Maze Consultation Panel in their 2005 report recommended a rural excellence and equestrian zone, including an international exhibition centre and showgrounds. The Maze/Long Kesh Masterplan, published in May 2006, built on these proposals which have been subject to discussion with the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society (RUAS). In March 2007 the RUAS reaffirmed their interest in moving to the proposed Maze/Long Kesh development site. It would now be a matter for the RUAS to develop and bring forward their proposals and to work with any development partners who may be appointed to regenerate the Maze/Long Kesh to bring these to fruition.

Victims' Commissioner

Mrs Long asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what progress it has made in the past four weeks in relation to the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner. (AQO 377/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

We have decided to extend the appointment process and re-advertise the position. We intend to announce the new Commissioner for Victims and Survivors before the end of the year.

Programme for Government

Mr Hamilton asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give a timetable within which a Programme for Government will be published, and to detail how this will guide Executive priorities. (AQO 328/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Since devolution was restored on 8 May, the Executive has taken forward work to develop and agree a Programme for Government which, in line with the Comprehensive Spending Review settlement, will set our policy and spending priorities and plans for 2008 - 2011.

To ensure a clear alignment between our policy and spending priorities, the Executive is taking a co-ordinated approach to the development of the Programme for Government, the Budget and the Investment Strategy. We are working towards publication of these documents in draft form for consultation by early November. This will enable the Executive to take full account of the outcome of the CSR exercise.

Cost of Division

Mr McCarthy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how it intends to tackle the cost of division as set out in 'The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy'. (AQO 373/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The cost of division research was commissioned by the previous administration on 29 March 2006 and was conducted and finalised during direct rule.

We believe that by tackling the causes of division in our society, sectarianism and racism, that a reduction of consequential costs will follow.

The report focuses on just one of a range of issues which must be considered. The report itself recognises that arriving at exact costs is not possible and that the timeline for change could be very long.

For that reason we have cautioned against plucking a figure out of the air. The issue is much more complex than simply reducing the research to a figure.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Designated Water Courses

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to her answer to AQW 819/07, to detail whether or not the Rivers Agency has made approaches to riparian landowners to ensure that grilles for designated water courses are checked and cleared. (AQW 451/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): Inspection and maintenance of some 830 culvert inlet protection grilles on designated watercourses across Northern Ireland is undertaken by Rivers Agency as part of its works programme and is not deemed to be a riparian landowner responsibility. These grilles are inspected routinely by Rivers Agency's staff, either on weekly basis in vulnerable areas, or monthly in less vulnerable areas, and debris with the potential to cause obstruction to flow is removed. Additional inspections, and any necessary clearance, are undertaken during and after periods of heavy rainfall.

Similar work in respect of undesignated watercourses is a riparian landowner responsibility which can be enforced by Rivers Agency under the Drainage (Northern Ireland) Order 1973.

Rural Development Programme 2007-2013 - Action Groups

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the number of action groups that will be established to deliver the Quality of Life and Farm Family options measures of the Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme 2007-2013; (ii) what role the farming and rural community will have in the proposed Action Groups; and (iii) how the Action Groups will be selected. (AQW 452/08)

Ms Gildernew:

- (i) I expect the Councils to self define into a number of local action groups although the actual number is still being negotiated with my officials.
- (ii) Farmers and Farm Families will have a significant role to play in the Local Action Groups because they must be fully representative of the various programmes Measures (including diversification which is exclusive to farmers) and of the area they serve.
- (iii) Local Action Groups will be established following an open and transparent competitive process by the Council Clusters in their respective areas.

Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the number of farms participating in the Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme; and what efforts are being made to increase participation in the Scheme, within the Sperrins area. (AQW 454/08)

Ms Gildernew: At April 2007 there were 1351 participants (equating to 62,500 ha of land) in the Environmentally Sensitive Areas (ESA) Scheme in the Sperrins Region. The ESA Scheme is closed to further applications. The NI Countryside Management Scheme (NICMS) is an integral part of the NI Rural Development Programme (NIRDP) 2007 to 2013. Development of the NICMS is ongoing and it is anticipated that this scheme will be open to applications in late spring/early summer 2008. The opening of the NICMS will be widely promoted via the local media to encourage uptake by potential applicants throughout the North of Ireland.

New Entrants Scheme

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of successful applicants, in the West Tyrone area, who have received funding under the New Entrants Scheme. (AQW 455/08)

Ms Gildernew: Four people in West Tyrone have been cleared to submit a claim for funding under the New Entrants Scheme. Of these one has been paid, another is pending payment and two have not yet submitted their claims.

Common Fishing Strategy

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with the Minister with responsibility for fisheries in the Republic of Ireland, regarding the development of a common fishing strategy. (AQW 517/08)

Ms Gildernew: I believe there is huge potential for greater co-operation between North and South to develop a common fishing strategy for the benefit of all our fishermen. There is already close co-operation between my officials and their southern counterparts on areas such as the Irish Sea Data Enhancement Pilot, seed mussel exploitation and the sharing of information about aquaculture development. I will be meeting Minister Mary Coughlan TD soon to explore ways in which we can further develop this relationship.

Flooding at Tromra Road, Cushendall

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the progress made by the Rivers Agency and the Roads Service, in relation to addressing flooding at Tromra Road, Cushendall. (AQW 531/08)

Ms Gildernew: I understand that flooding of the Tromra Road at Cushendall was largely caused by floodwater from the Dall River, exacerbated by over-land flows, collecting in a localised hollow at Black's Bridge just south of the junction with Gault's Road. Rivers Agency and Roads Service have liaised and will continue to liaise on remedial action. Rivers Agency has undertaken limited emergency maintenance on the watercourse at Tromra Road to remove obstructions to flow, improve flow conditions in the channel and prevent further erosion of banks affecting roadways. While this maintenance will provide improvement in the hydraulic capacity of the river, it is unlikely that it will enable the channel to contain flooding of the severity of the July event. Consequently Rivers Agency is in the process of commissioning a feasibility study of flood defence improvements at the locations on Tromra Road that were affected by flooding. The commission will recommend a holistic approach taking into account not only watercourse related flooding but also flooding from roads and overland flow. Any flood defence improvements will be subject to viability, and availability of resources.

Since the flooding, the Department for Regional Development's Roads Service has also agreed to investigate longer term measures to prevent floodwater building up at this location. However, this is likely to involve extensive reshaping/resurfacing of the existing carriageway and could not be undertaken until the next financial year.

Officials from Roads Service and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Rivers Agency met in August to consider how road drainage in the wider area might be improved to enable large volumes of water to be removed more quickly from the road. Interim low-cost measures, such as creating new or widening existing outlets on Tromra Road and Glenna Road, were identified and as many of these as possible will be implemented within the current financial year.

Farmers Affected by Flooding

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the amount of compensation that has been secured for farmers affected by flooding in July 2007, who were not entitled to assistance from the 'Distress Fund' available to householders through district councils. (AQW 532/08)

Ms Gildernew: The Scheme of emergency Financial Assistance to District Councils was restricted to assisting householders, so if a farmer's household was affected then he would be eligible, but cover was not extended to any part of the business sector, including the farming industry.

Brown Crab

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the quantity of brown crab landed in Northern Ireland, in each of the last twelve months. (AQW 547/08)

Ms Gildernew: Total Brown Crab landed from September 2006 until August 2007.

Month	Live wgt (tonnes)	Value (£)
September 06	139.4263	108,100.00
October 06	162.478	136,921.8
November 06	76.6857	68,910.86
December 06	52.856	46,120.3
January 07	30.574	25,346.3
February 07	19.4149	16,087.7

Month	Live wgt (tonnes)	Value (£)
March 07	16.5526	14,021.3
April 07	17.859	14,926.8
May 07	23.6386	17,813.91
June 07	36.692	29,961.2
July 07	64.4802	51,193.12
August 07	83.622	64,045.55
Total	724.2793	593,448.84

Animal Incinerators

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will provide the addresses of all animal incinerators which are currently operating on farms across Northern Ireland.

(AQW 579/08)

Ms Gildernew: I have provided the addresses of all on-farm incinerators, which are currently approved in accordance with the Animal By-Products Regulations (NI) 2003, in the attached list.

LIST OF APPROVED ON-FARM INCINERATORS IN NORTHERN IRELAND ANIMAL BY-PRODUCTS REGULATIONS (NI) 2003

Approval number	Name	Address
ICN/405/05	Mr Alan McFarland	163 Donaghane Road, Beragh, Co Tyrone, BT79 0XE
ICN/413/05	M S Dougan	97 Redrock Road, Armagh, Co Armagh, BT60 8BN
ICN/414/05	Mr John McMenamin	24 Magherafelt Road, Dromore, Co Tyrone, BT78 3HH
ICN/415/05	Mr Adam Lawson	90 Old Eglis Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT71 7PG
ICN/418/05	Mr Liam Gerard Collins	Aghamore South, Lisnaskea, Co Fermanagh, BT92 0EB
ICN/420/05	Mr Glenn Allen	19 Garvaghey Road, Ballygawley, Co Tyrone
ICN/421/05	E Patterson	26 Springhill Road, Glennane, Co Armagh, BT60 2LF
ICN/422/05	John & Ruth Steen	56A Moghan Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT70 3BZ
ICN/423/05	Tintagh Broiler Unit	60 Letteran Road, Moneymore, Co L'Derry, BT45 7UB
ICN/424/05	Mr Gerry Loughran	72 Dunamore, Cookstown, Co Tyrone, BT80 9NX
ICN/425/05	Mr Stephen Duff	55 Dergenagh Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT70 1TW

Approval number	Name	Address
ICN/426/05	Mr Jonathon Ewing	51 Thornhill Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT70 3LP,
ICN/428/05	Mr Raymond Busby	14 Feddan Road, Ballygawley, Co Tyrone, BT70 2AP
ICN/430/05	Mr Trevor Leyburn	10 Glassdrummond Road, Middletown, Co Armagh, BT60 3QH
ICN/433/05	Mr Bingsley Bell	5 Glendavagh Road, Aughnacloy, Co Tyrone, BT69 6EZ
ICN/434/05	Mr Robert McNeill	131 Caledon Road, Aughnacloy, Co Tyrone, BT69 6HZ
ICN/435/05	Mr David Drennan	34 Drumbolg Road, Maghera, Co L'Derry, BT46 5UD
ICN/436/05	Mr John Dennis Knipe	26 Baltarran Road, Armagh, Co Armagh, BT60 4LF
ICN/437/05	Mr Leslie Knipe	10 Maydown Road, Drumsallen, Armagh, BT61 8BU
ICN/438/05	Mr William George Brown	13 Annahaul Road, Newmills, Co Tyrone, BT71 4BU
ICN/444/05	Mr Thomas Newell	360 Newry Road, Kilkeel, Co Down, BT34 4SF
ICN/445/05	Robert Kernaghan	21 Kilkivamurray Road, Castlewellan, Co Down, BT31 9QR
ICN/446/05	Mr Ian Clyde	22 Botera Upper Road, Clanabogan, Omagh, Co Tyrone, BT78 5DG
ICN/452/05	Mr E Jason Browne	99 Peacock Road, Strabane, Co Tyrone, BT82 9NF
ICN/462/05	Mr Ian Forgrave	143 Finvoy Road, Ballymoney, Co Antrim, BT53 7JL
ICN/464/05	Yvonne McCrea	60 Drumskea Road, Ballymoney, Co Antrim, BT53 7JD
ICN/465/05	Leslie Blakely	57 Bannfield Road, Rathfriland, Co Down, BT34 5HQ
ICN/468/05	John, Philip & Edith Swaile	10 Ballykilly Road, Sandholes, Cookstown, Co Tyrone, BT80 9BX
ICN/466/05	Mr P Brown	24 Bog Road, Ballymena, Co Antrim, BT44 4HH
ICN/470/05	Mr William Mark Linton	208 Drumcroone Road, Coleraine, Co L'Derry, BT51 3SQ
ICN/473/05	Mr Thomas Singleton	20 Dergnagh Road, Ballygawley, Co Tyrone, BT70 2JY
ICN/474/05	Mr Wayne Acheson	60 Killyclougher Road, Cookstown, Co Tyrone, BT80 8HA
ICN/476/05	Mr Samuel Montgomery	53 Kirk Road, Ballymoney, Co Antrim, BT53 8HB
ICN/478/05	Mr John C Wallace	123 Aughentaine Road, Clabby, Fivemiletown, Co Tyrone, BT75 0RW
ICN/481/05	Mr Mark Adams	9 Peacock Road, Sion Mills, Co Tyrone, BT82 9NN

Approval number	Name	Address
ICN/482/05	Mr John Adams	67 Kinnyglass Road, Macosquin, Coleraine, Co L'Derry, BT51 4LP
ICN/483/05	Mr Ronald Patterson	Oak Bank, Mount Prospect, Derrylin, Enniskillen, Co Fermangh, BT92 9LS
ICN/484/05	Mr W Kerr	Raceview, 51 Hallaghan Road, Sixmilecross, Co Tyrone, BT79 9DW
ICN/485/05	Mrs M Crozier	149 Seagahan Road, Collone, Co Armagh, BT60 2BT
ICN/486/05	Mr Kevin Grimes	73 Drumduff Road, Beragh, Co Tyrone, BT79 0SD
ICN/487/05	Mr Roger Latimer	131 Carnalea Road, Seskanore, Omagh, Co Tyrone, BT78 2PP
ICN/489/05	Mr Patrick Loughran	70 Loughbranken Road, Pomeroy, Co Tyrone, BT70 2SF
ICN/490/05	Mr David Ramsay	10 Culramoney Road, Ballymoney Co Antrim, BT53 8LL
ICN/492/05	Mr Brian A Hamilton	12 Loughadoo Road, Ardkeen, Kircubbin, Co Down , BT22 1HN
ICN/493/05	Mr George Knipe	151 Battleford Road, Armagh, Co Armagh, BT61 8BT
ICN/495/05	Mr Edward McDonald	6 Doogary Road, Tyan, Co Armagh BT60 4TE
ICN/496/05	Mr Kate Rodgers	14 Lisheeghan Lane, Ballymoney, Co Antrim, BT53 7JZ
ICN/497/05	Mr Lawrence & Shiona Heslip	48 Tullywhinney Road, Ballygawley Co Tyrone, BT70 2NA
ICN/498/05	Mr R Abernethy	64 Drumhubber Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT71 5EB
ICN/501/05	Mr NR & Mrs J Aiken	59 Dyan Road Caledan, Co Tyrone, BT68 4XA
ICN/502/05	Mr John Foye	25 Derryhirk Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT71 6NH
ICN/503/05	Mr Mervyn Shaw	7 Legaterriff Road, Lisburn, Co Antrim, BT28 2EY
ICN/504/05	Mr Kenneth Montgomery	42 Toberooney Road, Liscolman, Ballymoney, Co Antrim, BT53 8DN
ICN/505/05	Mr Seamus McGirr	36 Errigal Road, Ballygawley, Co Tyrone, BT70 2DQ
ICN/506/05	Mr Alistair F. Doran	38 Finulagh Road, Castlecaulfield, Co Tyrone, BT70 3DE
ICN/508/05	Mr Tom Taylor	The Palace Farm, 50 Keady Road, Armagh, Co Armagh, BT60 3NW
ICN/509/05	Mr James & Wesley George	28 Cabragh Road, Armagh, Co Armagh, BT61 8EY
ICN/512/05	A & B Jefferson	1 Tursallagh Road, Sixmilecross, Co Tyrone, BT79 9EA

Approval number	Name	Address
ICN/511/05	Mr William Jordan	8 Raveagh Road, Eskra, Omagh, Co Tyrone, BT78 1UZ
ICN/513/05	Mr Oliver Anderson	22 Flushtown Road, Sixmilecross, Co Tyrone, BT79 9DY
ICN/517/06	Mr William Keatley	7 Garrison Road, Magherafelt, Co L'derry, BT45 8RD
ICN/518/06	Mr Eugene Donnelly	55 Lettergesh Road, Dromore, Omagh, Co Tyrone, BT78 3WG
ICN/516/06	Mr Sidney Millar	26 Stillago Road, Dungannon, Co Tyrone, BT71 7QH
ICN/520/06	Mr David Preston	58 Ballymagarney Road, Loughgall, Co Armagh, BT61 8PL
ICN/523/06	Mr Mervyn Boyle	32 Gortnagross Road, Dungiven, Co L'Derry, BT47 4QP
ICN/524/06	Mr Shane Kearney	35 Belmont Road, Kilkeel, Co Down BT34 4LA
ICN/531/06	Nugent Estate	Portaferry House, 6 Coach Road, Portaferry, Co Down, BT22 1PP
ICN/533/06	Mr Charles Crawford, Erne Eggs Ltd	Manor Waterhouse Farm, Lisnaskea, Co Fermanagh, BT92 0BN
ICN/537/06	Mr Nigel & Jim Irwin	Irwin Bros, 3 Carrowcolman Road, Eglisish, Co Tyrone, BT70 1LF
ICN/538/06	Mr Seamus Patterson	80 Main Street, Randalstown, Antrim, Co Antrim, BT41 3BB
ICN/539/06	Mr Stanley Gordon	Shean Church-Hill, Enniskillen, Co Fermanagh, BT93 6LL
ICN/541/06	Mr T Kyle	16 Old Tyanee Road, Portglenone, Co Antrim, BT44 8JJ
ICN/548/07	G & A Young	G & A Young, 11 Rosedene Road, Castlederg, Co Tyrone, BT81 7JR
ICN/557/07	Mr Clive Allen	43 Errigal Road, Ballygawley, Co Tyrone, BT70 2DQ
INC/567/07	Mr John McKinley	65 Whitepark Road, Ballycastle Co Antrim, BT54 6LP
ICN/568/07	Mr Joe O'Donnell	Caddy Veterinary Practice, 19 Caddy Road, Randalstown, Co Antrim, BT41 3DL
ICN/569/07	Mr Malcolm MacNaghten	MacNaghten Farms Ltd, 20 Dundarave Road, Bushmills, Co Antrim, BT57 8ST
ICN/570/07	Mr David Nicholson	147 Keady Road, Armagh, Co Armagh, BT60 3AE
ICN/571/01	Mr Norman Reid	Aghinure, Maguiresbridge, Co Fermanagh, BT94 4NR
ICN/572/07	Mr John Jackson	26 Carrickfergus Road, Ballynure, Ballyclare, Co Antrim, BT39 9UW
INC/573/07	Mr Aeneas Quinn	27 Kiltyclay Road, Gortavilly, Sandholes, Co Tyrone, BT80 9DA

Animal Incinerators

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the number of man hours committed to monitoring animal incinerators on farms across Northern Ireland; and (ii) the amount of money allocated to monitoring such facilities, in each of the past three years. (AQW 580/08)

Ms Gildernew: I have detailed in the table below (i) the numbers of hours committed to, and (ii) the amount of money allocated to, monitoring on-farm incinerators in the past three years.

A greater amount of money was allocated in 2007 because the number of inspection visits was increased and the work was transferred to field Veterinary Officers who are able to bring their local knowledge of the disease situation to bear when carrying out inspections.

	2005	2006	2007 to date
(i) Number of hours	222	266	300
(ii) Amount of money*	£5,147	£6,469	£12,148

* Cost of staff time

Animal Incinerators

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to provide a breakdown of the number of animal incinerators which are currently operating on farms across Northern Ireland by (a) constituency; and (b) district council area. (AQW 582/08)

Ms Gildernew: I have provided in the attached tables the number of on-farm animal carcase incinerators currently approved under the Animal By-Products Regulations (NI) 2003 by (a) constituency and by (b) District Council area.

NUMBER OF APPROVED ON-FARM INCINERATORS IN NORTHERN IRELAND BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA

District council area	Number of on-farm incinerators
Antrim Borough Council	2
Ards Borough Council	2
Armagh City and District Council	12
Ballymena Borough Council	1
Ballymoney Borough Council	5
Banbridge District Council	1
Belfast City Council	0

District council area	Number of on-farm incinerators
Carrickfergus Borough Council	0
Castlereagh Borough Council	0
Coleraine Borough Council	2
Cookstown District Council	7
Craigavon Borough Council	0
Derry City Council	0
Down District Council	0
Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council	18
Fermanagh District Council	6
Larne Borough Council	1
Limavady Borough Council	1
Lisburn City Council	1
Magherafelt District Council	3
Moyle District Council	3
Newry and Mourne District Council	3
Newtownabbey Borough Council	0
North Down Borough Council	0
Omagh District Council	10
Strabane District Council	3

NUMBER OF APPROVED ON-FARM INCINERATORS IN NORTHERN IRELAND BY CONSTITUENCY

Constituency	Number of on-farm incinerators
Belfast East	0
Belfast North	0
Belfast South	0
Belfast West	0
East Antrim	0
North Antrim	10
South Antrim	2
North Down	0
South Down	4
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	24
Foyle	0
Lagan Valley	1
East Londonderry	3
Mid Ulster	10
Newry and Armagh	12
Strangford	2

Constituency	Number of on-farm incinerators
West Tyrone	13
Upper Bann	0

Kilkeel Harbour

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what progress has been made in relation to the funding of improvements to Kilkeel harbour. (AQW 586/08)

Ms Gildernew: My Department is currently undertaking a number of initiatives aimed at improving Kilkeel harbour. We are currently funding the technical studies recommended in the Wallingford Report which will assess the feasibility of a new breakwater to resolve the safety issues for vessels entering Kilkeel harbour. Progress is on target for completion by May 2008. A decision on the construction of a breakwater will be made following the completion of these studies.

Since 2002, approximately £12.2 million of funding has been committed for the improvement of facilities at Kilkeel Harbour. The Northern Ireland Fishery Harbour Authority has recently finalised the tendering process for further improvement works. These will include remedial work to the inner and outer quay walls and construction of a new vessel berthing facility. Award of the contract is imminent and the combined projects are due to be completed by November 2008.

Foot-and-Mouth Disease

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline her department's policy in the event of a Foot-and-Mouth Disease outbreak in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 606/08)

Ms Gildernew: As I said in my Statement to the Assembly on 1 October, my Department will not be found wanting in relation to any necessary steps necessary to maintain our Foot and Mouth Disease free status and protect our local industry. I, together with my officials, are working closely with the South to co-ordinate our actions to protect the whole island from Foot and Mouth Disease.

My policy, in the event of a Foot and Mouth Disease outbreak in the South, but not in the North would very much depend on the circumstances of the outbreak in question, including the exact location and the scale of the incident. I would want to take account of our veterinary risk assessment at the time. Nothing would be decided without close liaison with our colleagues in Dublin. Obviously we would also be bound by the EU rules in dealing with any outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease.

Alpha-Nortesterone

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to provide an update on the investigation into the alpha-nortesterone problems of 2006; and to indicate when political representatives, who were involved with the issue in 2006 and since, will be interviewed as part of this investigation.

(AQW 634/08)

Ms Gildernew: I commissioned Joan Ruddock, an independent member of the DARD Board, to carry out a review of DARD's handling of the alpha-nortestosterone issue. To ensure that the review was completely independent, the individuals interviewed during the course of the investigation were chosen entirely by Mrs Ruddock. I understand that the report on the review is almost complete and that no further interviews will be taking place.

Bluetongue Disease

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she is taking to initiate a full review of her department's regulation in relation to bluetongue disease.

(AQW 658/08)

Ms Gildernew: The control of Bluetongue is based on an EU legal framework. Our statutory powers for the control of Bluetongue are contained in the Blue Tongue Order (Northern Ireland) 2003, which implements Council Directive 2000/75/EC laying down specific provisions for the control and eradication of Bluetongue.

As part of our contingency planning to deal with the threat of this disease, my Department is currently reviewing the existing legislation to ensure it is up-to-date and consistent with the EU Bluetongue Directive.

On the basis of the new experience that has been gained on Bluetongue disease control following the outbreaks in Northern Europe in 2006 and 2007, on 3 October 2007 the EU Commission adopted a new Commission Regulation on Bluetongue which will apply from 15 November 2007. This Regulation lays down additional measures on the control, monitoring, surveillance and restrictions of movements of susceptible animals in relation to Bluetongue.

My Department is currently assessing the implications of this new Regulation and is seeking legal advice on what legislative changes if any will be needed to implement the Regulation here.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the amount of money her department is seeking from the Comprehensive Spending Review, in order to meet the costs associated with adherence to the Stockholm Convention.

(AQW 700/08)

Ms Gildernew: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development did not seek any monies in the Comprehensive Spending Review in order to meet the costs associated with adherence to the Stockholm Convention.

Lamb Promotion

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she is taking to promote Northern Ireland lamb to markets outside the United Kingdom.

(AQW 745/08)

Ms Gildernew: I am committed to supporting local produce and can advise that my Department is actively involved in work to assist our sheep industry. In 2006 the Department and industry stakeholders formed a Red Meat Task Force to develop a long term strategy for the local beef and sheepmeat industries. The Task Force have recently completed a report which was published on 3 October. While the Report has outlined serious challenges for this important sector, it has also identified models of production that could provide an economic return to farmers. My Department will help those farmers who wish to pursue alternative production models.

Lamb will be included in LMC's programme of activities at Anuga, the international food and drink exhibition which will take place in Cologne this month, attracting international traders. LMC also facilitate trade missions, carry out lamb promotion activities in Europe and provide pricing and marketing information to help the industry secure the best markets for their products.

Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or Brucellosis to Livestock

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of adjudicated cases over the past three years which involved the proven deliberate introduction of tuberculosis or brucellosis to livestock; and to detail how this compares to incidences of the same offence in (a) the rest of the United Kingdom; and (b) the Republic of Ireland.

(AQO 307/08)

Ms Gildernew: My Department and I have zero tolerance to fraud but none of the adjudicated cases over the past three years relate to the deliberate infection of livestock with tuberculosis or brucellosis. DARD does however investigate and, where sufficient evidence exists, prosecute herdkeepers that have breached statutory regulations and in doing so have prejudiced the control of disease. The Department will withhold compensation in such cases until investigations are concluded and will then adjudicate on whether or to what extent compensation can be released.

It should be recognised that the vast majority of farmers work hard over many years to build up and improve the health and quality of their herds and would not compromise those efforts by deliberately introducing infection.

Comparable figures are not available for the South or for Britain.

Rural Development Programme 2007-2013

Mr Brolly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give her assessment of the formation and funding of 'council clusters', given the decision that there should be increased district council involvement in the delivery of the Rural Development Programme 2007-2013. (AQO 347/08)

Ms Gildernew: Following extensive consultations and lengthy deliberations I have made the decision to give Local Councils a more central and strategic role in delivering measures within the 2007 - 2013 Rural Development Programme. The increased council involvement take the form of Council Clusters and will bring economies of scale, complementarity of strategies, and improved corporate governance and financial arrangements. This will rationalise the number of rural development delivery partnerships and maximise the impact of the Programme for local communities.

The new delivery model will however retain the Leader Methodology of "bottom up" working at its core. Self defining Council Clusters will work in partnership with new Local Action Groups (LAGs) to deliver the 'Quality of Life and Farm Family Option Measures' of the 2007- 2013 Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme on a sub-regional basis. Each Council cluster of at least 3 councils will, through a competitive process establish a Local Action Group (LAG) to deliver the measures in the area. Animation funding will be available to enable Council clusters to undertake animation action within their area for the purpose of establishing LAGs and drawing up strategies.

The Council Clusters will have a primary responsibility for accounting and financial governance arrangements for the Axis 1 and Axis 3 budgets allocated to the cluster area. The Local Action Groups will be required to play a full part in implementation of the measures and in particular will be responsible for developing a strategy that meets the needs of the area, and for assessing applications for Grant aid under the measures.

In excess of £100m will be invested in Rural Areas through the 'Quality of Life and Farm Family Option Measures' and I place great importance on the development of a strong partnership between each Council Cluster and the Local Action Group.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the preparations her department has made for a Northern Ireland contribution to the European Union's mid-term review of the Common Agricultural Policy. (AQO 375/08)

Ms Gildernew: The forthcoming Common Agricultural Policy 'Health Check' will be important for Northern Ireland agriculture. While it will not be a radical reform of the CAP, there will be proposals for changes to milk quotas, modulation and the single farm payment scheme that will have significant consequences for our agricultural sector. Consequently, my Department has been very active in preparing for the 'Health Check'.

In order to inform our position, we have commissioned research on the possible impact on the local agricultural industry of the abolition of milk quotas and increased compulsory modulation, both of which are likely to feature in the Health Check proposals. The research was conducted by Queen's University Belfast and the Agri-Food Biosciences Institute in conjunction with the Food, Agricultural and Policy Research Institute, University of Missouri. A report of the findings from this research was published in February 2007.

In conjunction with the agriculture departments in England Scotland and Wales, we are also contributing to ongoing research on the impact at local, UK and EU levels of the abolition of milk quotas.

My officials have taken part in numerous meetings with their counterparts across the UK in order to influence the Commission's thinking before it publishes its preliminary proposals later this year. The Health Check was also discussed at a meeting of UK Agriculture Ministers, which I attended on 19 June, and I will be discussing CAP issues in the forthcoming North South Ministerial Council meeting.

When the Health Check proposals are published, my Department will be conducting a full public consultation with stakeholders in order to establish our position with respect to the upcoming EU negotiations on the issue.

Renewable Energy

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to co-ordinate their approach on the development of renewable energy. (AQO 383/08)

Ms Gildernew: My colleague, the Minister for the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, and I share a common approach to this subject.

We see renewable energy as an important policy to secure future environmental and economic gain.

There are numerous and ongoing contacts between DARD and DETI at official level to ensure a co-ordinated approach to the development of renewable energy across these departments.

Should a joint-Ministerial meeting be required, then I shall be pleased to facilitate this.

Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she is taking to tackle bovine tuberculosis and brucellosis; and to outline what impact this action has had. (AQO 348/08)

Ms Gildernew: The TB programme is based on the detection of diseased or high risk animals, the compulsory removal of these animals from their herd of origin to slaughter, and the restriction of movements of cattle from infected herds until they are tested clear. Generally individual animals test positive and are removed rather than the whole herd.

Since 2002, there has been clear evidence of a significant decline in the incidence of TB. The herd incidence peaked in 2002 at 9.93% and has now dropped to 5.61% for the first half of this year. The herd incidence is currently at a similar rate in the North and South

The brucellosis control programme is based on the detection of diseased or high risk animals, compulsory removal of these animals for slaughter, removal of all in-contact animals in other words, group or whole herd depopulation, and immediate restriction of all movements from or to infected herds until they are depopulated or tested clear. Generally whole herds are depopulated when infected animals are detected.

Over the last few years, there has been clear evidence of significant decline in the incidence of BR from its peak at the start of 2002 when the herd incidence reached 1.43%. Overall, the trend remained downwards until 2006-07 when specific localised disease clusters halted the decline. This recent rise peaked in October 2006 at 0.6% but has since levelled off. The current herd incidence is now 0.48% and animal incidence is 0.034%.

Agri-Food Matters

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made in promoting increased co-operation in regard to agri-food matters, on an all-island basis. (AQO 353/08)

Ms Gildernew: Under the auspices of the North South Ministerial Council arrangements important steps are being taken which will benefit the agri-food industry throughout the Island of Ireland. These relate to issues concerning animal health and plant health. It is vital to lay a sound foundation for future initiatives. In view of this the development of the All-Island Animal Health and Welfare Strategy, including the free movement of animals within the island of Ireland, is amongst my key priorities. We will continue to work closely with our colleagues in the South given the interest we share in preventing the introduction of serious animal and plant diseases to the island.

I believe it is in the best interests of the North's agri-food industry to determine how best to position its products in the markets they serve and I will continue to support industry in this respect in order to achieve the best returns possible. Ultimately, however, promotional activities will be determined by the marketplace. The North is in a unique position in that its products are sold in a wide range of markets. Promotional activities must therefore be tailored for specific markets in a manner that optimises the benefit of the North's multiple identity.

An International Image Group consisting of experienced representatives from export businesses in the North was established by my Department and DETI to oversee research into the image of the North's food and drink in international markets. The research found that the North may be best served by being marketed as part of the island of Ireland in international markets. However, to gain optimum advantage of its unique position, the Image Group felt that the North's agri-food industry should utilise all options at its disposal, and, depending on the market and customer, market itself as North of Ireland, island of Ireland or UK.

In supporting the local agri-food industry, my Department works closely with Invest NI, which has a Memorandum of Understanding with Bord Bia. A strategic alliance now exists to promote Ireland's food industry overseas. Ongoing and planned joint work includes joint promotion of regional foods, participation in local food festivals, food and tourism initiatives, shared costs at international trade shows, meet the buyer events and collaborative market research.

Rural Diversification

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to support the development of Ulster-Scots projects in rural areas, as a means of rural diversification. (AQO 361/08)

Ms Gildernew: None. However a key theme within the 2007 – 2013 Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme is ‘improving the quality of life in rural areas and encouraging diversification of economic activity’. I would encourage both individuals and organisations with projects suitable and eligible for funding under the ‘quality of life’ measures to take these forward with their Local Action Group when it is in place.

Rural Development Programme 2007-2013

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the proposed timetable for the delivery of the Rural Development Programme; and what mechanism will be put in place to ensure that farming families can avail of future funding from this programme. (AQO 304/08)

Ms Gildernew: Legislation will be required for some of the Axis I (competitiveness) measures and I intend to present these to the Agriculture Committee as soon as possible. Delivery structures are being agreed with stakeholders, where appropriate, and I would aim to have measures opened as soon as possible. It is intended that one of the 4 measures (Adding Value to Agriculture and Forestry Products Improving Marketing Capability) will open late in 2007, with the remainder opening as early as possible in 2008 once all tendering and administrative structures have been agreed.

The development of the Northern Ireland Countryside Management Scheme (NICMS), an integral part of the new programme is ongoing. The estimated opening date of the NICMS will be in late spring/early summer 2008.

As no national legislation was required for the First Afforestation and Forest Environments schemes, they have been carried forward in a similar format from the previous programme.

I have invited local councils to form self-defined Clusters for delivery of the Axis 3 ‘Diversification and Quality of Life and Farm Family Options Measures’ of the new Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme. Following a competitive process, each Cluster will appoint a Local Action Group to bring forward and implement a local development strategy. I anticipate that Local Action Groups will be in place by the Spring of 2008.

In the Programme there are Measures across the three Axis, that are specific to farmers and farm families and also more general Measures that are also open to the farmer and farm family.

Fishing Rights

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline her strategy for securing greater fishing rights for local fishermen in the Irish Sea. (AQO 322/08)

Ms Gildernew: I am committed to ensuring that fishing opportunities for local fishermen are improved and maximised. A key part of that is to make sure there is robust scientific evidence to underpin fish stock assessments. Scientific research carried out on Irish Sea stocks is assessed by ICES (International Council for the Exploration of the Seas) which advises the European Commission on annual fishing opportunities. ICES advice is made solely on the basis of scientific evidence and where it believes that there is insufficient data it will take a precautionary approach. It is clear from ICES advice over the last number of years that there are gaps in the knowledge about some stocks that are important to local fishermen, in particular, Cod, Haddock and Herring.

My Department in conjunction with AFBI (Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute) and the industry is constantly looking at ways to improve information to inform decisions about fishing opportunities and fisheries management. There have been some important developments in that area recently, for example the Irish Sea Data Enhancement Pilot project which is gathering data about the extent and reasons for discarding fish and ways to avoid this happening. My Department has also responded to industry calls to extend its survey work of herring in the Irish Sea. This autumn, with the involvement of the local industry, AFBI is collecting data about herring from 4 survey trips (instead of the usual 1).

Improving our knowledge about fish stocks is not something that my Department and its scientific advisors can do alone. It is important that fishermen’s knowledge is factored into our work and also that our scientists get the fullest co-operation from fishermen to allow them to gather data about the size and age of fish from samples of landings and to accommodate them as on-board observers to collect total catch information.

Information Technology in Farming

Mr O’Dowd asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she is taking to move towards the use of information technology in farming, including the electronic tagging of livestock.

(AQO 351/08)

Ms Gildernew: I am keen that farmers benefit fully from information and communication technology (ICT) in their businesses. Through the Increasing Access to ICT scheme, 988 farmers are currently using and evaluating innovative technologies for their business. Another scheme, the ICT Grant Scheme, has encouraged food processors to use ICT technology to communicate business information to their farmer suppliers. This scheme is on target to have 1750 farmers benefiting by April 2008.

The College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) has delivered training to over 900 farmers in the past two years, developing their confidence and competence to use ICT for their business. Students on Further and Higher Education programmes at CAFRE, in preparation for a career in farming, have the opportunity to develop their ICT skills and to use specialist enterprise and business management software packages.

My Department has also developed a wide range of online services to reduce the administrative burden for farmers and growers and give them the tools to improve business performance. APHIS Online, the Animal and Public Health Information System, was the first real time transactional service offered by any NI Department and currently has 7,300 registered users. More than 1,200 farmers benefit from the use of CAFRE Online Benchmarking services, helping to identify opportunities to improve their business performance. Work is continuing to improve the infrastructure and expand the range of services offered.

DARD is working with industry and colleagues from the South and GB to ensure the benefits of Electronic Identification (EID) are fully exploited. DARD has completed a successful pilot to explore the potential of EID and, more particularly, Electronic Data Transfer in abattoirs to show how this technology can improve the flow of information to meet regulatory requirements and satisfy the needs of consumers for traceability in the supply chain. CAFRE is demonstrating the use of this technology on its own and partner farms. Expertise and facilities are available to provide farmers with sound, practical advice on implementing EID. My officials are also playing an active role in a recently established industry group being led by the Livestock and Meat Commission looking at implementing electronic identification in cattle.

Agricultural Wages Board

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in light of the recommendation of the Ulster Farmers' Union, what steps she will take to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board. (AQO 355/08)

Ms Gildernew: I have considered the case made by the Ulster Farmers' Union for the abolition of the Agricultural Wages Board and subsequently met with representatives of the Amalgamated Transport and General Workers' Union and the Chairman of the Agricultural Wages Board to discuss the issue. In the absence of an alternative mechanism to protect the rights of agricultural employees I have decided not to abolish the Agricultural Wages Board.

To abolish the Agriculture Wages Board would place agricultural workers in the North of Ireland at a financial disadvantage when compared with agricultural workers in Britain. This is particularly important in the context of ensuring the rights and privileges of migrant workers and minority communities here are protected.

Irish Fish Stocks

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of scientific research into the levels of Irish fish stocks; and what meetings she is planning to have on this matter, during the December meeting of the European Council in Brussels. (AQO 350/08)

Ms Gildernew: The 2007 scientific advice for the main fish stocks in the Irish Sea will not be published until 12 October. However our scientists believe that the advice coming from the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas will be little changed from last year.

On that basis I expect that a rollover in the Total Allowable Catch (TAC) for Area 7 prawns and Irish Sea plaice will be recommended. I expect that the outlook will still be poor for cod and whiting whilst the recommendations for the Irish Sea haddock TAC will be affected by concerns that increasing its TAC may result in a greater by-catch of cod. The scientists have already advised that there should be a small reduction in the Irish Sea herring TAC.

Fishing opportunities will also be affected by changes to the effort control regime and I will fight hard to ensure that our fleet has sufficient fishing days to enable it to catch the available quotas.

As soon as this year's scientific advice is published I will meet with industry representatives to discuss the implications of the advice and the best way to present our case in Brussels to protect our industry's interests. I will also have further meetings with the English and Scottish fisheries Ministers in order to secure our priorities within the overall negotiating position and at the Council. Whilst at the Council I will press our case vigorously and keep the industry informed of progress.

Bluetongue Disease

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she is taking to keep bluetongue disease out of Northern Ireland.

(AQO 395/08)

Ms Gildernew: I will continue to do everything possible to try to prevent Bluetongue from spreading here.

As I said in my Statement to the Assembly of 1 October, we have a range of preventive measures in place to minimise the risk of Bluetongue reaching the North.

In light of the heightened risk from Northern Europe, since August 2006 all imports of susceptible animals from Bluetongue restricted areas in EU Member States have been banned. Animals and their vehicles that travel across the restricted areas are sprayed with insecticide. We carry out post import testing of imported cattle and sheep from Europe. These animals are restricted and isolated pending negative test results. All test results to date have proven negative. We have also advised potential importers to request that animals are pre-import tested as an additional precaution.

Due to the Foot and Mouth Disease preventive measures that I reintroduced here on 12 September, our ports remain closed to the import of live animals from Britain, which gives us dual protection for Bluetongue too.

My officials have traced and examined all consignments of cattle, sheep, goats and pigs imported directly from Britain since the beginning of July in response to the FMD outbreaks in Britain. All examinations were negative for signs that could be attributed to either Foot and Mouth Disease or Bluetongue, which has given me some reassurance that Bluetongue has not spread to the North.

Over the past six months, my Department has been working in partnership with key stakeholders here, through the bluetongue working group, on preparedness to deal with the threat of this disease and will continue to do so.

In May, my Department in conjunction with our key stakeholders issued advice to the industry about Bluetongue including information about clinical signs. This leaflet is available on the DARD website, along with other comprehensive information on Bluetongue.

Bluetongue Disease

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will make a statement on the threat posed to Northern Ireland by bluetongue disease.
(AQO 326/08)

Ms Gildernew: I will continue to do everything possible to try to prevent Bluetongue from spreading here.

As I said in my Statement to the Assembly of 1 October, we have a range of preventive measures in place to minimise the risk of Bluetongue reaching the North.

In light of the heightened risk from Northern Europe, since August 2006 all imports of susceptible animals from Bluetongue restricted areas in EU Member States have been banned. Animals and their vehicles that travel across the restricted areas are sprayed with insecticide. We carry out post import testing of imported cattle and sheep from Europe. These animals are restricted and isolated pending negative test results. All test results to date have proven negative. We have also advised potential importers to request that animals are pre-import tested as an additional precaution.

Due to the Foot and Mouth Disease preventive measures that I reintroduced here on 12 September, our ports remain closed to the import of live animals from Britain, which gives us dual protection for Bluetongue too.

My officials have traced and examined all consignments of cattle, sheep, goats and pigs imported directly from Britain since the beginning of July in response to the FMD outbreaks in Britain. All examinations were negative for signs that could be attributed to either Foot and Mouth Disease or Bluetongue, which has given me some reassurance that Bluetongue has not spread to the North.

Over the past six months, my Department has been working in partnership with key stakeholders here, through the bluetongue working group, on preparedness to deal with the threat of this disease and will continue to do so.

In May, my Department in conjunction with our key stakeholders issued advice to the industry about Bluetongue including information about clinical signs. This leaflet is available on the DARD website, along with other comprehensive information on Bluetongue.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Irish Language Act

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to give a timescale within which he expects to make an announcement regarding the Irish Language Act. (AQW 338/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): As indicated during the Assembly's oral questions session on Monday 10th September, it is my intention to make a statement on the proposed Irish Language Act to the Assembly in the early Autumn.

Motorcycle Road Racing

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of financial assistance his department has given to motorcycle road racing, in each of the last five years. (AQW 447/08)

Mr Poots: I apologise for the delay in replying to the member.

Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of financial assistance to sports organisations. SNI has provided the following funding to motorcycle road racing in each of the last 5 financial years: -

2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07	Total
£13,000	£12,000	£18,500	£7,420	£50,920

Motorcycle Racing on Circuits

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of financial assistance his department has given to motorcycle racing on circuits, in each of the last five years. (AQW 448/08)

Mr Poots: I apologise for the delay in replying to the member.

Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of financial assistance to sports organisations. SNI has provided the following funding to motorcycle racing on circuits in each of the last 5 financial years: -

2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07	Total
£11,000	£14,000	£18,500	£2,000	£45,500

Equestrian Sports Events

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what consideration he has given to the inclusion of an international competition area, for promoting equestrian sports events, in the proposal for a multi-sports stadium at the proposed Maze development site; and if he will meet with the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society to discuss this issue. (AQW 457/08)

Mr Poots: Proposals for the development of a Multi-Sports Stadium at the Maze/Long Kesh site have been focusing exclusively on the future facility requirements of the three major ball sports in Northern Ireland – Soccer, Rugby and Gaelic Games.

Responsibility for the development of equestrian sports in Northern Ireland rests with the governing body, the Northern Ireland Equestrian Sports Committee. I would be happy to meet with the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society to discuss their proposals for an international competition area for equestrian sports, provided they have the endorsement of the Northern Ireland Equestrian Sports Committee.

World Pipe Band Championships

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to his answer to AQW 206/08, to detail the progress that has been made within the Northern Ireland Events Company, the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, regarding opportunities for hosting the World Pipe Band Championships in Northern Ireland. (AQW 508/08)

Mr Poots: Officials from my department will be meeting with representatives of the Northern Ireland Events Company, Arts Council of Northern Ireland and Ulster-Scots Agency on 8 October 2007.

The Northern Ireland Events Company has researched the size and scope of the event which will help to determine the way forward.

Derelict Library in Cullybackey

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action he will take to demolish the derelict library in Cullybackey, in light of the anti-social behaviour taking place at this site. (AQW 605/08)

Mr Poots: Responsibility for the former Cullybackey library building rests with the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB). Following the closure of the library, the NEELB is required to trawl the surplus property within the Public Sector, in accordance with the relevant guidance. Some interest has been expressed and NEELB is currently awaiting a decision from the Land and Property Agency as to when the sale of the building can be completed. The Board therefore has no current plans to demolish the building, however it has been secured.

National Stadium

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is his assessment of whether or not the cost of building a different design to that of the original, for the National Stadium at the Maze, will be met; and whether or not this will provide value for money. (AQO 317/08)

Mr Poots: The work currently ongoing on proposals for a Multi-Sports Stadium – including stadium design, business planning and the development of an outline business case – is intended to help me reach a conclusion on value for money and affordability issues. I expect to be in a position to make an assessment on these issues when that work is completed. As part of this process, DCAL is continuing to work with the 3 sports bodies on developing a suitable design for the Stadium. The Department has no plans to develop any alternative design that does not have the involvement and agreement of the 3 sports.

Work on the development of a suitable design, business plan and outline business case for the Multi-Sports Stadium is well advanced. This work is expected to be completed shortly and I hope to be in a position to make a recommendation to the Executive by the end of this year with a view to making an announcement on the way forward early in the new year.

Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to provide an update on the development of the Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast. (AQO 363/08)

Mr Poots: An Ceathrú Gaeltachta Teo – the Gaeltacht Quarter Development Company (Ltd) - became fully operational in July 2007 and the company currently employs two members of staff. The company is funded through the Integrated Development Fund with the funding being administered by my Department. The conditions of funding state that an early task for the company should be the production of a business and marketing plan for the Gaeltacht Quarter, along with an associated baseline study. I am aware that work is already underway on drawing up terms of reference for such plans and I understand that they are scheduled to be completed in the New Year.

Community Festivals Fund

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline his plans for the funding of public events through the Community Festivals Fund, over the next three years. (AQO 313/08)

Mr Poots: I have initiated a review of the Community Festivals Fund. The Northern Ireland Events Company, which currently administers the Fund on the Department's behalf, commissioned an independent evaluation of the Fund and I will be taking account of this as I determine the way forward.

Public Angling Estate

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the progress that has been made in developing the public angling estate; and the amount of investment his department has given to this process to date. (AQO 382/08)

Mr Poots: Considerable progress has been made since 1999 when the Department took over responsibility for the Estate. Six new fisheries have been added including 2 wild salmon and trout fisheries and 4 coarse fisheries. A new website has been developed which provides details of the Estate's 64 fisheries, licence and permit details, educational information and links with travel and accommodation providers. The website also has on line permit and day ticket purchase facilities. A boat hire facility for anglers is now available at Castlewellan Lake. Considerable infrastructure development has taken place including the provision of 10 car parks, 3 slipways have been built and 117 new fishing stands have been constructed. 5.5 kilometres of new tarmaced roads and paths have been provided to facilitate access. Movannagher Fish Farm which supplies trout for stocking into put and take fisheries has been improved and fish production has been increased by 20%.

The total investment of capital and running cost expenditure from 1999 to 31 March 2007 amounts to £2,620,472. This does not include staff costs. Details of the annual expenditure for the period 2000 to 2005 are contained in the Department's Salmon and Inland Fisheries Annual Reports which are in the Assembly Library. The 2006 Report will be laid in the Assembly shortly.

Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to give an update on the cost and value for money of the Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development project at Stranmillis, which is funded by his department. (AQO 388/08)

Mr Poots: The Stranmillis Curriculum Development Unit has received to date £1,512,433 in funding the period 2002 to 2007. The projects carried out by the Unit were commissioned and funded by the Ulster-Scots Agency. The Agency ceased to continue funding from 31 August 2007. Funding for two posts is now being provided by the Ulster Scots Academy Implementation Group. The Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) conducted an Inspection of the Unit in 2006 and concluded that the quality of the work is good and fulfils the terms of its remit well.

National Stadium

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline his timetable of actions before he will be in a position to make an announcement on plans for a new National Sports Stadium. (AQO 314/08)

Mr Poots: The work currently ongoing on proposals for a Multi-Sports Stadium – including stadium design, business planning and the development of an outline business case – is intended to help me reach a conclusion on value for money and affordability issues. I expect to be in a position to make an assessment on these issues when that work is completed. As part of this process, DCAL is continuing to work with the 3 sports bodies on developing a suitable design for the Stadium. The Department has no plans to develop any alternative design that does not have the involvement and agreement of the 3 sports.

Work on the development of a suitable design, business plan and outline business case for the Multi-Sports Stadium is well advanced. This work is expected to be completed shortly and I hope to be in a position to make a recommendation to the Executive by the end of this year with a view to making an announcement on the way forward early in the new year.

Ulster-Scots and Irish Gaelic Spending

Mr Burnside asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline his plans and spending bids for both the Ulster-Scots and Irish Gaelic cultural traditions, over the next 5 years. (AQO 333/08)

Mr Poots: Spending plans are only agreed over a three year period.

Any plans or bids concerning future spending will be agreed as part of the 2007 Comprehensive Spending Review for the period 2008/09 – 2010/11. The outcome of the review will determine the levels and amounts of funding to be made available for Ulster-Scots and Irish Cultural projects and events.

Belfast Mela

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the level of support given by his department to the organisers of the Belfast Mela 2007; and whether or not his officials will further engage with the organisers, to ensure that this gathering continues as a successful annual event. (AQO 381/08)

Mr Poots: ArtsEkta received £5000 funding for the Belfast Mela 2007 from the Community Festival Fund which is administered on DCAL's behalf by the Northern Ireland Events Company. DCAL does not fund arts organizations directly. ArtsEkta should liaise with officials from the Arts Council and the Northern Ireland Events Company in relation to future funding.

North-South Ministerial Council Sectoral Meetings

Mr Brolly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline his priorities for the forthcoming North-South Ministerial Council sectoral meetings, in regard to Waterways Ireland and The Language Body. (AQO 354/08)

Mr Poots: My priorities for the Waterways Ireland and North South Language Body Sectoral meetings are to review the progress that has been made to date and to consider both organizations' plans for the future.

Following the Sectoral meetings on the 17th and 26th October 2007 joint communiqués will be issued to the press and published on the North South Ministerial Council website outlining the topics discussed.

Cost of Translations

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the guidance his department has given to other Government departments, with regard to ensuring that value for money is received for all translations from English into other languages. (AQO 393/08)

Mr Poots: My Department is responsible for the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) Irish Language Translation Service. The current panel of translators was selected in 2004 in accordance with Government's Central Procurement Division guidance, which includes a value for money criteria. An agreement was reached between all departments in 2003 that this service must be used in respect of all Irish language translations. As part of the arrangement a Quality Assurance procedure was established.

Sign Language

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he will take to promote sign language in Northern Ireland. (AQO 321/08)

Mr Poots: My Department continues to work in partnership with organisations representing the Deaf community to promote sign languages and to educate and inform the wider community. My Department additionally chairs a Sign Language Partnership Group bringing together representatives from Government Departments and the Deaf community to consider ways to improve access to public services for users of sign languages. I have made a bid for additional funding in the Comprehensive Spending Review. I have also been liaising with the Minister for the Department for Employment and Learning in relation to the provision of more training to increase the supply of sign language tutors and interpreters.

EDUCATION

Staff Team Building

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises carried out by her department, in each of the last three years. (AQW 335/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): The total cost of staff away days and staff team building days, in the last three financial years is as follows:

Year	Away Days/ Team Building Days	Cost
2004/05	√	£33, 346.16
2005/06	√	£29, 996.00
2006/07	√	£42, 124.11
Total Cost		£105, 466.27

The above are all costs associated with staff away days/team building days. These include costs for the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) which provides inspection services for the Department of Education (DE), the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) and the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL).

Away days in the main are used for Business Planning. As an Investor in People there is a requirement to involve people when developing the organisation's business plan and when agreeing team and individual objectives. It is not possible to show separately the costs for away days (business planning) and team building exercises. In the Department of Education, however, teambuilding days are generally arranged through Employer Supported Volunteering with Voluntary Service Bureau at nil cost.

Curriculum Reserve Support

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of Curriculum Reserve Support monies paid out to schools in the (i) controlled; (ii) maintained; (iii) integrated; and (iv) Irish language sectors, in order to improve their financial bottom line, in each of the last five years. (AQW 336/08)

Ms Ruane: Moneys from the Curriculum Reserve Support Fund are not issued in order to improve schools' financial positions but rather to provide for additional teaching/curriculum support in set circumstances. I understand from the Chief Executives of the five Education and Library Boards that the amount of Curriculum Reserve Support Monies paid to schools in each of the last five years is as follows:

Schools	2002/03 £000s	2003/04 £000s	2004/05 £000s	2005/06 £000s	2006/07 £000s
Controlled	1,152	1,124	979	917	474
Maintained	1,146	1,099	1,194	1,035	600
Controlled Integrated	24	8	15	11	0
Irish Medium	0	0	0	15	30

Chinese Language School

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of funding allocated to the Chinese Language School Northern Ireland, for each of the last five years. (AQW 353/08)

Ms Ruane: I have been advised that payment was made to the Chinese Language School for each of the last five years as follows:

Funding Provider	Financial Year	Payment Date	Amount
BELB	2001-02	May-01	£6,000
BELB	2002-03	May-02	£10,000
BELB	2003-04	May-03	£10,000
BELB	2004-05	May-04	£11,000

Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education

Miss Michelle McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what action she will take regarding the recommendation in the report of the Strategic Review of Education that the methodology used to distribute resources to schools through the Common Funding Formula should be reviewed, in order to ensure that delegations under the formula reflect the costs of the main needs of the school. (AQW 427/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what action she will take regarding the recommendation in the report of the Strategic Review of Education that the rationale for funding preparatory departments in grammar schools should be reviewed. (AQW 428/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what action she will take regarding the recommendation of the report of the Strategic Review of Education that the policy for sustainable schools in Northern Ireland should ensure that all schools are sustainable, in terms of quality of the educational experience of children; enrolment trends; financial position; school leadership and management; accessibility; and the strength of their links to the community. (AQW 429/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria that is used to determine whether a school's quality and breadth of education is satisfactory, as referred to in recommendation 7 of the report of the Strategic Review of Education. (AQW 430/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education, in light of the recommendation in the report of the Strategic Review of Education that the minimum (not optimal) enrolments for new primary schools, and for Years 8-12 in new post-primary schools should be (i) Primary: 140 pupils in urban areas, and 105 pupils in rural areas; and (ii) Post-primary: 500 pupils, what is her assessment of whether or not the future of an existing school should be reviewed when enrolment falls below the relevant level. (AQW 431/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking in regard to the recommendation in the Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education that, in addition to a delegated budget, schools should receive financial and other incentives to share resources and deliver improved provision in collaboration with other schools. (AQW 440/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking in regard to the recommendation in the Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education to maximise the degree to which schools have control of their own budgets, and what appropriate arrangements for accountability she intends to put in place. (AQW 441/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking in regard to the recommendation in the Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education that the budgets delegated to schools should continue to include resources for teachers' salaries and other staff costs. (AQW 442/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the Bain Report, a draft policy document on Sustainable Schools was published for consultation by the direct rule administration on 23 January 2007. The responses to the consultation are being analysed by the Department. I am considering carefully the issues which have been raised and how best to move forward in ensuring that children get a good educational experience in strong viable schools. I intend to set out the position by the end of the year.

School Repairs

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 69/08, to detail the amount and percentage of expenditure on school repairs in the maintained sector that was spent on Irish-medium schools, in each of the last five years. (AQW 482/08)

Ms Ruane: The information provided by the Education and Library Boards is as follows:

EXPENDITURE ON MAINTENANCE AND REPAIRS IN IRISH-MEDIUM SCHOOLS

	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Amount £000	160	161	115	66	61
% of total maintained sector expenditure	0.8	0.8	1.0	0.8	0.7

Dickson Plan

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQO 85/08, to detail the meetings she has had with (i) pupils; (ii) parents; and (iii) teachers to establish their assessment of the Craigavon-based Dickson Plan for education. (AQW 484/08)

Ms Ruane: I have listened to comment on the Dickson Plan during informal discussions I have had with school staff, parents and pupils during many of the 34 visits I have made to all types of school, including one visit to a participating school (St Paul's Junior High School) and two visits to Lismore Comprehensive School which is located within the Dickson Plan area. I am also mindful of any points raised about the system in Ministerial correspondence which I answer personally in every instance, as well as the available research evidence on the subject.

Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 77/08, to detail the reasons why no central register of complaints of child sexual abuse is maintained by her department; and whether or not she will instruct her department to keep such a register. (AQW 486/08)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to create a central register of complaints of child sexual abuse. Information about all complaints of child abuse against staff in all employment sectors is available from the investigating agencies.

Schools are required by law to notify the investigating agencies of any allegation of child abuse by staff or others. Failure to report an allegation is an offence.

Schools must keep a record all complaints of child abuse made against staff. This record is presented annually to the Board of Governors and by this means clusters of complaints can be identified.

The employing authority must notify the Department when an individual is dismissed as unsuitable to work with children following disciplinary action. When an individual is convicted of a relevant offence the Department is advised by PSNI. In both cases action is taken to list the person as unsuitable to work with children.

Boards of Governors have a statutory duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils and must ensure that the school complies with any guidance issued by the Department about child protection matters.

The Department has no record of the occasions when it has been contacted by schools about allegations of child abuse. Support and advice to schools on complaints about child abuse, whether sexual or otherwise, was provided directly by the Education and Library Boards' Designated Officers and from April 2006 by the Child Protection Support Service for Schools.

Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 77/08, to detail the means through which her department keeps track of clusters of allegations of child sexual abuse made against any particular individual, in the absence of a central register. (AQW 487/08)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to create a central register of complaints of child sexual abuse. Information about all complaints of child abuse against staff in all employment sectors is available from the investigating agencies.

Schools are required by law to notify the investigating agencies of any allegation of child abuse by staff or others. Failure to report an allegation is an offence.

Schools must keep a record all complaints of child abuse made against staff. This record is presented annually to the Board of Governors and by this means clusters of complaints can be identified.

The employing authority must notify the Department when an individual is dismissed as unsuitable to work with children following disciplinary action. When an individual is convicted of a relevant offence the Department is advised by PSNI. In both cases action is taken to list the person as unsuitable to work with children.

Boards of Governors have a statutory duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils and must ensure that the school complies with any guidance issued by the Department about child protection matters.

The Department has no record of the occasions when it has been contacted by schools about allegations of child abuse. Support and advice to schools on complaints about child abuse, whether sexual or otherwise, was provided directly by the Education and Library Boards' Designated Officers and from April 2006 by the Child Protection Support Service for Schools.

Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 77/08, to detail the number of occasions on which each school in Northern Ireland has contacted her department about allegations of child sexual abuse, in each of the last five years. (AQW 488/08)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to create a central register of complaints of child sexual abuse. Information about all complaints of child abuse against staff in all employment sectors is available from the investigating agencies.

Schools are required by law to notify the investigating agencies of any allegation of child abuse by staff or others. Failure to report an allegation is an offence.

Schools must keep a record all complaints of child abuse made against staff. This record is presented annually to the Board of Governors and by this means clusters of complaints can be identified.

The employing authority must notify the Department when an individual is dismissed as unsuitable to work with children following disciplinary action. When an individual is convicted of a relevant offence the Department is advised by PSNI. In both cases action is taken to list the person as unsuitable to work with children.

Boards of Governors have a statutory duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils and must ensure that the school complies with any guidance issued by the Department about child protection matters.

The Department has no record of the occasions when it has been contacted by schools about allegations of child abuse. Support and advice to schools on complaints about child abuse, whether sexual or otherwise, was provided directly by the Education and Library Boards' Designated Officers and from April 2006 by the Child Protection Support Service for Schools.

Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 77/08, if she will confirm that any school in receipt of an allegation of child sexual abuse need not inform her department, or any investigating agency of (i) the nature of the allegations; (ii) the details of any disciplinary process; or (iii) any disciplinary punishment imposed upon anyone against whom an allegation has been proven. (AQW 489/08)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to create a central register of complaints of child sexual abuse. Information about all complaints of child abuse against staff in all employment sectors is available from the investigating agencies.

Schools are required by law to notify the investigating agencies of any allegation of child abuse by staff or others. Failure to report an allegation is an offence.

Schools must keep a record all complaints of child abuse made against staff. This record is presented annually to the Board of Governors and by this means clusters of complaints can be identified.

The employing authority must notify the Department when an individual is dismissed as unsuitable to work with children following disciplinary action. When an individual is convicted of a relevant offence the Department is advised by PSNI. In both cases action is taken to list the person as unsuitable to work with children.

Boards of Governors have a statutory duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils and must ensure that the school complies with any guidance issued by the Department about child protection matters.

The Department has no record of the occasions when it has been contacted by schools about allegations of child abuse. Support and advice to schools on complaints about child abuse, whether sexual or otherwise, was provided directly by the Education and Library Boards' Designated Officers and from April 2006 by the Child Protection Support Service for Schools.

Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 77/08, to outline the legal obligations placed upon boards of governors in receipt of information passed to them by the school, in relation to allegations of child sexual abuse. (AQW 490/08)

Ms Ruane: There are no plans to create a central register of complaints of child sexual abuse. Information about all complaints of child abuse against staff in all employment sectors is available from the investigating agencies.

Schools are required by law to notify the investigating agencies of any allegation of child abuse by staff or others. Failure to report an allegation is an offence.

Schools must keep a record all complaints of child abuse made against staff. This record is presented annually to the Board of Governors and by this means clusters of complaints can be identified.

The employing authority must notify the Department when an individual is dismissed as unsuitable to work with children following disciplinary action. When an individual is convicted of a relevant offence the Department is advised by PSNI. In both cases action is taken to list the person as unsuitable to work with children.

Boards of Governors have a statutory duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils and must ensure that the school complies with any guidance issued by the Department about child protection matters.

The Department has no record of the occasions when it has been contacted by schools about allegations of child abuse. Support and advice to schools on complaints about child abuse, whether sexual or otherwise, was provided directly by the Education and Library Boards' Designated Officers and from April 2006 by the Child Protection Support Service for Schools.

Registered Childminders

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of registered childminders in Northern Ireland, in each of the last three years. (AQW 501/08)

Ms Ruane: Current figures available indicate the number of childminders registered with the Health and Social Care Trusts as

- 3730 in 2005
- 3,627 in 2006
- 3567 in 2007

Childminder Start-Up Package

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what consideration she has given to funding the Childminder Start-Up package. (AQW 502/08)

Ms Ruane: Officials from the Department met with the Director of NICMA on 21st August. At this meeting NICMA was asked to undertake further work in order to demonstrate the benefits, in terms of increased uptake, of introducing a start up grant. NICMA was advised that future consideration may be given to establishing a minimum training standard for childminders.

Some further evidence has since been provided by NICMA, however this will require some additional clarification. When this is available, I will be happy to convene a meeting with the Director of NICMA to discuss the proposals.

Free School Meals

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools, at primary and post-primary level, where the uptake of free school meals is between (i) 90 -100%; (ii) 80-89%; (iii) 70-79%; (iv) 60-69%; (iv) 50-59%; and (v) 40-49%; and to detail the total enrolment figures for each school included in each of the above categories. (AQW 574/08)

Ms Ruane: Information on the uptake of free school meals is not readily available in the format requested, therefore information on the eligibility of pupils for free school meals has been provided. The latest information available relates to the 2006/07 academic year.

PERCENTAGE PUPILS ENTITLED TO FREE SCHOOL MEALS AT PRIMARY SCHOOLS AND POST PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN 2006/07

% Pupils entitled to free school meals	Primary schools	Post Primary Schools
90 - 100	0	0
80 - 89	0	0
70 - 79	9	0
60 - 69	8	3
50 - 59	34	10
40 - 49	39	13

PERCENTAGE PRIMARY PUPILS ENTITLED TO FREE SCHOOL MEALS BY SCHOOL 2006/07

School name	Total enrolment	% of total enrolment entitled to free school meals
Vere Foster Primary School	102	70 - 79
Beechfield Primary School	110	70 - 79
St Luke's Primary School, Lisburn	226	70 - 79
St Pauls Primary School, Slievemore	183	70 - 79
Blythefield Primary School	132	70 - 79
Currie Primary School	119	70 - 79
St Kieran's Primary School	437	70 - 79
St Aidan's Christian Brothers Primary School	204	70 - 79

School name	Total enrolment	% of total enrolment entitled to free school meals
Gaelscoil An Damba	27	70 - 79
St Bernadette's Primary School	212	60 - 69
Holy Child Primary School, Derry	287	60 - 69
Malvern Primary School	114	60 - 69
Edenbrooke Primary School	184	60 - 69
Holy Cross Girls' Primary School	152	60 - 69
St Peter's Primary School, Belfast	326	60 - 69
The Good Shepherd Primary School	366	60 - 69
Kilcooley Primary School	138	60 - 69
Old Warren Primary School	127	50 - 59
Avoniel Primary School	188	50 - 59
Anamar Primary School	39	50 - 59
Ballysally Primary School	198	50 - 59
St Vincent De Paul Primary School	202	50 - 59
St Matthew's Primary School, Belfast	303	50 - 59
Star Of The Sea Girls' Primary School	317	50 - 59
Christ The King Primary School	145	50 - 59
St Mary's Primary School, Belfast	128	50 - 59
Gaelscoil An Lonnain	44	50 - 59
St Colmcille's Primary School, Downpatrick	211	50 - 59
St Theresa's Primary School, Lenamore	426	50 - 59
Tullygally Primary School	167	50 - 59
Springfield Primary School	73	50 - 59
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	73	50 - 59
St Malachy's Primary School, Belfast	261	50 - 59
Grove Primary School	104	50 - 59
Harmony Primary School	205	50 - 59
St Michael's Primary School, Newtownhamilton	62	50 - 59
Fountain Primary School	112	50 - 59
Blackmountain Primary School	114	50 - 59
Longtower Primary School	311	50 - 59
Glenwood Primary School	455	50 - 59

School name	Total enrolment	% of total enrolment entitled to free school meals
Nettlefield Primary School	272	50 - 59
St Brigid's Primary School, Derry	343	50 - 59
Gaelscoil Eadain Mhoir	116	50 - 59
Scoil Na Fuisseoige	134	50 - 59
Holy Family Primary School	448	50 - 59
Ballee Primary School	71	50 - 59
Holy Cross Boys' Primary School	348	50 - 59
Edmund Rice (CB) Primary School	333	50 - 59
St Malachy's Primary School, Newry	324	50 - 59
St Joseph's Primary School, Belfast	250	50 - 59
Euston Street Primary School	254	50 - 59
St Mark's Primary School, Lisburn	522	40 - 49
Ballygolan Primary School	124	40 - 49
Holy Trinity Primary School, Belfast	621	40 - 49
Ballysillan Primary School	133	40 - 49
Barrack Street Boys' Primary School	184	40 - 49
Bunscoil Mhic Reachtain	65	40 - 49
Tullycarnet Primary School	107	40 - 49
Ashlea Primary School	91	40 - 49
Gaelscoil Na Mona	66	40 - 49
Holy Family Primary School, Belfast	375	40 - 49
St Oliver Plunkett Primary School	167	40 - 49
Harryville Primary School	148	40 - 49
Our Lady's Girls' Primary School	336	40 - 49
Steelstown Vol Maintained Primary School	511	40 - 49
Wheatfield Primary School	167	40 - 49
Silverstream Primary School	144	40 - 49
Sacred Heart Primary School, Belfast	236	40 - 49
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	73	40 - 49
St John's Primary School, Derry	588	40 - 49
West Winds Primary School	156	40 - 49
Harpurs Hill Primary School	189	40 - 49

School name	Total enrolment	% of total enrolment entitled to free school meals
Primate Dixon Primary School	483	40 - 49
Botanic Primary School	185	40 - 49
Ballyoran Primary School	265	40 - 49
Donegall Road Primary School	164	40 - 49
St Patrick's Primary School, Newry	362	40 - 49
St Patrick's Primary School, Castlederg	248	40 - 49
Gaelscoil Ui Neill	104	40 - 49
Stewartstown Primary School	34	40 - 49
Sunnylands Primary School	166	40 - 49
Bunscoil An Traonaigh	22	40 - 49
Dunclug Primary School	115	40 - 49
Rathcoole Primary School	191	40 - 49
Knocknagoney Primary School	128	40 - 49
St Patrick's Primary School	207	40 - 49
Bunscoil Cholmcille	163	40 - 49
Earlview Primary School	141	40 - 49
Ballykeel Primary School	322	40 - 49
St Oliver Plunkett Primary School	597	40 - 49

PERCENTAGE POST-PRIMARY PUPILS ENTITLED TO FREE SCHOOL MEALS BY SCHOOL 2006/07

School name	Total enrolment	% of total enrolment entitled to free school meals
St Peter's High School	344	60 - 69
St Gemma's High School	262	60 - 69
St Brigid's College	840	60 - 69
St Colm's High School	701	50 - 59
Immaculate Conception College	239	50 - 59
St Gabriel's Boys School	117	50 - 59
Castle High School	129	50 - 59
St Mary's College	898	50 - 59
St Joseph's High School, Strabane	85	50 - 59
St Rose's High School	549	50 - 59

School name	Total enrolment	% of total enrolment entitled to free school meals
Corpus Christi College	600	50 - 59
St Joseph's Secondary, Derry	902	50 - 59
St Joseph's High School, Dungannon	454	50 - 59
Christian Brothers Secondary School	578	40 - 49
Lisnasharragh High School	193	40 - 49
Balmoral High School	154	40 - 49
Newtownabbey Community High School	302	40 - 49
Our Lady of Mercy Girls' School	438	40 - 49
St Joseph's College, Belfast	663	40 - 49
Mount Gilbert Community College	94	40 - 49
Maghera High School	166	40 - 49
St Cecilia's College	918	40 - 49
Belfast Boys' Model School	959	40 - 49
St Eugene's High School	142	40 - 49
St Joseph's High School, Crossmaglen	547	40 - 49
Orangefield High School	302	40 - 49

Source: NI School Census.

Note: Figures for primary schools include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – 7 classes.

For nursery children, figures for those children who had a parent(s) in receipt of Job Seeker's Allowance or Income Support was used as a proxy for free school meal eligibility.

Irish Language Schools

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's expenditure on Irish language schools, to date. (AQW 603/08)

Ms Ruane: The tables below show the Department's expenditure on Irish-medium schools between 1999/2000 and 2005/06 (the last year for which this information is readily available).

Figures are based on information provided by each of the Education & Library Boards and by the relevant branches within the Department of Education. LMS expenditure figures include both delegated and centre recurrent funding, but exclude other costs such as milk and meals and transport, which are not allocated at individual school level.

IRISH-MEDIUM SCHOOLS EXPENDITURE

Year	LMS Expenditure	Capital Expenditure	School Improvement Programme
1999/00	£3,039,201	£1,667,584	£27,200
2000/01	£3,809,316	£763,796	£42,874
2001/02	£4,304,243	£140,896	£41,000
2002/03	£5,113,379	£775,717	£52,220
2003/04	£6,128,323	£1,589,219	£75,400
2004/05	£6,553,325	£3,086,106	£228,954
2005/06	£7,866,375	£2,057,054	£151,500
Total	£36,814,162	£10,080,372	£619,148

Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's total expenditure on hospitality and entertainment, in each of the last five years. (AQW 621/08)

Ms Ruane: The total expenditure cost for hospitality, in the last five financial years is as follows:

Year	Cost
2002/03	£23,609
2003/04	£23,791
2004/05	£43,074
2005/06	£33,891
2006/07	£45,146
Total Cost	£169,511

The above are all costs associated with hospitality for the Department and the Minister. All of the above costs are inclusive of associated room hire.

MAGS2 Funding

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to explain why St Brigid's Primary School, Ballymena, is not eligible for the MAGS2 funding, despite the fact that children who now attend this school were previously entitled to this funding when they attended St Joseph's Primary School, which is now closed. (AQW 640/08)

Ms Ruane: Funds allocated to the MAGS 2 pilot initiative are targeted at schools with the lowest proportion of their pupils achieving the expected level for their age at Key Stage 2 Assessment. St Brigid's Primary School does not meet this criteria.

Sign Language

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teachers in Northern Ireland who hold a sign language qualification. (AQW 655/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department does not hold this information centrally however in July 2007 when answering a previous similar question we contacted the 5 Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools who employ teachers.

The Southern Education and Library Board advised in July 2007 that they had 4 and Western Education and Library Board had 7, these figures related to Peripatetic Teachers in the Boards Sensory Impaired Services. The other employing authorities advised they did not hold this information.

School Enrolments

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children from the mid-Glens area of Glenariff, Cushendall and Cushendun, who live within the three-mile limit for St Aloysius High School, and who have enrolled in (i) St Aloysius High School, Cushendun; (ii) Cross and Passion College, Ballycastle; (iii) St Macnissi's, Garron Tower; and (iv) St Louis Grammar School, Ballymena, in each of the last five years. (AQW 674/08)

Ms Ruane: The total number of pupils admitted to St Aloysius High School, Cross and Passion College, St Macnissi's College and St Louis Grammar School for the last five school years is set out in the attached table. This information relates to pupils living in the mid-Glens area of Glenariff, Cushendall and Cushendun. Information relating to which of these children live within a three mile radius of St Aloysius High School is not readily available and its retrieval would result in disproportionate cost.

School	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
St Aloysius High School	11	9	8	1	0
Cross and Passion College	10	10	13	18	22
St Macnissi's College	37	25	24	15	32
St Louis Grammar School	4	5	2	2	2

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Course Fees

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the average fees charged for a course, broken down by each of the Further Education Colleges, in each of the last five years. (AQW 468/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): As incorporated bodies, further education colleges are responsible for their own curriculum offers and set their own course fees policies. Therefore, the Department for Employment and Learning does not hold details of fees charged by colleges for further education courses in Northern Ireland. In addition, further education colleges do not, routinely, hold information on the average fees charged for courses and, given the large number of part-time and full-time courses offered by colleges, this information could not be made available easily.

Course Fees

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline what scope his department has to reduce or cap fees charged to students by Further Education Colleges. (AQW 470/08)

Sir Reg Empey: As incorporated bodies, further education colleges are responsible for their own curriculum offers and for setting the level of fees, including concessionary fees, charged to students for the courses they provide. The Department for Employment and Learning does not intervene in this matter.

Sector Skills Agreement

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to co-ordinate a sector skills agreement between further education colleges and the manufacturing industry. (AQW 504/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Sector Skills Agreements are or have already been agreed by five Sector Skills Councils in relation to different sectors of manufacturing industry. The agreements are brokered among a range of private and public sector stakeholders which may include further education colleges.

Student Loans

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to explain the decision to increase interest rates for Student Loans from 2.4% to 4.8%. (AQW 544/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Student loans are issued on the basis that borrowers should repay broadly the same amount, in real terms, as they borrowed. Therefore the interest rate is linked only to the rate of inflation which is calculated annually using the Retail Price Index (RPI). For the academic year 2007/08 the interest rate will be set at the current RPI rate of 4.8%. This represents an increase from 2.4% in 2006/07 and may continue to fluctuate year on year according to the rate of inflation.

Skills Pool

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to address the gaps in Northern Ireland's skills pool, with particular reference to skilled labour, e.g. plumbing, joinery etc. (AQW 545/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Success through Skills, the Skills Strategy for Northern Ireland, aims to identify current and future skills needs both at a regional and local level and seek appropriate interventions.

The Strategy advocates the use of the Department's existing provision to raise the population's overall level of skills. In addition, the Department is examining more sector specific requirements through an employer led network consisting of the Skills Expert Group, six Workforce Development Forums and the 25 UK wide Sector Skills Councils (SSCs).

Training for Success, which replaced the existing Jobskills programme in September 2007, is the Department's flagship professional and technical training provision. It provides the opportunity to a significant number of young people to work towards industry recognised qualifications.

SSCs have specific responsibility for setting standards within their industry, including the requirements for Apprenticeship provision within Training for Success. SummitSkills and ConstructionSkills are the SSCs responsible for plumbing and joinery respectively. The councils also work with the employers to promote apprenticeships and that scope has now been widened with the introduction of Level 2 Apprenticeship training in addition to the existing Level 3 provision.

The Department, for its part, will continue to promote professional and technical training widely and in particular apprenticeships. There are some 54 Suppliers delivering Training for Success and under contract they are also required to develop relationships with industry and employers and to promote training and apprenticeships.

Student Enrolments

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students from the Strangford constituency, who enrolled in (i) university; (ii) further education college; and (iii) apprenticeships, in each of the last three years. (AQW 565/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Table below details the requested data for Universities and Further Education Colleges during the period 2003/04 to 2005/06, the latest year for which data are available. Data in relation to apprenticeships have been provided for the years 2004/05 to 2006/07.

STUDENTS ENROLLED FROM THE STRANGFORD PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCY, 2003/04 – 2005/06

Students enrolled in:	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
UK Universities ¹	3,305	3,465	3,415
NI Further Education Colleges ²	5,926	7,215	6,751
NI Apprenticeships ³		159	141	155

Sources: ¹ Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA),

² Further Education Statistical Record (FESR),

³ Client Management System.

Note: ¹ HESA figures are rounded to the nearest 5.

South Eastern Regional College

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he can confirm that there are no plans to close or wind down operations at the Kircubbin and Ballyboley campuses of the South Eastern Regional College. (AQW 581/08)

Sir Reg Empey: I can confirm that there are currently no plans to close or wind down operations at these campuses. However, colleges keep their course provision under regular review to take account of the changing demand in their areas, while ensuring continued ease of access for learners.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013)

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is his assessment of the Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013), with its focus on enterprise development, with reference to its ability to address and support the broader economic development needs of the west region, given the concerns highlighted by district councils in this area.

(AQW 460/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): The future Northern Ireland Competitiveness programme 2007-13, co-financed by the European Regional Development Fund, has been drawn-up in partnership with a wide range of regional interests including local government representatives, public and private sector bodies, social partners, business and research bodies, and environmental agencies. The draft Programme, which is expected to be approved shortly by the European Commission, has been prepared in line with the new EU Guidelines and Regulations and fulfils the Lisbon requirement to focus on spending to help achieve a step-change in Northern Ireland's competitiveness.

The draft Programme covers all of Northern Ireland and is aimed at boosting the performance of the regions as a whole. The draft Programme will allow support for a broad range of strategic economic development activities and needs across Northern Ireland. While the Guidelines for the programme do not provide for expenditure on large scale infrastructure, a point of concern for some Councils, I hope that all parts of the region, including the west, will benefit from it.

Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013)

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans are in place within the Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013), to support the unique economic needs of the west whilst meeting the challenges proposed by the Lisbon Agenda.
(AQW 461/08)

Mr Dodds: The future Northern Ireland Competitiveness programme 2007-13 co-financed by the European Regional Development Fund has been drawn-up in partnership with a wide range of regional interests including, local government representatives, public and private sector bodies, social partners, business and research bodies, and environmental agencies. The draft programme which is expected to be approved shortly by the European Commission is fully in line with the new EU Guidelines and Regulations and fulfils the Lisbon requirement to focus on spending to help achieve a step-change in Northern Ireland's competitiveness.

The programme covers all of Northern Ireland and is aimed at boosting the performance of the regions as a whole. The programme will allow for support for a broad range of strategic economic development activities addressing needs and challenges across Northern Ireland.

Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013)

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will make a statement on the new Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013); and if he will ensure that the Programme will allow local authorities to fund Town Centre Regeneration Programmes and Marketing Initiatives, as was the case within the previous Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme (2001-2007).
(AQW 462/08)

Mr Dodds: The Draft Programme, which is expected to be approved shortly by the European Commission, has been prepared in line with the new EU Guidelines and Regulations and fulfils the Lisbon requirement to focus on spending to help achieve a step-change in Northern Ireland's competitiveness.

Under the new rules governing types of activities that may be funded under the new Competitiveness and Employment Objective, many of the activities that were previously funded under the Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme in Northern Ireland as an 'Objective 1' region are no longer eligible. No money has specifically been set aside within the draft Programme for town centre regeneration, but the programme would allow for strategic business development activities which could impact on urban and rural regeneration. Any proposals put forward would be considered on their merit and their potential contribution to meeting the aims and objectives of the future Programme.

Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013)

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans are in place within the new Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013) to ensure that those Town Centre Regeneration Strategies previously funded by his department, in partnership with district councils, will be financially supported and implemented over the next five years.
(AQW 463/08)

Mr Dodds: The future Northern Ireland Competitiveness programme 2007-13, co-financed by the European Regional Development Fund, is expected to be approved shortly by the European Commission. The Draft Programme has been prepared in line with the new EU Guidelines and Regulations and fulfils the Lisbon requirement to focus on spending to help improve Northern Ireland's competitiveness.

Under the new rules governing types of activities that may be funded under the new Competitiveness and Employment Objective, many of the activities that were previously funded under the Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme in Northern Ireland as an 'Objective 1' region are no longer eligible. No money has specifically been set aside for town centre regeneration, but the programme will allow for strategic business development activities which could impact on urban and rural regeneration. Any proposals put forward would be considered on their merit, and their potential contribution to meeting the aims and objectives of the future programme.

Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013)

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what future role the Assembly will have in formulating and detailing the programme complement of the Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013), to ensure that it meets the economic needs of Northern Ireland, and in particular, the west. (AQW 464/08)

Mr Dodds: Under the new EU Regulations for the funding period 2007-13, there is no requirement for a Programme Complement to EU Competitiveness and Employment programmes. The Northern Ireland ERDF Competitiveness Programme 2007-13 is a strategic-level framework programme covering the whole of Northern Ireland: it sets out how we will use our share of the UK's Structural Fund allocation 2007-13 to complement national spending to improve our competitiveness and create a sustainable, knowledge-based economy with opportunities for all. The strategy and the key spending Priorities in the draft programme, which is expected to be approved shortly by the EU Commission, is fully in line with the Lisbon requirement to devote EU resources to increasing the levels of Research and Development and promoting innovation. Equality and sustainable development are cross-cutting themes underpinning each of the Priorities in the future programme. The Assembly and its Committees have oversight of EU Programme expenditure in the same way as other public expenditure. The draft programme was presented to the Finance and Personnel Committee of the Assembly and approved by the Executive before submission to the EU Commission.

Financial Capability Strategy

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps are being taken to implement the Financial Services Authority's United Kingdom Financial Capability Strategy, given the research conducted by the Consumer Council, which shows that consumers in Northern Ireland are falling behind at being financially capable. (AQW 525/08)

Mr Dodds: The Consumer Council for Northern Ireland, in conjunction with the Financial Services Authority, has established a Northern Ireland Financial Capability Partnership which includes the public sector, financial institutions and voluntary and community organisations. The Partnership is planning a range of initiatives aimed at improving the level of financial capability in Northern Ireland. Funding from the FSA has been secured to create a NI Financial Capability Co-ordinator post in the Consumer Council to work towards implementing the UK Financial Capability Strategy in NI from October 2007.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) to provide an estimate of the cost placed on the Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre at each stage since 2000; (ii) to detail whether or not a cost limit was included as part of the specification for the international design competition announcement in 2005; and (iii) to explain the reasons why the cost appears to have escalated from approximately £14 million in 2004, to over £21 million in 2007, an increase of 50% in three years. (AQW 558/08)

Mr Dodds:

- (i) My Department only assumed the lead in this project in April 2003. The first project cost estimate was produced in late 2004 for the international design competition which commenced in February 2005. The estimated project cost, which was based on an anticipated completion date of May 2007, was £14 million - £8.5 million of which was the estimated construction cost. The balance was for contingency and fees. The next cost estimate was produced after the competition in May 2006. The estimated cost was then £17 million. This assumed a completion date of December 2008. A more detailed cost estimate was produced in November 2006. The estimated cost was then £20 million with a completion date of March 2009. The most recent cost estimate was produced in May 2007. The estimated cost was then £21.5 million with a completion date of December 2009.
- (ii) The International Architectural Competition Brief set an indicative budget of £8.5 million for construction. This excluded fees and contingency of circa £5.5 million
- (iii) The reasons for the increase in project costs include;
 - (a) design of the building – underground design more expensive
 - (b) increase in building size from 1800 sq metres to 2000 sq metres
 - (c) additional work on landscaping and off site car parking

- (d) decanting the existing visitor facilities during the period of construction
- (e) construction inflation
- (f) increased provision for contingency and fees

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the comments made by the Geological Survey of Northern Ireland in relation to the private application for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway. (AQW 576/08)

Mr Dodds: I have arranged for copies of the GSNI comments in relation to the visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway to be placed in the library of the Assembly.

Broadband Availability

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the villages in North Antrim that do not have broadband access; and to outline his department's strategy and timetable for delivering 100% broadband availability in North Antrim. (AQW 577/08)

Mr Dodds: Broadband access with speeds of no less than 512 kilo bits per second has been available to all of Northern Ireland since December 2005. This includes every village in North Antrim and is delivered either through telephone lines, wireless or satellite services. Consumers can often choose from more than one provider.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is his assessment of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's comments, made on 27 June 2002, in regard to the private application for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway, which stated that 'applications close to the World Heritage Site have the potential to forever compromise the visual and environmental integrity of the area', with specific reference to whether or not this development will detrimentally affect the tourist industry. (AQW 578/08)

Mr Dodds: I am advised that this reference is taken from a single Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) response to planning consultations in respect of a number of proposed developments. I am also advised that the views expressed in June 2002 were framed in the circumstances of the time. These included work being undertaken by the Department of the Environment (DOE) on an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty Management Plan and the drafting of the Northern Area Plan. The planning system, which is the responsibility of DOE, deals with issues of visual and environmental integrity. The tourism industry will be best served by the development of facilities which enhance the visitor experience and which protect the interests of taxpayers.

Asbestos-related Illness

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of people who have died as a consequence of asbestos-related illness, contracted through exposure to asbestos in their workplace, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 595/08)

Mr Dodds: Asbestos-related diseases are, in the main, occupationally acquired and include asbestosis, mesothelioma and lung cancer. The table below gives the number of deaths in each year between 1997 and 2006 where the underlying cause of death was recorded as mesothelioma¹ or 'asbestosis'². The number of deaths caused by asbestos related lung cancer is not available. However, estimates suggest that they equal those caused by mesothelioma. For the majority of these deaths, the workplace is likely to have been the relevant source of asbestos. However there are no figures available on such exposure related to cause of death.

- 1 International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision code C45 for years 2001-2006 and Ninth Revision codes 158.9 or 163.9 for year 1997-2000.
- 2 International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision codes J61 and J92.0 for years 2001-2006 and Ninth Revision code 501 for year 1997-2000.

TABLE: NUMBER OF REGISTERED DEATHS BY YEAR
IN NORTHERN IRELAND RESULTING FROM ASBESTOS RELATED ILLNESSES (MESOTHELIOMA AND 'ASBESTOSIS'),
1997- 2006

Registration Year	Mesothelioma	'Asbestosis'	Total
1997	42	-	42
1998	40	6	46
1999	46	4	50
2000	37	6	43
2001	54	9	63
2002	42	12	54
2003	46	9	55
2004	51	14	65

Registration Year	Mesothelioma	'Asbestosis'	Total
2005	34	10	44
2006 ^p	47	6	53

^p Provisional data.

Note: Data from 2001-2006 have been agreed by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) and the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland (HSENI). Prior to 2001 the figures are from NISRA only.

Asbestos-related Illness: Harland and Wolff

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what compensation arrangements have been put in place by Harland and Wolff, to compensate employees who have contracted asbestos-related illnesses from exposure to asbestos during their time of employment with the company.

(AQW 596/08)

Mr Dodds: Harland & Wolff was taken into public ownership in 1975. Harland & Wolff plc (H&W plc) remained in public ownership at the time of the privatisation of the shipbuilding business in 1989. All liabilities that existed at this time were retained in H&W plc.

DETI has guaranteed funding to H&W plc to enable it to meet liabilities as they fall due. This commitment covers funding to meet obligations that would fall to the company in relation to agreed compensation claims from employees who contracted asbestos related illnesses. This position was affirmed in a statement to the Northern Ireland Assembly on 5 March 2002 by Sir Reg Empey, the then DETI Minister.

Asbestos-related Illness: Harland and Wolff

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the number of Harland and Wolff employees who have received compensation for asbestos-related illnesses contracted from their employment at the shipyard; and (b) the total amount of compensation paid out by the company. (AQW 597/08)

Mr Dodds: Statistical Information relating to the above is available only from 2001 onwards. No earlier information is available as previously the company's insurers, Chester Street, would have settled claims on the company's behalf.

- (a) 2,693 employees have received compensation since 2001.
- (b) £30,273,903 has been paid to former employees since 2001.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Applications

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) all Article 31 planning applications that were in the system when she took up office; (ii) the dates upon which each of these applications were submitted to the Planning Service; (iii) the dates upon which they were declared under Article 31; and (iv) the date upon which she made a decision, in cases where a decision has been made.

(AQW 325/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): I can confirm that there were 69 Article 31 planning applications in the system on 8 May 2007, 1 of which was approved on 27 July 2007 (extension to foodstore at Knocknagoney) and 2 of which have since been withdrawn (proposed extension to landfill site, Gortin and foodstore/retail warehouse, Enniskillen). The dates these applications were received by Planning Service, as well as the dates they were declared Article 31, are detailed on the attached table.

There are a number of key factors which contribute to the timescales involved in the processing of an Article 31 application. The most important is the quality of the application and its supporting information. The vast majority of Article 31 applications because of the scale, nature and location of the proposal, are required to be accompanied by a significant amount of environmental information – information which is submitted in the form of an Environmental Statement. It is very often the case that the required environmental information is submitted long after an application has been submitted to Planning Service added to which further information may be required following consultation with environmental bodies. This has significant implications for timescales.

Another is the development plan process and, particularly, the issue of prematurity – which is applicable to a significant number of current Article 31 applications. At present, for example, a number of applications are awaiting the outcome of the Ards/Down Area Plan public inquiry and as a result have been in the process for some time.

The Strategic Projects Unit is aware of the need to bring long-standing applications to the decision stage and steps have been taken which should ensure that the number of such cases is significantly reduced in the coming months.

App Ref No	Date Received	Description	Date declared Article 31	Outcome
1. A/2004/1251	03-Dec-04	Erection of six storey building for office & ancillary uses on the bed of the river Foyle. Foyle embankment L'Derry.	24-Mar-05	No decision made as yet.
2. U/2001/0243	04-May-01	Construction of Housing Scheme along with Roads & associated site works & landscaping , Ross's Ave, Ballyclare.	23-Aug-01	No decision made as yet.
3. R/2002/0971	05-Aug-02	Continuation of use of land in accordance with planning permission R/1993/0400 without conditions 3 & 4. Bishopcourt, Ballyhornan.	25-Nov-02	No decision made as yet.
4. X/1999/0842	08-Oct-99	Residential Development Donaghadee Road, N'ards	03-Dec-99	No decision made as yet.
5. Z/2003/2725	10-Nov-03	Mixed Use Development Bridge End, Belfast.	05-Mar-04	No decision made as yet.
6. F/2006/0131	09-May-06	Regeneration of Former Magheramore Works & Quarry. Magheramore, Larne.	10-Aug-06	No decision made as yet.
7. X/2000/0414	11-Apr-00	Residential Development & provision for Link road Newtownards	09-Jun-00	No decision made as yet.
8. U/2006/0377	11-Jul-06	First phase of Relief Road. western edge of Ballyclare.	31-Oct-06	No decision made as yet.
9. Z/2004/0329	12-Feb-04	Brunswick (Sirocco) Ltd Office, Buildings & Apartments Bridge End,Belfast	07-Apr-04	No decision made as yet.
10. N/2007/0131	14-Feb-07	Marlborough Retail Park Highfield Grove, Craigavon.	04-Apr-07	No decision made as yet.
11. X/1999/0030	15-Jan-99	Village Development between Bangor Rd & Donaghdee Rd. Newtownards.	29-Mar-00	No decision made as yet.
12. Z/2004/1455	14-Jun-04	NIHE Housing & Mixed development Hannahstown Hill, Belfast.	04-Oct-04	No decision made as yet.
13. J/2006/0616	19-May-06	Strategic mixed use development including employment park, leisure complex and hotel inc landscaping, Strabane.	10-Aug-06	No decision made as yet.
14. X/2001/ 1118	20-Sep-01	Housing Development at Movilla Road, Newtownards.	15-Jan-02	No decision made as yet.
15. F/1999/0465	23-Dec-99	Waterfront Leisure Development with Marina, hotel, restaurant & apartment. Larne	17-Apr-00	No decision made as yet.
16. X/2001/0457	24-Apr-01	Residential development Newtownards.	25-Sep-01	No decision made as yet
17. E/2002/0065	25-Feb-02	Giant's Causeway World Heritage visitor & Study Centre , Bushmills.	11-Apr-02	No decision made as yet.
18. T/1999/0376	29-Jun-99	New Village settlement Clady Road, Dunadry.	24-May-00	No decision made as yet.
19. Y/2006/0379	30-Jun-06	Park and Ride Adjacent to Saintfield Road Belfast.	26-Sep-06	No decision made as yet.
20. Z/2000/2178	05-Sep-00	Comprehensive mixed-use development, Sirocco Works Belfast	03-Nov-00	No Decision made as yet
21.Z/2006/2864	12-Dec-06	Titanic Quarter residential Mixed-use development. Belfast.	27-Mar-07	No Decision made as yet *Minister announced her intention to approve this application on 2 October 2007

App Ref No	Date Received	Description	Date declared Article 31	Outcome
22. Z/1996/2070	01-Feb-96	Proposed Incinerator & Storage of waste and sewage for production of Electricity McCaughey Road, Belfast.	22-Apr-96	No Decision made as yet
23. A/1998/0451	03-Jul-98	Proposed extension to restoration of landfill site Gortin	22-Oct-98	Application Withdrawn 24/07/2007
24. J/1994/0386	27-Oct-94	Proposed landfill facility Moorlough Road, Artigarvan.	13-Dec-94	No Decision made as yet
25. R/1996/0677	09-Aug-96	Proposed animal incineration plant, Crossgar.	01-Oct-96	No Decision made as yet
26. F/2001/007	10-Jan-01	Proposed Landfill facility. Ballyrickard Road, Larne.	01-May-01	No Decision made as yet
27. H/1997/0364	18-Jul-97	Change of use from Quarry to refuse disposal / recycling facility, Knocklochrim Quarry. L'Derry.	28-Oct-97	No Decision made as yet
28. Z/1997/2681	22-Aug-97	Plant for the generation for electric power, Duncrue Street Belfast	04-Dec-97	No Decision made as yet
29. T/2002/0020	16-Jan-02	Change of Use from Quarry to a site for the disposal of refuse & waste landfilling Ladyhill, Antrim	24-May-02	No Decision made as yet
30. T/2001/0517	02-Jul-01	Landfill site & Materials recovery. Craigmore Quarry Craigmore Rd, Randalstown	02-Sep-02	No Decision made as yet
31. B/2005/0329	04-May-05	Extension to Eden Quarry, Glenshane Road, Dungiven.	08-Aug-05	No Decision made as yet
32. F/2005/0044	10-Feb-05	Extension to Parishagh & Demesne Quarry, Glenarm.	13-Apr-05	No Decision made as yet
33. X/2006/0302	23-Mar-06	Extension to existing quarry, Moss Road, Ballygowan Co.Down	06-Jul-06	No Decision made as yet
34. B/2004/0862	23-Dec-04	Extension to existing sand & gravel pit (Murnees Sand pit) Dungiven	13-Apr-05	No Decision made as yet
35. L/20061397	25-Apr-06	Variation of planning conditions to allow deepening of Slushill Quarry, Lisnakea.	06-Apr-06	No Decision made as yet
36. I/2004/1062	23-Sep-04	Extension of existing quarry at Ballymagilly, Cookstown.	21-Feb-05	No Decision made as yet
37. Q/06/1075	07-Dec-06	Superstore Bridgewater Park, Banbridge	23-Mar-07	No Decision made as yet
38. Q/06/1074	01-Dec-06	Warehouse Park Bridgewater park Banbridge	23-Mar-07	No Decision made as yet
39. Z/03//2548	16-Oct-03	New floodlit soccer pitches housing development retail & car parking Fortwilliam Roundabout Belfast	25-Aug-04	No Decision made as yet
40. N/04/1170	01-Nov-04	Food superstore with parking (Northway/Highfield Heights,Craigavon)	17-Dec-04	No Decision made as yet
41. N/04/1314	06-Dec-04	Food superstore Marlborough Retail Park Craigavon	02-Feb-05	No Decision made as yet
42. N/98/0458	06-Jul-98	Retail development Shillingstons Site Portadown	04-Sep-98	No Decision made as yet
43. L/04/1961	06-Oct-04	Foodstore/Retail ware-house former abattoir site Enniskillen	02-Dec-04	Application Withdrawn 23/07/2007
44. J/05/0125	07-Feb-05	Retail Development Strabane	30-Mar-05	No Decision made as yet

App Ref No	Date Received	Description	Date declared Article 31	Outcome
45. X/05/1156	07-Oct-05	Retail Development Castlebawn, Newtownards.	24-Nov-05	No Decision made as yet
46. Z/02/0572	08-Mar-02	Extension Castlecourt Shopping centre Belfast	25-Jun-02	No Decision made as yet
47. Z/03/2727	10-Nov-03	Major Retail Development Brigde end, Belfast.	05-Mar-04	No Decision made as yet
48. U/05/0070	09-Feb-05	Extension Abbeycentre Longwood rd, Newtownabbey	06-Apr-05	No Decision made as yet
49. A/07/0145	09-Feb-07	Proposed redevelopment of existing Lisnagelvin Shopping centre Lisnagelvin Rd, L'Derry	04-Apr-07	No Decision made as yet
50. S/06/0443	10-Apr-06	Major mixed-use urban extension	21-Jul-06	No Decision made as yet
51. A/06/0180	24-Feb-06	Retail foodstore Buncranan Rd, L'Derry	19-Jan-07	No Decision made as yet
52. S/05/1556	11-Nov-05	Tourist destination and retail garden centre restaurant, garden areas Car parking, landscaping Saintfield Rd, Belfast.	19-Jul-06	No Decision made as yet
53. Z/04/2377	12-Oct-04	Mixed-used Development Smithfield Square North Belfast.	31-Jan-05	No Decision made as yet
54. N/96/0321	15-Apr-96	Supermarket&Petrol filling station, Craigavon	13-Jun-96	No Decision made as yet
55. N/05/0253	14-Mar-05	Site for Foodstore (Marlborough Retail park) Alternative scheme to N/04/1314 Craigavon	12-May-05	No Decision made as yet
56. X/05/0653	17-May-05	Shopping centre and associated multi storey car park	30-Jun-05	No Decision made as yet
57. A/04/0976	17-Sep-04	Proposed food store car parking , Buncrana rd Templemore Rd, L'Derry.	17-Nov-04	No Decision made as yet
58. X/04/1800	21-Dec-04	Extension to existing Ards Shopping centre Newtownards.	17-Feb-05	No Decision made as yet
59. N/96/0138	23-Feb-96	Retail development-food store/retail warehousing, Edenderry Portadown.	29-Apr-96	No Decision made as yet
60. N/05/0288	23-Mar-05	Foodstore at Edenderry, Portadown	12-May-05	No Decision made as yet
61. Z/04/2299	01-Oct-04	Extension to existing food store Knocknagoney, Belfast	17-Jan-05	Approved 27/7/07
62. Z/06/2018	25-Aug-06	Superstore Castlereagh Rd, Belfast	24-Oct-06	No Decision made as yet
63. Z/03/0437	25-Feb-03	Mixed use development Alternative proposal to Z/00/0520, Royal Avenue & Donegall St, Belfast.	16-Jun-03	No Decision made as yet
64. S/04/1757	10-Nov-04	Outline application for retail development on Mckinstry Road Lisburn	14-Mar-05	No Decision made as yet
65. Z/04/2742	26-Nov-04	Extension to existing Westwood Shopping Centre, Belfast	5-Jan-05	No Decision made as yet
66. Y/05/0257	27-May-05	Retail warehousing at Purdysburn Rd/ Saintfield Rd Belfast	26-Jan-06	No Decision made as yet
67. Y/00/0704	30-Oct-00	Comprehensive road improvement, Castlereagh, Belfast.	29-Dec-00	No Decision made as yet
68.T/06/0629	31-Jul-06	Food superstore Ballymena Rd, Antrim.	27-Sep-06	No Decision made as yet
69. Z/00/0520	25-Feb-00	Retail, leisure, hotel and residential use development, Cathedral Way, Belfast	28-Nov-00	No Decision made as yet

Planning Applications

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of outstanding planning applications, broken down by district council area; and to detail the average amount of time taken to deal with such an application. (AQW 474/08)

Mrs Foster: At 31 August 2007, there were a total of 19,024 outstanding planning applications (that is, not yet determined). The median (that is, most appropriate average) length of time these applications have been outstanding was 24.2 working weeks. The breakdown of these figures by District Council area is as follows:

OUTSTANDING APPLICATIONS AT 31/08/2007

District Council Area	Number of Outstanding applications	Median ¹ Number of Weeks Outstanding
Antrim	305	11.8
Ards	726	19.2
Armagh	1284	49.9
Ballymena	618	18.5
Ballymoney	324	20.2
Banbridge	930	34.6
Belfast	1482	18.4
Carrickfergus	206	16.8
Castlereagh	292	17.2
Coleraine	757	22.2
Cookstown	488	19.8
Craigavon	615	23
Derry	897	23.6
Down	787	22
Dungannon	729	18.4
Fermanagh	1206	24.8
Larne	310	22.2
Limavady	381	22.2
Lisburn	1103	23.8
Magherafelt	698	28.2
Moyle	264	23.9
Newry and Mourne	2360	41.8
Newtownabbey	438	18.6
North Down	609	19.4
Omagh	872	21.2
Strabane	343	16
Planning Service Total	19024	24.2

¹ The mean is sensitive to abnormally high values, which may be caused by inaccuracies in the data, and does not represent the typical average time an application is outstanding. Therefore the most appropriate average value to produce this, in this instance, is the median.

Dog Fouling

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to help district councils to develop a strategy to tackle dog fouling; and what will be the content of this strategy. (AQW 492/08)

Mrs Foster: Dog fouling is one of a number of issues presently under consideration by my Department as part of our work to bring forward stronger and more effective legislation to help district councils to improve local environmental quality. We are considering various options to allow more effective control of dog fouling. It is our intention to consult on specific proposals in due course.

Eastwood Envirowise Facility, Crumlin

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to her answer to AQO 170/08, to detail specifically the tonnage of (i) inert waste; and (ii) reclamation material stored at the Eastwood Envirowise facility, Crosshill Road, Crumlin, BT29 4BQ. (AQW 513/08)

Mrs Foster: There are approximately 8,000 tonnes of waste stored at the Eastwood Envirowise facility in Crumlin prior to reclamation.

The waste stockpiles are comprised of bricks, rubble, concrete and small amounts of wood and metal. It is not possible to give a further breakdown on the composition of this waste prior to processing on site by the operator as it is mixed when the site receives it.

Material which has been reclaimed is transported off site. EHS is satisfied that the site operator is complying with a licensed limit of 1,000 tonnes of reclaimed material permitted on the site.

Planning Applications for Retirement and Farm Workers Dwellings

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the criteria used to assess farm viability for retirement and farm workers' dwellings; and to detail all applications refused (with reasons) and approved in the Moyle District Council area, since January 2007. (AQW 534/08)

Mrs Foster: The relevant policy context within which planning applications for retirement and farm workers dwellings are considered is detailed in policy

CTY1, 2 and 3 of draft Planning Policy Statement 14 – Sustainable Development in the Countryside. This and other planning policies can be viewed on the Planning Service website at www.planningni.gov.uk

When considering the viability element of the policy the Department, in line with Policy CTY2, considers the following:

- (i) labour requirements of the farm, including the need for specialist workers and the level of attention needed outside normal hours;
- (ii) Farm Details, the extent and nature of the farm enterprise; including details of land owned, taken in conacre, stock numbers and type of farming operations; (Land taken in conacre will only be considered, in the assessment of need, when it has been a regular part of a farm unit over a considerable period of years -generally not less than 10 years).
- (iii) The man-hour requirements of a farm will indicate the numbers of workers required to run the business, but this does not necessarily mean that it is essential for all those workers to live on the farm.
- (iv) the level of investment and commitment to the business. Investment in farm buildings, or maintenance and improvement of land alone, may not be sufficient evidence of a commitment. Actual agricultural use for a sufficient period of time will be necessary.
- (v) Consultation response from Department for Agriculture and Rural Development.
- (vi) The case provided by the applicant to show that the proposed occupant is sufficiently involved in farming, to be considered mainly working in agriculture on the farm, and that it is essential he or she should live there, for the working of that farm.

Details of the applications for farm dwellings approved and refused since January 2007 will be provided to you in a separate letter.

Path Erosion

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what resources have been invested in the high Mourne to combat path erosion in the last two years.

(AQW 548/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service has provided the National Trust with grant aid of £30,568 towards a Slieve Donard Access and Erosion project; £17,864.33 in the 2005/06 financial year and £12,703.67 in 2006/07. Through this project, an upland access team provided specialist skills in the construction of stone pitched footpaths and the restoration of eroded habitats.

I believe that effective management of access is crucial to landowners and visitors alike. I have therefore asked Environment and Heritage Service to commit a further £500,000 over three years to address some of the recommendations of the Mourne Access Study.

This will provide additional resources for developing and improving access facilities, providing better information for walkers and helping landowners deal with the problems they face.

Wastewater Treatment Works at Newcastle, Co. Down

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the environmental concerns her department has in relation to the performance of the wastewater treatment works at Newcastle, Co. Down; to list the data for discharges from this treatment works; and to detail how this data complies with Environment and Heritage Service guidelines. (AQW 549/08)

Mrs Foster: Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) regulates discharges from Northern Ireland Water (NIW) waste water treatment works (WWTW) against standards set by EHS and also standards under the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive (UWWTD).

Since 1 January 1997, the quality of the effluent discharged by the works has complied with EHS discharge standards every year, except for 2003 when one sample failed. This single failure caused the works to fail for the year 2003.

Since 1 January 2001, the quality of the effluent discharged by the works has complied with the requirements of the UWWTD, except on one occasion in 2006. This single failure caused the works to fail for the year 2006. Since 1991, the works has provided secondary treatment – this has been a requirement of the UWWTD since 1 January 2001.

The bathing water at Newcastle failed to comply with the mandatory standards of the EC Bathing Waters Directive during 2001, 2005 and 2007 and also with the tighter guideline standards during 2002, 2004 and 2006. The failures are considered to be largely due to the impact of storm overflows from the Newcastle sewer system during wet weather, in conjunction with overflows from the WWTW.

Following investigation of the failures of the bathing water, a study, commissioned by the, then, Water Service at the request of EHS, into the operation of the sewer system, was carried out and this was completed in February 2006. Following this, in March 2006, EHS agreed a solution with Water Service which is designed to reduce the spillage from storm overflows on the system. NIW is currently drawing up implementation plans to put the agreed solution in place.

Access to the High Mournes

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what resources have been invested to improve access from Newcastle, Co. Down to the high Mournes, in each of the past two years. (AQW 554/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service has provided the National Trust with grant aid of £30,568 towards a Slieve Donard Access and Erosion project; £17,864.33 in the 2005/06 financial year and £12,703.67 in 2006/07. Through this project, an upland access team provided specialist skills in the construction of stone pitched footpaths and the restoration of eroded habitats.

I believe that effective management of access is crucial to landowners and visitors alike. I have therefore asked Environment and Heritage Service to commit a further £500,000 over three years to address some of the recommendations of the Mournes Access Study.

This will provide additional resources for developing and improving access facilities, providing better information for walkers and helping landowners deal with the problems they face.

Planning Proposal at the Giant's Causeway

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail, including dates, all site or office meetings that have taken place in regard to the planning proposal at the Giant's Causeway. (AQW 568/08)

Mrs Foster: As with any major planning application, the Giant's Causeway proposal has been the subject of numerous meetings since it was submitted in 2002. The most significant of these have been as follows:

- A meeting of Planning Service Management Board on 11th April 2002 at which a decision was taken to apply Article 31 of the Planning Order to this application (Article 31 was applied on grounds that the proposal would impact on the whole of a neighbourhood and would be of significance to the whole or a substantial part of Northern Ireland).
- A meeting on 6th September 2006 between Planning Service officials and a legal representative relating to technical details associated with the processing of the application.
- A meeting between Planning Service officials on 14th March 2007 to discuss the findings of their assessment of the planning application.

- A meeting of Planning Service Management Board on 17th May 2007 to consider a report and recommendation produced by Planning Service officials.
- A meeting between Planning Service officials and the applicant, Mr Sweeney, on 28th September 2007 to discuss a number of issues which I have identified as being worthy of further consideration. These issues, which are already a matter of public record, include:
 - the impact of the proposal on the World Heritage Site;
 - its ability to integrate into the landscape;
 - its relationship to other development in the area;
 - its relationship to the existing visitors centre.

Persistent Organic Pollutants

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of how the principles of the Stockholm Convention on Persistent Organic Pollutants (POPs) have been incorporated into legislation in Northern Ireland. (AQW 583/08)

Mrs Foster: Within the European Community, requirements of the Stockholm Convention have been implemented through Regulation EC 850/2004 on Persistent Organic Pollutants. This regulation is binding in all member states. Additional UK regulations (The Draft Persistent Organic Pollutants Regulations 2007) have been prepared and are due to come into force in November 2007.

These regulations will enforce Regulation (EC) 850/2004 and designate DoE as the Competent Authority for Northern Ireland. The main provisions relate to restricting the marketing and use of specified substances, treatment of stockpiles and disposal of waste containing POPs. Measures and strategies to reduce levels of POPs in the environment are also set out in the UK National Implementation Plan, published in April 2007.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the major concerns of the Environment and Heritage Service in relation to the private application for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway; and what assessment the Water Management Unit has made of whether or not there is the appropriate waste water treatment infrastructure to deal with this proposed development. (AQW 585/08)

Mrs Foster: Environment and Heritage Service commented on the planning application from Seaport

Investments Ltd for a Visitor Centre at the Giant's Causeway in a letter dated 20 December 2002.

EHS's comments centred on:

- (i) the impact of the development on the landscape character and quality of the World Heritage Site and its setting; and
- (ii) the ability of the development to offer a high quality visitor experience.

In 2004, the Water Management Unit of EHS examined the Environmental Statement submitted in support of the application. In its response to Planning Service EHS highlighted that:

- (a) the Waste Water Treatment Works (WWTW) at the Giant's Causeway was already overloaded and would not have the capacity to deal with the flows arising from the development;
- (b) the WWTW at Bushmills might not have sufficient hydraulic capacity to deal with the volumes of waste water from the development. I understand that new wastewater treatment facilities to serve the area are planned.

Nuisance Trees and High Hedges

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to carry out a further consultation process, to inform the debate surrounding the long-standing issue of nuisance trees and high hedges. (AQW 661/08)

Mrs Foster: I am aware that this is an issue of widespread concern and I am keen to bring forward legislation as soon as possible, starting with a policy consultation on the detailed operation of the legislation. However, the timing will be subject to consideration of other competing priorities.

Green Areas

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of housing developments in Northern Ireland that provide the 10% green area required under Policy OS2 of Planning Policy Statement 8: Open Space, Sport and Outdoor Recreation, managed by (a) the Greenbelt Foundation; (b) the Woodland Trust; (c) local councils; (d) residents' groups; and (e) any other group or company. (AQW 706/08)

Mrs Foster: Since the introduction of Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 8: Open Space, Sport and Outdoor Recreation in February 2004 Planning Service has determined approved around 4000 applications for residential development in urban areas. Where these applications relate to proposals for 25 units or more or sites of 1 hectare or more there is a requirement under PPS 8 policy OS2 to provide an area of public open space of a least 10% of the overall site area. Developers are required to put in place suitable arrangements to ensure management and maintenance of areas of open space. It is standard practice to require open space to be provided. This would be dealt with either by a planning condition or an Article 40 agreement and in some cases both.

The only means of detailing the number of applications where PPS 8 Policy OS 2 was relevant and the maintenance arrangements put in place for each would be to manually search individual files across all Planning Service Divisional Offices. This would involve a disproportionate amount of time and cost.

Greenbelt Foundation and the Woodland Trust

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment to detail whether or not the Greenbelt Foundation and the Woodland Trust are charitable trusts registered by the Charity Commission, as required by Policy OS2 of Planning Policy Statement 8: Open Space, Sport and Outdoor Recreation, page 22, section 5.19. (AQW 707/08)

Mrs Foster: A check of the Charity Commission's register for England and Wales on Friday 5 October 2007 showed that The Woodland Trust was registered and the Greenbelt Foundation was not.

Strategic Environmental Assessment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the implications of the recent High Court judgement relating to Strategic Environmental Assessment of the draft Magherafelt Area Plan and Northern Area Plan, with particular reference to future area plans for the (i) West Tyrone; (ii) Armagh; and (iii) Ballymena, Antrim and Larne areas. (AQW 708/08)

Mrs Foster: I have noted the judgement of the Court in respect of the Judicial Review of the Strategic Environmental Assessments for the Draft Northern Area Plan and the Draft Magherafelt Area Plan. My Department is currently considering the judgment and its implications, including those for future plans, in consultation with our legal advisors in preparation for a remedies hearing on the 8 or 9 November 2007. A date will be set for the similar challenge to the Strategic Environmental Assessment for the Draft Banbridge Newry and Mourne Area Plan following this. Until the issue of remedies has been determined the three draft

Area Plans remain as material considerations in the determination of planning applications within their respective areas.

My Department is not in a position to comment on the potential implications for future plans until the outcome of the ongoing legal proceedings is known.

The draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan is not the subject of a legal challenge.

Strategic Environmental Assessment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the implications of the recent High Court judgement relating to Strategic Environmental Assessment of the draft Magherafelt Area Plan and Northern Area Plan, with particular reference to (i) the Magherafelt Area Plan; (ii) the Northern Area Plan; (iii) the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan; and (iv) the draft Banbridge and Newry and Mourne Area Plan. (AQW 709/08)

Mrs Foster: I have noted the judgement of the Court in respect of the Judicial Review of the Strategic Environmental Assessments for the Draft Northern Area Plan and the Draft Magherafelt Area Plan. My Department is currently considering the judgment and its implications, including those for future plans, in consultation with our legal advisors in preparation for a remedies hearing on the 8 or 9 November 2007. A date will be set for the similar challenge to the Strategic Environmental Assessment for the Draft Banbridge Newry and Mourne Area Plan following this. Until the issue of remedies has been determined the three draft Area Plans remain as material considerations in the determination of planning applications within their respective areas.

My Department is not in a position to comment on the potential implications for future plans until the outcome of the ongoing legal proceedings is known.

The draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan is not the subject of a legal challenge.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Peter Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to provide a timescale for announcing the outcome of the current review of the decisions of the Review of Public Administration relating to local government. (AQW 765/08)

Mrs Foster: The Executive initiated a review of local government aspects of the Review of Public Administration on 5 July.

I had hoped that it would be possible to complete the Review within the calendar year 2007, but the volume of work currently being undertaken by the Executive has created a short delay.

It is expected that the Executive should be in a position to announce its decisions to the Assembly and the public in January 2008.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Civil Partnerships

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of civil partnerships that have taken place since the introduction of the Civil Partnership Act, broken down by district council area. (AQW 569/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): The attached table gives the number of civil partnerships registered in Northern Ireland by District Council Area of registration between December 2005 and June 2007.

TABLE: NUMBER OF CIVIL PARTNERSHIPS REGISTERED IN NORTHERN IRELAND BETWEEN 5 DECEMBER 2005 AND 30 JUNE 2007 BY DISTRICT COUNCIL OF REGISTRATION

Registration Area ¹	Number of Civil Partnerships Registered ^P
Belfast	109
Derry	15
Newry & Mourne	11
North Down	8
Lisburn	6
Down	5
All Other Districts ²	25
Northern Ireland	179

¹ These data represent the locations where civil partnerships were registered. They do not necessarily reflect where either partner lived and will contain partnerships of some people who lived outside Northern Ireland.

² There were fewer than five civil partnerships registered in each of the other council areas.

^P Provisional Data.

Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the average length of time between the lodging of an appeal against a decision in respect of the Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme (NI) and the outcome of the appeal being issued. (AQW 607/08)

Mr P Robinson: The average length of time, over the 3 financial years ending on 31 March 2007, between the lodging of an appeal, in respect to either of the two stages of internal dispute resolution, against a decision in respect of the Civil Service Injury Benefit Scheme (Northern Ireland) and the outcome of the appeal being issued is 2.8 months.

Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of decisions that have been made on appeals in respect of the Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme (NI), in each of the last three years. (AQW 608/08)

Mr P Robinson: The table below provides the number of decisions made on appeals lodged at both stages of the appeals procedures in respect of the Civil Service Injury Benefit Scheme (Northern Ireland) for the last 3 financial years ending on 31 March each year.

	1/4/2004 – 31/3/2005	1/4/2005 – 31/3/2006	1/4/2006 – 31/3/2007	Totals
Number of decisions made in respect of CSIBS (NI) cases	Stage 1 IDR cases: 30	Stage 1 IDR cases: 62	Stage 1 IDR cases: 69	Stage 1 IDR cases: 161
	Stage 2 IDR cases: 5	Stage 2 IDR cases: 17	Stage 2 IDR cases: 25	Stage 2 IDR cases: 47

Note: IDR refers to Internal Dispute Resolution procedures in which there are two stages

Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of appeals lodged against decisions made in respect of the Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme (NI), in each of the last three years. (AQW 609/08)

Mr P Robinson: The table below provides the number of appeals lodged at both stages of the appeals procedures in respect of the Civil Service Injury Benefit Scheme (Northern Ireland) for the last 3 financial years ending on 31 March each year.

	1/4/2004 – 31/3/2005	1/4/2005 – 31/3/2006	1/4/2006 – 31/3/2007	Totals
Number of appeals lodged in respect of CSIBS (NI) cases	Stage 1 IDR cases: 40	Stage 1 IDR cases: 59	Stage 1 IDR cases: 62	Stage 1 IDR cases: 161
	Stage 2 IDR cases: 7	Stage 2 IDR cases: 23	Stage 2 IDR cases: 34	Stage 2 IDR cases: 64

Note: IDR refers to Internal Dispute Resolution procedures in which there are two stages

Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will confirm that no officials who were involved in an original decision of a Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme (NI) are also involved in the appeal process in respect of the same benefit. (AQW 610/08)

Mr P Robinson: The appeals procedures in relation to the Civil Service Injury Benefit Scheme (Northern Ireland) are structured to ensure that each stage of the appeal is dealt with independently and that any official involved in the original determination takes no part in any stage of the appeal.

Public Sector Employment

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he will take to address the level of public sector employment in East Antrim, where a level of only 10% exists, compared to a national constituency average of 20%, and 53% in the Belfast area. (AQW 714/08)

Mr P Robinson: I made a statement to the Assembly on 24 September 2007 outlining the Executive's agreement to initiate a time-bound review of policy on the location of public sector jobs in Northern Ireland. I intend to take further detailed proposals on the terms of reference for the review to the Executive shortly.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Medical Secretaries

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an explanation of why all medical secretaries in Northern Ireland were matched to Band 3 pay levels, regardless of experience, compared to 70% of medical secretaries in Wales and 80% of medical secretaries in Scotland, who were matched to Band 4 pay levels. (AQW 584/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): Not all medical secretaries in Northern Ireland have been through the full Agenda for Change implementation process, which is being completed by Health and Social Care employers in partnership with staff representatives. My officials are currently working with employers and staff representatives in an effort to finalise this process. It is unhelpful to make comparisons with band outcomes in other parts of the NHS at this stage. I am confident that when the implementation process is complete we will have reached a fair and appropriate rate of pay for the Medical Secretary jobs in Northern Ireland.

MRSA

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to address the number of MRSA cases in the Ulster Hospital. (AQW 589/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Infection Prevention and Control Team in the Ulster Hospital has an active and ongoing programme of MRSA control. A comprehensive infection reduction plan for 2007-2008 has been produced and is being rolled out across the Trust.

This reduction plan contains the following significant elements: a monitoring programme of ward cleanliness; monitoring all multi-antibiotic resistant bacteria including MRSA; the appointment of a medical consultant microbiologist to provide medical leadership to the Infection Prevention and Control programme; a Trust-wide hand hygiene campaign targeting not only staff but also patients and the public; active auditing of hand hygiene practice at ward level with audit results being fed back to ward sisters for action; and display of hand washing posters. An extensive Infection Prevention and Control training programme is also under way.

Flu Jabs

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to promote flu jabs for the elderly and young people, over the winter period. (AQW 591/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The winter flu immunisation programme 2007/08 was launched on 1st October 2007 by the Chief Medical Officer and is targeted at those most in need and for whom it will be most effective. The elderly are targeted and young people who are deemed 'at risk' are also targeted. The full list includes:

- People over 65 years old - even if they feel fit and healthy
- Children and adults who suffer from any of the following:
 1. chronic heart conditions
 2. chronic chest conditions e.g. asthma
 3. chronic liver disease
 4. chronic kidney disease
 5. diabetes
 6. lowered immunity due to disease or treatment such as steroids or cancer therapy
 7. any other serious medical condition.
- Children who have previously been admitted to hospital with a chest infection

- Carers (who are the main carer for an elderly or disabled person) and people who live in a residential or nursing home.
- people with certain neurological conditions such as stroke, multiple sclerosis and inherited diseases of the nervous system.

GPs will be inviting patients in staged groups according to their level of risk. Everyone over 65 and young people within an 'at risk' category should expect to receive a letter of invitation from their GP surgery.

Information is provided on the DHSSPS website and local advertisement arrangements are in place across GP surgeries in Northern Ireland.

Flu Jabs

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking, similar to that in the rest of the United Kingdom, to introduce flu jabs for young people who have asthma and diabetic health problems.

(AQW 592/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The winter flu immunisation programme 2007/08 was launched on 1st October 2007 and is targeted at those most in need and for whom it will be most effective. Those targeted include:

- People over 65 years old - even if they feel fit and healthy
- Children and adults who suffer from any of the following:
 1. chronic heart conditions
 2. chronic chest conditions e.g. asthma
 3. chronic liver disease
 4. chronic kidney disease
 5. diabetes
 6. lowered immunity due to disease or treatment such as steroids or cancer therapy
 7. any other serious medical condition.
- Children who have previously been admitted to hospital with a chest infection
- Carers (who are the main carer for an elderly or disabled person) and people who live in a residential or nursing home.
- people with certain neurological conditions such as stroke, multiple sclerosis and inherited diseases of the nervous system.

GPs will be inviting patients in staged groups according to their level of risk. Young people with asthma and diabetic health problems should expect to receive a letter of invitation from their GP surgery.

Asbestos-Related Illness

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to provide medical help to people suffering from asbestos-related illness. (AQW 598/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Equality of access to health care services for all within Northern Ireland is a priority for my Department, and my officials continue to develop policy that will deliver modern high quality services to the whole population, including those suffering from asbestos-related illness.

In support of this aim I am fully committed to progressing the implementation of initiatives such as Developing Better Services and A Healthier Future: A Strategic Framework for Respiratory Conditions to deliver high quality services that meet the needs of the population of Northern Ireland. This will include health promotion awareness, as well as provision of the full range of primary, secondary and community care services appropriate to the respiratory and oncology illnesses commonly associated with asbestos exposure.

Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 290/08, to detail (i) what type of expenditure is included in the 'other' category; and (ii) the reasons for the increase in expenditure in this category, in the last year. (AQW 619/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Expenditure in the 'Other' or miscellaneous category covers payments for a range of miscellaneous expenditure items, including:

- Delegate fees
- Locum expenses for HSC Professionals attending Departmental meetings and working groups
- Locum travel costs
- Hotel reservations
- Christmas Cards
- Photocopying at events

Given the miscellaneous nature of the expenditure, it is not possible to make any meaningful comparison with expenditure under this heading in previous years.

Treatment for HIV/AIDS

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people in Northern Ireland who are on the drugs cocktail treatment for HIV/AIDS; and what is the cost per year of this treatment. (AQW 625/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Our records show that in 2006, there were 230 individuals on antiretroviral therapy. The cost of antiretroviral therapy for that year was £1.7m.

AIDS

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of heterosexual people who have contracted AIDS; and to provide a breakdown of their age groups. (AQW 627/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information is not available on the number of heterosexual or homosexual people who have contracted AIDS. However, information is available on the number of individuals diagnosed with AIDS whose first diagnosis was made in Northern Ireland and the probable route of their infection.

As of June 2007, the number of people who had contracted AIDS and whose probable route of infection was either as a result of sex between men or as a result of sex between men and women is given in the table below together with their age group at the time when AIDS was diagnosed.

Probable route of infection	Age Group			Total
	15-29	30-44	45+
Sex between men	17	33	15	65
Sex between men and women	5	15	13	33

Source: HIV and AIDS Patient Data – New Diagnoses. HIV and STI Department, Health Protection Agency, Centre for Infections, London.

AIDS

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of homosexual people who have contracted AIDS; and to provide a breakdown of their age groups. (AQW 628/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information is not available on the number of heterosexual or homosexual people who have contracted AIDS. However, information is available on the number of individuals diagnosed with AIDS whose first diagnosis was made in Northern Ireland and the probable route of their infection.

As of June 2007, the number of people who had contracted AIDS and whose probable route of infection was either as a result of sex between men or as a result of sex between men and women is given in the table below together with their age group at the time when AIDS was diagnosed.

Probable route of infection	Age Group			Total
	15-29	30-44	45+
Sex between men	17	33	15	65
Sex between men and women	5	15	13	33

Source: HIV and AIDS Patient Data – New Diagnoses. HIV and STI Department, Health Protection Agency, Centre for Infections, London.

HIV

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of new cases of HIV in Northern Ireland, in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 629/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the number of new cases of HIV in Northern Ireland in each of the last 3 years, is shown in the table below.

Year of diagnosis	Number of New Diagnoses
2004	62
2005	63
2006	57

Source: CDSC(NI) - HIV New Diagnoses Quarterly Surveillance Tables. UK data received to the end of June 2007.

Ambulance Response

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the ambulance response times in the glens of Antrim area, since January 2007. (AQW 637/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) does not hold response data for the glens of Antrim. However, the monthly percentages for responses within the eight minute target to Category A (life threatening) calls in the Causeway and East Antrim areas are set out in the table below.

Month	Causeway / East Antrim Combined
January	40%
February	48%
March	48%
April	42%
May	54%
June	48%
July	51%

Month	Causeway / East Antrim Combined
August	51%
September	53%

Whiteabbey Hospital Site

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to redevelop the Whiteabbey Hospital site; and to give a timescale within which the medical facilities that are currently based on this site will be enhanced.

(AQW 660/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Developing Better Services policy framework proposed, in conjunction with a rationalised network of 9 acute hospitals, a network of local hospitals, which included Whiteabbey Hospital, with facilities comprising inpatient assessment and rehabilitation for the elderly, day surgery, day procedures, outpatient services and complex diagnostics such as CT scans.

The Northern Health and Social Care Trust is currently developing a Stage 2 Outline Business Case which is expected to confirm the proposed service model. I expect submission of this Business Case in the Spring of 2008.

Until the Business Case has been appraised and approved by the Department it is not possible to provide a timescale for this specific redevelopment.

Accident and Emergency Waiting Times

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of occasions upon which patients waited longer than four hours for treatment at Accident and Emergency departments, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 664/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the time that patients waited for treatment at Accident and Emergency departments has been collected centrally since the beginning of April 2007 only.

In the five months from April 2007 until August 2007 (the latest month for which information is available) 41,713 people waited longer than four hours from the time of arrival until the time when they left the Emergency Care Department.

Over this 5 month period there were 269,465 patients recorded as being seen in A&E Departments and Minor Injury Units. 15.5% waited longer than 4 hours to be treated.

A target has been set to ensure that 95% of patients are treated and discharged, or admitted to a ward, within four hours of arrival at A&E by March 2008. Progress towards this target is being closely monitored and my Department is supporting Trusts through a programme of reform and modernisation.

Cardiac Nursing Provision

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his department's expenditure on specialised cardiac nursing provision, broken down by Health and Social Services Board area, in each of the last five years. (AQW 665/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The cost of specialist cardiac nurses cannot be readily identified and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost but it is possible to provide the cost of all qualified nursing staff working within the cardiac surgery and cardiology specialties and in coronary care units and coronary intensive care. This information is given below.

HSS TRUST EXPENDITURE ON QUALIFIED NURSING STAFF WORKING IN CARDIAC SPECIALTIES, SHOWN BY THE BOARD IN WHICH THE TRUST IS LOCATED

Year	EHSSB £000's	NHSSB £000's	SHSSB £000's	WHSSB £000's
2002/03	8,552	2,283	1,210	1,092
2003/04	9,533	2,253	1,403	1,158
2004/05	9,847	2,233	1,588	1,128
2005/06	10,777	2,563	1,810	1,335

Notes:

1. Trusts located in one Board can provide services for the residents of another Board area. This is particularly the case for the Eastern Board area where its Trusts provide regional services.
2. The information was not collected from Trusts in the same detail for years prior to 2002/03 and the 2006/07 information is not yet available.

Age Limit for Purchasing Cigarettes

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to raise the legal age limit for purchasing cigarettes from 16 to 18, in light of the recent changes in England, Scotland and Wales. (AQW 668/08)

Mr McGimpsey: A 12-week public consultation exercise on raising the age of sale in Northern Ireland will be launched later this month. Any proposals to raise the age of sale will be brought before the Assembly as soon as possible after the responses to the consultation exercise have been evaluated.

Health Implications of Wi-Fi

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to contact the European Environmental Agency, and the German and Austrian Health Ministers, in relation to the warnings they recently issued about the health implications of wi-fi. (AQW 685/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Radiation Protection Division of the Health Protection Agency (HPA) provides government departments, including DHSSPS, and other bodies involved in radiological protection matters, with an independent, impartial and authoritative source of scientific advice on questions related to health effects from ionising and non-ionising radiations. The role of HPA in this regard includes maintaining an oversight of relevant international developments. HPA have asked the German Radiological Protection body - BfS (Bundesamt für Strahlenschutz / Federal Office for Radiation Protection) to clarify their position on wireless computer networks (WiFi). The advice from BfS is a recommendation and not a warning. BfS believes that precautionary measures are important and appropriate in view of the existing scientific uncertainties in relation to these relatively new technologies. A precautionary approach would be to avoid WiFi where wired technology could be used just as well. However, HPA emphasise that there is no consistent evidence to date that WiFi and WLANs adversely affect the health of the general population.

Health Implications of Wi-Fi

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the insurance underwriter that is being used to guarantee that any health damage caused by wi-fi equipment will be fully compensated. (AQW 686/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Telecommunications is a reserved matter and falls under the Department of Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform (formerly DTI). Within the UK, telecommunications is a privatised and fully competitive industry that is subject to independent regulation by the Office for Communications (OFCOM). Wireless computer networks (WiFi), fall within the broad range of radio and wireless technologies used for communications which includes mobile phones and television. The Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 requires that no radio equipment is installed or used in the UK except under the authority of a licence or otherwise exempted by OFCOM. OFCOM monitors all radio activity to ensure it complies with the relevant UK/EC legislation and other relevant regulations. There is no legal requirement for communications companies to have insurance cover for WiFi or other radio networks.

Current advice from the Health Protection Agency is that there is no consistent evidence to date that WiFi and WLANs adversely affect the health of the general population.

Expenditure on Irish language

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his department's expenditure on (i) Irish language translations; (ii) publication of booklets and other literature in Irish; and (iii) Irish language advertisements, in each year between the devolution of power in December 1999 and the suspension of devolution in October 2002.

(AQW 703/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Due to the time elapsed, detailed records are no longer available to provide specific costs of translations and production of documents into Irish.

	Translation and publication costs	Placement of Irish adverts	Total
1999/2000	£17,604	NIL	£17,604
2000/2001	£59,742	£1,519	£61,261
2001/2002	£68,459	£51,364	£119,823
Totals	£145,805*	£52,883	£198,688

* Irish Translation figures include costs for Press releases, speeches and advert translations.

It should be pointed out, that the practice of placing adverts in Irish, and having Press releases translated into Irish has now ceased as announced on 1st October 2007.

Home-Start Armagh

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to continue to extend funding from the Children and Young People's Fund to Home-Start Armagh, to enable it to continue to employ a co-ordinator for its outreach scheme.

(AQW 718/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The coordinator post in Home-Start Armagh will continue to be supported by the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety through the Children's Fund component of the Children and Young People's Funding Package until March 2008. As you will be aware, Government spending plans after that date have yet to be finalised.

Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm that the age restriction of over 16 and under 65, which is part of the referral criteria applied by the Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit in Musgrave Park Hospital, is in keeping with Standard 1 of the National Service Framework for older people, which requires NHS services to be provided regardless of age, on the basis of need alone; and to give his assessment on whether or not this restriction of access to healthcare on the basis of age contravenes section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and the Human Rights Act 1998. (AQW 731/08)

Mr McGimpsey: When I was made aware of the age restriction for the admission of patients to the Regional Acquired Brain Injury Unit (RABIU) on 4 October 2007, I instructed my Officials to immediately undertake a review of the RABIU admissions policy. Terms of Reference have been agreed and I have directed that the report should be completed by 19 October 2007. Compliance with Equality and Human Rights duties will be assessed as part of this review.

The National Service Framework for Older People is not applicable in Northern Ireland. However, work has commenced on the development of a range of service frameworks which will set out measurable standards that patients and users should expect within health and social care. These frameworks will take cognizance of Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and the Human Rights Act 1998. Further information on Service Frameworks can be accessed at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/phealth/sqs/sqsd-standards-service-frameworks.htm>

Firefighters

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to allow retained firefighters in Coleraine to transfer to full-time status; and to outline the process that must be followed in order to complete this transfer.

(AQW 794/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service advises that it has no plans to provide for the direct transfer of Retained Firefighters into the Wholetime Service.

As has been the recruitment practice for many years, all Retained Firefighters have to apply for Wholetime firefighter positions in exactly the same manner as external candidates through stringent aptitude tests and, if successful, a structured interview followed by a medical examination.

This process is equitable and fair, and is also a fundamental requirement to ensuring that the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service's recruitment policy meets all relevant statutory obligations with regard to equality of opportunity.

Registered Childminders

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average time taken from the date of application to be registered as a childminder, to the registration being granted; and to provide overall registration figures for last year, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 796/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Health and Social Care Trusts are responsible for registering childminders and day care providers. At 31 March 2006, 3,627 childminders were registered with local Health and Social Care Trusts. Statistics for the average time taken for applications to be registered and the number of childminders registered last year are not held centrally.

Medical Secretaries

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give an update on the possible industrial action by workers at Altnagelvin Hospital; and what is his assessment of the recommendations of the independent panel established to assess the pay of medical secretaries and to encourage the local health trusts to take all possible steps to avoid industrial action at the hospital. (AQW 877/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The process for moving medical secretaries on to Agenda for Change rates of pay is not yet complete. Staff will only be moved to the new rates of pay when there is a partnership agreement between the Health and Social Care employer and the staff representatives. Management in the Altnagelvin Hospital are working in partnership with staff representatives to finalise the Agenda for Change implementation process. Staff representatives have now agreed to postpone the industrial action to allow this process to continue. I have instructed all Health and Social Care employers that I expect them to have the Agenda for Change matching process completed by the end of December 2007 and that all staff should be in receipt of the new rates of pay by 31 March 2008.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 45/08, to outline the nature of the work carried out by Northern Ireland Railways to achieve effective community relations on the Belfast to Dublin rail link; and what is his assessment of this work. (AQW 373/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr

Murphy): In order to achieve effective community relations on the Belfast to Dublin rail link, Northern Ireland Railways has an ongoing and long-standing programme of engagement, support and joint activity programmes. This includes consultation with local representatives and community groups along the cross-border line together with a programme of visits to schools in the area. It also has a high level of engagement with local newspapers and other media.

I am content that NIR is working effectively to engender positive community relations around the Belfast to Dublin rail link.

Review of Road and Rail Infrastructure

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 43/08, to detail the frequency with which the measures he outlined will be subject to review, and what targets his department has set for improved competitiveness against the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 375/08)

Mr Murphy: The mid-term review of the Regional Transportation Strategy will review all our transportation measures. Progress on implementing the Regional Transportation Strategy is monitored on a yearly basis.

My Department has not set targets for competitiveness with other administrations, either on the island of Ireland or elsewhere in these islands.

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link

Mr Mervyn Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 44/08, if he will explain why he has not met with the PSNI in relation to security threats to the Belfast to Dublin rail link; and if he will (i) meet with the PSNI on this matter without delay; and (ii) make a statement to the Assembly regarding the security of the Belfast to Dublin rail link and the level of co-operation between his department and the PSNI on this matter. (AQW 376/08)

Mr Murphy: Assessing the level of threat to the Belfast to Dublin rail link is a matter for the PSNI. During the last six months senior operational managers from NIR have met with senior divisional officers from PSNI on 6 occasions. I have not met with the PSNI to discuss this security threat as I am content that sufficient cooperation exists between the railway operators and the police. I am not aware of any raised level of security threat, at present, that would necessitate a meeting between myself and PSNI.

I do not intend to make a statement to the Assembly regarding the security of the Belfast to Dublin rail link. However, I am satisfied that there is good cooperation between NIR and the PSNI on matters relating to the security of the line.

Roads Service's Moratorium on Expenditure

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his response to AQW 89/08, what detail he has since sought from Roads Service Headquarters in relation to this matter. (AQW 389/08)

Mr Murphy: I can advise that I am updated regularly by my Departmental officials on expenditure matters.

I should explain that the financial contingency plan, developed by my Department's Roads Service, addresses potential issues within the capital budget which will be reassessed in light of DFP's quarterly budget review, the outcome of which should be known by late October/early November. The plan is a work in progress and does not currently have a significant impact on the roads programme.

Divisional Roads Managers have been briefed on the position and have been advised to press ahead with the implementation of their capital programme maintaining a close liaison with Roads Service Headquarters on commitments.

There are several exceptions within this approach comprising two carriageway widening schemes totalling around £3 million, on the A28 at Edenaveys and the A5 at Castletown, which were deferred earlier in the financial year.

I must emphasize that the number of schemes affected and the extent of any delays will be dependent upon the outcome of the October Monitoring Round. I am therefore not in a position to provide more detail at this time.

Roads Service's Moratorium on Expenditure

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his response to AQW 89/08, to detail the capital, or other roads schemes and budgets, affected by the 'contingency plan'; and the delays associated with, and financial extent of, the cutbacks to those schemes and budgets. (AQW 390/08)

Mr Murphy: I can advise that I am updated regularly by my Departmental officials on expenditure matters.

I should explain that the financial contingency plan, developed by my Department's Roads Service, addresses potential issues within the capital budget which will be reassessed in light of DFP's quarterly budget review, the outcome of which should be known by late October/early November. The plan is a work in progress and does not currently have a significant impact on the roads programme.

Divisional Roads Managers have been briefed on the position and have been advised to press ahead with the implementation of their capital programme maintaining a close liaison with Roads Service Headquarters on commitments.

There are several exceptions within this approach comprising two carriageway widening schemes totalling around £3 million, on the A28 at Edenaveys and the A5 at Castletown, which were deferred earlier in the financial year.

I must emphasize that the number of schemes affected and the extent of any delays will be dependent upon the outcome of the October Monitoring Round. I am therefore not in a position to provide more detail at this time.

Residents' Parking Schemes

Dr Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an update on the formulation of a policy on residents' parking schemes, and to give a timescale for the introduction of the initial pilots. (AQW 446/08)

Mr Murphy: The draft policy on the implementation of Residents' Parking schemes was the subject of a full public consultation exercise between November 2006 and February 2007.

In total, sixty-three written replies and over five hundred pre-printed postcards were received in response and my Department's Roads Service considered each in detail.

The final draft version of the policy and a draft report on the consultation process has been referred to the Regional Development Committee for scrutiny. Officials from Roads Service also gave a presentation to the Committee on 5 September 2007, and I am awaiting the Committee's formal response.

Roads Service intends to start work developing schemes as soon as the policy is finalised. However, I am advised that it may be six to twelve months before the first schemes will be on the ground due to the local consultation and legislative processes that have to be followed.

Currently the pressure to deliver schemes is largely in the Belfast area and initially Roads Service will concentrate on developing potential schemes in the Belfast City Centre core parking area, as identified in the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan. Surveys are also underway in Derry, with a number of areas currently being assessed, with a view to developing schemes there.

Former MOD Sites

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 134/08, to advise whether or not former MOD sites are considered by his department to have roads of adoption standard; and, if requested, whether or not he will undertake to adopt these roads. (AQW 466/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service have advised that it does not maintain records of the condition of roads in former MOD sites and therefore is not aware of whether any such sites have roads of adoption standard.

As I advised in my previous reply on this issue (AQW 134/08), sites can be considered for adoption under Article 9 of the Private Streets (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 as amended, where:

- the majority of landowners or occupiers so request it;
- the roads or streets are first brought up to adoption standard, normally at the expense of the landowners or occupiers; and
- the Department is of the opinion that the street should become a public road.

Roads Maintenance

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to reduce the corporate risk to his department and the Northern Ireland Executive, due to inadequate funding allocated to roads maintenance, as indicated in the Roads Service Annual Report and Accounts 2006/07. (AQW 496/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service endeavours to ensure that maintenance resources are targeted in a manner that optimises value for money and minimises risks to road users.

In line with my Department's Risk Management Policy, Roads Service operates a system of internal control, which is based on an ongoing risk management process. This identifies the principal risks associated with the achievement of Roads Service policies, aims and objectives, along with the controls in place to manage those risks. One of the risks identified on Roads Service's Corporate Risk Register is the shortfall in the funding for structural maintenance.

In recognition of the need to manage this under-funding, Roads Service has developed a sub-optimal budget strategy. The strategy measures fall short of desired resurfacing frequencies, but aim to protect the public liability position. The strategy concentrates on giving priority to resurfacing motorways and trunk roads, so that patching is only carried out where it is necessary for safety reasons. The strategy also involves minimising footway expenditure, while ensuring that the Department maintains these assets in accordance with its statutory duty, and maximising surface dressing.

In support of this strategy, Roads Service undertakes a series of regular inspections and condition surveys, to ensure the road network is maintained to defined standards and that serious road defects are detected and repaired. These arrangements, together with the experience and professional judgement of the Roads Service engineers, ensure that roads remain safe and do not fall below satisfactory and serviceable levels.

Expenditure on Consultants

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail Roads Service's expenditure on consultants employed in the preparation pool work for future capital road schemes, during 2005/06 and 2006/07. (AQW 497/08)

Mr Murphy: In 2005/06 and 2006/07 a total of £7.0 million and £8.4 million respectively was spent on consultants developing future roads schemes within Roads Service's Major Works Programme.

Typically this work includes:

- Route Corridor Study;
- Selection of Preferred Route;
- Public Consultation;
- Environmental Statement;
- Economic Appraisal;
- Progression through Statutory Orders/Public Inquiries;
- Detailed Design; and
- Contract Procurement.

Road Network Survey Results

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to advise of the most recent road network survey results, in particular the results from SCRIM tests that assess the skid resistance of the road surface; and to detail those roads in Northern Ireland that are below the recommended level for skid resistance. (AQW 498/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service constantly strives to improve road safety standards on our roads. One means of achieving this is to ensure that roads have a satisfactory level of skidding resistance. This reduces the risk of uncontrolled skids and improves braking efficiency. Roads Service has a programme of measuring skidding resistance using the SCRIM (Sideways-Force Coefficient Routine Investigation Machine) and reports annually on the percentage of the network which is equal to or below the relevant investigatory level.

The most recent survey results available indicate that some 3.6% of the motorway network and around 43% of the trunk road network are at or below the national skidding resistance investigatory level. However, it is important to note that a road with a skidding resistance below the investigatory level is not necessarily unsafe; it simply means that there is a need for further investigation, to determine the need for maintenance if appropriate. Roads Service engineers carry out these investigations on all roads that are found to be below the investigatory level and arrange remedial work, where necessary.

In view of the way in which the results are presented, it is difficult to provide a detailed listing of all road sections that are at or below the 'investigatory level'. However, if there are concerns about specific locations, the local Roads Service Section Office will be able to provide the relevant SCRIM results. Details of local Section Offices can be found at the Roads Service website www.roadsni.gov.uk

Land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street, Antrim.

Mr Burnside asked the Minister for Regional Development to give an update on the current status of land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street, Antrim. (AQW 510/08)

Mr Murphy: The land at Ulster Bar Corner is owned by the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company. The site is currently unoccupied. Translink have declared that they have no long term operational need for the land. NITHC have undertaken to prepare a business case for its disposal subject to the approval of my Department.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will consider the installation of specialised buttons for the disabled and the elderly, to allow extra time to cross at pedestrian crossings. (AQW 515/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised that it follows advice from the Department for Transport in Great Britain in relation to the provision of traffic signal equipment and the time which is allocated to cross at pedestrian crossings.

In order to assist the visually impaired, Road Service has an ongoing programme of installing tactile paving, tactile cones and also the use of audible signals where this is appropriate. At pelican crossings, the 'green man' period is an invitation to cross, and once the 'green man' time has expired, there is still a 'clearance' period during which the pedestrian has right of way to complete crossing the road.

Roads Service is currently looking at the development of puffin crossings (an extension of the pelican crossing), a feature of which would be an on-crossing detector, which would detect pedestrians crossing the road and, if required, extend the crossing time as necessary up to a pre-set maximum.

Bypass for Ballynahinch, Co. Down

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the timetable for the proposed bypass for Ballynahinch, Co. Down. (AQW 516/08)

Mr Murphy: The Ballynahinch Bypass scheme is included in the Forward Planning Schedule of my Department's Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan 2015, which was published in March 2005. These schemes are expected to be implemented within the next 5-10 years, subject to clearing the necessary statutory procedures, a satisfactory economic appraisal and the availability of funds at the time.

Work is currently underway to confirm the feasibility of this scheme and develop the design in preparation for progressing it through the statutory procedures.

While the consultant's work is progressing well, with extensive traffic studies and work in preparation for an environmental impact assessment complete, I am not in a position at this time to advise when the scheme might commence.

Road Upgrade

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which the proposed scheme to upgrade the road in the residential street 'Bramblewood' in Crumlin (BT29 4FQ) will commence; and to detail when this road will be adopted by Antrim Borough Council. (AQW 518/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that, while the streets in Bramblewood have been substantially complete for a number of years, adoption has been delayed due to the presence of service strip infringements and large scale sewer defects, including pipe settlement.

The private dwelling sewer connections have been repaired and, in October 2006, residents removed service strip infringements.

Roads Service issued a Notice to the developer under Article 11 of the Private Streets (NI) Order 1980 on 30 October 2006, to have the work completed and streets adopted. The large volume of sewer work requires employing a Northern Ireland Water (NIW) contractor to carry out these repairs.

NIW has advised that the sewers at Bramblewood were not constructed to a satisfactory standard in 1992 to enable Water Service to adopt them. At that time, the developer was advised of the remedial works that would be required to bring the sewers up to adoption standard. The remedial works were not undertaken by the developer and the condition of the sewers has deteriorated since 1992.

NIW is considering the use of its contractor to undertake the work, subject to the availability of funding, but is not yet in a position to estimate when work will commence. The Chief Executive of NIW will write to you when a decision has been made.

Roads Service is currently liaising with NIW and once the sewers have been brought to the necessary standard, Roads Service will employ a roads contractor to complete the streets for adoption.

Water Pressure

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans Water Service NI has any plans to remedy water pressure difficulties in the Derrytrasna/Derryinver area. (AQW 552/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that a number of complaints about poor water pressure were received from residents of the Derrytrasna area on Monday 24 September 2007. Investigations undertaken to determine the source of the problem discovered a malfunctioning water pressure regulating valve in the Highfield area of Craigavon. A replacement valve was installed on 2 October 2007 and the water pressure to the Derrytrasna and Derryinver areas returned to normal.

Traffic Management Review

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will authorise a traffic management review in Castlewellan, Co. Down, in view of the housing and commercial development which has taken place in the town. (AQW 555/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service is fully aware of the general traffic management needs for Castlewellan. Monitoring and assessment of the town is a continual process as development occurs within the area.

In recent years, Castlewellan has benefited from a number of traffic improvements, including:

- high friction surfacing and pedestrian guard rail at Upper Square;
- extension of 30 mph limit at Bunker's Hill / Drumee Road;
- bus lay-by at Upper Square, Castlewellan;
- dropped kerbs and tactile paving at Upper Square / Circular Road; and
- addition of the 40mph limit on the Bann Road.

A request for another pedestrian crossing in Main Street has been recently received and assessed by Roads Service. It is hoped that this will be provided in 2008.

I am aware that you recently wrote to Roads Service regarding the speed limits on the A50 Bann Road, Castlewellan. The introduction and extension of speed limits are subject to certain criteria and are assessed jointly by Roads Service and the PSNI. A recent examination of the Bann Road limits has revealed that the 30 mph limit is in the correct position; however it would be possible to extend the 40 mph limit. Roads Service will pursue the necessary legislative process, including a consultation period during which objections may be made, with a view to facilitating the extension of the 40 mph limit.

Parking Tickets

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of parking tickets that have been issued on Victoria Street, Ballymoney, since Roads Service assumed responsibility for parking enforcement, broken down by month. (AQW 599/08)

Mr Murphy: Since my Department's Roads Service became responsible for on-street parking enforcement on 30 October 2006, a total of eleven Penalty Charge Notices have been issued at Victoria Street, Ballymoney. The monthly break-down is as follows:

Month	Number of Parking Tickets Issued
November 2006	1
December 2006	1
January 2007	3
February 2007	0
March 2007	3
April 2007	0
May 2007	0
June 2007	1
July 2007	1

Month	Number of Parking Tickets Issued
August 2007	0
September 2007	2

Road-Humps

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number, and locations, of road-humps that have been installed in the North Antrim constituency in (i) 2001/02; (ii) 2002/03; (iii) 2003/04; (iv) 2004/05; (v) 2005/06; and (vi) 2006/07. (AQW 600/08)

Mr Murphy: The number and locations of road-humps that have been installed in the North Antrim constituency between 2001 and 2007, by my Department's Roads Service, are detailed in the table below.

Year	Scheme Details
2001/02	23 in an area wide scheme in Tobar Park/Kimakevitt, Cullybackey 20 in an area wide scheme in Glebeside, Ballymoney 1 was installed at the junction of Ann Street and Station road, Ballycastle
2002/03	35 in an area wide scheme in Ballee, Ballymena
2003/04	36 in an area wide scheme in the Glendun, Doury Road, Dunvale and Dunclug area of Ballymena 18 in an area wide scheme in the Demesne, Ballymena 7 were installed in Altananam Park, Ballycastle
2004/05	3 in Ballymoney Street, Ballymena 15 in an area wide scheme in the Intermediate Road/ Armour Avenue, Ballymoney
2005/06	15 in an area wide scheme in Chichester Park, Ballymena 16 in an area wide scheme in Fisherwick, Warden Street, Suffolk Street, Ballymena 1 in Mill Street, Ballymena 5 in Princess Gardens, Cypress Park and Strand Park, Cloughmills
2006/07	1 in Lower Wellington Street, Ballymena 9 in Village/Royal Court, Gracehill, Ballymena

Largy Road Route Study

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the proposals of the Largy Road Route Study that have not yet been implemented; and to outline the work that has been carried out to date as a result of this study. (AQW 601/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that a 'Whole Route Study' was recently completed on the B62, Largy Road. I understand a copy of the Study was forwarded to you for information.

As you will be aware, the Study identified a number of locations where it was considered that improvements would be beneficial. These were:

1. Aughnahoy Road – Vertical realignment to improve sight visibility and improve sight distance.
2. Largy Lounge – Vertical alignment to improve sight distance.
3. Casheltown Crossroads – Introduction of a one way system on the western leg of this road from the Largy Road towards Kilcurry Road to prevent access onto the Largy Road at this junction where sight lines are poor. Improvements to the sight lines at the junction of the Kilcurry Road and Casheltown Road.
4. Duffin's Bend – Improvements to the horizontal alignment to improve the sight distance, widening the existing verges and widening the existing road width.
5. Gillistown Road – Improvements to sightlines.
6. Chesney's Corner – Introduction of right turn lanes.
7. Kilnock Crossroads – Introduction of right turn lanes.

To date, the proposed improvements at the Gillistown Road Junction have been completed and the Casheltown Crossroads scheme is in the Minor Works programme for completion this financial year.

The remaining five scheme proposals are being assessed with a view to advancing to preliminary design stage and subsequent prioritisation within a works programme for Roads Service's Northern Division. Prioritisation will take account of the technical merit of each scheme, availability of funding, Council consultation as well as Road Service priorities.

The Study also proposed a number of enhancements to warning signage and road markings along this route. I am pleased to inform you that all the improvements to warning signage and road markings as detailed in the Study have now been completed.

Directional Signs

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of directional signs that Roads Service has erected to date, for (i) soccer club grounds; (ii) rugby club grounds; (iii) GAA club grounds; and (iv) other sports club grounds; and the number of these that have been fully funded by Roads Service. (AQW 602/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service facilitates the provision of directional traffic signs through its policies on "Directional Signage", and "Tourist Signing in Northern Ireland". Both policies, were introduced in 2004, the latter being jointly developed and agreed with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

Unless designated by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board as a tourist attraction, public sports facilities owned and operated by local councils are not eligible for white-on-brown tourist signing. However, under the Directional Signage policy, sporting facilities, whether privately owned or operated by local councils, may be signed where:

- there is a clear road safety reason for doing so; or
- the facilities are hard to find and will generate a significant volume of traffic from outside the locality.

The following table details the number of directional signs to sporting facilities provided since the introduction of these policies:

Facility	No	Funded by Roads Service
Soccer Club Grounds	1	1
Rugby Club Grounds	6	0
GAA Club Grounds	0	0
Other Sports Club Grounds	30	0

I should advise that the majority of the signs provided to “Other Sports Club Grounds”, were for golfing facilities, which are considered under the tourist attraction policy.

It should also be noted that other facilities may have been signed before the adoption of these policies in 2004. Such signs will be allowed to remain in place until such times as they are in need of replacement.

Staff Team Building

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total cost of (i) away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises, in each of the last three years. (AQW 620/08)

Mr Murphy: The total cost in each of the years concerned was as follows:

Financial Year	Total Cost (£) *
2004/05	13,091
2005/06	4,814
2006/07	7,047
Total for Period	24,952

* Reflects expenditure on hire of venues and cost of guest speakers/ outside facilitators.

These figures do not cover agencies and NDPBs.

Road Improvements

Mr Donaldson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will confirm the timescale for the commencement of works to provide improvements to the junctions of the Dromore Road, Hillsborough, and the Banbridge Road, Dromore, with the A1 dual carriageway. (AQW 646/08)

Mr Murphy: The proposals to upgrade the Dromore Road, Hillsborough and Banbridge Road, Dromore junctions with the A1 dual carriageway, included in the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan (RSTN TP) 2015, are being progressed through a Design Build Finance and Operate (DBFO) Package.

My Department's Roads Service is currently progressing the tendering process, for the procurement of this package of road projects, as a Public Private Partnership, and it is anticipated that the contract will be awarded before the end of October 2007.

The phasing of the construction of individual schemes within the overall DBFO package of schemes is a matter for the successful tenderer. However, current indications (from the Preferred Bidder) are that both schemes will commence in early 2008.

Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development if he can confirm the reason why, three months after its formation, there has been no meeting of the Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning. (AQW 647/08)

Mr Murphy: The Executive Committee on 5 July agreed to a review of rural planning policy, including the establishment of an Inter-Departmental Group of Ministers to take this matter forward. The first meeting of the Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning was scheduled for 10 September. However, given the uncertainty arising from the Judgement of the Judicial Review on PPS 14 delivered on 7 September, and its implications for Departments, this meeting was subsequently postponed. Work has however progressed with the stakeholders meetings on 29 and 30 August. The first meeting of the Executive Sub-Group will be held shortly.

Roads Service Traffic Watch

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to extend the cameras available on the Roads Service Traffic Watch website, to locations outside Belfast. (AQW 653/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has no plans at present, to extend the cameras available on the trafficwatch website to locations outside Belfast.

Speed Limit in School Zones

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he will give to implementing a 20mph speed limit in school zones; and to complementing its introduction with a '20 is plenty' advertising campaign. (AQW 681/08)

Mr Murphy: The imposition of speed limits generally at schools has been considered by both my Department's Roads Service and PSNI - who are responsible for enforcement. It is acknowledged that for perhaps 90% of the time, reduced speed limits at schools may be totally inappropriate for example at nights, weekends and holiday periods and experience has shown that inappropriate speed limits are ignored and may have the potential to bring speed limits, generally, into disrepute. I can confirm however, that Roads Service is planning to pilot a variable speed limit at 2 schools over the next year to measure their effectiveness. A variable speed limit at a school refers to a part-time speed limit e.g. 20mph, which is effective at certain times of the day (when children are arriving and leaving) and is indicated by a variable message sign on the approach to the school. The speed limit would be enforced by the police in the normal manner.

You may be aware that Roads Service, as part of its Safer Routes to Schools programme, has been working pro-actively with schools across the North to promote road safety at schools and on the journey to school. Since this initiative started in 2001, Roads Service has implemented a series of speed management measures at around 80 schools, to alert drivers to the presence of school children and to encourage them to drive responsibly.

In September 2006, Roads Service accelerated this initiative to focus more particularly on the introduction of speed management measures at rural schools where the national speed limit (60mph) applies. In 2007/08 Roads Service aims to introduce speed management measures at a further 60 schools, both urban and rural.

Roads Service has also undertaken educational campaigns in schools raising awareness of the benefits of walking and cycling to school safely.

In relation to the Twenty's Plenty advertising campaign, I understand that this initiative has been implemented in England and Scotland where "advisory" 20mph limits have been introduced in residential areas. I can confirm that a number of "advisory" 20mph zones have been introduced across the North together with many formal traffic calming schemes in a bid to reduce speed and reduce collisions and casualties on our roads.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

First Time Home Buyers

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to help first time home buyers. (AQW 556/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): The Co-ownership shared equity scheme administered by the Northern Ireland Co-ownership Housing Association remains the Department's main measure for assisting first time buyers. The scheme has successfully assisted over 19,500 households since its inception in 1978.

In addition Sir John Semple's report published in April 2007 has made a series of 80 recommendations. The wide scope of these recommendations shows that concerted action across organisational boundaries is necessary to improve the delivery of affordable housing across tenures. The Semple report devotes a full chapter to potential changes relating to the scheme to allow better use of public funding and to help reduce those on the waiting list for social housing.

In response I have set up an Interdepartmental Affordability Review Implementation Group, which I chair. The role of the Interdepartmental Group is to agree and deliver on an affordability implementation plan through determining which of the Semple recommendations are acceptable and developing an implementation plan by Christmas 2007. I have also set up an Advisory Panel of Experts to assist the Interdepartmental Group by assessing the departmental responses to the Semple recommendations, highlighting and advising on any improvement or alternative approaches or timescales that could or should be applied. This will include potential improvements to the scheme in light of the Semple report.

The sale of social houses to sitting tenants through the House Sales Scheme also makes a contribution in assisting first time buyers into home ownership.

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of applications to the Child Support Agency that are exclusively dealt with in Northern Ireland, and the number that are dealt with in Great Britain. (AQW 564/08)

Ms Ritchie: The total number of applications exclusively dealt with by the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency is 221,435. Of these applications, 45,924 are from Northern Ireland customers and the remainder relate to applications from customers in the Eastern area of Great Britain.

In Great Britain the total number of applications to the Child Support Agency is 876,766. This figure excludes 175,511 cases which are from Eastern area of Great Britain customers and therefore dealt with by the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency.

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of applications to the Child Support Agency that resulted in payments being issued to the parent with care, within (i) one month; (ii) three months; (iii) six months; (iv) twelve months; and (v) eighteen months or more.

(AQW 566/08)

Ms Ritchie: In the last 18 months, from February 2006, the Agency has calculated maintenance on 3,404 applications. A first payment was issued to the parent with care in 1,556 of these cases. Of this total:

- 3 were cleared within one month
- 119 were cleared within 3 months
- 592 were cleared within 6 months
- 702 were cleared within 12 months, and
- 140 were cleared within 18 months.

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to ensure the quick turnaround of applications to the Child Support Agency.

(AQW 567/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Child Support Agency reviews its internal working practices on an ongoing basis. The information provided by the Computer System is now more accessible and allows managers to prioritise and target specific workloads to ensure a quick turnaround of applications.

As part of its operational improvements, there are plans for additional organisational changes linked to IT enhancements which should lead to further improvements in the speed of processing new applications.

Social Housing

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development if she will make a statement on the provision of social housing in South Down.

(AQW 587/08)

Ms Ritchie: Growing demand has been identified in Warrenpoint, Kilkeel, Rostrevor, Downpatrick, Ballynahinch, Newcastle, Castlewellan and Crossgar. In all of these areas, land for social housing has been very difficult to acquire due mainly to high cost and competition from the private sector.

During 2006/07, 30 homes at Bridal Loanan, Warrenpoint and one at Dunwellan Park, Newcastle were completed and a scheme at Bryansford Road for 12 supported units of accommodation commenced on site. A scheme at Windmill Drive, Ballynahinch is due to complete this year delivering a further 12 general needs units.

Housing Associations are actively seeking sites in areas where housing need has been identified and the Housing Executive is continually reviewing its own land holdings and working with others to try to identify suitable development opportunities.

The 5 year Social Housing Development Programme is currently being rolled forward this year and the programme for 2008/09 – 2012/13 is due to be published in January 2008. All programmes however will be subject to the availability of funding.

All efforts are being made to increase the supply of social housing in South Down, as across the whole of Northern Ireland.

Disability Action

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the amount of funding allocated by her department to Disability Action, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 654/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Department for Social Development provided funding to Disability Action NI in 2004/2005 under the Executive Programme Fund for Key Voluntary and Community Sector Services. The total amount awarded was £49,578 to develop the capacity of people with disabilities to empower themselves and meaningfully address the root causes of their marginalisation and exclusion.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Social Development if she is aware of the concerns of community representatives in Armagh city's 'Neighbourhood Renewal' areas, regarding the funding proposals for statutory bodies, in light of the fact that this appears to be a duplication of services that are already provided by these bodies; and of her department's apparent support for these bodies in regard to this matter.

(AQW 717/08)

Ms Ritchie: The funding proposals for statutory bodies in the Armagh Neighbourhood Renewal Area are aimed at tackling deprivation in line with the targets and objectives set out in the Action Plan which was developed by the local community. All proposals will be subjected to a rigorous appraisal process to ensure that they address the causes of deprivation, complement rather than duplicate existing services, offer value for money and that there are no other more appropriate funding sources available. My officials are engaging with the local community representatives and the relevant statutory bodies to address concerns which have been raised in this regard.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 19 October 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Attacks on Orange Halls

Mr Armstrong asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what representations have been made by the department, to ensure that the recent attacks on Orange Halls are being treated as sectarian hate crimes by the Police Service of Northern Ireland. (AQW 81/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley and Mr M McGuinness): We totally deplore these acts and condemn utterly those people who carry out such attacks, which are a scourge on our society. We are totally committed to moving society forward; to make a real difference to the lives of all our people.

To this end, the First Minister has made numerous representations to the police in relation to attacks on Orange Halls.

Pension Gratuity Payments to Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists

Mr McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the further clarification it is seeking from the Secretary of State with regard to pension/gratuity payments to Royal Ulster Constabulary reservists; and to indicate when it will be in a position to release the information obtained in relation to this issue. (AQW 588/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We have asked for further information about aspects of the Northern Ireland Office's assessment of the economic viability of a pension scheme for Royal Ulster Constabulary Part-time Reservists. We will provide a full response when this additional information has been received.

Investment Strategy

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how it will ensure that the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland covers all of Northern Ireland, and, in particular, the Strangford area. (AQW 756/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: A draft Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland will be published shortly for consultation, setting out a range of programmes and projects to develop public infrastructure over the period 2008-2018 in line with the Executive's strategic priorities. In developing the draft Investment Strategy, the Strategic Investment Board has engaged with a wide cross-section of society across the region in order to inform better its advice to the Executive on prioritisation of future infrastructure development.

The Investment Strategy will be based on objective assessment of needs and priorities across all areas and will include developments both of regional and local significance.

Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner for Complaints

Mr McClarty asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what consideration it has given to initiating the review of the Offices of the Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, which was due to commence upon restoration of the Assembly. (AQW 764/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: A review of the Offices of the Assembly Ombudsman and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints was undertaken in the 2003/04 financial year, and a report was submitted to OFMDFM for consideration in March 2004. In considering the report, the former Secretary of State, Paul Murphy MP, decided that consultation on the report findings, and subsequent policy development, should await the return of the Assembly.

We are now considering the report to determine the continued relevance of its scope and findings in light of the time that has elapsed since it was originally submitted to OFMDFM. This will allow us to map out what action is required in relation to the report, and the timetable for taking forward its findings as appropriate. We will advise the Assembly of our intentions in due course.

Appointment of a Victims' Commissioner

Mrs D Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, with reference to the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner, and on the basis that the recruitment process was initiated under direct rule, to detail the implications that the delay in making this appointment will have on the reports being produced by (i) the Strategic Review of Parades Group; and (ii) the Consultative Group on the Past (Eames/Bradley). (AQW 894/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

The work of the Strategic Review of Parades Group and the Consultative Group on the Past are the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Office. We understand that the former intend to report in Spring 2008 and the latter by Summer 2008.

At this stage we do not anticipate any implications for the two reports arising from the timescale for Appointment of the Victims' Commissioner as announced on 8 October 2007.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Cost of Animal Feed

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she is taking to offset the threat to the pig, poultry and cattle industries, as a result of the increasing cost of feed. (AQW 630/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): I have recently met senior management at Grampian Country Park to hear at first hand the real economic challenges facing the pigmeat sector. I am also aware of the difficulties facing the poultry sector. I am fully engaged with the Red Meat Task Force and will be working with them and other stakeholders to consider their findings and recommendations and the way forward.

The extent of the problem varies with individual farm situation and it is essential each farmer accurately assesses their own costs of production. The College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise, CAFRE, offers Benchmarking programmes to pig producers and livestock farmers to help them assess their own costs of production and identify solutions to address any inefficiencies identified. The College is also working with stakeholders to develop training programmes for pig producers. A programme of written communications and workshops is planned this winter for the ruminant sectors in response to the current feed situation. We have also put the set-aside rate at 0% for the coming year, which will release land for cereal production. I hope this will go some way to helping the pig, poultry and cattle industries at this time.

I have highlighted to the major retailers here how difficult the situation is for our local supply base. I have also written to every supermarket in the North about the rising costs for producers because of feed prices. Whilst I would like to encourage supermarkets to consider better terms for local produce, unfortunately, this is a reserved matter and I have no direct influence over prices.

Livestock Identity Tags

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to explain the reasons for the decision to retain the United Kingdom logo on the new 14 digit livestock identity tags. (AQW 632/08)

Ms Gildernew: Two-letter country codes must be printed on cattle eartags under EU legislation. The purpose of this is to allow the animal's Member State of origin to be identified. Commission Regulation (EC) No. 911/2004 specifies that the country code for the United Kingdom is UK. We are bound by this Commission Regulation to retain this on the tags.

Sluicing Gates

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the decisions taken in relation to putting in place new and improved sluicing gates at the Clay Lakes, Shrigley, following the meeting on 18 June 2007 between her officials, Environment and Heritage Service officials, and local residents. (AQW 687/08)

Ms Gildernew: DARD Rivers Agency currently has no responsibility for control structures on the Clay Lakes. Following a meeting in June 2007 between representatives of Rivers Agency, DOE, Environment and Heritage, and the current controllers of the water levels, a further meeting took place on 19 July to discuss future control arrangements and the possible transfer of responsibility to Rivers Agency. Any decisions to provide new and improved control structures are subject to the formal agreement of the current controllers to transfer responsibility which has not yet been confirmed.

Animal Incinerators

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the consultation requirements, in relation to building an animal incinerator on a farm. (AQW 694/08)

Ms Gildernew: Animal carcass incinerators must be approved in accordance with the Animal By-Products Regulations (NI) 2003. This requires incinerators to be operated in such a way as to minimise risks to public or animal health.

Under the Regulations, my Department must grant an approval if it is satisfied that the premises will be operated in compliance with the legislation. The legislation does not make provision for consultation. There is therefore no requirement for consultation in the approval process.

Organics Sector

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline what incentives her department has introduced to develop the organics sector. (AQW 722/08)

Ms Gildernew: Under the Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme 2007-2013, which was approved by the European Commission in late July 2007, I hope to offer a new Organic Farming Scheme to assist farmers who wish to convert from conventional to organic production.

The new Scheme should offer increased levels of support for the organic livestock sector, with additional support for the organic cereal and horticulture sectors. DARD proposes to pay the following amounts to farmers to cover the first five years of conversion to organic production:

Horticulture (including top fruit)	£670
Arable	£570
Other Improved Land	£470

These payments are on a 'per hectare' basis, and will be apportioned over the five years.

I also hope to offer an ongoing post-conversion payment of £30 per hectare per year for such land, which is certified organic, under the proposed Organic Option in the new Countryside Management Scheme.

In addition to this, CAFRE (Greenmount Campus) continues to provide education, advice and ongoing support in relation to organic farming. It also develops and tests new technologies appropriate to the local organic sector.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, in relation to the debate on genetically modified crops. (AQW 723/08)

Ms Gildernew: To date, there have been no such discussions with Mary Coughlan, my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, on this matter.

While such discussions will be scheduled if and when required, it should be pointed out that locally the Department of Environment, not DARD, have the statutory responsibility for the licensing of any GM trials.

However, I must stress that no GM crops are being grown here, either on farms or in research establishments.

Lamb Production

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the tonnage of lamb produced in Northern Ireland in (a) 2004; (b) 2005; (c) 2006; and (d) 2007, to date. (AQW 743/08)

Ms Gildernew: The tonnage of lamb produced from the domestic breeding flock, including that from lambs slaughtered locally and lambs shipped or exported live, is estimated to be the following:

	Tonnes Dressed Carcase Weight
(a) 2004	17,878
(b) 2005	17,790
(c) 2006	18,940 (provisional)
(d) 2007 (to end of September)	11,855 (preliminary estimate)

I hope you find this helpful.

Beef Production

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the tonnage of beef produced in Northern Ireland in (a) 2004; (b) 2005; (c) 2006; and (d) 2007, to date. (AQW 744/08)

Ms Gildernew: The tonnage of beef produced locally, including that from animals slaughtered here and all cattle shipped or exported live, is estimated to be the following:

TONNES DRESSED CARCASE WEIGHT¹

	Tonnes Dressed Carcase Weight ¹
(a) 2004	138,174
(b) 2005	132,244
(c) 2006	139,693 (provisional)
(d) 2007 (to end of September)	113,325 (preliminary estimate)

1. This excludes meat from animals slaughtered under the Over Thirty Months Scheme and the Older Cattle Disposal Scheme. This meat does not enter the human food chain.

I hope you find this helpful.

Policy on Circus Animals

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her department's policy in relation to the presence of circuses involving the use of animals. (AQW 771/08)

Ms Gildernew: DARD's role in circuses is currently very limited. Part III of the Welfare of Animals Act (NI) 1972 allows for the protection of all animals, as it is an offence under the Act to fail to exercise reasonable care and supervision so as to prevent unnecessary suffering to an animal. There are, however, no specific provisions on the welfare of animals in circuses. Furthermore the Department has no powers of entry to circuses. If a welfare complaint is received regarding a circus animal, only the PSNI has powers of entry under the Act.

The Department did, however, consult on proposals for new animal welfare legislation in 2006, including on the need for regulation of circuses. I have asked my officials to finalise a paper summarising the responses to this consultation, after which I will decide what new legislation is required.

As many of the circuses that operate here are based in the South, it is important that I take note of the position in the South during my consideration of this issue. Therefore I have asked my officials to raise the issue in their discussions about new animal welfare legislation in the South, with their counterparts in the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when they next meet at a forthcoming Animal Welfare North South Working Group.

Regulation of Circus Animals

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to regulate the use of animals in circuses within Northern Ireland; and what consideration she has given to a ban on such circuses. (AQW 772/08)

Ms Gildernew: DARD's role in circuses is currently very limited. Part III of the Welfare of Animals Act (NI) 1972 allows for the protection of all animals, as it is an offence under the Act to fail to exercise reasonable care and supervision so as to prevent unnecessary suffering to an animal. There are, however, no specific provisions on the welfare of animals in circuses. Furthermore the Department has no powers of entry to circuses. If a welfare complaint is received regarding a circus animal, only the PSNI has powers of entry under the Act.

The Department did, however, consult on proposals for new animal welfare legislation in 2006, including on the need for regulation of circuses. I have asked my officials to finalise a paper summarising the responses to this consultation, after which I will decide what new legislation is required.

As many of the circuses that operate here are based in the South, it is important that I take note of the position in the South during my consideration of this issue. Therefore I have asked my officials to raise the issue in their discussions about new animal welfare legislation in the South, with their counterparts in the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, when they next meet at a forthcoming Animal Welfare North South Working Group.

Suckler Beef and Hill Sheep Farmers

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she will take to support the long-term sustainability of Northern Ireland's suckler beef and hill sheep farmers, in response to the findings of the Northern Ireland Red Meat Taskforce. (AQW 799/08)

Ms Gildernew: I am committed to supporting local produce and can advise that my Department is actively involved in work aimed at assisting our beef and sheep industries. The Task Force Report clearly shows the serious challenges facing these sectors and gives a clear view on the choices that have to be made by each individual farmer.

My Department will target research and investment to production models that are considered, by the Report, as having the greatest potential to deliver results and offer sustainable businesses to farmers. We will support those farmers who choose to stay in the sector and look at alternative production systems and help those who wish to change direction and take up other opportunities.

The Single Farm Payment, available up to 2013, represents substantial transitional support and gives producers options, while maintaining current levels of income, to be able to change direction while trying to implement logical business decisions. Additionally, the Rural Development Plan that I announced in early summer, contains many programmes and measures that will also assist in the transition, for example, adding value via better Processing and Marketing, Farm Modernisation and Supply Chain Programmes.

Beef and Lamb were included in LMC's programme of activities at Anuga, the international food and drink exhibition that took place in Cologne earlier this month. LMC also facilitate trade missions, carry out beef and lamb promotion activities in Europe and provide pricing and marketing information to help the industry secure the best markets for their products.

Part-Time Farmers

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will give a detailed report on her department's progress towards accommodating part-time farmers, within the farm viability criteria that are presently applied to meet planning policy.

(AQW 813/08)

Ms Gildernew: I understand the concerns which exist about the relevance of the current farm viability test given that an increasing proportion of farms are being operated on a part time basis. The assessment of farm viability is one of a number of issues that is being considered by the Ministerial Interdepartmental Rural Planning Group, of which I am a member. This group will report its conclusions to the Executive.

Disposal of Surplus Young Cattle

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of whether or not surplus young cattle are always disposed of in a humane manner.

(AQW 865/08)

Ms Gildernew: There is no evidence to suggest inhumane disposal of young cattle. The majority of these surplus young cattle are humanely destroyed by private vets though some may be shot by the farmers themselves. If the welfare of animals was being contravened the Department would expect to be made aware through complaints from neighbours and farm visitors. The Department gives high priority to the welfare of cattle and operates a vigorous enforcement policy to ensure full compliance of regulatory requirements. Any breaches are investigated thoroughly and offenders prosecuted as necessary.

Incentives for Rearing Surplus Young Cattle

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to introduce incentives in relation to the rearing of surplus young cattle, taking into account the current global food shortage.

(AQW 866/08)

Ms Gildernew: The recently published Red Meat Task Force Report highlights the serious challenges facing the sector and gives a clear view on the choices that have to be made by each individual farmer. My Department will assist in whatever way it can but the current structure of the red meat industry is not viable and we need to secure change. I will ensure that Government resources are focused and targeted on those production options which are viable. The College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise, CAFRE, and Supply Chain Development Branch will also continue to work with producers to develop new production systems for cattle with a view to satisfying the demands of, or need for, new market opportunities.

The Single Farm Payment, which will be available up to 2013 at least, represents substantial transitional support to underpin the red meat sector, giving producers the opportunity to change the direction of their business whilst maintaining current levels of income. The question would appear to indicate that the time is right to look at other options including diversification. Further subsidy, even in the short term, would simply mask the issues and put off addressing the need for change. Introducing an incentive scheme or something similar is neither realistic nor practical as, even if State Aid approval were to be granted, resources are extremely limited.

Early Retirement Scheme for Farmers

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what consideration she will give to an early retirement scheme for farmers, similar to that which exists in the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 867/08)

Ms Gildernew: Independent research commissioned by DARD and carried out in 2002 by The Queen's University of Belfast considered the viability of an Early Retirement Scheme, as well as a New Entrants Scheme. The research estimated that the payment for actions which would have occurred anyway in the absence of the Scheme would be relatively high and, therefore, it offered poor value for money.

Since then, decoupling of support and the introduction of the Single Farm Payment Scheme (SFPS) provides an extremely flexible means by which farmers can scale back their farming enterprises and retain a significant support payment. This offers a practical and readily available means for farmers to move to retirement at any stage and with minimum bureaucracy.

Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will make public the details of the business case that has been used as the basis for her decision to sell the facilities owned by her department at Crossnacreevy; and to detail what other options, as an alternative to this sale, were considered.

(AQW 914/08)

Ms Gildernew: The proposed disposal of the Crossnacreevy site is about Government's obligations to make best use of its capital assets and about the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute's (AFBI) future strategic needs.

Prior to my announcement on 12 June, DARD and AFBI jointly had already begun a review of AFBI's needs and utilisation of the estate it occupies. The initial scoping study for this review concluded that the relocation of the activities and facilities at Crossnacreevy to another site was feasible. This conclusion opened up the possibility that the current site could be sold without any adverse impact on AFBI's activities.

The AFBI estate review has now moved on to the next phase. This includes the preparation of business cases that will address the options for the relocation of the facilities and work carried out at and disposal of the Crossnacreevy site. Once the business cases are finalised I will be very happy to make the details available.

EU Agriculture and Fisheries Meeting

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what benefits were secured for the agricultural community in Northern Ireland, at the meeting of EU Agriculture and Fisheries Ministers in Porto, from 16-18 September 2007.
(AQW 1051/08)

Ms Gildernew: The meeting of EU Agriculture and Fisheries Ministers in Porto was an informal meeting of the EU Agriculture Council hosted by the Portuguese Presidency. The hosting of an informal Council meeting is normal practice at the start of each new six month Presidency. A Presidency paper entitled 'Importance of agri-food sector to the sustainable development of rural territories' was the subject of debate.

Informal meetings of the EU Council have no legal status. Consequently, no decisions are taken at such meetings and so there are no direct benefits for the agricultural community in the North that could accrue from the recent informal meeting in Porto.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Motorcycle Road Races

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what consideration has been given to permitting organisers of motorcycle road races to charge entry to their events.
(AQW 698/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): I am aware that, currently, legislation only provides for charging into the Dundrod circuit during the Ulster Grand Prix. Officials within my Department are in ongoing discussions with the umbrella body for motorsport, the 2&4 Wheel Motorsport Steering Group Limited, about the wider implications this may have for organisers of other motorsports events and how issues in relation to charging at those events might be addressed.

Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to give his assessment of the impact of the Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003.
(AQW 701/08)

Mr Poots: The Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003 provides for the organisers of the Ulster Grand Prix to levy an admission charge on spectators attending this event. The umbrella body for motorsport, the 2&4 Wheel Motorsport Steering Group Limited (2&4 Wheel MSG), has raised concerns with DCAL about the implications of these Regulations on investment opportunities for other motorsport events. DCAL officials are in on-going discussions with 2&4 Wheel MSG on this issue and how it might be addressed.

Staff Required in Library Services

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to provide an estimate of the number of administration and management staff that will be required in the various grades of library service, following the establishment of the proposed new Library Authority.
(AQW 734/08)

Mr Poots: The Chief Executive (designate) of the proposed Library Authority is considering the staffing structure of the Library Authority as part of the work she is undertaking on organisational design with senior library staff in the Education and Library Boards.

Once I have had an opportunity to consider her proposals I will advise the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee.

Public Access to Library Services

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will provide assurances that the core library services will be free to the general public at the point of use, following the establishment of the proposed Library Authority.
(AQW 735/08)

Mr Poots: Yes. The Libraries Bill as drafted is designed to reflect current practice in charging the public for certain library services. The Department's policy guidelines, Delivering Tomorrow's Libraries, state that "the public library service exists to make available to all, free at the point of use, books and information which provide opportunities for learning, knowledge and inspiration”.

Staff in Northern Library Services by Grade

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of administration and management staff within the Northern Ireland Library Service, broken down by grade. (AQW 738/08)

Mr Poots: A table detailing the information requested is attached.

ANNEX

Grade	In Post
Second Tier	5
Assistant Senior Education Officer	1
Education Officer	2
Senior Principal Officer	5
Principal Officer	3
Assistant Principal Officer	2
Senior Administration Officer	5
Administration Officer	13
Senior Executive Officer	12
Executive Officer	22
Senior Clerical Officer	22
Clerical Officer	6
Total	98

Accommodation of Library Services

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is his assessment of the land and property requirements of the new Library Authority and related administration; and to detail (a) whether there will be a requirement for additional or new accommodation; (b) the estimated cost of new accommodation; and (c) the value of any surplus land and property. (AQW 739/08)

Mr Poots: The existing public libraries and library administration buildings will transfer from the Education and Library Boards to the Library Authority in a scheme for the transfer of assets. In considering the organisational design of the Library Authority, an assessment will be made of the continuing need for the existing administration buildings. The value of any that are surplus will be calculated at that point.

The only new accommodation foreseen is for the headquarters of the Library Authority. Negotiations are underway for temporary premises in Lisburn which will cost around £30,000 per year in rent, rates and service charge. A permanent location for the Library Authority has not yet been considered.

Sporting Facilities

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what support his department is giving to provide additional sporting facilities, throughout all of the rural areas in North Antrim. (AQW 752/08)

Mr Poots: Article 10 of The Recreation and Youth Service (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 states that each District Council has statutory responsibility for the provision of leisure and recreation facilities within its area. Therefore the responsibility to provide additional sporting facilities throughout all of the rural areas in North Antrim falls to the District Councils in that area. This would therefore be a matter for Ballymena, Ballymoney, and Moyle, Borough Councils.

1911 Census of Ireland Microfilm

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to explain the reasons why the 1911 census of Ireland microfilm is still not available in the Public Record Office in Northern Ireland, when his department promised in 2002 that that it would be copied and placed on public record; and what is the timetable for this to be made available. (AQW 753/08)

Mr Poots: It was the intention of the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) to purchase microfilm copies of the 1911 census but because of technical difficulties in duplicating the films these plans were delayed. In the meantime PRONI was aware that the National Archives of Ireland in Dublin were keen to index and digitise both the 1901 and 1911 census in which case it would have been wasteful of public funding for PRONI to acquire microfilm copies.

In the autumn of 2005 the government in the Republic of Ireland announced that funding would be made available for the digitisation of both the 1901 and 1911 census returns for the whole island of Ireland. These will be available online without charge. This is being implemented as a joint project between the National Archives of Ireland and Library and Archives Canada. Phase one to make the 1911 census for Dublin available will be launched shortly. Cos Antrim and Down, including Belfast, will be in phase two which is to be launched in the Spring of 2008. It will therefore be unnecessary for PRONI to obtain microfilm copies of the 1911 census for Northern Ireland.

Cost of Translations

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total cost of translating all Northern Ireland Government departments' official documents and papers into non-English language mediums, broken down by language. (AQW 800/08)

Mr Poots: Detailed breakdowns of translation costs for each Government Department for each of the last five years are provided in the following tables:

BREAKDOWN OF TRANSLATIONS 2002/03, 2003/04, 2004/05, 2005/06

Breakdown For 2002/03
Department	Total 2002/03	Irish	Ulster Scots	* Ethnic	Sign	 Other
DHSSPS	£95,620.11	£89,152.86	£0.00	£6,467.25	£0.00	£0.00
NIO	£123,150.11	£679.36	£413.00	£121,790.75	£85.00	£182.00
DE	£98,993.67	£35,521.79	£0.00	£58,497.63	£599.70	£4,374.55
DETI	£987.68	£176.02	£0.00	£811.66	£0.00	£0.00
DEL	£4,726.86	£655.00	£0.00	£719.90	£3,351.96	£0.00
OFMDFM	£43,176.87	£26,208.99	£7,415.50	£2,522.00	£1,528.00	£5,502.38
DOE	£296.50	£154.50	£0.00	£0.00	£142.00	£0.00
DSD	£18,183.86	£57.50	£0.00	£16,836.02	£1,290.34	£0.00
DFP	£177.17	£177.17	£0.00	£0.00	£0.00	£0.00
DCAL	£39,718.86	£38,061.61	£149.85	£495.00	£1,012.40	£0.00
DARD	£981.49	£310.89	£0.00	£670.60	£0.00	£0.00
DRD	Nil Return
Total	£426,013.18	£191,155.69	£7,978.35	£208,810.81	£8,009.40	£10,058.93

Breakdown 2003/04
Department	Total 2003/04	Irish	Ulster Scots	* Ethnic	Sign	 Other
NIO	£115,001.83	£687.38	£0.00	£111,583.79	£2,730.66	£0.00
DE	£119,929.38	£22,963.22	£69.95	£96,780.01	£104.20	£12.00
DARD	£1,305.36	£76.59	£0.00	£1,175.78	£0.00	£52.99
DEL	£11,039.00	£0.00	£1,028.00	£9,028.70	£104.20	£878.10
DETI	£3,697.68	£2,075.93	£0.00	£523.93	£120.11	£977.71
DFP	£1,898.45	£1,060.13	£0.00	£838.32	£0.00	£0.00
DHSSPS	£31,466.55	£29,305.80	£0.00	£2,160.75	£0.00	£0.00
DOE	£74.95	£74.95	£0.00	£0.00	£0.00	£0.00
DRD	£539.04	£195.00	£134.04	£210.00	£0.00	£0.00
DSD	£53,913.74	£482.50	£0.00	£52,556.86	£874.38	£0.00
OFMDFM	£22,505.61	£4,764.15	£354.00	£1,375.51	£15,734.65	£277.30
DCAL	£53,652.58	£51,593.12	£444.50	£1,350.00	£264.96	£0.00
Total	£415,024.17	£113,278.77	£2,030.49	£277,583.65	£19,933.16	£2,198.10

Breakdown 2004/05
Department	Total 2004/05	Irish	Ulster Scots	* Ethnic	Sign	 Other
NIO	£257,878.70	£2,058.69	£558.06	£158,670.32	£4,161.52	£92,430.11
DE	£37,416.37	£24,554.49	£0.00	£9,800.30	£3,061.58	£0.00
DARD	£1,370.98	£311.90	£0.00	£1,059.08	£0.00	£0.00
DEL	£12,557.82	£0.00	£0.00	£50.00	£2,654.63	£9,853.19
DETI	£3,603.36	£309.97	£45.50	£1,740.01	£1,507.88	£0.00
DFP	£1,958.86	£625.06	£295.54	£715.11	£102.34	£220.81
DHSSPS	£13,515.01	£9,592.76	£0.00	£152.75	£0.00	£3,769.50
DOE	£724.02	£109.02	£225.00	£390.00	£0.00	£0.00
DRD	£3,798.99	£338.24	£0.00	£0.00	£3,108.24	£352.51
DSD	£112,612.59	£251.39	£0.00	£98,092.67	£3,154.70	£11,113.83
OFMDFM	£1,695.36	£494.36	£0.00	£1,195.00	£0.00	£6.00
DCAL	£37,403.23	£28,575.59	£568.71	£5,425.00	£2,833.93	£0.00
Total	£484,535.29	£67,221.47	£1,692.81	£277,290.24	£20,584.82	£117,745.95

Breakdown 2005/06
Department	Total 2005/06	Irish	Ulster Scots	* Ethnic	Sign	 Other
NIO	£527,454.57	£480.76	£0.00	£510,893.87	£16,079.94	£0.00
DE	£37,827.10	£19,349.27	£0.00	£14,094.27	£3,559.65	£823.91
DARD	£5,076.85	£3,192.16	£95.89	£1,590.00	£0.00	£198.80
DEL	£232,064.00	£0.00	£0.00	£230,841.00	£1,223.00	£0.00
DETI	£7,510.19	£390.89	£0.00	£5,430.59	£1,611.17	£77.54
DFP	£1,498.03	£899.73	£0.00	£180.00	£356.50	£61.80
DHSSPS	£27,262.66	£8,974.00	£0.00	£17,545.66	£0.00	£743.00
DOE	£16,330.78	£7,290.06	£7,931.62	£309.10	£800.00	£0.00
DRD	£546.04	£436.04	£0.00	£110.00	£0.00	£0.00
DSD	£309,871.19	£0.00	£0.00	£308,602.40	£561.00	£707.79
OFMDFM	£24,081.60	£2,740.77	£515.36	£15,210.47	£4,291.60	£1,323.40
DCAL	£25,183.92	£20,801.17	£783.40	£1,535.90	£532.30	£1,531.15
Total	£1,214,706.93	£64,554.85	£9,326.27	£1,106,343.26	£29,015.16	£5,467.39

Breakdown 2006/07
Department	Total 2006/07	Irish	Ulster Scots	Ethnic*	Sign	Other
NIO	£359,775.00	£1,963.00	£193.00	£337,935.00	£19,070.00	£614.00
DE	£235,520.11	£19,371.88	£50.61	£212,177.62	£3,590.00	£330.00
DARD	£8,723.20	£2,087.49	£489.77	£6,145.94	£0.00	£0.00
DEL	£118,987.71	£2,375.06	£630.00	£35,795.65	£80,187.00	£0.00
DETI	£12,482.65	£223.75	£0.00	£11,622.02	£113.00	£523.88
DFP	£14,040.03	£9,971.29	£0.00	£174.36	£3,763.88	£130.50
DHSSPS	£14,786.46	£14,046.45	£0.00	£740.01	£0.00	£0.00

Breakdown 2006/07
Department	Total 2006/07	Irish	Ulster Scots	Ethnic*	Sign	Other
DOE	£22,246.57	£20,145.87	£1,060.50	£508.20	£532.00	£0.00
DRD	£5,042.51	£410.67	£175.00	£1,547.34	£2,593.00	£316.50
DSD	£262,630.97	£1,932.88	£0.00	£257,924.33	£990.95	£1,782.81
OFMDFM	£14,926.86	£3,891.97	£499.60	£7,815.46	£2,111.40	£608.43
DCAL	£44,918.38	£40,667.70	£0.00	£2,191.31	£0.00	£2,059.37
Total	£1,114,080.45	£117,088.01	£3,098.48	£874,577.24	£112,951.23	£6,365.49

* Ethnic refers to translations other than English, Irish and Ulster-Scots

 Other refers to braille and interpretation costs

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, ‘The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy’ is being taken into account within his department’s approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 824/08)

Mr Poots: My Department is committed to ensuring that it fulfils its duties under both Section 75(1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 in relation to the promotion of equality of opportunity and the desirability of promoting good relations. Promotion of equality of opportunity and good relations is an important part of departmental policy development, legislative activities and operational programmes. For each of the Comprehensive Spending Review 2007 spending and efficiency proposals put forward by the Department a High Level Equality Impact Assessment (HLIA), agreed by the Equality Commission for the Comprehensive Spending Review process, has been completed showing how each proposal has been considered against both duties.

The report ‘The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy’ was a piece of independent research commissioned by the previous administration and represents the views of Deloitte Touche. Therefore my department did not consider this report during the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review.

Irish Language Community

Mr Brolly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he has taken to liaise with the Irish language community, since he took up office. (AQW 874/08)

Mr Poots: I have recently met with representatives from the Irish language community to discuss Irish language legislation, the recommendations of the Council of Europe Committee of Experts on Regional or Minority Languages duty to adopt a strategy to enhance and protect the development of the Irish language.

Staff Levels in Arts Council

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to provide a breakdown of the number of staff within the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, per head of population, compared to the Arts Councils of England, Scotland, Wales and the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 888/08)

Mr Poots: The information requested is shown in the table below.

Arts Council	No. of Staff	Population	Population per member of staff
England	700	50,762,900	72,518
Scotland	90	5,116,900	56,854
Wales	124	2,965,900	23,919
Republic of Ireland	105	4,109,086	39,134
Northern Ireland	56	1,710,300	30,541

The Arts Council staff total includes 5 temporary staff and 2 university student placements.

Arts Council: Annual Support for Organisation Programme

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to provide a breakdown of Annual Support for Organisations Programme contributions allocated by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland to the Grand Opera House, Belfast, in each of the last three years. (AQW 889/08)

Mr Poots: Annual Support for Organisations Programme contributions allocated by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland to the Grand Opera House in each of the last three years are shown on the following page:

Financial year	Amount allocated (£)
2007/08	492,921
2006/07	492,921
2005/06	485,000

Ulster-Scots Language

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what progress has been made in preparing to move the Ulster-Scots language from part 2 to part 3 of the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. (AQW 946/08)

Mr Poots: A draft road map has been developed by the Ulster Scots Academy Implementation Group Partnership Board outlining how the criteria could be met for Ulster-Scots to attain Part III status. This was done at the request of an Ulster Scots Future Search Group convened by my Department. Government Departments have considered the document and responded to the Partnership Board who in turn submitted a revised document for further consideration by the Interdepartmental Charter Implementation Group (ICIG). ICIG agreed to take on board both the Partnership Board's and Departments' comments and prepare a revised road map for discussion at its next meeting.

EDUCATION

Transfer Test

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the breakdown of costs and the number of personnel involved in devising, trialling and administering the transfer test each year. (AQW 220/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): The Transfer Test is estimated to cost the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) in excess of £500,000 to devise, trial and administer. Around 50% of the total cost is accounted for by the development and trialling of test papers, with around 30% accounted for by the marking and re-marking of test papers. The remaining 20% of costs relate to printing, postage, processing of entries and information management. This estimate reflects the fact that a number of CCEA staff engaged in these activities also undertake other functions within the organisation, so an exact head count is not appropriate, but staffing costs are factored into the overall estimate. The figure excludes the cost of invigilation, ongoing support for schools and the issue of results to schools and parents, all of which are more difficult to accurately estimate as they involve organisations other than CCEA.

Bunscoil an Chaistil

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to give a timescale for Bunscoil an Chaistil to (i) receive an upgrade of its C2K service; (ii) receive lunch facilities; and to detail how the Club Bank Scheme is progressing towards a new school in Ballycastle, and whether her department has settled upon a design for this new school. (AQW 280/08)

Ms Ruane:

- (i) Bunscoil an Chaistil is using standalone ICT equipment supplied by Classroom 2000 (C2k) because its current temporary accommodation does not have the cabling necessary to enable it to have a fully networked internal system. The Department is currently working with the North Eastern Education and Library Board and C2k to ensure that Bunscoil an Chaistil will be fully equipped and connected to the C2k network, thus ensuring that they can take full advantage of the benefits of ICT, as well as meeting their responsibilities under the new curricular and assessment arrangements. The solution for the school has still to be determined but it is expected that the work will be completed in the next few months.
- (ii) The North Eastern Education and Library Board is currently providing school meals for 7 to 8 pupils at Bunscoil an Chaistil. These pupils are entitled to free school meals and the meals are delivered daily to the school from St Patrick's and St Brigid's High School and eaten in the nursery classroom. Due to the small numbers involved the Board has not provided a separate school meal servery.
- (iii) Arrangements for a Club Bank scheme are currently the subject of consideration between the Department and Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta. The Department has not yet agreed a design for the school.

Dyslexia

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Education to detail the earliest age at which her department can make provision for children with dyslexia in the Ards peninsula. (AQW 437/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not make special education provision. Under special education legislation Education and Library Boards (ELBs) are responsible for identifying, assessing and, in appropriate cases, making special educational provision for children in their areas.

This provision, which includes provision for children with dyslexia, is matched to individual needs and for which no age limit has been prescribed by the Department.

All-Island Autism Centre

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education what progress has been made on an all-island autism centre. (AQO 294/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education in partnership with the Department of Education and Science is taking forward the arrangements needed to enable the Middletown Centre for Autism to begin offering services.

Following the purchase of the property in June 2004 and the approval of a comprehensive revised economic appraisal in July 2006 considerable progress has been made in the establishment of the Centre.

The appointment of the Board of Directors by the two Departments is now complete and the Middletown Centre for Autism Ltd was incorporated as a company on 16th March 2007.

The Chief Executive Officer for the Centre commenced employment in April 2007, with two Heads of Division taking up their posts in September and October. They will be taking forward the work required to commence service delivery. The recruitment of the Head of Corporate Services is also underway.

An Integrated Design Team led by the two Departments is taking forward the refurbishment and building project, which is being planned to facilitate the phasing of services until the completion of the building works. Consultations with stakeholders took place in August and September to help inform the design of the Centre.

The Board and Senior Management Team intend to undertake an extensive consultation exercise during the Autumn/Winter 2007 period with all those involved with children and young people with autism. The purpose of this consultation is to inform and invite comments regarding the proposed services to be delivered from the Centre.

Teaching Salaries

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 70/08, to detail the number of teachers whose salaries were included in the figures that she provided, broken down by sector, for each of the last five years. (AQW 481/08)

Ms Ruane: The number of teachers whose salaries were included in the figures provided in AQW 70/08, broken down by sector, for each of the last five years is detailed in the attached table.

Sector	2002/2003	2003/2004	2004/2005	2005/2006	2006/2007
Controlled	8,763	8,842	8,853	8,686	8,510
Controlled Integrated	226	255	270	270	263
Grant Maintained	775	794	841	876	903
Maintained	7,020	7,014	6,939	6,824	6,669
Other Maintained	78	81	79	81	81
Irish Medium	168	180	187	194	196
Total	17,030	17,166	17,169	16,931	16,622

After-School Clubs

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to introduce after-school clubs in rural areas in the next year; and, if so, what will be the locations of such clubs. (AQW 493/08)

Ms Ruane: Just under a quarter of the 494 schools currently in the extended school programme are classified as rural. The programme is targeted at socially disadvantaged schools across all areas and I have no plans to introduce a specific strand of the programme targeted solely at rural areas.

St. Aloysius High School, Cushendall

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail the current situation regarding the proposals to close St. Aloysius High School in Cushendall. (AQW 494/08)

Ms Ruane: The Trustees and CCMS are examining possible rationalisation of post-primary provision in the Glens and East Antrim area involving three schools, including St Aloysius High School. CCMS are working on an economic appraisal which covers options for rationalising provision, and which will be presented on completion to the Department of Education. Any proposal for rationalisation which CCMS and the Trustees bring forward in due course will require the publication of a statutory development proposal, which will be the subject of consultation.

Academic Selection

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail what progress has been made on the proposals to end academic selection; and to give a timescale within which her proposals will be fully implemented. (AQW 495/08)

Ms Ruane: I am aware of the need to put in place suitable transfer arrangements in time for the cohort transferring from primary to post-primary education in 2010 and will be bringing forward proposals as soon as possible. It is well known that I am not in favour of selection on the basis of ability, but I am also conscious of the need to engage with those who hold opposing views to determine new post-primary admissions arrangements for this cohort. Rather than imposing artificial deadlines, the priority must be to make the right decision for the children affected, within a broader view of the shape and nature of post-primary education.

Pupils in Irish Language Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of Irish language schools in Northern Ireland, broken down by constituency; and (ii) the number of pupils that are enrolled in each of these schools. (AQW 505/08)

Ms Ruane: The latest available school enrolment information relates to the 2006/07 academic year. There were 21 grant-aided Irish language primary and post-primary schools in the North of Ireland in 2006/07. They had a total enrolment of 2,530 pupils. In addition, there were two independent Irish language schools, with a combined enrolment of 24 pupils.

Local Business Needs

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 91/08, what meetings she has had with Northern Ireland business leaders, to ascertain how the education system can develop the skills of young people for life and work in the 21st century; and what emphasis was placed upon employability and entrepreneurship in these meetings. (AQW 507/08)

Ms Ruane: Since taking up the post of Minister for Education I have met representatives of the following groups on the dates specified:

Irish Association of Social, Cultural & Economic Relations:	03 July 2007
Confederation of British Industry:	25 July 2007
Ulster Farmers Union:	25 July 2007
Institute of Directors:	08 August 2007
Business in the Community	06 September 2007

These meetings have provided an opportunity for very useful engagement on the contribution that education can and does make to employment, enterprise and wider economic development.

Raising educational standards and ensuring young people have the necessary skills to progress into employment is crucial for our long-term economic success. It is for that reason that the revised curriculum now includes a specific focus, as part of Learning for Life and Work, on employability and entrepreneurship. That focus is complemented by other work to strengthen links between business and education, including in relation to improving careers education, advice and guidance.

Young Peoples' Skills

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 91/07, to detail what priority her department places upon developing the skills of young people, so that they make a greater contribution to improving Northern Ireland's economic competitiveness. (AQW 509/08)

Ms Ruane: Developing the skills and potential of our young people is one of my key priorities for education and I have taken account of the views of employers and business leaders on the skills our young people need.

The revised curriculum, being phased in from this school year, will help to develop highly skilled, confident, creative and articulate young people, crucial to improving our economic competitiveness. Skills are an integral part of the statutory revised curriculum. Pupils will develop the cross-curricular skills of Communication, Using Mathematics and Using ICT through the curriculum Areas of Learning, along with the other skills and personal capabilities sought by employers, including Working With Others, Self-Management, Managing Information, Problem-Solving and Being Creative.

Pupils will also be assessed each year in their progress in developing skills as well as knowledge and understanding. This will therefore provide a clear pathway to ensure pupils leave school with the skills they need for their future, and to contribute to our economic competitiveness.

Bus Passes

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of bus passes that were issued to school children in Crumlin and Glenavy for the academic year 2007/08; and to detail the total cost incurred by her department in respect of this issue. (AQW 521/08)

Ms Ruane: The North-Eastern and South-Eastern Education and Library Boards have advised that a total of 1,388 Translink bus passes have been issued to pupils travelling to school from the Crumlin/Glenavy area for the 2007/08 academic year, at a total cost of £804,953.

School Amalgamations

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education if she will make a statement on the amalgamation of St Patrick's Primary School, Cloney, and St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill, with specific reference to the transfer of pupils affected by the process.

(AQW 528/08)

Ms Ruane: Earlier this year I approved a proposal brought forward by the Trustees and the CCMS to amalgamate the two schools. The amalgamation is planned to take effect in January and would involve the transfer of pupils to St Joseph's Primary School. I understand that with the start of term a significant number of pupils at St Patrick's have transferred to other schools and the Department is therefore asking CCMS to review the position regarding the proposed amalgamation.

St Aloysius High School, Cushendall

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education if she will make a statement on the possible closure of St Aloysius Secondary School in Cushendall.

(AQW 529/08)

Ms Ruane: The Trustees and the CCMS are examining possible rationalisation of post-primary provision in the Glens and East Antrim area involving three schools, including St Aloysius High School. CCMS are working on an economic appraisal which covers options for rationalising provision and which will be presented on completion to the Department of Education. Any proposal for rationalisation which CCMS and the Trustees bring forward in due course will require the publication of a statutory development proposal, which will be the subject of consultation.

Transport For Students

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education what consideration she will give to the provision of paid transport to all pupils travelling from the Glenariff, Cushendall and Cushendun areas to Cross and Passion College, Ballycastle, in light of the fact that the nearest secondary school to these areas, St Aloysius, has been earmarked for closure, and has not had any pupils enrolling for Year 11 in this academic year.

(AQW 530/08)

Ms Ruane: Following the provision of an economic appraisal examining options for rationalising post-primary school provision in the Glens and East Antrim area, the Department has requested that further work is undertaken on the appraisal. However, consideration of this issue is at an early stage and no decision has yet been taken about the future of St Aloysius High School. Any change in existing provision would require the publication of a statutory development proposal to be preceded by consultation with the Boards of Governors, staff and parents of the schools involved.

Until such times as a decision has been taken regarding the future of St Aloysius High School, the normal home to school transport arrangements apply. Accordingly, under those arrangements, pupils must apply to, and be turned down by, St Aloysius High School, and any other maintained post-primary school within three miles of their homes, before being eligible to receive transport assistance to Cross and Passion College, Ballycastle.

School Buses

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of pupils; and (ii) the number and capacity of buses, travelling from Glenariff, Cushendall and Cushendun to Cross and Passion College, Ballycastle, since the beginning of September 2007.

(AQW 533/08)

Ms Ruane: Translink has advised that from Glenariff, Cushendall and Cushendun it currently transports 88 pupils to Cross and Passion College using two buses, 1 x 53 seater and 1 x 51 seater. I should advise, however, that of these 88 pupils only 37 are in receipt of home to school transport assistance.

School Amalgamations

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Education to give an update on the development proposal on the amalgamation of St. John the Baptist Boys' Primary School and St. John the Baptist Girls' Primary School on Finaghy Road, Belfast.

(AQW 546/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department is aware that the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) has discussed with the Trustees, Boards of Governors, staff and parents, the possible amalgamation of St John the Baptist Boys' Primary School and St John the Baptist Girls' Primary School, Belfast.

The CCMS have advised that there may be a requirement for a capital scheme to facilitate the amalgamation and the future long-term needs of the schools and have requested approval from the department for a feasibility study to be carried out, prior to the publication of a development proposal, to determine the recommended option for addressing both schools' future accommodation needs. This request is currently being considered.

Primary School Pupils in the Ards Peninsula Area

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the current pupil figures for each primary school in the Ards peninsula area. (AQW 559/08)

Ms Ruane: The latest available school enrolment information relates to the 2006/07 academic year.

ENROLMENT FIGURES FOR PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN THE ARDS DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA

School Name	Total pupils
Abbey Primary School	623
Alexander Dickson Primary School	153
Andrews Memorial Primary School	366
Ballykeigle Primary School	59
Ballyvester Primary School	73
Ballywalter Primary School	175
Carrickmannon Primary School	87
Carrowdore Primary school	141
Castle Gardens Primary School	344
Comber Primary School	369
Donaghadee Primary School	417
Greyabbey Primary School	76
Killinchy Primary School	309
Kircubbin Primary School	104
Kirkistown Primary School	101
Londonderry Primary School	313
Loughries Primary School	72
Millisle Primary School	143
Newtownards Model Primary School	375
Portaferry Integrated Primary School	83
Portavogie Primary School	197
Regent House School Preparatory Department	137
St. Anne's Primary School	34
St. Finian's Primary School	126

School Name	Total pupils
St. Mary's Primary School, Ballygowan	3
St. Mary's Primary School, Comber	37
St. Mary's Primary School, Kircubbin	122
St. Mary's Primary School, Portaferry	236
St. Patrick's Primary School	89
Victoria Primary School	556
Victoria Primary School, Ballyhalbert	136
West Winds Primary School	156

Source: NI School Census.

Note:

- Figures for primary schools include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – 7 classes.
- Schools in the Ards District Council area have been used as representative of those located in the Ards peninsula.

Donaghadee High School

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the current pupil figures for Donaghadee High School, broken down by form year, and the special needs section. (AQW 560/08)

Ms Ruane: The latest available school enrolment information relates to the 2006/07 academic year. The information requested is as follows:

Year Group	Pupils attending mainstream classes	Pupils in a Special Unit	Total
8	19	13	32
9	38	25	63
10	27	18	45
11	55	0	55
12	53	0	53
Total	192	56	248

Source: NI School Census.

Retired Teachers

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of retired teachers who have returned to, or are currently in, paid employment in non-teaching positions in (i) her department; (ii) Education and Library Boards; (iii) Regional Training Unit; (iv) the Catholic Council for Maintained Schools; and (v) other bodies that fall within her department's responsibility, on a temporary and permanent basis, for the last year for which statistics are available. (AQW 573/08)

Ms Ruane: This information requested is not routinely collected by the Department of Education or the sponsor bodies which fall within its area of responsibility. However the Regional Training Unit has advised the Department that currently there are nineteen retired head teachers / school leaders in temporary employment with them, NICIE has advised that it employs one retired teacher in its core staff and CnaG has advised that it employs one teacher who took voluntary redundancy but who is in receipt of a teachers pension.

Teaching of Creationism in Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 215/08, to detail the recommendations and advice given to her department by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment, in relation to meetings it has had with interested parties in relation to the teaching of (i) evolution; (ii) creationism; and (iii) Intelligent Design, in schools in Northern Ireland. (AQW 633/08)

Ms Ruane: CCEA has a statutory duty to advise me on school curriculum issues. In formulating advice, CCEA tells me that account is taken of the views of relevant interested parties. On this matter, CCEA has on occasion met with interested parties over recent years and listened carefully to their views. CCEA's advice to the Department remains that, while the revised curriculum provides greater flexibility for teachers to tailor provision for their pupils and greater opportunity for alternative views to evolution to be explored, there must be a distinction between teaching an evidence based approach to scientific theories and knowledge and exploring other beliefs about how the world came into existence.

Creationism

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 208/08, to clarify whether or not, under the revised curriculum, (i) parents, on behalf of their children; and (ii) pupils, on their own behalf, may request that other explanations of the origin and development of life be taught as scientific explanations in science class, and not restricted to Religious Education; and to confirm that teachers may do so, if such a request is granted by the headmaster or Board of Governors of the school. (AQW 635/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not tell teachers how to teach; that is a matter for their professional judgement and the revised curriculum provides greater flexibility for teachers to tailor their provision to best meet the needs and interests of their pupils.

The Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) has a statutory duty to advise me on the school curriculum. Its professional advice is that it is important to distinguish between teaching an evidence based approach to scientific theories and knowledge in science lessons, and exploring other beliefs about how the world came into existence, which could take place in other subjects such as RE.

Fair Employment Practices in WELB

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Education to detail the fair employment practices within the Western Education and Library Board; and to provide a breakdown of the number of staff employed at each grade, and their religious background. (AQW 642/08)

Ms Ruane: The Western Education and Library Board (the Board) has advised that it is committed to fair employment practices and positively promotes equality of opportunity in accordance with Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Board is opposed to all forms of unlawful discrimination, direct or indirect, against any person in the recruitment and selection process, in training, or in any other way. All staff involved in the recruitment and selection process are trained in accordance with agreed procedures on recruitment and selection, including equal opportunities awareness training. The Board also ensures that advertisements do not indicate or appear to indicate an intention to discriminate in the recruitment or selection and it includes an equal opportunities statement in all its advertisements.

In compliance with the Fair Employment (Monitoring) Regulations (NI) 1999 the Board undertakes to submit an annual monitoring return to the Equality Commission in respect of all its applicants, employees, appointees, promotees and leavers. It also undertakes, for presentation to the Equality Commission, a triennial review of its staff detailing any affirmative action which is required to be taken arising from an analysis of same.

The information in the attached table relates to non-teaching headquarter/centre-based staff only, i.e. school-based staff are excluded.

WESTERN EDUCATION AND LIBRARY BOARD: RELIGIOUS BACKGROUND OF NON-TEACHING HEADQUARTER/CENTRE-BASED STAFF

Salary Band (see note below)	Protestant	Catholic	Neither Protestant or Catholic	Non Determined	Total
1	39	83	2	2	126
2	46	84	2	0	132
3	23	52	3	2	80
4	5	7	0	0	12
Total	113	226	7	4	350

The table shows the perceived religious background of these staff as at 1 January 2007 broken down by salary band. The information is not available for publication by grade.

Note

Salary Band 1: Clerical Officer to Senior Clerical Officer

Salary Band 2: Executive Officer to Administrative Officer

Salary Band 3: Senior Administrative to Education Officer

Salary Band 4: Assistant Senior Education Officer to Chief Executive

School Amalgamations

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what consideration she has given to the use of the land available at Killyleagh High School, as a suitable site for the amalgamation of Down Academy and Rowallane Integrated High School. (AQW 656/08)

Ms Ruane: Development proposals have been published seeking the closure of Down Academy Controlled Integrated High School and the establishment of a new Grant maintained Integrated school, Blackwater Integrated College, which would incorporate the pupils from Down Academy and the independent school, Rowallane Integrated College.

The interim Board of Governors of the proposed new school have been taking forward a feasibility study for the proposed new college and this will consider site options for a new school. They have indicated in their published development proposal a preference for the new school to be sited in the greater Crossgar area.

The interim Board of Governors have not as yet proposed any specific site to the department.

School Amalgamations

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what consideration she has given to the use of a greenfield site at Crossgar, as a suitable site for the amalgamation of Down Academy and Rowallane Integrated High School. (AQW 657/08)

Ms Ruane: Development proposals have been published seeking the closure of Down Academy Controlled Integrated High School and the establishment of a new Grant maintained Integrated school, Blackwater Integrated College, which would incorporate the pupils from Down Academy and the independent school, Rowallane Integrated College.

The interim Board of Governors of the proposed new school have been taking forward a feasibility study for the proposed new college and this will consider site options for a new school. They have indicated in their published development proposal a preference for the new school to be sited in the greater Crossgar area.

The interim Board of Governors have not as yet proposed any specific site to the department.

Education Welfare Officers

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education what is her assessment of whether or not it is appropriate to evaluate Education Welfare Officers' posts using the NJC job evaluation scheme; and of whether or not this adequately reflects the knowledge, skills and roles performed by Education Welfare Officers in the context in which they work. (AQW 669/08)

Ms Ruane: The Education and Libraries Boards, as employers, are responsible for the arrangements used to evaluate positions and determine pay. The Boards have advised that the grading of Education Welfare Officers is largely determined by a national and agreed process of Job Evaluation. This process takes account of a range of factors relating to the job including supervisory responsibility, creativity, contacts, decision making, knowledge and skills (including qualification), and work context and is regarded as much fairer than a determination solely based on qualification. It is for the Boards to decide if this is no longer appropriate.

School Budgets

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to specify the exact date upon which the alteration to the funding arrangements for allocating budgets for equipment and fixtures for new schools took effect, in all Education and Library Board areas. (AQW 672/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education reviewed the methodology for allocating budgets for furniture & equipment in 2003 with the new methodology being introduced in December 2003. The revised methodology is based on approved schedules of accommodation and standard furniture and equipment lists and has been applied to all new major capital projects announced since 2004. Prior to this the budgets were allocated as a percentage of the estimated construction costs.

School Budgets

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to advise whether or not budgets are set for equipment and fixtures for new primary schools, based on the actual capital costs of the building of the school, or on the original estimated capital costs. (AQW 673/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education reviewed the methodology for allocating budgets for furniture & equipment in 2003 with the new methodology being introduced in December 2003. The revised methodology is based on approved schedules of accommodation and standard furniture and equipment lists and has been applied to all new major capital projects announced since 2004. Prior to this the budgets were allocated as a percentage of the estimated construction costs.

After-School Facilities

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail the current and future provision for after-school facilities for children with special needs in the North Antrim area. (AQW 675/08)

Ms Ruane: Almost 500 (40%) of our schools are currently being funded as Extended Schools under The Children and Young People Funding Package to support activities before and after the traditional school day, based on each schools' particular circumstances. 73 of these schools, all of whom have registered pupils with special needs are located within the NEELB area of which 18 (25%) are located within the North Antrim constituency. Each of these schools offer a varied range of after school programmes which includes activities aimed at raising attainment levels (homework clubs, ICT skills, languages, science clubs, specialist clubs) and fostering the health and well-being of the children (healthy eating, first aid, health and fitness, sports skills, drama and dance clubs, art craft and design). Schools which are not funded through the Extended Schools programme can also offer these services on a voluntary basis whilst others may have secured external funding from various sources such as Neighbourhood Renewal or the Lottery.

The outcome of the CSR will impact on the future provision of these activities.

Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of compensation paid in respect of legal proceedings involving Education and Library Boards, in each of the last five years. (AQW 680/08)

Ms Ruane: The information detailed in the table below has been provided by each Education and Library Board:

Amount of Compensation Paid in respect of legal proceedings involving Education and Library Boards in each of the last 5 years:
Year	BELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	WELB	Total
2002/03	£189,182.14	£148,437.82	£170,138.46	£122,337.09	£65,760.00	£695,855.51
2003/04	£224,397.10	£214,095.90	£210,350.00	£85,592.80	£26,445.58	£760,881.38
2004/05	£132,104.89	£159,257.00	£266,750.00	£231,025.00	£118,950.00	£908,086.89
2005/06	£258,712.66	£81,176.00	£197,743.99	£162,373.37	£69,250.00	£769,256.02
2006/07	£291,576.08	£164,650.00	£180,864.00	£198,300.00	£185,857.35	£1,021,247.43

Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the current trustees of Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta; (ii) how each trustee was appointed; (iii) the date of appointment of each trustee; and (iv) the duration of such appointments. (AQW 705/08)

Ms Ruane:

(i) The membership of the trustees is as follows:

Board Member	Representing
Seán Mag Uidhir (Chair)	DE
Dónall Ó Baoill	DE
Seán Ó Coinn	Comhairle
Séamus de Napier	Comhairle
Seán Mac Goill	Co-optee
Muireann Ní Mhóráin	DE
Roise Ní Bhaoill	DE

(ii) The trustees were appointed under the terms of the trust deed.

(iii) The date of appointment for each trustee is as follows:

Board Member	Date Appointed
Seán Mag Uidhir (Chair)	20 February 2001
Dónall Ó Baoill	20 February 2001
Seán Ó Coinn	01 April 2007
Séamus de Napier	20 February 2001
Seán Mac Goill	20 February 2002
Muireann Ní Mhóráin	17 January 2002
Roise Ní Bhaoill	17 January 2002

(iv) Under the terms of Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta's Declaration of Trust, a term of office lasts for 4 years and each trustee can serve a maximum of 2 consecutive terms.

Enrolment Numbers

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils on the roll in each of the primary schools in the Moyle District Council area, in (a) 2001/02; (b) 2002/03; (c) 2003/04; (d) 2004/05; (e) 2005/06; and (f) 2006/07. (AQW 728/08)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

PUPILS ENROLLED AT PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN THE MOYLE DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA

2001/02

School name	Enrolment
Armoy Primary School	68
Ballycastle Primary School	110
Barnish Primary School	75
Bushmills Primary School	161
Dunseverick Primary School	110
Glenann Primary School	57
Mosside Primary School	17
St Ciarán's Primary School	79
St Mary's Primary School	5
St Mary's Primary School, Glenariff	219
St Olcan's Primary School	70
St Patrick's & St Brigid's Primary School	512
St Patrick's Primary School	105
Straidbilly Primary School	61

2002/03

School name	Enrolment
Armoy Primary School	62
Ballycastle Primary School	97
Barnish Primary School	84
Bushmills Primary School	145
Dunseverick Primary School	110
Glenann Primary School	54
St Ciarán's Primary School	76
St Mary's Primary School	7
St Mary's Primary School, Glenariff	216
St Olcan's Primary School	62
St Patrick's & St Brigid's Primary School	491
St Patrick's Primary School	117
Straidbilly Primary School	62

2003/04

School Name	Enrolment
Armoy Primary School	61
Ballycastle Primary School	89
Barnish Primary School	89
Bunscoil An Chastil	35
Bushmills Primary School	138

School Name	Enrolment
Dunseverick Primary School	113
Glenann Primary School	50
St Ciaran's Primary School	78
St Mary's Primary School	4
St Mary's Primary School, Glenariff	205
St Olcan's Primary School	62
St Patrick's & St Brigid's Primary School	473
St Patrick's Primary School	130
Straidbilly Primary School	66

2004/05

School Name	Enrolment
Armoy Primary School	61
Ballycastle Primary School	82
Barnish Primary School	86
Bunscoil An Chastil	43
Bushmills Primary School	131
Dunseverick Primary School	114
Glenann Primary School	53
St Ciaran's Primary School	77
St Mary's Primary School	3
St Mary's Primary School, Glenariff	211
St Olcan's Primary School	65
St Patrick's & St Brigid's Primary School	441
St Patrick's Primary School	121
Straidbilly Primary School	78

2005/06

School Name	Enrolment
Armoy Primary School	59
Ballycastle Primary School	72
Barnish Primary School	94
Bunscoil An Chastil	61
Bushmills Primary School	118
Dunseverick Primary School	129
Glenann Primary School	46
St Ciaran's Primary School	69
St Mary's Primary School	4
St Mary's Primary School, Glenariff	208
St Olcan's Primary School	62

School Name	Enrolment
St Patrick's & St Brigid's Primary School	447
St Patrick's Primary School	130
Straidbilly Primary School	74

2006/07

School Name	Enrolment
Armoy Primary School	57
Ballycastle Primary School	100
Barnish Primary School	89
Bunscoil An Chastil	71
Bushmills Primary School	120
Dunseverick Primary School	128
Glenann Primary School	48
St Ciaran's Primary School	69
St Mary's Primary School	4
St Mary's Primary School, Glenariff	208
St Olcan's Primary School	55
St Patrick's & St Brigid's Primary School	410
St Patrick's Primary School	125
Straidbilly Primary School	78

Source: NI school census.

Note: Figures include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – Year 7 classes.

Enrolment Numbers

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils on the roll in each of the primary schools in the Ballymena Borough Council area, in (a) 2001/02; (b) 2002/03; (c) 2003/04; (d) 2004/05; (e) 2005/06; and (f) 2006/07. (AQW 729/08)

Ms Ruane: The information requested is as follows:

PUPILS ENROLLED AT PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN THE BALLYMENA BOROUGH COUNCIL AREA

2001/02

School Name	Enrolment
All Saints Primary School	214
Ballee Primary School	101
Ballykeel Primary School	317
Ballymena Primary School	334
Braid Primary School	29

School Name	Enrolment
Braidside Integrated Primary School	292
Broughshane Primary School	325
Buick Memorial Primary School	351
Camphill Primary School	337
Carnaghts Primary School	104
Carniny Primary School	275
Clough Primary School	105
Dunclug Primary School	210
Fourtowns Primary School	240
Glenravel Primary School	101
Gracehill Primary School	398
Harryville Primary School	143
Hazelbank Primary School	92
Kells & Connor Primary School	203
Kirkinriola Primary School	55
Lisnamurrican Primary School	37
Longstone Primary School	38
Millquarter Primary School	84
Moorfields Primary School	186
Portglenone Primary School	179
St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill	24
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	107
St Louis' Convent Primary School	236
St Mary's Primary School, Portglenone	218
St Mary's Primary School, Ballymena	76
St Mary's Primary School Glenravel	83
St Patrick's Primary School Aughercloney	25
The Diamond Primary School	110
Tildarg Primary School	75

2002/03

School Name	Enrolment
All Saints Primary School	218
Ballee Primary School	103
Ballykeel Primary School	309
Ballymena Primary School	320
Braid Primary School	33
Braidside Integrated Primary School	317
Broughshane Primary School	304
Buick Memorial Primary School	368

School Name	Enrolment
Camphill Primary School	334
Carnaghts Primary School	116
Carniny Primary School	257
Clough Primary School	113
Dunclug Primary School	207
Fourtowns Primary School	252
Glenravel Primary School	104
Gracehill Primary School	416
Harryville Primary School	143
Hazelbank Primary School	103
Kells & Connor Primary School	206
Kirkinriola Primary School	59
Lisnamurrican Primary School	34
Longstone Primary School	41
Millquarter Primary School	85
Moorfields Primary School	190
Portglenone Primary School	178
St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill	20
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	106
St Louis' Convent Primary School	251
St Mary's Primary School, Portglenone	201
St Mary's Primary School, Ballymena	71
St Mary's Primary School Glenravel	90
St Patrick's Primary School Aughercloney	23
The Diamond Primary School	108
Tildarg Primary School	78

2003/04

School Name	Enrolment
All Saints Primary School	220
Ballee Primary School	88
Ballykeel Primary School	307
Ballymena Primary School	348
Braid Primary School	27
Braidside Integrated Primary School	338
Broughshane Primary School	293
Buick Memorial Primary School	394
Camphill Primary School	328
Carnaghts Primary School	114
Carniny Primary School	257

School Name	Enrolment
Clough Primary School	124
Dunclug Primary School	164
Fourtowns Primary School	258
Glenravel Primary School	112
Gracehill Primary School	414
Harryville Primary School	137
Hazelbank Primary School	100
Kells & Connor Primary School	196
Kirkinriola Primary School	63
Lisnamurrican Primary School	29
Longstone Primary School	51
Millquarter Primary School	90
Moorfields Primary School	195
Portglenone Primary School	175
St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill	17
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	106
St Louis' Convent Primary School	252
St Mary's Primary School, Portglenone	205
St Mary's Primary School, Ballymena	66
St Mary's Primary School Glenravel	88
St Patrick's Primary School Aughercloney	23
The Diamond Primary School	111
Tildarg Primary School	71

2004/05

School Name	Enrolment
All Saints Primary School	220
Ballee Primary School	87
Ballykeel Primary School	309
Ballymena Primary School	359
Braid Primary School	28
Braidside Integrated Primary School	345
Broughshane Primary School	312
Buick Memorial Primary School	387
Camphill Primary School	328
Carnaghts Primary School	110
Carniny Primary School	263
Clough Primary School	131
Dunclug Primary School	141
Fourtowns Primary School	242

School Name	Enrolment
Glenravel Primary School	117
Gracehill Primary School	434
Harryville Primary School	133
Hazelbank Primary School	91
Kells & Connor Primary School	192
Kirkinriola Primary School	72
Lisnamurrican Primary School	27
Longstone Primary School	60
Millquarter Primary School	103
Moorfields Primary School	198
Portglenone Primary School	174
St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill	24
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	86
St Louis' Convent Primary School	266
St Mary's Primary School, Portglenone	219
St Mary's Primary School, Ballymena	53
St Mary's Primary School Glenravel	86
St Patrick's Primary School Aughercloney	26
The Diamond Primary School	115
Tildarg Primary School	72

2005/06

School Name	Enrolment
All Saints Primary School	217
Ballee Primary School	84
Ballykeel Primary School	318
Ballymena Primary School	363
Braid Primary School	28
Braidside Integrated Primary School	352
Broughshane Primary School	296
Buick Memorial Primary School	389
Camphill Primary School	325
Carnaghts Primary School	108
Carniny Primary School	252
Clough Primary School	139
Dunclug Primary School	126
Fourtowns Primary School	235
Glenravel Primary School	126
Gracehill Primary School	432
Harryville Primary School	140

School Name	Enrolment
Hazelbank Primary School	94
Kells & Connor Primary School	187
Kirkinriola Primary School	72
Lisnamurrican Primary School	31
Longstone Primary School	64
Millquarter Primary School	102
Moorfields Primary School	193
Portglenone Primary School	162
St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill	26
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	77
St Louis' Convent Primary School	292
St Mary's Primary School, Portglenone	200
St Mary's Primary School, Ballymena	49
St Mary's Primary School Glenravel	86
St Patrick's Primary School Aughercloney	26
The Diamond Primary School	114

2006/07

School Name	Enrolment
All Saints Primary School	216
Ballee Primary School	71
Ballykeel Primary School	322
Ballymena Primary School	368
Braid Primary School	24
Braidside Integrated Primary School	343
Broughshane Primary School	321
Buick Memorial Primary School	382
Camphill Primary School	322
Carnaghts Primary School	109
Carniny Primary School	252
Clough Primary School	140
Dunclug Primary School	115
Fourtowns Primary School	228
Glenravel Primary School	131
Gracehill Primary School	435
Harryville Primary School	148
Hazelbank Primary School	105
Kells & Connor Primary School	194
Kirkinriola Primary School	78
Longstone Primary School	56

School Name	Enrolment
Millquarter Primary School	103
Moorfields Primary School	217
Portglenone Primary School	150
St Joseph's Primary School, Ahoghill	17
St Joseph's Primary School, Ballymena	73
St Louis' Convent Primary School	284
St Mary's Primary School, Ballymena	45
St Mary's Primary School, Portglenone	201
St Mary's Primary School Glenravel	87
St Patrick's Primary School Aughercloney	26
The Diamond Primary School	114

Note: Figures include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – Year 7 classes.

Enrolment Numbers

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils on the roll in each of the primary schools in the Ballymoney Borough Council area, in (a) 2001/02; (b) 2002/03; (c) 2003/04; (d) 2004/05; (e) 2005/06; and (f) 2006/07. (AQW 730/08)

Ms Ruane: Pupils enrolled at primary schools in the Ballymoney Borough Council area

2001/02

School Name	Enrolment
Ballymoney Primary School	337
Balnamore Primary School	95
Bushvalley Primary School	109
Carrowreagh Primary School	97
Cloughmills Primary School	87
Dalriada School	145
Eden Primary School	72
Garryduff Primary School	61
Kilmoyle Primary School	86
Knockahollet Primary School	89
Landhead Primary School	54
Leaney Primary School	303
Lislagan Primary School	87
Rasharkin Primary School	56
St Anne's Primary School	79
St Brigid's Primary School (Ballymoney)	187

School Name	Enrolment
St Brigid's Primary School (Clogh Mills)	87
St Joseph's Primary School	249
St Patrick's Primary School (Loughguile)	171
St Patrick's Primary School (Rasharkin)	247
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	67

2002/03

School Name	Enrolment
Ballymoney Primary School	307
Balnamore Primary School	93
Bushvalley Primary School	120
Carrowreagh Primary School	94
Cloughmills Primary School	93
Dalriada School	160
Eden Primary School	76
Garryduff Primary School	54
Kilmoyle Primary School	97
Knockahollet Primary School	78
Landhead Primary School	52
Leaney Primary School	305
Lislagan Primary School	84
Rasharkin Primary School	60
St Anne's Primary School	81
St Brigid's Primary School (Ballymoney)	187
St Brigid's Primary School (Clogh Mills)	88
St Joseph's Primary School	291
St Patrick's Primary School (Loughguile)	172
St Patrick's Primary School (Rasharkin)	239
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	71

2003/04

School Name	Enrolment
Ballymoney Primary School	309
Balnamore Primary School	89
Bushvalley Primary School	129
Carrowreagh Primary School	98
Cloughmills Primary School	88
Dalriada School	156
Eden Primary School	79
Garryduff Primary School	64

School Name	Enrolment
Kilmoyle Primary School	103
Knockahollet Primary School	76
Landhead Primary School	47
Leaney Primary School	302
Lislagan Primary School	86
Rasharkin Primary School	57
St Anne's Primary School	80
St Brigid's Primary School (Ballymoney)	184
St Brigid's Primary School (Clogh Mills)	83
St Joseph's Primary School	283
St Patrick's Primary School (Loughguile)	178
St Patrick's Primary School (Rasharkin)	235
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	72

2004/05

School Name	Enrolment
Ballymoney Primary School	318
Balnamore Primary School	87
Bushvalley Primary School	142
Carrowreagh Primary School	92
Cloughmills Primary School	80
Dalriada School	151
Eden Primary School	81
Garryduff Primary School	62
Kilmoyle Primary School	115
Knockahollet Primary School	76
Landhead Primary School	55
Leaney Primary School	306
Lislagan Primary School	92
Rasharkin Primary School	59
St Anne's Primary School	83
St Brigid's Primary School (Ballymoney)	183
St Brigid's Primary School (Clogh Mills)	84
St Joseph's Primary School	284
St Patrick's Primary School (Loughguile)	187
St Patrick's Primary School (Rasharkin)	224
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	67

2005/06

School Name	Enrolment
Ballymoney Primary School	316
Balnamore Primary School	87
Bushvalley Primary School	154
Carrowreagh Primary School	87
Cloughmills Primary School	75
Dalriada School Prep. Dept.	146
Eden Primary School	86
Garryduff Primary School	64
Kilmoyle Primary School	124
Knockahollet Primary School	66
Landhead Primary School	61
Leaney Primary School	308
Lislagan Primary School	93
Rasharkin Primary School	59
St Anne's Primary School	76
St Brigid's Primary School (Ballymoney)	188
St BRigid's Primary School (Clogh Mills)	86
St Joseph's Ps	290
St Patrick's Primary School (Loughguile)	193
St Patrick's Primary School (Rasharkin)	228
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	65

2006/07

School Name	Enrolment
Ballymoney Primary School	318
Balnamore Primary School	90
Bushvalley Primary School	147
Carrowreagh Primary School	81
Cloughmills Primary School	63
Dalriada School Prep. Dept.	147
Eden Primary School	91
Garryduff Primary School	63
Kilmoyle Primary School	128
Knockahollet Primary School	73
Landhead Primary School	55
Leaney Primary School	306
Lislagan Primary School	94
Rasharkin Primary School	63
St Anne's Primary School	73

School Name	Enrolment
St Brigid's Primary School (Ballymoney)	194
St BRigid's Primary School (Clogh Mills)	83
St Joseph's Primary School	292
St Patrick's Primary School (Rasharkin)	219
St Patrick's Primary School (Loughguile)	194
The Wm Pinkerton Memorial Primary School	73

Source: NI school census.

Note: 2. Figures include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – Year 7 classes.

Training for School Governors

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what is her assessment of the current level of training available to school governors; what plans she has to ensure equality of provision; and to detail how she intends to monitor the quality of such governor training across the sectors. (AQW 760/08)

Ms Ruane: The governor training services have the potential to bring greater benefits to the local management of schools here. There is scope to promote greater efficiency in financial management through governor training. Also, I favour a more customised approach to training to support the governors of those schools facing particular challenges such as declining enrolments.

The Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) has undertaken an assessment of governor training provision and this will be taken into account when the Education and Skills Authority (ESA) determines the future structure of this service and how it will operate. ESA will be accountable to my Department for its services and the ETI will retain the power to inspect this service and its impact on schools of all types.

Teacher Training Courses

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what initiatives she intends to bring forward to encourage more male students to enrol in teacher training courses; and to address the under-representation of male teachers in schools, in particular, primary schools. (AQW 795/08)

Ms Ruane: In the teaching profession, the gender balance has traditionally favoured women, particularly within the primary school sector. The providers of Initial Teacher Education (ITE) courses have been asked by the Department to draw attention to the under-representation of males within their Access Agreements (particularly in the primary sector) and to review their recruitment procedures. As a result, the Higher Education Institutions have sought to encourage males to apply for ITE courses through a range of actions, including: ensuring that males are well represented in publicity materials for their ITE courses; targeting all male schools and male groups in mixed schools for career talks and presentations; and, meeting regularly with career teachers and senior staff to seek their help in encouraging males to apply for ITE courses.

Workplace 2010

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Education what discussions she has had with departmental staff based at Rathgael House, in relation to the relocation of jobs under the Workplace 2010 plan. (AQW 819/08)

Ms Ruane: Departmental staff based in Rathgael House have been regularly updated regarding developments in relation to the possible relocation of jobs under the Workplace 2010 Programme by my officials. The communications have included regular updates via the Departmental e-mail system, Departmental Briefing process, Intranet site and communications from my Permanent Secretary.

Enrolment Numbers

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to provide the exact enrolment figures of primary years 5, 6 and 7 at (i) Gaelscoil Na Daroige in Derry/Londonderry; (ii) Gaelscoil Ghleann Darach in Crumlin; and (iii) Gaelscoil Éanna in Glengormley. (AQW 848/08)

Ms Ruane: Gaelscoil Éanna opened in September 2007. Enrolment figures for this school are not yet available.

Neither Gaelscoil Na Daroige nor Gaelscoil Ghleann Darach had children of Year 5, 6 or 7 age in 2006/07. As these schools have only recently opened, they would not normally be expected to have children in primary years 5, 6 and 7.

Enrolment Numbers

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils resident in the Republic of Ireland, but enrolled in schools in Northern Ireland in 2006/07; and 2007/08, broken down by (i) state controlled schools; (ii) Catholic maintained schools; (iii) integrated schools; and (iv) Irish-medium schools. (AQW 898/08)

Ms Ruane: Information for 2007/08 is not yet available.

Information on the number of children resident in the South of Ireland but attending schools in the North of Ireland is not collected. However, the number of children attending schools in the North of Ireland who are not domiciled here is as follows:

NON-DOMICILED PUPILS ATTENDING SCHOOLS IN NORTHERN IRELAND 2006/07

Education and Library Board Area	Primary	Post Primary	Total
Belfast	3	134	137
Western	116	102	218
North Eastern	0	0	0
South Eastern	7	1	8
Southern	9	83	92
Total	135	320	455

School Management Type	Primary	Post Primary	Total
Controlled schools	37	30	67
Catholic maintained schools	81	84	165
Integrated schools	11	15	26
Irish medium schools	3	0	3
Other schools	3	191	194

Source: NI school census.

Note:

- Figures include children normally resident in the South of Ireland and Boarders from outside the North of Ireland.
- Figures for primary schools include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – 7 classes.

Enrolment Numbers

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils resident in the Republic of Ireland, but enrolled in schools in Northern Ireland in 2007/08, broken down by Education and Library Board area. (AQW 899/08)

Ms Ruane: Information for 2007/08 is not yet available.

Information on the number of children resident in the South of Ireland but attending schools in the North of Ireland is not collected. However, the number of children attending schools in the North of Ireland who are not domiciled here is as follows:

NON-DOMICILED PUPILS ATTENDING SCHOOLS IN
NORTHERN IRELAND 2006/07

Education and Library Board Area	Primary	Post Primary	Total
Belfast	3	134	137
Western	116	102	218
North Eastern	0	0	0
South Eastern	7	1	8
Southern	9	83	92
Total	135	320	455

School Management Type	Primary	Post Primary	Total
Controlled schools	37	30	67
Catholic maintained schools	81	84	165
Integrated schools	11	15	26
Irish medium schools	3	0	3
Other schools	3	191	194

Source: NI school census.

Note:

- Figures include children normally resident in the South of Ireland and Boarders from outside the North of Ireland.
- Figures for primary schools include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – 7 classes.

Enrolment Numbers

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils resident in the Republic of Ireland, but enrolled in schools in Northern Ireland in 2007/08, broken down by (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary sector. (AQW 900/08)

Ms Ruane: Information for 2007/08 is not yet available.

Information on the number of children resident in the South of Ireland but attending schools in the North of Ireland is not collected. However, the number of children attending schools in the North of Ireland who are not domiciled here is as follows:

NON-DOMICILED PUPILS ATTENDING SCHOOLS IN
NORTHERN IRELAND 2006/07

Education and Library Board Area	Primary	Post Primary	Total
Belfast	3	134	137
Western	116	102	218
North Eastern	0	0	0

Education and Library Board Area	Primary	Post Primary	Total
South Eastern	7	1	8
Southern	9	83	92
Total	135	320	455

School Management Type	Primary	Post Primary	Total
Controlled schools	37	30	67
Catholic maintained schools	81	84	165
Integrated schools	11	15	26
Irish medium schools	3	0	3
Other schools	3	191	194

Source: NI school census.

Note:

- Figures include children normally resident in the South of Ireland and Boarders from outside the North of Ireland.
- Figures for primary schools include children in nursery, reception and Year 1 – 7 classes.

Primary School Curriculum

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Education what advice she has given to primary school principals regarding the curriculum. (AQO 416/08)

Ms Ruane: I spoke to over 600 primary principals at a special curriculum conference on 24 May. At that conference, I explained that the revised curriculum is about giving our children the best possible education, raising standards in literacy and numeracy and giving teachers back more professional flexibility. All of this is supported by principals.

I told principals that the curriculum is being phased in to give them time to prepare and adjust, and that this new school year, 2007/8, is a transitional year. Transitional means that primary schools are starting to teach the revised curriculum in Years 1 and 5, drawing on their current lesson plans if they wish, and to plan ahead for next year. But we don't expect everything to be in place yet – the key is that the curriculum is in place by June 2010.

In terms of assessment, transitional means that schools will run the new INCAS assessment in literacy and numeracy this year for Year 5 pupils. However, they don't have to report the results to parents and the results won't be centrally collected this year; this first year is about schools getting used to running the assessment. Irish-medium schools will have access to INCAS but have the choice to complete the literacy module or not, given that pupils in these schools will only recently have commenced formal bi-lingual education by the time they are in Year 5. My Department is working with CCEA and CnaG to develop a more appropriate literacy assessment tool. The voice-over for the numeracy module will be provided in Irish.

Furthermore, I encouraged principals to take advantage of the opportunities the curriculum now provides to give more emphasis on areas such as the Arts and PE that play an important part in a child's holistic development. That is why I am putting primary sports and languages programmes in place from this year to support schools in increasing their provision in these areas.

Transfer Test Replacement

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline her current timetable for bringing forward proposals for a replacement schools transfer system for Northern Ireland. (AQO 405/08)

Ms Ruane: Children transferring from primary to post-primary education in September 2009 will do so under the current arrangements. I am aware of the need to put in place suitable arrangements for children transferring from primary to post-primary education in 2010, and I will be bringing forward proposals as soon as possible. I am mindful of the current uncertainty affecting P5 teachers, pupils and their parents, but rather than impose artificial deadlines, the priority must be to use the time available to make the right decision for the children affected, within a broader view of the shape and nature of post-primary education.

Vetting of Workers

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to confirm that all workers who enter the grounds or vicinity of a school, and who are employed as part of a Public Private Partnership/Private Finance Initiative scheme, have been appropriately vetted. (AQO 468/08)

Ms Ruane: DE Circular 2006/06, "Child Protection: Recruitment of People to Work with Children and Young People In Educational Settings", provides guidance to employers on the groups of staff who should be subject to pre-employment checking. Where Boards or other employing authorities contract out services to the private sector, staff employed by private contractors to provide ancillary services should be subject to pre-employment checking where those staff will be working in educational settings and have regular contact with children and young people.

For example, catering staff who are in the school every day, taxi drivers who provide services to the schools every day and those contractors employed by the Boards, come into contact with children and should be vetted.

Then there are those contractors who are on the school site to carry out major or minor refurbishment work. It is expected that these areas of work will be out of bounds. Children should not be allowed in the areas where builders or service engineers are working for health and safety reasons and these contractors should have no contact with children. There is therefore no reason to have these contractors vetted.

Similarly contractors or sub contractors who visit a school on an ad hoc basis to carry out one off or emergency repairs or service equipment would normally be escorted to and from the location by a member of the school staff. Children should be prevented from being in that area while work progresses. It is not necessary to have these contractors vetted.

The employing authority should at tender stage make it clear to private contractors that pre-employment checks must be carried out after a contract is awarded but before any work is undertaken. Where the contractor confirms that this has been done, the employing authority should ask the contractor to provide, in writing, and as part of the contract, the names of each individual working on the contract and confirmation that a clear vetting check has been obtained in respect of each before that individual starts work.

The same requirements apply to contractors engaged under the PFI Pathfinder Projects.

It is an offence for an individual on either the DHSSPS or DE List of persons prohibited from working with children or who are the subject of a disqualification order issued by the courts, to knowingly apply for, offer to do, accept or do any work, paid or unpaid, in a regulated position which gives them access to children. It is an offence for an individual to knowingly employ in a regulated position, offer work in a regulated position to, or procure work in a regulated position for, such a person, or to fail to remove such a person from such work. Anyone convicted of these offences is liable to punishment by imprisonment or fines or both.

Child protection arrangements in education are kept under continuous review and every effort is made to ensure that they are robust. I would like to take this opportunity to remind members that vetting is only one part of the process of keeping children safe. That said, I take any failures to comply with current requirements very seriously (as do my officials) and would ask the Member if she has any specific concerns to raise them with me directly.

Transfer Test Advice for Teachers

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Education what guidance she is giving teachers of pupils currently in year five, regarding any transfer arrangements likely to apply when these pupils reach year seven.

(AQO 457/08)

Ms Ruane: I am aware of the need to put in place suitable transfer arrangements for children transferring from primary to post-primary education in 2010, and I will be bringing forward proposals as soon as possible. I am mindful of the current uncertainty affecting P5 teachers, pupils and their parents, and guidance will be prepared at the earliest opportunity. In the meantime teachers will be kept informed of any significant developments.

Irish-Medium Schools

Mr Brolly asked the Minister of Education what discussions officials in her department have held with Irish language education groups, in relation to safeguarding the education of over 3,200 children, currently attending Irish-medium schools.

(AQO 478/08)

Ms Ruane: To ask the Minister of Education what discussions officials in her department have held with Irish language education groups, in relation to safeguarding the education of over 3,200 children, currently attending Irish-medium schools.

Officials within my Department are currently co-ordinating a Review of Irish-medium Education with the aim of ensuring the highest quality education outcomes for all pupils in Irish-medium education.

The Project Board and Advisory Group of the Review of Irish-medium Education contain representation from a wide cross-section of Irish language interests and groups.

My Department agrees, and reviews regularly, an operational plan with Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta which has an overall objective to promote and support the strategic development of, and provide guidance and advice to, the Irish medium sector.

In addition it liaises with Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta on its development plans for the sector.

The Department has engaged POBAL to undertake a research project on the Special Educational Needs of Bilingual Children.

Furthermore, my Department's officials and members of the ETI have held discussions, on a range of issues relating to Irish-medium Education, with counterparts in the Department of Education and Science in the south.

The Department continues to have regular contact with individual Irish-medium Schools and representatives of the sector on a range of issues relevant to the sector by way of correspondence, telephone calls and ad-hoc discussions at conferences and other meetings.

Future of A-Levels

Mr Burnside asked the Minister of Education what action she proposes to take in respect of the future of A-levels in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 410/08)

Ms Ruane: A levels will remain important qualifications for post-16 pupils in schools. The revision and re-accreditation of A level specifications has been completed with the new specifications being introduced from September 2008. One change made is to introduce 'stretch and challenge' within the A2 units, with more demanding questions. A new A* grade will be introduced to reward the highest achievers in our schools, without changing the current standards for grades A-E. This new grade will be first awarded in 2010.

The member will be aware of changes announced by the Department for Children, Schools and Families in respect of the regulation of all post 14 qualifications in England. This will separate regulation from the responsibility for the development of qualifications. CCEA will remain the regulator for all qualifications here, with the exception of NVQs. With the establishment of ESA in April 2009, we are looking at how best to accommodate the important regulatory role within the new education structures and will certainly be informed by the models that have emerged elsewhere on these islands.

Children From the Travelling Community

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Education what steps she is taking to develop teaching arrangements for children from the travelling community.

(AQO 475/08)

Ms Ruane: I recognise the serious difficulties that many children from the Travelling community face in terms of attendance and achievement and the subsequent need for additional support.

Schools are provided with additional Common Funding Formula money, which works out as £943 per Traveller child this year 2007/08. Each school chooses how to spend this money to meet the needs of the children, and may spend it on extra teaching support if that is required. Ear-marked funding to support children from the Travelling community is also allocated to each education and library board. £353k has been allocated for 2007/08. Boards use this funding to supply schools with a variety of Traveller related services, and each board spends part of this funding on extra teaching support.

Classroom Teachers

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what action she has taken in respect of the administrative burden placed on classroom teachers. (AQO 409/08)

Ms Ruane: I recognise that many classroom teachers are required to perform routine administrative tasks alongside their teaching duties. This is one of a number of issues raised by the Curran Inquiry in its Final Report Part 2.

The Report recommended that a contextualised agreement with features similar to the English agreement on Raising Standards and Tackling Workload should be reached in the North of Ireland by the Teachers' Negotiating Committee. The Report did not draw any comparisons with arrangements in the South of Ireland, as teachers here have historically enjoyed terms and conditions of service broadly similar to those of their counterparts in England and Wales.

In accepting that measures should be introduced here similar to those introduced in England and Wales to limit teacher workload, including the delegation of routine administrative tasks, the Curran Committee took the view that the English proposals would require adaptation for the North of Ireland and that the timetable for their introduction may vary.

The implementation of the agreement in England and Wales was achieved through a number of strategies, including reform and remodelling of the school workforce (for example, the use of teaching assistants to undertake some teaching-type duties and the employment of additional ancillary staff to relieve teachers of routine administrative tasks). Such strategies were not considered appropriate by the teacher unions here and, as a result, estimates of the cost of implementing the Curran recommendations, at over £80m a year, were based on the assumption that significant numbers of additional teachers would need to be employed.

In the absence of additional resources in the 2004 and 2005 budgets, successive direct rule ministers asked the Teachers' Negotiating Committee to consider whether any of the key Curran recommendations could be progressed through alternative ways of working. This is currently the subject of ongoing discussion between both sides of the Teachers' Negotiating Committee through its Joint Working Party, although the recommendations in relation to Planning, Preparation and Assessment Time and Teaching Principals' Time were identified as more pressing priorities than the delegation of routine administrative tasks.

Antisocial Behaviour

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking to identify pupils who are likely to engage, or who are currently engaged, in antisocial behaviour, and to support schools in challenging antisocial behaviour. (AQO 438/08)

Ms Ruane: Pupils who present with challenging behaviour are identified by their school. Support is available to the school from the relevant Education and Library Board when the school determines that it can no longer manage the pupil within its own resources.

This support can include assistance from staff in the multi-disciplinary Behaviour Support Team, or the Educational Psychology Service, or the Education Welfare Service depending on the nature of the problems identified.

Support within the school environment may not be effective for some children and young people. For some of them, a detailed psychological assessment may point to a more acute underlying emotional disturbance that may warrant a special school placement. For others, there may be a need for a period of short-term specialised provision within, for example a Pupil Referral Unit.

For a small number of pupils, usually in the 14-16 age range, a return to mainstream schooling may not be appropriate and they are, therefore, placed in alternative education provision.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking to identify and support pupils with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, considering its significant impact on educational attainment. (AQO 442/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has in place a special educational needs framework setting out clear statutory duties on schools and Education and Library Boards to identify, assess and in appropriate cases make special educational provision to meet the needs of children with special educational needs. This framework applies to support for all children with special educational needs, including ADHD.

In addition, the Department of Education issued a Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs in 1998 to provide detailed guidance to schools and Boards on the framework and the various statutory duties that apply. A Supplement to this Code was issued in 2005, which updated the previous guidance following the introduction of the Special Educational Needs and Disability (NI) Order 2005.

Education and Library Board's Psychology Services and Behaviour Support Services provide advice to schools in relation to the management of pupils with ADHD, in order that schools can provide the most appropriate support for their pupils. The type of support offered is dependant on the needs of the school or child but can range from advice on writing an Individual Behaviour Plan to placement in a primary or post-primary guidance centre. In more severe cases Boards maintain Statements of Special Educational Need for pupils and provide funding for additional support, such as classroom assistance, to assist the school to meet the pupil's needs.

School staff can also receive advice and training in behaviour support strategies, appropriate in the support of ADHD pupils. Some Board officers deliver in-service training to individual schools and to classroom assistants.

In 2004 the Department of Education published two information booklets on how best to support children with ADHD, prepared by the Education and Library Boards – one a practical guide for parents and carers and the other a practical guide for schools.

North South Exchange Trust

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Education to outline the progress made to date on the proposal to establish a North South Exchange Trust, in conjunction with the Department of Education and Science in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 474/08)

Ms Ruane: Under the Good Friday Agreement (1998), education is identified as one of the areas suitable for 'Common Policy, Separate Implementation' co operation.

In December 1999, the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) agreed a programme of work for co-operation in the Education Sector including school, youth and teacher exchanges. Following discussions with the two Departments, the North South Exchange Consortium (NSEC) was formed, comprising the British Council, Léargas and the Youth Council. At the request of the two Departments, the Consortium developed and presented proposals to both education departments on an outline design and structure for a Joint Delivery Agency. The Departments engaged in discussions with the Consortium in relation to the potential of establishing a 'Charitable Trust'. This included developing a full economic appraisal and text of a trust deed.

The evolving nature of a delivery agency to manage exchequer funding requires appropriate governance and accountability arrangements to be put in place. The Consortium's solicitors have advised that changes made to the draft deed (to reflect DE and DES requirements) make it unlikely that the trust would qualify as a charitable body. This has resulted in the preferred option of a charitable trust being untenable for the Consortium members. Officials in both departments have been working to progress this issue, and I have agreed with my Ministerial counterpart in the South to carry out, in tandem with the Department of Education and Science, a formal review of the North South Exchange Consortium initiative. The aim of the review is to identify a range of options for future progress in this area in the light of current and future funding availability.

Both Departments have agreed to proceed with this proposed review and have agreed a Terms of Reference for the review. The two Departments are in the process of appointing suitable people from the North and South of Ireland to comprise the review team.

Omagh Educational Village

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education if she will provide an update on plans to develop an educational village at the Lisanelly site in Omagh. (AQO 472/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education has been liaising with the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Department for Social Development on the possible acquisition of the Lisanelly site from the Ministry of Defence (MOD). The MoD has been advised of the administration's interest. The acquisition of the site and its development for educational and other purposes will be subject to the availability of funding and the approval of the Executive.

Newbuild Programmes

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education to outline her spending plans for school newbuild programmes in the Coleraine Borough Council area, in 2007/2008. (AQO 398/08)

Ms Ruane: Work on the construction of a new school building for Carnalridge P.S. was started in December 2006 and is expected to be completed in December 2007. It is estimated that the capital spend on the project in 2007/08 will be approximately £1.5 million.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Small Businesses

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what support, financial and other, his department is making available to encourage small businesses to employ young adults, who are training in a certain vocation. (AQW 676/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): The Training for Success provision has replaced Jobskills from 3rd September 2007, and offers professional and technical training to young people age 16 – 24 years. The provision has been developed with the needs of both employers and young people in mind, and apprenticeships under this provision are available to all businesses.

All apprentices follow a training framework that is approved for delivery and developed in conjunction with the relevant industry. To maintain both the quality and relevance of content, Sector Skills Councils and Standard Setting Bodies are required to take the views of employers, including small businesses, into consideration when developing the frameworks. Small businesses, therefore, have an ideal opportunity to ensure that their particular skills needs are represented in the professional and technical training that is being provided, and thereby ensure that the young people undergoing training are ideally equipped for employment.

Whilst the programme is demand-led, the Department has budgeted for £50 million to cover all aspects of the programme, which also includes a direct financial incentive for employers to take on apprentices.

Adult Further Education Courses

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will intervene to reverse recent increases in charges for adult further education courses. (AQW 677/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Under the current arrangements between the Department and the Further Education sector, it is the responsibility of each individual college, not the Department, to decide what courses it wishes to offer, and what fees, including concessionary fees, it chooses to apply. The Department does not intervene in this process.

Job Ready Candidates

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will confirm whether or not his department had decided to pay only the first £3 of travel for 'Job Ready' candidates, before initiating its tender process for 'Job Ready' providers.

(AQW 702/08)

Sir Reg Empey: A standard contribution of £3, £5 or £9 to weekly travel costs is paid to Suppliers for all non-employed participants in the Job-Ready strand of Training for Success. This is based on the Contract Management area in which the Supplier is located.

Details of the proposed arrangements associated with travel costs were set out in the Training for Success: Professional and Technical Training Consultation Document dated July 2006. This was in advance of the tendering process taking place.

University of Ulster, Magee Campus

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he will take, in view of the disclosure that just one in five of the students at the University of Ulster's Magee campus is from a Protestant background. (AQW 704/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The University of Ulster is an autonomous institution responsible for its own policies and practices, including admissions.

The University reports that an Equality Impact Assessment was carried out in 2006 in respect of its Recruitment and Admissions Policy. In relation to the Magee campus, the Assessment noted a range of external contributory factors to the under representation of Protestant students, and that these were largely beyond the control of the University. For example, migration patterns show that Protestant students are substantially more likely to leave and study outside of Northern Ireland.

The University advises that a number of initiatives have been undertaken to redress the religious imbalance at the Magee campus. These include holding meetings with Head Teachers of schools which have a predominantly Protestant student population and which have been identified as providing low numbers of applicants. A number of talks and information days have been organised alongside various marketing activities. The University also intends to hold meetings with influential individuals or community organisations from the Protestant community, in order to encourage applications from pupils in Protestant schools.

Training for Success

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he will take to ensure that level one trainees on the 'Training for Success' scheme will not be charged course fees, when they have secured an apprenticeship in addition to enrolling on the course.

(AQW 715/08)

Sir Reg Empey: With the exception of travel allowances for apprentices the cost of training under Training for Success is funded by the Department. Job Ready trainees and Level 2 and Level 3 Apprentices are not required to pay enrolment or course fees.

Assistance for Low Income Families

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to provide details of his department's strategy to provide assistance to children from low income families, in order to help them to be able to afford to attend university.
(AQW 751/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department has a range of measures in place designed to increase participation in higher education by students from low income backgrounds. In addition to fee loans, which are available to all students, and do not have to be repaid until earnings are over £15,000 per year, less well off students are eligible for a maintenance grant (up to £3,265 in academic year 2007/2008) and bursaries of at least £305 from the institutions. A range of supplementary allowances are available for students with children and/or a disability.

Merged Regional Colleges

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is his assessment of the level of enrolment in non-vocational classes in the new merged regional colleges; and to indicate whether or not the situation relating to college budgets has played a role in moving these figures away from their former levels.
(AQW 759/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Due to the nature of data capture in colleges, it is too early to have information on the level of college enrolments, including non-vocational enrolments, for the 2007/08 academic year. However, I can assure you that each of the six new colleges received an increase in the recurrent grant paid in the current academic year in comparison to the recurrent grant paid in the 2006/07 academic year.

Non-EU Students

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students from non-EU countries that are currently studying at universities and further education colleges in Northern Ireland; and to indicate what type of support his department is making available to encourage overseas students to choose higher and further education institutions in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 761/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The latest available data relates to the 2005/06 academic year when there were 1,575 enrolments from non-EU countries at Northern Ireland Higher Education Institutions and 121 students from non-EU countries enrolled at the Northern Ireland Further Education Colleges.

My Department plays its part in encouraging overseas students to study in Northern Ireland in a number of ways including participation in programmes such as the Prime Minister's Initiative and by providing funding to a number of international programmes including the Mitchell Scholarships and The International Association for the Exchange of Students for Technical Expertise (IAESTE). It continues to work with the British Council on the promotion of Northern Ireland as a study destination and also provides funding for the Overseas Research Student Awards Scheme (ORSAS).

Student Complaints

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is his assessment of the issue of establishing an independent body for student complaints in Northern Ireland.
(AQW 766/08)

Sir Reg Empey: In my Department's policy consultation document "A Consultation on Proposals to Introduce Variable Deferred Tuition Fees, Access Agreements and a Review of the Student Complaints System", published in April 2004, consultees were asked whether an independent adjudicator should be established to hear student complaints in Northern Ireland and end the Visitor system in both Northern Ireland universities. The majority of responses were heavily weighted in favour of change to make the system more clearly independent of the universities.

In light of the consultation responses, it was agreed that the option to extend the remit of the Ombudsman, to include the adjudication of student complaints could be considered. The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) agreed that this could be included in their proposed review of the Offices of the Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, following restoration of the Assembly.

OFMDFM has advised my Department that a timetable for consultation, implementation and amendments to the Commissioner for Complaints Order 1996 has yet to be set following restoration of the Assembly. When the review is carried out, the option to extend the Ombudsman's remit, to include the adjudication of student complaints, can be considered.

Northern Ireland Students Studying in the Republic of Ireland

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to change the funding package for those students domiciled in Northern Ireland, who choose to take up tertiary education in the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 767/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Northern Ireland domiciled students studying at institutions of higher education in the Republic of Ireland are currently eligible for means-tested maintenance grants, maintenance loans and a non-means tested grant which covers the full amount of the registration fee charged by institutions. In light of the introduction of fee deferral arrangements and an enhanced student support package for students from Northern Ireland studying in the United Kingdom from 2006/2007, I am considering introducing similar arrangements for domiciled Northern Ireland students who study in the Republic of Ireland.

Student Financial Support

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to change the current financial support package for students, specifically in relation to the upper threshold at which students can obtain the maximum maintenance grant. (AQW 768/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Following the recent announcement by the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills (DIUS) regarding proposals to increase the maintenance grant threshold for English domiciled students, officials have been engaging with counterparts in DIUS and other regions of the UK to consider the implications for Northern Ireland. Any decision to change the current student finance package will have to be taken in the context of the current spending review.

Further Education College, Lisburn

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will give an assurance that the new further education college in Lisburn will proceed, and to provide a revised timescale for the completion of this project. (AQO 397/08)

Sir Reg Empey: I am happy to inform the Assembly that contract negotiations with the East Down and Lisburn Education Partnership, who are the preferred bidder, are nearing completion and contract signing should be achieved later this year. All planning approvals have been obtained and construction can begin immediately the contract has been signed. It is anticipated that the college will be ready for occupation in 2010.

Student Enrolments

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to reduce the number of Northern Ireland domiciled students enrolling on higher education courses in other parts of the United Kingdom. (AQO 412/08)

Sir Reg Empey: During the 2005/06 academic year, 25% of Northern Ireland domiciled students studied at GB institutions compared to 30% in 1995/96. Students obviously have a free choice of where they wish to study. My Department is currently conducting research to get a clearer picture of all the reasons why students choose to study outside Northern Ireland.

Holyland Area

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to encourage better relations between students and local residents in the Holyland area of Belfast. (AQO 461/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department supports fully the two universities in the initiatives they have taken to encourage better relations between students and local residents. Both institutions have been working in partnership with landlords, political representatives, Belfast City Council, the Housing Executive and the PSNI.

The seriousness with which the issue of anti-social behaviour is being treated is illustrated by the fact that in the academic year 06/07, two students were formally expelled from the University of Ulster. At both institutions disciplinary measures range from advice and a warning, the imposition of fines, with the ultimate sanction being expulsion. In total, 113 students were formally disciplined by the University of Ulster. 377 students were formally disciplined by Queen's University, although none were subject to expulsion. These actions were as a direct consequence of anti-social behaviour off campus.

Economic Inactivity

Dr Farry asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will give his assessment of the variation in levels of economic inactivity in different areas in Northern Ireland. (AQO 462/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Economic Inactivity is an issue of particular concern for Northern Ireland. Our rate of 27.8% compares unfavourably with the UK average of 21.1%.

The inactivity rate within Northern Ireland varies from 14.6% in the Larne District Council area to 43.8% in the Strabane District Council area. The differences are mainly due to the variations in the proportions of people who are inactive because of their home or family commitments, sickness or disability.

Migrant Workers

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to reduce the exploitation of migrant workers by employers. (AQO 485/08)

Sir Reg Empey: It remains a priority for my Department to ensure we have a modern and effective employment rights infrastructure that affords suitable protection for everyone, including migrant workers, working legally in Northern Ireland. My Department is leading work by state and non-state organisations to ensure that the needs of migrant workers are met effectively.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of cases that were brought to Industrial Tribunals, in each of the last five years. (AQO 434/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Claims registered with the Office of Industrial Tribunals and Fair Employment Tribunal (OITFET) in the last five years, which include both Industrial Tribunal and Fair Employment Tribunal issues, are as follows:

April 2002 – March 2003	3386
April 2003 – March 2004	9981
April 2004 – March 2005	3452
April 2005 – March 2006	1681
April 2006 – March 2007	2788
Total	21,288

As a result of procedures in place within the Tribunal system such as interim hearings, pre-hearing reviews and case management discussions; the multiple nature of some of the cases where a common complaint is brought by a group of claimants against one respondent and the use of the conciliation services of the Labour Relations Agency, it is estimated that some 85%-90% of these registered claims do not get to the stage of a full Tribunal hearing. This means that over the last five years approximately 2,100-3,200 cases proceed to a full Tribunal hearing.

Over the same period OITFET has heard and determined some 3,440 cases.

Budget Negotiations

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what progress has been achieved in budget negotiations with the Department of Finance and Personnel, in relation to his bid for a 1000% increase in funding for adult apprenticeships and a 500% increase in funding for PhDs and higher educational research. (AQO 471/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Budget 2007 process is still on-going and it is not expected to be finalised until late January 2008. Therefore I can not comment on any individual bids at this time.

Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of people within the Strangford area who have progressed through the apprenticeship scheme in each of the last three years; and what action he is taking to increase these numbers. (AQO 437/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The numbers of apprentices from the Strangford area who have progressed to achievement of the NVQ level 3, under the Modern Apprenticeships strand of Jobskills are:

2 004/05	25
2005/06	60
2006/07	50

In September 2007 the Department replaced Jobskills with Training for Success, with a key aim to increase the number of apprentices including a level 2 apprenticeship. Early indications are that significant numbers of young people are being recruited to these level 2 apprenticeships. It is expected that a combination of improved careers guidance, individual assessments of participants, better quality of provision, and restructured funding frameworks will encourage improved retention, completion and achievement rates.

New Deal

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to improve the success rate of New Deal in moving participants into sustained, unsubsidised employment. (AQO 466/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department is currently piloting, in four office areas, (Shaftesbury Square, Knockbreda, Lisburn and Limavady) a fresh approach to the delivery of New Deal aimed at improving outcomes into sustained, unsubsidised employment. This initiative, branded 'Steps to Work' is a flexible, menu-based modular approach, which can be tailored to address each individual's barriers to work. It also includes increased incentives to employers to recruit and retain New Deal participants. Subject to evaluation and resource availability, it will be rolled out across Northern Ireland.

Press Officers

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of press officers in his department. (AQO 429/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department for Employment and Learning has three press officers who work directly with the media on a regular basis. The Department also has Information Officers who occasionally work with the media but primarily perform a marketing function.

National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what consideration he has given to the creation of a National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy for Northern Ireland. (AQO 415/08)

Sir Reg Empey: I have no plans to create a National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy for Northern Ireland.

Training in skills at all levels is available for the sector through Further Education Colleges throughout Northern Ireland where the Southern Regional College is a Centre of Excellence. Extensive provision is also available in Higher Education and the University of Ulster which will soon have a new facility at York Street, Belfast.

Adult Learning

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he has taken to encourage adult learners to return to courses. (AQO 482/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department has a number of measures that are designed to encourage adult learners to return to courses at a wide variety of levels.

The courses that are available to adults include: full-time and part time courses in higher and further education establishments; Level 2 and Level 3 apprenticeship training (offered through Training for Success) in a wide range of occupational areas for those aged up to 24 years; and courses to improve adults' literacy and numeracy skills.

In delivering its programmes, the Department continues to develop ways of increasing access, with a particular focus on those who are reluctant to avail of the opportunities provided.

The Department's Careers Service offers an all-age careers information, advice and guidance service. In addition, the Department currently provides funding to the Educational Guidance Service for Adults to provide guidance and to help adults connect with Learning. The Department's Employment Service engages with a wide range of clients, both active and inactive in the labour market, through a team of specially trained Personal Advisers. These advisory services ensure that individuals are made aware of those opportunities that meet their particular needs and aspirations.

All-Island Skills Conference

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what discussions he had with Ministers from the Republic of Ireland, at their meeting on 4th September 2007. (AQO 411/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Discussions with Ministerial counterparts focussed on common issues such as workforce skills, the impact of the inflow of migrant workers, research and innovation. These are all important to our economies in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Looking to build on existing examples of co-operation we will co-host an all-island skills conference in NI in 2008.

Concessionary Fees Scheme

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will give his assessment of the success of the concessionary fees scheme in the further education sector. (AQO 458/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Under the current arrangements between the Department and the further education sector, it is the responsibility of individual colleges, not the Department, to decide what courses they wish to offer, and what fees, charges and concessionary fees they chooses to apply.

Holyland Area

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to encourage better relations between students and local residents in the Holyland area of Belfast. (AQO 461/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department supports fully the two universities in the initiatives they have taken to encourage better relations between students and local residents. Both institutions have been working in partnership with landlords, political representatives, Belfast City Council, the Housing Executive and the PSNI.

The seriousness with which this is being treated is illustrated by the fact that in the academic year 06/07, sixteen students were formally expelled from Queen's University, with two students being formally expelled from the University of Ulster. This action was as a direct consequence of anti-social behaviour off campus.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Invest NI

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given the importance of Enterprise Parks to the local economy, to indicate how Invest NI intends to facilitate the small business sector in Newtownabbey in 'growing on' these initial start-up businesses, through the provision of premises at Global Point. (AQW 618/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): Invest NI is awaiting a decision concerning overall planning permission for the Global Point site. Subject to completion of the statutory consultation process, it is expected that Planning Service will take its recommendation to Newtownabbey Council before the end of the calendar year. Invest NI, has already gained planning permission for specific aspects of the site and has developed significant infrastructure within the park at a cost of £7m.

Serviced sites on the park will be marketed, as soon as overall planning approval is granted, to all Invest NI clients that have the potential to bring forward development projects that meet Invest NI's Intervention Principles. This will include those clients located in Newtownabbey and its surrounding area.

Projects attractive to Invest NI are likely to comprise a number of the following characteristics:

- a focus on markets outside Northern Ireland
- Innovation or the use of advanced technologies
- new, value-added products or services
- increased and quality employment
- new skills
- challenging growth targets
- private sector finance

Invest NI has limited financial resources and therefore seeks to generate the best return on its investments for the Northern Ireland economy. To that end, Invest NI's client companies must be engaged in either manufacturing or tradeable services and must have, or demonstrate the potential to achieve:

- annual sales in excess of £100,000
- sales outside NI of at least 25% of turnover or £250,000

Invest NI has a relatively small land bank across Northern Ireland. This land is, therefore, held exclusively for Invest NI client companies, who collectively account for approximately 90% of NI exports and research and development expenditure.

Invest NI Global Point Development

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans Invest NI has to develop the lands at Global Point, Newtownabbey; and what is his assessment of whether or not the expanding small business sector based in Enterprise Parks could provide an anchor tenant role at this location.

(AQW 623/08)

Mr Dodds: After extensive discussions with Planning Service addressing a number of outstanding issues, Invest NI is awaiting a decision concerning overall planning permissions for the site at Global Point. Subject to completion of the statutory consultation process, it is expected that the application will be taken to Council before the end of the calendar year.

Over the last number of years, Invest NI has gained planning permission and developed several phases of infrastructure within the park at a cost of circa £7m. It expects to be in a position to market and lease serviced sites to client companies as soon as overall planning approval is granted.

Invest NI land at Global Point is held exclusively for its client companies with an approved business case and a demonstrable immediate property need. Any business case presented by an Enterprise Park provider, for example Mallusk Enterprise Park, would be considered on its merits. Tenants would be expected to be able to meet the normal Invest NI client criteria for entry.

Tourism in West Tyrone

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what funding will be made available in 2008 to promote tourism in West Tyrone, and what role Sperrins Tourism will play in developing tourism within West Tyrone. (AQW 650/08)

Mr Dodds: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) is fully committed to regional development as outlined in the Strategic Framework for Action (2005 – 2008). West Tyrone and Sperrins Tourism is a member of the Western Regional Tourism Partnership, which has received over £403,000 in financial support from NITB in the financial years 2006/07 and 2007/08.

Any further allocation will be considered in the context of the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Motorcycle Races

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is his assessment of the impact of attendance at motorcycle races on Northern Ireland's economy and tourist industry. (AQW 666/08)

Mr Dodds: The Tourism Strategic Framework for Action 2004 – 2008 recognises the potential of events in changing perceptions of Northern Ireland and benefiting the economy and the Northern Ireland tourism industry. The Northern Ireland Tourist Board works closely with the Northern Ireland Events Company (NIEC) to promote and support excellent events in Northern Ireland.

The Northern Ireland Events Company has been involved with many disciplines of motorcycle sport since its inception in 1997. Many of these World Class and International events bring extensive TV coverage allowing NIEC to profile NI as a Major Events and Tourism destination.

A post project evaluation (PPE) report was completed by NIEC for the North West 200 (NW200) and Ulster Grand Prix (UGP) in 2005. The evaluation figures are as follows:

Event:	Participant and Visitor Spend: (£)	Economic Benefit to NI: (£)	Economic Return (Per £ of public money)
NW200	£554,400	£1,850,142.89	£15.33:£1
UGP	£132,510	£444,892.78	£6.50:£1
Total	£686,910	£2,295,035.67	n/a

2008 will see the FIM Motocross of Nations – the largest event in the sport – take place in Moneyglass.

Invest NI All-island Economy

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of his statement to the 12th annual economic conference that his vision 'is for a higher value-added economy that is able to compete effectively with a globalised workforce', what is his assessment of the advice of the chairman of the Ulster Bank Group, that Invest NI should amalgamate with the Industrial Development Agency Ireland, to promote an all-island economy through a single, joined-up, effective agency; with the IDA and Invest NI no longer competitors, but fully collaborative. (AQW 683/08)

Mr Dodds: Our vision of a higher value added, competitive economy is shared with most stakeholder organisations and economic pundits in Northern Ireland. Invest NI, and a wide range of other public and private sector organisations in Northern Ireland, are committed to this approach. Recent Invest NI successes, including major investments by Citi, Liberty IT, Bank of Ireland and Mformation, bear testimony to this approach. While we enjoy cooperation with our southern counterparts on a number of fronts, I am clear that the competitive nature of procuring FDI and significant differences in our product offering, make a single operation, straddling two jurisdictions, impossible.

University of Ulster Patents

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he will take to build local enterprises within the East Antrim constituency, based on patents held by the University of Ulster. (AQW 711/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI (through the Higher Education Innovation Fund) has already supported the development of a commercially focused organisation to effectively manage University of Ulster technology (UUTech) and knowledge transfer Early stage technology screening, assessment and protection have led to a number of new patent filings. In addition, Invest NI's "Proof of Concept" programme will help researchers take their ideas and inventions from the laboratory to the global marketplace while new seed corn funds, dedicated to spin-outs from both Queen's University Belfast (QUB) and the University of Ulster (UU), are in the latter stages of development.

Technology based companies spinning out from the UU might be expected to establish in close proximity to specific research strengths and appropriately skilled and qualified graduates that are essential for continued growth and development.

Fast Ferry Linkages

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he has taken to develop fast ferry linkages between the Port of Larne and the Lancashire ports. (AQW 713/08)

Mr Dodds: Northern Ireland benefits from the private sector ferry services operating in the Irish Sea. These provide conventional ferry connections to Fleetwood, Heysham and Liverpool in Lancashire. A fast ferry service, which operated to Heysham, ceased in 2002 for commercial reasons.

The development of any ferry service is a matter for the commercial judgement of ferry operators having regard to prevailing market opportunities.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the estimated cost for final closure on the DETI-led visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway, if the proposals do not go ahead.

(AQW 740/08)

Mr Dodds: The outstanding costs for the public sector proposal relate to contractual liabilities to the architect and the design team and are estimated at around £300,000. This would bring the total estimated cost for the project, if it does not go ahead, to £1.5m.

Health and Safety Requirements

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to develop a strategy to help small construction businesses meet the costs of all health and safety requirements, in order to operate legally and safely in Northern Ireland. (AQW 741/08)

Mr Dodds: There are no plans to develop a strategy to help small construction businesses meet the costs of all health and safety requirements. Government cannot and should not financially assist any business to meet its statutory health and safety obligations. That said, Government should actively assist businesses in other ways to help them meet these obligations and, in regard to health and safety, this is very much the case. Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland (HSENI), the regional authority for health and safety, visits building sites and offers advice and information; it publishes free guidance; it provides a free phone help line and its small business service, Health and Safety Works NI, provides a confidential and free mentoring service to small businesses including small construction companies.

Small Construction Firms

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to support business growth for small construction firms in Northern Ireland. (AQW 742/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI helps small construction manufacturing companies to grow, become more competitive and develop export markets.

Invest NI focus on helping companies to be entrepreneurial; innovative and international. Emphasis is on increasing the company's ability to grow export markets and to compete in a sustainable way.

Invest NI liaise with sector bodies and trade associations to ensure clients are kept up to date on market trends and tendering opportunities via procurement databases. Strategic investment plans, such as Strategic Investment Board (NI), National Development Plan (ROI), and Olympics (London), leading to sales opportunities are communicated. Best practice and knowledge sharing is actively promoted.

- Support and guidance includes:
- Facilitating development of business direction and strategy
- Enhancing competitiveness with people and process improvement
- Developing export markets and products, with awareness workshops and programmes to define marketing strategies, strengthen marketing and export skills and increase market knowledge
- Stimulating innovation through technology transfer, and product & process development

An on-line business support service is available to all companies at <http://www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk> offering practical advice on a comprehensive range of business issues.

Invest NI

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of visits that have been organised by Invest NI for inward investors for the East Derry/Londonderry area, in each of the last five years. (AQW 769/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI does not determine locations for a potential investor: this decision is taken by the investor. The focus of Invest NI's international sales and marketing effort is to aggressively promote all areas of Northern Ireland as attractive and viable locations for new inward investment opportunities, in what is a very competitive global market.

The figures below outline the number of visits that have been organised by Invest NI for inward investors for the East Londonderry area, in each of the last five years.

April 2002 – March 2003	9
April 2003 – March 2004	2
April 2004 – March 2005	1
April 2005 – March 2006	2
April 2006 – March 2007	3

Staff Team Building

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises, in each of the last three years. (AQW 807/08)

Mr Dodds:

	Away Days	Team Building	Total
1 April 04 to 31 March 05	£9,769	£4,381	£14,150
1 April 05 to 31 March 06	£5,333	£4,432	£9,765
1 April 06 to 31 March 07	£0	£2,789	£2,789
DETI total			£26,704

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within his department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review.

(AQW 830/08)

Mr Dodds: A High Level Impact Assessment (HLIA) was completed for all Resource bids in the Comprehensive Spending Review. The HLIA considered how and to what extent each Resource bid promoted good relations between people of different race, religion, political opinion, sexual orientation and persons with a disability and persons without. It also examined if funding the Resource bid could inadvertently inhibit or damage good relations between groups within any of the above mentioned categories. Each HLIA was also considered by the DETI Equality Unit.

A summary of these HLIAs was also forwarded to the Department of Finance and Personnel for its consideration when making recommendations on allocations across the NI Block.

The Strategic Investment Board is considering the good relations impact of Capital Investment.

Greater Newry Vision

Mr Brady asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to implement the Greater Newry Vision document. (AQW 875/08)

Mr Dodds: We would wish to support the efforts of the Greater Newry Vision Partnership to enable the greater Newry area to achieve its full potential in terms of;

- An efficient economy
- Regional well-being
- Social political and economic stability and
- Economic opportunity

A range of initiatives, including substantial infrastructural developments, have been identified by the partnership as key drivers to an efficient economy in the Greater Newry area. These include for example; The Southern Relief Road and the Albert Basin Development. While such infrastructural development proposals are outside the direct remit of my department we will contribute to the appraisals of such initiatives by the relevant departments insofar as they impact on the economic development prospects of the area.

Invest NI, which has representation on the Greater Newry Vision Partnership, will continue to play a central role in delivering our economic development strategy by providing support to businesses in three main areas;

- Supporting Innovation for global markets
- Encouraging investment and re-investment in the area
- Stimulating entrepreneurial activity

Considerable success has been achieved to date in the Newry area as demonstrated by the relatively high level of business starts and the recent launch of the Teleperformance project that will create 450 jobs.

Invest NI Strabane District Council Land

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail, by name and size, all land within the Strabane District Council area that is currently (i) under the ownership of Invest NI; and (ii) available for industrial use. (AQW 881/08)

Mr Dodds: Invest NI holds land at one location in the Strabane District Council area, Orchard Road Industrial Estate.

The landholding at Orchard Road is 25.26 acres with 2.10 acres currently available for industrial use.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre Seaport Investments Planning Application

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the nature and outcome of his department's examination of the planning application from Seaport Investments for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway, prior to 10 September 2007, with specific reference to whether or not this development would provide a world class facility at this location.

(AQW 892/08)

Mr Dodds: My Department reviewed the Seaport Investments outline planning application as part of its work on developing its own design. On the basis of the information contained within the planning application it was considered reasonable to assume that visitors would receive a similar experience to that proposed in the public proposal.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will now test the market to assess whether or not other private sector businesses are interested in becoming involved in the creation of a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway. (AQW 897/08)

Mr Dodds: My Department does not own land at the Giant's Causeway site. It is therefore not appropriate for me to test the market place for private sector interest in developing visitor facilities. That is a matter for Moyle District Council, as land owners, to consider.

Graduate Earnings

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the average wage earned by graduates in Northern Ireland; and to provide a comparison with graduate earnings in (i) other parts of the United Kingdom; and (ii) the Republic of Ireland, for each of the last 5 years. (AQW 940/08)

Mr Dodds: The estimates for the median average wage earned by graduate employees in Northern Ireland and other parts of the United Kingdom can be found in the table below. Directly comparable figures for the Republic of Ireland are not available.

MEDIAN GROSS WEEKLY PAY FOR GRADUATE EMPLOYEES, 2003-2007¹

Region	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
England	£519	£516	£538	£577	£577
Scotland	£490	£531	£490	£525	£538
Wales	£485	£462	£433	£462	£512
Northern Ireland	£415	£490	£471	£462	£529
UK	£508	£508	£531	£558	£565

¹ Figures refer to the March–May period for the years 2003–2005 and to the April–June period for 2006 and 2007. Estimates are based on a sample survey and are subject to sampling error.

Source: Labour Force Survey

Opportunities For Women

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action he has taken to ensure the full participation of women, and increased opportunity for women, in the enterprise, trade and investment sector. (AQW 1020/08)

Mr Dodds: OFMDFM have co-ordinated actions across NI Departments in response to the report Shaping a Fairer Future published in February 2006 by the Women and Work Commission Report.

These include actions to support full and equal opportunity for, and participation by women in the enterprise, trade and investment sector, and are being mapped into the draft Action Plans which will underpin the Gender Equality Strategy for Northern Ireland published in December 2006 by OFMDFM. In addition we have in place a robust framework of anti-discrimination legislation which aims to ensure greater participation of women in the labour market, including in the enterprise, trade and investment sector.

Invest Northern Ireland's Go For It Campaign, its enterprise and education programmes and its specific Investing in Women Programme seek to encourage more women in Northern Ireland to start a business or grow their existing business.

Investing in Women involves a range of awareness programmes, role model promotion and sponsorship of conferences and events. Over 4000 women per year are engaged in the Investing in Women programmes with 16000 young women involved in enterprise and education programmes. An element of Invest NI's work within the Renewing Communities initiative is providing enterprise awareness for women. This includes activity with women's groups in North Belfast.

With this focussed approach to increasing the levels of female entrepreneurship, over the period 2002 – 2007, the number of female start-ups via Invest NI's Start a Business Programme has increased from 35% to 47%. This is an encouraging increase.

Inward Investment

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will make a statement on the impact of paramilitarism on inward investment in Northern Ireland. (AQO 452/08)

Mr Dodds: There has been no formal assessment of the impact of paramilitarism on inward investment in Northern Ireland. However, I would be very surprised if the images of terrorism and vandalism that have played across the media in the last three decades have not had a negative influence on the decisions of potential investors – to the extent that they ruled us out of their thinking without making any contact with Invest NI or its predecessors.

It is therefore to the credit of government agencies that they were able to attract a number of significant international companies to the region. Terrorism has a pernicious impact on business investment and we must do everything we can to maintain a stable political and social environment so that we can more easily market Northern Ireland as a high quality investment and tourism location.

As I said in my answer to the Member for Strangford, I would encourage any business that is the victim of paramilitary activity to come forward and contact the police or the Organised Crime Task Force.

United States Investment Conference

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide an update on his plans for the proposed United States Investment Conference; and to detail what he hopes to achieve from this event. (AQO 414/08)

Mr Dodds: Planning for this event is well advanced. This afternoon I am welcoming US Ambassadors Tuttle from London and Foley from Dublin. They are jointly leading a delegation of over 20 US companies to Northern Ireland.

Next month I plan to visit three or four cities in the United States to meet with US Business and Political figures to raise the profile of next year's conference. I hope that up to 50 CEOs, from major US Corporations in the key ICT, Financial and Business Services sectors, will participate in the conference in Belfast next year.

We want them to experience and explore how Northern Ireland can provide compelling business solutions to their global operations. Ultimately, my hope would be that some of these companies will decide that Northern Ireland offers them a location where they can establish a successful and sustainable operation.

Single Electricity Market

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will make a statement on the Single Electricity Market. (AQO 428/08)

Mr Dodds: Final preparations are being made by industry and the Regulators so that the Single Electricity Market can begin trading wholesale electricity from 1 November. This new market will be at the leading edge of the European Union's strategic vision for energy. It is the result of pragmatic cooperation to deliver mutual benefits to both Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

The overall net benefit is estimated at £103m over 10 years from greater efficiencies, plus potential additional "dynamic" benefits of £135m - £171m from more competitive wholesale and retail markets. However, these benefits will depend on the sustained and progressive introduction of greater competition. My Department will be working with its counterpart in the Irish Republic and with the Regulators to achieve this.

Fast Ferry Service

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action he is taking, along with the Minister for Regional Development, to develop a fast ferry service accessing the 43 million people who live within a four hour drive of ports in Lancashire. (AQO 418/08)

Mr Dodds: Northern Ireland benefits from the private sector ferry services operating in the Irish Sea. These provide conventional ferry connections to Fleetwood, Heysham and Liverpool in Lancashire. A fast ferry service, which operated to Heysham, ceased in 2002 for commercial reasons.

The development of any ferry service is a matter for the commercial judgement of ferry operators having regard to prevailing market opportunities.

Financial Services Sector

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the current prospects for employment within the financial services sector in Northern Ireland. (AQO 490/08)

Mr Dodds: This is a growing sector where the prospects of providing significant new employment opportunities for Northern Ireland are good. Invest NI will continue to target key accounts in Europe and the United States, in order to build on recent successes.

During 2007, Invest NI secured employment in this sector through strategic investments by two high profile financial institutions. Citi, one of the world's largest financial corporations, has established a Centre of Excellence in Belfast creating 716 jobs. This facility includes 117 jobs in capital markets and banking operations as well as 39 jobs in the legal and compliance field. These jobs attract average salaries of around £25k, well in excess of Northern Ireland's private sector average. In July 2007, Bank of Ireland Securities Services announced its intention to create 149 jobs establishing its first UK hedge fund administration centre. These jobs will attract average salaries of £35k per annum and the investment will enhance Northern Ireland's reputation as a global financial services location.

West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force Report

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will report on progress towards implementing the recommendations of the West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force Report.

(AQO 491/08)

Mr Dodds: Action has been taken to address a range of issues identified in the West Belfast and Greater Shankill Task Forces' Report. A bid to the Integrated Development Fund secured funding, in principle, of £21.7 million towards 17 projects specific to the area. As part of a recent study of the Task Force Initiative, local community representatives submitted a report outlining their views on the key outstanding development opportunities for the area in January 2007. DETI, and other relevant Departments, are in the process of discussing the most recent report with community representatives with a view to agreeing detailed actions which can be taken forward as quickly as is practicable.

Invest NI Inward Investment Agencies

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail what policy he intends to pursue, to allow increased co-ordination between the work of the inward investment agencies, Invest NI and the Industrial Development Agency Ireland.

(AQO 489/08)

Mr Dodds: The Comprehensive Study on the All-Island Economy, published by the British and Irish Governments in October 2006, identified opportunities for increased contacts between Invest NI and IDA Ireland. However, the attraction of Foreign Direct Investment is one of the areas where the economic development agencies in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland are in direct competition with each other. Nevertheless, it is clear that the island as a whole faces increasing competition from emerging economies for mobile inward investment. The Boards and officials of Invest NI and the IDA already meet regularly and I am keen that they should continue to meet to explore the potential for collaboration in areas of mutual benefit for both jurisdictions.

Both agencies agree that the focus for collaboration should be on strengthening the business operating environment and the examination of how Invest NI and IDA can work together to jointly influence and improve this in a manner that would increase the attractiveness of the whole island for FDI.

Investment Conference

Mr Donaldson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made on arrangements for the proposed investment conference in Washington D.C.

(AQO 396/08)

Mr Dodds: Planning for this event is well advanced. This afternoon I am welcoming US Ambassadors Tuttle from London and Foley from Dublin. They are jointly leading a delegation of over 20 US companies to Northern Ireland.

Next month I plan to visit three or four cities in the United States to meet with US Business and Political figures to raise the profile of next year's conference. I hope that up to 50 CEOs, from major US Corporations in the key ICT, Financial and Business Services sectors, will participate in the conference in Belfast next year.

We want them to experience and explore how Northern Ireland can provide compelling business solutions to their global operations. Ultimately, my hope would be that some of these companies will decide that Northern Ireland offers them a location where they can establish a successful and sustainable operation.

Racketeering

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give his assessment of the cost to Northern Ireland businesses of racketeering associated with paramilitaries.

(AQO 453/08)

Mr Dodds: My Department has made no assessment of the financial cost to Northern Ireland businesses of the wide range of racketeering activities associated with paramilitaries. It is clear, however, that businesses can only realise their full economic potential in a peaceful and law abiding environment.

A number of Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) events were held for the business community during 2006/07 to raise awareness of the help and support that is available for victims of extortion and to encourage victims to report the crime to the police.

The PSNI, supported by the OCTF, have launched an extortion Helpline (028 909 222 67). This provides access to professional advice and guidance from specially trained PSNI officers who are experts in this field. I would encourage any business that is the victim of extortion to contact the PSNI's extortion helpline.

Tourism

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans he has to develop tourist potential across the whole of Northern Ireland, rather than in only a small number of high profile locations. (AQO 423/08)

Mr Dodds: The Tourism Strategic Framework for Action 2004 – 2008 (SFA) currently sets out ten key programme areas to be addressed in developing Northern Ireland's tourism potential, it is directed at all of Northern Ireland.

Programmes include development of signature projects, visitor servicing, strengthening effective relationships for delivery and focusing on Winning Themes such as short breaks, excellent events and activity tourism. These programmes, taken as a whole, are not confined to a small number of locations.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of people who are employed by the Health and Safety Executive in Northern Ireland, and to outline their main priorities. (AQO 433/08)

Mr Dodds: The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) has a staff complement of 96, of which 6 posts are currently vacant. HSENI focuses on a number of priority issues, which are responsible for a disproportionately high number of cases of ill health and injury. These include manual handling and repetitive work; work-related stress; exposure to asbestos fibres; falls from height; transport in the workplace; and slips and trips. In addition to these priority issues, HSENI also focuses attention on the high risk work sectors of construction, quarrying and agriculture.

Tourist Accommodation

Mr P Maskey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount spent on hotel and tourist accommodation by Invest NI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, in the last year. (AQO 487/08)

Mr Dodds: In April 2002 the responsibility for the administration of the Capital Investment Programme for tourism accommodation development moved from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to Invest Northern Ireland (Invest NI).

In the financial year ending 31 March 2007 Invest NI paid £3,090,331.96 towards tourist accommodation projects of which £2,676,532.88 was for hotels.

Irish Language Businesses

Mr Brolly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what steps he has taken to sustain Irish language businesses in Northern Ireland. (AQO 492/08)

Mr Dodds: In order to qualify as an Invest NI client, businesses must be capable of demonstrating that they have, or have the potential to, achieve sales of over £100,000 per year, with sales outside NI of at least 25% of turnover or greater than £250,000 per year. Invest NI currently has 2,400 client companies. A very small number of these work within the Irish language sector. Invest NI assistance is dependent on businesses submitting proposals to the Agency for consideration. Invest NI will consider any such approach from Irish language businesses and their proposals will be assessed against the criteria outlined above.

ENVIRONMENT

Health Impacts of the Built Environment

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of the conclusions reached in the 'Health Impacts of the Built Environment' document, published by the Institute of Public Health in Ireland. (AQW 499/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): I have noted the conclusions of this document. My Department will participate fully in the review, due to start in 2008, which is to be carried out by the Ministerial Group on Public Health.

Planning Conditions

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the reasons why a planning condition specifying that obscure glass be fitted in windows at 18 Brae Grove, Ballygowan, has not been enforced by the Planning Service. (AQW 636/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department has concluded that because the condition relating to the use of obscure glazing is imprecise in that it does not specify which one of a number of windows in the relevant elevation it refers to, as such it would be unenforceable. The case has been closed and the complainant advised that the Department regrettably proposed to take no further action in relation to the matter.

The Department apologises for the error which has resulted in the case being closed without a satisfactory conclusion. Staff have been made aware of the developments and informed that such lapses should not be repeated.

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment if she will make a clear statement on the implications of the recent High Court decision on Draft Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside; and in particular, if she will (i) detail any policy implications; (ii) clarify the situation in respect of refusals made by the Planning Service under the 'unlawful' Draft PPS 14; and (iii) clarify the situation in respect of refusals made by the Planning Service under Draft PPS 14, and later upheld by the Planning Appeals Commission. (AQW 648/08)

Mrs Foster: A final decision by the Courts on the legal proceedings of draft PPS 14 is still awaited. I shall make a clear statement on draft PPS 14 when this is received.

In respect of refusals issued on the basis of draft PPS 14 since its introduction in March 2006, the Departmental Solicitors Office has clearly indicated that these remain valid decisions as they are protected by the public law principle of presumptive validity. This means that unless such decisions are the subject of a timely legal challenge themselves they remain valid.

In terms of an appeal decision where the Planning Appeal Commission dismissed the appeal, Planning Service can decline to consider a repeat application; however this is a discretionary power.

Rural Planning Policy

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to clarify what rural planning policy now applies, from 16 March 2006 onwards. (AQW 649/08)

Mrs Foster: The policy provisions of Draft Planning Policy Statement 14 'Sustainable Development in the Countryside' have applied since 16 March 2006 and continue to be a material consideration in the decision making process. This will remain the case until the final outcome of the legal proceedings taken by Omagh District Council against Draft PPS 14 is known.

Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment what action she will take to ensure that the appropriate Articles (e.g. Article 40) of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 are fully enforced, requiring developers to carry out whatever infrastructural upgrades are required to meet additional pressures on roads, sewerage, schools and other social facilities, created by proposed developments.

(AQW 682/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department has the power under Article 40 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to enter into legally binding planning agreements with developers to secure the provision of for example open space, additional community facilities etc where it is appropriate to do so. Planning Service's normal approach is to attach planning conditions to assure the necessary infrastructure is provided but Article 40 also may be used where it is not possible to secure the provision of such facilities by normal planning conditions.

The use of an Article 40 planning agreement is considered by Planning Service on a case by case basis and used where necessary depending on the specific circumstances relating to each planning application.

There are numerous examples where this has been used across Northern Ireland. Article 40 agreements are legally binding and enforceable by injunction.

Planning Applications

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail whether or not the Planning Service will look favourably upon planning applications on sites that form part of the back garden of existing properties, in order to enable families to build on their own land, in light of the increase in house prices throughout Northern Ireland. (AQW 693/08)

Mrs Foster: In determining planning applications that involve the subdivision of existing residential sites Planning Service considers each application within the relevant planning policy context set out in PPS 7: Quality Residential Developments and PPS 12: Housing in Settlement as well as taking account of all other relevant material planning considerations.

There is considerable variation in the size and specific characteristics of individual residential sites and Planning Service must deal with each case on its individual merits. Current policy makes it clear that over-development of a site, leading to an unacceptable loss of the established character of an area and an adverse impact of the privacy and amenity of adjoining residential properties is unacceptable.

Medieval Fish Traps

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment if she will authorise an archaeological excavation of the medieval fish traps on the coastline of Newcastle. (AQW 725/08)

Mrs Foster: There are no current plans for a full programme of maritime archaeological recording in the Newcastle area and therefore I do not think it would be appropriate to undertake excavations at this time. Such excavations will be considered when resources are available to carry out a full archaeological recording programme.

Lignite Resource Area

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of objections that have been received in relation to the Lignite Resource Area in North Antrim, under the draft Northern Area Plan. (AQW 727/08)

Mrs Foster: The Draft Northern Area Plan 2016 was published on 11 May 2005. It contains one Policy and one Designation relevant to the Lignite Resource Area in North Antrim.

My Department has received:

- 3,847 objections and 4 counter objections to Policy MIN 1: Protection of the Lignite Resource, and
- 3,914 objections and 6 counter objections to Designation COU 15: Lignite Resource Area.

Redevelopment of Land, Magheramorne

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking to encourage the redevelopment of former industrial lands at Magheramorne in a sustainable manner; and what consideration is she giving to the views of a wide variety of conservation and residents' groups who wish to see this brownfield site further enhance the environment in Larne Lough. (AQW 733/08)

Mrs Foster: This planning application is still being processed by Planning Service officials and a final decision on the matter has therefore not yet been taken. All representations that are received in relation to the proposal, including any from residents' groups and others, will of course be given full and careful consideration prior to a decision being reached.

Waste Management

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the support her department will provide for small waste management businesses, in both the community and small business sector. (AQW 737/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service provides small waste management businesses with comprehensive advisory support and funding. Financial support is offered to community groups through ARENA Network's Helping Hands programme, and we are currently supporting a number of voluntary and community based projects through the Community Waste Innovation Fund (CWIF). CWIF has offered some £3m in grants to enable this sector to play its part in reducing waste. Financial support is also provided to the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) which focuses on creating stable and efficient markets for recycled materials and products. This work is supplemented with practical and legislative waste guidance through programmes such as NetRegs a confidential, on-line tool available to all businesses in Northern Ireland, to assist them with complying with environmental legislation.

Gorse Areas

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration she will give to the introduction of grants for the sustainable management of gorse areas, taking into account the amount of money that is currently allocated to dealing with gorse fires. (AQW 762/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and the Mourne Heritage Trust are working together on the development of a sustainable management plan for gorse control.

An initial pilot study of gorse fire incidents in the Mournes area is being carried out. The study has two main aims: one is to reduce the likelihood of malicious gorse fires through the targeting by the relevant authorities of anti-social behaviour. The second aim is to improve the area of priority habitats in the Mournes by the removal of invasive gorse through financial support and expert advice to landowners within designated sites.

This will be delivered through DARD's agri-environment schemes or through management agreements between the land owners and EHS.

It is hoped that the reduction of invasive gorse, coupled with a close examination of anti-social behaviour trends, will reduce the resource requirements of the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service to tackle such gorse fires in the future.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration she has given to increasing the amount of funding allocated to the management of Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. (AQW 763/08)

Mrs Foster: I fully recognise the value of the partnerships that have been established in Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs) and the challenge of securing sustainable funding. My officials have just completed the first phase of a review of our support to partnership bodies, with a view to achieving more financially secure management arrangements for AONBs in the future.

The next phase will be to examine models elsewhere such as the Sustainable Development Fund in England and Wales. My officials will then meet with current and potential co-funders to explore further funding options.

Staff Team Building

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises, in each of the last three years. (AQW 806/08)

Mrs Foster:

Financial Year	Expenditure on Staff Away Days £'s	Expenditure on Staff Team Building Exercises £'s
2004/05	28,335	7,809
2005/06	43,836	19,482
2006/07	31,731	11,395

Comprehensive Spending Review: Good Relations

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within her department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 837/08)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that the Department is committed to ensuring that it fulfils its duties under both Section 75(1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 in relation to the promotion of equality of opportunity and the desirability of promoting good relations. Promotion of equality of opportunity and good relations is an important part of departmental policy development, legislative activities and operational programmes. For each of the Comprehensive Spending Review (known as Budget 2007 in Northern Ireland) spending and efficiency proposals put forward by the Department a High Level Impact Assessment (HLIA) form, agreed by the Equality Commission for the Budget process, has been completed showing how each proposal has been considered against both duties. Indeed the Equality Commission held a forum earlier in the year, with representation from all departments, to discuss the equality of opportunity and good relations agenda as it relates to the Budget process.

Comprehensive Spending Review: Deloitte Touche Report

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within her department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 838/08)

Mrs Foster: The report, which was commissioned by the previous administration in March 2006, is an independent piece of research into the financial cost of the Northern Ireland (NI) divide. The final report, which is unpublished, represents the views of Deloitte and not those of the First Minister, Deputy First Minister and the Executive and therefore does not form an agreed basis for future policy development. I should also say that the services provided by my Department are generally provided to the whole community on a common basis and have not therefore been particularly affected by the divisions in the community.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: Correspondence from MLAs

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail all correspondence from MLAs that has been recorded on the Planning Service's file for the private application for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway; and to list the names of all MLAs from whom such correspondence has been received. (AQW 842/08)

Mrs Foster: The only letter from an MLA on the planning file is a copy of a letter from Mr Ian Paisley Jr. to the then Secretary of State on 20 January 2005 listing matters of importance to the constituents in North Antrim.

The letter was copied to the file for information purposes only and Planning Service did not treat this letter as a representation. The letter has been available to view through the open file system.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: UNESCO Consultation

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment, in view of the Giant's Causeway's World Heritage Site status, if she will explain why she did not consult with UNESCO prior to issuing her statement of 10 September 2007, saying that she was minded to grant planning permission to Seaport Investments; and if she will now consult with UNESCO on this issue. (AQW 843/08)

Mrs Foster: I did not consult with UNESCO prior to making my announcement on 10 September 2007 because it was not necessary to do so. As a matter of courtesy my officials advised the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) and UNESCO of my announcement and stated that I would provide a full report in due course.

In my statement I said that while I saw considerable merit in the proposal from Seaport Investments Limited there were some aspects which required clarification. I have asked my officials to engage with the developer and key stakeholders on those aspects and to report the outcome.

I will notify UNESCO before I make a final decision if there is any question that my decision will impact on the World Heritage Site.

DCMS is the normal channel for communications with UNESCO on matters relating to World Heritage Sites. It is therefore normal practice for my Department to deal with issues relating to UNESCO through DCMS.

Although UNESCO officials visited the Giant's Causeway in 2003 and 2005, that was prior to my Ministerial responsibility and I did not therefore have occasion to meet them.

I am in correspondence with Margaret Hodge, the Minister responsible for Culture, Creative Industries and Tourism at DCMS, in relation to the planning application which is under my consideration.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: Communication with UNESCO

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment, in view of the Giant's Causeway's World Heritage Site status, if she will explain why her department has no ongoing direct channel of communication with UNESCO; and if one will now be established.

(AQW 844/08)

Mrs Foster: I did not consult with UNESCO prior to making my announcement on 10 September 2007 because it was not necessary to do so. As a matter of courtesy my officials advised the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) and UNESCO of my announcement and stated that I would provide a full report in due course.

In my statement I said that while I saw considerable merit in the proposal from Seaport Investments Limited there were some aspects which required clarification. I have asked my officials to engage with the developer and key stakeholders on those aspects and to report the outcome.

I will notify UNESCO before I make a final decision if there is any question that my decision will impact on the World Heritage Site.

DCMS is the normal channel for communications with UNESCO on matters relating to World Heritage Sites. It is therefore normal practice for my Department to deal with issues relating to UNESCO through DCMS.

Although UNESCO officials visited the Giant's Causeway in 2003 and 2005, that was prior to my Ministerial responsibility and I did not therefore have occasion to meet them.

I am in correspondence with Margaret Hodge, the Minister responsible for Culture, Creative Industries and Tourism at DCMS, in relation to the planning application which is under my consideration.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: UNESCO Official

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment if she will explain why she was not aware of the name of the senior UNESCO official who has had responsibility for the Giant's Causeway for several years, as she stated on Radio Ulster on 5 October 2007; and if she will now meet with this official.

(AQW 845/08)

Mrs Foster: I did not consult with UNESCO prior to making my announcement on 10 September 2007 because it was not necessary to do so. As a matter of courtesy my officials advised the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) and UNESCO of my announcement and stated that I would provide a full report in due course.

In my statement I said that while I saw considerable merit in the proposal from Seaport Investments Limited there were some aspects which required clarification. I have asked my officials to engage with the developer and key stakeholders on those aspects and to report the outcome.

I will notify UNESCO before I make a final decision if there is any question that my decision will impact on the World Heritage Site.

DCMS is the normal channel for communications with UNESCO on matters relating to World Heritage Sites. It is therefore normal practice for my Department to deal with issues relating to UNESCO through DCMS.

Although UNESCO officials visited the Giant's Causeway in 2003 and 2005, that was prior to my Ministerial responsibility and I did not therefore have occasion to meet them.

I am in correspondence with Margaret Hodge, the Minister responsible for Culture, Creative Industries and Tourism at DCMS, in relation to the planning application which is under my consideration.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment if she will explain why UNESCO was informed of developments in relation to the Giant's Causeway only at the same time as her statement to the press on 10 September 2007; and what is her assessment of whether or not this is the best way of maintaining the support of UNESCO in relation to this issue. (AQW 846/08)

Mrs Foster: I did not consult with UNESCO prior to making my announcement on 10 September 2007 because it was not necessary to do so. As a matter of courtesy my officials advised the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) and UNESCO of my announcement and stated that I would provide a full report in due course.

In my statement I said that while I saw considerable merit in the proposal from Seaport Investments Limited there were some aspects which required clarification. I have asked my officials to engage with the developer and key stakeholders on those aspects and to report the outcome.

I will notify UNESCO before I make a final decision if there is any question that my decision will impact on the World Heritage Site.

DCMS is the normal channel for communications with UNESCO on matters relating to World Heritage Sites. It is therefore normal practice for my Department to deal with issues relating to UNESCO through DCMS.

Although UNESCO officials visited the Giant's Causeway in 2003 and 2005, that was prior to my Ministerial responsibility and I did not therefore have occasion to meet them.

I am in correspondence with Margaret Hodge, the Minister responsible for Culture, Creative Industries and Tourism at DCMS, in relation to the planning application which is under my consideration.

Seaport Investments Planning Application

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail what representations her department has received from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in support of the planning proposal from Seaport Investments, prior to 10 September 2007. (AQW 847/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department has received no representations supporting the Seaport Investments planning proposal from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI). During the processing of the application Geological Survey of Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, both organisations associated with DETI, were consulted. The responses received have been available through the open file procedure and have been considered by Planning Service during the processing of the application.

Planning Proposal at the Giant's Causeway

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to her answer to AQW 568/08, if she will clarify which MP was scheduled to hold a site meeting on 3 January 2007. (AQW 854/08)

Mrs Foster: I am neither aware of the scheduled site meeting on 3 January 2007, in respect of the planning application at the Giant's Causeway, to which you refer nor which MP may have been involved. However, if you have more specific information I will be happy to instruct my officials in Planning Service to investigate further and will inform you of the outcome.

Northern Area Plan

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the implications that the recent Judicial Review of the Northern Area Plan will have on the Draft Ards and Down Area Plan. (AQW 903/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department gave public notice in January 2005 that it determined in accordance with the European Directive and consequent Regulations that a Strategic Environmental Assessment of the Ards and Down Area Plan 2015 was not feasible. In this respect there are no implications from the ongoing legal process relating to the Strategic Environmental Assessment of the Draft Northern Area Plan for the Draft Ards and Down Area Plan.

Larne Shoreline

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what is her assessment of the impact of the continuing demolition of large dwellings along the shoreline at Larne, and their replacement with high density apartments, in light of the fact that this is the first area seen by tourists arriving in Northern Ireland on the North Channel ferry routes. (AQW 997/08)

Mrs Foster: The issue of the demolition of dwellings and their replacement by apartments has yet not become a significant problem as only two permissions have been granted. However, there is pressure for further re-development along this shoreline and I am aware of the concern being expressed by the local community about the impact of such change. Additional guidance to planning staff has recently been issued on my instruction about the application of current policy in respect of this type of development to ensure the established character of this area is properly protected in line with policy objectives and that the individual or cumulative effects of proposals do not significantly erode the environmental quality, character and amenity of existing areas, for example through inappropriate design or over development.

High Density Developments

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she will take to prevent coastal towns and villages in East Antrim from becoming overwhelmed by high density, high profile developments, similar to those that have impacted adversely on communities along the north coast. (AQW 998/08)

Mrs Foster: I am aware of the concerns being expressed about the impact of new development on small towns and villages and I can confirm that existing policy provisions and specifically the intensification of development within existing residential areas is currently being considered by a joint group of officials within my Department and DRD. More recently, Planning Service issued a circular on my instruction to all its professional planners to remind them of the need to fully consider the impact on the established residential character when processing applications for new residential development.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to her answer to AQW 568/08, if she will clarify which MP was scheduled to hold a site meeting on 3 January 2002. (AQW 1001/08)

Mrs Foster: There was no site meeting on 3 January 2002, in respect of the Seaport Investment planning application at the Giant's Causeway. The meeting that you seem to be referring to is one mentioned on file in a report from the local planning office which details some planning history around the Causeway Centre. The meeting was a deferral meeting that took place on 3 January 2002 after Planning Service had consulted Moyle Council on 17 December 2001 with an opinion to refuse an application E/2001/0302. The Council disagreed with the Planning Service opinion and a meeting with local councillors, Randal McDonnell, Gardiner Kane, David McAllister, William Graham, George Hartin and Catherine McCambridge and the local MP, Dr I R K Paisley MP MLA was arranged to discuss the case.

The application that was the subject of the deferral site meeting was for the erection of an arts, crafts and cultural centre with ancillary facilities and customer/visitor parking on land at Runkerry Road opposite the terminus for the Bushmills/Giant's Causeway railway. The site was different from that of the current Seaport Investments site although there was a slight overlap. The application was subsequently the subject of a non-determination planning appeal which was dismissed by the Planning Appeals Commission on 11 July 2002.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Public Sector Employment

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he is taking to increase public sector employment in East Antrim, in light of the DETI Census of Employment that shows only 10% public sector employment in East Antrim, compared to 62% public sector employment in South Belfast and 53% in Belfast as a whole. (AQO 25/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): The consultation on 'The Guiding Principles for the Location of Public Sector Jobs in Northern Ireland' which closed on 30 April 2007 is the first step in developing a framework which would facilitate future decision-making on the location of public sector jobs. Following analysis of the consultation responses the Executive Committee held an initial discussion on the matter in July 2007 and will discuss the matter further this month.

Parenting Initiatives

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Finance and Personnel what funding is being made available to implement cross-cutting parenting initiatives in the Department of Finance and Personnel, the Department of Education and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. (AQW 667/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Department of Finance and Personnel does not take forward any cross-cutting parenting initiatives.

The Department of Education allocates earmarked funding for parenting initiatives to the Education and Library Boards; the total funding provided for 2007-08 is £260,000.

With regard to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, the Secretary of State's announcement, on 6 December 2006, of a further £6m from the Children and Young People's Package has resulted in £4.5m being made available this financial year to target families and parents in need of additional support through the following initiatives:

	£'000
Contact Centres	800
Young People/Parent Support – young children on edge of crime	1,000
Young Carers – caring for adults	500
Family Group Conferencing	500
Family Therapeutic Workers	500
Mediation	210
Parent Helpline	250
Information service for parents	198
Parenting Programmes	344
Children's Centres	125
Total	4,427

Census

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration he is giving to the introduction of censuses at five-yearly intervals, rather than at the current ten-yearly interval. (AQW 774/08)

Mr P Robinson: Planning is proceeding on the basis that the next census of population will take place in 2011 in conjunction with other parts of the United Kingdom. The need for a census at more frequent intervals is kept under review and forms an integral part of the evaluation process after each census. To date the ten yearly benchmark of the population is considered to have achieved the right balance between the accuracy of population estimates and cost.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the implications for Northern Ireland of the Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 1025/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer announced the outcome of the 2007 Comprehensive Spending Review on Tuesday 9 October 2007, alongside his Pre-Budget Report. In overall terms the Comprehensive Spending Review provides for the Northern Ireland DEL to increase by an average of 1.7% per annum in real terms over the period 2008-09 to 2010-11.

However, prior to the CSR announcement, downward adjustments were made, by the Treasury, to the 2007-08 baselines of some Whitehall Departments, particularly the Department of Health. This had a consequential impact on the baselines of the Devolved Administrations (via the application of the Barnett formula to those adjustments). In the case of Northern Ireland, there has been a reduction of £114 million which means the average annual real terms growth compared to actual 2007-08 spend is lower, at 1.2%, with growth of only 0.3% in 2010-11.

Notwithstanding this issue, the resources made available to NI over the CSR period amount to £443 million more than was available within the position set out by the Chancellor in May of this year. In addition, through direct discussions with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, I have been able to secure access to our full stock of End Year Flexibility over the period – again representing a significant addition, in this case some £295 million, over the position reached in May.

Although I would, of course, have hoped for a better outcome from the CSR, the overall fiscal position at UK level has been clear for sometime, and the position is not unexpected. The CSR outcome further highlights the need for local departments to deliver significant levels of cash releasing savings in the coming year in order to meet costs pressures and provide for improved services. This will require Executive Ministers to make some difficult and challenging decisions as regards the prioritisation of public services as well as how those services are delivered.

In this respect I am establishing a Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit to identify the scope to generate cash-releasing efficiencies and improve delivery across the public sector.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Patients Treated in Great Britain

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will provide a breakdown of (i) the number of occasions upon which patients from Northern Ireland have received treatment; and (ii) the types of treatment given, at hospitals in Great Britain, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 695/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The number of occasions upon which patients from Northern Ireland received treatment; and type of treatment given (by specialty) at hospitals in Great Britain, in each of the last five years is detailed in the table below.

Specialty	Number of occasions upon which patients from NI have received treatment at hospitals in GB
	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
General Surgery	137	126	200	199	207
Urology	7	13	17	18	44
T & O Surgery	100	147	120	199	268
ENT	3	34	13	25	25
Ophthalmology	94	113	136	140	169
Oral Surgery	2	2	6	4	10
Orthodontics	0	0	0	0	1
Neurosurgery	12	11	25	57	23
Plastic Surgery	58	42	41	38	102
Cardiac Surgery	304	199	199	117	115
Paediatric Surgery	20	27	30	25	84
Thoracic Surgery	2	1	0	1	7
Accident & Emergency	0	0	1	0	12
Anaesthetics	2	6	0	0	7
General Medicine	0	0	0	6	26
Gastroenterology	2	7	5	13	22
Endocrinology	0	2	10	6	7
Haematology	10	24	31	20	17
Audiological Medicine	1	1	14	1	0
Clinical Genetics	0	2	1	7	14
Clinical Immunology & Allergy	1	2	0	4	5
Rehabilitation	1	2	0	1	4
Cardiology	58	73	125	121	160
Dermatology	4	2	10	14	18
Thoracic Medicine	0	1	3	3	1
Infectious Diseases	0	4	0	2	2
Genito-Urinary Medicine	0	0	0	0	0
Nephrology	3	4	3	6	1
Medical Oncology	0	3	0	2	7
Nuclear Medicine	4	0	0	0	0
Neurology	96	95	103	134	191
Rheumatology	8	10	7	5	7
Paediatrics	136	140	154	98	149
Paediatric Neurology	8	9	16	17	19
Geriatric Medicine	0	0	0	0	4

Specialty	Number of occasions upon which patients from NI have received treatment at hospitals in GB
	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07
Dental Medicine Specialties	4	0	4	3	4
Obstetrics	5	24	12	21	32
Gynaecology	7	8	15	13	34
Obstetrics (Ante Natal)	0	1	0	0	0
GP Other	0	0	0	0	3
Mental Illness	111	154	181	235	295
Child & Adolescent Psychiatry	2	4	1	1	12
Old Age Psychiatry	14	17	9	9	1
Clinical Oncology	66	58	98	108	92
Radiology	0	0	2	12	9
Chemical Pathology	0	1	0	0	0
Haematology	0	5	4	4	7
Medical Microbiology	0	0	0	1	0
Other	340	301	357	493	450

Source: Health and Social Services Boards

Patients Treated in Great Britain

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients from Northern Ireland who (i) were offered medical treatment at hospitals in Great Britain; (ii) received medical treatment at hospitals in Great Britain; and to detail the cost his department incurred in the provision of this service, in each of the last five years. (AQW 697/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of patients from Northern Ireland who (i) were offered medical treatment at hospitals in Great Britain is not available

The number of patients from Northern Ireland who (ii) received medical treatment at hospitals in Great Britain in each of the last five years are detailed in the table below.

Financial year	Number of patients from Northern Ireland who received medical treatment at hospitals in GB
2002/03	893
2003/04	841
2004/05	896
2005/06	1070

Financial year	Number of patients from Northern Ireland who received medical treatment at hospitals in GB
2006/07	1341

Source: Health and Social Services Boards

The cost incurred by the Department for Health, Social Services and Public Safety in the provision of this service, are only available from financial year 2003/04 to 2005/06. This information is detailed in the table below.

Financial year	Cost incurred by DHSSPS in the provision of medical treatment for patients from Northern Ireland at hospitals in GB (£ million)
2003/04	5.6
2004/05	8.7
2005/06	10.9

Source: DHSSPS

The above figures relate to payments made directly to hospitals in Great Britain by the four Health and Social Service Boards. Further expenditure may have been incurred by Trusts who have received funding from the Boards, but who have opted, for medical reasons, to send a patient to Great Britain for treatment. Information on these costs is not captured by the Department.

European Regulation 1924/2006

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is his assessment of the impact of European Regulation 1924/2006 on nutrition and health claims, which applies from 1 July 2007, and which will restrict the legitimate activities of dieticians to communicate practical health information about food and drinks. (AQW 719/08)

Mr McGimpsey: European Regulation 1924/2006 applies to commercial communications only. It will not control dieticians' ability to provide advice or information on Nutrition and healthy eating in a non-commercial context.

The Food Standards Agency has produced a Regulatory Impact Assessment which accompanied the implementing Statutory Rules of Northern Ireland and was laid before the Assembly on 27 July 2007. The Government's Regulatory Impact Assessment reflects information received from consultations with stakeholders.

Community Care Packages

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who were awaiting community care packages on 31 March 2007, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 720/08)

Mr McGimpsey: At 31 March 2007, 635 people were awaiting community care packages in Northern Ireland, of which 347 were waiting in the community and 288 in an acute setting.

HSC Trust	Total Waiting for Community Care
Belfast HSC Trust	136
Northern HSC Trust ¹	244
South Eastern HSC Trust	188
Southern HSC Trust	13
Western HSC Trust	54
Northern Ireland	635

Source: DHSSPS Information returns CC5b & DD1.

¹ The Trust of residence of 19 patients waiting in an acute setting in Northern HSC Trust hospitals is unavailable. These patients have been counted as Northern HSC Trust residents.

NHS Dentists

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will provide a break down, by Health and Social Care Trust, of the number of dentists currently accepting National Health Service patients. (AQW 775/08)

Mr McGimpsey: It is not possible to provide information on the number of dentists who will accept new Health Service patients as this information is not collected centrally; however, Table 1 provides information on the number of dentists registered to provide Health Service dentistry in each Health and Social Care Trust at September 2007 who have had new Health Service patient registrations in the previous year. These could include re-registrations of existing patients whose 15-month registration period had elapsed or patients who have moved from another dentist. Note that it does not mean that these dentists will continue to accept Health Service registrations, nor that other dentists will not have Health Service registrations in the future.

TABLE 1

Health & Social Care Trust	Number of dentists with new Health Service patients registrations ¹²³⁴
Belfast	199

Health & Social Care Trust	Number of dentists with new Health Service patients registrations ^{1 2 3 4}
Northern	181
South Eastern	140
Southern	152
Western	118
Total	790

Source: Central Services Agency

- 1 Includes Principal dentists only - excludes assistants and Vocational Dental Practitioners.
- 2 Dentist numbers taken from the list of all dentists registered to provide Health Service dentistry in September 2007.
- 3 Should a dentist work in more than one practice within a Health and Social Care Trust then they have only been counted once within that Trust but if they work across Trusts then they have also been counted once in each relevant one.
- 4 Includes dentists working in the 12 month period October 2006 to September 2007 with registered patients at September 2007 who were not registered at October 2006

New Hospital in Omagh

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the proposed timetable for the opening of the new hospital in Omagh; and what services will be provided by the hospital. (AQW 786/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The construction of the new Local Hospital Complex is expected to be completed in 2011/12. Advance works contracts will start shortly and target project milestones are:

Appoint Preferred Bidder	2009/10
Construction commenced	2010/11
Transfer to New Hospital	2012/13

The new hospital is expected to provide 70% to 80% of the hospital services required by the local population. Services are expected to include:

- A 24/7 urgent care centre,
- Outpatient services,
- Diagnostic services,
- Renal dialysis,
- Day procedures and day case surgery,
- Inpatient beds, and
- Ambulatory care services.

In addition, the Local Hospital Complex will include:

- A Health and Care Centre, and
- A Mental Health Centre with inpatient beds.

Nurses in Training

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of nurses trained in hospitals in Northern Ireland, in the final year prior to the introduction of the delivery of this training in universities. (AQW 788/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Prior to the Department commissioning nurse training from Queen's University with effect from September 1997, student nurses were trained in five colleges of nursing in Northern Ireland. These colleges were the responsibility of the National Board for Nursing which ceased to exist with effect from 31st March 2002.

Based on bursary starter figures for the three years 1994, 1995 and 1996, it can be determined that there were approximately a total of 1391 nurses in training prior to September 1997.

Non-EU Nurses

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of nurses from abroad who are currently employed in Northern Ireland. (AQW 789/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information is not available in the form requested. Information is only collected on numbers of nurses from EU and non-EU countries, and the available latest information indicates that there are 909 (1) nurses (855.73 WTE (2)) from non-EU countries employed in the Health Service in Northern Ireland.

Notes:

1. These figures do not include Nursing Auxiliaries and bank staff.
2. WTE = Whole-Time Equivalent.

Nurses in Training

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of nurses trained in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 790/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The numbers of pre-registration nurses that began training in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years are as follows:

FULL TIME UNDERGRADUATES

Academic year 2007-2008	730
Academic year 2006-2007	730
Academic year 2005-2006	750

Academic year 2004-2005	750
Academic year 2003-2004	750

EMPLOYMENT BASED PART TIME NURSING

Academic year 2007-2008	52
Academic year 2006-2007	36
Academic year 2005-2006	18
Academic year 2004-2005	0
Academic year 2003-2004	30

Nurse Training Costs

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total cost of training a fully qualified nurse. (AQW 791/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Based on the rates for academic year 2007-2008, the cost in Northern Ireland of training an average student nurse to qualification is in the region of £36,220 per student.

NHS Physiotherapists

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total number of physiotherapists employed in the National Health Service in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 801/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information is detailed in the table below:

PHYSIOTHERAPISTS AND PHYSIOTHERAPY SUPPORT IN NI HSC AS AT 30TH MARCH IN EACH YEAR

	Physiotherapists		Physiotherapy Support
	Headcount	WTE	Headcount	WTE
2003	738	549.18	128	81.64
2004	792	590.26	126	79.1
2005	834	622.81	106	67.6
2006	872	648.42	110	67.91
2007	935	689.55	136	89.21

Source: Human Resources Management System

Notes: 2. WTE = Whole-Time Equivalent.

Physiotherapy Training

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total cost of training a physiotherapy graduate. (AQW 802/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Based on the 2007-2008 academic year's costs, the total cost in Northern Ireland of training a physiotherapy graduate is in the region of £25,311 per student.

Physiotherapist Waiting Times

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time for patients who need to see a physiotherapist. (AQW 803/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the average waiting time for physiotherapy is not collected centrally. Information is, however, collected on completed waiting times for a first outpatient appointment of an episode of care with a community physiotherapist, according to specific time bands.

During the quarter ending 31 March 2007, 18,380 persons attended their first outpatient appointment with a community physiotherapist. Of these, 13,643 had waited less than 3 months, 3,859 had waited 3 to 6 months, and 878 had waited 6 months or more.

	Time waiting			All Patients attending first Physiotherapy appointment
	Less than 3 months	3-6 months	6 months or over
Number	13,643	3,859	878	18,380
Percentage	74%	21%	5%	-

Source: Departmental Information Return CP3

Note: The service may be provided by either community or hospital Trusts

Physiotherapists Commencing Training

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of physiotherapists trained in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 804/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Academic year 2007-2008 - 50

Academic year 2007-2008	50
Academic year 2006-2007	0
Academic year 2005-2006	94
Academic year 2004-2005	70
Academic year 2003-2004	93

Physiotherapists

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to match the demand for physiotherapists with supply from colleges in Northern Ireland. (AQW 805/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department has established on-going workforce planning as a means of maintaining focus on the supply/demand of appropriately trained staff to meet service needs. Recent work carried out has identified a number of areas to be addressed in the longer-term, to safeguard availability of an appropriate physiotherapy workforce into the future. This includes consideration of career development pathways and examination of the optimum balance in grade levels in physiotherapy from junior to the most senior levels.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within his department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 832/08)

Mr McGimpsey: DHSSPS is fully committed to the policy and strategic framework for good relations in Northern Ireland as outlined within the report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy'. DHSSPS promotes a culture of tolerance in which all individuals are treated as equals and, good relations is an underpinning theme in developing our policies and practices and shapes the delivery of high quality public services.

Consideration of good relations is an integral element of my Department's work on the Comprehensive Spending Review. At each stage in the preparation and collation of bids, respondents were required to set out whether the bid had a positive or negative impact on equality, good relations, poverty/social inclusion and sustainable development. This information provided essential evidence to support the prioritisation and ranking of Departmental bids and was incorporated in the information submitted to DFP in support of each bid.

My officials also used their knowledge of stakeholders' needs and views obtained in last year's Priorities and Budget consultation to advise on areas where expenditure might be maintained, be prioritised for any additional funding available, or reduced to help fund higher priority activities in other areas. In particular, prioritisation of mental health and children and young people reflect the views of HPSS stakeholders.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within his department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 841/08)

Mr McGimpsey: DHSSPS is fully committed to the policy and strategic framework for good relations in Northern Ireland as outlined within the report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy'. DHSSPS promotes a culture of tolerance in which all individuals are treated as equals and, good relations is an underpinning theme in developing our policies and practices and shapes the delivery of high quality public services.

Consideration of good relations is an integral element of my Department's work on the Comprehensive Spending Review. At each stage in the preparation and collation of bids, respondents were required to set out whether the bid had a positive or negative impact on equality, good relations, poverty/social inclusion and sustainable development. This information provided essential evidence to support the prioritisation and ranking of Departmental bids and was incorporated in the information submitted to DFP in support of each bid.

My officials also used their knowledge of stakeholders' needs and views obtained in last year's Priorities and Budget consultation to advise on areas where expenditure might be maintained, be prioritised for any additional funding available, or reduced to help fund higher priority activities in other areas. In particular, prioritisation of mental health and children and young people reflect the views of HPSS stakeholders.

Satellite Cancer Centre

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will provide a firm commitment that a satellite cancer centre, based in the north west, will be delivered; and to outline the proposed timescale within which this facility will become operational, in light of the discussions on this issue at the North-South Ministerial Council meeting on 5 October 2007. (AQW 878/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The cancer unit in Altnagelvin Area Hospital is one of five cancer units in Northern Ireland providing a wide range of high quality cancer services from screening and diagnosis to specialist oncology therapies. The Cancer Centre was developed to meet the needs of the population of Northern Ireland until 2015, beyond which further capacity is likely to be required, particularly for radiotherapy services currently only provided at the Cancer Centre.

My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Health and Children, is currently assessing the potential for further cooperation to improve health service provision for people in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Cancer services is one area that will be explored within that process. I am keen to secure improvements in access to services for the population of Northern Ireland where this can be achieved through mutual co-operation. At this stage, however, I am not yet in a position to commit formally to the establishment of a satellite centre in the North West.

Community Care Infrastructure Programme

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will explain the reasons why Strabane Health and Care Centre was not included in the first phase of the Western Health and Social Services Board's Capital Development proposals, under the Community Care Infrastructure Programme.

(AQW 879/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Western Health and Social Services Board's capital development proposals for the Primary and Community Care Infrastructure (PCCI) programme were submitted for approval in the form of a business case to the Department in July 2007. The Strabane Health and Care Centre Project was identified by the Board in this business case as meriting inclusion in the second phase of the PCCI Programme. The prioritisation of projects and their allocation to different phases of the programme was based on an assessment of the state of existing premises and the range of services currently provided. The condition of the current Strabane premises was judged good, with some £900,000 having been spent on improvements to the Health Centre since 2001/02. It is envisaged that detailed proposals for the new Strabane project should be submitted to the Department by the end of 2009. The proposals would be subject to Departmental approval, and availability of the necessary capital and revenue funding. There are no plans for further enhanced services in the interim period.

Strabane Health and Care Centre

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give the timescale within which the business case for Strabane Health and Care Centre will be completed; and to outline what enhanced services are being considered for this centre in the interim period.

(AQW 880/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Western Health and Social Services Board's capital development proposals for the Primary and Community Care Infrastructure (PCCI) programme were submitted for approval in the form of a business case to the Department in July 2007. The Strabane Health and Care Centre Project was identified by the Board in this business case as meriting inclusion in the second phase of the PCCI Programme. The prioritisation of projects and their allocation to different phases of the programme was based on an assessment of the state of existing premises and the range of services currently provided. The condition of the current Strabane premises was judged good, with some £900,000 having been spent on improvements to the Health Centre since 2001/02. It is envisaged that detailed proposals for the new Strabane project should be submitted to the Department by the end of 2009. The proposals would be subject to Departmental approval, and availability of the necessary capital and revenue funding. There are no plans for further enhanced services in the interim period.

Myasthenia Gravis

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his department's current position in relation to the treatment of myasthenia gravis; and what support is available for those who are diagnosed with this disease.

(AQW 893/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Myasthenia gravis is an immune disorder which results in muscle weakness.

A range of treatment and support options are available and will depend on the patient's specific symptoms and their severity. This treatment is neurology led, with elements of care provided by intensive care, thoracic surgery and occasionally ophthalmologists. The medical service is delivered through general neurology clinics throughout Northern Ireland.

In severe cases patients may require specialist in-patient management. This is available in the Royal Victoria Hospital. Out-patient access to a myasthenia specialist for diagnosis and management of complex cases is available within the Belfast Trust at the Belfast City Hospital Muscle Clinic.

Intractable Epilepsy

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with Great Ormond Street Childrens Hospital, specifically in relation to the type of assessment and evaluation methods and diagnostic tools that are used to treat children with intractable epilepsy; and whether or not the hospital can provide a 3-Tesla MRI scanner to treat children suffering from this condition.

(AQW 913/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has been in contact with Great Ormond Street Hospital (GOSH) and I can confirm the hospital offers a wide range of assessment, evaluation, diagnostic and treatment services for children suffering from epilepsy. A recognised expert in the management of intractable epilepsy provides a specialist service at GOSH.

I understand that a 3-TESLA MRI scanner may be used in the diagnosis of illnesses, including epilepsy, but it is not a treatment tool. While GOSH does not have a 3-TESLA MRI Scanner, clinicians have access to the highest quality diagnostic equipment available in the UK.

Home Start Organisations

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to extend the funding for Home Start organisations, under the Children and Young People's Fund, beyond 31 March 2008. (AQW 916/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The four Home-Start projects, Home-Start Armagh and Dungannon, Home-Start Ards, Comber and the Peninsula, Home-Start Down District and Home-Start Newry and Mourne, will continue to be supported by the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety through the Children's Fund component of the Children and Young People's Funding Package until March 2008. As you will be aware, Government spending plans after that date have yet to be finalised.

Ambulance Provision in Ballycastle

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of ambulances and associated staff that are currently stationed in Ballycastle; (ii) the number of nights on which local crews are being used for cover; and (iii) whether or not this level of provision will be developed or continued in the short, medium or long term. (AQW 917/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service advises that one crewed emergency ambulance is currently based at Ballycastle ambulance station providing 24/7 cover in the area. This cover is provided by 11 staff. A back-up emergency ambulance vehicle is also available.

Currently, there are no plans to increase the level of ambulance provision at Ballycastle station.

Ambulances

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to remove bull bars from ambulances and similar vehicles currently in use in Northern Ireland. (AQW 936/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service currently has 3 four wheel drive vehicles fitted with "bull bars". These are specialist response vehicles with winching facilities. The bars form an integral part of the vehicles and provide structural strength and protection when operating the winches in off-road situations. There are currently no plans to remove them.

Compensation for Medical Negligence

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 485/08, to detail the reasons for the number of outstanding compensation claims, in each of the last five years. (AQW 958/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate costs.

Carers

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the support, including respite, that his department provides to carers and their families. (AQW 969/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Carers have a legal entitlement to an assessment of their needs, aimed at supporting them in their caring role. Health and Social Care Trusts are empowered to provide a range of services to carers including the provision of information, advice, training and practical support. An important element of practical support is respite, which may take many different forms from regular breaks to ad hoc sitting services.

Following the launch of the carers' strategy my Department allocated additional funding of £400,000 per annum to support the expansion of existing support services to carers, including flexible respite provision. The Department has also commissioned an in-depth study of the support services available to carers, which will make important recommendations about the type of support that will best meets carers' needs in the future.

Suicide Prevention

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his department's strategy and full level of support for suicide prevention in the North Antrim area. (AQW 970/08)

Mr McGimpsey: A Suicide Prevention Strategy was launched on 30 October 2006, and it contains over 60 actions that aim to reduce the rates of suicide. I have allocated over £3 million annually to support the Strategy's implementation.

Significant work has already been initiated regionally to implement the Strategy, including:

- establishment of a cross-sectoral implementation body;
- a pilot self-harm mentoring scheme and a pilot telephone helpline;
- research into the effects of the troubles on mental health and suicide rates;
- a new Depression Awareness Training Programme for GPs and frontline primary care staff; and
- a new joint North/South public information campaign.

In addition, £1.8 million of the Strategy's funding has been invested, via the four local Health and Social Services Boards, to support communities, and the Northern Health and Social Services Board (NHSSB) was subsequently allocated £363,960 to roll out their local suicide prevention action plan. The Board and local Investing for Health team the Department are now working closely with relevant stakeholders to take forward this action plan, and as part of the plan a number of initiatives have been taken forward in the North Antrim area. These include:

- appointment of a local suicide prevention co-ordinator;
- enhanced support for families bereaved by suicide;
- support for local public awareness campaign;
- additional counselling support for young people and marginalised and disadvantaged groups;
- roll out of suicide intervention and depression awareness skills training; and
- development of a community based small grants scheme programme to support local community based suicide prevention initiatives.

Depression

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the support provided by his department to people in the North Antrim area who are suffering from depression.
(AQW 971/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Depression is a common disorder of varying severity, which can be treated by a range of services and treatments. Services currently can be accessed in the community, primary and secondary care settings and range from self-help and peer support initiatives to specialist mental health inpatient services.

The Northern Health and Social Care Trust provide support to people in the North Antrim area who are suffering from depression through multi – disciplinary Community Mental Health Teams. Patients also receive counselling support including the use of Cognitive Behavioural Therapy techniques. There are two clinical psychologists covering the North Antrim area (including Coleraine). Every GP has information about online courses for depression that people can access free of charge. The voluntary sector is also active in this area.

Ambulances

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of ambulances in Northern Ireland; (ii) the location of ambulance stations; and (iii) the criteria used to determine where ambulance stations are placed.
(AQW 979/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) currently has 132 A&E ambulances and one cardiac ambulance,. It also has 11 Rapid Response and 105 patient care services vehicles. These vehicles are deployed at the following locations which are ambulance stations unless otherwise indicated.

NIAS Division
Northern	Antrim
	Ballycastle
	Ballymena
	Ballymoney
	Carrickfergus
	Coleraine
	Cookstown
	Larne
	Magherafelt
	Portrush*
	Whiteabbey
Southern	Armagh
	Ballygawley*
	Banbridge
	Craigavon
	Dromore*
	Dungannon
	Kilkeel
	Lurgan*
	Newry

NIAS Division
	Warrenpoint*
Eastern	Ardoyne
	Ards
	Ballymacarrett
	Bangor
	Broadway
	Carryduff*
	City Business Park (Derriaghy)
	Donaghadee*
	Downpatrick
	Forster Green*
	Knockbracken
	Lisburn
Eastern (continued)	M1 Business Park*
	Newcastle
	Ulster Hospital*
Western	Altnagelvin
	Castlederg
	Enniskillen
	Fintona*
	Limavady
	Northland*
	Omagh
	Omagh*
	Strabane

*Deployment Point

The majority of NIAS's ambulance stations were inherited on its establishment in 1995 from the four former Health and Social Services Board ambulance services and are generally sited on or near hospital facilities. More recently, scientific models employing historic activity data have been used to determine the location of additional dynamic deployment points from which ambulances can respond most effectively to emergency calls.

Vaccination Programme

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what preparations his department is making to introduce a vaccination programme for cervical cancer; and what plans he has to roll out liquid based cytology screening across Northern Ireland. (AQW 982/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety has bid for funding under the Comprehensive Spending Review to introduce a human papilloma virus (HPV) vaccination programme aimed at reducing the number of deaths from cervical cancer.

The Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety has begun to roll out Liquid Based Cytology across each of the four Health Board areas. It is expected all four board areas will be fully converted by March 2008.

Speech and Occupational Therapy

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what contingency plans he has to ensure that the speech and occupational therapy needs of children and young people are met, during periods of industrial action. (AQW 984/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is considering the provision of services by Allied Health Professionals under the Value for Money Audit Programme and is seeking to establish the level and costs of provision that is needed for temporary cover for therapy services.

My Department is also currently undertaking a review of speech & language therapy services in the form of the Regional Speech and Language Therapy Taskforce. This group will propose future workforce planning arrangements, which take account of gaps in provision. It will also identify issues, relating to current working arrangements and terms and conditions of employment, that impact on service provision.

The Taskforce will produce a report of its findings and recommendations by December 2007.

Cancer Consultants

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of women who are experiencing delays in accessing an appropriate consultant, following diagnosis of (i) breast cancer; (ii) ovarian cancer; and (iii) bowel cancer, due to lack of accessibility in rural areas, broken down by Health and Social Services Board area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 1042/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Information on the waiting time between cancer diagnosis and a subsequent appointment with a consultant is not collected.

I have set the following Priority for Action targets for my Department relating to waiting times for cancer services, to be achieved by 31st March 2008:

All breast cancer referrals deemed urgent according to regionally agreed guidelines for suspected breast cancer should be seen within 14 days of the receipt of the GP referral.

By 31 March 2008, 98% of cancer patients will commence first definitive treatment within 31 days from the date of decision to treat.

By 31 March 2008, 75% of cancer patients will commence first definitive treatment from the date of initial GP referral.

The waiting time from a cancer diagnosis to an appointment with an appropriate consultant thereafter, is not currently a Priority for Action target for my Department. Consequently, this information is not collected.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mains Water Supply, James St, Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of occasions upon which repair work has been carried out to the mains water supply pipe between numbers 1 and 37 James Street, Coleraine, in each of the last ten years. (AQW 604/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that, over the past ten years, 11 repairs have been carried out to the water mains in James Street. Details of the nature and number of the repairs in each of the years is tabled below.

Repair to:	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Burst Watermain		1		1			1			1
Burst Service Pipe	1		1				1
Valve Repair										2
Valve Replacement										1
Faulty Stopcock				1

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the legal costs incurred by his department in respect of the judicial review on Planning

Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside. (AQW 622/08)

Mr Murphy: I am presently unable to answer this question as the Court has yet to make its final decision including the award of costs. However I will write to the Member and provide the information once it becomes available.

Disabled Parking Bays

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of successful and unsuccessful applications for disabled parking bays, broken down by constituency and district council area, in 2005; 2006; and 2007, to date. (AQW 651/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service does not maintain records of applications for disabled parking bays, broken down by constituency or by district council area.

However, in relation to AQW 651/08 the table below details the number of applications for disabled parking bays received by Roads Service, and those subsequently rejected, in the years 2002 to 2006.

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Applications for disabled parking facilities outside homes	278	333	347	355	336
Rejected Applications	180	208	218	198	187

Figures in respect of 2007 are not yet available.

Typically, the reasons why applications are rejected include:

- the applicant is not the driver of the vehicle;
- there are no significant parking problems in the area or the applicant has access to alternative off street parking; or
- the applicant is not a blue badge holder and, if under 65, not in receipt of higher rate of Disabled Living Allowance or Attendance Allowance.

With regard to AQW 652/08, the time taken to process an application for a disabled parking bay, depends on the circumstances of the individual application. I should explain that when an application is received, the availability of parking in the subject area is assessed by site visits at various times of the day. It normally takes about three weeks to complete an assessment and approval is then required from the PSNI before the legislative process, including local consultation, to authorise disabled parking facilities can begin. Subject to there being no objections, this process usually takes about six months to complete.

Installation of Disabled Parking Bays

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the current time taken from the date of application, to the installation of a disabled parking bay, broken down by constituency and district council area. (AQW 652/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service does not maintain records of applications for disabled parking bays, broken down by constituency or by district council area.

However, in relation to AQW 651/08 the table below details the number of applications for disabled parking bays received by Roads Service, and those subsequently rejected, in the years 2002 to 2006.

	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006
Applications for disabled parking facilities outside homes	278	333	347	355	336
Rejected Applications	180	208	218	198	187

Figures in respect of 2007 are not yet available.

Typically, the reasons why applications are rejected include:

- the applicant is not the driver of the vehicle;
- there are no significant parking problems in the area or the applicant has access to alternative off street parking; or
- the applicant is not a blue badge holder and, if under 65, not in receipt of higher rate of Disabled Living Allowance or Attendance Allowance.

With regard to AQW 652/08, the time taken to process an application for a disabled parking bay, depends on the circumstances of the individual application. I should explain that when an application is received, the availability of parking in the subject area is assessed by site visits at various times of the day. It normally takes about three weeks to complete an assessment and approval is then required from the PSNI before the legislative process, including local consultation, to authorise disabled parking facilities can begin. Subject to there being no objections, this process usually takes about six months to complete.

Park and Ride Facilities

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which the proposed Park and Ride facilities at Jordanstown will become operational; and to detail when Park and Ride facilities will be introduced at Greenisland Railway Station. (AQW 659/08)

Mr Murphy: Translink are currently considering the feasibility of constructing a Park and Ride facility at Jordanstown before deciding if the project should proceed. Subject to completion of a satisfactory economic appraisal, Translink hope to complete work to provide Park and Ride facilities at Greenisland by August 2008.

Road Safety

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which a scheme will be brought forward to address road safety issues at the junction of the Doagh Road and Carnmoney Road North; and what progress has been made toward initiating an improvement scheme at the nearby Doagh Road/B90 junction at Mossley railway bridge. (AQW 662/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the detailed traffic modelling of the road junctions at Doagh Road/Carnmoney Road North and Doagh Road/B90 Old Lodge Row in Newtownabbey, is now complete. Roads Service considers that the provision of traffic signals would be the most appropriate form of junction improvement to address the problems being experienced at both junctions.

However, as with all road schemes, these must be prioritised in order to ensure the most urgent and best value for money schemes are progressed. These schemes will have to compete for priority with all other schemes in Roads Service's Eastern Divisional area and progress is subject to the availability of the necessary lands and finances.

You may be aware that, earlier this year, a planning application was lodged at the adjacent Global Point/Ballyhenry industrial development site. A Transport Assessment for the site is currently being considered and early indications are that alterations to a number of junctions on the existing road network (including the Doagh Road / Carnmoney Road North and Doagh Road / B90 Old Lodge Row junctions) will be required to mitigate the impact of this development.

While discussions with the developer are continuing, it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the timescale for improvements at these junctions. I have therefore asked the Divisional Roads Manager to advise you of the outcome, once the discussions have concluded.

Erection of Illegal Signs

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to introduce additional legislation to prevent estate agents from erecting signs on lamp posts and telegraph poles. (AQW 663/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service would acknowledge that the placing/erection of illegal signs is a problem and endeavours to keep Departmental property free from illegal signage. However, dealing with illegal signs erected on telegraph poles is the responsibility of the appropriate utility operator, for example Northern Ireland Electricity or British Telecom.

Under Article 87 of the Roads (NI) Order 1993, Roads Service can serve a notice on the owner of an illegal sign, requesting its immediate removal from Departmental property. Failure to comply with a notice may result in Roads Service removing the illegal sign and recovering any reasonably incurred expenses from the offender.

Roads Service considers that its existing legislative powers are adequate and further legislation is not necessary. Indeed, there are several prosecutions pending against a number of estate agents who continue to offend.

Roads Maintenance

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will explain the reasons why his department's expenditure on roads maintenance in 2007/08 will fall to £109 million, which is £5 million less than the expenditure in 2006/07, and £12 million less than the expenditure in 2005/06. (AQW 670/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to AQW 670/08, my response to your earlier Assembly Question (AQW 323/08) set out the total expenditure incurred by my Department's Roads Service on maintenance activities in 2005/06 and 2006/07, which was £121 million and £114 million respectively. This reflects the final financial year-end position for both these years. However, the budget figure of £109 million for 2007/08 reflects the opening budget position and this amount will be subject to amendment at in-year monitoring rounds during the course of the 2007/08 financial year.

With regard to AQW 671/08, approximately 27% of the total expenditure on maintenance activities was spent in the Greater Belfast Area in the 2005/06 and the 2006/07 financial years, as detailed in the table below.

	2005/06 £000's	2006/07 £000's
Greater Belfast Area	33,000	31,000
Total for the North	121,000	114,000
Percentage	27%	27%

Maintenance expenditure includes all maintenance costs, for example, structural maintenance (which includes resurfacing, reconstruction, surface dressing, patching etc.), routine maintenance (grass cutting, gully emptying and environmental work), traffic management, street lighting and car park maintenance costs.

In distributing the resources available for road maintenance, allocations are made to the four Roads Service Divisions on the basis of need, using a range of weighted indicators tailored to each maintenance activity. The Divisions also use these indicators when apportioning across district council areas to ensure, as far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds.

Roads Maintenance

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement outlining the justification for spending approximately 25% of his department's budget for roads maintenance in 2005/06, and approximately 30% of the 2006/07 budget, on roads in the Greater Belfast area. (AQW 671/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to AQW 670/08, my response to your earlier Assembly Question (AQW 323/08) set out the total expenditure incurred by my Department's Roads Service on maintenance activities in 2005/06 and 2006/07, which was £121 million and £114 million respectively. This reflects the final financial year-end position for both these years. However, the budget figure of £109 million for 2007/08 reflects the opening budget position and this amount will be subject to amendment at in-year monitoring rounds during the course of the 2007/08 financial year.

With regard to AQW 671/08, approximately 27% of the total expenditure on maintenance activities was spent in the Greater Belfast Area in the 2005/06 and the 2006/07 financial years, as detailed in the table below.

	2005/06 £000's	2006/07 £000's
Greater Belfast Area	33,000	31,000
Total for the North	121,000	114,000
Percentage	27%	27%

Maintenance expenditure includes all maintenance costs, for example, structural maintenance (which includes resurfacing, reconstruction, surface dressing, patching etc.), routine maintenance (grass cutting, gully emptying and environmental work), traffic management, street lighting and car park maintenance costs.

In distributing the resources available for road maintenance, allocations are made to the four Roads Service Divisions on the basis of need, using a range of weighted indicators tailored to each maintenance activity. The Divisions also use these indicators when apportioning across district council areas to ensure, as far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds.

Regional Development Strategy

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development if he can confirm that Northern Ireland's road and water infrastructure is overloaded, particularly in relation to the number of apartment blocks being built; and whether or not this issue will be addressed as part of the review of the Regional Development Strategy. (AQW 688/08)

Mr Murphy: The Regional Development Strategy (RDS) provides an important planning framework for tackling the deficiencies in our infrastructure and helping the overall development of our economy and society. The Strategy sends strong signals to all infrastructure providers about the future pattern of development. The first 5 year review of the RDS, which is now being finalised, will give increased emphasis to the need for the provision of necessary infrastructure to support housing development.

The impacts of any development proposals on the public road network and water infrastructure are important material considerations in relation to the determination of individual planning applications. Planning Service consults with DRD Roads Service and Northern Ireland Water (NIW) to ensure that any necessary upgrading of roads and water infrastructure is achieved through the planning process. Proposals which would adversely impact on road safety or damage the environment in terms of inadequate waste water disposal are unlikely to be approved if satisfactory solutions cannot be achieved.

In considering the impact of development proposals, including apartments, Roads Service advises on the appropriate standards and any required road improvements. Where appropriate, developers will be asked to prepare a detailed Transport Assessment, which must consider all modes of transport, with emphasis on walking, cycling and public transport.

NIW acknowledges that parts of the sewerage network across Northern Ireland need to be upgraded to ensure that the capacity is adequate to cater for development and to meet stringent environmental standards. A major programme of Drainage Area Studies is being undertaken to identify any improvements/upgrades required and NIW is committed to the implementation of the recommendations.

Regarding the impact of new apartment blocks on the sewerage system, because NIW requires all new development and re-development to be served by separate foul and rainwater sewers, any additional foul discharge from development does not significantly increase the risk of sewer overload.

NIW has a high level Water Resource Strategy covering the period from 2002 – 2030 which addresses the key issues of improving water quality in line with European legislation and developing the water supply to meet increasing demand.

Traffic Management Scheme in Waterfoot, Co. Antrim

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the progress made by Roads Service in relation to proposals for a traffic management scheme in Waterfoot, Co. Antrim. (AQW 690/08)

Mr Murphy: Firstly, in relation to AQW 690/08, following discussions with local representatives, a number of options have been drawn up for the provision of lay-bys in Main Street, Waterfoot. These lay-bys would reduce the parking on the carriageway, thereby assisting through traffic and helping to relieve traffic congestion. My Department's Roads Service intends to put proposals to local representatives and frontagers shortly, in order to seek their views. Depending on the outcome, Roads Service intends to carry out this scheme during the current financial year.

Secondly, in relation to AQW 691/08, the Shore Road, Cushendall was assessed for traffic calming measures in May 2006. This assessment indicated that a scheme could not be afforded a high priority at that time, when compared with other sites. A further assessment was carried out in January 2007, which suggested that the need for suitable measures had increased slightly. Towards the end of 2007 consideration will be given to the inclusion of a scheme in the programme for 2008/2009. However, as always, it would have to compete with many other requests.

With regard to AQW 692/08, Roads Service continually monitors traffic and road safety, as well as other traffic management issues, throughout North Antrim and other areas, and considers proposals and requests for various measures. Roads Service acknowledges that congestion in rural villages in North Antrim, particularly those on the signed Causeway Coastal Route, is an increasing problem. This congestion is usually related to parking issues. Decriminalised parking enforcement in the area, which has been in operation for nearly one year, is currently being reviewed in terms of the level of enforcement.

Roads Service intends to provide gateways at Ballintoy as a traffic calming measure and consideration is currently being given to requests for further gateways and other traffic calming measures. Their priority for inclusion in the 2008/2009 programme will be determined later this year.

In conjunction with Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and Sustrans, a Rural Schools project will be introduced at St Mary's Primary School in Cushendall. This will introduce Safer Routes to Schools measures at the primary school, to enhance safety and encourage the use of more sustainable and healthier means of travel.

Traffic Calming Measures on the Shore Road, Cushendall

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the progress made by Roads Service in relation to its assessment of the need for traffic calming measures on the Shore Road, Cushendall; and on the proposals to widen the footpath at this location. (AQW 691/08)

Mr Murphy: Firstly, in relation to AQW 690/08, following discussions with local representatives, a number of options have been drawn up for the provision of lay-bys in Main Street, Waterfoot. These lay-bys would reduce the parking on the carriageway, thereby assisting through traffic and helping to relieve traffic congestion. My Department's Roads Service intends to put proposals to local representatives and frontagers shortly, in order to seek their views. Depending on the outcome, Roads Service intends to carry out this scheme during the current financial year.

Secondly, in relation to AQW 691/08, the Shore Road, Cushendall was assessed for traffic calming measures in May 2006. This assessment indicated that a scheme could not be afforded a high priority at that time, when compared with other sites. A further assessment was carried out in January 2007, which suggested that the need for suitable measures had increased slightly. Towards the end of 2007 consideration will be given to the inclusion of a scheme in the programme for 2008/2009. However, as always, it would have to compete with many other requests.

With regard to AQW 692/08, Roads Service continually monitors traffic and road safety, as well as other traffic management issues, throughout North Antrim and other areas, and considers proposals and requests for various measures. Roads Service acknowledges that congestion in rural villages in North Antrim, particularly those on the signed Causeway Coastal Route, is an increasing problem. This congestion is usually related to parking issues. Decriminalised parking enforcement in the area, which has been in operation for nearly one year, is currently being reviewed in terms of the level of enforcement.

Roads Service intends to provide gateways at Ballintoy as a traffic calming measure and consideration is currently being given to requests for further gateways and other traffic calming measures. Their priority for inclusion in the 2008/2009 programme will be determined later this year.

In conjunction with Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and Sustrans, a Rural Schools project will be introduced at St Mary's Primary School in Cushendall. This will introduce Safer Routes to Schools measures at the primary school, to enhance safety and encourage the use of more sustainable and healthier means of travel.

Traffic Management

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to provide better traffic management for all rural villages in the North Antrim area. (AQW 692/08)

Mr Murphy: Firstly, in relation to AQW 690/08, following discussions with local representatives, a number of options have been drawn up for the provision of lay-bys in Main Street, Waterfoot. These lay-bys would reduce the parking on the carriageway, thereby assisting through traffic and helping to relieve traffic congestion. My Department's Roads Service intends to put proposals to local representatives and frontagers shortly, in order to seek their views. Depending on the outcome, Roads Service intends to carry out this scheme during the current financial year.

Secondly, in relation to AQW 691/08, the Shore Road, Cushendall was assessed for traffic calming measures in May 2006. This assessment indicated that a scheme could not be afforded a high priority at that time, when compared with other sites. A further assessment was carried out in January 2007, which suggested that the need for suitable measures had increased slightly. Towards the end of 2007 consideration will be given to the inclusion of a scheme in the programme for 2008/2009. However, as always, it would have to compete with many other requests.

With regard to AQW 692/08, Roads Service continually monitors traffic and road safety, as well as other traffic management issues, throughout North Antrim and other areas, and considers proposals and requests for various measures. Roads Service acknowledges that congestion in rural villages in North Antrim, particularly those on the signed Causeway Coastal Route, is an increasing problem. This congestion is usually related to parking issues. Decriminalised parking enforcement in the area, which has been in operation for nearly one year, is currently being reviewed in terms of the level of enforcement.

Roads Service intends to provide gateways at Ballintoy as a traffic calming measure and consideration is currently being given to requests for further gateways and other traffic calming measures. Their priority for inclusion in the 2008/2009 programme will be determined later this year.

In conjunction with Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and Sustrans, a Rural Schools project will be introduced at St Mary's Primary School in Cushendall. This will introduce Safer Routes to Schools measures at the primary school, to enhance safety and encourage the use of more sustainable and healthier means of travel.

Ulster Grand Prix

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development what restrictions are placed on spectators seeking to attend Ulster Grand Prix motorcycle races at Dundrod. (AQW 696/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised that The Road Races (NI) Order 1986 provides for charging into the race area at the Dundrod circuit during the Ulster Grand Prix. Roads Service and Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) are not aware of any further restrictions placed on spectators during the Ulster Grand Prix. DCAL advises that these would be a matter, in the first instance, for the promoters of the event.

Motorcycle Races

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail which motorcycle races in Northern Ireland charge admission fees to spectators. (AQW 699/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has confirmed that the Ulster Grand Prix is the only motorcycle race held on public roads in the North where an admission charge may be levied under the provisions of the Road Races (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. Roads Service is not aware of charges that may be levied in respect of motorcycle races held on private property.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of business customer payment facilities from Northern Ireland Water's local offices, indicating the method used to redeploy the staff involved, and detailing to what offices these staff members have been relocated. (AQW 710/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that following the centralisation of customer billing at its Customer Relations Centre in Belfast, the range of customer payment methods was extended and all customer payment facilities at local offices were phased out. As the local office payment facilities were used by only a small number of customers, the effect of withdrawal of payment facilities on staff was minimal and redeployment was not required.

The extensive range of payment options available to Northern Ireland Water customers includes an on-line facility, direct debit, cheque, credit or debit card or at a local bank or post office.

All-Ireland Ferry Port

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the likely impact that the establishment of an all-Ireland ferry port at Bremore will have on the future viability of the Port of Larne. (AQW 712/08)

Mr Murphy: I am aware that consideration is being given to development of port facilities at Bremore.

Ports in the North make their own assessments of the commercial opportunities and threats that they face. I would expect therefore that the privately-owned Port of Larne will make such an assessment in respect of any plans that emerge for Bremore.

Two-Way Traffic System on the Shimna Road, Newcastle

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will consider allocating funding to the installation of a two-way traffic system on the Shimna Road, Newcastle, Co. Down. (AQW 726/08)

Mr Murphy: Officials from my Department's Roads Service have advised that traffic flow and movement of traffic within the town of Newcastle was studied during the production of the Sub Regional Transport Plan 2015.

During this process, options for making Shimna Road a two-way flow were considered. However, due to a number of constraints, this would not only be a difficult and costly project to undertake but the emergent benefits would not be obvious. The cost of the work, including the acquisition of land, would be in the region of £1million which could not be seen as a justifiable use of Roads Service's finite resources at this time.

Traffic Management

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total cost of the new traffic management scheme at the former War Memorial site in Enniskillen; and to provide an assessment of the benefits of the scheme since it came into operation.

(AQW 732/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the cost of the new traffic management scheme at the former war memorial site at Gaol Square, Enniskillen is not available to the Department as the scheme was provided by the developer of the new Asda retail outlet. The scheme was provided to mitigate the impact of the additional traffic generated by the new retail development.

Road Service's early observations indicate that the new traffic management scheme is performing satisfactorily.

Provision of Services for People With Disabilities

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to give his assessment of the service to people with disabilities, provided by Disability Action in Belfast and Bridge Accessible Transport in Derry/Londonderry.
(AQW 736/08)

Mr Murphy: Under my Department's Transport Programme for People with Disabilities (TPPD), both Disability Action and Bridge Accessible Transport have service level agreements with the Department to provide accessible transport to people with reduced mobility. I am satisfied that both organizations meet the terms of the agreements.

Recently following a public tendering exercise, the Department introduced new door-to-door services under the TPPD in a further 27 urban areas. These services have a higher specification than the services currently in Belfast and Derry. To ensure consistency of standards across all urban areas, my Department will soon begin a tender process for the provision of door-to-door transport in Belfast and Derry, with a view to commencing the services in these two areas on 1 April 2008.

Road Resurfacing at Lansdowne Gardens, Newtownards

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline what plans he has to re-surface the road at Lansdowne Gardens in Newtownards; and to detail the basis upon which this decision was reached.
(AQW 746/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the carriageway and footways in Lansdowne Gardens were surfaced a considerable number of years ago and their general condition has deteriorated, due to wear and tear, over the years. In addition, some damage was caused, particularly at the two junction entrances to Lansdowne Gardens, as a result of a recent NI Water scheme, which involved additional heavy vehicles using the street as a local diversion route. As such, Lansdowne Gardens would be considered a suitable location for general improvement works.

Unfortunately, there is insufficient finance available to enable this area to be included in any improvement works programme at present. However, the areas damaged by the NI Water scheme will be repaired and Lansdowne Gardens will be kept under review for inclusion in any future programme.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to confirm the amount of money he intends to bid for, with reference to capital and current outlay on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry line, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review process.
(AQW 754/08)

Mr Murphy: The bid which I made to the Comprehensive Spending Review included some £20.4 million capital for the Belfast to Derry line for the period 2008/09 to 2010/11.

No bid has been made for revenue funding on the line as further significant enhancement to services will not be possible until the capital investment has been made.

A2 Between Bangor and Belfast

Dr Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to make the flow of traffic along the A2 between Bangor and Belfast more efficient.
(AQW 773/08)

Mr Murphy: I would refer the Member to my reply to his previous similar question AQW 741/07 dated 28 June 2007.

Short-term proposals, to control right turning movements from the A2 into Sullivan Place and Old Belfast Road, remain on course for completion during this financial year.

The proposed signalisation of the junction at Palace Barracks is a developer-led scheme. I am advised that necessary design work has not been progressed, as anticipated, and that the work may not, therefore, be completed this financial year, as previously indicated.

The longer-term aspirations of Roads Service, to improve this route, remain unchanged.

Traffic Calming

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to carry out a review of the provision of traffic calming measures, with particular reference to introducing more economical methods of traffic calming, given the large numbers of requests for this type of work to be carried out.
(AQW 776/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service advises that its traffic calming policy and procedures were last updated in 2003, following a Best Value Review of its road safety procedures. As a result, requests for traffic calming schemes are prioritised using a points scoring system based on the assessment of a number of road safety and local environmental factors. These include speed and volume of traffic, collision history and general road characteristics. Application of this practice ensures that the highest priority schemes are completed first.

With regard to the methods of traffic calming, I am sure you will appreciate that as police resources to ensure enforcement of speed limits are limited, it is essential that any engineering measures installed in residential areas, are effective at ensuring that road traffic travels at the appropriate speeds. These installations naturally require considerable investment of capital and resources.

Roads Service has experimented with advisory 20 mph zones that incorporate enhanced signs and road markings but do not use road humps or other physical measures. However, experience from here and elsewhere has shown that these, more economical schemes are only effective when they have the support of the entire local community and the roads on which the signs are placed do not carry any through traffic.

Roads Service advises that it has no plans to review the policy on the provision of traffic calming measures, however, I can assure you that Roads Safety is a key priority for Roads Service and that my officials are constantly researching methods to continually improve the safety of our roads.

Railway Spending

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount of money spent on capital projects on the railway line (i) between Derry/Londonderry and Coleraine; (ii) between Coleraine and Ballymena; and (iii) between Ballymena and Belfast, since 1 January 2005.
(AQW 780/08)

Mr Murphy: Translink has advised that the amount of expenditure incurred between 1 January 2005 to 30 September 2007 on capital projects on the Belfast to Derry line is as follows:

(i) £0.552 million between Derry and Coleraine;

(ii) £1.170 million between Coleraine and Ballymena; and

(iii) £0.773 million between Ballymena and Belfast.

This comes to a total of £2.495 million.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the capital projects and other purposes upon which the funding allocated to his department as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review is to be spent.
(AQW 781/08)

Mr Murphy: No funding has been allocated to specific DRD projects and programmes as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review at this stage. The Executive's Draft Budget 2007, which will include proposals for departmental allocations for the 3 years to 2010/11, is scheduled to be published for consultation during November and December 2007.

Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of speed restrictions that are in place on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry railway line, indicating their locations, respective speed limits and the length of time they have been in place.
(AQW 782/08)

Mr Murphy: The general line speed on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry has been downgraded from 70mph to 60mph.

There is also a permanent speed restriction of 40mph for 4 miles near Ballymoney.

The remaining speed restrictions are of a temporary nature and number 9 in total. The following table details these temporary speed restrictions.

Location	Date imposed	Length (miles)	Speed (mph)	Causation
Lisahally	24/9/07	1.0	30	Poor top and line due to deteriorated formation (wet beds)
Balnamore	3/9/07	0.5	30	Life expired formation which requires excavation, removal and replacement.
McConaghy's Crossing	3/9/07	0.25	10	Public road crossing.

Location	Date imposed	Length (miles)	Speed (mph)	Causation
Magherabeg	14/8/07	0.25	50	Work in progress on track alignment at switch and crossing units.
Glarryford	31/7/07	0.25	20	Poor top and line due to deteriorated ground/formation (wet beds).
Roe Bridge	14/5/07	0.25	30	Deteriorated formation, unable to hold alignment.
Ballyboyland	12/3/07	1.0	20	Life expired formation which requires excavation, removal and replacement.
Downhill	22/2/06	0.25	30	Poor alignment due to formation and track skeleton.

Location	Date imposed	Length (miles)	Speed (mph)	Causation
Limavady Junction	28/11/05	0.25	20	New track installed but bridge works required.

Railway Spending

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the locations on the rail network, and when, the £23.6 million railway line investment announced in December 2004, was spent. (AQW 783/08)

Mr Murphy: In 2003, the Railways Review Group (RRG) was established to consider the immediate investment needs of the NIR network and in particular, those of the lines north of Ballymena and Whitehead. As a result of the RRG report, Ministers agreed to provide total funding of £23.6 million (£17.2 million of which was capital and £6.4 million revenue) over a 5 year period from 2005 to maintain services on these lines at their present levels and to prevent deterioration. Details of this expenditure programme are provided below.

	2005/06	2006/07	2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Total
	£'000	£'000	£'000	£'000	£'000	£'000
Whitehead to Larne Relay	2,159	0	0	0	0	2,159
Fencing to prevent trespassing and vandalism	95	219	315	300	300	1,229
Sea Defences	0	70	23	0	0	93
Bridge work	6	109	252	342	0	709
Ballymena to Derry Track Life Extension	0	84	1,228	3,000	7,719	12,031
Ballymena to Derry - Insulated Joint Work	0	85	0	0	0	85
Train Protection Warning System	0	252	0	0	0	252
Bann Bridge - Coleraine	0	26	220	0	0	246
Sundry minor capital projects	29	18	225	124	0	396
Total Estimated Capital Expenditure	2,289	863	2,263	3,766	8,019	17,200
Total Estimated Revenue Expenditure	1,280	1,280	1,280	1,280	1,280	6,400

The revenue funding of £6.4 million was allocated to enable Translink's in-house maintenance teams to maintain and upkeep track sections of these lines on a day to day basis.

Linen Green Housing Development, Sion Mills

Mr Bresland asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will explain the reasons why Roads Service has permitted the developer of the Linen Green housing development, Melmount Road, Sion Mills, to create a bend in the main A5 road. (AQW 784/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service officials have advised me that the "bend" at Melmount Road, Sion Mills, is the result of work to provide a new right turning lane to the entrance to the Linen Green development. A right turn lane at the entrance at this location was considered necessary for safety and traffic progression reasons. The proposal, which required widening on one side of the carriageway, was assessed and approved in accordance with Roads Service standards and construction has proceeded accordingly.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within his department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 833/08)

Mr Murphy: For each of the Resource spending proposals put forward by the Department as part of the Budget 2007 process a High Level Impact Assessment (HLIA), agreed by the Equality Commission for this process, has been completed. As part of the HLIA process, each spending proposal was reviewed to identify whether it would provide an opportunity to promote good relations between people of different race, religion, political opinion, sexual orientation and persons with a disability and persons without, and to ensure that it did not inadvertently inhibit or damage good relations between any of those groups.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within his department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 834/08)

Mr Murphy: The 'Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' has not yet been published. However the final draft indicates that the cost of division in terms of transport and infrastructure are relatively small.

The report has, therefore, not significantly influenced my department's approach to the Comprehensive Spending Review.

A37 Springwell Climbing Lane

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 465/08, to detail the location at which the surplus material from the sister project on the A37 Coleraine to Limavady Road was disposed. (AQW 852/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the A37 Springwell Climbing Lane scheme, completed in 2004, generated approximately 40,000 m³ of surplus material. All of this material was removed to the council tip at Macosquin (about five miles from site) for use as capping material over the dump.

Traffic Calming at Strangford Heights, Newtownards

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the estimated start date for the construction of traffic calming measures at Strangford Heights, Newtownards. (AQW 858/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that the Strangford Heights traffic calming scheme is included in the current two-year programme for Ards.

The consultation period is under way, and subject to no objections being received, it is expected that work will commence early in 2008/09.

Department Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 964/08)

Mr Murphy: My department is not currently projecting an underspend for 2007/08.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Living Over the Shop Scheme

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Social Development to give a timescale within which she will announce the additional town centres that have been successful in their applications to the Living Over the Shop Scheme. (AQW 611/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): The Northern Ireland Housing Executive initiated the application process in February 2007 and nine submissions had been lodged by the closing date of 31st July 2007. These applications are currently being evaluated and it is envisaged that up to five out of the nine submissions will be recommended for 2008 Town Centre Living Initiative Area status. Each Council Chief Executive will be advised of the successful applicants following the Housing Executive Board Meeting on 28 November. The 2008 status becomes active on 1st January 2008 for those successful settlements.

Housing Executive

Mr Bresland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, for each of the last five years, the amount spent by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on (i) internal improvements; and (ii) external maintenance schemes, for housing stock in each of the 36 areas that comprise the Coleraine Borough Council area. (AQW 643/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information is not readily available in the form requested. I have however set out in the table below expenditure on internal and external improvement schemes to Northern Ireland Housing Executive stock within the administrative area covered by its Coleraine District Office.

	2002/03	2003/04	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07	Total
	£k	£k	£k	£k	£k	£k
Internal Improvements*	2094	3727	3146	3801	4792	17560
External Maintenance	1349	2125	648	281	1250	5653

Details of the individual schemes funded have been placed in the Library.

* Internal Improvements include heating replacement schemes, kitchen replacement schemes, and multi element improvement schemes.

 External Maintenance relates to external cyclic maintenance schemes, involving painting and general repairs to the exterior fabric of dwellings.

Construction of Houses, Armagh City

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Social Development if she will confirm that her department is actively supporting the construction of 32 houses and associated single-person dwellings in Armagh city, as proposed by the Housing Executive's southern area management team in Craigavon. (AQW 716/08)

Ms Ritchie: Two schemes at Mullacreevie containing a total of 32 units of general needs accommodation are already included in the published Social Housing Development Programme, as is a scheme of 12 units for the elderly at Ballynahonemore. A need has been identified for 16 units for singles and Housing Associations are working to identify a suitable site. Sites are also being sought in other areas of the Armagh district where need has been identified by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Child Support Agency

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the latest available figures for money lost through fraud and error by the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland, compared with the latest available figures for the Child Support Agency in Great Britain. (AQW 721/08)

Ms Ritchie: During 2006/2007, the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency Investigation Service dealt with 620 referrals. The monetary impact of fraud investigations on Child Maintenance Assessments in 2006/2007 was £72,753.20.

In 2006/2007 twelve cases were forwarded to the Director of Public Prosecutions and eight convictions secured.

Comparative data is not available for other United Kingdom regions.

Bonfires

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development if she will authorise the Housing Executive to develop a consistent policy in relation to bonfires on its property. (AQW 724/08)

Ms Ritchie: The management of bonfires is an interagency issue with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive working in partnership with the PSNI, Fire Service, Councils and local communities.

The Housing Executive adopts a good relations and community led approach to best manage and reduce the number of bonfires and decrease the cost of reinstating sites. Local bonfire management initiatives are monitored by the Housing Executive which is charged with translating its good relations duties under Section 75 (part 2) and community relations policy into actions on the ground through a partnership approach.

The approach to dealing with bonfires aims to:

- reduce the risk to the environment;
- develop a partnership approach which allows the agencies involved to impact on the bonfire issue in a cohesive manner;
- develop a graduated response to bonfires which involves consultation, shared understanding, negotiation and if necessary proportionate and legal use of enforcement methods; and
- promote a shared, inclusive community celebration.

Social Housing

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to provide more social housing in the Ballymena Borough Council area; and to detail (i) the timescale for this; and (ii) the areas in which the increased provision will be located. (AQW 747/08)

Ms Ritchie: During 2008/09, 12 general needs units are planned to go on site at Garvaghy Road, Portglenone. Eighteen general needs units are programmed to go on site in 2009/10 at Tobar Park, Cullybackey. Provision has been made in the programme for 20 general units in Broughshane but a site has yet to be identified and acquired. The programme for 2010/11 – 2011/12 makes provision for a further 58 general needs units but sites have yet to be identified and acquired for some of these.

An interest has been expressed in a portion of the MOD site at St Patrick's Barracks, Ballymena for the development of affordable/social housing units.

In addition to the schemes formally identified within the programme, Housing Associations have registered an interest in a further 12 sites within Ballymena Council area and work is underway to determine the feasibility of developing these sites with a view to acquisition.

Social Housing

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to provide more social housing in the Ballymoney Borough Council area; and to detail (i) the timescale for this; and (ii) the areas in which the increased provision will be located. (AQW 749/08)

Ms Ritchie: During 2008/09, 8 general needs units are planned to go on site at Church Road, Rasharkin. The Social Housing Development Programme for 2010/11 – 2011/12 makes provision for a further 27 general needs units but sites have yet to be identified and acquired for some of these.

In addition to the schemes formally identified within the programme, Housing Associations have registered an interest in a further 5 sites within Ballymoney Council area and work is underway to determine the feasibility of developing these sites with a view to acquisition.

Housing Associations are actively seeking sites in areas where housing need has been identified and the Housing Executive is continually reviewing its own land holdings and working with others to try to identify suitable development opportunities.

Social Housing

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to provide more social housing in the Moyle District Council area; and to detail (i) the timescale for this; and (ii) the areas in which the increased provision will be located. (AQW 750/08)

Ms Ritchie: During 2007/08 two properties in Ballycastle will be acquired and added to the social housing stock. A further scheme for 10 general needs units is planned for 2008/09. The programme for 2009/10 – 2011/12 makes provision for a further 58 general needs units but sites have yet to be identified and acquired for some of these.

Securing land for housing is a particular issue within some areas of Ballycastle District. Housing Associations are actively seeking sites in areas where housing need has been identified and the Housing Executive is continually reviewing its own land holdings and working with others to try to identify suitable development opportunities.

Homeless in South Down

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people in South Down who are declared homeless. (AQW 1010/08)

Ms Ritchie: The numbers of applicants accepted as statutorily homeless by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and still appearing on the waiting list at 30 September 2007 for accommodation in the South Down area are as follows:

Downpatrick	358
Banbridge	10
Newry	316
Total	684

Housing Executive Waiting List

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list, in the South Down area. (AQW 1011/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31 March 2007 there were 2,449 applicants on the waiting list in the South Down area. Of these 1,463 had more than 30 points and are therefore deemed to be in housing stress.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSIONWi-Fi Technology

Mr Shannon asked the Assembly Commission what decisions it has taken regarding the installation of wi-fi technology in Parliament Buildings. (AQW 684/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): In February 2007 the Commission for the Transitional Assembly approved to Award of Contract stage a project to update ageing network equipment in Parliament Buildings. The project was to provide additional network capacity for the Assembly for the next four years, giving enhanced security measures, wireless networking and allowing for future enhancements such as digital telephony and Hansard digital audio. In particular the wireless network facilities were requested by Members and guests in Parliament Buildings including the various political correspondents.

At the NI Assembly Commission meeting of the 9th July 2007 approval was given for the Senior Management Team to continue the procurement process and award of contract on behalf of the Commission during the summer recess. The contract was awarded on the 30th July 2007.

An interim wireless network was installed in Parliament Buildings in the middle of September 2007, to be replaced by the final solution by the end of October 2007.

Electricity Costs in Parliament Buildings

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission to detail the amount spent on electricity for Parliament Buildings, in each of the last five years. (AQW 853/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): The following is a breakdown of cost spent on electricity for the last five years:

Year	£
2002/2003	140,367.42
2003/2004	129,353.11
2004/2005	127,564.42
2005/2006	99,624.16
2006/2007	146,547.64
Total	643,456.75

The decrease in cost during the years 2003/2006 was due to the reduction of the number of building users. However the Assembly Commission is actively seeking to reduce their electricity usage as part of their overall energy management. Guidance is issued to building users to remind them of their responsibilities to assist in energy management and recycling.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 26 October 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

All-Ireland Parliamentary Forum

Mrs D Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what discussions have taken place in relation to the development of an all-Ireland Parliamentary Forum. (AQW 536/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley and Mr M McGuinness): At the North South Ministerial Council Plenary in Armagh in July, the Council noted the provisions of the St. Andrews Agreement relating to a North South Parliamentary Forum. The Council recognised that any development of a joint parliamentary forum was a matter for the Northern Ireland Assembly and the Oireachtas.

It was agreed that officials from the two administrations would make contact with the Northern Ireland Assembly and the Houses of the Oireachtas and report back to the NSMC at the earliest opportunity on the prospects for the development of such a forum. Officials in OFMDFM have written to the Clerk of the Northern Ireland Assembly. We have been advised that the Speaker has commissioned some preliminary research into the format of such a Forum and how best it could operate. We understand that he also discussed the development of the Forum with his counterpart in the Oireachtas during his recent visit to Dublin.

Victims' Groups

Mr Moutray asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the meetings attended by (i) the First Minister; and (ii) the deputy First Minister, with representatives of victims' groups, since assuming office. (AQW 617/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: Since assuming office on the 8th May 2007, (i) the First Minister has not met representatives of victims' groups in an official capacity. However he has met a number of groups and individuals in a personal capacity in his role as MP and MLA. The deputy First Minister met representatives of the Disabled Police Officers Association on the 21st May.

Equality Legislation

Mr Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to the answer to AQW 339/08, to explain why it has not contacted other legislatures to investigate how EU Directives on equality have been implemented in other Member States; and to detail whether or not it will now hold such meetings. (AQW 624/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: Each Member State has an obligation to implement European Directives within set time limits and to determine how best to do so in a way which gives effect to the requirements of the Directives and takes account of each Member State's own national legislation.

Given that implementation of Directives is a matter for each Member State, how others comply with Directives, whilst of interest, is not directly pertinent. We do not therefore normally contact other Member States nor do we plan to do so. However, to ensure consistency of approach across the Member State, officials have regular contact with their counterparts in Great Britain.

As equality is a devolved matter, it is the responsibility of this administration to consider how the requirements of equality Directives impact on Northern Ireland and to bring forward legislation specific to Northern Ireland to implement those Directives.

Policy consideration on the appropriate transposition of EU Directives into domestic law includes consideration of the degree of flexibility available to the Member State and the devolved administration. In doing so we are also required to meet our statutory equality obligations and comply with the Human Rights Act 1998.

If the Member State does not fully implement a directive within a specified timeframe it is likely that the EU will commence infraction proceedings which usually take the form of daily fines until full implementation is achieved. The Member State therefore has limited discretion in the implementation of directives.

Equality Legislation

Mr Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to the answer to AQW 339/08, to detail how it will ensure that EU Directives on equality will be implemented to cater for Northern Ireland's particular local situation, in the absence of evidence of how other regions have implemented such Directives to best suit their local needs. (AQW 626/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: Each Member State has an obligation to implement European Directives within set time limits and to determine how best to do so in a way which gives effect to the requirements of the Directives and takes account of each Member State's own national legislation.

Given that implementation of Directives is a matter for each Member State, how others comply with Directives, whilst of interest, is not directly pertinent. We do not therefore normally contact other Member States nor do we plan to do so. However, to ensure consistency of approach across the Member State, officials have regular contact with their counterparts in Great Britain.

As equality is a devolved matter, it is the responsibility of this administration to consider how the requirements of equality Directives impact on Northern Ireland and to bring forward legislation specific to Northern Ireland to implement those Directives.

Policy consideration on the appropriate transposition of EU Directives into domestic law includes consideration of the degree of flexibility available to the Member State and the devolved administration. In doing so we are also required to meet our statutory equality obligations and comply with the Human Rights Act 1998.

If the Member State does not fully implement a directive within a specified timeframe it is likely that the EU will commence infraction proceedings which usually take the form of daily fines until full implementation is achieved. The Member State therefore has limited discretion in the implementation of directives.

Equality Legislation

Mr Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to the answer to AQW 339/08, to detail whether or not, as part of the department's ongoing contact with counterparts in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland, it will also establish contact with other regions of the European Union, in order to gather information from all sources to investigate the degree of flexibility available when bringing forward equality proposals, with a view to protecting (i) freedom of speech; (ii) the right to protest; and (iii) defining and implementing harassment provisions, so as to grant greater exemptions for people of religious conviction. (AQW 631/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: Each Member State has an obligation to implement European Directives within set time limits and to determine how best to do so in a way which gives effect to the requirements of the Directives and takes account of each Member State's own national legislation.

Given that implementation of Directives is a matter for each Member State, how others comply with Directives, whilst of interest, is not directly pertinent. We do not therefore normally contact other Member States nor do we plan to do so. However, to ensure consistency of approach across the Member State, officials have regular contact with their counterparts in Great Britain.

As equality is a devolved matter, it is the responsibility of this administration to consider how the requirements of equality Directives impact on Northern Ireland and to bring forward legislation specific to Northern Ireland to implement those Directives.

Policy consideration on the appropriate transposition of EU Directives into domestic law includes consideration of the degree of flexibility available to the Member State and the devolved administration. In doing so we are also required to meet our statutory equality obligations and comply with the Human Rights Act 1998.

If the Member State does not fully implement a directive within a specified timeframe it is likely that the EU will commence infraction proceedings which usually take the form of daily fines until full implementation is achieved. The Member State therefore has limited discretion in the implementation of directives.

Staff Team Building

Mr Moutray asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises, in each of the last three years. (AQW 808/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises held in the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister in each of the last three complete financial years is provided in the table below. The period covered includes 1 April 2004 to 31 March 2005, 1 April 2005 to 31 March 2006 and 1 April 2006 to 31 March 2007. For completeness, information is also provided for the current financial year, from 1 April 2007 to 30 September 2007.

Financial Year	Type of Event and Cost of Each
	Away Days	Team Building Exercises
1 April 2004 to 31 March 2005	£9,890.43	£337.43
1 April 2005 to 31 March 2006	£26,466.61	£3,853.58
1 April 2006 to 31 March 2007	£24,240.00	£45.00
1 April 2007 to 30 September 2007-	£11,485.87	Nil

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mrs Long asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within the department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review.

(AQW 821/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The good relations impacts have been assessed and taken into account in the advice and recommendations provided to Ministers on the OFMDFM bid relating to the Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. The equality, poverty/social inclusion, and sustainable development impacts of these financial proposals have also been considered. The completion and consideration of these "High Level Impact Assessments" is a fundamental aspect of the Comprehensive Spending Review and Priorities and Budget 2007 processes.

Planning Appeals

Mr Wells asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the number of appeals lodged with the Planning Appeals Commission, since 1 April 2007.

(AQW 904/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The Planning Appeals Commission is a statutory appellate body established under Article 110 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to decide a wide range of appeals against decisions of the Department of the Environment's Planning Service and to report on various matters under planning and other legislation.

Given the independent tribunal status of the Commission, we have asked the Chief Commissioner to provide a response directly to you. We understand the Chief Administrative Officer, of the Commission has responded to you in the following terms:

"The total number of appeals received by the Commission since the 1 April 2007 and up to the 30

September 2007 is 1035. As of the 30 September 2007 the Commission has a total of 3108 appeals for determination.

I enclose a copy of our latest statistical information which is updated and downloaded to the publication page of our website www.pacni.gov.uk at the start of each month.

I would be happy to provide any further information you require arising out of this response or to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable."

Planning Appeals Commission

Mr Wells asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the number of appeals currently being considered by the Planning Appeals Commission.

(AQW 906/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The Planning Appeals Commission is a statutory appellate body established under Article 110 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to decide a wide range of appeals against decisions of the Department of the Environment's Planning Service and to report on various matters under planning and other legislation.

Given the independent tribunal status of the Commission, we have asked the Chief Commissioner to provide a response directly to you. We understand the Chief Administrative Officer has responded to you in the following terms:

"The total number of appeals received by the Commission since the 1 April 2007 and up to the 30 September 2007 is 1035. As of the 30 September 2007 the Commission has a total of 3108 appeals for determination.

I enclose a copy of our latest statistical information which is updated and downloaded to the publication page of our website www.pacni.gov.uk at the start of each month.

I would be happy to provide any further information you require arising out of this response or to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable."

Commissioned Report

Mr Ford asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to the answer to AQO 379/08, to give a definition of the term 'a private report'; to detail the number of such reports that were (i) commissioned; and (ii) received by the department, during the periods 1 January 2006 to 7 May 2007; and since 8 May 2007; and to detail the other kinds of reports commissioned by the department.

(AQW 911/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The term private report was made in the reference to the Deloitte Touche report on “The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy”. This phrase means that it was a report completed not within OFMDFM but from an external source. This report was commissioned by the previous administration in March 2006 and was conducted and finalised during direct rule and is an independent piece of research.

The following table provides information on the number of such reports commissioned and received by the Department, during the periods 1 January 2006 to 7 May 2007 and since 8 May 2007 to 30 September 2007. The total numbers stated for reports that were commissioned and received do not correlate because reports that were commissioned in one period may not have been received until a later period or not received to date. No other kinds of reports were commissioned by the Department.

REPORTS COMMISSIONED AND RECEIVED BY OFMDFM

	1 January 2006 to 7 May 2007		8 May 2007 to 30 September 2007
	Commis- sioned	Received	Commis- sioned	Received
Number of Reports	19	18	5	7

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the department’s projected underspend for this financial year.
(AQW 965/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: On the basis of outturn for the six-month period ended 30 September 2007, OFMDFM is not projecting any underspend for this financial year.

Integrated Development Fund

Mr Adams asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister if it will reaffirm the support for, and safeguarding of, resource funding pledged to projects in west Belfast and greater Shankill, through the pilot Integrated Development Fund.
(AQW 1063/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: Under the current arrangements, all outline pilot projects supported by the Integrated Development Fund (IDF), will have an entitlement to funding of the amount previously agreed by Ministers, subject to the provision and approval of the required economic appraisals for the respective projects.

Any further funding applications for individual projects, above the agreed amount or beyond the specified timescales, will be a matter for relevant lead Departments. Departments will consider such applications on the basis of their competing priorities and available resources.

Public Service Agreements

Ms S Ramsey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister if they will confirm that children will be identified as a priority under target setting in the current round of Public Service Agreements, specifically in relation to (i) the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister; (ii) the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure; (iii) the Department for Employment and Learning; and (iv) the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.
(AQW 1068/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The Executive is determined to seize this opportunity to deliver a better future for all our people. In support of this, work has been ongoing to develop our first Programme for Government which will set out our strategic priorities for the next three years. The Programme for Government will be supported by a framework of Public Service Agreements (PSAs) which will confirm the key actions we will take in support of our priorities, and the outcomes and targets we aim to achieve.

Our approach to developing PSAs has been directed by a focus on the key cross-cutting issues and challenges we face rather than along departmental structures as was previously the case. This will help ensure a more co-ordinated response across Government to the key issues and outcomes to which we are committed. Within that framework, improving the outcomes and life chances for children will continue to be a key objective for the Executive.

Executive Committee Meeting

Mr McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the process by which the minute of the Executive Committee meeting held on 8 October 2007 was drafted, circulated for comment and approved.
(AQW 1147/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The minutes of the meeting of the Executive which took place on 8 October 2007 were prepared in the normal manner. An Executive Secretariat official who attended the meeting took notes of the proceedings and prepared a set of draft minutes. With the approval of the Secretary to the Executive these were passed to us for consideration and approval to issue. The draft minutes were subsequently issued to Executive Ministers on 17 October 2007 for consideration at the meeting the following day. At that meeting, the draft minutes were approved by the Executive without amendment.

Links With Scotland

Mr Spratt asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to give its assessment of maintaining links with Scotland for the mutual benefit of both countries; and what steps it is taking to encourage all Northern Ireland departments to co-operate, where possible, with their Scottish counterparts.

(AQO 493/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: We recognise the strong historical bond that exists between our countries and the importance of maintaining close links with Scotland for our mutual benefit.

In June, we signed an agreement with the Scottish First Minister, Alex Salmond, to work closely together and to consolidate and strengthen the social, educational and cultural relationship between our two countries.

Departments are taking forward work on strengthening links with Scotland across a range of sectors of mutual interest and through the work of the British Irish Council.

Co-operation is also ongoing at Executive level. We had the opportunity to meet Alex Salmond during our recent visit to the US and there have been a series of meetings between Executive Ministers and their Scottish counterparts on a range of issues including, Tourism, economic co-operation, fisheries, environment, higher education, culture, arts and leisure.

Meetings with Ministerial Counterparts

Mr Burnside asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the number of meetings that it has had with Ministers of the Government of the Republic of Ireland; and to detail the number of meetings that it has had with Ministers of the United Kingdom Government, the Scottish Executive and the Welsh Assembly.

(AQO 516/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: Since 8 May this year, Ministers in the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister have attended 3 meetings with Ministers of the Southern Government, one of which was the NSMC Plenary meeting in Armagh on 17 July; 6 meetings with UK Government Ministers, of which 3 were with the Secretary of State; and 3 meetings with the Scottish First Minister.

We hosted the British Irish Council Summit in Belfast in July which was attended by Ministers of each of the participating administrations. We also had separate discussions with the British Prime Minister during the Summit.

Ministers also participated in 2 Joint Ministerial Committee meetings on Europe, which were attended by UK Government Ministers and Ministers from the Scottish Government and Welsh Executive

Public Appointments

Mr McCarthy asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to give its assessment of the effectiveness of the appointments process as detailed in its publication, 'A Guide to Public Appointments in Northern Ireland', in meeting the needs of the general public.

(AQO 562/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: In the interests of openness and transparency, responsibility for ensuring the effectiveness of the public appointments process is delegated to an independent statutory Commissioner for Public Appointments.

The Commissioner publishes a Code of Practice and audits departmental public appointment processes to establish whether the Code of Practice is being observed. The Commissioner has the power to investigate complaints.

The Commissioner also publishes an annual report which is available to the public that provides information on the observance by departments of the Code of Practice, an account of the outcome of the audit process and any complaints investigated.

The procedures set out in the Commissioner's Code of Practice are underpinned by the principles of selection based on merit, independent scrutiny in the selection process, equality of opportunity and a process that is open and transparent.

In 2005 the Department published a guide to public appointments to raise awareness of public appointment opportunities; explain how the public appointment process works in practice; and to help people engage with the process to the best of their ability.

A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy

Mrs M Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what budget is being sought, in order to resource 'A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy'.

(AQO 590/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The department currently spends in the region of £25m to support good relations including good race relations activities. This includes approximately £17m under the Special European Programme, Measure 2.1 for Peace and Reconciliation.

We are unable to provide any details of the bid for future resources until the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review Budget and Priorities 2007 exercise is made known.

Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington

Mr Cree asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what plans it has to expand the Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, following the success of the recent Smithsonian exhibition.

(AQO 538/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The Northern Ireland Bureau's strategy over the last four years has pro actively developed networks and contacts in other regions in the United States. Recent Ministerial visits, including those during the Smithsonian Festival, have convinced us of the need to further develop these networks and this may lead to an expanded role for the Bureau, particularly in New York and Boston.

The feasibility of any possible expansion will be investigated by the new Director of the Bureau when he takes up post in November 2007.

Sustainable Development Strategy

Mr Gardiner asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to give its assessment of whether or not the Sustainable Development Strategy target to obtain 40% of all electricity consumed in Northern Ireland from indigenous renewable energy sources, beyond 2025, will be achieved. (AQO 537/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has lead policy responsibility for Sustainable Development and we are fully committed to promoting a strong, stable and sustainable economy with a strong healthy and just society while at the same time maintaining and improving our natural resources.

Climate change is one of the most severe problems we face today. The Sustainable Development Strategy identified the potential locally to develop renewable energy sources as an important step in reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Older Persons' Commissioner

Mr K Robinson asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the costs incurred in appointing an independent party to undertake work on behalf of junior Ministers, to review the case for an Older Persons' Commissioner for Northern Ireland. (AQO 536/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: We have committed to carrying out the review for an Older People's Commissioner by December 2007 and work will be undertaken by an independent party. The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister will seek quotations through a competitive tendering process, from those seeking to do this work and who are on the Northern Ireland Civil Service Management Consultancy Framework Agreement select list. Until the contract of work has been awarded it will not be possible to provide costs.

Investment Strategy

Mr Dallat asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what assessment it has made, and what plans it has to review, the impact of the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland on equality of opportunity, generally, and on access to job opportunities across Northern Ireland. (AQO 587/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The Executive is currently developing a new Investment Strategy, which will be published shortly for consultation along with the draft Programme for Government and the draft Budget. A full Equality Impact Assessment is being carried out on the Investment Strategy and the result of this work will be published in tandem with the draft Investment Strategy document.

The substantive infrastructure investment programmes that the Executive will outline in the Investment Strategy have the potential to make impact positively on access to job opportunities across Northern Ireland.

Victims' Commissioner

Mr Cobain asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the final stages of the appointment process for the Victims' Commissioner; and to give a timescale within which the successful candidate is likely to take up the post. (AQO 549/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: We would refer the Member to our statement on 8 October in which we stated that we intend to announce the new Commissioner for Victims and Survivors before the end of this year.

Public Appointments

Ms Lo asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to give an assessment of the effectiveness of its arrangements for ensuring racial equality in public appointments. (AQO 559/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The overriding principle of the public appointment process is that selection is based on merit. We are committed to equality in the public appointments process and believe that existing arrangements support this aim.

In the interests of openness and transparency, responsibility for ensuring the effectiveness of the public appointments process is delegated to an independent statutory Commissioner for Public Appointments.

The Commissioner publishes a Code of Practice setting out procedures which are underpinned by the principles of selection based on merit, independent scrutiny in the selection process, equality of opportunity and a process that is open and transparent. The Commissioner's Code of Practice requires Departments to comply with their statutory duty under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 when making Ministerial appointments to public bodies and to have due regard for the need to promote equality of opportunity.

Existing legislation prohibits the selection of candidates on the basis that they are, for example, of a particular religion, gender or race. Decisions about who to appoint must be based solely on skills and abilities and not on factors that could be construed as discriminatory.

We are aware however, that some sections in our society are under represented on the Boards of public bodies and, following the reception we hosted on 9 May 2007, remain committed to recognising and encouraging greater participation by the minority ethnic community.

Victims' Commissioner

Mr A Maginness asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what assessment it has made of the appointment of a Victims' Commissioner, with specific reference to whether or not this appointment should be based on merit. (AQO 589/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: All appointments are subject to the public appointments procedures. The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister is committed to the principles of public appointments, based on merit with independent assessment, openness and transparency of process.

Attacks on Orange Halls

Mr Bresland asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what is its assessment of continued attacks against Orange Halls, including the destruction of an Orange Hall in Strabane; and if it will make a direct representation to the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on this matter. (AQO 496/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: We totally deplore these acts and condemn utterly those people who carry out such attacks, which are a scourge on our society. We are totally committed to moving society forward to make a real difference to the lives of all our people.

On Tuesday 11 September the Assembly debated the motion: 'that this Assembly condemns all attacks on Orange Halls and calls on all political parties to use their influence to stop such sectarian attacks.'

As responsibility for policing and justice is still a reserved matter, Junior Minister Kelly made an undertaking to the Assembly to forward the report of the debate to the Secretary of State. We wrote to the Secretary of State on the 3rd October and reiterated our strong condemnation of any such attacks and sought his support in doing all that he could to bring all those responsible to justice.

Legislative Programme for 2007/2008

Mr S Wilson asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to give a timescale within which it intends to publish the legislative programme for 2007/2008; and to detail the number of pieces of legislation on this programme. (AQO 494/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: We wrote to the Speaker on 19 October on behalf of the Executive to set out its Legislative Programme for the 2007-2008 session of the Assembly. Including the three Bills which were introduced to the Assembly before the Summer Recess and which are currently before Committee, we anticipate that 18 Bills will be progressed during this session.

Victims' Commissioner

Mr O'Loan asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline why it did not consider any of the existing candidates for the position of Victims' Commissioner to be suitable for appointment. (AQO 543/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: The people who were deemed appointable under the direct rule process can, if they so wish, have their names carried forward into the newly extended process. They won't have to reapply, will not be re-interviewed, and will be considered along with any further applicants who are deemed appointable.

Maze Site Development

Mrs D Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister if it will outline a timetable for a decision to be made on the future of the Maze site. (AQO 593/08)

The First and deputy First Minister: A decision on the proposed development of the Maze/Long Kesh site will be made following receipt of the business case, which is currently being finalised. Following detailed examination of the value for money case and assessment of affordability the development proposal will be brought to the Executive for formal consideration.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mrs Long asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within her department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 822/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) has complied with all the good relations procedures required by OFMDFM and DFP in respect the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review proposals. These procedures are in line with Section 75 requirements and A Shared Future policy. The Department's compliance has been achieved through the completion of High Level Impact Assessments for all bids submitted to DFP.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mrs Long asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within her department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 823/08)

Ms Gildernew: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) has taken account of the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' by following the good relations procedures required by OFMDFM and DFP in respect the Department's Comprehensive Spending Review proposals. These procedures are in line with Section 75 requirements and A Shared Future policy. The Department's compliance has been achieved through the completion of High Level Impact Assessments in relation to DARD's proposals.

National Ploughing Championships

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the number of departmental representatives who attended the National Ploughing Championships in Tullamore in the Republic of Ireland, in their official capacity; (ii) the total cost to her department of their attendance; and (iii) what is her assessment of the benefit of this to the farming community in Northern Ireland. (AQW 895/08)

- (i) Ms Gildernew: A total of 21 DARD officials attended the ROI National Ploughing Championships, which was a 3 day event. Officials manned the DARD exhibition stand. On average, 7 DARD officials manned the stand each day.
- (ii) The total cost to DARD was £27,459 (£20,601 for staff and £6,858 for exhibition build).
- (iii) The DARD exhibition at the ROI National Ploughing Championships, which also included an Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) exhibit (AFBI is a Non-Departmental Public Body of DARD), afforded the opportunity to promote the NI agri-food industry and rural community at Ireland's largest agricultural event. Around 165,000 people attended the event and NI was well represented amongst the large number of visitors and trade exhibitors. The DARD exhibition promoted a wide range of services, which generated awareness amongst a large audience. The exhibition included several businesses that received funding from the NI Rural Development Programme 2000-2006 and these businesses received significant interest in their products.

In addition, DARD/AFBI officials identified potential opportunities for mutual collaboration on an all-island basis, for example animal disease control, fisheries management and rural development, which could bring much benefit to the NI agri-food sector and rural community.

My own attendance provided DARD and the new Executive a firm voice at this major agricultural event. I had the opportunity to speak directly with President McAleese, The Tanaiste – Brian Cowan, my counterpart — Mary Coughlan, The Minister of Community,

Rural and Gaeltacht Affairs — Eamon O’Cuiv, and the Minister of State, Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, Trevor Sargent — on agri-food and rural issues These included, importantly, the current animal disease situation and the approach being taken to prevent the arrival of Foot and Mouth and Bluetongue diseases in the island of Ireland.

Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the cost of establishing the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute; and to provide a detailed breakdown of the expenditure.

(AQW 901/08)

Ms Gildernew: The additional identifiable costs incurred in the lead-up to the establishment the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) were as follows:

	£’000(rounded)
Change Management Team	60
Change Manager	30
Staff Conference Costs	10
Corporate Publicity	15
Refurbishment of Offices	100
ICT Costs	250
Consultancy	65
Finance System	115
Launch Costs	5
Total	650

No additional resources were made available to DARD in relation to these set up costs for AFBI. These costs were met from within the DARD Resource Consumption budget for 2005/06.

Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the projected running costs for the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, for each of the next three years.

(AQW 902/08)

Ms Gildernew: The projected net costs to the NI Block for running the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) for each of the next three years are as follows:

AFBI Running Costs	Projected Expenditure (£million)
2008-2009	32.2

AFBI Running Costs	Projected Expenditure (£million)
2009-2010	31.5
2010-2011	30.3

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her department’s projected underspend for this financial year.

(AQW 926/08)

Ms Gildernew: As part of the October Public Expenditure Monitoring Review, my Department identified Resource Current pressures totalling £7.2m. At this stage it is therefore anticipated that there will be no underspend in Resource Current expenditure. However, the Resource Current budget will be kept under review during the remainder of the financial year.

My Department has sought DFP approval to roll forward £5.1m of Capital budget from this financial year to 2008/09. In the event that this £5.1m Capital is not removed from the Department’s baseline in this financial year, it will emerge as underspend at the year end. At this stage no other Capital underspend is anticipated. However, the Capital budget will be kept under review during the remainder of the financial year.

Departmental Offices

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has for her department’s offices across Northern Ireland; to detail the impact that these plans will have on services; and to outline in full any anticipated job losses.

(AQW 977/08)

Ms Gildernew: Currently all DARD frontline services are not available from every DARD office in the North and opening times for these offices vary. I plan to introduce a new way of working called DARD Direct which will help to standardise the service we provide, to improve the efficiency of customer transactions and to provide more choice in how and when transactions are conducted. This would be enabled, in part, by bringing together staff from all the main services, at 10 single locations. To ensure that we continue to provide rural communities with equitable access, these locations would need to be strategically placed across the North.

DARD Direct will involve the main customer facing DARD services including Veterinary Service, Grants & Subsidies Inspection Branch, Countryside Management Branch, CAFRE Development Advisers, Quality Assurance Branch, Rural Connect and Customer Service Improvement Branch. Regionally based staff from these branches, under this proposal, would be headquartered at one of these 10 locations, so some current offices are likely to close. I am aware of recent media speculation that DARD will make large job cuts solely by closing regional offices through rolling out DARD Direct. It has arisen because consultation on the roll-out proposal has been inaccurately linked to part of the Budget process, where all Departments including DARD will have to make reductions in expenditure on administration and absorb the cost of pay settlements. The fact is that nothing has been decided on this front yet and it is likely that any job reductions which have to be made will fall across most areas of the Department.

In advance of formal consultation, we are canvassing the views of key stakeholders this proposal might affect. No decision has yet been made on the final locations of these offices. Inishkeen House, Enniskillen is the exception because it has already been modified to test the DARD Direct model.

Local Community Fund

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to her answer to AQW 302/08, if she will give a timescale within which the review of the Local Community Fund will be completed; and to detail what input Local Strategy Partnerships and community groups will have in relation to the review. (AQW 990/08)

Ms Gildernew: The review of the Local Community Fund is due to be completed in early 2008. Intermediary Funding Bodies responsible for the delivery of the Programme, including Local Strategy Partnerships, and community groups will be consulted during the review process.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Maritime Museum

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will investigate the potential for a maritime museum, adjacent to the recently announced Titanic project; and the potential for developing such a project based on the unique vessels that are already in local waters. (AQW 758/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, through the National Museums Northern Ireland will give priority consideration to the development of a Maritime Museum. Naturally options for locations will include the Titanic Quarter.

Arts Council Funding

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to provide a breakdown of funding given by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland to each district council, in each of the last three years. (AQW 887/08)

Mr Poots: A breakdown of funding given by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland to each district council in each of the last three years is shown in the attached table.

SOURCES OF FUNDING INCLUDE EXCHEQUER, LOTTERY AND RE-IMAGING COMMUNITIES PROGRAMMES.

Council area	2004/05	2005/06	2006/07	Total
Antrim	222,732	84,000	0	306,732
Ards	0	0	11,840	11,840
Armagh	45,000	50,000	140,000	235,000
Ballymena	0	0	0	0
Ballymoney	168,450	0	0	168,450
Banbridge	5,000	30,003	0	35,003
Belfast	538,718	737,369	54,000	1,330,087
Carrickfergus	0	0	16,425	16,425
Castlereagh	5,000	30,003	0	35,003
Coleraine	12,000	36,200	40,600	88,800
Cookstown	65,367	28,000	90,000	183,367
Craigavon	336,681	46,383	66,500	449,564
Derry	180,254	0	18,300	198,554
Down	69,969	68,000	92,250	230,219
Dungannon	0	42,000	10,990	52,990
Fermanagh	470,039	48,000	129,750	647,789
Larne	19,628	0	0	19,628
Limavady	0	0	0	0
Lisburn	66,929	0	50,580	117,509
Magherafelt	0	0	0	0
Moyle	147,215	9,180	0	156,395
Newry and Mourne	0	0	49,820	49,820
Newtownabbey	221,350	0	0	221,350
North Down	198,448	0	22,500	220,948
Omagh	0	57,000	100,000	157,000
Strabane	248,000	0	55,000	303,000
Total	3,020,780	1,266,138	948,555	5,235,473

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail his department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 925/08)

Mr Poots: The Department has just completed a review of its spending plans and priorities and currently does not project an underspend for this financial year.

Foras na Gaeilge

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to his answer to AQW 232/07, to detail whether or not Foras na Gaeilge has started to translate the minutes of its board meetings into English and to post them on the English language section of its website. (AQW 1002/08)

Mr Poots: The decision to have the minutes of the Foras na Gaeilge Board meetings translated into English and posted on the English language section of their website has not yet been taken by the Board. This will be discussed at the next Board meeting due to be held on 2 November 2007.

Ordnance Survey

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he is taking to liaise with district councils to ensure that new buildings and dwellings are included on all Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland maps as soon as possible. (AQW 1008/08)

Mr Poots: Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland® (OSNI®) has worked with district councils for many years. This includes district councils being users of OSNI's products, and close collaboration in the creation and maintenance of Pointer, the definitive address file for Northern Ireland.

Information on the location of new properties is gathered by OSNI from many sources, and accurate, timely change information is vital for OSNI as it continues to improve the currency of its databases in line with its ministerial targets. District councils provide change information via updates to the Pointer dataset and four district council representatives sit on the Pointer Project Board.

Land & Property Services (LPS) is also working with Building Control sections in district councils to provide timely data to support property valuation. As OSNI prepares to merge into LPS in April 2008, OSNI managers are working with LPS colleagues to consolidate data flows between district councils and LPS/OSNI. This will support the ongoing improvement of LPS datasets, including the up-to-dateness of the mapping database.

Community Arts Projects

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what funding arrangements his department has put in place for community arts projects based in North Belfast. (AQW 1048/08)

Mr Poots: Government funding for the arts in Northern Ireland is disbursed through the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. Funding is not ring-fenced for any particular area but must be applied for in competition with other applications. Funding awarded to community arts projects in North Belfast in the last two financial years and in 2007/08 to date is detailed in the attached table.

Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what arrangements his department has put in place to resource the Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies. (AQW 1050/08)

Mr Poots: DCAL recognises the significant role the Arts, Culture and Sport play in supporting people of all ages with mental health and learning disabilities subject to budgetary considerations. DCAL will endeavour to maintain and develop policies and programmes consistent with the Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies.

Fisheries Conservancy Board

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of staff employed by the Fisheries Conservancy Board. (AQW 1137/08)

Mr Poots: The Fisheries Conservancy Board currently employs 19 staff consisting of a Chief and Deputy Chief Executive, one support manager, 4 other administrative staff, 11 fisheries officers and a cleaner.

The Department has currently budgeted £464,000 to be paid to the FCB in 2007/2008. This includes payment for bailiffing services carried out by FCB on the Department's Public Angling Estate, the Salmon Management Plan and deficit funding to ensure the FCB remains operationally viable. This budget is likely to increase once FCB functions transfer to the Department to take account of transferred staff and operational costs. These additional costs have been included in the bid to secure additional funding to carry out the FCB functions in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Provisions to abolish the FCB and transfer its functions to the Department are included in the Draft Public Authorities Reform Bill which will be taken forward by OFMDFM and is included in the Legislative Programme for the 2007/2008 Assembly Session. The timing of the transfer will depend on when this Bill is passed.

Fisheries Conservancy Board

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the budget currently allocated to the Fisheries Conservancy Board; and whether or not that budget will be increased, with the transfer of interest to his department. (AQW 1139/08)

Mr Poots: The Fisheries Conservancy Board currently employs 19 staff consisting of a Chief and Deputy Chief Executive, one support manager, 4 other administrative staff, 11 fisheries officers and a cleaner.

The Department has currently budgeted £464,000 to be paid to the FCB in 2007/2008. This includes payment for bailiffing services carried out by FCB on the Department's Public Angling Estate, the Salmon Management Plan and deficit funding to ensure the FCB remains operationally viable. This budget is likely to increase once FCB functions transfer to the Department to take account of transferred staff and operational costs. These additional costs have been included in the bid to secure additional funding to carry out the FCB functions in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Provisions to abolish the FCB and transfer its functions to the Department are included in the Draft Public Authorities Reform Bill which will be taken forward by OFMDFM and is included in the Legislative Programme for the 2007/2008 Assembly Session. The timing of the transfer will depend on when this Bill is passed.

Fisheries Conservancy Board

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the timescale for the transfer of interest from the Fisheries Conservancy Board to his department. (AQW 1140/08)

Mr Poots: The Fisheries Conservancy Board currently employs 19 staff consisting of a Chief and Deputy Chief Executive, one support manager, 4 other administrative staff, 11 fisheries officers and a cleaner.

The Department has currently budgeted £464,000 to be paid to the FCB in 2007/2008. This includes payment for bailiffing services carried out by FCB on the Department's Public Angling Estate, the Salmon Management Plan and deficit funding to ensure the FCB remains operationally viable. This budget is likely to increase once FCB functions transfer to the Department to take account of transferred staff and operational costs. These additional costs have been included in the bid to secure additional funding to carry out the FCB functions in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Provisions to abolish the FCB and transfer its functions to the Department are included in the Draft Public Authorities Reform Bill which will be taken forward by OFMDFM and is included in the Legislative Programme for the 2007/2008 Assembly Session. The timing of the transfer will depend on when this Bill is passed.

EDUCATION

Unoccupied Desks

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of unoccupied desks expected in (i) controlled schools; (ii) maintained schools; (iii) integrated schools; and (iv) Irish language schools, in each of the next five years. (AQW 24/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): The Department does not have projections for the future level of surplus places in each sector. In the 2006/07 school year there were an estimated 55,100 surplus places in schools in the North of Ireland - 36,600 in primary schools and 18,500 in the post-primary schools. The breakdown of this information by school sector is as follows:

Sector	Estimated Surplus Places in Primary Schools	Estimated Surplus Places in Post-Primary Schools
Controlled	17,200	7,900
Maintained	18,200	9,300
Integrated*	800	300
Irish-Medium	400	0
Voluntary Grammar	not applicable	1,000
Totals	36,600	18,500

* Controlled integrated and grant maintained integrated schools have been grouped together.

Based on the population projections from the Northern Ireland Statistics Research Agency (NISRA) the school-age population is projected to decline by approximately 15,000 in the period 2007 to 2012 as follows:

Year	Projected decrease in the school population in the 5-18 age-range
2007/08	- 4,228
2008/09	- 3,495
2009/10	- 2,433
2010/11	-2,721
2011/12	-2,183

Changes in pupil numbers are not the only factor affecting the numbers of surplus places. Changes to the schools' estate through capital works and as a result of proposals from school authorities for closures or amalgamations also impact on the estimated numbers of surplus places.

Governing Body of the SELB

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Education to give a timescale within which she intends to restore democratically elected representatives and independent members to the governing body of the South Eastern Education and Library Board. (AQW 355/08)

Ms Ruane: In the interests of local accountability I would be keen that the members of the SEELB Board take up their former responsibilities as soon as possible. However, in the context of the many changes and challenges facing the South Eastern Education and Library Board, it is essential to ensure that there would be no return to the difficulties which the Commissioners inherited when they were appointed in July 2006 and that the stability which has since been achieved is sustained. I am therefore arranging to meet with a cross-section of Board members in the near future to explore their readiness to take up their former responsibilities and to deliver those effectively. That meeting will help inform decisions on how best to move forward.

Newbuild School

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education to give a timescale within which she will consider the provision of a newbuild school for St Gerard's Educational Resource Centre, Upper Springfield Road, Belfast, taking into account the school's special needs unit. (AQW 575/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education is in the process of arranging a feasibility study with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools in order to identify site options for the school. The feasibility study is expected to be completed by January 2008. Subject to the conclusions of the feasibility study, an economic appraisal would be undertaken to examine the best way of addressing the building needs of the school.

Extended Schools Funding

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education if she will explain why St Brigid's Primary School, Ballymena, is not entitled to extended schools funding, despite having a significant number of pupils from the Dunclog area, who were previously entitled to this funding when they attended St Joseph's Primary School, which is now closed. (AQW 639/08)

Ms Ruane: Entitlement to extended school funding does not transfer with pupils. St Brigid's Primary School is not located in a Neighbourhood Renewal Area or a deprived ward and does not have a sufficient percentage of pupils claiming free school meals to qualify for funding.

Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 29/08, to detail the number of responses that were received in December 2002, from the individuals and organisations listed; whether or not views were sought specifically in relation to the proposal for Middletown Centre of Excellence for Autism; and if she will place the letter seeking views and the responses received in the Assembly Library. (AQW 777/08)

Ms Ruane: There were a total of 17 responses from education and health providers in the North. The views were sought specifically in relation to the proposal for the Middletown Centre for Autism. A copy of the letter that issued from this Department in December 2002 and the accompanying Briefing Paper will be placed in the Assembly Library. The consent to the release of individual responses was not sought in 2002 and therefore the summaries of the North's education and health sector responses will be placed in the Assembly Library. A similar letter issued from the Department of Education and Science (DES) Joint Chair of the Steering Group to their education and health providers. It is not for this Department to publish the responses sought by the DES in the South.

School Financial Deficits

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 337/08, to outline the ten largest financial deficits run by schools in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years. (AQW 797/08)

Ms Ruane: The 10 largest financial deficits in each of the 5 years from 2002/03 to 2006/07 are as follows:

2002/03 £	2003/04 £	2004/05 £	2005/06 £	2006/07 (Provis- ional) £
-788,352	-817,549	-784,714	-563,425	-482,425
-487,853	-628,229	-609,044	-441,331	-447,199
-347,165	-347,741	-372,301	-413,878	-440,538
-291,653	-346,286	-348,023	-343,910	-339,886
-260,270	-294,216	-306,657	-329,297	-337,967
-256,194	-277,119	-302,809	-328,410	-334,198
-228,975	-246,176	-290,639	-289,355	-318,321
-220,475	-242,336	-281,870	-280,297	-315,990
-217,959	-202,279	-275,076	-279,554	-309,936
-215,006	-185,654	-239,125	-247,994	-282,249

The total cost of schools financial deficits in each sector, in each of the last five years is as follows:

Sector	2002/03 £k	2003/04 £k	2004/05 £k	2005/06 £k	2006/07 (Provisional) £k
Controlled	-5,678	-6,531	-8,723	-8,984	-7,067
Maintained	-5,482	-5,898	-7,976	-9,618	-6,626
Irish Medium	-238	-206	-280	-265	-253
Integrated	-78	-124	-161	-207	-217
Voluntary Grammar	-2,051	-1,796	-1,637	-1,872	-2,761

School Financial Deficits

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 337/08, to detail the total cost of financial deficits run by schools in each sector, in each of the last five years. (AQW 798/08)

Ms Ruane: The 10 largest financial deficits in each of the 5 years from 2002/03 to 2006/07 are as follows:

2002/03 £	2003/04 £	2004/05 £	2005/06 £	2006/07 (Provis- ional) £
-788,352	-817,549	-784,714	-563,425	-482,425
-487,853	-628,229	-609,044	-441,331	-447,199
-347,165	-347,741	-372,301	-413,878	-440,538

2002/03 £	2003/04 £	2004/05 £	2005/06 £	2006/07 (Provis- ional) £
-291,653	-346,286	-348,023	-343,910	-339,886
-260,270	-294,216	-306,657	-329,297	-337,967
-256,194	-277,119	-302,809	-328,410	-334,198
-228,975	-246,176	-290,639	-289,355	-318,321
-220,475	-242,336	-281,870	-280,297	-315,990
-217,959	-202,279	-275,076	-279,554	-309,936
-215,006	-185,654	-239,125	-247,994	-282,249

The total cost of schools financial deficits in each sector, in each of the last five years is as follows:

Sector	2002/03 £k	2003/04 £k	2004/05 £k	2005/06 £k	2006/07 (Provisional) £k
Controlled	-5,678	-6,531	-8,723	-8,984	-7,067
Maintained	-5,482	-5,898	-7,976	-9,618	-6,626
Irish Medium	-238	-206	-280	-265	-253
Integrated	-78	-124	-161	-207	-217
Voluntary Grammar	-2,051	-1,796	-1,637	-1,872	-2,761

Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education to detail what correspondence she has received in relation to the teaching of scientific explanations of the origin and development of life in science classes, since assuming office. (AQW 811/08)

Ms Ruane: To date I have received 7 letters from the public and 14 Written Assembly Questions on this issue.

Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education to outline the process through which (i) pupils may request that scientific data pointing to explanations for the origin and development of life, other than Darwinian evolution, be made available in science class; and (ii) parents may make such a request on behalf of their children. (AQW 812/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department of Education does not tell teachers how to teach, as that is a matter for their professional judgement. Issues regarding a school's teaching should be raised in the first instance through representation to the Board of Governors. It is important to bear in mind that, whilst the revised curriculum offers greater opportunities for alternatives to evolutionary views to be explored, this could be in areas such as RE.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Education to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within her department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 826/08)

Ms Ruane: As part of the current Budget 2007 process, Departments were obliged to undertake high level impact assessments in respect of each bid submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The purpose of these high level impact assessments was to ascertain the equality and good relations implications for each funding proposal submitted and assessments were undertaken in accordance with Section 75 (1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland also produced a briefing paper for Departments on the importance of mainstreaming equality and good relations considerations into the Comprehensive Spending Review and Priorities and Budget, and this paper was also used to inform the development of my Department's bids.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Education to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within her department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 827/08)

Ms Ruane: I understand that this report was a piece of independent research which was commissioned by the previous administration. It represents the views of Deloitte Touche and was not taken into account in my department's approach to the Budget 2007 process.

Glastry College

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what steps she will take to ensure that mobile classrooms in Glastry College are maintained to the highest standard, whilst the new school is being built.[R] (AQW 882/08)

Ms Ruane: The upkeep and repair of mobiles at controlled and maintained schools is the responsibility of Education and Library Boards. Funding for this is met from the Boards' recurrent budgets.

In the case of Glastry College the South Eastern Education and Library Board has responsibility for maintaining the mobile classrooms until such time as the new school is built. In doing so they must work within budget limits and ensure that any expenditure on mobiles during this period represents value for money.

Glastry College

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the funding her department will make available to Glastry College to assist with the maintenance of mobile classrooms, whilst the new school is being built.[R] (AQW 883/08)

Ms Ruane: The upkeep and repair of mobiles at controlled and maintained schools is the responsibility of Education and Library Boards. Funding for this is met from the Boards' recurrent budgets.

In the case of Glastry College the South Eastern Education and Library Board has responsibility for maintaining the mobile classrooms until such time as the new school is built. In doing so they must work within budget limits and ensure that any expenditure on mobiles during this period represents value for money.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria used to determine which classroom assistants should be graded as classroom assistants (additional special needs). (AQW 941/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of classroom assistants employed in special schools, who will be graded as classroom assistants (additional special needs). (AQW 942/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to encourage all classroom assistants to consider training to NVQ Level III, and to provide funding to cover the cost of such courses.

(AQW 943/08)

Ms Ruane: As Educational Bodies, the Department of Education and the Education and Library Boards always encourage their staff to consider their own development needs and to avail of opportunities to achieve their own potential.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education to detail the precise number of classroom assistants that will be budgeted for, in each of the three grades.

(AQW 944/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education if she will confirm that classroom assistants currently working 32.5 hours per week will be considered as full-time employees, despite the change to the 36 hour divisor; and that no reduction in hours will be enforced.

(AQW 945/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education if she will undertake to examine the difficulties for classroom assistants who are attached to a specific child on a short-term contract, with regard to payment protection.

(AQW 949/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education if she will confirm that between 30% and 50% of classroom assistants will see an increase in their hourly rate of pay, under the proposed pay settlement. (AQW 950/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education to explain the reasons why classroom assistants must be evaluated on the basis of a 36 hour week, despite the fact that it is impossible for them to work more than 32.5 hours per week; and if she will undertake to remedy this situation as soon as possible.

(AQW 951/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education if she will provide a detailed example of the back pay owed to a classroom assistant working in a special needs school with SEN allowance, currently on SCP 15, and having been in full-time employment for the past 18 years.

(AQW 955/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Access Audits

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 327/08, to indicate when the access audit of each school will be completed. (AQW 959/08)

Ms Ruane: The Department has a programme to carry out access audits in every school. At the present time over 700 audits have been completed. It is the intention of the Department to have all schools in the estate audited by the end of March 2009.

Entitlement Framework

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 191/08, to outline what vocational courses will be guaranteed under the entitlement framework. (AQW 960/08)

Ms Ruane: Under the Entitlement Framework all pupils will be guaranteed access to a greater range of applied (vocational) courses and it will be for individual schools to decide which courses to offer their pupils, based on an assessment of their pupils' needs as well as discussions with other schools, other providers and employers. The courses (both general and applied) which can contribute to a school's curricular offer under the requirements of the Entitlement Framework are listed in the Approval of Qualifications circular issued by the Department of Education (DE) which is updated on a continual basis.

In terms of raising of standards, we will continue to use assessment and other information on school performance along with inspection to promote and raise the highest possible educational standards of teaching, learning and achievement throughout the education and training sectors and the forthcoming school improvement policy will include a particular focus on the use of both performance data and inspection findings to improve performance.

Measuring the success of our school systems over a longer period and in wider economic terms will always present challenges. However, we know from employers the importance of ensuring that our young people leave compulsory schooling with the highest possible standards of literacy and numeracy, with qualifications that are relevant to the economy here and with the lifeskills needed to succeed in the world of work and in wider society. That is why we are committed to bringing forward strategies on school improvement, on literacy and numeracy and, in conjunction with the Department for Employment and Learning, on careers advice, information, education and guidance to support the focus that the revised curriculum already has on delivering balanced, relevant learning opportunities for all our young people.

Educational Standards

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 191/08, what action she is taking to ensure that educational standards are raised to so that young people have the necessary skills to progress into employment. (AQW 966/08)

Ms Ruane: Under the Entitlement Framework all pupils will be guaranteed access to a greater range of applied (vocational) courses and it will be for individual schools to decide which courses to offer their pupils, based on an assessment of their pupils' needs as well as discussions with other schools, other providers and employers. The courses (both general and applied) which can contribute to a school's curricular offer under the requirements of the Entitlement Framework are listed in the Approval of Qualifications circular issued by the Department of Education (DE) which is updated on a continual basis.

In terms of raising of standards, we will continue to use assessment and other information on school performance along with inspection to promote and raise the highest possible educational standards of teaching, learning and achievement throughout the education and training sectors and the forthcoming school improvement policy will include a particular focus on the use of both performance data and inspection findings to improve performance.

Measuring the success of our school systems over a longer period and in wider economic terms will always present challenges. However, we know from employers the importance of ensuring that our young people leave compulsory schooling with the highest possible standards of literacy and numeracy, with qualifications that are relevant to the economy here and with the lifeskills needed to succeed in the world of work and in wider society. That is why we are committed to bringing forward strategies on school improvement, on literacy and numeracy and, in conjunction with the Department for Employment and Learning, on careers advice, information, education and guidance to support the focus that the revised curriculum already has on delivering balanced, relevant learning opportunities for all our young people.

Educational Standards

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 191/08, to detail the means through which her department will measure the success of the contribution made by increased educational standards and improved skills against the long-term economic success of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 967/08)

Ms Ruane: Under the Entitlement Framework all pupils will be guaranteed access to a greater range of applied (vocational) courses and it will be for individual schools to decide which courses to offer their pupils, based on an assessment of their pupils' needs as well as discussions with other schools, other providers and employers. The courses (both general and applied) which can contribute to a school's curricular offer under the requirements of the Entitlement Framework are listed in the Approval of Qualifications circular issued by the Department of Education (DE) which is updated on a continual basis.

In terms of raising of standards, we will continue to use assessment and other information on school performance along with inspection to promote and raise the highest possible educational standards of teaching, learning and achievement throughout the education and training sectors and the forthcoming school improvement policy will include a particular focus on the use of both performance data and inspection findings to improve performance.

Measuring the success of our school systems over a longer period and in wider economic terms will always present challenges. However, we know from employers the importance of ensuring that our young people leave compulsory schooling with the highest possible standards of literacy and numeracy, with qualifications that are relevant to the economy here and with the lifeskills needed to succeed in the world of work and in wider society. That is why we are committed to bringing forward strategies on school improvement, on literacy and numeracy and, in conjunction with the Department for Employment and Learning, on careers advice, information, education and guidance to support the focus that the revised curriculum already has on delivering balanced, relevant learning opportunities for all our young people.

Educational Standards

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 191/08, what plans she has to measure the success of her department's efforts to raise educational standards and ensure that young people have the necessary skills to progress into employment.

(AQW 968/08)

Ms Ruane: Under the Entitlement Framework all pupils will be guaranteed access to a greater range of applied (vocational) courses and it will be for individual schools to decide which courses to offer their pupils, based on an assessment of their pupils' needs as well as discussions with other schools, other providers and employers. The courses (both general and applied) which can contribute to a school's curricular offer under the requirements of the Entitlement Framework are listed in the Approval of Qualifications circular issued by the Department of Education (DE) which is updated on a continual basis.

In terms of raising of standards, we will continue to use assessment and other information on school performance along with inspection to promote and raise the highest possible educational standards of teaching, learning and achievement throughout the education and training sectors and the forthcoming school improvement policy will include a particular focus on the use of both performance data and inspection findings to improve performance.

Measuring the success of our school systems over a longer period and in wider economic terms will always present challenges. However, we know from employers the importance of ensuring that our young people leave compulsory schooling with the highest possible standards of literacy and numeracy, with qualifications that are relevant to the economy here and with the lifeskills needed to succeed in the world of work and in wider society. That is why we are committed to bringing forward strategies on school improvement, on literacy and numeracy and, in conjunction with the Department for Employment and Learning, on careers advice, information, education and guidance to support the focus that the revised curriculum already has on delivering balanced, relevant learning opportunities for all our young people.

Bullying

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's strategy to prevent bullying, whilst children are travelling to and from, and attending, secondary school. (AQW 972/08)

Ms Ruane: All grant-aided schools are required, by law, to have measures in place to address all forms of bullying among pupils as part of their discipline policy. The Department has issued guidance to schools on this; however, it is for each school to decide, taking account of its own ethos and circumstances, what behaviours and situations will be covered by its policy.

When developing a policy, a school community must decide on its position in respect of pupil behaviour off site and out of school hours, for example while travelling to and from school. The school's position should be clearly set out in the discipline policy and the entire school community, including pupils, parents and staff, should be fully aware of it and its implications.

Astroturf Facilities at Limavady Grammar School

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education if she will undertake, as a matter of urgency, to resolve the problems surrounding the after-school use of the new Astroturf facilities at Limavady Grammar School. (AQW 980/08)

Ms Ruane: I understand that the Western Education & Library Board has instructed its legal advisors to prepare a draft agreement between the Board and Limavady Borough Council for the community use of the new pitch. Until the terms and conditions, including insurance arrangements, have been agreed between the Board and the Council, the Board is unable to allow community use of the facility. The WELB is working to ensure that community use happens as soon as possible and in line with statutory requirements.

Review of Public Administration and the Education and Skills Authority

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail whether or not her department carried out a risk assessment prior to the implementation of the recommendations of the Review of Public Administration, and the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority. (AQW 994/08)

Ms Ruane: Risk Assessment is an integral part of the management of the RPA Programme in Education. In my Department a RPA Programme Management Board (PMB) which was established in December 2005, oversees both the Department of Education and the Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team (ESAIT) elements of the overall programme. The PMB is supported by a Programme Management Office (PMO) which is accountable to the PMB and provides it with assurances on the overall programme.

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of individuals involved in the risk assessment in relation to the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority; and the costs associated with (i) salaries; (ii) travel/subsistence; and (iii) the secretariat. (AQW 995/08)

Ms Ruane: Risk assessment is an integral part of the management of the RPA Programme in education and indeed the work of my Department in general. It is therefore not possible to specifically quantify the numbers of individuals involved and the costs associated with risk assessment in relation to the programme.

Classroom Assistants

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to explain what will happen when the pay protection for classroom assistants concludes at the end of the review period. (AQW 1016/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail whether the 36 hour divisor for classroom assistants was agreed upon during or after their job evaluation. (AQW 1017/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of classroom assistants who will be offered a 36 hour week in their contracts. (AQW 1018/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Classroom Assistants

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail what criteria she is using to evaluate the jobs of classroom assistants. (AQW 1019/08)

Ms Ruane: Following intensive talks that were facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency over the weekend of 13 and 14 October, the employers and the unions have agreed to hold further negotiations during the rest of October. The terms of the proposed offer are primarily a matter for the employers and the unions and it would not be appropriate or helpful for me to comment on the possible outworkings of the proposed offer whilst talks remain at such an advanced stage.

I hope however that the recent progress that has been achieved will lead to an agreed settlement being reached in the very near future.

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of money allocated in order to establish the Education and Skills Authority by 31 March 2008. (AQW 1052/08)

Ms Ruane: The Education and Skills Authority (ESA) is to be established by 1 April 2009 at the latest rather than 31 March 2008. Funding to establish ESA will be considered in the course of the Budget 2007 process, the outcome of which has yet to be determined.

Available Year Eight Places

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of year eight places available in (i) Strangford College; (ii) Movilla High School; (iii) Regent House; (iv) Donaghadee High School; and (v) Glastray College. (AQW 1070/08)

Ms Ruane: The number of year eight places approved at each of the schools (their admissions number) for the 2007/08 school year is as follows:

Strangford College	80
Movilla High	180
Regent House	210
Donaghadee High	76
Glastry College	110

Academic Best Practice

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to disseminate the academic best practice of the leading grammar schools in Northern Ireland to secondary schools, so that overall school performance can be enhanced. (AQO 406/08)

Ms Ruane: Best practice, academic and non-academic, is not confined to grammar schools. Very many schools can point to good practice and all are encouraged to develop further that good practice, to disseminate it within their own school and to share examples with other schools. This is an area which I am keen to develop and am considering in the context of a new school improvement policy which will be the subject of consultation next month.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

National Minimum Wage

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform on reported plans to replace the National Minimum Wage with regional variants. (AQW 787/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): I have had no such discussions on this reserved matter.

Following media reports about the possible introduction of regional variants to the minimum wage, officials from my Department met with officials from the Low Pay Commission (LPC), which reports to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform. LPC officials confirmed that there were no proposals to replace the National Minimum Wage with regional variants. My officials also spoke to officials from the Department for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform who confirmed that no such proposals were being considered.

You will be aware from the debate on 11 September that, in common with most Members, I am opposed to any move to replace the National Minimum Wage with regional variants. I will be writing to the Secretary of State for Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform to enclose a transcript of the Assembly debate and to advise him of the Assembly's concern at this proposal.

Workforce Development Forum

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the appointment process for members of the Workforce Development Forum. (AQW 792/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Interim working groups, comprising representatives from employers groups, District Councils and Further Education, were established in each of the new Regional College areas to take forward the formation of local Workforce Development Forums (WDF). The role of the interim groups was to identify a prominent business figure in each of the areas to chair the group, and to seek nominations for WDF members from various interested local bodies.

The six Workforce Development Forums bring together the supply and demand sides of the skills issue at sub-regional levels to identify local skills training needs and to articulate a strategic response to those needs from within existing resources. These are employer-led structures and they invite membership from those whom they deem to be most relevant to the work being undertaken by the Forum. While my Department has sought to encourage a wide representation on each group, we have also tried to allow the WDF to respond to local employers' needs as they perceive them.

Workforce Development Forum

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail whether or not representatives of bodies from outside Northern Ireland are entitled to sit on a Workforce Development Forum. (AQW 793/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Workforce Development Forums (WDF) are employer-led structures and they invite membership from those whom they deem to be most relevant to the work being undertaken by the Forum. This may include representatives of bodies from outside Northern Ireland, if the local Forum deems that they have something additional to offer to the group's work.

The North West WDF was established in 2006 as a cross border Forum, to include cooperation on skills for the entire region, including north east County Donegal. Representatives from Donegal employers, the County Council, FÁS, and Letterkenny Regional College are members of the North West WDF.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Neeson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within his department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 828/08)

Sir Reg Empey: For each spending proposal within the Department of Employment and Learning's Comprehensive Spending Review bids an impact assessment was completed to assess whether it might impact positively or negatively from both an equality and promotion of good relations aspect. None of the spending proposals were found to have an adverse impact from a good relations standpoint and over half were deemed to have a positive impact.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Neeson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within his department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 829/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Key themes from the Deloitte report, for example on access to higher education and helping people into work and raising the skills of the Northern Ireland workforce, are reflected in the Department's strategic objectives and associated Comprehensive Spending Review spending proposals. The report will continue to provide useful information as DEL seeks to make a leading contribution to support economic growth and prosperity.

Course Fees

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is his assessment of recent increases in the fees for citizens over the age of 60 registering for non-vocational college courses in several colleges, including the Southern Regional College; and if he will clarify the interpretation of the Employment Equality (Age) Regulations 2006 in relation to these courses. (AQW 876/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Under the current arrangements between the Department for Employment and Learning and the Further Education sector, it is the responsibility of individual colleges to set the level of fees, including concessionary fees, for the courses they provide. The Department does not interfere in this process. Therefore, the Department is not in a position to make an assessment of the course fees being charged by colleges.

In the past it was common practice for colleges to automatically offer age-based concessionary fees, for example a discount for senior citizens. The interpretation of the Employment Equality (Age) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006 (S.R No. 261) being used is that colleges are no longer able to offer concessionary fees to senior citizens on the basis of age alone for any of the courses they provide, including non-vocational courses. However, not all colleges have been adopting this definition, and the Department is asking the FE sector to consider this matter further.

Projected Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail his department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 924/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department fully recognises the importance of Financial Management and has detailed procedures and processes in place to minimise the level of any underspend.

As we are only midway through the current financial year it is not possible to forecast underspends with any degree of precision.

Graduate Jobs

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline what estimate he has made of the number of graduates employed in non-graduate jobs for each of the last five years. (AQW 939/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department does not hold information on the number of graduates employed in non-graduate jobs for each of the last five years. However, research published by the Department in October 2005, investigating the early careers of graduates from Northern Ireland, showed that: -

- approximately 17 per cent of the surveyed 1999 cohort of graduates from NI Higher Education Institutions were employed in non-graduate occupations four years after graduation.
- approximately 13 per cent of the surveyed 1995 cohort of graduates from NI Higher Education Institutions were employed in non-graduate occupations seven years after graduation.

Workers' Educational Association

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to ensure that the Workers' Educational Association can continue to provide supportive funding to organisations such as the Ballybeen Women's Centre. (AQW 1007/08)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department's contract with WEA for the delivery of community based further education will expire in August 2008. Any proposed future arrangements for this type of provision will be considered in consultation with all interested parties, including WEA.

The Department is not aware of the nature and extent of any links between WEA and other voluntary/community organisations.

Further Education Concession Fees

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the changes that have been made to the concession fees for disabled and elderly people and those on benefits, that were previously available to students at the former North Down and Ards Institute; and what is his assessment of whether or not these changes have affected the number of students enrolling on courses this term. (AQW 1058/08)

Sir Reg Empey: As incorporated bodies, further education colleges are responsible for their own curriculum offers and set their own fees policies. It is, therefore, for each individual college to set any fee charges, including concessionary fees, for its further and higher education course provision.

When North Down and Ards Institute merged with East Down and Lisburn Institute to form the South Eastern Regional College (SERC) as part of the recent re-structuring of the FE sector, one of the tasks SERC had to carry out was a rationalisation of the fees policies of the individual colleges that were merging to form a single fees policy for the new college. This would have taken account of factors such as the different concessionary fees offered by the three merging colleges, both in terms of the percentage reduction allowed and the criteria for allowing a concession. As a general principle, SERC, when setting its fees policy, attempts to take account of learners' ability to pay – in this context, SERC is of the view that disability is not, necessarily, an indication of financial hardship.

In addition to the above factors, in the past it was common practice for colleges to offer age-based concessionary fees, for example a discount for senior citizens. However, following the introduction of the Employment Equality (Age) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006 (S.R No. 261) on 1st October 2006, colleges are no longer able to offer concessionary fees automatically to senior citizens on the basis of age alone.

However, disabled students and senior citizens could be eligible for concessions based on the other concessionary fees criteria set by SERC such as Income Support, Jobseekers Allowance (Income based), Guaranteed Pension Credit, students holding an income based NHS Exemption Certificate or students on a low income.

Due to the nature of data capture in colleges, it is too early to have information on the level of college enrolments for the 2007/08 academic year. Therefore, it is not possible at this time to assess the number of students enrolling on courses this term.

University Tuition Fees

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has, and what investigatory work has been carried out by his department, in relation to the removal of university tuition fees for citizens of Northern Ireland, who are receiving their education at universities in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 1084/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Any change to the current variable tuition fee arrangements must be informed by an independent review to ensure we maintain world class institutions and secure equitable access to universities for all who are able to benefit.

A review of variable tuition fees is planned to take place in FY2008/09. In England, it is proposed to establish an independent Commission reporting to Parliament. As a substantial number of Northern Ireland students study elsewhere in the UK, I have asked my officials to liaise with counterparts in other jurisdictions operating variable fees to ensure that, when we are initiating the Northern Ireland review, we take a consistent approach in terms of scope and independence.

Student Enrolments

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of Northern Ireland citizens enrolled on university courses at institutions in Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 1085/08)

Sir Reg Empey: I have been advised that the amount spent by each Education and Library Board in the 2005/06 and 2006/07 financial years is:

	BELB £	NEELB £	SEELB £	SELB £	WELB £
2005-06
Refurbishment of Offices	10,000	71,031	-	5,000	387,218
Travel expenses of Administrative staff	14,000	91,845	34,391	130,000	100,443
Travel expenses of Advisory staff	42,000	157,114	92,127	217,000	237,680

	BELB £	NEELB £	SEELB £	SELB £	WELB £
2006-07
Refurbishment of Offices	33,000	-	-	28,000	148,334
Travel expenses of Administrative staff	16,000	108,027	35,218	108,000	103,166
Travel expenses of Advisory staff	35,000	144,092	92,693	184,000	222,845

Engineering Degrees

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he will take to encourage more students to participate in degree courses in the various engineering disciplines, in order to meet the growing demand for people with engineering qualifications. (AQW 1090/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Education, has initiated a review of Science, Technology, Engineering and Maths, or STEM, subjects. As part of this, a working group is currently considering a strategy for the further development of STEM subjects in schools and Further Education colleges. The group is considering issues such as teacher supply, a comparative lack of integration amongst the components of STEM and a need to better develop the links between schools, further education and industry, particularly in respect of careers guidance.

SEMTA, the science, engineering and manufacturing technologies Sector Skills Council, has included an Action Point on improving careers promotion and sector attractiveness, in its Sector Skills Agreement Action Plan for Northern Ireland. It is recognised that this can only be achieved through the co-ordination of careers activities, strengthening employer links with the Universities and employer support for careers initiatives.

Northern Ireland Universities are working to complement the work of Government in aiming to increase the number of high quality school-leavers going on to take STEM subjects at university. The Queen's University of Belfast has launched a scholarship scheme – the first of its kind in the United Kingdom – which will help to ensure future economic competitiveness and attract high-quality students. The scheme, for students entering the University in 2008, offers awards of £1,000 to all students achieving three As at A-level who go on to study a STEM subject at Queen's University.

Island-Wide Employment Opportunities

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will undertake to explore, with his counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, the establishment of a joint information programme to provide graduates with details of island-wide employment opportunities, in order to minimise the loss to the economy resulting from graduates seeking employment overseas. (AQW 1091/08)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department's Employment Service and its counterpart FAS already collaborate closely to ensure that job seekers, including graduates, have access to notified job vacancies in both the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland. Both employment services provide links to each others websites thereby making all vacancies accessible throughout Ireland North and South.

In addition, a range of pan-Ireland graduate-specific initiatives exist which are designed to provide access to careers and job opportunities. In the circumstances I am of the view that our graduates are already well served by these facilities

Engineering Students

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students studying for engineering degrees; and the current number of students who are expected to qualify in each engineering discipline. (AQW 1092/08)

Sir Reg Empey: (a) The number of enrolments on Engineering courses at Northern Ireland Higher Education Institutions in 2005/06 is detailed below:

Level of Study	Total
Postgraduate	545
First Degree	2,180
Other Undergraduate	405
Total	3,130

Source: Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA)

Notes: Figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 and therefore numbers may not sum to totals.

(b) The Department does not hold information on the number of students who are expected to qualify from particular courses. However, the number of students who qualified from Engineering courses at Northern Ireland Higher Education Institutions in 2005/06 is detailed in the table below:

	Postgraduate	First Degree	Other Undergraduate	Total
General engineering	50	25	30	105
Civil engineering	25	110	0	135
Mechanical engineering	10	100	5	115
Aerospace engineering	5	25	0	25
Electronic & electrical engineering	55	85	5	150
Production & manufacturing engineering	5	20	0	30

	Postgraduate	First Degree	Other Undergraduate	Total
Chemical, process & energy engineering	15	20	0	35
Others in engineering	15	10	0	25
Total	180	400	40	620

Source: Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA)

Notes: Figures have been rounded to the nearest 5 and therefore numbers may not sum to totals.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within his department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 831/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): The Deloitte Touche report does not of itself form an agreed basis for future policy development. The report focuses on just one of a range of issues which must be considered

As regards good relations, as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review process, DETI reviewed all areas of policy to ensure consistency with the delivery of the vision for Northern Ireland set out in the "A Shared Future – Policy and Strategic Framework for Good Relations in Northern Ireland" which was published in 2005.

High Level Impact Assessments (HLIAs), were also completed for DETI Resource bids. These impact assessments examined equality, anti poverty/social inclusion, good relationship, and sustainable development impacts of bids.

A summary of the HLIAs was forwarded to the Department of Finance and Personnel for its consideration when making recommendations on allocations across the NI Block.

The Strategic Investment Board is considering the good relations impact of Capital Investment.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail all communications between his department and the Department of the Environment, including those from special advisers, in relation to the planning application from Seaport Investments for a visitors' centre at the Giant's Causeway, prior to 10 September 2007. (AQW 891/08)

Mr Dodds: As part of its work in developing the public sector-led proposal, DETI wrote, on 8 March 2007, to DoE requesting an early decision on the private sector proposal and referring to car parking issues relating to the public sector project. DoE replied on 13 March noting the need for an early decision on the private sector application and agreeing to a meeting on the car parking issues.

Officials from both Departments met on 29 March 2007 to discuss planning and car park issues surrounding the public sector proposal.

On 7 June I met Minister Foster to discuss a number of issues which touched upon the responsibilities of both Departments. The Giant's Causeway was one of those issues. My officials wrote again to DOE on 1 August asking for an early decision on the private sector planning application. DoE replied on 10 August noting that they had completed their consideration of the application and that their Minister wished to discuss the outcome with me. On 21 August, accompanied by officials, I met Minister Foster who advised that she was minded to approve the Seaport application, but that before making an announcement she needed to have further discussions with her officials, some of whom were on leave.

Between 6 and 10 September there were discussions and emails between officials in both Departments regarding the detail of Minister Foster's and my announcements of 10 September. There has been no correspondence between Special Advisors.

Ballycastle to Campbeltown Ferry

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide an update on the position regarding the Ballycastle to Campbeltown ferry. (AQW 1030/08)

Mr Dodds: The Scottish Government, which has lead responsibility for the Ballycastle to Campbeltown ferry service, has produced a discussion paper setting out the relevant issues including possible procurement processes and timetables. My officials are in discussions with Scottish Government officials about the details and will bring advice forward to me in due course. I will consider further, in partnership with my Scottish counterpart, once I am in receipt of the necessary advice.

Regional Tourism Partnerships

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the additional funding that will be made available to the Regional Tourism Partnerships. (AQW 1037/08)

Mr Dodds: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) is fully committed to regional development as outlined in the Strategic Framework for Action (2005 – 2008). In the current financial year, £500,000 has been allocated from the agency's core budget to Regional Tourism Partnership's (RTPs).

NITB is looking at the possibility of further funding for regional development with my department and is bidding for an additional £1m per annum for regional development from the EU Competitiveness and Employment Programme 2007-13 to focus on product development and visitor servicing initiatives.

Sustainable Energy

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is his assessment of the potential for sustainable energy generation in Northern Ireland and on the island of Ireland; and whether or not the market for sustainable energy would be best developed in the context of a single market. (AQW 1060/08)

Mr Dodds: The Department, in co-operation with the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural resources (DCENR) in the Irish Republic has recently completed a Grid Study of the potential for increased electricity generation from renewable sources on an all-island basis.

Initial indications from the study results are that there is scope for a significant increase in renewable generation across the island. However, exploiting this potential will require investment in both renewable technologies and grid strengthening.

The Departments are currently considering the results of the study prior to a decision of its publication.

While the study considers the development of renewables in the context of a single all-island market, there are no plans at present to adopt a single approach to encouraging that development across the two separate jurisdictions.

Sustainable Energy

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans his department, in conjunction with its counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, has to explore mechanisms to allow a single market for sustainable energy, which includes the necessary subventions to maximise the potential of the wind resource, which is particularly strong on the west coast of Ireland. (AQW 1061/08)

Mr Dodds: The Single Electricity Market (SEM) for wholesale trading is due to commence operation from 1 November 2007 and represents the culmination of extensive work by my Department and the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources (DCENR) in the Irish Republic. Decisions on the SEM will be taken in the manner which is best calculated to secure a diverse, viable and environmentally sustainable long-term energy supply in Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic, subject to the principal objective and duty to protect the interests of consumers.

As an integral part of plans for the development of renewables across the island of Ireland, DETI and DCENR are currently completing a major Grid Study in relation to the potential for different renewable technologies on the island in 2020 and the implications for future network development.

Subvention measures in support of sustainable energy remain a matter for the respective jurisdictions. The Renewables Obligation is the main support mechanism for large scale wind energy in Northern Ireland while the Irish Republic operates a Feed-in Tariff. There are no plans for harmonisation of these measures across the whole island.

Prospecting Licence

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the nature of the prospecting licence being sought by Lonmin Plc in North Antrim; (ii) what minerals are being sought in respect of this licence; and (iii) what rights, including rights of entry, are provided by such a licence. (AQW 1078/08)

Mr Dodds: The licences being sought by Lonmin Plc in North Antrim would permit the company to carry out an agreed scheme of unobtrusive prospecting activities which may include collation of existing data, soil and stream sampling analysis, mapping of rocks and geophysical surveys using hand held instruments. If evidence of minerals were found, the company would be permitted to drill test boreholes usually using a rig mounted on a tractor.

The company is prospecting for all minerals including gold and silver for which it has applied, as required for precious metals, for a separate crown licence.

The Company is required under the legislation to seek agreement of any landowner whose land it wishes to enter.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Applications

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications for single dwellings in the countryside that have been received in each Divisional Planning Office, since (i) 16 March 2006; and (ii) 7 September 2007. (AQW 868/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster):

No of Applications for Single Houses in the Countryside
Divisional Planning Office	Apps Received since 16 March 2006	Apps Received since 7 September 2007
Ballymena	852	198
Belfast	88	5
Craigavon	1301	195
Downpatrick	712	62
Londonderry	685	93
Omagh	2381	1059
All Divisions	6019	1612

Planning Applications

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications for single dwellings in the countryside that have been received by the Planning Service, in each of the last ten years. (AQW 869/08)

Mrs Foster: The number of planning applications received since January 2000 for single dwellings in the countryside is listed in the table below. I regret the Planning Service only has readily accessible information on its computer system from 2000. Site history details before that date would require an examination of our paper files and would be disproportionately costly to produce.

RURAL SINGLE DWELLING APPLICATIONS RECEIVED BY PLANNING SERVICE

Year	00-01	01-02	02-03	03-04	04-05	05-06	06-07	07 YTD
Planning Service Total	7,794	8,381	10,558	13,994	16,530	15,301	2,991	2,170

These figures have been extracted from a live dataset which is continuously updated and validated. They should therefore be regarded as indicative only at this point in time and should not be compared with any previous figures published by the Agency.

Planning Applications

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications for single dwellings in the countryside that have been submitted to the Planning Service since 7 September 2007. (AQW 884/08)

Mrs Foster: The number of planning applications for single dwellings in the countryside that have been submitted to the Planning Service since 7 September 2007 is 1612. The breakdown of the applications by division is shown in the table below.

NO OF APPLICATIONS FOR SINGLE HOUSES IN THE COUNTRYSIDE RECEIVED SINCE 7/9/2007 BY DIVISION

Ballymena	198
Belfast	5
Londonderry	93
Craigavon	195
Downpatrick	62
Omagh	1059
All Divisions	1612

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made in relation to the implementation of the recommendations of the 2003 Northern Ireland Audit Office Report on Areas of Special Scientific Interest; and, for those areas of the report that have not been acted upon, to outline the reasons why these recommendations have not been implemented. (AQW 890/08)

Mrs Foster: Following the issue of the initial report of the Northern Ireland Audit Office (NIAO) on Areas of Special Scientific Interest in March 2003, the Department has made substantial progress in the implementation of the recommendations.

The NIAO published a further related report on 19 July 2005 entitled 'Departmental Responses to Recommendations in NIAO Reports'. This report detailed, under the ten questions contained therein, key issues and associated recommendations arising from the initial report, together with the Department's responses to them.

My officials in the Environment & Heritage Service take the view that recommendations made by the NIAO in 2005 have, with one exception, been appropriately addressed in a way which meets operational needs. The exception is the recommendation for a Service Level Agreement to be established between EHS and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. This is being progressed through a Memorandum of Understanding that is nearing completion.

EHS will seek confirmation of its position from the NIAO during its annual review which is expected to take place in January 2008.

I will write to the Member at that point to let him know the outcome.

Planning Applications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail whether or not planning applications for housing developments in Rasharkin are being (i) delayed; and (ii) refused, due to inadequate sewerage infrastructure in the village. (AQW 920/08)

Mrs Foster: Planning applications are not being delayed or refused for housing developments in Rasharkin due to inadequate sewerage infrastructure in the village.

However, in one case a developer has been asked to contact Northern Ireland Water to discuss options for dealing with waste water treatment, including providing a permanent facility at his own expense, because the existing waste water treatment option does not have the capacity to deal with the proposal.

Planning Application

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail whether or not a planning condition requesting a pumping station to be put in place has been attached to the approval of planning application X2007/0315/F; and if this is for a low density or high density pumping station. (AQW 931/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department would advise that planning application (X/2007/0315) for an amended dwelling design in substitution of planning permission (X/2002/1205/F) was received on 8 March 2007 and is still under consideration. No decision has yet been reached.

The application in question will be serviced by a septic tank.

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of Areas of Special Scientific Interest that have been designated, in each of the last five years. (AQW 934/08)

Mrs Foster: The number of Areas of Special Scientific Interest designated in each of the last five years are given in the table below

Period	Number Designated
1/04/2003 to 31/03/2004	15
1/04/2004 to 31/03/2005	13
1/04/2005 to 31/03/2006	2
1/04/2006 to 31/03/2007	15
1/04/2007 to 30/09/2007	10

Demolition of Unauthorised Developments

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to detail all unauthorised developments that have been demolished as a result of enforcement action taken by the Planning Service, since 1 April 2001. (AQW 935/08)

Mrs Foster: The total number of unauthorised developments that have been demolished or removed as a result of enforcement action since 1st April 2001 is 46. This figure includes unauthorised buildings and other permanent structures. The breakdown is as follows:

Dwellings Houses	6
Permanently Sited Mobile Homes	6
Other Buildings (including domestic outbuildings)	24
Walls, Fences and other Ancillary Structures	10
Total	46

Bull Bars

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to introduce legislation making it illegal for private vehicles to have bull bars fitted. (AQW 937/08)

Mrs Foster: I have no plans to introduce legislation making it illegal for private vehicles to have bull bars fitted.

As from 25 May 2007, the use of bull bars or frontal protection systems on passenger cars is subject to the requirements of EC Directive 2005/66/EC which was implemented by amendment to UK-wide EC Type Approval Regulations. All new cars must therefore conform to the technical requirements of this Directive before being registered, sold or entered into service for the first time. Similarly, all bull bars offered for sale as accessories must also be approved to the standards of the Directive and carry an approval mark.

Bull bars fitted prior to 25 May 2007 are subject to the general safety requirements of Construction and Use Regulations.

The Directive does not prohibit bull bars, which if manufactured using flexible or compliant material can offer improved protection for pedestrians, but sets out specific performance provisions that allow them to be marketed provided it is shown they do not reduce the level of safety provided by the base vehicle.

Planning Service Staff Vacancies

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of staff vacancies in the Planning Service at present. (AQW 938/08)

Mrs Foster: Planning Service currently has 72.5 vacancies representing a vacancy rate of 8.3%. The vacancies relate to 39 specialist planning and 33.5 administrative posts.

These vacancies remain despite the Planning Service having recently completed a major external recruitment and an internal promotion exercise.

A further recruitment competition for casual specialist staff has just concluded, so the majority of the planner vacancies will be filled within the next 6-8 weeks when pre-appointment checks have been completed.

In addition, the NICS promotion competitions for administrative staff which are currently underway should assist with filling administrative vacancies as successful staff become available for posting.

The Planning Service is conscious of the pressures created by vacancies arising from staff turnover. The Agency has raised the issue of increasing levels of resignations by planners with the Department of Finance & Personnel's Central Personnel Group (CPG) which is responsible for such matters as pay and terms and conditions of employment.

Marine Bill

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she is taking to ensure that the interests of Northern Ireland are represented in the Marine Bill; and if she will confirm that the provisions of this Bill will be UK-wide. (AQW 1009/08)

Mrs Foster: My officials have been working closely with officials in the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs to ensure that Northern Ireland's representation in the Marine Bill takes full and appropriate account of the devolution settlement.

I can confirm that the Scottish Government announced its intention in June 2007 to introduce a Scottish Marine Bill.

Review of Environmental Governance

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the changes her department will implement as a result of the Review of Environmental Governance. (AQW 1023/08)

Mrs Foster: As yet, we have not made any decisions about changes to be made as a result of the Review of Environmental Governance.

Any decisions will be agreed with the Executive and announced in the Assembly in the appropriate way.

Renewable Energy Schemes

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications for renewable energy schemes submitted in each of the last three years, broken down by (i) Divisional Planning Office; and (ii) district council area. (AQW 1049/08)

Mrs Foster: All planning applications for windfarms that connect to the National Grid are dealt with in Planning Service Headquarters (Special Studies). The Departmental Divisional Planning Offices have received many other renewable energy applications eg for small domestic solar panels/ single turbines for domestic/specific uses, etc but these are not specifically recorded on the Planning System and it would be impossible in the time available, etc. to examine the paper files.

In the last 3 years, Planning Service HQ has received the following numbers of windfarm applications:

Year	No of Applications	Divisional Planning Office	District Council Area	No of Applications
2005	16	Omagh	Omagh	6
		Omagh	Strabane	5
		Omagh	Fermanagh	2
		Londonderry	Londonderry	1
		Belfast	Newtown-abbey	1
		Londonderry	Ballymoney	1
2006	22	Omagh	Omagh	8
		Omagh	Fermanagh	3
		Londonderry	Ballymoney	2
		Omagh	Strabane	2

Year	No of Applications	Divisional Planning Office	District Council Area	No of Applications
		Ballymena	Ballymena	2
		Omagh	Dungannon	2
		Belfast	Newtown-abbey	1
		Ballymena	Antrim	1
		Londonderry	Limavady	1
2007	2	Londonderry	Limavady	1
		Omagh	Omagh	1

National Park

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to issue a consultation document on the issues related to the proposed National Park designation for the Mourne/Slieve Croob area of South Down. (AQW 1077/08)

Mrs Foster: The Mourne National Park Working Party presented me recently with its recommendations about the proposed Mourne National Park. I will seek the opinions of the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside and the Environment and Agriculture and Rural Development Committees. The views of these bodies will help me decide how to proceed.

Illegal Dumping

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of the Environment if she will confirm that leachate from an illegal dump is polluting the County River at Kilcoo, Co. Fermanagh; and what plans she has to deal with this issue. (AQW 1115/08)

Mrs Foster: I am aware of the illegal landfill site at Slattinagh in Co Fermanagh. On 20 June 2006 officials in the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) instigated a prosecution against the operators of the site which resulted in them being found guilty of depositing waste without a licence and with keeping, treating and disposing of waste in a manner likely to cause environmental pollution or harm to human health. EHS officials have also formally applied to the authorities in the Republic of Ireland to have approximately 4500 tonnes of waste removed from the site.

At present there is no conclusive evidence that leachate from the site is causing pollution. Biological water quality monitoring by EHS in the County River, some 6 km downstream of the site, has detected a slight decline in water quality over the past 3 years. However, there is no evidence that this has been caused by the site at Slattinagh. EHS is considering carrying out an additional monitoring programme to help identify the source of the decline.

Industrial Zoned Land

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of the Environment to provide a detailed breakdown of the availability of industrial zoned land in the Omagh and Strabane District Council areas. (AQW 1182/08)

Mrs Foster: The last survey of industrial land take up was carried out by Planning Service in the Autumn of 2005. This established that, of the 94 hectares zoned in Omagh District, two thirds remain undeveloped while less than one third of the 23 hectares zoned in Strabane District remains undeveloped.

The Omagh Area Plan 2002 zoned 83.6 hectares of industrial land in Omagh town of which 55.7 hectares remain undeveloped. A further 10.5 hectares were zoned in Fintona, Dromore and Carrickmore of which 6.92 hectares remain undeveloped.

The Strabane Area Plan 2001 zoned over 15 hectares in Strabane town of which 3.85 hectares still remain undeveloped. A further 8 hectares were zoned in Castlederg, Newtownstewart and Sion Mills of which 3.8 hectares remain undeveloped.

A review of industrial land needs for West Tyrone is currently being undertaken as part of the preparation for the West Tyrone Area Plan 2019.

Carbon Footprint

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking, financial and otherwise, to enable communities and individuals to reduce their carbon footprint. (AQO 514/08)

Mrs Foster: The Member will be aware that OFMDFM's Northern Ireland Sustainable Development Strategy identifies that responsibility for sustainability lies with all government Departments, including my own. I take my responsibility very seriously.

To enable communities, individuals and society in general to reduce their carbon footprint I am providing leadership in the following ways.

I am bringing forward to the Assembly a legislative consent motion to extend the provisions of the UK Climate Change Bill to Northern Ireland. The Bill will signal to all the importance of the issue and provide the possibility of future schemes to reduce emissions.

I am working with the Sustainable Development Commission to progress work on behavioural change, including both community and individual action. I am to receive a report on this before Christmas.

My officials have also been drafting new planning policy aimed at promoting renewable energy in appropriate locations to help in meeting the targets set out in the Sustainable Development Strategy to reduce carbon emissions. Preparation of this policy is at an advanced stage and I will be circulating this to Executive Colleagues for consideration in due course.

I have provided specific support for the Community Eco-Challenge project, started in April 2007 and sponsored by DOE (supported under the Environment and Renewable Energy Fund). The project is about working with local community groups and households to identify those areas which impact on their carbon footprint such as transport and energy and to help reduce their Ecological Footprint through simple lifestyle changes. A total of £250k has been allocated to the project over a 2-year period.

I have also been out there with communities and individuals demonstrating my interest, listening to their views, highlighting the issues, and supporting the organisers by my attendance at “green” or environmental fairs. I have been, for example, to two recent events in Castlewellan and the King’s Hall concerned with reducing carbon footprint and related sustainability matters.

Infraction Proceedings

Dr Farry asked the Minister of the Environment if she will make a statement on infraction proceedings brought by the European Commission on matters that fall within the remit of her department. (AQO 553/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department is currently involved with 25 cases involving infraction proceedings by the European Commission in the areas of waste management, water quality and regulation, natural heritage and planning.

Infraction proceedings constitute formal legal proceedings between the Commission and the Member State and for that reason I cannot provide details of individual cases. However, I can give an assurance that my officials are working positively with the Commission and, where appropriate, with their counterparts in UK Government Departments and the other devolved administrations to resolve all the outstanding issues associated with these cases.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to hold discussions with stakeholders, regarding the Review of Public Administration.

(AQO 531/08)

Mrs Foster: When I launched the Review in July 2007 I stated that I was committed to working in partnership with the local government, business and community and voluntary sectors to win consensus on the future shape of local government in Northern Ireland. This remains my position.

In order to meet this commitment, I and my Ministerial colleagues on the Executive Sub Committee are determined that there be significant stakeholder engagement in the review, all working together to prepare for and deliver the change which will achieve the strong, effective and efficient local government that we all want. To this end a major stakeholder conference took place in September aimed at validating the emerging Vision for local government arising out of earlier engagement with stakeholders.

Following the Executive’s consideration of the emerging findings of the review, and the Sub Committee’s proposals for the next stage in the process, I released the Emerging Findings paper to stakeholders last Friday. Our aim is to test the emerging findings with local government as a sector and with other stakeholders, so that the Executive Sub Committee can take those views into account in presenting its final report and recommendations to the Executive.

To provide opportunities for focused consideration and discussion on the issues a regional stakeholder conference and four sub-regional events are taking place over the course of the next few weeks. I have also invited stakeholders to make written comments on the emerging findings, if they feel this to be appropriate.

I would encourage as many organisations and individuals as possible to respond to the proposals set out in the emerging findings paper. I want to hear what people have to say, as do my colleagues on the Executive Sub Committee and the Executive Committee as a whole.

Road Safety

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the amount of funding that has been allocated to road safety; and what is her assessment of the success of the road safety advertising campaign.

(AQO 530/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department’s budget for road safety for 2007/2008 is approximately £54 million. This comprises allocations of £5.3 million for Road Safety Division and £48.7 million for the Driver Vehicle Agency. This does not take account of any income.

Research indicates that advertising campaigns have been very successful in improving attitudes and changing behaviours. I am satisfied that road safety advertising campaigns have made a significant contribution to the reduction in road traffic casualties to date.

Infraction Proceedings

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions she has had with the European Commission regarding infraction proceedings, in respect of the delivery of the Birds and Habitats Directive in Northern Ireland. (AQO 550/08)

Mrs Foster: I have not been directly involved in any discussion with the Commission on these matters. My officials have, when necessary and appropriate, held discussions with the Commission in relation to a number of individual infraction cases, in association with colleagues in DEFRA and the other devolved administrations. These discussions have always been positive and my officials will continue to work closely with the Commission to ensure Northern Ireland's obligations in delivering the objectives and requirements of the relevant European laws are fulfilled.

Climate Change

Mr Brady asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she has taken to address the issue of climate change and global warming on an all-island basis, in conjunction with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 570/08)

Mrs Foster: Climate change is the greatest environmental threat to Northern Ireland right now. It is currently addressed through a mix of devolved and reserved instruments.

The Kyoto Protocol set targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions against 1990 baseline levels by 2012. The European Union agreed to meet an 8% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions through a special arrangement. This special arrangement allows the EU's target to be redistributed between Member states to reflect their national circumstances, requirements for economic growth, and the scope for further emission reductions.

The UK agreed to reduce its emissions by 12.5% against the 1990 baseline whilst the Republic of Ireland was allowed a 13% increase. For the UK to reduce and the ROI allowed to emit more, two different strategies have been employed making it difficult for an all-island approach.

In addition, the main instrument to deliver the reductions is the EU Emissions Trading Scheme. Because this is delivered at Member State level there is no scope for an alternative all-island scheme.

Because climate change action involves a mix of reserved, (e.g. fiscal policy) and devolved action, it will be natural that policy will have a Westminster focus.

Whilst our political and economic structure makes it difficult to address climate change on an all-island basis, my officials remain in contact with their counterparts in the Irish Republic to discuss policy development.

Planning Policy Statement 14

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment what formal training planning officers have received in relation to Planning Policy Statement 14: Sustainable Development in the Countryside, and its implementation. (AQO 547/08)

Mrs Foster: After the publication of any new planning policy measure, Planning Service as a matter of practice provides relevant professional staff in all Divisions with both formal and informal training supported by written guidance. In the case of draft Planning Policy Statement 14 prepared by DRD, Planning Service provided formal training to all its senior professional managers at the time of its publication and this was complemented by the provision of guidance and local informal training through its well-established network of working and decision-making groups.

Cooperation between the Environment and Heritage Service and the Environmental Protection Agency

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment to provide an update on co-operation between the Environment and Heritage Service and its counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, the Environmental Protection Agency. (AQO 569/08)

Mrs Foster: I am delighted to note the significant co-operation between the EHS and EPA. Officers are maintaining a close working relationship through regular planned meetings and an ad hoc exchange of information.

The Environmental Enforcement Network Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Working Group meets regularly to discuss matters concerning cross-border movements of waste. Officers have agreed targets to carry out road side checks in conjunction with District Councils in the Republic of Ireland and verification checks of trans-boundary movements. Information, intelligence and evidence are routinely shared to enable more effective tackling of cross-border waste crime.

Shared work in support of the implementation of the EC Water Framework Directive has led to the development of new monitoring, classification, information and reporting tools. This work has also forged improved technical links with the rest of the UK and Europe.

Planning Policies

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment if she will make a statement on updating the suite of planning policies. (AQO 552/08)

Mrs Foster: Given that the planning system has to respond to continuously changing circumstances and emerging issues, the review and update of planning policy is an ongoing process. We bring forward new and revised planning policies as necessary to facilitate the proper economic and environmental development of the Region.

This year's programme includes the publication of final policy statements on Renewable Energy, Residential Extensions and for the Control of Development in Airport Public Safety Zones.

In addition we will consult on draft policy statements for Renewable Energy and Natural Heritage and progress the preparation of PPS 1, which will update the key principles behind the planning system and highlight its role in achieving sustainable development and in meeting the challenges of climate change.

Biodiversity

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she is taking to help protect biodiversity. (AQO 578/08)

Mrs Foster: My Department continues to safeguard biodiversity through a comprehensive programme of designating Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs) for nationally important species and habitats. There are currently over 250 ASSIs and I intend to designate in the region of 200 additional sites by 2016. I would also note that over 50 sites have also been designated under the Habitats and Birds Directives.

In addition, I intend to undertake a review of the Wildlife Order (NI) 1985, which is the principal legislation relating to statutory protection of our important species. As part of this review I will propose additional powers to combat wildlife crime and a statutory duty on public bodies to promote and protect biodiversity when undertaking their functions.

I have also written to Ministerial colleagues to remind them of their responsibilities to implement the recommendations of the Northern Ireland Biodiversity Strategy, which was published in August 2000 and to seek an update on measures which their Departments are taking to promote biodiversity. Each Department has undertaken to produce a Biodiversity Implementation Plan.

Report of the Mourne National Park Working Party

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment to give a timescale within which she will make a formal response to the Report of the Mourne National Park Working Party. (AQO 546/08)

Mrs Foster: After the publication of any new planning policy measure, Planning Service as a matter of practice provides relevant professional staff in all Divisions with both formal and informal training supported by written guidance. In the case of draft Planning Policy Statement 14 prepared by DRD, Planning Service provided formal training to all its senior professional managers at the time of its publication and this was complemented by the provision of guidance and local informal training through its well-established network of working and decision-making groups.

Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the role of the Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside. (AQO 532/08)

Mrs Foster: The role of the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside is set out in the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. In summary, it is

- to advise my Department on matters relating to nature conservation;
- to enquire into and report on matters affecting the natural beauty or amenity of any place in Northern Ireland;
- to advise my Department on the establishment and management of national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty, areas of special scientific interest and nature reserves;
- to advise me on the establishment and management of marine nature reserves.

Garden Grabbing

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment what action she is taking to combat 'garden grabbing' by developers. (AQO 554/08)

Mrs Foster: In recognition of public concern on this matter and pending the outcome of the policy consideration by a joint group of officials within both the Department of the Environment and the Department for Regional Development, I asked some months ago that all Planning Service staff be reminded of the need to consider fully the impact on the established residential character when processing applications for new residential development. To this end a Planning Circular on the assessment of planning applications for residential development in urban areas, villages and other small settlements was issued to Planning Service operational staff in August 2007.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Staff Team Building

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total cost of (i) staff away days; and (ii) staff team building exercises, in each of the last three years. (AQW 809/08)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr P Robinson): The total cost of (a) staff away days and (b) staff team building exercises in the Department of Finance and Personnel in each of the last three years are set out in the table.

Year	Cost of Away Days (£)	Cost of Team Building Exercises (£)	Total Cost (£)
2004-05	26,139	24,255	50,394
2005-06	36,170	16,601	52,771
2006-07	31,689	9,196	40,885

Review of Domestic Rating

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will explain the concept of 'ability to pay', within the context of the current review of domestic rating. (AQW 815/08)

Mr P Robinson: 'Ability to pay' is a subjective concept but the majority view from the recent consultation exercise appears to define it as the direct relationship between tax liability and current income.

Capital values on their own are not a sufficiently reliable proxy for income and there needs to be checks and balances associated with the system. I believe this can be achieved through the provision of well targeted reliefs so that those people who are unable to pay are adequately protected.

This is the primary focus of Strand 1 of the ongoing Executive Review of Rating and as Minister responsible I will endeavour to deliver changes by April 2008 to achieve that aim.

Domestic Rating

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to explain why an equality impact assessment was not carried out, in respect of his department's decision to create a cap for properties valued at £500k or higher, within the current domestic rating regime. (AQW 816/08)

Mr P Robinson: The decision to create a cap for properties valued at £500k or higher was taken by the previous direct rule Administration and I do not therefore have access to the steps taken to arrive at that decision.

Domestic Rating

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give a timescale within which equality impact assessments will be conducted into the different options within Strands 1A, 1B and 2 of the current review of domestic rating. (AQW 817/08)

Mr P Robinson: A full EQIA process was undertaken and published in respect of the impact of a capital value system. Monitoring continues and it is worth noting that following publication of the new values, NISRA undertook a major study by matching the capital values to census information at individual household level. This study is available on the Rating Reform Website.

It is considered that most of the Strand 1A and many of the Strand 1B issues fall into the category of mitigating measures relating to existing policies and therefore will not be subjected to a new 7 stage EQIA process. Nevertheless, as noted above, my Department has considered or is actively considering all measures in the light of likely differential impact on Section 75 groups.

Other proposals which are not in the nature of mitigating measures (all the Strand 2 policies) must be subjected to full EQIA before any legislation can be presented to the Assembly.

Workplace 2010

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what discussions he has had with departmental staff based at Rathgael House, in relation to the relocation of jobs under the Workplace 2010 plan.

(AQW 818/08)

Mr P Robinson: There have been extensive consultations between the Workplace 2010 team and senior officials in Rathgael House as the strategic plan for the office estate has developed. These discussions have specifically included options for the location of both DE and DFP departmental headquarters under Workplace 2010. DFP also held a public consultation during summer 2006 as part of an Equality Impact Assessment. All staff in Rathgael House had the opportunity to respond and a number participated in focus groups on the issue. Their responses were considered in the final Equality Impact Assessment report.

I am fully aware of the issues relating to Rathgael and have had discussions with members of North Down Borough Council on the matter.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within his department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 839/08)

Mr P Robinson: As part of the current Comprehensive Spending Review process, Departments were obliged to undertake high level impact assessments in respect of each bid submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The purpose of these high level impact assessments was to ascertain the equality and good relations implications for each funding proposal submitted and were undertaken in accordance with Section 75 (1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Equality Commission for NI also produced a briefing paper for Departments on the importance of mainstreaming equality and good relations considerations into the Comprehensive Spending Review, Priorities and Budget and this paper was also used to inform the development of my Department's bids.

In respect of the report 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy', this piece of independent research was commissioned by the previous administration and represents the views of Deloitte. My department is continually reviewing the delivery of its public services. In doing so, it focuses on the needs of those who access its services and on the requirement upon all public bodies to ensure value for money.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within his department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 840/08)

Mr P Robinson: As part of the current Comprehensive Spending Review process, Departments were obliged to undertake high level impact assessments in respect of each bid submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The purpose of these high level impact assessments was to ascertain the equality and good relations implications for each funding proposal submitted and were undertaken in accordance with Section 75 (1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Equality Commission for NI also produced a briefing paper for Departments on the importance of mainstreaming equality and good relations considerations into the Comprehensive Spending Review, Priorities and Budget and this paper was also used to inform the development of my Department's bids.

In respect of the report 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy', this piece of independent research was commissioned by the previous administration and represents the views of Deloitte. My department is continually reviewing the delivery of its public services. In doing so, it focuses on the needs of those who access its services and on the requirement upon all public bodies to ensure value for money.

Graduate Entry to the NICS

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of direct entrant graduates recruited by the Northern Ireland Civil Service, in each of the last five years. (AQW 856/08)

Mr P Robinson: The table below shows the number of direct entrant graduates appointed by the NICS:

Financial Year	Graduate Staff Officer Appointments
2003 – 2004	95
2004 – 2005	63
2005 – 2006	31
2006 – 2007	22
2007 – 2008	56

Ministerial Cars

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail whether or not an environmental impact assessment was carried out, prior to the purchase of the new Ministerial cars. (AQW 933/08)

Mr P Robinson: The process involving the purchase of new Ministerial cars was completed prior to the restoration of devolution on 8 May 2007. However, I understand that while no formal environmental impact assessment was carried out, as part of the procurement process officials specified strict CO2 emissions requirements that the cars had to meet or better. Additionally information was requested regarding the percentage of each car that could be recycled after use. I am assured that the vehicles chosen were the best available under both criteria.

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail his department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 961/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Department does not project an underspend at this point in the financial year. In-year Monitoring rounds provide opportunities for budgets to be refined in the light of emerging pressures and reduced requirements. The final projected expenditure will be established at the February Monitoring round.

Childcare Vouchers

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will explain the reasons why the salary sacrifice scheme for Childcare Vouchers has not been made available to employees of the Northern Ireland Civil Service; and if he will provide details of the equality impact assessment conducted in relation to this scheme. (AQW 1031/08)

Mr P Robinson: In relation to the decision to delay the introduction of the salary sacrifice scheme in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and compensation for staff, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave my hon. Friends the Members for North Down and Lagan Valley to AQO 210/08 during oral question time on 24 September 2007.

In accordance with my Department's obligations under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 this policy was screened and it was assessed as not having a significant impact on equality of opportunity. It was therefore not necessary to carry out an Equality Impact Assessment.

My officials have had no discussions with Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs about the position of employees who cannot avail of the salary sacrifice scheme because of delayed introduction.

Childcare Vouchers

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what compensation will be made available to employees of the Northern Ireland Civil Service who have suffered a loss, as a result of the decision not to introduce the salary sacrifice scheme in respect of Childcare Vouchers. (AQW 1032/08)

Mr P Robinson: In relation to the decision to delay the introduction of the salary sacrifice scheme in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and compensation for staff, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave my hon. Friends the Members for North Down and Lagan Valley to AQO 210/08 during oral question time on 24 September 2007.

In accordance with my Department's obligations under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 this policy was screened and it was assessed as not having a significant impact on equality of opportunity. It was therefore not necessary to carry out an Equality Impact Assessment.

My officials have had no discussions with Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs about the position of employees who cannot avail of the salary sacrifice scheme because of delayed introduction.

Childcare Vouchers

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what discussions his officials have had with Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs in relation to the implementation of a scheme that will allow employees of the Northern Ireland Civil Service to have their case examined on (i) an annual basis; or (ii) an ad-hoc basis, in respect of those employees who cannot avail of the salary sacrifice scheme in respect of Childcare Vouchers. (AQW 1033/08)

Mr P Robinson: In relation to the decision to delay the introduction of the salary sacrifice scheme in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and compensation for staff, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave my hon. Friends the Members for North Down and Lagan Valley to AQO 210/08 during oral question time on 24 September 2007.

In accordance with my Department's obligations under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 this policy was screened and it was assessed as not having a significant impact on equality of opportunity. It was therefore not necessary to carry out an Equality Impact Assessment.

My officials have had no discussions with Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs about the position of employees who cannot avail of the salary sacrifice scheme because of delayed introduction.

Rating of Agricultural Land

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration his department is giving to the rating of agricultural land. (AQW 1034/08)

Mr P Robinson: Under the current rating system agricultural land is not valued nor rated and there are no plans to do so. However as you are aware the current review of the new domestic rating system that was introduced by Direct Rule Ministers in April 2007 is examining a wide range of options for change in the short and longer terms, which were included in terms of reference agreed by the Executive. Strand 2 of the review is addressing longer term issues including possible alternatives to the current arrangements and one such alternative, is Land Value Taxation.

I have commissioned the Ulster University to investigate the experience of other jurisdictions that have used Land Value Taxation as a revenue raising measure and I understand they have shared some of their preliminary findings with the DFP Committee. It is clear from the preliminary evidence provided by the Ulster University that in those countries that apply land value taxation, agricultural land normally forms part of the tax base.

However, their work is not yet complete and therefore no decisions have yet been taken. Once I have had time to consider their full findings and taken the views of the DFP Committee I will bring forward my recommendations to the Executive later in the year.

Meeting Requests

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of meeting requests received from MLAs; the number of these that were declined; the number that were accepted; and the party affiliation of those MLAs whose meeting requests were declined. (AQW 1067/08)

Mr P Robinson: Since the restoration of devolution on 8 May I have received 32 separate requests from MLAs for a meeting. Of these, 30 were accepted. The remaining 2 both related to an issue that was addressed before the meetings could take place and, consequently, no further action was necessary. The two Members involved belong to the UUP and DUP.

Departmental Funding

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will confirm that children will be identified as a priority in the allocation of departmental funding for the next three years, specifically in relation to (i) the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister; (ii) the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure; (iii) the Department for Employment and Learning; and (iv) the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. (AQW 1069/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Executive's proposed strategic priorities and associated public expenditure allocations for the next three years will be set out in the draft Programme for Government and draft Budget, to be published for consultation on 25 October.

Childcare Vouchers

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will explain the reasons why the salary sacrifice scheme for Childcare Vouchers has not been made available to employees of the Northern Ireland Civil Service; and if he will provide details of the equality impact assessment conducted in relation to this scheme. (AQW 1093/08)

Mr P Robinson: In relation to the decision to delay the introduction of the salary sacrifice scheme in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and compensation for staff, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave my hon. Friends the Members for North Down and Lagan Valley to AQO 210/08 during oral question time on 24 September 2007.

In accordance with my Department's obligations under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 this policy was screened and was assessed as not having a significant impact on equality of opportunity.

It was therefore not necessary to carry out an Equality Impact Assessment.

Industrial Derating

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will make a statement on industrial derating. (AQO 527/08)

Mr P Robinson: Earlier this year my Department engaged the Economic Research Institute (ERINI) to undertake a study into the effectiveness and impact of the policy to phase out industrial derating. A preliminary draft Report has been received from them and it is being considered by my officials. I expect a final Report by the end of the month and following Committee and Executive considerations, I will make a statement to this Assembly of my intentions for the CSR period and the longer term.

In the meantime I will have to outline my intentions for next year as part of the budget process. The final report will not be available before then, but I do have their preliminary report, which takes a hard look at the impact of this measure and identifies concerns about its potential long term effect on some firms. There is enough evidence contained in it on which to base a decision for next year.

I will not say much more about that until the budget statement, however, members may be aware of my line of thinking on the matter: if the focus and centrepiece of Government policy is economic growth, it would be inconsistent to make life more difficult for businesses.

What we cannot do is move backwards, because this is likely to be an issue with the EU in terms of State Aid.

Information Technology

Mr Cobain asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is his assessment of the information technology system used by the Land and Properties Agency (Rating Division); and to detail what action he is taking to improve communication between the Rating Division, Social Security Agency and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. (AQO 528/08)

Mr P Robinson: The first phase of the replacement rate collection system went live in September 2006 to support the introduction of rating reform in April 2007. Rate bills, based on capital value for domestic properties and net annual value for non-domestic properties, were successfully issued on schedule. Whilst there have been problems with the system, key improvements and enhancements have now been delivered. The remaining phases of the project are on schedule, but the project plan may need to be amended to accommodate any changes arising from the Review of Rating Policy.

Land and Property Services meets regularly with the Social Security Agency and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to highlight and resolve issues of joint concern, and to work in partnership wherever possible. Information is exchanged through a number of computer interfaces to secure efficiencies, reduce processing times and prevent and detect fraud.

Classroom Assistants' Dispute

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what bid has been received from the Minister of Education, for funding to address the classroom assistants' dispute. (AQO 585/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Department of Education has registered that a potential pressure may arise as a consequence of resolving the current dispute between classroom assistants' and the employers (Education and Library Boards).

However, in light of the current constrained public expenditure environment, the Department must first look to manage this issue from within existing allocations.

Lyons Review

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is his assessment of the implications of the Lyons Review into local Government finance, in relation to the present review of rating in Northern Ireland. (AQO 522/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Lyons Review has implications for the present review of rating in Northern Ireland in terms of providing valuable research and analysis to help inform policy decisions here. The recommendations do not apply to Northern Ireland. Although there are significant differences between Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK in terms of our system of local taxation and our structure of local government, there are issues on which there is much common ground. Issues around take up of reliefs, the impact of property tax on pensioners, barriers to providing relief for those on low incomes, such as the savings limit and suggestions for providing more automatic discounts.

I met Sir Michael Lyons a couple of weeks ago and spent some time with him examining those recommendations which could have application in Northern Ireland and may help us refashion the rating system here to make it more acceptable. I will continue to draw from the experience of others in this difficult area of policy, especially established experts in this field such as Sir Michael Lyons.

Budget Underspend

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is his assessment of underspending in previous budgets on children's services within Northern Ireland, when compared to other regions of the United Kingdom; and to detail what action he is taking to address this underspend. (AQO 526/08)

Mr P Robinson: Budgetary control within NI is primarily based on the nature of the service, as opposed to the ultimate recipient. On this basis it is not possible to provide the information sought.

This position was emphasised by the recent publication by the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People, 'An Analysis of Public Expenditure on Children in Northern Ireland', which highlighted the complexities of measuring the level of expenditure on any particular age group.

It also indicated the difficulties of comparisons between regions of the level of spend on particular groups as services may be provided in a variety of ways.

Flood Compensation

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how the £5 million made available to flood victims in June was spent; and the amount he maintains in a civil contingencies fund, to meet such eventualities. (AQO 510/08)

Mr P Robinson: The latest figures provided by the Department of the Environment indicate that 1,179 claims, at £1,000 each, have been paid, totalling £1,179,000. Direct costs to councils of £64,000 and contracted services costs of £189,000 have also been reimbursed. There are outstanding costs of some £68,000 giving a total expenditure to date of £1.5 million.

In the current climate of constrained public expenditure it would be unwise to hold unallocated funding to cover eventualities that may not materialise and, in doing so, deprive other public services of much needed funding.

However, as has been demonstrated by our response to this incident, we maintain sufficient flexibility within the current public expenditure system to react to such emergencies.

Business Rates

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, prior to any re-evaluation of the non-domestic business rate, if he will establish a standardised measurement of footfall which could be used to determine the level of business rates, in light of the impact of out-of-town shopping on town centres. (AQO 509/08)

Mr P Robinson: Shops in Northern Ireland are assessed on the basis of rental value. If out of town shopping is impacting on town centre rental levels this will be reflected in the new assessments following the revaluation. The basis of assessment is set out in legislation and is a well established approach based on market evidence. Whilst footfall figures can assist the assessment process I do not believe that they alone should be used as the basis for determining business rates.

Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will explain the reasons for announcing a new efficiency watchdog, the Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit, at the annual conference of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy on 27 September, and not in a Ministerial statement to the Assembly. (AQO 518/08)

Mr P Robinson: As the Member will be aware, on many occasions Ministerial announcements are made in places other than the Assembly Chamber. This also applies to Ministers from his own party, and I do not recall any Assembly questions being tabled by him on those occasions.

In this case, the announcement was in respect of a new Unit within my own Department, within existing legislative process and to be financed from within existing resources. On this basis, and particularly in the context of the conference theme – “Delivering More for Less: The Big Squeeze” - I feel this approach was entirely appropriate.

I am currently considering the composition and remit of the Unit, and will want to consult the Assembly Committee for Finance and Personnel on this issue.

Efficiency Targets

Mr McCrea asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what efficiency targets have been set for Government departments in Northern Ireland. (AQO 539/08)

Mr P Robinson: Northern Ireland Departments have been set a 3% per annum cash releasing efficiency savings target over the period 2008-09 to 2010-11. This builds on the work of Direct Rule Ministers. My own view is that this is at the low end of what can be achieved, hence I am establishing a Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit (PEDU), to examine the scope for further efficiencies, and improvements in performance and delivery in NI departments and the wider public sector.

Public Service Jobs

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he is taking to replace public service jobs that have been lost, or are about to be lost, in East Derry/Londonderry. (AQO 583/08)

Mr P Robinson: There are currently no plans to replace public service jobs that have been lost, or are about to be lost in the Parliamentary Constituency of East Londonderry. However I understand that the Social Security Agency has relocated thirty jobs from Belfast to East Londonderry, with plans for a further four next month. The roll out of the Department for Employment and Learning's Pathway to Work Initiative will also result in additional posts in Coleraine.

I made a statement to the Assembly on 24 September 2007 outlining the Executive's agreement to initiate a time-bound review of policy on the location of public sector jobs in Northern Ireland. I intend to take further detailed proposals on the terms of reference for the review to the Executive shortly.

End-Year Flexibility

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will make a statement on his discussions with HM Treasury, in relation to end-year flexibility. (AQO 506/08)

Mr P Robinson: As part of the ongoing work on the Comprehensive Spending Review, I have had a series of discussions with the Treasury on this issue.

As a result I have been able to secure access to our full stock of End Year Flexibility over the CSR period. This represents an increase of some £295 million over the position offered by the Chancellor in May.

Approval of Government Expenditure

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the role of his department in approving expenditure by Government departments. (AQO 517/08)

Mr P Robinson: The Ministerial Code confirms the principles set out in Government Accounting Northern Ireland that 'no expenditure can be properly incurred without the approval of the Department of Finance and Personnel'.

My department exercises this responsibility, on behalf of the Assembly, with the objective of ensuring good financial management and value for money.

Northern Ireland Direct Project

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what progress has been made in relation to the Northern Ireland Direct project. (AQO 505/08)

Mr P Robinson: NI Direct is one of my key priorities and is being developed to provide simple, high quality and efficient access to government services through a single 3 digit telephone number and website. It is to be introduced on a phased basis starting with an upgrade of the existing service that I expect to be operational from autumn 2008 and which will deal with first point of contact enquiries on a range of services including rates, planning and General Registrar's Office.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Budget

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 485/08, to detail the amount of his department's annual budget that is set aside in order to cover compensation claims; and what percentage of the overall health budget that this represents. (AQW 956/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): My Department's budget for 2007-08 is £4009 million, of which £11 million has been set aside to cover clinical negligence compensation claims. This represents 0.27 percent of the overall DHSSPS budget.

Compensation to Patients

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his AQW 485/08, to give a timescale within which he expects outstanding compensation claims to be concluded, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last five years. (AQW 957/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested has been set out in the tables below.

BELFAST HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE TRUSTBELFAST CITY HOSPITAL HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	Undetermined
2002/03	23	5	16	2	0	0
2003/04	36	5	25	6	0	0
2004/05	38	7	25	6	0	0
2005/06	31	4	22	5	0	0
2006/07	36	5	25	6	0	0

GREEN PARK HEALTHCARE HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	Undetermined
2002/03	3	0	3	0	0	0
2003/04	1	0	1	0	0	0
2004/05	5	3	1	1	0	0
2005/06	16	2	12	2	0	0
2006/07	19	1	17	1	0	0

MATER HOSPITAL HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	7	1	4	2	0
2003/04	16	5	11	0	0
2004/05	10	2	8	0	0
2005/06	23	5	8	10	0
2006/07	28	0	5	23	0

NORTH & WEST BELFAST HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	0	0	0	0	0
2003/04	1	1	0	0	0
2004/05	1	1	0	0	0
2005/06	6	6	0	0	0
2006/07	2	0	2	0	0

ROYAL GROUP OF HOSPITALS AND DENTAL HOSPITAL HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	Undetermined
2002/03	34	10	22	2	0	0
2003/04	42	11	31	0	0	0
2004/05	59	17	41	1	0	0
2005/06	66	12	54	0	0	0
2006/07	76	8	33	33	2	0

SOUTH & EAST BELFAST HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	1	0	1	0	0
2003/04	0	0	0	0	0
2004/05	1	0	1	0	0
2005/06	2	2	0	0	0
2006/07	0	0	0	0	0

NORTHERN HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE TRUSTCAUSEWAY HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	6	4	2	0	0
2003/04	9	8	0	1	0
2004/05	8	3	3	2	0
2005/06	18	4	10	4	0
2006/07	18	4	6	4	4

HOMEFIRST COMMUNITY HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	4	2	1	1	0
2003/04	3	1	0	2	0
2004/05	0	0	0	0	0
2005/06	1	1	0	0	0
2006/07	1	0	0	0	1

UNITED HOSPITALS HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	25	7	18	0	0
2003/04	23	9	14	0	0
2004/05	43	14	28	1	0
2005/06	26	8	17	1	0
2006/07	63	11	20	32	0

NI AMBULANCE SERVICE HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES TRUSTNI AMBULANCE SERVICE HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	0	0	0	0	0
2003/04	1	0	1	0	0
2004/05	2	0	0	2	0
2005/06	1	1	0	0	0
2006/07	1	0	0	1	0

SOUTH EASTERN HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE TRUSTDOWN LISBURN HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	8	2	4	2	0
2003/04	10	2	5	3	0
2004/05	23	5	2	16	0
2005/06	23	1	6	16	0
2006/07	33	1	3	29	0

ULSTER COMMUNITY & HOSPITALS HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	29	4	7	18	0
2003/04	30	5	9	16	0
2004/05	40	4	9	26	1
2005/06	41	6	14	17	4

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2006/07	38	1	7	16	14

SOUTHERN HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE TRUSTARMAGH AND DUNGANNON HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	0	0	0	0	0
2003/04	3	2	0	0	1
2004/05	1	0	0	0	1
2005/06	5	1	4	0	0
2006/07	2	0	0	0	2

CRAIGAVON AREA HOSPITAL GROUP HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	Undetermined
2002/03	12	2	5	4	1	0
2003/04	17	3	8	4	0	2
2004/05	23	2	7	13	1	0
2005/06	24	1	7	15	1	0
2006/07	40	2	12	26	0	0

CRAIGAVON & BANBRIDGE COMMUNITY HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	0	0	0	0	0
2003/04	1	1	0	0	0
2004/05	0	0	0	0	0
2005/06	0	0	0	0	0
2006/07	3	2	1	0	0

NEWRY & MOURNE HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	11	1	2	8	0
2003/04	13	1	7	5	0
2004/05	12	0	5	7	0
2005/06	9	0	2	7	0
2006/07	14	2	1	10	1

WESTERN HEALTH AND SOCIAL CARE TRUSTALTNAGELVIN HOSPITALS HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	28	16	10	0	2
2003/04	38	25	7	0	6
2004/05	26	12	4	0	10
2005/06	45	4	14	3	24
2006/07	35	3	5	3	24

FOYLE HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	2	0	2	0	0
2003/04	4	0	2	2	0
2004/05	3	1	1	1	0
2005/06	3	0	1	2	0
2006/07	0	0	0	0	0

SPERRIN LAKELAND HSS TRUST

Year of Claim	Number of claims outstanding as at 30 September 2007	Expected Year of Settlement
		2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	Undetermined
2002/03	30	4	11	12	3
2003/04	14	2	7	5	0
2004/05	19	2	11	3	3
2005/06	25	6	11	6	2
2006/07	17	1	1	3	12

Every effort is made by Health and Social Care Trusts to resolve these issues. However, once the claimant initiates the legal process other factors outside of the Trust's control influence the speed of resolution of the claim. These factors include the decision-making time for the individual claimant concerned; time required to gather medical and other evidence and the time necessary to engage with the court processes.

Practice-Based Commissioning

Mr McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give his assessment of the benefits of practice-based commissioning in Northern Ireland. (AQW 973/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I am currently considering the future shape of our health and social care systems in Northern Ireland. While I agree that changes need to be made, it is unlikely that there will be further changes before April 2009 because of likely legislative requirements and practical considerations around restructuring.

I want to be sure that the changes we make will deliver the best outcome for the people of Northern Ireland. Health and social care structures must meet local needs and must be sustainable in the long-term.

The current integrated health and social care system in Northern Ireland has many strengths and I want to capitalise on those strengths. As part of this process I will consider how the various methods of commissioning could contribute to this.

Commissioning Groups

Mr McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the progress of the work of local commissioning groups. (AQW 974/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I am currently considering the future shape of our health and social care systems in Northern Ireland. While I agree that changes need to be made, it is unlikely that there will be further changes before April 2009 because of likely legislative requirements and practical considerations around restructuring.

I want to be sure that the changes we make will deliver the best outcome for the people of Northern Ireland. Health and social care structures must meet local needs and must be sustainable in the long-term.

The current integrated health and social care system in Northern Ireland has many strengths and I want to capitalise on those strengths. As part of this process I will consider how the various methods of commissioning could contribute to this.

Commissioning Groups

Mr McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give his assessment of the benefits of establishing community commissioning associations. (AQW 975/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I am currently considering the future shape of our health and social care systems in Northern Ireland. While I agree that changes need to be made, it is unlikely that there will be further changes before April 2009 because of likely legislative requirements and practical considerations around restructuring.

I want to be sure that the changes we make will deliver the best outcome for the people of Northern Ireland. Health and social care structures must meet local needs and must be sustainable in the long-term.

The current integrated health and social care system in Northern Ireland has many strengths and I want to capitalise on those strengths. As part of this process I will consider how the various methods of commissioning could contribute to this.

Reformed Health Structures

Mr McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what representations he has received requesting early decisions to be taken on reformed health structures. (AQW 976/08)

Mr McGimpsey: To date I have received letters from the Chairman of the British Medical Association (NI) dated 13 September and from the Chairman of the General Practitioners Committee of the BMA(NI) dated 27 September 2007 regarding the impact of any delay in taking decisions on the new health and social care structures. In response to these letters, I met with representatives of the British Medical Association on 11 October and plan to meet representatives of the General Practitioners Committee to discuss, amongst other things, their concerns in this regard.

British Heart Foundation

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will make a statement on the provision of funding to British Heart Foundation nurses, after the cessation of British Heart Foundation funding for these positions. (AQW 981/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I appreciate the service that British Heart Foundation (BHF) nurses provide in supporting and caring for patients with heart failure.

No definite decision has been taken regarding the long term funding of these positions.

It will be a matter for the commissioners to prioritise how funding is used when funding from BHF ceases, taking into account local circumstances, the evaluation of the individual schemes, the strategic objectives established for the Health and Social Care (HSC) sector and demands and pressures generally at that time for access to a wide range of cardiac and cardiology services.

I would like to assure you of my commitment to develop cardiac services for the benefit of people living with all forms of heart disease. In that context, a Regional Cardiac Network has been established to develop more integrated, responsive and cost-effective cardiac services for the people of Northern Ireland. This will help to ensure the development of patient focused services running seamlessly through primary, secondary and tertiary care. The outcome of this work will be used to inform the development of a commissioning framework for cardiac services.

AIDS and HIV Prescriptions

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the reasons why people suffering from AIDS and HIV must travel to Belfast in order to receive their prescriptions and medication; and why local pharmacies cannot provide this service. (AQW 1022/08)

Mr McGimpsey: It is assumed this question refers to specialist HIV and AIDS medicines, as people with HIV or AIDS can obtain prescriptions for non-specialist medicines from their GPs and have their medicines dispensed by local pharmacies in the same way as other patients.

Treatment for HIV and AIDS is managed regionally by the Genito Urinary Medicine Clinic at the Royal Victoria Hospital in Belfast which provides a specialised clinic with three dedicated consultants. HIV and AIDS therapies are of significant pharmacological complexity and involve combinations of drugs with significant potential for toxicity and complex interactions. These require specialised monitoring which GP practices are unable to carry out. Responsibility for prescribing specialist HIV and AIDS drugs therefore remains with the consultant or specialist clinician based at the Royal and responsibility for supply rests with the hospital pharmacy.

Lymphoedema

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what provision is currently in place for patients suffering from lymphoedema. (AQW 1027/08)

Mr McGimpsey: From 2007/08 an additional £500,000 per year has been allocated to support the implementation of high quality specialist lymphoedema care throughout the province. Lymphoedema services across NI are currently delivered in a variety of healthcare settings in the primary, community and secondary care sectors. The voluntary sector also provides valuable specialist lymphoedema services to patients.

It is planned that the additional funding will allow clinical teams in each trust area to lead on the further development of services locally. Each trust team will strengthen services already in place and improve coordination across all of the relevant specialties (physiotherapy, oncology, palliative care, genetics, dermatology and vascular surgery). In addition plans include the creation of a consultant led complex case clinic which will rotate around a number of locations to provide a regional service.

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of business cases that have been (i) prepared; and (ii) approved by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, in each of the last five years. (AQW 1028/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The information requested is set out in the table below:

	02/03	03/04	04/05	05/06	06/07
No of Business Cases Prepared by NIFRS	109	71	73	51	21
No of Business Cases Approved by NIFRS	109	71	73	51	21

The figures refer to business cases which fall within the NI Fire and Rescue Service's delegated limits for expenditure projects.

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the proposals for a new Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service facility in Ballymena. (AQW 1029/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) advises that the replacement of Ballymena Station has been identified as a high priority in its Strategic Development Plan.

NIFRS is working closely with consultants appointed by DHSSPS and the Strategic Investment Board (SIB) to develop outline business cases for estate, fleet and equipment over a 10 year investment period.

Bamford Review and Investing for Health Strategies

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what arrangements his department has put in place to resource the Bamford Review and Investing for Health Strategies.

(AQW 1046/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The Bamford Review of Mental Health and Learning Disability has set out a vision for the improvement of services over the next 15 years. A bid has been submitted through the Comprehensive Spending Review to start implementation of the recommendations in the Report.

There are many actions which contribute to Investing for Health within and beyond my Department. In respect of resourcing the strategy a total of around £22.5 m has been invested by DHSSPS this year. This total includes funding for implementation of a range of healthy lifestyle strategies and contributes to implementation of the Investing for Health Partnerships' local Health Improvement Plans.

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of incidences of civil disturbance that took place when the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service was present, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 1072/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The number of incidences of civil disturbance that Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) attended in each of the last 3 financial years is shown below:

Year	Mobilised Civil Disturbance Incidents
2004/2005	425
2005/2006	548
2006/2007	357

* NIFRS records incidents as "Civil Disturbance" related where one or more of the following conditions apply:

- Incidents attended by NIFRS where the cause of fire has been the result of "Civil Unrest". [Petrol bomb attack, rioting etc.]
- Incidents where NIFRS have had to withdraw due to hostilities or where they come under attack.

- Incidents where NIFRS are called in to deal with fires following a spate of Civil Unrest.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Blue Disability Badges

Mr McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to eradicate the unlawful use of blue disability badges. (AQW 860/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): I can advise that the Parking Enforcement Unit within my Department's Roads Service, has been working closely with the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC) on all aspects of parking enforcement relating to the use of Blue Badges, since responsibility for parking enforcement passed to them in October 2006.

Roads Service and IMTAC have agreed that there should be a dual approach to tackling the unlawful use of the Blue Badges, namely, raising awareness on the use of Badges and supporting this with enforcement against those people who continue to abuse the scheme.

In June this year IMTAC undertook an extensive publicity exercise as part of their Baywatch campaign, to raise awareness of inconsiderate parking in disabled parking bays and the difficulties caused by people using Blue Badges when they are not authorised to do so.

On 8th October, my Department issued a press release explaining that enforcement in this area would be increasing. It also encouraged people not to abuse the scheme and warned that Badges may be confiscated if abuse continued.

Roads Service is committed to tackling this issue by continually raising awareness of the problem and taking enforcement action when necessary. However, levels of enforcement must be set according to available resources and other enforcement demands.

I should point out that enforcement action against people who abuse the scheme is extremely difficult. Traffic Attendants have to gather information on drivers and vehicles where they believe the badge is being misused. In some circumstances this can only be done by questioning the driver when they park or return to the vehicle. This will result in attendants spending long periods observing vehicles, taking them away from other enforcement duties.

With regard to your question relating to the display of information on either side of the Blue Badge, I can advise that my Department is preparing to issue a consultation document in respect of a number of changes to the Blue Badge scheme. The proposed changes include the alteration of the design of the Badge, and the inclusion of clearer instructions about which side of the Badge must be displayed. Subject to Executive Committee approval, the consultation paper should be issued to interested parties in the very near future. Any suggestions relating to the badge design will be considered as part of the overall consultation process.

Blue Disability Badges

Mr McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he will give to ensuring that the necessary information is displayed on both sides of blue disability badges. (AQW 861/08)

Mr Murphy: I can advise that the Parking Enforcement Unit within my Department's Roads Service, has been working closely with the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC) on all aspects of parking enforcement relating to the use of Blue Badges, since responsibility for parking enforcement passed to them in October 2006.

Roads Service and IMTAC have agreed that there should be a dual approach to tackling the unlawful use of the Blue Badges, namely, raising awareness on the use of Badges and supporting this with enforcement against those people who continue to abuse the scheme.

In June this year IMTAC undertook an extensive publicity exercise as part of their Baywatch campaign, to raise awareness of inconsiderate parking in disabled parking bays and the difficulties caused by people using Blue Badges when they are not authorised to do so.

On 8th October, my Department issued a press release explaining that enforcement in this area would be increasing. It also encouraged people not to abuse the scheme and warned that Badges may be confiscated if abuse continued.

Roads Service is committed to tackling this issue by continually raising awareness of the problem and taking enforcement action when necessary. However, levels of enforcement must be set according to available resources and other enforcement demands.

I should point out that enforcement action against people who abuse the scheme is extremely difficult. Traffic Attendants have to gather information on drivers and vehicles where they believe the badge is being misused. In some circumstances this can only be done by questioning the driver when they park or return to the vehicle. This will result in attendants spending long periods observing vehicles, taking them away from other enforcement duties.

With regard to your question relating to the display of information on either side of the Blue Badge, I can advise that my Department is preparing to issue a consultation document in respect of a number of changes to the Blue Badge scheme. The proposed changes include the alteration of the design of the Badge, and the inclusion of clearer instructions about which side of the Badge must be displayed. Subject to Executive Committee approval, the consultation paper should be issued to interested parties in the very near future. Any suggestions relating to the badge design will be considered as part of the overall consultation process.

Illegally Erected Monuments

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of illegally erected monuments on property owned by the Roads Service. (AQW 862/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to AQW 862/08, my Department's Roads Service has advised that there are some 106 illegally erected monuments on public roads. Of that figure, 72 relate to road traffic accident fatalities while the other 34 relate to the troubles.

With regards to AQW 863/08, Roads Service has advised that no illegally erected monuments have been removed by them in any of the last three years.

Finally, with regards to AQW 864/08, I can advise that Roads Service does not approve of, or support, the unauthorised use of departmental property for illegally erected monuments. However, taking account of its statutory obligations, including those arising under Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, there are some sensitive aspects surrounding roadside monuments, and as such Roads Service operates a toleration policy.

Unless such structures pose a danger to road users, or there is a clear indication that their removal would have widespread local support, no immediate action will generally be taken.

Illegally Erected Monuments

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of illegally erected monuments that have been removed by the Roads Service, in each of the last three years. (AQW 863/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to AQW 862/08, my Department's Roads Service has advised that there are some 106 illegally erected monuments on public roads. Of that figure, 72 relate to road traffic accident fatalities while the other 34 relate to the troubles.

With regards to AQW 863/08, Roads Service has advised that no illegally erected monuments have been removed by them in any of the last three years.

Finally, with regards to AQW 864/08, I can advise that Roads Service does not approve of, or support, the unauthorised use of departmental property for illegally erected monuments. However, taking account of its statutory obligations, including those arising under Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, there are some sensitive aspects surrounding roadside monuments, and as such Roads Service operates a toleration policy.

Unless such structures pose a danger to road users, or there is a clear indication that their removal would have widespread local support, no immediate action will generally be taken.

Illegally Erected Monuments

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take to address the issue of illegally erected monuments on property owned by the Roads Service. (AQW 864/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to AQW 862/08, my Department's Roads Service has advised that there are some 106 illegally erected monuments on public roads. Of that figure, 72 relate to road traffic accident fatalities while the other 34 relate to the troubles.

With regards to AQW 863/08, Roads Service has advised that no illegally erected monuments have been removed by them in any of the last three years.

Finally, with regards to AQW 864/08, I can advise that Roads Service does not approve of, or support, the unauthorised use of departmental property for illegally erected monuments. However, taking account of its statutory obligations, including those arising under Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, there are some sensitive aspects surrounding roadside monuments, and as such Roads Service operates a toleration policy.

Unless such structures pose a danger to road users, or there is a clear indication that their removal would have widespread local support, no immediate action will generally be taken.

Independent Water Review Panel

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total cost of the independent water review panel, to date. (AQW 870/08)

Mr Murphy: The Independent Water Review Panel was appointed in June 2007 and since that date it has incurred expenditure of approximately £120k. This figure is made up of £63k in respect of the Panel Members' fees and expenses; £35k in respect of the salaries of the administrative support staff and £22k in respect of general running costs.

106A Service From Lisburn to Antrim

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of passengers who have used the new 106A service from Lisburn to Antrim; and the number of passengers who have boarded or alighted the bus at Belfast International Airport. (AQW 908/08)

Mr Murphy: The new service from Lisburn to Antrim has been operational since 3 September 2007. Based on the latest ticketing information from Wayfarer (up to 6 October 2007) the statistics are as follows:

- The total number of passengers on the service was 5,227.
- The total number of passengers using the stop at Belfast International Airport was 685.

Unadopted Roads

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail all roads in the Crumlin area that remain unadopted; and to list the roads that are unadopted because a private developer has defaulted on a road-building bond. (AQW 909/08)

Mr Murphy: In the case of private streets that have been determined through the planning process, it is the responsibility of developers to bring roads and sewers up to the required standard for adoption by my Department.

The following is a list of roads in the Crumlin area that remain unadopted and are subject to Private Streets Order Legislation:

- Bramblewood, Ballytromery Road, Crumlin
- Glenoak Grange, Crumlin
- St James Meadow, Cidercourt Road, Crumlin
- The Mews, Cidercourt Road, Crumlin
- Ballytromery Avenue, Ballytromery Road, Crumlin
- Riveroaks, Mill Road, Crumlin
- Millwater Lodge, Mill Street, Crumlin
- Maple Park, Lurgan Road, Crumlin
- Main Street, Crumlin

Of the above, the Bramblewood development, Ballytromery Road, remains unadopted and the developer has defaulted on the road building bond.

In addition, no road bond was put in place for the Glenoak Grange development before the developer went into liquidation.

If the Member requires any further information for a particular development he should feel free to contact my officials in Roads Service.

Road Safety

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to improve road safety at Auglish Cottages on the main Portadown to Newry Road, focusing on (i) the current risk surrounding vehicular access to the cottages; and (ii) the speed of oncoming traffic. (AQW 915/08)

Mr Murphy: Auglish Cottages are located on the A27 Newry to Portadown Road, which is subject to the national speed limit of 60mph. My Department's Roads Service assessed this location, in conjunction with the Police, following several requests to have the speed limit reduced to either 30mph or 40mph. I am advised, however, that given its rural character, coupled with the limited extent of development, it would not be appropriate or effective to introduce a reduced speed limit at this location.

However, as part of its ongoing monitoring of collision information, Roads Service has identified a poor collision history at the crossroads on the southern approach to Auglish Cottages and is currently developing a scheme to include in a future improvement works programme. Also, as the enforcement of speed limit restrictions is a matter for the Police, your concerns will be brought to their attention.

In relation to risks associated with vehicular access to the cottages, as I am sure you will appreciate, it would be an impossible task for Roads Service to be responsible for every private access onto a public road. However, where safety at a private access remains the responsibility of individual landowners, I can confirm that Roads Service would be happy to advise in any reasonable way.

Sewerage Infrastructure

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the work that has been carried out to Rasharkin's sewerage infrastructure to date; (ii) the timescale within which it will be brought to an appropriate standard; and (iii) the reasons for the delays in carrying out this work. (AQW 921/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it recognises the sewerage infrastructure at Rasharkin requires upgrading in order to prevent out-of-sewer flooding and to cater for future development in the area.

In order to reduce the risk of flooding pending a major upgrade, NIW undertook work to improve the capacity of the sewerage system in the vicinity of Main Street. However, it was recognised that a residual risk of flooding remained, particularly at Sunnyside Street, which has been prone to flooding during periods of heavy rainfall.

An upgrade scheme for Rasharkin was originally included in Northern Ireland Water's Capital Works Programme for 2005/06, but further work was required on the original proposal to take into account additional development in the area and to ensure the design was fit for purpose. This resulted in an improved scheme design which required additional funding of around £370,000 to provide adequate foul and storm sewers. This major scheme is now a priority in the Capital Works Programme for 2007/08 and work is scheduled to commence in December 2007, subject to all statutory approvals. The work is expected to take seventeen months to complete.

NI Water's Budget

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail NI Water's budget; and to give a detailed breakdown of this expenditure, for each of the last three years. (AQW 922/08)

Mr Murphy: The financial requirements for Northern Ireland Water (NIW) were determined as part of the process to develop its Strategic Business Plan. The company submitted its 2007/08 Budget to the Department by 30 April 2007 in accordance with the governance arrangements. However due to the decision not to introduce charges in 2007/08 the Budget required revision. The Department has not yet approved the revised Budget.

As NIW came into existence on 1 April 2007 there are no figures available for the breakdown of its expenditure over each of the last three years. The company has been established with a new financial framework which is not directly comparable with its predecessor. However, the Annual Report and Accounts for Water Service for each of the last three years are available in the Assembly Library.

PricewaterhouseCoopers

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the role of PriceWaterhouse Cooper within NI Water; and to detail the annual cost of this consultancy. (AQW 923/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that Pricewaterhouse Coopers' role is to provide support and advice to the company in relation to Transformation Partnering; Customer Billing, Customer Relations and Mobile Work Management; and on a range of Financial Matters. In this role Pricewaterhouse Coopers is undertaking contracts to build additional capability required by Northern Ireland Water under regulation; to enable its efficiency programme; and to advise the company and the Department on the procurement and delivery of effective systems of customer billing. All of the contracts were independently procured by the Central Procurement Directorate of the Department of Finance and Personnel by way of open and competitive tenders.

As Northern Ireland Water was only created on 1 April 2007 the costs to the company can only be provided from that date. From 1 April 2007 to 19 October 2007, Pricewaterhouse Coopers has undertaken work to the value of £2.3 million for Northern Ireland Water. (Exclusive of VAT)

NI Water

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his letter dated 20 July, what discussions NI Water has had with the Environment and Heritage Service regarding ‘the abandonment of the private works with flow transfer through the pumping station to the inlet of the existing retention as an interim measure pending construction of the new works’; and what decisions have been taken in relation to this matter. (AQW 953/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that they wrote to the Environment and Heritage Service on 16 July 2007 regarding the possibility of the flow transfer of the private works at Motelands development site at Ballyhalbert. I understand that Environment and Heritage Service are still considering this matter and will let NIW have comments on the matter in the near future. I have asked the Chief Executive of NIW, Katharine Bryan, to respond directly to you when this happens.

Wastewater Treatment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the progress of the interim waste water treatment facility at Ballyhalbert; and to specify when construction will start. (AQW 954/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the Chief Executive, Katharine Bryan, in response to your previous Assembly Question, informed you on 4 July 2007 that Northern Ireland Water was “in negotiations with a local landowner with a view to renting lands to the rear of Ballyhalbert village to site a temporary wastewater treatment works”. The negotiations are still ongoing. Northern Ireland Water remains confident that the outcome will facilitate construction of the interim works to commence towards the end of this financial year. The treatment facility will not be operational for at least 12 months from the date work commences. Northern Ireland Water will endeavour to improve on the completion date.

Bridge at Narrow Water

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the Government of the Republic of Ireland’s commitment, in its Programme for Government, to provide a bridge at Narrow Water, linking the counties of Louth and Down. (AQW 978/08)

Mr Murphy: The Irish National Development Plan contains proposals for significant Irish Government Investment in North/South projects and initiatives for mutual benefit. The Irish Government has stated its desire to agree and implement these with the British Government and a restored Northern Ireland Executive in the period 2007 – 2013.

The Irish Government has outlined its priorities for agreement on joint projects with the North to include “improved access for tourism and other opportunities along the Eastern corridor, including better links between County Louth and County Down in Northern Ireland”.

Whilst it is my understanding that the National Development Plan does not make specific reference to a bridge at Narrow Water, I understand that the Department of Transport and the Marine recently granted Louth County Council funds to undertake a technical study to obtain further information on the likely costs of a bridge at Narrow Water, and to explore issues such as the potential impact on the environment.

You will be aware that my Department’s Roads Service is carrying out a similar study relating to the Newry Southern Relief Road. It has been agreed that the outcomes of these studies will be made available to officials.

Free Public Transport

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to prioritise free public transport for children and young people with special educational needs; and, if such plans are already in place, to give a timescale within which they will be implemented, and an estimated cost for their implementation. (AQW 985/08)

Mr Murphy: I have no plans to introduce free public transport for children and young people with special educational needs.

My colleague, Caitriona Ruane, Minister for Education, has advised that the home to school transport arrangements for pupils with special educational needs lie outside the standard arrangements applied, and are tailored to each individual child. If health care professionals deem transport provision necessary as part of the child’s statementing process, then transport will be provided using whatever mode of transport that is recommended, to whichever school is deemed most suitable to meet that child's needs. The Department of Education funded home to school transport provision for 7,367 pupils with a statement of special educational needs, at a total cost of £12.4 million in 2005/06.

Road Signage

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he will give to providing road signage to the Acorn Centre in Ahoghill and the Millennium Centre in Loughgiel, in light of the community service provided by these centres.

(AQW 989/08)

Mr Murphy: In relation to the Millennium Centre in Loughgiel, I understand that signage was provided from the junction of Lough Road and Ballyveely Road in 2002.

In relation to the Acorn Centre in Ahoghill, unfortunately I must repeat the position conveyed to you by my Department's Roads Service earlier this year. This indicated that signage may only be erected to direct road users to community halls and centres where:

1. there is difficulty in locating them; or
2. where there is a clear road safety reason to do so; and
3. they fulfill the following criteria:
 - they are non-denominational;
 - they are owned or managed by or on behalf of a local council; and
 - evidence is available that the hall is used extensively by large numbers of visitors drawn from outside the immediate catchment area.

Having carried out an assessment, and based on the information currently available to Roads Service, my officials have concluded that the Acorn Centre does not qualify for signage.

Jordanstown Road, Newtownabbey

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will investigate, as a matter of urgency, the potential for improving the Jordanstown Road in Newtownabbey, between the railway bridge and the new junction with the Monkstown Road, in order to further protect pedestrians and motorists using this increasingly busy route. (AQW 1000/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service advise me that it carried out a survey of vehicular and pedestrian movements at the Jordanstown Road/ Monkstown estate junction on 5 October 2007.

Following analysis of the survey results, preliminary work will be undertaken on a scheme to provide a pelican crossing at the junction. The scheme will be included in a list with other potential schemes to be considered for prioritisation and possible inclusion in the Roads Service 2008/2009 programme of works.

Energy Consumption and Emissions

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of the various commitments to reduce energy consumption and emissions in Northern Ireland, to outline any major initiatives planned to improve the performance of, and reduce, emissions from the transport sectors; and to detail any associated targets. (AQW 1021/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Regional Transportation Strategy seeks to reduce people's reliance on the private car and improve the use of public transport, cycling and walking, thereby reducing energy consumption and emissions from transport. Bids have been made through the Budget 2007 process to continue to provide significant levels of investment for bus and rail travel. My Department is continuing with the introduction of Quality Bus Corridors in the Belfast Metropolitan Area and of Park & Ride sites to encourage the use of bus or rail, and is carrying out a feasibility study into a rapid transit network for the Belfast Metropolitan Area. The Travelwise initiative also encourages walking, cycling and public transport use. The Travelwise Car Scheme encourages 2 or more people to travel together to reduce travel costs, congestion, pollution, and carbon dioxide emissions.

The Sustainable Development Strategy identified the need to take steps and identify targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from transport. Targets will be considered as part of the mid term Review of the Regional Transportation Strategy. The Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan and Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan indicate that targets for reducing emissions of Nitrogen Oxides and particulates from road traffic will be specified in Local Air Quality Management Action Plans.

Road Deaths

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development what further action the Roads Service will take at the junction of the Largy Road, the Carnearey Road and the Loughbeg Road, in light of the recent road accident that led to the death of a motorcyclist. (AQW 1035/08)

Mr Murphy: It is with regret that my staff and I learn of a death on our roads. However, the circumstances surrounding the recent collision which led to the death of a motorcyclist at the Largy Road/Carnearnery Road/Loughbeg Road junction are currently under investigation by the PSNI and it would be inappropriate to comment until the facts surrounding this collision are known. I should add that road safety continues to be one of Roads Service's top priorities. We are fully committed, along with other agencies, such as the Police and DoE's Road Safety Education Branch, to doing all that we can to reduce the number of people killed or injured on our roads.

However, I can advise that my Department's Roads Service is currently considering the findings of a 'Whole Route Study' which was recently completed on the B52, Largy Road. I have therefore asked Roads Service to notify you of their conclusions as soon as their assessment is complete.

Ticket Machines

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to ensure that all ticket machines, used by conductors employed by Northern Ireland Railways, are able to read smart passes and concessionary fare cards. (AQW 1043/08)

Mr Murphy: Translink/NIR is responsible for ensuring that ticketing machines have the capacity to read smart passes and concessionary fare cards. Currently these machines have the capacity to read the complete range of smart passes and fare cards. If an individual machine should fail, responsibility for fixing the problem rests with NIR.

Speed Restrictions

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will confirm that legislation that is currently in place would enable him to introduce a 20 miles per hour speed limit within (i) towns, villages and cities; and (ii) residential areas. (AQW 1044/08)

Mr Murphy: As responsibility for setting speed limits rests with my Department, your question has been referred to me as Minister for Regional Development to answer.

I can confirm that my department, under current legislation, has the powers necessary to introduce 20 miles per hour speed limits in towns, villages, cities and in residential areas.

Roads

Mr J Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps his department has taken to ensure that (i) roads are not dug up unnecessarily by third parties (including utilities); and (ii) when roads are dug up, that they are reinstated to the highest standards. (AQW 1062/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service is fully aware of the issues associated with road openings by third parties, given the level of activity across the North in recent years and significant progress has been made to ensure roads are reinstated to an appropriate standard.

I should, however, explain that Utility Companies have a statutory right to open public roads and footways to install and maintain their equipment. Because of this, Roads Service has no control over the number of openings made by utilities, although they do have powers, under the Street Works (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 as amended by the Street Works (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 2007, to regulate the process.

Utility street works are coordinated under the Order, with coordination being facilitated by a computerised system, called the Northern Ireland Street Works Register and Notification System (NISRANS). Roads Service and all main utility companies have access to this system to view planned works and comment on proposals, should there be any issues or potentially conflicting works.

With regard to the second part of your question, I can confirm that established policy is in place which requires utilities to reinstate roads and footways to the standards expressed in the Specification of the Reinstatement of Openings in Roads, issued under the Order.

Roads Service officials continue to inspect and monitor street works on an ongoing basis, to ensure that the work of utilities complies fully with the specification. Additionally, utilities are required to have at least one operative in each squad who has been trained in street works and holds a current registration card. Each site must be visited by a trained street works supervisor from the relevant third party on a daily basis.

Roads Service also operates a strong enforcement policy, particularly where serious infringements of the legislation occur. In recent years a number of utilities have been successfully prosecuted for breaches of the Street Works Order.

The number of road openings by other third parties, such as private developers, is rather small by comparison. They are usually carried out under either the Private Streets (Northern Ireland) Orders 1980 and 1992 (if the work is associated with a new housing development) or, (for most other cases) by Agreement or Consent issued by Roads Service under either the Private Streets or Roads Orders respectively or the Planning (NI) Order 1991.

In each case Roads Service has no supervisory role as to the way this work is carried out, other than to ensure that it meets the required specification and layout. However, where the consent has been contravened, Roads Service has the power to rectify serious infringements and recover the costs from the developer's bond.

Departmental Correspondence

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail what instructions he has issued to staff in his department, in relation to references to (i) Derry/Londonderry; (ii) Northern Ireland; (iii) the United Kingdom; and (iv) Great Britain, in departmental correspondence. (AQW 1089/08)

Mr Murphy: I have not given any instruction to staff in respect of the references listed by the Member. However, in any correspondence to be signed by me, or speeches that I will deliver, I have advised that I prefer to use the terms Derry and the North.

Rail Link Between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) his department's bid for funding; (ii) the amount of finance secured; and (iii) a breakdown of expenditure, in relation to the upgrade of the rail link between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station, between 27 July 2000 and 14 October 2002. (AQW 1116/08)

Mr Murphy: The bids for railway infrastructure and rolling stock lodged as part of the 2000 Comprehensive Spending Review and the funding received, were as follows:

	Total
Bids	£122.0m
(element included for lesser used lines)	(£4.3m)
Funding secured	£102.5m

The bid for the "lesser used lines" was to cover the lines north of Ballymena and Whitehead.

Translink carried out a range of projects during the period 27 July 2000 to 14 October 2002 on the line between the Railway Station at Waterside and Coleraine Railway Station. Translink have provided a breakdown of that expenditure as follows:

Castlerock Resignalling	£231,415
Coleraine to Londonderry Track	£28,385
Coleraine Integrated Transport Centre	£670,078
Castlerock Re-lay	£23,929
Coleraine Footbridge	£127,393
Points and Crossing – Coleraine	£38,155
Slope Stabilisation	£200,601
Castlerock Tunnel Lighting	£43,698
River Bann Bridge	£20,153
Coleraine Passenger Information System	£98,484
Magilligan Platform	£12,502
Coleraine Train Describer	£87,390
Total	£1,582,183

In addition to the above, expenditure was incurred on the following items:

- Fencing
- Station Condition Improvements
- Accommodation crossings improvements
- Vegetation clearance

These were network-wide projects and Translink cannot identify expenditure that relates solely to the line between Derry and Coleraine.

Hightown Bridge

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to alleviate the difficulties of people living and working in the Hightown and Mallusk areas of Newtownabbey, as a result of the closure of the Hightown Bridge from Sunday 21 October. (AQW 1122/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service advises that the Hightown Road Bridge, which is 50 years old, has been assessed as being under strength and requires to be replaced. This work is being undertaken in association with the contract to widen the M2 at this location.

The current closure to vehicular traffic for a period of 6 weeks from 22 October 2007 is necessary to facilitate work on the diversion of essential British Telecom services that cross the bridge, in advance of demolition works to be undertaken next year and to ensure that these essential services are maintained. Pedestrian access will be maintained across the Hightown Bridge during the 6-week period.

During the closure a signed diversionary route will be available via Mallusk Road, Scullions Road, Sandyknowes Roundabout and Antrim Road, in both directions.

In order to reduce the impact of the closure on the travelling public Roads Service has:

- made full time the existing part time signals at Sandyknowes Roundabout;
- adjusted the signal timings on the A8 and M2 southbound offslip of the roundabout to accommodate extra traffic on Scullions Road;
- adjusted signal timings to Mallusk Road from Hightown Road and Mayfield Link to help accommodate displaced traffic;
- made adjustments to the traffic signals along the Antrim Road Line to help deal with the expected increase in traffic along this route;
- introduced additional monitoring of the junction and surrounding area for a period until traffic patterns stabilise; and
- undertaken publicity to advise people of the closure, including:
 - Letters distributed to residents of Hightown Estate, Derry Road and Mallusk Areas;
 - Notification to Newtownabbey Council and Councillors;
 - Notification to Glengormley Chamber of Commerce and Glengormley Town Centre Management;
 - Notification to Emergency Services;
 - Notification to Translink;
 - Notification to Edmund Rice School;
 - Advertised the closure through the media;
 - Notices of closure posted on bridge; and
 - Liaison with elected representatives.

Translink has also put in place a Shuttle Bus that will operate in the peak periods over the next 6 weeks between Edmund Rice School and Scullions Road to link with the service between Antrim Road and Roughfort.

Following this initial 6-week closure, the road will be reopened on 3 December to facilitate the run up to the Christmas period. The road will be closed again in January for approximately one year, during which time the bridge will be demolished and rebuilt.

Belfast to Coleraine Express Bus

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of passengers using the 218 Belfast to Coleraine express bus service, in the last three years. (AQW 1127/08)

Mr Murphy: In the last three operational years passenger numbers on the Belfast to Coleraine express were as follows.

Year	Passenger Numbers on the 218 Express
2004/05	283,035
2005/06	303,071
2006/07	312,577

These figures include those who have travelled from Belfast to Coleraine and vice versa, as well as those boarding and alighting at intermediary stops.

These figures include those who have travelled from Belfast to Coleraine and vice versa, as well as those boarding and alighting at intermediary stops.

Hightown Bridge

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reasons why a temporary bridge will not be erected across the M2 to replace the Hightown Bridge, when it is demolished for reconstruction in December 2007/January 2008.

(AQW 1209/08)

Mr Murphy: The 50 year old Hightown Road Bridge has been assessed as being under strength and in need of replacement. This work is being undertaken as part of the contract to widen the M2 at this location. Initially, the bridge will be closed for a 6-week period, from Monday 22 October 2007, to allow essential utility work to be undertaken in anticipation of the bridge's demolition next year.

In preparation for these works, Roads Service officials considered a number of possible temporary traffic management options. These included the provision of a temporary bridge across the M2 motorway adjacent to the existing structure. This option was discounted, due to the close proximity of properties along both sides of the Hightown Road and the geometry of the existing Derry Road and Mallusk Road, making it impossible to construct the necessary approach roads to a temporary bridge at this location.

However during both closures a signed diversionary route will be available via Mallusk Road, Scullions Road, Sandyknowes Roundabout and Antrim Road, in both directions. Pedestrian access will be maintained across the Hightown Bridge during the 6-week period.

Roads Service has also introduced changes to traffic signals at a number of key junctions on the diversion route and will continue to monitor traffic conditions during the bridge closures.

Officials are currently considering the introduction of additional signals at the Scullions Road access onto Sandyknowes Roundabout, for the longer term closure during the planned demolition and rebuilding of the bridge.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how good relations considerations have been taken into account within her department's bid, in relation to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 835/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): As part of the current Comprehensive Spending Review process, Departments were obliged to undertake high level impact assessments in respect of each bid submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The purpose of these high level impact assessments was to ascertain the equality and good relations implications for each funding proposal submitted and were undertaken in accordance with Section 75 (1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Equality Commission for NI also produced a briefing paper for Departments on the importance of mainstreaming equality and good relations considerations into the Comprehensive Spending Review, Priorities and Budget and this paper was also used to inform the development of my Department's bids.

In respect of the report 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy', this piece of independent research was commissioned by the previous administration and represents the views of Deloitte. My department is continually reviewing the delivery of its public services. In doing so, it focuses on the needs of those who access its services and on the requirement upon all public bodies to ensure value for money.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how the Deloitte Touche report, 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy' is being taken into account within her department's approach to the current Northern Ireland Comprehensive Spending Review. (AQW 836/08)

Ms Ritchie: As part of the current Comprehensive Spending Review process, Departments were obliged to undertake high level impact assessments in respect of each bid submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The purpose of these high level impact assessments was to ascertain the equality and good relations implications for each funding proposal submitted and were undertaken in accordance with Section 75 (1) and (2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Equality Commission for NI also produced a briefing paper for Departments on the importance of mainstreaming equality and good relations considerations into the Comprehensive Spending Review, Priorities and Budget and this paper was also used to inform the development of my Department's bids.

In respect of the report 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy', this piece of independent research was commissioned by the previous administration and represents the views of Deloitte. My department is continually reviewing the delivery of its public services. In doing so, it focuses on the needs of those who access its services and on the requirement upon all public bodies to ensure value for money.

Village Planning Day

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development what action she is taking to progress the redevelopment of the Village area in South Belfast, following the 'Village Planning Day' held on 9 July 2007. (AQW 855/08)

Ms Ritchie: I am making arrangements for a further Planning Day to report on progress on the Village area. The economic appraisal for the first phase of the Urban Renewal proposal is at present being considered and financial bids were lodged with the Strategic Investment Board as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. My Department awaits information from Representative Groups who were to identify, in their opinion, the streets in worst physical condition.

Housing Executive Insurance Claims

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of insurance claims that have been lodged with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive or its insurance companies, broken down by district council area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 873/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive self-insures against all Public Liability Claims up to a limit of £500,000. This includes injury liabilities which arise from incidents on its property.

The tables below detail the number of Public Liability Claims lodged with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last three years, including those claims involving personal injury, by District Council area, for the period 2004/05-2006/07.

Housing Executive Insurance Claims

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of personal injury claims that have been lodged with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last three years, broken down by district council area.
(AQW 885/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Housing Executive self-insures against all Public Liability Claims up to a limit of £500,000. This includes injury liabilities which arise from incidents on its property.

The tables below detail the number of Public Liability Claims lodged with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in each of the last three years, including those claims involving personal injury, by District Council area, for the period 2004/05-2006/07.

Housing Executive Insurance Claims

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, broken down by district council area, the number of claims lodged in respect of damage to houses owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive due to (i) renovations; (ii) repairs; and (iii) natural disasters, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 886/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information is not available. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive does not record Public Liability claims by cause.

Conway Mill

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to finance the refurbishment of Conway Mill.
(AQW 912/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Department for Social Development is the lead funder of the redevelopment of Conway Mill. The Department's Belfast Regeneration Office has granted £1.2million from the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund towards the project, which has an overall budget of £4.3 million. The redevelopment project has now been formally initiated and an Employer's Agent has recently been appointed to manage the project. The estimated start time for work on site is June 2008.

New Build Social Housing Scheme

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to detail whether or not the new build social housing scheme for Rasharkin will commence on the agreed start date; and, if not, to give the reasons for the delay.
(AQW 919/08)

Ms Ritchie: A scheme at Church Road, Rasharkin is programmed to go on site during 2008/09. This site is owned by the Housing Executive and Triangle Housing Association has been nominated to deliver the scheme. Both are working to achieve the target on site date but there may be a problem with the capacity of the sewerage system at present to accommodate a connection to the sewer for this development. Every effort will be made to resolve this issue.

Housing Executive Insurance Claims

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the cost of personal injury claims to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, broken down by district council area, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 928/08)

Ms Ritchie: Expenditure on Public Liability Claims (PLC) made to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, for the last three full financial years was as follows:

PLC EXPENDITURE FOR 2004/05-2006/07 BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA

Council	2004/2005 £k	2005/2006 £k	2006/2007 £k	Total £k
Antrim	50	69	22	141
Ards	26.5	53	38	117.5
Armagh	29	11	8.5	48.5
Ballymena	16	10	33	59
Ballymoney	8	5	10	23
Banbridge	30	10.5	16	56.5
Belfast	553	676	435	1.6m
Carrickfergus	19	61	33	113
Castlereagh	73	58	65	196
Coleraine	22	8	21	51
Cookstown	0	2	0.2	2.2
Craigavon	50	80	52	182
Londonderry	223	185	123	531
Down	22.5	40	44	106.5
Dungannon	69	38.5	2	109.5

Council	2004/2005 £k	2005/2006 £k	2006/2007 £k	Total £k
Fermanagh	25	10	2	37
Larne	14.5	29	15	58.5
Limavady	22.5	17	39	78.5
Lisburn	91	57	56	204
Magherafelt	41	31	35	107
Moyle	0	0	13.5	13.5
Newry & Mourne	53	68	150	271
Newtownabbey	88	49	437	574
North Down	47	20	11	78
Omagh	20	16	13	49
Strabane	53.5	18	45	116.5
Total	1.6m	1.6m	1.7m	4.9m

These figures include claims involving both personal injury and property damage.

Housing Executive Insurance Claims

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail whether or not the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's insurance companies have settled the issue in relation to claims for burst water tanks; and to confirm the timescale for settling claims, broken down by Housing Executive district area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 929/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive self-insures against all Public Liability Claims up to a limit of £500,000. This includes property damage and personal injury liabilities which arise from incidents on its property. Claims for damaged cold water storage tanks are treated in the same manner as any other claim made to the Housing Executive. As these largely fall below the £500,000 limit, settlements are met from the Housing Executive's own budget and do not involve an insurance company. There are no set timescales for dealing with insurance claims since the assessment of whether the Housing Executive has been negligent depends on a variety of factors. However the Housing Executive strives to deal with claims as efficiently as possible. Thirty four claims under £250 were settled in-house by the Housing Executive in 2006/07 and a further 50 were settled by claims handlers working on the Housing Executive's behalf. A small number of claims progress to Court, while others may be resolved without recourse to the Housing Executive, for example, by contractors.

Burst Water Tanks

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of water tanks that have burst in Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties, broken down by Housing Executive district area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 930/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information is not available in the form requested.

However, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive replaced a total of 1258 storage and expansion tanks for the financial years 2004/05 to 2006/07. The reason for replacement included wear and tear, scheme work and damage. The cause of the replacement is not recorded.

Child Support Agency

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has for the Child Support Agency; to detail the impact that these plans will have on services; and to outline in full any anticipated job losses. (AQW 983/08)

Ms Ritchie: I intend to bring forward similar Child Support policy changes for Northern Ireland as those outlined in The Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill in Great Britain.

The four principles for reform should tackle child poverty, promote parental responsibility, provide a cost effective and professional service and be simple and transparent. The changes include:

- removing the requirement for parents with care who claim benefits to be treated as applying for child maintenance;
- encouraging parents to make their own arrangements by increasing the amount of maintenance which parents with care on benefit can keep before their benefits are affected (known as "disregard");
- simplifying and streamlining the child maintenance assessment process by, for example, using the latest available tax year information as the basis for calculating child maintenance;
- improving collection and enforcement processes; and
- increasing efforts to collect and manage debt.

I have also concluded that the existing Northern Ireland Child Support Agency should be wound up and service delivery brought under the direct control of my Department. This offers the best long term solution for Northern Ireland, minimising the need for organisational change and allowing us to concentrate on maintaining and improving services to parents with care and non-resident parents, and ultimately children.

In relation to the matter of job losses, the size of the new Child Support organisation has not been determined and I am therefore not in a position to assess the impact on staffing levels.

Public Housing Units

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of units of public housing that have been provided in (i) Newcastle; (ii) Castlewellan; (iii) Downpatrick; and (iv) Ballynahinch, in the last two years. (AQW 1012/08)

Ms Ritchie: Twenty four homes were started or completed in Newcastle and 12 in Ballynahinch in the last two years. The current Social Housing Development Programme makes provision for 77 units in Downpatrick, 35 in Newcastle and 7 in Castlewellan over the next 3 years.

Land for social housing has been very difficult to acquire in Downpatrick, Ballynahinch, Newcastle and Castlewellan due mainly to high cost and competition from the private sector.

Housing Associations are actively seeking sites in areas where housing need has been identified and the Housing Executive is reviewing its own land holdings and working with others to try to identify suitable development opportunities. In addition to the schemes formally identified within the programme, Housing Associations have identified 4 potential sites in Newcastle; 3 in Castlewellan; 5 in Ballynahinch and 8 in Downpatrick. Work is underway to determine the feasibility of developing these sites with a view to acquisition.

The Housing Executive also has a detailed site investigation programme underway in areas of housing need across Northern Ireland as a whole. Newcastle, Ballynahinch and Downpatrick are included within this study.

Public Housing Units

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of units of public housing that will be provided in (i) Newcastle; (ii) Castlewellan; (iii) Downpatrick; and (iv) Ballynahinch, in the next two years. (AQW 1013/08)

Ms Ritchie: Twenty four homes were started or completed in Newcastle and 12 in Ballynahinch in the last two years. The current Social Housing Development Programme makes provision for 77 units in Downpatrick, 35 in Newcastle and 7 in Castlewellan over the next 3 years.

Land for social housing has been very difficult to acquire in Downpatrick, Ballynahinch, Newcastle and Castlewellan due mainly to high cost and competition from the private sector.

Housing Associations are actively seeking sites in areas where housing need has been identified and the Housing Executive is reviewing its own land holdings and working with others to try to identify suitable development opportunities. In addition to the schemes formally identified within the programme, Housing Associations have identified 4 potential sites in Newcastle; 3 in Castlewellan; 5 in Ballynahinch and 8 in Downpatrick. Work is underway to determine the feasibility of developing these sites with a view to acquisition.

The Housing Executive also has a detailed site investigation programme underway in areas of housing need across Northern Ireland as a whole. Newcastle, Ballynahinch and Downpatrick are included within this study.

Housing Executive Waiting List

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people who are on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list in (i) Newcastle; (ii) Castlewellan; (iii) Downpatrick; and (iv) Ballynahinch. (AQW 1014/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 30 June 2007 the total waiting list figures were as follows; Newcastle 261, Castlewellan 111, Downpatrick 299 and Ballynahinch 162. Of these totals the following had more than 30 points; Newcastle 152, Castlewellan 63, Downpatrick 162 and Downpatrick 112.

Warmer Homes Scheme

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she has taken to ensure that people who are entitled to payments from the Warmer Homes Scheme are not subjected to any delay; and that such payments are increased in line with rising fuel costs and inflation. (AQW 1024/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Warm Homes Scheme does not provide payments to eligible householders, rather a range of energy efficient measures such as a variety of insulation, including cavity wall and loft insulation, as well as an oil or natural gas energy efficient central heating system to those eligible householders over 60 years of age.

Despite current funding of just over £20 million, the Scheme is oversubscribed. However, my Department is endeavouring to keep delays to a minimum. Maximum grant limits for measures are regularly increased.

Voluntary and Community Sector Funding

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development to detail whether or not all funding provided by her department to the voluntary and community sector is guided solely by objective need. (AQW 1026/08)

Ms Ritchie: As Minister for Social Development I am committed to tackling poverty and disadvantage and building communities right across Northern Ireland. All funding allocated by my department to the voluntary and community sector is subject to appraisal in line with Treasury guidance, this includes objective assessment of need.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what arrangements her department has put in place to resource the Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies. (AQW 1047/08)

Ms Ritchie: The decisions on the Comprehensive Spending Review 2007 have not yet been finalised.

Housing Executive

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail whether or not the Northern Ireland Housing Executive will remain the principal housing body, in relation to the management and delivery of social housing. (AQW 1064/08)

Ms Ritchie: At present I have no plans to make any changes to the current arrangements.

Housing Selection Scheme

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development what is her assessment of the housing selection scheme, in relation to the allocation of houses in areas of high demand; and to outline whether or not she intends to review this policy, in line with the commitment made by direct rule Ministers. (AQW 1065/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Common Selection Scheme is based on the fundamental principle that assessment and prioritisation of applicants and allocation of accommodation are undertaken on the basis of greatest housing need. It is also underpinned by the principles of fairness, equity and openness. The Scheme is considered to be more objective and sensitive to individual needs than its predecessor, measuring the competing needs of applicants and their varying characteristics more sensitively.

The Scheme provides for an assessment of housing need on an equitable basis throughout Northern Ireland. Through recognising a wide range of housing circumstances the Scheme aims to ensure that those in the greatest overall housing need are housed first.

While the general view is that the Scheme meets its objectives and is regarded as fulfilling its function well, whether in areas of high or low demand, it is acknowledged that there are supply / demand issues in certain areas. Given that the waiting list of applicants assessed in accordance with the Selection Scheme is in essence a “queuing list” for a decreasing number of houses becoming available, it is inevitable that some will get housed more quickly than others and applicants who choose to queue for such high-demand areas are, as a consequence of exercising this choice and supply / demand imbalances, likely to wait a disproportionate length of time for rehousing.

This is one of a number of issues which has been the focus of research over the last few months into Social Housing Need and Access. This research has looked at a number of issues, including the need to review of a number of aspects of the Common Selection Scheme and other models of meeting housing need. The research report is currently being finalised. This may well result in changes to the Common Housing Selection Scheme.

Housing Executive Waiting List

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people (i) currently on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list; and (ii) who are deemed to be homeless, in South Antrim. (AQW 1123/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31 March 2007 the total waiting list figure for South Antrim was 2,557 of which 763 had Full Duty Applicant status.

Vacant Residential Properties

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of vacant residential properties in the South Antrim constituency, broken down by electoral ward. (AQW 1124/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information is not available in the format requested. Information compiled from Rates Collection Agency and Housing Executive records shows 2,285 vacant Northern Ireland Housing Executive and private residential properties in the Antrim and Newtownabbey District Council areas at September 2006. The data is not available at electoral ward level.

Vacant Residential Properties

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to outline how she intends to bring vacant residential properties in the South Antrim constituency into productive use, in order to tackle the housing problems in this area. (AQW 1125/08)

Ms Ritchie: An Empty Homes Team is currently developing an appropriate strategy to address vacant properties across all tenures. Further work is required to determine both the location and suitability of these dwellings in order to bring them back into use. I have asked the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to let me have a report into Empty Homes as quickly as possible.

Conflict Transformation Initiative

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what elements were contractually and legally binding within the Community Transformation Initiative, which directly linked Ulster Defence Association decommissioning to funding by her department. (AQW 1126/08)

Ms Ritchie: The contract with regard to the Conflict Transformation Initiative states that “Any evidence that there is not a sustained reduction in the level of paramilitary activity and anti-social behaviour associated with paramilitary in the target areas may be considered as indicative that the project is not pursuing its identified outcomes.”

Conflict Transformation Initiative

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the precise time at which her officials took action regarding her announcement, made in the Assembly on Tuesday 16 October 2007, regarding the Community Transformation Initiative; and the precise time at which her instructions were officially issued to the managing agents of the project. (AQW 1128/08)

Ms Ritchie: My officials spoke with a representative of Farset Youth & Community Ltd on Tuesday 16 October between 4.00-5.00pm to confirm the content of my announcement to the Assembly. A termination notice is currently being prepared and will be sent to Farset Youth & Community Ltd in due course.

Conflict Transformation Initiative

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the exact costs of winding up the Community Transformation Initiative, in accordance with her instructions, or, if unable to give exact costs, to detail the estimated costs; and to give a breakdown of these estimations. (AQW 1130/08)

Ms Ritchie: I am not in a position to give exact costs of the termination of the project at this time. I can confirm the estimated normal project costs for one month are in the region of £37,000.

I understand that Farset Youth & Community Ltd will seek some additional costs that they claim they have incurred in establishing this project. I have no information on what these costs are likely to be.

Actual costs will be dependent on the terms of the termination of contract which is still being finalised.

Former Military Sites

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development to provide details on the former military sites that have been nominated for transfer to the Executive. (AQW 1179/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Executive has approached the British Government in relation to the free transfer of all remaining redundant military sites. DSD has already had to purchase a number of such sites at full market cost and is currently in the process of so doing in relation to the Grosvenor site in Enniskillen for a mixed tenure housing scheme.

DSD is also currently working to explore possible acquisition of the St Lucia and Lisanelly sites in Omagh and the St Patricks site in Ballymena and is acting on behalf of Department of Agriculture and Rural Development in respect of acquisition of the Forkhill site in Armagh.

Acquisition of Lisanelly Barracks and St Patricks barracks would be the subject of Executive approval because of the very substantial sums involved and the fact that DSD is facilitating a range of possible uses by other Government Departments. The process would obviously be greatly facilitated should these redundant military sites be gifted to the Northern Ireland Executive by the British Government, as has been requested.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Assembly Research and Library Service

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission if the Assembly Research and Library Service has adequate staffing levels to deal with its workload.

(AQW 952/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): The Assembly Research and Library Service has recently appointed 14 researchers from the Brook Street Employment Agency to cover vacancies created by temporary promotions and transfers to other areas of Assembly business that were required to ensure Assembly readiness for restoration. Researcher vacancies also arose due to staff resigning posts over the 4 and a half year suspension period. The agency researchers have shown themselves able to deal with the Assembly's current workload though three vacancies remain in the fields of agriculture / rural development, geographical information systems and statistics. Efforts continue to locate staff in these fields and further appointments are expected soon.

Open recruitment to appoint permanent research staff is set as a high priority and will be initiated once the current temporary hold on recruitment is lifted.

Over the suspension period the Service lost proportionally more librarians than it did researchers. Since specific professional qualifications in information management are required for library posts the agency route has not proven to be as successful. The Service is seeking to use the Interchange scheme to temporarily fill vacancies until such time as open recruitment can occur. In the interim, the current library team has prioritized customer facing work and has the support of an administrative support team to carry out this function. Hence, short-term library workloads are being dealt with satisfactorily while longer term initiatives are underway to ensure full staffing within the Service.

Tree Planting Initiatives

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission what plans it has to engage in further tree planting initiatives in the grounds of the Stormont estate, in order to support the Woodland Trust in its 'Tree Planting for All' campaign.

(AQW 1117/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): Tree planting within the Stormont Estate is the responsibility of the Department of Finance and Personnel, who manage the grounds. The Assembly Commission is assured however, that tree planting forms an integral part of their operations and is regularly monitored and reviewed by the Estate Management Unit.

With the Estate moving towards biodiversity and sustainability targets, Estate Management Unit has begun a programme of propagating native plants from seeds taken within the estate in an effort to become self sufficient.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission to detail whether or not it has carried out an environmental feasibility study to introduce renewable energy sources, as a means of generating power for Parliament Buildings.

(AQW 1118/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): The Assembly Commission is committed to adopting a proactive approach to energy management in Parliament Buildings and Annexe C and as such has established links with the Public Sector Energy Committee (PSEC) and Carbon Trust to take this forward. As recently as Friday 19th October secretariat staff attended an energy training course run by PSEC to be kept abreast of the most up to date policies and strategies.

The Commission is in the process of preparing a bid to identify potential projects within Parliament Buildings that could receive funding from the Central Energy efficiency Fund, which supports projects which will advance energy management in public sector buildings.

- A feasibility study was carried out to ascertain if biomass boilers could be installed within the Stormont estate however it was determined that it would not be suitable for Parliament Buildings.
- The Commission is currently undertaking an environmental audit which will include the following:
- current environmental management at Parliament Buildings (including inter alia recycling, procurement, energy usage);
- a desk-study examining examples of best practise for 'greening' public buildings of this type, especially listed buildings;
- recommendations for progressing these ideas towards implementation;
- new Parliaments' buildings and the measures that they have built in; and
- examples of environmentally enhancing/beneficial features that have been built in to public buildings and non governmental buildings, listed and otherwise.

Following this the Commission will look at implementing the findings from the report.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 2 November 2007

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Consultancy Expenditure

Mr Savage asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the department's expenditure on consultancy; and to provide a breakdown of this expenditure, for the last year. (AQW 1164/08)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Rev Dr Ian Paisley and Mr M McGuinness): During the last financial year (2006/07), the Department's expenditure on external consultants amounted to £1.193 million. A breakdown of this expenditure is detailed below.

BREAKDOWN OF CONSULTANCY SPEND 2006/07

Category	Amount (£m)
policy appraisal and review	0.158
strategic management	0.811
organisational development	0.072
quality accreditation	0.008
projects	0.024
surveys	0.010
market research	0.046
Other	0.064
Total	1.193

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Animal Welfare

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail whether or not she proposes to update the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, in line with the Animal Welfare Act 2006 in England and Wales; and if this new legislation will include the 'five freedoms'.

(AQW 1006/08)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): The Department consulted on proposals for new animal welfare legislation in late 2006. I have asked my officials to finalise a report which will summarise the outcome of the responses to the consultation, after which I will decide what new legislation is required.

The Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (DAFF) in the South are currently considering updating their animal welfare legislation. I believe that it is important that we take similar approaches to dealing with animal welfare abuses on the island of Ireland and I have asked that my officials liaise closely with their counterparts in DAFF. The summary of the responses to the 2006 consultation will therefore also reflect on the position in the South.

While the specific provisions in any new legislation will depend on detailed deliberation of the consultation responses, the 'five freedoms' will inform my considerations.

Carbon Footprint

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to assist research into the carbon footprint of Northern Ireland's farming systems. (AQW 1039/08)

Ms Gildernew: Research by the Agri-Food & Biosciences Institute (AFBI) into proactive and innovative ways to lower greenhouse gas emissions from farming is ongoing.

DARD is also engaged with counterparts in Britain on research into carbon efficient farming systems and the development of a standard method for measuring the carbon emissions of agricultural products.

The Environment and Renewable Energy Centre at AFBI is researching a number of renewable energy technologies, including short rotation willow coppice and anaerobic digestion of farm waste, which will assist in reducing the carbon footprint of farming systems.

Carbon Footprint

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her assessment of the potential advantages of showing Northern Ireland's farming systems to be carbon efficient, in assisting the marketing of agricultural products; and, if so, to detail how she would maximise this benefit. (AQW 1040/08)

Ms Gildernew: Evidence for the carbon efficiency of local farming systems would help reinforce the ‘branding’ of agriculture here as ‘clean and green.’

My Department would support efforts by the agri-food sector to exploit this brand through measures under Axis 1 of the Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme 2007-13 (the ‘NIRDP’).

DARD is engaged with counterparts in England, Scotland and Wales on a strategy for the sustainability of food production and consumption. Until this work has been taken further the carbon efficiencies of the local farming systems cannot be assumed.

Farmers Affected by Flooding

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to her answer to AQW 532/08, what action she has taken to source compensation for farmers affected by flooding in the Glens of Antrim in July 2007; and to detail the progress she has made on this issue, to date. (AQW 1100/08)

Ms Gildernew: I have directed farmers like other householders to the Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance to District Councils which is administered by the Department of Environment. There is no other assistance available from the Executive.

Food Security

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps her department is taking to ensure food security in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1114/08)

Ms Gildernew: Future food security is a very important issue and I wish to advise that appropriate contingency planning on this matter is handled by Defra in consultation with my Department and the Agriculture Departments in Scotland and Wales. However, as the agri-food industry in the North is heavily dependant on external sales the issue of food security is unlikely to pose a local problem. I can also assure you that I am committed to the continued development of a sustainable local agri-food industry which has the capacity to produce more than enough food for the local population.

Pomeroy Business Park

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her department’s involvement in the development of Pomeroy Business Park, located in Pomeroy forest; and what is the current stage of development of this project. (AQW 1252/08)

Ms Gildernew: My Department has recently agreed to the disposal of 0.9 hectares of land at Pomeroy Forest in County Tyrone to Pomeroy Community Developments for the purposes of an Enterprise Park. The Department has recently issued instructions to the Departmental Solicitors Office to prepare the legal documentation. Harvesting of the timber and development of this site will commence once the legal framework is in place and the required fees have been received.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Community Festivals Fund

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the support provided by his department in relation to sustaining community festivals and events, other than that provided by the Community Festivals Fund. (AQW 986/08)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Poots): The table below details the support provided by my Department for community festivals and events, other than from the Community Festivals Fund since the introduction of the Community Festivals fund in April 2006:

Source	Festival	Amount awarded
DCAL (Transitional Funding)	Féile an Phobail	£130,000
	Ardoyne Fleadh	£31,000
	Greater New Lodge Festival	£33,500
Foras na Gaelige	Spraioi (Fun)	£2,371
	Camlough Festival	£1,000
	Derry Festival	£995
	Feile an Phobail	£15,000
Arts Council	Glasgowbury	£29,219
	Celtic Fusion	£52,000
	Fairhead Folk Festival	£6,900
Northern Ireland Events Company	Nashville Songwriters Festival	£15,000
	Blues on the Bay Festival	£10,000

EDUCATION

School Repairs

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 69/08, what steps she has taken to make savings on the amount of her department's budget that is spent on repairs to schools. (AQW 483/08)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): Expenditure on repairs is made in response to building deficiencies identified by the school authorities and which need to be addressed, for example for reasons of safety. It is important that best use is made of all the funding available to improve the schools' estate and in that regard the work underway to improve the planning of the estate, and improve the procurement of school projects should lead to greater efficiency in addressing infrastructure deficiencies.

Derryboye Primary School Car Park

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Education to provide an update on the construction of a car park at Derryboye Primary School; and to give an expected completion date for the project. (AQW 644/08)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board is responsible for this project and it expects it to commence before the end of this financial year. The Board will advise you of the completion date as soon as it is known.

Autistic Spectrum Disorders Programmes

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Education to detail, for each Education and Library Board for the five financial years prior to 31 March 2006, the number of applications received for after-school Autistic Spectrum Disorders programmes; the number of those applications approved by each Board; and the number of applications awarded by tribunal. (AQW 770/08)

Ms Ruane: I am advised by the Chief Executive Officers of the Education and Library Boards as follows;

Financial Years 2001/2002 – 2005/06	Number of applications	Number of applications approved	Number awarded by tribunal
Belfast	20	8	0
North Eastern	0	0	0
South Eastern	0	0	0
Southern	0	0	0
Western	4	3	0
Total	24	11	0

Autistic Spectrum Disorder

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 29/08, to detail which of the organisations invited to the two stakeholder consultations, in August and September 2007, attended one or both of these meetings. (AQW 778/08)

Ms Ruane: The following organisations, including those with expertise in the area of autism attended one or other of the two building stakeholder consultation meetings held in Middletown in August and September 2007: Abbey Vocational School; Appleby Trust; Autism Initiatives; Autism NI (PAPA); Buncrana College Vocational Education Committee; Camphill Community Glencraig; County Donegal Vocational Education Committee; Irish Autism Action; Irish Society for Autism; Knappagh Presbyterian Church; Middletown Presbyterian Church; National Parents Council – Primary; Southern Education and Library Board; Western Education and Library Board.

Autistic Spectrum Disorder

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 29/08, to detail whether or not any initial consultations with established universities, teacher training colleges, or university medical schools in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, or with the Department of Education and Science in the Republic of Ireland, took place, prior to the decision to acquire and site a centre of excellence for autism at Middletown. (AQW 779/08)

Ms Ruane: Officials within the Department consulted with their counterparts in the Department of Education and Science (DES) prior to the decision made in April 2002 to acquire and site a centre of excellence for autism at the property in Middletown. I am unable to confirm whether or not there were consultations with universities, teacher training colleges or university medical schools in the North or the South. My answer to AQW 778/08 refers to consultations with statutory providers carried out in December 2002.

School Repairs

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's expenditure on school repairs in the East Derry/Londonderry constituency, in each of the last five years. (AQW 859/08)

Ms Ruane: The expenditure information available does not distinguish between maintenance and repairs. Details of expenditure on maintenance and repairs on schools in the East Derry constituency, in each of the last five years, is as follows:

2002/03	£674,000
2003/04	£1,179,000

2004/05	£957,000
2005/06	£718,000
2006/07	£825,000

School Bus Seatbelts

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of primary school buses in North Antrim that have been fitted with seatbelts; and to list the schools and areas that are serviced by these buses. (AQW 918/08)

Ms Ruane: In total, 44 buses serving North Antrim primary schools have seatbelts fitted. The North-Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that the following primary schools in the North Antrim area are serviced by buses with seatbelts fitted:

School	Areas Covered	No. of Buses
Moorfields PS	Racavan/Rathkeel/Glenhead/Speerstown/Kells/Whappstown/Connor/Craigstown/Tully/Moorfields	2
Kells & Connor PS	Steeple/Lislunna/Parkgate/Carncome/Doagh Rd	1
Broughshane PS	Tullymore/Elginy/Longmore/Knockan/Ballyloughan/Knowehead/Ballylig/Quille/Cloneytrace	1
Dunseverick PS	Ballintoy/Portballintrae/Causeway/Ballaghmore/Lagavara/Craigalappin/Whitepark/Straid/Dunseverick/Moycraig/Toberkeigh/Larrybane	1
Braidside Integrated PS	Ballymena/Munie/Broughshane/Carniny/Ahoghill/Cullybackey/Martinstown	7*
Knockhollett PS	Ballyveely/Ballyweaney/Kilmandil/Loughabin/Knockmore/Crosstagherty/Tober/Frocess/Ballyportery	1
Rasharkin PS/St Patrick's PS, Rasharkin & Carrowreagh PS	Carclinty/Aghill/Portna/Bann/Drumack/Tamlaght/Lisnahuncheon/Finvoy/Craigs/Mullan/Rosnashane/Lisheeghan/Townhill/Donnelly Park/Vow/Gortgole/Doneyshiel/Gortahar/Glenbuck/Bridge/Station/Duneaney/Slaght/Slievenagh/Tullaghans	4
St Brigid's PS, Cloughmills & Clough PS	Ballinaloob/Kilmandil/Ballyveeley/Rosedemott/Lislabin/Old Frocess/Springmount/DouryRd/Ballycragh/Cloughwater/Drumfin/Loughmagarry/Carnlea/Crankill/Cladytown/Ballyboge/Moneyduff/Frocess	3*
St Patrick's PS, Loughguile & St Anne's PS	Tober/Kilraughts/Pharis/Ballyweaney/Kilraughts/Fernbank/Bregha/Altnarichard/Shelton/Altnahinch/Coolkeeran/Magherahoney/Knockard	2
Gracehill PS & Carnaghts PS	Nursery Rd/Slatt/Marlow X/Rankinstown/Ballycowan	1

School	Areas Covered	No. of Buses
Glenravel PS	Carncoagh/Lisnacrouther/Limavallaghan/Tullykittagh/Skerry/Crommelin Hill/Riverlea/Drumagrove	1
Barnish PS	Torr/Ballyvennaught/Craigfad/Fairhead/Watertop/C'dall Rd/Glenmakeeran/Churchfield/Glenshesk/Careymill	1
Hazelbank PS (pm only)	Aghnadore/Douglas/Lisnamurrican/B'gelly/Clough/Longmore	1
St Colmcilles PS	Ballymean/Lisnahilt/Tully/Craigadoo/Moorfields Kells/Deerfin/Rankinstown	2
St Brigid's PS, Ballymoney	Armoy/Ballymoney/Corkey/Taughey/Rosnashane/Loughguile/Dunloy	3
Gracehill PS	Gracehill/Ballymontenagh/Nursery Rd/Caddy/Sourhill	1
Ballymoney PS	Ballymoney	1
St Anne's PS, Corkey	Corkey/Loughguile/Cloughmills/Armoy	1
St Ciaran's PS	Clady/Knocknacarry/Torr/Tromra	1
Longstone PS, St Patrick's & St Joseph's PS, Ahoghill	Gillistown/Mount Hilary/Ballybollen/Clooney/Culnafey/Crosskeys/Carmegrim/Grange/Priestown/Cranearney/Glebe/Casheltown/Kilcurry	2
Buick Memorial PS	Killagan/Glenvale/Killycowan/Bridge/Caldytown/Shellinghill	1
The Diamond PS	Garvaghy/Ballynafie/Priestown	1
Bushvalley PS	Altarichard/Knockmore/Moyarget/Mosside/Moycraig/Drumaheigh/Ballinlea/Lisnagat/Kilmahamogue/Islandboy	1
St Joseph's PS, Dunloy	Bridge/Mallaboy/Galdanagh/Mullans/Dunloy/Tullaghans/Loughabin/Glenbuck/Killagin/Anticur/Frocess/Duneaney/Rosnashane	1

* Figure includes one vehicle fitted with seatbelts on exposed seats only

In addition to the vehicles listed above, Translink also operates 3 fully seatbelted 53 seater buses in the North Antrim area. As is the nature with Translink vehicles, it is not always the same vehicle servicing an individual school, however, it has advised that one of the fully seatbelted vehicles operates out of the Ballycastle depot while the other two operate out of the Ballymena depot.

Derryboye Primary School Car Park

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail the commencement and completion dates for the provision of a new car park for Derryboye Primary School. (AQW 932/08)

Ms Ruane: The South Eastern Education and Library Board is responsible for this project and it expects it to commence before the end of this financial year. The Board will advise you of the completion date as soon as it is known.

Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail the board members of Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta; and the organisation that nominated each member. (AQW 947/08)

Ms Ruane: The membership of the Board of Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta (CnaG) is as follows:

Nominee	Nominated By
Padaí Ó Ceallaigh	CnaG Board
Caoimhín Ó Peatáin	CnaG Board
Brian P Gaffney	CnaG Board
Vacancy	Gaeloiliúint
Paul O'Doherty	Council for Catholic Maintained Schools
Micheál Ó Máirtín	Universities Council for the Education of Teachers
Brendan Henry	Association of Education and Library Boards
Aodán Mac Póilin	Department of Education
Gabrielle Nig Uidhir	Department of Education
Áine Andrews	Altram
Gearóid MacSiacais	Foras na Gaeilge
Janet Muller	Pobal
Micheál Mac Aodha	Chomhairle um Oideachas Gaeltachta agus Gaelscolaíochta
Labhras Ó Ciaráin	Gaeleagras um Shainriachtanas Oideachais
John Morgan D'Arcy	Association of Northern Ireland Colleges
Vacancy	Irish-medium Schools
Éilís Uí Néill	Irish-medium Schools
Vacancy	Irish-medium Schools
Aedin Ní Ghadhra	Irish-medium Schools
Dara Woods	Irish-medium Schools
Marion Dorman	Irish-medium Schools
Vacancy	Irish-medium Schools

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail her department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 962/08)

Ms Ruane: Present forecasts indicate that the Department of Education's resource expenditure budgets will be fully utilised in the current financial year.

The Department is currently reviewing the position in relation to spending on the capital investment programme to ensure that spending is maximised. The Department will continue to monitor the position on both budgets closely.

Sports Coaches in Schools

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education to detail whether or not the funding for sports coaches in schools will be available to all schools in Northern Ireland; and to give a timescale for the full implementation of the scheme. (AQW 987/08)

Ms Ruane: Funding is being provided for 40 coaches to enable the GAA and IFA to provide 20 coaches each to work with a range of primary schools to support the development of children's physical literacy skills, and to support teachers in delivering the PE curriculum. It will be a matter for primary schools to opt in to the programme, which will aim to support those dealing with greatest levels of disadvantage if oversubscribed.

The GAA has its coaches in place and the IFA will be recruiting shortly so that we have coaches working in schools from January.

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount spent by her department, to date, on establishing the Education and Skills Authority, including the appointment of staff and the paying of salaries. (AQW 992/08)

Ms Ruane: The total amount spent by the Department of Education on establishing the Education and Skills Authority is £896,576.29. The following table itemises the expenditure:

Area of expenditure	Amount
Cost of advertising and recruitment for the post of Chief Executive Designate, Education and Skills Authority	£28,314.09
Salaries of staff who work in the Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team (ESAIT)	£521,513.53
Other Expenditure	£346,748.67
Total expenditure to date (since July 2006)	£896,576.29

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of officers who have been appointed to the Education and Skills Authority. (AQW 993/08)

Ms Ruane: The Education and Skills Authority (ESA) has not yet been established. However, on 1 February 2007 the Chief Executive (Designate) of ESA was appointed, initially to the Department of Education and subsequently, subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation to establish ESA, as Chief Executive of ESA.

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the work that will be undertaken by the officers appointed to the Education and Skills Authority, taking into account that this body will not become operational until April 2010. (AQW 996/08)

Ms Ruane: It is my intention that the Education and Skills Authority (ESA) will be operational by April 2009 at the latest. No officers have been appointed to the ESA at this stage.

The ESA Implementation Team (ESAIT), which includes staff from 7 of the RPA affected education organisations, is supporting the Chief Executive (Designate) in establishing the ESA. They are taking forward the planning and developmental work including HR, ICT, Finance and Accounting, Organisational Design and Communications, necessary to ensure ESA will function effectively from the date of establishment. I have also asked the CE (Designate) to develop and lead a Convergence Programme, involving the existing education organisations, to ensure a smooth transition to the new arrangements.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of officials involved in conducting the equality impact assessment of the recommendations of the Review of Public Administration and the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority; and the cost to her department in terms of (i) salaries; (ii) travel/subsistence; and (iii) secretariat services. (AQW 1054/08)

Ms Ruane: Consideration of equality is an integral part of policy development and staff throughout my Department have been involved on an ongoing basis in the assessment of proposals for the Review of Public Administration. This is part of the normal duties of those staff, and separate information on the costs of this particular work is not held by my Department.

Post-Primary Education

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQO 405/08, to detail what would be included in a broader view of post-primary education. (AQW 1098/08)

Ms Ruane: The phrase “a broader view of post-primary education” reflects the fact that the development of a replacement system of transfer is a complex matter that requires the consideration of several factors, including the impact of demographic decline on school enrolment, structural changes arising from the review of public administration, the gradual move towards an area-based planning approach for schools, the implementation of the revised curriculum and, in particular, movement towards the entitlement framework, all of which must help children to access, on a fair and equal basis, a high-quality post-primary education.

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the duties, functions, assets, liabilities and staff that will not be transferred from the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools to the Education and Skills Authority. (AQW 1138/08)

Ms Ruane: Legislation will be brought forward to transfer all of the statutory functions and duties of the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools to the Education and Skills Authority (ESA) with the exception of:

- preparing schemes of management and schemes of appointment for Catholic maintained schools, in accordance with guidance set by the Department of Education; and
- responding to formal consultation on development proposals affecting Catholic maintained schools.

These functions will transfer to the trustees of Catholic maintained schools.

Details of the transfer of assets, liabilities and staff are under consideration, and have not yet been finalised. All assets and liabilities of the organisation will transfer to the ESA, other than assets that belong to the Catholic church. All teaching staff and other staff employed by the Council who are engaged wholly or mainly in the provision of front-line support services will transfer to the ESA.

Review of Irish-Medium Education

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the progress made to date on the Review of Irish-Medium Education. (AQW 1149/08)

Ms Ruane: The Review of Irish-medium education is progressing well and it is expected to report shortly. This is a longer timescale than initially expected but is necessary so that the wide range of issues covered are fully considered. It is therefore important that this is done correctly rather than quickly.

The initial phase of the Review concentrated on gathering and quality-assuring factual information and evidence to determine the current situation in Irish-medium education and to identify all the issues which need to be addressed.

We are now entering the final phase of the Review when options are being identified to address the challenges. The outcomes of the Review will help inform future policy for the provision of IM Education.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Training for Success Apprenticeship

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how the Training for Success apprenticeship programme helps to meet the needs of the economy and young people, when the majority of apprentice training programmes are no longer available in Derry/Londonderry, an area of high unemployment. (AQW 1238/08)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): In response to approaches from public representatives, the Department has commissioned a report to understand the demographics of apprenticeship training within the North West area and the underlying causes for trends over the past ten years, as well as how these trends might change over the next five to ten years. This report has not yet been completed, but I would be happy to forward you a copy once it has been finalised. Early indications from the report suggest that trends in Derry/Londonderry generally mirror the same trends throughout the rest of Northern Ireland, with an increase in apprenticeships, although the uptake of some occupational areas has seen some decline over recent years.

Whilst it would appear that recruitment to apprenticeship programmes in Derry/Londonderry has not been as high in other parts of Northern Ireland, there continues to be strong Further Education provision in the city, on which occupancy appears to be consistently high.

Training for Success nevertheless provides a range of professional and technical training opportunities, as well as access to industry-led qualifications in the skills areas that industry needs. Furthermore, the Job-Ready strand provides young people with the tools, skills, and basic qualifications required to gain employment. For this provision to be successful, and for Northern Ireland's economy and industry growth to benefit, industry itself must continue to invest in the training of its employees, and I consider that Training for Success provides an ideal vehicle for this.

Apprenticeships

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to ensure that the down turn in the building trade does not result in the loss of apprenticeships, particularly in relation to people in the final year of their apprenticeship.

(AQW 1290/08)

Sir Reg Empey: Under the Department's Training for Success provision, apprenticeship training provides a range of professional and technical training opportunities. I would maintain that employers should want to invest in their businesses through employing apprentices, in order to develop the skills that they need to grow and to make them more competitive and profitable. To encourage this, therefore, the Department has ensured a direct financial incentive within the funding framework of this provision, for employers who take on apprentices.

I appreciate, however, that this provision is dependent on prevailing economic conditions and the consequent capacity of employers to accommodate apprenticeships. The Department has therefore been working closely with representatives from the construction industry to try and ensure that the provision, as far as possible, meets the industry's immediate needs.

I also consider that the provision is sufficiently flexible, to allow apprentices to complete the provision with an alternative employer, should the unfortunate case arise where an employer is no longer able to continue to facilitate an apprenticeship.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail his department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 963/08)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr Dodds): DETI does not project an underspend at this point in the financial year. In-year Monitoring rounds provide opportunities for budgets to be adjusted in the light of emerging pressures and reduced requirements. The final projected expenditure will be established at February 2008 Monitoring.

Tourism

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he has taken to ensure better communication between Tourism Ireland, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Regional Tourism Partnerships. (AQW 1036/08)

Mr Dodds: My Department continues to play a key role in ensuring that communication channels between the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB), Tourism Ireland Limited (TIL) and the Regional Tourism Partnerships (RTPs) operate effectively. Communications between NITB & TIL occur on a daily basis and both organisations are currently updating a Memorandum of Understanding which aims to further enhance co-operation and reduce duplication. In addition the NITB's relationship with the RTPs is based on regular contact and through a clearly defined relationship as set out in a Service Level Agreement.

Tourism-Related Budgets

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he is taking to ensure that there is better co-ordination and more efficient use of funds between the respective Government departments that hold tourism-related budgets. (AQW 1038/08)

Mr Dodds: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) is responsible for tourism policy and legislation. Due to the very diverse nature of tourism, a number of other Departments are also involved in supporting the tourism sector.

The priorities for tourism are set out in the tourism Strategic Framework for Action (SFA) which is currently being evaluated by a Steering Group led by DETI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. The SFA was agreed with all those Departments which have budgets for supporting the sector. The evaluation of the SFA will include consideration of how co-ordination between Departments with tourism interests could be improved. DETI will take the lead in implementing recommendations arising from that evaluation.

New Hotels

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the grants offered by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board for new hotels in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1141/08)

Mr Dodds: Responsibility for the provision of support to the tourism accommodation sector passed from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to Invest NI at its inception in 2002.

From April 2002 to date Invest NI has made offers of assistance towards the development of three new hotels in Antrim, Enniskillen, and Craigavon totalling £4,488,428.

New Hotels

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail whether or not the Northern Ireland Tourist Board is continuing to operate a grant system for new hotels within a 10 mile radius of Belfast. (AQW 1142/08)

Mr Dodds: Responsibility for the provision of support to the tourism accommodation sector passed from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to Invest NI at its establishment in 2002.

A moratorium on capital support for the development of new hotels and the extension or upgrading of existing hotels within a ten mile radius of Belfast city centre was introduced by NITB in 1997 and remains in place at this time.

The moratorium does have a number of specific exclusions and allows for the consideration of projects in areas on the periphery of the zone without an existing supply; in areas of New Targeting Social Need; or for hotel developments capable of generating their own supply from market sectors not serviced by existing hotels.

While capital support is not available, Invest NI may still consider developmental support for hotel projects in the moratorium zone.

Cosultancy Expenditure

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail his department's expenditure on consultancy; and to provide a breakdown of this expenditure, for the last year.

(AQW 1167/08)

Mr Dodds: DETI's expenditure on external consultancy in 2006-07

Category	Amount (£'s)
1. policy appraisal and review	1,120,644
2. strategic management	114,799
3. organisational development	0
4. performance management	34,691

Category	Amount (£'s)
5. accountancy	0
6. audit	55,738
7. economic appraisal	16,355
8. internal audit	0
9. feasibility study	71,514
10. quality accreditation	0
11. investment appraisal	0
12. corporate governance	31,562
13. projects	88,037
14. surveys	0
15. marketing	60,418
16. market research	600
Other	0
Total	£1,594,358

Invest NI

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of funding Invest NI has allocated to businesses in the (i) Omagh District Council area; and (ii) the Strabane District Council area. (AQW 1178/08)

Mr Dodds: During the 5 year period ended March 2007 Invest NI offered assistance in support of business formation, expansion and development projects valued at:

- (i) £6.15 million within Omagh District Council area, and
- (ii) £12.76 million within Strabane District Council area.

Trading Partnerships

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consideration he has given to establishing a network of Northern Ireland agents in all major economies that might be identified as trading partners. (AQW 1228/08)

Mr Dodds: A strategic objective of Invest NI is to help new and existing exporters to compete successfully internationally and it provides a range of measures to achieve this including support services provided by trade advisers in key markets in Europe, North America, Middle East, India and China. Moreover, Northern Ireland businesses have access to the Commercial Departments of UK Diplomatic Posts in over 200 markets worldwide. They also can avail of the trade advisory services provided by Enterprise Ireland's network of over 30 overseas offices.

The services Invest NI provides in overseas markets are kept under review to ensure that they are matched with those markets which offer local businesses the best trading opportunities.

ENVIRONMENT

Agricultural Planning Regulations

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what steps she is taking to reduce the amount of planning regulation facing the agricultural sector. (AQW 896/08)

The Minister of the Environment (Mrs Foster): I am currently bringing forward legislation to extend the period during which the agricultural sector may rely on extended permitted development rights for the building and excavation of slurry storage facilities needed to comply with action measures implementing the Nitrates Directive to 31 December 2008.

I also expect to bring forward legislation which, should it be necessary because of avian flu, will enable producers to carry out development required to bring birds under cover without applying for planning permission.

More generally, my Department is working with DARD to review all the relevant regulations applied across the agricultural sector with a view to simplifying compliance with them and reducing the costs to food producers.

Planning Applications

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications for new housing units that have been (i) received; and (ii) approved by the Planning Service, in (a) Carrickfergus Borough Council area; (b) Larne Borough Council area; and (c) Newtownabbey Borough Council area, in each year since 2000. (AQW 999/08)

Mrs Foster: The numbers of applications for new and replacement single dwellings and housing developments received and approved in each of the council areas and in each year since 2000 are as shown in the attached tables.

NUMBER OF NEW PLANNING APPLICATIONS RECEIVED
2000 TO 17/10/07

Year	Carrickfergus		Larne		Newtownabbey
	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments
2000	29	34	50	24	53	66
2001	27	31	44	18	41	60
2002	16	33	41	28	50	68
2003	23	24	69	40	70	79
2004	33	27	71	43	73	82
2005	27	39	85	50	48	84
2006	30	45	38	34	31	97
2007	12	74	30	53	32	97

NUMBER OF NEW PLANNING APPROVALS ISSUED
2000 TO 17/10/07

Year	Carrickfergus		Larne		Newtownabbey
	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments
2000	18	32	24	10	30	24
2001	18	21	22	17	30	36
2002	11	26	22	13	32	43
2003	14	17	34	22	41	56
2004	14	19	41	22	39	57
2005	20	16	37	48	41	46
2006	26	36	32	23	27	58
2007	16	12	7	17	15	35

NUMBER OF PLANNING APPLICATIONS RECEIVED FOR REPLACEMENT DWELLINGS 2000 TO 17/10/07

Year	Carrickfergus		Larne		Newtownabbey
	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments
2000	10	0	33	0	12	0
2001	7	0	26	1	9	1
2002	12	0	30	1	10	1
2003	16	1	21	0	16	2

Year	Carrickfergus		Larne		Newtownabbey
	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments
2004	13	0	29	2	17	0
2005	10	0	16	0	20	0
2006	5	1	23	2	10	1
2007	0	1	28	3	13	0

NUMBER OF PLANNING APPLICATIONS APPROVED FOR REPLACEMENT DWELLINGS 2000 TO 17/10/07

Year	Carrickfergus		Larne		Newtownabbey
	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments	Single Dwellings	Housing Developments
2000	3	0	18	0	7	0
2001	7	0	20	1	5	0
2002	5	0	21	0	9	1
2003	12	0	24	1	13	1
2004	15	1	28	2	9	2
2005	7	0	7	0	13	0
2006	5	0	13	0	9	0
2007	2	0	13	1	4	0

The figures have been extracted from a live dataset which is continuously updated and validated. They should therefore be regarded as indicative only at this point in time and should not be compared with any previous figures published by the Agency.

MOT Tests

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the average waiting time for an MOT, in each of the vehicle testing centres in Northern Ireland.
(AQW 1045/08)

Mrs Foster: Details of the average waiting time for all test centres are included in the following table:

Test Centre	For week ending 20 October 2007	From 1 April -20 October 2007
	Average weekly waiting times in days	Average year to date waiting times in days
Armagh	14	14
Ballymena	17	22

Test Centre	For week ending 20 October 2007	From 1 April -20 October 2007
	Average weekly waiting times in days	Average year to date waiting times in days
Belfast	15	17
Coleraine	18	16
Cookstown	19	20
Craigavon	17	16
Downpatrick	23	17
Enniskillen	30	24
Larne	13	21
Lisburn	14	15
Londonderry	16	17
Mallusk	12	16
Newry	26	19
Newtownards	16	15
Omagh	15	16

Radioactive Waste

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment if she will give immediate assurances that Northern Ireland will not host any sites for the long-term disposal of higher capacity radioactive waste, arising from nuclear facilities based in Great Britain. (AQW 1074/08)

Mrs Foster: The current 'Managing Radioactive Waste Safely' consultation seeks views on both the process by which government might implement proposals to deal with the UK's legacy of long-lived higher activity radioactive waste, and the process by which potential sites for disposal might be identified.

It would be inappropriate for me to make assurances that pre-empt the responses to the consultation, or any decisions that might subsequently be taken. However, I can clarify that at this time there are no plans to locate geological disposal facilities in Northern Ireland.

Radioactive Waste

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the financial and resource contribution her department is making towards the consultation on proposals for the way in which a site will be chosen for the long-term disposal of higher capacity radioactive waste. (AQW 1075/08)

Mrs Foster: A Departmental official sits on the Implementation Planning Group (IPG) of the Managing Radioactive Waste Safely programme, participating in meetings on an approximately bi-monthly basis. In financial terms, the Department incurred minor administrative costs related to the development and distribution of the consultation document.

Radioactive Waste

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment if she will explain the reasons why Northern Ireland's devolved administration is co-sponsoring the Defra consultation on proposals for the way in which a site will be chosen for the long-term disposal of higher capacity radioactive waste. (AQW 1076/08)

Mrs Foster: In October 2006, my Department accepted, in conjunction with the UK government and the Scottish and Welsh devolved administrations, the recommendations of the independent Committee on Radioactive Waste Management (CoRWM).

In June this year I agreed that my Department would also be a co-sponsor of the consultation 'Managing Radioactive Waste Safely – a framework for implementing geological disposal,' as it is an important step in implementing the recommendations made by CoRWM.

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail whether or not her department has ceased to support the management plan for the Giant's Causeway, in which the Environment and Heritage Service is a partner, and which is predicated on the provision of a visitors' centre by the public sector, led by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. (AQW 1081/08)

Mrs Foster: The management plan for the Giant's Causeway and Causeway Coast World Heritage Site (WHS) was commissioned by EHS to meet UNESCO requirements and was published in 2005.

Although the WHS Management Plan was part of a Ministerial initiative which included a Tourism Masterplan for the Causeway Coast and Glens area and the international competition for new visitor facilities launched by DETI in 2005, it was not predicated on the provision of a visitor centre by the public sector.

My Department is fully committed to delivery of the management plan. A meeting of the WHS Management Group was postponed while the stakeholder meetings about the proposed private sector visitor centre are taking place. My officials will review this position after meetings have taken place with each of the stakeholders and will convene the Management Group as soon as it is appropriate to do so.

Motorcycle Off-Road Tests

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of the Environment what plans she has to provide motorcycle off-road tests at the Coleraine Driver and Vehicle Testing Centre. (AQW 1083/08)

Mrs Foster: Based on a detailed assessment of the Coleraine Driver and Vehicle Test Centre it was considered, in the interest of health and safety, that there was insufficient space to ensure safe segregation from other traffic using the sites for vehicle and driving tests to accommodate an off-road motorcycle testing facility. Therefore there are no plans to introduce the test at the Coleraine centre.

The DVA Board has agreed that post implementation there will be an evaluation of the entire project and, subject to demand, further consideration will be given to testing locations and, if deemed necessary, DVA will endeavour to identify additional available sites.

Private Developments

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the laws governing management companies appointed by private developers to maintain 'common areas' in private developments; and what means of complaint householders have if they do not believe they are receiving value for money. (AQW 1101/08)

Mrs Foster: Developers who are required under current planning policy – PPS 8: Open Space, Sport & Outdoor Recreation - to provide areas of public open space in new housing are generally required to enter into a legal agreement (known as Article 40 Agreements) under the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 transferring ownership and responsibility for the open space to a management company supported by a charitable trust.

The management company may be funded through a levy on residents which would be clearly identified at the time of purchase. Any dispute about service standards and value for money is entirely a matter between residents and the management company.

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of the Environment to detail her department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 1113/08)

Mrs Foster: The In-year monitoring process provides a formal system for reviewing spending plans and priorities set for the financial year in light of more up to date information.

In-year monitoring rounds are usually conducted at June, October, December and February and allow departments to surrender projected easements.

In view of the In-year monitoring process my department is not currently projecting an underspend for this financial year.

Consultancy Expenditure

Mr Savage asked the Minister of the Environment to detail his department's expenditure on consultancy; and to provide a breakdown of this expenditure, for the last year. (AQW 1163/08)

Mrs Foster: The table below gives details of my Department's expenditure on external consultancy for 2006-07 broken down into the categories defined by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP).

DEPARTMENT: ENVIRONMENT

Category	2006/07 Amount £
1. policy appraisal and review	107,791
2. strategic management	-
3. organisational development	28,195
4. performance management	-
5. accountancy	-
6. audit	-
7. economic appraisal	-
8. internal audit	-
9. feasibility study	-
10. quality accreditation	-
11. investment appraisal	-
12. corporate governance	-
13. projects	603,166
14. surveys	-
15. marketing	-
16. market research	-
Other	108,000
Total	847,152

Motor Homes

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail her department's strategy to better promote, and provide enhanced facilities for, motor homes in country parks. (AQW 1231/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department has no specific strategy relating to mobile homes in its country parks, but considers that the facilities provided for touring caravans by the concessionaire at its Castle Archdale Country Park are also fully satisfactory for mobile homes. Promotion of these is primarily down to the concessionaire. The Department has considered the possibility of providing touring caravan facilities at other country parks which it owns, but this is judged likely to be uneconomic. The Environment and Heritage Service policy statement on the management of its country parks can be accessed on <http://www.ehsni.gov.uk/cppolicymarch04.pdf>

The Department has no role in mobile home provision at local authority country parks.

Illegal Waste

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the authority in the Republic of Ireland, to which her department has applied for the removal of illegal waste at Slattinagh Garrison; (ii) the date of the application; (iii) the estimated cost of this work; (iv) the responses received from the authority; and (v) what is her assessment of whether or not it is expected that this application will be given favourable consideration. (AQW 1306/08)

Mrs Foster: The Department of the Environment applied on 7 August 2007 to Dublin City Council, the competent authority for all exports of waste from the Republic of Ireland, for the removal of the illegal waste at Slattinagh, Garrison. The cost of this work is very difficult to estimate before all the waste is removed from the site, however it is expected to be substantial. I understand that a response is expected this week from Dublin City Council on the production of a timetable for the repatriation of waste deposited at this site.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Suicide

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration he will give to meeting with industry representatives from the media and broadcast organisations, including online social networking and other internet-based platforms, with a view to drawing up voluntary guidelines on the coverage and portrayal of suicides and attempted suicides involving young people. (AQW 1003/08)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The media and broadcast organisations have a very important role to play in helping to prevent suicide and self-harm, and in the promotion of positive mental health and wellbeing. I am pleased that the four main newspapers in Northern Ireland have recently undertaken a campaign on suicide prevention.

I recently met with a number of local newspaper editors in order to further emphasise the need for responsible reporting of these issues. In addition all-island media guidelines, which were developed in co-operation with the Samaritans and the Irish Association of Suicidology, to advise on the portrayal of suicide, were re-issued to all local media organisations earlier this year.

I also met with key internet industry stakeholders, including Bebo, Google and Vodafone/ My Space, to highlight my concerns about the impact the internet can have on vulnerable people, especially at times of crisis. I challenged them to outline what further actions they could take to promote positive mental health and to prevent their sites being used to promote suicide.

Initial responses have been positive, particularly as they have highlighted their intention to further promote positive mental health via their websites, and to encourage people to seek help and support at times of crisis. I will keep the focus on this issue and I intend to meet with these stakeholders again in the near future.

The issue of suicide requires sensitive handling in the media, as it is possible to make things worse through excessive or inappropriate reporting. Responsible reporting can have a positive impact, for example, a campaign to decrease media coverage of subway suicides in Vienna in the late 1980s cut subway suicides by 80%.

We are all obliged to act sensibly and maturely on this issue, as lives are at stake through contagion, especially among our young people. I will of course continue to monitor this important issue.

Suicide

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will explain the reasons why current statistics for suicides and attempted suicides are incomplete, in light of the fact that they do not provide for an exhaustive analysis of the extent to which alcohol and/or drugs play a significant role in suicides and attempted suicides involving young people in Northern Ireland, including cases where drugs and alcohol are not the immediate cause of death.

(AQW 1004/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Official statistics on suicide are derived from the statutory register of deaths. Deaths from non-natural causes are referred to the Coroner who can decide to have an inquest or a post-mortem. The Coroner then reports his findings on the cause of death which is subsequently recorded on the death certificate. This cause of death is used to compile detailed mortality statistics; in some cases alcohol / drugs is recorded on the death certificate (e.g. intentional self-poisoning). For all death certificates to include information on the role alcohol / drugs played in the cause of death, a change in death registration legislation would be required.

The Hospital Inpatient System, records all admissions to HSC hospitals in Northern Ireland. Reasons for the patients' admission to hospital are recorded in seven diagnosis field, and from this diagnosis coding, it is possible to provide the number of admissions to acute hospitals which occur as a result of attempted suicide. In 2005/06 there were 4,498 admissions to hospital where the patient was diagnosed as having attempted suicide. Further diagnosis coding indicates that 4,286 of these admissions (95%) were also diagnosed with alcohol or drug related conditions. However, secondary coding may not be completed in all cases.

Central access to Accident and Emergency datasets is currently being developed. This database will include details of patients' diagnoses. In the future it should be possible to identify attendances at Accident and Emergency as a result of attempted suicide provided that patients' records are coded appropriately.

In summary, these are the reasons why statistics for suicides and attempted suicides are not exhaustive. No further Review is planned.

Suicide

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will undertake a review of the statistics and information collected by his department, in order to establish the extent of the role that drugs and alcohol play in all reported suicides and attempted suicides in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 1005/08)

Mr McGimpsey: Official statistics on suicide are derived from the statutory register of deaths. Deaths from non-natural causes are referred to the Coroner who can decide to have an inquest or a post-mortem. The Coroner then reports his findings on the cause of death which is subsequently recorded on the death certificate. This cause of death is used to compile detailed mortality statistics; in some cases alcohol / drugs is recorded on the death certificate (e.g. intentional self-poisoning). For all death certificates to include information on the role alcohol / drugs played in the cause of death, a change in death registration legislation would be required.

The Hospital Inpatient System, records all admissions to HSC hospitals in Northern Ireland. Reasons for the patients' admission to hospital are recorded in seven diagnosis field, and from this diagnosis coding, it is possible to provide the number of admissions to acute hospitals which occur as a result of attempted suicide. In 2005/06 there were 4,498 admissions to hospital where the patient was diagnosed as having attempted suicide. Further diagnosis coding indicates that 4,286 of these admissions (95%) were also diagnosed with alcohol or drug related conditions. However, secondary coding may not be completed in all cases.

Central access to Accident and Emergency datasets is currently being developed. This database will include details of patients' diagnoses. In the future it should be possible to identify attendances at Accident and Emergency as a result of attempted suicide provided that patients' records are coded appropriately.

In summary, these are the reasons why statistics for suicides and attempted suicides are not exhaustive. No further Review is planned.

Health and Social Services Authority

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the indicative costs of delaying the new health and social services authority until April 2009.

(AQW 1041/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My decision to reconsider the Health and Social Care structural changes does not mean any additional cost, but will simply mean that some of the planned savings from reorganisation will now arise later than would otherwise have been the case.

It had been assumed that the rationalisation of Health and Social Care Boards and Agencies would lead to planned savings of approximately £1m by April 2009 (this is a relatively small proportion of the total of some £50 million, because much greater savings will arise from the Trust restructuring, and, subject to the conclusions following consultation, from the introduction of shared services).

Whilst an element of this £1 million of savings will not now be made as planned, other RPA savings have offset this loss, mainly because there is a larger than anticipated number of vacant posts within the Health and Social Care Boards as a result of the operation of vacancy controls.

Binge Drinking

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his department's expenditure on advertising the risks of binge drinking through public campaigns, in numerical and percentage terms, with reference to his Department's overall budget. (AQW 1102/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department's budget for 2007-08 is £4.1 billion, of which approx £270k has been set aside to cover spend in relation to binge drinking campaigns. This represents 0.0067 percent of the overall DHSSPS budget.

Cardiac Screening for Young People

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to make cardiac screening for young people a statutory provision within the health service; and to make it available on a universal basis. (AQW 1107/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The recent tragic deaths of young boys enjoying sport have brought home to us again the shock and devastation felt by their families, friends and communities. The most fitting response is that we put in place the most effective measures possible to minimise this terrible risk.

Our response has to be based on sound evidence. This is a complex area: more than twenty different conditions have been identified as causes of sudden cardiac death in young people, and there is no single screening test that would diagnose all these causes. It is also important to consider whether screening is always the right course of action.

A workshop, led by the Chief Medical Officer in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, is being organised to look at sudden cardiac death in the young. This workshop will call on an expert body of opinion to give this matter the attention it needs, and explore what further steps can be taken to protect those who are most at risk. This will include leading health experts in cardiology, clinical psychology, genetics, and research academics within this field, along with people from the relevant Government Departments, public health bodies, the Sports Council, and voluntary organisations.

The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) is scheduled to review its policy advice on screening for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy in 2007/08. The Chief Medical Officer for Northern Ireland has written to the Chair of the NSC asking them to prioritise this review.

Sudden cardiac death in young will be covered in the Service Framework for Cardiovascular Health and Wellbeing which is due to be published for consultation in April 2008.

Regarding early health checks, all newborn babies have their hearts examined for defects.

All the facts need to be considered by the specialist group before any recommendations can be agreed and taken forward. This work is being taken forward as quickly as possible. At this stage it would not be right for me either to pre-empt the outcome of this work or to commit to a timescale.

Cardiac Screening

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to ensure that there are no barriers to children under the age of 14 accessing cardiac screening; and what consideration he is giving to integrating the option of cardiac screening into the system of early health checks and immunisations for children. (AQW 1108/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The recent tragic deaths of young boys enjoying sport have brought home to us again the shock and devastation felt by their families, friends and communities. The most fitting response is that we put in place the most effective measures possible to minimise this terrible risk.

Our response has to be based on sound evidence. This is a complex area: more than twenty different conditions have been identified as causes of sudden cardiac death in young people, and there is no single screening test that would diagnose all these causes. It is also important to consider whether screening is always the right course of action.

A workshop, led by the Chief Medical Officer in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, is being organised to look at sudden cardiac death in the young. This workshop will call on an expert body of opinion to give this matter the attention it needs, and explore what further steps can be taken to protect those who are most at risk. This will include leading health experts in cardiology, clinical psychology, genetics, and research academics within this field, along with people from the relevant Government Departments, public health bodies, the Sports Council, and voluntary organisations.

The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) is scheduled to review its policy advice on screening for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy in 2007/08. The Chief Medical Officer for Northern Ireland has written to the Chair of the NSC asking them to prioritise this review.

Sudden cardiac death in young will be covered in the Service Framework for Cardiovascular Health and Wellbeing which is due to be published for consultation in April 2008.

Regarding early health checks, all newborn babies have their hearts examined for defects.

All the facts need to be considered by the specialist group before any recommendations can be agreed and taken forward. This work is being taken forward as quickly as possible. At this stage it would not be right for me either to pre-empt the outcome of this work or to commit to a timescale.

Cardiac Risk in Young People

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what additional resources he is making available to deal with cardiac-related deaths and cardiac risk in the young; specifically in terms of increasing (i) the number of specialist cardiologists who can interpret tests; (ii) the availability of defibrillators and people trained in their use; and (iii) the level of bereavement counselling services available to families affected by sudden death, due to undetected heart conditions. (AQW 1109/08)

Mr McGimpsey:

- (i) Since 2002, there has been a 66% increase in the number of doctors pursuing specialist training in cardiology to meet the needs of the service.
- (ii) There is no central register of how many defibrillators are available in Northern Ireland. The Department is currently working with the Department of Epidemiology and Public Health at QUB, and with the Health and Social Care (HSC) Boards and the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS), to develop a Strategy for First Responders and Public Access Defibrillation. Part of this work will entail an exercise to identify the extent to which automated external defibrillators are available in Northern Ireland.
- (iii) Trained staff within the Health and Social Care sector in Northern Ireland offer a wide range of support to the bereaved. This is in addition to the services available from voluntary, community and church organisations. The establishment, in March 2006, within the HSC of a Northern Ireland Bereavement Network comprising five area co-ordinators based in local trusts also makes a significant contribution to developing support for those families who experience a sudden death.

Heart Screening Report

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will indicate when the specialists group, established to investigate heart screening for young people, will report on its findings and recommendations. (AQW 1110/08)

Mr McGimpsey: The recent tragic deaths of young boys enjoying sport have brought home to us again the shock and devastation felt by their families, friends and communities. The most fitting response is that we put in place the most effective measures possible to minimise this terrible risk.

Our response has to be based on sound evidence. This is a complex area: more than twenty different conditions have been identified as causes of sudden cardiac death in young people, and there is no single screening test that would diagnose all these causes. It is also important to consider whether screening is always the right course of action.

A workshop, led by the Chief Medical Officer in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, is being organised to look at sudden cardiac death in the young. This workshop will call on an expert body of opinion to give this matter the attention it needs, and explore what further steps can be taken to protect those who are most at risk. This will include leading health experts in cardiology, clinical psychology, genetics, and research academics within this field, along with people from the relevant Government Departments, public health bodies, the Sports Council, and voluntary organisations.

The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) is scheduled to review its policy advice on screening for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy in 2007/08. The Chief Medical Officer for Northern Ireland has written to the Chair of the NSC asking them to prioritise this review.

Sudden cardiac death in young will be covered in the Service Framework for Cardiovascular Health and Wellbeing which is due to be published for consultation in April 2008.

Regarding early health checks, all newborn babies have their hearts examined for defects.

All the facts need to be considered by the specialist group before any recommendations can be agreed and taken forward. This work is being taken forward as quickly as possible. At this stage it would not be right for me either to pre-empt the outcome of this work or to commit to a timescale.

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 1112/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is projecting a minimal underspend for this financial year and every effort is being made to ensure all resources will be substantially spent. However, given the need to avoid an excess vote and the inclusion of certain demand led budgets such as pharmaceutical expenditure, a small underspend is inevitable, as is always the case for all Departments, though under the end-year flexibility arrangements, no resources are lost to Northern Ireland.

Mobile Phone Use

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with the mobile phone industry, in relation to developing increased protection from radiation, following prolonged mobile phone use. (AQW 1173/08)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has had no discussions with the mobile phone industry on such matters. Mobile phones comply with the international guidelines set out in the European Council Recommendation EC/519/1999 on limiting public exposure to electromagnetic fields.

Dental Guidelines

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps his department is taking to produce guidelines for dentists, in relation to giving fillings to patients who are pregnant. (AQW 1176/08)

Mr McGimpsey: There are no plans for my Department to produce guidelines for dentists in relation to providing fillings for patients who are pregnant.

MLA Meetings

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of meeting requests received from MLAs; the number of these that were declined; the number that were accepted; and the party affiliation of those MLAs whose meeting requests were declined. (AQW 1221/08)

Mr McGimpsey: I can advise that from taking up office on 8 May 2007 34 requests for meetings from MLAs were received.

17 of those were accepted and 14 were declined. Another 3 have yet to receive responses as these requests were only recently received.

Of the 14 that were declined

- 6 were DUP
- 4 were UUP
- 3 were Sinn Féin
- 1 was SDLP

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Road Upgrade

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the funding allocated to upgrading the B36 road from Lisnaskea/Roslea to Monaghan; and to detail whether or not any major surface upgrade is due in the near future. (AQW 1073/08)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): My Department's Roads Service has invested £299,000 on the structural maintenance of the B36 Dernawilt Road, which runs between Lisnaskea and the border with County Monaghan, over the past five financial years. In this time, 13.7 kilometers (75% of the length) of the B36 have undergone surface dressing or resurfacing work.

Two further sections of the road have been identified for resurfacing and are included in the programme for 2007/08, as well as a section in Roslea itself. Unfortunately resources are not sufficient to deliver the full programme at present, however both schemes are high on the reserve programme and will be implemented as soon as resources do become available, hopefully within this financial year.

Route Corridor Study

Mr Doherty asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will outline the planned timeframe for the completion of the A5 dual carriageway 'Route Corridor Study'; and for the completion of the subsequent public consultation into the alternative route options. (AQW 1082/08)

Mr Murphy: I am advised that an early appointment of consultants will allow the production of a preliminary options report including recommendations for a preferred corridor for the dualling of the A5 by late 2008. Subsequent work, including significant public consultation, should enable the identification of a preferred route within that corridor by mid 2009.

Disability Badges

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to introduce new blue disability badges, with the expiry date displayed on both sides, in order to prevent parking fines being imposed on disabled people because the date on their badge is not visible. (AQW 1094/08)

Mr Murphy: I can advise that my Department is preparing to issue a consultation document in respect of a number of changes to the Blue Badge scheme. The proposed changes include the alteration of the design of the badge, and the inclusion of clearer instructions about which side of the badge must be displayed. The consultation paper should be issued to interested parties in the very near future. Any suggestions relating to the badge design will be considered as part of the overall consultation process.

Residents' Parking Schemes

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to introduce the necessary legislation to allow residents' parking schemes. (AQW 1103/08)

Mr Murphy: I am advised that my Department's Roads Service took powers in the Road Traffic Regulation (NI) Order 1997 to permit the introduction of residents' parking schemes. Under the Order, schemes can be implemented using individual Residents' Parking Orders.

Roads Service intends to start work on the development of schemes as soon as the policy has been finalised. However, I am advised that it may be six to twelve months before the first schemes will be on the ground due to the local consultation and legislative processes that have to be followed.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his Department's criteria for providing a pedestrian crossing at, or near to, the entrance to a primary school. (AQW 1104/08)

Mr Murphy: Controlled crossings are provided to facilitate access and easier movement for pedestrians and cyclists. They also have an important role in contributing to pedestrian safety and convenience.

My Department's criteria for the provision of pedestrian crossings are outlined in Roads Service Policy and Procedure Guide: RSPPG - E005 Controlled Crossings: Assessment Procedures. This policy also covers the provision of a pedestrian crossing at, or near to, the entrance to a school and a copy is enclosed for your information.

In summary, a five step procedure is applied when assessing the need for the provision of a pedestrian crossing and, where required, to determine the type of crossing appropriate to the circumstances of the site. The five steps are:

- an initial site survey and preliminary assessment;
- a full site survey;
- an assessment of need;
- priority ranking; and
- selection of type of facility.

The preliminary assessment uses the number of pedestrians and cyclists to measure the demand to cross the particular road and the degree of difficulty in doing so. Sites with a low demand and low difficulty are screened out of the process at this stage, while a more detailed assessment is carried out at sites above the initial threshold.

At these sites the location is subject to a site assessment and a needs assessment, taking into consideration a range of factors (eg demand/difficulty score, pedestrian collision history, number of vulnerable road users, speed of traffic, width of the road and proximity to public amenities, such as hospital, schools, libraries, health centres, post office, bus/rail station, etc). A scorecard is completed as part of the assessment and an overall score for the site is calculated. Sites are ranked in merit order, with those achieving the highest scores receiving priority attention within the normal budgetary constraints.

Free Public Transport

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development, further to the Assembly's resolution of 17 September 2007, regarding the introduction of free public transport for women and men at the age of 60, to detail what consideration he has given to this, in terms of his department's budget bids; and what priority he will assign to this issue. (AQW 1121/08)

Mr Murphy: As part of the Draft Budget, provisions have been made to extend free public transport services to men and women living here aged 60 to 64. Subject to confirmation of resources and upon satisfactory completion of the necessary Equality Impact Assessment and public consultation processes, I hope that my Department will be able to introduce this concession in late 2008.

Ballymoney Railway Station

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development to give a timescale within which work will commence at Ballymoney Railway Station, in order to ensure that the station is compliant with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. (AQW 1129/08)

Mr Murphy: The programme of works to upgrade public transport facilities in compliance with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 is being undertaken in two phases. Phase I is nearing completion and Phase II, which is presently at tendering stage, will commence towards the end of 2007 and will be completed in 2008. I can confirm that Ballymoney is to be included within the scope of the Phase II works; however, Translink cannot provide a definite timescale for the commencement of the work at Ballymoney station as this will be negotiated between them and the successful contractor.

Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Rail Line

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the number of breakdowns on the Belfast to Derry/Londonderry rail line in the last three years; and (ii) the resulting time delay associated with each breakdown. (AQW 1131/08)

Mr Murphy: The total number of breakdowns and resultant delays are detailed in the tables below. The figures for 2007/08 refer to the six months period up to the end of September 2007.

	2005/07	2006/07	2007/08 (Six Months)	Total
Number of Services	6,502	6,513	3,536	16,551
Number of Breakdowns	44	16	8	68

Over the two and a half years there have been a total of 68 breakdowns on the Belfast to Derry line. As a consequence the following delays have been experienced.

Delays / Cancellations	2005/07	2006/07	2007/08 (Six Months)
30-60 mins delay	32	9	5
60+ mins delay	6	3	1
Cancellation	6	4	2
Total	44	16	8

Traffic Congestion

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to tackle growing traffic congestion in Saintfield. (AQW 1132/08)

Mr Murphy: It is the case that congestion is a growing problem in all of our villages, towns and cities as a direct result of increased car ownership and a range of measures and initiatives have been undertaken by my Department's Roads Service to address this problem.

The measures centre on sustainable transport initiatives, and aim to encourage commuters and school children in particular, to get to their destination by means other than private car.

While Saintfield would not be considered to have severe congestion issues, local Roads Service officials would be happy to meet with you to discuss any specific areas in Saintfield which you believe to be problematic.

Interdepartmental Steering Group

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will make a statement on the Interdepartmental Steering Group; its evaluation of investment in rolling stock and the rail network; and the options for future investment, in accordance with the Regional Transportation Strategy and the Railways Review Group reports. (AQW 1133/08)

Mr Murphy: Following on from the Regional Transportation Strategy and the Railways Review Group report, and in advance of the 2007 Comprehensive Spending Review, the Interdepartmental Steering Group was established to take forward the evaluation of recent expenditure on the railway network and to review options for future investment. The group comprised representatives from the Department for Regional Development, the Department of Finance and Personnel, the Strategic Investment Board, the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company, Translink and the Department of Transport in Dublin.

The group considered a Business Development Analysis which looked at the recent performance of railway services here in terms of passenger numbers and estimated passenger demand levels for the future. This analysis fed into an Economic Appraisal of various options for future investment on the railways network. The group considered the Economic Appraisal and reported to me. On the basis of the Group's report I submitted a bid to the Comprehensive Spending Review and to the Investment Strategy. This sought funding for the upgrading of rail infrastructure and for the purchase of new trains in order to enhance all rail services in the North together with the Belfast to Dublin service.

The outcome of that bid was announced in the draft Budget on 25 October 2007.

Speed Limits

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration he will give to designating the Darragh Road area of Comber, and the streets immediately surrounding it, as a 20 mph zone. (AQW 1134/08)

Mr Murphy: I am advised that current guidance permits the introduction of 20mph zones in residential areas only in cases where such limits are clearly self enforcing and where there is agreement with the PSNI.

The streets surrounding the Darragh Road in Comber are such that my Department's Roads Service considers it unnecessary to introduce 20 mph zones.

Traffic calming work was undertaken on the main Darragh Road Housing Distributor in 2002 and has proven effective, with traffic speeds in the streets immediately surrounding the area considered to be below the current 30mph limit. With the success of the traffic calming measures in place, Roads Service officials believe there would be little to be gained by the introduction of a 20mph zone in this location at this time.

Septic Tanks

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail what progress is being made by Northern Ireland Water towards meeting its commitment to customers to clear the backlog in the emptying of septic tanks by the end of November 2007.

(AQW 1135/08)

Mr Murphy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that since April 2007 around 19,000 requests have been received for septic tanks to be emptied and almost 16,000 have been emptied to date. The backlog currently stands at 2,850 and Northern Ireland Water remains on target to restore normal service for septic tank emptying by the end of November 2007.

Traffic Congestion

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an estimate of the daily volume of traffic along Main Street, Saintfield.

(AQW 1136/08)

Mr Murphy: Officials in my Department's Roads Service have advised me that the last recorded traffic survey for Main Street, Saintfield, was in 2005. At that time, the estimated daily volume of traffic using Main Street was approximately 11,500 vehicles. This estimate was based on two-way traffic flow.

Park and Ride Schemes

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to ensure that surplus land held by Government Departments, that could potentially accommodate Park and Ride schemes along the railway line between Belfast and Larne, can be transferred to his department to strengthen the Sustainable Transport Strategy, rather than being sold off to private developers.

(AQW 1158/08)

Mr Murphy: Details of publicly owned surplus land, which are being considered for sale, are circulated to Government Departments by the Department of Finance and Personnel's Land and Property Services. The Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company, which is responsible for acquiring land needed by Translink for construction purposes, is included on this circulation list.

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of people who used the Derry/Londonderry to Belfast railway line in (i) each of the last 12 months; (ii) 2006; (iii) 2005; (iv) 2004; (v) 2003.

(AQW 1159/08)

Mr Murphy: The table below details the patronage on the line over the last twelve periods of operation. A period is broadly equivalent to calendar months and corresponds with the financial year (i.e. Period 1 = April, Period 12 = March etc). Most periods have four weeks although Periods 3, 6, 9 and 12 all have five weeks.

2006/07	Derry Line Patronage
Period 7 = October	88,292
Period 8 = November	87,213
Period 9 = December	95,484
Period 10 = January	61,502
Period 11 = February	77,601
Period 12 = March	97,639

2007/08	Derry Line Patronage
Period 1 = April	85,076
Period 2 = May	92,484
Period 3 = June	96,323
Period 4 = July	80,174
Period 5 = August	97,971
Period 6 = September	112,147

Year	Derry Line Patronage
2003/04	652,262*
2004/05	850,056
2005/06	874,954
2006/07	1,020,685

* The 2003/04 figure is an estimate as a new method of counting passengers was implemented from 2004/05 and there were some problems with the outgoing ticketing system.

Rural Public Transport

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he has taken to expand existing rural public transport services.

(AQW 1180/08)

Mr Murphy: Under the Rural Transport Fund my Department currently provides support to 19 Rural Community Transport Partnerships to offer a range of specialised transport services to their members. These services complement the existing conventional public transport network and provide transport opportunities for people with reduced mobility living in rural areas throughout the North.

Following a recent review of the Fund, we have begun to re-focus the efforts of the partnerships to ensure that these important transport services are made available to a greater number of rural dwellers.

My Department also supports Translink to maintain a network of rural routes across the North that would otherwise be uneconomic to run. The future development of these services is being considered as part of the Ulsterbus strategic review.

Carbon Emissions

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what action his department is taking to reduce carbon emissions in the transport sector.

(AQW 1194/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Regional Transportation Strategy seeks to reduce people's reliance on the private car and improve the use of public transport, cycling and walking, thereby reducing carbon emissions from transport. The Sustainable Development Strategy identified the need to take steps and identify targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from transport. This will be considered as part of the mid-term Review of the Regional Transportation Strategy that is currently being undertaken.

The Travelwise initiative introduced in 2003 also promotes sustainable transport and encourages car sharing and personal travel planning. The scheme currently has over 2200 members and is reducing carbon emissions which equate to savings in the region of 1190 tonnes of CO₂ annually.

Translink has also pursued energy management and efficiency programmes to help reduce emissions. Ulsterbus and Metro have now completed successful trials and plan to convert all bus operations to use bio diesel, a blend of 5% bio fuel and 95% diesel. This will further reduce CO₂ emissions by typically 4% to 5%.

CO₂ Reduction

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will provide an evaluation of the CO₂ reduction schemes currently being operated by his Department, including CO₂ saved and the cost per tonne saved; and if he will make a statement on any major transport-related CO₂ reduction schemes currently being planned by his department.

(AQW 1195/08)

Mr Murphy: My Department's Roads Service is currently leading and promoting the Travelwise NI Car Share Scheme. The initiative launched in October 2003 promotes sustainable transport namely walking, cycling and greater use of public transport. It also includes measures such as car sharing and personalised travel planning to encourage a change in attitude away from the private car as the main means of transport. The Scheme currently has over 2200 members and is reducing carbon emissions, which equate to savings in the region of 1190 tonnes of CO₂ annually.

Other major transport related schemes planned or already underway include the development of Workplace Travel Plans in all sectors and Personalised Travel Planning projects. Along with sustainable transport promotional events such as Bike Week and Walk/Cycle to School Week, my Department is engaged in raising public awareness on both the impact of unrestrained car use and the environmental savings including CO₂ emissions which sustainable travel can deliver.

The Sustainable Development Strategy identified the need to take steps and identify targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions from transport. Targets will be considered as part of the mid term Review of the Regional Transportation Strategy.

Derry/Londonderry and Donegal Rail Link

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to commission a feasibility study into a north-west cross border rail link between Derry/Londonderry and Donegal; and what discussions he has had with his counterpart in the Republic of Ireland on the possibility of commencing such a study.

(AQW 1246/08)

Mr Murphy: I have no plans at present to commission a feasibility study into a rail link between Derry and Donegal. I am aware that the Transport 21 initiative aims to re-open the railway corridor between Limerick and Sligo but I am not aware that it includes plans for a railway line from Sligo through Donegal towards Derry. I have not had any discussions with my counterpart on the possibility of commencing a study, but am open to doing so if the matter arises at a future date.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships

Mr Bresland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the amount of funding allocated to each of the Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships for 2006 and 2007, in (i) Strabane District Council area; (ii) Derry/Londonderry City Council area; and (iii) Limavady Borough Council area.

(AQW 991/08)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships are a vehicle for planning and implementing Neighbourhood Action Plans which detail priorities and expected outcomes for their respective areas. The Department is continuing to fund projects and services which are relevant to the priorities identified and which may play a part in the future delivery of the Neighbourhood Action Plans. The Department has not allocated any funding directly to the Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships within Strabane, Derry/Londonderry or Limavady Council areas.

However, total Departmental funding provided to each of the Neighbourhood Renewal Areas in the Strabane District Council area, Derry/Londonderry City Council area and Limavady Borough Council area for the financial years 2006/07 and 2007/08 is as follows:

2006/07
Strabane	£1,943,072
Derry/Londonderry	£8,903,789
Limavady	£ 311,336
2007/08 to date
Strabane	£3,386,681
Derry/Londonderry	£6,426,188
Limavady	£ 104,009

These figures include funding from programmes delivered by the North West Development Office, Voluntary and Community Unit and Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Energy Consumption

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development, in light of the various commitments to reduce energy consumption and emissions in Northern Ireland, to outline any major initiatives planned to improve the performance of, and reduce, emissions from the household sectors; and to detail any associated targets.

(AQW 1059/08)

Ms Ritchie: The main contribution that the Department makes to carbon reduction is in fuel switching and improved insulation, both of which are covered by the Department's Warm Homes Scheme and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Heating/Insulation programme.

All the works carried out through the various schemes between 1996 and 2004 on energy efficiency improvement have resulted in recurrent annual savings of 2.26 million tonnes of CO₂. This figure will be updated later this year when the 2006 House Condition Survey figures are published.

The Housing Executive is the Home Energy Conservation Authority for Northern Ireland and funds advice, research and marketing campaigns aimed at improving domestic energy efficiency.

MLA Meetings

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of meeting requests received from MLAs; the number of these that were declined; the number that were accepted; and the party affiliation of those MLAs whose meeting requests were declined.

(AQW 1066/08)

Ms Ritchie: I have received 46 meeting requests from MLAs. Of these, 29 were accepted, 13 were declined and 4 are pending decisions. A breakdown of meetings requested by party affiliation of MLAs is provided in the following table;

Party	Requests accepted	Requests Declined	Pending	Total Requests Received
Sinn Fein	3	2	0	5
DUP	10	3	1	14
UUP	8	6	1	15
SDLP	8	1	1	10
PUP	0	1	1	2
Total	29	13	4	46

Bonfires

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the costs to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive of managing and clearing up bonfires on the Doury Road estate, Ballymena, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 1079/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information is only available for the past three financial years. From 2005/06 – 2007/08 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive spent the following amounts clearing bonfire sites in the Doury Road estate, Ballymena.

2005/2006	£250
2006/2007	£250
2007/2008	£500

Clearances of identified bonfire sites are dealt with as part of the Housing Executive's Grounds' Maintenance contract. All burnt litter and debris are considered to be part of the normal litter lifting operation through its response maintenance programme. Within 7 days of a bonfire being burnt, all debris (including ashes and material not burnt, or scattered) are removed. Grass areas damaged are made good.

Housing Executive Waiting List

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people (i) currently on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive waiting list; (ii) who are classified as being in priority need; and (iii) who are deemed to be homeless, in North Belfast. (AQW 1086/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31st March 2007 the total waiting list figure for North Belfast was 2354. Of these, 1359 had more than 30 points and are therefore deemed to be in housing stress and of this total 715 had Full Duty Applicant status.

Vacant Houses

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development if she will provide an inventory of vacant houses; and to detail the number of (i) social housing units; and (ii) private houses, in North Belfast. (AQW 1087/08)

Ms Ritchie: The information is not available in the format requested. The total number of Housing Executive vacant homes at 1st October 2007 was 461, broken down as follows:

- Awaiting imminent relet – 35
- Difficult to let – 147
- Undergoing major improvements/decanting – 112
- Pending sale or demolition – 167

Information compiled from Rates Collection Agency records shows 1677 vacant private residential properties in North Belfast at September 2006.

Vacant Properties

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development what action she intends to take to bring Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties that are vacant or abandoned back into use, as a means of addressing the housing shortage in North Belfast. (AQW 1088/08)

Ms Ritchie: In North Belfast the majority of long term vacant properties are concentrated at sectarian interfaces and are included in local estate strategies. There are also long term voids in non traditional house types (maisonettes) and in aged and obsolete stock.

In most instances local strategies have already been implemented to address the range of problems occurring in difficult to let areas. Estate strategies involving improvement, sale and/or selective demolition have been put in place for numerous estates. The Housing Executive is working closely with the local communities, for example in Lower Oldpark and Tiger's Bay, to develop appropriate regeneration strategies to revitalise these neighbourhoods. In 2005 13 long term vacant dwellings in the private sector were vested and transferred to Clanmil Housing Association. Marketing, community safety and anti-blight measures are being carried out in social estates (including use of alarm systems, the appointment of neighbourhood wardens and other security measures). Improvement or demolition of unpopular, non-traditional housing is continuing. This includes decapitation (conversion of maisonette blocks to houses); privatisation and more intensive management.

In addition, in response to the Semple Report I have commissioned the Housing Executive to produce a costed empty homes strategy to bring such homes back into use.

Budget Underspend

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to detail her department's projected underspend for this financial year. (AQW 1111/08)

Ms Ritchie: It is not possible to provide an estimate of my Department's projected underspend at this stage of the year as its budget will be refined up until the February Monitoring Round in the light of emerging pressures and reduced requirements.

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 500/08, what steps she is taking to speed up the processing of maintenance application forms submitted to the Child Support Agency, taking into account that only 20-25% of applications are cleared each year. (AQW 1144/08)

Ms Ritchie: Improvements have been made to the Child Support Agency's computer system and working practices to speed up the processing of maintenance applications. Further improvements are also planned as part of the Agency's Operational Improvement Project.

At September 2007, 71% of applications which started in April 2007 have been cleared within 18 weeks. The number of applications outstanding has also reduced by 37% compared to the March 2007 figure.

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if she will confirm that all Child Support Agency cases will be transferred to Great Britain; and to outline an estimated date of transfer. (AQW 1145/08)

Ms Ritchie: There are no plans to transfer all Child Support Agency cases to Great Britain.

Child Support Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to retain Child Support Agency jobs in Northern Ireland. (AQW 1146/08)

Ms Ritchie: I have written to Lord McKenzie, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Department for Work and Pensions requesting a meeting to discuss future working arrangements between Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Within my Department, a project is also being established to take forward the issues associated with the Redesign of Child Maintenance, including the future arrangements for the provision of services on behalf of the Great Britain Child Maintenance and Enforcement Commission.

Housing Allocation

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development what action she will take to provide greater input for local residents' associations in South Down, in relation to the housing allocation process. (AQW 1172/08)

Ms Ritchie: All social housing is allocated on the basis of housing need. The points system, known as the Housing Selection Scheme, is managed by the Housing Executive to objectively and impartially assess housing need.

All social housing applicants for Housing Executive and Housing Association property are awarded a number of points which reflect their particular circumstances. For example, applicants receive points for overcrowding or living in property which is unfit or in disrepair.

When applicants receive their points they are registered on the Common Waiting List for their designated areas of choice. Applicants with higher points are housed before applicants with fewer points and all social housing allocations are made from this list.

The Housing Selection Scheme has been amended when required, to reflect changes in standards and society. The most recent revision was in 2000 and arose from concerns that the process did not take sufficient account of the relative and varying needs of applicants seeking accommodation. The review resulted in the introduction of an entirely points based scheme which aims to ensure that those in greatest overall need are ranked highest on the list and are housed appropriately. These changes were introduced following consultation with public representatives and other key stakeholders.

The Housing Executive is currently undertaking a review of the Common Waiting List, including in particular, the level of the applicants on the list deemed to be in housing stress. I expect to be appraised of the outcome in the autumn.

Residents groups cannot exercise influence over any aspect of the allocation process, but would be key consultees in the event of any proposal to amend the scheme.

Housing Executive Properties

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties owned by (i) the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and (ii) housing associations, in the South Down area. (AQW 1174/08)

Ms Ritchie: At 31st March 2007 records showed that the Northern Ireland Housing Executive owned 4767 properties and Housing Associations owned 1253 properties in the South Down area.

Consultancy Expenditure

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to detail her department's expenditure on consultancy; and to provide a breakdown of this expenditure, for the last year. (AQW 1213/08)

Ms Ritchie: The actual expenditure on management consultancy incurred by the Department for Social Development for the financial year 2006/07 amounted to £260,652. A breakdown of the expenditure is as follows:

Categories of Consultancy	Expenditure 2006/07 £
1 Management - Policy Appraisal and Review	89,770
2 Management - Strategic Management	9,054
3 Management - Organisational Development	27,190
7 Financial - Economic Appraisal	9,625
13 Research - Projects	125,013
Total	260,652

Down's Syndrome

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of children with Down's Syndrome (i) who are in receipt of disability living allowance; (ii) who receive only the mobility component of disability living allowance; and (iii) who receive only the care component of disability living allowance. (AQW 1233/08)

Ms Ritchie: My Department does not hold the information requested.

While there are disability codes attributed to all Disability Living Allowance awards, there is no specific disability code relating to Down's Syndrome. This disability is captured under the disability code relating to mental health cases which encompasses many other types of mental health disabilities.

Jobs & Benefits Office, Newtownards

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she has taken to establish a combined Social Security Office and Job Centre in Newtownards. (AQW 1298/08)

Ms Ritchie: The Social Security Agency remains committed to the rollout of a Jobs & Benefits office in Newtownards to ensure that clients benefit from the same enhanced work-focused service which is available elsewhere in Northern Ireland. A procurement exercise has been ongoing to identify the site of the new office.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Assembly Shop

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission what consideration it has given, in conjunction with Eurest, to the production of a market research questionnaire, in order to gain information from visitors to the Assembly shop, in relation to (i) Assembly shop profile; (ii) goods; (iii) opening times; and (iv) prices. (AQW 1119/08)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): As the member may know the new support services contract, which includes the Assembly Gift Shop, has been operating since 5 March 2007. During this period the efforts of both Eurest and Facilities Branch has been very much focused on the major components of the contract which are catering and cleaning. Of necessity, this has meant that other parts of the contract, including the shop, have not received the priority that it would otherwise enjoy.

The current position on the specific matters which you have raised is;

Eurest has not introduced a questionnaire specific to visitors to ascertain the shop profile.

A questionnaire of the goods currently on offer has not been conducted. Goods offered to date have been subjected to approval by Facilities Branch and the Speaker's office.

The opening times Eurest operate are set by the Secretariat and are written into the support services contract. Eurest do also offer, on request, a mobile shop service to private tours and events outside of the normal opening hours.

No questionnaire has been carried out into the current selling prices within the shop. All prices within the shop are set in conjunction with Facilities Branch. Sales lines are subject to recommended retail prices that may vary in response to market trends.

You have highlighted a number of important points about the development of the Assembly shop which I will table at an early meeting of the Assembly Commission.

Assembly Shop

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission what plans it has to encourage Eurest to extend the gift selection in the Assembly shop, to include Northern Ireland Assembly (i) t-shirts; (ii) sweat shirts; (iii) baseball caps; and (iv) other promotional items, which are now common in other visitor attractions.

(AQW 1120/08)

Rev Dr Robert Coulter: Management are keen to encourage a greater use of the shop by internal and external customers and in extending the gift selection forms. Eurest are currently exploring new and innovative ideas to extend the current gift shop selection. Such new lines could include:

- A new range of Quality chocolate;
- Wine - N.I. Assembly crested wine;
- CD Picture Postcards - A full DVD/CD picture postcard which is very light weight and easy to carry;
- A new range of Business gifts, Folders, Pens, Credit Card Holders etc.;
- A N.I. Assembly Tie pin; and
- A N.I. Assembly Ladies Brooch.

Eurest will also as part of this process explore the feasibility of providing a range of NI Assembly clothing options for sale within the gift shop. Of course, any new lines will require a relevant business case for the Assembly Commissions consideration.

Indexes

INDEX

PART I (BUSINESS)

- 106A Service from Lisburn to Antrim, WA274
 - 1911 Census of Ireland Microfilm, WA157
 - A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy, WA229–30
 - A2 between Bangor and Belfast, WA217
 - A37 Springwell Climbing Lane, WA220
 - Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 464–74
 - Abortion, 433–8, 454–63
 - Academic Best Practice, WA244–5
 - Academic Selection, WA162–3
 - Access Audits, WA241
 - Access to the High Mourne, WA132
 - Accident and Emergency Services at Mater Hospital, WA61
 - Accident and Emergency Waiting Times, WA138–9
 - Accommodation of Library Services, WA157
 - Action on Child Poverty, 53–64
 - Adjournment
 - Future of Donaghadee High School, 306–13
 - Traffic-calming Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery, 407–13
 - Administrative Support for Party Whips, 10
 - Adult Further Education Courses, WA182
 - Adult Learning, WA186
 - Affordable Housing, WA89
 - After-School Clubs, WA162
 - After-School Facilities, WA168
 - Age Limit for Purchasing Cigarettes, WA139
 - Agenda for Change, WA60–1, WA72
 - Ulster Hospital, 125
 - Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, WA155–6, WA233
 - Agri-Food Matters, WA106
 - Agricultural Wages Board, WA108
 - Agriculture
 - Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 464–74
 - Agri-food industry, WA5–6
 - Agri-food matters, WA106
 - Agricultural Careers, 227–8
 - Agricultural Planning Regulations, WA297
 - Agricultural Wages Board, WA108
 - Animal incinerators, WA100–3, WA152–3
 - Beef Production, WA153
 - Bluetongue disease, WA104, WA109
 - Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth disease, 101–11
 - Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
 - Deliberate Introduction of to Livestock, WA9–10, WA104–5
 - Common Agricultural Policy, WA105
 - Cost of Animal Feed, WA152
 - Disease Compensation, WA39
 - Disposal of Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 - Early Retirement Scheme for Farmers, WA155
 - EU Agriculture and Fisheries Meeting, WA156
 - Farm Nutrient Scheme, WA39
 - Farm Viability Criteria, WA8–9
 - Farmers Affected by Flooding, WA100, WA290
 - Food Security, WA290
 - Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 223–4, WA103
 - Genetically Modified Crops, WA153
 - Incentives for Rearing Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 - Information Technology in Farming, WA107–8
 - Lamb Production, WA153
 - Lamb Promotion, WA104
 - Livestock Identity Tags, WA152
 - Locally Produced Food, WA67
 - National Ploughing Championships, WA232–3
 - Northern Ireland Produced Beef, WA60
 - Organic Farming, WA9
 - Organics Sector, WA153
 - Part-time Farmers, WA155
 - Planning Applications for Retirement and Farmworkers' Dwellings, WA130–1
 - Potato Inspection Regime, WA39
 - Protected Regional Food Status, 225–6
 - Rating of Agricultural Land, WA261
 - Red Meat Taskforce, 226–7
 - Single Farm Payments, WA7
 - Suckler Beef and Hill Sheep Farmers, WA154
 - AIDS, WA137–8
 - AIDS and HIV Prescriptions, WA271
 - Treatment for HIV/AIDS, WA137
 - Alcohol-Related Illness, WA63
 - All-Ireland Ferry Port, WA216
 - All-Ireland Parliamentary Forum, WA225
 - All-Island Autism Centre, WA162
 - All-Island Skills Conference, WA186
 - All-Island Transport Collaboration, 132–3
 - Alpha-Nortesterone, WA104
 - Alzheimer's, WA72, WA77
 - Ambulances, WA208, WA209–10
 - Ambulance Provision in Ballycastle, WA208
 - Ambulance Response, WA138
 - Ambulance Service Employees, WA61
 - Ambulance Shortages, WA76
 - Anahorish Primary School
 - Air Quality at, WA45
 - Animal Incinerators, WA100–3, WA152–3
 - Animal Welfare, WA289
 - Annual Remembrance Ceremonies, WA96
 - Antisocial Behaviour, WA180
 - Antrim
 - Land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street, WA144
 - Apprenticeships, WA46, WA295
 - Apprenticeship Scheme, WA185
 - Training for Success Apprenticeship, WA295
 - Approval of Government Expenditure, WA264
-

Ards Peninsula Area
 Primary School Pupils in, WA165
 Areas of Deprivation, WA34–5
 Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, WA196–7
 Areas of Special Scientific Interest, WA251–2
 Armagh
 Construction of Houses, Armagh City, WA221
 Art
 Arts Council
 Annual Support for Organisations Programme, WA160–1
 Arts Council Funding, WA234
 Arts Funding 265–79
 Artwork Expenditure, WA59, WA60
 Burnavon Arts and Culture Centre in Cookstown, WA40–1
 Community Arts Projects, WA235
 Community Festivals Fund, WA42, WA111, WA290
 Creative Arts and Culture, 229–30
 Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 230–1
 Performing Arts Facility, 230
 Staff Levels in Arts Council, WA160
 Asbestos, WA48
 Asbestos-Related Illness, WA125–6, WA137
 Harland and Wolff, WA126
 Assembly Business, 415–16
 Administrative Support for Party Whips, 10
 Members' Participation in Debates/Ministerial Statements, 1
 Retirement of the Clerk to the Assembly, 1
 Assembly Commission
 Parliament Buildings
 Artefacts, 39
 Recycling Levels, 38–9
 Assembly Questions, WA44
 Assembly Research and Library Service, WA287
 Assembly Shop, WA92–3, WA313
 Assistance for Low-Income Families, WA183
 Astroturf Facilities at Limavady Grammar School, WA243
 Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures, 444–5
 Attacks on Fire and Rescue Service, WA71–2
 Attacks on Orange Halls, WA96, WA151, WA231
 Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, WA180–1
 Autism, WA61, WA63
 All-Island Autism Centre, WA162
 Autistic Spectrum Disorder, WA291
 Autistic Spectrum Disorders Programme, WA291
 Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown, WA12, WA237
 Available Year 8 Places, WA244
 Ballycastle to Campbelltown Ferry, WA249
 Ballymoney Railway Station, WA306
 Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies, WA235, WA272
 Barnett Consequential, WA29
 Battletown Gallery, Newtownards, 133
 Beach Quality, WA20
 Beef Production, WA153
 Belfast
 A2 between Bangor and Belfast, WA217
 Belfast Mela, WA112
 Belfast Metropolitan College, WA14–15
 Belfast to Coleraine Express Bus, WA280
 Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Rail Line, WA306–7
 Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line, WA218–19, WA308
 Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133, WA81, WA82, WA141
 Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast, WA111
 Holylands Area, WA184, WA186–7
 West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force Report, WA193
 Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 320–33
 Binge Drinking, WA76, WA302–3
 Biodiversity, WA257
 the Environment, and, WA27
 Biofuels, WA7–8, WA67
 Blocked Sewers, WA79
 Blue Disability Badges, WA272–3
 Blue Light Ambulances, WA61
 Bluetongue Disease, WA104, WA109
 Foot-and-Mouth Disease, and, 101–11
 Bonfires, WA27, WA221, WA310–11
 Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
 Breast Reconstruction, WA61
 Bridge at Narrow Water, WA276
 British Heart Foundation, WA270–1
 British and Irish Sign Languages, WA42–3
 British-Irish Council 219
 Broadband Internet, WA48
 Availability of, WA125
 Brown Crab, WA100
 Brucellosis
 Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
 Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or Brucellosis to Livestock, WA9–10, WA104–5
 Budget
 Budget Negotiations, WA185
 Draft Budget 2008–2011, 491–507
 Budget Underspend, WA228, WA233, WA235, WA260, WA262–3, WA293, WA300, WA304, WA311
 Built Heritage, 31
 Bull Bars, WA252–3
 Bullying, WA243
 Bunscoil an Chaistil, WA161
 Burma
 Crisis in, 213–18, 238–43
 Burnavon Arts and Culture Centre in Cookstown, WA40–1
 Burst Water Tanks, WA283
 Bus Passes, WA163–4
 Business Rates, WA263
 Bypass for Ballynahinch, County Down, WA144
 Cancer Consultants, WA210–11
 Capital Investment, 452

Carbon Emissions, 30, WA309
Carbon Footprint, WA254–5, WA289
Cardiac Nursing Provision, WA139
Cardiac Risk in Young People, WA304
Cardiac Screening, WA303–4
Cardiac Screening for Young People, WA303
Care Matters, 128
Care Matters Strategy, WA71, WA74–5
Carers, WA64, WA208
Caring for the Carers Strategy, WA64
Castlederg Nursery
 Land and Facilities at, WA8
Census, WA201
Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown,
 WA12, WA237
Challenge of Change, 439–40
Charities, WA88
Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
 Legislative Consent Motion, 431–2
Child Protection and Safety, WA76–7
Child Support Agency, WA85, WA87, WA148–9,
 WA221, WA283–4, WA311–12
Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments)
 Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 429–30
Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36
Childcare Vouchers, WA260, WA261
Childminding, WA44
 Childminder Start-Up Package, WA117–18
Children (Emergency Protection Orders) Bill: First
 Stage, 429
Children and Young People, 27–8, 219–20
 Action on Child Poverty, 53–64
 Cardiac Risk in Young People, WA304
 Cardiac Screening for Young People, WA303
 Child Obesity, WA61–2
 Child Poverty, WA5, WA90, WA91
 Child Protection and Safety, WA76–7
 Child Support Policy, WA86
 Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36
 Childcare Vouchers, WA260, WA261
 Childminding, WA44
 Children (Emergency Protection Orders) Bill: First
 Stage, 429
 Children from the Travelling Community, WA179–80
 Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse, WA115–16
 Counselling in Schools, WA43
 Parenting Initiatives, WA200–1
 Registered Childminders, WA117, WA141
 Young People Not in Education, Employment or Training, 340–1
 Young People's Skills, WA163
 Youth Outreach Work, WA13–14
Chinese Language School, WA113
Christmas Lights on the Windows of Vehicles, WA22–3
Circus Animals
 Policy on, WA154
 Regulation of, WA154
Civic Forum, WA2, WA97
Civil Partnerships, WA134
Civil Service
 Graduate Entry to NICS, WA259
 Injury Benefits Scheme, WA134–5
 Recruitment, WA29
 Vacancies, WA56–7
Classroom Assistants 10–22, 40–1, WA239–41, WA243–4
 Dispute, 87–8, WA262
 Strike Action by, 235–7
Classroom Teachers, WA180
Climate Change, WA256
County Armagh
 Land Acquisition at Loughgilly, WA35–6
County Tyrone
 Whitebridge Road, WA81
CO2 Reduction, WA309
Coastal Erosion, WA6–7
Coeliac Disease, WA72–3
Cold Weather Winter Fuel Payments, WA83–4
Coleraine
 Mains Water Supply, James Street, WA211
Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, WA293
Commissioners, WA45
Commissioning Groups, WA270
Committee Business
 Committee Membership, 111
 Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill: Extension of Committee Stage, 112
 Libraries Bill: Extension of Committee Stage, 9
 Local Government Pension Scheme (Amendment No2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007: Prayer of Annulment, 112–14
 Report of the Committee for Finance and Personnel
 on Workplace 2010, 204–13
Committee Stages
 Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill:
 Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS147–52
 Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87–8,
 CS111–12
 Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS1–C13, CS31–40,
 CS57–69, CS89–109, CS153–7
 Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS15–29, CS41–55, CS71–
 85, CS113–145
Common Agricultural Policy, WA105
Common Fishing Strategy, WA99
Community Arts Projects, WA235
Community Care Infrastructure Programme, WA207
Community Care Packages, WA203
Community Festivals Fund, WA42, WA111, WA290
Community Training, 341–2
Companions of Disabled People, WA81
Company and Business Names (Amendment)
 Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 149
Compensation for Medical Negligence, WA67–71,
 WA208
Compensation to Patients, WA264–70
Competitiveness and Employment Programme, WA55

Competitiveness Programme 2007-2013, WA83, WA122-4
 Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse, WA115-17
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA28, WA37, WA104, WA160, WA190, WA201, WA206, WA217, WA218, WA220, WA227, WA232, WA239, WA245-6, WA249, WA259, WA281, WA285
 Deloitte Touche Report, WA197
 Good Relations, WA197
 Concessionary Fees Scheme, WA186
 Conflict Transformation Initiative, WA286
 Future of, 386-94
 Conlig Primary School, WA45
 Construction of Houses, Armagh City, WA221
 Consultancy Expenditure, WA289, WA296-7, WA300, WA312
 Control of Cormorants, WA54
 Conway Mill, WA282
 Co-operation between Environment and Heritage Service and Environmental Protection Agency, WA256-7
 Cost of Animal Feed, WA152
 Cost of Division, WA98
 Cost of Staff Teambuilding Days, WA45-6
 Cost of Translations, WA112, WA158-60
 Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside, WA257
 Counselling in Schools, WA43
 Course Fees, WA121, WA246
 Creationism, WA13, WA166
 Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life, WA238-9
 Teaching of Creationism in Schools, WA166
 Creative Arts and Culture, 229-30
 Crisis in Burma, 213-18, 238-43
 Cross-border Healthcare, WA64
 Crossnacreevy, 228-9
 Crystal Alliance, WA81
 Curriculum Reserve Support, WA113
 Cushendall
 Flooding at Tromra Road, WA99-100
 St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA162, WA164
 Traffic-Calming Measures on Shore Road, Cushendall, WA215
 Decentralisation of Social Services, WA89
 Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or Brucellosis to Livestock, WA9-10, WA104-5
 Demolition of Unauthorised Developments, WA252
 Dental Guidelines, WA305
 Departmental Underspend, WA220
 Departmental Correspondence, WA279
 Departmental Funding, WA261
 Departmental Offices, WA233-4
 Depression, WA209
 Derry/Londonderry and Donegal Rail Link, WA309
 Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, 128-9
 Derryboy Primary School Car Park, WA291, WA292-3
 Designated Water Courses, WA98
 Development at Maze Site, WA97-8
 Development Plan Process, WA23-4
 Development Plans and the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy, WA26
 Development of Tullaghoge Fort, WA9
 Dibney River, WA19-20
 Pollution, WA49
 Dickson Plan, 338, WA115
 Directional Signs, WA146-7
 Disability
 Blue Disability Badges, WA272-3
 Disability Access, WA44-5
 Disability Action, WA149
 Disability Badges, WA305
 Disability Living Allowance, WA87-8, WA88-9
 Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 134-5
 Provision of Services for People with Disabilities, WA217
 Disabled Parking Bays, Installation of, WA211, WA212
 Disease Compensation, WA39
 Disposal of Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 Dog Fouling, WA21, WA130
 Dogs (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, WA38
 Domestic Rating, WA258
 Donaghadee High School, WA165
 Future of 306-13
 Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS147-52
 Down's Syndrome, WA313
 Draft Area Plans, WA26, WA48-9
 Draft Budget 2008-2011, 491-507
 Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 475-90
 Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order (Northern Ireland), 316-19
 Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle, WA80
 Drink/Drug Driving, 443-4
 Driving Lessons in Schools, WA20
 Dual Carriageway between Comber and Newtownards, WA32
 Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, WA156
 Durlston Pastoral Care Centre, WA88
 Dyslexia, WA161-2
 Early Retirement Scheme for Farmers, WA155
 Eastwood Envirowaste Facility, WA26-7
 Eastwood Envirowise Facility, Crumlin, WA130
 Economic Development, WA97
 Economic Inactivity, WA184
 Education
 Academic Best Practice, WA244-5
 Academic Selection, WA162-3
 Access Audits, WA241
 Adult Further Education Courses, WA182
 Adult Learning, WA186
 After-School clubs, WA162
 After-School Facilities, WA168
 All-Island Autism Centre, WA162

Astroturf Facilities at Limavady Grammar School, WA243
 Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, WA180–1
 Available Year 8 Places, WA244
 Belfast Metropolitan College, WA14
 Bullying, WA243
 Children from the Travelling Community, WA179–80
 Chinese Language School, WA113
 Classroom Assistants, 10–22, 40–1, WA239–40, WA243–4
 Dispute 87–8
 Classroom Assistants' Dispute, WA262
 Classroom Teachers, WA180
 Conlig Primary School, WA45
 Course Fees, WA121, WA246
 Derryboye Primary School Car Park, WA291
 Dickson Plan, 338, WA115
 Donaghadee High School, WA165
 Dyslexia, WA161–2
 Education and Skills Authority, WA243, WA244, WA293–4
 Education Welfare Officers, WA167
 Educational Standards, WA241–3
 Engineering Degrees, WA248
 Engineering Students, WA248–9
 Enrolment Numbers, WA169–75, WA176–7
 Entitlement Framework, WA241
 Extended Schools Funding, WA237
 Further Education, WA47
 Further Education College, Lisburn, WA184
 Further Education Concession Fees, WA247
 Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 198–203
 Future of A Levels, WA179
 Future of Donaghadee High School, 306–13
 GCSE and A-level Courses, WA13
 GCSE Achievement, 339
 Glastray College, 334, WA239
 Governing Body of SELB, WA237
 Independent Students, WA16
 Irish-Language Schools, WA120
 Irish-Medium Schools, WA179
 Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards, WA168
 Merged Regional Colleges, WA183
 National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy, WA186
 Newbuild Programmes, WA181
 Newbuild School, WA237
 Non-EU Students, WA183
 Northern Ireland Students Studying in the Republic of Ireland, WA184
 Omagh Educational Village, WA181
 Parent/Pupil Interaction, 337–8
 Parkhall School, Antrim, WA45
 Post-Primary Education, WA294
 Primary School Curriculum, WA177–8
 Primary School Pupils in the Ards Peninsula Area, WA165
 Priory Integrated College, WA11
 Pupils in Irish-Language Schools, WA163
 Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education, WA114, WA115
 Retired Teachers, WA165–6
 Review into Higher Education, WA46–7
 Review of Irish-Medium Education, WA294–5
 Review of Public Administration and the Education and Skills Authority, WA243
 St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA162
 St Colmgall's Primary School, WA44
 School Amalgamations, WA164, WA167
 School Budgets, WA167–8
 School Buses, WA164
 School Enrolments, WA121
 School Financial Deficits, WA237–8
 School Repairs, WA115, WA290–1, WA291–2
 Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life, WA238–9
 South Eastern Regional College, WA122
 Sports Coaches in Schools, WA293
 Strategic Review of Education, WA114
 Strike Action by Classroom Assistants 235–7
 Student Bursaries, WA15
 Student Complaints, WA183
 Student Enrolments, WA122, WA184, WA247
 Student Financial Support, WA184
 Student Loans, WA47, WA121–2
 Suspension of Members of the South Eastern Education and Library Board, WA13
 Teacher Induction Year, 334–5
 Teacher Training Courses, WA175–6
 Teachers' Pay and Pensions Branch, WA14
 Teaching of Creationism in Schools, WA166
 Teaching Salaries, WA162
 Training for School Governors, WA175
 Transfer Procedure, 335–6
 Transfer Test, WA161
 Transfer Test Advice for Teachers, WA179
 Transfer Test Replacement, WA178
 Transport for Students, WA164
 University Applications, WA46
 University Enrolment, WA16
 University Tuition Fees, WA247
 University of Ulster, Magee Campus, WA182
 Unoccupied Desks, WA236–7
 Young People not in Education, Employment or Training, 340–1
 Education Welfare Officers, WA167
 Eel Grass in Strangford Lough, WA53
 Efficiency of Departmental Structures, WA2–3
 Efficiency Targets, WA263
 Electricity Costs in Parliament Buildings, WA223
 Elite Facilities Capital Programme, WA41
 Employment
 Agricultural Careers 227–8
 Apprenticeship Scheme, WA185
 Apprenticeships, WA46

Competitiveness and Employment Programme, WA55
 Fair Employment Practices in WELB, WA166
 Financial Services Sector, WA192–3
 Graduate Earnings, WA191
 Graduate Entry to NICS, WA259
 Graduate Jobs, WA246
 Industrial Tribunals, WA185
 Island-wide Employment Opportunities, WA248
 Job Losses: Social Security Agency, 138
 Job Ready Candidates, WA182
 Job Ready Scheme, 343
 Local Business Needs, WA163
 Migrant Workers, WA185
 New Deal, WA185–6
 Opportunities for Women, WA191
 Planning Service Staff Vacancies, WA253
 Public-Sector Employment, WA135, WA200
 Public-Sector Jobs, WA29
 Public-Service Jobs, WA263–4
 Skills Pool, WA122
 Training and Employment Places, 372–85
 Vetting of Workers, WA178
 Workers' Educational Association, WA246
 Workforce, WA43
 Workforce Development Forum, WA245
 Workforce Planning, WA72
 Workplace 2010, 2–9, WA258–9
 Young People not in Education, Employment or Training, 340–1
 Empty Homes Strategy, 135–6
 End-year Flexibility, WA264
 Energy
 Atomic Energy Authority Technology figures, 444–5
 Biofuels, WA7–8, WA67
 Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order (Northern Ireland), 316–19
 Electricity Costs in Parliament Buildings, WA223
 Energy Consumption, WA310
 Energy Consumption and Emissions, WA277
 Energy Efficiency, WA83
 Housing Energy Performance Certificates, WA34
 Renewable Energy, WA105–6
 Renewable Energy Schemes, WA253–4
 Renewable Energy Sources, WA287
 Renewable Sources 344–5
 Single Electricity Market, WA192
 Sustainable Energy, WA250
 Windscale/Sellafield, 526–38
 Engagements, 438–9
 Engineering Degrees, WA248
 Engineering Students, WA248–9
 Enrolment Numbers, WA169–75, WA176–7
 Enterprise and Investment Zone, Newtownabbey, 348
 Entitlement Framework, WA241
 Environment, 28
 Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, WA196–7
 Areas of Special Scientific Interest, WA251–2
 Biodiversity, WA257
 the Environment, and, WA27
 Carbon Emissions, 30, WA309
 Carbon Footprint, WA254–5, WA289
 Climate Change, WA256
 CO2 Reduction, WA309
 Control of Cormorants, WA54
 Co-operation between Environment and Heritage Service and Environmental Protection Agency, WA256–7
 Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside, WA257
 Eastwood Envirowaste Facility, WA26–7
 Eastwood Envirowise Facility, Crumlin, WA130
 Eel Grass in Strangford Lough, WA53
 Environment and Heritage Service, 446–7
 Environmental Protection Agency, WA21
 Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 72–86
 Green Areas, WA133
 Health Impacts of the Built Environment, WA194
 Marine Bill, WA253
 Mature Garden Trees, 445
 Parliament Buildings
 Recycling Levels, 38–9
 Persistent Organic Pollutants, WA132
 Pollution Enforcement Cases, WA19
 Radioactive Waste, WA299
 Recycling, WA20
 Recycling Levels, 32
 Review of Environmental Governance, WA253
 Special Preservation Order for the Irish Hare, WA53
 Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme, WA99
 Strategic Environmental Assessment, WA133–4
 Sustainable Development
 Climate Change and, 165–79
 Resource Efficiency, WA18–19
 Waste Management, WA196
 Waste Processing, 31–2
 Environment and Heritage Service, 446–7
 Environmental Protection Agency, WA21
 Equality Impact Assessments, 25
 Equality Legislation, WA1, WA225–6
 Equality in Northern Ireland Report, 150–63
 Equality Provision, WA1
 Equestrian Sports Events, WA110
 Erection of Illegal Signs, WA212–13
 Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 72–86
 European Union
 Agenda, WA97
 EU Agriculture and Fisheries Meeting, WA156
 EU Regional Development Committee, 26–7
 European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages, WA82
 European Directives, WA37
 European Regulation 1924/2006, WA203

-
- Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 244–56
Special EU Programmes Body, WA27
- Executive Business
- Draft Budget 2008–2011, 491–507
 - Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 475–90
 - Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order (Northern Ireland), 316–19
- Executive Committee Business
- Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill: Legislative Consent Motion, 431–2
 - Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 429–30
 - Children (Emergency Protection Orders) Bill: First Stage, 429
 - Company and Business Names (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 149
- Executive Committee Meeting, WA228–9
- Executive Legislative Programme, 349–61
- Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning, WA147
- Expenditure on Consultants, WA143
- Expenditure on Irish Language, WA140
- Extended Schools Funding, WA237
- Fair Employment Practices in WELB, WA166
- Farm Nutrient Scheme, WA39
- Farm Viability Criteria, WA8–9
- Farmers Affected by Flooding, WA100, WA290
- Fast-Ferry Linkages, WA188–9
- Fast-Ferry Service, WA192
- Financial Capability Strategy, WA124
- Financial Deficits, WA45
- Financial Services Sector, WA192–3
- Firefighters, WA140
- Fireworks, 124
- First-Time Home Buyers, WA148
- Fiscal Reform, 394–406
- Fish Stocks, WA11
- Fishing
- Common Fishing Strategy, WA99
 - Fisheries Conservancy Board, WA235–6
 - Irish Fish Stocks, WA108–9
 - Marine Bill, WA253
 - Medieval Fish Traps, WA195–6
 - Public Angling Estate, WA111
 - Rights, WA107
- Flood Compensation, WA263
- Flooding
- Farmers Affected by Flooding, WA100, WA290
 - Carrickdesland, Warrenpoint, at, WA79
 - Tromra Road, Cushendall, at, WA99–100
 - Warrenpoint, in, WA30
- Flu Jabs, WA136
- Fly Posting, WA19
- Food Security, WA290
- Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 101–11, 223–4, WA103
- Bluetongue, and, 101–11
- Football
- Irish League Football, 231–2
- Foras na Gaeilge, WA235
- Forestry, WA5
- Former Military Sites, WA286
- Former MOD sites, WA143
- Fraud, WA38–9
- Free Public Transport, WA276–7, WA306
- Free School Meals, WA118–20
- Freedom of Information Requests, 222
- Fuel Poverty, WA84
- Full-rate Liability for Industrial Rates, WA28
- Funding for Karate Sports, WA10
- Funding Major Infrastructure Projects, WA82–3
- Further Education, WA47
- Further Education College, Lisburn, WA184
- Further Education Concession Fees, WA247
- Further Education Lecturers’ Pay Dispute, 198–203
- Future of A Levels, WA179
- Future of Donaghadee High School, 306–13
- Gaelic Language Event: Mull and Iona, 232
- Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast, WA111
- Garden Grabbing, WA257–8
- Gardening and Landscaping Expenditure, WA60
- GCSE and A-Level Courses, WA13
- GCSE Achievement, 339
- Gender Equality Strategy, WA95–6
- Genetically Modified Crops, WA153
- Giant’s Causeway Visitors’ Centre, 28, 447–8, WA16–17, WA18, WA25, WA26, WA55, WA124–5, WA132–3, WA189, WA191, WA199, WA200, WA249, WA299–300
- Communication with UNESCO, WA198
 - Correspondence from MLAs, WA197
 - Planning Proposal at, WA199
 - Seaport Investments Planning Application, WA190–1, WA199
 - UNESCO Consultation, WA197–8
 - UNESCO Official, WA198
- Glastry College, 334, WA239
- Gorse Areas, WA196
- Gortcorbies Climbing Lane, WA79–80
- Governing Body of SELB, WA237
- Government Legal Services, WA30
- Graduate Earnings, WA191
- Graduate Entry to NICS, WA259
- Graduate Jobs, WA246
- Greater Newry Vision, WA190
- Green Areas, WA133
- Greenbelt Foundation and Woodland Trust, WA133
- Greyabbey
- Resurfacing of the Road at Main Street, WA32
- Gross Value Added in Northern Ireland, WA29
- Grouse Numbers, WA22, WA23
- Health
- Abortion 433–8
 - Accident and Emergency Services at Mater Hospital, WA61
 - Accident and Emergency Waiting Times, WA138–9
 - Agenda for Change: Ulster Hospital, 125
-

AIDS, WA137–8
 AIDS and HIV Prescriptions, WA271
 Alcohol-Related Illness, WA63
 Alzheimer's, WA72, WA77
 Ambulance Provision in Ballycastle, WA208
 Ambulance Response, WA138
 Ambulance Service Employees, WA61
 Ambulance Shortages, WA76
 Ambulances, WA208, WA209–10
 Asbestos-related Illness, WA125–6, WA137
 Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, WA180–1
 Autism, WA61
 Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies, WA235, WA272
 Blue-Light Ambulances, WA61
 Breast Reconstruction, WA61
 British Heart Foundation, WA270–1
 Cancer Consultants, WA210–11
 Cardiac Nursing Provision, WA139
 Cardiac Risk in Young People, WA304
 Cardiac Screening, WA303–4
 Cardiac Screening for Young People, WA303
 Care Matters, 128
 Carers, WA208
 Child Obesity, WA61–2
 Coeliac Disease, WA72–3
 Community Care Infrastructure Programme, WA207
 Community Care Packages, WA203
 Compensation for Medical Negligence, WA67–71, WA208
 Compensation to Patients, WA264–70
 Cross-border Healthcare, WA64
 Dental Guidelines, WA305
 Depression, WA209
 Down's Syndrome, WA313
 Flu Jabs, WA136
 Health Impacts of the Built Environment, WA194
 Health Implications of Wi-fi, WA139–40
 Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill: Extension of Committee Stage, 112
 Health and Social Services Authority, WA302
 Heart Screening Report, WA304
 HIV, WA138
 Hospital Pathology Services, WA75
 Hospital Services, WA75
 Hospital Treatment, WA71
 Intractable Epilepsy, WA207–8
 Investing for Health Strategy, WA75
 IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 514–26
 Lymphoedema, WA271
 Medical Secretaries, WA135, WA141
 Mental Illness, WA74
 MRSA, WA77, WA136
 Myasthenia Gravis, WA207
 New Hospital in Omagh, WA204
 NHS Dentists, WA203–4
 NHS Physiotherapists, WA205
 Non-EU Nurses, WA204

North/South Ministerial Council Health Sectoral Meeting, WA76
 North/South Regional Hospital Services Group, WA73
 Nurse Training Costs, WA205
 Nurses in Training, WA204
 Ophthalmic Services, WA58
 Organ Donor Cards, WA66
 Organ Donors, WA76
 Organ Transplants, WA64–5
 Out-of-Hours Care, WA63
 Patient Complaints, WA58
 Patients Treated in Great Britain, WA201–3
 Pharmaceutical Payments, WA58
 Physiotherapist Waiting Times, WA205
 Physiotherapists, WA206
 Physiotherapists Commencing Training, WA205–6
 Physiotherapy Training, WA205
 Practice-based Commissioning, WA270
 Prescriptions, WA58–9
 Promotion of Good Mental Health, 124–5
 Psychiatric Treatment, WA71
 Reformed Health Structures, WA270
 Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit, WA140
 Regional Respiratory Forum, WA59
 Respiratory Disease, WA59–60
 Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 424–8
 Satellite Cancer Centre, WA206–7
 Section 56 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001, WA67
 Speech and Occupational Therapy, WA210
 Strabane Health and Care Centre, WA207
 Stroke Research, WA62
 Stroke Strategy, WA75
 Stroke Units, WA62
 Suicide Prevention, 125–6
 Treatment for HIV/AIDS, WA137
 Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital: Acute Mental-Health/Psychiatric Beds, 126–8
 Vaccination Programme, WA210
 Whiteabbey Hospital Site, WA138
 World Alzheimer's Day, 42–52
 Health and Safety Executive, WA194
 Health and Safety Requirements, WA189
 Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87–8, CS111–12
 Health and Social Services Authority, WA302
 Heart Screening Report, WA304
 High Density Developments, WA200
 High Hedges Legislation, WA24
 High Mournes
 Access to the, WA132
 Hightown Bridge, WA279–80
 HIV, WA138
 AIDS and HIV Prescriptions, WA271
 Treatment for HIV/AIDS, WA137
 Holylands Area, WA184, WA186–7
 Home Start Organisations, WA208

Home-Start Armagh, WA140
 Homeless in South Down, WA222
 Honours List
 Local Alternatives 23–4
 Hospital Pathology Services, WA75
 Hospital Services, WA75
 Hospital Treatment, WA71
 Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure, WA30, WA120, WA137
 Housing
 Affordable Housing, WA89
 Construction of Houses, Armagh City, WA221
 Empty Homes Strategy, 135–6
 First-time Home Buyers, WA148
 Homeless in South Down, WA222
 Housing Allocation, WA312
 Housing Applications, 133–4
 Housing Associations
 Opportunity to Purchase Surplus Land, 137–8
 Procurement, 136–7
 Property, WA86
 Housing Crisis, WA90
 Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 134–5
 Housing Provision, WA31–2
 Housing Selection Scheme, WA285
 Linen Green Housing Development, Sion Mills, WA219–20
 Living Over the Shop Scheme, WA220–1
 Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 114–23
 New Build Social Housing Scheme, WA282
 Northern Ireland Housing Executive Land, WA34
 Public Housing Units, WA284
 Social Housing, WA89–90, WA149, WA222
 Vacant Houses, WA311
 Vacant Properties, WA311
 Vacant Residential Properties, WA285–6
 Housing Energy Performance Certificates, WA34
 Housing Executive, WA221, WA285
 Insurance Claims, WA281–3
 Properties, WA85, WA86–7, WA88, WA312
 Waiting List, WA85, WA86, WA222, WA284, WA285, WA311
 ICBAN, WA31
 Illegal Dumping, WA254
 Illegal Fishing, WA42
 Illegal Waste, WA301
 Illegally Erected Monuments, WA273–4
 Incentives for Rearing Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 Independent Students, WA16
 Independent Water Review Panel, WA274
 India
 Investment from, 343–4
 Industrial Derating, WA261–2
 Industrial Tribunals, WA185
 Industrial Zoned Land, WA254
 Information Technology, WA262
 Information Technology in Farming, WA107–8
 Infraction Proceedings, WA255, WA256
 Installation of Disabled Parking Bays, WA212
 Integrated Development Fund, WA228
 Interdepartmental Steering Group, WA307
 Interreg IV Programme, WA28–9
 Intractable Epilepsy, WA207–8
 Introduction of Fluoride into Drinking Water, WA71
 Invest NI, WA16, WA17, WA18, WA47, WA48, WA187, WA189, WA297
 All-Island Economy, WA188
 Global Point Development, WA187
 Inward Investment Agencies, WA193
 Strabane District Council Land, WA190
 Investing for Health Strategy, WA75
 Investment
 Investment Conference, WA193
 Investment Strategy, WA2, WA151, WA230
 Inward Investment, WA4, WA96, WA191–2
 United States Investment Conference, WA192
 Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta, WA169
 Irish Central Border Area Network, WA29
 Irish Fish Stocks, WA108–9
 Irish Language 280–93
 British and Irish Sign Languages, WA42–3
 Expenditure on Irish Language, WA140
 Irish-Language Businesses, WA194
 Irish-Language Community, WA160
 Irish-Language Schools, WA120
 Irish on Road Signs, WA33
 Irish-Medium Schools, WA179
 Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 363–71
 Pupils in Irish-Language Schools, WA163
 Review of Irish-Medium Education, WA294–5
 Ulster-Scots Language, WA161
 Irish language Act, WA110
 Irish League Football, 231–2
 Island-wide Employment Opportunities, WA248
 IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 514–26
 Job and Benefits Office, Newtownards, WA313
 Job Losses: Social Security Agency, 138
 Job Ready Candidates, WA182
 Job Ready Scheme, 343
 Joint Afforestation Strategy, WA6
 Jordanstown Rd, Newtownabbey, WA277
 Kilkeel Harbour, WA103
 Lamb Production, WA153
 Lamb Promotion, WA104
 Land Acquisition at Loughgilly, County Armagh, WA35–6
 Land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street, Antrim, WA144
 Land and Facilities at Castlederg Nursery, WA8
 Largy Road Route Study, WA146
 Larne Shoreline, WA199–200
 Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards, WA168
 Legislative Programme for 2007/2008, WA231

Libraries

Accommodation of Library Services, WA157
Derelict Library in Cullybackey, WA110–11
Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards, WA168
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS1–13, CS31–40, CS57–69, CS89–109, CS153–7, WA10
 Extension of Committee Stage, 9
Library Authority, WA39
 Public Access to Library Services, WA156–7
 Staff in Northern Library Services by Grade, WA157
 Staff Required in Library Services, WA156
Lifetime Opportunities, 23, 34–5, WA3, WA37–8
Lignite Resource Area, WA196
Limavady Grammar School
 Astroturf Facilities at, WA243
Linen Green Housing Development, Sion Mills, WA219–20
Links with Scotland, WA229
Lisburn
 106A Service from Lisburn to Antrim, WA274
 Further Education College, WA184
Listed Buildings, 29–30
Livestock Identity Tags, WA152
Living Over the Shop Scheme, WA220–1
Local Business Needs, WA163
Local Community Fund, WA34, WA234
Local Government Pension Scheme (Amendment No2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007: Prayer of Annulment, 112–14
Local and Regional Rates, 33–4
Locally Produced Food, WA67
Loughview Primary School and Nursery
 Traffic-Calming Requirements at, 407–13
Lymphoedema, WA271
Lyons Review, WA262
Magheramorne
 Redevelopment of land, WA196
MAGS2 funding, WA120
Mains Water Supply, James St, Coleraine, WA211
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 114–23
Marine Bill, WA253
Maritime Museum, WA234
Mater Hospital
 Accident and Emergency Services at, WA61
Mature Garden Trees, 445
Maze
 Development at Site, WA97–8, WA232
Medical Secretaries, WA141
Medieval Fish Traps, WA195–6
Meeting Requests, WA261
Members' Participation in Debates/Ministerial Statements, 1
Mental Illness, WA74
Merged Regional Colleges, WA183
Migrant Workers, WA185
Millennium Way, Lurgan, 131–2
Ministerial Cars, WA260

Ministerial Statements

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 101–11
Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 198–203
The Future of the Conflict Transformation Initiative, 386–94
Members' Participation in Debates and, 1
North/South Ministerial Council
 Road Safety, 69–71
 Transport, 65–8
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007–17, 257–65
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 363–71
Planning Application for Development at Titanic Quarter, Belfast, 163–5
Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 424–8
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 417–23
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 507–14
Workplace 2010, 2–9
Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 230–1
Mislaidd Benefit Claim Forms, WA88
MLA Meetings, WA305, WA310
Mobile Phone Use, WA305
MOT Test, WA53, WA298–9
Motor Homes, WA25, WA300–1
Motor Test Certificates, WA25
Motorcycles
 Off-road Tests, WA300
 Races, WA188, WA216
 Racing on Circuits, WA110
 Road Races, WA156
 Road Racing, WA110
 Track at Nutts Corner, WA24
Mountain-biking, WA7
MRSA, WA77, WA136
Mull and Iona
 Gaelic Language Event, 232
Museums Strategy, WA40
Myasthenia Gravis, WA207
National Minimum Wage, WA245
National Parks, WA49, WA254
National Ploughing Championships, WA232–3
National Stadium, WA111, WA112
National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy, WA186
Neighbourhood Renewal, WA149–50
Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships, WA309–10
Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy, WA90–1
Newbuild Programmes, WA181
Newbuild Social Housing Scheme, WA282
New Deal, WA185–6
New Entrants Scheme, WA99
New Hotels, WA296
Newbuild School, WA237
Newcastle
 Drainage Area Plan for, WA80
 Two-way Traffic System on Shimna Road,

-
- Newcastle, WA216
Wastewater Treatment Works at Newcastle, County Down, WA131–2
Newry Railway Station, WA82
Newtownabbey
 Enterprise and Investment Zone, 348
 Jordanstown Rd, Newtownabbey, WA277
NHS Dentists, WA203–4
NHS Physiotherapists, WA205
NI Water, WA276
NI Water’s Budget, WA275
Noise Complaints, WA24–5
Non-EU Nurses, WA204
Non-EU Students, WA183
North/South Exchange Trust, WA181
North/South Bodies, 222–3
North/South Ministerial Council, WA1–2, WA3–4
 Health Sectoral Meeting, WA76
 Institutional Format, 441–2
 Meetings, WA96
 Road Safety, 69–71
 Secretariat Accommodation, 25–6
 Sectoral Meetings, WA112
 Transport, 65–8
North/South Regional Hospital Services Group, WA73
Northern Area Plan, WA27, WA199
Northern Ireland Audit Office
 Earlier Intervention, 38
Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, WA230
Northern Ireland Civil Service
 Sick Absence, 451–2
Northern Ireland Direct Project, WA264
Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, WA271–2
Northern Ireland Housing Executive Land, WA34
Northern Ireland Library Authority, WA10
Northern Ireland-Produced Beef, WA60
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007–17, 233–4, 257–65
Northern Ireland Students Studying in the Republic of Ireland, WA184
Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 345–6
Northern Ireland Water, WA216
Nuisance Trees and High Hedges, WA133
Nurse Training Costs, WA205
Nurses in Training, WA204
Nutts Corner
 Motorcycle Track at, WA24
Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner for Complaints, WA151
OFMDFM website, WA4–5
Older Persons’ Commissioner, WA230
Omagh
 New Hospital in Omagh, WA204
 Omagh Educational Village, WA181
Ophthalmic Services, WA58
Opportunities for Women, WA191
Oral Answers
 2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
 Agenda for Change: Ulster Hospital, 125
 Agricultural Careers, 227–8
 All-Island Transport Collaboration, 132–3
 Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures, 444–5
 Battletown Gallery, Newtownards, 133
 Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133
 British-Irish Council, 219
 Built Heritage, 31
 Capital Investment, 452
 Carbon Emissions, 30
 Care Matters, 128
 ‘Challenge of Change’, 439–40
 Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36
 Children and Young People, 27–8, 219–20
 Community Training, 341–2
 Creative Arts and Culture, 229–30
 Crossnacreevy, 228–9
 Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, 128–9
 Dickson Plan, 338
 Drink/Drug Driving, 443–4
 Empty Homes Strategy, 135–6
 Engagements, 438–9
 Enterprise and Investment Zone, Newtownabbey, 348
 Environment, 28
 Environment and Heritage Service, 446–7
 Equality Impact Assessments, 25
 EU Regional Development Committee, 26–7
 Fireworks, 124
 Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 223–4
 Freedom of Information Requests, 222
 Gaelic Language Event: Mull and Iona, 232
 GCSE Achievement, 339
 Giant’s Causeway Visitors’ Centre, 28, 447–8
 Glastry College, 334
 Honours List: Local Alternative, 23–4
 Housing Applications, 133–4
 Housing Associations
 Opportunity to Purchase Surplus Land, 137–8
 Procurement, 136–7
 Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 134–5
 Investment from India, 343–4
 Irish League Football, 231–2
 Job Losses: Social Security Agency, 138
 Job Ready Scheme, 343
 Lifetime Opportunities, 23, 34–5
 Listed Buildings, 29–30
 Local and Regional Rates, 33–4
 Mature Garden Trees, 445
 Millennium Way, Lurgan, 131–2
 Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 230–1
 North/South Bodies, 222–3
 North/South Ministerial Council
 Institutional Format, 441–2
 Secretariat Accommodation, 25–6
 Northern Ireland Audit Office
 Earlier Intervention, 38
 Northern Ireland Civil Service: Sick Absence, 451–2
-

Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007-17, 233-4
 Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 345-6
 Paramilitary Groups, 346-7
 Parent/Pupil Interaction, 337-8
 Performing Arts Facility, 230
 Planning Policy Statement 14, 32-3, 129-30
 Planning Regulations, 448
 Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 440-1
 Promotion of Good Mental Health, 124-5
 Protected Regional Food Status, 225-6
 Public Expenditure, 448-9
 Rating Reform, 450
 Recycling Levels, 32
 Red Meat Task Force, 226-7
 Renewable Sources, 344-5
 Research and Development Spending, 339-40
 Retail Development, 445-6
 Review of Rating, 35-6
 Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary Implications, 453-4
 Rights of Older People, 24-5
 Road Safety Strategy, 28-9
 Rural Poverty, 224-5
 Salt Caves: Licences, 347
 Scottish Executive Counterpart, 342-3
 Sexual Orientation Strategy and Action Plan, 221-2
 Small and Medium-sized Business Sector, 347-8
 Suicide Prevention, 125-6
 Sustainable Development, 131
 Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 442-3
 Teacher Induction Year, 334-5
 The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy, 220-1
 Traffic Congestion in Lurgan, 130-1
 Training Strategies, 341
 Transfer of Policing and Justice Powers, 221
 Transfer Procedure, 335-6
 Trilingual Translation Services, 123-4
 Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital: Acute Mental-Health/Psychiatric Beds, 126-8
 Ulster-Scots Academy, 234
 Varney Review, 37-8
 Victims, 223
 Waste Processing, 31-2
 Water Charges, 450-1
 Workplace 2010, 36-7
 Young People not in Education, Employment or Training, 340-1
 Ordnance Survey, WA235
 Organ Donor Cards, WA66
 Organ Donors, WA76
 Organ Transplants, WA64-6
 Organic Farming, WA9
 Organics Sector, WA153
 Out-of-Hours Care, WA63
 Paramilitary Groups, 346-7
 Parent/Pupil Interaction, 337-8
 Parenting Initiatives, WA200-1
 Park and Ride Facilities, WA212
 Park and Ride Schemes, WA308
 Parkhall School, Antrim, WA45
 Parking Exemptions for Community Carers, WA32
 Parking Tickets, WA145-6
 Parliament Buildings
 Artefacts, 39
 Recycling Levels, 38-9
 Part-time Farmers, WA155
 Path Erosion, WA131
 Patient Complaints, WA58
 Patients Treated in Great Britain, WA201-3
 Pay Scales, WA73
 Peace III, WA57
 Pedestrian Crossings, WA144, WA306
 Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit, WA263
 Performing Arts Facility, 230
 Persistent Organic Pollutants, WA132
 Pharmaceutical Payments, WA58
 Physiotherapists, WA206
 Commencing Training, WA205-6
 Waiting Times, WA205
 Physiotherapy Training, WA205
 Planning Appeals, WA95, WA227
 Backlog, WA4
 Planning Appeals Commission, WA227
 Planning Applications, WA19, WA22, WA23, WA24, WA25, WA49-52, WA53-4, WA54-5, WA126-130, WA195, WA251, WA252, WA297-8
 Development at Titanic Quarter, Belfast, for, 163-5
 Fees, WA21-2
 Retirement and Farmworkers' Dwellings, for, WA130-1
 Planning Conditions, WA194-5
 Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, WA195
 Planning Policies, WA257
 Planning Policy Statement 14, 32-3, 129-30, WA195, WA211, WA256
 Rural Planning Policy and, 507-14
 Planning Proposal at the Giant's Causeway, WA132
 Planning Regulations, 448
 Agricultural Planning Regulations, WA297
 Planning Service Staff Vacancies, WA253
 Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 440-1
 Policing
 2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
 Northern Ireland, in, 180-96
 Pension Gratuity Payments to Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA151
 Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA4
 Sex Offenders, 293-306
 Transfer of Policing and Judicial Powers, 221
 Policy on Circus Animals, WA154
 Pollution Enforcement Cases, WA19
 Pomeroy Business Park, WA290
 Post-Primary Education, WA294
 Potato Inspection Regime, WA39

Practice-based Commissioning, WA270
 Prescriptions, WA58–9
 Press Officers, WA186
 PriceWaterhouse Coopers, WA275–6
 Primary School Curriculum, WA177–8
 Primary School Pupils in the Ards Peninsula Area, WA165
 Priory Integrated College, WA11
 Private Developments, WA300
 Private Members' Business
 Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 464–74
 Abortion, 433–8, 454–63
 Action on Child Poverty, 53–64
 Arts Funding, 265–79
 Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 320–33
 Classroom Assistants, 10–22, 40–1
 Crisis in Burma, 213–18, 238–43
 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 150–63
 Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 72–86
 Executive Legislative Programme, 349–61
 Fiscal Reform, 394–406
 Irish Language, 280–93
 IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 514–26
 Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 114–23
 Policing in Northern Ireland, 180–96
 Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 244–56
 Republican Parade, 88–99
 Sex Offenders, 293–306
 Strategic Planning Policy, 139–47
 Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 165–79
 Training and Employment Places, 372–85
 Windscale/Sellafield, 526–38
 World Alzheimer's Day, 42–52
 Private Notice Question
 Classroom Assistants' Dispute, 87–8
 Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 235–7
 Programme for Government, WA3, WA98
 Projected Underspend, WA246
 Promotion of Good Mental Health, 124–5
 Prosecutions of Illegal Street Traders, WA36
 Prospecting Licence, WA250
 Protected Regional Food Status, 225–6
 Provision of Services for People with Disabilities, WA217
 Psychiatric Treatment, WA71
 Public Access to Library Services, WA156–7
 Public Angling Estate, WA111
 Public Appointments, WA229, WA231
 Public Consultation, WA26
 Public Expenditure, 448–9
 Public Housing Units, WA284
 Public-Sector Employment, WA135, WA200
 Public-Sector Jobs, WA29
 Public-Service Agreements, WA228
 Public-Service Jobs, WA263–4
 Public Transport, WA78–9
 Pupils in Irish-Language Schools, WA163
 Racism
 A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy, WA229–30
 'Challenge of Change', 439–40
 Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 442–3
 Racketeering, WA193
 Radioactive Waste, WA299
 Rail Link between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station, WA279
 Railway Spending, WA218, WA219
 Rally Ireland in 2007, WA11
 Rapid-Transit Schemes, WA81
 Rates Relief, WA57–8
 Rating of Agricultural Land, WA261
 Rating Reform, 450
 Recycling, WA20
 Recycling Levels, 32
 Red Meat Task Force, 226–7
 Redevelopment of Land, Magheramorne, WA196
 Reduction in Corporation Tax, WA30
 Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 244–56
 Reformed Health Structures, WA270
 Regeneration, WA91
 Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit, WA140
 Regional Development Strategy, WA214
 Development Plans and the Implementation of, WA26
 Regional Respiratory Forum, WA59
 Regional Tourism Partnerships, WA17, WA48, WA250
 Registered Childminders, WA117, WA141
 Regulation of Circus Animals, WA154
 Renewable Energy, WA105–6
 Schemes, WA253–4
 Sources, WA287
 Report of the Committee for Finance and Personnel on Workplace 2010, 204–13
 Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education, WA114, WA115
 Report of Mourne National Park Working Party, WA257
 Republican Parade, 88–99
 Requests for Funding, WA10
 Research and Development Spending, 339–40
 Residents' Parking Schemes, WA142, WA306
 Respiratory Disease, WA59–60
 Resurfacing of the Road at Main Street, Greyabbey, WA32
 Resurfacing of Roads, WA83
 Retail Development, 445–6
 Retired Teachers, WA165–6
 Retirement of the Clerk to the Assembly, 1
 Reviews,
 Council Boundaries and Functions, of, WA25–6
 Domestic Rating, of, WA258
 Environmental Governance, of, WA253
 Higher Education, into, WA46–7
 Irish-Medium Education, of, WA294–5
 Planning Policy Statements, of, WA21

-
- Public Administration, of, WA22, WA134, WA255, WA294
 - Education and Skills Authority, and, WA243
 - Rating, of, 35–6, WA27–8
 - Rating Policy: Budgetary Implications, of 453–4
 - Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, of, 424–8
 - Road and Rail Infrastructure, of, WA141
 - Road Safety on the Frosses Road, of, WA33–4
 - Water and Sewerage Services, of, 417–23
 - Rights of Disabled People, WA2
 - Rights of Older People, 24–5
 - Roads, WA278–9
 - Deaths, WA277–8
 - Humps, WA146
 - Improvements, WA147
 - Infrastructure between Craigavon and Banbridge, WA78
 - Maintenance, WA143, WA213
 - Budget, WA78
 - Resurfacing at Lansdowne Gardens, Newtownards, WA217
 - Road Network Survey Results, WA143–4
 - Roads Service’s Moratorium on Expenditure, WA142
 - Roads Service Traffic Watch, WA147–8
 - Safety, WA82, WA212, WA255–6, WA275
 - Ballyrainey Road, on the, WA32–3
 - Road Safety Strategy, 28–9
 - Signage, WA277
 - Signs, WA30–1
 - Upgrade, WA144–5, WA305
 - Route Corridor Study, WA305
 - Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists
 - Pension Gratuity Payments to, WA151, WA4
 - Rural Development Council, WA38
 - Rural Development Programme 2007-2013, WA105, WA107
 - Action Groups, WA99
 - Rural Diversification, WA107
 - Rural Planning Policy, WA195
 - Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 507–14
 - Rural Poverty, 224–5
 - Rural Public Transport, WA308–9
 - St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA162, WA164
 - St Colmgall’s Primary School, WA44
 - Salt Caves
 - Licences, 347
 - Satellite Cancer Centre, WA206–7
 - Schools
 - Amalgamations, WA164, WA167
 - Budgets, WA167–8
 - Bus Seatbelts, WA292
 - Buses, WA164
 - Enrolments, WA121
 - Financial Deficits, WA237–8
 - Repairs, WA115, WA290–1, WA291–2
 - Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life, WA238–9
 - Scottish Executive Counterpart, 342–3
 - Sectarianism
 - Tackling Racism and, 442–3
 - Section 56 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001, WA67
 - Sector Skills Agreement, WA121
 - Security Arrangements for Parliament Buildings, WA93
 - Sellafield
 - Windscale/Sellafield, 526–38
 - Septic Tanks, WA77–8, WA308
 - Sewage on Lough Park, Ballynahinch, WA80
 - Sewerage Infrastructure, WA275
 - Sex Offenders, 293–306
 - Sexual Orientation Strategy and Action Plan, 221–2
 - Shooting Sports, WA42
 - Sight-Lines Staff, WA31
 - Sign Language, WA113, WA121
 - Single Electricity Market, WA192
 - Single Farm Payments, WA7
 - Single Library Authority, WA10–11
 - Skills Pool, WA122
 - Sluicing Gates, WA152
 - Small Businesses, WA182
 - Small Construction Firms, WA189
 - Small and Medium-sized Business Sector, 347–8
 - Social Housing, WA89–90, WA149, WA222
 - Social Services
 - Decentralisation of, WA89
 - South Eastern Regional College, WA122
 - Special EU Programmes Body, WA27
 - Special Preservation Order for the Irish Hare, WA53
 - Speech and Occupational Therapy, WA210
 - Speed Limits, WA307
 - School Zones, in, WA148
 - Speed Restrictions, WA278
 - Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme, WA99
 - Sport
 - 2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
 - Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, WA156
 - Elite Facilities Capital Programme, WA41
 - Equestrian Sports Events, WA110
 - Funding for Karate Sports, WA10
 - Irish League Football, 231–2
 - Motorcycle Races, WA188, WA216
 - Circuits, on, WA110
 - Road Races, WA110, WA156
 - National Stadium, WA111, WA112
 - Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007-17, 233–4, 257–65
 - Rally Ireland in 2007, WA11
 - Shooting Sports, WA42
 - Sport NI, WA41
 - Sporting Facilities, WA157
 - Sports Coaches in Schools, WA293
 - Ulster Grand Prix, WA216
 - Staff Levels in Arts Council, WA160
 - Staff in Northern Library Services by Grade, WA157
 - Staff Required in Library Services, WA156
-

Staff Teambuilding, WA113, WA147, WA190, WA197, WA226–7, WA258
 Staff Teambuilding Costs, WA35
 Staff Teambuilding Days, WA38, WA62
 Strabane Health and Care Centre, WA207
 Strategic Environmental Assessment, WA133–4
 Strategic Planning Policy, 139–47
 Strategic Review of Education, WA114
 Street Trader Legislation, WA36
 Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 235–7
 Stroke Research, WA62
 Stroke Strategy, WA75
 Stroke Units, WA62
 Students
 Bursaries, WA15
 Complaints, WA183
 Enrolments, WA122, WA184, WA247
 Financial Support, WA184
 Student Loans, WA47, WA121–2
 Suckler Beef and Hill Sheep Farmers, WA154
 Suicide, WA66–7, WA301–2
 Prevention, 125–6, WA208–9
 Suspension of Members of the South Eastern Education and Library Board, WA13
 Sustainable Development, 131
 Climate Change, and, 165–79
 Resource Efficiency, WA18–19
 Sustainable Development Strategy, WA37, WA230
 Sustainable Energy, WA250
 Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 442–3
 Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS15–29, CS41–55, CS71–85, CS113–145
 Teachers
 Induction Year, 334–5
 Salaries, WA162
 Teacher’s Pay and Pensions Branch, WA14
 Training Courses, WA175–6
 Teaching of Creationism in Schools, WA166
 The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy, 220–1, WA28
 The Future of the Conflict Transformation Initiative, 386–394
 Ticket Machines, WA278
 Titanic Quarter, WA39–40
 Tourism, WA194, WA296
 National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy, WA186
 New Hotels, WA296
 Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 345–6
 Regional Tourism Partnerships, WA17, WA48, WA250
 Tourism in West Tyrone, WA187–8
 Tourism-related Budgets, WA296
 Tourist Accommodation, WA194
 Tourist Events, WA47–8
 Town Centre Living Initiative, WA24
 Trading Partnerships, WA297
 Traffic
 Calming, WA218
 Measures on Shore Road, Cushendall, WA215
 Rasharkin, in, WA80–1
 Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery, 407–13
 Strangford Heights, Newtownards, at, WA220
 Congestion, WA307, WA308
 Lurgan, in, 130–1
 Management, WA215–16, WA216–17
 Review, WA145
 Scheme in Waterfoot, Co. Antrim, WA214–15
 Train Diversions, WA33
 Training
 Community Training, 341–2
 Job Ready Scheme, 343
 Nurse Training Costs, WA205
 Nurses in Training, WA204
 Physiotherapists Commencing Training, WA205–6
 Physiotherapy Training, WA205
 Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 424–8
 Teacher Training Courses, WA175–6
 Training and Employment Places, 372–85
 Training for School Governors, WA175
 Training Strategies, 341
 Training for Success, WA182–3
 Training for Success Apprenticeship, WA295
 Young People Not in Education, Employment or Training, 340–1
 Transfer of Policing and Justice Powers, 221
 Transfer Procedure, 335–6
 Transfer Test, WA161
 Advice for Teachers, WA179
 Replacement, WA178
 Transport
 106A Service from Lisburn to Antrim, WA274
 A2 between Bangor and Belfast, WA217
 A37 Springwell Climbing Lane, WA220
 All-Ireland Ferry Port, WA216
 All-Island Transport Collaboration, 132–3
 Ballycastle to Campbelltown Ferry, WA249
 Ballymoney Railway Station, WA306
 Belfast to Coleraine Express Bus, WA280
 Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line, 128–9, WA218–19, WA306–7, WA308
 Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133, WA141
 Bus Passes, WA163–4
 Bypass for Ballynahinch, County Down, WA144
 Derry/Londonderry and Donegal Rail Link, WA309
 Directional Signs, WA146–7
 Drink/Drug Driving, 443–4
 Driving Lessons in Schools, WA20
 Dual Carriageway between Comber and Newtownards, WA32
 Fast-Ferry Linkages, WA188–9
 Fast-Ferry Service, WA192
 Free Public Transport, WA276–7, WA306

Gortcorbies Climbing Lane, WA79–80
 Irish on Road Signs, WA33
 Jordantown Road, Newtownabbey, WA277
 Largy Road Route Study, WA146
 Millennium Way, Lurgan, 131–2
 MOT Tests, WA53, WA298–9
 Motor Homes, WA25, WA300–1
 Motor Test Certificates, WA25
 Motorcycle Off-Road Tests, WA300
 Newry Railway Station, WA82
 North/South Ministerial Council
 Road Safety, 69–71
 Transport, 65–8
 Park and Ride Facilities, WA212
 Park and Ride Schemes, WA308
 Parking Tickets, WA145–6
 Public Transport, WA78–9
 Rail Link between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station, WA279
 Railway Spending, WA218, WA219
 Rapid-transit Schemes, WA81
 Residents' Parking Schemes, WA142
 Resurfacing of Roads, WA83
 Review of Road and Rail Infrastructure, WA141
 Review of Road Safety on the Frosses Road,
 WA33–4
 Road Deaths, WA277–8
 Road Humps, WA146
 Road Improvements, WA147
 Road Infrastructure between Craigavon and
 Banbridge, WA78
 Road Network Survey Results, WA143–4
 Road Resurfacing at Lansdowne Gardens,
 Newtownards, WA217
 Road Safety, WA82, WA212, WA255–6, WA275
 Ballyrainey Road, on, WA32–3
 Road Safety Strategy, 28–9
 Roads Service's Moratorium on Expenditure, WA142
 Road Signage, WA277
 Road Signs, WA30–1
 Road Upgrade, WA144–5, WA305
 Roads, WA278–9
 Roads Maintenance, WA143, WA213
 Budget, WA78
 Roads Service Traffic Watch, WA147–8
 Route Corridor Study, WA305
 Rural Public Transport, WA308–9
 School Bus Seatbelts, WA292
 School Buses, WA164
 Speed Limits, WA307
 School Zones, in, WA148
 Speed Restrictions, WA278
 Traffic Calming, WA218
 Measures on Shore Road, Cushendall, WA215
 Rasharkin, in, WA80–1
 Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery, 407–13
 Strangford Heights, Newtownards, at, WA220
 Traffic Congestion, WA307, WA308
 Lurgan, in 130–1
 Traffic Management, WA215–16, WA216–17
 Review, WA145
 Scheme in Waterfoot, County Antrim, WA214–15
 Train Diversions, WA33
 Transport for Students, WA164
 Two-way Traffic System on Shimna Road,
 Newcastle, WA216
 Unadopted roads, WA274
 Westlink Upgrade, WA31
 Written Driving Test, WA20
 Tree-planting Initiatives, WA287
 Trilingual Translation Services, 123–4
 Tuberculosis
 Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
 Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or
 Brucellosis to Livestock, WA9–10, WA104–5
 Tullaghoge Fort, WA38, WA52
 Development of, WA9
 Two-way Traffic System on Shimna Road, Newcastle,
 WA216
 Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital: Acute Mental-Health/
 Psychiatric Beds, 126–8
 Ulster Grand Prix, WA216
 Ulster Scots, WA44
 Ulster-Scots Academy, 234
 Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development, WA111–12
 Ulster-Scots and Irish-Gaelic Spending, WA112
 Ulster-Scots Language, WA161
 Unadopted Roads, WA274
 Undocumented Irish, WA96
 United States
 Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, WA230
 United States Investment Conference, WA192
 Universities
 Applications, WA46
 Enrolment, WA16
 Tuition Fees, WA247
 University of Ulster,
 Magee Campus, WA182
 Patents, WA188
 Unoccupied Desks, WA236–7
 Vacant Houses, WA311
 Vacant Properties, WA311
 Vacant Residential Properties, WA285–6
 Vaccination Programme, WA210
 Varney Review, 37–8
 VAT-Registered Businesses, WA17–18
 Vetting of Workers, WA178
 Victims, 223
 Victims' Commissioner, WA98, WA230, WA231,
 WA231–2
 Appointment of, WA152
 Victims of Domestic Violence, WA64
 Victims' Groups, WA1, WA225
 Village Planning Day, WA281
 Voluntary- and Community-Sector Funding, WA285

Warm Homes Scheme, WA84–5, WA284
 Warrenpoint
 Flooding in, WA30
 Waste Management, WA196
 Waste Offences, WA52–3
 Waste Processing, 31–2
 Water
 Burst Water Tanks, WA283
 Charges, 450–1
 Independent Water Review Panel, WA274
 Mains Water Supply, James Street, Coleraine, WA211
 NI Water, WA276
 NI Water’s Budget, WA275
 Northern Ireland Water, WA216
 Pressure, WA145
 Wastewater Treatment, WA276
 Works at Newcastle, County Down, WA131–2
 Water and Sewerage Services
 Review of, 417–23
 West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force
 Report, WA193
 West Tyrone
 Tourism in, WA187–8
 Westlink Upgrade, WA31
 Whiteabbey Hospital Site, WA138
 Whitebridge Road, County Tyrone, WA81
 Wi-Fi
 Health Implications of, WA139–40
 Technology, WA223
 Wireless Network, WA73–4
 Windscale/Sellafield, 526–38
 Woodside Forest Park, WA89
 Workers’ Educational Association, WA246
 Workforce, WA43
 Workforce Development Forum, WA245
 Workforce Planning, WA72
 Workplace 2010, 2–9, 36–7, WA176, WA258–9
 Report of the Committee for Finance and Personnel on, 204–13
 World Alzheimer’s Day, 42–52
 World Pipe Band Championships, WA110
 Written Answers
 106A Service from Lisburn to Antrim, WA274
 1911 Census of Ireland Microfilm, WA157
 A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy,
 WA229–30
 A2 between Bangor and Belfast, WA217
 A37 Springwell Climbing Lane, WA220
 Academic Best Practice, WA244–5
 Academic Selection, WA162–3
 Access Audits, WA241
 Access to the High Mourne, WA132
 Accident and Emergency Services at Mater
 Hospital, WA61
 Accident and Emergency Waiting Times, WA138–9
 Accommodation of Library Services, WA157
 Adult Further Education Courses, WA182
 Adult Learning, WA186
 Affordable Housing, WA89
 After-School Clubs, WA162
 After-School Facilities, WA168
 Age Limit for Purchasing Cigarettes, WA139
 Agenda for Change, WA60–1, WA72
 Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, WA155–6,
 WA233
 Agri-food Industry, WA5–6
 Agri-food Matters, WA106
 Agricultural Planning Regulations, WA297
 Agricultural Wages Board, WA108
 AIDS, WA137–8
 AIDS and HIV Prescriptions, WA271
 Air Quality at Anahorish Primary School, WA45
 Alcohol-related Illness, WA63
 All-Ireland Ferry Port, WA216
 All-Ireland Parliamentary Forum, WA225
 All-Island Autism Centre, WA162
 All-Island Skills Conference, WA186
 Alpha-nortesterone, WA104
 Alzheimer’s, WA72, WA77
 Ambulance Provision in Ballycastle, WA208
 Ambulance Response, WA138
 Ambulance Service Employees, WA61
 Ambulance Shortages, WA76
 Ambulances, WA208, WA209–10
 Animal Incinerators, WA100–3, WA152–3
 Animal Welfare, WA289
 Annual Remembrance Ceremonies, WA96
 Antisocial Behaviour, WA180
 Appointment of Victims’ Commissioner, WA152
 Apprenticeship Scheme, WA185
 Apprenticeships, WA46, WA295
 Approval of Government Expenditure, WA264
 Areas of Deprivation, WA34–5
 Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, WA196–7
 Areas of Special Scientific Interest, WA251–2
 Arts Council: Annual Support for Organisations
 Programme, WA160–1
 Arts Council Funding, WA234
 Artwork Expenditure, WA59, WA60
 Asbestos, WA48
 Asbestos-related Illness, WA125–6, WA137
 Harland and Wolff, WA126,
 Assembly Questions, WA44
 Assembly Research and Library Service, WA287
 Assembly Shop, WA92, WA313
 Assistance for Low-Income Families, WA183
 Astroturf Facilities at Limavady Grammar School,
 WA243
 Attacks on Fire and Rescue Service, WA71–2
 Attacks on Orange Halls, WA96, WA151, WA231
 Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, WA180–1
 Autism, WA61, WA63
 Autistic Spectrum Disorder, WA291
 Autistic Spectrum Disorders Programme, WA291
 Available Year 8 Places, WA244
 Ballycastle to Campbelltown Ferry, WA249

Ballymoney Railway Station, WA306
 Bamford Review and Investing for Health Strategies, WA272
 Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies, WA235
 Barnett Consequential, WA29
 Beach Quality, WA20
 Beef Production, WA153
 Belfast Mela, WA112
 Belfast Metropolitan College, WA14
 Belfast to Coleraine Express Bus, WA280
 Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Rail Line, WA218–19, WA306–7, WA308
 Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, WA81, WA82, WA141
 Binge Drinking, WA76, WA302–3
 Biodiversity, WA257
 Biodiversity and the Environment, WA27
 Biofuels, WA7–8, WA67
 Blocked Sewers, WA79
 Blue Disability Badges, WA272–3
 Blue-Light Ambulances, WA61
 Bluetongue Disease, WA104, WA109
 Bonfires, WA27, WA221, WA310–11
 Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
 Breast Reconstruction, WA61
 Bridge at Narrow Water, WA276
 British Heart Foundation, WA270–1
 British and Irish Sign Languages, WA42–3
 Broadband Availability, WA125
 Broadband Internet, WA48
 Brown Crab, WA100
 Budget, WA264
 Budget Negotiations, WA185
 Budget Underspend, WA228, WA233, WA235, WA260, WA262–3, WA293, WA295–6, WA300, WA304, WA311
 Bull Bars, WA252–3
 Bullying, WA243
 Bunscoil an Chaistil, WA161
 Burnavon Arts and Culture Centre in Cookstown, WA40–1
 Burst Water Tanks, WA283
 Bus Passes, WA163–4
 Business Rates, WA263
 Bypass for Ballynahinch, County Down, WA144
 Cancer Consultants, WA210–11
 Carbon Emissions, WA309
 Carbon Footprint, WA254–5, WA289
 Cardiac Nursing Provision, WA139
 Cardiac Risk in Young People, WA304
 Cardiac Screening, WA303–4
 Cardiac Screening for Young People, WA303
 Care Matters Strategy, WA71, WA74–5
 Carers, WA64, WA208
 Caring for the Carers Strategy, WA64
 Census, WA201
 Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown, WA12, WA237
 Charities, WA88
 Child Obesity, WA61–2
 Child Poverty, WA5, WA90, WA91
 Child Protection and Safety, WA76–7
 Child Support Agency, WA85, WA87, WA148–9, WA221, WA283–4, WA311–12
 Child Support Policy, WA86
 Childcare Vouchers, WA260, WA261
 Childminder Start-Up Package, WA117–18
 Childminding, WA44
 Children from the Travelling Community, WA179–80
 Chinese Language School, WA113
 Christmas Lights on the Windows of Vehicles, WA22–3
 Civic Forum, WA2, WA97
 Civil Partnerships, WA134
 Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme, WA134–5
 Civil Service Recruitment, WA29
 Civil Service Vacancies, WA56–7
 Classroom Assistants, WA239–41, WA243–4
 Classroom Assistants' Dispute, WA262
 Classroom Teachers, WA180
 Climate Change, WA256
 CO2 Reduction, WA309
 Coastal Erosion, WA6–7
 Coeliac Disease, WA72–3
 Cold Weather Winter Fuel Payments, WA83–4
 Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, WA293
 Commissioned Reports, WA227–8
 Commissioners, WA45
 Commissioning Groups, WA270
 Common Agricultural Policy, WA105
 Common Fishing Strategy, WA99
 Community Arts Projects, WA235
 Community Care Infrastructure Programme, WA207
 Community Care Packages, WA203
 Community Festivals Fund, WA42, WA111, WA290
 Companions of Disabled People, WA81
 Compensation for Medical Negligence, WA67–71, WA208
 Compensation to Patients, WA264–70
 Competitiveness and Employment Programme, WA55
 Competitiveness Programme 2007–2013, WA83, WA122–4
 Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse, WA115–17
 Comprehensive Spending Review: Deloitte Touche Report, WA197
 Comprehensive Spending Review: Good Relations, WA197
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA28, WA37, WA104, WA160, WA190, WA201, WA206, WA217, WA218, WA220, WA227, WA232, WA239, WA245–6, WA249, WA259, WA281, WA285
 Concessionary Fees Scheme, WA186
 Conflict Transformation Initiative, WA286
 Conlig Primary School, WA45
 Construction of Houses, Armagh City, WA221

Consultancy Expenditure, WA289, WA296–7, WA300, WA312
 Control of Cormorants, WA54
 Conway Mill, WA282
 Co-operation between Environment and Heritage Service and Environmental Protection Agency, WA256–7
 Cost of Animal Feed, WA152
 Cost of Division, WA98
 Cost of Staff Teambuilding Days, WA45–6
 Cost of Translations, WA112, WA158–60
 Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside, WA257
 Counselling in Schools, WA43
 Course Fees, WA121, WA246
 Creationism, WA13, WA166
 Cross-Border Healthcare, WA64
 Crystal Alliance, WA81
 Curriculum Reserve Support, WA113
 Decentralisation of Social Services, WA89
 Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or Brucellosis to Livestock, WA9–10, WA104–5
 Demolition of Unauthorised Developments, WA252
 Dental Guidelines, WA305
 Departmental Underspend, WA220
 Departmental Correspondence, WA279
 Departmental Funding, WA261
 Departmental Offices, WA233–4
 Depression, WA209
 Derelict Library in Cullybackey, WA110–11
 Derry/Londonderry and Donegal Rail Link, WA309
 Derryboy Primary School Car Park, WA291, WA292–3
 Designated Water Courses, WA98
 Development at Maze Site, WA97–8
 Development Plan Process, WA23–4
 Development Plans for the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy, WA26
 Development of Tullaghoge Fort, WA9
 Dibney River, WA19–20
 Dibney River's pollution, WA49
 Dickson Plan, WA115
 Directional Signs, WA146–7
 Disability Access, WA44–5
 Disability Action, WA149
 Disability Badges, WA305
 Disability Living Allowance, WA87–8, WA88–9
 Disabled Parking Bays, WA211
 Disease Compensation, WA39
 Disposal of Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 Dog Fouling, WA21, WA130
 Dogs (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, WA38
 Domestic Rating, WA258
 Donaghadee High School, WA165
 Down's Syndrome, WA313
 Draft Area Plans, WA26, WA48–9
 Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle, WA80
 Driving Lessons in Schools, WA20
 Dual Carriageway between Comber and Newtownards, WA32
 Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, WA156
 Durlston Pastoral Care Centre, WA88
 Dyslexia, WA161–2
 Early Retirement Scheme for Farmers, WA155
 Eastwood Envirowaste Facility, WA26–7
 Eastwood Envirowise Facility, Crumlin, WA130
 Economic Development, WA97
 Economic Inactivity, WA184
 Education and Skills Authority, WA243, WA244, WA293–4
 Education Welfare Officers, WA167
 Educational Standards, WA241–3
 Eel Grass in Strangford Lough, WA53
 Efficiency of Departmental Structures, WA2–3
 Efficiency Targets, WA263
 Electricity Costs in Parliament Buildings, WA223
 Elite Facilities Capital Programme, WA41
 End-Year Flexibility, WA264
 Energy Consumption, WA310
 Energy Consumption and Emissions, WA277
 Energy Efficiency, WA83
 Engineering Degrees, WA248
 Engineering Students, WA248–9
 Enrolment Numbers, WA169–75, WA176–7
 Entitlement Framework, WA241
 Environmental Protection Agency, WA21
 Equality Legislation, WA1, WA225, WA226
 Equality Provision, WA1
 Equestrian Sports Events, WA110
 Erection of Illegal Signs, WA212–13
 EU Agriculture and Fisheries Meeting, WA156
 European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages, WA82
 European Directives, WA37
 European Regulation 1924/2006, WA203
 European Union Agenda, WA97
 Executive Committee Meeting, WA228–9
 Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning, WA147
 Expenditure on Consultants, WA143
 Expenditure on Irish Language, WA140
 Extended-Schools Funding, WA237
 Fair Employment Practices in WELB, WA166
 Farm Nutrient Scheme, WA39
 Farm Viability Criteria, WA8–9
 Farmers Affected by Flooding, WA100, WA290
 Fast-Ferry Linkages, WA188–9
 Fast-Ferry Service, WA192
 Financial Capability Strategy, WA124
 Financial Deficits, WA45
 Financial Services Sector, WA192–3
 Firefighters, WA140
 First-time Home Buyers, WA148
 Fish Stocks, WA11
 Fisheries Conservancy Board, WA235–6

Fishing Rights, WA107
 Flood Compensation, WA263
 Flooding at Carrickdesland, Warrenpoint, WA79
 Flooding at Tromra Road, Cushendall, WA99–100
 Flooding in Warrenpoint, WA30
 Flu Jabs, WA136
 Fly Posting, WA19
 Food Security, WA290
 Foot-and-Mouth Disease, WA103
 Foras na Gaeilge, WA235
 Forestry, WA5
 Former Military Sites, WA286
 Former MOD Sites, WA143
 Fraud, WA38–9
 Free Public Transport, WA276–7, WA306
 Free School Meals, WA118–20
 Fuel Poverty, WA84
 Full-Rate Liability for Industrial Rates, WA28
 Funding for Karate Sports, WA10
 Funding Major Infrastructure Projects, WA82–3
 Further Education, WA47
 Further Education College, Lisburn, WA184
 Further Education Concession Fees, WA247
 Future of A Levels, WA179
 Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast, WA111
 Garden Grabbing, WA257–8
 Gardening and Landscaping Expenditure, WA60
 GCSE and A-Level courses, WA13
 Gender Equality Strategy, WA95–6
 Genetically Modified Crops, WA153
 Giant’s Causeway Visitors’ Centre, WA18, WA25, WA26, WA55, WA124–5, WA132–3, WA189, WA191, WA199, WA200, WA249, WA299–300
 Communication with UNESCO, WA198
 Correspondence from MLAs, WA197
 Planning Proposal at, WA199
 Seaport Investments Planning Application, WA190–1, WA199
 UNESCO Consultation, WA197–8
 UNESCO Official, WA198
 Glastray College, WA239
 Gorse Areas, WA196
 Gortcorbies Climbing Lane, WA79–80
 Governing Body of SELB, WA237
 Government Legal Services, WA30
 Graduate Earnings, WA191
 Graduate Entry to NICS, WA259
 Graduate Jobs, WA246
 Greater Newry Vision, WA190
 Green Areas, WA133
 Greenbelt Foundation and Woodland Trust, WA133
 Gross Value Added in Northern Ireland, WA29
 Grouse Numbers, WA22, WA23
 Health Impacts of the Built Environment, WA194
 Health Implications of Wi-fi, WA139–40
 Health and Safety Executive, WA194
 Health and Safety Requirements, WA189
 Health and Social Services Authority, WA302
 Heart Screening Report, WA304
 High-Density Developments, WA200
 High Hedges Legislation, WA24
 Hightown Bridge, WA279–80
 HIV, WA138
 Holylands Area, WA184, WA186–7
 Home Start Organisations, WA208
 Home-Start Armagh, WA140
 Homeless in South Down, WA222
 Hospital Pathology Services, WA75
 Hospital Services, WA75
 Hospital Treatment, WA71
 Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure, WA30, WA120, WA137
 Housing Allocation, WA312
 Housing Associations’ Property, WA86
 Housing Crisis, WA90
 Housing Energy Performance Certificates, WA34
 Housing Executive, WA221, WA285
 Housing Executive Insurance Claims, WA281–3
 Housing Executive Properties, WA85, WA86–7, WA88, WA312
 Housing Executive Waiting List, WA85, WA86, WA222, WA284, WA285, WA311
 Housing Provision, WA31–2
 Housing Selection Scheme, WA285
 ICBAN, WA31
 Illegal Dumping, WA254
 Illegal Fishing, WA42
 Illegal Waste, WA301
 Illegally Erected Monuments, WA273–4
 Incentives for Rearing Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 Independent Students, WA16
 Independent Water Review Panel, WA274
 Industrial Derating, WA261–2
 Industrial Tribunals, WA185
 Industrial Zoned Land, WA254
 Information Technology, WA262
 Information Technology in Farming, WA107–8
 Infraction Proceedings, WA255, WA256
 Installation of Disabled Parking Bays, WA212
 Integrated Development Fund, WA228
 Interdepartmental Steering Group, WA307
 Interreg IV Programme, WA28–9
 Intractable Epilepsy, WA207–8
 Introduction of Fluoride into Drinking Water, WA71
 Invest NI, WA16, WA17, WA18, WA47, WA48, WA187, WA189, WA297
 Invest NI All-Island Economy, WA188
 Invest NI Global Point Development, WA187
 Invest NI Inward Investment Agencies, WA193
 Invest NI Strabane District Council Land, WA190
 Investing for Health Strategy, WA75
 Investment Conference, WA193
 Investment Strategy, WA2, WA151, WA230
 Inward Investment, WA4, WA96, WA191–2
 Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta, WA169
 Irish Central Border Area Network, WA29

Irish Fish Stocks, WA108–9
 Irish Language Act, WA110
 Irish-Language Businesses, WA194
 Irish-Language Community, WA160
 Irish-Language Schools, WA120
 Irish on Road Signs, WA33
 Irish-Medium Schools, WA179
 Island-Wide Employment Opportunities, WA248
 Job and Benefits Office, Newtownards, WA313
 Job Ready Candidates, WA182
 Joint Afforestation Strategy, WA6
 Jordantown Road, Newtownabbey, WA277
 Kilkeel Harbour, WA103
 Lamb Production, WA153
 Lamb Promotion, WA104
 Land Acquisition at Loughgilly, County Armagh, WA35–6
 Land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street, Antrim, WA144
 Land and Facilities at Castlederg Nursery, WA8
 Largy Road Route Study, WA146
 Larne Shoreline, WA199–200
 Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards, WA168
 Legislative Programme for 2007/2008, WA231
 Libraries Bill, WA10
 Library Authority, WA39
 Lifetime Opportunities, WA3, WA37–8
 Lignite Resource Area, WA196
 Linen Green Housing Development, Sion Mills, WA219–20
 Links with Scotland, WA229
 Livestock Identity Tags, WA152
 Living Over the Shop Scheme, WA220–1
 Local Business Needs, WA163
 Local Community Fund, WA34, WA234
 Locally Produced Food, WA67
 Lymphoedema, WA271
 Lyons Review, WA262
 MAGS2 Funding, WA120
 Mains Water Supply, James Street, Coleraine, WA211
 Marine Bill, WA253
 Maritime Museum, WA234
 Maze Site Development, WA232
 Medical Secretaries, WA135, WA141
 Medieval Fish Traps, WA195–6
 Meeting Requests, WA261
 Meetings with Ministerial Counterparts, WA229
 Mental Illness, WA74
 Merged Regional Colleges, WA183
 Migrant Workers, WA185
 Ministerial Cars, WA260
 Mislaid Benefit Claim Forms, WA88
 MLA Meetings, WA305, WA310
 Mobile Phone Use, WA305
 MOT Test, WA53
 MOT Tests, WA298–9
 Motor Homes, WA25, WA300–1
 Motor Test Certificates, WA25
 Motorcycle Off-Road Tests, WA300
 Motorcycle Races, WA188, WA216
 Motorcycle Racing on Circuits, WA110
 Motorcycle Road Races, WA156
 Motorcycle Road Racing, WA110
 Motorcycle Track at Nutts Corner, WA24
 Mountain-Biking, WA7
 MRSA, WA77, WA136
 Museums Strategy, WA40
 Myasthenia Gravis, WA207
 National Minimum Wage, WA245
 National Park, WA254
 National Parks, WA49
 National Ploughing Championships, WA232–3
 National Stadium, WA111, WA112
 National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy, WA186
 Neighbourhood Renewal, WA149–50
 Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships, WA309–10
 Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy, WA90–1
 Newbuild Programmes, WA181
 Newbuild Social Housing Scheme, WA282
 Newbuild School, WA237
 New Deal, WA185–6
 New Entrants Scheme, WA99
 New Hospital in Omagh, WA204
 New Hotels, WA296
 Newry Railway Station, WA82
 NHS Dentists, WA203–4
 NHS Physiotherapists, WA205
 NI Water, WA276
 NI Water's Budget, WA275
 Noise Complaints, WA24–5
 Non-EU Nurses, WA204
 Non-EU Students, WA183
 North/South Exchange Trust, WA181
 North/South Ministerial Council, WA1–2, WA3–4
 North/South Ministerial Council Health Sectoral Meeting, WA76
 North/South Ministerial Council Meetings, WA96
 North/South Ministerial Council Sectoral Meetings, WA112
 North/South Regional Hospital Services Group, WA73
 Northern Area Plan, WA27, WA199
 Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, WA230
 Northern Ireland Direct Project, WA264
 Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, WA271–2
 Northern Ireland Housing Executive Land, WA34
 Northern Ireland Library Authority, WA10
 Northern Ireland-Produced Beef, WA60
 Northern Ireland Students Studying in the Republic of Ireland, WA184
 Northern Ireland Water, WA216
 Nuisance Trees and High Hedges, WA133
 Nurse Training Costs, WA205
 Nurses in Training, WA204

Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner for Complaints, WA151
 OFMDFM Website, WA4–5
 Older Persons' Commissioner, WA230
 Omagh Educational Village, WA181
 Ophthalmic Services, WA58
 Opportunities for Women, WA191
 Ordnance Survey, WA235
 Organ Donor Cards, WA66
 Organ Donors, WA76
 Organ Transplants, WA64–6
 Organic Farming, WA9
 Organics Sector, WA153
 Out-of-Hours Care, WA63
 Parenting Initiatives, WA200–1
 Park and Ride Facilities, WA212
 Park and Ride Schemes, WA308
 Parkhall School, Antrim, WA45
 Parking Exemptions for Community Carers, WA32
 Parking Tickets, WA145–6
 Part-Time Farmers, WA155
 Path Erosion, WA131
 Patient Complaints, WA58
 Patients Treated in Great Britain, WA201–3
 Pay Scales, WA73
 Peace III, WA57
 Pedestrian Crossings, WA144, WA306
 Pension Gratuity Payments to Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA151
 Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit, WA263
 Persistent Organic Pollutants, WA132
 Pharmaceutical Payments, WA58
 Physiotherapist Waiting Times, WA205
 Physiotherapists, WA206
 Physiotherapists Commencing Training, WA205–6
 Physiotherapy Training, WA205
 Planning Appeals, WA95, WA227
 Planning Appeals Backlog, WA4
 Planning Appeals Commission, WA227
 Planning Application Fees, WA21–2
 Planning Applications, WA19, WA22, WA23, WA24, WA25, WA49–52, WA53–4, WA54–5, WA126, WA126–30, WA195, WA251, WA252, WA297–8
 Planning Applications for Retirement and Farmworkers' Dwellings, WA130–1
 Planning Conditions, WA194–5
 Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, WA195
 Planning Policies, WA257
 Planning Policy Statement 14, WA195, WA211, WA256
 Planning Proposal at the Giant's Causeway, WA132
 Planning Service Staff Vacancies, WA253
 Policy on Circus Animals, WA154
 Pollution Enforcement Cases, WA19
 Pomeroy Business Park, WA290
 Post-Primary Education, WA294
 Potato Inspection Regime, WA39
 Practice-Based Commissioning, WA270
 Prescriptions, WA58–9
 Press Officers, WA186
 PriceWaterhouse Coopers, WA275–6
 Primary School Curriculum, WA177–8
 Primary School Pupils in the Ards Peninsula Area, WA165
 Priory Integrated College, WA11
 Private Developments, WA300
 Programme for Government, WA3, WA98
 Projected Underspend, WA246
 Prosecutions of Illegal Street Traders, WA36
 Prospecting Licence, WA250
 Provision of Services for People with Disabilities, WA217
 Psychiatric Treatment, WA71
 Public Access to Library Services, WA156–7
 Public Angling Estate, WA111
 Public Appointments, WA229, WA231
 Public Consultation, WA26
 Public Housing Units, WA284
 Public-Sector Employment, WA135, WA200
 Public-Sector Jobs, WA29
 Public-Service Agreements, WA228
 Public-Service Jobs, WA263–4
 Public Transport, WA78–9
 Pupils in Irish-Language Schools, WA163
 Racketeering, WA193
 Radioactive Waste, WA299
 Rail Link between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station, WA279
 Railway Spending, WA218, WA219
 Rally Ireland in 2007, WA11
 Rapid-Transit Schemes, WA81
 Rates Relief, WA57–8
 Rating of Agricultural Land, WA261
 Recycling, WA20
 Redevelopment of Land, Magheramorne, WA196
 Reduction in Corporation Tax, WA30
 Reformed Health Structures, WA270
 Regeneration, WA91
 Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit, WA140
 Regional Development Strategy, WA214
 Regional Respiratory Forum, WA59
 Regional Tourism Partnerships, WA17, WA48, WA250
 Registered Childminders, WA117, WA141
 Regulation of Circus Animals, WA154
 Renewable Energy, WA105–6
 Renewable Energy Schemes, WA253–4
 Renewable Energy Sources, WA287
 Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education, WA114, WA115
 Report of Mourne National Park Working Party, WA257
 Requests for Funding, WA10
 Residents' Parking Schemes, WA142, WA306
 Respiratory Disease, WA59–60

Resurfacing of the Road at Main Street, Greyabbey, WA32
 Resurfacing of Roads, WA83
 Retired Teachers, WA165–6
 Review of Council Boundaries and Functions, WA25–6
 Review of Domestic Rating, WA258
 Review of Environmental Governance, WA253
 Review into Higher Education, WA46–7
 Review of Irish-Medium Education, WA294–5
 Review of Planning Policy Statements, WA21
 Review of Public Administration, WA22, WA134, WA255, WA294
 Review of Public Administration and the Education and Skills Authority, WA243
 Review of Rating, WA27–8
 Review of Road and Rail Infrastructure, WA141
 Review of Road Safety on the Frosses Road, WA33–4
 Rights of Disabled People, WA2
 Road Deaths, WA277–8
 Road Humps, WA146
 Road Improvements, WA147
 Road Infrastructure between Craigavon and Banbridge, WA78
 Road Network Survey Results, WA143–4
 Road Resurfacing at Lansdowne Gardens, Newtownards, WA217
 Road Safety, WA82, WA212, WA255–6, WA275
 Road Safety on the Ballyrainey Road, WA32–3
 Roads Service’s Moratorium on Expenditure, WA142
 Road Signage, WA277
 Road Signs, WA30–1
 Road Upgrade, WA144–5, WA305
 Roads, WA278–9
 Roads Maintenance, WA143, WA213
 Roads Maintenance Budget, WA78
 Roads Service Traffic Watch, WA147–8
 Route Corridor Study, WA305
 Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA4
 Rural Development Council, WA38
 Rural Development Programme 2007-2013 - Action Groups, WA99
 Rural Development Programme 2007-2013, WA105, WA107
 Rural Diversification, WA107
 Rural Planning Policy, WA195
 Rural Public Transport, WA308–9
 St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA162, WA164
 St Colmgall’s Primary School, WA44
 Satellite Cancer Centre, WA206–7
 School Amalgamations, WA164, WA167
 School Budgets, WA167–8
 School Bus Seatbelts, WA292
 School Buses, WA164
 School Enrolments, WA121
 School Financial Deficits, WA237–8
 School Repairs, WA115, WA290–1, WA291–2
 Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life, WA238–9
 Section 56 of the Health and Social Care Act 2001, WA67
 Sector Skills Agreement, WA121
 Security Arrangements for Parliament Buildings, WA93
 Septic Tanks, WA77, WA308
 Sewage on Lough Park, Ballynahinch, WA80
 Sewerage Infrastructure, WA275
 Shooting Sports, WA42
 Sight-Lines Staff, WA31
 Sign Language, WA113, WA121
 Single Electricity Market, WA192
 Single Farm Payments, WA7
 Single Library Authority, WA10–11
 Skills Pool, WA122
 Sluicing Gates, WA152
 Small Businesses, WA182
 Small Construction Firms, WA189
 Social Housing, WA89–90, WA149, WA222
 South Eastern Regional College, WA122
 Special EU Programmes Body, WA27
 Special Preservation Order for the Irish Hare, WA53
 Speech and Occupational Therapy, WA210
 Speed Limit in School Zones, WA148
 Speed Limits, WA307
 Speed Restrictions, WA278
 Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme, WA99
 Sport NI, WA41
 Sporting Facilities, WA157
 Sports Coaches in Schools, WA293
 Staff Levels in Arts Council, WA160
 Staff in Northern Library Services by Grade, WA157
 Staff Required in Library Services, WA156
 Staff Teambuilding, WA113, WA147, WA190, WA197, WA226–7, WA258
 Staff Teambuilding Costs, WA35
 Staff Teambuilding Days, WA38, WA62
 Strabane Health and Care Centre, WA207
 Strategic Environmental Assessment, WA133–4
 Strategic Review of Education, WA114
 Street Trader Legislation, WA36
 Stroke Research, WA62
 Stroke Strategy, WA75
 Stroke Units, WA62
 Student Bursaries, WA15
 Student Complaints, WA183
 Student Enrolments, WA122, WA184, WA247
 Student Financial Support, WA184
 Student Loans, WA47, WA121–2
 Suckler Beef and Hill Sheep Farmers, WA154
 Suicide, WA66–7, WA301–2
 Suicide Prevention, WA208–9
 Suspension of Members of the South Eastern Education and Library Board, WA13

Sustainable Development - resource efficiency, WA18–19	United States Investment Conference, WA192
Sustainable Development Strategy, WA37, WA230	University Applications, WA46
Sustainable Energy, WA250	University Enrolment, WA16
Teacher Training Courses, WA175–6	University Tuition Fees, WA247
Teachers' Pay and Pensions Branch, WA14	University of Ulster, Magee Campus, WA182
Teaching of Creationism in Schools, WA166	University of Ulster Patents, WA188
Teaching Salaries, WA162	Unoccupied Desks, WA236–7
The Cost of Division - A Shared Future Strategy, WA28	Vacant Houses, WA311
Ticket Machines, WA278	Vacant Properties, WA311
Titanic Quarter, WA39–40	Vacant Residential Properties, WA285–6
Tourism, WA194, WA296	Vaccination Programme, WA210
Tourism in West Tyrone, WA187–8	VAT-Registered Businesses, WA17–18
Tourism-Related Budgets, WA296	Vetting of Workers, WA178
Tourist Accommodation, WA194	Victim's Commissioner, WA98
Tourist Events, WA47–8	Victims' Commissioner, WA230, WA231, WA231–2
Town Centre Living Initiative, WA24	Victims of Domestic Violence, WA64
Trading Partnerships, WA297	Victims' Groups, WA1, WA225
Traffic Calming, WA218	Village Planning Day, WA281
Traffic Calming in Rasharkin, WA80–1	Voluntary- and Community-Sector Funding, WA285
Traffic Calming at Strangford Heights, Newtownards, WA220	Warm Homes Scheme, WA84–5
Traffic-Calming Measures on Shore Road, Cushendall, WA215	Warmer Homes Scheme, WA284
Traffic Congestion, WA307, WA308	Waste Management, WA196
Traffic Management, WA215–16, WA216–17	Waste Offences, WA52–3
Traffic Management Review, WA145	Wastewater Treatment, WA276
Traffic Management Scheme in Waterfoot, County Antrim, WA214–15	Wastewater Treatment Works at Newcastle, County Down, WA131–2
Train Diversions, WA33	Water Pressure, WA145
Training for School Governors, WA175	West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force Report, WA193
Training for Success, WA182–3	Westlink Upgrade, WA31
Training for Success Apprenticeship, WA295	Whiteabbey Hospital Site, WA138
Transfer Test, WA161	Whitebridge Road, County Tyrone, WA81
Transfer Test Advice for Teachers, WA179	Wi-fi Technology, WA223
Transfer Test Replacement, WA178	Wi-fi Wireless Network, WA73–4
Transport for Students, WA164	Woodside Forest Park, WA89
Treatment for HIV/AIDS, WA137	Workers' Educational Association, WA246
Tree-Planting Initiatives, WA287	Workforce, WA43
Tullaghoge Fort, WA38, WA52	Workforce Development Forum, WA245
Two-Way Traffic System on Shimna Road, Newcastle, WA216	Workforce Planning, WA72
Ulster Grand Prix, WA216	Workplace 2010, WA176, WA258–9
Ulster Scots, WA44	World Pipe Band Championships, WA110
Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development, WA111–12	Written Driving Test, WA20
Ulster-Scots and Irish-Gaelic Spending, WA112	Young People's Skills, WA163
Ulster-Scots Language, WA161	Youth Outreach Work, WA13–14
Unadopted Roads, WA274	Written Driving Test, WA20
Undocumented Irish, WA96	Young People Not in Education, Employment or Training, 340–1
	Young People's Skills, WA163
	Youth Outreach Work, WA13–14

PART II (MEMBERS' INDEX)

Adams, Mr G

- Ministerial Statement
 - Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 368
- Private Members' Business
 - Policing in Northern Ireland, 183
- Written Answers
 - Conway Mill, WA282
 - West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force Report, WA193

Anderson, Ms Martina

- Executive Business
 - Draft Budget 2008-2011, 501
 - Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 484
- Ministerial Statement
 - Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 391
 - Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 371
- Oral Answers
 - Equality Impact Assessments, 25
 - Teacher Induction Year, 335
 - 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy', 220
- Private Members' Business
 - Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 468, 469
 - Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 323–4
 - Crisis in Burma, 215–16
 - 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 152–3
 - Policing in Northern Ireland, 186
- Written Answers
 - Ambulance Shortages, WA76
 - Pay Scales, WA73
 - Section 56 of Health and Social Care Act 2001, WA67
 - Training for Success Apprenticeship, WA295

Armstrong, Mr B

- Committee Stages
 - Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS24, CS25, CS133, CS140
- Oral Answers
 - Environment and Heritage Service, 447
- Private Members' Business
 - Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 77–8
- Written Answers
 - Attacks on Orange Halls, WA151
 - Public Angling Estate, WA111

Attwood, Mr A

- Assembly Business, 197, 315, 416
- Ministerial Statement

- Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 392
- Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 199
- North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 70

Oral Answers

- All-Island Transport Collaboration, 132
- British-Irish Council, 219
- North/South Ministerial Council: Secretariat Accommodation, 26
- Young People Not in Education, Employment or Training, 340

Private Members' Business

- Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 321, 328–9
- 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 150–1
- Executive Legislative Programme, 357, 357–8
- IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 514–15, 525–6
- Policing in Northern Ireland, 184–5
- Republican Parade, 96–7
- Sex Offenders, 300, 300–1
- Training and Employment Places, 374, 374–5, 383–4

Written Answers

- Affordable Housing, WA89

Beggs, Mr R

Committee Business

- Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel on Workplace 2010, 206–7

Committee Stages

- Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS148, CS149

Executive Business

- Draft Budget 2008-2011, 499

Ministerial Statement

- North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 68
- Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 421–2
- Workplace 2010, 5

Oral Answers

- Children and Young People, 220
- Parent-Pupil Interaction, 337
- Public Expenditure, 449
- Renewable Sources, 345

Private Members' Business

- Action on Child Poverty, 59
- Fiscal Reform, 395–6, 404, 404–5, 406
- Policing in Northern Ireland, 191
- Sex Offenders, 299–300, 300
- Strategic Planning Policy, 139–40

Written Answers

- Budget Underspend, WA262
- Expenditure on Consultants, WA143
- Financial Capability Strategy, WA124
- Full-Rate Liability for Industrial Rates, WA28
- Living Over the Shop Scheme, WA220

Parenting Initiatives, WA200
Road Network Survey Results, WA143
Roads Maintenance, WA143

Boylan, Mr C

Ministerial Statement

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 420
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 509

Oral Answers

Drink/Drug Driving, 443
Planning Policy Statement 14, 129
Rural Poverty, 225

Private Members' Business

Strategic Planning Policy, 141

Written Answers

Construction of Houses, Armagh City, WA221
Driving Lessons in Schools, WA20
Home-Start Armagh, WA140
Motor Test Certificates, WA25
Neighbourhood Renewal, WA149
Training for Success, WA182
Written Driving Test, WA20

Boylan, Mr C (as Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment)

Committee Business

Local Government Pension Scheme Regulations
2007: Prayer of Annulment, 113–14

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS19, CS20, CS24, CS27,
CS47, CS52, CS55, CS82, CS83, CS114,
CS119, CS120, CS122, CS126, CS130, CS131,
CS134, CS139, CS141

Bradley, Mr D

Assembly Business, 234

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS31, CS31-3, CS32,
CS35–6, CS36, CS38, CS58, CS60, CS61,
CS62, CS63, CS64, CS65, CS66, CS67, CS68,
CS69, CS93, CS98, CS98–CS99, CS107,
CS107-8, CS108, CS109

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 389
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 261
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 366, 367

Oral Answers

Gaelic Language Event: Mull and Iona, 232
Job Losses: Social Security Agency, 138
Teacher Induction Year, 335

Private Members' Business

Arts Funding, 270, 276
Irish Language, 284, 284-5, 286

Written Answers

Classroom Assistants' Dispute, WA262
Counselling in Schools, WA43

Development Plans and the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy, WA26
Green Areas, WA133
Greenbelt Foundation and the Woodland Trust,
WA133

Pedestrian Crossings, WA306

Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit, WA140

Review of Irish-Medium Education, WA294–5

Bradley, Mrs M

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 489

Ministerial Statement

Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 263

Oral Answers

Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36
Children and Young People, 220
Housing Applications, 134
Performing Arts Facility, 230
Rights of Older People, 25

Private Members' Business

Action on Child Poverty, 62–3
Classroom Assistants, 15, 15–16, 21
Sex Offenders, 298
Training and Employment Places, 378
World Alzheimer's Day, 51–2

Written Answers

A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy,
WA229
Adult Further Education Courses, WA182
Barnett Consequential, WA29
Planning Appeals Backlog, WA4

Bradley, Mr P J

Ministerial Statement

North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 67

Oral Answers

Empty Homes Strategy, 135
Irish League Football, 232
Lifetime Opportunities, 35
Red Meat Task Force, 227
Waste Processing, 32

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 466–7
Classroom Assistants, 16
Windscale/Sellafield, 532–3

Written Answers

Alpha-nortesterone, WA104
Biofuels, WA7, WA8, WA67
Bridge at Narrow Water, WA276
Cost of Animal Feed, WA152
Flooding in Warrenpoint, WA30, WA79
Livestock Identity Tags, WA152
National Park, WA254
Planning Application Fees, WA21–2
Planning Applications, WA19

Potato Inspection Regime, WA39
Single Farm Payments, WA7
Undocumented Irish, WA96

Brady, Mr M

Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 488
Executive Committee Business
Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
Legislative Consent Motion, 431
Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments)
Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 430
Ministerial Statement
North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 71
Oral Answers
‘Challenge of Change’, 439
Rights of Older People, 24
Private Members’ Business
Windscale/Sellafield, 537
World Alzheimer’s Day, 43
Written Answers
Adult Learning, WA186
Climate Change, WA256
Course Fees, WA246
Greater Newry Vision, WA190
Out-of-Hours Care, WA63

Bresland, Mr A

Oral Answers
British-Irish Council, 219
Private Members’ Business
Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 468
Written Answers
Attacks on Orange Halls, WA231
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA28
Fair Employment Practices in WELB, WA166
Farm Nutrient Scheme, WA39
Foot-and-Mouth Disease, WA103
Housing Executive, WA221
Linen Green Housing Development, Sion Mills,
WA219–20
Local Community Fund, WA34, WA234
Locally Produced Food, WA67
Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships, WA309
New Entrants Scheme, WA99
New Hospital in Omagh, WA204
Organic Farming, WA9
Rural Development Council, WA38
Rural Development Programme 2007-2013,
WA107
Rural Development Programme 2007-2013
Action Groups, WA99
Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area
Scheme, WA99
Suckler Beef and Hill Sheep Farmers, WA154
Tourism in West Tyrone, WA187
Victims’ Groups, WA1

Brolly, Mr F

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS4, CS6, CS7,
CS9, CS13, CS32, CS35, CS36, CS37, CS39,
CS40, CS59, CS60, CS64, CS67, CS92, CS93,
CS100–1
Ministerial Statement
Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 105
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 263
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 369–70, 370
Oral Answers
Engagements, 438
Private Members’ Business
Arts Funding, 276
Irish Language, 286, 286–7
Written Answers
European Charter on Regional and Minority
Languages, WA82
Irish Language Businesses, WA194
Irish Language Community, WA160
Irish-Medium Schools, WA179
North/South Ministerial Council Sectoral
Meetings, WA112
Rural Development Programme 2007-2013,
WA105

Browne, Lord

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS2–3, CS3, CS5,
CS9–10, CS10, CS34, CS37, CS62, CS93,
CS96, CS102, CS155
Ministerial Statement
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 262
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 368
Oral Answers
EU Regional Development Committee, 27
Investment from India, 343, 343–4, 344
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 234
Private Members’ Business
Arts Funding, 270–1
Crisis in Burma, 239
Republican Parade, 94–5, 95

Buchanan, Mr T

Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 488
Ministerial Statement
Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical
Training, 426
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 512
Oral Answers
Capital Investment, 452

Mature Garden Trees, 445
Training Strategies, 341
Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital, 127

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 454–5, 455
IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 519
Policing in Northern Ireland, 186–7
Sex Offenders, 295, 296
World Alzheimer's Day, 43

Written Answers

Ambulance Service Employees, WA61
Autism, WA61
Blue Light Ambulances, WA61
Government Legal Services, WA30
Planning Applications, WA251

Burns, Mr T

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland,
489–90

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 106

Oral Answers

2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
Fireworks, 124
Review of Rating, 35
Sustainable Development, 131

Private Members' Business

Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 116

Written Answers

106A Service from Lisburn to Antrim, WA274
Budget Negotiations, WA185
Bus Passes, WA163
Dogs (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2001,
WA38
Eastwood Environment Facility WA26, WA130
Hightown Bridge, WA280
Medical Secretaries, WA135
Motorcycle Track at Nutts Corner, WA24
Rates Relief, WA57–8, WA58
Road Upgrade, WA144–5
St. Colmgall's Primary School, WA44
Unadopted Roads, WA274

Burnside, Mr D

Oral Answers

Agricultural Careers, 227, 227–8, 228
Transfer of Policing and Justice Powers, 221

Private Members' Business

Crisis in Burma, 239–40
Referendum on New European Union Treaty,
246, 252–3, 255

Private Notice Question

Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 235

Written Answers

Future of A Levels, WA179

Land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street,
Antrim, WA144

Meetings with Ministerial Counterparts, WA229

Parkhall School, Antrim, WA45

Ulster-Scots and Irish-Gaelic Spending, WA112

Butler, Mr P

Ministerial Statement

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 200

Private Members' Business

Classroom Assistants, 14–15
Sex Offenders, 293–5

Oral Answers

Parliament Buildings: Recycling Levels, 38,
38–9, 39

Written Answers

Assembly Questions, WA44
Autism, WA63
Bonfires, WA27
British and Irish Sign Languages, WA42
Civil Partnerships, WA134
Free School Meals, WA118
Newbuild School, WA237
Retired Teachers, WA165–6
Review of Planning Policy Statements, WA21
Transfer Test, WA161

Campbell, Mr G

Oral Answers

Empty Homes Strategy, 135
Small and Medium-Sized Business Sector, 347,
347–8

Private Members' Business

Arts Funding, 277
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 321, 329,
332–3, 333
'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 155, 156
Irish Language, 290
Republican Parade, 90

Written Answers

Attacks on Orange Halls, WA96
Civil Service Recruitment, WA29
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA37

Campbell, Mr G (as Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development)

Executive Committee Business

Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
Legislative Consent Motion, 431
Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments)
Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 430

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of,
389, 393

Private Members' Business

Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 116–17

Clarke, Mr T

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS23, CS24, CS74, CS75, CS76, CS78, CS81, CS84, CS114, CS115, CS117, CS117–18, CS118, CS119, CS120, CS121, CS121–2, CS122, CS123, CS124, CS125, CS126, CS127, CS132, CS133, CS134, CS135, CS136, CS137, CS139, CS140, CS141, CS142, CS143, CS144

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 490

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 107, 109

Oral Answers

Built Heritage, 31
Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 224
Freedom of Information Requests, 222
Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 135

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 466, 468, 469, 470

Written Answers

Agricultural Planning Regulations, WA297
Approval of Government Expenditure, WA264
National Ploughing Championships, WA232

Clarke, Mr W

Ministerial Statement

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 421

Oral Answers

All-Island Transport Collaboration, 132
North/South Ministerial Council: Institutional Format, 441

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 465–6, 466
Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 79
Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 170–1
Windscale/Sellafield, 534, 534–5

Written Answers

Access to the High Mournes, WA132
Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, WA196
Beach Quality, WA20
Bonfires, WA221
Brown Crab, WA100
Bypass for Ballynahinch, County Down, WA144
Carbon Footprint, WA289, WA289–90
Coastal Erosion, WA6
Common Fishing Strategy, WA99
Co-operation between the Environment Heritage Service and the Environmental Protection Agency, WA256
Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle, WA80
First-time Homebuyers, WA148
Forestry, WA5
Genetically Modified Crops, WA153

Gorse Areas, WA196

Homeless in South Down, WA222

Housing Allocation, WA312

Housing Executive Properties, WA312

Housing Executive Waiting List, WA222, WA284

Interreg IV Programme, WA28–9

Irish Fish Stocks, WA108

Joint Afforestation Strategy, WA6

Kilkeel Harbour, WA103

Medieval Fish Traps, WA195

Mobile Phone Use, WA305

Mountain Biking, WA7

North/South Ministerial Council, WA3

Organics Sector, WA153

Path Erosion, WA131

Pedestrian Crossings, WA144

Public Housing Units, WA284

Recycling, WA20

Regional Tourism Partnerships, WA250

Road Signs, WA30

Sewage on Lough Park, Ballynahinch, WA80

Social Housing, WA149

Tourism, WA296

Tourism-Related Budgets, WA296

Traffic Calming, WA218

Traffic Management Review, WA145

Two-Way Traffic System on the Shimna Road, Newcastle, WA216

Wastewater Treatment Works at Newcastle, County Down, WA131

Westlink Upgrade, WA31

Youth Outreach Work, WA13

Cobain, Mr F

Oral Answers

Suicide Prevention, 125, 126
Training Strategies, 341

Private Members' Business

Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 117–18

Written Answers

Child Poverty, WA5, WA90
Information Technology, WA262
Resurfacing of Roads, WA83
Victims' Commissioner, WA230

Cobain, Mr F (as Chairperson of the Committee for Regional Development)

Ministerial Statement

North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 66
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 418

Coulter, Rev Dr R

Private Members' Business

Executive Legislative Programme, 360–1

Written Answers

Academic Best Practice, WA244–5
Binge-drinking, WA76
Carbon Footprint, WA254

Fast-Ferry Service, WA192

Coulter, Rev Dr Robert (as Representative of the Assembly Commission)

Written Answers

Assembly Research and Library Service, WA287
Assembly Shop, WA92, WA93, WA313
Electricity Costs in Parliament Buildings, WA223
Renewable Energy Sources, WA287
Security Arrangements for Parliament Buildings, WA93
Tree-Planting Initiatives, WA287
Wi-Fi Technology, WA223

Craig, Mr J

Oral Answers

Housing Associations: Procurement, 137

Private Members' Business

Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 76
Strategic Planning Policy, 144

Written Answers

Further Education College, Lisburn, WA184

Cree, Mr L

Adjournment

Future of Donaghadee High School, 307–8

Ministerial Statement

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 203

Oral Answers

Creative Arts and Culture, 229

Private Members' Business

Fiscal Reform, 400–1

Written Answers

Annual Remembrance Ceremonies, WA96
Antisocial Behaviour, WA180
Assembly Shop, WA92, WA93, WA313
Electricity Costs in Parliament Buildings, WA223
Ministerial Cars, WA260
Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, WA230
Renewable Energy Sources, WA287
Tree-Planting Initiatives, WA287

Dallat, Mr J

Ministerial Statement

North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 71
North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 66
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 419

Oral Answers

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, 129
Honours List: Local Alternative, 23, 24
Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 134
Northern Ireland Audit Office: Earlier Intervention, 38
Parliament Buildings: Artefacts, 39
Rating Reform, 450
Retail Development, 445, 446
Road Safety Strategy, 29

Private Members' Business

Strategic Planning Policy, 141–2

Written Answers

Investment Strategy, WA230
Public Service Jobs, WA263
Road Safety, WA82
Roads, WA278

Dallat, Mr J (as Deputy Speaker)

Executive Committee Business

Children (Emergency Protection Orders) Bill: First Stage, 429

Oral Answers

Enterprise and Investment Zone, Newtownabbey, 348

Paramilitary Groups, 346

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 464, 465, 468, 469, 471
Abortion, 433, 434, 436, 437–8, 463
Arts Funding, 276, 279
Classroom Assistants, 10, 12, 16, 20, 21, 22
'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 150, 151, 154, 156, 156–63
Executive Legislative Programme, 349, 350, 354, 357, 360
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 114, 114–23, 116, 121, 122, 123
Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 244, 249, 253
Training and Employment Places, 380, 385
Windscale/Sellafield, 526, 534, 537

Deeny, Dr K

Ministerial Statement

Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 426

Oral Answers

Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital, 127

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 459
Sex Offenders, 303–4
World Alzheimer's Day, 45–6

Dodds, Mr N

Executive Business

Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order 2007, 318–19

Dodds, Mr N (as Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment)

Executive Business

Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order 2007, 316

Executive Committee Business

Company and Business Names (Amendment) Regulations 2007, 149

Oral Answers

Enterprise and Investment Zone, Newtownabbey, 348
Invest NI, WA47, WA48
Investment from India, 344
Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 345, 345–6
Paramilitary Groups, 346, 346–7, 347
Renewable Sources, 344–5, 345
Salt caves: Licences, 347
Small and Medium-sized Business Sector, 347, 348

Written Answers

Asbestos, WA48
Asbestos-Related Illness, WA125–6
Asbestos-Related Illness: Harland and Wolff, WA126
Ballycastle to Campbeltown Ferry, WA249
Broadband Availability, WA125
Broadband Internet, WA48
Budget Underspend, WA295–6
Competitiveness Programme (2007–2013), WA123, WA123–4, WA124, WA129–5
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA190, WA249
Consultancy Expenditure, WA296–7
Fast-Ferry Linkages, WA188–9
Fast-Ferry Service, WA192
Financial Capability Strategy, WA124
Financial Services Sector, WA192–3
Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, WA124–5, WA189, WA191, WA249, WA125
Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre Seaport Investments Planning Application, WA191
Graduate Earnings, WA191
Greater Newry Vision, WA190
Health and Safety Executive, WA194
Health and Safety Requirements, WA189
Invest NI, WA16, WA17, WA18, WA187, WA189, WA297
Invest NI All-Island Economy, WA188
Invest NI Global Point Development, WA187
Invest NI Inward Investment Agencies, WA193
Invest NI Strabane District Council Land, WA190
Investment Conference, WA193
Inward Investment, WA191–2
Irish Language Businesses, WA194
Motorcycle Races, WA188
New Hotels, WA296
Opportunities for Women, WA191
Prospecting Licence, WA250
Racketeering, WA193
Regional Tourism Partnerships, WA17, WA48, WA250
Single Electricity Market, WA192
Small Construction Firms, WA189
Staff Teambuilding, WA190
Sustainable Energy, WA250
Tourism, WA194, WA296
Tourism in West Tyrone, WA187–8
Tourist Accommodation, WA194

Tourist Events, WA48

Tourism-Related Budgets, WA296

Trading Partnerships, WA297

United States Investment Conference, WA192

University of Ulster Patents, WA188

VAT-Registered Businesses, WA17–18

Visitors' Centre at Giant's Causeway, WA16–17, WA18

West Belfast and Shankill Economic Task Force Report, WA193

Doherty, Mr P

Private Members' Business

Referendum on New European Union treaty, 248–9

Written Answers

Cardiac Risk in Young People, WA304

Cardiac Screening, WA303

Cardiac Screening for Young People, WA303

Community Care Infrastructure Programme, WA207

Cross-Border Healthcare, WA64

Heart Screening Report, WA304

Industrial Zoned Land, WA254

Invest NI, WA297

Invest NI Strabane District Council Land, WA190

Route Corridor Study, WA305

Satellite Cancer Centre, WA206, WA207

Strabane Health and Care Centre, WA207

Donaldson, Mr J

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 392

Oral Answers

Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36

Equality Impact Assessments, 25

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 434, 435, 462, 462–3, 463

Classroom Assistants, 13–14, 14

Policing in Northern Ireland, 180–1, 183–4, 194

Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 178

Written Answers

Investment Conference, WA193

Planning Applications, WA49

Road Improvements, WA147

Train Diversions, WA33

Durkan, Mr M

Assembly Business, 415, 416

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 388, 390, 391

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 202

Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 428

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 422

Oral Answers

- Creative Arts and Culture, 229
- North/South Ministerial Council: Institutional Format, 441–2
- Public Expenditure, 449

Private Members' Business

- Abortion, 435, 463
- Crisis in Burma, 242–3
- IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 521–2

Written Answers

- Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line, WA218
- Civil Service Vacancies, WA56
- Comprehensive Spending Review, WA217, WA218
- Disabled Parking Bays, WA211
- Installation of Disabled Parking Bays, WA212
- Northern Ireland Water, WA216
- Railway Spending, WA218, WA219
- Roads Service Traffic Watch, WA147
- Teacher's Pay and Pensions Branch, WA14

Durkan, Mr M (as Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment)

Executive Business

- Draft Budget 2008-2011, 503, 506–7, 507
- Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 483

Executive Committee Business

- Company and Business Names (Amendment) Regulations 2007, 149

Easton, Mr A

Adjournment

- Future of Donaghadee High School, 306–7

Ministerial Statement

- Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 370–1
- Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 427

Oral Answers

- Agenda for Change: Ulster Hospital, 125
- Public Expenditure, 448

Private Members' Business

- Abortion, 456, 456–7
- IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 519–20
- Referendum on New European Union treaty, 244–5
- Sex Offenders, 304
- World Alzheimer's Day, 46

Written Answers

- Accident and Emergency Waiting Times, WA138
- Available Year 8 Places, WA244
- Donaghadee High School, WA165
- Erection of Illegal Signs, WA212
- Non-EU Nurses, WA204
- Nurse Training Costs, WA205
- Nurses in Training, WA204
- Primary School Pupils in Ards Peninsula Area, WA165

Elliott, Mr T

Assembly Business, 257

Executive Business

- Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 486

Ministerial Statement

- Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 105, 106
- Northern Ireland strategy for sport and physical recreation 2007-17, 264
- Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 427

Oral Answers

- 2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
- Community Training, 341, 342
- Housing Associations: Procurement, 137
- Irish League Football, 231, 232
- Lifetime Opportunities, 23
- Listed Buildings, 29
- Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 346
- North/South Bodies, 223
- Red Meat Task Force, 227

Private Members' Business

- Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 464–5
- Action on Child Poverty, 56
- Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 327–8
- 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 156–7
- Irish Language, 291

Written Answers

- Agricultural Wages Board, WA108
- Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, WA180
- Development at Maze site, WA97–8
- Farm Viability Criteria, WA8
- Hospital Services, WA75
- ICBAN, WA31
- Irish Central Border Area Network, WA29
- Land and Facilities at Castlederg Nursery, WA8
- Lifetime Opportunities, WA3
- Planning Applications, WA23
- Planning Policy Statement 14, WA256
- Pomeroy Business Park, WA290
- Rally Ireland in 2007, WA11
- Social Housing, WA89

Empey, Sir Reg (as Minister for Employment and Learning)

Ministerial Statement

- Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 198, 198-99, 199, 200, 200-1, 201, 201-2, 202, 203

Oral Answers

- Community Training, 341, 342
- Job Ready Scheme, 343
- Research and Development Spending, 339, 340
- Scottish Executive Counterpart, 342, 342-3, 343
- Training Strategies, 341
- Young People Not in Education, Employment or Training, 340, 340-1

Private Members' Business

- Training and Employment Places, 380–3

Written Answers

Adult Further Education Courses, WA182
Adult Learning, WA186
All-Island Skills Conference, WA186
Apprenticeship Scheme, WA185
Apprenticeships, WA46, WA295
Assistance for Low-Income Families, WA183
Belfast Metropolitan College, WA14–15
Budget Negotiations, WA185
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA245–6
Concessionary Fees Scheme, WA186
Cost of Staff Teambuilding Days, WA46
Course Fees, WA121, WA246
Economic Inactivity, WA184
Engineering Degrees, WA248
Engineering Students, WA248–9
Further Education, WA47
Further Education College, Lisburn, WA184
Further Education Concession Fees, WA247
Graduate Jobs, WA246
Holylands Area, WA184, WA186–7
Independent Students, WA16
Industrial Tribunals, WA185
Island-wide Employment Opportunities, WA248
Job Ready Candidates, WA182
Merged Regional Colleges, WA183
Migrant Workers, WA185
National Minimum Wage, WA245
National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy, WA186
New Deal, WA185–6
Non-EU Students, WA183
Northern Ireland Students Studying in the Republic of Ireland, WA184
Press Officers, WA186
Projected Underspend, WA246
Review into Higher Education, WA47
Sector Skills Agreement, WA121
Skills Pool, WA122
Small Businesses, WA182
South Eastern Regional College, WA122
Student Bursaries, WA15
Student Complaints, WA183
Student Enrolments, WA122, WA184, WA247
Student Financial Support, WA184
Student Loans, WA47, WA122
Training for Success, WA182–3
Training for Success Apprenticeship, WA295
University Applications, WA46
University Enrolment, WA16
University of Ulster, Magee Campus, WA182
University Tuition Fees, WA247
Workers' Educational Association, WA246
Workforce Development Forum, WA245

Farry, Dr S

Adjournment
Future of Donaghadee High School, 308–9, 309, 310, 312
Committee Business
Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel on Workplace 2010, 207–8
Committee Stages
Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS150–1, CS151
Executive Business
Draft Budget 2008–2011, 500
Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 490
Ministerial Statement
Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 392
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 367
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 423
Workplace 2010, 6
Oral Answers
Sexual Orientation Strategy and Action Plan, 221
Private Members' Business
Arts Funding, 277–9
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 325, 327
Fiscal Reform, 405–6, 406
Irish Language, 285
Policing in Northern Ireland, 181–2, 182–3, 193–4, 194
Written Answers
A2 Between Bangor and Belfast, WA217
Census, WA201
Conlig Primary School, WA45
Cost of Translations, WA112
Domestic Rating, WA258
Economic Inactivity, WA184
Infraction Proceedings, WA255
Peace III, WA57
Planning Applications, WA53
Policy on Circus Animals, WA154
Racketeering, WA193
Regional Tourism Partnerships, WA17, WA48
Regulation of Circus Animals, WA154
Residents' Parking Schemes, WA142
Review of Domestic Rating, WA258
Transfer Test Advice for Teachers, WA179
Workplace 2010, WA176, WA258–9

Ford, Mr D

Assembly Business, 415, 416
Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS19, CS27, CS29, CS45, CS52, CS55, CS72, CS73, CS113, CS115, CS116, CS117, CS140, CS141, CS142–3, CS143
Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 483

-
- Ministerial Statement
 - Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 106
 - Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 389, 393
 - Planning Application for Development at Titanic Quarter, Belfast, 164
 - Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 428
 - Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 510
 - Oral Answers
 - Carbon Emissions, 30
 - Engagements, 439
 - Lifetime Opportunities, 34
 - Rating Reform, 450
 - Teacher Induction Year, 335
 - 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy', 220
 - Private Members' Business
 - Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 467–8, 469
 - Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 72–3, 73–4, 82, 84
 - Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 247–8
 - Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 173, 178, 178–9
 - Written Answers
 - Bluetongue Disease, WA109
 - Commissioned Report, WA227
 - Comprehensive Spending Review, WA206, WA259
 - Comprehensive Spending Review: Deloitte Touche report, WA197
 - Comprehensive Spending Review: Good Relations, WA197
 - Hightown Bridge, WA279
 - Inward Investment, WA191
 - Planning Policies, WA257
 - Foster, Mrs A
 - Private Members' Business
 - Strategic Planning Policy, 145
 - Foster, Mrs A (as Minister of the Environment)
 - Committee Business
 - Local Government Pension Scheme Regulations 2007: Prayer of Annulment, 113–14
 - Ministerial Statement
 - North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 69, 69–70, 70, 71
 - Planning Application for Development at Titanic Quarter, Belfast, 163–4, 164, 164–5, 165
 - Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 507–14
 - Oral Answers
 - Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures, 444, 444–5, 445
 - Built Heritage, 31
 - Carbon Emissions, 30
 - Drink/Drug Driving, 443, 444
 - Environment and Heritage Service, 447
 - Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, 28, 447, 447–8, 448
 - Listed Buildings, 29, 29–30
 - Mature Garden Trees, 445
 - Planning Policy Statement 14, 32–3, 33
 - Planning Regulations, 448
 - Recycling Levels, 32
 - Retail Development, 446
 - Road Safety Strategy, 28, 29
 - Waste Processing, 31, 31–2, 32
 - Private Members' Business
 - Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 81, 82, 82–3, 83, 85
 - Written Answers
 - Access to the High Mournes, WA132
 - Agricultural Planning Regulations, WA297
 - Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, WA196–7
 - Areas of Special Scientific Interest, WA251–2
 - Beach Quality, WA20
 - Biodiversity, WA257
 - Biodiversity and the Environment, WA27
 - Bonfires, WA27
 - Budget Underspend, WA300
 - Bull Bars, WA252–3
 - Carbon Footprint, WA254–5
 - Christmas Lights on Windows of Vehicles, WA22–3
 - Climate Change, WA256
 - Comprehensive Spending Review: Deloitte Touche Report, WA197
 - Comprehensive Spending Review: Good Relations, WA197
 - Consultancy Expenditure, WA300
 - Control of Cormorants, WA54
 - Co-operation between the Environment Heritage Service and the Environmental Protection Agency, WA256–7
 - Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside, WA257
 - Demolition of Unauthorised Developments, WA252
 - Development Plan Process, WA23–4
 - Development Plans and the Implementation of the Regional Development Strategy, WA26
 - Dibney River, WA19–20, WA49
 - Dog Fouling, WA21, WA130
 - Draft Area Plans, WA26, WA48–9
 - Driving Lessons in Schools, WA20
 - Eastwood Environment Facility WA26–7, WA130
 - Environmental Protection Agency, WA21
 - Fly Posting, WA19
 - Garden Grabbing, WA258
 - Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, WA25, WA26, WA55, WA132–3, WA199, WA200, WA299–300
 - Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: Communication with UNESCO, WA198
 - Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: Correspondence from MLAs, WA197
-

Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: UNESCO Consultation, WA197–8
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: UNESCO Official, WA198
 Gorse Areas, WA196
 Green Areas, WA133
 Greenbelt Foundation and the Woodland Trust, WA133
 Grouse Numbers, WA22, WA23
 Health Impacts of the Built Environment, WA194
 High-Density Developments, WA200
 High Hedges Legislation, WA24
 Illegal Dumping, WA254
 Illegal Waste, WA301
 Industrial Zoned Land, WA254
 Infraction Proceedings, WA255, WA256
 Larne Shoreline, WA199–200
 Lignite Resource Area, WA196
 Marine Bill, WA253
 Medieval Fish Traps, WA196
 MOT Test, WA53, WA298–9
 Motor Homes, WA25, WA301
 Motor Test Certificates, WA25
 Motorcycle Off-Road Tests, WA300
 Motorcycle Track at Nutts Corner, WA24
 National Park, WA49, WA254
 Noise Complaints, WA25
 Northern Area Plan, WA27, WA199
 Nuisance Trees and High Hedges, WA133
 Path Erosion, WA131
 Persistent Organic Pollutants, WA132
 Planning Application Fees, WA22
 Planning Applications, WA19, WA22, WA23, WA24, WA25, WA49–52, WA53–54, WA54–5, WA126–9, WA130, WA195, WA251, WA252, WA297–8
 Planning Applications for Retirement and Farmworkers' Dwellings, WA130–1
 Planning Conditions, WA194–5
 Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, WA195
 Planning Policies, WA257
 Planning Policy Statement 14, WA195, WA256
 Planning Proposal at the Giant's Causeway, WA132, WA199
 Planning Service Staff Vacancies, WA253
 Pollution Enforcement Cases, WA19
 Private Developments, WA300
 Public Consultation, WA26
 Radioactive Waste, WA299
 Recycling, WA20
 Redevelopment of Land, Magheramorne, WA196
 Renewable Energy Schemes, WA253–4
 Report of the Mourne National Park Working Party, WA257
 Review of Council Boundaries and Functions, WA25–6
 Review of Environmental Governance, WA253

Review of Planning Policy Statements, WA21
 Review of Public Administration, WA22, WA134, WA255
 Road Safety, WA255–6
 Rural Planning Policy, WA195
 Seaport Investments Planning Application, WA199
 Special Preservation Order for the Irish Hare, WA53
 Staff Teambuilding, WA197
 Strategic Environmental Assessment, WA133–4
 Sustainable Development — Resource Efficiency, WA19
 Town Centre Living Initiative, WA24
 Tullaghoge Fort, WA52
 Waste Management, WA196
 Waste Offences, WA52–3
 Wastewater Treatment Works at Newcastle, County Down, WA131–2
 Written Driving Test, WA20

Gallagher, Mr T

Committee Stages

Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87, CS111
 Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS120, CS126, CS129, CS141, CS144

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 488
 Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order 2007, 317, 319

Ministerial Statement

Rural Planning Policy and PPS14, 512

Oral Answers

Community Training, 342
 Dickson Plan, 338
 Drink/Drug Driving, 444
 North/South Bodies, 223
 Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 441
 Renewable Sources, 345
 Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary Implications, 453, 454

Private Members' Business

Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 75–6, 76, 83, 83–4
 World Alzheimer's Day, 48

Written Answers

Areas of Special Scientific Interest, WA251
 Crystal Alliance, WA81
 Hospital Pathology Services, WA75
 Illegal Dumping, WA254
 Illegal Waste, WA301
 Traffic Management, WA216–17

Gardiner, Mr S

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS46, CS55, CS120, CS122, CS125

Ministerial Statement
Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 201
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 510

Oral Answers

Dickson Plan, 338
Freedom of Information Requests, 222
North/South Ministerial Council: Institutional
Format, 441
Planning Policy Statement 14, 32, 33
Traffic Congestion in Lurgan, 130

Private Members' Business

Classroom Assistants, 15
Windscale/Sellafield, 530–1

Written Answers

Business Rates, WA263
Sustainable Development Strategy, WA230
Trading Partnerships, WA297

Gildernew, Ms M (as Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development)

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 101–2,
102–4, 104, 104–5, 105, 106, 106–7, 107, 107–
8, 108, 109, 109–10, 110, 110–11, 111

Oral Answers

Agricultural Careers, 227, 228
Crossnacreevy, 228–9
Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 223–4, 224
Protected Regional Food Status, 225–6, 226
Red Meat Task Force, 226–7, 227
Rural Poverty, 224–5, 225

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 470–1,
471, 471–2, 473

Written Answers

Agricultural Wages Board, WA108
Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, WA155–6,
WA233
Agrifood industry, WA5–6, WA26
Agrifood matters, WA106
Alpha-nortesterone, WA104
Animal Incinerators, WA100–2, WA102,
WA102–3, WA153
Animal Welfare, WA289
Beef Production, WA153
Biofuels, WA7, WA8
Bluetongue Disease, WA104, WA109
Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
Brown Crab, WA100
Budget Underspend, WA233
Carbon Footprint, WA290
Coastal Erosion, WA6–7
Common Agricultural Policy, WA105
Common Fishing Strategy, WA99
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA104, WA232
Cost of Animal Feed, WA152
Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or
Brucellosis to Livestock, WA9, WA104–5

Departmental Offices, WA233–4
Designated Water Courses, WA98
Development of Tullaghoge Fort, WA9
Disease Compensation, WA39
Disposal of Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
Dogs (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2001,
WA38
Early Retirement Scheme for Farmers, WA155
EU Agriculture and Fisheries Meeting, WA156
Farm Nutrient Scheme, WA39
Farm Viability Criteria, WA8–9
Farmers Affected by Flooding, WA100, WA290
Fishing Rights, WA107
Flooding at Tromra Road, Cushendall, WA99–100
Food Security, WA290
Foot-and-Mouth Disease, WA103
Forestry, WA5
Fraud, WA38–9
Genetically Modified Crops, WA153
Incentives for Rearing Surplus Young Cattle,
WA155
Information Technology in Farming, WA108
Irish Fish Stocks, WA108–9
Joint Afforestation Strategy, WA6
Kilkeel Harbour, WA103
Lamb Production, WA153
Lamb Promotion, WA104
Land and Facilities at Castlederg Nursery, WA8
Local Community Fund, WA234
Livestock Identity Tags, WA152
Mountain Biking, WA7
National Ploughing Championships, WA232–3
New Entrants Scheme, WA99
Organic Farming, WA9
Organics Sector, WA153
Part-Time Farmers, WA155
Policy on Circus Animals, WA154
Pomeroy Business Park, WA290
Potato Inspection Regime, WA39
Regulation of Circus Animals, WA154
Renewable Energy, WA105–6
Rural Development Council, WA38
Rural Development Programme 2007-2013,
WA105, WA107
Rural Development Programme 2007-2013
Action Groups, WA99
Rural Diversification, WA107
Single Farm Payments, WA7
Sluicing Gates, WA152
Sperrins Environmentally Sensitive Area
Scheme, WA99
Staff Teambuilding Days, WA38
Suckler Beef and Hill Sheep Farmers, WA154
Tullaghoge Fort, WA38

Hamilton, Mr S

- Committee Business
 - Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel on Workplace 2010, 209–10
- Committee Stages
 - Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS147, CS148, CS151, CS151–2
- Executive Business
 - Draft Budget 2008–2011, 498–9
 - Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 484
- Ministerial Statement
 - Workplace 2010, 8
- Oral Answers
 - Local and Regional Rates, 34
 - Protected Regional Food Status, 225, 226
 - Road Safety Strategy, 28, 28–9
- Private Members' Business
 - Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 329–30
 - Crisis in Burma, 215
 - Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 84
 - Fiscal Reform, 398–9
 - Windscale/Sellafield, 527–8, 529, 532
- Written Answers
 - Child Support Agency, WA85, WA221
 - Community Care Packages, WA203
 - Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside, WA257
 - Derryboye Primary School Car Park, WA291
 - European Regulation 1924/2006, WA203
 - Housing Association Property, WA86
 - Housing Executive Properties, WA85, WA86
 - Housing Executive Waiting List, WA85, WA86
 - Invest NI, WA16
 - Job and Benefits Office, Newtownards, WA313
 - MOT Tests, WA298
 - Motor Homes, WA25, WA300
 - National Tourism and Hospitality Skills Academy, WA186
 - Planning Applications, WA130
 - Primary School Curriculum, WA177
 - Programme for Government, WA98
 - Rapid Transit Schemes, WA81
 - Renewable Energy Schemes, WA253, WA254
 - Review of Rating, WA27
 - Septic Tanks, WA77–8, WA308
 - Sign Language, WA113
 - Speed Limits, WA307
 - Traffic Calming at Strangford Heights, Newtownards, WA220
 - Traffic Congestion, WA307, WA308
 - United States Investment Conference, WA192

Hanna, Mrs C

- Adjournment
 - Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery, 411
- Ministerial Statement
 - Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 426
- Oral Answers
 - 'Challenge of Change', 440
 - Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 231
- Private Members' Business
 - Abortion, 436–7
 - Crisis in Burma, 213–15, 215, 217
 - IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 520–1, 251
 - Referendum on New European Union treaty, 250
 - Sex Offenders, 301
 - Windscale/Sellafield, 529–30, 535–6, 536
 - World Alzheimer's Day, 42–3
- Written Answers
 - Alcohol-Related Illness, WA63
 - Ambulances, WA209
 - Charities, WA88
 - Free Public Transport, WA276
 - Speech and Occupational Therapy, WA210
 - Vaccination Programme, WA210

Hilditch, Mr D

- Oral Answers
 - 2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
- Private Members' Business
 - Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 118–9
- Written Answers
 - Civic Forum, WA97
 - Classroom Assistants, WA243, WA244
 - Competitiveness and Employment Programme, WA55
 - End-Year Flexibility, WA264
 - Invest NI, WA17, WA18, WA47, WA48
 - Prosecutions of Illegal Street Traders, WA36
 - Special EU Programmes Body, WA27
 - Street Trader Legislation, WA36
 - VAT-Registered Businesses, WA17

Irwin, Mr W

- Ministerial Statement
 - Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 108
 - Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 421
 - Workplace 2010, 8
- Oral Answers
 - Waste Processing, 31
- Private Members' Business
 - Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 469, 471
- Written Answers
 - Bluetongue Disease, WA109
 - Health and Safety Executive, WA194
 - Home Start Organisations, WA208
 - Mislaidd Benefit Claim Forms, WA88
 - Road Safety, WA275

Kelly, Mrs D

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 391
Workplace 2010, 7

Oral Answers

Agenda for Change: Ulster Hospital, 125
Housing Associations: Opportunity to Purchase
Surplus Land, 138
Lifetime Opportunities, 23
Traffic Congestion in Lurgan, 130

Private Members' Business

Action on Child Poverty, 54–5
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 331, 331–2
Classroom Assistants, 19, 21, 22
'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 158, 161,
161–2, 162
Executive Legislative Programme, 352, 354,
355, 359
Policing in Northern Ireland, 182

Written Answers

All-Ireland Parliamentary Forum, WA225
Appointment of a Victims' Commissioner, WA152
Lifetime Opportunities, WA37
Maze Site Development, WA232
Water Pressure, WA145

Kelly, Mr G

Private Members' Business

Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 331

Kelly, Mr G (as junior Minister)

Private Members' Business

Irish Language, 289–90, 290
Policing in Northern Ireland, 192–3

Kennedy, Mr D

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 108
Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 393
North/South Ministerial Council: Transport,
66–7, 67
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 511

Oral Answers

Drink/Drug Driving, 443
Honours List: Local Alternatives, 24
Housing Applications, 133, 134
Irish League Football, 232
Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary
Implications, 454
Rural Poverty, 225
'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future
Strategy', 220
Transfer Procedure, 335, 336
Varney Review, 37

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 461–2
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 324–5
Classroom Assistants, 19

Crisis in Burma, 217

'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 151, 151–2
Executive Legislative Programme, 349–50, 350,
353, 354

Irish Language, 285, 290–1, 291, 291–2
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 123
Policing in Northern Ireland, 183, 184
Referendum on New European Union treaty,
245–6, 246

Republican Parade, 92, 96

Windscale/Sellafield, 534

World Alzheimer's Day, 47–8

Written Answers

Common Agricultural Policy, WA105
Cost of Translations, WA158
Draft Area Plans, WA26
Efficiency of Departmental Structures, WA2
Land Acquisition at Loughgilly, County Antrim,
WA35–6
Newry Railway Station, WA82
Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit, WA263
Suicide, WA66
Tourism, WA194

Kennedy, Mr D (as Chairperson of the Committee for Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister)

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and Investment
Strategy for Northern Ireland, 481–482, 482

Oral Answers

Engagements, 439

Private Members' Business

Action on Child poverty, 59–60
Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 168

Lo, Ms A

Executive Committee Business

Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
Legislative Consent Motion, 431

Ministerial Statement

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 199–200

Oral Answers

Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 230, 231
Promotion of Good Mental Health, 124, 125
Rural Poverty, 224, 225

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 437
Arts Funding, 265–6
Crisis in Burma, 217
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 118

Written Answers

Garden Grabbing, WA257
Holylands Area, WA184, WA186
OFMDFM Website, WA4
Public Appointments, WA231
The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy,
WA28

Long, Mrs N

Adjournment

Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview
Primary School and Nursery, 410–11

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 481, 487

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 392
North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 70
North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 66
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 420

Oral Answers

Equality Impact Assessments, 25
Housing Associations: Procurement, 136
Mature Garden Trees, 445
Parent-Pupil Interaction, 337
Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 442
Ulster-Scots Academy, 234
Water Charges, 450, 451

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 435
Action on Child Poverty, 56–7
Irish Language, 283, 291
Republican Parade, 92–3, 98
Sex Offenders, 296–7
Strategic Planning Policy, 142, 142–3

Private Notice Question

Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 235, 236,
237

Written Answers

Comprehensive Spending Review, WA227, WA232
Victims' Commissioner, WA98

Lunn, Mr T

Oral Answers

Housing Associations: Opportunity to Purchase
Surplus Land, 137
Environment and Heritage Service, 446, 447

Private Members' Business

Classroom Assistants, 16
Executive Legislative Programme, 352–3

Written Answers

All-Island Autism Centre, WA162
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA28,
WA206, WA220, WA281
Funding Major Infrastructure Projects, WA82
Museums Strategy, WA40
Public Consultation, WA26

McCallister, Mr J

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008–2011, 502
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 489

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 110

Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical
Training, 426

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 421

Oral Answers

Crossnacreevy, 228
GCSE Achievement, 339
Housing Associations: Procurement, 136
Investment from India, 344
Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 441
Rating Reform, 450
Trilingual Translation Services, 123

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 434, 434–5, 435
IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 518
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 120
Policing in Northern Ireland, 187
Sex Offenders, 297
Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 172
Training and Employment Places, 384, 385

Written Answers

Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, WA155
Autistic Spectrum Disorder, WA291
Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown,
WA12, WA237
Industrial Tribunals, WA185
Invest NI, WA17
Report of the Mourne National Park Working Party, WA257
Security Arrangements for Parliament Buildings,
WA93

McCann, Mr F

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of,
388, 390

Private Members' Business

Fiscal Reform, 399
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 114–16,
116, 120, 121

Written Answers

Housing Crisis, WA90
Housing Executive, WA285
Housing Selection Scheme, WA285

McCann, Ms J

Committee Business

Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel
on Workplace 2010, 205–6

Committee Stages

Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts
Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion,
CS150

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008–2011, 505

Ministerial Statement

Outcome of the Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 370

Private Members' Business
Republican Parade, 91–2, 92

Written Answers

Belfast Metropolitan College, WA14
Gender Equality Strategy, WA95
Victims of Domestic Violence, WA64
Woodside Forest Park, WA89

McCarthy, Mr K

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS32, CS37, CS39,
CS61, CS62, CS93, CS94, CS98

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 393
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-2017, 261

Oral Answers

Community Training, 342
Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 223, 224
Paramilitary Groups, 346

Private Members' Business

'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 153–4, 154
Irish Language, 285
IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 517–18, 518, 519
Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 178
Training and Employment Places, 376

Written Answers

Comprehensive Spending Review, WA160, WA239
Concessionary Fees Scheme, WA186
Cost of Division, WA98
Dyslexia, WA161
North/South Ministerial Council, WA1
Public Appointments, WA229
Reduction in Corporation Tax, WA30
Review of Council Boundaries and Functions,
WA25
Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development, WA111–12

McCartney, Mr R

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 393
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 419

Oral Answers

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, 128
EU Regional Development Committee, 26
Sexual Orientation Strategy and Action Plan, 222

Private Members' Business

Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 322
Strategic Planning Policy, 143–4

Written Answers

Dental Guidelines, WA305
Lymphoedema, WA271
North/South Ministerial Council Health Sectoral Meeting, WA76
North/South Regional Hospital Services Group,
WA73
Rail Link between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station, WA279

Rural Public Transport, WA308
Speed Limit in School Zones, WA148
Voluntary and Community Sector Funding, WA285

McCausland, Mr N

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS32, CS33, CS36,
CS37, CS39, CS40, CS58–9, CS59, CS60,
CS61, CS62, CS63, CS64, CS66–7, CS67,
CS68, CS69, CS90, CS91, CS92, CS93, CS94,
CS97, CS97–8, CS98, CS99, CS101, CS108,
CS154, CS155, CS156

Ministerial Statement

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 201
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-2017, 260
Outcome of the Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 366

Oral Answers

Creative Arts and Culture, 229
Research and Development Spending, 339–40
Trilingual Translation Services, 123

Private Members' Business

Arts Funding, 266–8, 276
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 325–6, 326, 331
Irish Language, 281–3, 283
Referendum on the New European Union Treaty,
248
Republican Parade, 88, 89–90, 90, 92, 95

Written Answers

Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, WA293
Expenditure on Irish Language, WA140
Foras na Gaeilge, WA235
Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast, WA111
Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta, WA169
Northern Ireland Direct Project, WA264
Rural Diversification, WA107
Ulster-Scots Language, WA161
University of Ulster, Magee Campus, WA182

McClarty, Mr D

Ministerial Statement

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 199

Oral Answers

Fireworks, 124
Gaelic Language Event: Mull and Iona, 232
Review of Rating, 35–6
Scottish Executive Counterpart, 342

Private Members' Business

Training and Employment Places, 373–4

Written Answers

Invest NI, WA189
Motorcycle Off-Road Tests, WA300
National Minimum Wage, WA245
Northern Ireland Students Studying in the Republic of Ireland, WA184
Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner
for Complaints, WA151

Review into Higher Education, WA46–7
Student Complaints, WA183
Student Financial Support, WA184
University Applications, WA46

McClarty, Mr D (as Deputy Speaker)

Adjournment
Future of Donaghadee High School, 309
Committee Business
Report of the Committee for Finance and Personnel on Workplace 2010, 205
Oral Answers
Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133
Traffic Congestion in Lurgan, 130
Private Members' Business
Action on Child Poverty, 53, 60, 64
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 321, 327,
332, 333
Crisis in Burma, 213, 217, 218
Sex Offenders, 298, 299, 305
Strategic Planning Policy, 139, 145

McCrea, Mr B

Executive Business
Draft Budget 2008-2011, 501, 506
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 484, 485
Ministerial Statement
Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 202–3
Oral Answers
Atomic Energy Authority Technology figures, 444
Housing Associations: Opportunity to Purchase
Surplus Land, 137
Sustainable Development, 131
Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 443
Private Members' Business
Abortion, 457
Classroom Assistants, 10, 10–12, 14, 22, 40–1, 41
'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 154,
157–8, 158, 161
Policing in Northern Ireland, 187, 187–8, 194
Strategic Planning Policy, 144–5, 145
World Alzheimer's Day, 44–5
Private Notice Question
Classroom Assistants' Dispute, 88
Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 236
Written Answers
Classroom Assistants, WA239, WA39–40,
WA40, WA41

McCrea, Mr I

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS28, CS44, CS45, CS72,
CS118, CS119, CS123, CS124, CS125, CS126
Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 490

Ministerial Statement
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 510

Oral Answers

Fireworks, 124
Honours List: Local Alternatives, 24

Private Members' Business

Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 78

Written Answers

Arts Council: Annual Support for Organisation
Programme, WA160
Arts Council Funding, WA234
Blue Disability Badges, WA272, WA273
Burnavon Arts and Cultural Centre in
Cookstown, WA40
Commissioning Groups, WA270
Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013),
WA122–3, WA123, WA124
Efficiency Targets, WA263
Practice-Based Commissioning, WA270
Reformed Health Structures, WA270
Staff Levels in Arts Council, WA160

McCrea, Dr W

Oral Answers

Planning Policy Statement 14, 129
Red Meat Task Force, 226

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 465,
470, 471, 472
Strategic Planning Policy, 143

McCrea, Dr W (as Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development)

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 104, 105, 107

McDonnell, Dr A

Adjournment

Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview
Primary School and Nursery, 407–8, 408

Ministerial Statement

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 423

McElduff, Mr B

Assembly Business, 234

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 110
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 512–13

Oral Answers

Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-2017, 233
North/South Ministerial Council: Secretariat
Accommodation, 25, 26
Planning Policy Statement 14, 32, 33
Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital, 126, 127

Private Members' Business

Arts Funding, 268, 268–9, 276

Irish Language, 283, 284, 291, 292
Windscale/Sellafield, 533, 533–4

Private Notice Question

Classroom Assistants' Dispute, 87

Written Answers

Agri-Food Matters, WA106
Broadband Internet, WA48
Disability Living Allowance, WA88
Former Military Sites, WA286
Intractable Epilepsy, WA207
North/South Ministerial Council Meetings, WA96
Omagh Educational Village, WA181
Public-Sector Jobs, WA29
Whitebridge Road, County Tyrone, WA81

McElduff, Mr B (as Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure)

Committee Business

Libraries Bill: Extension of Committee Stage, 9

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS1, CS2, CS4, CS6, CS7, CS8, CS11, CS12, CS13, CS31, CS32, CS35, CS37, CS38, CS39, CS40, CS57, CS58, CS59, CS60, CS60–1CS61, CS62, CS63, CS64, CS65, CS66, CS67, CS67–8, CS69, CS89–90, CS90, CS90–1, CS91–2, CS92, CS92–3, CS93, CS94, CS95, CS96, CS99, CS100, CS101, CS102, CS103, CS104, CS105, CS107, CS108, CS109, CS153, CS153–4, CS154, CS155, CS155–6, CS156, CS157

Ministerial Statement

Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007-17, 259–60

Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language

Legislation Consultation Process, 365

McFarland, Mr A

Adjournment

Future of Donaghadee High School, 310–11

Oral Answers

Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36
Protected Regional Food Status, 226
Small and Medium-Sized Business Sector, 348

Private Members' Business

Strategic Planning Policy, 146, 146–7, 147
World Alzheimer's Day, 49–50

McGill, Mrs C

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 487

Executive Committee Business

Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
Legislative Consent Motion, 432

Oral Answers

Lifetime Opportunities, 23

Private Members' Business

Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 122–3

Training and Employment Places, 385

McGimpsey, Mr M

Adjournment

Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview

Primary School and Nursery, 409–10

McGimpsey, Mr M (as Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety)

Executive Committee Business

Children (Emergency Protection Orders) Bill:

First Stage, 429

Ministerial Statement

Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical

Training, 424–5, 426, 426–7, 427, 428

Oral Answers

Agenda for Change: Ulster Hospital, 125

Care Matters, 128

Fireworks, 124

Promotion of Good Mental Health, 124–5, 125

Suicide Prevention, 126

Trilingual Translation Services, 123, 123–4

Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital, 126–7, 127, 127–8

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 459–60, 460–61, 462

IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 522–4

Sex Offenders, 301–3

World Alzheimer's Day, 50–1

Written Answers

Accident and Emergency Services at the Mater Hospital, WA61

Accident and Emergency Waiting Times, WA138–9

Age Limit for Purchasing Cigarettes, WA139

Agenda for Change, WA60–1, WA72

AIDS, WA137

AIDS and HIV Prescriptions, WA271

Alcohol-Related Illness, WA63

Alzheimer's, WA72, WA77

Ambulance Provision in Ballycastle, WA208

Ambulance Response, WA138

Ambulance Service Employees, WA61

Ambulance Shortages, WA76

Ambulances, WA208, WA209–10

Artwork Expenditure, WA59, WA60

Asbestos-Related Illness, WA137

Attacks on Fire and Rescue Service, WA72

Autism, WA61, WA63

Bamford Review and Investment for Health Strategies, WA272

Binge-Drinking, WA76, WA303

Biofuels, WA67

Blue-Light Ambulances, WA61

Breast Reconstruction, WA61

British Heart Foundation, WA270–1

Budget, WA264
 Budget Underspend, WA304
 Cancer Consultants, WA210–11
 Cardiac Nursing Provisions, WA139
 Cardiac Risk in Young People, WA304
 Cardiac Screening, WA303–4
 Cardiac Screening for Young People, WA303
 Care Matters Strategy, WA71, WA74–5
 Carers, WA64, WA208
 Caring for Carers Strategy, WA64
 Child Obesity, WA61–2
 Child Protection and Safety, WA76–7
 Coeliac Disease, WA72–3
 Commissioning Groups, WA270
 Community Care Infrastructure Programme, WA207
 Community Care Packages, WA203
 Compensation for Medical Negligence, WA67–71, WA208
 Compensation to Patients, WA264–70
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA206
 Cross-Border Healthcare, WA64
 Dental Guidelines, WA305
 Depression, WA209
 European Regulation 1924/2006, WA203
 Expenditure on Irish Language, WA140
 Firefighters, WA140
 Flu Jabs, WA136
 Gardening and Landscaping Expenditure, WA60
 Health and Social Services Authority, WA302
 Health Implications of Wi-Fi, WA139–40
 Heart Screening Report, WA304
 HIV, WA138
 Home-Start Armagh, WA140
 Home Start Organisations, WA208
 Hospital Pathology Services, WA75
 Hospital Services, WA75
 Hospital Treatment, WA71
 Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure, WA30, WA137
 Intractable Epilepsy, WA207–8
 Introduction of Fluoride into Drinking Water, WA71
 Investing for Health Strategy, WA75
 Locally Produced Food, WA67
 Lymphoedema, WA271
 Medical Secretaries, WA135
 Mental Illness, WA74
 MLA Meetings, WA305
 Mobile Phone Use, WA305
 MRSA, WA77, WA136
 Myasthenia Gravis, WA207
 New Hospital in Omagh, WA204
 NHS Dentists, WA203–4
 NHS Physiotherapists, WA205
 Non-EU Nurses, WA204
 North/South Ministerial Council Health Sectoral Meeting, WA76
 North/South Regional Hospital Services Group, WA73

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, WA271–2
 Northern Ireland-Produced Beef, WA60
 Nurse Training Costs, WA205
 Nurses in Training, WA204–5
 Ophthalmic Services, WA58
 Organ Donor Cards, WA66
 Organ Donors, WA76
 Organ Transplants, WA65, WA65–6
 Out-of-Hours Care, WA63
 Patient Complaints, WA58
 Patients Treated in Great Britain, WA201–2, WA202–3
 Pay Scales, WA73
 Pharmaceutical Payments, WA58
 Physiotherapist Waiting Times, WA205
 Physiotherapists, WA206
 Physiotherapists Commencing Training, WA205
 Physiotherapy Training, WA205
 Practice-Based Commissioning, WA270
 Prescriptions, WA59
 Psychiatric Treatment, WA71
 Reformed Health Structures, WA270
 Regional Acquired Brain Injuries Unit, WA140
 Regional Respiratory Forum, WA59
 Registered Childminders, WA141
 Respiratory Disease, WA59–60
 Satellite Cancer Centre, WA206–7
 Section 56 of Health and Social Care Act 2001, WA67
 Speech and Occupational Therapy, WA210
 Staff Teambuilding Days, WA62
 Strabane Health and Care Centre, WA207
 Stroke Research, WA62
 Stroke Strategy, WA75
 Stroke Units, WA62
 Suicide, WA66–7, WA301, WA301–2, WA302
 Suicide Prevention, WA208–9
 Treatment for HIV/AIDS, WA137
 Vaccination Programme, WA210
 Victims of Domestic Violence, WA64
 Whiteabbey Hospital Site, WA138
 Wi-Fi Wireless Network, WA73–4, WA74
 Workforce Planning, WA72

McGlone, Mr P

Ministerial Statement

Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
 Legislation Consultation Process, 371

Oral Answers

Agricultural Careers, 228
 Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures, 444
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, 28
 Parliament Buildings: Recycling Levels, 39
 Planning Policy Statement 14, 129

Private Members' Business

- Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 83
- Irish Language, 288–9
- Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 167–8

Written Answers

- Child Support Agency, WA283
- Coeliac Disease, WA72
- Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013), WA83
- Departmental Offices, WA233
- Development of Tullaghoge Fort, WA9
- Development Plan Process, WA23
- Draft Area Plans, WA48
- Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning, WA147
- Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, WA200
- Housing Provision, WA31
- Irish on Road Signs, WA33
- MOT Test, WA53
- NHS Dentists, WA203
- Part-Time Farmers, WA155
- Planning Applications, WA22, WA24
- Planning Policy Statement 14, WA195, WA211
- Planning Proposal at the Giant's Causeway, WA132, WA199
- Review of Public Administration, WA22
- Roads Service's Moratorium on Expenditure, WA142
- Rural Planning Policy, WA195
- Town Centre Living Initiative, WA24
- Tullaghoge Fort, WA38, WA52

McGlone, Mr P (as Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment)Committee Business

- Local Government Pension Scheme Regulations 2007: Prayer of Annulment, 112–13, 114

Committee Stages

- Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS15, CS18, CS19, CS19–20, CA20, CS23, CS25, CS26, CS27, CS28, CS29, CS41, CS43, CS45, CS46, CS48, CS51, CS52, CS54, CS55, CS71, CS73, CS75–6, CS78, CS79, CS80, CS81, CS82, CS83, CS84, CS85, CS113, CS114, CS115, CS115–16, CS116, CS117, CS118, CS119, CS120, CS121, CS122, CS123, CS124, CS125, CS126, CS127, CS129, CS130, CS131, CS132, CS133, CS134, CS135, CS136, CS137, CS138, CS138–9, CS139, CS140, CS141, CS142, CS143, CS144, CS145

Executive Business

- Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 485

Ministerial Statement

- Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 508

McGuinness, Mr M (as deputy First Minister)Executive Business

- Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 478–81, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490

Oral Answers

- 'Challenge of Change', 439, 439–40
- Children and Young People, 27, 27–8
- Engagements, 438, 439
- Equality Impact Assessments, 25
- Equality Legislation, WA1, WA225
- EU Regional Development Committee, 26, 26–7, 27
- Honours List: Local Alternatives, 24
- Lifetime Opportunities, 23
- North/South Ministerial Council: Institutional Format, 441, 442
- North/South Ministerial Council: Secretariat Accommodation, 25–6, 26
- Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 440, 440–1, 441
- Rights of Older People, 24, 24–5, 25
- Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 442, 442–3, 443

Private Members' Business

- Action on Child Poverty, 60–2
- 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 158–60, 560, 560–1
- Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 174–7

Written Answers

- A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy, WA229–30
- All-Ireland Parliamentary Forum, WA225
- Annual Remembrance Ceremonies, WA96
- Appointment of a Victims' Commissioner, WA152
- Attacks on Orange Halls, WA96, WA151, WA231
- Budget Underspend, WA228
- Child Poverty, WA5
- Civic Forum, WA2, WA97
- Commissioned Report, WA228
- Comprehensive Spending Review, WA37, WA227
- Consultancy Expenditure, WA289
- Cost of Division, WA98
- Development at Maze Site, WA98
- Economic Development, WA97
- Efficiency of Department Structures, WA2–3
- Equality Legislation, WA1
- Equality Provision, WA1
- European Directives, WA37
- European Union Agenda, WA97
- Executive Committee Meeting, WA228–9
- Gender Equality Strategy, WA95–6
- Integrated Development Fund, WA228
- Investment Strategy, WA2, WA151, WA230
- Inward Investment, WA4, WA96
- Legislative Programme for 2007/2008, WA231
- Lifetime Opportunities, WA3, WA37–8

Links with Scotland, WA229
 Maze Site Development, WA232
 Meetings with Ministerial Counterparts, WA229
 North/South Ministerial Council, WA1–2, WA3–4
 North/South Ministerial Council Meetings, WA96
 Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, WA230
 Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner
 for Complaints, WA151
 OFMDFM Website, WA5
 Older Persons' Commissioner, WA230
 Pension Gratuity Payments to Royal Ulster
 Constabulary Reservists, WA151
 Planning Appeals, WA95, WA227
 Planning Appeals Backlog, WA4
 Planning Appeals Commission, WA227
 Programme for Government, WA3, WA98
 Public Appointments, WA229, WA231
 Public Service Agreements, WA228
 Rights of Disabled People, WA2
 Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA4
 Staff Teambuilding, WA226–7
 Sustainable Development Strategy, WA37, WA230
 Undocumented Irish, WA96
 Victims' Commissioner, WA98, WA230, WA231–2
 Victim's Groups, WA1, WA225

McHugh, Mr G

Ministerial Statement
 Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 109
 Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
 Recreation 2007-17, 265
 Workplace 2010, 8
 Oral Answers
 Empty Homes Strategy, 136
 Planning Regulations, 448
 Sustainable Development, 131
 Tackling Racism and Sectarianism, 442
 Private Members' Business
 Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 469–70,
 470
 Written Answers
 Children from the Travelling Community,
 WA179
 Migrant Workers, WA185
 Road Upgrade, WA305

McIlveen, Miss M

Oral Answers
 Care Matters, 128
 Transfer of Policing and Justice Powers, 221
 Private Members' Business
 Action on Child Poverty, 58–9
 Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 320–1, 321
 Classroom Assistants, 16–17
 Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 119–20
 Written Answers
 Care Matters Strategy, WA74
 Child Poverty, WA91

Childminding, WA44
 Economic Development, WA97
 Lyons Review, WA262
 Northern Ireland Housing Executive Land,
 WA34
 Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education, WA114–15
 Strategic Review of Education, WA114
 Vetting of Workers, WA178

McKay, Mr D

Executive Business
 Draft Programme for Government and
 Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 488
 Ministerial Statement
 Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 109
 Planning Application for Development at Titanic
 Quarter, Belfast, 165
 Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 511
 Oral Answers
 Environment and Heritage Service, 447
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, 447
 Parliament Buildings: Recycling Levels, 38
 Private Members' Business
 Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 76–7
 Policing in Northern Ireland, 188–9
 Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 169
 Windscale/Sellafield, 526–7, 528
 Written Answers
 Ambulance Provision in Ballycastle, WA208
 Assembly Research and Library Service, WA287
 Broadband Availability, WA125
 Bunschoil an Chaistil, WA161
 Community Festivals Fund, WA42
 Derelict Library in Cullybackey, WA110
 Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line,
 WA308
 Directional Signs, WA146
 Sulston Pastoral Care Centre, WA88
 Enrolment Numbers, WA169
 Fish Stocks, WA11
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, WA18,
 WA25, WA55, WA125, WA132
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre:
 Correspondence from MLAs, WA197
 Health Impacts of the Built Environment,
 WA194
 Illegal Fishing, WA42
 Largy Road Route Study, WA146
 Lignite Resource Area, WA196
 Newbuild Social Housing Scheme, WA282
 Parking Tickets, WA145
 Planning Appeals, WA95
 Planning Applications, WA25, WA252
 Review of Road Safety on Frosses Road, WA33
 Road Humps, WA146
 School Amalgamations, WA164

School Bus Seatbelts, WA292
Sewerage Infrastructure, WA275
St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA164
Traffic Calming in Rasharkin, WA80

McLaughlin, Mr M

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 485

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 391

Private Members' Business

Fiscal Reform, 397

Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 245

Written Answers

Education Welfare Officers, WA167

Engineering Degrees, WA248

Engineering Students, WA248

Housing Executive Waiting List, WA285

Invest NI All-Island Economy, WA188

Invest NI Inward Investment Agencies, WA193

Island-Wide Employment Opportunities, WA248

Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, WA195

Vacant Residential Properties, WA285, WA286

McLaughlin, Mr M (as Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel)

Committee Business

Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel
on Workplace 2010, 211–13

Committee Stages

Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts
Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion,
CS147, CS148, CS149, CS150, CS152

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008-2011, 498

McNarry, Mr D

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS1–2, CS2, CS6,
CS7, CS8, CS9, CS13, CS34, CS34–5, CS35,
CS57, CS58, CS59, CS59–60, CS62, CS63,
CS64, CS65, CS65–6, CS66, CS67, CS68,
CS90, CS91, CS93, CS94, CS102–3, CS103,
CS103–4, CS104, CS105, CS106, CS108

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 389
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 261

Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 366

Oral Answers

'Challenge of Change', 440

Equality Impact Assessments, 25

Performing Arts Facility, 230

Parent-Pupil Interaction, 337

Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary
Implications, 453

Teacher Induction Year, 335

Private Members' Business

Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 473

Arts Funding, 268, 269–70

'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 160, 162

Equestrian Sports Events, WA110

Executive Legislative Programme, 354, 357, 359

Irish Language, 280–1, 284, 290, 292

Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 123

Policing in Northern Ireland, 196

Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 178

Written Answers

Conflict Transformation Initiative, WA286

Deliberate Introduction of Tuberculosis or
Brucellosis to Livestock, WA9, WA104

Disease Compensation, WA39

Executive Committee Meeting, WA228

Fraud, WA38

Free Public Transport, WA306

National Stadium, WA111

Pension Gratuity Payments to Royal Ulster
Constabulary Reservists, WA151

Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA4

McQuillan, Mr A

Committee Stages

Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts
Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion,
CS150

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 482

Ministerial Statement

Workplace 2010, 7

Oral Answers

Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 345

Workplace 2010, 37

Private Members' Business

Fiscal Reform, 399–400

Written Answers

Age Limit for Purchasing Cigarettes, WA139

Disability Living Allowance, WA87

Gross Value Added in Northern Ireland, WA29

Newbuild Programmes, WA181

Maginness, Mr A

Assembly Business

Administrative Support for Party Whips, 10

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 490

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 393

Oral Answers

EU Regional Development Committee, 27

Small and Medium-Sized Business Sector, 348

'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future
Strategy', 221

Private Members' Business
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 321–2, 322,
326, 327
Crisis in Burma, 240
Irish Language, 292
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 121–2, 122
Referendum on New European Union Treaty,
246, 246–7, 248, 256
Republican Parade, 90, 90–1
Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 178

Written Answers
Child Support Policy, WA86
Infraction Proceedings, WA256
Regeneration, WA91
Victims' Commissioner, WA231

Maskey, Mr A

Adjournment
Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview
Primary School and Nursery, 409
Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS19
Oral Answers
Listed Buildings, 29
Private Members' Business
Policing in Northern Ireland, 190–1, 195

Maskey, Mr P

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS3, CS31, CS37,
CS62, CS68, CS90, CS96, CS97, CS155,
CS156, CS157
Ministerial Statement
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007–17, 262
Planning Application for Development at Titanic
Quarter, Belfast, 164
Oral Answers
Recycling Levels, 32
Private Members' Business
Arts Funding, 271
Crisis in Burma, 238–9
Written Answers
Inward Investment, WA4, WA96
Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy, WA90–1
Tourist Accommodation, WA194

Maskey, Mr P (as Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment)

Executive Business
Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment)
Order 2007, 316–17

Molloy, Mr F

Ministerial Statement
Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 107
Oral Answers
Investment from India, 344

Waste Processing, 31

Private Members' Business
'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 155
Executive Legislative Programme, 351–2
Republican Parade, 93–4, 94, 97

Written Answers
Biodiversity, WA257
Bovine Tuberculosis and Brucellosis, WA106
Decentralisation of Social Services, WA89

Molloy, Mr F (as Deputy Speaker)

Adjournment
Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview
Primary School and Nursery, 407
Assembly Business, 257
Executive Business
Draft Budget 2008–2011, 493, 501
Ministerial Statement
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007–2017, 257, 261, 262, 264
Oral Answers
Assembly Commission, 38
Private Members' Business
Arts Funding, 265, 268, 275
Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 72, 78, 83, 84, 86
Fiscal Reform, 397, 404
Policing in Northern Ireland, 180
World Alzheimer's Day, 42

Morrow, Lord

Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 484
Ministerial Statement
Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 102, 109
North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 71
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 370
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 511
Oral Answers
Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures,
445
Performing Arts Facility, 230
Private Members' Business
Executive Legislative Programme, 356
Referendum on New European Union Treaty,
255, 255–6, 256
Training and Employment Places, 372
Written Answers
Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges)
Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, WA156
Motorcycle Races, WA188, WA216
Motorcycle Road Races, WA156
Ulster Grand Prix, WA216

Moutray, Mr S

Ministerial Statement

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 420

Oral Answers

Dickson Plan, 338

Millennium Way, Lurgan, 131, 132

Private Members' Business

Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 168–9

Written Answers

Artwork Expenditure, WA59, WA60

Budget, WA264

Community Festivals Fund, WA111

Compensation for Medical Negligence, WA67, WA208

Compensation to Patients, WA264

Cost of Staff Teambuilding Days, WA45

Dickson Plan, WA115

European Directives, WA37

Gardening and Landscaping Expenditure, WA60

Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure, WA30, WA120, WA137

Patient Complaints, WA58

School Repairs, WA115, WA290–1

Single Electricity Market, WA192

Staff Teambuilding, WA113, WA147, WA190, WA197, WA226, WA258

Staff Teambuilding Costs, WA35

Staff Teambuilding Days, WA38, WA62

Teaching Salaries, WA162

Victims' Groups, WA225

Murphy, Mr C (as Minister for Regional Development)

Adjournment

Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview

Primary School and Nursery, 411–13

Ministerial Statement

North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 65–6, 66, 67–8, 68

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 417–18, 418–19, 419, 419–20, 420, 421, 421–2, 422, 422–3, 423

Oral Answers

All-Island Transport Collaboration, 132, 132–3

Battletown Gallery, Newtownards, 133

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, 128, 128–9, 129

Millennium Way, Lurgan, 132, 131–2

Planning Policy Statement 14, 129, 129–30

Sustainable Development, 131

Traffic Congestion in Lurgan, 130, 131

Private Members' Business

Action on Child Poverty, 64

Strategic Planning Policy, 145, 145–6

Written Answers

106A Service from Lisburn to Antrim, WA274

A2 between Bangor and Belfast, WA217

A37 Springwell Climbing Lane, WA220

All-Ireland Ferry Port, WA216

Ballymoney Railway Station, WA306

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, WA81, WA82, WA141–2

Belfast to Coleraine Express Bus, WA280

Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Railway Line, WA218–19, WA307

Blocked Sewers, WA79

Blue Disability Badges, WA273

Bridge at Narrow Water, WA276

Bypass for Ballynahinch, County Down, WA144

Carbon Emissions, WA309

CO2 Reduction, WA309

Companions of Disabled People, WA81

Comprehensive Spending Review, WA217, WA218, WA220

Crystal Alliance, WA81

Departmental Underspend, WA220

Departmental Correspondence, WA279

Derry/Londonderry and Donegal Rail Link, WA309

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, WA308

Directional Signs, WA146–7

Disability Badges, WA305

Disabled Parking Bays, WA211

Drainage Area Plan for Newcastle, WA80

Dual Carriageway between Comber and Newtownards, WA32

Energy Consumption and Emissions, WA277

Erection of Illegal Signs, WA213

European Charter on Regional and Minority Languages, WA82

Executive Sub-Committee on Rural Planning, WA147

Expenditure on Consultants, WA143

Flooding in Warrenpoint, WA30, WA79

Former MOD Sites, WA143

Free Public Transport, WA276–7, WA306

Funding Major Infrastructure Projects, WA82–3

Gortcorbies Climbing Lane, WA79–80

Hightown Bridge, WA279–80, WA280–1

Housing Provision, WA31

ICBAN, WA31

Illegally Erected Monuments, WA273–4, WA274

Independent Water Review Panel, WA274

Installation of Disabled Parking Bays, WA212

Interdepartmental Steering Group, WA307

Irish on Road Signs, WA33

Jordanstown Road, Newtownabbey, WA277

Land at the Ulster Bar Corner, High Street, Antrim, WA144

Largy Road Route Study, WA146

Linen Green Housing Development, Sion Mills, WA220

Mains Water Supply, James Street, Coleraine, WA211

Motorcycle Races, WA216

Newry Railway Station, WA82
 NI Water, WA276
 NI Water's Budget, WA275
 Northern Ireland Water, WA216
 Park and Ride Facilities, WA212
 Park and Ride Schemes, WA308
 Parking Exemptions for Community Carers, WA32
 Parking Tickets, WA145–6
 Pedestrian Crossings, WA144, WA306
 Planning Policy Statement 14, WA211
 PricewaterhouseCoopers, WA275–6
 Provision of Services for People with Disabilities, WA217
 Public Transport, WA78–9
 Rail Link between Waterside Railway Station and Coleraine Railway Station, WA279
 Railway Spending, WA218, WA219
 Rapid Transit Schemes, WA81
 Regional Development Strategy, WA214
 Residents' Parking Schemes, WA142, WA306
 Resurfacing of Road at Main Street, Greyabbey, WA32
 Resurfacing of Roads, WA83
 Review of Road and Rail Infrastructure, WA141
 Review of Road Safety on Frosses Road, WA33–4
 Road Deaths, WA278
 Road Humps, WA146
 Road Improvements, WA147
 Road Infrastructure between Craigavon and Banbridge, WA78
 Road Network Survey Results, WA143–4
 Road Resurfacing at Lansdowne Gardens, Newtownards, WA217
 Road Safety, WA82, WA212, WA275
 Road Safety on the Ballyrainey Road, WA32–3
 Road Service's Moratorium on Expenditure, WA142
 Road Signage, WA277
 Road Signs, WA31
 Road Upgrade, WA144–5, WA305
 Roads, WA278–9
 Roads Maintenance, WA143, WA213–14
 Roads Maintenance Budget, WA78
 Roads Service Traffic Watch, WA148
 Route Corridor Study, WA305
 Rural Public Transport, WA308–9
 Septic Tanks, WA78
 Sewerage Infrastructure, WA275
 Sewage on Lough Park, Ballynahinch, WA80
 Sight-Lines Staff, WA31
 Speed Limit in School Zones, WA148
 Speed Limits, WA307
 Speed Restrictions, WA278
 Staff Teambuilding, WA147
 Ticket Machines, WA278
 Traffic Calming, WA218
 Traffic Calming at Strangford Heights, Newtownards, WA220

Traffic Calming in Rasharkin, WA80–1
 Traffic-Calming Measures on Shore Road, Cushendall, WA215
 Traffic Congestion, WA307, WA308
 Traffic Management, WA215–17
 Traffic Management Review, WA145
 Traffic Management Scheme in Waterfoot, County Antrim, WA214–15
 Train Diversions, WA33
 Two-Way Traffic System on the Shimna Road, Newcastle, WA216
 Ulster Grand Prix, WA216
 Unadopted Roads, WA274
 Wastewater Treatment, WA276
 Water Pressure, WA145
 Westlink Upgrade, WA31
 Whitebridge Road, County Tyrone, WA81

Neeson, Mr S

Executive Business
 Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order 2007, 317
 Oral Answers
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, 447
 Parliament Buildings: Artefacts, 39
 Varney Review, 37
 Private Members' Business
 Fiscal Reform, 394–5
 Written Answers
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA190, WA239, WA245, WA246, WA249
 Investment Strategy, WA2
 Northern Area Plan, WA27
 Renewable Energy, WA105–6

Newton, Mr R

Adjournment
 Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery, 411
 Executive Business
 Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 489
 Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment) Order (Northern Ireland) 2007, 317–18
 Ministerial Statement
 Further Education Lecturer's Pay Dispute, 200
 Oral Answers
 Recycling Levels, 32
 Private Members' Business
 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 155, 156
 Republican Parade, 90, 93
 Training and Employment Places, 376–7
 Windscale/Sellafield, 536, 536–7
 Written Answers
 Financial Services Sector, WA192
 Industrial Derating, WA261
 Titanic Quarter, WA39–40

Ni Chuilín, Ms C

Committee Stages

Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87,
CS88, CS111, CS112

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 488

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 105
Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of,
389, 390
Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 427

Oral Answers

Transfer Procedure, 336

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 436
Action on Child Poverty, 63–4
Irish Language, 283
Sex Offenders, 304–5
World Alzheimer's Day, 46–7

Written Answers

Accident and Emergency Services at the Mater
Hospital, WA61
Agenda for Change, WA60, WA72
AIDS and HIV Prescriptions, WA271
Alzheimer's, WA72, WA77
Bamford Review and Investment for Health
Strategies, WA235, WA272
Breast Reconstruction, WA61
Care Matters Strategy, WA71
Community Arts Projects, WA235
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA285
Housing Executive Waiting List, WA311
Opportunities for Women, WA191
Review of Environmental Governance, WA253
Social Housing, WA90
Vacant Houses, WA311
Vacant Properties, WA311
Warmer Homes Scheme, WA284
Workforce Planning, WA72

O'Dowd, Mr J

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008-2011, 504
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 486

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 390
Workplace 2010, 7

Oral Answers

Traffic Congestion in Lurgan, 130
Transfer Procedure, 336
Workplace 2010, 36, 37

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 455–6, 462
Executive Legislative Programme, 354, 354–5
Irish Language, 292

IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 524–5
Republican Parade, 95, 95–6, 96, 98

Written Answers

Apprenticeships, WA295
Childcare Vouchers, WA261
Disability Badges, WA305
Information Technology in Farming, WA107–8
Investing for Health Strategy, WA75
Private Developments, WA300
Programme for Government, WA3
Road Infrastructure between Craigavon and
Banbridge, WA78

O'Dowd, Mr J (as Chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee)

Oral Answers

Public Expenditure, 449

O'Loan, Mr D

Committee Business

Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel
on Workplace 2010, 207

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008-2011, 499–500
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland,
486–7

Ministerial Statement

Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-2017, 264
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 421
Workplace 2010, 6

Oral Answers

Freedom of Information Requests, 222
Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, 448
Glastry College, 334
Local and Regional Rates, 34
Northern Ireland Civil Service: Sick Absence,
451, 452
Paramilitary Groups, 346
Research and Development Spending, 339
Suicide Prevention, 126

Private Members' Business

Arts Funding, 272–3
'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 157
Fiscal Reform, 397–8, 404

Written Answers

Academic Selection, WA162–3
After-School Clubs, WA162
After-School Facilities, WA168
Ambulance Response, WA138
Assistance for Low Income Families, WA183
Binge Drinking, WA302–3
Bonfires, WA310
Bullying, WA243
Carers, WA208
Childcare Vouchers, WA260–1
Community Festivals Fund, WA290

Depression, WA209
 Dog Fouling, WA130
 Extended Schools Funding, WA237
 Farmers Affected by Flooding, WA100, WA290
 Flooding at Tromra Road, Cushendall, WA99
 Health and Safety Requirements, WA189
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre, WA124–5, WA189, WA191, WA199, WA249, WA299
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre:
 Communication with UNESCO, WA198
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre Seaport
 Investments Planning Application, WA190–1
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: UNESCO
 Consultation, WA197
 Giant's Causeway Visitors' Centre: UNESCO
 Official, WA198
 Housing Executive Properties, WA88
 MAGS2 Funding, WA120
 Mental Illness, WA74
 Myasthenia Gravis, WA207
 Planning Applications, WA54–5, WA126, WA195
 Planning Applications for Retirement and Farmworkers' Dwellings, WA130
 Prospecting Licence, WA250
 Rating of Agricultural Land, WA261
 Residents' Parking Schemes, WA306
 Road Deaths, WA277
 Road Signage, WA277
 School Budgets, WA167
 School Buses, WA164
 School Enrolments, WA121
 Seaport Investments Planning Application,
 WA199
 Small Businesses, WA182
 Small Construction Firms, WA189
 Social Housing, WA222
 Sporting Facilities, WA157
 Sports Coaches in Schools, WA293
 St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA162
 Suicide Prevention, WA208
 Traffic-Calming Measures on Shore Road,
 Cushendall, WA215
 Traffic Management, WA215
 Traffic Management Scheme in Waterfoot,
 County Antrim, WA214
 Transport for Students, WA164
 Victims' Commissioner, WA231
 Visitors' Centre at Giant's Causeway, WA16, WA26
 Waste Management, WA196

O'Neill, Mrs M

Ministerial Statement

Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical Training, 426

Private Members' Business

IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 515–16, 516–17

Written Answers

Air Quality at Anahorish Primary School, WA45
 Companions of Disabled People, WA81
 North South Exchange Trust, WA181
 Rights of Disabled People, WA2
 Stroke Research, WA62
 Stroke Strategy, WA75
 Stroke Units, WA62

Paisley, Rev Dr Ian

Ministerial Statement

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 394

Paisley, Rev Dr Ian (as First Minister)

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and
 Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland,
 475–477, 477–8, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487,
 487–8, 488–9, 489, 490

Oral Answers

British-Irish Council, 219
 Children and Young People, 219, 219–20, 220
 Freedom of Information Requests, 222
 North/South Bodies, 222–3, 223
 Sexual Orientation Strategy and Action Plan,
 221, 222
 'The Cost of Division – A Shared Future
 Strategy', 220, 221
 Transfer of Policing and Justice Powers, 221
 Victims, 223

Written Answers

A Shared Future and Racial Equality Strategy,
 WA229–30
 All-Ireland Parliamentary Forum, WA225
 Annual Remembrance Ceremonies, WA96
 Appointment of a Victims' Commissioner,
 WA152
 Attacks on Orange Halls, WA96, WA151, WA231
 Budget Underspend, WA228
 Child Poverty, WA5
 Civic Forum, WA2, WA97
 Commissioned Report, WA228
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA37, WA227
 Consultancy Expenditure, WA289
 Cost of Division, WA98
 Development at Maze Site, WA98
 Economic Development, WA97
 Efficiency of Department Structures, WA2–3
 Equality Legislation, WA1, WA225, WA226
 Equality Provision, WA1
 European Directives, WA37
 European Union Agenda, WA97
 Executive Committee Meeting, WA228–9
 Gender Equality Strategy, WA96
 Integrated Development Fund, WA228
 Investment Strategy, WA2, WA151, WA230
 Inward Investment, WA4, WA96
 Legislative Programme for 2007/2008, WA231

Lifetime Opportunities, WA3, WA37–8
 Links with Scotland, WA229
 Maze Site Development, WA232
 Meetings with Ministerial Counterparts, WA229
 North/South Ministerial Council, WA1–2, WA3–4
 North/South Ministerial Council meetings, WA96
 Northern Ireland Bureau in Washington, WA230
 Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner
 for Complaints, WA151
 OFMDFM Website, WA5
 Older Persons' Commissioner, WA230
 Pension Gratuity Payments to Royal Ulster
 Constabulary Reservists, WA151
 Planning Appeals, WA95, WA227
 Planning Appeals Backlog, WA4
 Planning Appeals Commission, WA227
 Programme for Government, WA3, WA98
 Public Appointments, WA229, WA231
 Public Service Agreements, WA228
 Rights of Disabled People, WA2
 Royal Ulster Constabulary Reservists, WA4
 Staff Teambuilding, WA226
 Sustainable Development Strategy, WA37, WA230
 Undocumented Irish, WA96
 Victims' Commissioner, WA98, WA230, WA231–2
 Victim's Groups, WA1, WA225

Paisley Jnr, Mr I

Private Members' Business
 Classroom Assistants, 10

Paisley Jnr, Mr I (as junior Minister)

Private Members' Business
 Executive Legislative Programme, 358, 358–9,
 359, 360
 Referendum on New European Union Treaty,
 253–5

Poots, Mr E

Executive Business
 Draft Budget 2008–2011, 502
 Oral Answers
 Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary
 Implications, 453
 Private Members' Business
 Abortion, 456
 Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 73

Poots, Mr E (as Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure)

Committee Stages
 Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS95–6, CS96, CS97,
 CS98, CS99, CS100, CS101, CS102, CS103,
 CS104, CS105–7, CS108–9
 Ministerial Statement
 Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
 Recreation 2007–17, 257–9, 260, 260–1, 261,
 262, 262–3, 263, 264, 264–5, 265

Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
 Legislation Consultation Process, 363–5, 365–
 6, 366, 367, 367–8, 368, 368–9, 369, 370, 371

Oral Answers

2013 World Police and Fire Games, 233
 Creative Arts and Culture, 229, 229–30
 Gaelic Language Event: Mull and Iona, 232
 Irish League Football, 231, 231–2, 232
 Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 230–1, 231
 Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
 Recreation 2007–17, 233, 234
 Performing Arts Facility, 230
 Ulster-Scots Academy, 234

Private Members' Business

Arts Funding, 273–5, 275

Written Answers

1911 Census of Ireland Microfilm, WA157
 Accommodation of Library Services, WA157
 Arts Council: Annual Support for Organisation
 Programme, WA160–1
 Arts Council Funding, WA234
 Bamford Review and Investment for Health
 Strategies, WA235
 Belfast Mela, WA112
 British and Irish Sign Languages, WA42–3
 Budget Underspend, WA235
 Burnavon Arts and Cultural Centre in
 Cookstown, WA40
 Community Arts Projects, WA235
 Community Festivals Fund, WA42, WA111,
 WA290
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA160
 Cost of Translations, WA112, WA158–60
 Derelict Library in Cullybackey, WA110–11
 Dundrod Circuit (Admission Charges)
 Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003, WA156
 Elite Facilities Capital Programme, WA41
 Equestrian Sports Events, WA110
 Fish Stocks, WA11
 Fisheries Conservancy Board, WA236
 Foras na Gaeilge, WA235
 Funding for Karate Sports, WA10
 Gaeltacht Quarter in West Belfast, WA111
 Illegal Fishing, WA42
 Irish Language Act, WA110
 Irish Language Community, WA160
 Libraries Bill, WA10
 Library Authority, WA39
 Maritime Museum, WA234
 Motorcycle Racing on Circuits, WA110
 Motorcycle Road Races, WA156
 Motorcycle Road Racing, WA110
 Museums Strategy, WA40
 National Stadium, WA111, WA112
 North/South Ministerial Council Sectoral
 Meetings, WA112
 Northern Ireland Library Authority, WA10
 Ordnance Survey, WA235

Public Access to Library Services, WA156–7
Public Angling Estate, WA111
Rally Ireland in 2007, WA11
Requests for Funding, WA10
Sign Language, WA113
Single Library Authority, WA10–11
Shooting Sports, WA42
Sport NI, WA41
Sporting Facilities, WA157
Staff in Northern Ireland Library Service by
Grade, WA157
Staff Levels in Arts Council, WA160
Staff Required in Library Services, WA156
Titanic Quarter, WA40
Ulster-Scots and Irish-Gaelic Spending, WA112
Ulster-Scots Curriculum Development, WA112
Ulster-Scots Language, WA161
World Pipe Band Championships, WA110

Purvis, Ms D

Private Members' Business
Classroom Assistants, 12, 13, 16, 22, 41

Ramsey, Mr P

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS2, CS3, CS5, CS90,
CS92, CS93, CS94, CS106, CS107, CS154,
CS155, CS157
Ministerial Statement
North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 69
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 369
Oral Answers
Capital Investment, 452
Carbon Emissions, 30
Mature Garden Trees, 445
Northern Ireland Tourist Board, 346
Parent-Pupil Interaction, 337–8
Scottish Executive Counterpart, 343
Private Members' Business
Abortion, 434, 457–8, 458
Written Answers
Accommodation of Library Services, WA157
Carbon Emissions, WA309
CO2 Reduction, WA309
Derry/Londonderry and Donegal Rail Link, WA309
Housing Energy Performance Certificates, WA34
New Deal, WA185
Provision of Services for People with Disabilities, WA217
Public Access to Library Services, WA156
Staff in Northern Ireland Library Service by
Grade, WA157
Staff Required in Library Services, WA156
Sustainable Development — Resource Efficiency, WA18
Sustainable Development Strategy, WA37
Sustainable Energy, WA250

Ramsey, Ms S

Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 482–3
Ministerial Statement
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-2017, 263–4
Oral Answers
Children and Young People, 27
Private Members' Business
Action on Child Poverty, 53–4
Carers, WA64
Caring for Carers Strategy, WA64
Classroom Assistants, 10
Sex Offenders, 298–9, 299
Training and Employment Places, 372–3, 374, 376
Written Answers
Cold Weather Winter Fuel Payments, WA83
Departmental Funding, WA261
Fuel Poverty, WA84
Meeting Requests, WA261
MLA Meetings, WA305, WA310
Public Service Agreements, WA228
Warm Homes Scheme, WA84

Ramsey, Ms S (as Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning)

Ministerial Statement
Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 198

Ritchie, Ms M (as Minister for Social Development)

Executive Committee Business
Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
Legislative Consent Motion, 431, 432
Child Support (Miscellaneous Amendments)
Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007, 429–30
Ministerial Statement
Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of,
386, 386–8, 389, 389–90, 390, 391, 391–2,
392, 393
Oral Answers
Empty Homes Strategy, 135, 135–6
Housing Applications, 134
Housing Associations: Opportunity to Purchase
Surplus Land, 137, 137–8, 138
Housing Associations: Procurement, 136, 136–7
Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 134
Job Losses: Social Security Agency, 138
Private Members' Business
Mandatory Registration of Landlords, 120–1, 121
Written Answers
Affordable Housing, WA89
Areas of Deprivation, WA34–5
Bonfires, WA221, WA310–11
Budget Underspend, WA311
Burst Water Tanks, WA283
Charities, WA88
Child Poverty, WA90, WA91

Child Support Agency, WA85, WA87, WA148–9, WA149, WA221, WA283–4, WA311, WA312
 Child Support Policy, WA86
 Cold Weather Winter Fuel Payments, WA83–4
 Competitiveness Programme (2007-2013), WA83
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA281, WA285
 Conflict Transformation Initiative, WA286
 Construction of Houses, Armagh City, WA221
 Consultancy Expenditure, WA312
 Conway Mill, WA282
 Decentralisation of Social Services, WA89
 Disability Action, WA149
 Disability Living Allowance, WA87–9
 Down's Syndrome, WA313
 Durlston Pastoral Care Centre, WA88
 Energy Consumption, WA310
 Energy Efficiency, WA83
 First-Time Homebuyers, WA148
 Former Military Sites, WA286
 Fuel Poverty, WA84
 Homeless in South Down, WA222
 Housing Allocation, WA312
 Housing Associations Property, WA86
 Housing Crisis, WA90
 Housing Energy Performance Certificates, WA34
 Housing Executive, WA221, WA285
 Housing Executive Insurance Claims, WA281–3
 Housing Executive Properties, WA85, WA86–7, WA87, WA88, WA312
 Housing Executive Waiting List, WA85, WA86, WA222, WA284, WA285, WA311
 Housing Selection Scheme, WA285
 Job and Benefits Office, Newtownards, WA313
 Land Acquisition at Loughgilly, County Antrim, WA36
 Living Over the Shop Scheme, WA220–1
 Local Community Fund, WA34
 Mislaid Benefit Claim Forms, WA88
 MLA Meetings, WA310
 Neighbourhood Renewal, WA149–50
 Neighbourhood Renewal Partnerships, WA309–10
 Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy, WA91
 Newbuild Social Housing Scheme, WA282
 Northern Ireland Housing Executive Land, WA34
 Prosecutions of Illegal Street Traders, WA36
 Public Housing Units, WA284
 Regeneration, WA91
 Social Housing, WA90, WA149, WA222
 Staff Teambuilding Costs, WA35
 Street Trader Legislation, WA36
 Vacant Houses, WA311
 Vacant Properties, WA311
 Vacant Residential Properties, WA286
 Village Planning Day, WA281
 Voluntary and Community Sector Funding, WA285
 Warm Homes Scheme, WA84–5, WA284
 Woodside Forest Park, WA89

Robinson, Mr G

Executive Business

Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 487

Ministerial Statement

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 420–1, 421

Oral Answers

Derry/Londonderry to Belfast Railway Line, 128

Renewable Sources, 344, 345

Private Members' Business

Crisis in Burma, 241–2

Fiscal Reform, 401

Irish Language, 285–6

Policing in Northern Ireland, 191–2, 192

Windscale/Sellafield, 535

World Alzheimer's Day, 47

Written Answers

A37 Springwell Climbing Lane, WA220

Astro Turf Facilities at Limavady Grammar School, WA243

British Heart Foundation, WA270

Cardiac Nursing Provisions, WA139

Energy Efficiency, WA83

Firefighters, WA140

Fly Posting, WA19

Former MOD Sites, WA143

Gortcorbies Climbing Lane, WA79

Irish Language Schools, WA120

Mains Water Supply, James Street, Coleraine, WA211

Roads Maintenance, WA213

Roads Maintenance Budget, WA78

School Repairs, WA291

Student Enrolments, WA184

Ticket Machines, WA278

Robinson, Mrs I

Adjournment

Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview Primary School and Nursery, 408

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008-2011, 505

Oral Answers

Suicide Prevention, 126

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 433–4, 434, 460, 463

Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 330

Policing in Northern Ireland, 189

Strategic Planning Policy, 147

Training and Employment Places, 379, 380

Written Answers

Animal Incinerators, WA100, WA152

Beef Production, WA153

Cancer Consultants, WA210

Comprehensive Spending Review, WA104

Enrolment Numbers, WA176

Health and Social Services Authority, WA302

Lamb Production, WA153
Lamb Promotion, WA104
Patients Treated in Great Britain, WA201
Persistent Organic Pollutants, WA132
Road Resurfacing at Lansdowne Gardens,
Newtownards, WA217
South Eastern Regional College, WA122
Student Enrolments, WA247
University Tuition Fees, WA247

Robinson, Mrs I (as Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety)

Committee Business
Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill:
Extension of Committee Stage, 112
Committee Stages
Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87,
CS88, CS111, CS112
Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 485–6
Ministerial Statement
Review of Recruitment in Speciality Medical
Training, 427
Private Members' Business
IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 517

Robinson, Mr K

Assembly Business, 234, 257
Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS62–3, CS65, CS67,
CS68, CS92, CS93, CS99, CS99–100, CS100,
CS109
Ministerial Statement
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007–17, 263
Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language
Legislation Consultation Process, 369
Oral Answers
British-Irish Council, 219
Enterprise and Investment Zone, Newtownabbey,
348
Housing Needs: People with Disabilities, 134
Local and Regional Rates, 33, 33–4
Minority Ethnic Groups: Arts Funding, 231
Promotion of Good Mental Health, 125
Research and Development Spending, 339
Retail Development, 446
Private Members' Business
Arts Funding, 271, 272
Classroom Assistants, 19, 20
Executive Legislative Programme, 356, 356–7, 357
Irish Language, 288
Written Answers
All-Ireland Ferry Port, WA216
Belfast Mela, WA112
Classroom Teachers, WA180
Fast-Ferry Linkages, WA188

Flood Compensation, WA263
High Density Developments, WA200
Invest NI, WA187
Invest NI Global Point Development, WA187
Jordanstown Road, Newtownabbey, WA277
Larne Shoreline, WA199
Maritime Museum, WA234
Merged Regional Colleges, WA183
MRSA, WA77
Non-EU Students, WA183
Nuisance Trees and High Hedges, WA133
Older Persons' Commissioner, WA230
Park and Ride Facilities, WA212
Park and Ride Schemes, WA308
Planning Applications, WA297
Public-Sector Employment, WA135, WA200
Redevelopment of Land, Magheramorne, WA196
Registered Childminders, WA141
Road Safety, WA212
Speed Restrictions, WA278
Teacher-Training Courses, WA175
Training for School Governors, WA175
University of Ulster Patents, WA188
Whiteabbey Hospital Site, WA138

Robinson, Mr P

Ministerial Statement
Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of,
388, 391, 394

Robinson, Mr P (as Minister of Finance and Personnel)

Committee Business
Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel
on Workplace 2010, 210–11
Executive Business
Draft Budget 2008–2011, 491, 491–3, 493–8
Ministerial Statement
Workplace 2010, 2–5, 5, 6, 6–7, 7, 7–8, 8, 9
Oral Answers
Capital Investment, 452
Childcare Voucher Scheme, 36
Lifetime Opportunities, 34, 34–5
Local and Regional Rates, 33, 34
Northern Ireland Audit Office: Earlier
Intervention, 38
Northern Ireland Civil Service: Sick Absence,
451–2, 452
Public Expenditure, 448, 448–9, 449
Rating Reform, 450
Review of Rating, 35–6
Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary
Implications, 453
Varney Review, 37–8
Water Charges, 450–1, 451
Workplace 2010, 36–7, 37
Private Members' Business
Fiscal Reform, 401–4

Written Answers

Approval of Government Expenditure, WA264
Barnett Consequential, WA29
Budget Underspend, WA260, WA262–3
Business Rates, WA263
Census, WA201
Childcare Vouchers, WA260–1
Civil Partnerships, WA134
Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme, WA135
Civil Service Recruitment, WA29
Civil Service Vacancies, WA56
Classroom Assistants' Dispute, WA262
Competitiveness and Employment Programme, WA55–6
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA28, WA201, WA259
Departmental Funding, WA261
Domestic Rating, WA258
Efficiency Targets, WA263
End-Year Flexibility, WA264
Flood Compensation, WA263
Full-Rate Liability for Industrial Rates, WA28
Government Legal Services, WA30
Graduate Entry to the NICS, WA259
Gross Value Added in Northern Ireland, WA29
Industrial Derating, WA261
Information Technology, WA262
Interreg IV Programme, WA29
Irish Central Border Area Network, WA29
Lyons Review, WA262
Meeting Requests, WA261
Ministerial Cars, WA260
Northern Ireland Direct Project, WA264
Parenting Initiatives, WA200–1
Peace III, WA57
Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit, WA263
Public-Sector Employment, WA135, WA200
Public-Sector Jobs, WA29
Public-Service Jobs, WA263–4
Rates Relief, WA58
Rating of Agricultural Land, WA261
Reduction in Corporation Tax, WA30
Review of Domestic Rating, WA258
Review of Rating, WA27–8
Special EU Programmes Body, WA27
Staff Teambuilding, WA258
The Cost of Division – A Shared Future Strategy, WA28
Workplace 2010, WA259

Ross, Mr A

Ministerial Statement

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 202
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007-17, 263

Oral Answers

Carbon Emissions, 30
Environment and Heritage Service, 447

Gaelic Language Event: Mull and Iona, 232
Northern Ireland Civil Service: Sick Absence, 452
Rights of Older People, 24
Salt Caves: Licences, 347
Teacher Induction Year, 334
Varney Review, 37
Young People not in Education, Employment or Training, 340

Private Members' Business

Policing in Northern Ireland, 189–90
Training and Employment Places, 377

Written Answers

European Union Agenda, WA97
Press Officers, WA186

Ruane, Ms C (as Minister of Education)

Adjournment

Future of Donaghadee High School, 311–12, 312–13

Oral Answers

Dickson Plan, 338
GCSE Achievement, 339
Glastry College, 334
Parent-Pupil Interaction, 337, 338
Teacher Induction Year, 334, 334–5, 335
Transfer Procedure, 335–6, 336

Private Members' Business

Classroom Assistants, 19, 19–20, 20, 21

Private Notice Question

Classroom Assistants' Dispute, 87, 88
Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 235, 235–6, 236, 237

Written Answers

Academic Best Practice, WA245
Academic Selection, WA163
Access Audits, WA241
After-School Clubs, WA162
After-School Facilities, WA168
Air Quality at Anahorish Primary School, WA45
All-Island Autism Centre, WA162
Antisocial Behaviour, WA180
Assembly Questions, WA44
Astro Turf Facilities at Limavady Grammar School, WA243
Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, WA180–1
Autistic Spectrum Disorder, WA291
Autistic Spectrum Disorders Programme, WA291
Available Year 8 Places, WA244
Budget Underspend, WA293
Bullying, WA243
Bunschoil an Chaistil, WA161
Bus Passes, WA164
Centre of Excellence for Autism at Middletown, WA12–13, WA237
Childminder Start-Up Package, WA117–18
Childminding, WA44

Children from the Travelling Community, WA179–80
 Chinese Language School, WA113
 Classroom Assistants, WA240, WA240–41, WA241, WA243–4
 Classroom Teachers, WA180
 Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, WA293
 Commissioners, WA45
 Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse, WA115–17
 Comprehensive Spending Review, WA239
 Conlig Primary School, WA45
 Counselling in Schools, WA43
 Creationism, WA13, WA166
 Curriculum Reserve Support, WA113
 Derryboye Primary School Car Park, WA291, WA293
 Dickson Plan, WA115
 Disability Access, WA44–5
 Donaghadee High School, WA165
 Dyslexia, WA161–2
 Education and Skills Authority, WA243, WA244, WA293, WA294
 Education Welfare Officers, WA167
 Educational Standards, WA242, WA242–3
 Enrolment Numbers, WA169–70, WA170, WA170–3, WA173–5, WA176, WA176–7, WA177
 Entitlement Framework, WA241
 Extended Schools Funding, WA237
 Fair Employment Practices in WELB, WA166–7
 Financial Deficits, WA45
 Free School Meals, WA118–20
 Future of A Levels, WA179
 GCSE and A-Level Courses, WA13
 Glashy College, WA239
 Governing Body of SELB, WA237
 Hospitality and Entertainment Expenditure, WA120
 Iontaobhas na Gaelscolaíochta, WA169
 Irish Language Schools, WA120
 Irish-Medium Schools, WA179
 Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards, WA168
 Local Business Needs, WA163
 MAGS2 Funding, WA120
 Newbuild Programmes, WA181
 Newbuild School, WA237
 North South Exchange Trust, WA181
 Omagh Educational Village, WA181
 Parkhall School, Antrim, WA45
 Post-Primary Education, WA294
 Primary School Curriculum, WA177–8
 Primary School Pupils in Ards Peninsula Area, WA165
 Priory Integrated College, WA11
 Pupils in Irish Language Schools, WA163
 Registered Childminders, WA117
 Report of the Independent Strategic Review of Education, WA115
 Retired Teachers, WA166

Review of Irish-Medium Education, WA295
 Review of Public Administration, WA294
 Review of Public Administration and the Education and Skills Authority, WA243
 School Amalgamations, WA164–5, WA167
 School Budgets, WA167–8
 School Bus Seatbelts, WA292
 School Buses, WA164
 School Enrolments, WA121
 School Financial Deficits, WA237, WA238
 School Repairs, WA115, WA291, WA291–2
 Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life, WA238, WA239
 Sign Language, WA121
 Sports Coaches in Schools, WA293
 St Aloysius High School, Cushendall, WA162, WA164
 St Colmgall's Primary School, WA44
 Staff Teambuilding, WA113
 Strategic Review of Education, WA114
 Suspension of Members of South Eastern Education and Library Board, WA13
 Teacher-Training Courses, WA175–6
 Teachers' Pay and Pensions Branch, WA14
 Teaching of Creationism in Schools, WA166
 Teaching Salaries, WA162
 Training for School Governors, WA175
 Transfer Test, WA161
 Transfer Test Advice for Teachers, WA179
 Transfer Test Replacement, WA178
 Transport for Students, WA164
 Ulster Scots, WA44
 Unoccupied Desks, WA236–7
 Vetting of Workers, WA178
 Workforce, WA43
 Workplace 2010, WA176
 Young People's Skills, WA163
 Youth Outreach Work, WA13–14

Savage, Mr G

Ministerial Statement
 Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 111
 Oral Answers
 Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 224
 Private Members' Business
 Abolition of Agricultural Wages Board, 472–3, 473, 473–4
 Crisis in Burma, 216–17
 Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 250
 Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 174
 Written Answers
 Budget Underspend, WA228, WA233, WA235, WA260, WA293, WA295, WA300, WA304, WA311
 Consultancy Expenditure, WA289, WA296, WA300, WA312
 Department Underspend, WA220

Disposal of Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 Early Retirement Scheme for Farmers, WA155
 Education and Skills Authority, WA243, WA244, WA294
 EU Agriculture and Fisheries Meeting, WA156
 Food Security, WA290
 Incentives for Rearing Surplus Young Cattle, WA155
 NI Water's Budget, WA275
 PricewaterhouseCoopers, WA275
 Projected Underspend, WA246
 Review of Public Administration, WA294
 Review of Public Administration and the Education and Skills Authority, WA243

Shannon, Mr J

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS3, CS6, CS10, CS11, CS58, CS59, CS62, CS63, CS64, CS67, CS91, CS92, CS93, CS94, CS99, CS101, CS104, CS105, CS154, CS155

Executive Committee Business

Child Maintenance and Other Payments Bill:
 Legislative Consent Motion, 432

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 110
 Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation 2007-17, 262
 North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 70
 Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language Legislation Consultation Process, 367
 Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 513
 Workplace 2010, 8

Oral Answers

Agricultural Careers, 228
 Battletown Gallery, Newtownards, 133
 Children and Young People, 219
 Glasyry College, 334
 Parliament Buildings: Artefacts, 39
 Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 440
 Scottish Executive Counterpart, 343

Private Members' Business

Abortion, 458, 463
 Action on Child Poverty, 57-8
 Arts Funding, 276-7, 277
 Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 330, 330-1
 Classroom Assistants, 18-19
 Crisis in Burma, 217-18
 'Equality in Northern Ireland' Report, 154
 Executive Legislative Programme, 355, 355-6
 Irish Language, 287-8
 IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 521
 Policing in Northern Ireland, 192, 195
 Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 251-2
 Regional Development Strategy, WA214
 Strategic Planning Policy, 147

Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 169, 169-70, 170
 Training and Employment Places, 378-9, 379
 Windscale/Sellafield, 533, 534
 World Alzheimer's Day, 48-9

Written Answers

1911 Census of Ireland Microfilm, WA157
 AIDS, WA137
 Apprenticeship Scheme, WA185
 Apprenticeships, WA46
 Attacks on Fire and Rescue Service, WA71
 Biodiversity and the Environment, WA27
 Blocked Sewers, WA79
 Bluetongue Disease, WA104
 Burst Water Tanks, WA283
 Child Support Agency, WA87, WA148, WA311
 Childminder Start-Up Package, WA117
 Christmas Lights on Windows of Vehicles, WA22
 Civic Forum, WA2
 Control of Cormorants, WA54
 Derryboye Primary School Car Park, WA292
 Designated Water Courses, WA98
 Dibney River, WA19, WA49
 Disability Action, WA149
 Dog Fouling, WA21
 Dual Carriageway Between Comber and Newtownards, WA32
 Eel Grass in Strangford Lough, WA53
 Elite Facilities Capital Programme, WA41
 Fisheries Conservancy Board, WA235, WA236
 Fishing Rights, WA107
 Flu Jabs, WA136
 Funding for Karate sports, WA10
 Glasyry College, WA239
 Grouse Numbers, WA22, WA23
 Health Implications of Wi-Fi, WA139
 High Hedges Legislation, WA24
 HIV, WA138
 Housing Executive Insurance Claims, WA281
 Introduction of Fluoride into Drinking Water, WA71
 Investment Strategy, WA151
 Libraries Bill, WA10
 Library Authority, WA39
 Marine Bill, WA253
 Motorcycle Racing on Circuits, WA110
 Motorcycle Road Racing, WA110
 MRSA, WA136
 National Parks, WA49
 New Hotels, WA296
 NI Water, WA276
 Northern Ireland Library Authority, WA10
 Northern Ireland-Produced Beef, WA60
 Ordnance Survey, WA235
 Organ Donor Cards, WA66
 Organ Donors, WA76
 Organ Transplants, WA64
 Parking Exemptions for Community Carers, WA32

Planning Appeals, WA95
 Planning Application, WA252
 Planning Conditions, WA194
 Psychiatric Treatment, WA71
 Regional Development Strategy, WA214
 Registered Childminders, WA117
 Resurfacing of Road at Main Street, Greyabbey, WA32
 Road Safety, WA255
 Road Safety on the Ballyrainey Road, WA32
 School Amalgamations, WA167
 Sector Skills Agreement, WA121
 Sight-Lines Staff, WA31
 Sign Language, WA121
 Single Library Authority, WA10
 Shooting Sports, WA42
 Skills Pool, WA122
 Sluicing Gates, WA152
 Special Preservation Order for the Irish Hare, WA53
 Sport NI, WA41
 Strategic Environmental Assessment, WA133, WA144
 Student Bursaries, WA15
 Student Enrolments, WA122
 Student Loans, WA47, WA121
 Tourist Events, WA47–8
 Treatment for HIV/AIDS, WA137
 Ulster Scots, WA44
 Wastewater Treatment, WA276
 Wi-Fi technology, WA223
 Wi-Fi wireless network, WA73, WA74
 Workers' Educational Association, WA246

Simpson, Mr D

Oral Answers

Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133
 Paramilitary Groups, 347
 Promotion of Good Mental Health, 125
 Retail Development, 446

Private Members' Business

Policing in Northern Ireland, 194–5, 195, 195–6, 196
 Windscale/Sellafield, 532

Written Answers

Access Audits, WA241
 Agri-Food Industry, WA5, WA6
 Areas of Deprivation, WA34
 Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, WA81
 Child Obesity, WA61
 Child Protection and Safety, WA76
 Complaints of Child Sexual Abuse, WA115
 Disability Access, WA44
 Educational Standards, WA241–3
 Entitlement Framework, WA241
 Equality Provision, WA1
 GCSE and A-Level Courses, WA13
 Noise Complaints, WA24

Ophthalmic Services, WA58
 Pharmaceutical Payments, WA58
 Prescriptions, WA58
 Regional Respiratory Forum, WA59
 Respiratory Disease, WA59
 Scientific Explanations of the Origin and Development of Life, WA238
 Unoccupied Desks, WA236
 Workforce, WA43

Speaker (Mr W Hay)

Assembly Business, 197, 234, 315, 415–16

Members' Participation in Debates, 1

Ministerial Statements, 1

Retirement of Clerk to Assembly, 1

Committee Business

Committee Membership, 111

Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel on Workplace 2010, 204

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008-2011, 491, 506, 507

Draft Programme for Government and Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 475, 481, 482, 483, 484, 487, 488

Ministerial Statement

Bluetongue/Foot-and-Mouth Disease, 101, 104, 105, 105–6, 107, 109, 110

Further Education Lecturers' Pay Dispute, 198

Conflict Transformation Initiative, Future of, 386, 388, 389, 390, 391, 393, 394

North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 69

North/South Ministerial Council: Transport, 65, 67, 68

Outcome of Proposed Irish-Language

Legislation Consultation Process, 363, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371

Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 417

Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 507

Workplace 2010, 2

Oral Answers

Agricultural Careers, 228

Atomic Energy Authority Technology Figures, 444

British-Irish Council, 219

Care Matters, 128

Crossnacreevy, 229

Dickson Plan, 338

Drink/Drug Driving, 443

Engagements, 439

Environment, 28

Equality Impact Assessments, 25

Freedom of Information Requests, 222

GCSE Achievement, 339

Northern Ireland Audit Office: Earlier Intervention, 38

Parent-Pupil Interaction, 337

Planning Policy Statement 14, 33

Planning Regulations, 448

Plans to Promote Northern Ireland, 441

Public Expenditure, 449
Rating Reform, 450
Recycling Levels, 32
Review of Rating Policy: Budgetary
Implications, 453, 453–4, 454
Road Safety Strategy, 29
Teacher Induction Year, 334, 335
‘The Cost of Division – A Shared Future
Strategy’, 220
Transfer Procedure, 336
Tyrone and Fermanagh Hospital, 127
Victims, 223
Waste Processing, 32

Private Members’ Business
Abortion, 455, 457, 458
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 320
Fiscal Reform, 394
Irish Language, 280, 284, 285, 286, 287, 290,
291, 292
IVF Fertility Waiting Lists, 514, 516, 521
Policing in Northern Ireland, 184, 194, 196
Republican Parade, 88, 90, 92, 94, 95, 96
Sex Offenders, 293
Sustainable Development and Climate Change, 165
Training and Employment Places, 372, 379
Private Notice Question
Classroom Assistants’ Dispute, 87, 88
Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 235, 236, 237

Spratt, Mr J

Adjournment
Traffic-Calming Requirements at Loughview
Primary School and Nursery, 408, 408–9
Executive Business
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 488
Ministerial Statement
Further Education Lecturers’ Pay Dispute, 199
Oral Answers
Irish League Football, 231
Listed Buildings, 29
‘The Cost of Division – A Shared Future
Strategy’, 220
Private Members’ Business
Action on Child Poverty, 55–6
‘Equality in Northern Ireland’ Report, 152
Executive Legislative Programme, 353, 353–4, 354
Policing in Northern Ireland, 185
Referendum on New European Union Treaty, 251
Republican Parade, 95
Sustainable Development and Climate Change,
172–3
Training and Employment Places, 375–6
Written Answers
All-Island Skills Conference, WA186
Chinese Language School, WA113
Commissioners, WA45

Governing Body of SELB, WA237
Graduate Earnings, WA191
Graduate Entry to the NICS, WA259
Graduate Jobs, WA246
Illegally Erected Monuments, WA273, WA274
Independent Students, WA16
Links with Scotland, WA229
University Enrolment, WA16
Village Planning Day, WA281
Workforce Development Forum, WA245

Storey, Mr M

Executive Business
Draft Budget 2008-2011, 504
Draft Programme for Government and
Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 486
Draft Renewables Obligation (Amendment)
Order 2007, 318
Ministerial Statement
Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical
Recreation 2007-17, 264
Oral Answers
Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, 133
Giant’s Causeway Visitors’ Centre, 28
Housing Applications, 134
Job Ready Scheme, 343
Lifetime Opportunities, 35
Sexual Orientation Strategy and Action Plan, 221
Victims, 223
Water Charges, 451
Private Members’ Business
Fiscal Reform, 396–7
Republican Parade, 88, 90, 94, 96
Private Notice Question
Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 237
Written Answers
Ballycastle to Campbelltown Ferry, WA249
Ballymoney Railway Station, WA306
Belfast to Dublin Rail Link, WA82, WA141
Belfast to Coleraine Express Bus, WA280
Belfast to Derry/Londonderry Rail Line, WA306–7
Creationism, WA13, WA166
Curriculum Reserve Support, WA113
Down’s Syndrome, WA313
Education and Skills Authority, WA294
Equality Legislation, WA1, WA225, WA256
Financial Deficits, WA45
Hospital Treatment, WA71
Interdepartmental Steering Group, WA307
Irish Language Act, WA110
Job Ready Candidates, WA182
Legal Proceedings Involving Education and Library Boards, WA168
Local Business Needs, WA163
National Stadium, WA112
Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, WA271
Pollution Enforcement Cases, WA19
Post-Primary Education, WA294

Public Transport, WA78
Pupils in Irish Language Schools, WA163
Requests for Funding, WA10
Review of Road and Rail Infrastructure, WA141
School Financial Deficits, WA237, WA238
Teaching of Creationism in Schools, WA166
Transfer Test Replacement, WA178
Waste Offences, WA52
World Pipe Band Championships, WA110
Young People's Skills, WA163

Storey, Mr M (as Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel)

Committee Business
Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel
on Workplace 2010, 204–5, 205
Ministerial Statement
Workplace 2010, 5

Weir, Mr P

Adjournment
Future of Donaghadee High School, 309–10
Committee Business
Report of Committee for Finance and Personnel
on Workplace 2010, 208–9
Committee Stages
Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts
Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion,
CS147, CS149, CS150
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS18, CS23, CS25, CS26,
CS29, CS43, CS44, CS47, CS48, CS51, CS73,
CS75, CS76–7, CS77, CS83–4, CS84, CS129,
CS131, CS132, CS135, CS136, CS140
Executive Business
Draft Budget 2008–2011, 501
Ministerial Statement
North/South Ministerial Council: Road Safety, 69
Planning Application for Development at Titanic
Quarter, Belfast, 164
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 509
Workplace 2010, 6
Oral Answers
North/South Bodies, 222, 223
Review of Rating, 35
Private Members' Business
Bill of Rights Forum Membership, 322, 326, 327
Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 74–86
Policing in Northern Ireland, 185
Sex Offenders, 295
Strategic Planning Policy, 146
Written Answers
Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, WA233
Asbestos, WA48
Asbestos-Related Illness, WA125, WA137
Asbestos-Related Illness: Harland and Wolff,
WA126
Civil Service Injury Benefits Scheme, WA134,

WA135
Comprehensive Spending Review, WA201
Course Fees, WA121
Further Education, WA47
Review of Public Administration, WA134, WA255

Wells, Mr J

Ministerial Statement
Planning Application for Development at Titanic
Quarter, Belfast, 164
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 419
Rural Planning Policy and PPS 14, 513
Oral Answers
Planning Policy Statement 14, 33
Private Members' Business
Abortion, 435, 436, 457
Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 79–80, 85
Strategic Planning Policy, 140, 141
Sustainable Development and Climate Change,
171–12, 172, 178
Written Answers
Ambulances, WA208
Areas of Special Scientific Interest, WA252
Bull Bars, WA252
Demolition of Unauthorised Developments, WA252
Departmental Correspondence, WA279
Independent Water Review Panel, WA274
Northern Area Plan, WA199
Planning Appeals, WA227
Planning Appeals Commission, WA227
Planning Applications, WA251
Planning Service Staff Vacancies, WA253

Wilson, Mr B

Adjournment
Future of Donaghadee High School, 310
Ministerial Statement
Review of Water and Sewerage Services, 422
Private Members' Business
Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 85, 86
Sustainable Development and Climate Change,
165, 166
Windscale/Sellafield, 531, 532
Written Answers
Animal Welfare, WA289
Energy Consumption, WA310
Energy Consumption and Emissions, WA277
Environmental Protection Agency, WA21
Further Education Concession Fees, WA247
Priory Integrated College, WA11
Radioactive Waste, WA299
Suicide, WA302
Suspension of Members of South Eastern
Education and Library Board, WA13

Wilson, Mr S

Executive Business

Draft Budget 2008-2011, 502

Draft Programme for Government and

Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, 484,
489

Ministerial Statement

Workplace 2010, 8

Oral Answers

Transfer Procedure, 336

Private Members' Business

Classroom Assistants, 12–13, 14, 21, 22

Crisis in Burma, 215, 240–1

Establishment of Independent Environmental Protection Agency, 81, 82Executive Legislative Programme, 350, 351,
352, 358Referendum on New European Union Treaty,
246, 249

Republican Parade, 97, 98

Strategic Planning Policy, 142, 145

Sustainable Development and Climate Change,
166, 170, 172, 173

Private Notice Question

Classroom Assistants' Dispute, 87, 88

Written Answers

Enrolment Numbers, WA176

Legislative Programme for 2007/2008, WA231

NHS Physiotherapists, WA205

Physiotherapist Waiting Times, WA205

Physiotherapists, WA206

Physiotherapists Commencing Training, WA205

Physiotherapy Training, WA205

Wilson, Mr S (as Chairperson of the Committee for Education)

Private Notice Question

Strike Action by Classroom Assistants, 236

PART III (STRANGERS' INDEX)

Beckett, Mr James (Transport and General Workers' Union)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS20, CS25, CS26, CS27-8

Black, Mr William (International Airport Taxi Co Ltd)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS48-52

Cairns, Ms Joyce (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety)

Committee Stages
Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87, CS111

Connolly, Mrs Anne (North Eastern Education and Library Board)

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS2, CS3-4

Corey, Mr John (Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance)

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS7, CS8, CS9, CS10, CS11, CS12, CS13

Daniels, Mr Richard (London Taxis International)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS22-3, CS24, CS25

Dempster, Mr Raymond (Accessible Taxi Association NI)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS41-2, CS43-4, CS44-5

Doherty, Mr Kevin (Disability Action)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS71-2, CS73

Fleming, Ms Barbara (Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS17-18, CS18, CS19

Grogan, Mr Eamon (Accessible Taxi Association NI)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS41, CS42, CS43, CS45

Jack, Mr Colin (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure)

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS97, CS98, CS100, CS107

Kelly, Mr Noel (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure)

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS34, CS35

Knox, Ms Irene (proposed Northern Ireland Library Authority)

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS96, CS97, CS98, CS100, CS104, CS104-5, CS107

Lambe, Mr Neil (Department of Finance and Personnel)

Committee Stages
Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS149, CS151

Lavery, Mr Bill (Department of the Environment)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS118-19, CS120, CS121, CS124, CS125

Lennon, Mrs Agnes (Department of Finance and Personnel)

Committee Stages
Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS149, CS150, CS152

Lorimer, Mr Michael (Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS15-17, CS18-19

McCartney, Mr William (North Eastern Education and Library Board)

Committee Stages
Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS1, CS4

McCloskey, Mr Anthony (George Best Belfast City Airport Taxi Rank)

Committee Stages
Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS28-9

McKeown, Ms Patricia (UNISON)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS4-5, CS6, CS7

McMullan, Mr John (Department of the Environment)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS73-4, CS75, CS76, CS77-8, CS113-14, CS115, CS116, CS117, CS121, CS122, CS123, CS124, CS125, CS126-7, CS129, CS130-1, CS132, CS133, CS134, CS135-6, CS137, CS138, CS139, CS141, CS143, CS144

McVeigh, Mr James (International Airport Taxi Co Ltd)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS52-5

McVeigh, Ms Mary (Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS8, CS9

Maguire, Mr Terence (Accessible Taxi Association NI)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS45-6, CS47, CS48

Mapstone, Ms Julie (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS31, CS32, CS33-4, CS36-9, CS40

Martin, Mr John (Department of the Environment)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS78-80, CS81-2, CS83, CS84

Matier, Mr James (Transport and General Workers' Union)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS25-7, CS28

Millar, Ms Alison (Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS7-9, CS10, CS11

Morrow, Dr Norman (Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety)

Committee Stages

Health and Social Care Bill (NIA 2/07), CS87-8, CS111-12

Overton, Mr Andrew (London Taxis International)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS22, CS23, CS24, CS25

Pengelly, Mr Richard (Department of Finance and Personnel)

Committee Stages

Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Bill: Legislative Consent/Sewell Motion, CS147, CS148, CS149-50, CS151, CS152

Press, Mr Brian (International Airport Taxi Co Ltd)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS54, CS55

Smyth, Mr Sean (T&G Section of Unite)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS19, CS20-2, CS23, CS24, CS25

Spratt, Mr Stephen (Department of the Environment)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS82-3, CS85

Swallow, Mr Jonathon (UNISON)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS5-6, CS7

Sweeney, Mr Paul (Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS34, CS38, CS39, CS40

Topping, Mr Gordon (North Eastern Education and Library Board)

Committee Stages

Libraries Bill (NIA 5/07), CS1, CS2, CS3

Watters, Mrs Adele (Department of the Environment)

Committee Stages

Taxis Bill (NIA 4/07), CS75, CS76, CS77, CS113, CS114, CS115, CS116, CS117, CS118, CS119, CS120, CS121, CS122, CS123, CS124, CS125, CS126, CS127, CS129, CS130, CS131-2, CS133, CS134, CS135, CS136-8, CS139-40, CS141, CS142, CS143, CS144, CS145