In addition to the funds received from the Department, many voluntary schools receive additional funding from parents and benefactors. We believe that the standardisation that will inevitably result from the Education Bill will lessen the incentive to make such contributions in future. That will ultimately put an additional strain on the public purse.

A number of voluntary schools also carry out additional educational activities outside those that are directly grant-aided by the Department. Such activities generate non-public funds, which should not come under the proposed legislative framework. Although the Bill is largely silent on procurement, it is understood that when the second Bill is introduced there will be further legislation that will considerably reduce the autonomy of voluntary schools through centralising the procurement function, which could undoubtedly lead to increased costs and inefficiencies.

To allay genuine concerns about preserving the ethos of schools and maximising the autonomy of school governance, the proposed legislation must be amended. There should be no alteration of the role of boards of governors as the sole employing authorities for voluntary schools. Individual boards of governors must retain the autonomy that will allow them to make decisions that are in the best interests of their schools: that must be reflected in the legislation.

The association cannot find evidence to suggest that the proposal to enable the ESAs to manage voluntary schools, as outlined in the Bill, will result in improvements to education administration and achieve better outcomes.

The Acting Chairperson: Thank you. You mentioned additional funding in your presentation and in your written submission. How much additional funding is received?

Mr McConnell: I cannot give you an exact figure for the whole of the sector. However, I can speak for my school, which receives an additional £100,000 a year for the secondary department. My school also has a preparatory department and a boarding department. The revenue generated by the boarding department is close to £750,000. We employ all the staff in the boarding department, and we manage the funds from the fees that come in from boarding pupils. We do not believe that the ESA, which would have no conduit to Mr John Robinson (Northern Ireland Voluntary Grammar Schools’ Bursars Association): May I add to that? My school is Methodist College. We receive revenue in excess of £500,000 a year from parents and voluntary contributions. That money is used entirely in the secondary department and is accounted for in that department. Without it, we could not provide the services that we provide for the children who attend the school. It is very straightforward.

(The Chairperson [Mr Storey] in the Chair)

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): I thank Nelson McCausland for chairing the meeting in my absence.

Miss McIlveen: Thank you for your presentation. You made a comment about teaching staff. If I were a teacher and knew that a teacher in another school was being paid differently for doing the same job, I would be asking questions. You also talked about the organisation of trips, and so on, which might be curtailed under the ESA. As a teacher in a previous life, I know that many teachers work beyond what is in their contract. They do what they feel is necessary, and to say that they would be bound by contracts is a bit cynical.

You also said that because a voluntary school is autonomous, there is little read-across regarding salaries and conditions. Have you done any work in order to address that or to get a feel for what the differences may be?

Mr J Robinson: Voluntary schools are slightly different in that, as Stephen said, many have preparatory departments and boarding departments. There is more of a difference in terms and conditions than there is in pay. In our school, for example, we run janitors on a continuous rota system. I understand that that is different from almost any other school in the Province. That is one example, but terms and conditions are the key issue.

Our message is that the nature of life, and people, is that people react better when their employer is local and when they know who their employer is. I have no great issue with ensuring that staff are properly remunerated in line with that across the sector. In fact, teachers in voluntary schools are paid on exactly the same basis as those in the controlled sector, and I do not know of any exceptions to that. There may be some enhancements for the additional work that they carry out and which is line with the salary policy, but, generally, that is not a great issue.

We are saying that the change, and the move towards that change, is difficult. On the basis of many years experience as a manager outside the education sector, I believe that the key message is that people have an affinity for a local employer. The key factors are: who holds the contract, and who deals with discipline and grievances in the normal employment relationship. The board of governors have control of those issues in voluntary grammar schools.

Miss McIlveen: It also involves an interpretation of how local is local. We are not talking about an organisation that is based across the water; it will be reasonably local without being located in a school.

Mr J Robinson: The key is that it should be in the school and in the board of governors of the school.

Miss McIlveen: Is your primary concern around commitments?

Mr J Robinson: Yes — and teaching staff. Teaching staff look to the board of governors of the school as their employer if the employment relationship is correct.

Mr O’Dowd: Thank you for your presentation. I also noted the issues that Michelle raised. You referred to auxiliary and support staff at your school, and I see that they are also mentioned in your letter:

“The Regulations have the effect that employees employed by their respective Board of Governors would automatically become employees of the ESA on the same terms and conditions.”

To me, that is why the ESA should be in place. Recently, the Minister diverted more than £1 million to ensure that voluntary schools’ classroom assistants had the same terms and conditions as other classroom assistants. Should the Minister take that money back?

Mr McConnell: I do not wish to get into an argument over classroom assistants.

Mr O’Dowd: I do — but perhaps I am being unfair to you in that sense.

The public purse was opened up and more than £1 million was taken out to ensure that staff in your schools received the same terms and conditions as other staff. Today, you are arguing that the ESA is a bad idea because all staff will be on the same terms and conditions. That is a crazy argument.

Mr J Robinson: The argument is about the transition and the difficulties in setting up the ESA.

Mr O’Dowd: A lengthy and exhaustive process of job evaluation has taken place. In the beginning, the job-evaluation process was not managed properly. When I was Chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee, we reported on the matter. However, the process is now in place and is ticking over. Therefore, ensuring that employees in your sector are on the same terms, grades and conditions as those in other sectors would not be a major problem.

Mr McConnell: In any industry, a job-evaluation process will increase costs. Therefore, that would impact on the education budget. The first job-evaluation process started a number of years ago, and there has been significant erosion in the differentials in the rates of pay between, for example, ground staff and cleaning staff. In some schools, therefore, it is almost better to be employed as a cleaner in the afternoon than as a clerical officer. A job-evaluation exercise will be carried out for clerical staff. What will happen is that suddenly everyone’s rate of pay will increase. There is no bottomless pit of money from HM Treasury. Therefore, we are being realistic in saying that the exercise will cost the Government significantly more money.

Mr O’Dowd: I do not think that that is the reason that you are arguing against it. You have the right to give that response, but I do not accept it.

Mr J Robinson: To add to that response, the key point is that there are differences in the job descriptions of some staff. I will give an example that applies to classroom assistants in our school. We compared their job descriptions with the job-evaluated description and found that they are virtually the same; there is no substantial difference. Therefore, our classroom assistants will be given the money when it comes through. We consulted them and told them that we hope that that will resolve the problem with terms and conditions. Let me stress that I do not think that any voluntary grammar school will ever argue about not paying their staff a proper rate for the job. However, there are differences between the schools as regards job descriptions.

Mr O’Dowd: Job evaluation has managed to go across five boards. It has been a very difficult process and has gone through many hoops, hurdles and mistakes. However, the process is in place now, so I assume that it can be applied to 30 voluntary grammar schools.

Mr J Robinson: That is exactly our point.

Mr O’Dowd: I am surprised that you are not able to tell us how much voluntary contributions there are across the board. I can tell you how much public contributions were last year — in the region of £250 million went into the voluntary schools. I note that your presentation states that there are clear lines of responsibility and accountability, and I think that you were referring to education and funding. What are the clear lines of financial accountability for public funds? How are you audited? Have you ever been audited by the Audit Office?

Mr McConnell: As I said in my presentation, we are audited annually, both internally and externally. We are audited by professional chartered accountants. We submit our annual audited accounts to the Department by 1 June each year, in line with the Treasury’s Faster Closing initiative. We also have internal audits that examine the internal control systems in schools, and the Department of Education receives those internal audit reports. We constantly submit returns to the Department monitoring our financial affairs. The Department receives an initial estimate from us each year on how we will spend the money. That is reviewed in November each year, and a further review of that is sent to the Department. The Department monitors our surpluses and deficits. If there is a surplus or deficit of more than 5%, the Department asks the board of governors in each school what they are doing about it. As far as accountability for the money that we get is concerned, we are very accountable to the Department and to the public purse.

Mr O’Dowd: The CCMS, the education boards, Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, and so forth, have to present themselves quarterly to the Minister and explain how they are accounting for the money spent. Do the grammar schools do that?

Mr McConnell: We do not have to meet quarterly, but, as I explained —

Mr O’Dowd: When was the last time that you went before the Minister of Education to discuss your accounts?

Mr McConnell: We have never done so.

Mr J Robinson: It would not be a problem for us, but it would not be appropriate for us to do so, because we are not the proper body to meet as regards accounting for the money that goes into the voluntary grammar sector. It would have to be the GBA, or some other body, and I am unaware of the arrangements in place between that body, or individual schools, and the Department.

Mr Elliott: Elements of your presentation concern additional education activities outside those that are directly grant-aided by the Department. Will you elaborate on that? I understood that those took place in all schools, including schools in the controlled sector. How does that differ in the voluntary grammar sector? What are your concerns in that respect?

Mr McConnell: I was making reference to activities in boarding schools and preparatory schools.

Mr Elliott: Would it have any effect on day schools?

Mr McConnell: No. The only additional funds that would be applicable to day schools are the voluntary contributions from parents, which have the effect of reducing schools’ deficits.

Mr Elliott: Are you saying that there would be an issue with staff in the respect? Or, would it be an issue because of the ESA?

Mr J Robinson: The issue has not been sorted out. The ESA chief executive designate has met us on a couple of occasions, and for that I thank him. We have been told that staff who fall within the educational sector will be employed by the ESA. There is a difficulty with that in that some staff will have a couple of masters. For instance, a boarding department is not that educational, and funding comes from parents towards boarding. That is one issue that needs to be resolved.
Mr Elliott: I have noticed a common theme among various associations that have provided evidence to us, and paragraphs 23 and 24 of your submission echo that point when you state that policy is not being reflected in the Bill. Perhaps, we should ask this of the departmental officials, but I would like you to expand on that. I know that you have limited your concerns to one point, but is that the only point that you have or is it broader?

Mr J Robinson: The original documentation, the policy paper and our initial meeting with people involved with the setting up of the ESA — which was some time ago — assured us that maximum autonomy would be given to the schools that could deal with it. That assured us to some extent, but it took us more towards the academy model, which is happening in England, and our own models. The Bill is a disappointment, because it seems to be prescriptive in all the areas — and certainly in employment.

We believe that there may have been some movement on the employment of staff. The Bill states clearly that staff will be employed by the ESA. We understand the need for efficiencies, and so on, but that was some fundamental change — and, as a manager, I do not believe that it is a change for the better. I am not arguing for worse terms for anyone; I am arguing, from the management perspective, that this is not the best way forward.

Mr Lunn: Thank you for your presentation. I want to pick up on one point, which you have highlighted in your submission. You are concerned about clause 18(1), which states:

“ESA may do anything that appears to it to be conducive or incidental to the discharge of its functions.”

Why are you so concerned about that? It comes at the end of a long list of functions and duties that are being given to the ESA. It seems like a tidying-up line to cover anything that may have been forgotten. You say that it provides all-embracing powers; it does not. The words are further qualified later in clause 18. The same words are used in clause 19, which deals with the powers of the ESA to undertake commercial activities, and it is qualified by certain restrictions. If that line were not part of the clause, would it make a difference to what the ESA can or cannot do? I do not know why you are concerned about it.

Mr J Robinson: Again, I refer to the submission by Mr Lockhart, and his comment about the law of unforeseen eventualities. We are concerned about the clause because it allows the ESA to make adjustments and regulations should something crop up that may not have been foreseen during the passage of the Bill. Therefore, I — not as a lawyer, but as an accountant — will find it helpful to have some qualification of the clause. You are quite right: it is a catch-all clause, and I imagine that that is why it has been written into the Bill. If I were drafting the Bill, I would do exactly the same — I would include a clause that allows some flexibility in future rather than have to go through the churn of the legislative process all over again.

Mr Lunn: My guess is that there is probably a similar clause in existing legislation governing the activities of the present governing bodies — we can ask the departmental officials about that later. Have you checked that legislation, or have you just picked this clause out and said that it is appalling, and that we cannot have it in the Bill.

Mr J Robinson: We are dealing with, and commenting on, the legislation that is in front of us. As for other legislation, there would usually be a little more qualification.

Mr Lunn: Well, we are not going to agree. I just wondered why the matter was so important to you.

The Chairperson: Obviously, that is a concern for the Committee. Previously, we told the Department that if it is not in the legislation, we are going to have difficulty with it.

I will conclude this session by asking a question that was asked in an earlier session, and it relates to clause 8, which deals with employment schemes. If there were a system of independent appeal, or if the Assembly had the power to regulate and control the ESA guidance and model schemes, would that address some of your concerns about employment schemes and other schemes of management?

Mr J Robinson: Again, I agree with what Mr Lockhart said. I deal with employment law and employment issues in our school. What is being proposed would create an unwieldy bureaucratic means of dealing with the issue.

As regards schemes of management and accountability, many of our schools have schemes of management with the Department. I can speak only for myself, but I have no issue with that. Lawyers are often quoted as saying that employment law is the second most difficult area of law. We deal with that area of law, and I do not think that it would be helpful to introduce other layers of bureaucracy into the arrangement between employer and employee given that employment issues can be difficult to deal with in general.

The Chairperson: Stephen, Shane and John, thank you very much for your presentation. You are welcome to stay for the remainder of the meeting. I now ask the departmental officials to join us — undoubtedly, they have been imbibing all that has been said in the past hour or so.

The Department sent the Committee a response to the GBA paper, but I suspect that, after today’s session, other issues will also need to be dealt with. Mr McGrath, I am sure that the Committee will agree that the paper submitted by the GBA today should be given to you, and that we should continue to consider the issues raised in that paper, in this presentation and in the Department’s response. The paper was sent yesterday, so members should have received it. John, I am in your hands.

Mr John McGrath (Department of Education): I am glad to be with the Committee again. Chris will lead off on the Department’s response to the initial paper.

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education): We welcome the opportunity to consider the presentations and hear the evidence from the Governing Bodies Association (GBA) and the Northern Ireland Voluntary Grammar Schools’ Bursars Association. It is clear that we agree on a great deal and that we disagree on some fundamental points, which I want to concentrate on in my presentation.

I am conscious that the Committee is pressed for time, so my presentation will be shorter than it might otherwise have been. It is important to set the context and to remind ourselves of our aims. There, we begin to see the commonality of view between ourselves and the GBA. The RPA arrangements are based on autonomy for schools and on the aim that schools are best placed to run their own affairs but with accountability for their actions and for the educational outcomes that they produce. We intend to achieve that effect through the Bill.

I want to respond specifically to the GBA’s three major areas of concern: its objection to the proposed employment arrangements; its objection to the proposed governance arrangements for schools; and comparisons with legislation in England and Wales.

The GBA has argued consistently that the employment arrangements will result in a loss of autonomy for some schools. We recognise and acknowledge the genuine sense of loss in those schools. However, the Department contends that there is no real loss of autonomy, because boards of governors will remain responsible for the exercise of employment functions and will take employment decisions that the ESA will be under a legal duty to put into effect. Our policy aim is to ensure that that degree of autonomy is available to all schools on the basis of equality, rather than to some schools on the basis of historical differences in ownership.

The GBA contends that the Bill will not have such an effect, that decision-making powers will rest with the ESA and that boards of governors will be restricted to making suggestions or requests. That is not the case. The Education Bill makes it clear that boards of governors will make decisions — which is the phraseology used in the Bill — not recommendations on employment matters. We have referred to clause 8(2) several times, and it is worth remembering its content and meaning. That clause’s effect is that the ESA may not lawfully refuse to put into effect boards of governors’ proper decisions on employment matters.

Mr Lockhart spoke earlier and made a number of points to which I want to respond. His central point was that the separate employment arrangements that pertain at present somehow offer those schools a degree of freedom that they would lose under the proposed arrangements to interpret the law. As I have confessed to the Committee many times, I am not a lawyer, and I rely on legal advice. The legal advice is that I have received is different and states that schools do not enjoy that degree of freedom.

If a board of governors, in its role as employer, proposed to act outside the law, the Department would prevent that and would exercise its powers of direction. If, for some reason, the Department failed to act, in a case of unlawful dismissal, a tribunal would have the power to impose a substantial fine or to order the reinstatement of the member of staff. Those arrangements will pertain irrespective of whether we continue to have separate employers or whether the ESA becomes the single employer. That advice has been provided by the Departmental Solicitor, who is also the chairman of employment tribunals and has considerable experience in such matters.

Furthermore, the GBA suggested that it is not possible to put the proposed arrangements into effect in law. Mr Lockhart said that only the ESA would be present at employment tribunals and courts. Again, our legal advice is different and states that a court or tribunal would automatically join to the proceedings any body or person who played a part in the matter that was the subject of complaint. Therefore, the board of governors and the ESA would be represented in proceedings by order of the tribunal or the court.

The GBA argued that it is not possible to achieve the Department’s desired effect in law.

However, not only is it possible — it has already been done. We have discussed schedule 2 to the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 in the Committee on several occasions. Several key points in respect of that schedule — which refers to controlled schools — are worth emphasising.

It is solely for boards of governors to determine staff complement; there is no role for the employer in that regard. It is for boards of governors to draw up and implement disciplinary rules and procedures, and the employer’s role is limited to one of consultee. Boards of governors and principals — not employers — have the power to suspend staff and to end suspensions. Crucially, it is for boards of governors only to take decisions on the dismissal of staff. The only exception to that is if a member of staff becomes ineligible for employment; for example, if their registration to teach is revoked.
Those provisions demonstrate that boards of governors can, and will, be given an autonomous statutory role in employment matters, including dismissal. There are also clear and effective duties on the ESA, as the employer, to put the lawful decisions of boards of governors into effect. Schools may feel that they have a degree of freedom in how to interpret the law, but that is not the case.

The GBA has stated its opposition to the provisions in clauses 30 to 33 very clearly. Those clauses require each school to draw up a scheme of management, taking account of guidance produced by the ESA, and to submit that scheme to the ESA for approval. We find it difficult to understand the GBA’s objection and, indeed, its description of the arrangements as a striking transfer of power. Grant-aided schools are publicly funded institutions that deliver a key public service. The Department contends that it is reasonable and necessary to require each school to have clear governance arrangements and to abide by them. In essence, we are saying that schools must have rules and stick to them. We do not regard that as an unreasonable requirement or a striking transfer of power.

In its paper, the GBA suggested that only failing schools should be subject to those requirements. That seems to suggest that we should have a statutory duty to bolt the stable door long after the horse has disappeared over the horizon; we do not think that that is an appropriate way forward. The legislative requirements are not new; they have been in statute since 1989. Article 9(a) to 9(d) of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 requires schemes of management to be prepared and submitted to the Department for approval and contain powers for the Department to modify and impose — or default — on those schemes. The provisions in the Education Bill are very similar to those arrangements, but the approval role rests with the ESA rather than with the Department.

The GBA drew comparisons with the legislation in England and Wales and suggested that that legislation might be a better route for us to follow. There is a Chinese proverb: “be careful what you ask for — you might get it.” It is worth bearing that proverb in mind when considering the relevant legislation, namely the School Standards and Framework Act 1998. That Act is more prescriptive and contains a broader range of intervention powers for local education authorities than anything that we have proposed for the education and skills authority.

The equivalent of management schemes are known as instruments of government in English legislation, the key provisions of which are section 37 and schedule 12 of the 1998 Act. Schools are required to draw up instruments of government that they must submit to local education authorities for approval. That is very similar to the Northern Ireland provisions, but the key difference is that schools here will have more flexibility to shape their schemes. Schools in Northern Ireland can tailor their schemes of management and take account of the ESA guidance. By contrast, schools in England are legally required to draw up instruments of government in prescribed form and with no scope for variation.

I now turn to the intervention powers of local education authorities and the ESA. We have striven to maintain that the emphasis is on schools self-improving. Schools are to be supported and challenged — but not controlled — by the ESA, and the ESA’s intervention powers are to be kept to a minimum. Action to raise standards and tackle underperformance will be schools-led. Following inspection, the legislation will require a school — not the ESA — to produce an action plan detailing what action that school proposes to take to address an inspection’s findings.

The interventions regime under the English Act is rather different. In England, LEAs may, depending on a school’s performance, issue a formal direction that requires the school to take specified actions; appoint additional governors, overriding the school’s instrument of government; suspend the delegation of a school’s budget; take over the role of setting a school’s staffing complement; remove a governing body’s right to appoint or dismiss staff; and direct a governing body to dismiss staff.

By contrast, the ESA will have no such powers; it cannot direct schools with regard to raising standards; it cannot withhold grants; it cannot interfere with a school’s staff complement or the appointment of staff; neither can it direct the dismissal of staff. The strongest powers in Northern Ireland legislation, which are rather less extensive than any in England and Wales, are reserved exclusively by the Department and will not be in the hands of the ESA.

The GBA said that legislation in England and Wales is preferable to proposals in the Education Bill. However, a comparison demonstrates that the English legislation is more prescriptive; offers less flexibility to schools in determining their governance arrangements; and gives much greater powers of intervention to local education authorities than anything in current legislation or anything proposed in the Education Bill.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Chris. I am more worried about Irish blarney than Chinese proverbs. The worry, which you have heard repeated by the Committee several times and to which Trevor referred earlier, is that there is a sense that the Bill creates a catch-all scenario; provisions are made and powers are given that cover every eventuality. Organisations that have attended the Committee today, such as the Northern Ireland Voluntary Grammar Schools Bursars’ Association and the GBA, are still not convinced that the legislation will not manifest their worst-case scenarios.

For example, as regards clause 8, does the Department not feel that to allay concerns, there should be adequate provision in the legislation for an independent appeals mechanism subject to resolution, control or regulation by the Assembly? Would that be helpful?

Mr C Stewart: I recognise that many of the concerns of the GBA, the bursars’ association and, indeed, other stakeholders’ focus on the fact that much of the detail, particularly on employment arrangements, does not appear in the Bill. However, it will appear in guidance and in the schemes of employment when they are drawn up. The aim is to reduce bureaucracy and the degree of prescription in legislation. However, I understand the concern that arises when that detail is not seen in writing; it is perfectly natural to have some concern about what the content might be.

There are two possible approaches, one of which we have discussed previously in the Committee. The first is explicitly linking the role of the ESA in such matters with article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 and the Department’s power to direct and provide a vehicle for an aggrieved party to complain. The Department would then investigate the matter. If necessary, it would issue a direction to correct any malfeasance on the ESA’s part.

The second mechanism, to which some of your questions pointed earlier, is to provide a scrutiny, challenge or overseeing role for the Assembly, and there is a way to achieve that. We could propose that that detail be contained in guidance. The alternative is to put it in subordinate legislation or regulation, which, of course, could be made subject to Assembly control and would always be subject to scrutiny by the Committee.

We have sought wherever possible to avoid doing that, because, as we have said before, the volume of education legislation is extremely large and we do our best not to add to it unnecessarily. However, if it is felt that we need to be more prescriptive and to provide more clarity in legislation rather than in guidance, there is a mechanism that allows us to do that.

Mr O'Dowd: Do staff in voluntary grammar schools have more or fewer employment rights now than those working in the controlled or maintained sector?

Mr C Stewart: I do not see how that could be.

Mr O'Dowd: Are there any plans to introduce independent, free-standing employment legislation to back up proposals of the education and skills authority? Is there a raft of employment legislation to which the ESA or any other body must adhere? Every time that you draft a Bill, do you have to add the employment legislation to it? Is the ESA rewriting or adding to existing employment legislation?

Mr C Stewart: The answer to those questions is no.

Mr John McGrath (Department of Education): It is not in our power to do that. The law on employment will remain as it is now after the ESA has been set up; the ESA does not affect the legislation one way or the other.

Mr O'Dowd: If a voluntary grammar school’s board of governors interviewed an applicant for a job for which he or she was best qualified, could the board of governors decide not to give the job to him or her because they did not like the look of that person? I am not saying that they would want to do that, but could they?

Mr McGrath: They should not do that.

Mr O'Dowd: I am not suggesting that they would want to but whether they could under existing legislation.

Mr McGrath: The law of the land on fair employment applies to voluntary grammar schools no less or no more than it applies to controlled schools, maintained schools or any other employer.

Mr O'Dowd: Concerns were expressed that the ethos of a school could be undermined by the ESA’s being the employing authority. However, boards of governors will conduct interviews and appoint staff, and that will not be undermined.

Mr C Stewart: Ethos is always subject to the law; we touched on this issue several times with the Committee. The Committee has also discussed, and expressed its views on, the exemption on teacher recruitment in the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 (FETO). That is why we posed that question in response to the Governing Bodies Association paper that sought clarification on additional exemptions in respect of fair employment and equality legislation for which it appeared to be arguing. Given the existing FETO exemption, it was not clear what additional legislative requirements the association sought to have disapplied to voluntary grammar schools.

The Chairperson: Chris made a point earlier about the mechanisms that we could use to address those concerns, through either a direction subject to article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 or additional regulations. Would it be possible to make proposals or prepare a paper on that?

Mr C Stewart: As a technical challenge, it is certainly possible. We would have to seek a view from the Minister. I am not aware of any technical difficulty that would prevent such a course of action.

The Chairperson: I want to bring this session to a close because we have a commitment to Portadown...
College, whose representatives, I am glad to say, have joined us. Will the maintained schools, controlled schools, voluntary grammar schools, integrated schools and various other types of schools in Northern Ireland have equality in the employment schemes? Once the ESA has been established, will we be able to say, without any shadow of doubt, that all schools will be administered and treated equally and that no sector will have any advantage — through any sleight-of-hand or historical accident or privileged position — over any other?

Mr C Stewart: I sense that you are looking for a straight answer and that answer is yes.

Mr Lunn: Will you comment briefly on the bursars’ concern about clause 18(1)? It states that:

“ESA may do anything that appears to it to be conducive or incidental to the discharge of its functions.”

Mr C Stewart: On first reading, clause 18 appears to offer a degree of latitude to the ESA that might give rise to concern; however, it does not. The qualification that something must be conducive or incidental to the discharge of the ESA’s functions is important. There has to be a direct link between what the ESA wants to do in the discharge of its statutory functions and the education legislation. Therefore, the clause does not allow the ESA to set up private companies that can do something that is not connected to education.

However, apart from that, it is a fairly standard provision that would routinely be inserted into legislation to establish any new non-departmental public body delivering a public service. There is an almost identically worded clause in the Libraries Bill, and, if my memory serves me correctly, in the health and social services RPA legislation. Therefore, there is nothing unusual about it.

Mr Lunn: Could the ESA step outside that rule to do something that could be construed as not being conducive to its normal activities?

Mr C Stewart: Specific departmental approval will be required for some of the things that the ESA will be entitled to do. In addition, more generally, if the Department felt that it was doing something that was not sufficiently related to its statutory functions in legislation or to the priorities that the Department has determined for it, we would step in very quickly with a formal direction if necessary.

Mr McCausland: The folk from the Governing Bodies Association suggested that the ESA would be very bureaucratic and, therefore, a substantial portion of the budget would be spent internally in the ESA rather than going to schools. How do you see that working out? Will moving from the boards to the ESA reduce or increase bureaucracy and, therefore, the amount of money kept at the centre?

Mr McGrath: A key objective of the ESA is to rationalise many of the administrative functions across the five boards and organisations and to bear out savings. The Department will consider the targets that it will set for management costs and bureaucracy, and the Minister has a clear view that she wants to get as much money out of the education budget to the front line of schools. That is a general objective above and beyond issues around voluntary grammars and in schools in general.

Mr McCausland: What will the target be?

Mr McGrath: We have not decided on the target yet.

Mr McCausland: As much as 90% could go to schools.

Mr McGrath: The Committee has had various discussions on the issue, and it would be helpful to get clarity about what we are counting. The amount of money in the Minister’s budget that goes into schools now — whether it is earmarked or is part of the agreed school budget — will increase over time; however, the scope to do that is limited by the expectations with regard to efficiency savings in future budgets and by cost pressures. Nevertheless, it is a general objective. We want to reduce educational bureaucracy to the minimum necessary to deliver an effective service and to get as much money as possible into classrooms.

Mr McCausland: When will you have that figure?

Mr McGrath: It will not be a set figure, but rather a figure over time or for each year.

Mr McCausland: What will the initial figure be?

Mr McGrath: I have said to the Committee before that the Department will want to consider setting an envelope for senior management costs in the ESA. That will address concerns that the Chairperson expressed about its structure at the beginning and about whether it could expand willy-nilly. Therefore, we will want to put an envelope on it. We would like to get more information and agreement on the precise percentage of money that goes into classrooms, because different figures have been quoted from LEAs across the water. The Minister may want to set an objective for the ESA over a three- or five-year period and change the percentage over time.

Mr McCausland: That may not happen. However, the ESA will be established on 1 January 2010, which means that the target must be set before that date. At what point during this year will that happen?

Mr McGrath: It will be a target as part of the general oversight of the ESA to be delivered as it comes into full being. The ESA will not reduce or increase the amount of money into classrooms in three months at the end of the next financial year. However, it could be a target for 2010-11 to 2011-12.
Mr McCausland: On 1 January 2010, will there not be a reduction in the amount of administration?

Mr McGrath: There will not be an automatic reduction on 1 January 2010.

Mr McCausland: When the ESA comes into being and the boards cease to exist, they will no longer employ people; therefore the reduction will have happened at that point.

Mr McGrath: The people who are employed by the boards on 31 December 2009 will be employed by the ESA on 1 January 2010. Therefore, the rationalisation process will take a bit of time.

Mr McCausland: How long will it take?

Mr McGrath: That will depend on each sector. Gavin Boyd has appeared before the Committee to talk about the work that was done in the various sectors. The departmental overseers will have to say how long the process will take. However, we should not underestimate the management challenge of welding together seven or more organisations.

Mr McCausland: Before we are asked to sign off on a Bill we need a clear steer from you on its benefits in real terms, and a target figure would give us some indication. The argument is being made to us that slimming down administration will put more money into schools, which is great. However, you must have an estimate; you cannot be working totally in the dark.

Mr McGrath: We have answers to those questions. As he said the last time that he gave evidence to the Committee, work is being done on what models will be in certain areas. You are correct that once that has been done, he will be able to work out what the broader picture will look like and how much money will be saved by certain stages. I do not know how long that will take. We can try to find out.

Mr McCausland: We are now in early March, and the Bill’s Committee Stage will run until some time in September. Can you assure us that we will have a figure before the end of the Committee Stage? Otherwise we are being asked to buy a pig in a poke.

Mr McGrath: We will do our best to get the information for which you ask.

The Chairperson: How will that relate to the business case, about which serious issues were raised? Has there been a revision of the business case for the reasons that Nelson McCausland gave? Not revising it creates the impression that everything is vague and hopeful, which is no way to enact legislation. We expect schools and the other parties involved to sign up and be accountable and show where money will be spent, yet we are allowing the ESA to come into existence on a very flimsy and ad hoc basis. We are being asked to agree to look at the ESA in three years’ time and amend it if necessary, but that is not the reason why we are bringing it into existence.

Mr McGraith: I disagree with that perception. There is a business case on the establishment of the ESA.

The Chairperson: It is only an outline business case.

Mr McGrath: Outline is a technical term used by DFP; outline business cases are detailed, rigorous documents. One then moves to a final business case, which is why the previous one is called an outline business case. However, outline business cases still... have to be made to green-book standards and with Treasury guidance.

The Department’s outline business case demonstrates that establishing the ESA will save up to £20 million in the first three years; that will create a vehicle in the ESA to rationalise education administration and draw out further savings. The Department is wary of getting the long-term figure up front because it could be offering hostages to fortune. However, the outline business case is one of the more robust pieces of evidence for RPA changes. If it were regarded as flimsy, some of the other institutional changes are flimsy as well.

The Chairperson: When will we move from outline to final business case before the ESA is brought into existence?

Mr McGrath: Work is in hand to move from the outline business case to the full business case, as required.

The Chairperson: Could the Committee get an update on that?

Mr McGrath: Yes. However, I have had this conversation with you already and with the previous Chairperson. The Department would be hesitant about writing down sure-fire savings over time in a business case. We know that we will have to deliver efficiency savings, and we believe that the ESA is the vehicle to tackle rationalising administration and, as far as possible, make saving that will not affect classrooms. That is the Department’s firm belief.

The Chairperson: No doubt, Mr McGrath, the Committee will return to that issue.

Mr Elliott: I have several issues, but I know that we are pushed for time so I will limit them.

The Chairperson: I assure you that we will come back to them.

Mr Elliott: The last issue worries me, and Mr McGrath’s answer that the Department is reluctant to put something down on paper worries me even more.

Mr McGrath: The Department made it clear that the key objective of the ESA — along with raising standards — is to enable savings to be brought out from the current education administration, to sweep them up and, ideally, to get them into the front line. That is the objective. However, at the minute that is difficult, and I would be nervous about offering up a figure that could be taken as Gospel and almost as a contribution towards savings before we even have a further 3% target. Those figures could be taken as opportunistic savings, and we would still have to make 3% savings targets above and beyond that, which would be punitive.

Mr Elliott: With your indulgence, Chairperson, I think that we will return to that at some stage.

Mr McGrath used the example that the GBA used earlier about defending a case at tribunal, saying that the ESA and the board of governors would be there. Who would take the lead; who would be the defence at the tribunal?

Mr C Stewart: It would depend on the nature of the complaint and the matter that was being complained about. If, for example, it were a dismissal and the ESA had acted on an instruction from a board of governors to dismiss a member of staff — I am not a lawyer, let alone a tribunal chairperson — I would have thought that the lead party would be the board of governors, since it was the body that had taken the action that had led to the dismissal.

Mr Elliott: Therefore the ESA would be the secondary party as the main employer?

Mr C Stewart: I do not know that I would place a great deal of emphasis on who is named first or second.

Mr Elliott: It would be a huge issue, especially for a board of governors.

Mr C Stewart: Not necessarily; the tribunal or court would decide where the balance of responsibility or blame lay and would apply its judgement on remedies or damages accordingly.

Mr Elliott: That is why the Committee wants those who will be responsible to be made clear in the Bill. I appreciate that there will always be legal arguments; however, that highlights the difficulties. I use that as an example, as it shows the ambiguity in the system.

I have another issue that I want to tease out, but I will have time at some other stage.

The Chairperson: Who pays for the process, and will they all be represented separately? There are many matters to be satisfactorily resolved.

Mr C Stewart: There is a short and a long answer to that question. The short answer is that if something goes wrong with employment in the public education service, although the taxpayer would meet the monetary costs, education and children would also have a price to pay because money that should have been spent in classrooms would have been wasted on other matters. Whichever body the court or tribunal fines initially is a matter for the court or tribunal; however, in a publicly funded service, ultimately, the taxpayer pays.

Mr O’Dowd: With respect to Nelson McCausland’s question about the budget, is it not the case that the Department must accumulate some £20 million of savings by the third year of the comprehensive spending review?

Mr McGrath: Yes. Under the CSR, we must realise savings of 3% per annum compounded. With that in mind, we indicated that establishing the ESA under the original timetable would, by the third year, contribute £21 million of savings. There are some concerns about the timetable being delayed, but the savings are already in the bag and, of course, accounted for. We are, however, wary about predicking decisions on possible savings down the line, which may already have been accounted for in the next budgetary process. That is a real concern for us, because we might have to find yet another 3% of savings.

The Chairperson: Thank you. We will ensure that you receive copies of today’s submissions from the GBA and the bursars’ association; in addition, we will ensure that the GBA receives a copy of your response to the issues raised. This is not the end of the matter. I thank you again for your attendance, and, no doubt, we will see you again next week.

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): Cardinal Brady and delegation, you are very welcome to the Education Committee meeting this morning. Thank you also for making your submission to us in writing; members have had it for a few days. The acoustics in the Chamber are not great, so please bear that in mind. It would help us all to hear your submission clearly so that there will be no confusion. Please make your presentation, Cardinal, and then members will ask questions on it.

His Eminence Cardinal Seán Brady, Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of All Ireland (Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education): Thank you, Mr Chairman. On behalf of the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education (NICCE), I would like to thank the members of the Education Committee for their kind invitation to discuss our submission on the draft Education Bill. We are very happy to do so.

The Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education speaks for the trustees of the entire family of Catholic schools; that network consists of some 550 nursery, primary and post-primary maintained and voluntary schools in Northern Ireland.

I am joined this morning by some of the members of our commission: Bishop Patrick Walsh, a former Bishop of Down and Connor; Sister Eithne Woulfe, Sister of the Order of St Louis, a religious order that has schools across Ireland, including Kilkeel and Ballymena; and Bishop Donal McKeown, chairman of the commission. We are joined by Mr John Gordon, legal adviser to the commission. We are happy to answer any questions that you might have regarding our written submission.

Before addressing that submission, however, I am conscious that we meet in the aftermath of the brutal murders of Constable Stephen Carroll and Sappers Cenzig Azimkar and Mark Quinsey. I consider those crimes an attack on the whole community. They were an attack on the democratic will of people across this island and on their overwhelming support for the institution in which we are gathered this morning. I am therefore mindful that we are engaging with you today as democratically elected Members of the legislative Assembly. We are engaging in the privileged context of a democracy — a privilege that we can never take for granted. We do so with great respect for you and for your role as politicians.

I am mindful too of our shared duty as elected and as civic leaders to do all that we can to consolidate the progress already made towards a more secure, confident and reconciled future for everyone in our society, not least for the young people.

As trustees of Catholic schools, we are fully committed to playing our part in building a more peaceful future for all in our society. As stated in our publication ‘Building Peace, Shaping the Future’, our society in Northern Ireland has been characterised by profound conflict, and those charged with the education of our young people have an important role to play in breaking down barriers of ignorance, misunderstanding and suspicion. Our schools cannot carry the full responsibility for reconciliation on their own, but we recognise that they have an important part to play.

The publication went on to state that tolerance and respect for difference are at the heart of all Christian and human education. That brings me directly to our submission on the draft Education Bill — respect for diversity is one of the key values underpinning that submission. We see respect for diversity as part of the contribution that Catholic schools make to our society. We also see that respect for diversity as part of the obligation of society to Catholic and, indeed, other schools.

In Britain, the Republic of Ireland, and many other parts of the world, the provision of publicly funded, faith-based schools — or other schools founded on a particular philosophical, cultural or linguistic ethos — is accepted as a normal part of society. I hold that the provision of a diverse range of schools is the mark of a mature, tolerant and reconciled society. Since that is the type of society to which we in Northern Ireland aspire, it follows that we should provide for a variety of schools, based on available resources, from which parents may choose.

The principle of diverse provision is also recognised and protected in international instruments on human rights. Notably, protocol 1, article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights upholds the right of parents to have their children educated in a manner consistent with their religious or philosophical convictions. As trustees of Catholic schools, we have a duty to strive to ensure that that right of parents is adequately respected and provided for in the Education Bill.

As the Bill stands, we remain unclear as to how certain key aspects of the proposed legislation will operate. We therefore have significant reservations about our ability to support key aspects of the Bill in its current form. Perhaps the Committee will address our concerns.

Before outlining some of those concerns, I want to make it clear that any right that we seek to have respected or any provision or resource that we seek for Catholic schools, we seek for each and every provider of education in Northern Ireland. Therefore we support those elected representatives and others who uphold the principle of equality in education policy and provision in Northern Ireland.

In doing so, we are conscious that some people may have the impression that the Catholic sector is somehow advantaged over other sectors in Northern Ireland; that is historically incorrect. Indeed, until relatively recently, the Catholic sector received less support from the state than any other sector. However, it is true that when other sectors transferred ownership of their schools to the state, the Catholic community maintained its ownership; that took place at considerable financial cost to the Catholic community, particularly to our Catholic parishes. However, it was a cost that generations of Catholics were willing to bear in order to guarantee the ethos of their schools and the right of parents to have such schools. Responsibility for ensuring the continuation of that right falls to us as the trustees of Catholic schools in Northern Ireland, and it is a right that we will strive to uphold in all circumstances.

However, as trustees, it is becoming increasingly clear to us that one consequence of the decision of the Transferor Representatives’ Council (TRC) to hand their schools over to the state is that many parents from other Christian traditions, as well as those from other cultural, ethnic or linguistic backgrounds, believe that their right to have schools with a particular ethos is not adequately provided for. On behalf of the Catholic trustees, I want to make it clear that we will lend our wholehearted support to any legislative or policy change that facilitates the right of parents from other religious, cultural, linguistic or ethnic backgrounds to be more adequately addressed.

To ensure adequate provision for parents who choose a Catholic education for their children, we have highlighted in our submission several key issues that need to be further clarified or addressed in the Education Bill. There are three critical issues on which we are happy to elaborate in our response to Committee members’ questions. First, there is a need to clarify the role of the education and skills authority (ESA) as the employer and/or the employing authority. The proposal in clause 3 for the ESA to be the employer of all staff in all schools is unacceptable; it is a fundamental impediment to the ability of owners/trustees to exercise their right and duty to promote and guard the ethos and defining character of a school. To exercise our duties as trustees adequately, we require that the board of governors of each school be the legal employer of all staff in their schools. As it stands, the provision in the Bill appears to run counter to the principle, which we support, of giving maximised autonomy to schools. Therefore we suggest that further clarification is needed on clause 8.

We accept that the functions of each sectoral support body will be as agreed between the Department of Education and the owners/trustees as stated in policy paper 21. The functions of a sectoral body will be complementary and will not duplicate or overlap with the functions of the ESA. That should be reflected in the proposed legislation. The business plan submitted by the Catholic trustees addresses any fears that members of the Committee may have about the proposed scale of such a body for the Catholic sector — or indeed for any other sector; we are not trying to create a new Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS). However, we need adequate support to enable the discharge of functions that properly belong to owners/trustees. That would also avoid the necessity of the ESA having, in effect, to negotiate key decisions with every individual school in a given sector. Those support bodies make sense in terms of value for money and good administration.

They have already been shown to play a key role in raising standards. Policy and/or legislation provision must be made for their role in supporting schools in the appointment of teachers, particularly at leadership level; their role on behalf of school owners in the planning and provision of schools; their advocacy role on behalf of a given sector; and their role in supporting and developing ethos.

Similarly, there is no point in having such support bodies if schools in a sector can ignore them. Therefore, it is critical that legislation place a duty on boards of governors to co-operate with the support body in their respective sector. Strong and committed boards of governors are required to maximise autonomy and to ensure the ethos of a school. Clarification is required on the appointment of community governors. It is essential that legislation reflect the importance of making such appointments in consultation with owners and trustees.

That is a short overview of the main issues that we want to bring to the Committee’s attention. Thank you for giving us the opportunity to explain those issues directly. We are happy to take questions — at least my colleagues are. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: You have delegated autonomy on the commission’s behalf, Cardinal. First of all, Cardinal, the Committee endorses your opening comments on the recent murders. One of the soldiers who was murdered in Antrim will be buried today, and our thoughts and prayers continue to be with those who have suffered as a result of those heinous crimes. We welcome everyone in our society’s condemnation of those events.

We appreciate the candid way in which you have raised issues. In the past weeks, the Committee has listened to the concerns of several organisations, and we will continue to take oral evidence from relevant organisations to establish plainly how the Bill can be amended to become more acceptable. Your remarks underscored an issue that has been prevalent in our deliberations — the lack of clarity. A more than considerable mist still hangs over the detail — or lack of detail — on the ESA, particularly on the issue of employment and the employer.

Last week, the Committee heard the Governing Bodies Association (GBA) raise its concerns, which the Department dismissed in a subsequent rebuttal. As the process continues, there seems to be — as with most issues in Northern Ireland — two camps. The various education providers are of the opinion that there is no clarity on the employer issue. However, the other body of opinion — primarily the Department — believes that there has been a misunderstanding and maintains that there is clarity in the Bill and that it contains no threat to the various bodies that raised concerns.

Members should indicate their desire to ask questions, because I do not want to ask all the questions; I am sure that the Committee will agree that I have never done that. Cardinal, will you and your team clarify the current representation of trustees on boards of governors?

What influence and consultation rights do trustees have in the appointment of other members of a board? Is the representation and influence not sufficient to enable trustees to trust boards of governors to safeguard the ethos of Catholic schools in formulating schemes of management and employment? Is that not enough to ensure that the ethos is developed and maintained by a body that is significantly accountable to trustees?

Dr Brady: I invite Bishop Walsh to take that question, because he has much more experience of serving on boards of governors in this part of the world than I have.

Most Reverend Patrick Walsh, Bishop Emeritus of Down and Connor (Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education): That is a very important question. We talk about the ethos of a school, and we all know that each school has its own character. However, it is essential to us that the entire Catholic sector has an overarching ethos, and that is what we seek to maintain. It is the responsibility and duty of bishops, religious and trustees to determine the overarching ethos of each school, and each school also has its own particular character within that ethos.

We expect every member of the board of governors of one of our schools to subscribe to the ethos of that school; there is no point in appointing someone to the governing body of a school who is not in agreement with the general ethos of that school. The CCMS, of which I was a member for many years, had several members who were not of the Catholic faith. However, those people were totally in tune with the ethos for which the CCMS stands, and they made a valuable contribution. Irrespective of their tradition, no one who does not accept the ethos of one of our schools should be a member of the board of governors of that school.

Under the current composition, trustees have the right to appoint directly four members of a board of governors; there is also an elected teacher, an elected parent and so on. Until now, the Department of Education has appointed its two members in consultation with the trustees, and the education and library boards have done likewise in the maintained sector. Those appointments have always been made in consultation with trustees, and we want the new legislation to ensure that that continues. I understand that the relevant schedules of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 and of the previous Order still apply and that there will be meaningful consultation with the trustees with regard to appointments.

We have no problem with the ESA having the right to make appointments — whether two, if that is the number decided — to the board of governors of our schools, provided that those appointments are made in meaningful consultation with the trustees. It is for that reason that we have asked for the phrase “in consultation with” to be used in the legislation rather than simply “consulting”. That should ensure meaningful consultation rather than allow people merely to say, “We have consulted; end of story.” We want serious and meaningful consultation and, therefore, assurance that those who are appointed to the board of governors of a school subscribe to the ethos of that school.

Most Reverend Donal McKeown, Auxiliary Bishop of Down and Connor (Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education): We all want a more effective and efficient running of our education system. The Government have the legislature, the Executive and the judiciary; similarly, there is a range of bodies in the education system between which a balance must be maintained. Those bodies include the Department of Education, the ESA, the trustees and owners of schools and boards of governors; they all have vital and complementary roles to play in the running of schools. We have a sense of a sectoral identity, but governors are committed to running their schools.

It is a question of striking a balance between harnessing the passion of individual governors and their commitment to their schools — which has raised standards across the educational community in Northern Ireland — and the broader educational communities. There are balances to be struck; we do not seek out-and-out control.

Under present legislation, boards of governors have a huge amount of power and trustees have a negligible amount of right. We are trying to determine how to ensure that all education stakeholders — which is now, according to a radio programme this morning, a very unpopular term — can assert their rights without disturbing the equilibrium at the heart of the education system. We do not seek a Stalinist, centralist control: we want to maximise how devolved responsibility can be exercised in the interests of pupils while maintaining a cohesive system and cohesive sectors.

The Chairperson: The commission’s submission stresses the role of the employer as the person or body with the power; even more so than the issue of ownership. I noticed that your submission draws a distinction between the employer and the power of the trustees.

Under the current arrangement, the CCMS employs teachers and the Department employs non-teaching staff. If we take what the commission proposes to its logical conclusion, the commission would like the power that is the domain of the CCMS with regard to teachers given to individual boards of governors. That would lead to boards of governors being the employers of all non-teaching staff.

Is that not a step back from a more streamlined and efficient way of governing our schools? We will discuss clause 8 in a minute or two, but I want to tease that point out first. The submission rightly refers to attempts to achieve more streamlining. If we started with a clean sheet, we would not be starting from here, but to use a well-worn phrase — which the media may no longer find acceptable — we are where we are. The sectors, the institutions and the bodies govern and are responsible for education. However, do you not see that there could be a conflict between trying to achieve a more streamlined way of governing our schools and what is sought in your submission?

Dr McKeown: At present, there is a wide variety of relationships between schools and their employees. The voluntary grammar sector employed everybody — it chose when to employ, when not to employ, when to promote and so on; whereas the CCMS used a comparatively light touch as an employing body. That ensured that a school followed correct procedures in the appointment of staff, but the boards of governors made the decisions. With the education and library board situation, people had to go through a board of governors and then pass on a number of names. We want to find the most effective method.

We are keen that as much responsibility as possible should be devolved locally to avoid having multiple tiers of filters through which matters must proceed. We seek effectiveness and efficiency, and it is possible to balance those. The last thing that we want to do is add more layers in attempting to remove the multiplicity of layers that we have at present.

The voluntary grammar sector has demonstrated its ability to manage its resources effectively and accountably.

If that model works for some schools, then as much authority as possible should be devolved to them. That should be done in the interests of good education, the raising of standards, and it should be done in such a way that the schools are accountable.

The Chairperson: Some people might dispute that the CCMS could be described as having a light touch. I have never heard it described as such before.

Dr McKeown: I was referring to appointments.

The Chairperson: I appreciate that. I am sure that the CCMS will be able to rebut that comment when it appears before the Committee later. Bishop Walsh, do you want to comment?

Dr Walsh: Bishop McKeown has summed up the position. The voluntary grammar sector, in which the schools are generally large and have plenty of resources, has shown that it has experience in that area; there are strong boards of governors and they have been well able to make successful appointments. Schools in the maintained sector have seen the value of the CCMS having a “light touch” in assisting them to make appointments.

Some small schools would not be in a position to make appointments without some assistance, and perhaps the support bodies could provide that. However, in general, schools should be given as much autonomy as possible.

The Chairperson: I wish to speak personally, rather than on behalf of the Committee, about one of my concerns. I would like locally delegated autonomy, which has been the domain of the voluntary grammar schools, to become the domain of all schools. That autonomy has been the envy of the non-grammar schools, and Donal referred to the multiple layers involved in making teacher appointments and choosing one candidate from three. Such autonomy would, therefore, be good for our education system.

Clauses 3 and 8 are causing major concerns. Clause 8 states that the ESA may not lawfully refuse to put into effect any proper decision of a board of governors on employment matters. If model employment schemes and associated guidance were to clarify that and any other points for which you consider clarification to be necessary — and if those schemes were subject to full consultation with submitting authorities and, possibly, an independent appeals system or to regulation and control by the Assembly — would that remove some of the commission’s key concerns?

That issue was touched on at last week’s meeting, and the Committee asked the Department to provide “mechanisms” for how it could be done. If such mechanisms, structures, and regulation were added, would that help to address your concerns?

Mr John Gordon (Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education): A pragmatic solution is required. A dispute mechanism would deal with the disputes that arise between boards of governors and the ESA. Disputes within particular schools are likely to be internal; they may relate to selection and recruitment or to disciplinary issues. This is about providing boards of governors with the right to deal with disputes as they deem fit.

Clause 8(2) does not specify who will determine what is lawful. If the ESA approves a scheme of employment and management for a particular school, it should adopt a hands-off approach thereafter, and the school should have the right to choose its own representation at any tribunal or court hearing. The ESA should indemnify the school, as suggested in clause 8(2), although clarification is required about any costs or damages that may be incurred in facilitating a school’s challenge and in dealing with a dispute.

It would be only if it were not possible to deal with a situation that there would be a conflict with the ESA. The ESA should not be directing schools in the minutiae of employment and disciplinary matters. The position on the ground at the moment is very similar. Schools have the power in the maintained sector — and, indeed, the voluntary grammar sector — to conduct and represent themselves at tribunals and courts. That position should continue.

The Chairperson: To clarify the issue: are you saying that provision for appeals and other mechanisms would only resolve disputes between boards of governors and the ESA and would not address the fundamental problem?

Mr Gordon: Yes.

The Chairperson: So, there is a need to go further than appeals and mechanisms?

Mr Gordon: I am not sure whether there is a need to go further. There should be clarification, either in primary or secondary legislation, that boards of governors would have the power. In fact, it is hinted in various papers from the Department and in some of the evidence that was given last week that there would be a clear autonomous employer role for boards of governors. The words “advocacy” and “representation” were used. If that were the case, boards of governors would, obviously, have the right to employ their own lawyers to represent them. Those lawyers, in turn, would represent not only the school but the ethos of the school in the manner in which a case is taken forward to a tribunal or court.

The Chairperson: We always return to the same issue — the need for clarity. In an appeal situation, who would be the appellant and who would represent education? Last week, an eminent legal expert appeared before the Committee on behalf of the Governing Bodies Association; today, Mr Gordon is here. The Department is stating that the ESA may not lawfully refuse to put into effect any proper decision of a board of governors on employment matters. There is now, clearly, a conflict of legal opinion. At some stage, the Committee will have to determine which of the two legal positions it will accept, given all that it has heard. We will obviously have to return to this issue.

I do not want today’s session to be curtailed — if we run over time, so be it, provided that that time is valuable and well spent. I want the commission, the CCMS, and all organisations who submit oral evidence to have the confidence that the Committee will listen genuinely to the arguments. That is our statutory responsibility and duty, and we will carry it out fully.

Mr O’Dowd: Your Eminence, Bishop Walsh and Bishop McKeown, you are very welcome. I have read your speech of last Thursday with great interest, and we have a responsibility to study that speech and consider the concerns that you raise in it, which are clearly deeply felt. Today, you have again outlined many of those concerns; and, hopefully, from this and other engagements, we will be able to clarify the issues and use our best offices to reassure where we can and build a common approach to the future provision of education.

The role that the commission and the CCMS have played in education is invaluable. You have provided an excellent education service through very difficult times in our collective history, and you are, justly, proud of that. We do not want to do anything to damage that provision or the relationship of that provision.

Many of the points that I wish to raise have been raised by the Chairperson, particularly in relation to the role of boards of governors. I think that this is an area in which clarity has to be given, either through further discussions or through some other mechanism. I do not read the situation in the same way as you are reading it — that the roles of boards of governors are being diminished, either in providing ethos or as the employment authority. Will you map out the differences between what is in place and what you see happening? John Gordon already touched on the legal provision and tribunals, but where do your concerns lie about the day-to-day running of schools and employment management?

Mr Gordon: Obviously, there is a difference between the Catholic-maintained and voluntary grammar sectors. In the latter, boards of governors are the employers and have the right to hire, fire and to discipline teachers and pupils alike. Frequently, one finds that voluntary grammar schools have taken out insurance to protect themselves against the costs they might incur were they to end up in court or at an employment tribunal. Therefore, there is complete autonomy in that sector.

On a day-to-day basis in the Catholic-maintained sector, as Bishop McKeown has said, the CCMS has responsibility in statute for the scheme of management, which includes employment, selection and recruitment, and for assisting boards of governors to deal with schools. Schools have the day-to-day decision-making power on issues such as selection, recruitment, hiring, firing and discipline. The CCMS support system makes a valuable contribution to our schools, particularly — as Bishop Walsh indicated — the smaller ones.

The situation is different again in the controlled sector, where schools are subject to the education and library boards. Those boards have their own joint legal services, which provide representation for controlled schools at tribunals and in courts on a range of issues, particularly those relating to the schools estate. I assume that those joint legal services will cross over to the ESA, which will then also have its own in-house legal team.

Mr O’Dowd: As the Chairperson said, we have had three different legal interpretations. That is the nature of legal matters, which is why there are so many solicitors and barristers — we are fortunate to have so many of them. Therefore, the Committee has to do its homework to examine those opinions. However, the ESA is not bringing forward any new employment legislation; it will only interpret and adapt what currently exists. Is that a fair statement?

Mr Gordon: That leads to the crucial statement: who determines what is lawful?

Mr O’Dowd: It would be a tribunal or a judge.

Mr Gordon: If one is providing an autonomous role for boards of governors, then it they who should determine what is lawful, not the ESA.

Mr O’Dowd: In your earlier comments to the Chairperson, you said that the ESA should legally indemnify boards of governors. In such circumstances, a board of governors, as an autonomous unit, would be saying that its interpretation of the law is correct and that it is prepared for its decisions to be challenged in court. Is that what you are saying?

Mr Gordon: Yes; essentially, boards of governors should be given the power to make decisions. That is what happens on a day-to-day basis at the moment. Provided that a board of governors acts responsibly, within the law, and not recklessly, it is indemnified by the relevant education and library board for any decisions that it takes. The safeguard in that is what is referred to in clause 8(2); that boards of governors have a scheme of management and employment that they are asked to adhere to on issues such as selection and recruitment and that that scheme of management and employment respects and enforces current equality legislation.

Nothing is black and white when it comes to selection and recruitment, because the basis and nature of applications can be contested. The board of governors that made the decision in the first instance must determine whether allegations made by an applicant or complainant are valid. It should, subsequently, be afforded an opportunity to defend its decision-making power rather than having the ESA simply overriding it. At present, education and library boards do not deal with matters in that way, and the process should remain as it is.

Mr O’Dowd: However, a defence could be based only on the current law; is that right?

Mr Gordon: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Apart from the veto, or exemption, on recruitment, is the commission seeking any other exemptions?
Mr Gordon: No. The schools will adhere to the current equality legislation.

Mr D Bradley: Good morning, Your Eminence and team.

Autonomy is one of the crucial concepts in this matter, and your paper outlines your support for maximum autonomy. The Department has a different concept, which it calls maximum supported autonomy. Your proposal that employment powers be vested in boards of governors is quite radical, because the view expressed to date is that many of them do not have the capacity to carry that responsibility. Therefore, until now, sectoral support from the CCMS has been required to support and advise boards of governors on employment issues, which are, as we all know, a potential minefield.

To date, the concept of maximum supported autonomy has operated in the maintained sector. However, you talked today about placing that burden of responsibility on schools, and Bishop Walsh mentioned that some of the smaller schools would not be able to deal with employment matters without further support. Are you moving towards the Department’s position on supported autonomy?

That leads to the question: from where would that support, if required, come? The evidence that the Committee has received so far is that the ESA would encourage schools to be as autonomous as possible while supporting them when needed. Bishop Walsh suggested that the new emerging sectoral body, or bodies, should provide that support. Paragraph 7 of your paper states that you envisage a need for:

How far should that support extend, and to what extent should it be provided for in statute?

Dr McKeown: I will consider the question in the broad sense, and perhaps John will talk about any legal technicalities. We all recognise that having a multiplicity of education bodies was not the most efficient and effective way of administering education. To ensure that best practice can continue, we must take into account the current situation in which some schools have experienced a huge amount of autonomy and in which others accept that they need a great deal of support.

We are not hung up on individual phrases as long as the outcomes benefit young people, serve the common good and work in the interests of reconciliation. From the information in the consultation paper and the advice that the Committee received from the Department in early January 2009, it is quite clear that the role of the sectoral body would be, primarily, to provide advisory, representational and advocacy services, but not front line services. We are not looking for a body to provide those front line services.

If a school can get all the advice that it needs about correct procedures from the ESA, then that is fine; as long as the school is in a position to make its own decisions as much as possible. The CCMS structure seemed to have provided for that by outlining what schools should do and supporting that work, while resting all decisions in the hands of schools.

It seems that we want to take the range of sectors and maximise the best that is currently available in the interests of all. It is important to note that in the review of public administration the most publicly administered schools were not necessarily the most successful. That was not necessarily the most successful way to get the best outcomes. Therefore, the question is how can we build on what is already good in our system?

Mr Gordon: The commission wishes to see the provision of sectoral support — not just to the Catholic sector but to all sectors — reflected in the legislation. It is quite extraordinary that the Catholic sector — the largest sector and provider of education to children in Northern Ireland — is not supported and maintained in the legislation. Yet, I note that the Bill does not seek to repeal article 64 of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. Paragraph 1 of article 64 states:

“It will be the duty of the Department to encourage and facilitate to development of integrated education”.

That article remains. In addition, Irish-medium education, by virtue of article 89 of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998, is also being retained. Therefore, two smaller sectors within education are, in fact, getting statutory encouragement and support yet the largest educational sector is not receiving such support in the Education Bill.

The Chairperson: Following on from that point, the Department, in its perceived wisdom, says that it is introducing the Education Bill to get a more streamlined and equitable system of governance. I determine from your comments that we will not have such a system because two sectors have a position of prominence over and above the other sectors because of article 64 of the 1989 Order and article 89 of the 1998 Order.

Mr Gordon: The Department has a statutory obligation to encourage and facilitate the development of Irish-medium education and integrated education. The Department has recognised that sectoral support is required not just for those sectors and the Catholic sector, but for the controlled sector too. The Cardinal has alluded to the fact that the commission believes that that support should be extended to all sectors and representatives of the various sectors within education and should be reflected in the legislation.

Sister Eithne Woulfe (Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education): I will make a couple of important points about statutory obligations. There is a level of mutual accountability once something is part of a statutory instrument. In this case, education is a common good. Therefore, support services for whatever sectors must provide value for the common good. There should be a mechanism in place to ensure accountability and transparency, and ensure that they are not simply part of a private enterprise. We are talking about public moneys and about something that provides a service to the people.

One of the things that the CCMS has proven, as has research in other jurisdictions, is that ethos adds value. Every group of schools has an ethos, and it is important that, somehow or other, in the context of diversity, each distinctive ethos is promoted — not as segregation, but as some sort of healthy mutuality. It is therefore important that there should be some process of inspection to determine how those support services add value to the education experience of young people, because, ultimately, that is the bottom line.

Mrs M Bradley: Good morning, Your Eminence, and everyone. In your submission you state that the sectoral support bodies should have a role in raising standards, and that that is the Department’s rationale for establishing the ESA. Is there a danger that, with the ESA and a number of other bodies involved in raising standards, we may have a case of “too many cooks”, and standards may suffer as a result?

Dr McKeown: You are quite right in putting your finger on the need to raise standards. Too many young people are being failed by the current system, despite the wonderful efforts of so many schools and teachers. There is a balance to be struck between ensuring that we have a streamlined system and maximising the ability of schools locally — to bring in local governors, to work with people to develop links with local enterprises and businesses, and all of that sort of thing, in the interests of quality outcomes.

Outcomes are not simply the result of inputs — they arise from an atmosphere, a sense that, yes, we can do it, and a sense of belonging and identity. I often quote one of our local parish priests in Belfast who says that in his parish, male life expectancy is now 50. There is a shocking level of people being failed by the system, and just having good teachers and good governors is part of the process of dealing with that.

We are looking for what will actually deliver on the ground in particular parts of Belfast or the rest of the country. If that costs appreciable amounts of money, we have to ask whether it is worth investing whatever it takes in order to bring up that tail of young people who are being failed by society. They are falling into addictions, self-harm, depression, and all of those things. We have to ensure that their needs are a priority for us, and that we put in place a system that will ensure quality outcomes, especially for those with the biggest needs.

Many of us would have done well in a hedge school. Our emphasis has to be on what is going to help those who most need support, not just what will look well on a piece of paper as a nice flow diagram. Of course, there has to be accountability and an organised system, but it is important that that is biased in favour of those who have most needs, of one sort or another.

We in the Catholic sector are certainly not looking for any form of unilateral declaration of independence — we are looking to maximise outcomes for everybody, to ensure that reconciliation is a key part of what we do, and to serve the common good. Being a very large sector is not just a privilege, it is also a huge responsibility. We have to ensure that the legislation ensures outcomes, particularly for those who have the greatest needs — there are too many of those in our society at the present time. The taxpayer will pay for the problems that arise from that into the future.

Dr Walsh: In response to Mrs Bradley, it is important that we all recognise the importance of sectoral support bodies, as the Department of Education has done. That is accepted, and we are very pleased about that. As the Cardinal said, in policy paper 21 the roles and functions were spelt out quite clearly, and there is no question of duplicating the roles and functions of the ESA. It is important that the roles and functions of support bodies should be enshrined and made clear in legislation. That is the kind of clarity that we need.

There is one point following from that, which Bishop McKeown has mentioned — we all have to be accountable. It is very important that if a particular support body is obliged to support schools in its sector, the schools are obliged to accept and consult with that support body.

That is also important. Our submission says that schools must have due regard to the ESA’s advice as they would with the sectoral body. I hope that that clarifies our position.

Sister Woulfe: I want to reinforce Bishop Walsh’s comments. There are, probably, three key issues. First, support bodies should be slimline and should not duplicate services that are provided by other bodies. Secondly, as the Chairperson outlined in his introductory remarks, there is a need for clarity, and sometimes the devil is in the detail. Thirdly, there must be clarity in the mediation of interests and accountability, and that important issue should be included in statute. I hope that we will not have too many cooks but will have a richer broth. [Laughter]

Mr Lunn: Good morning, Your Eminence. Good morning, Bishops. The word “ethos” must be the most used word in this morning’s discussions. If I thought that any of the Bill’s provisions posed a genuine threat to your right to maintain a Catholic ethos in your schools — or to the perceived ethos of voluntary grammars — I would oppose it. However, I see no such threat.

You have stressed the critical link between employment and ethos, and the employment of teachers is of primary concern to you. I am sorry to revisit old ground, but your boards of governors do not employ your teachers. However, your submission states:

“NICCE wants to make it clear, in the strongest possible terms, that it regards the right of Boards of Governors of Schools to be the legal employer … as critical to the future provision of schools of a particular ethos and defining character”.

That has not been the case to date. An arm’s-length body — the CCMS — has employed teachers, and the ESA now do so.

I do not know whether the CCMS has a light touch or not, and neither do I know whether the ESA will have a light touch or not; but I do know what the Bill says. Under its provisions, only boards of governors can decide which staff to appoint. That is included in the departmental response; it could not be clearer.

An eminent QC who attended the Committee last week on behalf of the GBA made a similar point. However, no matter how eminent he was, he did not convince me that a problem exists. In fact, he gave one ridiculous example — I will not bore you with it — concerning Irish-medium schools. How do you explain your desire to change the existing system from the CCMS being the employer to individual schools, rather than the ESA, being the employer? Moreover, will you reiterate your problems with the appointment of community governors to schools, where the ESA must, by law, consult trustees? I do not understand your problem with that.

Mr John Gordon (Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education): Mr Lunn asked why we want boards of governors rather than the ESA to take decisions. The CCMS shared, fostered and developed the aspiration of Catholic ethos. As Bishop Walsh said, it had an overarching statutory role, which is outlined in the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. The Bill proposes the abolition of the CCMS, but no substitute has been proposed.

You are quite right: if boards of governors have the right to hire and fire teachers and to deal with disciplinary matters, what happens when a legal challenge is made to their decision making? Who represents the board of governors? Is the matter kicked upstairs to the ESA, which would mean that a Government secular body would represent the interests of a school with a particular ethos to foster? It is more appropriate that boards of governors have that power and that they deal with decision making and contested issues themselves.

In the current situation, the CCMS was at idem with any board of governors that it represented. To my knowledge, there is no record of any differences of opinion or difficulties between a board of governors and the CCMS or in a board of governors following advice from the CCMS. The sectoral support body that is envisaged and which we would like to see enshrined in the legislation would perform a similar, albeit reduced, support role in those circumstances.

Dr Brady: Teachers are vital to the ethos of a school. I do not know whether the CCMS had a light touch or a heavy touch, but we have the impression that it had a nearer touch than the Department. That is vital.

Mr Lunn: The witnesses would know better than I whether it had a light touch or a heavy touch.

Dr McKeown: Trevor highlighted the question of community governors. Bishop Walsh made it clear that the corporate body of a board of governors should have some agreed vision for the future. It would be difficult for an integrated school to have someone on its board of governors who opposed the school’s philosophy. It would be difficult for an Irish-medium bunscoil or meánscoil to have a governor who was not really all that fussed about what that school was trying to achieve.

There should be adequate public representation on boards of governors, but cohesiveness is needed on agreed broad principles about what the school wants to attain. Due note should be taken that there should be some consonance between publicly appointed governors and the ethos of the school. The last thing that we want is boards of governors to be in constant conflict over all sorts of things.

That does not mean that the trustees would have to vet appointments, but those who agree to serve on the board of governors of a controlled, voluntary, or any other school, should at least be committed to the broad vision of that school. We are trying to offer leadership, as trustees in the Catholic sector, on some very current issues. It is important that governors are committed to their school, and it is also important to recognise that the trustees have a role in the overall direction in the sector. That must be recognised; otherwise we end up with governors fighting one another instead of running the school. We want to avoid that in all circumstances.

Mr Lunn: Why would the ESA, in consultation with the trustees, want to appoint a governor who did not respect the ethos of a school? The question seems almost hypothetical; but why would that be a problem?

Dr Walsh: In so far as one can speak about one’s personal experience, it has not been a problem before now. It seems that there has been proper consultation in the voluntary grammar sector and in the maintained sector; we just want to ensure that that will continue. As the Department pointed out, it is included in schedules 5 and 6 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, and it remains the case.
We would like the word “consult” to be strengthened by a phrase such as “in consultation with” so that there is genuine consultation. So far, that has taken place, but there is no guarantee that the ESA may interpret consulting in the same way. It may regard consultation as simply phoning up and providing two names.

Mr Lunn: The Department appeared to think that that small change in the wording would change the emphasis of the Bill, although I cannot see it myself. I do not disagree with the small change that you propose.

I am pleased that one paragraph of your submission is headed “Membership of the ESA”; I have finally found someone who agrees with me. I am slightly worried. [Laughter.]

Dr Walsh: We did not consult you, did we?

Mr Lunn: The proposal that the ESA have a majority of local councillors on its board fills me with dread. Your submission states:

“In NICCE our experience of the contribution of elected representatives on such bodies has generally been positive”.

I will not go into my thoughts on that, but “generally” means that sometimes it has not been positive, and the current situation of the South Eastern Education and Library Board might provide a clue about why I say that.

Although you have not been specific about what you would like to see, can I take it that you would still like to see local councillor representation on the ESA board but not as a majority — or even close to a majority? Is that a fair summation of what you think?

Dr Walsh: We simply ask for a better balance. It is important that the people who run the ESA will be appointed not simply because they happen to be councillors — or anything else — but because they have a specific contribution to make to educational thought. The ESA should be an educational body, and we are asking for that balance to be struck.

Dr McKeown: Our education system has survived difficult years — with schools often being havens of calm in the midst of a very troubled society. Educationalists have done a reasonably good job of running our education system, and there is concern that non-educational issues might, on some occasions — a minority of occasions — interfere excessively in the decision-making process.

I understand that a majority of the ESA board must be councillors — which is a reasonable, if small, pool from which to draw — because the Assembly will be responsible for passing legislation. It would be inappropriate for the body that passes legislation to be involved in the implementation thereof. We are expressing our concerns. Knowing the nature of Northern Ireland, sometimes political priorities might get in the way of what educationalists might see as other, more important, priorities.

Mr Lunn: I am glad that you raised it in your submission, as we have been able to put it on the record.

The Chairperson: I am conscious that we are running over time. However, I want to ensure that everybody has the opportunity to raise issues that concern them. Nevertheless, I ask members to be conscious of time, because we still have a considerable amount of work to get through.

Before we move on, I want to raise a point about community governors. What is the definition of community? That was not picked up in your submission. How would we define the local community? Is it the faith-based, the geographical or the social community? That needs clarity, and we need more work on the provisions for community governors in clause 35, as they are very broad and should be more defined.

Mr Poots: Just to clarify, the South Eastern Education and Library Board was a quango — 60% of which were not public representatives — that got itself into huge debt, and public representatives stood against cutting special needs provision. We are in this mess because of a quango of appointees, not because of public representatives.

Bishops, you set out your stall in article 7a of your submission quite clearly on a faith-based education, which you say is supported by the European Convention on Human Rights.

It appears to me that there is an inference inherent throughout your submission that the legislation is moving away from your right to provide a faith-based education and that the ESA will undermine your position.

Dr McKeown: We are raising concerns about the legislation’s ability to ensure that, as a sector, we can act in a cohesive manner. The Bain Report of 2006 recommended that sectoral bodies be supported, particularly for planning. The ability to bring schools together — not to knock heads together but to recognise that there are overriding priorities other than local priorities — is very important in the context of the demographic downturn. If we individualise schools excessively, all sorts of influences can become involved in deciding what a school will do, because a short-term action — for example, for the lifespan of a board of governors — seems to be the best way forward.

I go to every monthly meeting of the TRC; I am an agenda item every time, because there is a recognition of the need to ensure that faith-based education — whatever that might mean in future — continues to be accessible. As someone said, in future the problem will not be so much religious difference as religious indifference. The problem with the present system is that, in many ways, there are no secular schools for those who would like an avowedly secular education.
In 20 years’ time, there will be a major reshaping of the alliances and allegiances of the education system in Northern Ireland. We are working with the transferors to ensure parents’ right to have a faith-based education system in Northern Ireland that is in no way damaged by legislation, changes or streamlining. Sectoral bodies must have the right to negotiate and to work together to create new types of schools. If we centralise and individualise schools excessively, we will end up with many small empires without the cohesion of the vision and the value that ethos brings. We are looking for a balance to ensure that faith-based education will be an option for as many people as want to take advantage of it in 20 years’ time.

Mr Poots: Would you accept the argument that the Bill gives schools the right to operate according to their own ethos and practices and brings together various streams in the overall delivery of education under the ESA? The ESA is the paymaster, and he who pays the piper calls the tune.

Dr McKeown: I have no problem with that. However, it is important to recognise what has enabled schools here to deliver the highest quality of education: the ability of individuals and sectors to work together. Fifty-seven per cent of pupils in Northern Ireland do not go to controlled schools; that, as the Chairperson said, is where we are starting from. We are looking for something that delivers outcomes — I keep repeating that — and which will allow those who wish to choose faith-based education in an increasingly secular society to do so. It is possible to ensure streamlining, efficiency and effectiveness within such a system. The danger is that we end up with something that looks well on a flow chart but which does not deliver.

The ability to harness local energy and enthusiasm in a group of schools is very important, as is area-based planning, which the Bain Report was strong on and in which we are at present involved. A balance can be struck. However, excessive paring may not deliver the outcomes that we all passionately want for our schools.

Mr Poots: I take it that the ethos for which you argue and which you support and the autonomy for that ethos is something that you would want for the voluntary grammar sector as well.

Dr McKeown: The voluntary grammar sector has a range of —

Mr Poots: I mean that you would not seek something for your own sector that you would not seek for another sector.

Dr McKeown: We have said that clearly. We have a clear set of documents about the Catholic ethos. The voluntary grammar sector is unified in that it has a particular status in legislation, but there is no agreed ethos for voluntary grammar schools, as far as I am aware. As a former principal of one, I was not conscious of that.

They have a particular interest and structures, but I do not think that there is an agreed ethos for voluntary grammar schools, except in a comparatively limited sense. I think that we have a much broader sense of ethos; however, it is important that those groups of schools and individual schools have the right to be supported in gathering together where they have common interests, because it is all directed towards delivering quality outcomes.

Mr Poots: I take it, then, that you would envisage voluntary grammar schools being in existence for some time to come.

Dr McKeown: They are independent schools. What contribution they make to society and what role they play in the education system is a different matter, but they exist as individual schools, and their autonomy is precious to them and they have every right to maintain it.

Sister Woulfe: Mr Poots argued that the paymaster was the architect-in-chief of a school. The paymaster is responsible for the distribution of the public purse on behalf of the taxpayer, but that does not mean that the paymaster is the arbiter or the creator of the profile of school provision or ethos in a democracy. Democracy seeks to reflect the diversity of society, and that is the purpose of some of the changes. The other purpose — to which we subscribe in paragraph 8 of our submission — is that the Education Bill seeks to establish:

“a more streamlined, coherent and efficient system of education”.

That is the core. Everyone here wants an efficient, coherent education system that is not just value for money but also value for the young people in the education system. That does not mean one size fits all, but it places an obligation on the legislation and on the ESA, within its powers, to clarify the role of the constituent bodies and what demands are to be made of them so that some of them do not become privileged.

The voluntary principle of that devolution is particularly important, whether schools remain voluntary grammar or another kind of school.

Mr Poots: Bishop McKeown, in response to an earlier question, suggested that we need to provide “whatever it takes” to deal with the educational tail, but we do not have “whatever it takes”. Of a budget of £9 billion, education takes about £2 billion. We do not have much flexibility to provide “whatever it takes”.

Would you agree that you have a role to play in ensuring that education is provided more efficiently and at a lower cost-base than at present, given the diverse range of education that it is provided? Should you not co-operate fully to deliver education more efficiently so that more resources go to the youngsters who need them most? Should education not be about children first and foremost rather than about ethos or faiths or anything else?

Mr Gordon: Following up on Mr Poots’s last point, and I am sure that Mr Flanagan will visit this —

The Chairperson: He is a soft touch. [Laughter.]

Mr Gordon: The Catholic sector has, vis-à-vis the education and library boards, provided value for money in representation and education. To return to the initial question, the commission believes that the Education Bill does not go far enough in certain areas. From answers to questions, from the Department’s evidence to the Committee last week, from the Bain Report and the review of public administration (RPA) papers, it is clear that sectoral support bodies are necessary.

Since that is the case, and since sectoral bodies represent all sectors in education, why have they not been included in the Education Bill? It makes more sense to include them in it, as you will obtain the trust and confidence not just of the commission but of the Governing Bodies Association and the other sectors that have given evidence to the Committee.

Dr Walsh: Mr Poots spoke about children and ethos, among other things, and since he might have used a throwaway phrase I do not want to quote him exactly. However, putting children’s education first and maintaining ethos do not exclude each other. It is important that children are educated in a school, not in a vacuum or even in a hedge school — even though I know that Dr McKeown would have prospered at one.

Children are educated in schools that have a certain thrust and character, and it is those factors that provide good education in a sector; therefore, they should not be separated out, Mr Poots. Ethos is an important factor in the good education of children, and for us, children are important. We have said that all along, and it is good that children are beginning to take centre stage in the education process. That is what is good for children.

Mr Poots: The reality is that many schools are exclusive.

Dr Walsh: That is another issue and not quite ad rem to this discussion.

Mr McCausland: I have three questions. First, as regards governors and their appointment, you said that at present the Department of Education and the education and library boards, in consultation with the trustees, appoint governors. When I sat on an education and library board school management committee, we were given a list of people who had been proposed as governors, and that list was essentially rubber-stamped. I assume that that list came from the CCMS. Why will it be any different under a new regime?

Dr Walsh: That is unknown. It has always been a question of names being suggested backwards and forwards; that is the kind of good consultation that we require.

Mr McCausland: In my experience, there was no backwards and forwards; it was simply a case of presenting a list to a board of governors to rubber-stamp.

Dr Walsh: Perhaps that was the fault of the education and library board.

Mr McCausland: There was mention that people from the Protestant community work for the CCMS. However, how many people from the Protestant community sit on the boards of governors of Catholic maintained schools?

Dr Walsh: I do not know whether we can answer that question. If the Department of Education suggested a person for the board of one of our schools who was not of our faith but who was fully in tune with the ethos of the school and who was clearly a good educationalist, we would have no problem.

Dr Brady: That question could be answered in the Committee’s session with the CCMS.

Dr McKeown: I have worked with people from the Protestant and unionist community who were passionate members of boards of governors; that is my experience, and I am sure that it applies in other schools.

Mr McCausland: It would be useful to know.

Secondly, you said that if too many councillors were members of the board of the ESA, non-educational issues could be introduced and people could follow political priorities. No one in Northern Ireland is non-political; I have never found such a person. Everyone comes with some political agenda, whether they sit on a board as a politician or as a representative of some other sector. What sort of political issues do you see people pursuing? I find that difficult to envisage.

Dr McKeown: A major element is the planning of the schools estate — the development of new schools and amalgamations. We all have agendas. Inevitably, the agenda of a politician is to be elected, which is a very real part of the important role that political representatives play. I hope that decisions are taken that are not in the interests of people who depend on votes or who want to play to the tune of particular local groups — and I hope that that is the case within the CCMS. Our broad point is that we should ensure that pure, non-election-based agendas are always the dominant ones.

Mr McCausland: If I picked you up right, you are saying that you saw people pursuing political priorities and agendas on estate planning. Can you fill that out a bit more?
Dr McKeown: As someone who was never in the Belfast Education and Library Board (BELB), Balmoral High School springs to mind as an example of when a school is put in a place where it is not needed in the long term. We are simply saying that it is important to ensure that the big picture is always kept in mind, not just the picture for the next four or five years.

Mr McCausland: Should the councillors on the board of the ESA reflect the political community? Likewise, should the other members on the board reflect the composition of the wider community?

Dr McKeown: How representatives are picked will be a matter for the Assembly — the d’Hondt system seems to be valid everywhere. We are also aware that the Education Bill, and certainly its associated documentation, talks about local committees. The last thing that we want is a Balkanisation of education due to the predominance of one community in particular areas. We are looking for a system that will serve the common good. Democracy has to be exercised on the ground. However, we know from our society that there is a danger of Balkanisation, which we want to avoid.

Mr McCausland: There was mention in passing to the current obligation to encourage and facilitate the Irish-medium and integrated sectors. What is your view on equality across the education sectors? Should it not be the responsibility of the state to encourage and facilitate all sectors, rather than giving what might be perceived as special attention to two sectors?

Dr McKeown: In 1989, the Irish-medium sector was miniscule and the integrated sector was also small. At that time, it was right to ensure that such small sectors were given encouragement. Whether such encouragement is required to the same extent 20 years on is another thing. John Gordon was saying that at least those two sectors are recognised on the face of legislation — the end of the CCMS will mean that there is no recognition of the Catholic-maintained sector anywhere on the face of legislation.

Dr Brady: In our presentation, we made clear our respect for diversity, and we said that that should be reflected in legislation and provision.

Mr McCausland: If one goes down the road of saying that all sectors should be treated on the basis of equality, then giving a particular commitment to facilitate and encourage one sector will draw a difference. It would be helpful to ascertain views on that from the various people who give evidence to us on the Bill. Do you favour a more general commitment that the state should be responsible for encouraging and facilitating all sectors?

Dr McKeown: I talked to the transferors at the meeting on Monday. They are concerned about how they can play an important role in developing the current ethos of the schools in which they are heavily involved and to which they have made a huge commitment. Some will regard education supply as being divided, but we have produced a system that is, in global terms, good in many ways. The devolution to, and subsequent strength of, particular sectors is a source of strength, rather than being something of which we should rid ourselves.

Miss McIlveen: Having listened carefully to what you have said and having read your submission, my impression is that you feel under threat from the ESA. What discussions have you had with the Department about your concerns and what was its response?

Dr Walsh: For the past number of years, there has been ongoing communication with senior officials in the Department and we raised our concerns, which focus on employment issues. The Department’s legal advisers gave their opinion; our adviser, Mr Gordon, also has a view; and, as was strongly hinted, the Governing Bodies Association also brought an adviser to the Committee.

Having listened to today’s discussion, legal matters and the interpretation of law are becoming core issues. Is the Committee thinking about bringing some of the lawyers together, rather than hearing one view and then another? Perhaps the lawyers could tease out the legal issues in the presence of the Committee — is that too much to ask? Perhaps some members are lawyers.

The Chairperson: I do not want to be a referee at that meeting.

Mr McCausland: It would be an expensive meeting.

Dr Walsh: We would ask Mr Gordon not to charge a fee.

The Chair: Is that the basis on which he is here today? Perhaps I should not ask such questions.

Miss McIlveen: We could speak all day about ethos, and so forth, but, as someone who does not come from the same faith, I find it difficult to understand its importance. However, let us consider other models, particularly in Scotland, where schools are owned by the state but have maintained their Catholic faith and ethos. Have you spoken to your counterparts there or in other jurisdictions?

Sister Woulfe: Yes.

Miss McIlveen: Will you elaborate?

Dr McKeown: We meet the Scottish Catholic Education Service and their counterparts in England and Wales every year. In addition, we are part of a much bigger network of providers of Catholic schools throughout Europe. We are involved in ongoing dialogue, not only to maintain our existing system but to determine the best practical ways forward. The Scottish model provides one perspective, and our submission reflects that the right of minority groups of schools to continue is guaranteed in legislation in various parts of these islands. We want to ensure that that continues to be the case here, because we wish to serve the common good, and the examination results that we produce demonstrate that we are doing so.

Miss McIlveen: From your written submission and what you have said today, I get the impression that you simply want to hold on to what you have and perhaps gain a bit more if you can during the period of transition, rather than being more progressive and considering what might be better for the wider Northern Ireland.

Sister Woulfe: With respect, Miss McIlveen, your comment misses the point. The issue is one of a commitment to providing education in Northern Ireland for all young people. However, there is also the recognition and commitment to offer options within that provision. That is part of the diversity. For some people, their vision of education contains certain nuances. People want to bring up their children in a particular cultural environment, and for many, that has a religious dimension, whereas for others it does not. I am thinking not only of Northern Ireland, but of Europe when I say that. We all recognise that we are living in a time of huge and rapid transition on this island.

It is not about grabbing what one can, so to speak; it is about offering something for the common good in schools that promote an ethos with a particular vision of, and purpose in, life. These schools are open to all, not just to children whose families are from the Catholic tradition. They are open to anyone who wishes to participate in them. It is also open to participating in communities of learning, which are very much part of the emerging context in this part of the island.

You asked whether we have studied what is happening in Catholic schools in other parts of the world. We have. You mentioned the Scottish model, which arose from early twentieth-century legislation. In recent times, there has been significant legislation in England and Wales. Furthermore, legislators in France, Belgium, Holland, Spain and Italy have worked on the matter, and, as well as having state systems, those countries have state-funded diverse education systems.

The place of religion in those countries varies according to the jurisdiction. However, a religious ethos is not just founded on the faith dimension, nor is it just about the period of worship; it informs how things, such as discipline, are done. There is a dialogue between faith and culture; it is not about indoctrination, because education is fundamentally not about indoctrination; it is about enabling people to be critical thinkers at an appropriate age. For example, four-year olds are not critical thinkers in the same way as 24-year olds.

There are different forms of education, and a one-size-fits-all system would do nothing for society. In any kind of democracy, one must allow for diverse voices, and that is partly why we are here. Although we represent Catholic interests, we do not deny the value of other interests as education providers — we endorse them. We mentioned the controlled sector, the Irish-medium sector, the integrated sector and the transferors, and we acknowledge the value of them all. In some ways, we recognise the value of them working alone; however, in other ways, we see the value of them working together, and that is happening. That is why support is required for each sector here, and, in order to ensure that that support is healthy and accountable, it must be integrated in legislation.

The Chairperson: Roman Catholic schools became part of the state system in Scotland in 1926, and that was followed by the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 and so on. In light of that, do you believe that the ethos of those schools was diminished in any way? Further to the point raised by Michelle McIlveen, I am interested in the comments in your submission about explicit legal recognition in other jurisdictions with respect to the critical link between employment and ethos. Do you believe that the ethos of Roman Catholic schools was diminished in any way, because that brings us back to the fundamental issue with which we started — employment fears? Last Thursday in Dungannon, the Cardinal publicly stated his concerns about preserving the ethos of schools.

Sister Woulfe: I think you are talking about a question of principle. The Scottish model has worked well.

The Chairperson: That is something that we would be interested to see.

Sister Woulfe: I have here ‘Religion, Education & the Law: A Comparative Approach’, which some of you might find interesting.

The Chairperson: I shall delegate Nelson McCausland to read that and report back next week. [Laughter.]

Finally, Cardinal Brady said something about which I wish to ask a question. I apologise to the other witnesses about the way that the session has run on; however, it is vital that we have this discussion. In the Cardinal’s opening remarks, he said that clause 3 is unacceptable. If we were not able to convince the Department and the Minister to make changes that could satisfy the concerns that have been raised today and those that were raised with us last week by the GBA, what would the effect be? It might be difficult to answer that, but given that you said that clause 3 was unacceptable —

Dr Brady: It is unacceptable in its present form.

The Chairperson: Yes.
Dr Brady: Today’s meeting gives us cause for hope that by having genuine listening, as you said, and a profitable and fruitful exchange of views, we will arrive at a situation in which the legislation is acceptable. That is the point of the exercise, but we will cross that bridge when we come to it.

The Chairperson: I thank you and your delegation, Cardinal. You are welcome to stay while we hear from the representatives of the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS).

Dr Brady: I thank you and the Committee for listening genuinely.

The Chairperson: If members agree, I propose that, because of time constraints, we postpone the presentation from the departmental officials, if they will be kind enough to accede to that request. It is not that I am putting them in the sin bin — I am very conscious of that. We are also due to have a very important presentation from the Education and Training Inspectorate.

Mr O’Dowd: I am conscious that the media are interested in the Department’s presentation. Is it possible, if the officials’ attendance is to be postponed, to make the relevant documents public?

The Chairperson: I meant to say to the Cardinal’s delegation before they left the table that we have a departmental response to their submission and that we will make that available to both delegations and the press, because it is now in the public domain. Are members content with course of action?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: I apologise to the departmental officials about that. I welcome Bishop McAreavey, Mr Donal Flanagan and his team. We are looking forward to a soft touch from the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS). You have been at the centre of some jesting this morning, but I hope that it was all taken in good humour. There is a great deal of commonality on many of the issues that have been raised. I ask you to make your presentation, after which members will have an opportunity to ask questions.

Most Reverend John McAreavey, Bishop of Dromore (Council for Catholic Maintained Schools): Thank you, Chairperson. We appreciate having the opportunity to address the Committee, and we hope that we will be able to bring some clarity to the issues that have already been discussed this morning.

I will introduce the members of our delegation. Mr Donal Flanagan is the chief executive of CCMS; Mr Jim Clarke is the deputy chief executive, and Ms La’Verne Montgomery is the head of human resources and corporate services.

It is the case that we are in broad agreement with the views expressed by the trustees, both in their written submission and oral evidence. The views of the CCMS come from more direct hands-on experience than that of bishops or trustees, who, in the nature of things, are a little bit more removed from the classroom and day-to-day administration of schools. It is from that experience that our contribution will be made.

My colleagues, as you probably know, or will discover, are well able to speak for themselves. Whether they take a gentle touch or not, as a trustee and chair of the council of the CCMS, I think that they have acted over the years as they believed necessary and appropriate. By and large, that has been through influence and in trying to be supportive.

Of course, as with any organisation, there were times and situations in which fairly decisive action was judged necessary. History will show that such actions were taken for the benefit of schools, teachers and pupils. I will hand over to Jim Clarke, who will make the main presentation.

Mr Jim Clarke (Council for Catholic Maintained Schools): As a regional body, the CCMS agrees with the RPA proposals and agrees that they have the potential to deliver a more coherent and efficient support and administrative framework for education. However, centralised administration should not mean centralised control.

The Bill is incomplete and lacks clarity. Those facts make it difficult for the CCMS to develop a full understanding of the intentions and implications at this time. At present, we do not have sight of the second Bill. Therefore, proposals on matters such as accountable autonomy, area-based planning and governance are not available to us. Members will have noted from the previous conversation that much of the debate is about how accountable autonomy will look and how it will operate.

Furthermore, we are confused about the Bill’s lack of clarity on employment, the selection of community governors and the roles and responsibilities of sectoral support bodies. The CCMS believes that the purpose of schools should be to provide a high-quality education in which parents and pupils can have confidence. It should be an education system that is clearly linked to Northern Ireland’s emerging economy and changing society. In order to ensure that that happens, all sectors should have access to the range of supports that they need, bearing in mind — as Mr Poots might remind us — the costs.

I will focus on three main areas: the need for clarity on the roles of the education and skills authority and boards of governors in the employment of teachers; the importance of the need for clarity on the roles and responsibilities of sectoral support bodies; and... their relationship to the ESA and schools’ boards of governors; and, the critical area of raising standards. We are happy to answer questions on other aspects of our evidence.

The first issue is the role of the ESA and boards of governors in the employment of teachers. The council is anxious to secure that there is clarity in the legislation and associated guidance in order to ensure equality, whereby each sector must provide schools that reflect parents’ desire for a particular educational ethos — be it Catholic, other faith-based, integrated, secular or Irish-medium. At present, there is confusion in the language of the Bill. References to the “employing authority” or “employer” seem to relate only to ESA’s role. Indeed, those terms are almost interchangeable in the Bill.

There is no clear statement on the roles that will be discharged by boards of governors, and there is no umbrella terminology to describe what those roles might be. That omission is exacerbated by the lack of detail on the meaning of accountable autonomy and on how that concept will function. It is important that schools appoint teachers — particularly leaders — who have a commitment to the ethos regardless of their own background, in order to achieve and maintain high standards.

Boards of governors must have significant influence over the appointment and management of staff. We have been told that the ESA will be the de jure employer or employing authority whereas boards of governors will be the de facto employer on all practical matters. Those roles must be clarified and confirmed in legislation or in guidance.

The CCMS regards accountable autonomy as a significant opportunity for all schools to have the potential to access a more extensive range of responsibilities than those that are available under the current voluntary principle. However, that voluntary principle is not available to all schools. We believe that schools should have the potential to aspire to, or earn, that greater level of autonomy, and accountability aspects must be reflected in that. It should empower with a view to, primarily, raising standards rather than constraining, but we need detail on how that issue might operate.

It is important that there is equality in the proposals. The CCMS believes that the Catholic sector and the controlled sector should have the same legal protections that are available to the integrated and Irish-medium sectors, as was suggested in the outcomes of the working group on establishing a culture of tolerance. The Catholic sector is not asking for anything that should not be available to other sectors.

CCMS believes that all sectors should have access to a support body with a range of functions that are consistent with the needs and responsibilities of the sector. In the case of the Catholic sector, those are well outlined in policy paper 21, with the exception of the role of raising standards, which I will refer to later. Those responsibilities, in addition to the role of raising standards, include: developing ethos; an advocacy role on behalf of the sector; clarity on the role of school owners in the planning and provision of schools under an area-based planning process, managed, after the second Bill has been implemented, by the ESA acting as a neutral body; and the supporting of schools and the appointment of teachers, particularly at leadership levels.

All those functions are based on ensuring the effectiveness of every school in the sector, imbued by the ethos of that sector, recognised in the schemes of management and employment. The experience of the CCMS has been that ethos adds value, and improvement in the sector appears to support that position. We believe that sectoral support is valuable, it should be available to every sector, and its functions and relationships should be explicit in the Bill. The sectoral support body exists to assist schools. The Catholic sector also wishes that all of its schools be recognised as Catholic, grant-aided schools. That issue will be addressed in the second Bill.

The final issue is that of raising standards. Every child is entitled to a high quality education at a good school. Raising standards needs to be an explicit role of the ESA, the sectoral body and the individual school. However, only the schools can deliver directly on the raising of standards. Clause 34 needs to include reference to the sectoral support body as well as to the ESA in respect of raising standards and to clarify the respective roles and relationships of each of those bodies on the important issue of raising standards.

The CCMS was created primarily because trustees and Government had concerns about standards. We know that standards have improved, and it is important to analyse how that came about. Some of the characteristics of that change include: the importance of an agreed and shared ethos; the value of employing people committed to that ethos; the value of the ethos in addressing underperformance and aspiring to high standards, and the importance of support which understands and promotes the ethos. The experience of the CCMS should give confidence to other sectors that, with the proper conditions in place, standards can be raised.

CCMS will be gone, but it wants the new arrangements to work effectively. To ensure that they do, there must be: an understanding of the objectives of the proposed changes, particularly with respect to improving educational outcomes; an acceptance of the diversities of pluralist society and of the need to provide for those equally; a recognition of the importance of ethos and the added value that it brings to each sector; a clarity in legislation and guidance on the roles of boards of governors in the employment of teachers and the nature and functioning of accountable autonomy; and a recognition of the role of school owners in the framing of schemes of management and employment, the selection of community governors committed to the ethos of the school and the planning and provision of schools.

Governance arrangements should be effective and competent to do the job and be free from politicisation. Thank you, Chairperson.

The Chairperson: We always seem to return to either clause 8 or clause 3, which are fundamental to those concerned. With respect to the point I made earlier to the commission delegation on clause 8, if there were to be built in some appeal or regulation of control, do you think it would go any way towards addressing concerns over employment schemes and schemes of management?

Mr Donal Flanagan (Chief Executive, Council for Catholic Maintained Schools): When this exercise started, our first meeting was with Angela Smith and we explained the issues to her. She said that it was not beyond the wit of man to create a difference between an employing authority as employers de jure and a board of governors as employers de facto. Jim has said that there is not enough clarity in the legislation in relation to the role of boards of governors. If that role were clarified, we might make some progress.

The legislation contains a requirement for the ESA to approve the scheme of management and the scheme of employment. That is not a difficulty. To create a difference between the employer and the employing authority, we can give the ESA a statutory role to support the board of governors in the exercise of its function as employer.

That would provide a degree of consistency and accountability throughout the system; that is what I call a “light touch”. In other words, the ESA would not have to control it, but it could advise on how it works. If people followed that advice, they will not get into trouble; if people wilfully ignore that advice, they should not be indemnified. There is an opportunity to create a difference between an employing authority and an employer de jure.

The Chairperson: Are you aware of any examples of similar practices that could be used in the education sector?

Mr Flanagan: The closest to it is the example that exists in the CCMS; we are the lead employer, but we do not exercise that with a heavy hand. Boards of governors are responsible for the employment of teachers, and they exercise that role by using advice that is given to them by the CCMS. We have seldom inhibited a board of governors from exercising its will; we have done so only when people were acting in a silly manner.

With a minor extension to the CCMS’s role, we could create what the voluntary grammar, the Catholic maintained, the integrated and Irish-medium and, I expect, many in the controlled sector have and want in future.

Ms La’Verne Montgomery (Council for Catholic Maintained Schools): Schedules 7 and 8 are minor amendments to current legislation, including the removal of schedule 2 of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998. That relates to the staff of controlled and Catholic maintained schools with delegated budgets and covers discipline and grievance under a board of governors control, the right to suspend employees and provisions in relation to dismissals. We presume that those functions will be provided for elsewhere; as yet, however, they are not, and that is our concern. The omission may imply a change in the authority of boards of governors in respect of discipline, grievance and dismissal. In effect, that would remove those employer functions from boards of governors and, presumably, pass them to the ESA. There is a need to clarify those points, generally and particularly, in relation to any model in a scheme of management or scheme of employment.

The Chairperson: That is helpful in view of the concern that exists about the revisions of employment schemes. I am sure that the thought will send shudders through the maintained sector, but if I were a teacher in a maintained school and was dismissed, against whom would I take a grievance? Would I take it against the CCMS or the Department? That will provide clarity on concerns that are being raised all the time. If the CCMS is the employer — as is the case at present — but the Department has responsibilities, on whose door would I knock if I wanted to take someone to court and get my compensation?

Mr Flanagan: If you were appointed as a teacher in a CCMS school, you would be a good teacher, and the likelihood of your being dismissed would be slim. However, if you were dismissed for doing something that was not correct, your representation would be against the CCMS.

Ms Montgomery: It would be against the board of governors in the first instance; the CCMS would be co-joined.

The Chairperson: How would that change if the CCMS functions were transferred to the ESA? That is the nub of the matter.

Mr Flanagan: The difference is that we do not know how the ESA will exercise its employing authority; there is no clarity on the role of boards of governors. We have clarity, evidence of good practice, and evidence of delegating considerable amounts of autonomy to local level.

We have heard about accountable autonomy, but we have not seen it; we do not know how it will work, and it has never been described to me in any discussion with anyone.

The Chairperson: Trevor said that, from his observation, he can see no problem. However, clause 3 states:

“All teachers and other persons who are appointed to work under a contract of employment on the staff of a grant-aided school shall be employed by ESA.”

Therefore if I were employed by the ESA and a problem arose — taking La'Verne’s comments about clause 7 into account — I would knock on the door of the ESA. I would not take a board of governors to court; I would take the ESA to court.

Mr Flanagan: The ESA will be a statutory body whose make-up will be largely political. Equally, we can work on the basis that the make-up of that statutory body will not necessarily support any one sector or be committed to any one ethos. The CCMS has been appointed as a statutory body to support the maintenance and standards of Catholic maintained schools, so there are people in that organisation who are sensitive and committed to working towards the promotion of the Catholic ethos. They are not all from the Catholic denomination.

The difficulty is that we do not know how the ESA will interpret its role as the employing authority; if the ESA were given that authority, it would be a matter for it to interpret. There is no clarity on how it might wish to do that. That is our concern and our fear.

The ESA is not necessarily a problem, but the ESA operating in a neutral manner would be a problem.

Mr J Clarke: The issue is one of clarity — and clause 3 lacks clarity. Its title is:

and it also refers to the ESA as the employer. It may not be legally correct, but, in common parlance, the roles that boards of governors play in the Catholic maintained sector is that of employer while the CCMS is the employing authority. If the ESA were both employing authority and employer, what will the role of boards of governors be and how will that be affected by the operation of accountable autonomy? Accountable autonomy is an important driver in raising standards. We want boards of governors to show the qualities, enthusiasm and commitment to take authority because they want to do better for their schools.

The Chairperson: That is useful, but I have a query. You raised concerns, as I did earlier, about community governors, will you expand on those concerns? In paragraph 6.2 of your submission you refer to persons living and working in the local community and state:

“Council believes it may be worth questioning if this is still a realistic understanding”.

Mr Flanagan: There are two issues. One is the process of selection, to which Bishop Walsh referred this morning. That should be done “in consultation with”, and despite what Nelson may have seen or heard at the Belfast board, that list of names was produced after a great deal of preparation and discussion with the relevant officers from both bodies; those names were selected “in consultation with”. That is an issue about process. If the ESA appoints people “in consultation with”, I do not see any concerns for the future.

Commitment is an issue. A community governor would have to be sensitive to, comfortable with, and committed to the promotion of the Catholic ethos in a Catholic school. It would be a very disruptive board of governors if individuals disagreed openly about something that is so important to the running of a school.

The Chairperson: Ethos is not included in the definition of “community”; the Bill refers to someone living and working in the local community. Are we clear about what is meant by “community”? People have different interpretations and definitions of community. Do you not see that that could cause problems?

Mr J Clarke: In our submission we asked for clarity on that matter because of the differing circumstances of our schools — about one third of our schools are now recognised as extended schools. We see education linked to other public services, particularly health and social services and community development. Those issues should be reflected in schools to recognise an area’s circumstances. Strategies and people should be in place who understand how relationships and links can be developed to enhance education generally and the community in particular.

Mr O’Dowd: Bishop McAreavey, you and your colleagues are very welcome. Today’s debate has revolved around the role of boards of governors, the employing authority and the employment rights of boards of governors. Donal, you said that the employing authority is the CCMS. If it came to your attention as the employing authority that the employment practices of a board of governors were outside the law, would you act?

Mr Flanagan: Yes.

Mr O’Dowd: Why, then, would you not expect the ESA to act in future if it came to its attention that a board of governors was acting outside the law?
Mr Flanagan: If the ESA were the employing authority, I would expect it to act. If it were the body that provided statutory advice to schools, it would have to ask the board of governors to account for the breach of statutory advice but not necessarily employment law. There is a slight difference. Either way, however, intervention is needed when people act inappropriately or in a wilful manner.

(The Deputy Chairperson [Mr D Bradley] in the Chair)

Mr O’Dowd: There was a wee bit of noise, so I am not sure whether we are contradicting each other. Are we?

Mr Flanagan: No. We started this process with a discussion about the employing authority and the employer; at that stage, the Minister said that it was not beyond the wit of man to have clear blue water between them. If the role of governors was clarified and determined, we would be having a slightly different argument about the interface between the ESA as the employing authority and the board of governors as the employer. We do not have that clarity and division between the two. In the absence of that, it is better for the board of governors to be the employer than it would be for the ESA.

Mr O’Dowd: Under your proposals, there would be several hundred employing authorities rather than one, because each board of governors would be an employing authority. That would be a logistical nightmare.

I would like to ask about representation at a tribunal or in a court of law in relation to employment matters. I understand that the CCMS carries out the ethos, which is fair enough. However, a barrister before a tribunal — regardless of their ethos — advocates the law and defends a case based on law, not on ethos: no legal defence can be based on ethos.

Mr Flanagan: There are two issues. One is about the plethora of schools that we would have, but we have that at the minute: there are 1,300 schools and 1,300 boards of governors. Many of them do extremely good jobs in raising standards and in ensuring and supporting the welfare of children, so why not take the next step and give them responsibility for the employing authority role? Advice and support would be available to them from the ESA.

You must remember that this process was about mopping up and tying up administration, not changing the system.

Mr O’Dowd: I disagree.

Mr Flanagan: The review of public administration came about to reduce the amount of administration in education — not necessarily to threaten anybody or to get rid of anything that was good but to provide a more coherent and efficient way of working. We can do that, and the CCMS has demonstrated — through its practice over the past 20 years — that it is capable of handing more responsibilities to boards of governors.

It is not the Assembly, the Education Committee, the Department of Education, Donal Flanagan or anybody else who raises standards: schools raise standards, and unless you bring decision-making down to that level, whether with finance or the employment of staff, you will not raise standards. Some schools are extremely good at exercising that degree of autonomy, and many others are capable of it, and some schools would need more support than others. However, the ESA, which will have a statutory duty to provide advice and guidance on a range of issues, will have the authority to intervene.

I may give the impression of having something other than a light touch; however, I do not have the authority to go into a school or to direct anybody to do anything. I use influence, advice and guidance. By exercising their responsibilities based on that advice and guidance, boards of governors have demonstrated that they do not act wilfully; therefore, I can indemnify and defend them in any court of law. As La’Verne said, when a barrister joins us on a particular case, he co-joins the board of governors and the CCMS. That is what would happen in relation to the ESA.

Mr O’Dowd: Yes; but a barrister defends you on the basis of the law, not on the basis of an ethos. I admire the work of the CCMS; however, why does it never delegate employment authority to the boards of governors?

Mr Flanagan: It is not within the legislation for us to do that.

Mr O’Dowd: I do not remember it being lobbied for either. [Laughter.]

Mr Flanagan: We have argued for it. We embraced the review of public administration because it would allow us to go to the next stage and delegate responsibility to the boards of governors. We have talked about the strength of governors and how they are selected, and we firmly believe that good schools have good governors. If you pick good governors who can manage properly, you will have a good school. Therefore give governors more power and responsibility to allow them to do their job.

The Deputy Chairperson: You talked about delegation, which brings us back to the question of autonomy. We have three different forms of terminology: maximised autonomy; maximised supported autonomy; and accountable autonomy. Are we talking about the same thing?

Mr J Clarke: I hope so. As you say, the language has changed. I reiterate my earlier point: what we need is clarity so that we know precisely what we mean when we talk about the employing authority role of the ESA, the role that boards of governors will have as employers, and the role that, over time, might be devolved to boards of governors, depending on the desire and capability of a board. If you encourage people to take responsibility and make them accountable, they will do a better job. In answer to John’s question, had accountable autonomy — in whatever terminology — been around, several boards of governors and several clusters of schools in the maintained sector could have operated a devolved model. We would like to encourage that.

The Deputy Chairperson: Donal is right. We talked about the ESA being a major part of the RPA and the streamlining of administration, and we were told that savings of £20 million would be directed into front-line services. That is now in doubt. As Mrs Bradley said, the Department’s emphasis has changed and is now on raising standards, which was the CCMS’s raison d’être when it started out. You have been successful in that and you suggest that the sectoral body that replaces you should continue to have a role in raising standards. Presumably the ESA will retain its role in raising standards. What degree and what form of co-operation will work between a sectoral body with some responsibility for raising standards and the ESA?

Mr J Clarke: That requires clarity. The ESA is the body responsible for raising standards generally through its support and challenge functions. The challenge function has not been played, except by the CCMS; we played it with a light touch and largely outside any legislative role that we have had. However, we have done that because, under our ethos, every child is entitled to a good education. When we face difficulties, we have, metaphorically, wrapped the arms of that ethos around the situation and told people that they have a responsibility to the children in their care. We do not think that that will change.

I do not want to introduce differentials, but the education and library boards have said that it is not their role to challenge; however, we believe that it is everyone’s role to challenge and that that is implicit in raising standards. If there has been a differential, the CCMS has challenged schools, and we have used that challenge role to try and raise standards. Some other sectors might not have done that.

It must be asked whether the neutral position or that of influence based on ethos has been more successful. Every sector should have that backup, and the ESA should be able to call on backup from a sectoral support body to support it in finding a way into a school or board of governors that a neutral external body simply might not be able to do. That is good for value for money if it achieves better outcomes for children and for education services.

Mr Flanagan: Earlier, we talked about having good governors in schools. If, for example, the problem at a school is the governors, the sectoral support body can have huge influence through the trustees’ nominations, through the ESA’s nomination or through community nominations to begin to change a board of governors. We have effected such change on a number of occasions in the past 20 years. We have moved people out of boards of governors and put new people on boards midstream. That is one of the great advantages that a sectoral support body has, because it will have the ear of the body of the trustees who have the ownership role at schools.

Mr McCausland: The CCMS is a statutory body. How is its membership constituted?

Mr Flanagan: It is a constituted body of 36 members, 20 of whom are nominated by the trustees. Of those 20, 10 are directly nominated by the trustees and the remaining 10 are selected from people who have a contribution to make to education — academics, heads of institutions, business people, former assistant secretaries at the Department of Education or prominent people in the Protestant community.

The Department of Education selects eight people by public advertisement. Four parent governors are selected on the basis that they are selected at local level — one cannot be a parent governor on the CCMS if one has not been selected at local level. A list of names is submitted from each of the dioceses. Similarly, people elected as teacher representatives in their own schools can come forward for selection to the CCMS.

Mr McCausland: Therefore, 20 appointments come through the trustees, eight come through the Department, four are parents and four are teachers.

Mr Flanagan: That is correct.

Mr McCausland: Earlier, a question was asked about the boards of governors at Catholic-maintained schools. How many people from the Protestant community are on boards of governors in schools in Northern Ireland?

Mr Flanagan: As you might expect, I do not have that information; nor do we gather it. We have anecdotal evidence. For instance, a school, which I cannot name, had lots of difficulties, and, as part of our intervention strategy, we created space — for want of a better word — on the board of governors. I went to a person who was not from the Catholic denomination but who has tremendous educational credibility. He went on to that board of governors and his influence was fundamental to making differences to the school. I have done that on a number of occasions. I select people on the basis that they are able to do a particular job.
Equally, there are Catholic schools in which a significant number of children from other denominations are present, and people of those denominations have opportunities, through parental representation, to be members of that board of governors. I cannot give any exact detail, but I can say that through departmental representation, education and library board representation, trustee representation and parent representation, a significant number of people from other denominations sit on the boards of governors of Catholic schools.

Mr McCausland: I appreciate that you do not have exact figures, but most people would expect you to have some sense of the general picture: would it be 1%, 5%, 50%; what would be the overall figure?

Mr Flanagan: I would say that it is less than 5%.

Mr McCausland: Is it much less than 5% — less than 5% could be one in 1,000; or it might be 0.1% — can you estimate?

Mr Flanagan: It is probably more than 1%, and less than 5%. I would need to do a lot of work and survey the boards of governors of all of our schools to answer that. However, there is no exclusion on people who are sensitive to and committed to the promotion of ethos. The acceptance of office allows people to say that they are committed to and will work within the policies of the Catholic school.

Mr McCausland: I am asking this question because people in the Protestant community do not have a detailed understanding of the internal workings of the Catholic sector. Therefore, I do not wish to be in any way problematic, I simply want to get an understanding of the prevailing situation.

Mrs O’Neill: You are obviously committed to equality of opportunity in the Catholic employment sector. One issue that you raised in your submission centres on maintaining ethos, which has been rehearsed many times today. In particular, you are seeking assurances about the Department’s powers — in clause 5(2) and clause 12 — as regards fair employment legislation; for example, whether it would have the power to make change. Any change to fair-employment legislation can only be taken forward through OFMDFM; it would not be in the remit of the Department of Education.

The Department’s paper states that the provisions give it very limited powers to modify employment law to facilitate the operation of the employment arrangements in the Bill. It has suggested also that it is not aware of any need to modify employment law in that regard, and it has no plans to do so. Is that sufficient reassurance for you; or do you want to see something stronger?

Ms Montgomery: That is very helpful. Obviously, it is not in the Bill as currently drafted. Our concern about the exemption is more to do with administration in relation to appointments. We have 500 appointments a year, and I can count the number of tribunals that would be lodged in one year on the fingers of one hand. We are concerned that if the exemption were removed, it may bring an influx of tribunals, not necessarily on merit — that is a reality of life.

Our position is that we advocate very strongly the retention of the exemption in relation to teacher appointments.

Mr Lunn: I wanted to make the same point. I am perfectly happy with the response, so I will not trouble you with a question.

Mr D Bradley: Are there teachers employed in Catholic schools who do not subscribe to the Catholic faith who are not Catholics?

Mr Flanagan: Yes.

Ms Montgomery: We do not gather information on people’s religious denomination, but our understanding is that there are people who are not of the Catholic faith.

Mr D Bradley: Are those people in leadership roles as well as in classrooms?

Mr J Clarke: Yes.

Ms Montgomery: Again, that is anecdotal information as opposed to anything that we gather on a formal basis.

The Chairperson: I thought that, given Donal’s recommendation earlier, I was going to be appointed.

Mr Flanagan: I said only if you were good enough. [Laughter.]

Mr McCausland: Does everyone who is appointed have to subscribe to promoting the ethos of the Catholic sector?

Ms Montgomery: We have a Catholic vision, to which all of our schools have effectively signed up, and we make reference to that in our advertisements for appointments, both in the ‘Irish News’ and on our website. Any teacher who applies for a post in a Catholic-maintained school knows exactly what they are signing up to and what the school believes in.

Mr McCausland: If someone were applying in response to an advertisement to be a member of the board of the CCMS, would they have to subscribe to the ethos?

Ms Montgomery: That would be determined by the criteria that the Department of Education sets for governors.

Mr J Clarke: Our point is not just about the Catholic ethos; it is also about the integrated ethos, the Irish-medium ethos and all others. If people commit to an ethos, they will bring value to it. Therefore, it is important to encourage people to understand an ethos so that they can commit to it.

The Chairperson: Paragraph 9.3 of your submission states:

“Council would seek assurance on the standing of such bodies preferably through some formal recognitions in the Bill.”

Does that arise due to lack of clarity in the Department’s policy paper 21 or is it due to more fundamental concerns on the role of sectoral support bodies?

Mr J Clarke: The function of policy paper 21 is to describe the main functions of sectoral support bodies; it does not say anything about their legal standing. At the beginning of the process, the given wisdom was that since the ESA would be the administrative arm of education, some of the functions that are currently with the CCMS and other bodies would be brought under the ESA’s influence. However, if sectoral support bodies are to play their role effectively and complement, rather than compete with, the ESA, their functions need to be clarified for themselves, boards of governors and the ESA. Commission members made the important point that there should be some mechanism whereby their voice is heard by boards of governors, especially on matters concerning the improvement of standards in schools.

Mr Flanagan: Bishop Walsh said that if we have such a body, its role and connection with boards of governors should be clearly spelt out or it will begin to disappear.

The Chairperson: I thank you all for taking the time to come to the Committee and endure the marathon that we have had this morning. The meeting has been useful and profitable. As there is a crossover between yourselves and the issues raised by the commission, I hope that you feel that you have had the opportunity to raise your concerns, both in your submission and in oral evidence. We will ensure that you get a copy of the Department’s response. If you have outstanding issues that you want to raise with us, we are quite happy to receive comments from the CCMS.

Dr McAreavey: We appreciate that your task is a very difficult one, and we would be glad to help in any way we can.
I propose to make some opening remarks about the evidence given by our trade union colleagues. Chris Stewart will follow that with detailed comments on the paper that we have submitted. We will adopt the same approach in the second session.

I wish to provide clarification on some of the points that came up in this morning’s session and, particularly, in relation to Dominic’s questions. We have made it clear in recent months that the education and skills authority (ESA) primary, if not exclusive, objective is to raise standards. There is also an agenda to produce efficiencies through the centralisation of functions and the reduction of needless bureaucracy.

The Minister has made the objective to raise overall standards and close the gap in standards very explicit, and she has cited particular problems in particular sectors. The main vehicle for achieving that objective will be built around the school improvement policy. That will come in the final version of ‘Every School a Good School’, which is expected to be published shortly. The literacy and numeracy strategy is also linked to the achievement of that objective.

We see the ESA’s role as one of providing help, support and, where necessary, a challenge function. That challenge function will be relevant when there is evidence in the ETI reports that schools are underperforming or could do better. In conjunction with the Inspectorate, the ESA will be responsible for providing that challenge function. We see some of that role as being the same as the role played by the CCMS in the maintained sector in past years. The CCMS had a role in driving up standards in the Catholic-maintained sector, and the statistics for that period provide evidence of that.

As I have said, there is an agenda to produce greater efficiencies. Through recent Assembly Questions, and in comments to the Committee, we have made it clear that there can be no guarantee that savings will automatically go to front line services, because we may well have to meet savings targets. However, if we may have savings targets of between 3% and 4% in the education budget and the ESA is a better vehicle by which to identify and secure those savings, that is still protecting front line services because, if the ESA does not make savings in back-office services, they will have to come out of front line services.

An environment in which we have greater efficiency targets heightens the importance of that objective of the ESA; it does not reduce it, which was the implication of Dominic’s interpretation. It is still a major objective of the ESA to drive out savings. It may well be that a starker environment will be created, and that savings may have to be returned to the centre if some of the prognosis around the overall state of the Northern Ireland block comes to pass in the coming years. It is important to make that point.

The need to drive out savings — particularly from support services — is of no lesser importance. If savings are not made in that area, and a levy of 3% to 3.5% is applied in the future, there will be no areas left from which to make those savings, except from front line services. Therefore, the issue is still about investing in front line services or, as far as possible, protecting front line services. I wanted to make remarks on savings and on standards before Chris deals with the specific details of our trade union colleagues’ evidence.

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education): Thank you. First, we very much welcome the opportunity to respond to the points that our trade union colleagues have made. We also welcome the very detailed and thoughtful submissions that they have brought to the Committee: they have clearly invested a great deal of time and effort in closely studying the proposals.

For once, I do not believe that there will be much rebuttal. It is clear from the papers and from the oral evidence given by the trade unions that there is a great deal that we agree on. I will not attempt to deal with all of the issues raised in the trade unions’ papers, but I will concentrate on the main ones. We will be happy to answer any questions, or expand on any of the issues raised.

On the issue of the employment arrangements, the Department welcomes the support offered by trade union colleagues on the proposed role of the ESA as the employing authority for all staff in grant-aided schools. Clearly, there are some aspects of the proposed employment arrangements that we do not agree upon, and I will come to those later. However, we do welcome the overall support for the core arrangements.

In relation to the membership of the ESA, the Minister has noted the views expressed by trade unions on the number and composition of the proposed membership, and the involvement of district councillors. Indeed, similar points have been expressed by Members in recent weeks, and the Minister wants to carefully consider all of those views. However, at present, the Minister remains of the view that a membership of 12 is sufficient for effective leadership and governance. The Minister also feels that the proposal for a majority of members to be district councillors is important to ensure local democratic accountability.

Trade union colleagues have suggested that a proportion of the ESA membership should be reserved for trade union representatives. The present legislation and policy make it clear that membership of the ESA and appointment to that body will primarily be on the principle of merit. Trade union representatives can of course apply for appointment, but I draw the Committee’s attention to the provision in schedule 1, paragraph 5(5), of the Bill, which prevents a member of the ESA from also being an employee of the ESA. However that, in itself, does not prevent trade union representatives from applying for membership. All members will be appointed on the basis of their competence and experience rather than on the basis of any formal representative capacity.

The Minister also notes that formally reserving a proportion of the membership for trade union representatives could give rise to a conflict of interest for those members in management and trade union matters.

On the issue of employment schemes and the role of the submitting authority, a number of points were made in the written and oral presentations about the need for schemes and the administrative burden that those might represent for schools. Also addressed was whether there ought to be scope for schools to tailor those schemes, or whether a single scheme should be imposed on all schools.

The Minister does not agree with the view of trade union colleagues that the requirement for schools to produce schemes is a bureaucratic burden. In fact, the Department views those schemes as an essential element of the employment arrangements in the Bill. The schemes will be in place to ensure that there is clarity on the respective roles and responsibilities of the ESA and boards of governors. In that, it is important to have those schemes in place, and they are in the best interest of education staff. The ESA will produce model schemes, which schools will be free to adopt if they wish to do so. In doing so, those schools can minimise the administrative burden that will be placed upon them.

The responsibility for preparing and submitting schemes will be given to schools, which is in keeping with the policy aim of allowing schools to determine the degree of autonomy that they wish to have on employment matters. In recent weeks, members have heard the views of various stakeholders who have stressed the importance and value of an autonomous role for boards of governors. The Department’s agreement with that position is reflected in the employment arrangements contained in the Bill.

The Minister has told the Committee that she is minded to propose an amendment to the definition of the submitting authority, the effect of which would be to define it, in all cases, as the owners and trustees of the school, but with an option to delegate that function to boards of governors if the owners so wish.

The Minister agrees with the views of trade union colleagues that schools should be responsible for determining the professional development needs of their staff and the advice and support services required to support those needs. At the same time, however, it is important that the ESA has a clear statutory responsibility to ensure that those services are available to schools. That is addressed in clause 13 of the Bill. However, that clause is intentionally flexible in the way in which it has been drafted. It requires the ESA to “provide or secure the provision of” such services. The word “secure” provides for budgets to be delegated to schools, or groups of schools, to provide or procure professional development services themselves. Contrary to a suggestion from one union, the Minister sees little purpose in introducing a charging regime for instances in which the ESA provides such services directly to schools. The Department considers that the administration of a charging system would be a waste of resources.

The Minister does not fully agree with the comments made by trade union colleagues on raising standards, particularly those on clause 34 of the Bill, which outlines the duty of the boards of governors. The Department considers it essential that there are clear responsibilities for raising standards throughout the education system, and the absence of such clarity is recognised as a significant weakness in the current arrangements. It is equally important to ensure that schools co-operate with the ESA in the discharge of its functions. The word “co-operate” was deliberately chosen for the legislation. It is a good description of the sort of relationship that we want, which is one that involves no aggressive challenge, but co-operation, support and challenge where necessary.

The Ulster Teachers Union (UTU) expressed concern that the Bill does not cover early-years learning, nursery schools or special education. That concern illustrates the challenge for any reader in studying such a complex Bill. The Bill must be read alongside the existing legislation, and particular attention must be paid to the amending provisions in the schedules. I am happy to reassure UTU colleagues that their fears are unfounded. The Bill does, in fact, include provisions on early-years services in clause 2(2)(a), although they are not described as such; they are referred to as educational services, which is departmental shorthand.

Equally, nursery schools fall within the definition of primary schools that already exists in the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, and that carries forward to the Education Bill. Schedule 7 to the Education Bill contains extensive amendments to the special educational needs and to the Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order 2005. The effect of those amendments is to transfer to the ESA all the functions and duties of education and library boards in relation to special education.

The Minister recognises and agrees with the importance of consultation with, and participation by, trade unions on a range of matters. She will wish to consider further whether there is a need for specific legislation to underpin that.

I turn now to faith-based education and to the specific definition of a Catholic-maintained school. In its submission, the UTU questioned the need for that definition in the legislation. The Department previously stated that the Minister views the definition as a temporary measure that will be removed from legislation, either in the first Bill, by amendment, or, failing that, in the second Bill.

However, the Department does not fully agree with the comments of union colleagues on faith-based schools or the diversity of school types in the system. Parents and children have the right to choose to attend a Catholic school, or a school of another type, if they wish. The Department’s aim, through the review of public administration (RPA), is to have a single system of administration to support a diversity of school types. It is not, and has never been, our aim to reduce the diversity of school types within the system.

Finally, I shall address a point made by an important organisation that was not present today. The forum of nursery school teachers expressed concern about the lack of support and training for nursery school principals and staff. I am happy to reassure trade union colleagues that the duties in clause 13 relate to all grant-aided schools, including nursery schools. I shall pause at this point, and we are happy to take questions.

The Chairperson: Thank you. I wish to follow up on a couple of matters. Given that the Minister is minded to propose an amendment whereby the submitting authority for schools would become the owners, or trustees, of those schools, and given the current arrangements for the controlled sector, in which no body has been established that might own schools within it, is there not a risk that maximised, accountable autonomy will be lost?

Furthermore, when we were discussing the establishment of such a body, concerns were raised that it might be subject to paying VAT. At that time, we were told that we were within days or weeks of receiving a response on that matter from the Treasury. Since then, we have not heard tell of the response, so we do not know the current thinking on the subject. We are concerned that the matter seems to be in abeyance.

Mr C Stewart: I am not aware of whether we have had a formal response from the Treasury, but I will certainly take the matter up with Department of Finance colleagues. Our view on the matter is clear. We wish to ensure that there will be a VAT exemption for any statutory authority involved in education, and we will forcibly convey that point to our Treasury colleagues.

With regard to the first part of your question, it is certainly true that the principle of accountable autonomy would be seriously weakened, or damaged, if we were unable to apply it consistently, and on the basis of equality, to all school types. That is why it is important that we determine where the submitting authority responsibility should lie for controlled schools. In consultation paper 20, we suggested that that responsibility might be assigned to the controlled schools’ ownership body. Alternatively, due to that sector’s unique nature, it might be more appropriate to place the responsibility directly with boards of governors. We will wish to reflect on that idea and to carefully consider what has been said to us in response to the consultation, which is coming to an end.

The Chairperson: In your written submission, you stated that the Minister does not accept that the preparation and operation of employment schemes and, presumably, their ease of management would be a bureaucratic burden. Public bodies that are subject to section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 are charged with preparing and submitting equality schemes, in light of model schemes of guidance. The guidance for section 75 duties runs to 153 pages. What assurances can you give boards of governors about the size of the bureaucratic task facing them?

Mr C Stewart: The arrangements that we have proposed are sufficiently flexible for a board of governors to decide what priority, and how much effort and resource, it wishes to expend on developing a scheme. We will ensure that a range of model schemes are available for different types of schools, so that, wherever possible, a school will be able to lift a model scheme off the shelf and adopt it as it stands. If that is the case, the burden becomes vanishingly small.

On the other hand, we have heard from a number of stakeholders — and this point was emphasised in last week’s evidence session — that some schools and sectors do not regard section 75 obligations as a burden: they regard as absolutely essential to the maintenance of their ethos that they have the opportunity to invest time and resources in designing their employment arrangements.

The proposals in the Bill would allow for that. Therefore, no school will be compelled to expend effort and resources in developing an employment scheme if it does not want to, but the opportunity will be there for those schools that do.

The Chairperson: You mentioned a number of models for the different school types. What differences would there be between the models for the different school sectors? As was said earlier, we are trying to get a more unified approach to the employment of staff in our 1,200 schools.

Mr C Stewart: The differences may be less than some people fear, and there is strong agreement on that between us and our trade union colleagues. We have made it clear that every employment scheme must comply with education employment law. We will also expect every employment scheme to reflect best practice on employment matters. Best practice is best practice, so we would not expect to see a significant variation on that between schemes from different schools or different sectors.

There is perhaps scope to tailor schemes a little more precisely on issues of ethos. That remains to be seen, but I do not think that that will form the majority of a scheme’s content; it might be a small part of the scheme.

Mr D Bradley: Gavin Boyd told the Committee at a previous meeting that the £20 million in savings was over and above the education budget and that it was going directly to front-line services. The situation has changed. I accept the point that the money will now be used to protect front-line services, but it is not added icing on the cake as was suggested to us at the beginning.

Mr McGrath: The savings in the current budget period have already been allocated to go back into front-line services. The conversations recently have been about future savings that the ESA will generate. We are simply making the point that we may not always be able to guarantee that those savings will go into front-line services instead of going against savings targets. In the current budget period, some of that £20 million has already been allocated to front-line services.

Mr D Bradley: I take your point, but the scenario is different to the one with which we were first presented.

The Committee received a letter from school principals that I quoted from at a previous meeting. At that meeting, I asked you what empirical evidence there is to suggest that the ESA would be successful in raising standards. You answered that the ESA will be based on the model of the CCMs, which was successful, so it logically followed the ESA would be successful.

Mr McGrath: I do not think that we made it sound like an automatic process. There is an issue about standards, and we have enough evidence to say that there are issues that we need to tackle. The current structure does not give an even focus across the different sectors.

To again reflect what trade union colleagues have said, the bulk of evidence shows that standards are improved by improving the quality of teaching. That is how the model that we are talking about facilitates an approach to professional development in which schools commission what they want instead of taking what they get. That is how standards will be improved.

The issue is not just about the ESA per se; it is also about the approach to accountable autonomy, a better approach to professional development and an element of challenge when institutions are seen not to be performing as well as they should be and when the opportunities for kids are not what they should be.

Mr D Bradley: OK. You heard the evidence from the representatives of the teachers’ unions, and they are clearly not happy with the proposed approach. They think that it is too closely founded on the English approach of constant inspection and placing principals under pressure. Moreover, they believe that the versions of ‘Every School a Good School’ that have been introduced to date contain, in my words, too much stick and not enough carrot. The Department, the teachers’ unions and the inspectorate need to agree on the best possible approach, based — as the union representative said — on a collegiate model, rather than on a model that could cause confrontation.

Mr McGrath: I have no difficulty with that suggestion. My colleagues, particularly Katrina Godfrey, will have briefed the Committee on the specifics of the issue of standards and how ‘Every School a Good School’ will progress. I know that Katrina and her colleagues had considerable discussions with trade unions during the development of ‘Every School a Good School’.

When we use words such as help, support and challenge, it is important that the concept of “challenge” is not automatically considered adversarial. If an inspectorate report shows that a school is at the bottom level of performance, no one will dispute that everyone in the system has a duty to address that issue. The challenge for the school and the wider system is how to improve performance. The approach does not necessarily have to be adversarial, but the ongoing level of performance must be challenged with a view to increasing it as much as possible.

The ESA model should help and support all schools and should challenge schools in which performance levels could be better. In the future, some schools might, given their circumstances and resources, be deemed to be performing satisfactorily but could do better. That situation does not necessarily have to be approached in an adversarial way. Challenge should not be interpreted in that way. The approach should determine how to improve children’s prospects.

Mr D Bradley: I did not interpret it in that way. However, based on the evidence from the teachers’ unions, there is potential for disagreement on the approach to raising standards. I am asking you to ensure that there is no disagreement and that all relevant parties are singing from the same hymn sheet. Such an approach will avoid a confrontational situation between the employers and the unions.

Mr McGrath: I fully believe that there is a consensus among everyone on the need to raise standards.

Mr D Bradley: I agree.

Mr McGrath: We are talking about modalities, and I will relay members’ points — in particular, Dominic’s comments — to the officials who work more closely on the specifics of the standards agenda.

Mr C Stewart: I may be able to offer more reassurance to trade union colleagues. In comparing the proposed approaches here with the approach in England and Wales, I draw the Committee’s attention — as we have done in the past couple of weeks — to the respective legislation. The School Standards and Framework Act 1998 outlines a range of significant intervention powers for local education authorities. Whether or not one thinks that the balance between carrots and sticks in the Education Bill is correct, it contains no new sticks. No new intervention powers are proposed for the ESA.

Mr McCausland: Chris said earlier that — except for some references to ethos — schemes of employment will be more or less standard across all sectors. How will ethos feature in schemes of employment?

Mr C Stewart: That is difficult to predict without hearing more about how the sectors want ethos to be reflected, but —

Mr McCausland: Which sectors have raised that matter to date?

Mr C Stewart: The Catholic education sector, the Irish-medium sector and, to a lesser extent, the integrated sector tend to raise that issue most often. The controlled sector’s interest is beginning to grow, and it is starting to recognise that it has the freedom to define an ethos for itself. Therefore, it needs to think about what its ethos might be, and how it might be reflected in everything from governance through to employment.

To return to your question, one might expect a scheme of employment — for example, in a Catholic school — to make it clear that, in recruiting and selecting members of staff, part of the appointment procedure would be to test candidates on their knowledge and understanding of the ethos of Catholic education.

Mr McCausland: Could you have a situation in which — across all sectors — you delete the word “Catholic” and put in a generic term that would apply to the appropriate sector?

Mr C Stewart: It is quite possible that all sectors could start off in different places and eventually find themselves in similar positions. We have made the point to several sectors that we recognise and value their ethos and understand its importance to them. When one considers the strength of ethos in various sectors, they have much in common.

Mr Lunn: The Minister said that she was not prepared formally to reserve a proportion of places on the board for trade union representatives because it could give rise to a conflict of interest. How does she square that with the presence of such representatives on education and library boards?

Mr McGrath: The Minister did not establish the education and library boards, so she has no ownership of those governance arrangements. They predate her appointment. They are very large bodies, and bodies with that size of membership are few and far between in governance terms. Whereas in the past, it was possible to accommodate a representative model with 30 members or more, it is now difficult to accommodate that within the numbers discussed for the ESA and other public bodies.

Mr C Stewart: My understanding of the legislation is that positions are not reserved for trade union representatives. There is a difference between a system that is open and allows people to take part and a system or set of arrangements that reserves places for particular organisations or stakeholders. The issue of conflict of interest is important. If I were a teacher, I would look to the trade union to represent my interests and not to sit on the management side of the table.

Mr Lunn: If the trade unions want input at the top layer of the ESA, surely the conflict of interest issue could be dealt with. Such representation is made on lots of boards and organisations, and sometimes members simply have to exclude themselves from certain discussions. Conflict of interest should not preclude the trade unions from having proper input for most of the ESA’s business. The issue is probably academic anyway, because if the Minister sticks to a 12-person maximum for the board, seven of the members will be councillors.

Mr C Stewart: The conflict of interest issue in that case would be extremely difficult. I can think of few aspects of the ESA’s business or affairs that would not touch on employment matters. Your first point is important. It is vital that there is an ongoing, effective working relationship between the ESA and trade union colleagues. Their input to the ESA’s business is extremely important. We would expect the ESA to pursue a social-partnership approach. We expect a productive, mature relationship between the ESA and trade union colleagues, with challenge where it is appropriate without confrontation.

Mr Lunn: Michelle has kindly lent me her copy of the Department’s response. I wish that I had it in front of me earlier. I have not seen it until now. That is another example of a last-minute production from the Department. I have not received that paper yet.

The Chairperson: They were given out yesterday when they were received, is that right?

The Committee Clerk: Yes, by e-mail, and hard copies were distributed.

Mr Lunn: Some of us get up and come straight here and do not see our e-mails. It certainly has not come to me as a hard copy. That is a normal complaint; everything arrives at the last minute.

The Chairperson: That was a rebuttal for the Department, and I hope that you will take that on board again.

Mr McGrath: Right on the chin, Chairperson.

Mrs O’Neill: Can you assure the unions that, under clause 10 as it stands, the ESA can employ a panel of teachers?

Mr C Stewart: Yes, it could. The clause is sufficiently flexible and broad for the ESA to employ a panel of teachers in exactly the way that trade union colleagues have described. Whether they ought to and whether that represents the best use of resources is an issue that the Department and the ESA might want to consider, but the legislation does allow for it.

Mr Poots: The UTU raised issues about the absence of focus on special needs and early-years provision. Will you respond to that?

Mr C Stewart: Early years is covered in the legislation. We do not use the phrase “early years”, because it is not a form of words that could easily be incorporated into legislation. The phrase we use is “educational services”. The definition in the Bill is somewhat dry and wordy, but it is there specifically because there was a need, for the first time, to put the delivery of early-years services on a proper legislative footing. It is something that we have been doing on an extra-statutory basis up until now. However, we identified the need to put it on a proper legislative basis, and it is there.

Mr Poots: Are you satisfied that it deals with nursery provision and so forth?

Mr C Stewart: Nursery schools fall within the definition of primary schools. The definition of primary schools is in previous legalisation, and will continue in the Education Bill.

Mr Poots: What about the private playgroups?

Mr C Stewart: Those would come within early years.

Mr Poots: They do not fall within primary schools?

Mr C Stewart: No.

The Chairperson: Is there any other aspect that falls under the definition of educational services other than early years? Is it all-encompassing? That is always the problem; if it is not specific, those who read it may miss that. However, if there is then a challenge, the Department is able to say that it is covered because they know that that aspect is included, but you are the only guardians of that knowledge.
Mr C Stewart: Perhaps I should explain the process of how we got there. The drafting of that particular clause was long and difficult. Members will be aware that responsibility for a range of early-years services was transferred from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) to the Department of Education some years ago. There was a clear need to do that, and we moved quickly to do so. The agreement was that we would put that on a sound legislative basis at the earliest possible opportunity.

Perhaps naively, we thought that that would be a simple task, and that we would come up with a simple, clear definition of early-years services, which could be written into the Bill. When we looked more closely at what services are actually provided, they were extremely broad and diverse.

The strength of that definition lies in the fact that those primarily non-statutory providers are continually coming up with new and good ideas of the types of services that ought to be delivered in and around communities. In order to accommodate that, we needed a very broad, flexible and all-encompassing definition, and one that we hope is sufficiently open to allow for the future development of services that are not currently delivered or perhaps not even currently envisaged. That is why it is written in that very broad formulation. Had we not done so, the difficulty would be that every time someone comes up with a new and good idea in early-years services, we would have to go back to primary legislation and stretch the definition yet again in order to encompass those ideas. That is why we have taken that particular approach. I cannot tell you exactly what might fall within that definition at this stage, because we have deliberately left it very open.

Mr Poots: I remain to be convinced on that point. I feel that private playgroups will probably get a raw deal. They do not receive the same funding or support as others, and their being put into a large silo with others may not be in their long-term interests.

I do not believe that the Minister’s notion of having 12 board members — a majority of which would be councillors — will work. That will result in there being a maximum of five educationalists on that board, and the ESA board requires a greater capacity. Furthermore, if the Department is going to go down the route of having subgroups and bringing in others from outside, it would be much better appointing a larger board and drawing the subgroups and the expertise from that board rather than externally.

Mr C Stewart: That is a fair point. However, I emphasise that the Minister has not yet given her final answer on the size or composition of the board. She has not yet had an opportunity to come to a conclusion on the points that Committee members have raised, and she wants to do that before she indicates her formal position to the Committee.

The Chairperson: Clause 13 has the heading:

“ESA to provide or secure provision of training and advisory and support services for schools”.

Clause 13(1) states that:

“It is the duty of ESA to provide or secure the provision of —
(a) such training, and
(b) such advisory and support services”.

A concern was raised by the unions that there is already a wealth of expertise within the education and library boards as they are currently constituted. Why is it that the ESA — in its interim and current forms — will be going outside the boards to secure and provide other services? Why is the ESA not seeking to use and utilise the excellent provision and services that already exist?

Mr McGrath: I do not believe that the Bill is implying that. Chris’s point was that the legislation is framed so that the ESA does not necessarily have to be the direct provider, thus allowing flexibility in the future.

There is considerable resource in the curriculum work that is carried out by the Regional Training Unit (RTU), the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) and Curriculum Advisors and Support Services (CASS) which needs to be brought together, thus harnessing those skills and expertise. The thinking behind that provision was to create a model that was much more responsive to what schools want or need. If that model is not in the form or shape of what schools want, the Department is rightly trying to make provision for the ESA to have the duty and the flexibility to create what schools, school principals and boards of governors need for professional development.

There is a sense among many of the schools at the moment that a table d’hôte rather than an à la carte approach is being taken in relation to what is available for professional development. We said earlier that we see much more scope for schools telling us what they need and how they need it, and the ESA will then have the flexibility to respond to those requests. It will, undoubtedly, use much of the existing expertise and skills.

The delivery model will be a much more of a responsive commissioning model by schools than a delivery model that emanates from the system. That is the theme, and it reflects many of the messages that the Department has picked up from schools. Those messages have also been reflected through some of the evidence that was given by our trade union colleagues.

Mr C Stewart: That is exactly right. The point that the Department hears most frequently from stakeholders about CASS is that there are excellent people in that organisation who provide very good services, but that it is too inflexible and not sufficiently tailored to what... the schools and staff within those schools determine their needs to be. Indeed, we heard those sentiments expressed again from trade union colleagues today.

That is the reason for trying to introduce the flexibility; it is not that we see wholesale privatisation of provision. We see change through moving away from the ESA providing services and towards schools or groups of schools providing the services themselves. There are already seen some very good examples of groups of schools — particularly within learning communities — coming together, assessing their own professional development needs, carving out some resources and procuring or delivering those services in, and for, the schools. We believe that that model has a great deal of potential. We will tell the ESA that we expect it to look sympathetically and favourably on proposals from schools or groups of schools to develop professional-development approaches for themselves.

Mr Lunn: The UTU made the point about the ESA’s duty to have regard to the requirements of industry, commerce and the professions. The union also believes that ESA should also have regard to its requirements. I assume that what the union means by that is that it is a necessary and important part of industry, commerce and the professions, and it wants its views to be considered as well. I am not sure whether it is the Minister’s response when the Department says that it is not clear about what the union means. I believe that what it means is reasonably clear. Is that simply Minister-speak for “no way”?

Mr C Stewart: No, I do not believe so. Your explanation of it is helpful. Exactly what the union meant was not clear in its paper. It said that we need to amend the legislation to reflect unions’ needs. I was not quite sure what that meant. If it means that the clause ought to be interpreted as meaning that the teaching profession is an important one, and that its needs ought to be fairly central to the application of that clause, we fully support that. However, it was not clear from the wording in the paper exactly what it meant by having regard for trade unions’ needs.

Mr Lunn: Is it becoming clearer now?

Mr C Stewart: If trade-union colleagues agree with your helpful explanation, then I believe that it is.

Mr Lunn: If trade-union colleagues were to write to you again to clarify that point, you could take it further.

Mr C Stewart: That would be extremely helpful.

Mr Lunn: In the meantime, however, it is not ruled out. You have said simply that it is not clear what the union meant.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct.

The Chairperson: On that point, I want to say, particularly to the trade-union delegation, that it will have a right to reply and respond to the Department’s paper, a copy of which we have given them. Therefore, if there are issues on which it still has concerns, we want to ensure — as we have done with others — that we try to address them. I am sure, Chris, that you are quite happy with that.

Mr C Stewart: Absolutely, Chairman. Our door is never closed.

The Chairperson: It takes a long time to open, but it is never closed. [Laughter.]

The Minister has now indicated that she is minded to propose an amendment to the definition of a submitting authority. An issue surrounds the submitting authority’s being the trustees — people who own schools. Following from comments that were made last week, for example, by Bishop Walsh, given the fact that trustees currently appoint four members of a school’s board of governors, is it not, therefore, sufficient for the people who are on a school’s board of governors to be able to safeguard and guarantee the ethos of that school?

Mr C Stewart: The Minister’s policy is that it is not sufficient and that arrangements ought to allow the owners or trustees of schools, not only to make appointments to boards of governors, but to set the governance and employment arrangements within which those governors will operate, or, at least, to ensure that ethos is properly reflected in those arrangements.

The Chairperson: OK. We will now move on to your response to the issues that were raised by the CCMS and the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education. Have you provided a paper for that?

Mr McGrath: We provided a response last week that we did not get a chance to discuss.

The Chairperson: Of course, you did provide that paper. I apologise.

Mr McGrath: Chris will elaborate on some of the detail of the paper that we provided. Having listened to the comments that were made by the commission and the CCMS, we were struck by the similarity between a number of their key points and the Minister’s proposals.

Strong emphasis was put on the need for a single education system, albeit one that reflects and recognises diversity. The Cardinal made specific points about the need for equality in education policy and provision. Support was expressed for shrinkage of administration and a focus on front line delivery. Bishop McKeown talked of the need to emphasise delegation to schools and the need for accountable autonomy.

Discussion took place around establishing the appropriate balance between the role of the school and the wider role of the ESA as the single employing authority. As was evidenced earlier today, the role of the CCMS as the employing authority for teachers in Catholic-maintained schools has worked, and it is difficult to see how, with goodwill, the broader model proposed cannot or will not work in the future.

The need for a flexible approach was recognised.
Bishop Walsh cited the example that such an approach could deal with the problems of small schools that might well want to have a lot provided from the centre.

As the NICCE, in particular, recognised, the Department has been engaged in a continuous process of dialogue with the Church, the trustees, the commission and all stakeholders in the legislation.

The written and oral evidence shows that there is a perceived lack of clarity around some aspects of the single employing authority, and that has given rise to specific concerns on behalf of the NICCE, in particular. We would say that based on the single employing authority model that has been operating to date, namely the CCMS, those concerns can be laid to rest. The Minister is committed to continuing dialogue with the NICCE with a view to providing as much clarity as possible and, through that, to allay the concerns expressed by the commission and the CCMS last week.

Mr C Stewart: Before I move on to the detail, I shall pick up on couple of the general points that John made. It is worth reminding ourselves that the RPA is the biggest reform of education in a generation. Therefore, it is not surprising that, from time to time, concerns and fears have arisen among a number of stakeholders.
The Committee heard a number of those last week, and some more again today from trade union colleagues.
As John said, throughout that process, we have and will continue to seek to address those concerns and to accommodate the views of stakeholders wherever we can.
That is part of an open and transparent process.

We recognise and value the diversity of the education system and of the various sectors and school types, each of which has a distinctive character and ethos. We recognise that every sector contributes to the success of our education system and that every sector faces the same challenges of raising standards.

Every sector has a part to play in meeting the needs of children and young people. The RPA is based on that recognition. Our aim is for a modern, fit-for-purpose, value-for-money system of administration. We aim for a single system, but one supports a diversity of school types and offers the same opportunities to all on the basis of equality. We believe that the provisions in the Bill meet that aim. They threaten no school and no sector, but they offer an opportunity and a challenge to all to work in partnership for continued and greater success.

The paper that we provided to the Committee seeks to comprehensively address all of the issues raised by the NICCE and the CCMS. I will not attempt to cover all of those now, but I will concentrate on the key themes of the commission’s evidence. We will, of course, be happy to pick up any other points during questions.

The commission’s evidence posed three key questions or tests about the Education Bill. It asked about the rights of parents, the provision of the trustees to exercise their rights and duties, and the structures of support for each education sector.

On the first of those, the commission emphasised the importance that it places on the rights of parents to have their children educated in a manner that is consistent with their religious and philosophical convictions. The Minister acknowledges that right and the need to ensure that it continues to be reflected in legislation. Again, the existing legislation must be looked at, as well as the Education Bill. Article 44 of the 1986 Order includes a provision on having regard to the principle:

“pupils shall be educated in accordance with the wishes of their parents.”

The duty in that provision will apply both to the ESA and to the Department, and it will cover the exercising by the ESA of all of the powers and duties conferred, or imposed, on it by education legislation. Therefore, the Minister’s view is that the Education Bill does preserve the rights of parents, and fully addresses the Commission’s concerns.

The second matter was the provision for trustees to exercise their rights and duties. A number of measures have been included in policy and legislation to ensure that the role of trustees to foster and develop the ethos of Catholic education is recognised, supported and, where appropriate, provided for in legislation.
Specifically, there will be no change to the ownership of Catholic schools.

The role of trustees will be underpinned in the legislation, and the submitting authorities will control the schemes of management and employment for Catholic schools and have consultation rights on matters that affect those schools, ranging from planning to the appointment of governors.

Boards of governors will make key employment decisions, under the control and direction of the trustees and exercised through the schemes of employment.
The ESA will be bound by the schemes of employment, and it will be under a legal duty to put into effect the lawful decisions of boards of governors. In addition, there will be no change to lawful criteria centred on ethos, such as the requirement for a certificate in religious education.
Nothing in the Bill impedes the desire for greater coherence within the Catholic sector and, indeed, some provisions will assist it, such as bringing the administration arrangements for Catholic-grammar and Catholic-maintained schools closer together. Trustees will continue to have modest public funding for professional support for the discharge of their roles.

In its evidence, the Commission referred to two matters under the heading: the connection between employment and ethos and exemptions from equality legislation. With respect to employment, the Commission suggested that individual boards of governors, rather than the ESA, should be the formal employers of staff. As John McGrath said, we do not fully understand why the Commission feels that only individual school employers can safeguard the ethos of Catholic schools. That strikes us as somewhat strange for three reasons.

First, the fracturing of employment arrangements that that would involve seems to be at odds with the Commission’s declared aim of drawing Catholic schools closer together into a more coherent sector, particularly when, as at present, the vast majority of Catholic schools are already part of collective employment arrangements. Members will know that teachers in Catholic-maintained schools are employed by the CCMS and non-teaching staff are employed by the education and library boards. The RPA employment-model arrangements are, essentially, the CCMS model applied to all sectors, so we wonder why the commission is now arguing against those arrangements, which both it and the CCMS say are working well.

Reiterating what John McGrath said, the commission said in its evidence to the Committee that small schools might struggle to discharge employment functions without a supporting authority being in place. The commission and the CCMS also acknowledged that the CCMS has an intervention role, albeit with a light touch, but one that it exercises from time to time.

Secondly, irrespective of whether individual schools or the ESA employ staff, there would be no significant change to the responsibilities to be discharged by boards of governors, or to the requirement that all parties must act within education and employment law.

Thirdly, the proposal from the commission strikes us as unnecessary, because, under RPA arrangements, only boards of governors, and not the ESA, can decide who will be appointed to the staff of any Catholic school — a point that was reiterated by trade union colleagues. Boards of governors must comply with schemes of management and employment that will be set by the trustees.

The secondary issue raised under the heading was that of exemptions from equality legislation. In its written evidence, the commission suggested that religious schools should be exempt from the requirements of equality legislation. Members will be aware of the background to this matter, and they will know that, at the moment, the education system here is not covered by the full range of equality legislation. Schools are not public authorities for the purposes of section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, and the recruitment of teachers is outside the scope of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order.

Against that background, we would wish to comment on two aspects. First, the commission’s paper does not make a clear case for change, and we do not know what problem or difficulty the commission was seeking to address or which aspects of anti-discrimination or fair-employment legislation it felt ought to have been set aside.

Secondly, with respect to the feasibility of the proposal, legal advice is required to determine whether the Assembly could take forward legislation such as that suggested by the commission. However, it is questionable whether such measures would be within the Assembly’s legislative competence as defined by section 6 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

We welcome the apparent change in the commission’s position, which it outlined in its oral evidence. The commission stated that no further exemptions were sought, and we welcome that because we believe that there is no case for such exemptions to be sought.

The Minister considers that the Education Bill recognises the rights and duties of trustees and makes effective provision for trustees to exercise those rights and duties. The Minister remains of the view that the employment arrangements contained in the Bill are the best option. Those arrangements will deliver significant benefits in relation to raising standards, professional development, workforce planning, consistency and equality and value for money. The arrangements also provide an autonomous role for boards of governors on an equitable basis across all sectors and effective ethos safeguards for owners and trustees.

The third point concerns the structures of support for each education sector. Members will know that the Department is considering a number of education sectors’ business cases for public funding for sectoral support. Each business case will be assessed for value for money and against the policy criteria that are set out in policy paper 21, which the Committee considered previously. The commission suggested that the Education Bill should include references to the role of various sectoral organisations. However, the approach in paper 21 makes it clear that sectoral organisations will be non-statutory bodies and will not have any statutory functions. Therefore, we find it difficult to see a clear or appropriate rationale for making reference to sectoral organisations in legislation.

The Minister also points out that legislation will contain sufficient duties, or other mechanisms, to ensure that there is effective consultation with education sectors. The education advisory forum will provide a formal statutory mechanism for the involvement of sectors and other stakeholders in policy formulation. That will be complemented by the existing specific duties to consult the trustees and others on a range of legislative matters and not just on development proposals for schools.

In respect of the operational functions of the ESA on matters such as raising standards, the Minister considers that any formal duties to consult should refer to boards of governors and/or the owners or trustees of schools, rather than to sectoral bodies. The trustees may, of course, request a sectoral body to provide them with advice and support in relation to such consultations.

The Minister considers that effective arrangements are being made for the support structures of each education sector. However, in keeping with the policy that is set out in paper 21, the Minister does not see a need for any new legislative provisions in relation to that matter. The commission set three key tests, or success criteria, for the Education Bill, and it is the Minister’s view that the Bill meets all three of those criteria for all sectors.

The Chairperson: If that is the case, and the Minister feels that the Bill meets all three criteria and is sufficient for all sectors, is there not an anomaly or inequality? Perhaps you will explain the historical issue of why our schools are not all covered by the provisions of equality legislation. Nevertheless, if we go down this road, a non-departmental public body will be established for the controlled sector, to own its schools, and that body will be subject to section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. However, there will be another body, under the ownership of the trustees or the Catholic schools, which will not be a non-departmental public body and will not be subject to section 75. That is a glaring inequality, because you are not treating sectors equitably.

The two main words that came out of last week’s meeting with the CCMS and the commission were trust and clarity. There is a lack of trust on the part of both the CCMS and the commission, and there is a lack of clarity among most people. How do we reach the situation in which people have clarity and equity?

It will not be acceptable to have one sector that will be subject to all the equality scrutiny that is usually applied. A large part of the thinking concerning section 75 was the need to minimise or avoid additional bureaucratic burdens on schools. In the context of collective employment arrangements, the CCMS and the education and library boards would be subject to section 75. Therefore, there is no particular advantage in applying it a second time to individual schools.

The issue around the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 is one of ethos. At the time of the Order’s inception, the Churches felt that there was a need to exclude teachers from its provisions to ensure that measures to protect an ethos could continue to be legitimately applied. The strongest views on that were expressed by the Protestant Churches, who felt that if the exemption were not granted, there was a danger of de facto inequality for Protestant teachers who would not enjoy the same range of employment opportunities as their Catholic counterparts.

I understand your point about equity or equality between the ownership arrangements for Catholic schools and controlled schools. However, finding an answer that you would regard as satisfactory is difficult. Catholic schools are owned by the Catholic Church; an attempt to apply legislation that governs public authorities to a Church would be difficult. However, controlled schools will remain in the public sector and will be owned by some form of public authority — it would be an unusual and difficult approach not to apply the normal panoply of legislation to any public authority. Essentially, the difference is between public ownership and private ownership — between a public authority and a Church. Any attempt to subject both to exactly the same approach in legislation would be fraught with difficulty.

Committee members and a number of stakeholders have emphasised the issue of clarity on a number of occasions, and we accept that. Our approach has been based on seeking to avoid excessive detail or excessive bureaucracy in legislation. We accept that that has given rise to concern about a lack of clarity. A potential approach is to move into legislation — probably subordinate legislation — a lot of the detail that we proposed to place in guidance, and that is something that the Minister will want to consider.

Mr Poots: What will be the situation for voluntary grammar schools, which are currently owned by trustees?

Mr C Stewart: There are no plans to change the ownership of those schools.

The Chairperson: If boards of governors of Catholic schools decline to employ candidates for vacancies on the grounds of ethos, where is the reassurance for Catholic trustees that the ESA will fight such cases with the same commitment as the CCMS? I am talking about cases where there is a good and arguable case that the board of governors’ decision was lawful.
Mr C Stewart: If the decision of a board of governors has been lawful and it has applied the correct procedures, we would expect the ESA to provide exactly the same backing and support as the CCMS currently does. The issue is that the law applies equally to all employers, both current and future, in the education sector. The suggestion that is made from time to time that the CCMS, or an individual school employer, has more leeway or opportunity to act differently should be challenged, because it is not accurate. The issue from our perspective, and from the perspective of the ESA in due course, is whether the law has been correctly applied; the school will be supported if it has, but the decision made by the board of governors would not be taken forward if it has not.

The Chairperson: You could argue that those boards are able to do that because of the exemptions that exist. Therefore, the situation is not equitable.

Mr C Stewart: The effect of the exemption is there, whether or not one agrees with it. It applies equally to every employer, current and future. It does not and cannot apply differentially between CCMS and the ESA or, between an individual school as an employer or a collective employer.

Mr McCausland: I am interested in the appointment of governors and boards of governors. It is a big issue with the Catholic Church.

I noticed in a newspaper recently that the Department was advertising for people to apply to register to serve on boards of governors. It was interesting that, on the form, the applicant could tick which box he or she wished to apply for: there was no provision for expression of preference. The categories were: “integrated”, “Irish-medium”, “Catholic management” and “other management”. I thought it interesting that some sectors were specifically titled, while others were not. That could be extremely confusing for some people. I will return to that point.

I am interested in the current composition of boards of governors and how, in practice, that works out. I understand the composition of boards of governors of controlled schools, but if you asked me about the composition of boards of governors in other sectors, I would have some difficulty describing it. Yesterday, I asked that question of officials at an education and library board: I is the CCMs, or the particular composition of boards of governors in other sectors, I would have some difficulty describing it. Yesterday, I asked that question of officials at an education and library board: they had to go away and check the answer. Things tend to work in silos.

Does the Department appoint some of the governors to Catholic schools, and, if so, how many does it appoint?

Mr C Stewart: I find myself in the same position as the hapless official at the education and library board: I will have to run away to check. The sums are extremely complicated. Some of my colleagues may be able to advise me.

Mr McCausland: It would be useful if you were to make up a little grid: I am sure that you could do it when you return to the office this afternoon. I started to make one yesterday, but I could not not get all the answers. Your grid should list all the school categories, separating, for example, controlled primary from controlled integrated primary. Presumably, there are transfers from a controlled primary but not from a controlled integrated primary.

Mr C Stewart: I would need to check that detail. We could certainly provide that.

Mr McCausland: In the grid, all the school categories should be listed on one side, and all the different sources from which school governors are drawn should be listed on the other. Then we would know the current situation. It seemed to me yesterday, and your evidence this morning shows, that a lot of this discussion takes place in a general atmosphere of confusion and lack of clarity. That would be a useful exercise.

How are the department-appointed governors for a Catholic school selected? Applicants fill in the form, asking that their names go forward. For example, I — or Mervyn, or someone else — decides to put his name forward to Michelle to be a governor of a school of a particular category.

Mr C Stewart: We would be happy to take your application.

Mr McCausland: I know that you would. [Laughter]. Suppose that the Church is reasonably satisfied with the arrangements and is content that the people coming forward are in full accord with the Catholic ethos. How does that work in the Department? How do you check that?

Mr C Stewart: We check it through consultation. There is a legal requirement to consult.

Mr McCausland: Who do you consult?

Mr C Stewart: In the case of a Catholic grammar school, we consult the trustees or the existing board of governors. In the case of a Catholic-maintained school, the education and library board would carry out the consultation with the CCMS.

Mr McCausland: Is the CCMS, or the particular order that owns the school, able to look down the list and determine who fits the criteria? How do they check that the candidate fits in with the Catholic ethos? How does it work? It is one of the mysteries of the universe.

Mr C Stewart: It is; it is a mystery to me. You would have to ask them how they satisfy themselves about that.

In practice, I am unsure whether there is the same need to check that in detail. In proposing the appointments, our colleagues in the Department and in the education and library boards take careful note of the preferences expressed by applicants on their forms.
We try to, where possible, match applicants with the type of school or, in many cases, the particular school to which they want to be appointed. Applicants tend to self-select. They apply for a particular school or type of school because they have an interest in and an understanding of the ethos of that type of school.

Mr McCausland: However, the application form does not contain the word “controlled” even though you are appointing governors for the next four years.

Mr C Stewart: That is a symptom of a situation that arises in several aspects of education. We tend to use management-type or administrative arrangements as a proxy for ethos. It is not a particularly exact or helpful proxy.

Mr McCausland: My perception — which I think is widespread — is that certain sectors are looked after whereas the others must take what they get. That is how most people perceive the situation, given that names of particular sectors are not included on forms.
What happens if I want to apply to controlled primary school but I do not want to apply to a controlled-integrated primary school? I suppose that I could select “integrated schools” on the form. The word “controlled” does not appear on the form — that is incredible.

Mr C Stewart: Every applicant can indicate — in any degree of detail — for which sectors they want to be considered.

Mr McCausland: With respect, Chris, you cannot argue this point away. Controlled schools seem to be an afterthought with the Department at a stage when it is appointing governors for four years and after much debate about the ESA and the sector. If the Department cannot even manage to include the word “controlled” on the advertisement, what confidence could anybody have in the impartiality and inclusiveness of the Department’s approach? That is the problem.

Mr C Stewart: I find myself in complete agreement with you. The form could be improved considerably by including specific references to school types and the ethos of schools rather than to their management type.

Mr McCausland: Therefore, I am sure that if I visit the website tomorrow the form will have been changed.

Mr McGrath: Chris has recognised — as I do — the merit of your points, which we will consider after the meeting. As was mentioned earlier, we need to do a much better job on the business of recruiting governors by explaining the role and by offering induction and training. Some of our materials are, perhaps, past their sell-by date.

Mr McCausland: I was told that the deadline for applications is 20 May 2009. There is also an issue about how education and library boards appoint governors. The newspaper contains an advert for departmental appointees. Will there be an advert for governors that are appointed by education and library boards? Are they required to advertise? I was told yesterday that the answer is probably not. How those governors emerge seems to be another mystery of the universe.

The Department will appoint those governors for four years, and, therefore, they will serve during three years of the ESA. They will, potentially, have a larger role in the future. It is clear that, in certain sectors, the ethos of governors fits in with the ethos of the school.
However, once again, the controlled sector is at a serious disadvantage, even though it accommodates almost half of the children. Could we have the grid in the next day or so?

Mr McGrath: I am reliably informed that such a grid exists in the Department. We can obtain that for the Committee as soon as possible.

Mr McCausland: Will you e-mail it to members?

Mr McGrath: We should be able to.

Mr McCausland: That is excellent. Will you also explain how the system works in the Catholic sector?
That will enable us to see how it might potentially work for the controlled sector in the future.

Mr C Stewart: Certainly; I can talk to colleagues who administer that process and elicit a detailed description.

Mr McGrath: We can maybe bring a paper back to the Committee, because we are looking at how we are going to modernise our whole approach to that, so we need to set it in that context.

Mr C Stewart: You rightly pointed out a number of deficiencies in the current arrangements. In doing so, you are making a good case for us to move as quickly as possible to establishing the ESA and to having new and revised arrangements to address the very issues that you raised.

Mr McCausland: Your logic was going well and then it went slightly astray, but we will allow for that. I want you to move to a new system of equality. It is about getting that correction, and I welcome that.
Getting that information will help us in that direction.

The Chairperson: Would it not be preferable to move to the system in the Bill, rather than to the system with the ESA? Then you would have the trust that we spoke about earlier. It is clear that other sectors have issues. Nelson articulated the issues from the point of view of the controlled sector — there is no trust there.

Mr C Stewart: Many sectors have issues with governance, and the point that you made at the beginning was absolutely correct. The current arrangements are Byzantine. There are weird and wonderful arrangements of compositions of boards of governors, and separate administrative arrangements and different management types for schools have developed over the years. However, the central thrust of the RPA proposals is that that is unnecessary. It adds no value; in fact, it detracts value from the education system. Therefore, we need to move as quickly and as far as we can towards harmonising those arrangements.

You made a particular point, which is symptomatic of the situation — instead of responding to and addressing issues of ethos properly, we use management type as a very imperfect proxy. We need to move away from that. Ethos has a role to play, and it needs to be recognised and handled properly on an equitable and consistent basis across all sectors.

Mr D Bradley: You answered the point that was made by the commission, which suggested that boards of governors should be the formal employers of staff rather than the ESA. However, it is not beyond the realms of possibility that that arrangement will change in the future. It may turn out that boards of governors, not only in Catholic maintained schools, but in other schools, will become the employers. If that were to happen, how would you protect teachers from the current situation, which the unions described earlier, that is, lack of clarity; pension difficulties; lack of transparency; lower standards; discrimination against women; and so on? If boards of governors were to become the employers, would the Department be in a position to ensure that that situation would not exist in the future?

Mr McGrath: The Minister is supporting the model of a single employing authority to tackle, inter alia, the sort of issues that trade union colleagues flagged up and that you have repeated. If we were to conjecture that we lived in a world in which there was no single employing authority, the issue of how we would stop those matters arising would be down to political decisions and legislation, and to moving from the situation that we are trying to put in place to change it.

Mr D Bradley: Yes, but it is not beyond the realms of possibility.

Mr McGrath: That issue would be addressed when those changes were being made.

Mr D Bradley: That is what I am asking. Would you be able to address those issues in the future?

Mr McGrath: I do not know. On the basis of the direction that we were given on the issue, the single employing authority is rightly seen as a method of tackling and eradicating existing deficiencies. If someone wanted to replace the single employing authority, it would be a challenge to demonstrate that those deficiencies did not return to a greater or lesser extent.
in consultation might mean. It sounded to him, as it did to me, like joint appointment. The difficulty with joint appointment arises when the two participants fail to agree.

Mr Lunn: I did not get that impression from the evidence last week, but I suppose that I can look at the wording again.

Mr McGrath: In the evidence session last week, Bishop Walsh in particular made the point that they were happy with the existing arrangements. He seemed to have a view that the form of wording that the commission was offering would somehow imply a guarantee that there would be deeper and more meaningful consultation than the form of wording that the Department was suggesting. In a sense, it is neutral — the spirit of the consultation is separate from its precise legal nicety.

The Department is saying that the legislative draftsman sees a probable diminution — rather than added value — in using the words “in consultation with”. Ultimately, the appointments will be made by the ESA, and diluting that will cause confusion.

Mr C Stewart: That formulation carries considerable risk. We must avoid making bad law, and law that is not clear is bad law. We know what “consult” means. There is a body of case law that sets the parameters very clearly.

We know what a “reasonable requirement” is for the ESA or any public authority — what it must do, and how it needs to conduct meaningful consultation. However the phrase “in consultation with” would be new territory. Its meaning would be unclear; therefore, carries a significant risk of making bad law — law that is not clear and that would have to be interpreted by the courts, probably after a dispute.

Mr Lunn: If they come back to the Department with the suggestion of using the phrase “having consulted with”, would your legal expert consider that?

Mr C Stewart: We would certainly seek advice on that. With my usual caveat that I am not a lawyer, I cannot see any difference between “having consulted with” and the form of words in the Bill.

Mr Lunn: I am not a lawyer either, but I fancy that I can see a difference; “having consulted with” is much closer to “consult” than “in consultation with”.

Mr C Stewart: Sorry, that is what I meant. I do not see any difference between “having consulted with” and “consult”.

Mr Lunn: If there is no difference, why not placate them? I will have them put that to the Department to see what happens.

The Chairperson: You made a comment that law that is not clear is bad law. The Committee has heard from a number of people who said that there was no clarity in the Bill; therefore, it must be bad law. Furthermore, you have also said that the Department is going to make changes and propose amendments.

Mr McGrath: Sometimes law is changed to change the proposed content and purpose of it. On other occasions, it is changed — and rightly so — because it is not clear or because the provisions do not deal with the purpose behind the law, which can easily happen. However, as Chris said, if something on the statute book is confusing and misleading, it is bad law.

Mr C Stewart: Certainly, law that is not clear is bad law. However, law that stakeholders disagree with is not necessarily bad law.

Miss McIlveen: Did the Department carry out or commission any research into ethos and the protection of ethos in legislation? Furthermore, did the Department examine how that has been carried out in other jurisdictions of the UK and elsewhere?

Mr C Stewart: The Department examined legislation in other jurisdictions. It has not carried out anything that I would describe as research.

Miss McIlveen: Is it possible for research to be carried out in that area, perhaps by examining the Scottish or some European models?

Mr C Stewart: Do you mean how ethos is dealt with?

Miss McIlveen: Yes. I do not necessarily mean how it is dealt with in relation to the Catholic Church, although it does fit quite well into the discussion. The issue of ethos exists in and around the controlled sector also.

The Chairperson: An issue was raised about what happened in Scotland in 1926 when Catholic schools went into public ownership. Was the ethos of those schools protected?

Miss McIlveen: The ethos of those schools was protected with legal provisions. I was wondering whether the Department carried out any comprehensive work in relation to that, which is obviously a key theme in all this.

Mr C Stewart: No work has been carried out on that. As I said, the Department has examined the legislation in various jurisdictions and the various suggestions that were made by stakeholders. The Department’s view is that the current and proposed legislation provides adequate and satisfactory protection within the body of Northern Ireland law for ethos to be properly reflected.

The case made by the commission, and the GBA before them, was that the Department simply should adopt the legislative provisions that apply in other jurisdictions. Beyond that, they did not actually make a case.
The Department has not been told what is broken that we need to fix, and I am not clear on what the commission or the GBA are arguing that needs to change. There is a risk of making bad law in attempting to legislate for something when it is not clear what it is that we are trying to legislate for.

Miss McIlveen: I do not necessarily disagree with you, but I want to see what evidence has been used to back up the Department’s argument. I also want to see the evidence that has been used for and against the arguments of the commission and GBA.

The Chairperson: Is there something that could be provided to the Committee to give it some indication about that issue?

Mr C Stewart: Could you clarify that for me, please? I am not sure what the Committee requires.

The Chairperson: It relates to what Michelle has set out. What happened in Scotland in 1926 is a specific example of how faith-based schools were placed into public ownership and certain provisions were made to protect the ethos of those schools. How is that different from the legislation that is before the Committee?

My understanding is — and reference was made to it in the submission by the commission — that in the Scottish model, specific provisions were made so that there was no dilution of ethos in Catholic schools that are governed by the state.

Mr Poots: In Northern Ireland there is a Catholic ethos in the Catholic sector. In the controlled sector, there is a Christian/Protestant ethos, albeit not as evident as that in the Catholic sector. However, school assemblies and religious education classes do occur, which are more focused towards that Christian/Protestant ethos. The Committee wants to know how that ethos can be protected in the legislation.

The Chairperson: How was the ethos of the transferors protected when they came into existence? Obviously, they transferred their ownership and became part and parcel of what was the then established institutions. How did they view the protection that was given?

Mr C Stewart: The transferors have made it clear that they feel aggrieved about the changes. The protection that was given was the right to nominate school governors and the right to reserved membership on the education and library boards. We understand their position and their concerns about any changes to either of those protections.

Our difficulty is with those people who say that we can adopt a simple model that is used in Scotland or elsewhere. There are many problems with that, the first being that the legislation for the Scottish model was enacted in the 1920s. A lot has happened since then generally and in Northern Ireland specifically. We have a body of European legislation that now impacts on much of this. We have the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which determines the legislative capacity of the Assembly, and we have the European Commission of Human Rights, which not only affects statute law, but very significantly changes the body of case law and how it affects those sorts of matters. Therefore, it is difficult to say how exactly that 1920’s legislation applies in 2009, never mind what the rationale was for making that particular change all those years ago.

We are happy to look into that further and to offer what information we can to the Committee, if you feel that that will be helpful.

The Chairperson: That will help to give us some idea of where this is taking us.

Mr McGrath: We will do our best. The issue is about what the legislation provided for, it is about cause and effect, and about the perception of whether ethos is being protected and fostered.

Mr C Stewart: What John is saying, and what I hinted at, is that I am not convinced that there will be a great deal of value for the Committee in expending a lot of time and effort on that model. The points that Michelle and Edwin made are very significant. At present, no clear statement about the ethos of controlled schools or the controlled sector has been written down anywhere.

We will look to the controlled sector representative body to get that sector to agree on a set of principles and values in order to start forming a description of the ethos that pertains to that sector. I mentioned that point to school principals during helpful early discussions. Once we have a clearer view of what that ethos is, we can come to a view about how it might be protected in legislation.

The Chairperson: What work is being done to try to get that definition? I know that this is probably a well-rehearsed point but, to date, we have not seen much progress on any work being done for the controlled sector. We have no business case, they are still behind and now you are putting another issue on the table — the definition of the controlled sector’s ethos. What work is being done to try to address that huge deficit?

Mr McGrath: We are working on that, but are conscious of the fact that we had a lot on. As Chris said, we need someone to articulate and explain to us what the ethos is — it is not for us to commission an ethos. Edwin’s and Nelson’s interventions were helpful, because we are trying to promote conversations. Possibly, a question still exists over whether the controlled sector has a single ethos or whether there is a broader range, such as the examples that Edwin discussed.
Mr McCausland: That gets to the heart of the matter. This is not going to go anywhere unless there is agreement and acceptance at the heart of the Department about the ethos of the controlled sector. As you said, that is not a matter for the Department to determine. However, legislative obligations and other obligations will help to shape that.

Clearly, the Transferor Representatives’ Council (TRC) has a role in this matter, but it is not the only player. Other organisations and interests should be involved, particularly with regard to the cultural as well as the religious ethos of those schools. The situation is not as complex as people make out. What percentage of children in the controlled sector is from the Protestant/unionist community?

Mr C Stewart: I cannot answer that today; we can add it to the grid.

Mr McCausland: It is probably about 95%. It would be useful if you could send on two things with the grid. One is the percentage of children from each background in each sector. Some 99% of children in Catholic schools are from the Catholic community. In controlled schools, 95% of children are from the Protestant community.

Mr C Stewart: It would not surprise me if those figures were correct, though within individual schools there will be variations.

Mr McCausland: Vere Foster Primary School in west Belfast is an example of a school with a varied intake. That is the only such school that I am familiar with in Belfast, though there may be others. In due course that school will close. I have spoken to folk who have connections with the school, and I believe that its closure is likely as part of a reorganisation in that area. Those children will, presumably, go to Catholic maintained schools or to Irish-medium schools.

In addition, we need to know what percentage of children in the Catholic maintained and controlled sectors come from ethnic minorities. This was a point that I made earlier to the representatives of the unions. It may be 1% or 1.5%.

Mr C Stewart: Again, that would be subject to considerable geographical variations. It would be much higher than that in some areas.

Mr McCausland: It will be helpful to have that information — for the Catholic maintained and the controlled sectors — as it will remove the myth that has grown up about the huge diversity of the controlled sector. That sector is much more homogenous than people suggest.

Mr C Stewart: I do not disagree. Neither do I disagree with the list of the features of controlled sector ethos described by Edwin. Most, if not all, schools in the controlled sector recognise those as elements of their ethos. However, it has never been written down or clearly expressed in the past. Perhaps, many in that sector have never felt that they have a right to have such an ethos or to give clear expression to it. That is something that we need to move beyond quickly.

Mr Poots: It is an unspoken ethos.

Mr C Stewart: Yes, it is.

Mr D Bradley: I have a question about the role of sectoral bodies in relation to raising standards. You said that the sectoral bodies would take an interest in the performance of the schools and have a role in promoting high standards generally. How will that role interlink with that of the ESA in raising standards?

Mr McGrath: The ESA will have an executive role in helping to raise standards in schools. Sectoral support bodies will clearly have an interest in promoting high standards and contributing to the appointments to boards of governors. However, their role is pastoral, rather than executive.

There were different articulations this morning and last week as to the role of sectoral support bodies. They will help to support the sector without, necessarily, intervening in individual schools. The executive role is for the ESA. As Frank said earlier, we should fund the sectoral bodies sufficiently for what they need to do and no more. It is important that there is no confusion: promotion of and raising standards is the ESA's responsibility.

Mr D Bradley: The role of sectoral bodies in raising standards is, then, ill-defined.

Mr McGrath: We expect them to have an interest. The business cases indicate that. However, they will not have a statutory duty to do so. The duty to promote standards in the public sector, and the resources to do so, belongs to the ESA in conjunction with the ETI.

Mr D Bradley: Is it possible for the Committee to see the businesses cases that have been submitted?

Mr C Stewart: We intended to bring them to the Committee when they were concluded. It would be unfortunate to put the business cases into the public domain in that way while we are still in negotiation with the organisations. The sectors might find that unhelpful.

Mr D Bradley: Will we be able to see them at some future date?

Mr McGrath: Yes.

The Chairperson: The Committee has written to the Department listing a whole range of concerns and information requests about clause 8, and it has tried to bring them all together. Chris said that the Minister would probably propose secondary legislation. Is any thinking emerging on independent appeals or regulation to address the concerns that we have about clause 8?
Mr C Stewart: For clarification, what I said, or what I intended to say, was that the Minister would consider a suggestion from the Committee that we should have subordinate legislation, rather than relying merely on guidance.

As regards the appeal or challenge mechanism, the suggestion that we floated earlier, which can be developed if it would be helpful, would be a specific link between the Department’s power to direct in article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 and a complaint by a board of governors that the ESA was somehow behaving improperly in relation to the discharge of its functions. That would not be a terribly difficult technical challenge, as there is a precedent for it in the legislation. It could be argued that existing legislation already allows for that. However, there would be value in bringing the respective provisions very closely together and associating them with the employment provisions in the Education Bill. The Minister would be willing to consider a suggestion from the Committee to that end.

The Chairperson: The Committee has put those matters in the letter, which has now gone, and will await a response.

Thank you very much. We will see you next week.

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): I hope that today’s business will be shorter than last week’s marathon session. The Committee will seek to avoid having so many and such protracted presentations in the future.

Today we will have presentations from the Ulster Teachers’ Union (UTU); the Irish National Teachers’ Organisation (INTO), and the National Association of Schoolmasters Union of Women Teachers (NASUWT). We will also hear responses from the Department — on today’s presentation from the unions, and on the issues raised last week by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) and the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education (NICCE).

Avril, Frank and Seamus; you are very welcome. Please make your presentation, and members will then ask questions.

Ms Avril Hall-Callaghan (Ulster Teachers’ Union): We thank the Committee for the invitation to give evidence. The Bill is very important, and we have notified the Committee that there are a number of points on which we wish to speak.

Before I start, I will distribute a joint statement on the Education Bill that has been issued by the five recognised teaching unions in Northern Ireland. The main thrust of it is that we are absolutely convinced that the education and skills authority (ESA) must assume responsibility — as employing authority — for all sectors in education. Everybody must come into the tent, including alternative education provision, which Seamus will mention later. Otherwise, there will not be the equality within the education system that we feel is absolutely vital.

A number of things flow from that in relation to the redeployment of teachers and saving on duplication — we are horrified at the thought of a multiplicity of employers carrying out the same functions. Where would the control mechanisms be? That is the main message that the unions want to get across to the Committee today.

I understand that most of the other witnesses come from the alternative point of view. However, we represent the teaching force that the Bill will affect. Staff who work in schools alongside teachers will also be affected. The unions are certainly not happy about the thought of those staff working under different terms and conditions.

The second point is that we are concerned about the lack of specific reference to nought-to-six years’ provision. The Department of Education is at present working on a review of nought-to-six provision. We are concerned that there has been no specific reference in the Bill, apart from a small mention of materials for young children being produced by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA). There are rumours that there is an intention to, in some way, separate early-years provision from education, which we totally oppose. The unions feel that the years nought-to-six are a vital stage of a child’s development. Any language, or other, difficulties would be picked up at that stage, and we feel that it is vitally important that an education professional is involved in the early-years provision.

I know that the curriculum has changed at that stage and that some people would argue that one does not need to have a teacher there, but that is not the case. Just because it is a more relaxed environment does not mean that same amount of professional input is not required. Teachers picking up problems at that early stage will help the whole system later.

We also feel that equity in funding for all sectors is essential. The Committee knows that the unions have been campaigning for equity between primary- and secondary-sector funding, because we believe that most resources should be invested in the early stages in order to prevent problems developing later.

Retention of salaries at the centre would be welcomed. There is no point in trying to streamline an education system and then having many different people paying out salaries. The same principle applies to schemes of employment. It would be much better to have uniform schemes of employment. There should be no provision for schools to vary from that scheme.

The unions were interested to see in the Bill that employment for peripatetic teachers should be subject to negotiation with the schools. We certainly believe that it should be subject to negotiation. We favour a model that retains peripatetic teachers from within the teaching force instead of creating compulsory redundancies. A pool of peripatetic teachers of varying expertise should be maintained. In addition, teachers unions as well as the schools should be consulted about the use of those teachers. That is something that is lacking throughout the Bill — teachers’ unions are not being acknowledged as one of the major stakeholders.

At present, the education system relies far too heavily on buying in expertise from outside. Therefore, we were concerned about the reference in the Bill to the commissioning of research. We feel that there is adequate expertise in the system to ensure that any required research is done by the people who know the system. When outside providers come in, they ask the people in the system for their views anyway; so, let us cut that out and put the money put into front line services.

We are concerned that the Bill does not go far enough in trying to rid us of the multiplicity of bodies involved in the education service. We were delighted when we thought that all the sectoral bodies were going, but now there is a suggestion that not only are they being retained, but attempts are being made to create new ones. If we are trying to streamline the system, surely we should be trying to exclude those bodies.

We are not saying that those sectoral bodies should not be able to comment, but they should do so in the same way as teacher unions. We are not funded out of the education budget, and other bodies, such as the Churches and the integrated education sector should fund themselves and leave the education budget intact for the education of children.

The General Teaching Council (GTC) is mentioned in the Bill. That is one of the areas in which there should be a statutory obligation for consultation with the teacher unions. We have no difficulty with the GTC in that regard. Indeed, we have a good relationship with the GTC because the Registrar has placed it as a high-profile, important item. We do not know what the future holds, so we would like to have statutory provision for consultation.

Schools should operate on a multicultural basis. As members know, our society has changed drastically in recent years. There has to be a change of emphasis: schools should be open to all, and a diversity of cultures and opinions, for instance, is to be welcomed.

The governing body — the ESA — will be too small: eight to 12 people is not enough. If a couple of those people are not available on any particular day, then a small number of people could end up managing a huge employment sector. The number should be increased to 15 to 19 people, 25% of whom should be political representatives — which is what you would have wanted within your existing model. There should also be guaranteed places for trade unions at the table.

It is vital that the Department of Education retains the ability to direct the ESA, because we are sure that there will be times in the future when a guiding hand will be needed.

Mr Frank Bunting (Irish National Teachers’ Union): I will be brief. I want to emphasise that the five teacher unions are of the view that there should be a single employing authority for all teaching and support staff in Northern Ireland. There is a range of reasons for that view, and I can go into those reasons later, if you wish.

With regard to clause 10 and the situation that we are moving into regarding redundancies and pensions, Ms Hall-Callaghan has suggested that there should be a provision in the Bill for the ESA to be able to employ panels of peripatetic teachers. That would be important, particularly for teachers in rural areas who, perhaps, will be subject to compulsory redundancies over the next decade.

Clause 13 relates to the provision of training. The broad thrust of the Bill is the need for accountable autonomy, and that means schools taking the lead. In the current model, professional development and in-service training are provided on a mechanical, statutory basis by the Curriculum Advisory and Support Services of the five education and library boards, with funding being diverted away from schools to the boards so that they can do that. I would like to see that changed to a mixed-economy model in which schools receive the lion’s share of the budget. The GTC would have some responsibility for the budget, and there would be a smaller share for the ESA to deal with. That is generally in line with the thrust of accountable autonomy.

We value the role that the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) plays. It is currently under the auspices of the Department of Education, and we advocate strongly that that role be continued and that the inspectorate should not be separated from the Department.
Mr Seamus Searson (National Association of Schoolmasters Union of Women Teachers): Our central point is about the need to have a single, central employer. That is crucial to us, because it makes the most sense. It makes no sense for schools to want to be the employer and deal with all the legal situations. Why should they want to do that? They should be guided by the ESA, and that is one of the major messages that I want to get across this morning.

I shall take a slightly different tack and talk about the way in which schools operate. The important part of a school is what goes on in the classroom, whether that is in a field or in a special unit. As you might expect a representative from a teaching union to say, it is important to realise that teachers are an important part of the teaching and learning experience for youngsters. We want to emphasise that, but we also need a system that supports the teacher in the classroom. That is why schools, principals and management need to be able to support the teacher in the classroom; it should not be the other way around. Resources and support staff should be focused on supporting the teacher.

The whole idea of moving away from the current number of employers was to try to streamline the system, and the next step should be to streamline things inside schools. Schools are expected to carry out many duties, and teachers and principals are not the best people to do them. We need to focus on what schools are for, create structures and systems that will support teaching and learning in schools and allow all young people to reach their full potential. The challenge for the ESA is to create an educational support system that allows schools to focus on the activity in the classroom.

Some of the functions that have been talked about in other places do not make any sense. For example, the ESA should be able to relieve schools of bureaucratic and administrative burdens and offer a range of support services. If the ESA is to be the single employer, why is there a need for various employment schemes? That is unnecessary. A teacher working in Bangor should be treated the same as a teacher working in Derry, in the same situation, and that should also apply to support staff. Why would schools want to invoke extra work and extra responsibility? They have enough to do as it is.

Avril mentioned alternative education providers. Education does not simply apply to one school but to a whole range of units and outfits across Northern Ireland, and the ESA should have responsibility for all of those. Outreach centres such as Newstart Education Centre, Conway Mill Education Centre and Lagan Valley Educational Project are working and supporting youngsters who are outside the education system. In some instances, they rely on charitable funding, which does not seem to make any sense because those youngsters are part of educational responsibility and need to be brought back into line.

Finally, provision for 14-to-19-year-olds is straddled across two Departments, and we see potential conflict with that in the future. An important consideration is who will be the lead partner for education of people between the ages of 14 and 19. We agree that the major issue is the importance of having a single employer. Why should we have a myriad of other obstacles in the way?

The Chairperson: As you are aware, today’s edition of ‘The Irish News’ reports on a conflict between the teaching unions and the Catholic bishops on this issue, because it is central to the presentations that were made to the Committee last week on the single employing authority. The Catholic bishops argued that, as a result of the ESA becoming the single employing authority, there would be a threat to ethos. From a union’s point of view, is that an issue?

Mr Bunting: I do not think so. The Church is generally responsible for the population of most of the governors of Catholic schools.

Provision has been made in the Bill for the trustees, as the owners of schools, to have a major say in how employment schemes and suchlike are developed. We do not envisage any threat to the ethos of any individual school. Indeed, we were surprised by the thrust of the bishops’ and cardinal’s statement.

Our experience with the CCMS, which is the single employing authority for all Catholic teachers throughout Northern Ireland, is that it shows the benefits for Catholic teachers of having a single employing authority. An example of that was when schools were being closed in the Belfast area and the responsibility for redeployment of staff was undertaken by the CCMS. It was able to redeploy teaching staff across Northern Ireland. Some teachers were moved from central Belfast to Lisnaskea, for example, simply because it also suited them to move back home for a variety of reasons. The fact that the CCMS was a single employing authority meant that it had the ability to do that.

The teachers who suffered most from the fact that there was no single employing authority were those in the controlled sector, because all that education and library boards were able to do, particularly in the post-primary sector, was to redeploy teachers from, for example, one controlled secondary school to another in a limited number of schools in their area. Therefore, there was total inequity in teachers’ prospects between the controlled sector and the Catholic sector.

As Seamus and Avril have said, the creation of a single employing authority addresses that issue. It also enables teachers to be redeployed from post-primary controlled and Catholic secondary schools into grammar schools, and from Irish-medium into integrated schools.
Recently, Armagh Integrated College was closed. Its teachers have a single employing authority, in its board of governors, and do not have the ability to be redeployed elsewhere. Establishing a single employing authority will address such issues. Therefore, from the perspective of teachers and support staff, and in the interests of efficiency, establishing the ESA is basically a dream come true.

The Chairperson: Frank, I want to tease that out slightly. One of the concerns raised by CCMS and the NICCE — and I believe that some voluntary grammar schools have also raised this concern — is about the redeployment of staff. There is a worry — the reasons for which I cannot fully comprehend fully — about that matter. It seems to focus on the ESA’s ability to take a member of staff who has taught in a maintained school and place that person in a non-maintained school, and vice versa. They argue that that is the big issue.

Mr Bunting: That can be addressed easily. The CCMS did a fantastic job; everyone accepts that. The boards also did a good job.

The ESA will have the ability to redeploy teachers. However, the actual decision-making for the employment of teachers will remain with the board of governors. Therefore, for example, the CCMS, and hopefully the ESA when it is established, places the names of teachers who need to be redeployed before individual boards of governors. Subsequently, those teachers are interviewed by a subcommittee of the board of governors, which then appoints to the position the teacher whom it believes to be meritorious. If there is not a teacher whom the board of governors wishes to employ, it is under no compulsion to employ or redeploy a teacher who has been placed before it by the central body. The entire thrust of protection of ethos, employment status and rights by the board of governors will remain exactly as it is.

Mr Searyson: I want to start by saying that my interpretation is that there will be no change to what exists at present except that the final decision or control of the final decision will belong to the employer, which will be the ESA.

Boards of governors will appoint and dismiss their own staff as long as they follow the correct legal procedures, and the ESA will be ensuring that they adhere to those procedures. If a board of governors wants to dismiss somebody for the wrong reasons, the ESA should be able to step in and advise the board that it will encounter legal difficulties and other problems by using incorrect methods. That will be a safeguarding situation. An employer should take advice and guidance from the centre, which knows the law and the regulations. In reality, most boards of governors do not know the law. Schools working alone make up the law and end up in trouble afterwards.

Teachers are not made redundant because they are bad teachers; it is because there are not enough children to teach. That is different from trying to dismiss someone whose teaching standards are not up to the mark. If that is the case, there is a capability procedure, which is the correct procedure for somebody who wants to go down that particular road.

It is not the case that teachers are not fit for one school or another. Under present arrangements, many people who are redeployed are young teachers in their first three or four years of teaching. I do not think that schools will say that they cannot change young teachers and mould them to work a certain way. It is a bit of a red herring and is obviously hiding something else that they are trying to protect rather than coming forward and saying that it is in the interest of all schools.

We spend a lot of resources on training teachers, but we do not do look after them when they leave university and college. Every so often, we put them on a daily rate, and we do not have a scheme for them. The ESA must deal with that problem and find a way for young teachers to gain employment and become inducted into the education service. As I said earlier, if that is not possible, teachers need the support to move on. People have spun the story in an unfortunate way because, as Frank said, governors will have the final say as to whether a person fits in with their staff. If they reject that person, they should do so for good reasons.

The Chairperson: Before members ask questions, I want to tease that matter out a bit further. You have raised concerns about schools having the freedom to prepare schemes of management. The Bill, as it stands, proposes different submitting authorities for employment and management schemes. However, we believe that the Minister is considering an amendment that will make the owners/trustees the submitting authority for all schools. Who should be the submitting authority that prepares the schemes of management and schemes of employment?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: We feel very strongly that there should be a uniform scheme of management. There is no reason for schemes to be duplicated. We are concerned that we will end up with a situation similar to that in England and Wales, where schools are tantamount to private institutions with their own conditions of service, and so on. We do not want to countenance such a situation in Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: As regards the phrase “maximising school autonomy and centralisation”, do you believe that it is a case of one or the other, or is it a combination of both? Voluntary grammar schools and maintained schools say that they have autonomy that they do not want to give up. As collective representatives of teachers, should functions be centralised, should local autonomy remain or is a combination of both preferable?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: Several functions should be centralised, and we have already suggested that —

The Chairperson: Employment is obviously a key one.

Ms Hall-Callaghan: Yes. There are other areas that schools need to have control over, such as training, to which Frank referred. It is a mixed package.

Mr Bunting: It is an interrelationship. I know that many members of the Committee, including the Chairperson, serve as school governors. We believe that the concept of governorship in Northern Ireland, England and Wales is seriously flawed.

There must be a relationship between governors — who are basically unpaid volunteers who receive a limited number of hours of training for undertaking complex education and employment functions — and where their expertise may lead. For example, under the present arrangements, one governor from each school is designated to liaise with the principal about child-protection matters. I believe that as child protection is such an important, significant and difficult area, the person selected must have considerable professional experience in that area. Therefore, it may not be appropriate for a volunteer to assume such a role.

If you are dealing with, and giving advice to, teachers or support staff who are under investigation and, perhaps, suicidal, then you will want to ensure that they receive the best professional support possible. Therefore, the relationship between the central authority — the ESA — and governors is complex, and while we have governors, professional expertise must come from the ESA.

Hopefully, with the Committee’s help, we may move to a more professional model for education, such as the one that exists under the delegated schools management system in Scotland.

Mr Searson: There is confusion about what the terms the Chairperson mentioned actually mean. They can mean different things to different people. In reality, how many decisions do schools have to make? The bottom line is that they must employ teachers; so, based on their budgets, they must decide how many teachers they can afford to employ, which will determine the curriculum they are able to offer.

Having paid for buildings, heating, meals, transport and all the other factors for which a school is responsible, the major decision left is how to deploy the remaining resources. Ultimately, little is recalled, so a school’s autonomy amounts to how it uses that last piece of money. Autonomy might be exercised by a school deciding to spend money on extra equipment, such as an IT suite, or in choosing to spend money on additional teachers, support staff or materials. Schools must be careful about the decisions they make; however, those decisions should be based on the quality of the education that they provide for youngsters.

Activities such as looking after school buses should be taken away from schools and dealt with somewhere else. Consequently, schools would not have a budget of £4 million or £5 million each; it would be a much smaller figure, which would reflect how much money they actually have to spend. What people mean when they use the word “autonomy” has yet to be teased out and explored further. Otherwise, we will end up with different meanings for different people, and that will cause difficulties in the future.

Mr D Bradley: I thank the witnesses for their presentation. I agree with Seamus. Last week, during our meeting with the NICCE, three different terms were used containing the word “autonomy”, and we are not sure whether each of those terms means the same thing. Therefore, we require more clarity on that subject.

Initially, one of the major selling points for the ESA was the £20 million per annum savings that were predicted. That money was to be reinvested in front line services; however, as a result of the financial situation, the economic downturn, and so on, we are told that that money might be used to plug various holes in the education budget. Therefore, we cannot be sure that the savings will go to front line services.

The Department’s main rationale for the ESA now is raising standards. You did not mention that in your presentation. How effective do you think the ESA will be in raising standards in schools?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: That depends on how it goes about doing it. To date, we are very concerned about what is coming out of the ESA and out of the Department with respect to the ‘Every School a Good School’ policy. If the ESA is to be set up with the role of challenging schools — and that is what the chief executive designate is saying — I believe that that is totally wrong. Schools do not need to be challenged; they need positive support.

Starting off with a confrontation — which the word “challenge” indicates — will result in teachers getting nervous, and they will, perhaps, go into a defensive mode. That will not get the best out of schools.

I recently went to Finland, and one of the things that came across most was the fact that professionals there are left to get on with it. No inspectorial process whatsoever exists in Finland, and yet, its pupils achieve the highest results in the Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA) surveys. Therefore, there is something about professional self-esteem and the fact that the vast majority of schools operate well and do the best for their pupils. As Seamus said, there is a small number of problems, but those are picked up by the unsatisfactory teacher procedure and the existing inspection procedure. Therefore, we have concerns.

Mr Bunting: There are different ways in which to sell the ESA. I know from the experience of the CCMS that we are not simply supporting a central employing authority for teaching and support staff out of ritual. In a place such as Northern Ireland with a small system of fewer than 1,200 mixed-model schools, the only way in which we can move forward to implement the Department’s sustainable schools programme is to have a single employing authority, whereby the actual workforce is being used more efficiently. Really, that is the key benefit that will sustain.

As the chief inspector and everyone else will acknowledge, the key deliverer as regards teaching and learning in schools is the teaching force. Having a single employing authority will be a major boon, particularly for teachers who are currently isolated in grammar schools, integrated schools, Irish-medium schools and controlled schools. Having one single employing authority will bring major benefits for all those sectors.

Shortly, the five teachers’ unions will meet the chief inspector, at his invitation, to explore ways in which standards in education can be raised. That is the first time that those unions have been so invited by any part of the education administrative network.

I share the view that Avril outlined about adopting the English system. The London Challenge and the National Challenge in England, which try to drive up standards through the use of heavy inspections and rigorous accountability, has not worked. Rather, we believe that schools need to build on good practice, and we are keen to explore with the chief inspector how we can do that together.

Mr Searson: I agree with what has been said. The teachers are the way forward, and the teachers’ unions are not the enemy. We wish to work with the Department, the ESA and whoever else to move the issue forward. We should be working together to raise standards for all young people.

The Chairperson: On that point, in the briefing paper, INTO says that it has a concern about the principles that underlie the new duty on boards of governors in clause 34 to promote the achievement of high standards of educational attainment. The worry is about that responsibility being put on boards of governors. Are you saying that that has been proven, because you make reference to the new Labour school improvement agenda? Do you think that that is now being replicated under the guise of ‘Every School a Good School’?

Mr Bunting: All the teachers’ unions were unhappy with the first draft of ‘Every School a Good School’. Hopefully, the second draft, which is due to come out for consultation shortly, will be a significant improvement, given the fact that there has been consultation between the Department and us.

In our view, clause 34 borrows from the ideology of the London Challenge and the National Challenge, which are used in England and Wales. Our colleagues in the National Association of Head Teachers (NAHT) told us that that has been found wanting in delivering improvements in standards in London and in the rest of England and Wales. That programme has been dropped in primary schools in those countries.

Challenging principles on a continuing basis and employing school improvement officers is not necessarily the best way forward. School improvement officers exist in England and Wales and have fairly plenipotentiary powers to overrule principals and governors on their school development plans and on other decisions. Although it is important to have a healthy challenge function for teaching and learning in all our schools, the balance must be correct.

Mr D Bradley: The key element in the ESA for the Department seems to be the raising of standards rather than its role as a single employing body. I understand why you are concerned about the employment aspect, but you are questioning the rationale of the Department, particular in relation to ‘Every School a Good School’. I thought that the final version of that policy had been published.

In his report, the chief inspector mentioned specifically ‘Every School a Good School’ as a means of driving up standards. I am sure that that is something that you will want to discuss with the chief inspector when you meet him if you have issues about the approach that is advocated in that policy, which I previously described as too much stick and not enough carrot.

If you, as the representatives of the teaching force, disagree with the approach that the ESA will take to raising standards through that policy, which has also been endorsed by the Education and Training Inspectorate, there is a major difficulty. As you said, the key group in raising standards is the teaching force. Therefore, there has to be a better meeting of minds between those who represent the teaching force and those who believe themselves to be charged with raising standards. If you are working at cross purposes, standards will suffer.

There needs to be close co-operation between the teaching force and the administrators, in this case the ESA, if we are going to achieve the standards that we require. The chief inspector’s report suggests that, although positive improvements have been made, there is still some distance to go in that regard. I hope that you are able to come to a meeting of minds when you meet the chief inspector, which will work for the benefit of children in the long term and the raising of standards.
Are teachers’ conditions of service and employment not the same across the board, regardless of the employing body?

Mr Bunting: Yes, they are.

Mr D Bradley: You said that there is unevenness between various types of schools. You also said that there is a lack of clarity in salary policy and pension difficulties. Furthermore, you said that there is a lack of transparency in ethos, which responds poorly to challenges and so on. How can that be the case if the terms and conditions of service are the same across the board?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: There is one major difference — schools are not funded equally. Therefore, promotion opportunities are not the same for all teachers. That issue needs to be looked at, because there is more funding going into the grammar-school sector at the moment. Also, there are some schools that use honourariums and other allowances, and some may receive additional funds from parents. Therefore, there is a certain degree of inequity. The biggest inequity is probably in the non-teaching sector, where some schools have different terms and conditions than others. That is not justified.

Mr D Bradley: I hear that in the maintained sector promotional opportunities used to be advertised publicly in the school, applications invited, and so on. However, that situation seems to have changed, and there seems to be private negotiations between principals and individual teachers. Quite often, positions are not advertised. Furthermore, not all staff are always aware that individuals have been promoted. Has that scenario developed recently?

Mr Bunting: In a minority of schools — perhaps a large minority — there is some bad practice in areas of employment, promotions and in the implementation of salary policy statements. Emoluments — such as honoraria, to which Avril referred — have been given out without any degree of accountability. Moreover, significant failings of individual professional teachers or principals might not, up to now, have been addressed as robustly as we want, particularly in cases in which schools are in considerable difficulty and need help. The ESA will provide an opportunity for that to happen, and it is important that it has the power to do that. Furthermore, it is important to strike a balance between the ESA and schools in order to ensure harmonious working in the interest of pupils’ teaching and learning.

Mr D Bradley: If I am not mistaken, in your submission, you acknowledged the work of the CCMS in raising standards.

Mr Bunting: Did I say that? I acknowledge the work that the CCMS and the education and library boards have done on a range of issues. Attainment in the Catholic sector has increased over the past 10 to 15 years, for which the CCMS has claimed some credit. I agree with what Seamus and Avril said: the main credit should go to the collegiate working of principals and teachers in schools. The CCMS model, which has been borrowed for the ESA in a range of different ways, is helpful. It will abolish many arcane practices that relate to the employment of principals, and so on. A simpler, streamlined model will be introduced and will help everyone.

Mr D Bradley: Last week, the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education said that the CCMS has helped to raise standards in that sector because of its work with Catholic-maintained schools, and it argued that sectoral support should continue because it contributes positively to raising standards. Do you agree?

Mr Bunting: Every administrative post that is created militates against people’s teaching and learning. We would much prefer the money to be diverted to teaching and learning, rather than being spent on creating sectoral support bodies and administrative support staff that will, allegedly, give sectors an advisory role. We do not see the logic in establishing four, five or six sectoral support bodies. We thought that when new education administrative bodies were being established, there would be a simple model in which all players would be members of the education advisory forum and would advise the Department of Education.

Consider a similar model in the Republic of Ireland, where the Catholic Primary Schools Management Association (CPSMA) is a much larger entity than the CCMS. CPSMA performs the same role with about three members of staff who are not funded separately by Government or through public funds, but, as I understand, by the Church. I do not see why such nanny-state support needs to be given to sectoral-support bodies in Northern Ireland — simply because support is given to one Church body, it has to be given to others, which would create other sectoral-support bodies along the line. We could end up with a number of sectoral-support bodies employing more than 100 staff.

The tendency has been for education administrative bodies, once established, to grow like topsy. When the CCMS was established, it employed seven or eight members of staff. It now has approximately 85 employees and, therefore, we must be careful. The Department wants to give additional capability to those particular bodies, but they do not need it. The existing members of staff know that perfectly well, because they receive all the necessary advice and support from within their own sectors.

The Chairperson: Frank, does that have an adverse effect on education? The worry, or fear, is that the result of raising concerns and issues, and moving away from the debate on efficiency to one on who runs the schools, may lead to a more segregated and Balkanised education system than ever before. The opportunity exists to work together to the advantage of all children, as opposed to all children, but particularly those in certain sectors. The fact that there are so many sectors raises difficulties.

Mr Bunting: Other major strategies are within the Department of Education’s ambit. For example, learning communities have been established within which post-primary schools from all sectors work more collaboratively. There is a progressive move in that respect. However, we see no logic in additional tiers of education administration being built in as well as the ESA.

The Catholic Church, the transferors, the Governing Bodies Association (GBA), the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education and Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta all have the capability to provide advice to the Department of Education on ethos, and on the education and learning in their particular sectors. Why do they need additional capability, the funding for which would come from the education budget? As Dominic said, that budget is under increasing pressure because of the state of the economy. All available money should be invested in teaching and learning.

Ms Hall-Callaghan: We must also focus on professional development, and teachers must be allowed enough time to participate in that. That is how to raise standards.

The Chairperson: Frank, the one sector that you did not mention, and it is invariably omitted, is the controlled sector.

Mr Bunting: Sorry, I thought that I had mentioned the controlled sector. When I mentioned the transferors, I meant that to refer to the controlled sector.

The Chairperson: Where is that sector’s capability to be at an equitable level with all other sectors? At present, there is no such equity.

Mr Bunting: We are still in the process of responding to the Department of Education’s proposal relating to paper 20 on the review of public administration.

The Chairperson: The paper’s author is sitting behind you.

Mr Bunting: He has much more capability than I have.

It is important for the working group proposed by the Department to address those issues.

The Chairperson: If we could establish that working group, it would be extremely helpful.

Mr Bunting: I absolutely agree. The only issue that INTO has is that the working group should be built on the existing expertise in the education and library boards. For reasons of exigency, I believe that the Department wants to select people to be involved in consultation with the education and library boards. The education and library boards have been 100% responsible for the development and maintenance of the controlled sector. In my view, they have done a first-class job. There is a body of expertise in the boards that could be used to ensure that that sector is not treated any less equitably than another sector.

Mr Lunn: I will not take up much of your time, because, for once, I find myself agreeing with almost everything that is in the submission. I want to raise a couple of small points; however, I am more interested to hear the departmental response to your comments.

Your paper states that equity in funding for all levels is essential. Can you tease that out a wee bit for me? I do not believe that you mean equal amounts of funding, but rebalancing of amounts. By “schemes of employment”, I presume that you mean a model scheme that could be varied slightly if necessary.

I am having quite a good week on the subject of the ESA, because, suddenly, the Catholic bishops and unions seem to agree with me. I am delighted. [Laughter.]

How many guaranteed places for trade-union reps do you suggest? In your submission, Frank, it states that the ESA should report to, and be subject to, scrutiny by the Assembly’s Education Committee. Of course, it would be subject to scrutiny by the Committee, although I am not sure about formal reporting.

The multicultural reference is music to my ears.

Generally, you find differences of opinion between trade unions in the same sector. I have looked at all those submissions and I cannot find any differences in them. Are there any areas that you have not mentioned on which you do not agree?

The Chairperson [Mr D Bradley in the Chair]

We have only half an hour or so left. [Laughter.]

Mr Searson: We agree on the important matters. Although certain issues may need further airing, we agree on the vast majority.

Mr Lunn: Deputy Chairperson, it is a bit rich for you to point out that we have only half an hour left. Those were short questions.

The Chairperson: I believe that you misinterpreted my remark. Go ahead, Trevor.

Mr Lunn: I am waiting to hear from Mr Bunting on the issues that I just highlighted.

Mr Bunting: Representatives of two unions — the Association of Teachers and Lecturers (ATL) and the NAHT — are not present; they must have fallen off the wagon. The five teachers’ unions are of one view on the matter. Our approach is absolutely seamless. That gives a lot of resonance to what is in the draft Education Bill. We believe that if it were enacted in that particular manner, with some of the minor caveats that we have brought forward, it would be extremely helpful.

Mr Lunn: The trade-union interests merit some mention. That is a fair point. Perhaps, the Department would say that they are included in that regard for the requirements of the professions. As I said, that is why I want to hear from the Department, rather than from yourselves, on the points that you have made.

Mr Bunting: There teachers’ unions have had representation on the education and library boards, but none on any other entity, such as the CCMS. Meaningful consultation would be helpful, bearing in mind that, at the end of the day, the ESA will be the employer of teaching and support staff. Some adoption of the education and library board model in that particular category could be helpful.

Mr Lunn: I mentioned equity in funding for different levels. Presumably, you mean an increase in early-years funding?

Mr Searson: There is a question of funding or resources going to where there is need. The problem is that everyone assumes that a particular sector needs only this, and another sector needs only that. In fact, the needs of schools in particular areas must be considered. That must be levelled up. Mr Avril said, the early years are important, and that area is one of the poor relations in the funding arrangement. The whole way in which schools are funded must be reviewed at some point in the future.

Ms Hall-Callaghan: We believe that if it were enacted in that particular way, the differences are few questions left to ask. Each representative body that has attended the Committee over the past few weeks has put forward strong arguments for strengthening its own position, and you have not let us down with that. Will you expand on where you see your role in the ESA? You said that you wanted the trade unions to be mentioned in the legislation. How many places do you feel that you should have on the ESA board?

Ms McIlveen: Have you been given any indication from the Department that you might be excluded?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: We have not, but there is a difference between being able to apply through a public-appointments process and being assured of having a presence. Such a presence is assured in the Labour Relations Agency and in the industrial court.

The Deputy Chairperson: If you were on the board of the body that employed your members, would that compromise your position, given that your responsibility is to stand up for your members' rights against that organisation?

Ms McIlveen: That did not affect us in the operation of the education and library boards. We had nominees on those boards. That proved to be helpful, because it meant that the practitioners’ voices were heard directly by the management.

The Deputy Chairperson: Is there any precedent in UK legislation for the type of consultation that you advocate?

Mr Bunting: We are asking for representation. I do not think that there is a precedent for that.

The Deputy Chairperson: We could ask the Research Services to look into that.

Miss McIlveen: Will you continue with the point about the fact that you feel that your role should be strengthened in the ESA?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: We already mentioned the GTC, and about being written into that part of the legislation. We represent teachers, who are a huge influence on the education service. So as long as we are written into the legislation, we will not be left out of the process. If a statutory requirement is placed on people to consult, they will do so, but, if we are not specifically mentioned in the Bill, there will be a tendency to put us to one side and talk to us later. We want to be an integral part of the process, in the interests of the children. We bring the perspective of the teacher, who is the front line worker.

Mrs O’Neill: A lot of ground has been covered, but Frank and Avril mentioned the employment of a panel of teachers. On my reading, clause 10 includes that provision. Why do you think that it is not, or why do you believe that an amendment is needed?

Mr Bunting: It is difficult to know the legislative and the practical outworking of that. We have been making representations on the matter to the Department for a considerable time and have received no reassurance.

We are moving rapidly towards a situation this year when there must be a panel in place. We would be more than happy to accept an assurance obtained by the Committee that the ESA is capable of employing a panel of teachers, particularly for the type of exigencies that we have outlined. In those circumstances, we would be content to let the legislation sit.

Mrs O’Neill: That is something that the Committee can put to the departmental officials.

Ms Hall-Callaghan: The other thing that we have been working on is a winding-down scheme, which involves teachers at the end of their careers — who have accumulated a lot of expertise and experience — would be able to reduce their workloads and perhaps enter that pool of peripatetic teachers. However, that is another issue about which we have come to brick wall with the Department.

Mr McCausland: Paragraph 14 of the UTU submission states:

“Whilst the UTU accepts that it may be necessary on some occasions to commission research it would state its very strong reservations about the amount of public funds currently used in employing commercial companies to carry out research.”

Have the unions any understanding of what is currently spent on research?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: We have no idea of the level of expenditure, but we have recently been advised by Gavin Boyd that he will again outsource work on the setting up of all the ESA structures, yet people in the boards know all those structures inside out. Nevertheless, he is buying in resources on the grounds that he does not have the necessary expertise.

Mr McCausland: The unions state:

“schools should operate on a multi-cultural basis in the interests of unifying our society”.

How do you see that working out across the different sectors?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: I am a great believer that there should not be different sectors. I think that we should all come together and this is the one thing that may unite people in Northern Ireland. In the context of a multi-diverse European society, I believe that we should be thinking more of bringing people together — allow for those sectoral differences by all means, but do so under one roof.

Mr McCausland: If there were sectors, which there may be, how do you see multiculturalism working out across those sectors?

Ms Hall-Callaghan: It is very difficult to represent a multicultural society if people are put into separate boxes. The Lisanelly site at Omagh is the single good major development that is underway at present. There at least the maintained and controlled sectors are being brought together in one campus. That may be some sort of halfway measure — I would like to go the whole way — but at least that starts the process.

Mr Bunting: The current situation is a mess. Under the 1986 Order, the education and library boards were legally responsible for the planning and development of schools in their respective areas. However, that never actually worked for the Catholics, because when the CCMS was created under the 1989 Order it was given the statutory responsibility for the provision of Catholic education. I believe that the ESA presents an enormous opportunity to remove all that dysfunction. The ESA — in collaboration with all the relevant bodies — can work for a more planned schools system. As we move forward towards collaboration and sustainable schools, that will maximise the opportunities for all kinds of education including multiculturalism.

Mr McCausland: Have you any idea what percentage of children from ethnic minority communities attend controlled and Catholic maintained schools?

Mr Bunting: Not off hand.

Mr D Bradley: One point occurred to me as you were answering Nelson’s question. Is it possible for the sectoral support to be located within the ESA? In the same way that there are different sections within the Department of Education, there could be a section within the ESA for Irish-medium, controlled and maintained schools. It would provide sectoral support under one roof, and there would be opportunities for coming together. It would be easier to collaborate, as you suggest they should do. I am unsure whether the various sectors would agree with it, but is it a possibility?

Mr Bunting: I would say that it is not.

Ms Hall-Callaghan: I think that it could work, but I do not know whether the sectors would accept it as sufficient.
The Chairperson: Frank, you referred earlier to the education advisory forum. The Committee does not know much about it other than its name. We do not know who will be on it or what its role will be. Do you think that that would be preferable to having all these sectoral bodies? There is some weight to the argument that the sectoral bodies should not only exist, but that they should be provided for in statute. In addition to having the CCMS, integrated and Irish-medium sectoral bodies, we need the GBA — the grammar school sectoral body — represented, and also a body to represent the controlled sector. We could end up having more sectoral bodies than we have ever had.

Mr Bunting: We are baffled as to why we need sectoral support bodies in education in Northern Ireland when they are not needed in the Republic of Ireland, which has almost exactly the same system of education. The Catholic and Protestant Churches and the other interests in the Republic are content, yet in Northern Ireland there is a completely different interpretation as to how education administration should be supported. There is a major mismatch, and there must be an explanation for it.

The Department originally brought forward the proposal for an education advisory forum. That is why it is wrong of Michelle McIlveen to talk about our looking for more power. Technically speaking, we are not looking for more power. As a stakeholder, the teachers’ unions were to be represented in the education advisory forum.

All the other interests that are now being supplemented and artificially created as sectoral support bodies were supposed to be in the education advisory forum. That was supposed to be a strategic policy advisory group for the Department. That is such common sense that we supported it 100%. The Department has done a fair bit of work on it and there are papers available to the Committee, which would be helpful.

Mr McCausland: How would you select representation to that forum from the controlled sector?

Mr Bunting: That is one of the functions of the working group that the Department is proposing in paper 20. Paper 20 is exceptionally interesting. It shows the complexity of the controlled sector and how that needs to be brought forward. I will not second-guess the working group: it is for them to answer your question.

The Chairperson: You refer to “the complexity of the controlled sector”. What is meant by that phrase? The figures indicate that more than 90% of children who attend controlled-sector schools come from the Protestant community — what is complex about that?

Mr Bunting: There is nothing complex about that. I am just saying that there has been a growing body of controlled-sector schools over the past 10 or 15 years: for example, there are now Irish-medium schools in the controlled sector. Therefore, to answer Nelson’s question, a mechanism that represents 100% of children in the controlled sector needs to be found.

The Chairperson: Avril, Seamus, and Frank, thank you very much for your submission. You are welcome to stay and listen to the departmental representatives’ comments — or their rebuttal, as it has been referred to. I am sure that you had those in the past.

Mr Bunting: That is a very polite way of putting it.

[Laughter.]
The Chairperson (Mr Storey): Mr McGrath, thank you for your patience. We have the paper, and I want to raise one specific point. Members will have questions, and we will try to get to them as quickly as possible rather than go through the whole paper.

Mr John McGrath (Department of Education): Yes, that will be fine. I will make a couple of remarks, and Mr Stewart will refer to some of the issues that have been highlighted this morning rather than track through the papers.

It was an interesting discussion. From the Department’s, and the Minister’s, point of view, we welcome the chief executives’ support, on behalf of the boards, for creating a single system — one that recognises diversity and creates a regional authority that gives appropriate recognition and importance to children’s services, youth services and early-years services. It gives regional policy with local flexibility.

The system is based on accountable autonomy for schools — autonomy for schools to decide how they will attain standards and how they will secure services and training, which will be matched by accountability for those outcomes. The ESA will support and challenge schools. Essentially, it will be a model where, in the case of many schools, they move from being in a command-and-control system to a role where they are at the centre of the commission.

Some of the chief executives said that they had issues that needed to be clarified or that amendments needed to be made to the Bill. Legislation is difficult. The Chairperson described it as an onion: it is complex; people do not always get the right interpretation first time, and, perhaps, some mist surrounds the Bill. We may have helped to diffuse some of the mists of people’s interpretations in earlier weeks, and I am reasonably sure that we can dispel most of the mists surrounding the issues that our chief executive colleagues have just raised. I hope that we will be able to do some of that now and, if not, we will deal with them at the next session.

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education): I am conscious that the Committee is pressed for time, so I will keep my presentation quite short. There are three issues that I would like to cover; the others, as the Chairperson said, have been covered in the paper.

I hope that Members will forgive me for starting with two technical issues. Nevertheless, they are significant, and a clear explanation may help to avoid some of the misunderstandings that might otherwise be perpetuated.

In several of the boards’ submissions, and in the submissions from some of the other stakeholders, the view was expressed that the Bill does not cover pre-school education or nursery schools. In fact, it does. Clause 2(2)(a) includes pre-school education, but the references are to “educational services”.

That term is included specifically to cover pre-school education. As we discussed briefly last week, it is intentionally broad because that is necessary to reflect the diversity and the evolving nature of early-years services. It is simply incorrect to say that the Bill does not cover pre-school education.

Gordon Topping answered his own query about whether nursery schools are included. The definition of nursery schools falls within the definition of primary schools. The definition of primary schools is in the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 rather than in the Education Bill. As we discussed previously, those pieces of legislation must be read and construed together, as outlined in clause 52 of the Education Bill.

I will now discuss an even more dry and technical issue. There has been considerable debate and comment about the construction of clause 2 and whether to combine youth services and early-years provision, which are currently separate. They are covered by separate provisions because it would be extremely difficult to convey those services in a single provision
I will now move to the more substantive policy issue. The employment arrangements in the Bill featured significantly in this morning’s discussions and in previous Committee meetings, and it is the issue that stakeholders raise most frequently. I will begin with a brief recap of the intention of the employment arrangements.

In essence, the arrangements are the CCMS model applied to all schools. Different models could have been chosen. The GBA and, more recently, the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education argued that all 1,251 schools should be separate employers. The argument that the Committee heard this morning supported the concept of a single employer with a limited role for boards of governors — in effect, every school a controlled school. Those two options might have been chosen. However, the Minister chose to apply a third model — the CCMS model — to all schools.

In practice, all staff in all grant-aided schools will be employed by the ESA. The ESA is the employer in education law and in employment law, and contracts of employment will be between the ESA and members of staff. Boards of governors will have a strong autonomous role and will discharge employment functions on behalf of the ESA, which is the employer. In essence, it is a delegated model. Boards of governors will make decisions on employment matters and, in doing so, will discharge functions that are delegated to them by the ESA.

Schemes of employment will outline the delegation arrangements and the detailed role of boards of governors, as covered by clauses 3 to 12. The Department recognises that various stakeholders and the Committee have outlined — particularly in recent weeks — the need for greater clarity and certainty on the detail of the arrangements and the content of the employment schemes. The Department has heeded that message.

Until now, the intention has been that the ESA would provide guidance on the required detail. However, given the concerns that have been expressed, the Minister is prepared to consider the need for subordinate legislation rather than guidance to govern the content of employment schemes. Therefore the Bill could be amended to include a provision for the Department to make regulations on schemes of employment. Such regulations could be made subject to Assembly control and most certainly would be subject to scrutiny by the Committee.

The enabling provision that could be introduced to the Bill could state that the regulations might, among other things, specify the matters that must be included in schemes of employment and the form in which such schemes must be drawn up. Moreover, it might specify the functions that must be carried out by boards of governors, other functions that must be carried out by the ESA, or functions that could be carried out by one or the other depending on what is decided by the schools and written into the schemes.

A further provision could be included — it is related to the other concern that the Committee raised — that would permit a board of governors to make a complaint to the Department if it believed that the ESA had acted in breach of, or in some way contrary to, the scheme of employment. If the Department were satisfied that a breach had occurred, it could use its power of direction under article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 to remedy the matter.

It is our view that, taken together, those measures — if they were to be taken forward — would provide the clarity and the certainty that boards of governors, other stakeholders and Committee members are looking for. However, the Minister would welcome the view of the Committee as to whether that would be a satisfactory response to the concerns that have been raised.

There is a great deal more that I could say, but I will stop now for members’ questions.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Chris. That is obviously something that we wanted to talk about. We would like to see, at an early stage, what form the subordinate legislation would take. You gave us an idea of the likely content of that enabling provision in your written submission.

Mr C Stewart: Possibly part of it; it would not necessarily be limited to that provision. The written submission comprises our initial thoughts about the bones of the regulations, but other issues that would have to be addressed in order to provide clarity could also be included.

The Chairperson: The issue has come to us now, and we will have to take a view on whether it is enough to satisfy the concerns that have been raised.

Mr McCausland: My questions were on matters that carried over from last week’s meeting.
The Chairperson: We will deal with them now.

Mr McCausland: Last week, I asked for information on how to ensure that governors in the sector are sympathetic to the Catholic ethos. How long will it be before we can get an answer to that question?

Mr C Stewart: I apologise for not providing you with all the information for which you asked. I understand that we have sent you some of the figures that you were looking for; perhaps they have not yet reached you. I will endeavour to provide that before next week.

Mr McCausland: We will be on holiday next week.

The Chairperson: Was that information sent to the Committee or to Nelson?

Mr C Stewart: I will have to check that.

Ms Eve Stewart (Department of Education): It was sent to the Committee Clerk.

The Chairperson: We have not seen that yet.

Mr McCausland: Michelle wanted to ask about a paper. It is about the Catholic ethos, and another paper.

Ms E Stewart: Was her question about the ethos paper? A question was asked last week about ethos and whether any work had begun on the ethos paper?

Mr McCausland: We will be on holiday next week.

Mr C Stewart: That work is in hand; we are not in a position to bring a paper back to the Committee just yet. We will endeavour to do so as soon as we can.

Mr B McCrea: In your remarks on clause 8 in your written submission you seem to be pretty sure that boards of governors will not be allowed to deviate from anything. Chris asked whether the Committee would be satisfied with what was put forward. I suppose that we are driven by what other people think, but there is a deep concern about the reinforcing of the point that control of the contract of employment is control over everything else. I am not sure that we will resolve that issue. Everything I see reinforces the notion that the situation is as you described — that the ESA is responsible, and that is that.

Mr C Stewart: I would not put it quite like that. You have heard contrasting views from stakeholders in recent weeks. The GBA would certainly say — and the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education is coming closer to the same view — that the ESA will have too much power and control, and because the ESA will be the employer, boards of governors will have no autonomous role. There is a sense today from the education and library boards that they hold the opposite view — that we have gone too far and have allowed too much autonomy and leeway for boards of governors to do their own thing, and that there is insufficient control for the poor unfortunate employing authority, which has to pick up the tab if something goes wrong.

Mr B McCrea: You said that it was interesting that different folk could draw different conclusions from the same piece of legislation; I drew a different conclusion from what the boards' representatives were saying. I thought that they were saying that there was a lack of clarity; that there was a statement in support of maximum devolved autonomy, but that they were actually getting a more centralised response.

I took them to be calling for a decision one way or the other, so that the appropriate arrangements could then be made. I think that the nub of the issue is that people hear the Department stating that, rest assured, it is not its intention to do this, that or the other, but when they read what is written down, the legal interpretation from some quarters is something different. I reiterate that I think that is the nub of the problem. Obviously, one can extend the employment issue to all the other issues, including educational psychologists etc, as Gordon Topping did. However, is the Department aiming for a deregulated oversight model, or is it more of a fudge; we describe it as a balance. There is a single employing authority and there is a single employer. There is one organisation that will hold the contracts of staff, but in a delegated model decisions will be made by boards of governors in the name of and on behalf of the ESA.

In our view, notwithstanding the concerns that we acknowledge about the need for more detail and clarity, the crux of those arrangements is a balanced model, in which there is a single employer, but which involves the delegation of a very strong autonomous role to boards of governors. It is, in essence, the CCMS model, which, in recent weeks, members have heard described as working very effectively in the maintained sector, and as involving a light-touch intervention where necessary. Those are positive features that we wish to see as part of the new model.

The Department does not want any more than the GBA would want; it does not want a heavy-handed interventionist approach from the ESA. Equally, it does not want a laissez-faire approach, which would leave boards of governors, in particular, feeling unsupported and unassisted in discharging the significant responsibilities that they are given. We are looking for balance, and the closest current model to that is most definitely the CCMS approach.

Mr B McCrea: You said that it was interesting that different folk could draw different conclusions from the same piece of legislation; I drew a different conclusion from what the boards' representatives were saying. I thought that they were saying that there was a lack of clarity; that there was a statement in support of maximum devolved autonomy, but that they were actually getting a more centralised response.

I took them to be calling for a decision one way or the other, so that the appropriate arrangements could then be made. I think that the nub of the issue is that people hear the Department stating that, rest assured, it is not its intention to do this, that or the other, but when they read what is written down, the legal interpretation from some quarters is something different. I reiterate that I think that is the nub of the problem. Obviously, one can extend the employment issue to all the other issues, including educational psychologists etc, as Gordon Topping did. However, is the Department aiming for a deregulated oversight model, or is its view that that is too much of a burden for many people to carry and that it must be done centrally?

Mr C Stewart: The aim is very much to establish a deregulated oversight model, but there is a more general point to be made in that it is possible to put a great deal of detail in primary legislation — much more than the Department has done. That, in fact, has been the approach in education over the last 35 years, which is why there is approximately three times the volume of primary legislation on education than there is on health. If you add up the 11 Orders, there are 674 articles and 60 schedules. If those regulations were to sit on one’s desk, they would make a pile about six inches high. One may regard that as a good thing or a bad thing; there are different ways in which it can be done.

One of the consequences of that is that every time something needs to be changed, you go back to the primary legislation. In taking forward the review of public administration (RPA), the Department’s policy was to put as little detail as possible in the primary legislation. We recognise that the particular issue under discussion has given rise to very significant concerns on the part of stakeholders and the Committee, and that there may be a need to shift the balance and put more detail into primary and subordinate legislation.

Mr McGrath: The detail would explain the model; it would not change it. Chris made the point that, a couple of weeks ago, the CCMS representatives pointed us to the model that they use — an employing authority with a light touch. That demonstrates that a balance can be struck, and that it can work. That is the issue that people have to understand; once all the detail is determined, it will explain the model. People have to recognise that it can — and does — work.

It is a sensitive issue, and there is a spectrum, but we are trying to strike a balance by setting up a single system. We see a single employing authority at a strategic level as being the cement around that system, as opposed to having five different systems. There will be maximum delegation to schools, and, on the other side, schools will do their best to meet and drive up standards and will be held to account for that. That is analagical with the way in which the CCMS has worked, and with the improvements in the Catholic maintained sector over the past number of years.

Mr Lunn: We had a discussion about the inspectorate not being independent. Are you aware of any particular reason for that being the case in the first place?

Mr McGrath: I cannot go back into the mists of time. However, you rightly asked what was broken that needed to be fixed? There is no evidence. I hesitate to speak for the current inspectorate or for previous inspectorates, but I think that they would take a dim view if they thought that there was an implication that there had been any constraint on the independence with which they did their work.

Clearly, there is separation. However, the concept of having professional advisers whose role it is to give independent advice but who work as part of a Government Department is used across the system. Nationally, the Chief Medical Officer is responsible for advising the Government on the state of public health, but he is also part of the Department of Health. The Chief Medical Officer has the same role in our Health Department. It is a sophisticated model, and we have no difficulty with how the inspectorate operates at the minute. We would be wary of suggesting that another body should be set up simply to solve a problem that when there is no evidence that it existed in the first place.

Mr C Stewart: John and I worked in the health field for many years, and we never felt that any of our chief professional colleagues were in any way impeded from telling us when they thought we got things wrong.

The Chairperson: I will return to an issue that we still have not had any feedback from you on. The Minister is considering amending the Bill so that the owners of schools would be the submitting authority. We still do not know what the ownership body of the controlled sector will be. Has any thought been given to retaining an element of the existing education and library boards so that they would become the submitting authority? In that way, inequality would not arise as a result of some trustees being treated separately from schools in the controlled sector, which would be subject to public appointments procedure and to section 75 requirements. Basically, it would be a non-departmental public body.

Mr C Stewart: I have certainly made the Minister aware of that suggestion. However, she has not yet responded formally. We recognise that that would be a very significant policy change. I am sure that the Minister would welcome a formal view from the Committee on that before coming to a conclusion.

Mr McGrath: I think that it appears that it would makes things very untidy.

The Chairperson: More untidy than they currently are?

Mr McGrath: Certainly, given where we are trying to get to.

The Chairperson: Do you accept that we are currently not in a very good position?

Mr McGrath: I think that there is a general view around the table that we would not have chosen to start to devise an education system from this position. However, in trying to move forward and modernise, I think that retaining aspects of the old model for particular consideration is not the way to deal with some of the issues. Granted, there is an issue around ownership bodies and the submitting authority. That may be best dealt with in the context of creating a controlled state body.

The Chairperson: In January, the Committee sent a letter to the Department containing a list of issues around which members still had concerns and on which information was required. In March, we updated that list, and another letter was sent. Can we expect a response to that letter after the Easter recess?

Mr C Stewart: Yes.

The Chairperson: Many of the issues that were raised this morning are contained and summarised in that letter, therefore, it would be very helpful to get some response.

Chris, John and Eve, thank you very much. Do not eat too many Easter eggs over the break.
The Committee received a response to the Bill from the boards. I will present the background issues and an overview, and my colleagues will provide some detail on the specific strategic issues that the Bill raises.

Since the announcement of the decisions associated with the review of public administration in November 2005, we have supported the proposed changes and worked co-operatively. Today, for example, part of our organisation has been hived off and is now part of the new Northern Ireland Library Authority. We assisted with that process and in the creation of the education and skills authority (ESA). We made proposals on how the ESA might be progressed and provided advice through various groups. Ultimately, all the changes must be to the benefit of the children and young people whom we serve.

Our support for a regional education authority was based on the need to create an all-inclusive authority that manages an education service, is cohesive rather than fragmented, and has the legal basis to ensure that it can manage the authority effectively — that means a regional service that is locally delivered. After all, the many different areas of Northern Ireland have different needs: inner-city Belfast, for example, has different needs from rural Fermanagh. We contend that services must be tailored to meet those disparate needs and that a regional service should be locally delivered.

Generally, children are at school for between six and seven hours a day for approximately 37 weeks each year. Over recent years, we have dramatically improved the outcomes for young people, but we recognise that many external factors affect schools’ performance. We must further improve educational outcomes, and that requires intervention not only in schools but on other issues. That leads us to the conclusion that a children’s services function must be developed.

Since we established our position, the political situation has moved on. For the Second Stage of the Bill, the Assembly has now committed to the principles enshrined in the Bill. Nevertheless, any new authority should be all-inclusive and incorporate all sectors; it should have the legal basis to manage the service effectively, have a children’s services function, and have a local dimension to facilitate the local delivery of a regional service.

Unfortunately, we see little or no mention of those issues in the Bill. Although it is important to get on with making changes — after all, four years have passed since the announcement was made in 2005 — it is also important to get them right. Clause 2(1), “Functions and general duty of ESA” states that the ESA has a duty:

“to promote, and co-ordinate the planning of, the effective provision of schools”.

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): Gentlemen, you are most welcome to the Committee for Education; I am delighted that you are here. Gordon, I will hand over to you to make a presentation, after which members will ask questions.

Mr Gordon Topping OBE (North Eastern Education and Library Board): Thank you for that welcome. We are delighted to join the Committee this morning to express our views on the Education Bill. I am sure that the date has nothing to do with your calling us today.

The Chairperson: No, but it does have something to do with the departmental officials who will follow you.

Mr Topping: I assure you that everything that we have to say is serious.
However, it will have no responsibility for overall planning, and we see little difference between what is proposed and the present flawed system.

The legislation is complex and technical, and it requires the reader to know and understand previous legislation. The Bill is a once-in-a-life-time opportunity to create Northern Ireland legislation for a Northern Ireland service, to consolidate education legislation, as was done in 1986, and simplify it. Unfortunately, that chance appears to have been missed.

Following that short introduction, I ask my colleagues to comment on specific issues in the Bill. Mr Cargo will lead on employment issues.

Mr David Cargo (Belfast Education and Library Board): Thank you, and good morning.

As our statement to the Committee makes clear, a single employer follows logically from a single authority. However, some clauses give us cause for concern.

The Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 created the concept of the employer and the employing authority; that has caused many problems in the system over the past 20 years, and we hoped that the Bill would clarify them. However, the Bill seems to perpetuate the confusion. The ESA is to be “the employing authority”, but clause 3(1) implies employer status. The former perpetuates the current problems; the latter simplifies the situation and, in effect, makes boards of governors subcommittees of the ESA under its control. There needs to be clarity on this issue and on contracts of employment and the liability associated with them.

Equality is at the heart of the Minister’s agenda, yet when dealing with the transfer of staff into the ESA, that principle appears to have been set aside. Staff are to be treated differently; civil servants are given preferential treatment over board staff and teachers are treated differently from other staff in schools. That needs to be resolved before the ESA is established.

Furthermore, the ESA implementation team (ESAIT) appears to have given little thought to how to minimize inequality of treatment once the ESA has been established. We are also unclear about how the qualifications that the Catholic sector requires of its teachers can be accommodated in a single organisation without giving rise to inequalities of treatment for teachers in the controlled sector. We welcome clause 11(5), which removes staffing costs from school budgets. We have long highlighted that as one of the main reasons for surpluses and deficits in the system. At present, budget management is too closely aligned to the age of teaching staff.

Finally, we are concerned at the proposals in clause 11 for voluntary grammar schools to pay staff. If one of the key drivers for the ESA is to achieve economies of scale in service delivery and thereby reduce costs, it is foolhardy and inefficient to consider such proposals to be enshrined in legislation.

Mr Topping: We leave the employment issue and move to the role of the ESA in providing training and advisory services.

Mr Stanton Sloan (South Eastern Education and Library Board): I would like to address clause 13:

“ESA to provide or secure provision and advisory and support services for schools” and, to a lesser extent, clause 19. Clause 13 covers all staff in schools, teaching and non-teaching. Ordinarily, that would mean the Curriculum Advisory and Support Service (CASS); however, boards provide a range of other support and advisory services to schools: education welfare, educational psychology, services for child protection, peripatetic services, services of local management of schools officers who work with schools and help them with budgets and human resources and others. All those services are funded centrally but are provided directly to schools, so more than 90% of boards’ budgets go directly into schools; some 60% is delegated and 30% goes to services.

The class is seen by many as the mainstay, particularly because of its role in raising standards. Gordon referred in his introductory remarks to the need to raise the standards of achievement of young people all over the Province. For that reason, it is vital that there be a properly established and properly resourced support service that must be delivered locally — albeit managed regionally.

It would have certain statutory powers, which, we believe, are missing at the moment. I want to highlight three main points. First, clause 13 deals with providing or securing the provision of training. There is a concern that that will lead to the commissioning of services; services would no longer be centrally funded. A regional policy is necessary for regional initiatives such as literacy and numeracy, for example. Will there be a regional service or will the ESA simply commission services from private individuals or private bodies? We need clarification on that.

Secondly, clause 19 confers on the ESA the power to undertake commercial activities, and we would like clarity on whether that could be extended to schools. I am aware that, in certain areas in England, money that was held centrally was given to schools to purchase their own services or buy in services. In many cases in England, that was overturned because it was unsuccessful.

In Northern Ireland, and in my own board in particular where I have talked to principals — especially of small schools — the money that they get would not enable them to partake of the range of support services or training that they need. There is potential for misinterpretation and charging.

Thirdly, underachievement is something that engages us all. At the moment, the board, through its Curriculum, Advisory and Support Service and, indeed, through other services, has no statutory right to intervene in a school. We strongly believe that there should be a statutory basis for intervention when underachievement is identified in the school, either at individual teacher level, whole school level, or leadership level. Those are three key issues for the support services.

Mr Topping: We move on from the support function of the ESA to the Youth Service, with which Barry Mulholland will deal.

Mr Barry Mulholland (Western Education and Library Board): I want to raise two issues: the first may be considered a matter of semantics; the second is another opportunity lost. The first is youth services. Clauses 2 set out firmly that youth services are part of education, and that is welcomed by all those in the education and library boards and youth services. However, the fact that youth services are not incorporated in clause 2(2)(a), when clause (2)(2)(c) states:

“To promote, and co-ordinate the planning of, the effective provision of schools, educational services and youth services;”

is causing the Youth Service some concern. It believes, and we believe, that the Youth Service is set firmly in education of which it is an integral part. Rather than separate it out into clause 2(2)(b), youth services should be incorporated into clause 2(2)(a). That would firmly set youth services in the educational context.

Secondly, there is the opportunity lost. Clause 37 sets out clearly the powers of the Department to carry out inspections of educational establishments. The Education and Training Inspectorate perceives itself to be independent. However, the Bill could have legislated for the independence of the inspectorate because there is a potential conflict of interest as the inspectorate would be involved in the setting of policy and also in monitoring, inspecting, reviewing and reporting on that policy. An opportunity has been lost to establish in law the independence of the inspectorate in Northern Ireland.

Mr Topping: Finally, we move to clauses 30 to 36, which deal with schemes and management for grant-aided schools, and Gregory Butler from the Southern Education and Library Board will deal with that issue.

Mr Gregory Butler (South Eastern Education and Library Board): I will cover three main issues. The first relates to the timing and the establishment of schemes of management. There is an area of possible confusion when boards of governors, after 1 January 2010, operate under the existing scheme. To avoid that, we request that model schemes of management be in place at that date.

Clause 34 deals with proposals to place duties on boards of governors in relation to achievement of high standards of educational attainment. That is a significant change. Paragraph 7.2 of “Every School a Good School” states:

“Governors have a particularly important role to play by supporting and encouraging staff while at the same time taking on the role of a critical friend and encouraging the school in its quest for continuous improvement.”

It is important that that responsibility be set out clearly in a scheme of management.

The third area relates to community governors, which is in clause 35. Community governors are defined as persons living or working in the local community. Our concern is that that could be described as being suitably vague — or just vague. That description is an issue. There is also no indication about how governors are appointed, and that is a concern.

Mr Topping: Those are the major issues that the Bill throws up for us. There are many other technical issues; for example, unless one reads the previous legislation and ties it together with the current legislation, it is very difficult to interpret exactly what is intended. Another issue is that the Bill is, in many places, enabling legislation: it enables things to happen. However, it is difficult for us to interpret the minds of the authors regarding what they intend to happen following the approval of the Bill.

We have tried to portray in our presentation that, first, we support the creation of a regional authority. Secondly, we have listed our areas of concern in the Bill, including the single employing authority, the support and role of the ESA, youth services, and, finally, governance of the service.

Thank you for listening to our presentation.

The Chairperson: It is right and proper to pay tribute to the boards. One of the chief executives, Mrs McClanaghan, cannot be with us today because she retired yesterday. Gregory Butler is here today to represent the Southern Education and Library Board, but we wish Mrs McClanaghan the very best in her retirement.

It is also right and proper that we place on record our appreciation of the huge amount of work that the boards have done. As MLAs, we have all had the opportunity to interact with you, to challenge you, and to have various exchanges with you over the years. However, you have carried a huge responsibility, and it would be remiss of me, as the Chairperson of the Committee for Education, not to place on record our appreciation and thanks.
We welcome this opportunity to discuss the fundamental sea change in the governance arrangements of education for Northern Ireland; they will have huge implications for many years to come.

We will try to work within the remit that you have given us. In your presentations, you dealt specifically with the functions and general duty of the single employing authority. We will work our way through those issues so that we do not go from Dan to Beersheba, which is, at times, how we operate. However, that should in no way preclude any member from raising any issue.

There may be a typing error under “functions and general duty” because it says section 2, whereas it should be clause 2(1). In your submission, you said that there is a danger that the nature of the statutory function ascribed to the ESA will limit its ability to deliver effective service. How do you see that being rolled out in practice if and when the ESA comes into existence?

Mr Topping: Thank you for your kind words about our work over the past 36 years; we very much appreciate them, and we will convey them to our staff and members.

One of our reasons for supporting a regional educational authority was that we know some of the problems that we faced in managing the service over the past 36 years. One of the major problems that we faced was planning — the planning of school provision in particular — the rationalisation of schools, supporting schools through resourcing them, or ensuring that new schools were built in the right place at the right time. We recognised all those problems.

When the proposal was made, we said that the new authority should have a clearly defined role in statute that would allow it to plan for school provision. Clause 2 states that ESA will “co-ordinate”. That is our role, and we know the problems that we face in co-ordinating with various other sectors that have responsibility for schools provision. It is very difficult.

We would like to see the responsibility laid on the ESA to plan effectively for the service in an all-inclusive authority. Schedule 7 proposes an amendment to article 14 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, which reiterates the co-ordinating role of the ESA rather than its responsibility to ensure that the schools estate is planned effectively. That is one of the issues that we wish to highlight.

The Chairperson: Would changing that not merely reduce the number of education and library boards without radically changing the function of an organisation to deliver the intended aim: raising standards?

Mr Topping: That is a good question. There is a danger that all the Bill will do is get rid of five boards and one or two other bodies. Reading between the lines, and taking into account some of the discussions that we have had, leads us to conclude that the intention is not to get rid of five boards and a few other bodies but to reform the service radically in order to create efficiencies and to put school improvement as the key element on the agenda.

We support that; however, we have reservations about how it might be achieved and the legal basis underpinning it. We welcome the ESA’s intervention role; but, as one of my colleagues said, we feel that that intervention should be strengthened by legislation.

The Chairperson: David Cargo made what I thought was a worrying comment to the effect that the ESA makes the board of governors one of its sub-committees.

We are told that boards of governors will have control and new responsibilities, and Mr Butler mentioned the reconstitution of board of governors, but how do boards of governors feel about being sub-committees of a very centralised, bureaucratic organisation that holds all the control and power?

Mr Cargo: We have tried to highlight the fudge at the heart of the Bill. When we were first engaged in discussions on the Bill, there was a possibility that each of the boards would speak to its own vested interests and say that it is important that it stayed in Belfast, Ballymena, Armagh or wherever.

We chose not to do that, and we engaged fully with the Department and the then Minister. We asked them to build something better than we had, which had the potential to become fragmented. There has been a fudge in the education system between, apparently, giving boards of governors more power — leading to fragmentation of the system — or centralising the service around the Minister and the Department, which would lead to greater coherence.

We were looking for clarity in the Bill about the direction in which we were heading, but we believe that the Bill has ducked the core issue. Certain consequences flow from being an employer that must be clearly identified in the Bill. There is potential for those to be included in the Bill, but the heading of the clauses relating to employment and the ESA refers to it as an “employing authority”. That has been part of the problem over the past 20 years in our dealings with boards of governors on employment issues. Boards of governors often claim that they are the employer and that the education and library board is only the employing authority; however, we have never been able to get legal clarity about the difference, and we were looking forward to that being provided by the Bill.

If the ESA is to be the single authority, it would be the employer, and boards of governors would become its sub-committees; however, if that is not the direction... in which the Committee or the Minister want to go, the Bill must make it clear whether alternative arrangements are available. At present, the Bill is neither one nor the other, and it replicates the difficult situation in which education and library boards have to fund legal cases — when they are settled — on behalf of the maintained sector. However, we have no role in trying to moderate or to play an intervening role in ensuring that best practice is followed. That is no criticism of the CCMS; it is a reality of the present fudged system.

For the first time in a generation, we have a Northern Ireland Bill for Northern Ireland’s system rather than a pick-and-mix Bill from England that we would have to adapt. We hoped that the Bill would have clarified those issues and provided clear policy directions.

The Chairperson: Woolworth’s has closed down, so we thought we had done away with the days of pick-and-mix; perhaps that is not the case.

From what Mr Cargo said, even with the system that we have had for 36 years, there has been no real clarity about employers and employing authorities. It seems that we are heading into the abyss. The Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education and the GBA say that they want to be employers. Mr Cargo talked about the ESA being the single employing authority and expressed the concerns of education and library boards about how it would operate under the draft legislation.

The Committee should take legal advice on the employers’ status vis-à-vis the ESA and boards of governors, because the more we delve into this and ask questions, the more confused I become. I just do not know sometimes where it is all going, and there seems to be no clarity. The issues are shrouded in mist.

The education and library boards have had to administer all that for the past 36 years, and all we would be doing is transferring that responsibility to Gavin Boyd and the ESA. If, however, that arrangement were to be challenged, we would have a problem. Then we would see who would pick up the legal fees and the fall-out as a result. Is that a fair comment?

Mr Topping: We are saying two things. First, if we are to have a regional education authority, it makes sense to have a regional employing authority or a regional employer. That is logical. If we do that, however, we must have clarity about the relationship between that authority and the boards of governors on employment terms.

The Chairperson: I will now open the discussion to members. There is so much that we have to cover, and I want to give as much time to this important issue as possible.

Mr Elliott: Thank you very much, gentlemen. The Chairperson is right that there is so much to go through. David raised the issue surrounding the employment authority, and that is not the first time that that point has been raised with the Committee. Indeed, as has been said, it seems to be getting even more confusing.

The Chairperson’s expression of thanks for all the work that the boards have done over the years sounded almost like a swansong. I do not want it to sound as though this is the last time that we will hear from the boards or lobby them.

The Chairperson: No; it will not be the last time that we write to them.

Mr Elliott: There is clearly a lot of work to be done before the ESA comes in, if, indeed, it ever does; I put down that marker, given the way things are going and what the Committee has heard. How are the boards going at the moment? I understand, from talking to staff, that boards have some concerns about their future. The boards thought that they were planning to move on fairly soon, but that has not happened.

Gordon, you said that you find it difficult to interpret what is in the minds of the authors of the Bill. The authors of the Bill sit at the end of this table every week, and we cannot interpret what is in their minds either. It would be much easier if we could, but we cannot. Those people are sitting behind you, and we will hear from them later.

Let me be blunt; we keep being told that it is not the Bill’s intention to do this or it is the Bill’s intention to do that. However, legal people tell us that we can deal only with what we see in front of us — if something is in the Bill, it is in the Bill; if it is not, it is not. The difficulty is that we cannot go on impressions or what we believe the situation should be.

I do not know whether you can help me on this, but one point that has not been touched on is the huge financial savings that we are told will be generated by the move from five boards to the ESA. I am concerned that some autonomy will be lost. No disrespect to David or Gordon, but it is often rural communities — and the Southern Board and, particularly, the Western Board — that lose out when things are moved to one central body. Do you think that real savings will be made, and, if so, where do you see them being made; in administration, perhaps?

Has there been any discussion of how the transfer of staff from the boards to the ESA will evolve?

Mr Topping: Mr Elliott has asked three questions. Each situation is different, so would you like us to give a brief round-robin update of the state of play in each of the boards?

The Chairperson: Yes, but I would like something to be clarified before we move on. Gordon, am I right in saying that the existing boards could not be reconstituted if the ESA is not introduced as of 1 January 2010? The life of the boards has already been extended by six months, and departmental officials have told the Committee that the intention is that the ESA will come into effect on 1 January 2010 but that it may be 1 April 2010. There may be legal issues around that.

Mr Topping: We have asked that question, but we have not been given a specific answer. I know that my chairman asked that question of the Minister at the last meeting of the chairs of the boards.

The Chairperson: We could perhaps ask the Department that question.

Mr Topping: You might want to do that. However, you are right that the life of the boards has been extended by six months until the end of December.

Would you like us to start that quick round-robin update?

The Chairperson: Yes, that would be very helpful.

Mr Mulholland: We are working in a very challenging environment, but I would not describe it as a crisis; our service delivery is nowhere near crisis level. The main difficulty that the Western Board is experiencing relates to the vacancy-control policy and the fact that it has been operating since late 2006. We are bringing in arrangements to replace staff who are moving out of the service with new temporary staff or staff who are acting up. The staff have responded extremely well, and we continue to deliver our services at the highest level possible.

One of the concerns for staff in the west is the Belfast-centric nature of jobs that are being advertised in the ESAIT. Up until yesterday, all the ESAIT jobs were based in Belfast. The ESAIT has tried to arrange for staff to work remotely for one day a week or so, but that still requires post holders from the west to spend an hour and a half travelling to and from Belfast in order to get to work. That leaves them feeling disadvantaged and that they are unable to apply for jobs in ESAIT, the organisation that is starting to form the new ESA, which will, therefore, leave them disadvantaged in the future. However, Western Board staff are certainly rising to the challenge, and they are continuing to deliver services.

Mr Sloan: Chairperson, you commended us for the work that we have done. I am sure that my colleagues will want to join me in commending our staff for the outstanding work that they have done in extremely challenging and difficult circumstances.

However, the South Eastern Board would present a slightly different picture, because we are close not only to the ESAIT’s headquarters, but also to those of NILA. NILA has its own administrative staff, and, from today, is a free-standing authority.

The South Eastern Board is still rising to the challenge, but I must tell the Committee that there is a human cost. Fewer people are doing more work, and I see what that costs. Staff are doing that work well and they step up to the mark day after day, but I fear that, in years to come, we will all be held to account for the human cost.

Vacancy control is a major factor. We can, of course, replace staff, but we cannot replace their skills. When staff go, we bring in agency or temporary staff who require two, three or four months of training, particularly in areas such as finance and human resources. That presents a challenge, and that is when other staff step up to the mark. However, our board has lost something — more than 40% of our staff are now on temporary contracts of one form or another. Some are agency staff, while others are acting up to higher posts — sometimes they act up, and then move up again and again.

That is also an issue because if people are acting up to two or three levels above their current grade, I understand that, under The Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 (TUPE), when they move to the ESA they will revert to their substantive grade. That touches on another question that Mr Elliott asked. Some of those staff have been doing jobs two grades up for the past two or three years, and they have clearly developed expertise. They are moving out of the education sector because they have worked at that higher level and are attracted to substantive posts in some other authority.

There are challenges, but, like Barry said, we are not in crisis. However, I am concerned about the well-being of staff.

Mr Topping: Gregory will describe the situation in the Southern Board.

Mr G Butler: Not unsurprisingly, our situation is quite similar to the situation in the west. A vacancy-control policy is in place and has had an impact, but because many of the jobs are based in Belfast or the greater Belfast area, we have not experienced the same loss of staff as the South Eastern Board or the Belfast Board. Therefore, the impact of vacancy control is a particular issue.

Our board is also in the fortunate position of being in an area that has a rising population, and it will continue to rise considerably over the next few years. That means that our budget is very good, which affords us some flexibility that other boards may not have because the populations that they serve are declining.

For senior staff in the board such as myself, travelling is not an issue, but it is an issue for administrative staff whose families live in the area and who would have difficulty meeting the cost of any move. Therefore, travel and the future location of jobs are particular concerns for staff in our board. As it develops, the ESA must ensure that those people who have given very good service for the past 20 or 30 years are not disadvantaged by the relocation of jobs away from their area.

There is a positive aspect in that our board is operating very well at present. We have a number of acting-up posts, but the overall position is very good. However, there is a major concern about the long-term position, and, from a morale point of view, that is sometimes a very difficult issue.

I thank the Chairperson for his comments about Helen McClennaghan. I will pass them on to her when I see her next week. We bid her farewell yesterday. She did a lot in the board, but she has left a very solid ship, and Tony Murphy will take that forward and we will continue to progress.

Mr Cargo: Belfast is, I suppose, used to providing services in challenging circumstances. We did it for 30 years during a period of quite difficult conflict in the city. In more recent years, we have had our challenges, and we have continued to meet them. So, the services continue to run. There is no service diminution.

I echo my colleagues’ comments about vacancy control, and I will highlight two issues. Very often those caught in the vacancy-control arrangements are young staff who are, perhaps, starting out on careers and attempting, in even the current difficult circumstances, to get rented property or to get on the mortgage ladder. However, because they are temporary — albeit temporary in permanent positions, because we do not see those posts going anywhere, even under the ESA — they are unable to access some of those services, and that is a particular difficulty for young people in the current situation.

The second issue is certainly a concern for us in Belfast. We have just transferred 1,000 staff among the five boards to NILA. We know the amount of work that that has required, which is in addition to everyone’s duties. We have 50,000 staff to transfer to the ESA in a very short time. With the volume of work associated with that, I think that it will be extremely challenging to continue to run the existing high-quality services and provide for the transfer of assets, staff and everything else to a new organisation in a very short period of time.

Mr Topping: From our point of view, there are two issues. The first is that uncertainty creates morale issues, and, unfortunately, for three years now there has been uncertainty. So, our message would be: it is important to get it right, but it is important to create certainty in the system. Secondly, like the other boards, 30% of our staff are in temporary positions. That is not sustainable in the longer term.

If I may pick up on the other two questions. First, an outline business case, which the Committee has probably seen, demonstrates savings of, I believe, £20 million in the third year. We have no reason to dispute those figures. It is obvious that, when organisations are brought together, the number of people managing that service will be automatically reduced. For example, if there are five of us and only one is needed in the longer term, there are obvious savings.

However, I would guess that the main savings will be made after the creation of the ESA, because, at that stage, services will be reorganised, and, again, that will bring management savings. That creates all kinds of challenging issues that need to be addressed and managed. However, we would certainly concur that there will be financial savings because of the way in which the system moves.

With regard to staff transfer, if the ESA is formed and created in exactly the same way as the Library Authority, I would have to say that, up to this point, that was done very smoothly, and staff were very satisfied about the way in which they were consulted and dealt with. However, the ESA throws up issues that the Library Authority perhaps does not.

Gregory mentioned the major issue, which is location. One must remember that 70% of our staff are women, so there is a gender issue in all of this. They are working where they are working because their families are close by. I think that centralising services, as distinct from regionalising them, will cause some problems, and will, I would guess, require significant discussion and negotiation with staff.

Those are the types of issues that Mr Elliott’s questions throw up.

Mr Cargo: I would like to reinforce the issue that we highlighted in the initial presentation, which concerns equality. Because of section 75, we are in a different situation as regards how staff are transferred than we perhaps would have been in the past. We are concerned that, because certain processes were used in the past for certain types of staff — for example, civil servants who were seconded into a new organisation — people will say that that should continue because that is the way it has always been done. If we are moving to create a new organisation, every member of staff needs to be placed on the same footing.

There is a precedent within the education and library boards. In 1997, we transferred staff to further education, where there was a number of posts in our central headquarters. We could have operated a secondment arrangement because the board was not going away. We trawled those jobs in advance so that people were defined as transferring on a particular date to the new organisation. We would emphasise that it is important that no group of staff anywhere feels either advantaged or disadvantaged by the arrangements. We fear that, at the moment, that approach is not being taken. Therefore, the sound basis of equality for staff transfer will be diminished.

Mr Topping: The recruitment, retention and voluntary severance (RRVS) paper, which is currently out for consultation, is pertinent to the discussion. I am sure that you are aware of it. Staff are very concerned about that, mainly because of the reasons that David has outlined and also because the criteria that are being used in that paper to allow staff to apply for jobs in the second tier, and probably the third tier, are such that they exclude staff from applying, rather than include them. We have made the case that any recruitment procedure should be inclusive, rather than exclusive.

The Chairperson: We will ask the departmental officials to comment on that when they appear before the Committee later.

Mr Elliott: Savings from middle management are estimated at 25%. Is that reasonable and practical in real terms, especially considering the inflation costs of wages? That will probably mean a reduction in staff of around a third.

Mr Topping: I do not think that we can answer that, because it depends on how the organisation takes forward its structure.

Mr Cargo: As Stanton pointed out at the beginning, although the current funding arrangement includes around 60% of funding that goes directly to schools, many of the other services that we provide, such as the psychology service, educational welfare, transport service and school meals, are provided directly to schools — those are all provided directly to children.

The budget of each board’s headquarters is £5 million, so £25 million will be saved from the headquarters alone. In the first instance, any transition will include those savings. As Gordon said, although we have no reason to dispute the business case because it has been set out by the ESA and by the Department, as we see it at the moment, and given that not much redesign of services is proposed in advance of the establishment of the ESA, most of the burden will fall on the headquarters’ services. In total, that is a figure of £25 million.

The Chairperson: What has been the interaction and interplay between the ESA, in its current form as an interim arrangement, and you as working chief executives who are responsible for your boards? Are you happy that the ESA, in its current form, has taken a hands-on approach and that you have a working knowledge and understanding of what is happening?

The transition from the library boards to a single service seemed to go reasonably well, and I suspect that you had a close working relationship with those involved in that transition. Is that being replicated with the transition to the ESA, or do you feel as though, as Tom said, there is a swansong and that the ESA, in its current form, may say that the boards will not be in existence from a certain date and that, therefore, any advice that you might give is of little relevance?

Mr Topping: Different Departments do things in different ways, and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure has certainly worked in a different way from the Department of Education. The five of us who are present today all sit on a transition board with the Department and the ESAIT, and we have contributed to those discussions. As well as that, all the staff who have been involved in working groups and various kinds of planning groups have said that they appreciated the communication that has gone on.

However, the expertise that we have has perhaps not been fully utilised. We have seconded staff to the ESAIT; for example, as you know, my chief finance officer has been seconded, and other boards have also contributed in that way. When it comes to the main business of the ESA, which is the educational function, I think that there will be a demand on our staff to provide expertise and advice — I hope that we can meet that demand.

Mr O’Dowd: I have read the Bill on several occasions, and I do not see it stated anywhere in it that the headquarters of the ESA will be in Belfast. That is one area of concern that can perhaps be clarified today. It does not state in the Bill where the headquarters will be, and, given recent reports about decentralisation from Belfast, I might conclude that it will not be in Belfast.

I understand that there is a need for careful liaison between staff representatives, the Department and the ESA to ensure that there is consultation with staff on transfer, etc. As we have seen in other major developments — [ Interruption. ] — I am sorry, Chairman, I can not hear a word that I am saying.

The Chairperson: Could we have silence, please?

Mr O’Dowd: We have seen with the transfer of staff in the Health Service that that can be managed, but it must be managed carefully.

David, I will not quote you directly, but you said that there was a possibility that boards of governors would become subcommittees of the ESA. Would that be a bad thing or a good thing?

Mr Cargo: I hope that John was not precluding Belfast from the discussions on the implementation of the recommendations of the Bain Report on the relocation of public sector jobs, or precluding a fair equality assessment.

Mr O’Dowd: There speaks a Belfast man.
Mr Cargo: I got the impression that anywhere but Belfast seemed to be the conclusion. My staff would be gravely concerned if that were the case, as would the board members.

Mr Topping: On the other hand, at least four of us here support you on that. [Laughter.]

Mr Cargo: Unfortunately, that has been part of the problem over the past number of years, in relation to funding and all sorts of things. What I was trying to point out was that there is a logic to the current single authority having employing functions. It is logical that there should be an employer.

Before 1989, boards of governors were originally management committees of the board. The 1989 Order changed that function, because it established local management of schools. In our view, when establishing that, the Order did not clarify the relationship between boards of governors, the employers and the employing authorities. We had hoped that the Bill would clarify that.

It is not for me to comment on whether it is a good thing or a bad thing. In our opinion, at the moment, the Bill continues the fudge that was evident in what was not a particularly good piece of legislation — the 1989 Order. We saw the Bill as an opportunity to clarify that, and to get a clear policy direction on how the service would go forward. We see logic in having a single employing authority, and that has obvious consequences for governors. We accept that not everyone favours that direction, but the Bill needs to provide clarity so that it does not perpetuate what, in our opinion, is a very inefficient fudge in the current legislation.

Mr O’Dowd: I want to tease the matter out. Are you referring specifically to the employment role rather than the day-to-day running of the schools? Is that the focus of your concern?

Mr Cargo: Yes; one part of the Bill seems to infer that boards of governors would operate under the direction of the ESA, whereas other parts seem to infer that boards of governors would have maximum supported autonomy, which was one of the original concepts. We feel that the Bill, in its current format, does not clarify that matter sufficiently but, in fact, perpetuates a fudge that was created by the 1989 Order and that was not helpful in the situation. That needs to be clarified.

It is a political decision as to whether to select autonomy and, therefore, potentially greater fragmentation, or to select cohesion and, therefore, potentially greater centralisation. The Bill must clarify that position before it becomes law. If it does not, you will end up in the situation in which we found ourselves whereby the position is not clear. Moreover, the issue is further compounded by the fact that the 1989 Order says that we can go into schools only by invitation. It is testimony to the skills of our officers that we have never been refused entry to a school. However, the Bill must clarify those issues and outline clearly the direction that the political system wants education to take.

The Chairperson: The Committee is at a stage where it is focusing on particular clauses. Clause 8 says that the ESA cannot lawfully refuse to put into effect any proper decision of a board of governors on employment matters. Do you think that a model employment scheme and guidance, an independent appeals system or some regulation and control built into the Assembly and the institutions here would be sufficient to address the issues of concern? The Committee has asked that question of the CCMS, the Catholic bishops and the GBA. At this stage, we still do not know who would represent a school legally in the High Court in the event of a dispute.

Mr Cargo: I have no legal competence. As Gordon said, part of the problem is that the Bill must be read in conjunction with other legislation. Other legislation provides the Department with powers to intervene. For example, article 158 of the 1989 Order currently allows it to intervene. That is why we mentioned a lost opportunity. We had an opportunity to create an education Bill that combined all the system’s powers, responsibilities and entitlements. I do not have an opinion on whether that would sort out the situation.

The Chairperson: How different is article 158 to article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986?

Mr Topping: It is much more wide-ranging.

The Chairperson: That is new to the Committee. Part of the problem is that there are 11 other pieces of subordinate legislation. It is like an onion; one continually peels, and people’s eyes water every time it is brought into the room. Article 158 is another of the Department’s current powers.

remove us politicians from the equation, as people are fed up with our meddling and interference. I realise that opinions may differ, but it would be valuable to hear if you feel that one is preferable to or has advantages over another.

Mr Cargo: I have 36 years’ experience in the education service, 25 years of which have been served in education and library boards. I may be straying into the area of vested interests, but one of the strengths of the board system — which I have seen in Belfast and in other areas over the years, and during very difficult and challenging times — is that is all interests are representing in one room. Therefore, if an issue comes to the floor of the board, vested interests cannot rule supreme, and there is a moderating influence on all the various sectors.

We felt that one of the reasons for moving to a single authority was that all the vested interests would be represented under it and nowhere else. However, the Bill appears to give vested interests — and I use that in the best sense of the word — separate bodies to represent them. Therefore the cohesion that we have valued in the system appears to be in danger of fragmenting. My fear, as I approach the end of my career in education, is that we will end up with a more fragmented system with less opportunity to drive standards up.

Mr Topping: I agree with that, but I would go a little further. Some people have called me a control freak, which is, of course, completely wrong —

The Chairperson: Gordon, I could never call you that —

Mr Topping: I support delegation to schools because decision making should be given to those who must pay the consequences. The present system is a mix-and-match: some responsibility is delegated and some is not. Therein lies the difficulty, because some of those who make decisions do not have to pay for the consequences of those decisions.

We had hoped, in line with the concept of maximum supported autonomy — or accountable autonomy as it now is — that functions would be delegated to schools allowing them to make decisions and be accountable and responsible for them. The role of the ESA in monitoring and co-ordinating that will be very important and it must ensure that those schools are held accountable for whatever they achieve. I do not know whether anyone else would agree or disagree.

Mr Sloan: To put it in a nutshell, of the £250 million budget that the South Eastern Education and Library Board receives, £160 million is delegated to schools under local management of schools. We are held accountable for the whole budget, yet we have no control over £160 million of it. I agree with Gordon: if you are going to delegate, the money and the accountability must also be delegated.

The other issue relates to what boards actually do, although I do not know whether my colleagues will agree with me on that. I am a firm believer that form should follow function. The purpose of boards is to raise educational standards; if we get that right, the structure can be designed around it.

It is still a cause of great personal regret that there are no educationalists on the implementation team to drive educational policy. That policy should be driving the structures that are to be put in place and what is, or is not, delegated.

Mr Mulholland: I agree. There are concerns about the potential for fragmentation in the service. With regard to accountable autonomy, the ESA’s role in monitoring what is going on must be matched by a power to intervene when it sees something inappropriate that impacts on standards.

Mr G Butler: Considering the situation pre-1989, there was an issue concerning the need to build the capacity of boards of governors. Although there may be a large capacity in certain areas — and the strong will survive and the weak will go to the wall — in some rural areas there are problems with developing supported autonomy and getting the right people to implement it. There is a difference between fragmentation and centrality, and that is not an easy circle to square.

Over the past 30 years, support from the boards has been indispensable in making the system work; the degree of hand-holding that goes on to stop people going over the precipice cannot be underestimated. Support services have helped. A balance must be struck between providing support and capacity building, which is not a cheap option. In order to develop the skills of governors and of boards of governors, one must invest in people at grass roots. At the same time, one must develop a central vision for education that everyone can share. That is not a cheap or an easy balance to strike.

The Chairperson: Other members will probably raise this matter, but I wish to put it on the table before inviting questions from them. As chief executives of the boards, you have had the primary responsibility for the controlled sector. It is a huge issue, so I want to spend some time on it. Speaking as a member of the DUP, not as the Chairperson of the Committee, the controlled sector is important to us, and the proposals for it present a huge problem that must be satisfactorily resolved.

Mrs M Bradley: I welcome the witnesses, and I associate myself with the Chairperson’s remarks about the work of the boards. For many years, I served on the Western Education and Library Board, so I know that it has always done excellent work and stood by schools, all of which, maintained and controlled, will miss its services.

I too have grave concerns, which I have raised in the Committee, about the situation of governors. I am deeply concerned about getting current governors to return. Schools cannot operate without their boards of governors.

I am concerned too that responsibility for youth services will remain with the Department of Education. They should not become a separate matter; they should remain attached. Gordon, are you confident that the ESA, as it is proposed, can deliver the enhanced services?

Mr Topping: That is a difficult question, because we do not know exactly what the ESA will look like; the process is evolving. Although we support the establishment of a regional education authority, we know the flaws in the system; we have worked that flawed system for 36 years. Whatever the ESA may look like, we hope that it is better than what we have now.

We have highlighted some of our concerns about aspects of the Bill, and we hope that they can be amended. However, we do not know whether they can be changed, because all kinds of interests are at play. Nevertheless, once all those matters have been resolved and consensus has been reached, we hope that the structure and organisation of the ESA will be better than what we have now.

Mr Lunn: I share Mary’s concerns about the ability of schools to attract governors in future, not because of the rules of employment but because of the more onerous duties that they will have to undertake and the training and, perhaps, qualifications that they will need. Put simply, boards of governors may be sued without being able to rely on the ESA to pick up the bill.

I hesitate to cross swords with 150 years’ experience.

Mr Topping: There are two questions there. One relates to the recruitment and expertise of governors, and Mr Sloan will deal with that. The other question is about employing authority versus employer, and Mr Cargo will deal with that. I look forward to hearing the answers. [Laughter.]

Mr Sloan: We have 80 years’ experience. I want to place on record the commitment of unpaid governors. I have met and worked with many governors, and their commitment and support to staff, principals and pupils is immeasurable. I am sure that you all agree.

Many governors are aware that the ESA is being introduced and of potential changes. We are beginning the process of recruiting again, and we are writing to bodies; however, it is difficult to be precise about what the response will be. I have been to 10 to 15 schools in the past weeks, and governors raised concerns about where they will stand in relation to a single authority and what support will be given to them. Governors want to know whether they will need someone with an accountancy or legal background on their board, for example. A great deal will be lost if boards of governors become less caring and more mechanistic.

Clarification on the recruitment and expertise of boards of governors goes back to the employing authority and the employer role and what they will pick up. At present, education and library boards indemnify boards of governors. I love the phrase “cavalierly disregard”, although it is not used in legislation now. Provided that boards of governors did not “cavalierly disregard” the rules, the education and library boards would support them. That needs clarification.

Mr Cargo: Since 1989, we have been asking for clarification on the differences between employer and employing authority, but it is difficult to get legal clarification. There is, perhaps, a slight misunderstanding. The problem with liability goes with who holds the contracts of employment. With regard to managing risk and liabilities in the current system, one always tries to minimise the possibility of having to pay out large sums of money for the sins of the boards of governors or individual members of a board.

In certain sectors, education and library boards are liable for paying out the money, but we cannot intervene to ensure the highest standards of practice.

Mr Lunn: I got that earlier.

Mr Cargo: We were hoping that the Bill would remove the confusion and that, as single authority, the ESA would be the single employer. Therefore the nuances and confusion of the present legislation would be clarified and boards of governors would be in a new relationship with the single body. It would be as it was pre-1989, and the boards of governors would, in fact, become sub-committees of the ESA. The authority would not only have the liability — and that would be clear — but it would have responsibility to ensure that the highest standards of best practice were employed in all boards of governors.

In certain circumstances that may appear draconian; however, it is a logical follow-on from a single authority. If that is not the political will, then you are moving onto the issue, as Stanton said, of the importance of boards of governors.

It is important that we seriously question the composition of boards of governors before the Bill is enacted. Important though boards of governors are, we are putting almost £1 billion of public money into the hands of volunteers. Those volunteers have many strengths, but if we are to give them greater responsibilities, there are issues around the composition of boards. Where autonomy is allied with accountability, that needs to be clearly thought through before a Bill is enacted under which it will be OK to heap more on volunteers. Although those volunteers invest innumerable hours in the system, there may not be — or, as Gregory says, in certain rural areas there may never be — the quality of governors required to do what the system wants them to do.

Mr Lunn: Can I take it from that you do not have a problem with the liability question? Does the Bill make it clear who would accept liability?

Mr Cargo: It appears to be clear by default. In such a situation, I assume that people would co-join the board of governors and the ESA. Therefore, in certain situations as a last resort, the ESA, as the public body, would pay. We should be more proactive and give the employing body responsibility and accountability for ensuring the highest standards of practice. That would minimise liability in certain situations, which cannot be done at the moment.

Mrs M Bradley: Will there be a weakness in the system if we wait until all the changes come in and then try to bring in new governors? Should we have new governors applying now to be trained and brought up to the required standard? I have a feeling that many of the governors already in place in schools have served for several years and do not want to serve again. What happens if a school cannot get enough people at that late stage?

Mr Topping: That is exactly what we are trying to do: we are trying to widen the expertise and we are alerting potential governors to the fact that the role is very wide and will become wider. For example, when we write to nominating bodies, which we have to do under present legislation, we alert them to the sort of expertise that might be valuable on a governing body. That does not necessarily mean that we will get everybody we would like on all governing bodies. That is part of the issue that you raised and part of the issue that we have to face. It comes back, I think, to the point that David made: how do we ensure that those people are well trained and up to speed with what is going on? That is a massive task because there are thousands of governors.

The Chairperson: The Northern Board in particular is concerned that the schemes of management are not fit for purpose. That is why it would be helpful if we could see what was proposed as an off-the-shelf scheme of management for the ESA; at present, we do not know if that even exists. That is something that perhaps we should ask the ESA.

Mr Topping: That is the timing issue that Gregory mentioned.

Mr Mulholland: One school might use an off-the-shelf scheme of management and another devise its own. The same governor could serve on the boards of two schools that operated two different schemes of management.

Mr Lunn: I ask everyone this question, but I have been waiting for you guys to come along because I am interested in your view. Members are sniggering because they know what I am going to say. You have the experience of operating boards that are composed in a particular way. Is it desirable for the ESA to be composed of a governing body dominated by local councillors?

The Chairperson: When is your next board of governors meeting, Gordon?

Mr Topping: I do not know why I sat in the middle. [Laughter.] We have councillors on our boards at the moment. As the Committee knows, 40% of our boards consist of elected representatives. I think that David said that we support the composition of our boards 100% because they contain all the stakeholders in different proportions.

Over the time that I have been involved, party politics has come to the fore only very rarely; what does come to the fore is community politics, and interesting alliances have formed to tackle problems. I hope that that could be the model for the ESA. Stakeholders should be around the table so that they can influence things and work together in the spirit of partnership for the benefit of all the young people that they serve.

Mr Lunn: The difference is between 40% and a majority of one.

Mr Topping: I appreciate that, but I do not think that the principle changes.

Mr Cargo: I concur with that view. The balances are less important than the fact that all the interests feel that they have a representative voice in the decision-making body. It may be fashionable to think of smaller boards, and those could work in certain circumstances; however, we said from the outset that the education and skills authority is a regional service locally delivered. The local dimension in education is crucial in driving up standards and sustaining communities across the region.

It must be ensured that the people who serve centrally can also bring a sub-regional dimension into discussions. When I came to Belfast, I thought that there would be cohesion, but Belfast is made up of a series of urban villages. We have strength in relation to our decision making because different political parties are represented and we have people from different parts of the city. We also have stakeholders of the main Churches that represent the various parts of the city. Furthermore, there is a microcosm of the users of the service who come from right across the city. That strengthens the decision-making process.

Mr Lunn: There will be a bigger number and a smaller area. At present, the ESA will represent the whole of Northern Ireland with a maximum of 12 members — seven of whom will be local councillors. Where is the scope for other interests in those other five people, who, presumably, include the chairman?

Mr Cargo: Twelve is rather small for the range of responsibilities and the amount of money and assets with which the ESA will deal.

Mr Lunn: You do not seem to have a problem with the fact that there is a majority of local councillors; you are a major disappointment to me. [Laughter.] I will have to go back to the bishops. [Laughter.]

Miss McIlveen: My questions are on two areas. The first, primarily, is directed to Gordon. Being a control freak is no bad thing — it is a positive trait that I sometimes see in myself.

Mr B McCrea: What a good job Hansard does. That will be used on countless occasions.

Miss McIlveen: In reference to clause 13, you mention receiving Charter Mark status for a curriculum advisory and support service and for innovative models of delivery. It is right that you should be proud of that. The question is in and around best practice and the lack of a comparator — for want of a better word — for the ESA. How can best practice be delivered?

Mr Topping: Charter Mark is a quality award that is based on customers and the service and delivery that they receive. We have tried to ensure that our service achieves maximum customer satisfaction, and we have systems and procedures that are externally assessed to demonstrate that.

It is important that single organisations develop a culture of continuous improvement. To do that, one needs to benchmark one’s service against where one started from so that, each year, one improves on pupil outcomes, customer satisfaction or any other measure. It is also important to benchmark one’s service against others. For example, the education service is trying to benchmark itself against the best in the world through the programme for international student assessment (PISA) results. I do not see any reason why the ESA should not look at other countries and services to ensure that the service that it delivers is at least of the same quality as elsewhere. The same principles of customer orientation and continuous improvement apply whether there is a single body or five or more bodies in a region — it is important to demonstrate year-on-year improvement.

Miss McIlveen: Are there standard performance indicators across all the boards?

Mr Topping: There are some standard indicators in the resource allocation plans, the work that we are set by the Department and in its strategic plan that all the boards deliver. There are other indicators that each board uses to measure itself year on year, because each area is different.

Mr Sloan: I agree with Gordon. One of our strengths is our sub-regional structure; one size does not fit all in Northern Ireland. Our sub-regional structure is made up of five boards, which means that each can see what the others do and can adopt best practice from them. There is a great deal of co-operation and cross-fertilisation. If the sub-regional structure is properly constituted by the ESA, that co-operation could be maintained; however, it will not work if there is only one board and, as someone said, if ideas are cherry-picked from England. Oscar Wilde said that Britain and America are two nations divided by a common language: the culture in England is entirely different from that here and we have entirely different needs. Something must be built in locally that allows the boards in different areas to learn from one another instead of having exactly the same thing everywhere.

Miss McIlveen: In his submission, Gordon Topping said that, with regard to clause 13, the details were sufficiently vague as to be able to offer only limited comment. What would you like in clause 13 to strengthen it?

Mr Topping: We were saying primarily that there will be a tension between what is delegated to schools, what is held centrally and what is held locally. We are concerned because we do not know how the delegation will be done. For example, every school needs literacy, so that will have a particular form. Will responsibility for that be delegated to schools, which can buy their own advice? Will it be part of a local dimension or will it all be centralised somewhere? How will responsibility be divided in areas where there is a special need or a minority subject? The tension is whether to delegate the money for those services to schools, in which case the ESA will have no control; hold the money centrally, in which case one can dictate exactly where the resource goes; or mix and match so that some of the resource is delegated and some of it held centrally.

That is the crucial tension between central support, local support and school discretion. That is what we meant when we referred to that clause.

Miss McIlveen: What will be the future of the controlled sector? I am mindful of the comments made in previous submissions from the Catholic bishops. They spoke about a single employing authority and the erosion of ethos. I want you to develop the concept of ethos in the controlled sector. Also, the Southern Board referred to the ownership body. Will you comment on that, too?

Mr Sloan: Gordon mentioned that the ESA seems to represent a move from five authorities to one. Our concern is that the parity of support for sectors is perhaps not as it ought to be. I speak from the South Eastern Board’s perspective, and, as a single board, we have been extremely careful to ensure that we never supported any particular sector more than another. All the services that we provide, including Curriculum Advisory and Support Service, special education, welfare and maintenance, are for every sector, other than perhaps the voluntary grammar and the grant-maintained integrated sectors, which are the responsibility of the Department. We have never promoted any particular schools.

The important issue of support bodies for the controlled sector must be addressed. How exactly that is done is still up for discussion. At one stage, the controlled sector was described as not having an ethos, but I do not subscribe to that view, nor, I believe, would my colleagues. In any case, no other sector is uniform; each has variations within it.

Discussion continues about how the school estate should be managed. As Gordon said, the management of an education service in Northern Ireland requires rationalisation. Some of the villages in the Southern Board area have four primary schools, where only one is needed. We had hoped that, through the establishment of a single authority, all sectors would be brought in as equal partners to devise an equal solution that satisfied everyone. Somehow, that idea has been lost, with the controlled sector in one corner and other sectors in different corners. That disturbs us slightly because we expected that sense of separation to dissipate, which would have added tremendous strength to the education system.

Mr Topping: We never wanted to be in the current situation in which there is a plethora of sectoral support bodies. At the outset of the discussion, we supported a single integrated authority, in which all the rights and the ethos of all interests would be protected. Sometimes, such protection may have to be enshrined in legislation, as happened with the boards. However, we have ended up in a position whereby whatever one group has, another group must have too. We did not sign up to that at the beginning of the exercise.

There is no such protection included in the Education Bill, although there is potential to include it in a second Bill. Unfortunately, Pandora’s box has been opened, and it will be difficult to put the lid back on. As a result, there are various types of sectoral support for all kinds of bodies. Without clear legislation, that detracts from the ESA’s ability to manage.

Mr Cargo: There is a danger that the Bill under discussion, and even a second Bill, will end up addressing the wrong problem. If the problem is the need to improve the educational opportunities of children, the Bill should clearly reflect the ways in which that will be achieved; the structures would follow from that central purpose.

I make no apology for saying that I am an integrationist in the best sense of the world. Education structures should be integrated; they should recognise diversity but celebrate inclusion. What I see now in the debate is an unedifying scramble by some sectors to ensure, quite properly, that they are not left out in a sectoral body carve-up of administration. That was never the intention of the boards in subsuming their wishes for the greater good — the development of a better system. If the outworking is that we spend most of our time discussing the setting up of sectoral support bodies just so as everyone feels loved, we have lost a major opportunity to enhance the opportunities for children.

Mr G Butler: That reflects the Southern Board’s response. We feel that it is not simply a matter of replicating everything that exists in the other sectors. If the sole purpose of the Bill is to provide a unified service, a big issue is what powers it is given. David mentioned respecting diversity and, at the same time, looking at methods of delivery that run across sectors. In particular, Stanton mentioned the need to look at the number of schools and locations and to maintain sustainable schools.

The Department’s policy paper 20 did not even fully replicate what went on in other sectors. The controlled sector had major problems. The paper was really saying that we would be given the powers in principle, but that the ESA would still hold the ownership and control. To use a good old expression from north Antrim, it was neither fish nor flesh, nor good red herring.

Mr Mulholland: Adding to what my colleagues already said, the creation of those new bodies eats into any potential savings that there would be in the future.

Miss McIlveen: I will ask one final question about a point that I know my colleague wishes to develop further. Are you concerned about the fact that, when writing about this period, historians may summarise that the boards were found wanting in their protection of the controlled sector and of the sectoral bodies that came out of that?

Mr Topping: No, I do not think so. Obviously, I do not want to be defensive about the boards, because we have agreed to subsume our interests for the greater good. However, we have tried to say that all children are equal and need to be treated equally; that they need to have the maximum opportunities, and that we want to provide a service that is as efficient and as integrated as possible.

Therefore, we are talking about an all-inclusive organisation that recognises the differences that exist, but that, at the same time, ensures that everyone is treated fairly. There is nothing wrong with that position. In fact, that is the high moral ground position, and we have always held it. Unfortunately, it does not look as though things are moving in that direction at present.

Mr McCausland: Stanton Sloan made a point about the subregional structure and used the phrase “if properly constituted”. How can that be constituted properly in order to do what needs to be done to recognise the differences across the country?

Mr Sloan: That really is a matter for the ESA to determine.

Mr McCausland: I think that it needs help. [Laughter.]

Mr Sloan: One of the strengths of the current situation is the number of services that are provided locally. Certainly from the point of view of parents and schools — including the boards of governors, staff and pupils — there is a whole range of services that is provided locally.

As regards the phrase “if properly constituted”, there needs to be a clear determination as to what will be available at a subregional level, whatever number of subregional groups there may be. For example, when people spoke initially about finance, they spoke about a centralisation of the finance function. The South Eastern Board has now employed several people from the Department as LMS advisers. They work in our finance department, but they spend their time with schools, helping them directly with their budgets and with developing five-year plans. A clear process of thought must be applied to finding out what schools want — they must be asked what they need locally. Schools and parents, as the end users, are in the best position to tell you what they want and what should be located at that subregional level.

We certainly have views on the matter: I could give you a list of services, and I started to do so earlier when I talked about educational welfare and psychology. The whole area of special needs must be local. The human resources function — depending on the resolution of the problem of employing authority and employer function — is another area where boards of governors are supported. Those issues need to be sorted out.

Mr Cargo: Stanton quite rightly focused on services. However, there are two key principles involved. The first is that whatever happens locally must be enshrined in the Bill. Intent cannot be relied on. Here is an opportunity to recast the system, and we need to be sure that whatever happens locally is enshrined in the legislation. It must be clear and explicit. The second is that the relationship must have a democratic accountability. It must also have a stakeholder accountability to be able to provide for schools, and it certainly has to have user accountability. Any local model needs to have those three elements built into it. It has to be integrated.

I want to mention one of the opportunities lost in this situation, which Gordon referred to at the start. We are dealing with children. One cannot divorce education from health, community capacity or the context in which children live in certain areas. We need to think seriously about including in the Bill specific clauses that provide for integrated local provision. Nelson knows, as I do from working in the inner city, that although the key determinant in moving people out of deprivation is education, there are also clear links to economic regeneration, community capacity building and health inequalities. We must write into the legislation a requirement for the education structures to collaborate in that way. We need to place a requirement on the body to define local need, otherwise an opportunity will be lost and the importance of a key dimension in education will be diluted. Education is a local service.

Mr G Butler: One of my hopes for a local Assembly, as one brought up in the education system throughout the period of direct rule, is that a style of joined-up government should emerge. The roles of community planning and education support should both be seen as part of how young people progress in Northern Ireland. We must tie that into not only the education debate, but the debate about where education fits into the wider picture of Northern Ireland plc, and how the Assembly sees Northern Ireland and its young people progressing and growing.

Mr McCausland: Stanton spoke about the functions that would be provided, and David spoke about the shape of the subregional structure. At an earlier stage, the question was asked about how that would operate. It is all very vague at present. Someone said it is a bit like a director of public prosecutions (DPP), whereby it monitors what the police are doing. That did not go down terribly well: the reaction was that all a DPP does is tick boxes and everyone ignores what it does anyway.
How do you see that local, subregional structure having a role in influencing, shaping and making decisions? What powers would it have? Would it just be a consultative group that meets but which everyone ignores, or would it have teeth? How would it work?

Mr Cargo: One of the themes that we have tried to get across this morning is that we believe in a regional service that is delivered locally. Education is an important requirement for young people and adults in Northern Ireland, and, undoubtedly, there needs to be a regional dimension to it so that there are coherent policies and strategies across the region that ensure accountability to the Assembly, the Minister and the citizens of Northern Ireland.

However, in its delivery, education is a local service that is tailored to meet the needs of individual communities. It is not the same in Ballinaual and as it is in Belfast or Ballycastle. Although we must ensure that we have a top-down structure that ensures coherence, we must also have in place a bottom-up process with local structures, both to capture all the views of the stakeholders and to ensure that the ESA is bound, not just to listen, but to take account, in a structured way, of area-based plans. That brings us back to area planning for provision and also for delivery of services. If you are going to deliver a service in Turf Lodge or the Shankill, the service, by its very nature, will be very different to that which would be delivered in rural Fermanagh or west Tyrone.

In addressing that local dimension, you must ensure that that there would not just be a monthly meeting to tick boxes; you must build meaningful area plans, which the ESA must take account of in legislation, and those area plans must take account of the regional strategy within which it operates.

Mr McCausland: I will move to a different area. Michelle spoke about ethos, and the phrase “Pandora’s box” was used earlier. I am not sure how you would describe it, but once you start to deconstruct the current system, all sorts of issues come out of the woodwork. I have learned things in this process of which I was never before aware, even though I have sat on an education and library board for many years. I doubt that anyone else who sat on an education and library board had a greater knowledge than I on those matters.

The point was well made that one of the factors must be equality for all children. The difficulty is that, by the nature of the system in Northern Ireland, children are broken up into sectors. If you do not have equality across all the sectors, you do not have equality for all children: that is our difficulty.

One of the points that the Catholic bishops made very forcefully when they appeared before the Committee recently was in relation to the role of governors. Last week, we asked the Department some questions about the appointment of governors to controlled schools and to CCMS schools, and we look forward to the answers.

The boards also appoint governors to both of those sectors. The key point for the Catholic bishops was that governors who are appointed must be supportive of the ethos of the sector. How do boards ensure that the governors that they appoint are supportive of the ethos of the maintained sector? Do they also look at whether governors appointed in the controlled sector support its ethos? I do not know if boards do that in the same way. I have some sense of how that works in practice — of how names are put forward and the result is reached — but I have no sense of how it works with the Catholic maintained schools. How do you ensure that those people support the ethos?

Mr Topping: We may do it in different ways, but I guess that each board has some kind of member input into that process. We have management committees, which deal with each of the subdivisions. In our case, those subdivisions cover nine council areas, and members from each area make decisions as to who represents the board. Other boards have committees that are constituted to do that.

Although it is probably done in different ways, in practical terms, the boards ask the Catholic sector, for example, to nominate people who they think could act as board representatives and still sign up to the Catholic ethos. Local knowledge comes into play in the controlled sector, because many of the board members will have knowledge of the areas in which they serve and represent, and they will feed in names. As a result of that, a variety of names is put forward, and we then make a decision.

Some of us have trawled — not necessarily advertised — for board members in local communities. For example, we placed flyers in libraries to say that we need good people to sit on the boards. We spelt out some of the criteria that we use, and we asked people if they would be interested in putting their names forward.

Therefore, I guess that we would probably do it in different ways. That is a general summary. I am not sure if anyone wants to add to it.

Mr Cargo: I believe that there is a misnomer in the current system. The schools for which we have direct responsibility are called controlled schools. However, when it comes to the development of a school’s ethos and how a community perceives it, we are probably the one sector that has no control. Given the history of the past 30 years, boards have tended to leave the operation of individual controlled schools to the good sense of the local community. Obviously, there is a different scenario in the faith-based system, which, I assume, is about trying to get consistency on the core values of a particular faith throughout all schools.
Therefore, we have a problem with the title of “controlled” because everyone thinks that we control boards of governors.

As regards ethos, Nelson, we are proud that we have responded to local communities’ needs. In taking that on, as Gordon says, in the development of boards of governors, we have very much left that to the good sense of board members who often know intimately the local communities that they serve. Therefore, governors have tended to emerge from that discussion.

If we move into a different situation in which we start to have sectoral bodies, a debate emerges that is the logical outcome of questions such as, “What is the controlled sector?”; “What is its ethos?”; and, “How do you ensure that everyone in that sector complies with that ethos?”. Once you enter that debate, it will neither be short nor easy. You will end up with structures that will, perhaps, add additional layers of complexity to a structure that you are trying to simplify.

Mr McCausland: The logical conclusion, therefore, is that either everybody has a sectoral body, or nobody has it.

Mr Cargo: That could be a conclusion.

Mr Topping: When we were involved in the initiation of that debate with the Department, we envisaged that sectors would have their ethos and rights protected inside a regional body. However, as it stands at present, the regional body that is being created will have some difficulty, we argue, with how it manages the system and a whole pile of sectoral bodies outside it; more sectoral bodies, in fact, than we have ever seen.

Mr Sloan: As regards appointing governors, we operate a similar system to that of the North Eastern Education and Library Board. We try to ensure that we appoint governors who support the ethos of the school. We all visit many schools. You can go to two maintained schools, and, despite their being in the same sector and having the same Catholic ethos, each school has a different overall ethos. We discuss schools’ needs with them frequently and try to balance skills to meet those needs.

Nelson, you made a comment about treating all children equally. We all subscribe to that view absolutely and totally. It is fundamental to draw a distinction between treating all children equally and treating all children the same. To treat all children equally does not mean to treat them all the same, because account must be taken of individual differences. The same applies to schools when appointing governors. In treating all schools equally, you do not necessarily treat them all the same.

Mr B McCrea: There is always a danger, when you reach this stage in the proceedings, that anything that is worth saying has been said several times.

Mr McCausland: That will not stop you. [Laughter.]

Mr B McCrea: I thought that you had finished, Nelson, although if you want to come back to the discussion, be my guest. [Laughter.]

Some useful questions were asked, on which I want to press you. I apologise, therefore, if I go back over matters that I did not get a chance to discuss earlier. There are certain particularly germane matters.

Just so that you understand where I am coming from; my party is in favour of maximum devolved autonomy to schools, with appropriate oversight arrangements to ensure that no inappropriate activity occurs. We believe that the ESA, as it is currently envisaged, will become a centralised bureaucratic monster that will not allow that to happen. That is why we have significant concerns.

I have a couple of questions that I want to pick up on. You gentlemen are all in a unique position to help us, given your experience of 180 years, or whatever length of time Trevor said it was. I am not sure whether that was 180 years’ experience each.

Mr Topping: That is 30 years more than the last time.

Mr B McCrea: Well, it has been a long meeting.

Furthermore, a number of you — though not all of you — said that you are reaching the end of your specific interest in the process. Therefore, you could afford us your opinions. I am slightly disappointed — and I mean that gently — that you have not grabbed the bull by the horns and told us exactly what you think. There were a couple of times earlier when you said that you were not being political, but, of course, as the debate goes on, it becomes more expansive. However, this is not a political decision. Various members have merely asked for your opinion; they have asked you, as experienced educationalists, what you really think.

I will narrow it down to two or three points, which, throughout our discussions, emerged as the central issues. Mary asked a devastatingly simple question, which we fudged — do you, as a group or as individuals, have confidence in the ESA, as it currently stands in the proposals? I have a few other questions, but, given that you talked about crucial differences and so on, do you have confidence that the ESA, as currently outlined in the Bill, will deliver a better educational system than the one that we have now?

Mr Topping: I will preface my answer by saying that we refute what has been said. We answered the questions, and we tried to be as clear as possible in our answers. We said quite explicitly what we believe in. We said that we believe in a regional education authority, and that we want it to be all-inclusive. We have said that it should have a children’s service dimension, and that it should have the powers to be able to manage the system. That is the framework within which we answered all the questions.

Basil repeated the question that was asked previously, which related to whether we have confidence in the ESA, but he added the phrase “as it currently stands”. We were asked whether we had confidence in the ESA. Of course, we have our concerns about the ESA as it currently stands in the Bill, and we expressed those concerns throughout this morning’s discussion. Therefore, as it currently stands, we would like to see changes, and we have illustrated some of the changes that we would like to see. However, we answered the question within the framework that I outlined. We believe in a regional authority that has a local dimension. We want it to be all-inclusive and to have a children’s services dimension, and it should have the ability to manage the system. We still hold to those principles.

Mr B McCrea: Gordon, I did not mean to imply that you were not answering the question. I am merely saying that I think there was a missed opportunity, but that is my personal view. You can answer in whatever way you think is appropriate.

You identified the phrase “the crucial tension”, and the crucial tension involved certain areas, such as clause 8 and the employability issues. We would find it useful to know about that. We received a letter from the GBA, which states that a prolonged cycle of rebuttals is possible, not least because of the Department’s predilection to argue that black is white when it comes to the employment issue.

A major issue has been raised by the GBA, the Catholic bishops and others, and you referred to it as well — is it the employer or the employing authority who has control of the employment issue?

That is probably the largest of the big three nubs that are central to what is happening. I agree that the question is one of clarity. The decision to be made is whether a centralised authority is what is wanted. However, given your experience, the question was in what way would you draw up a regional body? Can that be done on the basis of maximised devolved autonomy with some sort of oversight — along the lines of the Policing Board — or must all the powers rest with a central authority, with the associated knock-on effects?

Mr Topping: I thought that we had answered that question perfectly clearly, but obviously not. It has been a long time since I was in the classroom; therefore, my powers of explaining things might have diminished over the years.

Mr B McCrea: I am sure that the fault was mine, Gordon. I just believe that this was the key issue that we struggled with. For the sake of clarity, and in light of all of the responses, I would have liked direction, because I feel strongly — and others have said it — that whoever controls the employment contract controls everything else.

Mr Topping: I agree 100%. The issue is not just employment; it is what is delegated to schools. If the employer role is delegated to schools, there are consequences — I think that that is what David was saying. Responsibility for the cost of the curriculum and its support services has consequences. If things such as the psychology service and the education and welfare service are delegated, there is a consequence.

We said that, in general terms, we support delegation to schools and placing responsibility for decision-making with those best able to make decisions — local people. That was the principle on which we operated. In the length of time that we have with the Committee, it would be impossible to go into what we would delegate to schools in addition to what they have, because that has knock-on consequences for the ability of the ESA to manage the system holistically. In principle, we support local management.

Mr B McCrea: OK. At another stage, it would be useful to find out whether there was any other guidance.

I expected, but did not hear, mention of the benefits of having comparator regions, although that might have come up in the general discussion — the ability to compare and contrast, albeit, that the boards have different environments. There is a danger that that capability will be lost in a centralised regional body. I think that there is strength in having comparators; is that the case?

Mr Topping: In summary, we said that we recognise that issue and those problems, but they can be overcome in two ways.

One way was to use other comparators — either international or national — or, as mentioned by Stanton, by using the local dimension that is likely to be created in the ESA as a means to encourage improvement.

Mr B McCrea: Without labouring the point, the problem is that international comparators are not, strictly speaking, useful, because they have different conditions and they also tend to deal in averages.

If one looks at the sub-regional issues that could be developed, it is difficult to pick a number that is any better than five — too many becomes too localised. I think that there is merit in the job that is currently carried out, and we should not lose that.

My final point on that issue is a challenge that is meant positively. I understand the difficulties the boards face with the Committee in front of them and the Department behind them. That is an invidious position.
Trevor Lunn asked about councillors and their involvement in the decision-making body. I am aware of difficulties with boards not making decisions about closing schools and schools running up deficits and so on because it is impossible to get a decision. When we were originally looking at setting up the ESA, I thought that part of the benefit was to take a long, hard look at that issue and try to say what the decision might be.

The issue is not about just closing schools, because there are schools that I want to argue for keeping open; I just think that there are difficulties if we are not clear about what it is that we are trying to do. What does the ESA do? What do school governors do? What do the area-based planning issues do? They are all slightly different. I am not sure that having nine councillors on a regional body will give us the outcome that we require.

I understand that we all have to work with each other, and, therefore, one has to be a little bit cautious, but there is an opportunity to sit and say:

“No, there were difficulties, and how do we resolve that particular issue?”

Mr Topping: We think that we recognise the point that you are making. However, in my experience, and others can speak for themselves, we have had no more difficulties from elected representatives than we have had from others. As I said, party politics rarely come to the fore, but community politics do, and weird alliances are created, particularly on school closures, when it is not necessarily politicians or elected representatives who take the lead, but other local community representatives.

That is all part of the business area, so to speak, in which we work: getting support, dealing with issues and trying to get consensus around a board table with 35 members.

Mr B McCrea: I agree, and this is absolutely my last statement because I understand the position. Is it right for that discussion to take place in the ESA or in some other area-based planning context?

Mr Cargo: Decision-making processes are a bit like appointments: you are not exclusive. Education is a community-based service; therefore, it is important to reflect at all levels in the education service the totality of those who are engaged in it, and politicians have a vital role. Like Gordon, I have always found local councillors helpful in such a situation. They have good local intelligence that they can bring to the table and give an added dimension to the discussion. If they were not there, the discussion would not be as fruitful.

One need only look at the Health Service, which, for a time, had no local councillors or representatives on any of its structures. I think that, at certain times, decisions made on health were poorer for the lack of local representation. There should be local representation, but in the ESA the local dimension as represented by those who are democratically accountable should be at the heart of the organisation. That is consistent with the structures that are being put in place.

However, it is also proper that they are there because they bring an added intelligence and impetus to discussions on what is best for certain areas, because education is about sustaining communities. If we get to a stage when we are simply putting in place what is a business structure, education will be much poorer, and the opportunities for children will be much fewer.

Mr B McCrea: The boards and you gentlemen have made a huge contribution, and have a further contribution to make. Given that this is not the end but the start of the process, I encourage you to carry on engaging and helping us on this issue, because these processes sometimes assume that we know what it is that we want to do, and, therefore, we will check it out. Actually, we are in a much more iterative process, whereby one takes on ideas and decides that perhaps we will do it this way.

I do think that you are central to it, and I implore you to try and find a way of feeding more into our debate.

Mr Topping: We will provide whatever help in this process that the Committee wants.

Mr B McCrea: I finished too quickly.

The Chairperson: We have considered various issues, but there is one on which I would like your opinion. You expressed a clear view on the inspectorate, but I would like you to expand on the role of the inspector and his or her ability to carry out their functions independently. I think that it was Mr Mulholland who dealt with that part. He seemed to imply that there would be a conflict of interest between the inspectorate’s role with regard to the curriculum and the policy and its overseeing role. What is the concern there? It is something that we have considered and discussed, but not in much detail.

Mr Mulholland: The inspectorate values its independence, and it perceives itself to be independent. Clause 37 establishes the powers of the inspectors. The inspectorate is still part of the Department of Education and is overseen by it, and it will be party to the policies that come from the Department. Therefore there will be a perceived conflict of interest when inspectors are carrying out their inspectorial role: monitoring, inspecting, reviewing, and reporting on Department of Education policy in schools. There was an opportunity in the Bill to establish the independence of the inspectorate, much as there is in England. That is an opportunity lost.

Mr McCausland: The inspectorate is situated in the Department. However, is it separate from the Department?

Mr Mulholland: It is an integral part of the Department of Education.
Mr Topping: We understand that the chief inspector is part of the senior management team of the Department and its principal educational adviser.

The Chairperson: We will come back to that.

Mr O’Dowd: Is it not the case that a conflict of interest would arise if he or she was the inspector of the Department rather than of schools on behalf of the Department?

Mr Mulholland: The inspector inspects the policies that come from the Department and their implementation in schools.

Mr O’Dowd: A conflict of interest would arise if there was an inspector of the Department. For instance, if this Committee’s role is to inspect the Department of Education, and the members were from one party — which I wish was the case — [Laughter.]

Mr Topping: We are making the point that was made across the water, and it relates to why there are independent inspectorates outside the Department. The basic thrust of Mr Mulholland’s argument is that there is an inspectorate that is party to devising a policy on an issue. That policy will be implemented in schools through the boards or the CCMS, for instance, and an inspector will inspect its implications and workings. If an inspector says that the policy is a disaster, he or she is criticising themselves, because he or she was party to devising the policy advice that went to the Minister.

Mr Cargo: It would strengthen the system if there was a clear separation. The Belfast Education and Library Board made a further point around the clarity in respect of separation of functions, and we thought that it was an opportunity lost. The role of the inspectorate should be strengthened to make it a more accountable and independent body that will provide quality information, without fear or favour to anyone.

Mr G Butler: I will refrain from discussion on this topic because my wife is an inspector. I declare that interest for the record.

Mr Lunn: It sounds so obvious and simple, but has it caused a problem in the past? Can you provide an instance where an inspector’s ability to act independently was compromised by his membership of the Department.

Mr Topping: I do not know; we cannot comment on that as we are not aware of any.

Mr Lunn: How long has that arrangement been in place? Since the mists of time?

Mr Topping: Yes.

Mr Lunn: And it has not caused a problem: Mr Topping: No.

The Chairperson: Gordon, Stanton, Barry, David, and Gregory, thank you all very much for your contributions to the discussion. A paper has been prepared by the Department in response to the issues that have been raised, which the Committee will make available to you. You are all welcome to stay — if you wish.

Members, I am conscious that time is marching on.

Mr McCausland: Time is moving on, and we have the response from the Department. We will not be able to go into that in any great depth. Would it be in order, once the response goes to the boards, for us to ask each of the five boards to come back to us with their view of the response, as they had a list of specific points?

The Chairperson: Yes. That is what we have been trying to encourage up until now.

ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

1 April 2009

FINANCIAL PROVISIONS BILL
(NIA 6/08)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:
Mr Mitchel McLaughlin (Chairperson)
Mr Simon Hamilton (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Fra McCann
Mr Declan O’Loan
Mr Ian Paisley Jnr
Mr Peter Weir
Witnesses:
Mr Michael Daly
Ms Brenda Shearer
Mr David Thomson

The Chairperson (Mr McLaughlin): The Department gave the Committee a pre-introduction briefing on the Financial Provisions Bill on 4 February. At that briefing, the Committee requested further information on the proposal to remove the need to produce separate finance accounts. The response from the Department is in members’ information packs.

The Bill was subsequently introduced in the Assembly, and has reached its Committee Stage. The Committee sought the views of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, the Public Accounts Committee and the Audit Committee, as the scope of the Bill is within their remit, too. Their responses indicated that they had no issues to raise.

The Committee’s public consultation on the Bill ends at close of play today, and no responses have been received to date. So, we are overwhelmed. [Laughter.]

Mr Weir: Overwhelmed with apathy.

The Chairperson: Nonetheless, I invite Michael to make some introductory comments, and then we will open the meeting to members.

Mr Michael Daly (Department of Finance and Personnel): I do not have an awful lot to add to what the Chairperson said. The Second Stage debate on the Bill covered a number of issues that Members raised. The Minister replied to some of them during the debate, and wrote to Members about others. However, there may be other issues that Committee members might want to raise now.

The Chairperson: Thank you. Members, have we —

Mr Hamilton: Any holiday plans?

The Chairperson: Is that a question? I am overwhelmed by the responses from the Committee, too. So, Michael, may I just wish you well, and keep up the good work. Obviously, you are satisfying opinion around this table.

Mr Hamilton: Declan, could you not even ask something about social housing to take the bad look off us?

Mr O’Loan: Just so that we have something to write in the report.

The Chairperson: No, but I will make sure that the —

Mr Weir: There is something coming through from David McNarry. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: It is quite evident from the members who sent their apologies that they are the people who have the real interest in this subject. So, I can only apologise to those colleagues who attended today.

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Lillian Ladele Case

Mr Simpson asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the implications for the application of (i) section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998; (ii) all other UK equality legislation; and (iii) EU Directives, of the ruling by the Central London Employment Tribunal in the case of Lillian Ladele. (AQW 1675/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness): Section 75(1) of the NI Act 1998 imposes a general statutory duty on all public authorities (as defined under section 75(3)). This duty requires a public authority to have due regard for the need to promote equality of opportunity in the discharge of all its functions. The Executive has previously stated its commitment to observing this statutory duty. Further detailed enforcement duties also arise under Schedule 9 of the Act, which is given effect by Section 75(4). Various remedies are available to any citizen or group asserting any failure to comply with either the general statutory duty in Section 75(1) or the detailed enforcement duties in Schedule 9.

It is important to note that the Lillian Ladele case has since been successfully appealed at the Employment Appeal Tribunal. Since it is a case outside this jurisdiction it will have persuasive but not binding authority here. It is an example of the way in which the Courts balance competing interests (in this case between someone who had a conscientious objection to officiating at civil partnerships between couples of the same sex on the one hand and the rights of those couples to enter into a civil partnership on the other).

A Court in Northern Ireland may or may not adopt the same approach in corresponding circumstances. Under domestic and European legislation each case would be decided in the light of the particular issues and facts involved.

Training for Women Network

Ms J McCann asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for the reasons for the delay in the Peace III application submitted by the Training for Women Network which was approved by the Special European Union Programmes Body in August 2008. (AQW 3678/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Following the approval from SEUPB it was necessary to ensure the project complied with government accounting requirements. This has been completed and Departmental approval of the Training for Women Network was given just before Christmas. A formal Letter of Offer was issued to Training for Women Network on 22 December 2008 by the Special European Union Programmes Body.

Child Poverty

Mr Gardiner asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many children deemed as living in child poverty are residing in; (i) homes with a single parent; (ii) homes with two parents but only one parent working; and (iii) homes with two unemployed parents. (AQW 4989/09)
The First Minister and deputy First Minister: There are three measurements of poverty – relative, absolute and mixed.

Relative income poverty describes families living below 60% of the median wage. It is estimated that the number of children in relative income poverty living in:

(i) lone parent families is around 40,900
(ii) couple families with only one parent working is around 12,400
(iii) couple families with both not in work is around 16,500

The remainder of those children in poverty live in families with both parents working; this number is estimated to be around 21,100.

These figures have been sourced from the Households Below Average Income, NI, 2004/05, 2005/06, 2006/07. Because of the small numbers in the survey for this analysis it has been necessary to combine the three years of data.

Ministerial Subcommittee on Poverty and Social Exclusion

Mr Elliott asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister when will the first meeting of the Executive Subcommittee on Poverty and Social Exclusion take place; and what will the agenda be. (AQW 5127/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We propose to hold the first meeting of the Executive Subcommittee on Poverty and Social Inclusion on 26 March 2009. An agenda for this first meeting is still to be agreed.

The Executive Sub-Committee will be responsible for agreeing the priorities and key Executive actions for tackling poverty and social inclusion here and also agreeing the monitoring and reporting mechanisms associated with the ‘Lifetime Opportunities’ Anti-Poverty Strategy.

Once the Executive Sub-Committee has met, we would intend to convene a first meeting of the re-established Ministerially-led Poverty and Social Inclusion Stakeholder Forum.

Cost of Trips and Ministerial Visits

Mr Attwood asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the total (i) travel; and (ii) accommodation costs incurred by its Department on trips and ministerial visits since May 2007, broken down by (a) Ministers; and (b) senior officials. (AQW 5301/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The following table sets out the costs incurred by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister in relation to official travel by staff and Ministers in pursuance of Departmental business objectives since 8 May 2007. These costs fall into two financial years and include mileage allowances, accommodation costs, subsistence and all other associated costs of travel.

It is not possible to split staff travel, accommodation and subsistence costs by seniority or grade of staff. The figures provided relate to all grades of staff in OFMDFM.

Advertising Expenditure

Mr Gardiner asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent on advertisements placed in regional and local newspapers, broken down by each newspaper, in each of the last three years.

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Table A provides the classified advertising expenditure, broken down by individual newspaper, of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for financial years 05/06, 06/07, 07/08 and this year to date.

The Department did not carry out campaign advertising during this period.

Implementation of EU Legislation and Regulation

Mr Simpson asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to its answer to AQW 3849/09, to outline the manner in which Ministers and officials cooperate with the UK Government regarding the implementation of European Union relevant legislation and regulation. (AQW 5639/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The 2001 Memorandum of Understanding sets out the principles underlying relations between the UK Government and the Devolved Administrations. Its Concordat on Co-ordination of European Union Policy Issues outlines how Executive Ministers and officials handle cooperation with the UK Government on the implementation and enforcement of European Union obligations, infraction proceedings, and the scrutiny of European legislation.

Junior Ministers also attend JMC (Europe) which meets on a periodic basis. The JMC(E) is chaired by the Foreign Secretary and all other relevant Ministers from the devolved administrations are invited to attend.

Officials also have regular contact with UK representatives in Brussels on all matters of relevance.

Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People

Mr Poots asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much was spent in 2006/07 and 2007/08 on legal fees by the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People, and how much was spent on the judicial review on the ban on spanking, and on appealing the original decision. (AQW 5663/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Commissioner for Children and Young People for Northern Ireland has advised that the amounts paid in legal fees and the judicial review on the defence of reasonable parental punishment in 2006/2007 and 2007/2008 were as follows:

The appeal ruling stated that the Commissioner has to pay costs. The respondent is not yet able to provide a schedule of costs for the appeal hearing.

US Immigration

Mr Hamilton asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister if it will consider initiating discussions with the UK Government and the US administration about developing arrangements to allow passengers to pre-clear US Immigration at Belfast International Airport. (AQW 5688/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Due to the low volume of direct flights between Belfast International Airport and the United States we have no plans to initiate discussions with the UK Government and the US administration about arrangements for pre-clearance of US Immigration.

Strategic Investment Board

Mr Savage asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to provide a breakdown of external travel costs for the Strategic Investment Board for each of the last five years, including (i) destination; (ii) length of stay; (iii) reason for trip; (iv) cost of flights; (v) cost of hotels; and (vi) any other expenses. (AQW 5743/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The following table sets out the Strategic Investment Board’s expenditure on travel costs for each of the last five years. It is not possible to split expenditure between external and internal travel, nor is it possible to extract the details of individual trips.
SIB will travel abroad occasionally in order to meet bidders and funders; to participate in conferences and seminars and for research purposes.

Until 2007, SIB relied heavily on seconded staff and the figures before then include the cost of travel and accommodation arrangements for such staff.

SIB does not own or operate official cars.

Strategic Investment Board

Mr Savage asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to provide a breakdown of internal travel costs for the Strategic Investment Board including (i) cost of running official cars; (ii) mileage expenses; and (iii) hotels, in each of the last five years. (AQW 5744/09)

Presbyterian Mutual Society

Mr Butler asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on its discussions with Gordon Brown about extending the UK Government’s savings protection scheme to the Presbyterian Mutual Society. (AQW 5761/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: On 25 February 2009 we met with Prime Minister Gordon Brown. Also at the meeting were the First Ministers of Scotland and Wales and the Secretaries of State for each of the devolved administrations. While the primary intention was to have a discussion about the general economic downturn we did take the opportunity to strongly register our concerns about the handling of the Presbyterian Mutual Society (PMS) case. We impressed upon the Prime Minister the need to help ordinary depositors who had been disadvantaged by the circumstances and current approach to PMS. We emphasised our central concern that there should be a fair and equitable treatment of PMS depositors.

The Prime Minister, and indeed Secretary of State Sean Woodward, were clearly aware of the PMS case and we agreed that a separate meeting dedicated specifically to this issue was warranted. This will be arranged in the near future.

Trade Unions

Mr McKay asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what meetings it has had with trade unions in the past 6 months. (AQW 5767/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: On 14th October 2008, as part of a series of meetings about the economic downturn, we met with a group of trade unionists comprising the following: -

- Northern Ireland Committee Irish Congress of Trade Unions
- NIPSA
- Ulster Teachers Union
- UNISON
- UNITE
- Union of Shop Distributive and Allied Workers
- UCATT - Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians

The topics discussed included the state of the local economy including the effects of the recession, the cost of living and the construction industry. The views of trade unions, along with other groups consulted by us, were taken into account as part of the Executive’s consideration of measures to help deal with the economic downturn.

On 4 November 2008 and 5 February 2009 we met representatives of Northern Ireland Committee Irish Congress of Trade Unions. The topics discussed include future relationships with the Executive, the use of Public Private Partnerships and the economy.

To date individual unions have not requested separate meetings with us.

Cohesion, Sharing and Integration Strategy

Mr Lunn asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to report on progress on the publication of the Cohesion, Sharing and Integration Strategy. (AQO 2106/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are continuing to develop and refine the programme for Cohesion, Sharing and Integration. Improving relationships between and within communities in Northern Ireland and building a shared and better future remains a top priority for this Department and the Executive.
We believe that our work at Ministerial level in OFMDFM as well as throughout the Department at all levels, has demonstrated our commitment to building cohesive, inclusive communities.

The fact that we have been delivering substantial additional funding secured in the Executive’s budget is just one of our achievements. We have increased funding by a third for the period 2008-2011, from £21 million in the previous CSR period to almost £30 million in the current one. That means that vital work on the ground and with both existing and new communities is better resourced than ever. We also want to ensure that these resources are used in an effective way therefore we have been assessing existing programmes and considering new approaches to ensure tangible outcomes from our funding and actions.

We have increased funding to minority ethnic groups by two-thirds.
Funding for youth and interface workers has been increased by a quarter.
Statistics show that the work that we fund and resource is delivering real and meaningful outcomes. A 12% drop in racist hate crime between 2006/07 and 2007/08. Likewise, a reduction in sectarian motivated crimes from 1,217 in 2006/07 to 1,056 in 2007/08. Three out of five young people in 2007 reported that relationships between Protestants and Catholics were getting better.

But, we are not complacent. We are leading and driving change in our society – and we are leading and driving change in our work through the Department and the Executive to deliver a shared and better future for all our people.

Racial Attack in South Belfast

Mr A Maskey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for its assessment of the recent racial attack in South Belfast; and what action it is taking to promote racial equality in this area. (AQO 2122/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We unreservedly condemn the recent attack on the Bangladeshi student, Sazzadur Rahman, on the evening of Friday 6 February in the Donegall Road area of south Belfast.

Foreign students, like migrant workers, are a valuable resource both to our society and for our economy. We understand that local community representatives and the PSNI’s Minority Liaison Officer have been in contact with Mr Rahman to offer him advice and support.

We note the latest figures provided by the PSNI which indicate that there has been a reduction in racist crime and racist incidents in the South Belfast area. Over the period 1 April 2008 – 1 November 2008, there were 81 racist incidents and 61 racist crimes, compared to 117 racist incidents and 79 racist crimes over the same period the previous year. This reflects some of the very positive work which has been carried out by Government, the PSNI and community workers in the area.

We will continue to support preventative measures and capacity building of many local community groups, including those within the South Belfast area, through our Minority Ethnic Development Fund. To this end, and as part of our ongoing work to combat racism and to promote good relations, we recently launched our Minority Ethnic Development Fund for the incoming financial year.

The £1 million we have allocated this year represents a substantial increase on the previous annual spend prior to the restoration of devolution. This is clear evidence of our commitment to good relations and good race relations. Whilst we clearly cannot prevent all racial incidents and crimes, we are determined to do what we can to both prevent them occurring and to support those who are victims.

Sexual Orientation Issues

Dr Farry asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what consideration will be given to sexual orientation issues in the forthcoming strategy for Cohesion, Sharing and Integration. (AQO 2124/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Programme of Cohesion, Sharing and Integration (CSI) is currently being considered and we plan to present our proposals in the near future. However, at present the development of the CSI policy remains work in progress. Once published we will undertake a full consultation process on our proposals.
We are committed to challenging all intolerance. OFMDFM is currently refreshing a draft Sexual Orientation Equality Strategy and a supporting Cross-Departmental Action Plan for presentation to Ministers for consideration by the OFMDFM Committee and the Executive by early summer 2009.

Reports and Consultation Documents

Mr McKay asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister if it will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6003/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: When they receive notification that a publication is being issued, each MLA has the option of accessing the publication on the relevant Departmental website or requesting a hard copy. Departments will facilitate MLAs’ preferred method of receipt.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Increasing the Usage of E-mail

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail. (AQW 5618/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): DARD is committed to reducing the amount of paper usage and increasing electronic communication. E-mail systems were introduced into DARD in the early 90s and all non-industrial staff have e-mail access. Extensive use is made of this channel, both internally and over the internet to customers. For example over the last 30 day period, DARD staff sent an average of 15,500 e-mails per day and received 34,000 per day. An e-mail policy is in place and staff are encouraged not to print unless necessary.

DARD, in common with other Departments, introduced the TRIM electronic records management system in 2007/08. Since its implementation, 1.4 million documents have been stored electronically in DARD rather than in paper files.

Other measures introduced which cut down on paper include:

• DARD eNewsletter e-mailed to 4,000 farmers each month.
• Promotion of electronic services with 26% of cattle birth registrations and 100% of cattle eartag authorisations now taking place on-line.
• A policy of ensuring information and publications are available through the DARD web presence resulting in over 400,000 page views and 97,000 publication downloads in the month of January 2009.
• Extensive use of the intranet to keep staff up to date.

Rivers Agency

Dr W McCrea asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures have been put in place by Rivers Agency to mitigate the impact of flooding on residents living in close proximity to the Sixmilewater River, Antrim. (AQW 5627/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Having witnessed at first hand the effects of flooding I fully understand your concerns and can assure you that the Rivers Agency is doing all that it can to reduce the risk of flooding from the Sixmilewater River at Antrim. To this end general maintenance works at a number of locations along the river have already been undertaken. In addition my staff are continuing to provide flood emergency response as required. The Agency is also undertaking detailed investigations to identify how best to manage the risk of flooding at Antrim.
NI Cut Flower Growers Association

Dr W McCrea asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussion her Department has had with the Northern Ireland Cut Flower Growers Association to promote its industry. (AQW 5628/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department has worked very closely with all cut flower and foliage businesses in the North to help develop the sector over the last ten years. DARD through CAFRE, Greenmount Campus, has taken a lead role in the development of cut flower and foliage technology and its transfer to businesses. In addition growers have been provided with significant training in both technical and marketing issues. The sector has grown from 12 businesses with a farm gate value of just over £200,000 in 2004 to 30 businesses worth approximately £850,000 in 2008.

My staff have organised regular meetings through the Cut Flower and Foliage Development Group to help increase co-operation and collaboration between local growers. The creation of a NI Cut Flower Growers Association was proposed by a local grower at one of these meetings. My staff supported this initiative, encouraging local growers to form a representative group and elect their own chairperson. However Growers have not felt confident enough to do this as yet.

A considerable amount of emphasis has been placed on the promotion and marketing of locally grown flowers and foliage by my Department.

Supply Chain development Branch staff together with Crops and Horticulture development Branch staff have worked very closely with growers to help them improve their supply chains and promote and market their products. This has been achieved through the implementation of Supply Chain Awareness Programme and the Supply Chain Development Programme, and facilitation of communication and collaboration with wholesalers, grower/packers, florists, retail multiples buyers and a Dutch agent.

During 2008 my Department worked with growers to implement an extensive promotional campaign aimed at florists, wholesalers and the general public. A summary of initiatives is within the Background Note. Ongoing promotional activities are planned for 2009 in conjunction with local growers.

NI Cut Flower Growers Association

Dr W McCrea asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what grant assistance is available to cut flower growers for processing and marketing. (AQW 5629/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Financial assistance may be available to cut flower growers involved in the processing and marketing of cut flowers through a number of schemes under the Rural Development Programme.

The Processing & Marketing Grant Scheme provides capital support for capital investment to erect new buildings, refurbish old buildings and buy new equipment. This scheme is not available to projects relating to normal farm-based production and storage activity.

The Market Development Grant Scheme provides financial support for businesses to improve the marketing of their produce.

The Supply Chain Development Programme will facilitate co-operation and collaboration in supply chains between producers and processors.

The Processing & Marketing Grant and Marketing Development Grant Schemes are delivered directly by DARD and are currently open for applications. The Supply Chain Development Programme is due to open for applications later this year.

Departmental staff have met with most of the cut flower growers to discuss and promote these schemes.

Ten-Day Payment Target

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much of the total amount due to suppliers has been paid within the ten-day payment target. (AQW 5640/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department for the months of December 2008 and January 2009 has paid £27,147,000 from a total amount of £30,809,000 within the ten-day payment target.
Department Funding to Groups in Lagan Valley

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the amount; and (ii) the nature of funding that her Department has provided to groups in the Lagan Valley constituency, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 5810/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department awarded £837,176.09 to groups in the Lagan Valley constituency through letters of offer issued in 2006. Funding was distributed throughout 2007 and 2008. There were no relevant letters of offer in either 2007 or 2008.

The recipients and nature of the awards made are detailed in the attached table. The figure rises to £971,034.54 taking into account awards to individuals and businesses.

Forest Service

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to her answer to AQW 1834/09, how it aligns with Forest Service’s commitment to retain its UK Woodland Assurance Standard certification.

(AQW 5817/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My answer to AQW 1834/09 aligns very closely with the Forest Service’s commitment to retain its UK Woodland Assurance Standard (UKWAS) certification.

Restoration of planted ancient woodland sites (PAWS) is a requirement of the Standard, which was published in 2000. Forest Service received its first certificate in respect of UKWAS in May 2000, having initiated a survey to determine the location of planted ancient woodland sites under its stewardship.

The Forest Service was found to be fully compliant with the PAWS restoration requirement within the standard following the completion of survey work in early 2001 and development of a restoration strategy.

This position has been maintained and carried forward to the current certification period of 2005 to 2010, in respect of which independent audits to assess conformance with the UKWAS PAWS restoration requirement have been conducted on four occasions.

Conformance with this requirement is an important aspect of the Forest Service’s commitment to retain its UK Woodland Assurance Standard (UKWAS) certification. This will be subject to further audits going forward, including a full re-assessment in 2010.

Maintenance of Forest Parks

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what budget is available for the maintenance of forest parks; and when Castlewellan Forest Park complex was last painted.

(AQW 5913/09)
The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: A budget of £120,000 has been made available, in the current financial year, for the maintenance and refurbishment of buildings in the Forest Service estate. Castlewellan Forest Park complex was last painted 7 years ago.

Public Accountability Training

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what was the cost of Public Accountability Training of all those on the Statutory Joint Committee of the Local Action Group; and what is the planned cost for any future training of members of other tiers. (AQW 5915/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The provision of Public Accountability training has yet to be completed for all members of the seven Joint Council Committees acting as local action group Administrative and Lead Financial Actors, who will collectively be administering in excess £100m on behalf of my Department. At present £2,939.10 has been paid in respect of training and the balance for providing training, including 1 ‘wash up’ course for those who were either unable or failed to attend their agreed course, will be in the region of £4770.

Phytophthora Ramorum Disease

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plan her Department has to deal with the threat to plants and trees of the pathogens (i) phytophthora ramorum; and (ii) phytophthora kernoviae, as 19 historical National Trust gardens in other parts of the UK were affected by phytophthora in December 2008. (AQW 6052/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My inspectors carry out annual surveys for Phytophthora ramorum and Phytophthora kernoviae. To date, only Phytophthora ramorum has been found here.

The Plant Health (Phytophthora ramorum) Order (NI) 2005 prohibits the introduction and spread of P.ramorum. My Inspectors have the powers to take necessary steps to ensure that the infection is controlled. In order to prevent the disease from becoming established, measures to contain and eradicate infection are taken on premises where it is found. These include the issue of statutory destruction notices for infected plant material, and prohibitions on movement of plants in the immediate vicinity of the infection.

Phytophthora Ramorum Disease

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many incidences of (i) phytophthora ramorum: and (ii)phytophthora kernoviae diseases have been recorded in each year, since legislation was introduced by the Forestry Commission in 2002. (AQW 6053/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Annual surveys for Phytophthora ramorum / Phytophthora kernoviae are carried out by my inspectors at nurseries and garden centres, green sites, and forestry sites in the north of Ireland. The first finding of P.ramorum was confirmed in early 2003. P. kernoviae has not been found here. The results of the surveys are as follows:

Bereavement: Farming Families

Mrs O’Neill asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she has taken to advise farmers on how to handle their business affairs in the circumstances of family bereavement. (AQO 2256/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I fully understand that a family bereavement is a very difficult time and dealing with the transfer of business ownership would not be a priority in these circumstances. As part of the ongoing dialogue with industry stakeholders, the NI Agricultural Producers Association (NIAPA) highlighted the delay many farm businesses experience in receiving DARD payments following the death of the Head of Business. Since my Department cannot make any payments to a farm business until the legal process clarifies who is entitled to receive such payments, I acted on this feedback and commissioned officials to prepare an advisory leaflet to help farmers become more aware of the issue and resolve these difficulties. The leaflet, ‘Succession Planning for Farmers’ was published in April 2008 and highlights the importance of making legal arrangements for the future ownership of the farm businesses. Following a press launch, the leaflet was made available to farmers through DARD offices and on the DARD website. In addition copies were provided to both NIAPA and UFU.

Forests: East Antrim

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans her Department has to market the forests in the East Antrim area for outdoor pursuits. (AQO 2257/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Our forests offer great potential for the development of recreation and public access opportunities for local people and visitors alike. Forest Service woodland in the East Antrim and adjacent areas continues to be used extensively for informal public recreation as well as for more specific events. Existing facilities are marketed through a wide variety of media including the Forest Service web site, the WalkNI site sponsored by the Tourist Board, at information kiosks located at Forest Parks, through leaflets and tourist road signs.

We recognise that the demand for recreational use of forests is changing and that the expectations of today’s visitors have changed. In response to this, Forest Service has recently consulted on a draft strategy to develop the recreational and social use of our forests. The strategy, which will be published after Easter, recognises that Forest Service cannot achieve this development on its own and emphasises that partnership working with others, both commercial and with other public bodies, will enable much more to be done. For example, Forest Service are already working with NI Environment Agency in relation to the renewal of the Ulster Way in order to establish a well promoted, sustainable long distance quality walking route, long sections of which pass through scenically attractive forests. In East Antrim, this has also involved formal arrangements with Larne Borough Council in order to facilitate a section of the Ulster Way through Ballyboley Forest.

Environment: Funding for Farmers

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what funding is paid to farmers to enhance the environment. (AQO 2258/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Agri-environment Schemes under the Rural Development Programme (RDP) are the main mechanism for enhancing the environment. Under the 2007 – 13 RDP some £219 million has been allocated to these Schemes.

Dioxin Scare: Exceptional Support Measure/State Aid Applications

Mr Savage asked he Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to the pork dioxin scare, to provide an update on the Exceptional Support Measure and State Aid applications. (AQO 2260/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: An application for an Exceptional Support Measure (ESM) was submitted, via Defra, to the Commission on 17 February. The purpose of the Exceptional Support Measure is to seek European Community authorisation and possible co-financing support for action to protect public health and provide the basis for the stabilisation and recovery of our beef and pigmeat markets.
The application is currently being progressed through official channels and we are in regular communication with Commission officials. We understand there are no substantive problems and it is anticipated that a favourable decision will be made in the near future. It is hoped to commence the Cull and Disposal of eligible cattle and meat product once EC approval is obtained.

Once the full decision of the ESM has been established we can apply for State Aid approval of any additional support measures for affected producers and processors.

Inheritance Tax on Conacre Land

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the impact that changes in inheritance tax on conacre land will have on farming and rural communities. (AQO 2261/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: As you will be aware, this issue arises from a ruling in April 2008 on Inheritance Tax liability by the Special Commissioners and relates to a specific case where a farm with significant development potential was let entirely in conacre for a number of years prior to the death of the owner. An appeal recently launched through the Court of Appeal against this ruling has been unsuccessful. Further appeal may be possible. If the ruling continues to be upheld then the issue will be for farms who let land in conacre rather than active farm businesses. Moreover, it appears to relate only to conacre land with development potential rather than all conacre land. Consequently, the impact would seem to apply only in very specific circumstances.

Naturally, I would be extremely concerned at any decision which might threaten the viability of active family farm businesses which characterise our agricultural industry and lie at the heart of rural communities. I will continue to monitor developments with respect to this ruling.

EU Health Check

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what recommendations she has put forward in relation to voluntary and compulsory modulation to the EU Health Check. (AQO 2262/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I had two main objectives on modulation in relation to the EU Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) Health Check. I wanted to see no increase in the total (EU + voluntary) modulation rates applied to our farmers as a result of the CAP Health Check when compared with previously announced rates. The substitution of voluntary modulation with EU compulsory modulation would also help align our total modulation rates closer to those in other EU Member States. Secondly, I wanted to ensure that this substitution would not disrupt our Rural Development Programme, which was a very real risk.

I am pleased to report that both these objectives were achieved. The total modulation rate applied to direct payments in the North of Ireland in the period 2009–2012 will remain unchanged from those previously announced and there will be no need to recast our Rural Development Programme.

Binevenagh Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what input her Department has had into the consultation on the future of the Binevenagh Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty. (AQO 2264/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The new Binevenagh Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB) was designated in 2006, and in February 2008, at the request of NIEA, the Causeway Coast and Glens Heritage Trust set up the Binevenagh AONB Forum.

The Forum is tasked with the production of a co-ordinated strategy for the AONB. Countryside Management Branch is represented at the Forum.

Wind Turbines

Mrs McGill asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her efforts to resolve issues in relation to wind turbines. (AQO 2265/09)
The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I am pleased to say that a provisional negotiated settlement was reached with the 11 Powerbreeze owners last month. All 11 owners have indicated that they will accept an ex-gratia payment from the Department, subject to a detailed written offer, and the details of this are currently being finalised. Part of this is receiving confirmation from owners in writing that they will accept the terms and conditions of the offer-this is awaited. However once received, I expect that the offer will be processed quickly and the money will be in the applicants’ bank accounts at the end of the month. Given the protracted difficulties with this particular part of the Wind Energy for Rural Businesses Scheme I am pleased that a resolution has been found that I believe is fair and reasonable. The lessons learnt from our experience with this Scheme will inform our processes for future such schemes and programmes.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Economic Downturn

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) what the impact of the economic downturn has been on the delivery of his current policies and practices; and (ii) what changes to existing policies and practices have been made in relation to his Department’s responsibilities to address the effects of the economic downturn. (AQW 5404/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr Campbell): The Department has no quantative evidence of the impact of the economic downturn on the culture, arts and leisure sectors but it is likely that the reduction in disposable income will impact negatively on general confidence in the sector. Further clarity on the impact will be available when the Arts Council of Northern Ireland General Population Survey results are published later in 2009.

While no changes have been made to existing policies and practices in direct response to addressing the effects of the economic downturn, my Department, through its arms length bodies, and subject to available resources, continues to promote and develop the culture, arts and leisure sectors, conscious of the important contribution that this sector can make to economic development, for example:

- the Arts Council is currently undertaking a multi-million pound arts infrastructure programme which will lead to the construction of new arts facilities of world class standards. This will make a significant contribution to Northern Ireland’s cultural tourism; attracting visitors and investment to Northern Ireland;
- in addition the Arts Council is administering the Creative Industries Innovation Fund (£5m) over the next three years. The programme aims to deliver support to 140 Northern Ireland creative businesses over the period to March 2011; and
- initiatives undertaken by NI Screen continue to attract significant investment in the local economy through Film and Television. This has helped develop the Northern Ireland skills base and support local industry.

Finally, DCAL, through its arms length bodies, will continue to do all it can to ensure the delivery of its capital programme, within the shortest possible timeframe. Work is currently progressing or planned in the near future on a number of key projects with a combined project cost of over £90m.

GAA

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list all the invitations he has received to attend GAA events, functions and games. (AQW 5451/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Since becoming Minister I have received one invitation to a GAA event. This event was the TG4 All Ireland Ladies Championship Finals in Croke Park in September 2008. I did however attend the official opening of St Brigid’s GAC playing grounds on Saturday 13 September 2008 but the original invitation was addressed to my predecessor Edwin Poots MLA.
Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many employees in his Department travel from Derry/Londonderry to Belfast for work.

(AQW 5523/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: There are no employees in my Department who travel from Londonderry to Belfast for work.

Sports and Recreation Facilities

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the total capital grants awarded to each of the local councils in relation to providing new sports and recreation facilities, over the past 5 years.

(AQW 5571/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL), as part of its remit to develop the recreational potential of inland waterways administers an annual grant-aided Water Recreation Programme for which a total annual budget of up to £120k is available. This Programme is aimed at provision, in partnership, of new/improved water-based access/facilities, such as riverside paths and canoe trails for free public use. Over the past 5 years my Department has grant–aided 5 local council projects with total capital funding of £86,292 k for new water recreation facilities.

Under Measure 1.2a of the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure awarded capital grant of £191,708 towards one successful Council project to provide new angling and water recreation facilities.

Over the past 5 years my Department has grant-aided 10 local council projects with total funding of £177,132k for improving water recreation facilities.

Separately, under Measure 1.2a of the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure awarded grant of £326,630 towards 3 successful Council projects to develop existing (i.e. improving) angling and water recreation facilities.

Ulster-Scots Projects

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many Ulster-Scots projects his Department has funded in the Lagan Valley constituency, in each of the last three years. (AQW 5609/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Ulster-Scots Agency does not presently hold the requested information on a constituency basis. The Agency is currently reviewing its systems and procedures and as part of that I have asked the Agency to start capturing the information in this format from 1 April 2009.

The Agency can however provide detailed information pertaining to specific Ulster-Scots projects or events upon request.

The Arts Council of Northern Ireland has funded Ulster-Scots projects in the Lagan Valley Constituency over the past three years as detailed in the table below:-

Orange Culture

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what work he has undertaken to promote the Orange culture, and what funding has been provided. (AQW 5610/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Between 2005 and 2008 my department allocated approximately £30k annual funding for an Education Officer post and associated project costs in the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland (GOLI). The figure increased to £39k in 2008/09.

The objective of the funding was to help GOLI to develop confidence within its own community through increasing knowledge of the heritage and values of the Order and to foster greater awareness and understanding of Orange culture within the wider community.

Recently-funded projects include a Williamite Trail exhibition and map, and a ‘Famous Orangemen’ exhibition.

The Community Festivals Fund was established by DCAL in 2006 and the delivery of the fund was devolved to District Councils with effect from 1st April 2008. One of its aims of the fund is to enable community organisations to celebrate their cultural identity. In the three years of operation the Fund has awarded almost £67,500 to 17 festivals organised directly by the Orange Order.

Increasing the Usage of E-mail

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action he is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail. (AQW 5619/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: My Department, in accordance with its Waste Management Strategy, issues internal and external communication electronically where this is possible.

Furthermore, e-mail policy for the Northern Ireland Civil Service is currently under review by the Department of Finance and Personnel and will actively discourage staff from printing unnecessarily.

Guidance on the distribution of departmental publications and consultation documents, published in November 2008, states that there is a requirement to provide hard copies of documents to certain recipients including political representatives, parliamentary contacts and Legal Deposit and other libraries. The Guidance does, however, point out that organisations can, if they wish, choose not to receive hard copies of publications.

Language Strategy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what regard he will pay to the possible politicisation of Irish when bringing forward a paper to the Executive on a language strategy. (AQW 5637/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: This Strategy for Indigenous or Regional Minority Languages represents an opportunity to depoliticise the language issue in Northern Ireland.

I am keen that the Strategy will create the opportunity for an even handed approach to the indigenous or regional minority languages in Northern Ireland that will reduce and eliminate the disparity in funding between Irish and Ulster Scots.

Language Strategy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what consideration he will give to the possible underfunding of Ulster-Scots when bringing forward a paper to the Executive on a language strategy. (AQW 5638/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I am committed to addressing the disparity in funding between Irish and Ulster-Scots.

Through the implementation of the Strategy for Indigenous or Regional Minority Languages it is my intention to ensure that the development of one language must be considered within the context of an equitable approach to the other.

GAA

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to provide a list of (i) GAA clubs; (ii) GAA grounds; (iii) GAA competitions; and (iv) GAA trophies, that are named after members of Irish Republican terrorist organisations or those convicted of terrorist activity. (AQW 5671/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure does not retain information on GAA clubs, grounds, competitions or trophies that are named after members of Irish Republican terrorist organisations or those convicted of terrorist activity. However, following a number of representations, I wrote to the GAA expressing my concern about this serious matter. I have also made clear that one of my major priorities as Sports Minister is to promote sport as a vehicle for improving community relations and community cohesion in Northern Ireland and that I fully expect all sports governing bodies, including the GAA, to do all they can to support these objectives. Linkages to terrorism, in whatever form, are not acceptable in society.
Orange Order Based Projects

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many Orange Order based projects his Department has funded in the Lagan Valley constituency, in each of the last three years. (AQW 5813/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: In the last three years my Department has funded 1 Orange Order based project in the Lagan Valley constituency.

The event was the Orangefest 2006 organised by Maghergall LOL. Funding for the event was provided from the Community Festivals Fund.

Glenavy River

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline his Department’s involvement in the restocking of the Glenavy River with fish. (AQW 5853/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: DCAL received an application for a section 14 fish movement application from Glenavy Conservation and District Angling Club on 5 January 2009. The Department received confirmation from Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) that water quality assessments carried out confirmed that the water quality would sustain and support fish life.

Based on this information my officials granted approval for 500 1lb brown trout and 2,000 brown trout fry to be transported from Mairs Fish Farm in Crumlin to the Glenavy River for restocking purposes.

Sport NI

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if the Minister is aware that the delay in Sport NI informing sporting bodies if they have received funding means some staff will have to be put on redundancy notice until funding is secured. (AQW 5960/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) has received 19 business cases from sports governing bodies seeking funding for the period 2009-2013. I am fully aware of the urgency in assessing these and providing decisions to the sports bodies. My officials are working closely with SNI to expedite the matter. Approvals, if appropriate, will issue at the earliest juncture to ensure that no staff within governing bodies are made subject to redundancy notices.

Elite Facilities Programme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, since the Elite Facilities Programme for gymnastics in Lisburn will not go ahead to stage 2 of the process, if he will consider funding stage one. (AQW 5961/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Funding will only be considered for those applicants chosen as preferred bidders, following Sport NI’s assessment at Stage Two of the Elite Facilities Programme competition.

Only those applications which met the criteria for selection at Stage One of the competition were approved to proceed to Stage Two.

2012 Olympic Games: Events in Northern Ireland

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what London 2012 Olympic Games events are planned for Northern Ireland. (AQO 2267/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Northern Ireland will not host any London Olympic Games events in 2012. Except for football, the London Organising Committee were required to submit a compact venues portfolio which demonstrated that all other sporting events would take place as close to the Olympic Park as possible.
The International Olympic Committee requires football to be staged around the country in existing stadia. Northern Ireland was referred to in the bid book as being considered for staging football subject to completion of a new stadium.

Sports Stadia

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what discussions his Department has had with the three sporting codes in relation to the future international standard sports stadia. (AQO 2273/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Now that I have advised Executive colleagues of my views on the Maze stadium proposal I want to maintain the momentum and find a cost-effective, sustainable and equitable way of assisting football, rugby and gaelic games develop solutions to their stadia needs.

With this in mind I took an early opportunity to hold meetings with the Governing Bodies of football, rugby and gaelic games last month in order to explore options on future stadium provision. I explained to the Governing Bodies that I wanted them to return to me with a limited number of options for consideration. The Governing Bodies have undertaken to do this in the very near future.

PRONI: Acquisition of Records

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, following the Public Records Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) going on-line, to outline the policy and methods used by PRONI in the acquisition of new historical records. (AQO 2274/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland launched its electronic catalogue on the internet at the start of February 2009. It contains over 1 million catalogue entries and makes available the contents of PRONI’s catalogues to a worldwide audience. Although the PRONI catalogue has gone on-line, the office continues to acquire historical records. A new PRONI Acquisition policy had recently been drafted. It sets out PRONI’s legislative remit as the repository for selected official records from across the Northern Ireland public sector and privately-owned records relating to Northern Ireland. This wide remit is to ensure the selection of records for permanent preservation that reflect the history of Northern Ireland and its people. This includes records of political, economic, social, religious, educational, sports and cultural affairs at government, community and individual level.

Official records from across the NI public sector are selected using good records management practice to ensure that records of historical and research value are transferred to PRONI. Private records originate from a wide variety of sources – businesses, clubs, societies and charitable organisations, churches and faith groups, solicitors, landed estates, and private individuals whose contributions have impacted on life in Northern Ireland and beyond. The contents of such records are extremely varied and therefore PRONI officials must assess each potential deposit before it is accepted into the archives.

Irish-Language Strategy

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the formulation of the Irish-Language Strategy and to outline which Irish-Language groups he has met in the last month in relation to this strategy. (AQO 2275/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I intend to present an initial scoping paper to the Executive Committee in the near future on my approach to the drafting of a Strategy for Indigenous or Regional Minority Languages.

When completed the strategy will protect, enhance and develop the Ulster-Scots language, heritage and culture and the Irish-language and ensure that both languages are treated fairly with equal respect and recognition.

I have not met with any Irish-language groups in the last month however my officials and I have engaged with Foras na Gaeilge, Pobal and a delegation of the Irish Guild of the Church of Ireland in recent months on the Strategy and Irish-language issues.
Loyal Orders: Cultural Contribution

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for his assessment of the cultural contribution made by the Loyal Orders. (AQO 2276/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I recognise the important role and contribution that the Loyal Orders provide to Northern Ireland society and to the preservation of our cultural heritage.

As I am sure the Member is aware, the Loyal Orders raise substantive funds for both local and national charities, and carry out important work in improving community relations.

The continuation and promotion of our cultural heritage, through the work of the Loyal Orders, is reflected in, for example:

- Twelfth of July celebrations, organised by the Orange Order, is recognised as one of the most significant cultural events in Northern Ireland, in terms of participants and audience;
- the significant efforts made by the Orange Order to promote the Twelfth of July celebrations as an inclusive family-friendly festival and as an opportunity to attract cultural tourism; and
- the role played by the Apprentice Boys of Derry in the development of the Maiden City Festival in Londonderry, which is a highly successful celebration of our cultural heritage and a major tourist attraction to the City.

Furthermore, my Department funds an Education Officer post in the Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland. The role of the post holder is to raise awareness of the heritage and values of the Order in the wider community. The Officer has given presentations to Good Relations Officers in local Councils, to schools in the Catholic Maintained sector and to new recruits to the Police Service of Northern Ireland, in order to help foster greater understanding of Orange Culture.

Gregory Campbell MP MLA

Efficiency Savings: DCAL

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what efficiencies his Department has made in the current financial year. (AQO 2277/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: As part of the Comprehensive Spending Review, my Department has a target to deliver cash releasing efficiencies of £3.6m in this financial year. It planned to achieve this by reducing various budgets within the Department and the Department is currently living within these.

£400k of the total savings relate to Ordnance Survey Northern Ireland. Since this body has now moved into the Land and Property Services Agency, these savings will be delivered through that agency.

Irish-Language Functions: Ministerial Attendance

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans he has to attend Irish-Language functions. (AQO 2278/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I will consider any invitations to such events in accordance with my diary commitments.

Lyric Theatre: Progress Report

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for a progress report on the Lyric Theatre site. (AQO 2279/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Lyric is one of a small number of the Department’s strategic arts infrastructure projects. My officials have worked closely with the Lyric Theatre, Central Procurement Directorate, the Arts Council, and with other funders to progress this important project.
Detailed work on the design and costs of the new building has recently been completed and a Letter of Intent to the Contractor, Gilbert Ash, has been issued. Some further issues such as ensuring the necessary insurance requirements are in place are now being finalised.

I have announced just this morning that the Contractor will start work on site today, 9th March. I believe that the new Theatre will provide a much valued facility for audiences and artists alike and will make a significant contribution to our cultural offering.

My officials will continue to work closely with the Lyric Theatre to ensure this project is taken forward in a timely and cost effective manner.

2012 Olympic Games: Benefits for Northern Ireland

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for his assessment of the benefits for Northern Ireland arising from the 2012 Olympic Games in London. (AQO 2280/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: My Department has created a strategy for maximising the benefits to Northern Ireland from the London 2012 Olympics and DCal has responsibility for co-ordination. The strategy identifies benefits associated with the following themes: sport; culture; tourism; business; education; volunteering; and skills development. The anticipated benefits are: increased participation in sport, culture and volunteering especially among young people; increased economic activity through businesses winning 2012 contracts; increase in visitors through sports and cultural tourism.

Sporting Facilities: Upgrade

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when he will make an announcement on the upgrading of existing facilities for all the main sporting codes, within the timescale of the 2012 Olympic Games. (AQO 2281/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport NI is currently managing a range of funding programmes that aim in a cost effective manner to address the needs of all the main sporting codes, not just at representative and inter-county levels but to also address the deficit in facilities at the wider sub-regional level. As I have already indicated, in deferring major stadium expenditure, I will instead bring forward a number of other high priority Sports capital programmes, using at least part of the funding allocated to the stadium over the next 2 years, to support Sport more generally, including Football, Rugby and the GAA. All of this has the potential to provide upgraded facilities which could feature by 2012.

Creative Youth Partnerships

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the level of support available from his Department to Creative Youth Partnerships. (AQO 2282/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Creative Youth Partnerships is a valuable programme, which seeks to promote the participation of children and young people in artistic and creative activities and contribute to the professional development and employment opportunities of artists.

In the 2008/09 financial year, DCAL has provided Creative Youth Partnerships with £250k funding while the Arts Council of Northern Ireland has contributed a further £50k.

The Creative Youth Partnerships Steering Group has produced a business plan to mainstream the initiative and this is currently being considered by my officials in conjunction with colleagues in the Arts Council and the Department of Education. This is taking place in the context of the major structural changes occurring in the education sector including the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority. This process will inform decisions around the future funding of Creative Youth Partnerships. My officials are working with the Arts Council and Department of Education to consider possible funding for 2009/2010.
Irish-Language Broadcast Fund

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for his assessment of the success and value of the Irish-Language Broadcast Fund. (AQO 2283/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: In 2004 the Government announced the establishment of an Irish-Language Broadcast Fund (ILBF) with a £12m allocation over a four year period from 2005/06 to 2008/09.

An interim evaluation of the ILBF, completed by Deloitte MCS Ltd in August 2007, found that the targets set for the ILBF in terms of production, broadcasting and training had been met.

A Post Project Evaluation is planned to take place after 31 March 2009 and I will be better able to assess value when that work is complete.

In the interests of parity, I am currently investigating the possibility of a similar fund for Ulster-Scots.

Gregory Campbell MP MLA

Salmon Stock: Preservation

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he has held any consultations with the Minister of the Environment in relation to the preservation of salmon stocks. (AQO 2284/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: There is ongoing liaison between officials from the two Departments on a range of salmon conservation issues in the context of the Habitats Directive, the Water Framework Directive and the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation (NASCO) convention.

Sports Funding

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, following his announcement on the proposed stadium at the Maze site, to outline how available funding will be divided between the three main sporting codes. (AQO 2285/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I have asked the Governing Bodies of the football, rugby and gaelic games to identify a short list of stadium development options. In the interim I intend to defer major stadium expenditure and instead bring forward a number of other high priority capital projects using some of the funding allocated to the stadium over the next two years.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what the risks are for the schools who are proposing to set their own entrance examinations in Magherafelt and Ballymena; and what costs would they have to incur. (AQW 5448/09)

The Minister of Education (Ms C Ruane): Sa treoir ar Aistriú 2010 a foilsíodh de bhuin an ráitis a thug mé don Tionól ar 2 Feabhra 2009, déantar cur síos ar phriomhbhreithnithe áirithe do scoileanna dá leithéid mar mhaith leis an bhaol atá ann go mbeidh mífheidhmiú ann i dtaca leis an phróiseas aistrithe iar-bhunscoile a íoslaghdú.

The Transfer 2010 guidance published on foot of my 2 February 2009 statement to the Assembly describes certain key considerations for such schools in the interests of minimising the risk of dysfunction to the process of post-primary transfer.

• They should be very mindful of the need for a robust assessment mechanism capable of providing for sound ability-based admissions decisions;
• They should be aware that it would be their responsibility to ensure that parents have access to all the information they need in relation to any test;
• They should understand the critical importance of a special circumstances procedure to cater for claims that certain circumstances may have adversely impacted on a child’s performance on the day a test was conducted;
• They should assume that they will need to make fair and robust decisions in respect of applicants who have not been able to sit a test or who can not be assessed fairly by such a test. In other words, they should consider a procedure akin to the special provisions procedure which existed in support of the Transfer Test.
• They should consider that the Department made the Transfer Test available in Irish in recognition that primary education is also delivered in Irish.

These issues are only illustrative of areas where schools may be challenged. The general point is that if there are weaknesses of this nature in the manner in which a school provides, administers and supports a test, then these weaknesses carry significant risks. They may incur financial liabilities through successful judicial challenge and fundamentally undermine a school’s admissions decisions. These risks provide one of the reasons why the guidance does not recommend that schools attempt to use academic criteria.

If all schools adhere to the recommendations contained in the guidance, there will be no risk of dysfunctional processes, and we will lay the foundations of a system based upon social justice, equality and excellence.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to list the post-primary schools who have indicated that they will not go against her guidelines; and what percentage they make up of the post-primary sector. (AQW 5450/09)

The Minister of Education: I would expect the vast majority of post-primary schools to adhere to the recommendations in the Transfer 2010 guidance, however, individual schools are not required to formally notify me of their intentions.

Sa ráiteas ar Aistriú 2010 a thug mé don Tionól ar 2 Feabhra 2009 d’iarr mé go ndéanfadh gach iar-bhunscoil breithniú cúramach ar an Treoir ó mo Roinn ar Aistriú 2010 agus d’iarr mé ortha clois na moltaí a dhéantair inti.

In my 2 February 2009 statement to the Assembly on Transfer 2010 I asked that all post-primary schools consider my department’s Transfer 2010 guidance carefully and adhere to its recommendations. If that request is listened to and acted upon Transfer 2010 will become one of the key building blocks of reform resulting in a system based upon social justice, equality and excellence that treats all of our children equally.

School Meals

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how schools will ensure that applicants entitled to free school meals will gain admission at the same rate as all other applicants, under her recommendations for post-primary education. (AQW 5452/09)

The Minister of Education: The Transfer 2010 guidance recommends that, in relation to free school meals, all post-primary schools list as their first criterion for admission a commitment to admit children who are entitled to free school meals in numbers which reflect the proportion of first preference applications received from such children.

Tá súil agam go gcuireadh le chéile leis na moltaí seo mar mhaithe le córas a chruthú atá bunaithe ar cheartas sóisialta, ar chomhionannas agus ar shármhaitheas.

I hope that all schools will adhere to these recommendations in the interests of creating a system based upon social justice, equality and excellence.

Bangor Academy

Mrs I Robinson asked he Minister of Education to detail the implications of the collapse of Hocheiff (Ireland) Ltd for Bangor Academy. (AQW 5651/09)
The Minister of Education: Nil eolas ar bith ag an Roinn maidir le teip Hochtief (Ireland) Ltd. De réir dealraimh, ní bhaineann an conradh maidir le soláthar áiseanna agus seirbhísí chuig Bangor Academy le Hochtief (Ireland) Ltd.

The Department is not aware of a collapse of Hochtief (Ireland) Ltd. In any case the contract for the provision of facilities and services at Bangor Academy is not with Hochtief (Ireland) Ltd.

Educational Underachievement in Lagan Valley

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to address the issue of educational underachievement among children in the Lagan Valley constituency. (AQW 5718/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá mé ag cinntiú, trí chlár leasúcháin na Roinne, go bhfuil fócas soiléir ar chaighdeáin san oideachas; ag dul i ngleic leis an bhac ar an fhoghlaim a bhíonn ag barraíocht daoine óga agus ag íslú na bearná ghnóthachtála.

Through the Department’s reform programme, I am ensuring that there is a clear focus on standards in education; on tackling the barriers to learning that too many of our young people face; and on closing the achievement gap. I want to ensure that all schools and pupils, including those within the Lagan Valley constituency, receive the support and challenge necessary to raise standards.

The revised curriculum being introduced in all grant-aided schools is designed to support young people in acquiring not just the knowledge they need to succeed and do well in life and at work but also the skills they need to apply that knowledge. It will be supported with new assessment arrangements and by a new school improvement strategy, which is currently being finalised and is designed to ensure that every school maintains a clear focus on improvement.

There will also be a clear focus on improving attainment in literacy and numeracy through the revised literacy and numeracy strategy.

In my 2 February 2009 statement to the Assembly on Transfer 2010 I asked that all post-primary schools consider my Department’s Transfer 2010 guidance carefully and adhere to its recommendations. If that request is listened to and acted upon Transfer 2010 will become one of the key building blocks of reform resulting in a system based upon social justice, equality and excellence that treats all of our children equally.

Within our post-primary schools, the move towards an Entitlement Framework, which ensures that every young person has access to a much broader and better balanced range of courses and is supported with appropriate careers education, will help young people to succeed and gain qualifications in areas that interest them.

Additionally, action is being taken to address some of the barriers to learning that young people face – whether through disadvantage, through disability or because of other factors. A new policy for supporting Newcomer Children is currently being finalised and work is continuing to support the needs of children with disabilities, children from the Travelling Community and other young people who are at risk of underachievement.

The Extended Schools programme is also making a significant contribution to reducing differentials and improving the quality of life for children and young people particularly from disadvantaged areas. During the current financial year 19 schools within the Lagan Valley constituency have benefitted from almost £334k of Extended Schools funding which allows for the provision of a wide range of activities and services outside of the traditional school day.

Christ the Redeemer PS is also included in the £2m South Eastern Education and Library Board’s Integrated Development Fund programme which seeks to raise educational achievement by initiating a number of new services and seeks to work in more integrated ways by building new and improved relationships between agencies, schools, parents, pupils, professionals and the local community.

School Pupils in North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many pupils in (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools in the North Down constituency, have a first language other than English. (AQW 5833/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh sa tábla thios.
The information requested is contained in the table below.

Links Between Schools and Companies

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education what programme is in place to develop stronger links between primary and secondary schools and companies.

The Minister of Education: Tá sé tábhachtach go mbíonn an deis ag daltaí ar gach leibhéal bheith ag plé le cúrsaí gnó agus leis an saol oibre, agus cuireann an curaclam athbhreithnithe, agus á rollú amach i ngach scoil dheontaschúnta, an deis seo ar fáil dóibh.

It is important that pupils at all levels have an opportunity to engage with business and with the world of work, and the revised curriculum, which is being rolled out across all grant-aided schools, now provides real opportunity for this to happen. From the earliest stages, children are now introduced to the world of work and given opportunities to learn about different careers and to begin to develop the skills they will need to do well in life and in work. In post-primary schools, Learning for Life and Work is a core statutory component of the revised curriculum and pupils have the opportunity to explore work in the local and global economy; to develop career decision-making skills; and to focus on enterprise and entrepreneurship.

It is also important though that pupils’ experiences are broadened and, each year, the Department provides funding to a number of business education organisations who do excellent work in developing links between schools and businesses and in facilitating opportunities, for example, for both pupils and teachers to participate in work placements. We are committed to working through our business education partners and through business representative organisations to make sure that those opportunities are extended, particularly for young people who are at most risk of educational underachievement. I have met, for example, with the Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the IOD and the CBI to explore how best we can make sure that the connections between school and work are enhanced.

Additionally, my Department and the Department for Employment and Learning have begun the process of implementing the recently published Careers Education, Information, Advice and Guidance strategy, designed to support pupils in making career choices and decisions about their futures. The strategy will ensure that business-related issues such as employability and work related learning remain central themes.

Children with Autism

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education what summer schemes are available for children with Autism.

The Minister of Education: Tá tugtha le fios dom ag Príomhfheidhmeannaigh na mBord Oideachais agus Leabharlaine ag socraítear scéimeanna samraidi faoi láthair, cé nach bhfuil dhualgas reachtúil orthu soláthar speisialta scoileanna samhraidh a dhéanamh, do dhaltáí a dhreaíolann ar scoileanna speisialta, agus páisti a bhfuil uathachas acu san áireamh, agus gur minic a shocraitear iad i gcomhpháirtíocht le comhairli áitiúla agus le hiontabhais sláinte agus seirbhísí sóisialta.
I have been advised by the Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards that while Boards do not have a statutory duty to make specialist summer school provision they do currently arrange summer schemes, often in partnership with local councils and health and social services trusts, for pupils in special schools which includes those with Autism. In addition the Southern and Western Education and Library Boards have been working with MENCAP and Autism NI to submit a bid to the Big Lottery Fund to provide summer schemes for children with Autism. The outcome of this bid is currently awaited.

Guidance Notes

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how much money was spent on guidance notes in Irish sent to parents of year six pupils, since 1 January 2009. (AQW 5876/09)

The Minister of Education: Ba é costas aistriúchán Gaeilge na litreach agus an ábhair treorach a d’eisigh mé i mí Feabhra 2009 chuig tuismitheoirí gach páiste i Rang 6 maidir le hAistriú 2010 ná £545.15.

The cost of translating into Irish the letter and guidance material I issued in February 2009 to the parents of all P6 children on the issue of Transfer 2010 was £545.15.

Catholic Certificate of Education

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education if she has discussed the removal of the Catholic Certificate of Education with the Department for Employment and Learning (AQW 5877/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní raibh plé agam go fóill leis an Roinn Fostaíochta agus Foghlama faoin teastas i staidéar ar reiligión.

I have not yet discussed the certificate in religious studies with the Department for Employment and Learning. However, the Department for Employment and Learning will be consulted during the review of current and future recruitment opportunities in the Teaching sector.

The Review will be completed by January 2010.

Special Needs Pupils

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how many places will be available for special needs pupils in the next term in the North Down area. (AQW 5878/09)

The Minister of Education: The special educational needs (SEN) framework does not include a system to set aside or make available specific SEN places for children in mainstream schools. Children with a statement of SEN and for whom a school is named in the Statement by an Education and Library Board (ELB) will be accepted by that school outside of the current enrolment figure. SEN children who do not have a statement will be enrolled in schools in the normal manner and their needs assessed and met in line with the current SEN framework.

Bíonn freagracht dhíreach ar eLBanna as páistí a chur i scoileanna speisialta agus déanfaidh siad é seo de réir riachtanas an pháiste, de réir mianta na dtuismitheoirí agus de réir na cóiríochta atá ar fáil sa scoil speisialta ag an am sin.

ELBs have direct responsibility for placing children in special schools and will do so in accordance with the needs of the child, the wishes of the parents and the accommodation available at that time in the special school.

Newcomer Pupils

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education how much money was allocated to schools for each ‘newcomer’ pupil, per school year, and how this allocation is reviewed, monitored and evaluated. (AQW 5905/09)

The Minister of Education: Shonraigh daonáireamh Mheán Fómhair 2008 go raibh 6,995 dalta nua, a bhfuil Béarla mar theanga breise acu. Is meadú 23% é seo ar fhugúirí na bliana roimhe.
The October 2008 census indicated that there were 6,995 newcomer pupils, who have English as an additional language. This is an increase of 23% on the previous year’s figures.

The Common Funding Formula (CFF) is used to allocate funding direct to schools. Schools receive an additional 0.5 of the basic Age Weighted pupil Unit (AWPU) cash value (£983.08 in 2008/09) for each full-time newcomer pupil designated in the school census as having English as an additional language. During 2008/09 a total of £5.5million was allocated to schools via CFF.

Under Local Management of Schools arrangements, it is for the Principal and Board of Governors of each school to determine how their budgets are spent and to plan their use of resources to maximum effect, in accordance with their assessment of the needs and priorities of the school. Whilst, there is evidence from schools showing that they use their CFF funds in a variety of ways for the benefit of newcomer children, the Department has established a working group that will develop guidelines for Principals and Boards of Governors. These guidelines will detail good practice, specifically outlining how they should use their EAL CFF money to achieve the optimum support to newcomer children in schools. It is anticipated that these guidelines will be issued to all schools by the end of 2009.

Whilst funding to schools is vital, the support the Inclusion and Diversity Service (IDS) provides to schools is also relevant. This regional service was established on 1 April 2007 and is operated by the five Education and Library Boards to support those schools with newcomer pupils who have EAL. In 2008/09 it received £1,015,000.

I have also taken action to ensure that Roma children, who face the double barriers of language and discrimination as a historically nomadic group, receive a fair and equal education. Additional funding is being provided to schools based on the current reported number of Roma children.

The funding provided to IDS has allowed a number of EAL support services to be established. These include diversity coordinators, a multi-lingual website, interpreting and translation services and a toolkit for primary-school teachers in Ireland.

My Department requested the Education and Training Inspectorate to conduct a survey of the support schools and the IDS are providing. The survey was completed at the end of 2008 and the report will be published soon.

It is planned to launch the policy ‘Every School a Good School - Supporting Newcomer Pupils’, in April 2009. The aim of this policy is to ensure that schools and Education and Library Boards are in a position to welcome newcomer pupils into their school communities. In particular, that they are able to support them in their acquisition of the language of instruction, whether it is English or Irish, to enable them to access the school curriculum and partake in every aspect of school life.

Review of the Building Handbook

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education when the review of the building handbook will be completed and published. (AQW 5906/09)

The Minister of Education: Criochnaíodh athbhreithniú ar Lamhleabhar um t hógáíl foirgnimh Bunscoile le déanaí agus foilseofar an leagan athcheartaithe ar ball beag.

The review of the primary-school building handbook has recently been completed and the revised version will be published in the near future.

Byron Review on Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education for an update on the implementation of the recommendations of the Byron review on education. (AQW 5908/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá sé mar rún ag moltaí Athbhreithniú Byron paistí a choinneáil slán sábháilte sa domhan digiteach agus dá réir sin, téann siad thar na sainchúraimí a bhaineann go sonrach leis an earnáil oideachais.

The Byron review recommendations have as their intention to keep children safer in a digital world and as such extend beyond areas specific to the education sector.
The oversight of implementation of the recommendations here rests with the ministerial sub-committee on children and young people’s safeguarding sub group which is chaired by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS).

The Department of Education is working closely with DHSSPS, and other Departments, to achieve improvement in the current arrangements around internet safety.

Proposals for any changes here in respect of e-safety within schools, the curriculum and capacity building with the school workforce will be referenced to both the north/south and English, Scottish and Welsh context.

The ‘Better Education’ working group is one of four which are to be established to deal with the full range of Byron report recommendations and the Department expects to have membership.

Lagan College

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Education for an update on the current works at Lagan College and to provide a timetable for the completion of this project. (AQW 5923/09)

The Minister of Education: Is cuid de chnuas-thionscadal i gComhpháirtíócht P aoibhíneach Phoiblí (PPP) é Lagan College in éineacht le Tor Bank Special School, Dún Dónaill.

Lagan College is in a Public Private Partnerships (PPP) clustered project along with Tor Bank Special School, Dundonald. The PPP project is to extend and refurbish Lagan College and to provide a new school for Tor Bank Special School. There are remaining issues to be resolved before a preferred bidder can be appointed for this building project. The Department is working closely with those involved to allow the procurement process to move ahead.

You will be aware that I have reservations on the use of PF1/PPP as a procurement method. No new PPP/PFI projects have been announced by the Department since 2004.

Killard House Special Needs Unit

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education what plans the South Eastern Education and Library Board has to move Killard House special needs unit to the Donaghadee High school site. (AQW 5931/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá tugtha le fios dom ag an seeLB go bhfuil siad ag fiosrú úsáidí eile don fhoirgneamh ag Donaghadee High School, agus gurb é athlónnú an aonaid ag Killard House a d’fhéadfadh a bheith i gceist mar úsáid amháin.

The seeLB has advised that it has been investigating alternative uses for the building at Donaghadee High School, one of which may be relocation of the unit at Killard House. A series of meetings are being held to gauge the opinion of various stakeholders, but no decision has yet been made.

School Facilities in Strangford

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to upgrade school facilities in the Strangford constituency in 2009/10. (AQW 5992/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá dhá thionscadal i dtogghcheantar Loch Cuan atá cuimsithe i gClár Mór Oibreachta Chaipitíil na Roinne.

There are two projects in the Strangford constituency included in my Department’s Major Capital Works Programme. Planning of these is being taken forward and construction work is expected to start on site in the 2009/10 financial year. These are:-

Glastry College, Ballyhalbert – New School Building on an Extended Site.
Total Estimated Value - £12.5m

St Joseph’s Primary School, Carryduff – New School Building on Existing Site. Total Estimated Value - £5.4m

A number of potential minor works schemes have also been identified to improve facilities at the following schools. They may be progressed next year subject to resources being available.

Composite Classes

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 5184/09, (i) to name; (ii) to list all the classes; and (iii) to provide the number of pupils in primary schools where composite classes have been in existence in the Southern Education and Library Board, over the past five years. (AQW 5993/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá socraithe agam go gcuirfear an t-eolas i Leabharlann an Tionóil.

I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail. (AQW 5620/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): My Department actively promotes a range of measures to reduce the amount of paper documentation and increase the use of electronic communication as part of a green policy initiative which was introduced in March 2005.

Staff across the Department have been instructed to use e-mail wherever possible for both internal and external communications. This initiative has been adopted to reduce the amount of paper documentation produced and applies to general correspondence, consultation documents, reports, leaflets etc.

External customers are also encouraged to communicate with the Department through electronic means.

In addition and as part of the Northern Ireland Civil Service-wide Records NI Reform Project, the department uses an electronic document record management system called “TRIM”. Since the implementation of TRIM, official records are held electronically and it is no longer necessary in most cases to create a paper record for preservation purposes, or store them in a registered file. Electronic records held on TRIM can be sent as an attachment via the e-mail system.
Student Guidance

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what systems are in place to ensure that students are advised of potential growth employment markets and are guided into the appropriate further education or university courses to maximise their employment opportunities. (AQW 5705/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Careers Service has a key part to play in supporting the decision making process through the provision of effective guidance and up to date labour market information. The approach to the delivery of careers guidance is impartial and client centred and explores the skills, interests, experience and achievement of the individual together with labour market information relating to current and future opportunities and requirements.

All DEL’s Careers Advisers are professionally qualified in the delivery of information, advice and guidance. Their knowledge and experience on potential growth employment markets is enhanced through attendance at Professional Development days. Close liaison with the Sector Skills Councils ensures access to accurate, up-to-date labour market information which enable clients make effective career decisions to maximise their future employment opportunities. Advisers also carry out individual research and regular employer visits.

Students are advised of potential growth employment markets through guidance interventions, departmental publications, careers conventions, exhibitions and media and marketing campaigns.

Stranmillis College

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what investment there has been to upgrade the facilities at Stranmillis College in the last ten years. (AQW 5716/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: There has been a significant investment to upgrade the facilities at Stranmillis University College over the past ten years. In total since 1999/00 to the present, £12.1m of investment has taken place at the College. £11m of this has come from my Department and the College has contributed the remaining £1.1m.

The majority of this investment has been incurred on the Orchard project (£6.3m), Halls Heating Decentralisation (£2.1m) and in various works to comply with disability legislation (£1.5m). These three areas have accounted for £10m of the investment and the balance has been expended on a number of smaller projects.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he has met or written to the Minister of Education about the Catholic Certificate of education. (AQW 5717/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I can confirm that I have not met or written to the Minister of Education about the Catholic Certificate of Education.

Individual Learner Programme

Dr W McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what progress has been made to introduce an individual learner programme for young people entering further education. (AQW 5754/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: A project is currently under way to pilot an Individual Learner Programme for 16 to 19 year olds entering further education colleges from September 2009. The pilot will include the guidance processes used by colleges, and how these can be supported by technology. Ultimately, the aim is to provide 16 to 19 year olds entering an FE college with a personalised programme of learning that would enable his/her career aspirations to be met in the most effective way.

Further Education Colleges

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give an update on the pay agreement of the National Joint Council (NJC) for non-teaching staff in further education colleges. (AQW 5987/09)
The Minister for Employment and Learning: In October 2008, a National Joint Council (NJC) pay increase of 2.45% to non-teaching staff in Further Education (FE) Colleges was agreed. This increase is effective from April 2008. Additionally, following an arbitration award at national level in March 2009, a further 0.3% on top of the 2.45% is expected to be paid to non-teaching staff from April 2008. The implementation of this pay increase is subject to an approval process in accordance with the public sector pay policy adopted by the Executive. The terms under which the pay agreement will be applied, and its associated business case, are currently being prepared by FE College employers in consultation with my Department. That work should be completed within the next two weeks. The proposals, when finalised, will be submitted to the Department of Finance & Personnel (DFP) for approval. The increase will be paid once that approval process has been completed.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Executive-Led Trade Missions

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the level of investment and the number of new jobs created and filled in the last twelve months as a direct result of Executive led trade missions to the United States of America. (AQW 5570/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs Foster): In the last twelve months, there was one Executive led trade mission to the United States of America organised by Invest NI. The primary objective of the trade mission was to develop trade and export opportunities for Northern Ireland companies. In October 2008, I led 15 companies to Boston and Silicon Valley. As part of the follow-up to the USNl Conference, I attended a number of meetings with client contacts. However, to-date there have been no foreign direct investments or new jobs created in Northern Ireland as a direct result of this visit.

Electricity Grid Network

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consideration has been given to strengthening the electricity grid network to allow for the exploitation of wave energy potential off the Antrim coast. (AQW 5731/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In light of conclusions from the Grid study completed in late 2007, the Department has engaged with Northern Ireland Electricity as grid owner, and the Utility Regulator, to consider where, and how, the electricity grid in Northern Ireland could be strengthened to accept a much higher proportion of renewable power generation.

While it is likely that most of any additional renewable generation will be from on-shore wind, any grid development proposals will include consideration of the potential for ocean energy, including wave and tidal stream, and offshore wind.

The Department is already considering the environmental implications of the development of marine renewables and off-shore wind energy through a Strategic Environmental Assessment.

Waste Management

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what funding and support is available to encourage businesses to manage waste and become more energy efficient. (AQW 5801/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI funds three external delivery organisations to provide resource efficiency support to businesses in Northern Ireland and agrees the work programme of each of these organisations (The Carbon Trust, Envirowise and the National Industrial Symbiosis Programme) to ensure locally focused delivery of these national resource efficiency programmes. Financial support of these programmes amounts to £5.9 million in 2008/2009.

Best practice solutions to waste management and sustainable energy including energy efficiency can be provided by the delivery organisations through site visits and follow-up reports, dedicated help lines, free literature, technical seminars and training. An interest free loan is also available for sustainable energy projects that meet particular carbon saving and cost criteria.

In addition Invest NI’s Sustainable Development Team delivers a further support programme dedicated to providing sustainable development consultancy support. Site visits, advice and information on sustainable energy solutions are also available from in-house experts where this is appropriate.

Invest NI’s nibusinessinfo.co.uk website provides guidance and signposting in the resource efficiency arena.

LEDU Staff

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what protection will be given to former LEDU staff if the company to which their pensions are transferred ceases to trade. (AQW 5885/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The Trustees of the LEDU Retirement and Death Benefits Plan are under an obligation to act in the best interests of all the members of the Plan. In fulfilling this duty, the Trustees, prior to purchasing any insurance policies, will satisfy themselves as to the financial strength of the insurance company.

In the event that the Plan is wound up, the Plan would cease to exist and the Trustees and DETI, as the former Principal Employer under the Plan, would be discharged from their duties. As all members’ benefits would have been transferred to an insurance company, the insurance company would become responsible for the payment of members’ benefits. Should problems occur in the future with the insurance company, members would only have recourse to the insurance company.

All insurance companies are, however, governed and regulated by the Financial Services Authority and are required to maintain, at all times, statutory reserves that are sufficient to enable them to honour their guaranteed liabilities. In addition a compensation fund, the Financial Services Compensation Scheme, exists to provide compensation to insurance company policyholders where an insurance company becomes insolvent and their liabilities are not bought over by another company. This compensation is subject to a 90% limit.

LEDU Staff

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if she will consider delaying the decision to transfer the LEDU pension fund to an insurance company. (AQW 5886/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The decision to wind up the LEDU Retirement and Death Benefits Plan rests with the Trustees of the Plan and was communicated to members on 6 October 2008. Wind up of any pension scheme tends to be a rather lengthy process and the timing of the transfer of the fund to the preferred insurance company will be discussed at a full meeting of the Trustees. The Trustees will take expert advice into account and only after due diligence will the transfer of funds take place.

Northern Ireland Electricity

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if Northern Ireland Electricity intends to re-open funding for the ‘Insulation Measures only’ schemes, in the Antrim Borough Council area. (AQW 5946/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: NIE Energy has confirmed that they do not currently intend to re-open funding for their ‘Individual Measures- Insulation’ scheme, however they do plan, through the Energy Efficiency Levy Programme, to run several energy saving schemes once again from April 2009. One of the potential schemes, available to vulnerable householders and similar to the ‘Individual Measures only’ scheme, will pay for household insulation to be installed in privately owned or rented homes. Another scheme will give cashback to privately owned or rented (non-vulnerable) householders when they install insulation. Specific eligibility criteria for these schemes have yet to be confirmed.

All proposed Energy Efficiency Programme schemes are currently under review and will be subject to approval by the Energy Saving Trust and the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation.
Invest NI

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the area of Invest NI land that was sold to new and existing clients during the last three years.

(AWQ 5969/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In the three years from April 2006 to March 2009, Invest NI has sold 208 acres of land to its client companies.

60 clients made first time purchases totalling 182 acres, while 14 clients purchased 26 acres of additional land for expansion projects.

The provision of high-quality serviced sites for industrial development at strategic locations across Northern Ireland is a key goal of the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland. Invest NI has a target to acquire and/or develop an additional 200 acres of land by 2012.

Serviced sites are provided to client companies with an identifiable and viable development project in locations where there is clear evidence of market failure.

New Businesses

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what advice and help are available for individuals wanting to start up new businesses.

(AWQ 6015/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI have developed the new Enterprise Development Programmes to replace the current Start a Business programme.

Starting in April, these programmes will provide continuous support for those at different stages of setting up a business. This includes a range of targeted initiatives to help those at Pre-Start to progress their confidence and business idea. For those at the Start-Up stage, this support offers a range of workshops and seminars, flexible to the needs of the client, as well as tailored one to one mentor support for those with real growth potential.

The focus will be on building the skills and capabilities of the entrepreneur and in ensuring that those businesses capable of making a significant economic impact receive appropriate support. With its enhanced mentoring and follow-on support through the early stages of growth, the new programmes will provide a firmer foundation on which success can be built.

In addition to the programme, applicants will also be referred to other relevant sources of support such as online resources for information and partner organisations such as Advantage, Princes Trust, DARD and local councils.

Invest NI

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the investment made by Invest NI in the North West Action Plan (NWAP) phase 1 and 2.

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The first phase of the Invest NI's North West Action Plan (NWAP) was successfully implemented during the period April 2003 – March 2006. It was initially developed in response to a series of significant job losses and closures in the textile sector in the North West. It focused largely on addressing capital / infrastructural issues and the total Invest NI investment in the period was £80 million against a target of £60 million.

Whilst Invest NI continued to make significant investments in the North West in the period April 2006 – March 2008, including a number of substantial Foreign Direct Investment projects, there was a change in focus for NWAP Phase II. This was driven by a need to consolidate and facilitate the utilisation of some of the capital and infrastructural investments under NWAP Phase I in a changing economic environment. A series of specific joint initiatives were developed with the North West Councils aimed at addressing capability weaknesses within SMEs throughout the region. The total investment in these initiatives was almost £300,000 over a two year period, of which Invest NI contributed £100,000.
Invest NI

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much will be invested by Invest NI in North West Action Plan Phase 3. (AQW 6145/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI continues to be committed to working in partnership with local stakeholders in the north-west and is actively investing in relevant projects in the region in line with its current corporate plan.

No decision has yet been made in relation to a formal north-west action plan phase 3 and this is due to a number of factors including:

- The desire of the original council partners (Londonderry, Strabane, Coleraine, Limavady and Magherafelt) to move away from this traditional grouping and begin to develop new partnerships within the context of the new review of public administration council clusters.
- The significant European funding now available via the Interreg, rural development and DETI competitiveness and employment programmes.
- The role of the North-West Gateway Initiative in providing a framework for future investment in the wider north-west region.

Invest NI will continue to engage with councils in the north-west to explore the most appropriate mechanism for the delivery of all relevant joint projects and initiatives.

Invest NI

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much was invested in the virtual cross-border business park by Invest NI and the Irish Development Agency. (AQW 6148/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The virtual cross-border business park is now known as the north-West Business technology Zone (nWBtZ). nWBtZ is a flagship cross-border collaboration between Invest NI and the IDA. It includes high specification property provision in both Letterkenny and Londonderry, improved cross-border telecommunications and IT linkages, and a skills development programme all supported by promotional materials to market the Zone to external and internal investors.

The total investment in the nWBtZ is circa £39 million, which includes public and private sector contributions. The investment in Northern Ireland is £17.4 million. Invest NI’s contributed £6.75 million and IDA’s contribution was £8.4 million.

Cross-Border Business Park

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether there will be another phase of the cross-border business park, and if not, to detail the reasons why this will not take place. (AQW 6149/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: All elements of the cross-border business park, now known as the North West Business Technology Zone (NWBTZ), are now in place and they include the North-West Business Complex, the speculative build at Timberquay and the Academic Business and Clinical Research and Innovation Facility (Clinical Translational Research and Innovation Centre) facility at Altnagelvin hospital.

We are now entering a period of consolidation with regard to the various properties and the priority for the relevant project promoters is to maximise the capacity of their facilities and progress towards the achievement of the key targets and milestones set out in the original proposals.

In addition, there are a number of other public and private sector developments proposed for the city which will have synergy with, and compliment, the activities of the current NWBTZ.

Any future investment will have to be considered in the context of the progress of the current NWBTZ project and any other relevant infrastructure projects being proposed to ensure that there is not oversupply leading to potential displacement, particularly of private sector investment. Therefore, there are no immediate plans for a NWBTZ Phase 2 but the IDA/Invest NI Working Group continues to meet with a view to identifying further initiatives which may be suitable for support as part of the NWBTZ.
Invest NI

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why Invest NI has withdrawn (i) a Managing Director; (ii) an International Sales Manager; and (iii) the North West Initiatives Team, from Derry/Londonderry. (AQW 6152/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: At no time has there been an Invest NI Managing Director based in the North West.

A member of Invest NI’s International Marketing staff, although based in Belfast, was, for personal reasons, temporarily permitted to work out of the agency’s North West Regional Office.

Invest NI has not withdrawn any resources from the North West Initiative team, which is still in place and operating from the North West Regional Office.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

ERINI Report

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the Finance Minister’s statement ‘That report has no standing whatsoever with the Executive’ as recorded in Hansard, Volume 38, no 2 dated Tuesday 17th February 2009, in reference to the ERINI report published February 2009. (AQW 5697/09)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr S Wilson): I fully concur with the remarks made by the Finance Minister on this matter.

It is my understanding that this ERINI report was commissioned by an Assembly Committee and not the Executive. It certainly has not been circulated to Executive Ministers for consideration.

Planning Applications

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what action is being taken to speed up the process of smaller scale planning applications. (AQW 5748/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Following a successful pilot with Derry District Council and Limavady Borough Council, my Department is now rolling out a streamlined consultation scheme with a further 22 Councils.

Streamlining benefits all stakeholders in the planning process allowing decisions on non-contentious planning to be issued without formal presentation to Council on a monthly basis. Instead a weekly list of streamlined applications received by my Department will be provided to the Council. As a safeguard to the system the Council or Divisional Planning Manager has the right formally to refer an application to the Council for consideration.

The pilot scheme has an immediate impact accelerating the processing of all planning applications in the Derry City Council area by allowing a decision to be reached and issued quickly on non-contentious planning applications particularly those applications relating to small and medium sized business enterprises.

Other measures are taken by my Department to expedite the processing of certain applications such as those on which grant-aid may depend and certain commercial, industrial and social infrastructure proposals with a clear strategic, employment, community or public interest dimension such as social housing applications.

Enforcement Action Notices

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to the answer to AQW4231/09, for details of, and a timescale for, the clearance of outstanding enforcement actions, especially those that have been with his Department for a period of between 18 – 24 months. (AQW 5749/09)
The Minister of the Environment: In response, I would like to make 2 points: firstly the number of new cases is of course beyond the control of my Department; and secondly it is difficult to be specific on the anticipated timescales that will be required to resolve outstanding enforcement cases due to their complex nature, some of which may be linked to current planning applications. That said the Department continues to examine current cases on an ongoing basis with a view to prioritising the oldest for action, those between 18-24 months and resolving the more straightforward cases. This is beginning to be effective as witnessed by the number of cases resolved through our enforcement schedules and the halt in the rise of live cases.

Water Pollution Offences

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to his answer to AQW 4007/09, to detail (i) the number and, nature of; and (ii) what action his Department took on alleged pollution incidents by (a) Antrim Borough Council (b) Belfast International Airport (c) Coca Cola (d) DARD Rivers Agency (e) DARD Forestry Service (f) Farran’s Construction (g) Lisburn City Council (h) Moy Park Ltd (i) O’Kane Foods (j) Stoneyford Concrete, in each of the last five years. (AQW 5765/09)

The Minister of the Environment: A total of 53 pollution incidents have been recorded by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency as attributable to the eleven bodies listed in the question over a five year period from 2003 to 2007. The table appended to this answer lists the 11 named alleged offenders and also summarises the total number of pollution incidents attributed to each, the years in which the incidents occurred, the type/category of the pollution, and the severity category of the incidents. It also indicates where warning letters were issued and where prosecutions were taken.

Protection of Marine Life

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what his department has done to protect marine life.

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has designated a number of marine areas for species and habitats of conservation concern under the Habitats and Birds Directives. These areas include Strangford Lough, Murlough Bay and Rathlin Island. Other areas are being considered for designation.

My Department also protects marine life by responding to pollution incidents, monitoring the chemical and biological quality of the aquatic environment and through the regulation of effluent discharges.

Planning Applications

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment how many planning applications have been processed through the streamlined process introduced in January 2009.

The Minister of the Environment: The streamlining of planning applications was introduced by my Department as a pilot project with Derry City Council in December 2007 and was extended to Limavady Borough Council in June 2008. Following the success of the pilot the scheme was extended a further 22 Councils in January 2009. As Planning Service Development Management Statistics are produced on a quarterly basis, figures have not yet been published for the period since January 2009.

However, from 3 December 2007 to 30 September 2009 there were 353 streamlined applications processed and approved in the Derry City Council and Limavady Borough Council areas. Figures for 1st October 2008 to 31st December 2008 will be available from 20th March 2009.

Strategic Projects Unit

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment how many planning applications have been received by the Strategic Projects Unit since its creation and the average time it has taken to reach a determination.

The Minister of the Environment: The Programme for Government refers to a six month target being applied for the processing of large scale development proposals. These are proposals which are considered to have significant economic or social implications for the whole or a substantial part of Northern Ireland. In response to this, the Planning Service created 2 Strategic Project teams at Headquarters in October 2007 specifically to process these types of applications. This also includes facilitating pre-application discussions (PAdS).

PAdS were formally introduced in December 2007 and the 2 teams are currently dealing with 29 proposals in the pre-application discussion stage.

At the time the teams were formally established, they were required to complete the processing of a number of applications already in the system. Some were longstanding and therefore had lengthy processing times. The teams are currently processing 60 Article 31 cases and a further 36 major applications.

Since the creation of the teams, 6 applications have been processed to a decision or recommendation to the Minister in line with the PfG target with an average timescale of 6.3 months.

Renewable Energy and Waste Management Facilities

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the criteria for installing renewable energy and waste management facilities for businesses in rural and urban areas.

The Minister of the Environment: Proposals for renewable energy and waste management facilities attaching to existing business activities are considered on their individual planning merits. In many cases these works would not require the grant of planning permission. Where planning permission is required, proposals would be judged against the provisions contained in the area plan and in the light of all material planning considerations.
Specifically Planning Service has recently introduced draft Planning Policy Statement 18 Renewable Energy which aims to encourage the greater use of small scale renewable energy technologies. Similar planning policy guidance for waste management, Planning Policy Statement 11 Planning and Waste Management, provides a framework for determining waste management proposals.

Wind Turbines

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment if his Department has plans to offer incentives to farmers and landowners, who own or install wind turbines, to help meet the European Union’s Renewable Directive Targets for 2020. (AQW 5825/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has no such plans. Whilst my Department provides planning policy guidance on renewables, renewable energy policy in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

NI Environment Agency

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the obligatory ‘Right of Entry’ process which the NI Environment Agency officials must adhere to prior to entering a holding for inspection purposes. (AQW 5848/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Where it forms part of their particular duties, Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) staff can be authorised to enter premises when implementing or enforcing legislation that is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment.

The legislation specifies the circumstances in which an authorised officer can enter premises (which may include land, vehicles, vessels and residential premises) in the exercise of their statutory role.

Most legislation specifies that authorised officers must produce evidence of their authorisation on request. Some legislation requires that prior notice should be given to the owner or occupier of the premises concerned.

Driver and Vehicle Agency

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment why the Driver and Vehicle Agency does not send out information about fees with Driving Licence Renewal forms. (AQW 5898/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The fees associated with the administration of driver licensing are based on a system of cost-recovery and the fees are reviewed and, where necessary, amended, on a regular basis. If the Driver & Vehicle Agency were to print fees on the application forms or any accompanying leaflet it would mean that the forms or leaflets would have to be reprinted on each fee change. It would also mean batches of application forms/leaflets held elsewhere, such as at post offices, would have to be recalled. In order to avoid these costs and to limit confusion regarding fees at the period of transition from one fee to another, it has been decided to remove reference to specific fees from all DVA driver licensing forms. Up to date information on fees is available on the DVA website or from DVA customer services.

Recycling Packaging

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment if he would consider making supermarkets more responsible for recycling packaging. (AQW 5899/09)

The Minister of the Environment: 60% of Commercial and Industrial Waste is to be recycled by 2020. This non-statutory target is set out in the NI Waste Management Strategy 2006-2020 and applies to NI as a whole.

However, the revised European Waste Framework Directive (2008/98/EC) came into force on 12 December 2008 and is due to be transposed into national law by 12 December 2010. It includes the following statutory recycling target:
• by 2020, the preparing for re-use and the recycling of waste materials such as at least paper, metal, plastic and glass from households and possibly from other origins as far as these waste streams are similar to waste from households, shall be increased to a minimum of overall 50% by weight

The Department is awaiting clarification on whether this target includes waste from commercial premises where it is similar to household waste. If this turns out to be the case the target contained in the Directive will supersede the current non-statutory targets in the NI Waste Management Strategy.

My Department will continue to work with businesses to help them achieve these targets through its work with the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) and a new Waste Communications Strategy as outlined in my answer to your recent question on reducing the amount of packaging (AQW 5531/09).

Craigavon Area Plan 2010

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment when the Craigavon Area Plan 2010 will be reviewed.

(AQW 5940/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The Department does not propose to review the Craigavon Area Plan 2010 in advance of the new district councils assuming plan making powers under the Review of Public Administration in 2011.

The Department has carried out a review of Housing lands in Craigavon and discussed its findings with Craigavon Borough Council. This review indicates there is sufficient remaining land within the range of settlements across Craigavon Borough (both zoned phase 1 land and committed unzoned land) to provide for almost 10,000 dwellings. This represents sufficient land supply to meet housing need to 2015 and beyond. The Department does not therefore propose to release any phase II land for development in advance of the new district councils assuming plan making powers under the Review of Public Administration in 2011.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment when the land zoned as phase II in the Craigavon Area Plan 2010 will be released for development.

(AQW 5941/09)

River Pollution

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment how many (i) enforcement notices have been issued; and (ii) actions have been taken, by his Department against river pollution, in each of the last 3 years, in the Upper Bann constituency.

(AQW 5942/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Where water pollution occurs, it is the policy of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) to take formal enforcement action if this is warranted by the severity of the pollution and the circumstances which led to it occurring.

The formal enforcement options available to NIEA in water pollution cases include:

a. the issuing of an enforcement warning letter, or;
b. the initiation of prosecution proceedings, and / or;
c. the issuing of a Water Order Notice.
Table A details the number of substantiated pollution incidents and the number of Enforcement Notices issued under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 in each of the last 3 years in the Upper Bann catchment area. Table B details the actions and outcomes to date.

Planning Policy Statement 2: Planning and Nature Conservation

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made in updating Planning Policy Statement 2 - Planning and Nature Conservation. (AQW 5962/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Significant progress has been made in updating Planning Policy Statement 2 – Planning and Nature Conservation and I anticipate publishing a draft for public consultation in the spring.

River Pollution

Ms Ni Chuilin asked the Minister of the Environment if he plans to bring forward legislation about people who illegally dump waste and if he has had any discussions with the PPS to increase fines and deterrents for polluting rivers and the environment. (AQW 6047/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has recently acted to increase the penalties for the illegal deposit of waste on land. The Waste (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 2007 provided powers for the courts to impose more significant custodial sentences and financial penalties for waste offences. The maximum fine in the Magistrates Court was increased from £20,000 to £50,000 and the maximum prison sentence in the Crown Court was increased from 2 years to 5 years. As a further deterrent to such illegal activity, courts were also granted wider powers to require convicted offenders to pay investigation, enforcement and clean-up costs and to award the Department possession of vehicles used in the commission of illegal waste offences.

In addition, my Department will consult shortly on a range of measures designed to further strengthen the enforcement framework for the illegal deposit of waste on land. Depending upon the outcome of the consultation process, I anticipate that a number of the proposals will be included either in a Waste Bill or in other appropriate primary legislation.

At this point in time I have no plans to make further legislative changes to the fines and deterrents for polluting rivers and the environment. I can also confirm that in previous discussions with PPS, my officials were advised that sentencing is entirely a matter for the courts to judge.
Graduated Drivers Licensing

Mr Ross asked the Minister of the Environment if he intends to have a consultation on Graduated Drivers Licensing, and if so, when this will occur. (AQW 6074/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My main priority at present is the issue of drink driving, which is relevant to all drivers including learners and novices, and my Department will shortly be issuing a public consultation on proposals to reduce blood alcohol limits. I also intend to consider the outcome of the recent UK-wide consultation on “Learning to Drive” before deciding on the next steps in relation to driver training, testing and licensing in Northern Ireland. I have decided not to proceed at present with other aspects of graduated driver licensing.

Road Safety Council

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the future plans for road safety committees in the light of his decision to cease funding for the Road Safety Council. (AQW 6118/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Following a critical review of its performance, I wrote to the Road Safety Council (RSC) on 9 December 2008 to inform it of my decision to channel funding not into central administration but direct to local committees.

The future of road safety committees, as part of an independent and voluntary movement, is very much in their own hands. It is my intention that front-line road safety activities should continue, and that is why I have asked officials to put in place a new funding model for the period from 1 April 2009. Local committees have been provided with a simple application form, and the Department is waiting to receive their bids for funds for the new financial year.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) to list all the companies including consultancy companies, that have been involved in the Workplace 2010 project; and (ii) to detail how much each company has been paid. (AQW 5514/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Dodds): Details given in this answer relate to the Workplace 2010 PFI procurement process. In the main they exclude expenditure managed by the Department in relation to capital and operational costs of NICS accommodation outside the PFI procurement.

The workplace 2010 procurement was an extensive procurement project that ran for four years and involved hundreds of suppliers. The table below lists all companies that received over £25k (in total over the 4 years of the procurement process) for primarily procurement related work, however the figures shown may include some other payments that the same companies received in relation to non-procurement activities during the same period.

Capital Expenditure

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to report on the anticipated (i) net; and (ii) gross capital expenditure for the financial years (a) 2008/09; (b) 2009/10; and (c) 2010/11.

(AQW 5539/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The latest available Forecast Outturn information provided by departments suggests that their net capital expenditure will be £1.5 billion in 2008-09, whilst gross capital expenditure is expected to be £1.6 billion.

The Executive’s gross and net capital expenditure plans for 2009-10 and 2010-11 are set out in Table 1 below.

Ratepayers

Civil Service

Lone Pensioners Allowance

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what are the figures; and total value for the take up of lone pensioners allowance, for the current financial year. (AQW 5593/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Land & Property Services has made 17,095 awards of Lone Pensioner Allowance with a total value of £2,671,923 in the current financial year. These figures do not include awards of the allowance made by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) all small and medium sized firms bidding for government contracts as part of a consortium or group of firms; and (ii) all small and medium sized enterprises which have undertaken work as part of a supply chain to larger contractors doing work for the government, in the last 12 months. (AQW 5660/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: This information is not readily available and could only be collected at disproportionate cost.

Drivers on the Stormont Estate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps have been taken to ensure that drivers do not speed on the grounds of Stormont Estate. (AQW 5673/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The following measures have been taken to discourage speeding in the grounds of the Stormont Estate:

- Signs are in place at each entrance clearly displaying the 30mph speed limit;
- A number of traffic calming ramps have been installed between the Stoney Road entrance and the entrance to Stormont Castle;
- The Stormont Estate Rangers regularly monitor traffic on the estate roads;
Mobile speed detection and indication units are installed at different locations within the estate to remind drivers of their speed. The Rangers can and have stopped drivers whom they believe are driving in excess of the speed limit to remind them of the speed restrictions.

Regional Rates

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much the planned freeze in the non-domestic regional rate will cost.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: I announced on 15 December 2008 that non-domestic regional rates would be frozen in cash terms at current levels for 2009/2010 instead of increasing by 2.7% as originally intended. This change will cost approximately £7.8m.

Increasing the Usage of E-mail

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: DFP have made significant improvements in this area over recent years. Since the late 1990’s e-mail has been the normal communications method within DFP and between Departments. The introduction of the IT shared service centre (IT Assist) has seen the ongoing consolidation of the disparate e-mail services that have operated across Departments into a single resilient e-mail service.

An electronic document and records management system (RecordsNI) was introduced in 2007 and became fully operational in 2008. All eleven Departments now use this system and its common file plan to store and view documents, including e-mails, spreadsheets, and presentations. The use of electronic links to stored documents within the RecordsNI ‘TRIM’ system has now become the norm across DFP and other Departments and has dramatically decreased the necessity to print documents and e-mails.

No new paper files have been created within DFP since 12th November 2007 and the electronic record became the official record from this date.

DFP is currently working on an updated ICT policy for the NICS which will highlight sustainability. In addition, a review of printing technologies is underway aimed at increasing access to scanned material and a further reduction in the necessity to print correspondence.

DFP actively encourage staff to print only when necessary; however, there will probably always remain a requirement for documents to be printed for specific meetings.

The e-mail policy for the NICS is currently under review and as part of this staff will be actively discouraged from printing unnecessarily.

European Union Programmes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the likely effect of the clawback in the current European Union programmes.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The decommitments or clawback of Northern Ireland EU funding currently being proposed by the European Commission are in respect of the 1994-99 Programmes. Under the public expenditure rules that apply for the 1994-99 period there would be no impact on the current or future EU funding to Northern Ireland Departments. The amounts published by the European Commission late last year remain under discussion and are expected to be significantly reduced.

Paying Approved Invoices

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what monitoring he has in place to ensure that Departments are paying approved invoices within 10 days.

(AQW 5796/09)
The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Account NI provides monthly statistics on payment performance to the six departments which are currently on the programme and this information is being validated by departments. Other departments, not yet on Account NI, compile their own records. Each department and public body is taking appropriate action to ensure that payments are made promptly and that performance in achieving this is monitored.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Health and Social Care Trusts

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much was paid by each of the Health and Social Care Trusts to private firms in each of the last three years, broken down by (i) year; and (ii) Health and Social Care Trust area. (AQW 4262/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr M McGimpsey): This question is taken as referring to referrals to the Independent Sector for health care services.

The latest figures available are:

In 2006/07, a total of £22.9m was spent to have patients assessed and treated in the independent sector. It would only be possible to provide a further breakdown of this amount at disproportionate cost due to the reorganisation of the Trusts in April 2007.

IN 2007/08, A TOTAL OF APPROX £40M WAS SPENT BROKEN DOWN AS FOLLOWS:

Ambulance Provision

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the ambulance provision in the Moyle area; and what his plans are to modernise and improve the service. (AQW 5496/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) tactically deploys emergency response cover throughout its Northern Division. As a result, an emergency response to the Moyle area may be provided by vehicles based at a number of stations including Coleraine, Ballycastle, Ballymena and Ballymoney.

In October 2008, I announced a major investment in the ambulance service totalling £100m over the next ten years. This includes £17m over the three year Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) period to allow NIAS to modernise its estate and replace its fleet and equipment on a regular basis. I have also allocated additional revenue funding of £12.1m in the current CSR period.

This investment will enable NIAS to improve its responsiveness and to provide modern high quality emergency care to people in Northern Ireland.

Health Service Dentists

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the shortfall in the number of Health Service dentists is; and how it compares with the last two years. (AQW 5508/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The number of dentists registered to provide Health Service dentistry for the last three years is shown in the table below:

<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>February 07</th>
<th>February 08</th>
<th>February 09</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No. of dentists</td>
<td></td>

</tr>

There are more dentists per head of population in NI than in England, Wales or Scotland, and I do not consider that there is an issue with the overall number of registered dental practitioners. Unfortunately, however, increasing numbers of dentists in NI have chosen to treat patients privately rather than under the Health Service.

My Department is in negotiations with the British Dental Association over a new contract for dentists, which will ensure that they are paid fairly for the work they do, improve oral health and ease difficulties in accessing Health Service dentistry. A tender exercise to recruit additional dentist is nearing completion. I anticipate that 38 additional dentists will be in post by September of this year, providing Health Service dentistry to over 50,000 patients currently unable to access services.

Health Service Dentists

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety which Council areas are in greatest need of Health Service dental services. (AQW 5509/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As I have previously acknowledged, there has been a regrettable decrease in the number of dentists providing Health Service dentistry. This has been particularly prevalent in the WHSSB area and the Fermanagh and Omagh District Council areas have seen a persistent drop in patient registration numbers over recent years.

The Dental Directors of the four Health and Social Services Boards identified areas of need as part of the tender for additional dental services that was instigated by my Department. I anticipate that the additional dentists will be in post starting from September of this year. However, the table below sets out the areas identified by the Dental Directors and the number of additional dentists to be appointed.

Epilepsy Clinic

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to establish an epilepsy clinic in each of the Health and Social Care Trusts. (AQW 5541/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is for Health and Social Services Boards, as commissioners of services, to prioritise and allocate resources to meet the needs of their local population, including those with epilepsy. Epilepsy clinics currently held within the Belfast Trust include a regional epilepsy clinic held in the Belfast City Hospital every Tuesday and a regional Epilepsy / Obstetric clinic held in the Royal Jubilee Maternity Hospital every other Thursday. There is a seizure clinic in NHSCT once per month and there is an all day epilepsy clinic in the SHSCT on alternate Wednesdays. The nurse-led epilepsy clinic for the Western Trust area is not presently running, however the Western Board and Trust plan to rectify this situation shortly.

Craigavon Hospital

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety the number of times in financial years (i) 2007/08; and (ii) 2008/09 that Craigavon Hospital had to refuse admission to its Maternity Unit. (AQW 5551/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Craigavon Area Hospital which is part of the Southern Health and Social Care Trust has advised that it never refused to admit any women to its Maternity Service.

On one occasion in 2007/08 one lady was transferred to Daisy Hill Hospital.

On one occasion in 2008/09 one lady was transferred to Daisy Hill Hospital.

Both transfers were agreed between the mothers and the clinical team.

Nursing Positions

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has discussed with the Executive, the Health and Social Care Trusts’ proposals to cut 722 nursing positions. (AQW 5576/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Consultation on key proposals is currently ongoing and it would not therefore be appropriate for me to discuss proposals with the Executive at this time.

Residential Homes

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has discussed with the Executive, the Health and Social Care Trusts’ proposals to reduce residential homes. (AQW 5577/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Consultation on key proposals is currently ongoing and it would not therefore be appropriate for me to discuss proposals with the Executive at this time.

Ards Minor Injury Unit

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has discussed with the Executive, the proposal to reduce opening hours of the Ards Minor Injury Unit. (AQW 5578/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Consultation on the Ards Minor Injury Unit has recently closed and responses are being considered by the South Eastern HSC Trust. It would not therefore be appropriate for me to discuss this proposal with the Executive at this time.
Efficiency Savings

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has discussed with the Executive any alternative plans for efficiency savings for the Health Service. (AQW 5579/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Consultation on key proposals is currently ongoing and it would not therefore be appropriate for me to discuss the possibility or otherwise of alternative plans with the Executive at this time, since this would presuppose the outcome of consultation on existing proposals.

Ravara House, Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many letters of protest his Department has received about the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trusts’ proposed closure of Ravara House, Bangor.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As of the 24 February 2009 my Department has received 4 letters from elected representatives, and 131 letters from members of the public concerning the South Eastern Trust’s proposal on Ravara House. In addition, I have responded to 18 Assembly questions on the subject.

Child Respite Care

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why places are not available, when funding is in place, for child respite care, and what he is doing to rectify this matter. (AQW 5585/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Respite is of great importance as it supports people to live in the community for as long as it is safe and appropriate to do so. It comes in a variety of forms and may be provided to meet the user’s own needs or the needs of carers and families. However, I am aware that demand currently exceeds supply and more needs to be done. I expect Trusts to look critically at how they meet demand for respite provision in their areas, particularly with a view to introducing creative and innovative approaches.

Under the Comprehensive Spending Review, the Learning Disability Programme of Care has been allocated £33m (£17m recurrent) over the three-year period, while Physical and Sensory Disability has been allocated £10m (£7m recurrent).

Part of the investment in each of these Programmes of Care is to provide new or enhanced respite services for both children and adults.

Childminders

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why there is no funding to train childminders, since there are 60 people on the training waiting list. (AQW 5586/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Social Workers in Early Years Teams deliver training to childminders in conjunction with training provided by the Northern Ireland Childminding Association (NICMA), which ensures consistency in terms of delivery. It is the increasing number of applications to be assessed, with consequent need for training which has had an impact on the Early Years Teams capacity to meet demand.

The South Eastern Trust has confirmed that there are 60 childminders waiting for training in the Ards Sector. The Trust, in the Ards Sector, directly commissions training for childminders from the Northern Ireland Childminding Association (NICMA) and courses are planned for March (24th and 31st) and April (7th and 21st). In light of the demand, additional courses are now planned for May, June and September 2009.
Prescription Charges

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the annual monetary value will be from the (i) recent reduction in prescription charges and (ii) future abolition of prescription charges. (AQW 5591/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Prior to the reduction in charges the net annual income from prescription charges was £13 million. No figures are available yet with regard to the reduction in income following the reduction in charges to £3 from 1 January 2009.

Ten-Day Payment Target

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much of the total amount due to suppliers has been paid within the ten-day payment target. (AQW 5643/09)

* Payments should issue on or before the 10th working day after the receipt of a valid invoice. For reporting purposes Account NI cannot recognise bank/public holidays or weekends, therefore the statistics above are based on payments made on or within 14 calendar days from the invoice received date. They reflect payments made in a month and not the invoices raised in the month.

Western Health and Social Care Trust

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to the answer to AQW 4440/09, if he will obtain information regarding the breakdown by religion of Director level staff, from the Western Health and Social Care Trust, and make it available to all Assembly Members. (AQW 5649/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Having approached the Western HSC Trust directly, we have been informed that as there are only 8 Executive Directors in the Trust, a breakdown by religion cannot be given as this would run the risk of disclosing individual personal information.

The Trust provides information on staff, including religious background, to the Equality Commission for monitoring purposes and summary data is published in the Equality Commission annual monitoring report.

Genetic Cardiac Abnormalities

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what (i) statutory; and (ii) non statutory programmes are in place to detect and treat potentially genetic cardiac abnormalities affecting young people. (AQW 5670/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Many genetic disorders have major impacts on the cardiovascular system. However, in a recent review of evidence on screening for hypertrophic cardiomyopathy (HCM), the main cause of sudden cardiac death, the UK National Screening Committee advised that screening should not be offered and that screening of athletes for HCM or other causes of sudden cardiac death should not be instituted.

However families with a high risk of inherited cardiac disorders can be identified and affected individuals are offered appropriate monitoring to reduce risk. Services for people with inherited cardiac disorders are provided by consultants at the Belfast City Hospital Regional Genetics Centre and a consultant cardiologist specialising in inherited cardiac diseases at the Royal Victoria Hospital. GPs and consultant cardiologists throughout Northern Ireland can refer patients with a suspected diagnosis or confirmed diagnosis to this regional service.
There are a number of voluntary organisations which promote heart screening and ECG testing programmes; these include: Cardiac Risk in the Young (CRY), the Cormac Trust, the British Heart Foundation, the Cardiomyopathy Association and the Ashley Jolly Sad (sudden arrhythmic death) Trust.

Patient Waiting Lists

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) total figures on patient waiting lists; (ii) when waiting list figures have and have not met the 13 weeks target for outpatient, and 21 weeks target for inpatient treatment, in Ulster Hospital in 2008. (AQW 5679/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Department collects waiting time data by Health and Social Care Trust, not by hospital. Information is, however, available for the former Ulster Community and Hospital Trust. The (i) total number of patients waiting for inpatient treatment and a first outpatient appointment, and (ii) the number waiting over the 21 week inpatient and 13 week outpatient targets, at the former Ulster Community and Hospital Trust1, for the four quarters of 2008, is shown in the table below.

1 – The former Ulster Community and Hospital Trust included the Ulster, Bangor and Ards hospitals.

Private Clinics

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to account for the circumstances where outpatients are referred to private clinics to meet the target of 13 weeks for an initial appointment, at the Ulster Hospital. (AQW 5680/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: At the beginning of the financial year each Trust undertakes a service capacity and demand exercise to ensure that all patients are assessed within 13 weeks. Where it is clear that demand is greater than in-house capacity the Trust engages with the independent sector to provide patient services as required.

Private Clinics

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the private clinics/practices that are used for referrals from the Ulster Hospital. (AQW 5681/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In this financial year (08/09), the South Eastern Trust which operates not only the Ulster hospital but also Lagan Valley and Downe hospitals has procured services from the following independent sector providers:

- McIndoe Surgical Centre, East Grinstead, Sussex
- Fitzwilliam Clinic, Belfast
- 3fivetwo Healthcare Ltd, Belfast
- North West Independent Clinic, Ballykelly

The Trust also has an independent sector contract with a Consultant Cardiologist from Great Britain who carries out local clinics on its behalf.
Increasing the Usage of E-mail

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail. (AQW 5693/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: One of the key actions taken by all NICS Departments, including DHSSPS, to reduce the amount of paper documentation was to introduce an Electronic Document and Records Management System (TRIM). TRIM provides a single electronic repository for the storage of documents and records and has reduced the amount of paper documentation created within the Department. From May 2007 the electronic record became the official record for the Department. In tandem, DHSSPS have actively encouraged staff to reduce the amount of paper they create and have provided guidance to staff to enable them to do this. Within the HSC there are currently a number of initiatives aimed at moving away from the paper record and providing more effective access to information needed to deliver safe, efficient, high quality care to patients and clients.

In relation to the usage of e-mail, DHSSPS staff have been instructed that e-mail should be the normal channel for communications within the NICS and the preferred channel for communications externally. Work to enhance the use of electronic messaging systems within the Health and Social Care sector is ongoing.

Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many new cases of diabetes have been diagnosed in the last 12 months. (AQW 5712/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on the number of new cases of diabetes that have been diagnosed in the last 12 months is not available.

Generic Medicines

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what rights patients have to remain on current medication and not be changed to generic medicines. (AQW 5736/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department’s policy position is that medicines should be prescribed generically instead of by their branded name in all appropriate circumstances. The use of generic medicines in favour of branded equivalents is a central strand in the Department’s overall strategy aimed at promoting improved quality in medicines management for all patients through cost effective prescribing.

However, it is for the clinician, in consultation with their patient, to decide on an appropriate course of treatment for the patient and to prescribe the medication to support that treatment.

Respite Care Provisions

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what respite care provisions are currently in place for parents, in the North Down Area, whose children are seriously ill. (AQW 5737/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Within the North Down area of the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust a number of respite services are currently available for parents whose children are seriously ill. This includes domiciliary support via Community Children’s Nurses for parents of children who are seriously ill; access to the Hospice at Home service; and parents can also go to the Northern Ireland Children’s Hospice and spend time there with their child, supported by staff in the unit.

Ravara House Day Centre, Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if there are any staff shortages at Ravara House Day Centre, Bangor. (AQW 5738/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There are currently three staffing vacancies at Ravarra House Day Centre, one day care worker post and two care assistant posts. The two care assistant posts have already been advertised and the day care worker post will be advertised in the near future. The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust are managing the vacancies by the use of Agency staff.

MENCAP: Bangor Office

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if Mencap’s Bangor office is in danger of closure due to lack of funding. (AQW 5739/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust continue to contract with Mencap for care services in the Bangor area and there has been no change to the contract or funding to date. Mencap is a United Kingdom Charity and responsibility for operational matters rests with the charity.

Respite Beds

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust intends to buy a respite bed at the new Blair Lodge complex in Bangor. (AQW 5740/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I have been advised by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust that whilst they are working closely with Blair Lodge to commission new and extended residential services they do not intend to commission a respite bed within current provision which is targeted at long stay care. The Trust will however be considering whether a transitions bed is required to facilitate phased admissions for those who have been assessed as requiring a longer term placement in the near future.

Loughview Surgery

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 4301/09, the timescale for a decision on Global Sum and Correction Factor payments for Loughview Surgery. (AQW 5750/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department has written to Loughview Surgery to inform them of the outcome of the decision in relation to the practice’s request for payment assistance.

Road Rescue Team

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5439/09, if places in the new Road Rescue Team were offered to serving officers with the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service who then declined the offers. (AQW 5756/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I can confirm that places were offered to current Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service personnel who then declined to take up appointment.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to (i) detail the proposal to cut eight family support workers to one, on a 16 hour weekly contract, in the Armagh & Dungannon Health & Social Services Trust area; and (ii) for his assessment of whether services will be adversely affected. (AQW 5815/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There is no proposal in the Southern Health & Social Care Trust (previously Armagh & Dungannon Health & Social Care Trust) to “cut eight family support workers to one, on a 16 hour weekly contract, in the Armagh & Dungannon Health & Social Services Trust area”. The Southern Trust has family support workers in each of its three localities which are based on Legacy Trust areas. These are managed and supervised under differing arrangements. The Trust is currently reviewing its family support services including the management and deployment of these staff.
As part of this work Trust management have began meetings with family support staff. The proposals should give efficiencies in management costs. There will be no reduction in the amount of family support provided in the Trust. The aim will be to provide an equitable consistent service across the Trust.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many families in the Armagh & Dungannon Health & Social Services Trust area are receiving assistance from a family support worker.

(AQW 5816/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As at 3 March 2009, 29 families (73 children), within the Armagh and Dungannon area, were receiving assistance from a family support worker.

Age for Buying Alcohol

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he would consider raising the age for buying alcohol from 18 to 21 years old.

(AQW 5903/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Addressing alcohol misuse, particularly binge and young people’s drinking, is a key priority for my Department. To this end, my Department has led in the development of a Young People’s Drinking Action Plan that seeks to co-ordinate action to tackle this issue. This plan is currently with my Executive colleagues for consideration.

The Young People’s Drinking Action Plan does not currently propose to raise the age of sale of alcohol to 21, and responsibility for licensing legislation does not rest with my Department. However, this is an issue that may need to be considered further within Northern Ireland.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5092/09, how many people taking up voluntary redundancy were aged 58 and over.

(AQW 5904/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: 133 HSC staff who have taken RPA related voluntary redundancy were aged 58 and over.

Alcohol in Supermarkets

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if consideration is being given to banning the sale of alcohol in supermarkets.

(AQW 5948/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am concerned about the availability of alcohol and the impact that alcohol misuse is having on Northern Ireland. However liquor licensing legislation, which regulates the sale of alcohol, is the responsibility of the Department of Social Development.

Tyrone County Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what services are provided at the Urgent Care and Treatment Centre at Tyrone County Hospital in Omagh.

(AQW 5971/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Centre provides a full range of minor injury services including treatment for cuts, bruises, sprains or minor fractures to limbs and treatment to walk-in patients. Care is delivered by experienced Emergency Nurse Practitioners with support from a team of general emergency department nurses and daily support from senior medical staff.
Tyrone County Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many; and (ii) what the total cost was of, glossy documents on Tyrone County Hospital’s transition of Acute Medical Services produced by the Western Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 5972/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am advised that the Western Health and Social Care Trust has, to date, produced 60,000 copies of leaflets to inform the communities in Fermanagh and Tyrone on the transition of acute medical services at the Tyrone County Hospital.

The total cost of printing and distribution was £8420.

Altnagelvin Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients admitted to Altnagelvin Hospital since 1 January 2009, have had to spend time on a trolley until a bed became available. (AQW 5974/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the form requested.

Erne Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients admitted to Erne Hospital since 1 January 2009, have had to spend time on a trolley until a bed became available. (AQW 5976/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the form requested.

Tyrone County Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm if the 40 rehabilitation beds and the 22 palliative care beds are in place in Tyrone County Hospital, Omagh, and how many staff, broken down by grade, there are to deliver the service. (AQW 6016/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Western Health and Social Care Trust advises that it plans to provide 30 rehabilitation beds and 10 palliative care beds at the Tyrone County Hospital. A further 22 beds will be provided to support day procedures. This information was provided in the information leaflet ‘Tyrone County Hospital: Transition of Acute Medical Services’ recently distributed to households across Fermanagh and Tyrone.

I am advised that the rehabilitation ward is currently staffed for 17 beds with 23 whole time nursing staff broken down as follows - 1 band 7, 1 band 6, 13 band 5, 3 band 3 and 5 band 2 nurses. The Trust will be moving as soon as possible to the full complement of 30 beds with almost 40 whole time nursing staff.

I am also advised that the 10 palliative care beds are currently staffed by a complement of 22 nursing staff, comprising 1 band 7, 1 band 6, 14 band 5, and 6 band 2 staff.

The Trust is in the final stages of agreeing the numbers of Allied Health Professionals required to support these developments.

Tyrone County Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why inpatient services for acutely ill patients was not sustained at the Tyrone County Hospital, Omagh. (AQW 6017/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I refer you to the answer I gave in AQW 4362/09 on 2 February.
Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the second Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service appliance is still in Portstewart or was it removed, prior to his decision on its future. (AQW 6094/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The second appliance is still located in Portstewart.

George Best Belfast City Airport

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (i) any public health issues and (ii) any potential health issues related to the proposed runway extension at George Best Belfast City Airport. (AQW 6123/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I believe it is imperative that any decisions on the proposed runway extension at George Best Belfast City Airport are taken in the context of a proper understanding of the wider impacts that such a development may have on the local communities most affected. I share the concerns that have been raised by the Eastern Health and Social Services Board with Planning Service in relation to potential health impacts and public safety issues. These concerns relate to health impacts that may arise from increased levels of noise and air pollution, and public safety concerns associated with the proximity of significant residential development and major industrial sites and the possibility of bird strikes. In particular, I support the Board’s call for a Health Impact Assessment to be carried out in relation to these proposals.

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development how much water was lost through system leakage in the Craigavon Borough and Banbridge District Council areas in each of the past three years; and what steps have been taken to improve this situation. (AQW 5222/09)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr C Murphy): I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it assesses the levels of water lost through the water distribution network by geographical water supply areas which differ from council areas. However, the water supply areas that relate most closely to the council areas for which the information is requested are Craigavon and Newry. The leakage levels for these areas, in each of the past 3 years, are set out in the table below.

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Water Supply Area</th>
<th>Leakage (million litres)</th>

NIW continues to be engaged in a major programme of leakage control to reduce overall losses through leakage detection and repair. During the past three years almost £14 million has been invested in the Craigavon and Bainbridge council areas on watermains rehabilitation. One of the objectives of the watermain rehabilitation programme is to reduce leakage.

M2 Improvement Scheme

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place to remove any paramilitary or sectarian items or displays on his Department’s property along the boundary of the M2 prior to the completion of the expansion scheme. (AQW 5547/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has signed up to a multi agency protocol about the display of flags in public areas, which was launched in April 2005. The aim of the protocol is to provide a pro-active approach, with the support of communities and their representatives, to address the removal of flags from arterial routes, town centres and from particular locations, such as interface areas, or near schools, hospitals and churches.

The protocol recognises that an effective resolution to the flags issue is more likely to be achieved through the co-operation of local communities. It will require widespread community support to enable the partnership established by the protocol to be effective. The agency that is in the most effective position to consult, negotiate or resolve the situation will take the lead.

Roads Service has referred this issue to the PSNI, who are considered best placed to lead, on this occasion.

Under the protocol, Roads Service will facilitate the removal of flags as necessary by providing access equipment and resources to remove unwanted flags, but only on the provision that prior agreement for their removal has been established.

M2 Improvement Scheme

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development how many trees will be planted when the landscaping of the M2 is complete; and how many trees were removed during the construction process.

(AQW 5548/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that some 44,000 trees and shrubs will be planted as part of the M2 improvement scheme. Roads Service does not hold records of the number of trees removed during the course of this scheme. However, every effort was made to keep the number of trees removed to a minimum.

MV Canna Ferry

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Regional Development how many days in each month since July 2008 the (a) MV Canna ferry and (b) the relevant passenger-only ferry have been out of service on the Ballycastle-Rathlin line; and to detail the reasons.

(AQW 5553/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The MV Canna was not out of service for any full day of sailings during the months of July and August 2008. It was out of service from 29 September to 3 October 2008 during its annual overhaul. An alternative roll-on/roll-off vessel was used during this period to provide the service. The MV Canna was out of service for two days during October, two days during November 2008 and one day during January 2009 due to adverse weather conditions.

The relevant passenger-only ferry service did not miss any full day of sailings during July and August 2008. On days during these months when the vessel was unavailable due to mechanical problems, sailings were provided by a relief vessel. The passenger-only ferry was out of service on one day during September for planned maintenance and two days in November due to mechanical problems. A relief vessel was not provided on these days but the MV Canna was available for passengers.

The passenger only ferry was out of service for two days during October, one day during November, one day during December 2008 and five days during January 2009 due to adverse weather conditions.

Traffic Calming Schemes

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development how many traffic calming schemes are in place in North Down.

(AQW 5568/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that there are 33 traffic calming schemes, and four school travel and safety projects, in North Down.
Friday 13 March 2009

Free Public Transport

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development the annual monetary value of free public transportation for people over 60. (AQW 5592/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have interpreted the term ‘value’ to equate to the cost of the scheme – that is reimbursement to transport operators.

Before 1 October 2008, free public transport was available to people aged 65 and over. On 1 October 2008, the scheme was extended to cover people aged 60-64.

The annual cost of providing free public transport to these age groups over the last 3 financial years, is detailed in the table below.

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Financial Year</th>
<th>Cost of Travel</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2006/2007</td>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>2008/2009*</td>
<td>£18.2 m – for age 65+; and for age 60-64 from 1 October 2008</td>

The costs above do not include administration.

* The cost for 2008/2009 is projected, as actual costs are only available up to the end of January 2009.

Salt Boxes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how many, and the location of salt boxes provided in the North Down area. (AQW 5611/09)

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the criteria for the location of salt boxes. (AQW 5612/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that it will consider the provision of a salt bin on roads adopted/maintained by them, which do not qualify for inclusion onto the gritting schedule, when the following criteria are met:

- the location in question must be on the publicly maintained road network;
- the gradient of the road in question must be over 5%;
- no reasonable alternative route shall be available; and
- the subject road attains a minimum overall score, derived using a specific formula, where points are awarded depending on road geometry, residential usage, community welfare and commercial usage.

In addition, new salt bins will not be provided unless requested by a member of the public, who also agrees to spread the salt provided.

Where salt bins are provided they shall:

- be available for use from November to March inclusive. However, if necessary they may be removed during the summer months to prevent vandalism or theft;
- be inspected regularly and refilled as necessary during the winter months; and
- normally not be provided within 100m of another bin.

Roads Service already commits significant resources to maintaining approximately 3,500 salt bins it has provided on public roads.

Rathlin Island Ferry

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development why a public service obligation was not in place before the new Rathlin Island ferry contract was signed. (AQW 5622/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: A public service obligation, as defined in Article 2 (4) and Article 4 (2) of Regulation (EEC) No. 3577/92, is not required for the Rathlin Island ferry service contract. Moreover, the contract that has been put in place for this public service was considered to be more appropriate in that it places a wide range of obligations on the operator, including conditions concerning the quality of service which could not form part of a public service obligation. In any event, the Commission guidance COM (2006) 196 makes clear that the service would be exempt from a requirement for notification because of the scale of operations.

Rathlin Island Ferry

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development if his Department has issued a written apology to the former Rathlin Island ferry staff member whose identity was revealed following his ‘whistle blowing’ allegations.

(AQW 5623/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: In correspondence following the publication of the Investigation into the procurement of the Rathlin Ferry Service contract my officials acknowledged in writing the difficulty that the process had caused for those who considered themselves to be “whistleblowers”. The investigation report dealt fully with the concerns expressed by the former staff member.

Rathlin Island Ferry

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development if his Department’s subsidy payments for the Rathlin Island ferry service complied with European Union state aid regulations.

(AQW 5624/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The contract utilised and the payments made to enable operation of the Ballycastle to Rathlin Island ferry service are compliant with EU state aid law.

Rathlin Island Ferry

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development if a public service obligation is currently in place for the Rathlin Island ferry route.

(AQW 5625/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: A public service obligation, as defined in Article 2 (4) and Article 4 (2) of Regulation (EEC) No. 3577/92, is not required and is not in place in relation to the Ballycastle to Rathlin Island ferry service.

Tourist Signage

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development in what circumstances tourist signage will be provided to tourist attractions or amenities in the countryside from locations other than the nearest A or B class junction.

(AQW 5668/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the main purpose of tourist signs is to guide visitors to their desired destinations, via the most appropriate route, at the latter stages of their journey, particularly where destinations are hard to find. As with all other direction signs, tourist signs are an aid to safe and efficient navigation, to complement, but not replace, pre-planning of the journey and the use of verbal instructions, maps and road atlases.

One of the fundamental principles behind Road Service’s tourist signing policy is that tourist signing should supplement, rather than duplicate, information on other direction signs already provided for the guidance of all traffic. Consequently tourist signing is generally only provided from the nearest ‘A’ or ‘B’ route, unless there are very good traffic management or road safety reasons for signing from further away.

Tourist Signage

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development if any review is planned in relation to the policy on road signage for tourist attractions.

(AQW 5669/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service facilitates the provision of tourist traffic signs using its policy “Tourist Signing in Northern Ireland”. The policy was published in April 2004 and was jointly developed and agreed with the Tourist Board.

Under the policy, Roads Service agrees and implements local tourist signing plans. These plans are drawn up by local Councils in conjunction with the Tourist Board.

The policy provides a consistent framework for the provision of tourist signing, and I can advise the Member that there are no plans to review it, at present.

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development how old is the Larne line train that left Carrickfergus at 8:05am on Thursday 5 February 2009. (AQW 5682/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The train is 31 years old.

Average Age of Trains

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development the average age of all trains on each railway route. (AQW 5683/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink have informed me that the average age of trains on the Larne line is 24 years. The average age of trains on the Bangor, Portadown/Newry and Londonderry lines is 3.5 years.

Trains on the Larne Line

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development what safety checks are carried out on trains on the Larne Line, and how often they are carried out. (AQW 5684/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The following safety checks are carried out on Class 450 and Class 80 trains which operate mainly on the Larne Line:

- Operational checks: at every station/halt, before departure the conductor is required to check that all platform workings are complete and doors are closed;
- Pre-service daily checks: at the start of service each day, train crew check and sign off the brake system, the train emergency system, doors, and the door central locking system;
- Fuel checks: when the train is fuelled there is a visual inspection of the train. Any issues logged during the day are attended to;
- Every night a train environmental check is carried out, including toilet function, condition of doors, vestibules, floors, and seats;
- Every 20 operating days or three weeks, a comprehensive engineering inspection is carried out, incorporating detailed condition analysis of the above systems.

Water Pressure

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development how many complaints have been received about poor water pressure, broken down by constituency or council area. (AQW 5685/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that complaints are not recorded by parliamentary constituency or council area and it is not possible to provide the breakdown sought. However, since its establishment on 1 April 2007, NIW has received a total of 12,672 complaints from customers regarding poor water pressure.
Train Passengers

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development why passengers were asked to get off the train at Yorkgate on Thursday 5 February 2009.

The Minister for Regional Development: An incident occurred on one of the recently refurbished Class 80 slam door trains on the 07:55 Whitehead to Belfast service. The incident involved a carriage door that had not been properly closed prior to departure and as a result it came into contact with a bridge and was badly damaged. Although the train was fitted with a central door locking mechanism, this requires the door to be properly closed if it is to be effective. There were no injuries and passengers were moved into another carriage by the conductor, de-trained at York Road and directed onto another train. Translink has advised me that all train conductors have been briefed again fully on the correct station dispatch procedures which will ensure doors are securely closed.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail.

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department promotes the use of electronic working through the use of e-mails for internal correspondence as standard and for external correspondence where appropriate. The Department’s internet site and intranet are used for electronic publication and the TRIM electronic document and record management system is the mainstay for the management and storage of records. In addition my Department has an on-going project running in its Clarence Court headquarters the aim of which is to reduce the quantity of paper copy held. This exercise complies with guidance set by the Public Record Office for Northern Ireland (PRONI).

My Department is on occasions required to produce and maintain paper copy, for example for legal reasons or to cater for those without access to IT facilities.

Gritting Roads

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development to list all the roads on the gritting schedule in the Lagan Valley constituency.

The Minister for Regional Development: Details of my Department’s Roads Service gritting schedule for roads in the Lagan Valley constituency area are set out in the table below.

Craigavon Area
Gritting Roads

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount spent on gritting roads in the Lagan Valley constituency in the last 12 months. (AQW 5722/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that it does not maintain a record of specific salting costs by Electoral Area. However, I can advise that the annual cost of providing the complete service in the North is approximately £5 million.

Water Pressure

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development what actions have been taken to improve water pressure. (AQW 5723/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that it has invested approximately £110 million over the past five years on new or rehabilitated watermains as part of its Watermains Rehabilitation Programme. This programme of work has provided substantial benefits for customers including improved water pressure. The programme will continue for the next three years with further planned investment of £90 million.

Water Pipe System

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development how much water is lost through leakages in the pipe system. (AQW 5724/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it is continuing to undertake a major programme of leakage detection and repair to reduce overall water losses. During the 2007/08 financial year the level of water lost through the water distribution network and customers’ private supply pipes was almost 157 million litres per day.

NIW is currently reviewing the methodology for assessing the reported levels of water lost through the distribution system and this will be reflected in the figures from 2008/09 onwards.

Water Pipe System

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development the percentage of the water system in North Down has asbestos lagging on the pipes and when these will be replaced. (AQW 5732/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that there are approximately 560 kilometres of water mains in the North Down area of which 17 kilometres (approximately 3%) are asbestos cement pipes.
It is important to note that asbestos cement pipes are fully approved for use within Britain and here in the North and they are only replaced if there is a specific problem at a location, for example where there is insufficient hydraulic capacity or the structural condition of the pipework makes it susceptible to frequent bursts. NIW is progressively replacing asbestos cement pipework through its Mains Rehabilitation Programme. In the period from July 2004 to December 2008, almost 70 km of asbestos cement pipe was replaced and it is envisaged that a further 40 km will be replaced in 2009 based on the same criteria.

NIW continuously assesses the condition and performance of asbestos cement mains within the Watermains Rehabilitation Programme and during daily operational activity.

Water Pipe System

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development the annual costs of leakages in the water pipe system. (AQW 5735/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that, based on the operating costs of producing water, the cost of water lost through the distribution network during the 2007/08 financial year equated to approximately £5 million.

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail road traffic accidents involving Metro and Ulsterbus vehicles in East Antrim in 2008. (AQW 5759/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The number of road traffic accidents involving services operating from the depots at Larne and Newtownabbey, including services provided in Ballyclare and Larne was 157. The figure comprises all accidents including those where other vehicles were not involved. Fourteen of the accidents involved personal injuries reported at the time of the accident.

Clearing Litter

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development how much his Department has spent on clearing litter in each of the last five years, and what responsibility his Department has for cleaning litter. (AQW 5764/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Article 7 of the Litter (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 places a duty on Councils to ensure that all roads within their area, with the exception of designated roads, are, so far as is practical, kept clear of litter. Responsibility for keeping designated roads clear of litter rests with my Department’s Roads Service. Designated roads include the motorway network, the Ballymena Bypass and a section of the A8.

In the last five financial years Roads Service has spent the following on the sweeping and cleaning of designated roads:

- 2003/04 - £116,000;
- 2004/05 - £137,000;
- 2005/06 - £119,000;
- 2006/07 - £100,000; and
- 2007/08 - £92,000.

A5 Upgrade

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the A5 upgrade will include a by-pass for the village of Newbuildings. (AQW 5773/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has confirmed that the A5 dualling project will include a by-pass for Newbuildings. It is not yet decided whether this stretch of road will be to the east or west of Newbuildings. It is anticipated that the preferred route will be announced this summer.
Upgraded A5 and A6 Routes

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration has been given to linking the upgraded A5 and A6 routes in the south east of Derry/Londonderry. (AQW 5774/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service commissioned consultants in June 2008 to examine existing proposals, by Roads Service and the National Roads Authority, to improve the primary road network approaching Derry and to consider how traffic, on these proposed roads, could best be distributed into and around the city.

This commission has been extended to consider, as a priority, the feasibility of a link between the A6 and A5. This work will consider if such a link has merit and to make recommendations. A report is expected by summer 2009.

Lagan Ferrovial

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) if Lagan-Ferrovial has a permit to carry out quarrying operations on the roadside 300 yards south of Cloughogue roundabout adjacent to three housing developments and a primary school; and if so, what environmental protection does the permit ask them to observe; and (ii) what his Department is doing to monitor the situation in relation to air and other pollution. (AQW 5836/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that Lagan Ferrovial has undertaken extensive rock excavation by blasting south of Cloghogue roundabout, as an integral part of the construction of the A1 Beech Hill to Cloghogue dual carriageway scheme, in particular, for the new flyover type junction planned for this location. While the rock blasting operations south of Cloghogue are substantially complete, other construction processes are continuing at this location.

Road Service’s contractor on site is required to employ current good practice in relation to these construction processes, to ensure all necessary and appropriate measures are implemented, to minimise the nuisance and disruption experienced at properties in the vicinity of the work.

Amey Lagan Roads Ltd, Roads Service’s Design Build Finance and Operate Contractor, and Lagan Ferrovial, the Construction Contractor, attend regular Liaison Meetings with elected representatives, community representatives and Roads Service personnel. These meetings are facilitated by the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council, and any matters of concern arising from the construction works are considered. Amey Lagan Roads Ltd has also appointed Anne Monaghan as a Community Liaison Officer, to act as a point of contact, between individuals, communities and the contractor.

Roads Service cannot confirm that the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council have specifically undertaken air quality monitoring, at properties south of Cloghogue. However, Roads Service understand that such monitoring has been undertaken elsewhere on the site, and monitoring of the rock blasting is continuing.

I have arranged for my Roads Service officials to bring your enquiry directly to the Contractor’s attention, asking that the matter be investigated without delay and appropriate action taken, if required. A report will be provided at the forthcoming Liaison Meeting, which is scheduled for Friday 13 March 2009.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development how many billing complaints Northern Ireland Water received since this was out-sourced. (AQW 5840/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that a total of 3,865 complaints related to billing have been received since the contract with Crystal Alliance was established in October 2006.
Northern Ireland Water

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development how many staff in Northern Ireland Water are absent due to stress as a result of an increased work load.

(AQW 5841/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that at 5 March 2009, 11 staff were recorded as being absent from work due to stress related illnesses. There is no indication that any of the absences were attributable to increased workload.

Bramblewood Development

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answers to AQW 518/08 and AQW 2107/08, if (i) the remedial work in the Bramblewood development has taken place; (ii) the road and sewers have been adopted; and (iii) any legal action has been taken against the developer.

(AQW 5849/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that it will liaise with the developer to ascertain the work still to be carried out to bring the streets and footway to adoption standard. If the developer is unwilling to complete the necessary works, Roads Service will have the works carried out, adopt the streets and recover the costs.

I have also been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the developer has completed the necessary remedial work to bring the sewers at Bramblewood up to an acceptable standard for adoption. Northern Ireland Water expects to adopt the sewers in the development at the end of August 2009, following the expiry of an agreed maintenance period.

I can advise that to date it has not been necessary to take legal action against the developer.

Roads Service

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to increase the resources available to Roads Service Southern Division for more effective maintenance of minor roads and prevent further deterioration.

(AQW 5902/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service budget is allocated to its four Divisions on the basis of need, using a range of weighted indicators, tailored to each maintenance activity. Divisions use these indicators when apportioning across council areas to ensure, as far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds.

I can assure the member that the structural integrity of the roads network remains a high priority for Roads Service. You may be interested to note that the outcome of the Budget 2008-2011, means that Roads Service’s total funding for structural maintenance in 2009/10 will increase to £71.8 million, compared with the initial allocation of £56.3 million in 2008/09.

Review of Public Administration

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development which functions will transfer from his Department to local government under the Review of Public Administration.

(AQW 6018/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: On 31 March 2008, Minister Foster, the then Minister of the Environment, announced that responsibility for the public realm aspects of local roads functions will transfer to local government. The local roads public realm responsibilities listed for transfer include Roads Service work in relation to:-

• streetscaping;
• town and city centre environmental improvements;
• grass cutting and weed spraying;
• gully emptying;
• street lighting;
• off-street parking;
• pedestrian permits;
• maintenance of amenity areas;
• alley-gating;
• permitting local events to be held on roads; and
• salting of footways.

The functions detailed above are currently being considered further by Central and Local Government, with a view to agreeing a defined list of functions that will transfer to Local Government in May 2011.

Public Transport: Lisburn/Sprucefield

Mr Poots asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to improve public transport linkages between Lisburn City Centre and Sprucefield.

(AQO 2232/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Following my meeting with a delegation from Lisburn City Council in July 2008, I understand that officials from Translink and my Department met the Council to discuss, among other things, improved linkages between Sprucefield shopping centre and Lisburn city centre. I am informed by Translink that it considers services between the two to be adequate from 7:00 AM to 9:00 PM. Translink cannot commit to additional services at this time but is considering a pre booking service for passengers using night time buses to Dublin and wanting to board at Sprucefield. Translink is also considering the possibility of the Belfast/Enniskillen and Belfast/Armagh services stopping at Sprucefield with onward links to Lisburn.

Fuel Oil: Translink

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail what costs have been or will be incurred by Translink in buying fuel oil for buses and trains over (i) the last two quarters; and (ii) the next three quarters.

(AQO 2233/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: In this quarter and the last quarter Translink paid £6.9m for bus fuel and £2.9m for train fuel.

Over the next three quarters Translink will pay £10.8m for bus fuel and £4.6m for train fuel.

These fuel costs are on a net basis i.e. they exclude taxes and commissions. They also exclude the small percentage of fuel not purchased under forward contracts, approximately 10%, where it is not possible to forecast market prices payable.

Rapid Transport Scheme

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of progress on the Belfast rapid transport scheme.

(AQO 2234/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I am pleased with progress on the development of a new Rapid Transit System for Belfast.

At present, the newly-formed Rapid Transit Division within my Department is examining all the route options for the 3 routes in the pilot study (Titanic Quarter, East Belfast and West Belfast) to confirm the findings of the Strategic Outline Case. Once this is complete they will move into the preliminary design stage for the best route alignments, when site surveys and the required statutory assessments will be undertaken. The preliminary designs for each route will form the basis for public consultation which will afford people the opportunity to make their views known and influence how the project is implemented.

My Department has also completed land purchase for a park and ride site at Millmount in the East of the city and is investigating the legal basis under which the system will be implemented.
A26 Dualling

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the dualling of the A26. (AQO 2235/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service is progressing plans for the provision of a 7 km stretch of dual carriageway on the A26, between Glarryford and the A44 Drones Road. This is one of the major projects included in the ten year Investment Delivery Plan for Roads.

In August 2008, I announced the preferred route, which closely follows the existing corridor. The route is currently being taken through the final stage of the scheme assessment process. This will culminate in the publication of an Environmental Statement and draft Orders, for planning and land acquisition, which I would anticipate occurring during the 2009/10 financial year.

It is anticipated that construction will commence in the latter part of the Investment Delivery Plan period.

Trains: Larne Line

Mr Neeson asked the Minister for Regional Development when the order for new trains will be placed and if they will operate on the Larne line. (AQO 2236/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I intend to make an announcement about the award of contract prior to the end of this financial year and I can confirm good progress has been made with the procurement exercise. The first of the batch of 20 new trains is scheduled to be introduced to passenger service by 2011 with the final set in 2013. This will allow the old trains currently in service on the Larne line to be replaced.

Rapid Transport Scheme

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration has been given to extending the proposed Belfast rapid transport scheme to Lisburn, Newtownards and Newtownabbey. (AQO 2237/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Rapid Transit System will initially operate on three pilot routes running to East Belfast, West Belfast and Titanic Quarter via the City Centre.

Consideration will be given to proposals to provide extension of the RT System to the North and South of the City.

The decision on when to progress the extension(s) of the network will depend on the levels of funding available and, to some degree, on the success of the 3 pilot routes.

It is also important that we investigate the possibility of developer contributions at this stage so that such opportunities are not missed.

At present there are no plans to extend the Rapid Transit System outside of the greater Belfast area.

Regional Transportation Strategy: Greenhouse Gases

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Regional Development what contribution the Regional Transportation Strategy will make to the reduction of greenhouse gases. (AQO 2238/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Regional Transportation Strategy has been the catalyst for a number of measures that will assist in reducing greenhouse gases here. For example, the investment in improving public transport, both in terms of newer vehicles, services and routes, the use of more sustainable types of fuel for public transport, the TravelWise initiative seeking to encourage smarter travel, including walking and cycling, and gauging the public attitude to reducing transport emissions, etc.

The Strategy is being reviewed and will explore what further enhancement to existing measures can be provided to reducing greenhouse emissions. I am keen that my Department maximises its contribution to the Executive’s commitment to reduce greenhouse gases through challenging targets and outcomes.
Public Transport Reform

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on public transport reform, and to detail what progress has been made and a timeframe for the reform. (AQO 2239/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The public transport reforms, which will be designed to comply with EU Regulation 1370/2007, aim to introduce new contractual arrangements for the delivery of public transport. The options for how best to introduce new organisational arrangements that will support the reforms are currently being addressed as part of the development of an Outline Business Case. This will be completed shortly. It is planned to undertake a public consultation exercise on the reforms later this year, after which policy proposals for any required legislative changes would be introduced to the Assembly.

Collaborative Spatial Planning Framework

Mr Molloy asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress been made on the collaborative spatial planning framework for the north-west and across the island of Ireland. (AQO 2240/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department, jointly with the Department of the Environment, Heritage and Local Government, has prepared two draft cross-border spatial planning frameworks. The first, entitled “Spatial Strategies on the Island of Ireland: A Framework for Collaboration”, sets out a rationale for cross-border spatial planning in a European, North-South and east-west context. The second, entitled “North West Gateway Spatial Framework”, provides spatial planning guidance for the North West Gateway Initiative. These frameworks deal with cross-cutting issues and I am bringing them forward to the Executive.

Fuel Oil: Translink

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what changes are being considered by Translink in relation to the purchasing of fuel to ensure best value for money. (AQO 2241/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have no direct involvement in the negotiation and approval of Translink’s fuel purchasing function. NITHC operates commercially under the Transport Act (NI) 1967. The Management Statement and Financial Memorandum agreed between NITHC and my department defines operational roles and responsibilities.

The NITHC Board is formally responsible for the agreement of all contracts entered into by NITHC and delegates day to day operational issues to its executive team.

Translink have not indicated any change to their current arrangements which run up to June 2010. Translink anticipate that fuel costs will fall from June 2009 under current contracts.

Rural Transport

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of plans to slash rural transport and the importance of developing integrated public transport services. (AQO 2242/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: There is no plan to slash rural transportation and I recognise the importance of integrated public transport services.

My officials are in negotiation with NITHC/Translink with respect to the development of the Translink Corporate Plan for 2009/10. Within this exercise financial plans have to be agreed to ensure Translink meets its financial obligations. This plan will have to be agreed by me, and this process is still ongoing.

Translink, itself, is an example of an integrated public transport company covering both bus and rail. There are no plans to change this status.

Translink Passenger Charter: Punctuality Targets

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the Translink Passenger Charter punctuality targets. (AQO 2243/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: The punctuality targets in the Translink Passenger’s Charter have been in place for some years and are subject to periodic review.

The rail targets are similar to ones used by rail operators in the UK and RoI, and while bus comparisons are more difficult to make, it is the view of my Department, the Consumer Council and Translink that the punctuality targets in the Charter are realistic and challenging.

Roadside Trees

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the responsibility of his Department in ensuring that roadside trees do not fall on passing vehicles. (AQO 2244/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has a statutory duty to maintain the public road network, which includes ensuring that boundary trees or hedges do not overgrow the roadway and footway, thereby impeding road users and pedestrians.

The statutory obligation requires that Roads Service initially advise the adjacent land owner, responsible for the overgrowing hedge, requesting that the necessary remedial work to remove or cut the trees or hedges is carried out in the interests of public safety. This is normally undertaken by the issue of an informal letter which generally resolves the majority of the problems identified. If that fails, Roads Service has powers, under Article 50 of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993, to serve a notice on the land owner requiring that the tree or hedge is removed or cut back, so as to remove the danger or obstruction. Where the requirements of the notice are not complied with, Roads Service may carry out the necessary works and recover the costs from the land owner.

Regional Development Strategy: Fundamental Review

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the fundamental review of the Regional Development Strategy and to detail what public engagement has taken place to date. (AQO 2245/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department has been working on the revised RDS taking account of the comments and advice it has received. My intention is to present a draft document to Ministers by May this year.

My officials have been meeting with the Regional Development Committee on a monthly basis to update them on progress and to gauge their views. I also met with Ministerial colleagues in an Executive Sub Group and a further meeting is taking place on 12 March. An External Working Group was established to provide specialist advice and 3 meetings have taken place.

During November and early December 2008 my officials held a series of stakeholder events on the basis of the proposed new Council areas. The purpose of these was to hear local views on challenges and issues facing their areas.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Social Housing Projects

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to list all social housing projects (i) for this year and (ii) planned for next year, and the value of the each investment. (AQW 5502/09)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms M Ritchie): I have attached at Appendix 1 a list of all newbuild schemes either started or anticipated to start during this financial year. The total cost of these schemes is £111.8m

At Appendix 2 I also attach a list of all improvement schemes scheduled for this year. The draft Social Housing Development Programme for 2009-2014 has not yet been approved and I am unable to provide you with that information at this stage. In addition the Northern Ireland Housing Executive are currently reassessing their improvement schemes for 2009/10 based on the resources available to them and as such that information is also not yet available.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties are awaiting repairs before they can be allocated.

The Minister for Social Development: At 31 January 2009, 1189 Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties were awaiting repairs or major improvement works being completed before they could be allocated.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development how much of the total amount due to suppliers has been paid within the ten-day payment target.

The Minister for Social Development: Having recently gone live on the new Account NI automated payment system in November 2008, the Department for Social Development is striving to meet the 10 day payment target for all invoices as soon as possible. During February 2009, the Department cleared 70% of supplier invoices within the 10 day target, which equated to some £8.2m of the total £12.2m invoiced.

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development whether the present downturn in the economy has resulted in an increase in numbers applying for Housing Benefit and, if so, whether the necessary staff are in place to cope with the situation.

The Minister for Social Development: There have been significantly higher numbers of transactions (25%) including new claims and higher numbers of changes in circumstances. In view of this increase in demand, the Housing Executive is currently implementing a plan to increase Housing Benefit resources.

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the measures and initiatives her Department is currently undertaking to identify persons guilty of benefit fraud, and what her Department is doing to ensure that genuine applicants receive the service they deserve.

The Minister for Social Development: The Social Security Agency has a robust counter fraud strategy which has led to a reduction in estimated levels of fraud from £60m (1.88% of expenditure) in 2001 to £12.7m (0.35% of expenditure) in 2007. Some of the measures and initiatives that the Agency uses to identify persons who may be guilty of benefit fraud are set out below:-

- Regular electronic Data Matching of benefit records with other government departments and private organisations to identify cases where incorrect information may have been supplied.
- Arrangements that allow information from other government departments and public organisations to be provided.
- A dedicated telephone line that allows members of the public to report in confidence customers who may be committing benefit fraud, also a secure internet link on the Department’s Web Site.
from the Social Security Agency and the Republic of Ireland’s Department for Social and Family Affairs meet regularly to discuss operations aimed at detecting individuals committing benefit fraud in a cross-border scenario.

The level of customer service the Agency provides is covered by a range of quantitative and qualitative targets. These include accuracy and clearance time targets that are published in the Department’s Strategic and Business Plan. At present 19 out of 20 operational service delivery targets are either being achieved or are on course to being achieved. Further customer service improvements through the introduction of enhanced IT systems and new telephony are being developed under the Agency’s Modernisation Programme. In addition, the Agency is seeking to provide full entitlement amongst current customers and other members of the public through the Benefit Uptake Programme.

Housing Benefit

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development (i) the length of time it takes to process new Housing Benefit claims in the West Region; (ii) if targets for processing claims are being maintained; and (iii) whether her budget is adequate to deal with processing claims. (AQW 5672/09)

The Minister for Social Development:

i) The target timescale for new Housing Benefit claims is to process 100% of new claims (where all required information has been provided) within 14 days.

ii) Housing Benefit applications within the Housing Executive’s West area are processed by the Derry and Omagh Housing Benefits units. The most recently available figures regarding the processing of new Housing Benefit claims within the West Area administrative boundaries (where all required information had been supplied) demonstrate that:

• In January 2009 the Housing Executive’s Derry Housing Benefit unit assessed 74% within 14 days;
• In January 2009 the Housing Executive’s Omagh Housing Benefit unit assessed 90% within 14 days.

iii) There have been significantly higher numbers of transactions including new claims and higher numbers of changes in circumstances. In view of this increase in demand, the Housing Executive is currently implementing a plan to increase the Housing Benefit resources.

Social Housing Projects

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the social housing projects currently underway in the Lagan Valley constituency, and the total value of each investment. (AQW 5720/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The information is not available by parliamentary constituency. The Housing Executive’s Lisburn and Banbridge District Offices include the areas which comprise the Lagan Valley Constituency. The table below details the social housing projects currently under way and the total value of each investment.

Housing Executive

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development the number of vacant Housing Executive properties in the North Down constituency. (AQW 5730/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is not available by parliamentary constituency. However, there are 313 vacant properties in the Housing Executive's Bangor and Newtownards District Offices (which include the areas which comprise the North Down constituency).

Ballyclare Environmental Improvement Scheme

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Social Development in relation to the Ballyclare Environmental Improvement Scheme (i) if the costs have increased; (ii) why they have increased; and (iii) which agencies will contribute additional finance to address any extra costs which have been incurred. (AQW 5766/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I can confirm that the costs for this scheme increased due to unforeseen work; the inclusion of additional improvements to widen the footpaths, installing new railings, replacing trees, relocating street lighting columns and accommodating site restrictions to alleviate traffic congestion at peak times. The additional funding is being provided by my Department, the Department of Regional Development’s Roads Service and Newtownabbey Borough Council.

Hope Centre in Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development what he is doing to prevent the Hope Centre in Ballymena from closing. (AQW 5771/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department for Social Development funded a three year project to support the development of volunteering under the Community Volunteering Scheme. This project funding will end in March 2009 and there are no further DSD funding streams available to support the work of the Centre, whose principal activities fall under the general area of responsibility of the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

Warm Homes Scheme

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development (i) when the new Warm Homes Scheme will commence (ii) what arrangements will be in place for the delivery of the scheme; (iii) what advantages will accrue through participation in the programme; and (iv) what households will be eligible to apply. (AQW 5772/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The evaluation of all applications to deliver the Warm Homes Scheme received has been completed and applicants informed of the outcome. As tenders have not yet been invited I am unable to comment further but I expect the new scheme managers to be appointed in May.

The Warm Homes Scheme will be aimed at vulnerable, fuel poor households who could not afford to fund the energy efficiency measures required to reduce their fuel bills themselves. The Scheme will fund a range of cost-effective energy efficiency measures tailored to the needs of individual households.

The Scheme will have two elements: Warm Homes and Warm Homes Plus. A summary of the eligibility criteria and measures available under Warm Homes and Warm Homes Plus is shown below.

Housing Executive Estate Strategy

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to explain the delay in Phase 1 of the Housing Executive Estate Strategy for Dunclug. (AQW 5790/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Whilst it had been expected to start work on Phase 1 of this strategy before now, a combination of events has meant that work can not yet start. A number of issues have arisen out of the Economic Appraisal for Phase 1 which has delayed the approval of that Appraisal. The collapse of the land and property market has also significantly reduced the resources available to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for Environmental Improvement schemes such as this and a review of the 2009/10 programme has been made to identify what resources are now available for schemes, once the necessary approvals are in place.

Housing Executive Estate Strategy

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development when the Economic Appraisal for phase 1 of the Housing Executive Estate Strategy for Dunclug was passed to the Department of Finance and Personnel for approval. (AQW 5791/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department completed its technical and professional assessment of this Economic Appraisal on 5 December 2008 and it was referred that same day to the Department of Finance and Personnel.
Housing Executive Estate Strategy

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development whether funding is in place to deliver phase 1 of the Housing Executive Estate Strategy for Dunclug. (AQW 5792/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The shortfall in receipts resulting from the collapse of the land and property market has forced the Housing Executive to undertake an urgent and immediate review of all its programmes. No decisions have yet been made on the programme of improvement schemes for 2009/10.

Housing Executive Estate Strategy

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to confirm when work will start on Phase 1 of the Housing Executive Estate Strategy for Dunclug which was due to begin in November 2008. (AQW 5793/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department is currently working with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to resolve a number of issues regarding the Economic Appraisal for this phase of the project. Once these are resolved, approvals received and funding identified, work can begin.

Social Housing

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Social Development what plans are there for the development of social housing in the Ballymacross/Ballymacash area, in the next three years. (AQW 5812/09)

The Minister for Social Development: This information can not currently be provided as the new 5 year Social Housing Development Programme (2009/10 – 2013/14) is currently being formulated and, pending appropriate approvals, will be published on the Housing Executive’s website at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Social Housing

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Social Development what plans there are for spending on social housing developments and the development of any of her Department’s unused sites, to help the construction industry, in the next financial year. (AQW 5866/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The draft Social Housing Development Programme for 2009-2014 has not yet been finalised for approval and I am, therefore, unable to provide you with information on plans and spending at this stage. As part of the process to develop the Programme my officials have been working closely with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to assess the suitability of all surplus sites, including those within my own Department that may be identified for social housing.

I recognise how the Social Housing Development Programme can make a significant contribution to the economy and in particular the construction industry. I have already made the case to my Ministerial colleagues about how an increased investment in social housing could provide an immediate stimulus to the economy and at the same time help those in housing stress.

Strategic Business Review

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Social Development for her assurance that elderly people will not be disadvantaged as a result of the new service proposed under the Strategic Business Review. (AQW 5867/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Strategic Business Review proposals deal with services delivered to customers of the Social Security Agency’s local office network. The vast majority of elderly people do not use the local office network preferring instead to access pension services directly by telephone.

Nevertheless you have my assurance that elderly people or any other customer grouping using the local office network will not be disadvantaged as a result of the Strategic Business Review’s proposals.
Housing Executive

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to reduce the six to seven week period for a vacant Housing Executive house to be offered to a tenant. (AQW 5893/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive allocates 94% of its lettable stock within two weeks. Vacant properties which have been held for some time to assist with decanting in improvement schemes are now being reviewed and it is intended to bring these properties back into use.

Energy Savings for Homes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many enquiries there have been about energy savings for homes in (i) Ards; and (ii) Strangford, in the last financial year. (AQW 5894/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I have been advised by Eaga that they do not record details of energy efficiency enquiries and can therefore only report on actual referrals recorded. The number of referrals received in the last financial year for Ards Council Area was 294 and for Strangford constituency were 349.

Northern Ireland Energy Agency (NIEA) is a member of the Bryson Charitable Group who through the management and operation of the Energy Saving Trust Advice centre, offer free and impartial telephone advice to households across Northern Ireland on energy efficiency. NIEA currently hold details of the number of energy efficiency enquiries for the 3 year period 1 April 2005 to the 31 December 2008 for each of the local authorities. However, they are unable to produce figures for each financial year or per constituency.

The total number of enquiries recorded by NIEA for Ards Council during the period 1st April 2005 to the 31st December 2008 was 16,329. The figures for Strangford would include most of the 16,329 for Ards, part of the 16,498 figure for Castlereagh and part of the 12,509 figure for Down local authority.

Energy Efficiency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development why funding is not available for young couples who are struggling financially and are not on benefits, and who want to make their homes more energy efficient. (AQW 5895/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Northern Ireland Audit Office published a Value for Money study on the Warm Homes Scheme in June 2008. In this report the Audit Office highlighted a number of areas for change including the eligibility criteria. The Audit Office criticised the fact that families with children and householders aged under 60 years of age were only eligible for the Warm Homes element of the Scheme, which provides insulation and basic energy efficiency measures.

The Audit Office and Public Accounts Committee agreed that the existing eligibility criteria provided assistance for some people who were not in fuel poverty and actually excluded people who were in fuel poverty and change was needed to refocus the scheme. For this reason, from spring this year, the eligibility criteria will be changed to include families in receipt of Working Tax Credits who will now qualify for assistance with improving the heating in their homes.

Prior to a subsequent Public Accounts Committee hearing in October 2008 my Department had accepted all of the recommendations made by the Audit Office and had proposed a number of changes to the current scheme. My Department recently finished a consultation exercise on the proposed changes and over 90% of respondents supported changing the eligibility criteria. In changing the criteria, lone parents and low income families will qualify not only for insulation measures but also heating measures, thus improving the energy efficiency of their homes.

As these groups have been defined as those in greatest need, then this is where the funding must be targeted.

Rathgill Estate and Breezemount Estate, Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development if money from the Small Pockets Of Deprivation will continue for Rathgill Estate and Breezemount Estate, Bangor for the next financial year. (AQW 5935/09)
The Minister for Social Development: I can confirm that the funding for areas eligible under the SPOD programme has now been extended for another year until 31 March 2010. The Rathgill Estate is eligible for funding from the SPOD programme. The Breezemount Estate is not within the most 10% deprived areas in Northern Ireland and is not therefore eligible for SPOD funding.

Housing Executive

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development if she is aware of the significant number of Housing Executive homes without cavity walls that have been sold to tenants; and to detail what mechanisms are in place to ensure these properties will be brought up to building regulation standard. (AQW 5936/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive does not hold records regarding properties without cavity walls that have been sold to tenants. Upon completion of the sale, the ongoing maintenance of the property becomes the responsibility of the owner.

Housing in Antrim Borough Council

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development (i) if she is aware that the Antrim Borough Council area has one of the highest rankings for housing stress; (ii) to explain why a large number of properties remain boarded up in the Springfarm area despite increases in the housing waiting list; and (iii) to detail a time-scale when these properties will be brought up to building regulation standard and released back into the housing stock pool. (AQW 5937/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The level of housing stress, out of a total waiting list of 1051 applicants within the Northern Ireland Housing Executive’s Antrim District Office area, is broadly comparable to similarly sized District Office areas in Northern Ireland.

The Ministry of Defence terminated the leases of two lots of dwellings within the Springfarm estate, Antrim which they had previously leased from the Housing Executive. The first lot was sold to a private developer who refurbished them and sold them to private sector residents. In respect of the second lot of 114 dwellings, the Housing Executive has leased 18 to the Northern Health and Social Care Trust and allocated a further 13 to applicants on the social housing waiting list. The Housing Executive continues to complete the required remedial works, dependent on the availability of finance, and allocate the properties in line with demand within the area.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to provide information on the amount of cold weather payments (i) assessed; and (ii) paid, in each of the last three years. (AQW 5944/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Cold weather payments are triggered when the average temperature is, or is forecast to be, zero degrees or below over 7 consecutive days from November to March based on temperature readings supplied to my Department by the Met Office from its 5 weather stations located throughout Northern Ireland. Payments are made automatically and there is no requirement to assess individual entitlement when the qualifying conditions are met. The number and amount of cold weather payments made in the last 3 years are set out in the Table below.

Warm Homes Scheme

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development how she intends to address the backlog of referrals made to eaga.plc under the (i) Warm Homes Plus; and (ii) Warmer Ways to Better Health schemes, from the Antrim Borough Council area.

The Minister for Social Development: I am advised by Eaga that they do not have systems that can readily provide a breakdown for the Antrim Borough Council area. However, the budget available for the Warm Homes Scheme has been fully committed for this financial year and my Department has met, and I anticipate will exceed, its Public Service Agreement target of alleviating fuel poverty in 9,000 households through implementing energy efficiency measures. I submitted a bid in the June and December monitoring round for additional resources to clear the waiting list, but unfortunately neither bid was met.

I have asked my officials to look for ways that those households, who remain on the waiting list and are most in need, will receive some assistance.

There is no backlog of applications for the Warmer Ways to Better Health scheme.

Energy Savings for Homes

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many enquiries her Department has received in relation to energy savings for homes in the North Down constituency in the last financial year.

The Minister for Social Development: I have been advised by Eaga that they do not record details of energy efficiency enquiries and can therefore only report on actual referrals recorded. The number of referrals received from the North Down constituency in the last financial year was 453.

Northern Ireland Energy Agency (NIEA) is a member of the Bryson Charitable Group who through the management and operation of the Energy Saving Trust Advice centre, offer free and impartial telephone advice to households across Northern Ireland on energy efficiency. NIEA currently hold details of the number of energy efficiency enquiries for the 3 year period 1st April 2005 to the 31st December 2008 for each of the local authorities. However, they are unable to produce figures for each financial year or per constituency.

The total number of enquiries recorded by NIEA for North Down local authority during the period 1st April 2005 to the 31st December 2008 was 19,918.

Housing Executive

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development how many vacant Housing Executive properties there are in the Ards Borough Council area.

The Minister for Social Development: There are 124 vacant properties in the Housing Executive’s Newtownards District Office area, which covers the Ards Borough Council area.

Department Owned Properties and Sites

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development what properties and sites are owned by her Department in the Strangford constituency, and what plans and time-scale there are for their development.

The Minister for Social Development: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive owns undeveloped land holdings but does not hold the information requested by Parliamentary constituency. The table below details the undeveloped land holdings within the Newtownards, Castlereagh and Downpatrick District Office areas (which include the locations within the Strangford constituency) and the plans for their development.

In relation to timescales for development, any sites indicated for transfer to Housing Associations will be as programmed in the new 5 year Social Housing Development Programme for 2009/10 – 2013/14 which is due to be published shortly. The Housing Executive currently undertakes to dispose of surplus sites within 3 years of being declared surplus. Sites retained for future use are subject to feasibility studies to determine their best use and an appropriate timeframe for further action.

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Social Development in the light of the economic downturn, whether she will review her decision concerning the future of Social Security office locations. (AQW 6025/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I have not made any decisions concerning the future of Social Security office locations. The Strategic Business Review proposals are currently subject to ongoing public consultation. Final decisions on the review’s proposals, including the number and location of Benefit Processing Centres, will not be made until consultation has been completed and the responses have been fully considered.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to her answer to AQW 2216/09, if the planning of any programmes or schemes for the provision of Traveller’s sites must legally be within the geographical areas of Traveller families’ choice or if there is flexibility to provide sites elsewhere. (AQW 6142/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The planning of any programme or scheme in relation to Traveller sites is determined by the results of a comprehensive needs assessment which ensures that an informed and strategic approach can be taken. The Housing Executive is not obliged to provide Traveller’s sites in a geographically identified area (or at all) unless it considers that it is appropriate to provide such a site.

The Housing Executive has a statutory duty to provide such sites as it considers appropriate for the accommodation of caravans of members of the Traveller community. In considering whether it is appropriate to provide a Traveller site in any particular location all relevant factors must be taken into account. In drawing up a programme of schemes the Housing Executive will give consideration to greatest need and land availability in consultation with individuals, families and the wider community.
NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Assembly Computer Network

Mr Cree asked the Assembly Commission what steps have been taken to prevent outside access to the Assembly computer network, including access by unauthorised Civil Service staff. (AQW 5659/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): The Assembly Commission operates 2 computer networks in Parliament Buildings. The IS Office on behalf of the Assembly Commission has implemented a number of measures to secure the primary computer network designated for use solely by Members and other authorised Assembly users. These include:

- Use of a UK government approved firewall at the perimeter of the network;
- Implementation of a secure network design by expert 3rd party installers;
- Implementation of segregation of the different user traffic across the network;
- Monitoring of traffic patterns across the network;
- Provision of a secure web based portal system for remote access, which includes a two factor authentication system, in line with public sector best practice;
- Implementation of intrusion detection systems.

The second NI Assembly owned computer network, uses wireless technology, and is regarded as less secure, being provided for use by a wider group of people using their own equipment including Members; Press; Civil Servants and other visitors to the building. All users must register with the IS Office to use the system and are then provided with access for periods ranging from 24 hrs to 3 months. There is no direct connection between this network and the primary, secure network. All computer access from this network must come through the firewall system and use the secure web based portal.

Finally the NI Civil Service have been granted permission to operate their own independent network to selected areas within Parliament Buildings for use by Ministers and other officials. This network operates to NI Civil standards and has no direct connection to the NI Assembly networks.

Eurest Customer Satisfaction Survey

Mr Burns asked the Assembly Commission when Eurest will publish the results of the customer satisfaction survey recently conducted for the Blue Flax Restaurant. (AQW 5763/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): In response to the Members question, the results of the recent Customer survey are now available on AssIST following an analysis of the results and comments by Eurest and Facilities Branch. A summarised version of the results will also be available in the Blue Flax Restaurant. I have attached a copy of the results from the survey for the Members perusal.

Twitter Website

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission what use it has made of the Twitter website. (AQW 5789/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): The Northern Ireland Assembly began piloting the use of Twitter on 17th November 2008 in order to ascertain what benefits the Assembly could accrue by using the service.

As part of the Assembly’s Engagement Strategy, approved by the Commission and debated in Plenary on 3 March 2009, the Assembly is seeking to increase the use of social networking websites such as Twitter to better interact and engage with the public.

To date, the pilot Assembly Twitter site has 140 followers including MLAs, journalists, and government organisations including councils, members of the public and charitable groups. It has been used to inform followers of forthcoming business, and of recent publications such as committee reports and press releases.

The Assembly Twitter site has also been used to publicise the forthcoming Assembly road shows and the ‘Your Assembly, Your Say’ website. It is anticipated that the Assembly will further develop its use of Twitter as a communications tool to promote its business and activities.
Mr McKay asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the outcome of its meeting with UNITE union and if it intends to act on any matters arising from that meeting. (AQW 5769/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness): On 14th October 2008, as part of a series of meetings about the economic downturn, we met with a group of trade unionists comprising the following:

- Northern Ireland Committee Irish Congress of Trade Unions
- NIPSA
- Ulster Teachers Union
- UNISON
- UNITE
- Union of Shop Distributive and Allied Workers
- UCATT - Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians

The topics discussed included the state of the local economy including the effects of the recession, the cost of living and the construction industry. The views of trade unions, along with other groups consulted by us, were taken into account as part of the Executive's consideration of measures to help deal with the economic downturn.

On 4 November 2008 and 5 February 2009 we met representatives of Northern Ireland Committee Irish Congress of Trade Unions. The topics discussed include future relationships with the Executive, the use of Public Private Partnerships and the economy.

To date individual unions have not requested separate meetings with us.

Mr Storey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the meetings that have been held with banks in 2009. (AQW 6134/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are continuing our dialogue with the banks. We met with the Ulster Bank on 3 February 2009. This was followed by a meeting with the Northern Bank on 26 February. We then met the Bank of Ireland on 3 March 2009.

We are due to meet with the First Trust/AIB in early April 2009.
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Orange Halls

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she has taken since entering office to help strengthen the capacity of Orange Halls in rural communities. (AQW 5811/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms M Gildernew): Orange Halls Management Committees have access to support programmes managed and funded by my Department in rural areas. A range of capacity building activities has been available to all rural dwellers through the Rural Community Network (RCN); 12 local Rural Support Networks (RSNs); and NI Rural Women’s Network (NIRWN), funded by my Department through the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity (PBSP). I am considering continued funding for this type of development support now that the PBSP is closing.

The New Rural Development Programme 2007-2013 will also provide opportunities under the Quality of Life Measures in Axis 3. This aspect of the Rural Development Programme is being managed on behalf of the Department by Local Action Groups and Local Authority Joint Committees.

Forest Service

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to her answer to AQW 1834/09, if Forest Service will create an inventory of all woodland areas to address both the limitations of the current approach and to deliver on the commitment in the 2002 Northern Ireland Biodiversity Strategy. (AQW 5818/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Forest Service has acknowledged some limitations in the current woodland inventory in relation to the estimates around new private woodland created outside forestry grant schemes and in my earlier reply (AQW 1912/09), Forest Service indicated that it will consider using other available woodland information to provide more comprehensive inventory data, allowing changes in woodland cover over the long term to be more fully captured. This process has been initiated in partnership with the NI Environment Agency (NIEA). Progress in terms of implementation of this aspect of the Biodiversity Strategy will be reported at regular intervals through the Native Woodland Group.

The Forest Service holds a significant amount of biodiversity data about the Department’s woodland and, in respect of both state and private woodland, is able to make use of biodiversity information from a wide range of sources which either was not available in 2002 or not to the extent that it is available today. This includes the Ancient Woodland Inventory, data from NIEA, including surveys of Wood Pasture and Parkland, Sites of Local Nature Conservation Interest (SLNCI), Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB), Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs), the NIEA Register of Historic Parks, Gardens and Demesnes, data in relation to woodland in Countryside Management Schemes, and data on the Forest Service Private Woodland Geographical Information System (GIS). These data sets provide biodiversity data to assist in managing woodland sites and deliver on the commitment under the Biodiversity Strategy.

Wind Turbines

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail funding awards for the erection of wind turbines under the Rural Development Programme, since May 2007. (AQW 5824/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Since May 2007 no wind turbines have been funded under the Rural Development Programme.

Educational Schemes

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what grants are available to farmers to provide educational schemes to schools about the business activities of farms, and where the grants can be accessed. (AQW 5892/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: There are no specific grants for farmers to provide educational schemes to schools about the business activities of farms. However funding opportunities exist for support under measure Axis 3 of the new Rural Development Programme to assist micro enterprises or persons wishing to set up a new off-farm non-agricultural business.

In the North Down area the Rural Development measures are being delivered on DARD’s behalf by the Down Rural Area Partnership. The Group will support projects which are congruent with the priorities in the local rural development strategy and which have been successful in a competitive assessment. The group are currently seeking expressions of interest and can be contacted either through their chair, Mr David Kerr, telephone 07834254228 or through the Leanne McCready, Principal Project Development Officer, Ards Borough Council, 2 Church Street, Newtownards, Co. Down BT23 4AP, Telephone: 028 9182 4065 or by e-mail: leanne.mccready@ards-council.gov.uk

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, what action she intends to take to improve motivation and morale and reduce stress in the workplace. (AQW 5952/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: A number of support measures are already in place within the Department to help those staff who experience stress including welfare support and an employee assistance programme that is available 24/7 for staff and their immediate family. In addition we recently hosted a stress roadshow in conjunction with Occupational Health and NI Civil Service Sports Association. An NICS wide survey on stress is also being considered which will influence the existing NICS policy and DARD will be participating in this. We are currently researching the availability of additional interventions that should improve motivation and morale and thereby contribute to a reduction of absence levels including those attributable to stress in the workplace.

European Union

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much her Department has received from the European Union since 10 July 2008, in compliance with Commission Regulation (EC) No. 657/2008. (AQW 5973/09)

EU School Milk Scheme

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the milk supplier(s) used in the EU School Milk Subsidy Scheme; and the quantity of milk, per week, that is supplied to schools. (AQW 5975/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: There are six suppliers of milk under the EU School Milk Subsidy Scheme. These are Ballyrashane Co-operative Agricultural & Dairy Society (1990) Ltd, Dale Farm Ltd, Fane Valley Co-operative Society Ltd, Grove Dairy, Joseph Gibson and Stevenson Dairies.

Based on claims submitted for the summer 2008 term, which is the most recent data available, the average quantity of milk claimed per school day was 10,799 litres, which equates to 53,995 litres per week.

EU School Milk Scheme

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many schools take part in the European Union School Milk Scheme, broken down by Education and Library Board; and how many children in each of these schools receive such milk every day. (AQW 5977/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Based on claims submitted for the summer 2008 term, which is the most recent data available, the number of schools and children in each Education and Library Board (“ELB”) participating in the EU School Milk Scheme is as follows -

EU School Milk Scheme

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what marketing and promotional material is provided to primary-school principals in relation to the EU School Milk Scheme, broken down by Education and Library Board. (AQW 5978/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The EU School Milk Scheme was introduced in 1977 and in the interim the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has been proactive to encourage uptake under the Scheme. This included writing on two occasions to the Chief Executive of each of the five Education and Library Boards (ELBS) and the Principals of all nursery and primary schools in the North. The letter outlined the operations of the Scheme and advised that milk can make an important contribution to a healthy balanced diet. It also encouraged those schools that did not provide drinking milk to pupils to consider doing so.

Following an amendment to the EU School Milk Scheme, which came into operation on 1 August 2008, DARD wrote to each ELB providing an Information Bulletin on the Scheme. The Information Bulletin inter alia advised that all participating schools must display a poster in the entrance hall advertising the Scheme. In addition the Information Bulletin was also placed on the DARD website.

During the year ended 31 March 2008 DARD awarded the Dairy Council for NI (DCNI) £33,150 under the DARD Regional Food Programme. This funding allowed for promotional activity primarily to encourage schools not taking school milk to participate in the EU School Milk Scheme and to communicate the benefits of taking school milk to parents of all P1 children.

This funding was complemented last year when the DCNI was awarded €284,739.77 EU funding towards an information programme which aims to reinforce the role of dairy products in our daily breakfast and to increase uptake of milk under the EU School Milk Scheme.
The programme commenced in October 2008 and it will use a mixture of radio and TV (both supported by PR activities), direct mail and school education to achieve its goal.

Rural Development Programme

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much the administration charge will be for the delivery of the Rural Development Programme Axis 3 through local Council clusters. (AQW 5996/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Joint Council Committees will be permitted to utilise, by way of an administration budget, an amount equivalent to 20% of the funds disbursed on project grants. This means that for every £5 pounds of project spend £1 may be used towards administration. However Joint Council Committees in partnership with their LAGs may, with prudent financial management, assign a lesser percentage to administration and a greater amount to project expenditure. Therefore the final administration charge will be dependant upon the percentage drawn down in administration and the amount of grant awarded over the life of the programme.

Countryside Management Scheme

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the criteria used to assess applications for the Countryside Management scheme was approved by European Union authorities. (AQW 5997/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The forum that DARD is obliged to consult on selection criteria is the NIRDP Monitoring Committee. An environmental sub-group of the NIRDP Monitoring Committee was established. This group considered proposed ranking and selection criteria to ensure that the expenditure is targeted to achieve the greatest environmental benefit. The outcome of this consultation was then presented to the main Monitoring Committee of which EU officials are members. The Monitoring Committee were content with the proposals.

Private Forestry Industry

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what co-operation exists between her Department and the private forestry industry. (AQW 5998/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department’s Forest Service co-operates with a wide range of private forestry interests including representative bodies, businesses and individuals at a variety of different levels.

Private forestry industry stakeholders have played a key role in consultation on the development of forest policy and strategy which culminated in the publication of the Forestry Strategy, “A Strategy for Sustainability and Growth”. The industry also plays an active role in response to more focused strategies.

Forest Service is in regular contact with ConFor, the main forestry organisation representing forestry contractors, wood processors and woodland owners, in relation to developing industry best practice and capacity. The scope of these contacts are wide ranging, from long term timber contracts, forest environment issues, where ConFor has a representative on the Native Woodland Group, and encouraging forest expansion under the Rural Development Programme.

Forest Service engages with private timber customers and contractors on the operational delivery of the Forestry Programme through specific contractual agreements with individual customers and contractors. Forest Service also engages with private landowners and their agents in relation to providing advice and assistance to encourage creation of new woodland under the Woodland Grant Scheme. The wider Department also engages with the private forestry industry through an Agricultural Stakeholder’s Forum for Renewable Energy and the Renewable Energy Research Programme, both in relation to the development of wood biomass for an energy end-use.
Farm Nutrient Management Scheme

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if sufficient financial resources are in place to meet outstanding Farm Nutrient Management Scheme claims. (AQW 5999/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I can confirm that all valid outstanding Farm Nutrient Management Scheme claims will be paid.

Feasibility Study of the Halfpenny River

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for a timescale for the completion of the feasibility study of the Halfpenny River, designated under the terms of the Drainage (NI) Order 1973 at Knockramer Meadows area in Lurgan. (AQW 6006/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Rivers Agency is undertaking a programme of investigations of the numerous river related flooding incidents arising from the August 2008 event, including flooding from the Halfpenny River. The feasibility study is programmed for completion in late summer 2009.

Rural Businesses

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) how many rural businesses has her Department assisted in the North Antrim constituency; and (ii) how much has been invested in each business, over the past five years, (AQW 6037/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Since 2004-05 my Department has awarded non-agricultural financial assistance to 121 rural businesses in the North Antrim constituency under the auspices of the outgoing Rural Development Programme, which incorporated the Building Sustainable Prosperity, Peace II, INTERREG IIIA and LEADER + initiatives. This totals up to an overall investment of £2,822,123.96 over the period. A detailed table is available if required.

In addition, some £381,197.50 was distributed indirectly through LEADER groups. In this case it is not possible to provide a full breakdown without incurring disproportionate cost.

I am pleased to report that £100 million is available under Axis 3 of the RDP 2007-2013, and many of the measures within this Axis will target rural businesses.

Agricultural Links

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what actions her Department has taken to develop agricultural links, including business and marketing links, between North Antrim and the corresponding area of Scotland. (AQW 6038/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Neither I nor my officials have taken any action to develop agricultural links of this nature between North Antrim and the corresponding area of Scotland.

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) to outline the process by which her Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits her Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail her Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6350/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development:

(i) Outline the process by which her Department’s accounts are audited

• The NI Audit Office (NIAO) agrees an Audit Strategy with the Department. This contains key deliverables and dates.
• The Department submits interim accounts for the 9 months to 31 December, for audit, in February.
• In late May, the Department submits draft accounts for the 12 months to 31 March, for audit.
• There is an appropriate internal quality review process at all key stages.
• In June the NIAO clears the accounts and agrees with the Department a report to management, identifying any emergent issues.
• In late June the Departmental Accounting Officer signs the Final Accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor General certifies them for the NIAO.
• The Annual Report and Accounts are laid in the Assembly, in July.

(ii) Who audits her Department’s accounts?

The NIAO is responsible for auditing the Department’s accounts.

(iii) Detail her Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years.

The Department’s ‘Annual Report & Accounts’ is laid in the NI Assembly and subsequently published. Copies of these documents are available in the Assembly library.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Festivals and Events in East Antrim

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding his Department has provided for festivals and events in East Antrim since May 2007. (AQW 4890/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr G Campbell): My Department has awarded £324,004 for festivals and events in East Antrim since May 2007.

Irish-Language Groups

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the Irish-language groups that have been funded by his Department; and (ii) the amount of funding provided to Irish-language groups in the Lagan Valley constituency, over the last three years. (AQW 5779/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department does not fund individual Irish-language groups; however Irish-language groups can receive funding from Foras na Gaeilge.

Foras na Gaeilge does not hold the requested information on a constituency basis, however I have requested Foras na Gaeilge to start capturing the information in this format from 1 April 2009.

Foras na Gaeilge can however provide detailed information pertaining to specific Irish-language groups upon request.

Ulster-Scots Projects

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many Ulster-Scots projects his Department has funded in the North Down constituency, in each of the last three years. (AQW 5834/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: My Department through the Community Festival Fund has funded one Ulster-Scots project in the North Down Constituency over the past three years – Groomsport Eagle Wing Festival, £8,976 in the 2008/2009 year.

The Ulster-Scots Agency does not presently hold the requested information on a constituency basis. The Agency is currently reviewing its systems and procedures and as part of that I have asked the Agency to start capturing the information in this format from 1 April 2009.
The Agency can however provide detailed information pertaining to specific Ulster-Scots projects or events upon request.

North/South Language Body

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps are being taken to obtain an explanation from the language body of the North/South bodies of why grant expenditure of £720,000 in 2000 did not have documentation.

(AQW 5896/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The 2000 Accounts of the North/South Language Body were qualified.

The reason for qualification is included in the North/South Language Body Annual Report and Accounts which is in the Assembly library.

Following the qualification of the 2000 Accounts the Agencies of the North/South Language Body introduced a number of procedures and controls in relation to grant expenditures. These were approved by the Sponsor and Finance Departments and endorsed by the North/South Ministerial Council.

Russell Gaelic Union in Downpatrick

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much grant aid his Department has given to the Russell Gaelic Union in Downpatrick, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 5930/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. SNI has provided no exchequer funding to the Russell Gaelic Union in Downpatrick (RGU) over the last ten years. However, SNI made a £60,000 lottery award to the RGU in 2001 towards the construction of a new pitch.

Local Soccer Players

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he pledges to support and recognise the achievements of all local soccer players, whether playing for Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 5955/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: As Minister with responsibility for sport in Northern Ireland I will continue to recognise the achievements of all athletes who represent Northern Ireland at National and International sporting events.

Irish and Ulster-Scots Funding

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what progress has been made in reversing the historical disparity in funding between Irish and Ulster-Scots; and what further work he has planned to address this issue.

(AQW 6062/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I am committed to addressing the disparity in funding between Irish and Ulster-Scots.

Through the implementation of the Strategy for Indigenous or Regional Minority Languages it is my intention to ensure that both languages are given equal respect and recognition and that the development of one language must be considered within the context of an equitable approach to the other.

Traditional Arts Officer

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the analysis that took place which determined that the post of the Traditional Arts Officer will become a part time position, when currently it takes a number of officers to carry out the work.

(AQW 6085/09)
The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The appointment of Arts Officers is a matter for the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, and is overseen by its Chief Executive and Council.

The Arts Council has advised that when assessing the weighting of a post, the volume of work associated with the case load of the particular art form area is considered. For example, the number of clients the officer will be dealing with, the number of meetings and events to be attended, as well as developmental issues.

Although there are two officers currently carrying the traditional arts portfolio while it is vacant, this is in addition to their current areas of responsibility.

The Arts Council has advised that this post has been in existence for over 20 years and has historically been a part-time one. However, it was full time when it was last filled in September 2007. This was to allow for additional responsibilities related to the planning and delivery of the traditional arts contribution to the Smithsonian Folklife Festival in Washington.

Ten-Day Payment Policy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what measures his Department has in place to ensure invoices are paid within ten-days. (AQW 6125/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: My Department has issued guidance internally and to its sponsored bodies and has requested that every effort be made to comply with the ten-day payment policy.

The Department is committed to continuously improving its performance in this area. It has already contacted active suppliers who are still paid by payable order and asked them to convert to electronic funds transfer – this will reduce the time taken for payments to reach their bank accounts.

DCAL will also migrate its transaction processing to a shared services centre (AccountNI) in April 2009 and would anticipate that new business processes based around workflow and electronic documentation would make a further significant impact on turnaround times for invoice settlement.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what are the (i) projects; and (ii) amounts of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6156/09)

North/South Language Body

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why the accounts of the North/South Language Body have not been certified since 2003; and why there has been a delay given that the accounts for other North/South bodies have been certified up to 2006. (AQW 6161/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: At the North/South Ministerial Council meeting in language sectoral format Ministers directed the language body to address the backlog in laying the annual reports and accounts as a priority. The North/South Language Body annual report and accounts for the period ending 31 December 2004 was laid before the Northern Ireland Assembly and both houses of the Oireachtas on 26 February 2009. The accounts for both agencies for 2005 have been consolidated and will be laid before both Parliaments when cleared by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Programme for Government Targets

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education what risk assessment she has carried out on the Programme for Government targets. (AQW 4886/09)

The Minister of Education (Ms C Ruane): Cuirtear san áireamh i gClár na Rioscaí Corparáide DE iad na rioscaí ard leibhéil maidir leis an Chláir um spriocanna an rialtais agus bionn mónaitóireacht agus athbhreithniú déanta air seo go rialta ag Bord na Roinne agus ag Coiste um Bhainistíocht Ríoscaí lena chinntiú go bhfuil na rialaithe cuí agus gniomhartha bainistíochta ann leis na rioscai a bheith agus a mhaoiú.

High level risks in relation to delivery of the Programme for Government targets are included in the DE Corporate Risk Register which is monitored and reviewed regularly by the Departmental Board and the DE Audit and Risk Management Committee to ensure that the appropriate controls and management actions are in place to manage and mitigate the risks. “DE fails to achieve relevant PSA targets” is recognised as a high level risk in the DE Corporate Risk Register. The DE Business Plan, which I approve, takes account of the actions my Department is taking to ensure delivery of the high level targets set out in the Programme for Government and mitigate risk. If there is a significant risk, or the likelihood of a significant risk materialising, I would be made aware of the fact.

East-West Co-operation in Education

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the work she has undertaken to promote greater east-west co-operation in education in 2008/09.

(AQW 5907/09)

The Minister of Education: I recognise the mutual benefits to our education systems of ongoing cooperation with my counterparts in the South and in Scotland, Wales and England.

In 2008/09, my Department has provided funding to the British Council to administer the east-west schools programme and the causeway programme. The east-west schools programme aims to build educational links on a tripartite basis, involving schools from across Ireland, England, Scotland and Wales. The causeway programme is a youth exchange programme that was developed to strengthen and improve relationships between young people on these islands.

Officials from each of the eight British-Irish Council administrations held a very successful inaugural meeting in Cardiff in January 2009 to discuss a new thematic strand on early years policy and to take forward work on a number of topics.

Bullying is unacceptable in our classrooms and in our society. The Department cannot solve this issue alone, and therefore continues to work in close partnership with statutory and voluntary organisations through its membership and funding of the local Anti-Bullying Forum. It is also a member of the British and Irish Anti-Bullying Forum and I had the pleasure of attending its meeting in September last year.

Officials from my Department continued to work with their counterparts in the Department for Children, Schools and Families and the Scottish Public Pensions Agency to co-ordinate the development of policy for the respective teachers’ pension schemes here and in England, Wales and Scotland.

Last year, the Department of Education and the Education and Training Inspectorate hosted an autism stocktake event in Belfast, which included officials and inspectors from Wales, Scotland and the south of Ireland. The event provided a forum to consider autism provision across the education sector and exchange examples of good practice in a strategic context.

Bíonn oifigigh ón Chigireacht Oideachais agus Oiliúna ag bualadh lena gcomhghleacaithe sa deisceart, i Sasana, in Albain agus sa Bhréatain Bhheag go rialta le heolas a chomhroinnt ar réimse ceisteanna oideachais. Bíonn siad ag comhoibriú ar roinnt seirinní agus sprioc-chigearachtaí.

Officials from the Education and Training Inspectorate meet regularly with their counterparts in the south, England, Scotland and Wales to share information on a range of educational issues. They also collaborate on a variety of seminars and targeted inspections.
Childcare and Early Years Interventions

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education (i) what assessment has been made of the need for childcare and early years interventions; and (ii) what statutory provision exists for childcare and early years interventions, in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas, broken down by parliamentary constituency. (AQW 5927/09)

The Minister of Education:

(i) The subject of Childcare incorporates a range of issues including the needs of children, the needs of parents, the affordability of childcare, regulations and standards of provision, the shared focus on care and education, and access to services. As such, aspects of childcare are the responsibility of several government departments. The Ministerial Sub-Committee on Children and Young People has established a Sub-Group on Poverty which has been tasked with carrying out an assessment of the role and need for childcare. This Sub-Group will be reporting shortly to the Ministerial Sub-Committee for Children and Young People.

The evidence paper produced for the development of the Early Years Strategy has indicated the importance of early identification of any needs an individual child may be experiencing. This will be reflected in the Early Years Strategy currently being drafted.

Down High School in Downpatrick

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education why no planning application has been submitted for the new Down High School in Downpatrick. (AQW 5929/09)

The Minister of Education: Is ceist í pleanáil eastát na scoileanna rialaithe a bhaineann le Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt (SEELB) sa chéad dul síos.

The planning of the controlled schools’ estate is a matter for the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) in the first instance.

The SEELB has identified a suitable site for Down High School. However an issue arose with respect to the protection of paupers’ graves on the site which led to the SEELB engaging a firm of archaeologists to conduct some trial excavations in the area. Remains were found but have been left in situ. The Board is currently awaiting a report from the archaeologists before they formulate a way forward on the future treatment of this area.

The Board has advised that it is hoped the planning application will be lodged in a few weeks time.

‘STOP’ Group

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education if she has received any correspondence from the ‘STOP’ group. (AQW 6007/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá iarratas ar chruinniú faighte agam ón ghrúpa ‘STOP’ le plé a dhéanamh ar an imní atá ar na tuismitheoirí seo faoi na socruithe d’Aistriú 2010.

I have received a request from the ‘STOP’ group for a meeting to discuss concerns these parents have about arrangements for Transfer 2010.

Major Works

Work on new school buildings for Ballinderry Primary School and Pond Park Primary School, Lisburn is currently underway and both are due to complete in 2009/10. Planning for new school buildings for St Colman’s Primary School, Lambe and Dromore Central Primary School are also currently being taken forward. Construction work on new school buildings for Brookefield Special School, Moira and Ballymacrickett Primary School, Glenavy has also been completed in recent months.

First Language of Pupils

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 5333/09, what is her assessment of the adequacy of the provision for pupils whose first language is not English. (AQW 6029/09)

The Minister of Education: De réir an daonáirimh a rinneadh i mí d heireadh fómhair 2008 bhí 6,995 dalta nuathagtha ann, a raibh an Béarla mar theanga bhreise (EAL) acu.

According to the October 2008 census there were 6,995 newcomer pupils, who have English as an additional language (EAL).

I am pleased that my Department is now ready to publish a formal policy to help schools support all newcomer pupils, regardless of their first language. This policy will ensure such pupils acquire the language of instruction to enable them to access the school curriculum and partake in every aspect of school life through building upon the capacity and skills of the school workforce as part of the overall raising standards agenda.

My Department has funded the setting up of the regional Inclusion and Diversity Service (IDS) across the Education and Library Boards, to strengthen and improve support to newcomer pupils, by ensuring that a consistent level of support and specialist advice is provided to all grant-aided and special schools. In 2008/09, this service received £1,015,000 of funding.

In addition to this, my Department will continue to fund schools directly via the EAL factor of the Common Funding Formula (CFF) for each newcomer pupil who has significant language acquisition needs. In the 2008/09 financial year the EAL factor was £983 per newcomer pupil, giving a total of £5.5 million of this funding that was allocated to schools.

The key support services of the IDS that are currently available include diversity coordinators, interpreting and translating services, a multi-lingual website for teachers and newcomer parents, a toolkit for primary schools and continuous professional development for teaching staff. The future work programme will include developing toolkits for post-primary, special and nursery schools, aids for schools in initial and continuing assessment and specific training programmes aimed at increasing the capacity or skills of the teaching workforce.

An Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) survey of the support schools and the IDS are providing was completed at the end of 2008 and the report will be published soon. In addition the introduction of the ‘unique pupil number’ last year will allow the generation of data to assess the achievement levels of newcomer pupils.
First Language of Pupils

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education if her Department has any plans to increase funding for schools who have pupils whose first language is not English. (AQW 6031/09)

The Minister of Education: Soláthraíonn mo Roinn cistiú go díreach chuig scoileanna, trí Bhéarla mar theanga breise (EAL) atá mar chuid den Phoirmle Chómhaoinithe, a lígeann dóibh tacaíocht do dhaltái nua-thagtha.

My Department provides funding direct to schools, through the English as an additional language (EAL) factor of the Common Funding Formula (CFF), to allow them to support their newcomer pupils.

The funds to schools relate directly to the number of newcomer children identified in the school census. This particular method of funding is therefore flexible and responsive. The EAL factor is an additional 0.5 of the basic Age Weighted Pupil Unit (AWPU) cash value. This was £983 for each full-time newcomer pupil in 2008/09, giving a total of £5.5million. In the forthcoming 2009/10 financial year, as the EAL factor has risen to £1,010 per newcomer pupil, the total funding to be allocated will be over £6.9million.

In addition, funding is provided to Education and Library Boards, for the Inclusion and Diversity Service (IDS), to enable key services to be provided to schools. In 2008/09 it received £1,015,000 and in the forthcoming 2009/10 financial year, it will receive over £1.1million.

Composite Classes

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Education (i) how many primary schools have composite classes; (ii) where these classes are located; (iii) how many pupils are affected; and (iv) how this situation has altered over the past five years, in the North Antrim constituency. (AQW 6039/09)

Note:
1. Composite classes are those classes where children from two curriculum year groups are taught together. In some instances however, children from different year groups may be taught as a single year group. An example of this might be where a child from abroad is ‘held back’ a year, so that they can access the curriculum at a level appropriate to their previous educational experience. Some instances of these are included in the figures provided.
2. Figures relate to children in year 1 – 7 classes and include children in mainstream classes and special units within schools.

Children with Learning Disabilities

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education what is the selection criteria used by Boards of Governors to admit children with learning disabilities. (AQW 6044/09)

The Minister of Education: Is ceist a bhaineann leis an scoil féin í an cheist faoi na mionchritéir iontrála a úsáideann Bord Gobharnóirí na scoile ach ní bheadh tagairt ar leith do pháistí a bhfuil deacrachtaí an t-ainmneacha acu sna crítéir iontrála, dairire.

The exact nature of admissions criteria used by school Boards of Governors is a matter for each individual school, but admissions criteria would not in practice make specific reference to children with learning difficulties. Admissions criteria tend to be of the type described in the recently published Transfer 2010 guidance, and if children with learning difficulties require support on admission that can be catered for. If learning difficulties require a statement of special educational needs, such children would be placed on the basis of the content of that statement.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education what are her Department’s plans to provide a transfer system to post-primary schools for children who have statements. (AQW 6045/09)

The Minister of Education: Minítear sa treoir ar Aistriú 2010, a foilsiodh de bhun an ráitis a thug mé don Tionól ar 2 Feabhra 2009, nach mbeidh athrú ar bith ar na nősanna imeachta a bhionn á bhfeidhmiú lasmuigh de nósanna imeachta oscaite rollaithe do pháistí a bhfuil ráiteas ar riachtanais speisialta oideachais acu, lena chinntiú go bhfuaghdh na páistí sin an áit scoile is oiriúnáid doibh.

The Transfer 2010 guidance published on foot of my 2 February 2009 statement to the Assembly explains that the procedures that operate outside of the open enrolment procedures for children in receipt of a statement of special educational needs will continue unchanged, in order to ensure that such children are provided with the most appropriate school placement.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education to list the schools which have indicated that they will conduct their own entrance examinations in 2010. (AQW 6055/09)

The Minister of Education: Is iad Lumen Christi College agus Slemish College an dá scoil atá i ndiaidh a chur in iúl dom go mbeidh scrúduithe iontrála d’Aistriú 2010 acu.

The two schools that have indicated to me that they intend offering entrance examinations for Transfer 2010 are Lumen Christi College and Slemish College.
Primary Schools in Upper Bann

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the total amount of finance allocated as ring-fenced in each of the last three years to primary schools in Upper Bann; and (ii) the amount underspent and returned to her Department. (AQW 6064/09)

The Minister of Education: Sonraítear sa tábla thíos na méideanna imfhálaithe a dáileadh chuig bunscoileanna na Banna Uachtar i ngach bliain le trí bliana anuas agus na méideanna nár caítheadh ag gach deireadh bliana.

The table below provides details of the ring-fenced amounts which have been allocated to Upper Bann primary schools during each of the last three years and the amounts unspent at each year end. All funding allocated to schools and unspent at the end of the financial year is available for schools to use in future years for the purposes it was intended and is not therefore returned to my Department.

SELB delegates earmarked funds directly to schools and monitors expenditure on the basis of educational initiative outcomes. On that basis over the 3 years concerned the only reported underspends from Upper Bann primary schools were in relation to the extended schools initiative, the details of which are included on the table.

Our Lady’s & St Mochua’s Primary School, Derrynoose

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to assist the provision of an additional classroom at Our Lady’s & St Mochua’s Primary School, Derrynoose, given the rise in admissions and the long term accommodation difficulties with the current Primary 5 class. (AQW 6091/09)

The Minister of Education: Cé nach bhfuair an Roinn iarratas foirmiúil go fóill le haghaidh seomra ranga breise don scoil, tá oifigigh ar an eolas gur ardaíodh ceisteanna faoin chóiríocht atá ann anois.

Although my Department has not to date received formal application for an additional classroom for the school, officials are aware that issues have been raised about the current accommodation. The department is in contact with the CCMS on the position. If an application is submitted to the department it will be considered in line with the criteria set down for such applications.

Departmental Staff

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education where the health of an employee in her Department is at threat, would she give priority to that person for a move to more suitable employment. (AQW 6096/09)

The Minister of Education: Nuair a chuirtear in iúl go bhfuil bagairt ann do shláinte aon fhostaithe, moltar don fhostait dul i dteagmháil leis an Oifigeach Leasa le rátáil Leasa a fháil, rátáil a mbaintear úsáid aisti le tosaíocht ar an Lárliosta Aistrithe a thabhairt do bhaill foirne atá ag iarraidh ais triú chuig fosaiocth níos oiriúnaí.

Where it has been made known that the health of an employee is at threat, the employee is advised to contact the Welfare Officer for consideration of a Welfare rating which is used to prioritise staff on the Central Transfer List who wish to secure a move to more suitable employment.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education, (i) how many children with autism have been admitted to the Middletown Centre for Autism; (ii) what the total cost of staff salaries and benefits is; and (iii) how many staff will be employed when the recently advertised additional seven posts are filled. (AQW 6104/09)
The Minister of Education: In answer to part (i) of your question, the Middletown Centre for Autism is not yet in a position to accept referrals for its assessment services. The two key services to be provided by the Centre that involve the referral of children and young people with autistic spectrum disorders are the Educational Assessment Service and the Learning Support Service. It is planned that the Educational Assessment Service will be modelled later this year on an outreach basis and that the Learning Support Service will come on stream in 2010 following the completion of the building programme.

The Centre currently offers the training and advisory service and the autism research and information service. The Centre has trained 624 professionals, north and south, since December 2007. Also, the Centre has commenced research in relation to data collection and the Centre has recently completed a review of literature on diet and its impact on autism.

In answer to part (ii) of your question, I have been informed by the Chief Executive Officer of the Centre that the total cost of staff salaries for the first year of operation April 2007 - March 2008 was £219,284 and that the total cost for this current year April 2008 - February 2009 is £419,829. The costs of the Centre are shared on a north/south basis.

Ar deireadh, chuir an Príomhóifigeach Feidhmíucháin in iúl dom fosta go mbeidh 24 ball foirne, idir lánaímseartha agus pháirtaimseartha, fostaithe ag an ionad na seacht bpost atá á bhfógrú faoi láthair liona.

Finally, the Chief Executive Officer has also informed me that following successful recruitment of the seven posts currently advertised there will be 24 full and part-time members of staff employed by the Centre.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education what activities have taken place at the Middletown Centre for Autism since 2005 and to detail the number of children on the Autism Spectrum that have directly benefited from these activities. (AQW 6105/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá Ionad Anochtais Choillidh Chanannáin i mbun féidhme ó 1ú Aibreán 2007. Tá na seirbhísí atá a mholadh á dtabhairt isteach ar bhonnn cóimhneachta le bheith ag teacht le cur i gcrích an chlár um athchóiriú an fhoirgnimh.

The Middletown Centre for Autism has been in operation since 1st April 2007. The services proposed for the Centre are being phased in order to coincide with the completion of the building refurbishment programme. The Centre already offers the training and advisory service and the autism research and information service. The educational assessment service will be modelled during 2009.

The learning support service will be the fourth service to be offered, as it requires completion of the new building which is expected to be completed in 2010.

The following information has been supplied by the Chief Executive Officer of the Centre.

The Centre has already trained 624 professionals, north and south, over a total of 29 training courses to date in the following areas: ASD and co-morbidities; ASD and Mental Health; Sensory processing difficulties in ASD; Meeting the sensorimotor skills of children with ASD within the curriculum framework; PEP-3; TEACCH Transition Assessment Profile (first training in England, Scotland, Wales or the north or south of Ireland); and TEACCH Practice and Research. All of the training has been evaluated and feedback from the trainees has been very positive.

The education professionals trained will use the knowledge and skills gained from the training in their daily work with children and young people with autism, throughout Ireland.

Research has already commenced in relation to data collection and the Centre has recently completed a review of literature on diet and its impact on autism and will shortly publish their findings in the form of an information leaflet.

The Centre is also developing its capacity as an information resource and is already offering significant reference resources in the form of books and access to academic journals for professionals.
Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education if she will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6110/09)

The Minister of Education:

Maidir le dáileadh cháipéisí chomhailíúcháin agus foilsíúcháin eile, Leanann mo Roinn na bealaí dáilte comhaontaithe chuig ionadaithe polaitíochta agus teagmhálaíthe parlaiminteacha mar atá sonraithe sa Treoir OFMDFM ar Dháileadh Fhoilsíúcháin agus Cápéisí Chomhailíúcháin na Roinne mar chuid den nós imeachta a bhaveann le ’Páipéir curtha i láthair’ sa Tionól.

In distributing consultation documents and other publications, my Department follows the agreed distribution channels to political representatives and parliamentary contacts, specified in the OFMDFM Guidance on the Distribution of Departmental Publications and Consultation Documents by the “Papers Presented” procedure in the Assembly. In addition, the Department informs MLAs by letter of consultations undertaken by the Department and where they can obtain copies, including electronically, from the Department’s website.

Composite Classes

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education which primary schools in the North Eastern Education and Library Board area operate composite classes. (AQW 6115/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh sa tábla thíos.

The information requested is contained in the table below.

Note:

3. Composite classes are those classes where children from at least two curriculum year groups are taught together. In some instances however, children from different year groups may be taught as a single year group. An example of this might be where a child from abroad is ‘held back’ a year, so that they can access the curriculum at a level appropriate to their previous educational experience. Some instances of these are included in the figures provided.

4. Figures relate to children in year 1 – 7 classes and exclude children in special units within schools.

Academic Selection

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Education what options will be available to children attending (i) St John’s Primary School, Glen; (ii) St Mary’s Primary School, Barr; (iii) St Colman’s Primary School, Sheptown; (iv) Ballyholland Primary School, Ballyholland; (v) St Patrick’s Primary School, Mayobridge; (vi) Carrick Primary School, Burren; and (vii) Clontifleece Primary School, Warrenpoint, who, prior to transferring to second level education choose not to participate in any form of academic selection. (AQW 6120/09)

The Minister of Education: Déantar cur síos ar na roghanna atá ar fáil do thuismitheoirí agus do pháistí ó scol ar bith liostaithe thus, nó ó bhunscoil ar bith eile, laistigh den leabhrán asitrithe atá foilsithe ar bhonn bliantúil ag gach Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne agus a shonraíonn na crítheíontrála a bhainean le gach iarbhunscoil. Sonraithear ann fosta eolas ábhartha eile a chuidionn le tuismitheoirí agus le páistí socruithe eolasacha a dhéanamh nuair atá roghanna um aistriú iarbhunscoile le nochtadh ar fhoirm aistrithe acu.
The options that are available to parents and children associated with any of the schools listed, or any other primary school, are described within a post-primary transfer booklet which is published annually by each Education and Library Board detailing the admissions criteria that apply to all post-primary schools and other relevant information that helps parents and children make informed decisions on the expressing of preferences for post-primary transfer on a transfer form. The post-primary transfer booklets contain information about all types of school regardless of whether they practise academic selection or not.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education how many complaints she has received from parents about post-primary transfer arrangements in the last year (i) in total; (ii) broken down by constituency; and (iii) broken down by council area

The Minister of Education: Tá méid suntasach chomh fhreagrais faighte agam i rith na tréimhse seo maidir le hábhar an aistrithe iarbhunscoile agus in álainn cáisí, bionn tuismitheoirí agus eile ar lorg léiríúchaí faoi shonruithe um hhorbairt mo mholtáí ar an aistriú iarbhunscoile agus le déanaí ar fhoisliú na Treoir um Aistriú 2010.
I have received a considerable volume of correspondence on the subject of post-primary transfer during this period, and in many instances parents and others are seeking clarification on points of details about the development of my proposals for post-primary transfer and in more recent times the publishing of Transfer 2010 guidance. Correspondence of this nature is not routinely classified by any category and may take the form of enquiries, supportive or negative comments, or personal views on a way forward. On occasions parental correspondence includes a request for me to bring certainty to bear on arrangements for Transfer 2010. It is a subjective judgement as to whether correspondence of this nature should be described as letters of complaint, and in an increasing number of instances parental correspondence takes the form of an e-mail which contains no address details, hence precluding any analysis by constituency or council area. The information requested is therefore not readily available.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what are the (i) projects; and (ii) amounts of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6155/09)

Donaghadee High School

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to explain why the South Eastern Education and Library Board has failed to contact staff at Donaghadee High School about their future, since the school is due to close in August 2009. (AQW 6186/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá tugtha le fios dom ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Dheiscirt go bhfuil bhaint ghniomhach dhícheach acu leis an fhoireann múinteoireachta agus leis an fhoireann nach múinteoirí iad atá fostaithi i Donaghadee High School agus leis na ceardchumainn maidir le dúnadh na scoile ar 31 Lúnasa 2009.

I am advised by the South Eastern Education and Library Board that the Board is actively involved directly with teaching and non teaching staff employed in Donaghadee High School and their Trade Unions concerning the closure of the school on 31 August 2009.

The Board also advises that a number of consultation meetings have already taken place with staff and Trade Unions. Individual one-to-one meetings with staff are being scheduled.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education if grammar schools will continue to have the same status following the introduction of the proposed transfer arrangements in 2010. (AQW 6192/09)

The Minister of Education: Tugtar sainmhiniú dleathach do scoil ghramadaí ar bhonn nach bhfuil nasctha leis an phróiseas iontrála atá aici.

A grammar school is legally defined as a grammar school in a manner unconnected with the nature of its admissions process. The existing definition is contained in the interpretation section of the Education and Libraries Order (NI), 1986 and is as follows: ‘‘grammar school’ means a secondary school which—

(a) immediately before the coming into operation of Article 128 of the 1989 Order was a school in which fees were charged or could have been charged in respect of pupils admitted to the school, or a school which replaces such a school or schools; or (b) is established after the coming into operation of that Article and is designated by the Department as a grammar school.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education if the Free School Meals (FSME) criterion is the over-riding admissions criterion for transfer of children from primary to post-primary schools. (AQW 6194/09)

The Minister of Education: Minítear san Aistriú 2010 go moltar le bheith ina chéad chritéar um Theidlíocht do Bhéilí Saora Scolé (FSME) agus é in úsáid ag gach iarbhunscoil nuair atá a n-iontrála a sórtó acu.

The Transfer 2010 guidance explains that a Free School Meals Entitlement (FSME) criterion is recommended as the first criterion to be used by all post-primary schools in determining admissions. The guidance also lists a number of other recommended criteria, but in no particular order.

Post-Primary Transfer: Legal Advice

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education whether she has discretion to publish the legal advice she received from the Departmental solicitor in relation to the introduction of guidelines for post-primary transfer. (AQO 2295/09)

The Minister of Education: Glacann gach Roinn comhairle dli (agus cineálach aile comhairle riachtanai) maidir le roinn mórbeart.

All Departments take legal (and other necessary types of advice) on many major actions. Like all legal advice obtained by Government Departments, this advice is privileged. I do not therefore intend publishing legal advice received in relation to this issue.
However, the legislative basis for the issuing of guidance has already been published. Paragraph 1 of the guidance states that it is issued under Article 30 of the Education Order 2006. I will quote what this Article says: “The Department may issue, and from time to time revise, such guidance as it thinks appropriate in respect of the arrangements for the admission of pupils to grant-aided schools.

Educational Strategies

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what communication she has had with her colleagues in Scotland and Wales about exchanging educational strategies. (AQO 2297/09)

The Minister of Education: Bhuail mé leis an Aire in Albain ar 12 Nollaig 2007 le plé a dhéanamh ar chúrsaí amhail oiliúint do mhúinteoirí, dul i ngleic leis an tearghnóthachtáil agus Gaelscaíocht anseo agus in Albain.

I met with my Scottish counterpart on 12 December 2007 to discuss and share our thinking on matters such as teacher education, tackling educational underachievement and Irish/Gaelic-medium education.

I attended British Irish Council meetings on 16 July 2007 and 14 February 2008 along with counterparts from England, Scotland, Wales, the Isle of Man, Guernsey and Jersey. The meeting in Dublin in February focused on issues of drug misuse, with a focus on children and families; early years policy; child protection; and child poverty – all issues for which our education system has a role to play.

In September 2008, I attended a meeting of the British and Irish Anti-Bullying Forum, of which my Department is a member.

Review of Special Educational Needs and Inclusion

Ms J McCann asked the Minister of Education what is the status of the Review of Special Educational Needs and Inclusion which commenced in April 2006. (AQO 2298/09)

The Minister of Education: Cuireadh na moltaí a bhí mar thoradh ar an Athbhreithniú faoi bhráid an Choiste Fheidhmíucháin i mí Iúil 2008 le meabhrán feidhmíucháin breise i mí na Samhna ar long comhaontaithe leis na moltaí a eisiúnt le haghaidh comhairliúcháin phoiblí.

The policy proposals which have emerged from the Review were referred to the Executive in July 2008 with a further Executive memo in November seeking agreement to issue for public consultation.

To date the Executive has not discussed the policy proposals and agreement has not been given to proceed to consultation.

Subject to Executive agreement it is our intention to proceed to public consultation without delay.

The policy proposals relate to the most vulnerable in our society and the public consultation on the policy proposals are much anticipated by educationalists, voluntary sector, parents, teachers, trade union side and all those involved in the extensive pre-consultation stage.

I have recently issued my Executive colleagues a copy of the Equality Impact Assessment on the review’s proposals. This clearly identifies the various barriers to learning which children in our society face and many of which are not mutually exclusive.

There are now nearly 60,000 (18.6%) of our children and young people with a special educational need and 13,219 (4.1%) with a statement. The policy proposals maintain a very clear focus on the needs of these children within an inclusive conceptual framework which complements and supports the efforts to address special educational need. The concept of additional need recognises the interface between barriers to learning which already exist for many of our children and the applicability of a range of strategies to the continuum of need.

The focus of the proposed policy is on early identification and early intervention to provide the necessary support through capacity building in educational settings and multi disciplinary partnerships with the health and social services sectors.

My policy proposals aim to improve both the outcomes from education and the life chances of those children.

I would implore my Executive colleagues to urgently agree to the issue of these proposals for full consultation to allow everyone involved to contribute to the shaping of the final policy.

Post-Primary Transfer: Legal Advice

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education on what dates she received legal advice from her departmental solicitor in relation to the introduction of guidelines for post-primary transfer. (AQO 2299/09)

The Minister of Education: Glacann gach Roinn comhairle dlí (agus cineálacha eile comhairle riachtanaí) maidir le roinnt mórbheart, agus d’adhmaigh mé gur ghlaigh mé gur ghlaigh mé sa chás seo.

All Departments take legal advice (and other necessary types of advice) on many major actions, and I have acknowledged that I have done so in this instance. Legal advice obtained by Government Departments is privileged, and I consider details of communication with legal advisers to be as privileged as the resulting legal advice.

The legislative basis for the issuing of guidance has already been published. Paragraph 1 of the guidance states that it is issued under Article 30 of the Education Order 2006. That Article states: “The Department may issue, and from time to time revise, such guidance as it thinks appropriate in respect of the arrangements for the admission of pupils to grant-aided schools.”

Post-Primary Transfer: Independent Arrangements

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education for her assessment of the impact on children of schools opting for independent transfer arrangements based on examination. (AQO 2300/09)

The Minister of Education: Schools are required to “have regard to” the Transfer 2010 guidance. Any school that decides thereafter to depart from the recommendations contained within the guidance will help perpetuate the inequalities associated with the outgoing arrangements and risks creating dysfunction within the overall admissions process.

The impact on children whose parents choose to seek admission for them to these schools will be the stress and anxiety associated with preparing for multiple tests, possibly of differing types, and awaiting the results thereafter. They run the risk of further uncertainty and anxiety if challenges arise in respect of any aspect of the testing process.

Ní gá go dtarlóidh sé ar chor ar bith agus is fheidir é a sheachaint má chloíonn gach scoil leis na moltaí atá sa treoir ar Aistriú 2010.

This is entirely unnecessary and can be avoided if all schools adhere to the recommendations contained in the Transfer 2010 guidance.

Science, Mathematics and English: NI Performance

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Education for her assessment of Northern Ireland’s performance in Science, Mathematics and English as reported in the Programme for International Student Assessment report published in December 2007, and how these compare with the non-selective systems in England, Scotland and the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 2301/09)

The Minister of Education: Léiríonn torthaí 2006 an Chláir um Mheasúnú ar Mhic Léinn Idirnáisiúnta (PISA) sa léitheoireacht mar shampla, go bhfuil scór de 495 againn agus is íonann an scór seo agus measánfeidhmiocht ag leibhéal OECD.

The outcomes from the 2006 Programme for International Student Assessment (PISA) in, for example, reading show that we have a score of 495 which represents an average performance at OECD level. Compare this to the performance of the south where children are not subjected to the trauma of selection and generally attend all-ability schools - its performance in reading is significantly higher than ours and significantly higher than the OECD average.

Turning to England and Scotland, I can report that their PISA outcomes place them in a similar bracket to us. Like us and like the south, they are significantly above the OECD average performance in science. In reading and in mathematics both Scotland and England perform at the OECD average, as do we.

It is clear to me that we should be aspiring to be far better than simply average – there should be no reason why our performance cannot match that of the south in reading; or indeed of countries like Finland which outperform us in all three areas: reading, mathematics and science.
Academic selection does not improve our chances of achieving better performance – in my view, quite the reverse. An indicator of that is the fact that, of all OECD countries, we have one of the greatest gaps in achievement between our highest and lowest performing students and that is nothing to be proud of.

Post-Primary Transfer: Entry Criteria

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education for her assessment of the legal requirements faced by schools opting to use examinations as part of their entry criteria.

(AQO 2302/09)

The Minister of Education: Soláthraíonn an Treoir Aistrithe 2010, a bhí foilsithe de bhun mo raitis ar 2 Feabhar 2009 chuig an Tíonól, liosta léiríucháin, nach bhfuil uileghabháil, de na raíachtanais a bheidh ag scoileanna a roghnaíonn gan glacadh leis na moltai sa treoir.

The Transfer 2010 guidance published on foot of my 2 February 2009 statement to the Assembly provides an illustrative, though not exhaustive, list of requirements faced by schools that choose not to adhere to the recommendations contained within the guidance.

Some of these requirements have a legislative basis, such as the requirement to make reasonable adjustments for children defined as disabled under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. Other requirements set out in the guidance, such as the special provisions and special circumstances procedures, do not have their origins set out explicitly in legislation, but can equally be described as requirements in that breakaway schools would be expected by parents to operate robust procedures of an equivalent standard to those in operation under the outgoing arrangements involving a Department of Education approved Transfer Test. Failure to do so may lead to legal challenges by parents.

Schools intending to offer entrance tests will in my view increasingly become embroiled in a legal minefield.

Post-Primary Transfer: Breakaway Entrance Tests

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Education if the absence of regulation means that children will sit a number of different breakaway entrance tests.

(AQO 2303/09)

The Minister of Education: Nil gá ar bith ann do pháiste ar bith le teist iontrála a dhéanamh.

There is no need for any child to sit an entrance test. The Transfer 2010 guidance published on foot of my 2 February 2009 statement to the Assembly provides for a system of post-primary transfer which does not require any form of testing and addresses the inequalities associated with academic selection.

Schools intending to offer entrance tests will in my view increasingly become embroiled in a legal minefield.

Post-Primary Transfer: CCEA Test

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Education to detail why she has withdrawn the test that CCEA had been developing.

(AQO 2304/09)

The Minister of Education: Is é an t-aon bhealach amháin gur féidir teist a chur ar fáil ar bhonn freagrach, ná creatách reachtach a chur léi a mhínionn cén dóigh a n-úsáidfear í.

The only way a test could responsibly be made available is if there is a legislative framework defining its use. The successful operation of an admission-determining test requires not just a test, but a legal framework providing for which schools can and cannot use it, stating exactly how it should and should not be used and also stating that it alone should be used.

The test was a contingency for an agreement. My proposals featured a test in the interests of compromise and to give grammar schools three years to adjust to a long-term future without any selection and without any test. The reason that will not now happen is because others were not capable of equivalent concessions.
Portadown College: New School

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education for an update on plans to build a new school at Portadown College. (AQO 2305/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an measúnú ar an bhreithmheas athcheartaithe eacnamaíochta ar Portadown College criocnaithe ag an Roinn.

The Department has completed its assessment of a revised economic appraisal for Portadown College which was submitted by the Southern Education and Library Board. The Board has agreed to undertake further work on the option to complete a replacement school on the playing fields on the lower part of the existing school site.

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Disablement Advisory Service

Dr W McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assistance is available from the Disablement Advisory Service for young people with special needs leaving school who are unable to access mainstream vocational training provision. (AQW 5753/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): The Disablement Advisory Service purchases residential vocational training places at Parkanaur College for people with disabilities including young people. The Disablement Advisory Service also provides a range of pre-vocational and vocational programmes to assist people with disabilities find and keep employment. These programmes include: Workable (NI), Access to Work, New Deal for Disabled People, the Job Introduction Scheme, the Condition Management Programme and the Work Preparation Programme.

Filling Employment Gaps

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department is working with local companies to fill employment gaps created by migrant workers leaving Northern Ireland to work elsewhere. (AQW 5802/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: While there is currently no statistical evidence to suggest that migrant workers are leaving Northern Ireland to work elsewhere, my Department has access to a greater pool of labour supply already skilled for jobs or willing to retrain and improve their skills level to take up vacant positions due to the economic downturn. Through Programmes such as Steps to Work, Apprenticeships NI and Bridge to Employment we will continue to work closely with employers from all Sectors to meet their particular skills needs.

Placement Programmes

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what placement programmes and other incentives are available for companies to encourage them to hire recent graduates. (AQW 5803/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department has a number of programmes available to further develop the skills and knowledge of graduates to encourage companies to recruit them.

The Software Professional Course is a 35 week graduate conversion course designed to give non-IT graduates the skills to work in the ICT industry in Northern Ireland. Participants receive a training allowance of £120 per week from the Department whilst in training and they have the opportunity to earn up to £500 in bonuses depending on performance.

The Futures Programme is another example of the Department’s commitment to helping employers to recruit graduates. The Programme, supported jointly by the Department and Invest NI, is designed to develop expertise in the associated areas within the fund servicing sector. It gives full training for the Investment Administration
Qualification and provides an opportunity for placement with a top financial services institution in the UK or Europe, with the view to permanent employment on completion of the course.

To date, over 30 graduates have completed training under the Futures Programme and have participated in a number of workshops aimed at developing their personal effectiveness, teamwork and interview skills, the aim of which is to ensure that the participants make an immediate impact on their future placement company.

Bridge to Employment programmes are also available to companies as a method of recruiting graduates and indeed have been used in this way previously. Bespoke training courses are developed by Bridge to Employment staff in conjunction with the participating company and include, where possible, periods of in-company training to provide participants with on-the-job experience.

In addition, my Department is currently in early stage discussions with Invest NI on the possibility of developing a graduate placement scheme which would allow companies to offer placements to new graduates. This new concept would allow the companies, and the wider economy, to avoid seeing potential employees leave the local job market to seek work elsewhere (for example in London) at a time when both global economic conditions and recruitment freezes in multinational firms are impacting on their planned recruitment. Invest NI would provide funding for the wage costs of the placements whilst the Department for Employment and Learning would fund a series of off the job training covering technical training and softer skills such as project management and team working.

It is hoped that a pilot of this programme focusing initially on the IT sector will be operational by this summer.

Furthermore, the Employment Service provides assistance to individuals who are unemployed or economically inactive to move towards and into work. An Employer Subsidy may be available to employers recruiting individuals who have been unemployed or economically inactive for 13 weeks or more, including graduates.

Jobs and Benefits Offices

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what level of cooperation there is between companies, training organisations and jobs and benefits offices. (AQW 5804/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: There is a strong level of co-operation between Jobs and Benefits Office staff, employers and training organisations through provision of on-site redundancy clinics, Job Fairs, Advice and Opportunities Forums and partnerships with employers and Steps to Work lead contractors.

Apprentices

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what schemes are available for companies and businesses to help with employing trainees and apprentices. (AQW 5806/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department is committed to helping companies employ trainees and apprentices and runs a number of initiatives to this end.

The Bridge to Employment programme is a pre-employment training programme which aims to provide customised training courses to equip the unemployed, particularly the long-term unemployed, as well as those returning to the labour market, with the skills necessary to compete for new employment opportunities on an equal basis with others.

The programme also assists those employers wishing to expand their workforce to recruit suitable skilled unemployed people, thereby minimising the effects on other employers.

Participants on Bridge to Employment training courses learn the skills necessary to meet the recruitment profile for employment opportunities provided by inward investment companies and expanding indigenous companies. Bespoke training courses are developed by Bridge staff in conjunction with the participating company. The training courses are delivered mainly by the Further Education colleges, other public or private sector training providers or, in exceptional cases, by the employer. Where possible, periods of in-company training are included to provide participants with on-the-job experience.

Training places leading to job opportunities are advertised in the press, the Jobs & Benefits offices, including the JobcentreOnline website, and through the network of Community Groups. Participating companies are expected to offer a job interview to all trainees who successfully complete the training course. There is a target of 80% employment however, actual outcomes consistently exceed this.

ApprenticeshipsNI aims to provide participants of all ages with the opportunity to get Level 2 or Level 3 qualifications. This provision offers a diverse range of training and the opportunity to gain nationally recognised qualifications, giving participants the necessary skills needed for their chosen career. There are currently over 100 types of apprenticeships available.

Employers contribute by providing quality training in the workplace, by supporting the apprentice’s learning and by paying a wage that is relative to the industry rate for the job. The Department pays full costs of ‘directed training’ for the duration of an apprenticeship. Depending on the complexity, occupational area and level of the apprenticeship framework being followed, the maximum funding can range between £2,600 and £10,800.

In addition, employer incentives are available ranging between £500 and £1,500. Once again this is relative to the type of apprenticeship being undertaken and is payable on the achievement of a full apprenticeship framework.

By offering Apprenticeships, employers will find it easier to recruit and retain the right people for their business. The Department plans to include a suitable entry on an Invest NI website (www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk) to raise the profile amongst businesses of this provision.

Local Training Needs

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what level of co-operation exists between those companies who have certain training requirements and those with responsibility for identifying local training needs and providing this training. (AQW 5807/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: In Northern Ireland there are six Workforce Development Forums tasked to identify local skills training needs to propose practical solutions to their skills needs. These are employer-led structures and they invite membership from employers and other stakeholder organizations involved in local economic development.

The Workforce Development Forums are holding a series of local workshops/publicity events to ensure that employers are given every opportunity to communicate their labour force skills needs and to work with them to develop solutions at a local level.

In addition, my Department is currently developing a programme to support the work of the Forums through the provision of a team of training advisers who can further strengthen the links between the demand and supply sides of the training system. This will complement the existing employer engagement mechanisms established in each of the 6 Further Education Colleges.

Apprenticeship Schemes

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if there are any plans to bring back the old style apprenticeship schemes or Action for Community Employment (ACE) schemes. (AQW 5808/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department has currently no plans to go back to classroom-based apprenticeships. Employers are central to the success of an apprenticeship programme. An individual cannot be trained as an apprentice unless he/she is employed and the employer commits to training under an Apprenticeship Framework, as designed by industry for industry. Consequently, the employer is central to the whole programme. A good employer trains and develops his/her workforce because it makes good business sense in terms of increased productivity, staff motivation and retention and thereby improving business competitiveness.

My Department currently has no plans to re-introduce the Action for Community Employment programme. Steps to Work is the Department’s main adult return to work programme and can provide participants with a wide range of work experience placements together with opportunities for subsidised employment. I am satisfied that it is sufficiently flexible to adapt to the current economic conditions and any emerging needs. It also provides greater assistance to those seeking work than that available in any other part of the UK.
Training Requirements of Companies

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans there are to ensure educational establishments provide for the training requirements of companies. (AQW 5809/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Further Education Colleges offer local companies a wide range of training provision and practical support to promote innovation, assist with product design development, and manufacture, and generally to improve companies’ overall performance.

Through Workforce Development Forums (WDF), FE Colleges are better able to identify local skills training needs, and to respond accordingly.

Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) offer a range of Foundation Degrees, integrating theoretical learning with practical application.

In order to further improve skills levels in local industry, my Department is also considering:

• strengthening WDFs, to improve further College responsiveness;
• expanding Foundation Degrees through more flexible delivery arrangements;
• introducing flexible funding arrangements to support short cycle, modular or unitary courses, and
• promoting the ‘Connected’ programme, which enables companies to avail of the opportunities for knowledge transfer, training and up-skilling within local universities and colleges.

Ten-Day Payment Target

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much of the total amount due to suppliers was paid within the ten-day payment target, in the last year. (AQW 5821/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: In January the percentage of invoices paid by DEL within the ten-day target was 73.5%, rising to 78.5% in February.

Following the Finance Minister’s announcement in November, the Department has been committed to making payments to suppliers within the target of 10 working days. The Department complies with the Prompt Payment Code and provides information on prompt payment performance in the annual resource accounts. For the 2007/08 financial year, 99% of suppliers were paid within 30 days. Data relating to payments to suppliers within 10 days is not available for the last year.

Apprentices

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) which firms have agreed to foster apprentices; (ii) how many apprentices have been placed with fostering firms; and (iii) how many apprentices have been made redundant, broken down by vocational category. (AQW 5845/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: At present, there are no redundant apprentices in fostering. However, there are 6 applications being considered by Harland and Wolff, Magadeline and Barrington Daughter and Son. Granier Packaging and Dunbia are also considering being involved as foster employers. Other companies such as Michelin have had to withdraw their interest due to other business considerations.

Apprentices who wish to continue with their training have the opportunity to join either Training for Success or the Steps to Work programmes. Others have found alternative employment with some opting for Further Education. The Careers Service has provided advice to a number of redundant apprentices in order to explore the options available.

Management Information collected by the Department in relation to apprentices who have left training provision is included in a broader “early leaver” destination category. Consequently, the Department cannot say categorically whether these apprentices have left due to redundancy. Nevertheless, from 1st January 2008 until 21st January 2009, the following numbers of apprentices have been recorded as being “early leavers” in the following sectors:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sector</th>
<th>Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Childcare</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
I would emphasise that not all of these apprentices will have left apprenticeship provision due to redundancy, as people leave both training and employment for a wide variety of reasons. This is especially true in sectors with a historically transient workforce such Hospitality and Catering or Retail.

In order to gain greater clarity on the current status of apprentices who have been made redundant from the three priority skills areas, i.e. construction, engineering, and motor vehicle, from 1st April 2008 to 4th February 2009, the Department carried out a monitoring exercise with its ApprenticeshipsNI Training Suppliers.

A total of 303 apprentices have been made redundant from these three priority skill areas since 1st April 2008. This total can be broken down as follows:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Sector</th>

The University of Ulster

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the impact on higher education provision in Belfast when the planned expansion of the University of Ulster takes place at the York Street campus.

The Minister for Employment and Learning: In November 2008 I received an economic appraisal from the University of Ulster detailing development proposals for its Jordanstown campus, which includes the potential for capital investment in its Belfast campus.

I am advised by the University, as it intends to redistribute its existing student places between its Jordanstown and Belfast campuses and that the planned expansion does not appear to have any immediate impact on higher education provision in the Greater Belfast area.

I am also advised by the University that it is difficult for it to be explicit about the number of courses that will be created under the proposals for the Belfast campus but they will continue to respond to, and meet the needs of, the market, as appropriate.

It is imperative that the economic appraisal for the proposed capital investment in the Belfast campus meets Green Book standards. Those proposals will, if approved by my Department, be sent to the Department of Finance and Personnel for consideration. If that Department is satisfied, the matter will come back to my Department for a policy appraisal. The process is in its very early stages and my Department will be better placed... to make a judgement as further details become available. Any expansion of this scale will also probably require Equality and Environmental Impact Assessments.

However, if and when approval is given, it may take up to eight years before the proposed expansion of the Belfast campus is complete.

Apprentices

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many apprentices have been made redundant by employers in the East Belfast constituency. (AQW 5847/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department carried out a recent monitoring exercise, in conjunction with Training Suppliers, in respect of apprentices who have been made redundant across the three priority skills areas most affected by the economic downturn. This exercise has shown that a total of 303 apprentices have been made redundant across these areas as follows:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Construction</th>
<th>Engineering</th>
<th>Motor Vehicle</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>205</td>
<td>78</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

We are not in a position to break these figures down by constituency. However, 38 of these apprentices are from the Belfast area.

Apprentices

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many apprentices have been made redundant in the North Down constituency, in each of the last three years. (AQW 5888/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Management Information collected by the Department in relation to apprentices who have left the apprenticeship provision is included in a broader “early leaver” destination category. Consequently, the Department cannot say categorically whether these apprentices have left due to redundancy. The following table indicates the number of apprentices that have been recorded as “early leavers” in the North Down area for the periods 20th March 2006 until 20th March 2007, 21st March 2007 until 20th March 2008 and 21st March 2008 until 11th March 2009.

We are not in a position to break these numbers down by constituency. However, we have endeavoured, in the table below, to provide you with the information broken down by the town of residence of apprentices that closely represent your constituency.

I would emphasise that not all of these apprentices will have left apprenticeship provision due to redundancy, as people leave training for a wide variety of reasons.

Many of the apprentices listed above will have found alternative employment, or will have availed of the Department’s contingency arrangements for redundant apprentices for those affected in the key skills areas of Motor Vehicle, Engineering and Construction. Others may have returned to an alternative training provision or mainstream Further Education.
Third-Level Education College Staff

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when arrears arising out of national pay agreements, are expected to be paid to third-level education college staff. (AQW 5890/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The implementation of the National Joint Council pay increase for non-teaching staff in further education (FE) colleges is subject to an approval process, in accordance with the public sector pay policy adopted by the Northern Ireland Executive.

The terms under which the pay agreement will be applied, and its associated business case, are currently being prepared by FE college employers, in consultation with my Department. That work should be completed within the next two weeks. When finalised, the proposals will be submitted to the Department of Finance & Personnel (DFP) for approval. The increase will be paid once that approval process has been completed.

Non-Teaching Staff in Further Education Colleges

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) to confirm when the NJC pay increase for non-teaching staff in further education colleges for 2008 was agreed; and (ii) when this will be paid. (AQW 5924/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The application of a National Joint Council (NJC) pay increase of 2.45%, to non-teaching staff in further education (FE) colleges was agreed in October 2008. The increase is effective from April 2008. In addition, following an arbitration award at national level in March 2009, an additional 0.3% on top of the 2.45% is expected to be paid to non-teaching staff from April 2008. The implementation of the pay increase is subject to an approval process in accordance with the public sector pay policy adopted by the Executive. The terms under which the pay agreement will be applied, and its associated business case, are currently being prepared by FE college employers in consultation with my Department. That work should be completed within the next two weeks. When finalised, the proposals will be submitted to the Department of Finance & Personnel (DFP) for approval. The increase will be paid once that approval process has been completed.

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, what action he intends to take to improve motivation and morale and reduce stress in the workplace. (AQW 5951/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department recognises that such illnesses whether work related or not, can lead to long-term absence from work. The Department actively promotes stress management through interventions including:

• referral to the welfare support service,
• 24-hour access to the employee assistance programme (Carecall),
• timely referral to the Occupational Health Service (OHS) for advice,
• staff participation in physical health and lifestyle assessments which are provided by OHS,
• information leaflets and publications on mental health issues, including stress, which are accessible on the OHS website,
• a two-day Healthworks course which enables staff to assess their health and review their lifestyle,
• Healthworks roadshows and short ad hoc stress sessions,
• provision of ongoing training to help employees cope with changing roles and technology,
• provision of special leave and flexible working arrangements,
• promotion of the sources of help and support available including the NICS carers’ website and the Civil Service benevolent fund and
• the equal opportunities officer and a network of harassment contact advisers.

The Department has arranged for the benevolent fund to deliver personal finance seminars to staff during March 2009.
The Department is also considering undertaking a stress survey. It is hoped that the results of the survey will help inform and influence policy direction and target ‘hotspots’.

Apprentices

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many apprentices have been made redundant since September 2008; and their current employment status, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 5957/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Management Information collected by the Department in relation to apprentices who have left the Apprenticeship provision is included in a broader ‘early leaver’ destination category. The current status of these apprentices is as follows;

• 157 have been referred to the Careers Service for advice on further training;
• 51 are continuing their training under Training for Success;
• 26 are continuing their training under Steps to Work;
• 43 have found alternative employment, including continuing apprenticeship training or returned to their previous employer;
• 16 have entered Further Education; and
• the remaining 10 apprentices have not maintained contact with the training supplier.

University E-mail Accounts

Mr Simpson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what regulations are in place to govern the use of university e-mail accounts by staff for party political purposes. (AQW 6058/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Both universities in Northern Ireland are independent institutions and are responsible for formulating their own regulations governing the use of their e-mail accounts and systems. They have policies in place and they are subject to regular review. The policies do not refer specifically to the use of e-mail accounts for party political purposes.

At Queen’s University users are permitted to make use of the e-mail system for personal reasons but this must be for occasional use only. Any regular and excessive use may give rise to review and possible disciplinary action.

At the University of Ulster staff e-mail accounts may be used for any academic, administrative, or social and recreational use which is in furtherance of the aims and mission statement of the University. Use of e-mail accounts which does not comply with this is not authorised.

University Students

Mr Simpson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many, and what percentage of the total number of students went to university from each constituency in each of the last three years. (AQW 6060/09)

Jobs and Benefits Office in Limavady

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what staff vacancies there are in his Limavady office.

The Minister for Employment and Learning: There are 3 staff vacancies in Limavady Jobs and Benefits Office.

Stransmillis/Queen’s: Proposed Merger

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he will advise Stranmillis University College and Queen’s University, Belfast about the likelihood of the proposed merger date of August 2009 being achieved.

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I am aware that both Queen’s University and Stranmillis University College have a target date of August 2009 to complete the proposed merger between the two institutions. I have made it clear to senior management at both Queen’s and Stranmillis that there are key steps that must be taken prior to any merger being approved. Those steps include the endorsement of legislation by this Assembly. The timetable for any proposed merger will be determined by the completion of all those steps, rather than any desired deadline.

Apprentices

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his plans to assist apprentices being paid off due to the current economic difficulties.

The Minister for Employment and Learning: As previously outlined, the Department introduced contingency arrangements to allow apprentices who were made redundant from the construction, engineering, and motor vehicle sectors to continue with training because these sectors were the most affected by the economic downturn.

The Department is also examining data on other sectors, and as I said recently, it will introduce similar arrangements if that is shown to be necessary.

On a recent monitoring exercise, the Department established that from the range of options available to redundant apprentices a number of these have been taken up. This includes alternative employment, Steps to Work and the Pre-apprenticeship programme. We have also determined that whilst some employers are currently considering fostering applications, most of those being re-employed have attained alternative employment and others have offered work placements through the Steps to Work option.

Research Assessment Exercise: Queen’s University’s Performance

Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment his Department has made of the performance of Queen’s University, Belfast in the Research Assessment Exercise.

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I am very pleased with the performance of both our universities in the recent UK-wide Research Assessment Exercise. Queen’s University Belfast (QUB) submitted almost 800 staff to the Research Assessment Exercise 2008 and every area had research assessed as world-leading. Queen’s has 11 subject areas ranked within the top 10 in the UK and 24 in the top 20. An examination of the league tables produced by the Times Higher Education on 18 December 2008 records Queen’s as 39th out of the 132 universities; this represents a jump of 6 places from 2001 when it was ranked 45th.

Student Loans

Mrs McGill asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on work undertaken to increase the threshold for repayment of student loans from £15,000 to £18,000.

The Minister for Employment and Learning:
The Minister for Employment and Learning: Her Majesty’s Revenue and Customs, which collects payments on income contingent repayment loans on Government’s behalf, has made it clear to all Devolved Administrations that it cannot operate a UK-wide collection system with different repayment thresholds. My Department could not, therefore, increase the repayment threshold unless the Department for Innovation, Universities and Skills in England and the other Devolved Administrations were to do similar.

However, in light of the concerns which have been raised by the Committee for Employment and Learning, local Assembly Members and the National Union of Students and the Union of Students in Ireland (NUS-USI), I have recently written to my Ministerial colleagues in England, Scotland and Wales about this issue, and I have given a commitment to update the Committee when I receive their responses.

Tuition Fees

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he would request the Student Loans Company to change the system for paying university fees to include an option for students to pay by monthly direct debit. (AQO 2317/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Since the introduction of variable deferred tuition fees in September 2006, eligible students have three options for paying their tuition fees. They can:

(i) Defer payment of their fees by applying for a tuition fee loan up to a maximum of £3,145 (in the current academic year). The tuition fee loan only has to be repaid once the student leaves their course and is earning over £15,000. The amount repaid is 9% of the borrower’s gross income above that threshold; or

(ii) Pay the full tuition fee upfront direct to the Higher Education Institution (HEI); or

(iii) Take out a fee loan for part of the tuition fees, and pay the rest direct to the HEI.

If a student chooses to pay all or part of the tuition fees upfront, the student pays the fees directly to the HEI. The Student Loans Company has no involvement in this transaction.

In addition to the option of paying the full tuition fees up front, the Department is aware that Queen's University Belfast and the University of Ulster both offer students the option of paying their fees through a direct debit scheme.

As the option is already available through the University, I will not be requesting the Student Loans Company to change the system for paying university fees to include an option for students to pay by monthly direct debit.

Stranmillis University College Board of Governors

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the reasons for Protestant clergy no longer being allowed, as of right, to sit on the Board of Governors of Stranmillis College. (AQO 2318/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: In 2005 legal advice ruled that it would have been unlawful for the Department to permit Protestant clergy to sit, as of right, on the Board of Governors of Stranmillis College.

Stranmillis College was incorporated under The Colleges of Education (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 which is subordinate to the Northern Ireland Acts of 1998 and 2000. Section 6 of the 1998 Act, when read with the 2000 Act, provides that an Order in Council cannot contain a provision which discriminates against a class of persons on the grounds of religious belief or political opinion. To allow Protestant clergy to sit, as of right, on the Board of Governors would have discriminated against other religious groupings and would have been unlawful.

Further Education Pay

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning who took the decision, and when it was taken, that further education pay was covered by the Northern Ireland Civil Service Pay Restraint rather than the Public Sector Pay Restraint. (AQO 2320/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The application of pay policy is a devolved matter for the Northern Ireland Executive. In May 2007, the Executive adopted Civil Service Pay Guidance, which includes specific pay thresholds, for application to the wider public sector. In line with other public sector groups, the guidance was deemed to apply to Further Education lecturers in Northern Ireland.

STEM Subjects

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline how he intends to encourage more students to take up STEM subjects as part of his plans to improve the skills base of the workforce. (AQO 2321/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I am currently waiting on the publication of the STEM Review. Once received, my Department will make a prompt response to the report recommendations and any resource implications it may contain. In addition to this, my Department is currently in the process of commissioning research into the possibility of providing bursaries or scholarships for STEM students.

Queen’s University: Land Development

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he has held discussions with Queen’s University, Belfast on any proposal it may have to permit a private property business to develop its land. (AQO 2322/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I have received assurances that Queen's University, Belfast does not have any proposal to permit a private property business to develop its land.

Higher Education Land and Accommodation Strategy

Mr Attwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he is preparing a protocol with institutions of higher education, governing acquisition or disposal of land, to ensure that his Department is properly involved in any higher education land and accommodation strategy. (AQO 2323/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I am not preparing a protocol with the institutions of higher education governing acquisition or disposal of land to ensure that my Department is properly involved in any higher education land and accommodation strategy.

These matters are covered under the terms of the Financial Memorandum with my Department. The universities and university colleges are required to keep their holdings of land and buildings under review, with the objective of rationalising and disposing of those which they consider, in light of their estate strategy, to be no longer needed. The Financial Memorandum places conditions on the sale of any property with an exchequer interest. These include the need to notify, or consult with, my Department in advance of such a sale and the possibility of money being recouped from the proceeds where they are not being reinvested.

Belfast Metropolitan College: Relocation

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the progress of Belfast Metropolitan College relocating to the Titanic Quarter. (AQO 2324/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Negotiations to achieve financial closure on this project have been intense and despite the extreme market conditions and without pre empting the commercial issues I would anticipate contract signing within the next month. Construction can begin immediately upon signing and service commencement would be in scheduled for July 2011.

Redundancies: South Down

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action his Department is taking to address recent redundancies in South Down. (AQO 2325/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department provides information and advice to those made redundant in South Down to help them find alternative employment or identify opportunities to retrain.
under the Department’s employment and training programmes. In a number of cases the Jobs & Benefits staff were able to deliver on-site clinics directly to those who had received notices of redundancy. All redundant workers who call to the Jobs & Benefits office are given the full range of employment services.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Ten-Day Payment Target

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much of the total amount due to suppliers was paid within the ten-day payment target, in the last year. (AQW 5823/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs A Foster): The Department complies with the Prompt Payment Code and its annual resource accounts provide information on prompt payment. However, in the last year the amount paid to suppliers within 10 days is not available. Following Minister Dodds announcement on 28 November 2008, information on the time taken to process payments against the 10 working day target is now being produced.

Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in relation to the Project Kelvin Invitation to Tender document, when (i) MPD International was appointed project consultants; and (ii) the tender for consultancy services was advertised in the European Journal. (AQW 5871/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Following a full procurement process, managed by the Central Procurement Directorate (DFP), MPD International was appointed on the 18th February 2008.

The tender for technical consultants for Project Kelvin was advertised in the EU journal on the 12 December 2007.

Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to the Project Kelvin Invitation to Tender document, if her Department was informed that MPD International’s Managing Director was a former senior employee of Hibernia Atlantic and if so, was it before it was awarded the contract for consultancy services. (AQW 5872/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: MPD International made it clear in the January 2008 tender submitted for the consultancy contract that its Managing Director (MD) had previously worked for a range of telecommunications and other companies, including Hibernia Atlantic prior to the setting up of MPD International in 2006.

As part of their submission, MPD provided a signed warrant stating that there would be no conflict or perceived conflict of interest in relation to the personnel or type of work involved in this contract. Central Procurement Directorate (DFP), who managed the tender process, was satisfied that there was no conflict of interest. The contract was awarded to MPD International in February 2008.

Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in relation to the Project Kelvin Invitation to Tender document, how long was MPD International in existence before it was awarded the contract by her Department. (AQW 5873/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: According to the information provided by the company, MPD International was formed in 2006.

MPD International was appointed by the Department as technical consultants for Project Kelvin in February 2008.
Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if Hibernia Atlantic completed Principal Schedule 4 of the Project Kelvin Invitation to Tender document in its tender submission; and (ii) if her Department was aware of any potential conflict of interest prior to awarding either the contract for consultancy services or the actual contract for the Submarine Cable Works.

(AQW 5874/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The tender process for this project was managed by the Central Procurement Directorate (CPD), DFP. CPD has indicated that Hibernia Atlantic completed and submitted Principal Schedule 4.

Hibernia Atlantic indicated 2 possible conflicts of interest (i) the Managing Director of MPD International had been the CEO of Hibernia Atlantic until the end of 2004; (ii) that Arthur Cox act as the legal representation for Hibernia Atlantic in the Republic of Ireland but that it would not use Arthur Cox for this contract, therefore there would be no conflict. CPD considered both matters and concluded there was no conflict of interest.

Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if the Managing Director of MPD International played any part in the Project Kelvin tender and if he attended any meetings with any of the tenderers.

(AQW 5875/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Prior to the issue of the Invitation to Tender (ITT), the Managing Director (MD) of MPD International accompanied representatives of the Departments and Central Procurement Directorate (DFP) to a number of meetings with companies who operate international telecommunications networks. The purpose of these meetings was to assess the level of interest the companies might have in the project.

The MD was not directly involved in the subsequent development of the ITT and he did not attend any meetings after the issue of the ITT, either with the Department or with the tenderers.

Mourne National Park

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on (i) the progress to promote the Mourne National Park as one of the five signature projects; and (ii) her Department’s timetable for achieving a 40% increase in tourism in the area by 2015.

(AQW 5881/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The designation of the Mournes as a National Park is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment. NITB was a member of the Mourne National Park Working Party and has influenced this debate over the last 5 years. Should the area achieve designation it has been identified that tourism in the wider area has the potential to generate a growth of £221 million and account for 4,700 jobs by 2020.

The Mourne Signature Project (MSP) was identified on the basis that the Mournes could be Northern Ireland’s first National Park. However, NITB is progressing with the MSP regardless of designation as the area has still to realise its full tourism potential. NITB has recently received several applications for financial assistance under its Tourism Development Scheme. These are currently being assessed.

The Programme for Government has set targets to increase out-of-state visitors by 25% to 2.5million and spend by 40% to £520million by 2011. The Signature Projects, including the Mourne Signature Project, are key to achieving international stand out for Northern Ireland and helping achieve these ambitious targets.

Foreign Direct Investment Jobs

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many foreign direct investment jobs have been announced since the agreement of the Programme for Government.

(AQW 5887/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: From 1 April 2008 to date, 1,786 jobs have been announced as the result of investment in Northern Ireland by externally-owned businesses.
These businesses have been offered £12 million of assistance by Invest NI, which contributes towards a total planned investment of £71.5 million.

Review of Public Administration

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment which functions will transfer from her Department to local government under the Review of Public Administration. (AQW 5943/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: DETI will transfer, from Invest NI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, a number of local economic development and tourism activities to the new local councils.

- In relation to local economic development the following activities will transfer;
- Small Business Support Programme, replacement for Start a Business Programme
- Youth Entrepreneurship
- Social Entrepreneurship Programme

The new Small Business Support Programme incorporates Investing in Women and Neighbourhood Renewal activities which were previously delivered separately.

- The following local tourism activities will transfer;
- Local Product Development & Marketing
- Visitor Servicing
- Business Support
- Support for small scale tourist accommodation

My officials are working with their local government counterparts, within the implementation structures established by the DOE, to consider the practical arrangements for integrating these functions within local government.

Natural Gas Network

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans she has for extending the natural gas network. (AQW 5947/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: DETI is presently developing a new Strategic Energy Framework for Northern Ireland. The overall emphasis for the Framework will be a shift towards a cleaner and more efficient energy mix, including greater use of renewable energy sources, and extending the benefits of natural gas as a low carbon fuel where this is appropriate.

In furtherance of this objective, the Department is considering the economics of taking natural gas to towns in the West and North-West of Northern Ireland and will shortly be commissioning a study to determine the technical and economic feasibility of bringing gas to towns such as Magherafelt, Cookstown, Dungannon, Strabane, Omagh, and Enniskillen.

In parallel, the Department is also considering the merits of a proposal to take natural gas to towns in the Downpatrick economic corridor in East Down.

Local Manufacturing Industry

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the state of the local manufacturing industry. (AQW 5956/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The latest official statistics indicate that manufacturing output remained constant in the third quarter of 2008, and it has increased by 3.5% since the third quarter of 2007. This compares favorably with the contraction of 2.3% in manufacturing output over the last year in the UK as a whole. However, official statistics are now beginning to reveal falling employment and significant redundancies in manufacturing. The sector accounted for 77% (2,220) of total redundancies over the year to the end of January 2009.
Furthermore, local businesses, including those in the manufacturing sector, are facing increasing challenges as a result of the deterioration in global economic conditions. The slowdown in key export markets such as GB, Europe and the US is likely to result in a fall in demand for locally produced manufacturing goods.

However, it should be noted that the recent decline in the value of sterling against both the euro and the dollar should help improve the competitiveness of our exports. Invest NI will continue to work with local firms to help them take advantage of trade opportunities in the Eurozone and elsewhere.

Invest NI

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for the total amount that Invest NI has spent in seeking to attract investment into the Upper Bann constituency. (AQW 5980/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In answering the question, I have assumed that you are referring to the marketing and sales budget allocated to attracting inward investment, both first time and follow-on.

Invest NI’s international marketing and sales budget is entirely devoted to attracting investment into Northern Ireland as a single entity. As such, it is not sub-divided into regional allocations as to do so would be ineffective, inefficient and ultimately confusing to the client. To put this into some perspective, Northern Ireland is a small country that is smaller in size than a large number of County Councils in Great Britain.

When an investor has agreed to locate in Northern Ireland as a result of Invest NI’s promotional efforts, which will normally include an offer of financial assistance, it will choose a location that offers the best business sense. Invest NI has limited ability to influence this decision, although it does attempt to showcase a variety of locations across Northern Ireland that broadly fit the basic project parameters presented.

Broadband Provision

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline her plans to ensure parity in broadband provision for rural dwellers who presently only receive basic broadband packages. (AQW 6026/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Under the Programme for Government a number of activities specifically support the strategic priority of “Growing A Dynamic, Innovative Economy” and contribute to PSA 1 “Productivity Growth”. In relation to broadband these include undertaking a range of broadband stimulation activities to encourage the take-up and innovative use of telecommunications by businesses and to develop Northern Ireland’s next generation network for businesses.

In August 2008 I announced that £1.9million of EU and Government money had been set aside under the Northern Ireland Broadband Fund to offer financial support to businesses undertaking technology trials, which offer opportunities for the future commercial rollout of high speed broadband services. The fund had a particular focus on the delivery of broadband services into rural areas. Two calls have taken place already which has resulted in two projects that will bring high speed services to many rural areas of Northern Ireland. I intend to open a third call in April 2009.

In January 2009 I announced that the Department had signed a three year contract with Avanti Communications to continue to provide broadband services to customers in Northern Ireland that cannot currently access broadband services via a fixed-line solution. In addition to the basic broadband service the company can deliver higher speeds should customers wish to purchase them.

I also intend to begin a procurement process, subject to the necessary approvals being agreed, seeking to appoint suitably qualified suppliers to begin building suitable infrastructure that will enable 85% of businesses in Northern Ireland, many of whom are in rural areas, access to next generation broadband services.

The issue of broadband is also one of the areas being studied under Lord Carter’s Digital Britain Action Plan. The plan is to secure the UK’s place at the forefront of innovation, investment and quality in the digital and communications industries. My department will be contributing to the development of this plan as appropriate.

The EU has also indicated that it is earmarking funding to help rural areas get online, bring new jobs and help businesses grow. We understand that the funding stream would be through DARD and DETI officials have met DARD to inform them of our work in this area to ensure the funds compliment existing programmes.
Coal Providers

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if she has had discussions with coal providers about price reductions in relation to the recent decrease in the price of oil and gas. (AQW 6048/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I have had no discussions with coal providers about price reductions in relation to the recent decreases in the price of oil and gas. Unlike natural gas and electricity, the coal industry in Northern Ireland is unregulated and the Department has no role in coal pricing which is entirely the responsibility of coal importers, wholesalers and retailers.

Distribution of Departmental Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if she will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6082/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In accordance with the OFMDFM guidance on Distribution of Departmental Publications and Consultation Documents, the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment routinely makes publications available in hard copy format to a range of identified recipients and more generally in electronic format through its website. In addition publications are provided in hard copy format to others on request.

Tourism Ireland

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how the expenditure figure for Tourism Ireland was broken down between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland in the financial years 2007/08 and 2008/09. (AQW 6162/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: My Department funds Tourism Ireland on a financial year basis. The expenditure figure for 2007/08 is £14.538m. The figure for 2008/09 is not yet available.

The Republic of Ireland Department of Arts, Sport and Tourism funds Tourism Ireland on a calendar year basis and in Euros. The expenditure figure for 2007 is €51.255m. The figure for 2008 is €53.639m. The figure for 2009 is not yet available.

HR Connect

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide an estimate of how many hours have been lost by individuals and their managers trying to resolve a query with HR Connect. (AQW 6201/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The information requested is not routinely collected and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Local Enterprise Agencies

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) how many Local Enterprise Agencies she has visited, since taking up office (ii) the names of those visited; and (iii) the dates of the visits. (AQW 6229/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Since taking up office as Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on 10 June 2008 I have visited the following Local Enterprise Agencies:-

1. Enniskillen Business Centre 30 June 2008
3. East Belfast Enterprise Ltd 19 September 2008

I have also met with representatives from Townsend Enterprise Park in Parliament Buildings on 2 December 2008.
I am due to attend Enterprise Northern Ireland’s AGM on 30 April 2009 to be held in one of the Local Enterprise Agencies.

Newry and Mourne Enterprise Agency

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if she would accept an invitation to visit (i) Newry and Mourne Enterprise Agency; and (ii) Armagh Business Centre. (AQW 6230/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I have recently accepted an invitation from Newry & Mourne Enterprise Agency, subject to diary commitments, and would be happy to consider an invitation from Armagh Business Centre at some stage in the future.

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) to outline the process by which her Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits her Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail her Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6261/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The Comptroller and Auditor General of the Northern Ireland Audit Office (NIAO) is the Department’s appointed independent external auditor under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (NI) 2001. The accounts are audited in line with the NIAO’s audit plan each year.

The accounts are published each year and are available from the Assembly Library and the Stationery Office. The Department has received an unqualified audit opinion in each of the last three years.

Economic Downturn: Assistance for SMEs

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance is being offered to small and medium sized enterprises facing difficulties in the global economic downturn. (AQO 2329/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI is implementing a number of new initiatives designed to offer financial support and practical advice to its SME clients during the economic downturn.

Since September 2008, it has held 10 seminars on the theme of “Navigating through challenging times”. These have attracted almost 700 attendees and feedback has been extremely positive. A further event will be held in Omagh at the end of this month.

Up to 5 days diagnostic consultancy support, provided free of charge, is available on a range of key business issues, including working capital and cash flow management. Where suitable projects are then identified, clients can then obtain up to 50% financial support towards eligible project costs from Invest NI’s new £5 million Accelerated Support Fund.

Invest NI’s support is not restricted to its clients. Working in partnership with Enterprise Northern Ireland, the District Councils and the NI Chamber of Commerce, it developed a programme to provide the wider local business community with practical advice and guidance. There have been 10 events organised to date across Northern Ireland, all of which have been well attended. I understand that the feedback from these has also been consistently positive.

Going forward, we will continue to work with companies and, where possible, assist them to mitigate the impact of the downturn, and to enable them to prepare for a future upturn.

Upper Bann: DETI Assistance for Businesses

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action she is taking to assist businesses in Upper Bann. (AQO 2335/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest Northern Ireland continues to provide assistance to its clients in Upper Bann through a range of programmes designed to encourage improved international competitiveness.
In the current financial year, Invest NI has approved 113 offers of support to its client companies in the Upper Bann parliamentary constituency. These relate to £8.4 million of financial commitments contributing towards gross investment of £25.6 million.

Invest NI has also invested over £1 million in infrastructure works at three of its industrial estates at Charlestown Road Business Park in Portadown, Halfpenny Valley Industrial Estate in Lurgan and Mandeville Business Park in Craigavon. These development works will ensure that serviced sites are available for future investment projects.

Working in partnership with Enterprise Northern Ireland, the District Councils and the Northern Ireland Chamber of Commerce, Invest NI has also offered the wider local business community the opportunity to avail of practical advice and guidance to assist them navigate through the current economic downturn. 10 information seminars have been held to date, including one in Banbridge. Over 50 businesses came to the Banbridge event, which I also personally attended. I understand that the feedback from this, like all the others, has been positive and most encouraging.

Manufacturing Companies: Assistance with Cashflow Difficulties

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance is being offered to manufacturing companies which have cashflow difficulties. (AQO 2336/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI has, for some months now, been implementing a number of initiatives designed to assist its clients mitigate the impact of a sustained economic downturn. The provision of professional advice relating to the management of working capital and cash flow has been a priority.

Invest NI has held 10 seminars on the theme of “Navigating through challenging times”. These have attracted almost 700 attendees. Participation at these events can result in up to 5 days specialist consultancy support, provided free of charge, in a variety of business-related areas, including cash flow management. Where suitable projects are identified, clients can then obtain 50% support from Invest NI’s new £5 million Accelerated Support Fund.

Working in partnership with Enterprise NI, the District Councils and the NI Chamber of Commerce, Invest NI has also developed a programme that offers the wider local business community an opportunity to avail of specific advice and guidance regarding the current economic climate.

In January this year, Lord Mandelson announced a number of UK-wide business initiatives designed to encourage the provision of credit, including the Enterprise Finance Guarantee scheme. This scheme guarantees up to 75% of loans to businesses and the loans can be used for investment or working capital. The scheme is operated in Northern Ireland by the Bank of Ireland and the Northern and Ulster Banks. Invest NI is encouraging its clients to discuss opportunities under this scheme with their banks.

Northern Ireland has also been included in a new grant measure under the European Commission’s temporary state aid framework. This UK-wide measure aims to support companies whose financial position has been adversely affected by the credit squeeze by providing them with up to £500k of support. Invest NI is currently working with the Department of Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform and other UK regions to establish how any scheme might be deployed in Northern Ireland. It is hoped that an announcement regarding a new scheme can be made in April.

Debt Relief Scheme

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the current economic difficulties, what consideration she has given to fast-tracking her Department’s proposed debt relief scheme. (AQO 2337/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: While I am keen that the legislation is put in place as soon as possible, I am also aware that the Assembly’s Enterprise Trade & Investment Committee is concerned about the possible impact on small businesses. I will, therefore, want to give full consideration to the outcome of the current consultation process before considering whether there is a case for fast-tracking, the effect of which would be to limit the opportunity for Members to debate the detail of the scheme.
Mobile Phone Charges: Border Areas

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail her Department’s efforts to overcome the problems of roaming mobile phone charges in border areas. (AQO 2338/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Mobile roaming is a world-wide issue which affects those making and receiving mobile phone calls in border areas.

Between 2004 and 2007, my Department worked with the UK telecommunications regulator, the Irish telecommunications regulator and officials in the Republic of Ireland on mobile phone roaming in border areas. Significant progress was made in addressing the issue, including the introduction of all-island tariffs and special tariff initiatives for phone users by various mobile phone companies north and south. These measures significantly reduced the scale of the problem.

Efforts were also made by the industry and the regulators to publicise these tariffs through websites and adverts. Some operators also developed systems whereby a text message is sent to the user to make them aware that their mobile handset has roamed onto another operator's network.

Then, in August 2007, the European Union capped roaming tariffs across all of Europe. This led to significant tariff reductions for all mobile phone users. Later this year, the EU is planning to introduce further tariff reductions on the cost of voice calls across Europe. The EU is also planning to cap the cost of sending text messages while travelling in another EU country.

My Department is continuing to monitor the situation and liaise with the regulator.

Public Procurement: Applications from SMEs

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions she has had with the Minister of Finance and Personnel in relation to making public procurement procedures less complicated in order to encourage applications from small and medium sized enterprises. (AQO 2339/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Public sector procurement procedures are highly regulated in the European Union through Directives. The current procurement directives were transposed into UK National law on 31st January 2006 as The Public Contracts Regulations (2006) and the Utilities Contracts Regulations (2006). These regulations apply to contracts above a published threshold. The Public Contracts Regulations (2006) apply to service contracts above the threshold of £90,319 in DETI and above the threshold of £139,893 for our NDPBs. The Utilities Contracts Regulations (2006) apply to utilities contracts above the threshold of £279,785.

All Public Sector contracts, irrespective of value, are covered by the EC Treaty principles which include the free movement of goods and services, non-discrimination and transparency.

In order to increase accessibility to public tenders and to streamline and standardise processes, the Procurement Board, chaired by the Minister for Finance and Personnel, endorsed a recommendation that Centres of Procurement Expertise (CoPEs) implement an electronic sourcing system as the single portal for all government procurement activities within Northern Ireland.

This ‘e-Sourcing NI’ system is now fully operational within CPD and plans are underway to implement the system across all CoPEs. It will assist in the simplification and standardisation of procedures and reduce both the time and costs of the registration and bidding processes. The single portal will maximise the visibility of business opportunities and make it easier for companies, particularly SMEs to bid for potential work.

In addition Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) provides support to both SMEs and Social Economy Enterprises (SEE) to raise awareness and a better understanding of public procurement procedures. This includes a number of actions:

(i) Regular engagement with representative and lead bodies from both the SME and SEE sectors and the Construction Industry, including supporting ‘meet the buyer’ events and supplier education programmes.

(ii) In addition to this, individual suppliers can request information and clarification on specific tenders from CPD and are routinely offered debriefs on the quality of their tenders in order to assist them to compete more effectively for future opportunities.
Agreement with the Construction Industry Forum for Northern Ireland (CIfNI) that all new public sector contracts from December 2008, will require main contractors to publish opportunities within their supply chain, and encourage SMEs to join together as consortia to bid for larger contracts or to look for opportunities within the supply chains that will be formed by the successful tenderer.

CPD has also published guidance for SMEs and SEEs seeking to do business with the public sector. A companion guide for public sector purchasers on steps to help remove barriers faced by these suppliers has also been published. This guidance is available on CPD’s website.

The recently established Construction Industry Forum – Procurement Task Group will consider how to further maximise the opportunities for SMEs to bid for, or benefit from, public sector construction contracts.

Invest NI: Land Sales

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the area of Invest NI land that was sold to new clients and to existing clients during the last three years.

(AQO 2340/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In the three years from April 2006 to March 2009, Invest NI sold 208 acres of land to its client companies.

60 clients made first time purchases totalling 182 acres, while 14 clients purchased 26 acres of additional land for expansion projects.

The provision of high-quality serviced sites for industrial development at strategic locations across Northern Ireland is a key goal of the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland. Invest NI has a target to acquire and/or develop an additional 200 acres of land by 2012.

Serviced sites are provided to client companies with an identifiable and viable development project in locations where there is clear evidence of market failure.

Foreign Direct Investment

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how the current level of foreign direct investment compares to the levels anticipated following publication of the Programme for Government.

(AQO 2341/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The provisional data for those projects approved in the year to date suggests that Invest NI’s 2008/09 Operating Plan inward investment targets will be achieved. These comprise targets for jobs promoted, quality of jobs, and wages and salaries secured.

A number of approved projects have not yet been announced and may well now be delayed until more favourable economic conditions arise. Nonetheless, significant investments have been announced from companies such as Bombardier, Firstsource, Fujitsu and BTI Systems.

Looking longer term into 2009/10 and 2010/11, the pipeline for new projects is not favourable. It shows a significant reduction in project numbers compared to the same point in 2007/08.

As you will understand, the economic situation is still too volatile to predict with any precision. However, the project cycle for inward investment can take 18 to 24 months to complete and Invest NI is confident that, in the medium to longer term, Northern Ireland will benefit from the opportunity that the USNI conference afforded to Northern Ireland.

I remain cautiously optimistic that new opportunities may emerge and, when they do, Northern Ireland businesses will be well placed to exploit the opportunities that arise.

Titanic Signature Project

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Titanic Project.

(AQO 2342/09)
The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The Executive agreed to offer up to £43.5 million towards Titanic Quarter Limited’s proposal for a Titanic Signature Project, with the balance of funding being provided by Titanic Quarter Limited, Belfast Harbour Commissioners and Belfast City Council.

The Executive’s funding is subject to the satisfactory completion of commercial discussions and funding conditions with Titanic Quarter Limited, and the conclusion of a legal agreement between all funders.

All parties are working intensively on the commercial, funding and legal issues.

Redundancies: Past 12 Months

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many redundancies there have been in the last twelve months. (AQO 2343/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: There were 3,536 proposed redundancies and 2,882 confirmed redundancies in Northern Ireland in the twelve month period from 1st February 2008 to 31st January 2009.

Under the Employment Rights (Northern Ireland) Order 1996, companies are only legally required to notify the Department of impending redundancies of 20 or more employees.

Invest NI Assistance: Eligibility Criteria

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she would consider redefining the criteria for local businesses to be eligible for Invest NI assistance to increase the number of companies that qualify. (AQO 2344/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI’s clients are manufacturing and tradable service businesses that demonstrate the greatest export potential and the prospect of improving productivity by becoming more internationally competitive. To qualify as a client, businesses need to demonstrate that currently, or over the following three years, they will;

• have total sales of over £100,000 per annum;
• have sales outside of NI greater than 25 per cent of turnover, or greater than £250,000 per annum; and,
• be capable of and willing to work with Invest NI.

For locally-owned businesses in the tradable services sector, the additional qualifying criteria are;

• that they have the potential to sustain salaries above the Northern Ireland Private Sector median; and / or,
• a minimum gross profit margin of 20 per cent shown to be achievable.

The economic and policy justification for intervening with companies that are focused only on supplying the local Northern Ireland market is not strong. Such intervention could lead to market distortion and, as a result, job displacement. Both are contrary to EU intervention rules, would be of questionable economic benefit to the local or national economy, and would not deliver good value for money from Invest NI’s finite resources.

Any business in Northern Ireland can avail of advice provided through Invest NI’s ‘NI Business Information’ web site. In addition, non-clients can also participate on Invest NI trade missions provided they are interested in becoming an exporter and they are either a manufacturer or an international service provider.

The eligibility criteria for qualification as an Invest NI client are not onerous. In addition, Invest NI must apply its policy levers and limited resources to as far as possible maximise the economic impact. As such, there are no plans to revisit the current definition.

Pharmaceutical Industries: Investment Potential

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment which geographical areas are designated by Invest NI as having potential for investment in pharmaceutical industries; and what capabilities are being developed in those areas. (AQO 2345/09)
The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: There are no geographical areas within Northern Ireland that have been specifically designated by Invest NI for investment in pharmaceutical industries. Pharmaceutical companies, like any business, will chose to locate where they believe opportunities are maximised and the investment risk is minimised. Location-decisions take account of access to labour and skills, infrastructure and property, transportation linkages, linkages to academia, and the availability of financial assistance.

Invest NI has limited scope for directing investment to specific geographical areas.

Northern Ireland is a relatively small place and the opportunities and benefits that arise from investment decisions are not constrained by boundaries such as those of District Council or Parliamentary Constituency Areas. These are not self-contained labour markets and companies draw their workforces from beyond such boundaries.

Two of Northern Ireland's most successful pharmaceutical companies, Almac and Randox, for example, draw staff from wide catchment areas that extend well beyond their respective locations in Craigavon and Antrim.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Planning Policy Statement 5

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the development of Planning Policy Statement 5, and when he plans to introduce the revised statement. (AQW 5938/09)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr S Wilson): Work is ongoing on PPS 5. However it is difficult at present to provide a definitive date for publication of the PPS pending the outcome of a judicial challenge which was heard in the High Court in January 2009.

Disposal of Unlicensed Motor Vehicles

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment what was the total cost of the removal and disposal of unlicensed motor vehicles in each constituency, in the last three years. (AQW 6012/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Vehicle licensing is an excepted Matter, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport but it is administered in Northern Ireland by the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) under an agreement between my Department and the Department for Transport (DfT).

There is a UK-wide contract for a wide-range of activities relating to the detection, immobilisation and removal of unlicensed vehicles, which is awarded and administered by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Swansea. I am informed that this contract does not feature a specific cost for the removal and disposal of these vehicles. The information requested is therefore not available.

Disposal of Unlicensed Motor Vehicles

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment how much was reclaimed by the Department for the removal and disposal of unlicensed motor vehicles in each constituency, in the last three years. (AQW 6033/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Vehicle Licensing is an Excepted Matter, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport but it is administered in Northern Ireland by the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) under an agreement between my Department and the Department for Transport (DfT).

The arrangement for the removal and disposal of unlicensed motor vehicles is contained within the UK-Wide contract which was awarded and is administered by the Driver & Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) Swansea.
Fisheries Management

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if he could confirm whether Fisheries Management is included in the Northern Ireland Marine Bill. (AQW 6057/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Responsibility for fisheries rests with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. However, in the context of policy development for the Northern Ireland Marine Bill, I will be considering with Ministerial colleagues how all activities in the marine area might be managed in a more holistic and integrated way.

Footpath Provision

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of the Environment what criteria is applied by Planning Service for footpath provision in proposed residential developments for which planning approval is sought. (AQW 6068/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Planning Policy for the assessment of residential development is set out in Planning Policy Statement 7, Quality Residential Environments. Policy QD1 of PPS7 states that all residential proposals should have greater regard for sustainable movement patterns and should seek to reduce reliance on the private car. Consideration of matters such as pedestrian movements must be built into the design of a proposed development from the outset. In addition, supplementary planning guidance on the provision, positioning and detailed design of footpaths in residential developments is set out in Creating Places, Achieving Quality in Residential Developments.

In the determination of planning applications, my Department will consult with DRD Roads Service which provides specialist information and transportation advice on roads related matters associated with residential development.

The Private Streets (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 and the Private Streets (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 provide the statutory basis for the adoption of roads, including footpaths, constructed by developers for future maintenance by the Roads Service.

Following consideration and agreement from Planning Service and Roads Service on the form and layout of the proposal, developers should indicate on the plans submitted for approval those areas including footpaths that are to be adopted for future maintenance by the Roads Service.

Footpaths in Housing Developments

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of the Environment how many enforcement actions have been taken for failure to complete footpaths in housing developments, in each of the past 3 years, in each parliamentary constituency. (AQW 6069/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department does not at present hold centrally statistics on enforcement cases. To provide accurate figures for the information requested would require manual checking of files which is not only disproportionate in terms of time and cost but would result in un-validated statistics being released. This would be contrary to the Code of Practice for the release of official statistics published in January 2009 ahead of the enactment of the Statistics and Registration Service Act 2007 on 1 April 2009.

My Department has been working to improve the recording of Enforcement Cases, including modifying the existing data base and the inputting of data is ongoing, but this will take some time. When this exercise is complete the data validated statistics on Enforcement will be available.

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment if he will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6079/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department follows the guidance issued by OFMDFM on the distribution of publications to the Northern Ireland Assembly.
Where there is a statutory requirement to provide hard copies of documents to certain recipients, including political representatives, my Department follows the procedures outlined in the guidance referred to above. In addition, my Department ensures that copies of all documents are available in electronic format and that all recipients are given the option of obtaining a copy in that format.

If there is no requirement for a publication to be laid before the Assembly but it is considered to be of sufficient interest to MLAs then my Department would distribute it to the Assembly by the “Papers Presented” route. Under this procedure copies are sent to the Assembly Business Office with a covering letter asking that it be included on the “Papers Presented” list, to notify MLAs where it can be obtained.

For consultations my Department uses the “Papers Presented” procedure and also writes to MLAs advising that the consultation is taking place and where they can obtain copies of the document, either in hard copy or electronic format. A standard letter copied to each MLA is sent. The letters are forwarded to Parliament Buildings, to be placed in the MLA pigeonholes.

Rural Planning Strategy

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of the Environment how tourist need in Policy 3 of the Department’s Rural Planning Strategy is defined for assessing planning applications for tourism accommodation in the countryside. (AQW 6098/09)

The Minister of the Environment: There is no definition of tourist need in relation to Policy Tou 3 in the Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland.

Rural Planning Strategy

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of the Environment whether proposals to extend an existing tourist facility in the countryside to provide complementary tourist accommodation are required to demonstrate tourist need as outlined in Policy TOU 3 of the Rural Planning Strategy. (AQW 6100/09)

The Minister of the Environment: In assessing applications for all rural tourist accommodation including a proposal to extend an existing facility the need for the development is material to the determination of a planning application including extensions to existing tourist accommodation. A range of information may be requested by my Department in order to demonstrate a need for tourist accommodation. This will be dependent on the nature, scale and location of the extension to the development and may include one or a number of the following:

- expressions of support from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and other appropriate bodies such as local community groups or tourism based organisations;
- expressions of support from local elected representatives and District or Borough Council;
- a “Tourism Need Statement” which would demonstrate that the development would be in the public interest in terms of inward investment and employment opportunity;
- where applicable, confirmation of grant-aid funding in order to facilitate the tourism accommodation;
- a feasibility study for consideration and assessment by the Economics Branch in the Department for Regional Development which provides this service to the Department;

A minor extension to provide ancillary accommodation eg a toilet block, car park or similar facility would not, however, require this type of assessment.

Rural Planning Strategy

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of the Environment what information or details must accompany a planning application for tourist accommodation in the countryside, including proposals to provide accommodation in conjunction with existing tourist facilities, to ensure that it meets the Department’s requirement, in Policy TOU 3 of the Rural Planning Strategy that such accommodation should meet a clearly identified tourist need. (AQW 6101/09)

The Minister of the Environment: As detailed in AQW 6100/09 in assessing applications for rural tourist accommodation the need for the development is material to the determination of a planning application including extensions to existing tourist accommodation. A range of information may be requested by my Department in order to demonstrate a need for tourist accommodation. This will be dependent on the nature, scale and location of the development proposed and may include one or a number of the following:

- expressions of support from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and other appropriate bodies such as local community groups or tourism based organisations;
- expressions of support from local elected representatives;
- a ‘Tourism Need Statement’ which would demonstrate that the development would be in the public interest in terms of inward investment and employment opportunity;
- where applicable, confirmation of grant-aid funding in order to facilitate the tourism accommodation;
- a feasibility study for consideration and assessment by the Economics Branch in the Department for Regional Development which provides this service to the Department.

However a proposal for a small scale complementary facility e.g. a play area, small recreational building or similar scale and type of facility, which is clearly ancillary to the tourist accommodation would not require such an assessment.

Planning Applications

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what the minimum steps are that an applicant needs to take if their planning application is due to expire in the near future. (AQW 6114/09)

The Minister of the Environment: As the timeframe for implementation of a planning approval approaches, an applicant may choose to apply for renewal of planning permission or commence development on the site.

In the consideration of a renewal application refusal would only be considered where:

(a) there has been some material change in circumstances since the original permission was granted e.g. a change in policy
(b) continued failure to begin the development will contribute unacceptably to uncertainty about the future pattern of development in the area; or
(c) The application is premature because the permission has a reasonable time to run.

Over time a number of court and appeal cases have addressed the issue of commencement of development. In deciding whether or not development has commenced, the Department will consider:

- Whether the works carried out are in accordance with the relevant planning permission; and
- Whether the work carried out is material, in the sense that it is not de minimis (meaning something which is so minor as to have no legal consequence)

It is a matter of planning judgement as to whether or not development has commenced at the early stages of a project and the above test provides direction on the issue. Generally this would require

- Compliance with conditions relating to works to be carried out before the commencement of other work e.g. the construction of an access to the required standard; and
- Commencement of any work of construction in the course of the erection of the building such as the digging and pouring foundations etc.

Ten-Day Payment Policy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of the Environment what measures his Department has in place to ensure invoices are paid within ten-days. (AQW 6128/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has put certain measures in place to assist in helping meet the new 10 day target for payment of invoices as follows:

- Ensuring that the certification process of invoices is initiated as early as possible;
- Taking particular care at holiday times and other times of staff absence to ensure that invoices are not left unactioned; and
- Ensuring that creditors are aware of the correct billing name and address for invoices.
Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the (i) projects; and (ii) amount of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6153/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The table below details the one project planned and the amount involved.

Planning Applications

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if he will issue Planning Application X/2003/0731 which has been with his Department and has been passed by all of the other relevant bodies. (AQW 6154/09)

The Minister of the Environment: A planning permission in respect of application X/2003/0731 was issued by Planning Service on 24th February 2009.

Chicken Waste Plant at Glenavy

Mr Butler asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the planning application for a chicken waste plant at Glenavy and if he will ask for a public inquiry into this planning application. (AQW 6158/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The planning application, accompanied by an Environmental Statement, for a biomass fuelled power plant at Ballyvannon Road Glenavy was submitted to Planning Service on 4 June 2008. Article 31 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 was applied to the proposal on 23 September 2008, designating the proposal as a major application.

The first round of consultations with expert consultees is now complete and has revealed the need for additional environmental information which will be addressed by way of an Addendum to the Environmental Statement. The Addendum was requested on 11 February 2009 and in accordance with the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999 the applicants have 3 months from the date of the request to submit the Addendum. Upon receipt of this, Planning Service will re-advertise the application and re-notify neighbours providing the public with an opportunity to comment on the additional environmental information.

Careful consideration of the planning application and associated environmental information, and all representations made in relation to it, is necessary before I would be in a position to decide whether to proceed by way of a public inquiry as the most appropriate action. It would not be appropriate therefore at this stage to indicate whether I would call a public inquiry.

River Pollution

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how many (i) enforcement notices have been issued; and (ii) actions have been taken, by his Department in relation to river pollution in the North Down constituency, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6177/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Where pollution occurs, it is the policy of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) to take formal enforcement action if this is warranted by the severity of the pollution and the circumstances which led to it occurring.

The formal enforcement options available to NIEA in pollution cases include:

a. the issuing of an enforcement warning letter, or;
b. the initiation of prosecution proceedings, and / or;
c. the issuing of a Water Order Notice.
Table A details the number of substantiated pollution incidents and the number of Enforcement Notices issued under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 in each of the last 3 years in the North Down District Council area. Table B details the actions and outcomes to date.

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment, given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, to outline what actions his Department intends to bring forward to increase motivation and morale and reduce stress levels in the workplace. (AQW 6183/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Psychiatric and psychological illnesses, including stress are the main reasons for long-term sickness absence in the NICS. My Department recognises that such illnesses can lead to long-term absence from work. In DOE a significant portion of absence due to stress related illness is attributed to domestic situations or coping with life issues.

Measures are in place to help staff who experience such difficulties, including welfare support and a 24-hour employee assistance programme, which is available to staff and immediate family members. Early intervention in such cases is considered essential and immediate referral to the Occupational Health Service is made.

My Department has developed a pilot programme, Work Bridge, which blends coaching and practical actions to support the member of staff to actively plan, prepare and positively move forward towards a return to wellness at an early stage.

It is currently developing a Health Promotion Strategy to promote the health and well being of staff and we sponsor a range of work health initiatives such as Fitech and the Healthworks programme.

A series of seminars for senior managers have recently taken place to highlight the issue of stress and their responsibilities as managers. This includes detecting the early signs of stress and what action they should take to help those who are experiencing stress symptoms, and where possible, to help them remain at work. Early intervention with support from HR and Support Services is encouraged.

Regular information on health matters is made available to staff through the Department’s monthly team brief and other internal publications. Information is posted to the new Health Awareness section of the DOE intranet.

A proactive approach is taken to help individuals who are absent from work due to stress related illness return to work as soon as possible. It is hoped that all these interventions taken together will go some way to improving the motivation and morale across the Department.

Omagh Minerals Limited

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment if Omagh Minerals Limited is breaching any conditions placed against its planning approval. (AQW 6191/09)
The Minister of the Environment: I can confirm that my Department is aware of a number of breaches of planning control in respect of the Gold Mine at Cavanacaw, Omagh.

Planning Service Headquarters, Minerals Unit is currently investigating the breach of a number of conditions of planning approval K/1992/0713.

To date the operator has co-operated with the Department and it is anticipated that there will be a satisfactory resolution to all of the breaches of planning control, some of which are technical in nature.

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment (i) to outline the process by which his Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits his Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail his Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6260/09)

The Minister of the Environment:

(i) Process

DOE’s Resource Accounts are audited under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, and in accordance with United Kingdom Auditing Standards, as issued by the Auditing Practices Board. Prior to the audit of the annual accounts the department agrees a timetable with the auditors detailing dates for the production and audit of both interim (9 months) and year-end accounts. This enables the audit team to perform most of their audit work before the end of the financial year.

Year-end accounts are formally submitted to the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG) by the Permanent Secretary (as the principal Accounting Officer) by the end of May to allow sufficient time for the audit process. The C&AG aims to certify the annual accounts by end of June to enable the accounts to be laid before the Assembly prior to the summer recess.

(ii) The accounts are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG), and his staff in the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

(iii) In each of the last three years the DOE accounts received an unqualified true and fair view opinion. The complete accounts for all three years can be found on the DOE website www.doeni.gov.uk. The C&AG’s opinions are on pages 52-54 (2007-08), 44-46 (2006-07) and 39-40 (2005-06).

Planning Service

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the Planning Service Management Board’s referral process from Councils, to detail the meetings they have had with architects/agents (outside of Council delegations) to discuss individual applications, over the past 4 years. (AQW 6269/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The Management Board Referral process is part of the consultation arrangements operated for Councils in considering the Department’s opinion on the outcome of planning applications. The Council, as part of the process, is afforded the option of a meeting.

Third party attendance at any meeting with a representative of the Management Board or other Headquarters staff is only agreed if this forms part of the Council delegation.

As a consequence, there have been no meetings with architects/agents outside of Council delegations.
DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Government Transport

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) if any Minister used government transport (ii) in what capacity did they attend the events; and (iii) if the use of government transport was authorised, in relation to attendance at events at the North West 200 in (a) May 2007; and (b) May 2008. (AQW 4111/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr N Dodds): Ministers are supplied with official vehicles to assist them in undertaking their official duties. Guidance has been issued to Ministers on the use of transport and they are not required to seek approval for individual journeys.

Workplace 2010 Project

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the economic circumstances of continuing with the Workplace 2010 project. (AQW 5566/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The impact of continuing with the WP2010 procurement in the current financial circumstances would have been twofold. Firstly, debt finance would have been extremely difficult to secure potentially rendering the project undeliverable at this time and secondly the value for money of the project would probably have been impaired giving rise to an unaffordable deal.

Civil Service

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel the total number of vacant positions in each Civil Service Department and Agency in the Belfast Area. (AQW 5574/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The number of vacancies in permanent Civil Service posts located in the Belfast area, within the eleven Northern Ireland Departments and their Agencies, is set out in the attached table.

Capital Infrastructure Projects

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much was spent on capital infrastructure projects, broken down by Departments, in each of the last 10 years. (AQW 5590/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: It is currently not possible to separately identify expenditure on infrastructure projects from other capital investment.

The table attached provides information regarding total net capital investment by Northern Ireland departments for the period 2003-04 to 2007-08. The figures are based on final outturn information whilst changes in budgeting treatment mean that it is not possible to provide comparable figures for the period before 2003-04.

Civil Service

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many posts in the Civil Service are currently filled by temporary workers, broken down by (i) Department; and (ii) grade. (AQW 5594/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The number and grades of posts in the 11 Northern Ireland Departments and their Agencies currently filled by temporary workers are set out in the attached table. The figures, covering both industrial and non-industrial posts, are on a full-time equivalent (FTE) basis.

For the purpose of this question, the term “temporary workers” covers staff employed on casual or fixed term contracts and agency staff.

Domestic Regional Rate

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much the freeze on the domestic regional rate will cost his Department, in each year between 2008 and 2011. (AQW 5690/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: If it is assumed that the domestic regional rate would have increased year on year in line with inflation at, say, 2.7%, this would result in a cost in the region of £7.2m for each year on a cumulative basis. Since revenue from regional rates is not linked to any particular spending programme, the reduction in revenue means that the Executive has less money available to allocate to all Departments.

Events on the Grounds of Stormont Estate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he has received any requests for events to take place on the grounds of Stormont Estate between April and September 2009. (AQW 5741/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Yes, I have received a number of requests for events to take place on the grounds of Stormont Estate between April and September 2009.
Councillor Info Project

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to make a statement on the success of the councillor info project, and if further funding for this initiative will be made available by his Department. (AQW 5762/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Delivery Innovation Division (DID) within DFP financed a pilot project, councillor.info (www.councillor.info), through the former e-Government Fund. The e-Government fund was a direct result of the e-participation review carried out by OFMDFM in 2004/05. This review was carried out by the then Northern Ireland e Government Unit (NiEGU) now DID in DFP. As a result the e-Government fund sponsored several projects with one of the last of these being the councillor.info project. The aim of the pilot was to use modern technology to stimulate direct interaction between councillors and their electorate. The pilot project commenced in February 2008 and will run until the end of March 2009; a post project evaluation has yet to be completed.

Whilst experimental in nature, initial indications have shown that the project has been well received by a significant number of Councillors.

As a pilot project, my Department made it clear that it would only cover the first year costs and that funding thereafter would be the responsibility of individual Councils.

DFP has no resource to fund this project further.

Civil Service

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline what steps they intend to take to ensure there is no conflict of interest issues when senior civil servants leave the NICS and take up senior positions in the private sector. (AQW 5781/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The procedures governing the acceptance of business appointments by civil servants are set out in paragraph 1.7.1 and Annex 4 of the Conduct section of the NICS Staff Handbook and they apply to the acceptance of appointments within business and other bodies.

The current rules require that within 2 years of leaving Civil Service employment, a civil servant is to obtain the approval of the former employing department before accepting any offer of employment.

The procedures require an individual to submit an application for approval that includes full details of the proposed appointment and details of any official dealings with the prospective employer, or knowledge which might give the prospective employer an advantage over competitors.

The rules were introduced to protect the NICS and individual members of staff from suspicion of impropriety in the event that they may wish to take up an appointment with an outside body on leaving the service. They allow for restrictions to be applied such as delaying acceptance of an appointment (a waiting period) or restrictions on the type of work which the individual may be involved with for a period of time. However, conditions such as these should, and are, only applied where there is a specific cause for concern such as the contact that the individual had with the company involved or its competitors during the course of their official duties.

Senior Civil Servants

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for its assessment of senior Civil Servants joining the boards of banks that have close financial relationships with the public sector. (AQW 5838/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Business Appointments Rules governing the acceptance of appointments by civil servants are set out in the Conduct Section of the NICS Staff Handbook and they apply to the acceptance of appointments within business and other bodies.

These rules exist to counter suspicion that a serving civil servant might be influenced by the hope or expectation of future employment with a particular business or organisation; and to avoid the risk that a particular business or organisation might gain an unfair advantage over competitors by employing former civil servants. These rules are consistent with those applied in GB and are applied to all relevant appointments in Northern Ireland.

Inspectors of Education

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) to provide the number; and (ii) religious breakdown of Inspectors of Education in each Education and Library Board. (AQW 5879/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Inspectors of Education are members of the NI Civil Service and are employed by the Department of Education. The community background profile of this group is set out below:-
Third Level Education College Staff

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if a business case for payment of arrears to third level education college staff has been submitted to his Department and if so, when agreement to the payment of arrears is expected.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: A business case has not been received in my Department in respect of a pay award for third level education college staff.

Efficiency Savings

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what the outcome of discussions were with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment about efficiency savings.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: In the context of Budget 2008-2011 all departments were required to deliver 3% per annum efficiency savings. In bilateral discussions with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, agreement was reached in relation to how the Minister’s department would deliver the required target. Efficiency Delivery Plans, setting out the detail of these efficiency savings, are available on the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment’s website, www.detini.gov.uk

Asymptomatic Plural Plaques

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to his answer to AQW 92/09, for an update on the consultation for compensation to people suffering from asymptomatic plural plaques.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: On 13 October 2008 my Department issued a consultation paper which explored the House of Lords’ ruling in the Johnston case regarding asymptomatic pleural plaques and invited views on how people in Northern Ireland with pleural plaques could be supported and assisted. The consultation exercise concluded on 12 January 2009 and a preliminary analysis of the responses has been compiled. I am currently considering that analysis and will be assessing the available policy options with a view to determining the way forward.

Civil Service

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when he expects to commence the payments to Civil Service staff entitled to the equal pay claim.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Officials are currently in discussions with NIPSA about the equal pay issue facing the Northern Ireland Civil Service and a series of meetings are underway in order to establish the potential for an agreed settlement. As discussions with NIPSA have yet to be concluded and the equal pay claims already lodged are now the subject of legal processes in the Industrial Tribunal, you will appreciate that I am unable to provide any further specific details at present. The equal pay issues in the Civil Service are of a very significant scale and complexity and therefore it may yet take some time before I can confirm how they will be finally resolved.

Drug Related Deaths

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many people on prescription drugs have died as a result of addiction, in each of the last three years.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: In total 86 deaths were registered in Northern Ireland in 2007 where the cause of death was drug related, either due to legal or illegal drugs, this compares to 91 deaths in 2006 and 84 deaths in 2005. It is not possible to ascertain whether the deceased was addicted to any drugs mentioned on the death certificate or if the deceased was receiving any prescription drugs.

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6080/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: My Department adheres to the OFMDFM guidance on Distribution of Department Publications and Consultation Documents.

This guidance outlines that it is a matter of choice for recipients how they receive Government publications. The opportunity to receive publications by electronic means is available if requested.

Civil Service

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel why the required business case for pay increases for Civil Servants has not yet been approved. (AQW 6173/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Officials are currently in discussions with NIPSA about the equal pay issue facing the Northern Ireland Civil Service and a series of meetings are underway in order to establish the potential for an agreed settlement. As discussions with NIPSA have yet to be concluded and the equal pay claims already lodged are now the subject of legal processes in the Industrial Tribunal, you will appreciate that I am unable to provide any further specific details at present. DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Muscular Skeletal Conditions

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what work his Department has undertaken on frameworks for muscular skeletal conditions. (AQW 5854/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr M McGimpsey): Work is ongoing to develop service frameworks for cardiovascular health and wellbeing; respiratory health and wellbeing; cancer prevention, treatment and care; mental health and wellbeing; learning disability; children and young people’s health and wellbeing; and older people’s health and wellbeing.

It is anticipated that additional priority areas for service framework development will be taken forward. These will be drawn from the remaining priorities identified and evaluated by the Department. These include musculoskeletal conditions, physical disability and sensory impairment, sexual health and diabetes.

User Led Self Management

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what his Department is doing to promote user led self management for long term conditions such as arthritis; and how his Department is engaging with the voluntary and community sectors on this. (AQW 5855/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The introduction of self management and patient education programmes is an essential element of my Department’s approach to the more effective management of people with chronic conditions in the community. A wide range of self-management programmes is available. Some can be professionally-led and others can be delivered by patients or service users. It is a matter for HSC Boards working with healthcare professionals and voluntary organisations to decide on the most appropriate programmes to be delivered to individuals or to groups of people with long term conditions, including arthritis.

My officials met recently with the Long term Conditions Alliance, which is an umbrella body representing a range of voluntary organisations including Arthritis Care, to discuss how voluntary organisations can contribute to the uptake of patient education and self-management programmes.

Urology Treatment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when East Antrim constituents will be able to receive urology treatment at Antrim Hospital and not have to travel at extra expense to Causeway Hospital, Coleraine. (AQW 5862/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A regional review of adult urology services in Northern Ireland is underway at present. The purpose of the review is to make recommendations for a model of service which will ensure quality urology services are provided in the right place, at the right time by the most appropriate clinician, through the entire care pathway from Primary Care to Intermediate to Secondary and Tertiary Care. Part of this work has also included a review of workforce planning and training / development needs of staff.

The Review Report will inform the future distribution of urology services across Northern Ireland, including the Northern Trust area, and is likely to be completed by the end of March.
The number of urology patients referred to other parts of the UK for treatment in the last 12 months is set out in the table below broken down by Health and Social Services Board of residence.

Urology Treatment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when staffing infrastructure along with better training opportunities, will be put into place in hospitals to enable a more efficient urology service to be provided, minimising the need to send patients to other parts of the United Kingdom. Urology Treatment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in relation to patients receiving urology treatment in other parts of the UK, to detail (i) the number of patients; (ii) their travel costs; (iii) their treatment costs; and (iv) the travel and accommodation costs of friends and families, in the last 12 months. Ravara House Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if his meeting with Lady Hermon MP and myself at Ravara House will lead to a swift decision on the future of Ravara House Bangor.

(AQW 5880/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The South Eastern Trust’s public consultation period on the proposals for the future of three statutory residential homes, including Ravara House, ended on 12th February 2009. The Trust will now consider the outcomes of the consultation before making a decision on the future of each of the homes. My Department will also monitor the responses to the consultation. Should the Trust’s decision be to proceed with closure, I will make the final decision on the proposal. This process must be allowed to run its course without intervention.

If I am required to make a decision, before doing so, I will take account of the views expressed by all those who took part in the consultation process, and the needs of older people in the area now and in the future. I will also be concerned to take into account the position of the staff. But my primary consideration will be the health and well-being of the people who are currently resident in these Trust-run homes.

Residential Respite Care

Mr McEllduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many families with members who have autism qualify for residential respite care and how many are receiving their allocated quota, in the Western Health and Social Care Trust area.

(AQW 5882/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As at, 10 March 2009, 40 families with members who have autism, within the Western Health and Social Care Trust (WHSCT) qualify for residential respite care. The Trust indicated they have no set quota for each family, though they operate a prescribed upper limit of six weeks per family.

Residential Respite Care

Mr McEllduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children and adults with challenging behaviour qualify for residential respite care in the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 5883/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There are 44 adults and 4 children in the Western Health and Social Care Trust who exhibit challenging behaviours and would qualify for residential respite care.

Residential Respite Facilities

Mr McEllduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what residential respite facilities are available for children and adults with challenging behaviour, in the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 5884/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Western Health and Social Care Trust offer residential respite facilities for children with challenging behaviour at Shepherds Way and Beltany House. Residential respite care for adults with challenging behaviour is provided at The Respite Cottages and Beltany House. Adults who have challenging behaviour which poses a potential danger to themselves or others, have on occasions received respite in Lakeview Hospital.
Prescribed Medication

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has any plans to commission research into the level of addiction to prescribed medication. (AQW 5916/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Department is aware of the growing concern about the misuse of “prescription drugs”, and there is a range of survey work undertaken by the Department to uncover the level of use and misuse of prescription medication in Northern Ireland.

The Drug Addicts Index holds information on those whom “a doctor considers to be or has reasonable grounds to suspect is addicted to” a list of controlled drugs, some of which are prescribed drugs. The latest Drug Addict Index Annual Statistical bulletin was published on 5 March 2009.

Prevalence rates on the use of (though not addiction to) sedatives and tranquillisers and anti-depressants in Northern Ireland were previously published in Bulletin 1 (published in January 2008) of the 2006/2007 Drug Prevalence Survey. The relevant figures are set out in the table below:

It should be noted that the next bulletin from the Drug Prevalence Survey is due to be published shortly and it will provide a more detailed analysis of data on the use of sedatives and tranquillisers and anti-depressants.

The Drug Misuse Database holds information on people presenting to treatment services with problem drug misuse. The annual statistical bulletin provides an analysis of the main drug of misuse of people presenting for treatment. Some of these drugs such as benzodiazepines, codeine and paracetamol, are prescribed medication. According to the most recent information (published in October 2008) benzodiazepines were the second most commonly reported main drug of misuse (reported by 31% of individuals), Codeine & paracetamol were reported as the main drug of misuse by just 2%. Again further information can be found at:

With all this information it is not possible to establish if the drugs have been obtained on prescription by an individual or through another source.

The Department is beginning the process the review the ongoing implementation of the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs (NSD). As part of this work the Department will consider all relevant information, seek further research where necessary, to inform the ongoing development process, and decide if further action is required on specific issues, such as the misuse of prescription drugs.

Nursing Staff

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money has been spent on recruiting temporary nursing staff through recruitment agencies in the last year, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 5917/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Auxiliary Staff

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money has been spent on recruiting temporary auxiliary staff through recruitment agencies in the last year, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 5918/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Clostridium Difficile

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what costs have been incurred by the outbreak of Clostridium difficile in Craigavon Area Hospital through (i) the closure of beds; and (ii) longer inpatient stays. (AQW 5919/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: This information is not available.

Alcoholic Drinks

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to introduce (i) legislation which stops cut-price offers on alcoholic drinks; and (ii) a minimum price per alcoholic unit as proposed in Scotland. (AQW 5920/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Addressing alcohol misuse, particularly binge and young people’s drinking, is a key priority for my Department. To this end, my Department has led in the development of a Young People’s Drinking Action Plan that seeks to co-ordinate action to tackle this issue. This plan is currently with my Executive colleagues for consideration.

The Young People’s Drinking Action Plan raises both the issues of cut-price offers on alcoholic drinks and minimum unit pricing, and these are areas which will need further consideration across the Executive as responsibility for these issues does not lie with my Department. There may also be issues in relation to EU Legislation and Competition Laws, and I will therefore be watching the developments in Scotland with great interest.

Craigavon Area Hospital

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the occupancy rate of acute beds has been in Craigavon Area Hospital, over the past 12 months. (AQW 5922/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The number of available and occupied beds is collected on a quarterly basis, with the most recent being the quarter ending 31st December 2008. Occupancy rates are calculated from these data. The occupancy rate for acute beds in Craigavon Area Hospital, is shown in the table below, for each quarter and overall for the 12 months ending 31st December 2008.

Gynaecological Referrals

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the current average waiting time for urgent gynaecological referrals in the Southern Health and Social Services Trust area, and what measures are being taken to reduce the waiting time. (AQW 5925/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: All urgent “Red Flag” referrals to gynaecology are seen within a two week target. For other urgent referrals the Southern Trust aims for them to be seen within...
4 weeks though there is clinical discretion to decide the level of urgency of individual cases. Routine referrals should be seen within the current target of 13 weeks the target for these appointments will reduce to 9 weeks from 1 April.

My Department continues to work towards reducing waiting times for all patients. Each Trust is currently working towards the targets that by March 2009, no patient should wait longer than 9 weeks for a first outpatient appointment, 9 weeks for a diagnostic test, and 13 weeks for inpatient or daycase treatment.

Cervical Cancer Screening Tests

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if there has been an increased uptake of cervical cancer screening tests in recent months following the publicity about Jade Goody.

(AQW 5928/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Data on cervical smear tests are not held centrally by the Department.

It is too early to state if there has been a significant increase in the uptake of cervical screening smear tests. Cervical screening laboratories have reported an increase in the number of smear tests taken over the past few months. It is not yet known if the increase comprises mainly women who already have regular smear tests attending for an earlier smear because of increased publicity or if it comprises a significant number of women who previously had not attended regularly or at all.

Respite Care Provision

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of respite care provision in the North Down area.

(AQW 5932/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A range of respite services are available in the North Down area of the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust, including domiciliary supports, direct payments, provision of day care, community based inclusive activities and overnight respite in registered accommodation. Whilst my Department is currently undertaking work to provide a clearer and fuller picture of current and future respite provision and need, the Trust is taking a number of steps to address any gaps in respite provision including investing in additional respite beds in the non statutory sector, recruitment of specialist fostering placements, family support and domiciliary care inputs.

Smoking-Related Illnesses

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have been diagnosed with smoking-related illnesses over the last three years.

(AQW 5933/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on the total number of persons that have been diagnosed with smoking-related diseases within the last three years is not available.

Smoking-Related Illnesses

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of whether the general health of the public has improved since the banning of smoking in public places.

(AQW 5934/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Smoke-free legislation was introduced in April 2007 specifically to protect the public and employees from the harmful effects of tobacco smoke. I believe, as a result of this, the general health of our population will undoubtedly improve. Smoking related illnesses take many years to manifest in an individual; consequently the overall impact of smoke-free legislation on health improvement cannot be meaningfully measured within the short period since the introduction of the ban.

My department has undertaken research to determine changes in smoking trends and in second-hand smoke exposure following the introduction of smoke-free legislation. The results are very encouraging and show, for example, that smoking prevalence among adults fell from 25% in 2006/07 to 23% in 2007/08; that over 21,000 people set quit dates in 2007/08; and that three months after introduction of smoke-free legislation there was a 94% reduction in fine air particulates and a 92% reduction in air nicotine levels in sampled bars. The results of this preliminary research will be published shortly in “Smoke-free Legislation in Northern Ireland – A One Year Review.”

Sudden Cardiac Deaths in Young People

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the increasing number of sudden cardiac deaths in young people.

(AQW 5939/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I refer the member to the answer I gave to AQO 2203/09.

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, what action he intends to take to improve motivation and morale and reduce stress in the workplace.

(AQW 5949/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Department recognises that stress related illnesses whether work related or not, can lead to long term absence from work. All stress related absences are investigated immediately and prompt action is taken to ensure staff receive the appropriate support. The measures currently in place to support staff who are suffering from a stress related illness are assistance from the Welfare Service and an employee assistance programme which is available 24/7 for both employees and immediate family members. If appropriate, an immediate referral to the Occupational Health Service can also be arranged.

The NICS Workplace Health Committee published a comprehensive booklet on Mental Wellbeing in 1999. This booklet provided advice and guidance to Departments and employees across the NICS on the commitment to Mental Wellbeing at work. The booklet, which was issued to every member of staff, was aimed at creating a much greater awareness about mental health at work and provided detailed guidance on tackling stress. This guidance is currently under review and a revised Mental Well-being policy will issue in due course.

Consideration is also being given to undertaking an NICS-wide stress survey. It is hoped that the results of the survey will help inform and influence policy direction and target potential stress “hotspots”

Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children have been diagnosed with diabetes in each of the last 3 years.

(AQW 5968/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on the number of children diagnosed with diabetes each year is not available.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has held with rheumatoid arthritis groups or organisations.

(AQW 6009/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I have not held any discussions with rheumatoid arthritis groups or organisations. However, my officials recently met a representative from the National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society to discuss services for people with rheumatoid arthritis.
Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he plans to follow the lead in Wales and Scotland and implement the National Institute for Clinical Excellence guidance on rheumatoid arthritis medication and treatment. (AQW 6010/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Department has confirmed the application of three NICE technology appraisals for Northern Ireland in respect of biologic (anti-TNF) drugs for rheumatoid arthritis, subject to the conditions in the associated guidelines:

- TA 126 – recommending that abatacept is not used
- TA 130 – recommending that adalimumab, etanercept and infliximab are used subject to certain conditions
- TA 141 – recommending that Rituximab is used in certain circumstances.

Implementation is being taken forward in the context of the Public Service Agreement target to achieve a 21-week waiting time for drug therapies for treatment of severe arthritis by March 2011.

NICE has also recently published a clinical guideline on the management of rheumatoid arthritis in adults. This is currently being reviewed for its applicability to Northern Ireland and guidance on its implementation will be issued to the HSC.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how long do patients with symptoms of rheumatoid arthritis spend on a waiting list to see a consultant, and how does this compare with other regions of the United Kingdom. (AQW 6011/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on the number of patients with symptoms of rheumatoid arthritis waiting to see a consultant is not collected by the Department. Provision of such data by Health and Social Care Trusts in Northern Ireland, and other health care providers in the rest of the United Kingdom, would incur a disproportionate cost.

Health and Social Care Trusts

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total administrative costs broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in the last financial year. (AQW 6028/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information is available on the payroll costs of administrative staff for the financial year 2007/08:

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the format requested.

People with Learning Disabilities

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the budget for; and (ii) how the budget is spent on, people with learning disabilities, in each Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 6042/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The table below shows how the £197m budget was planned to be spent on Learning Disability Services in 2008/09 across the five Health and Social Care Trusts. The pattern of expenditure is based on Trusts local knowledge and their understanding of the demand for services in their area. Belfast Trust accounts for a substantial amount of hospital care due to the regional services they provide.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The table below shows that Health and Social Care Trusts planned to spend £576.2m on Programme of Care 4, Elderly Care in 2008/09. Of this 37.4% was to be spent on Residential and Nursing Home Care.

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Traffic Calming Measures

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development what traffic calming measures are in place in the vicinity of schools in the Lagan Valley constituency. (AQW 5777/09)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr C Murphy): My Department’s Roads Service has developed its Safer Routes to Schools programme, with the aim of tackling the problems caused by the continuing growth of the use of cars, for the ‘School Run’. It is anticipated that this will be achieved, by raising the awareness of the major issues related to increased congestion, including the detrimental impact on road safety, health and the environment. In addition, the programme aims to provide measures to encourage increased use of sustainable travel options for the school journey, such as walking, cycling, public transport and car sharing.

Where appropriate, the Safer Routes to School programme provides traffic management improvements outside schools, as well as curriculum based education and awareness resources, travel surveys, information leaflets, road safety training and initiatives, to encourage a modal shift away from the car, for the school run.

The table below includes the traffic management improvements which have been provided at schools within the Lagan Valley constituency:

Park and Ride Facilities

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development what park and ride facilities are currently operational in the Lagan Valley constituency. (AQW 5778/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: Within the Lagan Valley constituency there are two park and ride facilities provided in connection with rail travel. These are located at Lisburn train station and at the Moira rail halt.

In addition, there are two bus-based park and ride facilities on the M1 corridor at Sprucefield and at Blacks Road. These were implemented as part of the traffic management measures, during the M1/Westlink project construction period.

The Minister for Regional Development: Within the North Down constituency there are currently four park and ride facilities provided in connection with rail travel. These are located at Bangor, Holywood, Helens Bay and Carnlea rail stations and provide, in total, approximately 180 parking spaces.

Traffic Calming Measures

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what additional traffic calming measures are to be introduced in the vicinity of schools in the North Down constituency. (AQW 5831/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: In my reply to the Member’s recent Assembly Question, AQW 1968/09, I advised that my Department’s Roads Service is committed to installing road safety facilities outside schools, as part of the Travelwise Safer Routes to Schools initiative, and of the type of measures involved.

I would also refer the Member to my recent reply to his Assembly Question, AQW 5832/09, in which I provided details of traffic management improvements which have been provided at schools within the North Down constituency.

The Programme of Work for the 2009/10 financial year has not yet been set. I have asked the Divisional Roads Manager to write to you, when the programme has been confirmed early in the new financial year.

(AQW 5852/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink have advised me that during the calendar year 2008 a total of two trains used the Knockmore railway line. Details are:

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, what action he intends to take to improve motivation and morale and reduce stress in the workplace.
(AQW 5953/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: DRD already has in place a number of support mechanisms and initiatives, some of which are operated across all Departments, to improve staff motivation, morale and help reduce stress in the workplace. These include:
- Our Stress Management Policy, under which staff and line managers are given advice and guidance to help them recognise the symptoms of stress and how this condition can be managed;
- Attendance management procedures which fast-track stress-related absence cases to the Occupational Health Service to provide specific advice and information to the members of staff involved;
- Our Dignity at Work and Health and Safety policies, which provide staff with the means to tackle unacceptable behaviour and ensure healthy working practices;
- Work/Life Balance arrangements, including part-time working, job-sharing, flexible working hours, maternity and paternity leave, career break facilities and a Departmental Teleworking scheme, all of which are available to assist staff to manage their work and domestic responsibilities;
- Ongoing health checks, organised in conjunction with the Occupational Health Service, are offered to all staff;
- Regular Health Promotion events which focus on a number of health-related issues, including the recognition, control and relief of stress;
• We enable access by all staff to the Occupational Health Service and the Civil Service-wide Welfare Support Service; and
• We participate in the NI Civil Service Employee Assistance Programme, which provides a free, confidential 24-hour independent counselling service for all staff.

In addition to these measures, the Departmental Board initiated, in 2008, a “DRD Change and Improvement Programme” which focuses on improving corporate leadership and communications, enabling people, improving governance, and partnership working. The aim is to help develop capable, committed and confident staff to help the Department to deliver its services and to achieve its business objectives. The views of staff, assessed through focus groups, have helped to shape the programme. The improvements already achieved and those planned for the future in communications, leadership, training, financial management and partnership working are expected to make a major contribution towards improving staff morale and motivation.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development at what stage is the review of pay and grading for employees of Northern Ireland Water. (AQW 5959/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the review of pay and grading is subject to ongoing negotiations with the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA). While many issues have been agreed with the trade union, some relating to implementation and assimilation arrangements remain to be resolved. During December 2008, NIW employees were provided with details of the proposed pay structures and pay progression arrangements which had been agreed with NIPSA.

Transferring Budgets

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development if it is possible to transfer monies from one section of his Department to another, at the end of each financial year. (AQW 5970/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The February Monitoring Round is the last opportunity for the Department to seek Executive approval to transfer budgets from one business area to another.

Roads Service and Northern Ireland Water

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail all work being carried out by the Roads Service and NI Water in the South Antrim constituency in March 2009. (AQW 5983/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that in addition to the ongoing M2 Improvements Scheme, between Sandyknowes and Greencastle junctions, the following work will be undertaken in the South Antrim Constituency during March 2009:
• work to assist right turns - Antrim Road, between Sandyknowes and Chimney Corner Hotel;
• replacement of traffic signs - Sandyknowes Junction;
• carriageway resurfacing – Kilbride Road, Doagh;
• add Remote Monitoring Systems to three pelican crossings – Main Street, Ballyclare and Ballyclare Square East and West;

• upgrade of storm water drainage system - Straid Village;
• provision of new storm water drainage - Dalways Bawn, Ballycarry;
• provision of road humps - Hawthorne Road, Newtownabbey;

• improvements to the bus stop and associated footway links - junction of Ballyquillan Road and Diamond Road.

Routine maintenance work, which will also be carried out on roads in the South Antrim constituency during March 2009, includes:
• gully and manhole cleaning;
• sweeping and litter picking; and
• emergency telephone and communication cabinet cleaning.
• Northern Ireland Water has advised of the following work to be carried out in the South Antrim constituency during March 2009.
• replacement watermain- Birchill Road, Antrim;

• installation of storm tank - Roughfort Waste Water Treatment Works;
• upgrade of existing works Milltown Waste Water Treatment Works, Antrim; and
• installation of gravity sewer, pumping main and two pumping stations - Creevery Sewerage Scheme Phase II.

These are in addition to the day-to-day maintenance and repair work required to the water and sewage network.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answers to AQW 914/09 and AQW 2039/09, in relation to the review of pay and grading arrangements for employees of Northern Ireland Water, (i) has this process been completed; (ii) if Northern Ireland Water and the unions have resolved all issues; and (iii) if employees have to make decisions about their pensions without knowing if a deal has been agreed between Northern Ireland Water and the unions (AQW 6030/09)

The minister for regional development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the review of pay and grading is subject to ongoing negotiations with the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA). While many issues have been agreed with the trade union, some relating to implementation and assimilation arrangements are yet to be resolved.

Employees were provided with details of the proposed pay structures and pay progression arrangements during December 2008 and NIW is satisfied that this provided sufficient information to enable them to make an informed decision about their pensions before the 3 February 2009 deadline for the pensions option exercise.

Road Maintenance

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister for Regional Development how much his Department has spent on road maintenance (i) in total; and (ii) by mile, for each class of road, in the North Antrim constituency, over the past three years. (AQW 6041/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service does not maintain the information requested on a constituency basis. I can also advise that Roads Service’s expenditure is not recorded by class of road.

However, Roads Service does record the actual spend during the preceding financial year, and a breakdown of the number of miles of road managed, for each Council area.
The total amount spent by Roads Service across the North, on structural maintenance, in each of the last three years, is as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>2005/06</th>
<th>2006/07</th>

</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£</td>
<td>£70.5 million</td>
<td>£65.6 million</td>
<td>£77.3 million</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Structural maintenance includes resurfacing, strengthening, surface dressing, patching and structural drainage.

The table below provides details of spend on structural maintenance, together with the number of miles managed, and the approximate spend per mile that this equates to, for the Councils in the North Antrim Constituency, in each of the last three years.

Footpath Provision

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development what criteria is applied by Roads Service for footpath provision in proposed residential developments for which planning approval is sought. (AQW 6067/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service is consulted by Planning Service to provide advice on roads matters for housing development proposals, including with regard to the provision of footpaths within any such proposal.

Proposals are considered against the joint DOE/DRD planning guide, ‘Creating Places’. This incorporates guidance on layout and access for residential developments. Roads Service would normally stipulate that footpaths should be provided along both sides of a carriageway, except where development is only on one side of the carriageway. However, footways may be omitted to create a shared surface, where development is on both sides of a carriageway and the carriageway serves no more than approximately 25 dwellings.

Welcome Signs to Villages

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development what rules apply for the erection of welcome signs to villages by community groups. (AQW 6070/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has an agreed policy in place with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the local Councils, to cover the provision of town and village welcome signs. This policy permits the erection of welcome signs, other than the standard black on white plates, providing that certain conditions are met, including that:

- the sign design must comply with that currently authorised by my Department;
- the content of the sign must be agreed with the local Council;
- the sign should generally be erected on the main approaches to the town or village, in the vicinity of existing 30mph or 40mph limit signs; and
- the promoter should pay for the signs.
Fuel Efficiency of New Buses

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the fuel efficiency of new buses operated by Translink. (AQW 6076/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink has informed me that, although recently purchased buses produce fewer emissions, they are less fuel efficient than traditional vehicles. This reduction in fuel efficiency is in part due to the extra weight associated with making new buses accessible to people with disabilities and improving passenger comfort and safety.

However, it is likely that fuel efficiency of new buses will improve with the introduction of more sophisticated electronic control of engines and transmissions.

Translink continues to examine ways of improving fuel consumption through initiatives such as automatic gear change programmes and idle-shut down devices.

Site Meeting at the Hillhead Road, Newry

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development on what date did he attend a site meeting at the Hillhead Road, Newry. (AQW 6084/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Member will be aware I met on site with him, Mr Michael Brady MLA and a number of local residents on 9 July 2007, to discuss the on-going closure of the Hillhead Road, Newry.

Road Maintenance

Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total amount spent on Road Structural Maintenance for the years (i) 2002-03; (ii) 2003-04; (iii) 2004-05; (iv) 2005-06; (v) 2006-07; (vi) 2007-08; and (vii) 2008-09. (AQW 6103/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Departments Roads Service has advised that the total spend on structural maintenance over the years 2002/2003–2008/2009 is as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2002/03</td>
<td>£67.1 million</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2003/04</td>

<tr>

</tr>
<tr>

<td>£65.6 million</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2007/08</td>
<td>£77.3 million</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2008/09</td>
<td>£59 million*</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

* figure is estimated end of year spend.

Structural maintenance includes resurfacing, strengthening, surface dressing, patching and structural drainage.

Translink

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5708/09, to extend the purchase of return tickets to Half Price Smart Pass holders on all Translink services. (AQW 6119/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: From 1 April 2009, half fare SmartPass holders will be able to purchase return tickets for rail travel. This facility is being introduced to remove the need for pass holders to make two separate visits to the ticket office for each leg of their journey. On bus journeys, passengers must pass the driver as they board the vehicle and I do not consider that any real benefit would be achieved by having return tickets made available. As such, there are no plans to change the current arrangements for buying half fare bus tickets.

Traffic Calming Measures

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development for a list of traffic calming measures in Upper Bann. (AQW 6147/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: I understand the Upper Bann constituency covers areas from both Craigavon and Banbridge Councils. My Department’s Roads Service has advised that during the last four financial years there have been 34 traffic calming schemes, as well as 17 school travel and safety projects, implemented within these Council areas.

The tables below provide details of the traffic calming schemes and the school travel and safety projects in Upper Bann:

Northern Ireland Water

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development what problems have been encountered in agreeing the pay and grading system for Northern Ireland Water that was due to be completed by the end of November 2008; and if he is aware that employees have had to take other decisions about pensions without having this resolved. (AQW 6188/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the review of pay and grading is subject to ongoing negotiations with the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA). While many issues have been agreed with the trade union, some relating to implementation and assimilation arrangements are yet to be resolved.

Employees were provided with details of the proposed pay structures and pay progression arrangements during December 2008 and NIW is satisfied that this provided sufficient information to enable them to make an informed decision about their pensions before the 3 February 2009 deadline for the pensions option exercise.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain the comment from Northern Ireland Water that it ‘invests £1m every working day’; including where this money goes; and what benefits are received by the consumer. (AQW 6268/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that its current Strategic Business Plan includes £667 million for capital works investment across the three years to 2010 which equates to around £1 million per working day. This major investment is aimed at improving the water and sewerage infrastructure to achieve compliance with European Union water quality and environmental standards and will provide maximum benefit for customers including enhanced drinking water quality, improved delivery of services, greater protection of the environment and public health.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) what proposals or plans develop or dispose of existing or new sites for NI Water; (ii) to detail any construction projects planned to be underway for NI Water for each of the next 3 years broken down by year; and (ii) to outline how any such estate development strategy complies with the Bain report proposals on the location of public sector employment. (AQW 6310/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it has no proposals to develop any of its sites for office accommodation and therefore has no construction projects planned during the next three years for this purpose. It plans to dispose of approximately 118 sites identified as no longer required, including pieces of land, former works and pumping stations and a former depot.

The detailed suggestions contained in the Bain report on the review of policy on the location of public sector jobs are subject to careful examination and consideration by the Executive before decisions will be taken on a way forward. NIW has no objection to the principle of relocation provided it is based on sound business needs and offers best value for money.
Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) to outline the process by which his Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits his Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail his Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6348/09)

The Minister for Regional Development:

(i) DRD’s Resource Accounts are audited under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, and in accordance with United Kingdom Auditing Standards, as issued by the Auditing Practices Board.

(ii) The accounts are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG), and his staff in the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

(iii) The Departments final audited accounts have been published and are available in the Assembly Library. They can also be accessed from the DRD website.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Capital Infrastructure Projects

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to capital infrastructure projects in the East Londonderry constituency, (i) to list all these projects; and (ii) to breakdown the aggregated value of each project that is (a) under construction; (ii) in the procurement process; or (iii) to be advertised, in financial year 2009/2010. (AQW 6208/09)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms M Ritchie): The information on capital infrastructure projects in my Department relevant to the Member’s East Londonderry constituency is set out in the table below.

The member may wish to note that the Public Realm scheme covering the pedestrianised town centre in Coleraine is scheduled to complete by the end of March 2009. The estimated total cost of this is £1.32m, with the DSD contribution being some £1.23m.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Assembly Shop

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission (i) from which local companies is merchandise purchased for the Assembly shop; (ii) in which constituency is each of these companies based; and (iii) what merchandise does the Assembly shop stock. (AQW 5958/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): The attached table sets out (i) local companies from which the Assembly purchase merchandise for the Assembly Gift Shop, (ii) the constituency in which each company is based and (iii) a list of merchandise which the Assembly Gift Shop stocks.

In addition to the attached list a number of local crafters from across Northern Ireland have been provided with the opportunity to promote their goods in the Assembly Gift Shop each month. For the purpose of the crafter initiative the Assembly do not purchase any merchandise from the local crafters.

Art Owned by the Assembly

Mr McNarry asked the Assembly Commission what is the (i) estimated value; and (ii) insured value of art owned by the Assembly that are not registered under the Government Art Collection. (AQW 5995/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson):

(i) In August 2007, the Assembly Commission arranged to have a valuation of all artefacts, including artwork, belonging to the Northern Ireland Assembly carried out. A copy of the valuation is enclosed.

(ii) The artefacts belonging to the Northern Ireland Assembly, including the artwork, are not currently insured. The Assembly previously took the decision not to insure these items and to carry the risk. The Assembly currently has several works of art on loan from the Government Art Collection however these are managed centrally through the Department of Finance and Personnel, DFP. In line with other Government Departments DFP do not carry commercial insurance, they carry the risk and indemnify themselves against possible claims.

Hansard Reports
Hard Copies of Hansard

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission how much on average it costs to provide each MLA with hard copies of Hansards, since devolution. (AQW 6004/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): Between 8th May 2007 and 24th February 2009 (date last invoiced to the Assembly Commission) the average cost of producing the official report for each MLA was £2.30.

There have been 125 days of production and in total 26,241 copies of the official report have been produced, of which 12,082 have been issued to MLAs.

Mobile Phone Providers

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Assembly Commission, pursuant to the answer to AQW 7591/08 if any other mobile phone providers have enhanced their network coverage in Parliament Buildings. (AQW 6049/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): Further to AQW 7591/09 discussions are ongoing with Orange to install a signal booster in Parliament Buildings. It is hoped that this work will take place within the next few months. Upon completion of this work there will be enhanced network coverage for Orange, O2 and Vodafone mobile phone users.

Fax Machines in Parliament Buildings

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission what the age is of the fax machines that are provided to MLAs in Parliament Buildings; and if they are all in operational order. (AQW 6217/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): The Assembly Commission has delegated responsibility for the provision and maintenance of fax machines to Building Management Branch (BMB) within Properties Directorate. BMB have confirmed that the age of the fax machines provided to MLA’s varies from office to office ranging from new to over 3 years of age.

To the best of BMB’s knowledge all of the fax machines provided to MLA’s are fully operational. However, if MLA’s are experiencing any problems with their fax machines BMB will arrange for them to be repaired or replaced if they contact the Helpdesk on 25999.

In addition to this the IS Office, through the centrally funded IT equipment allocation for MLAs, has supplied each MLA with an OKI C5550 Multifunction Printer which has fax capability. These printers are based mainly in Constituency Offices however each Party has been allocated a number of these printers for use in Parliament Buildings in the respective central Party Support offices. These printers were purchased in May 2007 and the fax facility is fully operational and configured where requested by the MLA. Information relating to the capabilities of these types of printers, including the fax facility, was issued to all MLAs prior to the ICT refresh.
Mr Gardiner asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many staff are employed in its Department in a press and public relations capacity, and what (i) is the annual wage bill; and (ii) are other operational costs associated with this group. (AQW 5475/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness): There are currently four Press Officers employed within the department who provide direct support to the First Minister, deputy First Minister, and Junior Ministers on core press and public relations activity. The approximate annual wage bill for this group for this financial year based on the latest available figures is £182,899.

A further two officers support the work of the department and provide media planning support to the other 10 departments. In addition, the Director and Deputy Director of the Executive Information Service also provide input as part of their cross-departmental responsibility and in managing the provision of communications across all Executive departments.

The approximate annual wage bill for this group for this financial year based on the latest available figures is £264,035.

It is not possible to provide a disaggregated figure for the operational costs for this group.

Childcare Provision

Mr Durkan asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) to confirm if the preliminary report on childcare provision to the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Children and Young People is complete; (ii) when it will be published; (iii) to set out its main findings; (iv) to detail its recommendations; and (v) when a draft Child Care Strategy will be published for consultation. (AQW 5856/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: A paper on childcare provision is still in preparation. The child poverty sub-group of the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Children and Young People is due to consider the paper in March, after which the report will be forwarded to the Ministerial Sub-Committee for consideration.

It is intended that the paper will be made publicly available after consideration by the Executive. It is not possible to give a precise date at the moment but we would aim to make the paper available as soon as possible.

The paper will put forward a range of policy proposals and options which will require careful consideration and, subject to Executive approval, these will be outlined in the published document. The main findings and recommendations that flow from further consideration of the paper by the Ministerial Sub-Committee will be made available when agreed by the Sub-Committee and the Executive.

Executive decisions on the direction of child care policy will take into account the wider 10-year strategy for children and previous child care strategies, and there will be consultation on the resulting child care policy proposals.
Commissioner for Children and Young People

Mr Weir asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for the total amount spent by the Northern Ireland Children’s Commissioner on legal fees in each of the last three years. (AQW 5964/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The amounts paid in legal fees by the Commissioner for Children and Young People for Northern Ireland in each of the last three years were:

The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) has various controls in place to monitor the Commissioner’s expenditure. These controls in the main are operated by its sponsoring body, the Children and Young People’s Unit within OFMDFM.

The relationship between the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and the Commissioner is set out in the Management Statement and Financial Memorandum (MSFM). The MSFM sets out the broad framework within which the Commissioner operates and is based on a Treasury model. The Financial Memorandum section of the MSFM sets out in great detail certain aspects of the financial provisions, which the Commissioner is required to observe. The MSFM is “signed off” by the Commissioner and the OFMDFM Accounting Officer.

OFMDFM and the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) also agree the Commissioner’s business plan. The Business Plan includes key targets and milestones for the year immediately ahead, and links to budgeting information so that resources allocated to achieve specific objectives can readily be identified by OFMDFM.

To monitor actual expenditure against planned expenditure, the Commissioner’s monthly draw down requests are accompanied by monthly profiles and explanations on expenditure, which are scrutinised before approval of payment is given. Also, updates are requested from the Commissioner at each of the financial monitoring rounds.

Quarterly liaison meetings take place between the Commissioner and departmental officials. An official from the Children and Young People’s Unit also attends the Commissioner’s Audit and Risk Committee quarterly meetings and reports back to the department any issues raised.

To monitor the Commissioner’s accountability functions a senior OFMDFM official holds Accountability Meetings with the Commissioner and her Chief Executive every six months, mid year and end of year. The end of year meeting is attended by the Department’s Accounting Officer.

In addition to these procedures, all circulars and guidance issued by DFP are brought to the Commissioner’s attention.

However, we would ask you to note that, in order to ensure appropriate independence of the Commissioner’s office, relationships between the Commissioner, Ministers and OFMDFM are governed by the ‘arm’s length’ principle, wherein the primary role of Ministers is to set the Commissioner’s legal and financial framework and the structure of her funding and management. Within this framework it is the role of the Commissioner to determine her policy and activities in keeping with her statutory responsibilities and the requirements of Assembly policy. OFMDFM has the right of access to carry out any examination of the internal financial control systems as may be required by its Accounting Officer.

The total amount of funding provided to the Commissioner in financial year 07/08 was £1,897,000.

US Pre-Clearance at NI Airports

Mr Durkan asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether its office has had any discussions in relation to the establishment of United States Customs Border Protection Pre-Clearance at Northern Ireland airports; and (ii) what further plans it has to pursue this. (AQW 6206/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Belfast International Airport is the only Northern Ireland airport with flights to the United States and due to the low volume of direct flights we have not had any discussions about arrangements for pre-clearance of US Immigration at airports here nor do we plan to pursue the issue at this time.
Capital Realisation Taskforce

Mr Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the work of the Capital Realisation Taskforce. (AQO 2391/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Following the report of the Capital Realisations Taskforce in December 2007, a Central Assets Realisation Team (CART) has been established within Strategic Investment Board Limited. Work has proceeded on the development of a comprehensive Central Asset Register and preparatory work on the production of an Asset Management Strategy as recommended in the report. Work has also commenced with Departments on the identification of opportunities for a number of key surplus and underutilised public sector assets.

In view of the considerable changes in markets that have taken place since the economic downturn, we have invited Ed Vernon, who led the original Capital Realisations Taskforce, to report on progress since his original report, reviewing and re-drawing conclusions where necessary in the light of changed circumstances.

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) to outline the process by which its Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits its Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail its Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6258/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister:

(i) OFMDFM’s Resource Accounts are audited under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, and in accordance with United Kingdom Auditing Standards, as issued by the Auditing Practices Board.

(ii) The accounts are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG), and his staff in the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

(iii) The C&AG formed the opinion that OFMDFM’s Resource Accounts for the 2005/06, 2006/07, and 2007/08 financial years:

- gave a true and fair view;
- had been properly prepared in accordance with Department of Finance and Personnel directions issued under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001;
- the information which comprises the Directors’ Report and the Management Commentary was consistent with the financial statements; and
- that in all material respects, the expenditure and income had been applied to the purposes intended by the Assembly, and that the financial transactions conform to the authorities which govern them.

Commissioner for Children and Young People

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much money has been spent by the Commissioner for Children and Young People on litigation in relation to smacking children. (AQW 6321/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The amount of money which has been spent to date by the Commissioner for Children and Young People on litigation on the retention in law of a defence of reasonable punishment is £81,329.15.

Recent Visit to the United States

Mr Savage asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister in relation to the recent visit to the United States (i) to detail the costs involved, including (a) flights; (b) hotels; and (c) transportation; and (ii) to detail how many officials were in attendance and their associated costs. (AQW 6396/09)
The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are not yet in a position to provide all the information requested. We have still to receive some of the invoices associated with our visit to the United States. We will provide you with a full answer once this information becomes available.

Strategic Investment Board

Mr Savage asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) the salary scales in the Strategic Investment Board; and (ii) the number of staff members in each salary bracket. (AQW 6415/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Strategic Investment Board does not have salary scales. Starting salaries are determined on a personal basis, taking account of market conditions and the skills, experience and qualifications of the individual member of staff. Once appointed, salaries are not increased (except for a cost-of-living increment which has been set at 2% for each of the last three years).

The salaries of SIB staff are set out below.

Economic Development: US Trip

Ms J McCann asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what sections of the economy it targeted for development, in its recent trip to the USA. (AQO 2350/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The United States is a vitally important source of investment for Northern Ireland and our visit to the US provided an opportunity to promote business, investment and tourism opportunities and to further our international image and reputation.

We had a very useful series of meetings with business leaders in corporate America targeting not only key sectors which are already established in Northern Ireland such as ICT and manufacturing, but also emerging sectors such as life and health sciences and film production.

We met a wide range of companies in Los Angeles, Chicago, New York and Washington including those with an existing presence in Northern Ireland, such as Allstate. We reaffirmed our ongoing support to existing investors for their commitment here and met with potential new investors to highlight the opportunities that Northern Ireland offers.

We were greatly encouraged by the positive welcome we received and by the willingness of corporate America to look at inward investment opportunities. This was reflected by the New York State Comptroller, Thomas Di Napoli’s decision to provide $30 million for projects in NI. This is very significant investment and we very much welcome the vote of confidence from the State Comptroller’s Office in NI as an investment location.

We delivered a very powerful message to corporate America that NI remains an excellent investment opportunity and is open for business. We have no doubt that more US-based companies will take up the opportunity to invest here and we are also confident that other positive news will emerge as the result of our visit to the US.
US Subsidiary Companies

Mrs O’Neill asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the companies it met in the USA which have subsidiary companies based in Northern Ireland. (AQO 2354/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The United States is a vitally important source of investment for Northern Ireland and our visit to the US provided an opportunity to promote business, investment and tourism opportunities and to further our international image and reputation.

This is a very significant investment and we very much welcome the vote of confidence from the State Comptrollers Office in NI as an investment location.

We delivered a very powerful message to corporate America that NI remains an excellent investment opportunity and is open for business. We have no doubt that more US-based companies will take up the opportunity to invest here and we are also confident that other positive news will emerge as the result of our visit to the US.

Play and Leisure Policy

Mrs M Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the implementation plan for the play and leisure policy for 0-11 year olds will be published for consultation. (AQO 2355/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We have now established the Play and Leisure implementation group which consists of 26 members and which has been tasked with drawing up implementation plans for children in the 0-11 years and 12-18 years age groups.

We want the implementation plans to be robust and it is necessary for the groups to carry out extensive benchmarking to ensure that children and young people here will be afforded equal if not better opportunities for play and leisure than children living elsewhere in England, Scotland, Wales and the Republic of Ireland.

We want to consult directly with children and young people of all ages and this will take time to put in place and to carry out effectively.

Efficiency Savings: Job Losses

Mr McNarry asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, following comments made by the First Minister to the press on 24 February 2009 in relation to proposed Treasury ‘efficiency savings’ and that this would mean job losses ‘of very significant proportions’, for its assessment of any planned job losses as part of this process. (AQO 2356/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: In November 2008 as part of the pre-budget report, Chancellor Alastair Darling announced that he would seek to recover £5 billion efficiency savings. We discussed this issue with the British Prime Minister on 25 February 2009. We pointed out that the comprehensive spending review settlement in October 2007 fixed funding levels for three years and we expect this to remain.

Also, we reminded Prime Minister Brown of the promise made in reaching the St Andrew’s agreement that the Executive would be allowed to retain all efficiency savings identified over the CSR period to strengthen frontline service delivery.
We made it clear that we are fully supportive of all efforts to make local public services as efficient as possible. However, we remain firm in our view that efficiencies generated here should be reinvested here to improve services to local people.

We are resolved to resist all attempts to re-open the 2007 CSR settlement and impose reductions on our Budget. It would not be sensible to develop detailed plans on how we could absorb the impact of a reduction that we are determined to resist.

Peace Process

Mr P Maskey asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given its recent visit to the USA, what assessment it has made of how the experiences gained through the peace process can be used to benefit the global community. (AQO 2357/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Our Peace Process is based on addressing the divisions within our society. We recognise that whilst we continue to make significant progress, intolerance such as sectarianism and racism are still too evident. These blights on society have negative impacts not only on our economic prospects but in every part of the world where divided societies exist.

As we aim to build a peaceful, fair and prosperous society we welcome the opportunity to share our transformation experiences with the international community.

It is important to recognise the impact of European funding over the years with its focus on Peace and Reconciliation. Through the various E.U. Peace Programmes there has been considerable investment in work at community level to build relationships which are fundamental to a sustainable peace. We have similarly benefited from external funding from the International Fund for Ireland and other philanthropic investors in our transition process.

As the European and IFI programmes enter their “sunset” phase it is incumbent upon us to ensure there is a lasting legacy from the sustained support which we have benefited from. That legacy must not be solely for all our communities but for the global community.

Our assessment of the future for sharing experiences is that whilst we must be willing to be available to share, our role is to support and encourage. We must remember that our solution is appropriate to our circumstances. It is not our role to see it replicated in other places but to help other places, other peoples, find their way forward.

Economic Development: US Trip

Ms Ni Chuilin asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the businesses it met on its recent trip to the USA to promote economic development. (AQO 2358/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The United States is a vitally important source of investment for Northern Ireland and our visit to the US provided an opportunity to promote business, investment and tourism opportunities and to further our international image and reputation.

Civil Service: Press/PR Staff

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how many staff are employed in press and public relations offices across the Civil Service; and the total cost to the public purse that this represents. (AQO 2359/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: There are currently 50 Press Officers employed across the 11 departments who provide direct support to Ministers on core press and public relations activity. Press Officer is defined as Information grade staff who deal directly with media queries, handling the media, media monitoring, news releases, event management and general communications support.

Information Officers are outposted to departments who cover their individual salary costs. Therefore the total salary costs are not held by OFMDFM.

Racism

Mr Molloy asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on its efforts to tackle racism. (AQO 2360/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister is fully committed to building a cohesive, shared and integrated society for all.

The Programme for Government confirms our commitment to promote tolerance, inclusion and well being. Part of this is the commitment to continue to challenge racism, sectarianism and intolerance which tarnish our reputation, blight our economic prospects and have a corrosive effect on our society. The Executive is fully committed to addressing these divisions within our society.

We want to ensure that newcomers to our shores are integrated into communities which are not divided, separate or unequal, whilst at the same time addressing the challenges that face new and host communities.

To this aim, we are finalising proposals for a draft Programme of Cohesion, Sharing and Integration. It will build on some of the excellent work which is already being done, particularly by district councils and community organisations, to address the challenges which local communities are facing. Action to tackle sectarianism, racism and intolerance will be at the core of these proposals. This will be subject to a full consultation and equality impact assessment. Whilst the details of the policy proposals are finalised, the work of challenging sectarianism, racism and all forms of intolerance is continuing with the active support of OFMDFM Ministers.

As part of the ongoing work we recognise and value the vital role played by groups working with minority ethnic people on the ground. In following through on this recognition we have recently announced a further tranche of funding to support work with minority ethnic people and communities in the financial year 2009/10.

We are pleased to say the £1 million we have allocated this year represents a substantial increase on the previous annual spend prior to the restoration of devolution.

The aims of the fund align with our Programme for Government commitments by supporting work which contributes to the promotion of good relations between people of different ethnic backgrounds, the building of community cohesion, and facilitation of integration.

Security Situation

Mr Simpson asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether it has met with the Chief Constable of the PSNI in relation to the current security situation. (AQO 2361/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: As the Member may be aware, following the shootings of two soldiers at Massarene Barracks on Saturday 7th March and of a PSNI officer on duty in Craigavon on 9th March, we met the Chief Constable, Sir Hugh Orde and the Security Minister, Paul Goggins, at Stormont Castle on Tuesday 10th March.

The meeting was very productive and we will, of course, continue to keep the situation under review and hold further talks as necessary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Farm Modernisation Programme

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much the delivery organisation charge will be for the Farm Modernisation Programme. \(\text{(AQW 6000/09)}\)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms M Gildernew): I can not provide an answer to that question at this time as the contract to deliver those Axis 1 Measures, including the Farm Modernisation Programme, are still in negotiation and has not yet been finalised.

However, I will write to you with that information when it is available.

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. \(\text{(AQW 6081/09)}\)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Similar to other Departments, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development circulates documents in accordance with central guidance provided by Machinery of Government Division in the Office of the First and deputy First Minister.

Under this guidance, Departments have a statutory responsibility to consult with a range of stakeholders, including political representatives and other interested parties, on a range of policy and legislative proposals. In doing so, DARD has an obligation in certain circumstances to provide hard-copies of documents (e.g. to political Parties and Assembly Committees).

MLAs do not normally receive hard-copies of reports but are made aware of these via the ‘Papers Presented List’ circulated by the Assembly Business Office. Similarly, MLAs do not receive hard-copies of consultation documents, however, the Department will write to them advising that the consultation is taking place and where they can obtain copies (either in hard-copy from the Assembly Library or electronically via the Department’s web-site).
Flooding Problem of the Loop River

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made in addressing the flooding problem of the Loop River at the bridge over the Castleragh Road. (AQW 6124/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: DARD Rivers Agency is progressing with the Flood Alleviation Scheme for the Loop River in the Castlereagh area including major crossings of Castlereagh Road and Ladas Drive. It is planned that the associated works will be integrated with the proposed major East Belfast Partnership (EBP) ‘GREENWAY’ project which is scheduled to commence during 2010. In advance of works, Rivers Agency is currently carrying out culvert maintenance, which includes culvert cleaning, on the Loop River system in the Castlereagh area. Rivers Agency has also reached agreement with Roads Service to put in place further interim works on the Castlereagh Road. When completed this arrangement will enable floodwaters that escape from upstream of the Castlereagh Road bridge to be directed back into the river downstream of the bridge and will also facilitate pumping floodwaters away from the site. It is anticipated that these interim works will commence in the current financial year.

Ten-Day Payment Policy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures her Department has in place to ensure invoices are paid within ten-days. (AQW 6129/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department is fully committed to paying businesses for goods and services within the 10 day target and monitors and reports upon performance against that target to management on a monthly basis. For my Department and its agencies 81.5% of the invoices paid in February 2009 were paid within the 10 day target.

DARD will continue to monitor the 10 day prompt payment target and inform business areas of their performance.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what are the (i) projects; and (ii) amounts of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6157/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: There are no capital projects planned by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10 and (b) 2010/11.

European Fisheries Fund

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what the outcomes are from the work of the European Fisheries Fund; including how many workers will be retained and how many new jobs will be created. (AQW 6182/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The European Fisheries Fund does not have specific employment objectives. Its role is to support the objectives of the Common Fisheries Policy and therefore contribute to sustainability in economic, environmental and social terms, including promotion of a sustainable balance between resources and the fishing capacity of the Community fishing fleet. Our overarching aim for fisheries and aquaculture management is for “a fisheries industry that is sustainable, profitable and supports strong local communities, managed effectively as an integral part of coherent policies for the marine environment”. As a result, employment targets were not sought by, or included in the Operational Programme for the Fund approved by the Commission. Due to the dynamic environment our fishing industry operates in, it is not possible to quantify what impact the Programme will have on job creation or retention. The EFF will endeavour to provide support to the industry in efficiently adapting its current capacity to match projected fishing opportunities.
My department intends to open four key measures later this month for applications. These measures are Productive Investments in Aquaculture; Processing and Marketing of Fisheries and Aquaculture products; Collective Actions; and, Fishing Ports, Landing Sites & Shelters.

Other Measures will role out during 2009. The structure and size of Axis 1, “Measures for the adaptation of the Community Fishing” which is a key measure for our local fleet, will be informed by the work of the Fisheries Forum, which aims to report to me this April.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if tests on genetically modified (GM) crops have been carried out and if so, to detail the (i) dates; (ii) sites; and (iii) crops, that have been involved. (AQW 6271/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: No trials of any Genetically Modified (GM) crops or varieties have taken place in the north of Ireland in field experiments or in crop farm-scale evaluations (FSEs).

However, there was an approved release of one GM potato breeding line in research plots at Newforge Lane in 1996. That trial was not repeated, the particular line of research was discontinued and all of the plant material was destroyed within one year of the 1996 harvest.

Department Representatives Speaking at Public Meetings

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she is aware that representatives of her Department have been speaking at public meetings organised by Jim Allister MEP and if so, if she sanctioned the attendance of these officials. (AQW 6403/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: It is normal for officials from my Department to participate in public events where the rural community is present and where information is being provided about specific rural development programmes funded by DARD. My officials participated in an information evening for farmers and rural dwellers in the Antrim Civic Centre on 5 March 2009, which was attended by the Local Action Group for the area, GROW (Generating Rural Opportunities Within south Antrim). The evening was arranged by Jim Allister, MEP.

All information provided by officials was factual and relates only to DARD Rural Development funded programmes and funding opportunities.

Animal Welfare Bill

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development the proposed timescale for the introduction of an Animal Welfare Bill. (AQW 6410/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: In my Statement to the Assembly on 26 January 2009, I outlined the actions I had taken to date to review animal welfare legislation in the north of Ireland. DARD had previously consulted on proposals for new animal welfare legislation in late 2006. As this was carried out under Direct Rule, I wanted to take time to fully consider existing Animal Welfare legislation and the responses received to that consultation. I have completed an initial review, and have met a range of key stakeholders both from here, Britain and the south. These meetings have been exceptionally informative.

My review of animal welfare legislation is nearing completion. I will shortly be considering what new legislation is required, and the timetable for bringing this forward.
DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Sport NI

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why there has been a delay in issuing decisions on Investing in Performance Sport funding applications for 2009-2013 from Sport NI, as this is needed to enable sport governing bodies to determine if their programmes can continue. (AQW 5967/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr G Campbell): Officials from my Department are working closely with colleagues in Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) to assess the applications received from sports governing bodies under the Investing in Performance Sport programme.

The perception of delay arises purely from the volume and sequencing of the range of material that must be considered within the processes for ensuring sound economic appraisal and the invariant duty of safeguarding public funds in terms of value for money, regularity and propriety.

SNI and DCAL are fully aware of the urgency of informing organisations of awards whilst at the same time adhering to public sector accountability requirements. Approvals, if appropriate, will issue at the earliest juncture to governing bodies.

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6111/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: My Department follows OFMDFM’s “Guidance on the distribution of departmental publications and consultation documents” (November 2008) in the dissemination of reports and consultation documents.

The Member will be aware that the guidance states that there is a requirement to provide hard copies of documents to certain recipients including political representatives, parliamentary contacts and Legal Deposit and other libraries.

Where appropriate my Department will endeavour to provide copies of reports and consultation documents in the requested format.

Old Museum Arts Centre

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the progress of the Old Museum Art Centre’s new Arts Centre. (AQW 6140/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Old Museum Arts Centre (OMAC) plan to build a new arts centre called the ‘Metropolitan Arts Centre’ in Saint Anne’s Square in Cathedral Quarter.

OMAC are currently progressing through the second stage of a two stage contract. In parallel, the project will be undergoing a Gateway Review in coming months. The outcome of these processes will determine the construction start date. Whilst there has been some slippage in the original programme, this is not significant and the project is due to be completed in May 2011 (previous completion date March 2011).

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) to outline the process by which his Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits his Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail his Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6262/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure:

(i) The Department’s Resource Accounts are audited in accordance with an agreed and documented Audit Strategy between the Northern Ireland Audit Office and the Department, under the Government Resources and Accounts Act 2001, and in accordance with UK Auditing Standards as issued by the Auditing Standards Board.
(ii) The Department’s Resource Accounts are audited by Comptroller and Auditor General, and his staff in the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

(iii) The Department’s final audited Resource Accounts for the last three financial years have been laid in the Northern Ireland Assembly and are available in electronic format on the Department’s website. (http://www.dcal.gov.uk/index/quick-links/general_publications/other_publications.htm)

ITV Programmes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he would consider contacting ITV to ask it to re-think its intention to discontinue producing (i) Heartbeat; (ii) The Royal; (iii) The Bill; and (iv) Midsomer Murders. (AQW 6317/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I am aware of ITV’s proposals to scale back production for some programmes and decrease the level of scheduling for others and understand that the drama productions mentioned have long-standing audience support. However, broadcasters such as ITV have faced increasing difficulties in recent years in generating income particularly from advertising sources. This was a key conclusion of the recent Ofcom Review of Public Service Broadcasting.

Whilst I will continue to engage with ITV as appropriate, ITV is a commercial organisation and will make business decisions based on the prevailing circumstances. I would also note that the current economic crisis has exacerbated the difficulties faced by broadcasting companies such as ITV which are reliant on raising revenue from advertising.

Joint Eel Management Plan

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if the joint Eel Management plan with the Republic of Ireland authorities for the Lough Erne Basin has being agreed and submitted to the European Authorities. (AQW 6373/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Erne Eel Management Plan was forwarded to the Department for Environment Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) who submitted the plan to the EU Commission by the due date of 31st December 2008.

Loyal Order Events

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in relation to Loyal Order events and functions, how many invitations he has (i) received; (ii) accepted; and (iii) attended, since he took up office. (AQW 6378/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Since becoming Minister I have received three invitations to Loyal Order events, of which I have been able to attend one event.

Glenavy River

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5853/09, to make a statement on the restocking of the Glenavy River with a new fish population by the Glenavy Conservation and District Angling Club; and to give his assessment of the potential for the long term success of this project. (AQW 6407/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: On the basis of advice from DCAL Fisheries Officers, the Glenavy Conservation and District Angling Club has commenced a programme to restore self sustaining populations of trout and salmon to the Glenavy River to the level that their environment is now capable of supporting. This will restore biodiversity value to the river and provide an angling opportunity.

Provided that the environmental requirements of the fish are sustained, angling pressure is managed and poaching is prevented, then the project has the potential to yield sustainable environmental, social and recreational benefits. The project should provide some direct economic value to Northern Ireland through enhancing the angling product in due course.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Teaching Vacancies

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education how many teaching vacancies there are in each school in the Lagan Valley constituency. (AQW 5814/09)

The Minister of Education (Ms C Ruane): Bíonn an Roinn ag iarraidh eolais faoi fholúntais múinteoirí ó gach scoil dheontaschúnta ar bhonn bhliantúil.

The Department seeks information on teacher vacancies from all grant-aided schools on an annual basis. The information provides a “snapshot” of vacancies at a specific date each year. Details for the Lagan Valley parliamentary constituency are set out below:

Ten-Day Payment Target

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education how much of the total amount due to suppliers was paid within the ten-day payment target, in the last year. (AQW 5820/09)

The Minister of Education: From December 2008, when the ten-day payment target was introduced, until 28 February 2009 the Department of Education has paid £1,592,385.50 of the £3,306,720.43 due to suppliers in line with the ten-day payment target.

Tá an méid iomlán atá dlite do sholáthraithe bunaithe ar iarratais íocaíochta a fuarthas i mBrainse na gCuntas sa Roinn.

The total amount due to suppliers is based on payment requests received in the Department’s Accounts Branch.

Neighbourhood Renewal Projects

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education what Neighbourhood Renewal projects (i) were funded by her Department up to February 2009; and (ii) are to be funded by her Department from March 2009, broken down by parliamentary constituency. (AQW 5857/09)

The Minister of Education: Fuair mo Roinn aistrithe teicniúla acmhainní ó DSD, do na blianta airgeadais 2007/08 agus 2008/09, faoi choinne clár oideachais a chuirteann le spriocanna straitéiseacha na Straitéise um Athnuachan Comharsanachta mar atá leagtha amach sa tábla thos.
My Department has received, for each of the 2007/08 and 2008/09 financial years, technical transfers of resources from DSD in relation to education programmes that contribute to the strategic objectives of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy as set out in the table below. In relation to the 2009/10 and 2010/11 financial years the figures inserted below are resources that DE expects to receive from DSD, via in year monitoring rounds, to allow for the continuation of the programmes.

I do fully support the objectives of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy and, through my focus on raising standards in education and, particularly, on tackling educational underachievement I am confident that education can and will make a real contribution to the success of that strategy. I am also encouraged that most of the Neighbourhood Partnerships have identified education as a key issue for their areas and I can assure them that Education and Library Boards and other education bodies will work closely with them, including through programmes such as Achieving Belfast and Achieving Derry, to deliver improvements. The interest and involvement of local communities in education is a key factor in supporting the work of principals and teachers and in encouraging our young people to succeed and do well at school. I have seen at first hand through programmes such as Extended Schools and the Full Service School programme at the Belfast Boys and Girls Model schools examples of how schools are developing working relationships with parents, the wider community, health and social services and childcare agencies.

Classroom Assistants

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education if payments of arrears to all classroom assistants will be completed by 31 March 2009. (AQW 5921/09)

The Minister of Education:

Education and Library Boards

The timing of payments depends on the agreement of individual career histories and job descriptions between the classroom assistants and their school principals and the return of that documentation to the Boards. Individual Boards are at different stages of progression. However, a large proportion of classroom assistants in special schools have already received the arrears due. All Boards have confirmed that they are working towards a conclusion at the earliest possible date.

Maidir leis na costais a bhaineann le cur i bhfeidhm an phróisis phostmheastóireachta do chúntóirí ranga i scoileanna imeasctha faoi chothabháil stáit (GMI) agus i scoileanna gramadaí deonacha (VG), b’fhéidir gur eol duit gur ceist í seo a bhaineann leis na Boird Ghobharnóirí féin mar fhostóirí ó cheart.

Voluntary Grammar/Grant-Maintained Integrated Schools

In relation to costs associated with the implementation of the job evaluation process for classroom assistants in grant-maintained integrated (GMI) and voluntary grammar (VG) schools, you may be aware that this is a matter for individual Boards of Governors as employers in their own right. However, I have recently made available additional resources to those VG and GMI schools who have chosen to implement job evaluation exercises, to assist them with the financial pressures created by this exercise. The Department is still in the process of gathering the information required for the classroom assistants. It is, therefore, unlikely that all the funding will be paid out in the current financial year.

Rural Proofing Procedures

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Education to detail how many (i) administrative; and (ii) legislative actions taken by her Department have been subject to rural proofing procedures in the past three years. (AQW 6040/09)

The Minister of Education: Rinneadh anailís faoi phromhadh tuaithe ar dhá bheartas, mar chuid den próiseas forbartha ar bheartais, agus is iad an dá beartas atá i gceist ná Riachtanais Speisialta Oideachais agus Cuimsití agus Muintir Nuaithagtha.

Two policies, for which rural proofing analysis has been carried out, as part of the policy development process, are those for Special Educational Needs and Inclusion and Newcomers.

The need to rural proof policies is an intrinsic part of policy development and as such there is no disaggregated data on the number of administrative and legislative actions that have been subject to rural proofing procedures in the past three years.

Teacher Training Places

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education if there is any evidence that the economic downturn has led to an increase in applications for teacher training places. (AQO 2308/09)

The Minister of Education: Applications for admission to courses of initial teacher education (ITE) have for many years far exceeded the number of places available. There is no evidence at present to suggest that the economic downturn has led to an increase in applications for places on ITE in the north of Ireland.

The vast majority of the accidents recorded are of a minor nature and did not involve injury to children or adults.

Translink has advised that, as it does not operate a dedicated school fleet, it does not record the information in the format requested. In light of recent calls for this type of information, Translink is developing a system that will allow for the provision of these data in the future.
School E-mail Accounts

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education what regulations are in place to govern the use of school e-mail accounts by staff for party political purposes. (AQW 6056/09)

The Minister of Education: Is ceist í seo a bhaineann leis na scoileanna iad féin. Caithfidh na Boird Gobhanóirí cinntiú go bhfuil beartas ag na scoileanna a mhínionn úsáid shábháilte, inghlactha agus eifeachtach na hIdirlíne agus uirlísí eile digiteacha teicneolaíochta.

This is a matter for schools themselves. Boards of Governors must ensure that their schools have a policy on the safe, acceptable and effective use of the Internet and other digital technology tools. They must also actively promote safe and acceptable working practices for all staff and pupils.

Acceptable use policies detail the ways in which ICT facilities can and cannot be used by pupils and staff in the school; state what monitoring will take place; and stipulate the possible disciplinary consequences for breach of rules. Any abuses which arise within schools should be subject to the rules and regulations of the school.

The Department has provided guidance to schools on the wide range of issues that their acceptable use policies should address. If there is evidence of a need for greater clarity, it will review that guidance and strengthen the advice within it.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education to provide the total cost of the Middletown Centre for each year since its inception; and to outline any ways in which this cost has inhibited the delivery of autism educational services. (AQW 6099/09)

In answer to the second part of your question, I can confirm that the funding for the Middletown Centre for Autism has been additional money secured specifically for its purpose. The funding for the Centre has in no way inhibited the delivery of any autism educational service. Indeed, an additional £7.5 million has been provided for autism related services over the past five years to provide enhanced services; this includes in excess of £600k per annum earmarked directly to Education and Library Boards for the operation of an Autistic Spectrum Disorder 5-Board Group, which provides the key professional link between Board services and the Middletown Centre for Autism.

Ten-Day Payment Policy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Education what measures her Department has in place to ensure invoices are paid within ten-days.

(AQW 6127/09)

The Minister of Education: The Department of Education strongly supports the target of making payments within ten working days. Guidance was issued internally within the Department in December 2008 stressing the importance of this new target and the need for all Branches to ensure payments are processed without undue delay.

Thug an Roinn isteach monatóireacht mhíosúil agus tuairisciú míosúil ar an sprioc nua seo chuig ardhbainistíocht.

Monthly monitoring and reporting to senior management against this new target has been introduced by the Department.

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Education, given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, to outline what actions her Department intends to bring forward to increase motivation and morale and reduce stress levels in the workplace.

(AQW 6184/09)

The Minister of Education: Caithfidh gach bainistoir line i mo Roinn feidhmiocht a bhfoirne a bhainistiú tri húsáid a bhaint as an Creat um Bhainistiocht Feidhmiochta den NICS mar uirlís le hinspreagadh agus meanma a fheabhasú.

All line managers in my Department are required to manage the performance of their staff using the NICS Performance Management Framework as a tool to improve motivation and morale. As part of this process, line managers ensure that objectives which are agreed by staff are achievable and where concerns are raised, action is taken to address them.
Staff who indicate that their sickness absence is stress-related are sent a questionnaire which asks for details of any work related issues that are causing stress. Where these are identified, action is taken to address the issues and facilitate a return to work.

My Department actively promotes a number of support services including, the Occupational Health Service, the Welfare Support Service and the Employee Assistance Programme which offers free, confidential, independent advice and support to staff.

Throughout the year training opportunities are available to assist staff with managing stress and to help line managers to identify and manage stress in the workplace. Wellbeing Awareness roadshows are being held for all DE staff in March/April 2009; these will provide staff with advice and information on healthy lifestyle issues including the reduction of stress.

Closure of Donaghadee High School

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what policy has the South Eastern Education and Library Board in place to deal with the closure of Donaghadee High School.

(AQW 6196/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá tugtha le fios dom ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt go bhfuil sé ag iarraidh, ar bhonn gníomhach, iomarcaíocht éigeantach do fhoireann múinteoireachta a sheachaint trí phróiseas iomarcaíocht aistrithe a chur ar fáil.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board have advised that it is actively attempting to obviate compulsory redundancies for teaching staff through a transferred redundancy process. Teachers have been provided with a list of alternative posts they may wish to consider transferring to. Staff who do not wish to be considered for a transferred redundancy will receive a redundancy payment and, if applicable, early release of pension.

As the staff at Donaghadee High School are employed by the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) it is therefore a matter for that Board to consider the issues involved. However I am advised by the South Eastern Education and Library Board that the Board is actively involved directly with teaching and non teaching staff employed in Donaghadee High School and the Trade Unions concerning the closure of the school on 31 August 2009.

The Board also advises that a number of consultation meetings have already taken place with staff and Trade Unions. Individual one-to-one meetings with staff are being scheduled.

Closure of Donaghadee High School

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what contact has been made with the staff at Donaghadee High School in relation to transferring personnel or redundancy payments.

(AQW 6197/09)

The Minister of Education: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that it is actively attempting to obviate compulsory redundancies for teaching staff through a transferred redundancy process; and teachers have been provided with a list of alternative posts to which they may wish to consider transferring. The Board has also written to the principals of all controlled and maintained schools in the South Eastern area about the compensation payable in the event of a teacher's redundancy and to provide contact details for advice on handling redundancy.

The Board has advised that it is actively involved directly with teaching and non-teaching staff employed in Donaghadee High School and the Trade Unions concerning the closure of the school on 31 August 2009.

Thug an Bord le fios fosta go raibh roinnt cruinnithe comhairliúcháin ann cheana féin le baill foirne agus le Ceardehumainn. Tá cruinnithe duine le duine á sceidealú le baill foirne faoi láthair.

The Board also advises that a number of consultation meetings have already taken place with staff and Trade Unions. Individual one-to-one meetings with staff are being scheduled.
Closure of Donaghadee High School

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what help is the South Eastern Education and Library Board offering to staff at Donaghadee High School to reduce strain and stress levels throughout this, and other, consultation processes.

(AQW 6198/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá tugtha le fios ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt go bhfuil siad ag déanamh idirbheartaíochta go dirceach leis an fhoireann teagaisc agus neamhtheagaisc atá fostaithe in Donaghadee High School agus leis na Ceardchumainn maidir le druidim na scoile ar 31 Lúnasa 2009.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that it is actively involved directly with teaching and non-teaching staff employed in Donaghadee High School and the Trade Unions concerning the closure of the school on 31 August 2009. Staff have been advised that the Board provides an independent one-to-one confidential counselling service and this has been made available to staff.

(AQW 6200/09)

Closure of Donaghadee High School

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education if she will ensure that staff at Donaghadee High School will receive information on their pension rights and redundancy situation, as a matter of urgency.

(AQW 6213/09)

The Minister of Education: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that it is actively attempting to obviate compulsory redundancies for teaching staff through a transferred redundancy process; and teachers have been provided with a list of alternative posts to which they may wish to consider transferring. Closure of Donaghadee High School

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education if she will ensure that the South Eastern Education and Library Board has a policy in place for the closure of Donaghadee High School for both the staff and pupils. (AQW 6214/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá tugtha le fios dom ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdeiscirt go bhfuil sé ag iarraidh ar bhonn gníomhach, mar a dhéanfadh sé i gcás dúnta scoile ar bith, iomarcaiocht éigeantach do fhloireann muinteoiríocht a sheachaint trí próiseas iomarcaiochta a chur ar fáil.

The South-Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that it is actively attempting, as in the event of any school closure, to obviate compulsory redundancies for teaching staff through a transferred redundancy process. Teachers have been provided with a list of alternative posts they may wish to consider transferring to.

That the closure date of the school was scheduled to facilitate parents in making alternative arrangements for their children for September 2009. There are sufficient places to cater for the pupils leaving Donaghadee High School.

Mobile Classrooms

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education for the number of (i) children in Irish medium schools who are being taught in mobile classrooms; and (ii) mobile classrooms that are being used in the Irish medium education sector. (AQW 6222/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní choinníonn mo Roinn eolas ar líon na ndaltaí a mhúintear i seomraí ranga soghluaiste agus bheadh costas diréireach i gceist leis an eolas seo a fháil.

My Department does not hold information on the number of children taught in mobile classrooms and to have this collected could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. In particular in post-primary schools it would be impossible to establish how many children use the classrooms at any given time depending on the subject the classroom is used for.

Information on the number of mobile classrooms in use for teaching purposes in the different sectors is listed in the table below.

Primary Schools in North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the amount of (i) funding; and (ii) underspend returned to her Department, that was ring fenced for primary schools in North Down, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6223/09)

The Minister of Education: Sonraithear sa tábla thíos na méideanna imfhálatihe a dáileadh chug bunscoileanna Dhún Thuaidh i ngach bliain le trí bliana anuas agus na méideanna nach raibh caite ag deireadh gach bliana.

The table below provides details of the ring-fenced amounts which have been allocated to North Down primary schools during each of the last three years and the amounts unspent at each year end. All funding allocated to schools and unspent at the end of the financial year is available for schools to use in future years for the purposes it was intended and is not therefore returned to my Department.

The above figures (with the exception of funding for extended schools) do not include ring-fenced allocations that are directly delegated from the Department to schools as a supplement to the funding determined under the Common Funding Formula. It is not possible, or practical, to trace every individual ring-fenced fund. Rather measures are in place to ensure the services for which the funding was allocated are delivered.

Teaching Vacancies

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for the number of teaching vacancies in each school, in the North Down constituency.

(AQW 6224/09)

The Minister of Education: Faicheadh an Roinn eolas ar fholúntais múinteoirí ó gach scoil dheontaschúnta ar bhonn bhliantúil.

The Department seeks information on teacher vacancies from all grant-aided schools on an annual basis. The information provides a “snapshot” of vacancies at a specific date each year. Details for the North Down parliamentary constituency are set out below:

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Education to detail how much her Department has spent on (i) purchasing; and (ii) renting prefabricated buildings and mobile classrooms, in each of the last five years. (AQW 6235/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní choinníonn mo Roinn an t-eolas seo, maidir leis na ceisteanna seo a leanas, agus bheadh costas diréireach i gceist leis an eolas seo a bhailiú faoi láthair.

My Department does not hold this information for the following questions and to have this collected at the present time could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. However, a review of such information is underway and this type of information will be considered as part of that review.

Information is not available in respect of the following questions:
(i) Outstanding maintenance and repairs to mobile classrooms.
(ii) the number of mobile classrooms being used that are older than their anticipated lifespan
(iv) The age of mobile classrooms
(v) The cost to my department of purchasing and renting mobile classrooms in the last five years.

Workforce Development Strategy

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education if she intends to implement the decision of the Assembly on 26 June 2007 to introduce a transformation fund for the early years sector as a foundation for the workforce development strategy. (AQW 6247/09)

The Minister of Education: Tugadh tacaíocht traspháirtí don phrionsabal le cistiú trasfhoirmiúcháin a bhunadh nuair a rinneadh diospóireacht air sa Thionól ar 26ú Mheitheamh 2007, faoi réir thorthaí an Athbhreithnithe ar Chaiteachais Cuimsitheach.

The principle of establishing a transformation fund received cross-party support when it was debated in the Assembly on 26th June 2007, subject to the outcome of the Comprehensive Spending Review. It was not possible to introduce any fund within the current Programme for Government period. Furthermore, both the Early Years 0 – 6 Strategy and the work of Sector Skills Councils (SSCs) led by the Department for Employment and Learning are currently examining the landscape of the early years workforce, including qualifications and training needs. Without their findings it is too early to say if and how any such fund should be established.

0-6 Early Years Strategy

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for her assessment of the plans to end reception classes as part of the 0-6 early years strategy. (AQW 6248/09)

The Minister of Education: Bhí sé mar chonclúid an Athbhreithnithe ar Oideachas Réamhscoile, a rinneadh mi Mheitheamh 2004, go dtbharsadh ar an chur a thiar de chuid iomadh an t-athbhreithnithe. Tugadh ná ról as an sosailseadhrachtaí as an t-osclaíonnaí agus le léiriú é agus le feidhme. Tá an t-aontas a rith in ann suim sóisialta thar leith a bhaintear as an tsoláthar fáiltithe.

The Review of Pre-School Education undertaken in June 2004 concluded that the Department would bring forward legislation to prevent a school offering reception places as experience shows that reception provision is less beneficial than other forms of pre-school provision. The recommendations from the Review of Pre-school are being considered as part of the Early Years 0 – 6 Strategy.
0-6 Early Years Strategy

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for her assessment of whether the 0-6 early years strategy will ensure fair funding for the voluntary and independent early years sectors. (AQW 6249/09)

The Minister of Education: Is ceist ar a ndéanfar measúnú mar chuid den Stratéis Luath Bhlianta 0-6 í an cheist faoi chomhionannas i measc na hearnálacha reachtúla, deonacha agus pobal maidir le cistíú do sheirbhísí luath bhlianta.

The need for equity between the statutory, voluntary, community and private sectors in respect of funding for early years services is an issue that will be examined as part of the Early Years 0–6 Strategy. In setting a vision for early years policy the Early Years 0–6 Strategy will set the scene for how high quality early years services should be delivered in the next 10 years and will recognise that meaningful and sustained change will take time. The Department will be examining the costing implications for any recommendations.

Primary-Languages Scheme

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education (i) how many; and (ii) which primary schools have employed Irish-language tutors under the primary-languages scheme. (AQW 6250/09)

The Minister of Education: Dheimhnigh Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt, a riarann Clár na dTeangacha Bunscoile, go bhfuil 76 bunscoil ag baint tairbhse as teagascóirí Gaeilge tríd an chlár faoi láthair. Sonraithear na bunscoileanna seo sa tábha thios.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board, which administers the primary-languages programme has confirmed that currently 76 primary schools are benefiting from Irish tutors through the programme. These schools are detailed in the table below.

It is for individual schools to determine the teaching staff they require to meet the needs of the pupils in their classrooms. The Department does not hold information on the number of primary schools with full-time staff employed to teach Irish or the number of such staff.

Primary-Languages Scheme

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education (i) how many; and (ii) which primary schools have full time members of staff to teach Irish rather than Irish-language tutors employed under the primary-languages scheme. (AQW 6252/09)

The Minister of Education: Dheimhnigh Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt, a riarann Clár na dTeangacha Bunscoile, go bhfuil 76 bunscoil ag baint tairbhe as teagascóirí Gaeilge tríd an chlár faoi láthair. Sonraítear na bunscoileanna seo sa tábla thíos.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board, which administers the primary-languages programme has confirmed that currently 76 primary schools are benefiting from Irish tutors through the programme. These schools are detailed in the table below.

It is for individual schools to determine the teaching staff they require to meet the needs of the pupils in their classrooms. The Department does not hold information on the number of primary schools with full-time staff employed to teach Irish or the number of such staff.

Friday 27 March 2009 Written Answers
 Teachers of Irish

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education what teaching and learning materials are available to teachers of Irish in English-medium primary schools.

The Minister of Education: Cuireann an Chomhairle Curaclaim, Scrúdúcháin agus Measúnaithe (CC eA) réimse ábhar ar fáil le tacaíocht a thabhairt do mhúinteoirí chun gach gné den churaclam athbhreithnithe a soláthar, an Ghaeilge san áireamh.

The Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCeA) provides a range of materials to support teachers in delivering all areas of the revised curriculum, including Irish. It is for individual schools to decide which materials they use in delivering the curriculum and to determine the teaching staff they require to meet the needs of the pupils in their classrooms.

Through my primary-languages programme, teaching and learning resources are provided to support the teaching of Irish in those primary schools that have chosen to deliver Irish. In delivering the programme, Education and Boards have drawn support in providing teaching and learning resources from organisations such as CCeA, Foras na Gaeilge, the Centre for Information on Language Teaching and Research, and Gael Linn.

Teachers of Irish

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education what provision there is for initial teacher training in Irish at English-medium primary schools.

The Minister of Education: Bionn oideachas tosaigh trí Ghaeilge do mhúinteoirí bunscoile á sholáthar ag Coláiste Ollscoile Naomh Muire tríd an Bhaitseiléir san Oideachas (BEd) agus trí chláir an Teastais Iarchéime san Oideachas Lán-Ghaeilge (PGCE IME).
Initial teacher education in Irish for the primary sector is provided by St. Mary’s University College through its Bachelor of Education (BEd) and Post Graduate Certificate of Education in Irish-medium education (PGCE IME) programmes.

The PGCE IME is a one-year course which is taught substantially through the medium of Irish and is intended particularly for graduates who wish to teach in Irish-medium schools. Students spend two blocks of school experience in an Irish-medium school and one block in an English-medium school.

Students who choose Irish as their main subject in the BEd programme have the opportunity to take substantial elements of the course through modules designed to support the needs of the IME sector. Students undertaking this course spend years 1 and 2 on placement in English-medium schools, and usually years 3 and 4 in Irish-medium schools.

Both qualifications enable teachers to teach in both the Irish-medium and English-medium sectors.

Mobile Classrooms

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education how many school children are being taught in mobile classrooms, broken down by school, in each parliamentary constituency. (AQW 6270/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní choinníonn mo Roinn eolas ar líon na ndaltaí a mhúintear i seomraí ranga soghluaiste agus bheadh costas diréireach i gceist leis an eolas seo a fháil.

My department does not hold information on the number of children taught in mobile classrooms and to have this collected could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. In particular, in post-primary schools it would be impossible to establish how many children use the classrooms at any given time depending on the subject the classroom is used for.

Young People in Residential Care

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Education how much of her Department’s budget is spent on young people in residential care. (AQW 6277/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní thugann an Roinn Oideachais cistiú do chúram cónaithe; ach cinntíonn sí go soláthraítear an t-oideachas do na páisti atá i suíomhanna chúram cónaithe, a fhreastalaíonn ar a gcuid riachtanas.

The Department of Education does not fund residential care as such; rather it ensures that children in residential settings are provided with education to meet their particular needs. These needs may be met within a mainstream school, a special school, alternative education provision, or a dedicated provision attached to a residential care setting.

It is, therefore, not possible to separate out expenditure on young people in residential care. The Department did however allocate £1,628k earmarked funding in 2008/09 for education provision and support for children and young people in care.

Children and young people in care have access to the full range of education services and support depending on their needs. In addition, dedicated support is available in each Education and Library Board area to assist in the preparation and implementation of a personal education plan for each young person and to work with them, their carers and schools to sustain educational placements.

Teacher Training

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education what provision there is for in-service teacher training in Irish at English-medium primary schools. (AQW 6283/09)

The Minister of Education: The Education and Library Boards’ Curriculum Advisory and Support Service (CASS) are responsible for the continuing professional development of teachers, taking account of needs identified by school principals.

Support for Irish-medium primary schools and units is provided through the inter-board Irish-medium CASS service, managed on behalf of the five boards by the Belfast Education and Library Board. However, there is currently no specific CASS provision for Irish at English-medium schools.

Tri Chlár na dTeangacha Bunscoile áfach, biónn teagascóirí Spáinnise agus Gaeilge ag obair taobh le múinteoirí i seomraí ranga. Mar chuid den Chlár, soláthraithear oiliúint agus tacaíocht do mhúinteoirí ó bhunscoileanna ranpháirteacha, scoileanna a chuireann an Ghaeilge ar fáil san áireamh.

My primary-languages programme does however place Spanish and Irish tutors alongside teachers in classrooms. As part of the programme, training and support is provided for teachers from participating primary schools, including schools delivering Irish.

Youth Work

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education how much financial support is provided by the Belfast Education and Library Board for youth work and how many (i) youth clubs; (ii) youth workers; (iii) detached youth workers; and (iv) young people are in the Belfast Education and Library Board. (AQW 6312/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní choimhnionn mo Roinn an t-eolas seo, maidir leis na ceisteanna seo a leanas, agus bheadh costas diréireach i gceist leis an eolas seo a bhailiú faoi láthair.

(iii) The number of mobile classrooms being used that are older than their anticipated lifespan

School Transport Assistance

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to outline her plans for the review of school transport assistance for (i) nursery (ii) primary and (iii) post-primary schools. (AQW 6329/09)

The Minister of Education: Mar a dúirt mé cheana féin sa fhreagra a tugadh do AQW 4309/09 a foilsiodh sa Tuairisc Oifigiúil ar 6 Feabhra 2009, tá sé beartaithe agam tuilleadh oibre maidir leis an athbhreithniú ar an bheartas iompair scoile a chur síar le haidhrí is díorbadhachtaí ar an bheartas iompair scoile a chur síar le haidhrí ar thabhairt do shochtanna san am atá romhainn ar sholáthar oideachais iarbhunscoile agus pleanáil bunaithe sa cheantar.
As I previously advised in my answer to AQW 4309/09 published in the Official Report on 6 February 2009, I have decided to postpone any further work on the review of school transport policy to take account of future arrangements for post-primary education provision and area based planning.

When the review recommences it will cover all aspects of the current arrangements, including the definition of “suitable school”, statutory walking distance, rurality etc.

School Transport Assistance

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail what assistance is available to low-income families who have children attending schools below the distance for school transport assistance. (AQW 6330/09)

The Minister of Education: Faoi láthair, ní dhéantar tástáil ar chuidiú iompair idir baile is scoile ó thaobh acmhainne de agus nil aon bhaint ioncaim leis a chur isteach.

Assistance for home to school transport is not currently means tested or income related. Assistance is based solely on the statutory walking distance to a pupil’s nearest “suitable school” and there are no specific arrangements for assistance to low income families.

As previously advised a review, covering all aspects of the current home to school transport arrangements, including the present eligibility criteria, will be undertaken, to take account of future arrangements for post-primary education provision and area based planning.

Primary Schools

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail how she intends to ensure that primary schools with fewer than 100 pupils and secondary schools with fewer than 500 pupils are not systematically closed. (AQW 6331/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá liosta de shé chritéar agus táscairí gaolmhara sa bheartas um s coileanna Inmharthana, a foilsíodh i mí e anáir, is féidir a úsáid nuair atá inmharthanacht oideachasúil na scoile á measúnú.

The policy on Sustainable Schools published in January lists a set of six criteria and associated indicators for use in assessing a school’s educational viability. These are:
- Quality Educational Experience
- Stable Enrolment Trends
- Sound Financial Position
- Strong Leadership and Management
- Accessibility
- Strong Links with the Community.

Stable Enrolment Trends criterion which sets out minimum enrolment thresholds as follows:-

<thead>
<tr>
<th>School Type</th>
<th>Enrolment</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Rural Primary</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urban Primary</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Post-primary</td>
<td>500*</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6th Form</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* excluding 6th form provision

Pupil numbers are clearly an important factor in assessing future viability but schools will not be closed simply because they fall below these thresholds. They will be reviewed against all six criteria with each case being considered on its individual circumstances. The overriding consideration will be the quality of education that a school provides for the children.
Teacher Pensions

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail what plans she has to ensure teachers who have to retire prematurely through inefficiency or poor health receive their pensions.

(AQW 6332/09)

The Minister of Education: Is féidir múinteoirí dul ar scoir anabaí ar fhoras iomarcaíochta nó ar mhaithe le feidhmiú éifeachtach an fhostóra.

Teachers may be retired prematurely on the grounds of redundancy or in the interests of the efficient discharge of the employers’ function. My Department is currently consulting on draft regulations which would have the effect of making teachers’ employers liable for the cost of premature retirement compensation, including the additional cost arising from the immediate payment of unreduced pension benefits. The draft regulations also provide employers with discretion to make an enhanced severance payment as an alternative to granting premature retirement compensation.

No changes are planned in respect of the ill-health benefits payable under the Teachers’ Pension Scheme. The Scheme provides for pension to be paid to teachers who have to retire before normal pension age due to illness or injury and who have provided medical evidence that their illness permanently prevents them from teaching.

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education (i) to outline the process by which her Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits her Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail her Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 6351/09)

The Minister of Education: Iniúchtar cuntais na Roinne de réir an Government Resources and Accounts Act (NI) 2001.

1. The Department’s accounts are audited in accordance with the Government Resources and Accounts Act (NI) 2001.
2. The Department’s accounts are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG) of the Audit Office (NIAO).
3. The Department’s final audited accounts in each of the last three years were laid in the Assembly and copies are available in the Assembly Library or on the Department of Education website (refer to the attached link for the Departmental accounts for the last three years - http://www.deni.gov.uk/index/85-about-the-dept/24-about_the_department-resource_accountsPg/24-about_the_department-resource_accounts-annual_accountsPg.htm).

School Boards of Governors

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail the duties as set out in legislation, of a Board of Governors of a school.

(AQW 6353/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an iliomad dualgas reachtúil ag Boird Gobhanóíri, agus tá na dualgais seo leagtha síos i reachtaíocht phríomhúil fhairsing agus i bhfóreachtaíocht fhadréimseach.

Boards of Governors have very many statutory duties which are set down in a wide range of primary and subordinate legislation.

The main statutory duties of a school Board of Governors are:

- to prepare and from time to time revise a school development plan in accordance with regulated requirements and taking account of the findings of any school inspection report;
- to determine, and keep under review, its policy in relation to the curriculum for the school and to make, and keep up to date, a written statement of that policy;
- to facilitate the implementation of the revised curriculum;
- to ensure proper provision for pupils with special educational needs;
- to manage the school’s finances in accordance with a financial memorandum;
• to determine the school’s staff complement, to select & appoint staff and to manage employment issues including staff conduct, discipline and grievance procedures;
• to set performance objectives for the principal within the Performance Review and Staff Development Scheme;
• to safeguard and promote the welfare and protection of pupils;
• to set general principles on good behaviour and pupil conduct and participate in pupil disciplinary procedures;
• to provide information for parents about the school and the performance of their children;
• to agree and apply criteria for pupil admissions; and
• to oversee the use and maintenance of the school premises;

The Board of Governors is responsible for the management of the school for which it is appointed. It must exercise its responsibilities in accordance with a scheme of management for the school and such other schemes as are approved by my Department.

Cultural Rights of Children

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education who is responsible for ensuring that the cultural rights of children are implemented in each school. (AQW 6354/09)

The Minister of Education: The United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) is an international human rights treaty that recognises and protects the human rights of children. The convention requires all state parties to report to the UN Committee their progress against the convention. Articles 29 of the Convention deals with “cultural identity”. Education legislation and my Department’s education policies and strategies are designed to take account of the aims of education as enshrined in Article 29 of the convention.

It is the duty of a Board of Governors to facilitate the implementation of the statutory revised curriculum. The revised curriculum which I am currently introducing provides opportunities for pupils to explore issues relating to rights and responsibilities. Pupils will look at ways of promoting inclusion, diversity, respect for others and reconciliation. It is the duty of Boards of Governors of a school to determine and keep under review the school’s policy in relation to the curriculum, including its range and balance.

Agus iad ag socrú a mbéartas féin, ba chóir do scoileanna aird a thabhairt ar chearta daonna agus ar reachtaíochtaí comhionannais. Is féidir le Boird Ghobharnóirí comhairle a tháil ón Roín, ó na boird oideachais agus leabharlainne agus ón Choimisiún um Chearta Daonna faoi tóinchar a bhíonn ag cearta daonna agus ar reachtaíochtaí comhionainnis ar scoileanna.

Schools, when determining their own policies should have regard to human rights and equality legislation. Boards of Governors can obtain advice from the Department, the Education and Library Boards and the Human Rights Commission as to how human rights and equality legislation impacts on schools.

Cultural Rights of Children

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education what is the role of the Board of Governors in a school in ensuring that the cultural rights of that school’s children are implemented. (AQW 6355/09)

Closure of Donaghadee High School

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education how many teachers employed at Donaghadee High School have attained other teaching posts after the closure of the school this summer. (AQW 6366/09)

The Minister of Education: Go dtí seo, tá post eile múinteoireachta faighte ag beirt mhúinteoirí ó Donaghadee High School.

To date two teachers from Donaghadee High School have secured alternative teaching posts.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) is currently seeking to secure alternative employment for teachers in Donaghadee High School and have provided the teachers with a list of alternative posts to which they may wish to consider transferring. The SEELB will continue with these efforts up to the date of the school closure.

Capital Investments

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education what capital investments are proposed for (i) Devenish College, Enniskillen; (ii) Portora Royal School, Enniskillen; (iii) Collegiate Grammar School, Enniskillen; (iv) Lisnaskea High School, Lisnaskea; and to clarify when these investments will be implemented. (AQW 6374/09)

The Minister of Education: Fógraíodh íocaíocht maidir le hathsholáthar ar d'Evinish College roimhe seo. Faoi láthair, níl móroibreacha nó tionscadail faoitheach ar bith ann a bhaineann leis na scoileanna eile thuasluaite.

A payout for the replacement of Devenish College was announced previously. There are currently no approved major works/projects for the other schools identified. The Western Education and Library Board and the Department are currently working with the post-primary schools towards reaching a consensus on how best to meet the future needs of the pupils in the area. Discussions are aimed at reaching an agreed way forward which would support future investment decisions.

Creative Youth Partnerships

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education what support her Department has given to Creative Youth Partnerships and what support she plans to make in the 2009/2010 financial year. (AQW 6394/09)

The Minister of Education: Cuirim tábhaich mór ar chumas na ndaoine óga a fhorbairt ó thaobh cruthaíochta agus nuálraíochta de, ag tabhairt cuidiú dóibh bheith muinneach agus fiontraíoch san am atá le teacht.

I place great importance on developing young people’s capacity for creativity and innovation, helping them to develop as confident individuals and entrepreneurs of the future.

Creative Youth Partnerships has been operating as a pilot since 2004/05 and since that date my Department has contributed £450k to the Programme.

At my Department’s request, Creative Youth Partnerships has recently produced proposals for a mainstreaming strategy for the years beyond 2008/09, and these proposals have now been considered.

Looking ahead, a key challenge for my Department is to ensure that creativity and innovation is mainstreamed as a natural part of the planning and delivery of the revised curriculum. In that context I am making available £50k to support the Programme in the 2009/10 financial year.
Ballywalter Primary School

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education when the newbuild for Ballywalter Primary School will start, following the economic approval. (AQW 6399/09)

The Minister of Education: Nil amscála i gceist don chéad babhta eile de leithdháileadh caipitil mar sin ní feidir a rá faoi láthair cén uair a thosóidh obair ar scoil athsholáthair do Ballywalter Primary School.

There is currently no timeframe for the next capital allocations and it is, therefore, not possible to advise at this stage when work on a replacement school for Ballywalter Primary School would commence.

D’aithin Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Deiscirt scéim caipitil ionchasach do Londonderry Primary School.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) has identified a potential capital scheme for Londonderry Primary School. The Department has requested further information from the SEELB in regard to the proposed scheme and primary-school provision in the wider Newtownards area. An economic appraisal has not been received by the Department.

Faoi láthair, is ábhair breithnithe idir Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt agus an Roinn Oideachais iad na roghanna sa Bhreithmheas Eacnamaíochta um scéim caipitil mhóroibreacha do Killinchy Primary School.

The options in the Economic Appraisal for a major works capital scheme for Killinchy Primary School are currently the subject of consideration between the South Eastern Education and Library Board and the Department.

Londonderry Primary School

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to provide details of the newbuild for Londonderry Primary School in the Glen Estate, Newtownards, and to confirm if the business plan has been completed. (AQW 6400/09)

(AQW 6431/09)

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6107/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): When distributing reports and consultation documents, my officials comply with the requirements of the NICS-wide “Guidance on Distribution of Departmental Publications and Consultation Documents”. This document prescribes who should receive various categories of publications, as well as the format and the number of copies to be issued.

Accordingly, MLAs are normally alerted to DEL publications by means of the ‘papers presented’ list at the Assembly. Where appropriate, for example in relation to consultation documents, MLAs also receive a letter informing them where they might access an electronic version of the document and giving them the opportunity to request a hard copy if desired. With regard to the Employment and Learning Committee, my officials send almost all papers by e-mail.

Such an approach is consistent with my Department’s Green Policy, which states that “Where possible, the use of hard copies for external contacts and customers should be avoided if forms and/or publications can be distributed by e-mail or CD-ROM, or downloaded via the corporate website”.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what are the (i) projects; and (ii) amounts of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6164/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department for Employment and Learning has one capital project under construction in the North Down constituency. The project, in the further education sector, is to provide a Centre for Performing Arts, Technology and Innovation, and to carry out refurbishment at the Bangor campus of the South Eastern Regional College. The project, with a capital value of £13.4m, is planned to be delivered over three years. Project costs in 2009/10 are expected to amount to £2.1m, with a further £8.2m spend estimated for 2010/11.

First Year Students

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many first year students (i) drop out; (ii) switch courses; and (iii) drop out and are in receipt of (a) loans; (b) grants; or (c) bursaries; (AQW 6175/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning:

(i) Of those full-time undergraduate entrants to NI Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) in 2005/06, 1,175 were no longer in Higher Education (HE) in 2006/07. Some of these entrants may return to HE at a later stage, however, the Department does not hold this information.

Source: Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA)

Notes:
1. Figure has been rounded to the nearest 5.
2. The latest data on those no longer in HE are for those entering in 2005/06 and are available only for full-time undergraduate entrants.

(ii) The Department does not hold information relating to students that switch courses.

(iii) Of those full-time undergraduate NI domiciled and eligible EU approved applicants (supported by NI) for student support in 2007/08, 920 withdrew from Higher Education and were in receipt of statutory support in the form of loans, grants, or bursaries.

Source: Student Loans Company (SLC)

Notes:
1. Latest available data are for 2007/08 academic year.
2. The data which SLC provide to my Department relates to applications made by students supported by Northern Ireland as opposed to those at the institutional level reported by HESA in part i) above. On that basis and given the different academic years reported, the SLC data and the HESA data cannot be compared.

3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 10.

4. Providing a breakdown by loans, grants or bursaries separately is very complex and could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

5. Eligible EU approved applicants are only eligible to apply for tuition fee loans.

First Year Students

Mss S Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many first year students drop out and do not return to higher education.

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Of the 9,990 full-time undergraduate entrants to NI Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) in 2005/06, 1,175 were no longer in Higher Education in the following year. It is not possible to determine from the datasets held by the Department whether these students do or not return in later years.

Source: 2006/07 Performance Indicators, Higher Education Statistics Agency

Notes:
1. Figures have been rounded to the nearest 5
2. The latest available data on students no longer in HE are for those entering Higher Education in 2005/06 and this is only captured for full-time entrants.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) for an update on the review of the Construction Industry Training Board and (ii) to indicate when the final report will be published. (AQW 6204/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Deloitte Consultants have been appointed to conduct this review which is now well underway. The final report is expected to be received by the Department by 30 June 2009.

Capital Infrastructure Projects

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning in relation to capital infrastructure projects in the East Londonderry constituency, (i) to list all these projects; and (ii) to breakdown the aggregated value of each project that is (a) under construction; (b) in the procurement process; or (c) to be advertised, in financial year 2009/2010. (AQW 6211/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Funding of £1.3 million has been allocated to the Department for Employment and Learning under the Critical Sector Initiatives Budget. This money will be used to support investment in the capacity of the Northern Ireland Further Education Sector to deliver high quality training in areas of significant importance to the local economy. While final allocations have yet to be made, it is possible, but not certain, that some of the funding could be available within the East Londonderry constituency.

(i) The following projects will be carried out by the University of Ulster at its Coleraine campus:

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

People Registered as Unemployed

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many people are registered as unemployed in (i) Ballymoney District Council; (ii) Ballymena District Council; and (iii) Moyle District Council, currently and for the same period in 2008. (AQW 4874/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs A Foster): At January 2009, Ballymoney District Council Area (DCA) had 700 claimant count unemployed persons (558 males and 142 females), which corresponded to 3.8% of persons of working age. One year previously (January 2008), the count was 371 claimants (283 males and 88 females) which corresponded to 2.0% of persons of working age.

Ballymena DCA had 1,092 claimant count unemployed persons (847 males and 245 females), which corresponded to 2.9% of persons of working age. One year previously (January 2008), the count was 607 claimants (442 males and 165 females) which corresponded to 1.6% of persons of working age.

Moyle DCA had 507 claimant count unemployed persons (399 males and 108 females), which corresponded to 5.0% of persons of working age. One year previously (January 2008), the count was 300 claimants (227 males and 73 females) which corresponded to 3.0% of persons of working age.

Tourism

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions she has had with her counterparts in Scotland to improve tourism, with particular reference to sea links to Larne. (AQW 4917/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I have had no discussion with my Scottish counterparts in relation to sea links to Larne but I am well aware that these links are of significant tourism value to Northern Ireland, particularly in realising the full potential of our Causeway Coast and Glens signature project.

Tourism Ireland promotes Northern Ireland extensively across Scotland as part of its global destination marketing campaign and also through specific, additional marketing campaigns which it undertakes for Northern Ireland throughout Great Britain. This activity highlights specific, compelling reasons to visit Northern Ireland, demonstrates ease of access by sea and air and showcases the good value fares and compelling offers provided by local industry partners.
Tourism Ireland continues to work closely with air and sea carriers who serve Northern Ireland, helping to stimulate demand in key source markets overseas. Tourism Ireland works with sea carriers such as P&O Lines and Stena Line to promote ferry routes from Troon and Cairnryan to Larne and from Stranraer to Belfast. Tourism Ireland also works with airlines such as Ryanair to promote flights from Glasgow to Belfast and City of Derry Airport.

All this activity will continue throughout 2009, in conjunction with industry partners and with air and sea carriers.

Chicken Waste Plant at Glenavy

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the (i) planning application for a chicken waste plant at Glenavy; and (ii) request by Rose Energy for public money for its proposals. (AQW 6159/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In response to part (i) this is a planning matter and does not come under my remit. In response to part (ii) above, the company originally applied to the DETI administered Environment and Renewable Energy Fund for funding of £16million. This application was not approved, however, and the consortium subsequently approached Invest NI for support.

Without prejudice to the planning process, Invest NI is currently involved in negotiations with Rose Energy regarding the case for assistance towards project costs. The case will be subject to Invest NI’s normal appraisal and approval procedures.

Unemployed 17-19 Year Olds

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide figures for the number of unemployed people who are aged 17-19 years old, broken down by gender. (AQW 6160/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: At February 2009 there were 4,600 claimant count unemployed persons aged 17-19 years old in Northern Ireland (3,210 males and 1,390 females). This represents 10.5% of total claimants in Northern Ireland (9.2% of male claimants and 15.7% of female claimants).

For information, the Northern Ireland claimant count at February 2009 was 43,627 (34,796 males and 8,831 females). This figure is not adjusted for seasonality.

Invest NI

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the representation; and (ii) how many members of the top management tiers of Invest NI are from the North West. (AQW 6170/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: No Invest NI staff at senior management level (Director and above) are based in the North-West Regional Office. No members of the senior management team currently reside in the North-West, although two are natives of the area.

HR Connect

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many queries has HR Connect received since its introduction; and if the reference number allocated to each person reflects this. (AQW 6202/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: 1) This information is not fully available broken down by department. Specifically, departmental statistics are not available for telephone calls received by HR Connect. However, HR Connect has provided the following:

Number of e-mails received since December 2007 from a DETI e-mail account*: = 2,354

* Includes HSENI staff.

WA 255
2) The unique reference number is automatically generated by the HR Connect system, and is not related to the number of queries received by HRConnect. If HR Connect deals with a query as a ‘Service Request’, then a Service Request number is allocated sequentially, but not by department. Not all e-mails or phone calls result in a Service Request.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the (i) projects; and (ii) amount of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6267/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: DETI has three capital investment projects planned specifically for the North Down constituency in this period.

The Northern Ireland Tourist Board is investing £0.4million in projects at the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum, North Down Museum and Bangor Abbey during 2010-11.

There are also Telecoms infrastructure projects planned on a Northern Ireland wide basis totalling £6.5million in 2009-10 and £6.4million in 2010-11, which could potentially include the North Down constituency.

TradeLinks Programme

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on approval of funding for the TradeLinks programme. (AQW 6274/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: An application seeking INTERREG IVA funding for the Tradelinks II Programme has been submitted to the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB).

The detail of the application is currently under consideration by SEUPB as the overall Managing Authority of the Programme, DETI as the Northern Ireland Accountable Department, and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Employment (DETE) as the Republic of Ireland Accountable Department.

Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to confirm that the Project Kelvin ‘Telehouse’, to be sited in Londonderry/Derry, will be the primary connectivity point for the trans-Atlantic cable, and not Coleraine. (AQW 6383/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Hibernia Atlantic has indicated its intention to submit a formal request, jointly to DETI and The Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources (DCENR) in the Republic of Ireland, seeking a variation to the Project Kelvin contract awarded by the two Departments to facilitate a relocation of the Telehouse from Coleraine to Londonderry City, with a cable landing station in Coleraine. Both Departments have indicated their approval in principle to accede to this request, subject to the technical re-design being compliant with the original Invitation to Tender (ITT). The Company is now revising their technical design to give effect to this change. This re-design is likely to take several weeks and it would not be appropriate for my Department, or DCENR, to become involved in this re-design process or to comment at this stage.

Once complete, Hibernia Atlantic will submit their revised proposal to the two Departments. This will be considered by the joint DETI/DCENR Kelvin Project Board. The Departments will seek independent technical advice on the re-design proposal to ensure the re-design complies with the specifications of the original ITT. In due course the Project Board will make a recommendation through the respective Departments to me and the Minister for Communications, Energy and Natural Resources in the Republic of Ireland.

Invest NI

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance has been provided by Invest NI to Visteon’s manufacturing plant in Belfast, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6473/09)
The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI maintains regular contact with Visteon, the most recent meetings having taken place on 23 February 2009 and 19 March 2009. The possibility of offering support for Research and Development, marketing and training assistance has been explored recently. Invest NI remains in contact with Visteon management both locally and nationally.

In the last three years no projects seeking financial assistance have been presented to Invest NI by Visteon UK Ltd’s Belfast operation and consequently no financial assistance has been provided in the same period.

Visteon Plant in Belfast

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what action her Department is taking to sustain manufacturing jobs at Visteon’s plant in Belfast. (AQW 6498/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI maintains regular contact with Visteon having met with Visteon UK’s Managing Director Steve Gawne in London in February 2009 and more recently the local management team on the 19 March 2009 to discuss the current market issues.

As a result they are currently exploring opportunities for Research & Development, Marketing and Training assistance with the local Visteon management team.

Visteon Plant in Belfast

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what communication she has had with the management of (i) Visteon; and (ii) Ford about the future of Visteon’s manufacturing plant in Belfast. (AQW 6499/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I have not directly met with the management team of Visteon. However, officials from Invest NI met with Visteon UK on 23 February 2009 in London and with the local management team on 19 March 2009. These negotiations are focused on the future of Visteon’s operations in Belfast.

All communication is through Visteon UK as it is the Parent company and has assumed all assets and liabilities of the Belfast facility. Ford are the company’s sole customer and, as such, no direct contact has been made with them.

The Minister of the Environment: Expenditure incurred by district councils on capital investment associated with the refurbishment, modernisation or improvement of existing sports and leisure facilities, in each of the last five years, is detailed in the table below.

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment how many employees have disabilities in each of the local councils and what percentage of the total workforce it reflects.

The Minister of the Environment: The Department does not hold the requested information. The Department will request the information from the 26 local councils and will provide the member with a written response that will be placed in the Assembly Library.

Council Employees with Disabilities

Ms Ni Chuilín asked the Minister of the Environment how many representations each Environment Minister has made to Planning Service, since 1998.

The Minister of the Environment: Details of the number of representations each Environment Minister has made to the Planning Service since 1998 are shown in the table below. This information has been derived largely from the Planning Service’s electronic database. The information has not been validated against paper records as this would entail a manual exercise which could not be completed within the time available and could only be undertaken at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Staff Commission

Mr Ross asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the future of the Local Government Staff Commission. (AQW 6234/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My predecessor, Minister Foster, in her statement to the Assembly on 31 March 2008, stated that the Executive will review the functions that are to be delivered by local government 12 months after the new councils become operational and periodically thereafter.

I would envisage that the future of the Staff Commission will be considered as part of the first review in 2012.

Vehicle Tax Bands

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5287/09, to detail the (i) makes; (ii) models; and (iii) age of the vehicles, owned by his Department for tax bands E and F. (AQW 6238/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The make, model and age of each of the vehicles referred to in AQW 5287/09 as falling within tax bands E and F are listed in the table below.

IPPC Licence

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment if there are proposals to reduce the requirement criteria in applying for an IPPC licence in the poultry and pig agricultural sector, and if so, what are these proposals.

(AQW 6273/09)

The Minister of the Environment: There are currently no proposals to revise the application requirements for IPPC farms as these are largely dictated by legislation. The Northern Ireland Environment Agency will not support any proposals which impose additional costs on the industry unless it can be clearly shown the benefit for outweigh the costs.

MOT Tests

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the evidence for requiring an MOT test every year; and not less frequently as happens in other EU states.

(AQW 6285/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The MOT scheme is primarily a Road Safety measure designed to ensure that all cars more than 4 years old are examined at least once a year at an authorised MOT test station ensuring that they comply with certain requirements of the law and are properly maintained.

Evidence from international studies suggest that 4% to 5% of road traffic collisions are directly attributable to vehicle defects and in 10% to 13% of collisions defects are a contributory factor.

Directive 96/96/EC specifies requirements for roadworthiness testing of motor vehicles including frequency of testing for passenger vehicles known locally as MOT. The minimum pattern requires a first test after 4 years and subsequent tests every 2 years, this is known as 4.2.2. Member States have freedom to test vehicles more frequently if they wish and as a result not all Member States test at the same frequency. NI tests are at 4 years and annually thereafter (4.1.1). At least 5 member states begin testing at 3 years or earlier and then annually (3.1.1). A further 4 states have a pattern of (3.2.1).

Evidence in a report published in 2008 by Department for Transport suggest that member states with a more frequent vehicle testing regime have lower rates of road deaths.
Independent Working Group on PPS21

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment how the Independent Working Group on PPS21 will engage with the wider rural community, both in developing its report and in consulting on its final recommendations, including those (i) with a disability; (ii) lone parents; (iii) migrant workers; (iv) older people; (v) carers; and (vi) younger people.

The Minister of the Environment: The Independent Working Group’s methods of working, who it will meet and all other aspects of its work are matters for the Chair to decide in discussion with the members. This independent group was given clear terms of reference, agreed by the Executive and I cannot be involved in its day to day running.

General Licensed Species List

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration has been given to introducing the Ruddy Duck on the general licensed species list, similar to the rest of the UK.

The Minister of the Environment: The conservation threat posed by this species is acknowledged and a number of actions are being taken to reduce their numbers. For example, Northern Ireland is part of a UK wide eradication programme, funded by the EU LIFE-Nature Programme.

The numbers in Northern Ireland are small so there are no immediate plans to allow the taking and killing of Ruddy Duck under cover of a general licence in Northern Ireland, as in Great Britain. However, it is planned to add it to Schedule 2 of the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985, allowing it to be treated as a quarry species during the shooting season.

Allotments

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of the Environment how much land is set aside for allotments across all Council areas; and what plans there are to extend the area for allotments.

The Minister of the Environment: This information is available in the Assembly Library having been provided in response to AQW/575/09 and AQW/1449/09.

Any plans that councils have to extend the area for allotments are not a matter for my Department. Questions relating to this should be directed to each individual council.

Climate Change

Mr P Maskey asked the Minister of the Environment if any of his climate change policy officials have indicated that they agree with his views on climate change.

The Minister of the Environment: As outlined in the Northern Ireland Civil Service code of ethics my officials must provide objective and impartial advice. I am satisfied that that is what they do.

Reducing Northern Ireland’s carbon footprint is the collective responsibility of all Ministers in the Northern Ireland Executive. As Minister of the Environment I continue to meet my statutory obligations in terms of climate change policy. In recent weeks I sought and achieved Executive Committee agreement that a new carbon trading scheme, the Carbon Reduction Commitment, will apply in Northern Ireland through UK regulation. The enabling powers for this are provided for in the UK Climate Change Act 2008.

I believe my views have opened up the debate and raised public awareness on climate change. I have brought to public attention the cost and social implications that result directly from efforts to reduce Northern Ireland’s carbon footprint. These include higher energy costs and higher levels of fuel poverty.
Conflict of Interest

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has taken legal advice in relation to a Ministerial conflict of interest with his role as a Belfast councillor, since he took up office.

(AQO 2372/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has taken no legal advice in relation to this issue since my appointment as Minister.

Climate Change

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of how his views on climate change impact on his Department’s commitments to reducing Northern Ireland’s carbon footprint.

(AQO 2374/09)

The Minister of the Environment: As outlined in the Northern Ireland Civil Service code of ethics my officials must provide objective and impartial advice. I am satisfied that that is what they do.

Reducing Northern Ireland’s carbon footprint is the collective responsibility of all Ministers in the Northern Ireland Executive. Planning System

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the risks associated with delivering a reformed planning system following transfer of powers to local government by May 2011.

(AQO 2375/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Members will be aware that I hope to publish a consultation paper outlining wide-ranging proposals for reform of the planning system, including the changes necessary to transfer the majority of planning functions to the new local councils. Many of the proposed changes will require legislative change and our PSA commitment is to bring forward the relevant legislation by March 2011.

The major risk facing the reform programme at present is the extremely tight legislative timetable. I had hoped that the consultation paper would have been issued before now. However, the paper has not yet been included on Executive agenda, primarily because I have been unable to secure the deputy First Minister’s agreement that he is content with the consultation paper. He has recently raised a number of issues, which we are currently trying to address. Such delays are having a significant knock-on effect on the overall programme and therefore our ability to meet the commitment to bring forward the legislation for a reformed planning system by 2011.

Climate Change

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of the Environment how many local environmental NGOs have shown their support for his views on climate change.

(AQO 2376/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Local environmental NGOs and I agree on a number of issues relating to climate change. We accept climate change is happening. However, we would disagree on the causes. We also have common ground on the need to adapt to climate change impacts regardless of what has caused them. In terms of adaptation measures, in November 2008 the Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development and I published Northern Ireland Flood Maps. These maps will assist in sustainable planning policy and development. I am sure environmental NGOs support this practical approach of adapting to climate change.
Carbon Footprint

Mr Brolly asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his carbon footprint, in the same way as he did for some members of the Environment Committee. (AQO 2377/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I assume the member is referring to my attendance at the Environment Committee on 26 February. As I explained at the time and it is recorded in Hansard, I have not studied my carbon footprint because I am not exercised about it. I was simply giving the information to members who seem to be deeply exercised by the matter.

Local Government

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the formation of local government transition committees, being created to facilitate the merging of the proposed new council formats. (AQO 2378/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I am pleased to report that the eleven Transition Committees have now been established. The Transition Committees comprise elected members from the constituent councils which will form the new authorities. Their primary role is to take the key decisions necessary to ensure that there are eleven effective councils in place in May 2011.

It is my intention to underpin the Transition Committees in legislation. Provisions are being included in the Local Government (Contracts) Bill which is to come before this House in June of this year.

Each of the Transition Committees supported by a Transition Management Team comprising senior officers from the amalgamating Councils and the transferor public bodies.

Local Government Boundaries Commissioner: Revised Recommendations Report

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the recommendations made in the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner’s Revised Recommendations report. (AQO 2379/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The Local Government Boundaries Commissioner has been tasked with providing recommendations for the boundaries and names of the eleven new districts, and the number, boundaries and names of the wards that make them up.

When the Commissioner published his Provisional Recommendations in September 2008, he asked for written representations to be submitted by 12 November. Public hearings, conducted by Assistant Commissioners, were arranged for each of the 11 proposed local government districts in the period from 20 to 28 November, providing an opportunity for oral representations.

The Commissioner’s Revised Recommendations take into consideration the written and oral representations submitted in response to the Provisional Recommendations. If individuals, communities or their representatives wish to comment on the Revised Recommendations in relation to local identities or any other matter, they have an opportunity to make representations to the Commissioner in writing by 9 April 2009.

The Commissioner is independent of central government. It is not for me, or my Department, to make any assessment of the Revised Recommendations, or any aspect of those recommendations. I will read his final report with great interest but it would be inappropriate for me to comment at this stage.

Local Government Boundaries Commissioner: Revised Recommendations Report

Mr Savage asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the consideration given to the identities of local communities in the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner’s Revised Recommendations report. (AQO 2380/09)

East Antrim MP: Correspondence

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail on how many occasions his Department and agencies have received correspondence from the Member of Parliament for East Antrim, since 9 June 2008. (AQO 2381/09)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department and agencies have received correspondence from me as the Member of Parliament for East Antrim on 446 occasions since 9 June 2008.

I have also made 135 representations to Planning Service in the form of meetings, telephone calls and written correspondence since that time.

ROI Counterpart: Meetings

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on any meetings he has had with his counterpart in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 2382/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I met John Gormley last Friday at the North South Ministerial Council environment meeting which took place in Farmleigh, in Dublin when we discussed the areas of co-operation mandated by the NSMC.

Badger Baiting

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what action he is taking to tackle badger baiting. (AQO 2383/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Badgers already receive full protection under the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985. The Order also makes it an offence to damage or disturb their sett or to disturb the badger if it is in the sett.

In addition, I have secured the approval from the Secretary of State to take forward the introduction of custodial sentences for severe cases of wildlife crime which could include badger baiting. This is part of the review of the Wildlife Order, which is intended to ensure that effective enforcement measures are in place to provide adequate protection for our wildlife. I will bring these measures to the Assembly later in the year with the objective of having the legislation in place for mid 2010.

Responsibility for investigating and enforcing any alleged wildlife crime incident under the Wildlife Order falls to the PSNI. NIEA does not have an active role in this issue, but will provide expertise and assistance to the PSNI in such instances and works closely with their Wildlife Liaison Officer.

Local Government

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the legislative processes and timeframes which will enable local government co-option and severance arrangements. (AQO 2384/09)
The Minister of the Environment: The provision to enable the Department to make a severance scheme for district councillors will be included in a forthcoming Local Government Bill which I plan to introduce to the Assembly in June 2009.

A separate consultation on the proposed severance scheme will start in April. One of the areas on which I will be seeking views is when such a scheme should be made available. The responses to this question will inform when the regulations setting out the detail of the scheme will be made. The responses will also inform my future discussions with the Secretary of State about the legislation governing co-option.

As matters relating to elections (which would include co-options to fill casual vacancies) are excepted matters under the Northern Ireland Act 1998, they fall outside the competence of the Assembly.

Road Safety Council: Funding

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the consultant’s reports used to justify the withdrawal of funding from the Road Safety Council. (AQO 2385/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Three successive reports by independent consultants, over the last eleven years, have indicated that the Road Safety Council is no longer fit for purpose in its present form, hence my decision to channel funding away from central administration and into the front line road safety activities of local committees.

The British Institute of Traffic Education Research (BITER) review of 1997 contained 31 recommendations and concluded that, while many local committees performed a valuable and cost effective function in relation to highlighting specific local road safety problems (mainly related to engineering) and raising awareness on both general and specific road safety issues through media publicity and local initiatives, much of the work of the Road Safety Council did not have an apparent cost effective road safety benefit. The report also recognised the value of some of the activities of the Council and its committees. However, it did not consider that their activities as a whole significantly enhanced the work of the Road Safety Education Branch and the Roads Service. It also stated that the Council’s activities in 1996/97 were unlikely to represent value for money in light of the £154k grant to the Council.

The 2002 BITER report stated that partial implementation of the recommendations contained in the 1997 report had taken place. A few committees had demonstrated initiative and independence in establishing and supporting diverse road safety initiatives. However, certain committees had set themselves against any change, no matter how useful this might have been. The report stated that it was doubtful whether funding should be given to a committee some of whose activities appeared to be subversive and at odds with the policies of the DOE.

A further 20 recommendations were presented in 2002 and BITER concluded that, while a number of activities of the RSC and the local committees sought to enhance the road safety priorities of the DOE, funds spent on events such as the annual congress did not represent good value for money. The report also found that there was great variation between the committees. Some were proactive, had obtained sponsorship from a variety of sources and held meetings that were well attended; other committees were poorly attended, relied solely on grant money and appeared to achieve relatively little. BITER recommended that underperforming committees should have their funding withdrawn. It also stated that better communication channels were required between the RSC and the local committees (and the committees themselves) and that financial controls on the RSC and the committees must be tightened up.

The current review by PA Consulting Group is the most comprehensive and highly critical evaluation of the Council to date and the 37 key findings in the report cover a number of deficiencies ranging from a lack of strategic direction, leadership and control, through the absence of targeted local activities, to the inability of the Council to bring added value to the delivery of the Road Safety Strategy 2002-12.

It detailed the disproportionate central overhead cost, which did not represent reasonable value for money and reported that activities undertaken by the committees are neither evidence-based nor exhibit best practice; more specifically they did not target causation factors of collisions in local communities and there was little evidence of sharing of good practice in delivery of activities across committees. It also reported that the Council and the committees have failed to address key recommendations identified in the previous reviews.
Savings in Rates

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what are the savings in rates for (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic ratepayers as a result of the 2009/10 rate freeze, broken down by each local government district. (AQW 5423/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr N Dodds): I announced on 15 December 2008 that regional non-domestic rates would be frozen in cash terms at current levels for 2009/2010 instead of increasing by an inflationary factor of 2.7% as originally intended. This produces a savings for non-domestic ratepayers of around £7.8 million. A detailed breakdown by local government area is provided in Table 1.

Regional domestic rates have been frozen for a three year period from 2008/09 to 2010/11 and it is more difficult to quantify the full extent of the saving to domestic ratepayers in 2009/10. However, on the assumption that the domestic rates might have been increased by the same inflationary figure of 2.7%, the savings to domestic ratepayers would be £7.4m. A detailed breakdown by local government area is provided in Table 2.

Regional Rate

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to report on the expected yield from the regional rate in (i) 2008/09; (ii) 2009/10; and (iii) 2010/11, and to set out the assumptions behind these figures. (AQW 5537/09)
The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The expected yield from the regional rate is forecast to be £533m in 2008/09, and £543m in 2009/10. A figure has not yet been finalised for the year 2010/2011.

Lone Pensioner Allowance Scheme

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for the latest figures for the number of individuals taking up lone pensioners allowance in (i) the Ards Borough Council area and (ii) the Strangford constituency, and the total value of lone pensioners allowance paid to people in Ards and Strangford. (AQW 5805/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Land & Property Services has made 923 awards of Lone Pensioner Allowance with a total value of £145,029 for the Ards Borough Council area. Land & Property Services records this information by local government district and not parliamentary constituency. These figures do not include awards of the allowance made by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Lone Pensioner Allowance Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for the latest figures for (i) the number of people who have taken up; and (ii) the total paid out of, the lone pension allowance in (a) the North Down Borough Council area; and (b) the North Down constituency. (AQW 5891/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Land & Property Services has made 1,569 awards of Lone Pensioner Allowance with a total value of £268,974 for the North Down Borough Council area. Land & Property Services records this information by local government district and not parliamentary constituency. These figures do not include awards of the allowance made by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, to outline what actions his Department intends to bring forward to increase motivation and morale and reduce stress levels in the workplace. (AQW 6143/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Department of Finance and Personnel has adopted and will continue to adopt a range of actions to combat stress in the workplace. The Department recognises that psychiatric and psychological illnesses, which include stress, anxiety and depression are the main reasons for long term sickness absence in the NICS.

The DFP Policy Statement – ‘Stress in the Workplace and Guidance on Stress in the Workplace’ was developed in order to promote the strategic aim ‘to proactively manage attendance and promote, maintain and improve the welfare, including the physical and mental well-being of staff’.

Measures are in place to assist staff who experience such difficulties including an information booklet, promotion of work life balance, healthy lifestyle programmes and Workplace Health Improvement Programme. In addition, staff can avail of the support of Occupational Health Service (OHS), Welfare Support Service and an employee assistance programme which is available 24/7 for staff and immediate family members.

The use of Stress Questionnaires enables early intervention and appropriate support which is essential in stress cases. Immediate referral to the Occupational Health Service is and will continue to be made when required. OHS is committed to bringing health promotion to the workplace and does so through its Lifestyle and Physical Assessment Programme. A Health and Wellbeing Improvement Study is due to commence in May 2009 and is being taken forward in collaboration with the OHS and NI Civil Service Sports (NICSSA). ‘Your Life – Your Health’ is a health awareness course designed specifically with young civil servants in mind. The OHS have teamed up with Health Works to address key health issues amongst the under 25 age category. As part of our commitment to the NICS Workplace Health Improvement Programme, (WHIP) we have fully supported this programme and encouraged staff attendance across the Department.

As part of the OHS health promotion series, we recently circulated a factsheet on mental health issues, to all staff. This will be followed up by a revised ‘Mental Wellbeing’ policy which is currently under review in DFP. The aim is to create a much greater awareness about mental health at work and provide all DFP staff with detailed guidance on tackling stress.
Consideration is being given to undertaking an NICS-wide stress survey. It is hoped that the results of the survey will help to inform and influence policy direction and target ‘hotspots’.

All policy and guidance is intended to compliment existing policies such as Dignity at Work, Health & Safety and Managing Attendance.

Civil Service

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he is aware of the difficulties being experienced by Northern Ireland Civil Servants due to the introduction of HR Connect; and for his assessment of when the new system will deliver an efficient and effective service. (AQW 6189/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The HRConnect service is a key element of a wider programme to transform how personnel services are delivered within the Northern Ireland Civil Service. There has been good progress on implementing HRConnect with four services now in live operation, a further two due to be implemented this month and the final service scheduled for this summer.

I am aware of some difficulties which have arisen in relation to the payroll service. Whilst the vast majority of the 27,400 staff are being paid correctly and on time, there been a number of staff who have received an inaccurate pay. This level of service is not acceptable and officials are working with the Contractor to ensure appropriate action is taken including making manual payments to staff who may have received an inaccurate pay.

Officials have also raised some concerns with the Contractor about the capacity and capability of the Shared Service Centre (SSC). Particular issues have centred on the capacity of the telephone system to handle large volume of calls at peak times and the ability of SSC staff to accurately process the volume of data changes submitted each month.

A range of actions have been agreed to address these problems and improving customer service is now a priority for both the NICS and the Contractor.

Civil Service

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what the average salary was in the Northern Ireland Civil Service for full-time employees, in the last financial year. (AQW 6289/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The full-time equivalent average salary, as at the 1st April 2008 for Northern Ireland Civil Servants was £21,819.

For those staff who do not work on a full-time basis, a calculation is used in order to arrive at an annual full-time equivalent which has been taken into account in the above calculation.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) projects; and (ii) amounts of the capital investments planned for the North Down constituency, for each of the next two financial years. (AQW 6341/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Department of Finance and Personnel currently has no capital investment projects planned for the North Down constituency in the financial years 09/10 and 10/11.

Alcohol Related Deaths

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many alcohol related deaths there have been in (i) 2006; (ii) 2007; (iii) 2008; and (iv) 2009 to date. (AQW 6379/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: In Northern Ireland in 2006, 2007 and 2008 respectively there were 248, 283 and 276 alcohol related deaths. Mortality data for the first quarter of 2009 will be published in June.

Alcohol related deaths are defined using International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision codes F10, G31.2, G62.1, I42.6, K29.2, K70, K73, K74, K86.0, X45, X65 and Y15.
Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many children have been born in each Health and Social Care Trusts area, in each of the last five years. (AQW 6520/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The table below gives the number of births registered by mother’s Health and Social Care Trust area of residence, for the years 2004 to 2008.

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to explain why he does not consider revisiting the 2008/09 budget priorities given the current economic downturn. (AQO 2393/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The overall priorities for the Executive are set out in the Programme for Government document which was agreed by the Executive in January 2008.

The PfG indicates that growing a dynamic, innovative economy should be the Executive’s top priority for the three year period up to 2011 whilst the downturn in economic conditions across the world has confirmed and that this decision was correct.

I am glad to see that the Committee for Finance and Personnel shares this view and I would fully agree with its concern that the Executive should not lose sight of the longer-term economic objectives for Northern Ireland, whilst it focuses on short-term activity to counteract the economic downturn.

The final opportunity for the Executive to make changes to the budget priorities for 2008-09 was as part of the February monitoring round.

On the 2nd of March I made a Statement to the Assembly regarding the outcome of this round.

Therefore it is now too late to revisit the budget priorities for this financial year.

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what the impact is on his spending plans following the decision to defer water charges for two years. (AQO 2394/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Executive, on 20 November 2008, took the decision to defer water charges for a further year. This decision was taken in light of the significant pressures faced by households due to the impact of the global financial crisis.

Current Executive spending plans, for 2008-09, have not been adjusted as a result of this decision. For the incoming financial year it is intended that the additional costs falling to the Department for Regional Development will be funded from resources that become available to the Executive during the 2009-10 in-year monitoring process.

Electronic Tendering System

Mr Burnside asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given the announcement on 5 March 2009 in relation to the new electronic tendering system, how many small and medium sized enterprises have joined the tendering process for the first time. (AQO 2396/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: A new eSourcingNI web portal has been in operation since May 2008 within the Central Procurement Directorate of my Department. At present there is approximately 4,400 vendors registered on the system of which over 60% are declared SME’s. Of these vendors who have registered on this portal over 50% have accessed tender documents since the go-live date. Unfortunately Central Procurement Directorate do not hold any records of how many SMEs have joined the tendering process for the first time.

Education Redundancies

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what discussions he has had with the Minister of Education about potential redundancies resulting from her Department’s budgetary position. (AQO 2397/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Education Minister has not had any discussions with me about potential redundancies as a result of her Department’s budgetary allocation.

PEDU

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide an update on the work of the Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit. (AQO 2398/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Following the completion of the delivery review of Planning Service in November 2008, it was agreed that a meeting in April should be arranged to allow the DOE Minister and myself to be briefed on both the progress and the impact of the Action Plan’s implementation. During February, as part of a planned follow up, PEDU met with Planning Service to gauge the rate of progress made in implementing the recommendations arising from the review. This will enable PEDU to report its assessment back to me for the further joint meeting with Sammy Wilson in April.

As you are no doubt aware from recent press coverage, I have asked PEDU to undertake a short and focused joint review of Land and Property Services. The review team will report back to me in May with its recommendations and LPS will produce an action plan to address issues raised at the same time.

PEDU also continues to lead my Department’s work on the establishment of a robust Performance Management and Monitoring system, to drive the delivery of the commitments and targets that the Departments signed up to when they secured funding in the budget. A further round of PSA monitoring has just taken place as and the Unit will be making an assessment of progress to date – if necessary highlighting any areas where there is emerging evidence of potential delivery problems.

Rural Transport Services

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much money was allocated to the Department for Regional Development for rural transport services in the current financial year. (AQO 2399/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: In the February Monitoring round DRD were allocated total resource DEL of £535.72 million and total capital DEL of £548.42 million. It remains a matter for the DRD Minister how these funds are allocated and utilised by individual business areas in his Department.
Construction Sector Employment

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel which capital building and infrastructural programmes he has fast tracked to help support employment in the construction sector; and to outline the money to support this action and the source of this money. (AQO 2400/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The construction industry makes an important contribution to the economy of Northern Ireland. Total output from the sector during the 12 months to September 2008 was in excess of £3.3bn.

Of particular concern is the downturn in the housing sector and its impact in recent months on many individuals. However, while real difficulties are being experienced by the private housing market, investment by the public sector, which continues to increase, is significantly benefiting the industry and will continue to do so over the remaining years of the Investment Strategy.

During this financial year alone, it is expected that Government capital investment will be in the order of £1.5bn. This compares with £676m five years ago. This is a dramatic increase in expenditure which has only been achievable by the devolved administration recognising the importance of capital investment in infrastructure and working with the construction industry to deliver.

Public sector investment is set to continue to increase over the remaining years of the Investment Strategy. The gross capital investment planned for the next two financial years is intended to be more than £3bn.

As I announced in December, my Department has been working with a wide range of Government construction clients, including the Department of Education, to move the procurement of projects forward as quickly as possible.

Whilst large construction projects have lengthy lead-in times involving careful planning, procurement and management, it is vitally important that Government ensures that projects which are scheduled to move to the market place do so as quickly and as efficiently as possible.

A key task for the Construction Industry Forum – Procurement Task Group is to monitor and report the flow of projects to the market place.

Central Procurement Directorate has, on behalf of Departments, provided the construction industry representatives at the Procurement Task Group with a comprehensive list of the projects to be advertised during the next three months or are already at various stages of the procurement process. This list includes some 60 projects with an aggregated value in excess of £400m.

Projects where procurement is due to commence this financial year or has just commenced include:

- Roads Service – new A5 Western Transport Corridor - £600m;
- Preparatory enabling work for new local hospital Omagh - £4m; and
- Refurbishment of Newcastle Jobs & Benefits office - £2.1m.

Projects at various stages of the procurement process include:

- Crumlin Road Gaol – Refurbishment of Gatehouse - £3m;
- Two major roads projects including the A2 Broadbridge dualling in Londonderry at £20m and the A26/M2 Ballee East Road, Ballymena at £6m; and
- Magherafelt High School - £11m.

In addition, I have recently instructed CPD to ensure that Departments continue to update the information included in the current project list and to add new projects coming to the market place during the period April to June 2009.

Departments have advised that work scheduled to come to the market place during the period April to June 2009 includes:

- Cairnshill Park and Ride, Newtownbreda - £3m;
- 37 separate Roads Service Term Contracts for Environmental Management and Maintenance worth approximately £19m per annum.

The funding for this significant capital investment programme is that allocated in the Budget 2008-11, with additional funding available from the Executive to allocate in 2008-09 arising from the £11.2 million from the 2008 UK Budget and Pre-budget reports, as well as the access to our capital EYF stock and the use of current expenditure

Civil Service Back Pay

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on outstanding back pay owed to civil servants. (AQO 2401/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: My officials are currently in discussions with the trade union with the aim of establishing a framework that could form the basis of a negotiated resolution of the current equal pay issue in the Northern Ireland Civil Service. The issues under discussion are complex and may take some time to resolve. It is my hope that the matter can be brought to a conclusion on a basis that is both fair to staff but which, at the same time, recognises the need to minimise the impact across the public sector in Northern Ireland which will have to provide the funds to cover any payments that may be necessary.

Budget Priorities

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to explain why he does not consider revisiting the budget priorities in light of the economic downturn. (AQO 2402/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The expenditure plans for Northern Ireland departments over the period 2008-09 to 2010-11 are based on the priorities set out in the Programme for Government which was agreed by the Executive in January 2008.

Whilst the Programme for Government will be reviewed on a periodic basis, the downturn in economic conditions further strengthens the case that the economy should remain the Executive’s highest priority.

HR Connect

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the performance of HR Connect. (AQO 2403/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The HRConnect service is a key element of a wider programme to transform how personnel services are delivered within the Northern Ireland Civil Service. There has been very good progress with the implementation of this programme including four services now in live operation, a further two due to be implemented this month and the final service scheduled for this summer.

I am aware of difficulties which have arisen since launch of the payroll service in November 2008. Whilst the vast majority of the 27,400 staff receiving this service are being paid correctly and on time, there have been a number of staff who have received an inaccurate pay. My officials are working with the Contractor to ensure appropriate action is taken to address any issues which have arisen for their staff.

Officials have also raised some concerns about aspects of the services being delivered from the Shared Service Centre at a senior level with the Contractor. Particular issues have centred on the capacity of the telephone system to handle large volume of calls at peak times and the ability of SSC staff to accurately process the volume of data changes submitted each month. A range of actions have been agreed to address these problems and improving customer service is now a priority for both the NICS and the Contractor. The improvement plan for the SSC is designed to address concerns about customer service.

NIHE Capital Maintenance Programme

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he will take to ensure adequate funding is provided for the Housing Executive Capital Maintenance Programme. (AQO 2404/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: To help alleviate the Pressures on the Department for Social Development’s budget, resulting from a very significant shortfall in anticipated receipts, I have provided £20 million in additional funding to the Social Development Minister over recent monitoring rounds and have supported in the February monitoring round a reallocation within DSD of £10.5 million to housing.
Whilst I remain prepared to seek ways in which the housing programme can be prioritised within the overall package of funding available for redistribution at future monitoring rounds I do not have any pot of additional funding from which I can draw. It therefore clearly remains a matter for the Social Development Minister in the first instance to determine her priorities within the financial allocations she has already received.

Lone Pensioner Allowance Scheme

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what progress has been made in making payments under the Lone Pensioner Allowance Scheme. (AQO 2405/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Land & Property Services has received 18,328 applications for the Lone Pensioner Allowance of which 17,273 awards have been made, with a total value of £2,689,019. Some 970 applications were unsuccessful. Currently, 10 applications are being processed, while a further 75 await further information from claimants.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Central Services Agency

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 529/09, what action his Department is taking to ensure that the Central Services Agency offers a service that complies with the Good Friday Agreement and the European Charter for Minority languages, and issues medical cards with the correct spelling of children’s names in Irish, as they appear on the child’s birth certificate, including fadas. (AQW 1981/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr M McGimpsey): As the computer systems presently used to register patients in Northern Ireland are not capable of inserting accents for non-English words, and to replace them immediately would incur significant cost, the Central Services Agency have agreed to amend manually any medical card on request until such time as a UK wide replacement automated system is introduced, which is planned to take place within the next 5 years.

Minor Injuries Units

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the location of all the minor injuries units in operation, and the services that each unit provides. (AQW 5979/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In answering this question we have used the following definition of a Minor Injuries Unit: “A Type 3 Emergency Care Department is defined with designated accommodation for the reception of patients with a minor injury and/or illness. It may be doctor-led or nurse-led. A defining characteristic of this service is that it treats at least minor injuries and/or illnesses and can be routinely accessed without appointment”.

There are four Minor Injuries Units in operation in Northern Ireland, as detailed below:

Nurses

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the paper work that nurses must complete as part of their job.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The paperwork completed by nurses is dependent on the job for which they are employed. There would be a disproportionate cost involved in undertaking a survey of all nursing roles and the paperwork associated with that role. All nurses caring for patients or clients must undertake some form of record keeping relating to the assessment, care, treatment, observations and progress of the patient journey. These notes are an important part of ensuring the provision of safe, effective, high quality care. The Nursing and Midwifery regulator, Nursing and Midwifery Council have set standards for records and record keeping which must be adhered to by all nurses. A copy of these standards is available at www.nmc-uk.org.

Medical Records

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether entries in medical records can be amended; and if so, the circumstances in which such amendments can be made.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The entries in medical records can be amended in circumstances where it is identified that information is incorrect.

Care in the Community

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding has been allocated for care in the community in the Foyle constituency by the Western Health and Social Care Trust, in the past five years.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not held by the Department in form requested.

Care in the Community

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much additional money will be available for care in the community as a result of the closures of elderly care homes in the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is difficult to make a reliable estimate of such a figure at this stage given that such proposals are subject to the outcome of consultation.

I plan to invest some £60m from 2008/09 to 2010/11 (£35m recurrent investment) in community care services for the elderly in Northern Ireland, so that by March 2011 we will be able to support an additional 1,500 people in the community.

Outpatient Appointment Waiting List Targets

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety which Health and Social Care Trusts have failed to meet their outpatient appointment waiting list targets, in the last financial year.
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on the number of patients waiting for a first outpatient appointment are published by Hospital Information Branch on a quarterly basis in the Northern Ireland Waiting Lists Bulletin. The Waiting Lists Bulletin relating to the position at the end of December 2008 was published on Thursday 5th March (see link below): http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/waiting_list_december_08_final.pdf

Urgent Patient Care

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the response time is for an ambulance ordered for urgent patient care. (AQW 6102/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Urgent patient care calls are calls requested by medical clinicians e.g. Doctor/GPs. The specified timeframe for the collection of the patient is determined by the clinician.

The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) aims to respond to 95% of calls for patients requiring urgent care within 15 minutes of the time specified by the doctor requesting transport.

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6108/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There is a requirement to provide hard copies of documents such as Annual Reports, Departmental Publications and Consultation Documents to certain recipients including political representatives, parliamentary contacts and Legal Deposit and other libraries.

MLAs are also advised of the launch of departmental public consultations via a letter of notification giving them the opportunity to obtain copies of the documents in their preferred format.

Ten-Day Payment Policy

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures his Department has in place to ensure invoices are paid within ten-days. (AQW 6126/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A circular was issued across the Department on 11 December 2008, for action by cost centre managers and for information to all staff. This advised cost centre managers of the contents of DAO (DFP) 12/08 and the new commitment to paying businesses within 10 days. Cost centre managers were advised to take all possible steps to ensure suppliers were paid in respect of valid invoices or from the receipt of goods/services (whichever is the later) as promptly as possible.

Nursing Care on Rathlin Island

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he will increase nursing care on Rathlin Island to 24 hours a day, seven days a week. (AQW 6130/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: During my visit to Rathlin Island in August 2008, I gave a commitment to the provision of 24/7 nursing care on the island. My Department has liaised with the Northern Health and Social Care Trust in identifying options for such care. The Northern Trust is currently working with the Northern Health and Social Services Board, as the commissioner of healthcare services for the island, to try to finalise arrangements to meet this commitment. I am hopeful that new arrangements that will provide nursing care 24 hours a day, seven days a week will be in place as early as possible in the new financial year.
Wet Age-Related Macular Degeneration

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the process by which Wet Age-Related Macular Degeneration is diagnosed. (AQW 6131/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Typically, patients are likely to notice visual disturbance in their eye over a period of weeks. The patient may then attend an optometrist or GP who would refer the patient to an ophthalmologist. The ophthalmologist will assess the patient’s vision and if they suspect wet age-related macular degeneration will arrange a fluoroscein angiogram and a retinal scan. A diagnosis would be made following review of these tests.

Wet Age-Related Macular Degeneration

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what treatment is available for Wet Age-Related Macular Degeneration. (AQW 6132/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The treatments available for patients with wet age-related macular degeneration are argon laser, photodynamic therapy and the anti-VEGF drug ranibizumab (Lucentis).

Wet Age-Related Macular Degeneration

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how cases of Wet Age-Related Macular Degeneration are prioritised for treatment. (AQW 6133/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is assumed this question relates to prioritisation in respect of treatment of wet age-related macular degeneration with the drug Lucentis.

The HSC is in the process of expanding existing macular services to provide treatment with Lucentis in line with the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence guidance endorsed by my Department on 21 October 2008. In the meantime, Health and Social Services Boards will fund treatment for patients with the greatest clinical priority. In the main these are patients who have already lost sight in one eye, although other clinically exceptional circumstances may be considered.

Domestic Violence

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to provide an update on the work of the Inter-Ministerial Group on Domestic and Sexual Violence in relation to domestic violence; and (ii) to set out what measures are being taken to prevent and address domestic violence. (AQW 6135/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The next meeting of the Inter-Ministerial Group on Domestic and Sexual Violence is planned to take place in Castle Buildings on Wednesday 6 May 2009.

Although the full agenda has not yet been agreed it is likely to include:
- A short film presentation from Mrs Marie Brown from Foyle Women's Aid on the effects of domestic violence on children (a film produced in Londonderry);
- An analysis and evaluation of the current domestic violence media campaign, targeted at perpetrators;
- An examination of progress against targets in the current 2008/09 domestic violence action plan;
- An up date on progress on the 2008/09 Sexual Violence Action Plan;

I am confident the Domestic Violence Strategy and current Action Plan will comprehensively address your question about the measures being taken to prevent and address domestic violence. Both documents are available on my Department’s website at http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/hss/domestic_violence/dv-publications.htm.
Diabetes

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to establish regional centres of excellence for diabetes. (AQW 6136/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In Northern Ireland a wide range of services is provided for people with diabetes by healthcare professionals working in the hospital, primary and community care sectors. I have no current plans to establish regional centres of excellence for diabetes.

People with Speech, Language and Communication Difficulties

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to give the per-capita spend, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, on people with speech, language and communication difficulties. (AQW 6137/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

Diabetes

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people, broken down by constituency, are diagnosed with (i) type 1 diabetes; and (ii) type 2 diabetes. (AQW 6141/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the form requested.

Letters to Local Newspapers

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQO 2201/09 to detail the (i) weekly newspapers; (ii) date of publication; and (iii) the subject of each of the four letters which he submitted to local weekly newspapers in 2009, in his capacity as Minister. (AQW 6146/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The details of the four letters submitted are shown in the table.

Alcohol Related Diseases

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are the calculated benefits to the Health Service of a reduction in alcohol related diseases. (AQW 6150/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A 1998 report undertaken by my Department concluded that alcohol misuse was costing Northern Ireland society approximately £770 million per year, and of this the direct costs to the Health Service were in the region of £25 million per year. Clearly any reduction in alcohol related diseases, and alcohol misuse generally, would have an impact in reducing these costs.

As the original costings are now likely to be an underestimate my Department is seeking to undertake a research project in the next financial year to give a truer quantifiable cost of alcohol misuse on both the Health Service and society in Northern Ireland.

Tobacco-Related Diseases

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are the calculated benefits to the Health Service of a reduction in tobacco-related diseases. (AQW 6151/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The table below sets out the different diseases of which smoking is recognised as being a contributable factor. Any reduction in smoking-related illnesses would benefit the Health Service in terms of reduced overall costs for treating these diseases. The latest available figures, which are for the 2003-04 year, show that the estimated Northern Ireland applicable total hospital costs of treating cancer, circulatory and respiratory diseases, of which smoking has been a contributory factor, was £74m.

Food Safety Promotion Board

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the Food Safety Promotion Board was given an advertising budget of £581,780 without a tender being advertised in the Official Journal of the European Union. (AQW 6163/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The funding does not require to be advertised in the Official Journal. The Food Safety Promotion Board (FSPB) is a North/South implementation body established by statute in 1999. It is jointly funded by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Department of Health and Children (Ireland). The promotion of public health information in relation to food safety is a core function of this public body and the FSPB budget for promotional campaigns is agreed annually by the two sponsor departments and the finance departments in the two jurisdictions.

The Food Safety Promotion Board is required to comply with all regulatory and policy requirements on procurement when it engages external contractors to provide any service including advertising and promotional activities.

Bangor Hospital Services

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what impact the announcement of a new £18m health village for Bangor will have on the future of Bangor Hospital services. (AQW 6215/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The development planned by Primacure is an independent healthcare project and has no connections whatsoever with the plans I have announced for investment in the health and social care infrastructure across Northern Ireland. My Department has had no discussions with Primacure and as such there is no plan to enter into any project or contract with Primacure.

The Eastern Health and Social Services Board and the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust who are responsible for the commissioning and delivery of services in the Bangor area have indicated that this proposal has not been discussed with either of them.

Hope Centre in Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he has taken in the last six months to ensure that key posts in the Hope Centre in Ballymena are funded beyond 31 March 2009. (AQW 6219/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The allocation of local funding, as well as the identification of local needs and local priorities, is the responsibility of the Health and Social Services Boards. Therefore it is not the role of my Department to become involved in the direct allocation of funding to individual initiatives or local organisations. However, my Department does have a role in overseeing the provision of an appropriate range of services across Northern Ireland to support those individuals and families affected by substance misuse.

To this end, I have ensured that there will be no reduction in the funding available for addressing alcohol and drug misuse in the Northern Board area or across Northern Ireland. In fact, funding available for addressing this issue at the local level will increase to almost £5.2 million in 2009/10, and the Northern Board will receive £1.25 million of that budget.

The Northern Board has informed my Department that they have offered Hope Centre funding to extend their Family Support Programme for another year, and I understand this offer has now been accepted.

Hope Centre in Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will meet with North Antrim MLAs to discuss the possible closure of the Hope Centre before the end of this month. (AQW 6220/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The identification of local need and local priorities in relation to addressing alcohol and drug misuse, and the provision of services in order to meet these needs, is the responsibility of the local Health and Social Service Boards. It would therefore not be appropriate for me to meet with you to discuss these issues further at this time.

However, the Northern Health and Social Service Board has offered the Hope Centre a one year extension of funding for its family support service, and I understand the Hope Centre has now accepted this contract.

Hope Centre in Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the drug rehabilitation services, which are similar to one provided by the Hope Centre, which are available to the public. (AQW 6221/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Hope Centre provides counselling, advice, support, complimentary therapies, and family support services for substance misusers and their families. Such services are also provided by a range of community, voluntary, and statutory organisations, primarily at the local level. Organisations may operate different delivery models and on varying scales. As the funding of local servicers to meet local needs and priorities is the responsibility of the local Health and Social Services Boards, the Department does not hold details on all the organisations that provide such services.

Information on the range of alcohol and drug misuse services that are currently funded by Northern Health and Social Service Board can be found in the local directory of services at: http://www.nhssb.n-i.nhs.uk/partnerships/ndact.php
Dental Care

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many pregnant women are registered with Health Service dentists. (AQW 6225/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

Dental Care

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are in place to ensure that pregnant women get free access to Health Service dental care. (AQW 6226/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Pregnant women and those who have had a baby in the previous 12 months are entitled to free Health Service dental treatment. Unfortunately there is no obligation on General Dental Practitioners to accept anyone for Health service treatment, nor do the current contractual arrangements permit HSS Boards to compel practitioners to provide general dental services.

Officials in my Department have worked closely with the HSS Boards to recruit 38 additional dentists to provide Health Service dental services in areas where access is restricted. All 38 dentists should be in post by autumn of this year including 4 destined for North Down. To provide longer term stability, my Department is currently negotiating a new contract with the dental profession. This will allow services to be commissioned in areas where access is currently problematic, modernise dental services and ensure that everyone in Northern Ireland has access to high quality effective dental care.

Measles

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for the number of cases of measles that have been detected in each of the last five years. (AQW 6227/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The table below provides the number of clinical notifications under the Public Health Act for each year, and also the numbers of laboratory confirmed cases (RVL and salivary antibody testing) for each year.

Dental Care

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many dental practices in North Down accept Health Service patients. (AQW 6228/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information is not available in respect of which practices are currently accepting new Health Service patients. However, Central Services Agency figures show that 22 practices in North Down registered new Health Service patients, at any time, during the past year, although 2 of these had a very low number of new registrations.

Drug Abuse

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what strategies his Department has to tackle drug abuse. (AQW 6240/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The cross-Departmental New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs (NSD) 2006-2011 sets out my Department’s strategy for addressing the harm related to alcohol and drug misuse in Northern Ireland. The NSD is available at: http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/nsdad-finalversion-may06.pdf

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) projects; and (ii) amount of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11.

(AQW 6263/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I can confirm that a new Bayview Resource Centre has been recently opened in Bangor at a cost of £4.6 million. The balance of the contractual commitments for this scheme will be paid in 2009/10.

There are no planned developments in the North Down constituency area in 2010/11.

New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs 2006 – 2011 has Key Performance Indicators which are SMART (Specific, Measurable, Achievable, Relevant and Timed) and if not for his assessment of whether the target figures should be included rather than being aspirational goals.

(AQW 6275/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs (NSD) sets out a range of key alcohol and drug related performance indicators. These are available in the NSD at the following link: http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/nsdad-finalversion-may06.pdf. Reductions in any of these indicators over the life of the NSD will show progress against its overall aim of reducing the level of alcohol and drug misuse related harm in Northern Ireland.

In addition, under Public Service Agreement 8 (promoting health and addressing health inequities) within the Programme for Government a number of specific “SMART” targets have been developed to measure progress against the implementation of the Strategy. These include:

• by 2010, ensure a 5% reduction in the proportion of adults who binge drink;
• by 2010, ensure a 10% reduction in the proportion of young people who report getting drunk;
• by 2010, ensure a 5% reduction in the proportion of young adults taking illegal drugs during the previous month; and
• by 2011, ensure a 10% reduction in the number of children at risk from parental alcohol and/or drug dependency

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service posts are filled on a retained basis; and (ii) what percentage this is of the total number of posts.

(AQW 6296/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am advised that the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service currently has 980 posts filled on a retained basis. This equates to approximately 52% of the current establishment of 1881 firefighters.

Domestic Violence

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the work of the Regional Strategy Group (Domestic Violence).

(AQW 6339/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Regional Strategy Group on Domestic Violence is responsible for co-ordinating actions across both the statutory and voluntary sectors in Northern Ireland to deliver on the aims and objectives of the Government’s domestic violence strategy Tackling Violence at Home and the accompanying annual action plans. I am confident that the Domestic Violence Strategy and the current Action Plan will comprehensively address your question about the work of the Group. Both documents are available on my Department’s website at http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/hss/domestic_violence/dv-publications.htm

Domestic Violence

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the work of the Inter Ministerial Group on Domestic and Sexual Violence. (AQW 6340/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The next meeting of the Inter-Ministerial Group on Domestic and Sexual Violence is planned to take place on Wednesday 6 May 2009.

Although the full agenda has not yet been agreed it is likely to include:

- A short film presentation from Mrs Marie Brown from Foyle Women’s Aid on the effects of domestic violence on children (a film produced in Londonderry);
- An analysis and evaluation of the current domestic violence media campaign, targeted at perpetrators;
- An examination of progress against targets in the current 2008/09 domestic violence action plan;
- An update on progress on the 2008/09 Sexual Violence Action Plan;

Binge Drinking

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if his Department is considering putting in place a minimum price per alcohol unit to curb binge drinking similar to that proposed in Scotland. (AQW 6343/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Addressing alcohol misuse, particularly binge and young people’s drinking, is a key priority for my Department. To this end, my Department has led in the development of a Young People’s Drinking Action Plan that seeks to co-ordinate action to tackle this issue. This plan is currently with my Executive colleagues for consideration.

The Young People’s Drinking Action Plan highlights the issue of minimum unit pricing, and this is an area which will need further consideration across the Executive as responsibility for this issue does not lie with my Department. There may also be issues in relation to EU Legislation and Competition Laws, and I will therefore be watching the developments in Scotland with great interest.

Binge Drinking

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what his Department’s response is to the Donaldson Report on Alcohol Consumption and Binge Drinking. (AQW 6344/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department noted the contents of Sir Liam Donaldson’s report “150 years of the Annual Report of the Chief Medical Officer: On the state of public health 2008” in relation to alcohol misuse with interest.

Like Sir Liam Donaldson, I have been concerned about the level of alcohol misuse for some time, therefore addressing this issue, particularly binge and young people’s drinking, is a key priority for my Department and the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs. I agree that we need to raise awareness of the harm alcohol is doing, not just to the heaviest drinkers, but to our whole society.

I particularly noted Sir Liam’s proposal to introduce a minimum unit price for alcohol. My Department has led on the development of a cross-Department Young People’s Drinking Action Plan. This document highlights the issue of minimum unit pricing. However, this is an area which will need further consideration across the Executive as responsibility does not lie with my Department. There may also be issues in relation to EU Legislation and Competition Laws, and I will therefore be watching closely the developments in England and Scotland on this issue.

Binge Drinking

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department is taking, and intends to take, to combat binge drinking.

(AQW 6345/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department takes the misuse of alcohol very seriously, particularly binge drinking and underage drinking. Through the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs, current actions to address this issue include:

- the establishment of a binge drinking advisory group;
- the continuation of the award winning binge drinking public information campaign;
- local treatment, support and information programmes that support the regional campaign; and
- positive engagement with the drinks industry.

Latest figures from the Adult Drinking Patterns Survey show that binge drinking levels have fallen from 43% of men and 33% of women in 2005 to 33% and 29% respectively in 2008. I am due to issue an integrated action plan to address young people’s drinking in the near future.

Lough Cuan Residential Home

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm (i) that proposals in relation to the closure of Loch Cuan have been presented to him; and (ii) that a full investigation will be carried out by his officials, taking into account individual risk assessments for each resident, before making a decision on these proposals.

(AQW 6402/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As you are aware the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust have recently completed the 12 week public consultation surrounding the proposals for modernizing statutory residential care provision. The Trust has made recommendations concerning the proposals on all three of the statutory homes, including Loch Cuan. Before reaching a final decision I will consider all the evidence available and the health, well being and future social care requirements, of all the older people in the South Eastern Trust area, and in particular that of the current residents of all three statutory residential homes, will be of utmost importance in that decision making process.

Health Screening

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the health screening arrangements in place for young people participating in sport.

(AQW 6423/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: At present there are no health screening arrangements in place for young people participating in sport. In relation to sudden cardiac death the UK National Screening Committee has advised against a screening programme.

Sudden cardiac death is not caused by a single condition; there are more than twenty conditions that cause sudden cardiac death and many of these are difficult to detect through screening. Unfortunately there is no screening test that can detect all these conditions, and for many of these conditions there is no known or proven treatment. Until there is a test that can accurately assess who is likely to be affected, and we can advise them how to prevent death, screening the whole population is not realistic.

New Respite Care Centre for Young People

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the new Respite Care Centre for young people in the Omagh/Fermanagh area.

(AQW 6425/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Due to difficulties in obtaining a suitable site, the then Sperin and Lakeland Trust was unable to proceed with the scheme proposed in the business case which was approved in December 2005.

Since then, considerable work has been undertaken to address these difficulties and the current proposal is that the replacement will be in the grounds of the former Omagh General Hospital.

It is anticipated that a revised business case will be submitted to my Department by the Trust within the next few weeks. A decision on the timetable cannot be made until that business case has been addressed and approved.

Tyrone County Hospital

Mr Doherty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to outline what emergency ambulance provision is in place in Omagh following the removal of acute services from the Tyrone County Hospital; (ii) to detail how many ambulance vehicles are based in Omagh during the (a) day shift; and (b) night shift; and (iii) if accident and emergency vehicles are deployed to other stations whilst those vehicles are out on calls.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There are four accident and emergency (A&E) ambulances and one paramedic rapid response vehicle (RRV) based at the Omagh ambulance station.

Three A&E ambulances operate 24/7 on a 12 hour shift pattern while the fourth operates Sunday to Thursday from 0800 hours to 2300 hours and on a 24 hour basis on Friday and Saturday in two 12 hour shifts. The RRV operates 0800 hours to 2400 hours seven days a week.

The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service sends the nearest available appropriate resource to 999 calls. Its Regional Emergency Medical Dispatch Centre dynamically deploys resources as necessary depending on the level of demand.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the role of the Family Support Worker across all Health and Social Care Trusts; and for his assessment of whether they are an important factor in the community.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Family support services are delivered by a range of staff across Boards and Trusts. Such services are delivered by a combination of Trust staff and services commissioned from the voluntary and community sector. The detail of the role of the Family Support Worker is contingent on the service provided and the setting in which it is provided. The means by which family support services are organised and provided is a matter for HSC Trusts and Boards.

All family support services are important and my commitment to the development and delivery of such services remains significant.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many of the 73 children in the Armagh and Dungannon areas who are receiving assistance from a Family Support Worker, are on the At Risk register, broken down by each area.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not collected centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area, how many Family Support Workers (i) are; and (ii) are not on a contract, broken down by areas in the Trust.
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is given in the table below.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the Southern Health and Social Care Trust proposals to reduce Family Support Workers from eight workers to three on 18.5 hour weekly contracts, that would result in two in Armagh and one in Dungannon. (AQW 6459/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There is no proposal in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust to reduce the number of family support workers. The Southern Trust has family support workers in each of its three localities which are based on Legacy Trust areas. These are managed and supervised under differing arrangements. The Trust is currently reviewing its family support services including the management and deployment of these staff. As part of this work, Trust management have begun meetings with family support staff.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children have been receiving assistance from a Family Support Worker in the Armagh and Dungannon areas because of incidences of domestic violence, broken down by each area. (AQW 6464/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not collected centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

New Regional Hospital for Children and Women

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what social clauses and affirmative action measures will govern procurement for the new Regional Hospital for Children and Women. (AQW 6465/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department will promote the social element of sustainable development through the incorporation of social clauses, as far as practicable, into the construction contract(s) for the procurement of the new Regional Hospital for Children and Women. These will be in accordance with the requirements of public sector procurement policy that is current at the date of procurement of the project.

My Department recognises the requirement to take affirmative action measures consistent with prevailing legislation and guidance.
New Regional Hospital for Children and Women

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the proposed date is for the commencement of procurement for the Regional Hospital for Children and Women. (AQW 6472/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Timescales for the commencement of procurement in respect of this project can only be determined following approval of the business case and confirmation of availability of funding.

Under current funding constraints, construction of the Women’s hospital is not due to begin until 2015/16 with commencement of the Children’s in 2017/18.

Cervical Screening

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if there has been an increase in the numbers of women requesting cervical screening as a result of the publicity surrounding of Jade Goody’s illness. (AQW 6526/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I refer the member to the answer I gave to Written AQ No 5928/09.

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Distribution of Department Publications

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will ensure that MLAs have the choice of receiving reports and consultation documents in either electronic or hard copy form. (AQW 6109/09)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr C Murphy): My Department follows NICS guidance published in November 2008 on the Distribution of Departmental Publications and Consultation Documents. Sections 9 and 10 cover electronic publication and state, “It is a matter of choice for the organisation(s) as to their preferred method of receipt of Government publications ….”.

Assembly colleagues should inform my Department of their preference for how they wish to receive any communication and that will be complied with.

Road Surfacing Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the road surfacing schemes, scheduled for the North Down area, in the next financial year. (AQW 6166/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that, in anticipation of financial allocations being finalised, the following carriageway resurfacing schemes have been provisionally programmed for completion in the 2009/10 financial year, within the North Down area:

• Whinney Hill, Holywood – part of; and
• Robinson Road, Bangor.

Footpath Resurfacing Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the footpath resurfacing schemes, scheduled for the North Down area, in the next financial year. (AQW 6167/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that, in anticipation of financial allocations being finalised, the following footway resurfacing schemes have been provisionally programmed for completion in the 2009/2010 financial year, within the North Down area:
• Robinson Road, Bangor;
• Killeen Avenue, Bangor – Old Belfast Road to Doctor’s surgery; and • Clifton Road, Bangor.

New Pedestrian Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the new pedestrian schemes, scheduled for the North Down area, in the next financial year. (AQW 6168/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the full 2009/10 Programme of Work, for pedestrian schemes in North Down area, has not yet been established. However, I can advise that controlled pedestrian crossing facilities will be provided at each of the following locations:
• Castle Park Road, Bangor – near the museum entrance; and • Gransha Road, Bangor – with the junction of Bloomfield Road.

I have asked Mr Tom McCourt, the Divisional Roads Manager for Eastern Division, to write to you with details of proposed pedestrian schemes, when the full programme has been confirmed.

New Traffic Light Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the new traffic light schemes, scheduled for the North Down area, in the next financial year. (AQW 6169/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the full 2009/10 Programme of Work for traffic light schemes in North Down area has not yet been established. However, I can advise that schemes listed in AQW 6168/09 will be included in this programme of work.

I have asked Mr Tom McCourt, the Divisional Roads Manager for Eastern Division, to write to you with details of proposed traffic light schemes, when the full programme has been confirmed.

Disabled Parking

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain why the Department has a requirement that an applicant for a disabled parking bay must be the driver of the car rather than the spouse or a resident of the car owner’s address. (AQW 6178/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that disabled parking bays are only provided for those who would benefit most from their provision. Bays that are provided can be used by any blue badge holder and cannot be reserved for the exclusive use of an applicant.

It is considered that in normal circumstances, it would not be unreasonable to expect the driver of a vehicle to stop for a short time to help a person, with a disability, to get to and from the vehicle and then to find a suitable place to park, if required.

In areas where residents find it difficult to park close to their homes, bay provision can have a significant impact. It is for this reason that Roads Service would only provide a disabled parking bay, when the need has been established and this is done through the satisfaction of a number of criteria, including that the applicant must normally be the driver of the car. Extending our policy beyond the existing criteria, could lead to a proliferation of under-used bays, exacerbating parking difficulties for other drivers and making enforcement difficult.

Disabled parking bays are, therefore, normally only provided for disabled drivers, but they may, in cases of special hardship, be provided for disabled passengers.

Disabled Parking

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what are ‘exceptional circumstances’ when his Department is considering whether to waive the criteria for the allocation of a disabled parking bay. (AQW 6179/09)
The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that disabled parking bays are normally only provided for disabled drivers, but may, in cases of special hardship, be provided for disabled passengers. This requires a letter from a consultant physician confirming that the disabled person cannot be left unattended.

Part-Time EO11 Positions

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development how many part time positions in the EO11 grade (Promotion Board– EO11 (PR 003/01 carried forward to PR 006/05) have been filled in Departments located within travel to work distance of Londonderry/Derry. (AQW 6185/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: There is no record of any officer in any Department having been promoted from either of the boards concerned into a part-time EO11 post within the area specified.

Pressure Management Programme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain why the water pressure at 16 and 23 Ballybryan Road, Greyabbey has not been acceptable since before December 2008. (AQW 6199/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that an ongoing pressure management programme is being implemented in the Greyabbey area as an effective means of preventing bursts and reducing mains leakage. While water pressure has been reduced in the area, NIW can confirm that the current pressure at 16 and 23 Ballybryan Road is in excess of the minimum standard it aims to provide, of at least 15 metres head at the stop tap at the boundary, as set out in its customer charter.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) how many Water service staff have been based in Londonderry/Derry in each of the last 3 years, broken down by division; (ii) whether any proposals have been brought forward or are being developed which may affect the number of its staff in Londonderry/Derry and (iii) what impact any such proposals may have on NI Water employment levels in Londonderry/Derry. (AQW 6203/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the number of its staff based in Derry during the last three years is as follows:-

NIW is reviewing its telemetry and work planning activities currently provided from Derry and Belfast, but the impact of this proposal on NIW staff levels in Derry is not known at this time.

US Pre-Clearance at NI Airports

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) whether he has had any discussions in relation to the establishment of United States Customs Border Protection Pre-Clearance at Northern Ireland airports; and (ii) what further plans he has to pursue this. (AQW 6205/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department has consulted Belfast International Airport which has no plans to seek such facilities, the establishment of which is not a devolved matter.
Road Projects

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development to (i) list all road projects; and (ii) detail the value of each investment (a) for this year; and (b) planned for the next financial year. (AQW 6212/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I would refer the Member to my 6 March 2009 reply to Assembly Question AQW 5490/09.

M2 Improvement Scheme

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5548/09, to detail (i) the total number and types of trees being planted; (ii) the total number and types of shrubs being planted; (iii) the estimated completion date of the landscaping; and (iv) the total cost of the landscaping. (AQW 6216/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that a wide variety of different plant types will be planted along the M2 to create a range of planted areas, ranging from wildflower grassland to hedgerow, and from native woodland plants to specimen trees. Each planted area will contain a variety of different plant species. For example, those areas identified for native woodland planting will be planted with the following trees and shrubs between 0.75-1.5 metres apart:-

Trees
• 7.5% Common Alder;
• 7.5% Common Birch;
• 5% Common Ash;
• 10% Scots pine; and
• 10% Mountain Ash.

Shrubs
• 15 % Hazel;
• 15% Hawthorn;
• 15% holly; and
• 15% Blackthorn.

The landscaping along the M2 is expected to be substantially completed during April this year.

The M2 Improvement scheme and associated landscaping is being undertaken as part of the Roads Service DBFO Package 1 Contract. Under this type of contract Roads Service does not hold details of the cost of individual elements of work, such as landscaping. However, as I indicated in a previous reply some 44,000 trees and shrubs will be planted as part of the project.

11 July Bonfires

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made in developing a new policy on 11 July bonfires. (AQW 6231/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I can advise that my Department’s Roads Service is not developing new policy or undertaking any review in relation to Eleventh Night bonfires.

The Member may be aware that, while bonfire management is an inter-agency issue, Roads Service has the power, under the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993, to remove bonfire material on or near a public road, which may constitute a danger to road users. Roads Service will continue to take a joint approach with the other agencies in the management of bonfire sites.

You may be interested to note that Belfast City Council intends to continue its successful Bonfire Management Programme for another year. I understand that the Council has developed its Bonfire Beacon Structure, which will make beacons available to interested communities.
Flags and Emblems

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made in developing a new flags and emblems protocol between his Department and other statutory agencies; and when this protocol will be in place. (AQW 6233/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service have, through written submissions and attendance at review meetings, contributed to the review of the “The Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas”, initiated by OFMDFM in April 2008.

I understand that completion of the flags protocol review is subject to progress of work undertaken by OFMDFM, to review and refresh the current “A Shared Future” policy and “Racial Equality” strategy.

The Member will know that it is my view that the current protocols are outdated and although they may achieve successful resolution to these issues in some areas, they do not in many others. I have also met Chief Constable, Hugh Orde, PSNI, in relation to the role that the Police must play by way of enforcement, in addition to the work of other agencies, such as Roads Service.

Road Traffic Signs

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the measures which his Department was obliged to take in the last five years to monitor the performance of companies who are contracted for the supply and delivery of permanent and temporary road traffic signs; (ii) the measures that were used for monitoring in the last five years; and (iii) the findings of these monitoring exercises. (AQW 6236/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: In my response to your previous Assembly Question AQW 4646/09, I informed you that my Department’s Roads Service’s improved procedures, for monitoring the contract for the supply and delivery of traffic signs, were instigated in March 2003. This was in accordance with recommendations made by our internal auditors. These improved procedures have been in place for the current contract, which was awarded in 2005.

The information you have requested on the findings of these monitoring exercises is being collated, and I have asked Roads Service officials to forward it to you, as soon as it is available.

Road Resurfacing

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to resurface the roads in the Wandsworth Road area of Bangor. (AQW 6245/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by my Department’s Roads Service that there are no current plans, to carry out any carriageway resurfacing in the area of Wandsworth Road, Bangor.

Footpath Resurfacing

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to resurface the footpaths in the area of Wandsworth Road, Bangor. (AQW 6246/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by my Department’s Roads Service that there are no current plans, to carry out any footway resurfacing work in the area of Wandsworth Road, Bangor.

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the (i) projects; and (ii) amount of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11. (AQW 6264/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Information on projects and capital investment planned for the North Down constituency is set out below:
Roads

There are no major road schemes programmed for the North Down constituency area up to 2011.

Roads Service does not hold details of capital infrastructure projects on a parliamentary constituency basis. However, information on other capital expenditure projects with a value of less than £500,000 in the North Down constituency for the next two financial years will be provided in the Spring 2009 Council Reports for North Down and Ards. Council reports can be viewed at http://www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm.

It is anticipated that that the projected capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for 2009/10 and 2010/11, will be similar to the £963,000 spend in financial year 2008/09.

Rail Projects

Subject to the agreement of capital plans with Translink, which is an ongoing process, the following capital rail investment is planned for the North Down constituency in 2009/10 and 2010/11.

As part of the project to purchase 20 new trains some of the platforms on the rail network will be extended, this may include platforms in the North Down constituency. It is likely that the investment in new trains will directly benefit residents in North Down, using rail services.

Northern Ireland Water

The following projects are planned for the North Down constituency in 2009/10. Northern Ireland Water’s development plans from 2010/11 onwards will depend on the outcome of the price control review which will be undertaken in 2010, following which a prioritised programme of capital work will be developed.

Road Maintenance

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development for his Department’s assessment of (i) the wet weather skidding resistance of all road surfaces on (a) trunk roads; (b) A; and (c) B class roads; and (ii) whether the spending on roads maintenance over the past two years has improved the wet weather skidding resistance of all roads.

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service constantly strives to improve road safety standards. One means of achieving this is to ensure that roads have a satisfactory level of skidding resistance, which reduces the risk of uncontrolled skids and improves braking efficiency. Roads Service has a programme of measuring skidding resistance, using the Sideways-force Coefficient Routine Investigation Machine (SCRIM), and reports annually on the percentage of the network which is equal to or below the relevant investigatory level.

The most recent survey results available indicate that some 42.8% of the trunk road network and around 33.9% of the non-trunk, A Class network, are at or below the relevant skidding resistance investigatory level. Routine measurements of skid resistance using the SCRIM vehicle are not carried out on the B class network, so I cannot provide the information requested for these roads.

It is important to note that a road with a skidding resistance below the investigatory level is not necessarily unsafe; it simply means that there is a need for further investigation, to determine the need for maintenance, if appropriate. Roads Service engineers carry out these investigations on all roads that are found to be below the investigatory level and arrange remedial work, where necessary.

Timely resurfacing and surface dressing of roads will enhance their skidding resistance. In the last two years, some 3907 km of the road network has received treatment (resurfacing and/or surface dressing) thereby making a positive contribution to skidding resistance.

Traffic Management Assessment

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development if he would carry out a detailed traffic management assessment of Newcastle, to identify improvements required to facilitate future economic development. (AQW 6361/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service will continue to work with elected representatives, traders and residents, to identify local improvements which will assist with traffic progression in Newcastle. However, as indicated in previous replies to the Member, Roads Service does not propose to carry out detailed, and expensive, traffic management assessments in Newcastle, to identify improvements for possible future economic development. The preferred approach is to examine any proposals, as and when they are received, and have the required traffic assessments carried out by the applicant.

As a result of recent meetings with the Newcastle Steering Group, it is proposed to restore two lanes of traffic to Main Street, by the end of March 2009. It is hoped that other improvements can be made in the next financial year, although such measures will be subject to design and financial constraints.

Foyle Ferry Service

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will urgently consider amending the definition of ‘road’ in the Roads (NI) Order 1993 to allow subsidisation of the Loyal Foyle Ferry Service and provide a benefit to the local community. (AQW 6417/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Member will be aware that my Department was not involved in the creation of this ferry service, nor does it have legislative or direct operational responsibility. However, in the absence of other Departments or Ministers accepting responsibility, I have offered to work with all parties to see if solutions to its financial problems can be found.

I have previously made it clear that there are already many pressures on the funding available for Roads Service, and I do not foresee my Department taking over responsibility for this ferry service. I am therefore not minded to amend the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993. That said, I am hopeful that in highlighting the problems being encountered by the ferry service and urgently canvassing support from all possible interested parties, the necessary financial support can be secured.

New A1 Dual Carriageway

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reasons why the Forkhill Road will have to close during the building of the new A1 dual carriageway despite assurances, given to local residents at Killeavy in late 2008 by the contractor that this would not be the case. (AQW 6418/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the closure of the Forkhill Road is required to safely undertake works that are necessary to improve the level and alignment of a short stretch of the Forkhill Road, as it approaches the new enlarged roundabout. This work is planned to commence at 7.00pm on Friday 27 March 2009 and will continue until 6.00am on Monday 30 March 2009.

I understand that a meeting took place on 15 October 2008, with residents from the area and Lagan Ferrovial, the Construction Contractor. At this meeting, the contractor, in reply to a question about the closure of roads at Cloghogue Roundabout, indicated that access would be maintained on all approaches during the day. However, the Contractor has now progressed their works as far as possible, using normal traffic management measures, and they do now require a short weekend closure to safely complete the work. The Contractor's earlier advice to local residents was given in good faith, based on the information available at that time.

I am further advised that the Contractor has undertaken extensive consultation in the area, about this road closure with residents, the local parish and local businesses. This matter was also the subject of discussion at the Community Liaison Meeting held on Friday 13 March 2009, which was facilitated by the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council.

Roads Service and Lagan Ferrovial understand the disruption and inconvenience which this weekend road closure may cause in the area, and very much appreciates the communities patience, in these circumstances. Roads Service and their technical advisers will continue to work closely with the contractor to seek to minimise the negative impact of the construction of this important strategic road improvement scheme.

Improving Roads in County Fermanagh

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his Department’s plans for improving roads in County Fermanagh over the 2009/10 financial year. (AQW 6424/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Investment Delivery Plan for Roads, published in April 2008, identified a number of major road schemes that are to be delivered in Fermanagh during the ten year period 2008-2018.

Works have recently been completed in Enniskillen, where an additional traffic lane was provided at the Henry Street/Sligo Road junction, which previously created a significant bottleneck, particularly during the summer months.

A scheme to provide improvements on the A32 between Omagh and the Dromore Road at Mullaghbane is ongoing and is anticipated to be completed by May 2009.

In addition to this current scheme, an improvement strategy for the A32 trunk road has been developed, and a rolling programme of both on-line and off-line improvement works is in place.

It is anticipated that the first of these schemes will be to widen and realign the carriageway, while making provision for right turning vehicles, will be implemented at Sidaire crossroads. It is envisaged that work on this scheme, which is estimated to cost £800,000, will commence towards the end of the 2009/10 financial year, however, this is dependant on the acquisition of the necessary land by agreement.

Construction of 20km of dual carriageway on the A4 between Dungannon and Ballygawley, and the realignment and widening of 3.8km on the A4 at Annaghilla, is also progressing well and is expected to be completed by the end of 2010.

The proposed construction of the Cherrymount Link in Enniskillen, a 1.1km link road that will connect the B80 Tempo Road to the A32 Irvinestown Road, is expected to commence in 2009/10, subject to satisfactory progression through the procurement process and availability of finance. This scheme will provide relief to the Gaol Square junction and the town centre area.

Consultants are also to be commissioned before the end of March 2009, to assist Roads Service in the development of a route corridor for a southern bypass of Enniskillen. Another proposed scheme which is located within, or will directly impact on, Fermanagh is the A4 Fivemiletown Bypass.

Water Supply Breaks

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development, following interruptions to mains water supply in parts of the Ards Peninsula in recent weeks that culminated in the widespread unavailability of water supply to many hundreds of people during the weekend of 21-22 March 2009, to detail the reasons for these breaks in supply and what assurance he can give that there will be no further unscheduled interruptions. (AQW 6516/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the recent interruptions to the water supply in the Ards Peninsula area were caused by unforeseen defects in a trunk main and a number of other defects on smaller distribution mains.

WA 298
You will appreciate that it is not possible to guarantee against defects to any water supply system but NIW does undertake extensive monitoring and maintenance of its infrastructure to minimise the risk of interruptions to the water supply.

Water Supply Breaks

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the water supply breaks in Portaferry that lasted for 48 hours, why there was a breakdown in communicating to people that the water would not be on for an extended period of time; and why bottled water was not given out to those with special needs like mothers, children and the elderly. (AQW 6527/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that while work was progressing to restore the water supply to the Portaferry area, various media outlets were issued with press releases and interviews were given to local radio stations to inform customers of developments. In addition, extra staff were made available at NIW’s Customer Contact Centre to provide customers with the latest available information on the water supply position.

Water tankers and bowsers were deployed as it became clear that the interruptions to the water supply would be prolonged for some customers. An emergency supply of bottled water was issued with emphasis given to priority customers.

Water Supply Breaks

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will be taking to address the repeated water breaks and the non-supply of water at the Ballybloey Road, Greyabbey, since Christmas. (AQW 6528/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it is aware of a number of interruptions to the water supply in the Ballybloey Road area of Greyabbey which have been caused by burst water mains. In view of the frequency of the interruptions, NIW is investigating the feasibility of implementing infrastructure improvements to ensure continuity of supply in the area.

I have asked the Acting Chief Executive of NIW, Chris Mellor to write to you when the outcome of the investigation is known.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Childcare and Early Years Interventions

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development (i) what assessment has been made of the need for childcare and early years interventions; and (ii) what statutory provision exists for childcare and early years interventions, in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas, broken down by parliamentary constituency. (AQW 5926/09)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms M Ritchie):

(i) Early Years childcare is a function carried out by the Department of Education. The policy lead on childcare overall lies with the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister at present. The need for childcare and early years provision in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas is assessed in the development of Neighbourhood Renewal Action Plans. Whilst many communities have identified childcare as a priority, current provision is inconsistent, complicated and much of it operates at risk. I have welcomed the work being undertaken by the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Children and Young People to bring coherence to childcare provision.

(ii) Although DSD has no statutory obligation to provide childcare, I recently committed £1.5 million to sustain over 2,000 weekly childcare places, in disadvantaged communities, for a further twelve months to allow time for a coherent approach to be developed. As with all aspects of Neighbourhood Renewal, which is the...
Executive’s strategy for tackling deprivation, progress depends on the support of all Departments. Table 1 below details provision by my Department in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas by parliamentary constituency.

Reducing Stress in the Workplace

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development given that stress is the primary reason for absence from work, what action she intends to take to improve motivation and morale and reduce stress in the workplace. (AQW 5950/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department has, over the last couple of years, seen a downward trend in sick absence. This improvement can be attributed to the Department’s Human Resources policy in providing flexible work/life balance, to the support available to staff who report stress-related illness, and to the action taken by managers to lead and encourage their staff and to provide a healthy and productive work environment.

The Department will continue to give high priority to managing sick absence, with plans to develop a more holistic approach to sick absence through health and safety in the workplace, health promotion and prevention and focused action on managing staff attendance. It is also planned to take part in a Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) stress survey using the Health and Safety Executives management standards. These standards will provide the platform to plan for future action in the Department to reduce sick absence, to train managers and to develop a productive and safe work environment.

Charity Commissioners

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development what progress has been made in relation to the appointment of the Charity Commissioners. (AQW 5989/09)

The Minister for Social Development: My Department is currently engaged in the public appointments process and advertisements appeared in the press in week commencing 19 January 2009. Interviews are scheduled for 24 and 25 March and, subject to the outcome of the selection panel’s deliberations, I hope to be in a position to announce appointments to the Charity Commission in April.

Energy Savings

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how many inquiries there have been about energy savings from homes in (i) Larne (ii) Carrickfergus and (iii) Newtownabbey, in each month, in the last two years. (AQW 6008/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I have been advised by Eaga that they do not record details of energy efficiency enquiries and can therefore only report on actual referrals recorded. The number of referrals received for Larne, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey, in each month, in the last 2 years is shown in table 1. No referrals for the Warm Homes scheme have been taken from January 2009 as the budget for this year has all been committed. My department has met and, I anticipate will exceed, its Public Service Agreement target of alleviating fuel poverty in 9,000 households through implementing energy efficiency measures.

Northern Ireland Energy Agency (NIEA) is a member of the Bryson Charitable Group who through the management and operation of the Energy Saving Trust Advice centre, offer free and impartial telephone advice to households across Northern Ireland on energy efficiency. NIEA currently hold details of the number of energy efficiency enquiries for the 3 year period 1st April 2005 to the 31st December 2008 for each of the local authorities. However, they are unable to produce figures for each financial year or per constituency.

The total number of enquiries recorded by NIEA is detailed in table 2.

Heating Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what new heating schemes will go into the North Down area in the next financial year.

(AQW 6013/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Due to the review of the Housing Executive’s programmes, caused by the very significant shortfall in budget, the Housing Executive is not yet able to confirm the contents of its programme of improvement and maintenance schemes for 2009/10. A revised programme of upcoming improvement schemes will be formulated and the Housing Executive’s District Housing Plans, due for publication during summer 2009, will contain the relevant scheme information. The delivery of this programme will be dependent on the availability of finance.

Maintenance Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what new maintenance schemes will be carried out in the the North Down area in the next financial year.

Special Purchase of Evacuated Dwelling Scheme

The Minister for Social Development: The table below details the Northern Ireland Housing Executive’s expenditure on the Special Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings scheme. The information requested on individual applications is not available. Community and Voluntary Sector

Ms Ni Chuilin asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the funding her Department provided to the community and voluntary sector, including a breakdown of groups receiving awards, in the last two years. (AQW 6051/09)

The Minister for Social Development: In 2007/08 my Department provided a total of £34,497,493 and in 2008/09 at a total of £38,884,475, to the community and voluntary sector.

This does not include funding disbursed through the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) or provided through local councils in respect of the Community Support Programme (CSP).

A detailed breakdown of the groups and the amounts of funding by year has been placed in the Assembly Library.
People Diagnosed as Alcoholics

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how many people were diagnosed as alcoholics and what benefits did they receive for their condition, in the last financial year.

The Minister for Social Development: The Department does not collect information on the number of people diagnosed as alcoholics. A diagnosis of alcoholism does not, in itself, establish entitlement to any social security benefits.

Community Care Grants

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have been refused (i) a crisis loan; (b) a community care grant; and (c) both of these, in the last two years.

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is not available in the form requested as the Social Fund Management Information System only records statistical information in relation to the total number of applications made and not on an individual basis. The number of Crisis Loan and Community Care Grant applications refused in the last two years is outlined in the Table below.

Community Care Grants

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have been denied (i) crisis loan; (ii) community care grant; (iii) crisis loan and community care grants.

The Minister for Social Development: Everyone has the right to apply for a Crisis Loan and/or Community Care Grant under the Social Fund Scheme. No one should ever be denied this right. All applications received are considered by a Decision Maker who will decide on entitlement to a payment based on the information provided. Not all applications will however be successful for a variety of reasons including failure to satisfy the qualifying conditions. The number of applications received and refused in the last 3 years are set out in the tables below.

The Minister for Social Development: My Department adheres to the guidance supplied by OFMDFM relating to the distribution of Departmental publications and consultation documents. This guidance stipulates that MLAs be advised when reports or consultation documents are published and where these documents, either electronically or in hardcopy, can be obtained.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development what funding has been made available (i) directly from her Department; or (ii) from her Department through local Councils, to Citizens Advice Bureaux, in each of the last five years. (AQW 6180/09)

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how much funding is being made available to Citizens Advice Bureaux in 2009/10. (AQW 6181/09)

For the 2009/10 year they will be able to claim up to £664,918.57 subject to funding conditions being met. The Department also contributes £1.9m towards the provision of local advice services; this funding is matched by local councils who contribute a further £1.9m. Subject to appraisal Neighbourhood Renewal in the North West will provide £124,424 to the Derry CAB.

Table 2 shows details of Northern Ireland Housing Executive planned improvement schemes currently onsite in the Limavady and Coleraine District Office areas (which include the East Derry/Londonderry constituency boundaries).

Ardcarne Park Environmental Improvement Scheme

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Social Development to confirm if the Ardcarne Park environmental improvement scheme has been factored in the Housing Executive budget. (AQW 6257/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Due to the collapse of the land and properly market, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive expects to have a shortfall of £100m across its budget in each of the next 2 years. This has resulted in a formal review of all improvement and maintenance schemes, such as this one at Ardcarne Park.

A revised programme is being developed and will be published in due course once funding is available.

Community Workers

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when she will make a decision on the position of the community worker in Bloomfield Estate, Bangor, whose salary runs out at the end of March 2009. (AQW 6291/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive has confirmed that the housing community worker post will be funded for 2009/10.
Pensioner Bungalows

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when she will make a decision on the maintenance scheme for pensioners bungalows at Ballyree Drive, Bangor, which have been condemned as a health hazard since 2002. (AQW 6292/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Due to the review of the Housing Executive’s programmes, caused by the very significant shortfall in their budget, the Housing Executive is not yet able to confirm the contents of its programme of maintenance schemes for 2009/10. A revised programme of upcoming schemes will be formulated and the Housing Executive’s District Housing Plans, due for publication during summer 2009, will contain the relevant information. The delivery of this programme will be dependent on the availability of finance. In the meantime the Housing Executive will continue to carry out a repair service to the properties.

Social Security Offices

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development what the average waiting time is for a job interview at the Social Security Offices in (i) Lurgan; (ii) Portadown; and (iii) Banbridge. (AQW 6297/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Jobs and Benefits Service is jointly delivered by the Social Security Agency (SSA) and the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL). An initial job interview comprises two parts:
1. A claim form check undertaken by SSA staff
2. A work focussed interview (WFI) carried out by DEL staff.

During February 2009 the average waiting times for a first interview were as set out below:

Since I took up office in May 2007 a total of 84 newbuild units have been started by Housing Associations in the Upper Bann Constituency which includes Lurgan, Portadown, Craigavon and Banbridge. Six of these units are for people with learning difficulties and the remainder are classified as General Needs.

In respect of my plans for next year, the Social Housing Development Programme is currently being finalised and when available, will outline the new housing provision that will be delivered across Upper Bann and indeed Northern Ireland over the next five years. The Programme will be published on the Housing Executive’s website at www.nihe.gov.uk and I will place a copy in the Assembly Library.

Maintenance Schemes

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development what maintenance schemes will go ahead in the (i) Lurgan; (ii) Portadown; and (iii) Banbridge areas, for Housing Executive tenants, in the next financial year. (AQW 6299/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Due to the review of the Housing Executive’s programmes, caused by the very significant shortfall in their budget, the Housing Executive is not yet able to confirm the contents of its programme of maintenance schemes for 2009/10. A revised programme of upcoming schemes will be formulated and the Housing Executive’s District Housing Plans, due for publication during summer 2009, will contain the relevant information. The delivery of this programme will be dependent on the availability of finance.

Housing Executive

The Minister for Social Development: My Department’s Resource Accounts are audited under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, and in accordance with United Kingdom Auditing Standards, as issued by the Auditing Practices Board. The annual audit is completed by the Comptroller & Auditor General of the Northern Ireland Audit Office. It is not practical to provide details of the last 3 year’s Accounts in this response. However, the Member will be aware that the published versions of the final audited accounts for each year, are available from the Assembly library.

Housing Executive

The Minister for Social Development: There are 71 pensioner bungalows in the Bloomfield Estate in Bangor which still require to be rebuilt or have maintenance done to them.

Recent Visit to the United States

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to (i) outline the purpose of her recent visit to the United States; (ii) detail the costs involved with this trip, including (a) flights; (b) hotels; and (c) transportation; and (iii) detail how many officials were in attendance and their associated costs.

(AQW 6395/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The main purpose of my visit to the United States was to gain further understanding of how the American City, State and Federal Authorities deliver Housing and Urban Regeneration Programmes and how that can inform our work in Northern Ireland. In particular, I was able to explore how their experiences might help us tackle our divided communities and build a Shared Future, as I believe that segregation impedes community development and perpetuates disadvantage.

My visit proved to be very productive with more than 20 meetings with senior Political Representatives and officials from both philanthropic and not for profit organisations in New York City, Annapolis, Maryland and in Washington DC.

In addition, my visit also allowed me to participate in the St Patrick’s Day programme in Washington and attend a number of functions as a member of the Executive, along with my colleagues the First and deputy First Minister. These functions included a reception at the White House with President Obama.

My Private Secretary and Special Adviser and one Senior Departmental Official accompanied me to the United States. My officials have not yet been provided with the final costs of the trip and at present I am only able to detail that the total cost of flights was £9351.75. I will write to the member as soon as the details of the other expenses which he has requested become available.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

E-mail Facilities

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission if it will consider surveying MLAs to see how many are able to use e-mail facilities. (AQW 6005/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): The Assembly Commission has no specific plans to survey MLAs to see how many are able to use e-mail facilities. However, the Commission’s Corporate Plan for the period from 1 April 2009 to 31 March 2011 includes a commitment to undertake a survey of Members across a range of services. In addition, the Corporate Plan includes an action to develop and implement a Members’ development programme. It is likely that the Members’ survey will help to decide what issues may be included in this development programme.

Computer/E-mail Training

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission which MLAs have availed of computer/e-mail training. (AQW 6077/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): Whilst it is not appropriate to comment on whether individual Members have availed of training opportunities, I can confirm that both the IS Office and the Assembly training and development officer have provided informal training sessions, on specific topics, to those Members who have requested training since the start of the current mandate.

Assembly Translators

Mr D Bradley asked the Assembly Commission if Assembly translators of Ulster Scots or Irish are authorised to provide Assembly Members with translations of speeches to be made on the floor of the House. (AQW 6083/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): As you will be aware, the complement of the Office of the Official Report (Hansard) includes provision for staff to provide reporting and interpreting services in respect of Irish and Ulster Scots.

I can inform you that, in working to achieve its objectives of producing and publishing accurate, consistent and timely Hansard reports, and in providing accurate and timely interpreting services for the Speaker and Clerks at Table, the Office can provide Members with pre-reporting translation services. However, such services will be provided only when the material in question is considered suitable, is for a Member speaking in a personal capacity and resources are available. All requests for translations should be made through the Editor/Deputy Editor, who will decide whether such a service could and should be provided in the circumstances that apply at the time.

Assembly Web Services

Mr P Ramsey asked the Assembly Commission whether it is aware of complaints from Assembly Members that there are ongoing problems of accessibility to Assembly Web Services from constituency offices, and what steps will be taken to solve the problem. (AQW 6086/09)
The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): I would refer you to Assembly Questions AQW 2606/08, AQW 3232/08, AQW 8185/08, AQW 1924/09 and 4914/09 for previous replies on this and related matters.

I can report that the Assembly Commission at its meeting on 27 January 2009 considered a report on the status of the Northern Ireland Assembly internet connection which affects both outgoing and incoming internet access. To address the issues identified, approval was given to the IS Office to prioritise the move to a faster connection and review the performance of the internet connection following that improvement. This work is currently underway.

Assembly Questions and Answers

Mr P Ramsey asked the Assembly Commission whether there is an intention to make a publicly available searchable database similar to that on AssIst, on the website to allow members of the public to search for and view Assembly questions and answers. (AQW 6090/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Dr Robert Coulter): One of the key objectives of the Assembly’s Engagement Strategy is to enhance the public’s perception and understanding of the role of the Assembly, its workings and proceedings. As a result, a project has been initiated to redevelop the Assembly website, and to develop, and enhance the content provided. The enhanced content will include the integration of the Assembly Information Management System (AIMS), currently available on AssIst, allowing users of the website to search for and view Assembly questions and answers.

Cost of Heating in Parliament Buildings

Mr Durkan asked the Assembly Commission (i) what is the annual financial cost of heating in Parliament Buildings; (ii) what assessment has been made of carbon emissions resulting from heating the building; (iii) what advice has been received in relation to heating the building; and (iv) whether existing practice conforms to advice received. (AQW 6097/09)

(iii) The Assembly Commission tasked the Carbon Trust with carrying out an assessment of energy saving opportunities for Parliament Buildings in June 2008. This report detailed various initiatives, both short and long term, to improve the overall energy performance of Parliament Buildings. In addition, the Commission works closely with the Department of Finance and Personnel's Engineering Services and Energy Unit to progress energy saving initiatives.

(iv) The existing practice does conform to the advice received. Further to this advice Properties Directorate are in the process of reviewing the current building energy management system with a view to upgrading it. This will allow us to better regulate and control the heating and cooling systems in the building.

MLA Trips

Mr Lunn asked the Assembly Commission to detail the amount spent on sending MLAs on trips outside Northern Ireland, broken down by Assembly Committee or group, in (i) the 2007/2008 financial year; and (ii) the 2008/2009 financial year. (AQW 6117/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): Financial reports for committee members’ spend on travel and subsistence are available. However, the reports do not differentiate between spend incurred while on visits inside Northern Ireland and spend incurred while on visits outside Northern Ireland. In addition, due to a change in accounting arrangements in April 2008, the figures available for 1 April 2008 – 31 December 2008 also include the cost of staff travel on committee visits.

The financial report for the period 1 April 2007 – 31 March 2008 indicates that £57,559.40 was spent on committee members’ travel and subsistence. This includes the cost of all committee visits inside and outside Northern Ireland.

The financial report for the period 1 April 2008 – 31 December 2008 indicates that £69,836.28 was spent on committee travel and subsistence. This includes the cost of all committee visits inside and outside Northern Ireland and the cost of staff travel on committee visits.

The Appendix attached details the amount spent by each committee on members’ travel and subsistence for the 2007/2008 financial year and up to 31 December 2008 for the 2008/2009 financial year. Financial reports do not currently differentiate between expenditure on visits within Northern Ireland and those outside of Northern Ireland. The tables below therefore include the cost of all committee visits inside and outside Northern Ireland. In addition, due to a change in accounting arrangements, the figures provided for the 2008/2009 financial year also include the cost of staff travel on committee visits.

Assembly Shop

Ms S Ramsey asked the Assembly Commission, pursuant to its answer to AQW 5367/09, to provide a list of (i) Local Enterprise Agencies; and (ii) local crafters, that it contacted. (AQW 6174/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): Attached is a list of all Local Enterprise Agencies that the Assembly contacted in relation to the development of the Assembly Gift Shop.

Through the Local Enterprise Agencies, local crafters then made contact with the Assembly with a view to displaying/selling their goods in the Assembly Gift Shop. As the Gift Shop developed a number of crafters also made contact with other crafters (through other networking channels) advising them of the initiative.

Engagement Strategy

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission to confirm the costs involved in delivering the commitment of the Commission to ‘an annual public audit’ and the appointment of a continuous professional development co-ordinator’ as outlined in its Engagement Strategy. (AQW 6549/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): The cost of the annual public audit, which will be met from within the existing budget for the Engagement Directorate, is estimated to be approximately £40k. The Assembly Secretariat already has a Training and Development Coordinator, and it is intended that this person will additionally have responsibility for the continuous professional development of Members.
Assembly Festival

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission what are the estimated costs of holding an annual Assembly festival and being represented at local events including the Balmoral Show; the Belfast Festival at Queen’s; and summer schools.

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): The estimated costs of the Assembly Festival are £100k. In addition, the Commission is proposing to develop a significant exhibition which will move around Northern Ireland, and which will form a centre piece of the Assembly Festival. The additional cost of this exhibition is estimated to be £100k.

The Engagement Strategy also outlined that the “Assembly will be represented at local events of strategic importance, for example, the Balmoral Show, the Belfast Festival at Queen’s, summer schools etc.” Whilst the detail of this work, including the events to be attended, has not been finalised, this activity will be undertaken by existing staff within the Assembly’s External Liaison Unit within existing budgets.

Engagement Strategy

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission to confirm the costs involved in delivering the commitment of the Commission to (i) ‘the recruitment and appointment’ of an individual with journalistic experience; (ii) the development of a communication strategy; and (iii) the complete redevelopment of the Assembly website.

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray):

(i) The staffing complement of the Engagement Directorate includes provision for three Information Officers; the appointment of an individual with journalistic experience will involve one of these existing posts being re-graded to Deputy Information Officer. Therefore this does not represent any additional cost to the Assembly Secretariat, and in fact presents a small saving.

(ii) The development of a communication strategy will be undertaken ‘in house’ by the Head of Media Services, at no additional cost.

(iii) The complete redevelopment of the website, incorporating the following elements, is estimated to cost £750k:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Cost</th>
</tr>

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Technical design study</td>

</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

A project team has been established to oversee the redevelopment of the website, and the first stage of this work will be the development of a business case for consideration by the Assembly Commission.

Engagement Strategy

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission to confirm the costs involved in delivering the commitment of the Commission to (i) providing an additional committee room with video conferencing facilities; (ii) implementing broadcasting facilities in all committee rooms; and (iii) live screen/recorded broadcasting of all committees in public session.

(AQW 6552/09)
Assembly Roadshows

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission to confirm the costs involved in delivering its commitment in relation to the delivery of outreach events and public meetings, including the costs for each of the Assembly roadshows; and to confirm the numbers that attended each roadshow to date. (AQW 6602/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): The Engagement Directorate currently deliver a wide range of outreach events and public meetings, and this activity will continue to be undertaken by existing staff within the Assembly’s External Liaison Unit, within existing budgets.

The cost of the road shows has not been finalised as they are still ongoing, however the primary costs are newspaper advertising and venue costs. Estimated costs for this expenditure, together with the number of attendees, are as follows:

Fair Employment Tribunal

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission to confirm the number of legal proceedings pending against it, including cases before the Fair Employment Tribunal. (AQW 6606/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): There are currently 9 cases which are at varying stages of litigation. Two of these cases are in respect of one former member of staff and are enjoined as a single Fair Employment Tribunal case.

Engagement Strategy

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission to confirm the costs involved in delivering its commitment to the development of a public cafe, provision of improved signage, a visitor centre with permanent exhibits, a retail/bookshop, a dedicated education room and a ‘mini’ assembly chamber. (AQW 6609/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): The Engagement Strategy summarises a range of initiatives already being undertaken by the Commission, as well as a number of new initiatives, some of which require the development of separate business cases. These business cases will be considered by the Commission on their respective merits, and funding bids then made.

The Commission has estimated that the following new initiatives, if business cases are approved, would require additional expenditure, as follows:
• Development of a public café £30k
• Provision of improved signage Costs to be determined
• A visitor centre with permanent exhibits, a retail/bookshop, a dedicated education room and a ‘mini’ assembly chamber (subject to the development of the Accommodation Strategy) £500k

Engagement Strategy

Mr Attwood asked the Assembly Commission whether it considered and agreed the costs involved in the commitments contained in its Engagement Strategy for the Northern Ireland Assembly. (AQW 6610/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Moutray): Yes. The costs involved in the commitments contained in the Engagement Strategy were considered and agreed by the Commission on 13th January 2009.
NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 3 April 2009

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Planning Appeals Commission

Mr Elliott asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister if planning applications refused under PPS14 will continue to be considered by the Planning Appeals Commission under the criteria set out in PPS14 or under the new criteria in PPS21. (AQW 5861/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness): The Planning Appeals Commission is an independent tribunal Non-Departmental Public Body. Given its independent tribunal status, its Chief Commissioner has been asked to provide a response directly to you, and we understand that she has written to you in the following terms:

“I have been asked to provide you with information requested in the above Assembly Question.

In determining appeals the Planning Appeals Commission must have regard to the development plan (if material) and to any other material considerations.

Each appeal submitted to the Commission is considered and determined in the context of the evidence presented by all participants in that appeal. The Commission would expect that evidence to include the relevant Planning Policy Statements.”

Commissioner for Children and Young People

Mr Weir asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what controls exist to monitor the expenditure of the Northern Ireland Children’s Commissioner. (AQW 5965/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The amounts paid in legal fees by the Commissioner for Children and Young People for Northern Ireland in each of the last three years were:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>

</tr>
<tr>

The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) has various controls in place to monitor the Commissioner’s expenditure. These controls in the main are operated by its sponsoring body, the Children and Young People’s Unit within OFMDFM.

The relationship between the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and the Commissioner is set out in the Management Statement and Financial Memorandum (MSFM). The MSFM sets out the broad framework within which the Commissioner operates and is based on a Treasury model. The Financial Memorandum section of the MSFM sets out in great detail certain aspects of the financial provisions, which the Commissioner is required to observe. The MSFM is “signed off” by the Commissioner and the OFMDFM Accounting Officer.
OFMDFM and the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) also agree the Commissioner’s business plan. The Business Plan includes key targets and milestones for the year immediately ahead, and links to budgeting information so that resources allocated to achieve specific objectives can readily be identified by OFMDFM.

To monitor actual expenditure against planned expenditure, the Commissioner’s monthly draw down requests are accompanied by monthly profiles and explanations on expenditure, which are scrutinised before approval of payment is given. Also, updates are requested from the Commissioner at each of the financial monitoring rounds.

Quarterly liaison meetings take place between the Commissioner and departmental officials. An official from the Children and Young People’s Unit also attends the Commissioner’s Audit and Risk Committee quarterly meetings and reports back to the department any issues raised.

To monitor the Commissioner’s accountability functions a senior OFMDFM official holds Accountability Meetings with the Commissioner and her Chief Executive every six months, mid year and end of year. The end of year meeting is attended by the Department’s Accounting Officer.

In addition to these procedures, all circulars and guidance issued by DFP are brought to the Commissioner’s attention.

However, we would ask you to note that, in order to ensure appropriate independence of the Commissioner’s office, relationships between the Commissioner, Ministers and OFMDFM are governed by the ‘arm’s length’ principle, wherein the primary role of Ministers is to set the Commissioner’s legal and financial framework and the structure of her funding and management. Within this framework it is the role of the Commissioner to determine her policy and activities in keeping with her statutory responsibilities and the requirements of Assembly policy. OFMDFM has the right of access to carry out any examination of the internal financial control systems as may be required by its Accounting Officer.

The total amount of funding provided to the Commissioner in financial year 07/08 was £1,897,000.

Commissioner for Children and Young People

Mr Weir asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what was the total amount of funding for the Northern Ireland Children’s Commissioner, in the last financial year. (AQW 5966/09)

Infrastructure Projects

Mr McQuillan asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline all infrastructure projects planned for the East Londonderry constituency through the Investment Strategy; and the monetary value of each investment, up to 2011. (AQW 6210/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Please find the information you requested in Annex A. Projects of £0.5m or more have been listed separately. In some cases it has been necessary to include the full value of projects covering an area greater than East Londonderry and where costs cannot be disaggregated by constituency.

Northern Ireland Terrorist Victims Together

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what discussions have been held with Northern Ireland Terrorist Victims Together about funding for their organisation.

(AQW 6369/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: There has been no approach to the department from a group named “Terrorist Victims Together” for help, advice or funding.

Commissioner for Children and Young People

Mr Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what discussions it has held with the Commissioner for Children and Young People in relation to its annual budget.

(AQO 2362/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Commissioner has a set budget to work within every year. The Children and Young People’s Unit (CYPU), in OFMDFM is the sponsoring body for the Commissioner for Children and Young People.

Discussions take place between the Commissioner and officials in CYPU in relation to the Commissioner’s budget on a regular basis. CYPU discuss and agree the Commissioner’s annual Business Plan which is linked to budgeting information on the Commissioner’s objectives. The Commissioner’s financial performance is discussed at quarterly liaison meetings and also at the Commissioner’s Audit and Risk Committee meetings which an official from CYPU attends. Accountability meetings on the Commissioner’s expenditure are held with the Commissioner twice yearly.
Efficiency Savings: Regional Co-operative

Mr Kennedy asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister what contact it has had with its counterparts in Scotland and Wales on identifying efficiencies that could be gained through closer co-operation between the three regions. (AQO 2364/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We have an extensive range of ongoing contacts with our counterparts in Scotland and Wales. These are held both at official and at Ministerial level, on a formal and informal basis, and are aimed at improving co-operation and identifying synergies on issues of mutual interest. For example, we met the Prime Minister and the Heads of the Devolved Administrations on 25 February 2009 and agreed that all regions should consider and share instances of good practice and ideas which had been developed to effectively address problems emerging from the economic downturn.

In addition, the Minister for Finance and Personnel attended a quadrilateral meeting of Finance Ministers on 12 March 2009. One of the items for discussion during the course of the quadrilateral was the approach to delivering efficiency savings across the four jurisdictions over the period to 2010-11.

Equality Commission: Amending Legislation

Mrs D Kelly asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how it intends to bring forward amending legislation as requested by the Equality Commission. (AQO 2365/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Bob Collins, Chief Commissioner of the Equality Commission, wrote to Junior Ministers on 5 February 2009 to highlight a number of areas where the Commission believes that Northern Ireland equality legislation needs to be amended. The Commission submitted a detailed paper setting out six priorities for legislative amendment with a summary of the rationale underpinning each recommendation.

The Commission has recommended the introduction of new legislation to prohibit age discrimination in non-employment areas and has recommended significant amendments to five separate pieces of anti-discrimination legislation dealing with race, disability, sex and fair employment. Each of the recommendations would require the introduction of primary legislation to secure the necessary legislative change.

We need to ensure that our citizens enjoy the same rights and protections as others across the European Union. We will therefore consider the Commission’s recommendations in conjunction with proposed developments elsewhere when deciding the future direction of anti-discrimination legislation here.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many employees in the Department travel from Derry/Londonderry to work in Belfast. (AQW 6720/09)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Two of our employees travel from Derry/Londonderry to work in Belfast.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr Maginness asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the allocation of Farm Modernisation Scheme funding met with all the relevant EU legislative rules regarding the allocation of EU funds. (AQW 6347/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms M Gildernew): The Farm Modernisation Programme is an integral part of the Rural Development Programme approved by the European Commission in July 2007. As such, my officials considered that it met all relevant EU legislation.
EU rules associated with implementing rural development programmes do not oblige my Department to seek clearance from the European Commission on either selection criteria or operational matters.

My Department is obliged to consult the Rural Development Programme’s Monitoring Committee on the selection criteria and it has done so.

Farm Modernisation Programme

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if the EU authorities have approved the application process for the Farm Modernisation Programme that commenced on 17th February 2009.

(AQW 6372/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: EU rules associated with implementing rural development programmes do not oblige my Department to seek clearance from the European Commission on either selection criteria or operational matters. Consequently, my Department did not seek the Commission’s approval of the application process for the Farm Modernisation Programme. My Department is obliged to consult the Rural Development Programme’s Monitoring Committee on the scheme selection criteria which it has done.

Badger Baiting

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what co-operation exists between her Department and the Department of the Environment in relation to ending the practice of badger baiting.

(AQW 6414/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Under the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, it is an offence to cause unnecessary suffering to any animal. It is also a specific offence to cause unnecessary suffering to any animal by causing, procuring, assisting or spectating at the baiting of that animal. Any person found guilty of these offences is liable, on summary conviction, to up to three months imprisonment or a fine up to £5,000 or both.

While the PSNI is responsible for enforcing animal welfare legislation with regards to non-farmed animals such as badgers, my officials form part of a multi-agency body known as The Partnership for Action against Wildlife Crime (PAW). PAW partners include representatives of organisations involved in wildlife law enforcement including the PSNI, NI Environment Agency, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, conservation organisations, field sports organisations and land-owning interests. PAW liaises closely with the PSNI Wildlife Officer, and other key enforcement agencies. It aims to facilitate an exchange of information and also to increase public awareness of the key issues, including animal welfare, arising from badger persecution and illegal hunting of wild deer.

The issue of the level of penalties available to the Courts will form a significant part of my deliberations on new animal welfare legislation. It is my intention to ensure that the penalties available for animal cruelty, whether fines or custodial sentences, are a sufficient deterrent. This will include offences relating to badger baiting. When bringing forward my legislative proposals I will, of course, be liaising closely with the Environment Minister and my other Ministerial colleagues.

Meetings with MEPs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail any meetings she has held over the past 12 months with Northern Ireland’s three MEPs individually or as a group.

(AQW 6428/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Over the past 12 months, I have had 2 meetings with Jim Nicholson MEP, 1 meeting with Ms Bairbre De Brun MEP, and 1 joint meeting with Jim Nicholson and Bairbre de Brun.
Careers in Fishing

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she is taking to encourage people into a career in fishing considering that only seven people responded to a fishing advertisement that was circulated to over 50,000 people.

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The key encouraging people into a career in fishing is to have an efficient profitable industry which is of a size and capability appropriate to the fishing opportunities available to it. There are a range of financial assistance possibilities under Axis 1 of the European Fisheries Fund to help adapt the fleet to make it more economically efficient. I have asked the Fisheries Forum to advise me on how best to target the €14m of public money to achieve better profitability. I hope to receive the Forum's report shortly which will no doubt consider issues such as the attracting new entrants and maintaining skills in the industry.

Small Boat Fishery

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she would support a locally based small boat fishery, targeting shellfish in Northern Ireland waters; and what management and encouragement her Department would be able to offer those interested in such a venture.

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I am happy to support any fishery that is economically, environmentally, and socially sustainable and my Department will work with the industry to develop sustainable management measures for such fisheries. The inshore area is complex however with both static and mobile gear fishermen operating in the same areas as well as environmental designations, water quality and food hygiene issues to be considered. This means that any new proposals require careful consideration and the involvement of all stakeholders that may be affected.

Mussel On-Growing Sites in Belfast Lough

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) If she is aware that an application for a mussel on-growing site in Belfast Lough had been submitted in 2001 by a Strangford constituent; and (ii) if she will advise where the application is in the process; and when the constituent can expect a decision.

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I am aware there are a number of outstanding licence applications for mussel on-growing sites in Belfast Lough including one submitted by a Strangford constituent of Mr Shannon. These licence applications have been placed on hold due to the current moratorium on the granting of any further licences for the bottom culture of mussels. The moratorium was introduced because of concerns about the ability of local sea loughs to sustain what was a rapid development of the industry and about demand for seed exceeding supply.

Carrying capacity models have been developed and are being tested. Once fully operational the models will help inform decision-making on lifting the moratorium. Furthermore, one of the recommendations in a subsequent review of the bottom grown mussel sector is that no further sites should be licensed until the end of 2009 at the earliest. The moratorium therefore remains in place and I wrote to Mr Shannon’s constituent in November 2008 to advise him of this position.

Wild Mussel Fishery in Copeland Sound

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) if she is aware that a wild mussel fishery in Copeland Sound was planned for January 2009 in which 20 local vessels have expressed an interest and expended money for equipping the fishery; and (ii) if she can explain why the fishery has not yet been opened; and if she will confirm an opening date.

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I am aware that some fishermen interested in this fishery may have hoped to be able to fish it by January 2009. However before this fishery can start several stages must be gone through. Management measures have to be agreed and this requires consultation with all relevant stakeholders that may be affected by this fishery. The fishery also requires an Appropriate (environmental impact) Assessment due to its proximity to the Outer Ards Special Protected Area for birds and in order for the mussels to be sold directly for human consumption the area has to be classified by the Food Standards Agency (FSA).

A consultation on management measures was held from January to March and subject to a favourable Appropriate Assessment we intend to add these as conditions to the general fishing licence so that as soon as the area is classified by the FSA fishing may commence in a sustainable manner. I understand that the FSA may be in a position to classify the site during April.

School Children Receiving Milk

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her Department’s target to ensure that 100% of school children receive milk; and to give a time-scale for the completion of this target.
(AQW 6810/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I understand fully your desire to increase uptake under the EU School Milk Scheme but have to balance this with what is practical and achievable with the finite funding available.

My Department has been proactive to encourage uptake. This included writing on two occasions to the Chief Executive of each of the five Education and Library Boards and the Principals of all nursery and primary schools in the north of Ireland. In particular the letter outlined the important contribution that milk can make to a healthy balanced diet as well as encouraging those schools that did not provide drinking milk to pupils to consider doing so. I am pleased to advise that in 2007/08 almost 75% of nursery and primary schools in the North participated in the Scheme which compares with less than 40% in the South where a higher rate of national subsidy was paid.

My Department has also been working with the Dairy Council for NI (DCNI). In 2007/08 it was awarded funding under the Regional Food Programme for activity to encourage more schools to participate in the provision dairy products under the Scheme and to communicate the benefits of taking school milk to parents of all P1 children. As a result a further 13 primary schools agreed to make milk available to pupils under the Scheme.

Recently this funding was complemented by almost €285,000 EU funding towards an information programme which aims to reinforce the role of dairy products in our daily breakfast and to increase uptake of milk under the EU School Milk Scheme. The programme commenced in October 2008 and it will use a mixture of radio and TV (both supported by PR activities), direct mail and school education to achieve its goal.

So the current position is that we are doing what we can to help the dairy sector under the EU School Milk Scheme.

Horses Slaughtered in England

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to provide statistics or information held by her Department about the number of horses that leave here to be slaughtered in England for sale in the European market. (AQW 6815/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Records for 2008 show 720 horses were exported from here for slaughter in Britain.

Records for 2009 to date show 190 horses were exported from here for slaughter in Britain.

Single Farm Payments

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development considering issue of Single Farm Payments commenced at the beginning of December 2008, on what date did final farm inspections end for the 2008/09 year. (AQW 6863/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The final inspection in relation to Single Farm Payment for the 2008/09 year was completed on 19/01/09, and covered the protection of water against nitrate pollution.
Dangerous Dogs Legislation

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when she expects to introduce dangerous dogs legislation in the Assembly.

(AQO 2432/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Review of the dangerous dogs legislation is drawing to a close.

I expect to have all the relevant evidence presented to me in a matter of weeks. I intend to bring forward proposals for consideration by the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee in early May. I will then publish my proposals for consultation with key stakeholders.

I will then decide what legislation is needed.

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) how applicants for the Farm Modernisation Scheme are classified; and (ii) if all the farmers who queued for funding were considered applicants; or only those that were successful in submitting an application.

(AQO 2436/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: There is no classification of applicants and anyone who submitted an application whether it was over the counter, by proxy or by post is considered an applicant.

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the way in which the application process for the Farm Modernisation Scheme has reduced bureaucracy, considering that three out of four of the documents in the application process for the scheme were over ten pages long.

(AQO 2437/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My assessment of the application process based on the level of interest that has been expressed by farmers, and the feedback that I and the Department have received is, this programme has achieved reduced bureaucracy, has reduced red tape and the requirements to apply have been easily understood. This is borne out by the very low error rate on applications and the ease with which the applications are being processed.

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the decision to accept applications to the Farm Modernisation Programme on a first come first served basis was compliant with the Departmental Equality Impact Assessment for the Rural Development Programme 2007-2013.

(AQO 2438/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I believe that the first come first served method of accepting applications is compliant with the Equality Impact Assessment for the NI Rural Development Programme 2007-2013. People who work in agriculture and live in rural areas have a right to be treated equally and I am keen to ensure that this issue is at the heart of the Department’s work. The opportunity to submit applications was made as accessible as possible over the counter, in person or by proxy, and by post.

In addition, and in keeping with this ethos, you will be aware that I had asked for a review as late as last October to ensure that all stakeholders were on board with this approach. This indeed was the case as no other method was being put forward for consideration which could stand up to audit scrutiny and maintain my desire for reduced bureaucracy. I am content that it was the right thing to do but having said that, I have asked for a review of what happened and further consideration given to future tranches in light of the experiences on this first round.
Woodland: Comprehensive Inventory

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what consideration she has given to creating and maintaining a comprehensive inventory of all woodland. (AQO 2439/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I have considered this matter in some detail as outlined in written answers to recent questions on the same subject from Mr D Ford (AQW 5818/09 and AQW 1912/09).

A very significant resource would be required to produce and periodically update a comprehensive woodland inventory. I am unable to commit the level of resource required at this time.

However, I have initiated a process whereby, in partnership with the NI Environment Agency (NIEA), other available woodland information will be collated to provide more comprehensive inventory data, allowing changes in woodland cover over the long term to be more fully captured.

Rural Businesses

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to increase resources for promoting rural businesses. (AQO 2440/09)

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the correspondence her Department has received from the European Commission since the application deadline for the Farm Modernisation Scheme. (AQO 2441/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The deadline for submitting applications under the Farm Modernisation Scheme is 31 March 2009.

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the advice she sought and from what sources before introducing the Farm Modernisation Scheme. (AQO 2443/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: There are various stages European Programmes go through prior their implementation. This Programme was subject to an ex-ante appraisal, a policy appraisal, it was included in the Programme Document submitted to European Commission, legal advice was sought on a number of issues and it was also subjected to an economic appraisal. All of these stages were consulted on widely both internal and external to my Department and with the Monitoring Committee for the Fund.

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the statement by the spokesperson for the EU’s Agriculture Commissioner, that her Department’s method of allocating the Farm Modernisation Scheme was “unacceptable” as it does not comply with the EU rules for offering financial support on an equal basis to all applicants. (AQO 2445/09)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The statements by the European Commission’s spokesman on the 17 February certainly escalated media interest in the Farm Modernisation scheme but did not alter my opinion that the scheme had a selection process in place that met all the EU legislative requirements.
DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding his Department or its agencies provide to Neighbourhood Renewal areas, broken down by (i) organisation; and (ii) Neighbourhood Renewal area.

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr G Campbell): The requested information, where available, is set out in the attached Annex A.

Annex A

ARTS

The Arts Council Northern Ireland has targeted areas of social deprivation, including Neighbourhood Renewal Areas, through the Re-imaging Communities Programme.

The attached table details funding provided by the Arts Council Northern Ireland to NRAs through its Re-Imaging Communities Programme. Since 2006-2007 to date the Arts Council has awarded a total of £1, 484, 973 to projects within the NRAs through the Re-Imaging Communities Programme.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) to outline his Department’s strategy for contributing to Neighbourhood Renewal objectives; (ii) what targeted measures are in place to deliver the objectives; and (iii) what funding is available to meet them.

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The work of my Department and its arms length bodies, both in areas designated as Neighbourhood Renewal Areas (NRAs) and throughout Northern Ireland makes a real contribution to providing better opportunities for those in disadvantaged areas.
Examples of work my Department is doing in the most disadvantaged areas of Northern Ireland, including in NRAs, are set out below:

(i) The Arts Council Northern Ireland has specifically targeted areas of social deprivation, including NRAs, through its Re-imaging Communities Programme. One of the strategic themes of the programme is ‘Working to complement the existing Neighbourhood Renewal programmes and policy’. The Arts Council Northern Ireland has been administering the Re-Imaging Communities programme over the period 2006/07 to the present.

(ii) When it launched in July 2006, the programme aimed to deliver 60 to 80 community-based projects within three years, with a spend of £3 million. This number of projects has been exceeded, with 112 projects funded to date.

The objective of the scheme is to help people feel part of the communities in which they live by enhancing the physical and natural environment; and removing displays of sectarian aggression and intimidation.

(iii) The Arts Council Northern Ireland has awarded a total of £1,484,973 to projects within the NRAs through the Re-Imaging Communities Programme since it opened in July 2006.

In addition, a total of £46,778 has been awarded through the Re-Imaging Communities Programme to District Councils and other organisations for projects which each cover several NRAs. The Arts Council Northern Ireland also awarded the City Council of Londonderry a grant of £180,254 in January 2005 under the Art of Regeneration Programme which works closely with the Re-imaging projects.

The Arts Council Northern Ireland suspended the Re-imaging Communities Programme on 19 June 2008 as the budget had been assigned or earmarked in full. Following discussions with the Arts Council Northern Ireland, my Department submitted a bid in the September Monitoring Round exercise. On 3 November 2008, the Finance Minister, Nigel Dodds announced an additional £500k for the Re-Imaging Communities Programme in the September Monitoring Allocations.

(i) Sport Northern Ireland’s proposed Active Communities Investment Programme has been designed to employ, deploy and train a network of full time and part time sports coaches and leaders to deliver activities in community and club settings across Northern Ireland, with a view of increasing participation in sport and physical recreation, especially among under represented groups.

(ii) Sport Northern Ireland is working in partnership with key stakeholders, e.g. Community/Voluntary, Statutory and Governing Bodies of Sport to achieve the following Programme Outcomes:

- the creation of a network of community sports coaches and leaders to deliver sport and recreational activities in sports club and community settings;
- increased participation in sport and physical recreation among under represented groups including young people, older people, women and girls, people with a disability, people from minority ethnic groups and people from socio-economically deprived groups;
- the provision of opportunities that support lifelong participation in sport and physical recreation in sports club and community settings; and,
- the development of effective working partnerships within and between district councils, governing bodies of sport, schools, sports clubs, and statutory, community and voluntary organisations.

(iii) The programme is open to applications from 11 consortia of district councils as outlined in Model 11b of the Review of Public Administration Consultation (March 2005), and will be implemented between 1 April 2009-31 March 2014.

Each consortium has been allocated an investment amount from the total available of circa £13m, based on population, health deprivation (need) and area. It is anticipated that this investment programme will create approximately 100 full time equivalent coaches who will deliver sport and physical activity across each consortium including NRAs.

Ireland Rugby Team

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he would consider holding a reception for the Ireland Rugby Team at Parliament Buildings.

(AQW 6525/09)
The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I have congratulated the Irish rugby team including current and former Ulster players; Stephen Ferris, Rory Best, Tom Court, Paddy Wallace and Tommy Bowe following their momentous victory over Wales in Cardiff to win the 6 Nations Championship, the Triple Crown and the Grand Slam and I propose to discuss with the Ulster Rugby Football Union any arrangements for marking this achievement.

Northern Ireland Football Team

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he would issue a statement to congratulate the NI football team on the victory over Poland on Saturday, 28 March 2009. (AQW 6791/09)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: It would not be appropriate for me to issue a statement of congratulations every time the Northern Ireland team win a match. However I would hope to be in the position of being able to issue a statement of congratulations to the Northern Ireland football team when they have successfully qualified for the 2010 FIFA World Cup in South Africa.

I will continue to support the Northern Ireland football team throughout the duration of the qualifying competition and wish them every success.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Retired Teachers

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education when her Department provided the latest guidance to schools about the re-employment of recently retired teachers. (AQW 5598/09)

The Minister of Education (Ms C Ruane): I mí na Samhna 2006, spreag an Roinn fostóirí, nuair a bhí folúntais le lionadh - folúntais sealadacha san áireamh, chun tosaíocht a thabhairt do mhúinteoirí nua chailithe nó do mhúinteoirí cleachta a bhí ag iarraidh fíileadh chuig an fhostáilocht. (Imlitreach na Roinne 2006/23).

The Department last exhorted employers in November 2006 to give preference to newly qualified or experienced teachers seeking to return to employment when filling vacancies, including those of a temporary nature (Departmental Circular 2006/23). This reinforced earlier advice given in December 1999 (Circular 1999/30) and August 1991 (Circular 1991/34).

Reports have been provided at intervals to Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools since 1994 to assist them in monitoring the re-employment of retired teachers.

Capital Projects

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education to list all capital projects that have been delayed for more than 6 months. (AQW 6071/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá sonraithe i dTábla A thíos, priomhthionscadail caipitil atá i mbun pleanála agus a bhfuil moill níos mó ná sé mhí ag baint leo. Sonraíonn Tábla B cúig thionscadal a bhfuil an mhoill ama is faide orthu agus fad measta na moilí. Table A below details major capital projects in planning that have been delayed for more than six months. Table B details the five projects that have been delayed by the longest period of time and the estimated length of delay.

The projects identified have been subject to delay for a variety of reasons including site acquisition issues; review of projected long term enrolments; revised plans required; revisions to economic appraisals; and a legal challenge to the Major Works Construction Framework. The position has been assessed against the stage they might otherwise have expected to have reached by now.

Transfer 2010

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education if the criteria proposed for Transfer 2010 has been the subject of equality screening; and if so, to detail what the outcome was.

The Minister of Education: In my statement to the Assembly on 2 February 2009 I made a commitment to equality proof the recommendations contained within the Transfer 2010 guidance. That work is ongoing, and will involve the publication of an Equality Impact Assessment document for consultation. As part of the consultation process the Department of Education intends engaging with the Joint Consultative Forum, which provides a formal working link between public authorities in the education sector and the community and voluntary and trade union sectors and statutory equality authorities namely, the Equality Commission, the Community Relations Council and the Human Rights Commission.

Transfer 2010

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education if the criteria proposed for pupil Transfer 2010 has been discussed with the Equality Commission; and if so, what advice was given by the Commission.

Hope Centre in Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education if funding could be provided to support the Hope Centre in Ballymena to help it to continue to educate young people about the misuse and abuse of drugs.

The Minister of Education: Drugs and alcohol policy and the funding to implement that policy sit within the remit of Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety. My Department does not provide funding directly to any organisation to provide drugs and alcohol education.

However, schools and youth services have an important role to play in educating all our children and young people about the effects on the body of legal and illegal substances and the risks and consequences of their misuse. A number of steps have been taken to help schools to deliver this ‘universal’ drugs and alcohol education.

In May 2004, the Department issued Circular 2004/09, along with comprehensive guidance produced by a CCEA-led working group, to all schools on drawing up a drugs and alcohol policy and drug and alcohol education programme and on managing suspected drug and/or alcohol related incidents.

The revised curriculum includes a new area of Personal Development (PD) & Mutual Understanding/Learning for Life and Work, which provides opportunities for young people to develop the knowledge, understanding and skills to deal with issues such as drugs and alcohol.

In addition, the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have Drugs Education Officers to provide support to schools and my Department allocates funding to each ELBs and the Youth Council to support youth provision. Each of the boards issues funding for frontline youth provision which includes addressing, as part of an overall youth development programme, drugs and alcohol awareness sessions for young people.
Lislagan Primary School

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what action the North Eastern Education and Library Board will take in relation to car parking facilities at Lislagan Primary School after the recent meeting with stakeholders.

(AQW 6241/09)

The Minister of Education: I ndiaidh cruinnithe ar 26 Feabhra ina raibh oifigigh ó Bhord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirthuaisceart paiúteach ann, cuireadh in iúl don scoil gur chóir di foirm iarratais ar mhionoibreacha a chur isteach chuig an NEELB maidir le háiseanna pairceála.

Following a meeting on 26 February involving North Eastern Education and Library Board officials the school was advised that it should submit a minor works application form to the NEELB in respect of car-parking facilities. The Board will consider the request in due course, along with other competing priorities for minor works and the resources available.

Integrated Schools

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education to provide an update on the progress of her review of the viability criteria for integrated schools.

(AQW 6447/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an Roinn Oideachais tiomanta do théarmaí an athbhreithnithe agus tá siad faoi mheasúnú agam le m'oifigigh. Mar a léiríodh sa fhreagra a thug mé ar AQO 1786/09 agus ar AQW 4148/09, a foisiochd sa Tuairisc Oifigiúil ar 23 Eanáir agus 30 Eanáir 2009 faoi seach, tá sé ar intinn agam an t-athbhreithniú a chur i gcrích i mbliana.

I am considering with officials the terms of the review to which I have committed the Department of Education. As indicated in my response to AQO 1786/09 and AQW 4148/09 published in the Official Report on 23 January and 30 January 2009 respectively it is my intention to complete the review this year.

The necessity for an equality impact assessment will be considered once the terms of the review have been established.

Integrated Schools

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether she has carried out an equality impact assessment for her review of the viability criteria for integrated schools, and if so to provide details.

(AQW 6448/09)

Education and Library Boards

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Education (i) what funds are held by Education and Library Boards in contingency budgets; and (ii) what is the purpose of these contingency budgets.

(AQW 6454/09)

The Minister of Education: Táispeáinte thios na cistí a choimhionn an cúig Bhórd Oideachais agus Leabharlainne i mbuiséid teagmhásach a dön bhliain 2008/09:

Funds held in contingency budgets by the 5 Education and Library Boards for the 2008/09 year is as follows:
The funds set aside for contingency purposes are utilised during the year depending on need. Funds not utilised can be used to meet other pressures.

LMS Contingency Funds are used to correct any significant errors in the application of the formula budget, provide for emergency costs, deal with changes in the characteristics of the school including in-year growth in pupil numbers, and other circumstances which the funding authority judges exceptional.

Curriculum Reserve Support Funding can be made available to schools that claim support for funding against criteria set out by the relevant funding authority. This includes assistance to phase in a reduction in teaching staff, avoidance of a reduction in teaching staff caused by a short term dip in enrolments, additional support for schools under a rationalisation proposal/study or development proposal, a need to maintain essential curriculum provision, and the appointment or retention of teachers from a particular community background in the case of integrated schools.

Fleming Fulton School

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Education what plans there are, when the Education and Skills Authority replaces the five Education and Library Boards, to consider granting Fleming Fulton School regional ‘centre of excellence’ status in light of its free provision of the LILAC project to all schools. (AQW 6475/09)

The Minister of Education: Níl stádas dá leithéid ar fáil faoi láthoi agus níl sé beartaithe go mbeidh sé ar fáil do scoileanna speisialta.

There is no such status currently available or planned to be available to special schools.

The current policy review of special educational needs and inclusion within the Department has considered issues within the existing framework around unacceptable levels of bureaucracy attached to the statutory assessment process, the need for early identification, prompt interventions and capacity building in mainstream schools for teachers of children with special educational needs. The future role of special schools in the sharing of expertise between and across school sectors is being considered as part of the Review. It will be a matter for the Chief Executive of the Education Skills Authority if he wishes to consider how the work of the LILAC project might be taken forward in the future.

Rathmore Primary School

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to provide a new school at Rathmore Primary School in Bangor. (AQW 6523/09)

The Minister of Education: Tugadh le fios ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt nach bhfuil pleán ar bith aige, faoi láthair, le scoil nua a thógáil ar son Rathmore Primary School.

The South Eastern Education & Library Board has advised that it has no plans, at this time, for a newbuild for Rathmore Primary School.

Education Welfare Service

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 7060/08, to detail the number of pupils referred to the Education Welfare Service for truancy problems, broken down by (i) household; (ii) social class, or socio-economic status, in each of the last five years. (AQW 6587/09)
The Minister of Education: Ní bhailíonn an Roinn an t-eolas a iarradh.

The Department does not collect the requested information.

As stated in my previous answer, information about referrals by schools to the Education Welfare Service because of concerns about attendance, is collected from each of the Education and Library Boards on an annual basis. These statistics are not broken down in the manner which the member requests.

Referrals can be for a variety of reasons, which include truancy but not exclusively so.

Statistics on the number of referrals for non-attendance are published annually on the Department’s website at www.deni.gov.uk/index/21-pupils_parents-pg/21-pupils_parents-non-attendance_pg.htm.

The table below shows the number of pupils referred for non-attendance by schools to the Education Welfare Service in each of the last five years.

Donagheade High School

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education if she will consult with the Minister for Regional Development about the road problems around Donagheade High School, before any decision is made on the future of the site. (AQW 6593/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt go ndéanfaidh siad teagmháil go díreach leis an tSeirbhís Pleanála, sula ndéanfar aon obair ag Donagheade High School lena dtuairimí a fháil le haon úsáid mholta eile a mbainfear as Donagheade High School. Ba chóir go sainaithneofaí aon fhadhbanna bóthair a d'fhéadfaí bheith ann tríd an teagmháil seo.

The South-Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that it will liaise directly with the Planning Service, prior to carrying out any work at Donagheade High School in order to get their views of any proposed alternative use of Donagheade High School. This liaison should identify any potential road problems.

Primary Schools

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education what action she has taken to encourage more males to become teachers in primary education. (AQW 6611/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá iartha ag mo Roinn, agus iarraidh mo Roinn, ar sholáthraithe cúrsaí in oideachas tosaigh múinteoirí (ITE) aird a tharraingt ar an éagothroime inscne sa ghairm bheatha, in earnáil na mbunscoileanna go háirithe.

My Department has encouraged, and will continue to encourage, all of the providers of initial teacher education (ITE) courses to draw attention to the gender imbalance in the profession, particularly in the primary sector.

As a result, the Higher Education Institutions are ensuring that males are well represented in publicity materials for their ITE courses and are targeting all-male schools and male groups in mixed schools for careers talks and presentations. They also meet regularly with careers teachers and senior staff to seek their help in encouraging males to apply for all ITE courses.

My Department is fully committed to integrating equality and diversity into its core priorities and functions. I recognise not only the importance of promoting equality, including gender equality, within education itself, but also the contribution that education can make to promoting equality throughout society.

Post-Primary Transfer

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education how much has been spent on each of the available options for Transfer (i) 2010; and (ii) 2011. (AQW 6661/09)

The Minister of Education: Beidh costais ar an scála céanna i gceist leis na sacruithe d’Aistriú 2010, a bhi bunaithe ar an Treoir a foilsíodh ar 2 Feabhra 2009, agus a bhi na costais a tabhaíodh sna blianta roimhe, agus is é an diféar is mó eatarthu ná an easpa caiteachais ar riaradh teiste lárchomhordaithe a d’éascaigh roghnú acadúil.

Arrangements for Transfer 2010, informed by guidance published on 2 February 2009, will involve costs of a scale similar to those incurred in previous years, with the main difference being the absence of expenditure on administering a centrally co-ordinated test to facilitate academic selection.

The cost of work carried out by CCEA on a test commissioned as a contingency is around £100,000. In the absence of Executive agreement on regulations for post-primary Transfer 2010, around £9,000 has been spent on the printing and distribution of guidance material for schools and parents.

Excluding the administration of a selection test, the annual transfer process, which is largely an Education and Library Board funded service, costs in the region of £1m to administer. This is provided for within the overall annual budget set for the Boards.

Arrangements for Transfer 2011 have yet to be determined.

School Building Projects

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education to how many school building projects are underway in the Upper Bann constituency. (AQW 6679/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá seacht mórthionscadal tógála i dtoghcheantar na Banna Uachtaraí faoi láthair. Tá sé thionscadal acu ag céimeanna éagsúla pleánála agus tá ceann amháin acu á thógáil faoi láthair.

There are currently seven major building projects in the Upper Bann constituency. Six are at various stages of planning and one is currently under construction.

St Malachy’s Primary School

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to provide a new school building for St Malachy’s Primary School, Bangor. (AQW 6684/09)

The Minister of Education: Is ceist í pleánáil eastát na scoileanna faoi chothabhairt a bhaineann le Comhairle na Scoileanna Caitliceacha faoi Chothabháil (CCMS) sa chéad dul sios.

The planning of the maintained schools estate is a matter for the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) in the first instance. A potential capital major works scheme for St Malachy’s Primary School is one of a number of schemes that CCMS has indicated it intends to pursue with the Department in the next number of months. The possibility of a new school building for St Malachy’s is therefore at a very early stage of consideration.
Rebuilding of Schools

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Education how many schools have been (a) built (b) closed; and (c) rebuilt, in the last 10 years. (AQW 6702/09)

The Minister of Education: Le deich mbliana anuas, (a) tógadh 20 scoil nua, (b) druideadh 70 scoil, agus (c) aththógadh 98 scoil. Is scoileanna iad na scoileanna nua thógtha a osclaíodh leis an éileamh ar áiteanna i gceantar a fhreastal nó le cónascadh dó chaoil nó níos mó a éascú.

In the last 10 years there have been (a) 20 new schools built (b) 70 schools closed, and (c) 98 schools rebuilt. The new schools built are schools that were opened to meet demand for places in an area or to facilitate the amalgamation of two or more schools.

Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education (i) is there a register of interests for the staff of the Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team; and (ii) is it included on the ESAIT website and if not, if a copy could be placed in the Assembly library. (AQW 6705/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá foireann ón Roinn Oideachais agus foireann ar iasacht ón cúig Bhord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne (eLBanna), ó CCMS agus ó CCEA ar Fhoireann Forfeidhmhíte an ESA. Bhionn an foireann seo faoi réir chórd iompraíochta a n-eagraíochtaí féin, ó thaobh dearbhaithe leasa de.

The ESA Implementation Team comprises staff from the Department of Education and staff seconded from the five Education and Library Boards (eLBs), CCMS and CCEA. These staff are subject to the code of conduct of their respective organisation with regard to declaration of interests.

There is no separate register of interests for the ESA Implementation Team. The Chief Executive Designate of ESA, Gavin Boyd, completes an annual declaration which is included in the DE annual accounts. The Education and Library Boards, CCEA and CCMS all maintain a register of interests which are available to the public by written request.

Strandtown Primary School

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education when the start date is for the rebuild of the Strandtown Primary School as part of the Phase 2 of the Belfast Education and Library Board strategic partnership arrangement capital build programme. (AQW 6706/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá mo Roinn ag déanamh breithnithe ar an bhreithmheas leasaithe eacnamaíochta don scéim mhóroibreacha caipitil ag Strandtown Primary School agus tá sí i mbun oibre le cuiidí le Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne Bhéil Feirste chun teacht ar réiteach, a sholáthróidh an luach ar airgead is fearr is féidir. Ni féidir, mar sin de, dáta deifnídeach tosaigh a thabhairt ag an am seo.

My Department is currently considering the revised economic appraisal for the major capital works scheme for Strandtown Primary School and is working to assist the Belfast Education and Library Board in arriving at an outcome, which will be the best value for money solution possible. It is, therefore, not possible to offer a definitive start date at this time.

Glenwood Primary School

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education when the start date is for the rebuild of the Glenwood Primary School as part of the Phase 2 of the Belfast Education and Library Board strategic partnership arrangement capital build programme. (AQW 6707/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá mo Roínn ag déanamh breithnithe ar an bhreithmheas leasaithe eacnamaíochta don scéim mhóroibreacha caipitil ag Glenwood Primary School agus tá sí i mbun oibre le cuiidí le Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne Bheal Feirste chun teacht ar réiteach, a sholáthróidh an luach ar airgead is fearr is féidir. Integrated Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how the failure to follow best employment practice affects the charitable status of an integrated school. (AQW 6708/09)

The Minister of Education: I ndiaidh don Roinn Oideachais dul i gcomhairle leis an Roinn Forbartha Sóisialta, cuireadh in iúl dom, as siocair gur ceist bainistíochta seachas ceist carthanachta i ní bhfuil deachleachtas fostaiochta i bhfeidhm i scoil imeasctha faoi chothabháil stáit, ní dóchúil go mbeadh aon tionchar aige seo ar stádas carthanachta na scoile.

After consultation with the Department of Social Development, I am advised that as the failure of best employment practices within a grant maintained integrated school is a management and not a charity matter, this would not be likely to have any impact on the school’s charitable status.

Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what the consequences are for a grant maintained integrated college if it fails to follow the code for practice that it signed with the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education. (AQW 6709/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní éilíonn an Roinn Oideachais ar scoileanna imeasctha glacadh le Ráiteas Prionsabal an NICIE ná é a shiniú. Is ceist í a shocraíonn na scoileanna féin cé acu atá siad ag iarraidh glacadh leis.

The Department of Education does not require an integrated school to sign up to the NICIE Statement of Principles. It is a matter for individual schools to decide if they wish to do so.

Integrated Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education if employees of integrated schools are entitled to parity of esteem with colleagues in (i) the Education and Library Board; (ii) Council for Catholic Maintained Schools; and (iii) Irish speaking sectors of education who are in similar jobs. (AQW 6710/09)

The Minister of Education: Is mór agam an obair a dhéanann fostaithe i ngach scoil, is cuma cén earnáil ina bhfuil siad. Bíonn ról ríthábhachtach acu in oideachas na ndaoine óga inár scoileanna.

I appreciate and value the work of employees in all schools, irrespective of sector. They play a vital role in the education of the young people in our schools.

Grant-maintained integrated schools are employers in their own right and it is wholly the responsibility of individual Boards of Governors to appoint all staff. It is fair to say, however, that grant-maintained integrated schools adopt the principle of parity with employees of other sectors in relation to the pay and terms and conditions of employment of their staff.

Board of Governors

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what consequences Board of Governors face if they are in breach of the Nolan Principles. (AQW 6711/09)

The Minister of Education: Ní riachtanais ar leith iad The Nolan Principles a bhaineann le ceapachán, le hainmníúchán nó le toghchán ball de Bhord Gobhanóirí na scoile. Bionn socruithe eile i gceist le leasa bainistíochta na scoileanna deontaschúnta a chosaint.
The Nolan Principles are not a specific requirement associated with the appointment, nomination or election of the members of a school Board of Governors. Alternative arrangements apply to safeguard the management interests of grant-aided schools.

Before taking up office, a school governor must sign a declaration of acceptance of membership which requires him/her to carry out their duties in accordance with the scheme of management approved by the Department for the school.

This scheme includes provisions which disqualify governors from service and which are designed to protect the school against any conflict of interest on the part of the school’s governors. Also, systems of audit and accountability exist to safeguard the proper use and management of funds and procurement procedures.

Youth Workers

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to her answer to AQW 6288/09, how many (i) youth clubs; (ii) youth workers; (iii) detached youth workers; and (iv) young people are the Belfast Education and Library Board area, broken down by (a) north; (b) south; (c) east; and (d) west Belfast. (AQW 6730/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas seo a leanas don bhliain 2008/09 curtha ar fáil ag Príomhfeidhmeannach Bhord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne Bhéil Feirste.

Initial Teacher Education Provision

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education, given the proposed merger of Queen’s University, Belfast and Stranmillis University College, what assessment she has made of the effect of this merger on the allocation of initial teacher education places. (AQW 6767/09)

The Minister of Education: Is soláthar ar leith é an soláthar a chuireann an dá instiúidí ar fáil maidir le hOideachas Tosaigh do Mhúinteoirí (ITE).

The nature of Initial Teacher Education (ITE) provision at the two institutions is distinct.
The School of Education at Queen’s University Belfast provides for students who, following completion of an undergraduate course, wish to enter ITE through the one-year Post-Primary Postgraduate Certificate in Education (PGCE) course, whilst Stranmillis University College largely provides for students who wish to enter ITE straight from school through the four-year Bachelor of Education (BED) course.

As part of the annual process of determining intakes, I carefully consider the needs of these students, the schools’ sector and of the ITE providers in terms of ensuring a viable and vibrant ITE sector that meets the needs of our pluralist education system, and will continue to do so in the event of a merger between Queen’s University, Belfast and Stranmillis University College.

Initial Teacher Education Provision

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education to confirm if there will be a reduction in the number of initial teacher education places allocated to Queen’s University, Belfast, following the merger with Stranmillis University College.

(AQW 6768/09)

The Minister of Education: Is soláthar ar leith é an soláthar a chuireann an dá institiúid ar fáil maidir le hOideachas Tosaigh do Mhúinteoirí (ITE).

School Meals

Ms J McCann asked the Minister of Education if she will ensure that Roma children receiving free school meals will continue to receive them after April.

(AQW 6812/09)

The Minister of Education: Tá an Roinn ag déanamh breithnithe ar na critéir cáilitheachta do bhéilí saora scoile a leathnú faoi láthair le go n-áireofar na daltaí sin a gcreideann an scoil gur ‘páistí le riachtanais’ iad agus tá an Roinn i mbun phlé leis an Roinn Sláinte, Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sábháilteacha Poiblí ó thaobh na mionshocruithe riaracháin de.

The Department is presently considering extending the eligibility criteria for free school meals to include those pupils a school believes to be “children in need” and is in discussions with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety regarding the detailed administrative arrangements for this.

It is likely that a number of the Roma children currently enrolled at schools here will come within this definition and would therefore be entitled to free school meals.

Children in Need

Ms J McCann asked the Minister of Education to detail her Department’s guidance in relation to those children categorised as ‘children in need’.

(AQW 6813/09)

The Minister of Education: Baineann seirbhísí sláinte agus sóisialta úsáid a féidir liom aithintear go bhfuil páistí agus daoine óga ann a bhfuil tacaíocht nó seirbhísí de dhíth orthu de bhreis ar na priomhosseirbhísí a sholáthraítear don phobal i gceitinne.

The categorisation of ‘children in need’ is used by health and social services and recognises that there are children and young people who require support or services in addition to those mainstream services provided to the entire population.
While the categorisation of ‘children in need’ is not used within the education sector, it is recognised that many children and young people do experience barriers to learning and require additional or specialist support to sustain their engagement with the learning process. A range of advice and guidance documents have been issued to schools on issues such as promoting positive behaviour and tackling bullying and these have included advice on supporting vulnerable children and young people.

Further as vulnerable pupils with new support requirements are identified appropriate action is taken, such as that outlined in the response to AQW 6812/2009.

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Queen’s University

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning the religious breakdown of students attending Queen’s University, Belfast. (AQW 6389/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): Information on religion is only collected for Northern Ireland (NI) domiciled students studying at NI institutions.

On that basis, the number of NI domiciled students enrolled in courses at Queen’s University, Belfast, broken down by religious background in 2007/08 academic year is detailed in the table below:

Apprentices

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to promote women in apprenticeships. (AQW 6390/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Historically the male to female ratio for apprenticeships has typically been 70:30. The first year review of Training for Success in 2008, resulted in a revised flagship provision for apprentices entitled ApprenticeshipsNI. Improvements included the introduction of an all age programme, coupled with capacity for those on reduced hour employment contracts of 21 hours per week. Collectively these changes have had a positive impact with 46% of Level 2 and Level 3 apprentices at 4 March 2009 being female. This compares favourably to 32% on the Jobskills Modern Apprenticeships at 31st August 2007.

The Department will continue through its future marketing campaign and work with Sector Skills Councils to further promote the ApprenticeshipsNI programme and its availability to all.

Apprentices

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he is considering how the public sector can be used to assist the retention of apprentices during the economic downturn. (AQW 6392/09)
The Minister for Employment and Learning: Although the Department has made the ApprenticeshipsNI provision open to a wide range of participants, employees within the Public Sector and Local Authorities have historically been excluded in order to focus the funding available on these developments in the private sector. However, the Department is presently engaged with DFP’s Central Personnel Group (CPG) and Government Skills, the Sector Skills Council for the public sector, to explore apprenticeship programmes in the NI Civil Service. Consideration will also be given to the broader public sector including local authorities and health trusts.

St Mary’s College

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what discussions has he had with the Minister for Education on future student numbers for St Mary’s College.

(AQW 6651/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I have not had any recent discussions with the Minister of Education on future student numbers for St Mary’s University College. I have, however, written to her twice since last summer on a number of issues in relation to teacher education, including student numbers for all of the Higher Education Institutions (HEIs).

Queens University and Stranmillis College Merger

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the view from Queens University and Stranmillis College, that their proposed merger is a fait accompli.

(AQW 6653/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I do not regard the merger as a fait accompli. As I have previously stated, the merger between Queen’s University Belfast and Stranmillis requires a fully costed economic appraisal to be approved by both my Department and the Department of Finance and Personnel. Subject to approval of the appraisal, my Department will carry out a public consultation exercise prior to any decision being taken on the merger and to any enabling legislation being drafted. The Departmental Committee and the Assembly will be involved fully in any approval process. Until such time as this due process is finalised the proposed merger will not be completed.

North West Regional College

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he is aware of a resolution passed on 20 February 2009 by members of the University and College Union at the North West Regional College expressing no confidence in the institution’s Director and calling for the governing body to take direct control of the running of the college.

(AQW 6727/09)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I have noted the resolution passed on 20 February 2009 by members of the University and College Union at the North West Regional College expressing no confidence in the Institution’s Director and calling for the governing body to take direct control of the running of the college. This is not, at least initially, a matter for my Department. The Director is an employee of the Institution, and the Governing Body, as the employer, has responsibility for any matter relating to discharge of his duties.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

All-Island Public Procurement by InterTrade Ireland

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to the commissioning of a report on All-Island Public Procurement by InterTrade Ireland, to give his assessment of the economic gains from all-island procurement.

(AQO 2392/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs A Foster): The draft report commissioned by InterTradeIreland, entitled ‘All Island Public Procurement: A Competitiveness Study’ is unlikely to be published until April 2009. DETI cannot therefore respond to the findings and recommendations at this stage.

The objectives for this study were to provide a better understanding of the dynamics of the public procurement market and to make recommendations for mutually beneficial co-operative action.

DETI will look forward to receiving the final report in due course.

In terms of the importance of public procurement in relation to economic recovery, Minister Dodds in his statement made to the Assembly on 23 March, 2009, pointed out that significant capital investment has been made for example, in relation to the construction industry. During this financial year alone, it is expected that Government capital investment will be in the order of £1.5 Billion, compared with £676 Million five years ago. The devolved administration recognises the importance of capital investment in infrastructure and working with the construction industry to deliver.

Central Procurement Directorate of the Department of Finance and Personnel has, on behalf of Northern Ireland Departments, provided construction industry representatives at the Procurement Task Group of the Construction Industry Forum with a comprehensive list of the projects that are to be advertised or are already at various stages of the procurement process. This list includes some 60 projects with an aggregated value in excess of £400 Million.

Public sector investment is set to continue to increase over the remaining years of the Investment Strategy. The gross capital investment planned for the next two financial years is intended to be more that £3 Billion.

Electricity Prices

Mr O’Loan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the rise in electricity prices of 52% since September 2008; and, following the reduction in oil prices, when she expects electricity prices to fall to their previous level.

(AQW 6284/09)
The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: My Department has no statutory powers to set or to direct energy companies in setting tariffs. The Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation (NIAUR) has a statutory obligation to regulate and closely monitor the tariff setting process for NIE Energy (NIEE) and other regulated energy providers, and to protect the interests of electricity consumers with regard to price and quality of service by promoting effective competition in the generation, transmission and supply of electricity.

In Spring 2008, NIEE took the decision to advance purchase a significant proportion of their power generation, and given significant increases in wholesale energy costs over the summer and early autumn in 2008, this seemed a prudent action on their part in order to protect consumers over the winter period.

However although wholesale energy costs have fallen considerably since summer 2008, the NIEE strategy has meant that the company is not currently in a position to pass on the full benefit of lower wholesale energy costs to consumers. However, NIE’s Power Procurement business had greater flexibility, and savings to consumers were passed on through the 10.8% reduction in tariffs effective from 1 January 2009.

NIAUR is expected to publish its detailed plans and timetable on the forthcoming electricity contract year shortly, and it is their expectation that, should wholesale fuel costs continue to stay low or fall further, that this will be translated into lower electricity bills during 2009. The next scheduled review of prices is October 2009.

Invest NI

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the expenditure by Invest NI in the (i) Dungannon; (ii) Cookstown; (iii) Omagh; (iv) Magherafelt District Council areas, in the financial years (a) 2006/07; (b) 2007/08; (c) 2008 to date, and the number of jobs it created. (AQW 6337/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI does not budget for, allocate or record expenditure per District Council Area.

However, the table below provides information on the amount of assistance offered by Invest NI within the four District Council Areas during the time period requested. This represents the value of support which is expected to be paid towards business-related investment during the life-time of assisted projects. Total assistance includes that relating to business innovation activities, which is not specifically employment related. The latter is highlighted within the table.

The table also includes assistance offered through the Northern Ireland Start a Business Programme, which is delivered in partnership with Enterprise Northern Ireland. It should be noted that job promotion figures with regard to locally-owned projects is not available for 2006-07.

Invest NI

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the total amount of money that has been paid in bonuses to Invest NI staff; and (ii) how the bonuses were distributed across each staffing grade, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6346/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Three types of bonus are payable in Invest NI: -

• The remuneration package for the Chief Executive has a bonus element;
• bonuses are paid to Managing Directors (equivalent to NICS Grade 3) and Directors (equivalent to Grade 5) on the same basis as applies to the Senior Civil Service. These bonuses are based on the recommendations of the Senior Salaries Review Body and form part of the annual pay settlement.
• staff up to and including a level equivalent to Grade 6 level in Invest NI are eligible for bonuses under the Special Bonus Scheme to reward exceptional performance. This scheme is applied on the same basis as the NICS scheme of the same name.

All bonuses are non-consolidated and non-pensionable.

Amounts paid in bonuses, together with the grade distribution of awards, are set out in the tables below.

The application of SCS pay policy has meant that the bonus (as distinct from pensionable pay) element increased from 2.3% of the SCS paybill in 2002 to 8.6% in 2008.
Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what work her Department has undertaken in preparation for expanding the energy infrastructure. (AQW 6362/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: DETI is presently developing a new Strategic Energy Framework for Northern Ireland. The overall emphasis will be a shift towards a cleaner and more efficient energy mix, including greater use of renewable energy sources, and extending the benefits of natural gas.

In relation to energy infrastructure, DETI is involved in plans to strengthen the electricity grid to support an increase in the amount of electricity generated from sustainable sources. This follows the All-island Grid Study report, published in 2008, which noted that much higher levels of electricity could be generated from plentiful renewable sources.

In addition, Northern Ireland is working with Scotland, and the Republic of Ireland on the Isles Tripartite off-shore grid project, to explore the potential for an offshore electricity grid to capture marine renewables, namely, wind, wave and tidal.

The Department also plans to consider the technical feasibility and economics of taking natural gas to towns in the West and North-West of Northern Ireland, and is in the final stages of commissioning a study. The Department is also considering the merits of a proposal to take natural gas to towns in the Downpatrick economic corridor in East Down.

In addition DETI has commissioned a study to investigate the geology in the East Antrim area, including the off-shore area, to determine its suitability for underground energy storage. The development of large-scale energy storage facilities would help to improve Northern Ireland’s security of energy supply.

In preparation for the development of offshore wind and marine renewables, in particular tidal stream, DETI is undertaking a Strategic Environmental Assessment to identify the potential effects such developments may have on the environment. This work will enable my Department, in conjunction with The Crown Estate as owners of the seabed, to launch a competitive call for development projects later in 2010.

Laying Power Cables

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what the comparative costs per mile are for laying (i) underground; and (ii) overhead power cables. (AQW 6478/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The costs of installing transmission grid cables are project specific and are significantly influenced by the size of the cable and the nature of the route. Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE) recently published a report by Parsons Brinckerhoff that compared the cost of the 400kV transmission cable options for the planned Cavan - Tyrone circuit. This report indicates that the construction of a 400kV overhead line could cost approximately £760,000 per mile, compared to an estimated cost of £5.611 million per mile for an underground line.

NIE estimates that the cost of constructing an overhead 33kV distribution grid line could range from £55,000 to £113,000 per mile depending on the type of construction required. For an underground line the estimated cost could be about £255,000 per mile. This is based on a typical single circuit route laid on roadway in an urban area.

The company estimates that the cost of constructing an overhead 11kV distribution grid line could be approximately £30,300 per mile, while the cost of laying the line underground could be £130,000 per mile. This is based on a typical route comprising footpaths and roads.
Small Businesses

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what help she is giving to small businesses. (AQW 6487/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI offers a wide range of support to encourage the growth and development of the small business sector. It focuses on working with those manufacturing and tradable service businesses that demonstrate the greatest export potential and the prospect of improving productivity by becoming more internationally competitive.

A qualifying business will have access to all aspects of Invest NI’s extensive Business Development Solutions portfolio consisting of professional advice, assistance financial and non-financial, and support for businesses across the following 6 key areas:

- Strategy Development;
- People Development;
- Research and Development;
- Exporting;
- Energy Management; and
- E-Business.

A copy of the Invest NI Business Development Solutions brochure can be obtained from the Publications Section on Invest NI’s website at http://www.investni.com/bds_brochure_march_06.pdf

Invest NI has recently introduced new schemes focused on supporting small business growth, including the Growth Accelerator programme, that assists Small and Medium-sized Enterprises to achieve faster growth in export markets.

In addition, over the last few months, Invest NI has developed a programme of actions and initiatives designed to enable businesses to tackle the potential impact of a sustained economic downturn. In particular, it has focused on the areas of cash flow management, cost reduction and improving production efficiency.

Invest NI

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail Invest Northern Ireland’s North West Action Plan, including identifying target areas and planned deliverables. (AQW 6534/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI continues to be committed to working in partnership with local stakeholders in the North West, including Councils and is actively investing in relevant projects in the Region in line with their current Corporate Plan.

However, there is currently no formal North West Action Plan (NWAP). The economic environment has changed significantly since NWAP Phase I and Phase II (2003 – 2008). The relevance, content and extent of any future plan must to be considered in the context of a number of factors including:

- The desire of the original Council partners (Londonderry, Strabane, Coleraine, Limavady and Magherafelt) to move away from this traditional grouping and begin to develop new partnerships within the context of the new RPA Council clusters.
- The significant European Funding now available via the Interreg, Rural Development and DETI Competitiveness and Employment Programmes.
- The role of the North West Gateway Initiative in providing a framework for future investment in the wider North West Region

Invest NI will continue to engage with Councils in the North West to explore the most appropriate mechanism for delivery of relevant joint projects and initiatives.
Invest NI

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to the Invest NI North West Action Plan, (i) to outline the targets set; and (ii) to provide Invest NI’s assessment of progress, in each of the past 3 years. (AQW 6535/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI’s North West Action Plan phase II covers a proportion of the past three years, specifically the period 1st April 2006 to 31st March 2008. It concentrated on consolidating the gains made in the first action plan as well as a series of specific joint initiatives with the NW Councils. These initiatives were designed to address capability weaknesses within SME’s throughout the NW region focusing on three main themes Innovation, Internationalisation and Business Development.

The Councils awarded contracts for delivery of the programmes to consultants following appropriate tendering exercises, the key targets set were:

Innovation
- Delivery of 5 Regional Seminars

Internationalisation
- 100 Businesses profiled
- 47 Businesses to participate in workshop/mentoring activities
- 15 Export Plans Developed

Business Development
- 250 Businesses profiled
- 80 Business Audits
- 320 Mentoring Sessions
- 30 Businesses Referred to Invest NI

Invest NI have confirmed that these targets have been largely met or exceeded. There has been no formal North West Action Plan in operation since March 2008.

Invest NI

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what funding opportunities are available under Invest Northern Ireland’s North West Action Plan. (AQW 6536/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI do not currently have a formal North West Action Plan. However, the agency continues to engage with Councils in the Region to explore the most appropriate mechanism for delivery of relevant joint projects and initiatives.

Invest NI funding for good, eligible projects is not diminished by the absence of a North West Action Plan. Invest NI is keen to encourage project promoters to present proposals and will assess any project in line with standard appraisal and approval procedures. Invest NI personnel both locally and from across the organisation engage actively with local stakeholders and businesses to deliver relevant investment and services to the North West in line with Invest NI’s Corporate Plan 2008-2011.

Project Kelvin

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the technical basis by which the solution proposed by Hibernia Atlantic for Project Kelvin will guarantee 99.999% availability between the three mandatory locations and New York. (AQW 6601/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Hibernia Atlantic is contracted to deliver 99.999% availability at all 13 mandatory locations specified in the Project Kelvin contract.

Hibernia Atlantic is not due to complete the commissioning of the terrestrial infrastructure until October 2009 and the technical design is ongoing. The network will be fully tested for compliance with the contracts performance standards when both the terrestrial and submarine elements have been completed. The Department will continue the monitoring and testing of the network until the contract ends in December 2018.
Project Kelvin

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) when the re-design of the technical solution proposed by Hibernia Atlantic for Project Kelvin will be completed; and (ii) to detail the independent technical advice that will be sought to assess compliance with the Invitation to Tender requirements.

(AQW 6603/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Hibernia Atlantic is due to complete the overall network design and commissioning of the terrestrial infrastructure associated with Project Kelvin by October 2009. The telehouse forms part of this infrastructure and Hibernia Atlantic has indicated its intention to submit a request to seek a variation to the existing contract to facilitate a relocation of the telehouse from Coleraine to the city of Londonderry. This will involve a redesign of the telehouse and it is likely to be several weeks before the revised proposal is submitted by Hibernia Atlantic to DETI and the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources (DCENR).

Central Procurement Directorate, on behalf of the Department, will shortly be running a full EU procurement competition for the appointment of technical consultants to advise the Department during both the construction phase and the first two years of the operational phase of this contract. The consultants will assist the Departments in assessing compliance with the performance and other technical aspects of the Kelvin contract. The new consultants are expected to be appointed before the end of May 2009.

Project Kelvin

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to Project Kelvin, if she will request that Hibernia Atlantic demonstrate in a technical proof, how it will achieve 99.999 percent availability in each of the mandatory locations.

(AQW 6719/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Hibernia Atlantic is contracted to deliver 99.999% availability at all 13 mandatory locations specified in the Project Kelvin contract.

Work on the technical design by Hibernia Atlantic is ongoing and not due to be completed before the commissioning of the terrestrial infrastructure in October 2009. There is no value in requesting a technical proof when the network design has not been completed.

The network will be fully tested for compliance with the contracts performance standards when both the terrestrial and submarine elements have been completed. The Department will continue the monitoring and testing of the network until the contract ends in December 2018.

Visteon’s Manufacturing Plant

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) what financial assistance has been provided by Invest NI to Visteon’s manufacturing plant in Belfast; (ii) what safeguards are in place to protect any assistance.

(AQW 6867/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI provided Visteon UK with financial assistance in 2003 for the development of a fuel rail. The offer totalled £109,305 of which £97,210 was paid.

The Letter of Offer contained clauses to protect Invest NI’s investment and, where appropriate, claw back of monies paid will be invoked.

Visteon’s Manufacturing Plant

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what report she was provided to her, by Invest NI in January 2009, about the viability assessment initiated by Visteon.

(AQW 6868/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI has kept me informed of a number of companies facing difficulties, on an ongoing basis, including Visteon.

The viability of Visteon Belfast has been an issue for a number of years with management trying to address the issue primarily through managing costs. At a meeting in February 2009 the Managing Director of Visteon
UK Ltd stated that he was tasked to come up with a plan by 30 March 2009 to establish financial break even over the next twelve months. Similar discussions had taken place between Invest NI and Visteon in 2006.

Invest NI had discussions with local management around possible areas of assistance in March 2009 but no proposals were forthcoming. A further meeting was organised for 8 April 2009.

I am assured that Invest NI were exploring how Visteon could be encouraged to continue to operate in Belfast and would have reported to me on the outcome of such discussions. Unfortunately, the decision to place Visteon UK in administration was taken without any reference to Invest NI or DETI.

Visteon’s Manufacturing Plant

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what advice she was given by her officials on the future of Visteon operations in Belfast following meetings between Invest NI and the company in February and March 2009. (AQW 5869/09)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: No decision on the future of the UK manufacturing operations had been made when Invest NI officials met with Visteon management in February and March 2009. These meetings were a continuation of meetings that had taken place for a number of years. Invest NI continued to work with Visteon UK Ltd on a national and local basis.

Invest NI had a meeting planned with local management and the Department for Employment and Learning on 8 April 2009 to explore opportunities for providing financial assistance towards training activities. This meeting and any subsequent advice has been overtaken by the decision to place Visteon UK into administration.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Increasing the Usage of E-mail

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what action he is taking to reduce the amount of paper documentation and to increase the usage of e-mail. (AQW 5621/09)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr S Wilson): For some years now, virtually all documents produced by the Department have been created electronically. Similarly, the use of electronic mail has been the norm for internal Departmental and, where possible external, communications. However, to comply with public records legislation and official PRONI guidance, all records of Departmental business had to be printed to file.

With the introduction of Records NI electronic document and records management system in 2007, the vast majority of business records are now held exclusively in electronic format, and new paper files may only be created in exceptional circumstances. Where possible, incoming paper documents are scanned and also held in Records NI. The introduction of Records NI will result in a significant reduction in the amount of paper used by the Department.

Cookstown Aggregates

Ms Purvis asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the total costs of visits to Cookstown Aggregates by his Department; and the total cost of court cases against the company. (AQW 6364/09)

The Minister of the Environment: In my Department only Agencies involved in a significant number of site visits and preparation of court cases keep detailed records of staff costs associated with this work area. The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA), records staff costs associated with pollution investigations including site visits and subsequent enforcement action.

NIEA received 68 reports of pollution incidents attributed to Cookstown Aggregates for the period 1996 to 2009 with total staff costs, which including site visits, estimated at £13,243.

NIEA has successfully prosecuted Cookstown Aggregates a number of times for breaches of the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 and under the Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1997.
The cost to the Department in preparing both the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 prosecutions amounted to £1,174; however, costs are not available in relation to the Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 prosecution.

Council Expenditure

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of the Environment what proportion of the rates of each Council area are spent on (i) centrally provided services; (ii) capital investment; and (iii) infrastructure. (AQW 6477/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Centrally provided services are met from councils’ district fund, which is made up of income from district rates; General Grant; and any balance applied at the beginning of a financial year. Capital investment and expenditure relating to infrastructure are financed from the capital fund and separate figures are not maintained for each category.

The table below details the 2008/2009 estimates for centrally provided services and capital expenditure for each council and also expresses the figures as a proportion of the overall estimated expenditure.

Environmental Crime Unit

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of the Environment for (i) details; and (ii) success rates of the operation of his Department’s environmental crime unit over the past three years. (AQW 6479/09)

The Minister of the Environment: In an often difficult and dangerous climate, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency’s (NIEA) Environmental Crime Unit (ECU) has succeeded in increasing both legislative and financial enforcement against, and public awareness of, those engaged in illegal waste activities (which are criminal offences) in Northern Ireland.

The ECU receives over 1,000 reports of illegal dumping each year. Where the dumping is clearly on a commercial scale and where sufficient evidence is available and where it is in the public interest to prosecute, the ECU will recommend prosecution to the Public Prosecution Service. Since the inception of the ECU in 2003, it has secured 359 convictions and these have generated £948,115 in fines.

Courts are viewing environmental crime with increasing seriousness, as evidenced by the high level of fines that are often imposed and the jail terms handed down to some of the most serious offenders.

The ECU has been instrumental in having the first Northern Ireland environmental cases heard at the Crown Court, resulting in the first prison sentences and higher financial penalties for environmental offenders. In November 2007, the Assets Recovery Agency (ARA) (now the Serious Organised Crime Agency – (SOCA), working with NIEA secured the first UK confiscation order for £252,252 against a Tyrone farmer, relating to environmental crime.

The Unit is utilising the new and stronger powers of the Serious Crime Act 2007 to deal with serious and persistent environmental offenders and has pioneered the accreditation of financial investigators in line with the Proceeds of Crime Act. These financial investigators conduct confiscation investigations in-house, to remove illegal benefit from offenders.

Since November 2007, ARA/SOCA, working with the ECU has obtained four confiscation orders totalling £833,120, illustrating the power of this legislation in providing a deterrent and in denying funds for further offending.

On 26 March 2009, the ECU Financial Investigators secured their first confiscation independently of SOCA for £200,000.

The ECU will continue to develop its ability to tackle serious and persistent environmental offenders and will avail of all enforcement tools and legislation available in order to assist in this process.

Changes to Driving Test

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of the Environment what changes he is proposing to make to the driving test over the next three years. (AQW 6480/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I have no specific plans to introduce any changes to the driving test in the near future. However I am monitoring the progress of the Driving Standards Agency’s 2008 consultation “Learning to Drive” which was also issued in Northern Ireland, and will consider the proposals arising from it.

Planning Service

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to planning application T2006/0302/F, why Planning Service has not asked the applicant to produce (i) a daylight and sunlight study; (ii) a noise study; and (iii) an impact study on the adjacent Old Mill Industrial Estate in relation to future expansion; and the consequences of this for job creation.

(AQW 6481/09)

The Minister of the Environment:

(i) An office meeting was held in Antrim Civic Centre on 4 February 2009 to discuss planning application T/2006/0302/F. As a result of issues raised at the meeting Planning Service has carried out a number of reconsultations. When all consultation responses are returned and assessed Planning Service will consider if it is appropriate to request a daylight and sunlight study.

(ii) A noise study - In an initial consultation response received from the Environmental Services Department of Antrim Borough Council, received 9 May 2006, to application T/2006/0302 there were no noise concerns indicated other than during the construction period. Subsequently the applicant commissioned a desk top acoustic appraisal which Environmental Health were consulted on 27 November 2007 and which they considered acceptable. On 26 January 2009 an objection was submitted containing a “Detailed Rebuttal Statement” to the acoustic appraisal. In light of the “Detailed Rebuttal Statement”, and a recent complaint regarding noise levels in the area by a local resident, Planning Service re-consulted the Environmental Services Department on 16 February 2009 asking if their position remains unchanged. When the response has been returned and assessed Planning Service will consider if a further noise report is necessary.

(iii) Planning Service continues to consider this application having regard to both PPS4 and Draft PPS4. The outstanding consultation responses will help inform any impact that may result on the future expansion of the adjacent industrial premises and Old Mill Industrial Estate and the consequences of this for job creation. These issues will be fully taken into account when reaching a decision on this application.

Northern Ireland Environment Agency

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment if land owned by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency been leased or rented to an employee, for private business.

(AQW 6493/09)

The Minister of the Environment: No land owned by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has been leased or rented to any NIEA employee for private business.

However NIEA has licensed the grazing of 126 hectares of Crossmurrin and Killykeeghan Nature Reserves at Marlbank, Fermanagh, to a Ranger employed at NIEA’s Castle Archdale Country Park under a grazing management agreement, while retaining rights of access and other management responsibilities itself.

NIEA is charged with managing the Department’s nature reserve lands to maintain their scientific interest in favourable condition, as was its predecessor body - the Environment and Heritage Service - which established most of the current grazing agreements. This conservation management often requires grazing at low stocking levels, avoiding certain stock medications, and grazing at times of year unattractive to the farming community.

Where a suitable licensee willing to comply with the required management regime can be found through open advertisement, NIEA uses their services thereafter for as long as they are willing to continue with the agreement.

NIEA levies an annual payment (formerly set by the Valuation and Lands Agency (VLA)) which reflects the constraints imposed. The VLA has advised that there is no need to re-advertise once a suitable partner had been identified.

In the case of the Marlbank reserves, the partner farmer (originally engaged through open advertisement) became ill and at short notice had to withdraw from the grazing agreement for the larger area. Due to the difficulties in securing satisfactory partners, NIEA was therefore delighted that one if its Rangers employed at Castle Archdale Country Park (who owned some stock and lived in that area) agreed to take over that part of the grazing. All of the employee’s stock management is undertaken in his own time before and after work. This arrangement proved successful. When the farmer subsequently withdrew completely from grazing both areas, the employee took on all the grazing. Initially he paid the same amount as the previous partner. The rate is now set by NIEA’s own Valuer.

As the Marlbank reserves are not grazed during May, June and July, NIEA also licences some 5 hectares of better quality farmland at Castle Archdale Country Park to this employee, so facilitating the grazing of his stock during the summer.
The employee claims single farm payment for the Marlbank reserve lands. The sum he pays the Department for the grazing reflects this. He does not receive the single farm payment for the Castle Archdale grazing, so pays at a lower rate.

NIEA also licences the grazing of its reserves on Rathlin Island at the townlands of Kebble and Kinramer North and South (215 hectares) to the RSPB Ranger for the Island. NIEA pays the RSPB for a proportion of his time for care of its reserves but does not employ him directly.

This Ranger took on the Kinramer reserve areas from a relative in 1993 following the relative’s death. Records do not indicate whether the grazing was advertised, but as a satisfactory partner, his agreement has been renewed every three years. He then agreed to take on the grazing of Kebble after a previous farmer had proved an extremely unsatisfactory manager. The Ranger undertakes the care of his stock in his own time and the conservation quality of the reserves has markedly improved under his grazing management. He does not claim single farm payment.

Partner graziers must make a modest profit from their arrangement, but the primary reason for the agreements is the conservation management of special sites, not the facilitating of ‘private business’.

As a result of the difficulties in securing satisfactory partners to provide grazing at its reserves, NIEA itself has now acquired a number of rare breed livestock which it uses to manage several of these special sites. This is more costly than the management agreements where a partner farmer or amenable employee can be persuaded to take up a grazing agreement for which they pay, but does enable more precise grazing and has been successful in improving the conservation condition of several reserves.

Northern Ireland Environment Agency

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment if land owned by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency and leased or rented privately, has attracted single farm payments established by the tenant or tenants.

(AQW 6494/09)

Dry Recyclables

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for his assessment of whether kerbside sort is more beneficial than co-mingled collections of dry recyclables; and (ii) what steps are being taken to improve the quality of this material. (AQW 6500/09)

The Minister of the Environment:

Under Article 21 of the Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) 1997 the provision of receptacles for the collection of waste is the responsibility of each district council. Regardless of the method of collection used, there is a need to ensure that the materials being sent for recycling are of the highest possible quality. I emphasised this point in my press statement of 19 January 2009 when I encouraged everyone to play their part by placing only the appropriate materials in their recycling bins and boxes. This will ensure that the quality is as high as possible throughout the entire supply chain and is one of the key ways to ensure that sustainable markets for the materials can be found.

The delivery of high quality collections and recycling services remains a priority. My Department, with the assistance of the Waste & Resources Action Programme’s (WRAP) Recycling and Organics Technical Advisory Team (ROTATE), provides support and advice to district councils in Northern Ireland for reducing residual waste for disposal and increasing recycling and diversion from landfill. Improving collection efficiencies and outputs (quantities and quality) also play an important part.

Littering

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what measures are being taken to reduce littering. (AQW 6502/09)

The Minister of the Environment:

The Litter (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 places a duty on District Councils to keep land clear of litter. Significant powers are contained in the Order to help District Councils to deal with litter problems. For example, a £50 fixed penalty fine can be imposed on litter offenders. Alternatively a fine of up to £2500 can be imposed on conviction through the courts. My Department extended those powers with effect from 1 November 2005 to allow District Councils to retain the receipts from fixed penalties to help them to carry out their functions in relation to litter more effectively. Full details of the number of litter fines issued by each District Council are set out in my written answer (AQW 1723/09) to Simon Hamilton MLA.

Legislation and fines are important tools to help to reduce littering. However, I also recognise that a lot of good work is taking place to change the attitudes and behaviour of people who litter. For example, local anti-litter campaigns and initiatives, website information and the employment of local litter wardens all play their part in reducing littering.

Littering

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department measures levels of littering; and if the problem has worsened over the past 10 years. (AQW 6503/09)

The Minister of the Environment: There is no statutory requirement on my Department to measure levels of littering.

My Department provides core funding to the Tidy Northern Ireland organization to work with District Councils on litter issues and the running of litter campaigns and programmes. In its 2007 Northern Ireland Borough Cleanliness Survey Tidy Northern Ireland singled out cigarette, confectionery and chewing gum litter as major contributors to the litter problem but reported an overall improvement in cleanliness levels for the third year in a row.

My Department does not hold evidence centrally on the extent of the litter problem over the past 10 years.

Local Government Transition Committees

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what proposed legislation will address the issues of local government councillor severance and statutory transition committees. (AQW 6544/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I intend to bring a Local Government Bill before the House in June of this year which will include provision for severance arrangements for councillors. The Bill will also provide for the establishment of statutory transition committees and will enable the Department to specify in regulations the functions, powers, composition, etc of the transition committees.

Subordinate legislation setting out:
• the detail of the severance scheme for councillors, and
• the functions, powers and composition of the transition committees is likely to come into operation in January 2010.

Local Government Transition Committees

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment when local government transition committees will have statutory powers. (AQW 6546/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I intend to bring a Local Government Bill before the House in June of this year which will include provision for the establishment of statutory transition committees and will enable the Department to specify, in regulations, the functions, powers, composition, etc of these committees.

• I would anticipate that the earliest the Bill will have progressed through all its Assembly stages will be autumn 2009.
• The regulations setting out the functions, powers and composition of the transition committees are likely to come into operation in January 2010.

Housing Developments

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment to provide the number of planning applications approved for housing developments with access through established parks and cul-de-sacs, that have no footpaths in place. (AQW 6571/09)

The Minister of the Environment: I regret the Department’s electronic data storage and recovery system 20/20 does not record this level of detail for every planning application. The number could only be found through a manual search of all applications approved in each Divisional Planning Office and this could not be done in the time available and would incur disproportionate costs.
Demolition of Single Dwellings

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his Department’s policy in relation to demolishing single dwellings and replacing them with multiple dwellings. (AQW 6572/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Planning policy and guidance in support of the strategic approach for residential development provided in the Regional Development Strategy (RDS), is set out in Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 12: Housing in Settlements, Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 7: Quality Residential Environments, Area Plans and DCAN 8: Housing in Existing Urban Areas. Further supplementary design guidance is set out in the Creating Places document and Improving the Quality of Housing Layouts in Northern Ireland (a joint Planning Service, Roads Service, CEF and NIHE publication). The policy and guidance in these documents informs the consideration of planning applications for new residential developments, redevelopment and particularly intensification of use of an existing housing site.

The thrust of current policy for all new residential development proposals is a design-led approach, emphasising contextual and amenity tests, in which proposals should respect the character and built form of adjacent housing. It also seeks to ensure that the overall development does not result in unacceptable damage to the environmental quality, residential amenity and established character of the surrounding area. Full account is also taken of the potentially damaging effect of cumulative changes in a neighbourhood.

In recognition of public concern with the intensification of development within existing residential areas a Planning Circular on the assessment of planning applications for residential development in urban areas, villages and other small settlements was issued to planning service staff in August 2007. In addition, my Department’s Planning and Environmental Policy Group is currently working on an Addendum to PPS 7 which will be published for consultation later this year.

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the annual budget for the Management Of Sensitive Sites; and to give his assessment of the adequacy of the budget. (AQW 6576/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs), which are declared by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) under the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002, are thought to be the most important of sensitive sites at national level. They are so declared because they are considered to be of special scientific interest by reason of their flora, fauna, geological, physiographical or other features.

ASSIs may require intervention management to help maintain or enhance the special scientific interest for which they are declared, and this would be provided through the Management of Sensitive Sites Scheme (MOSS) that is administered by NIEA.

A budget of £500,000 was made available for this scheme in the 2008/09 financial year. The same amount has been allocated for 2009/10 and NIEA is satisfied that this is adequate to meets its present needs although this will be kept under review as the number of designations increases.

There is also potential for appropriate land management within ASSIs to be secured through the application of the Northern Ireland Countryside Management Scheme. This scheme is administered by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, which currently gives priority to applications that embrace lands that are within ASSIs.

Areas of Specific Scientific Interest

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment how many more Areas of Specific Scientific Interests the NI Environment Agency intends to declare; and what assistance his Department can give to those areas. (AQW 6577/09)

The Minister of the Environment: Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) intends to increase its suite of Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs) from its present total of 275 to 440 by the year 2016. At this stage the declaration programme will be substantially complete.
Assistance for the management of these ASSIs for nature conservation purposes may be provided through the Management of Sensitive Sites Scheme (MOSS) that is administered by NIEA. If thought necessary, the Agency may enter into a management agreement with the owner or occupier of lands under MOSS to secure a land management regime considered necessary to sustain or enhance the special scientific interest of the ASSI. Payments made under such an agreement will vary according to the land management requirements prescribed.

Support for land management may also be provided through the application of the Northern Ireland Countryside Management Scheme to declared lands. This scheme is administered by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development which currently gives priority to applications that embrace lands that are within ASSIs.

Driving Theory Tests

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of the Environment why there is no office in the East Londonderry constituency where applicants can complete the driving theory test. (AQW 6600/09)

The Minister of the Environment: There are six theory test centres strategically located throughout Northern Ireland. The centres are leased by Pearson VUE, the theory test contractor, and used to deliver the theory test for the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) and examinations for a range of other clients.

- The location of the theory test centres is designed to provide the best balance between accessibility and value for money. 2 centres (Londonderry & Ballymena) are in constituencies which border on East Londonderry.
- As a trading fund, the Driver & Vehicle Agency recovers costs from the fees charged to customers and the provision of additional theory test centres would result in a significant increase in the overall costs of the service and increase fees for all customers.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of the Environment how many employees are in his Department in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area. (AQW 6640/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The number of employees working in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area is detailed in the table below.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of the Environment how many employees in his Department travel from Londonderry/Derry to work in Belfast. (AQW 6641/09)

The Minister of the Environment: The number of staff who travel from County Londonderry to work in Belfast is not available.
Working Group on PPS21

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to his answer to AQW 6338/09, how (i) people with a disability; (ii) lone parents; (iii) migrant workers; (iv) older people; (v) carers; (vi) younger people; (vii) elected representatives; and (viii) members of the wider community contact the Working Group on the PPS 21 consultation.

The Minister of the Environment: The consultation on PPS 21 is a matter for my Department and anyone wishing to make comments on any aspect of the document should do so to the Department by 31 March. (AQW 6654/09)

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Workplace 2010 Project

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail his Department’s expenditure on the Workplace 2010 project. (AQW 5513/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr N Dodds): DFP incurred total costs of £12.85m on the Workplace 2010 project. This total includes costs on legal, commercial, financial and technical consultancy and other professional fees, all costs associated with the legal challenge to the procurement and an estimate of the internal costs associated with the procurement. The costs were incurred over a 4 year period from 2005 to present.

Approximately 45% of the work associated with consultancy and professional fees remains of value to the Department.

Government Art Collection

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is the (i) estimated value; and (ii) insured value of art owned by the Executive that are not registered under the Government Art Collection. (AQW 5982/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The estimated value is £3,704,273. This figure does not include the small number of artworks owned by Departments that have not had professional valuation. Additionally, the National Museums Northern Ireland has a significant collection, but accounting requirements do not require recorded valuation.

The insured value is £3,435,082. This figure relates solely to the Arts Council Northern Ireland and Southern Education and Library Board, both of which have separate insurance for their art. NICS Departments carry their own risk against indemnity, in line with policy.

Departmental Accounts

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) to outline the process by which his Department’s accounts are audited; (ii) who audits his Department’s accounts; and (iii) to detail his Department’s final audited accounts, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6259/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: DFP’s Resource Accounts are audited under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, and in accordance with United Kingdom Auditing Standards, as issued by the Auditing Practices Board.

The accounts are audited by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG), and his staff in the Northern Ireland Audit Office.

The C&AG formed the opinion that DFP’s Resource Accounts for the 2005-06, 2006-07, and 2007-08 financial years:

- gave a true and fair view;
• had been properly prepared in accordance with Department of Finance and Personnel directions issued under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001;
• that the information which comprises the Annual Report was consistent with the financial statements; and,
• that in all material respects, the expenditure and income had been applied to the purposes intended by the Assembly, and that the financial transactions conform to the authorities which govern them.

These accounts are published on the DFP internet site at www.dfpni.gov.uk

Civil Service

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) to detail the number of vacancies in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at Administrative Officer level in the Belfast area; and (ii) how many staff at this grade have applied for transfer from (a) Londonderry/Derry to Belfast; and (b) other locations to Belfast, in each Government Department. (AQW 6290/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The number of vacancies in permanent Northern Ireland Civil Service posts at Administrative Officer level, located in the Belfast area, within the eleven Northern Ireland Departments and their Agencies, is set out in the attached table. The figures are given on a Full Time Equivalent (FTE) basis, broken down by Departments, at 1 February 2009.

The table also gives numbers of staff at Administrative Officer level who have applied for a transfer (a) from Londonderry to Belfast or (b) from other locations to Belfast. These numbers, on a headcount basis and broken down by Department, are also at 1 February 2009.

Civil Service

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the average annual pension currently being paid to civil servants, broken down by retirement grade; (ii) the total sum of annual pension payments paid to retired civil servants in each of the last five years; and (iii) the individual annual totals of the ten largest pensions currently being paid to retired civil servants. (AQW 6408/09)
The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The average annual pension currently being paid to civil servants as at March 2009 is estimated at £7,119. It is not possible to provide this by retirement grade, as the information is not held in this format.

The estimated total sum of annual pension payments paid to retired civil servants is only available for the last 3 years. (Prior to this figures are only available for all scheme members, some of whom are not members of the NICS, and it would also include pensions paid to dependants.)

The overall annual total of the ten largest pensions currently being paid to retired civil servants is £612,202. I am unable to provide the individual totals as this would potentially identify individuals and would be a breach of Data Protection legislation.

Efficiency Savings

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the present position in relation to the planned efficiency savings across all Government Departments. (AQW 6484/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: As part of the 2007 Budget process the Executive agreed that Northern Ireland departments would be set the target of delivering 3% per annum cash releasing efficiency savings over the period 2008-09 to 2010-11.

The responsibility for the planning and delivery of efficiency savings lies with individual Ministers and departments. DFP has a role in terms of monitoring progress.

The latest assessment by my officials is that the majority of efficiency savings are on track for delivery in the current financial year.

Civil Service

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what (i) specific training deficiencies have been identified across the Civil Service; (ii) steps have been taken to address these deficiencies; and (iii) whether an assessment has been made of savings in consultancy fees that could result from any additional training being undertaken. (AQW 6490/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Northern Ireland Civil Service corporate training priorities are agreed on an annual basis by departmental Personnel Directors prior to the commencement of a new financial year. For 2009/10 the key areas are:

- Those applying across the NICS - Financial Governance and Development Programmes, including Leadership and Management/Administrative Development; and
- those appropriate to limited groups of staff, within certain business areas or particular disciplines – Programme and Project Management, Policy and Legislative Skills, Freedom of Information, Essential Skills, Sustainable Development, Health and Well Being

These agreed corporate training priorities inform the learning and development provision which will be delivered by the Centre for Applied Learning (CAL), the central NICS provider of generic training, for the forthcoming financial year.

CAL has responsibility for taking forward the development of generic training interventions in order to meet the training needs identified. Work is already ongoing to meet the identified needs with review and updating of existing training provision and development of new courses where the need is not met by existing provision.

The challenging environment in which the Northern Ireland Civil Service operates requires departments to consider new ways of carrying out their business and to draw on a wide range of skills and expertise. When such skills and expertise are not available ‘in-house’, departments may have to consider the engagement of external consultancy services, for a finite period to complete a particular piece of work. The use of consultants can have long term benefits to the NICS where knowledge and skills are passed to staff, increasing ‘in-house’ expertise. and thereby reducing future need to engage external consultants. To ensure value for money, strict guidelines are in place with respect to the circumstances in which external consultants can be employed.

Civil Service

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is the criteria that is used to pay bonuses to senior Civil Servants, including the method by which this criteria is applied; and by whom it is applied.

(AQW 6504/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: In line with the recommendations of the Senior Salaries Review Body, non-consolidated bonus payments have since 2002 been part of the annual pay awards to Senior Civil Servants. Eligibility for a non-consolidated bonus payment aims to reflect achievements against personal objectives or other short-term personal contributions to wider objectives, as measured against specified criteria. The criteria for payment of non-consolidated bonuses are:

- Whether corporate, business and capacity related objectives have been met or not and to what degree;
- Judgements about how the objectives were achieved and in particular whether the leadership behaviours and professional skills part of the Professional Skills for Government framework have been demonstrated or not and to what degree;
- Additional consideration may also be given to the degree of difficulty or ease in meeting the objectives in the light of actual events.

The level of non-consolidated bonus awards payable is determined by applying the following definition of how objectives were achieved:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bonus Level</th>
<th>Definition</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>LEVEL 1</td>
<td>Achieved objectives despite the most difficult political, operational and economic environment, displaying exceptional leadership in the business area and more widely.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LEVEL 2</td>
<td>Achieved objectives despite moderately difficult political, operational and economic environment, displaying a high level of leadership in the business area and more widely.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LEVEL 3</td>
<td>Achieved objectives encountering only some political, operational and economic obstacles, displaying leadership in the business area and more widely.</td>
</tr>
</table>

Recommendations on annual pay awards, including any non-consolidated bonus payments, for staff at Assistant Secretary level are made at departmental pay conferences chaired by the department’s Permanent Secretary and including those Deputy Secretaries with line manager responsibility. The Permanent Secretary is responsible for final decisions and for pay awards for Deputy Secretaries in his/her department. The Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) Senior Civil Service Pay Committee, comprising the Permanent Secretaries of all NICS departments and chaired by the DFP Permanent Secretary, provides a moderation role. The Head of the NICS, with the assistance of an independent Permanent Secretary Remuneration Committee, considers the annual pay awards, including any non-consolidated bonus payments, for Permanent Secretaries. The annual pay award, including any non-consolidated bonus payment, for the Head of the NICS is determined by the Whitehall Permanent Secretary Remuneration Committee.

Civil Service

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many senior Civil Servants in each Department were paid bonuses in (i) 2003/04; (ii) 2004/05; (iii) 2005/06; (iv) 2006/07; and (v) 2007/08.

(AQW 6505/09)

The Northern Ireland Civil Service Sports Association (NICSSA) also holds events at its Pavilion Complex. These events, including cricket matches, do not require Ministerial approval. We have been advised of the following major events:
Crossnacreevy Site

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if his Department has any responsibility for releasing or raising any finances needed because of the miscalculation of the value of the Crossnacreevy Site.

(AQW 6556/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The responsibility for delivering capital receipts targets is primarily a matter for the relevant Department. The position of Crossnacreevy is an issue affecting the Investment Strategy in 2010/11 and my Department is considering the implications of this matter along with all other capital receipt forecasts in consultation with the Department for Agriculture and Rural Development.

Land and Property Services

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he is taking to improve the level of customer care in the Land and Property Services.

(AQW 6604/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Steps being taken include the implementation of a new Customer Transformation Strategy, which will co-ordinate customer services across Land & Property Services, and which takes into account best practice in other organisations in Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

Improvements that have already taken place include significant reductions in backlogs of work, and improvements in handling correspondence. Land & Property Services is working closely with the first phase of Northern Ireland Direct to improve call-handling, particularly with regard to the more than 500,000 start of year rate bills to be issued at the beginning of April.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many employees are in his Department in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area.

(AQW 6642/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The number of employees in the Council area is 168.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many employees in his Department travel from Londonderry/Derry to work in Belfast.

(AQW 6643/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The number of employees from Londonderry travelling to work in Belfast is 37.

Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to specify the number of small and medium sized enterprises in the Upper Bann constituency that have been placed on tendering lists, in the last financial year.

(AQW 6681/09)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) do not hold tendering lists. All NICS tenders are subject to open and transparent competition.

Since May 2008 all CPD procurement has been carried out through a web based procurement portal called eSourcingNI. At present there are approximately 2700 suppliers which class themselves as SME’s currently registered on the system. This number is expected to grow significantly as the system is rolled out to other Centres of Procurement Expertise in Northern Ireland.
DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

MRSA

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the procedures in place in each Hospital Trust for (a) screening all hospital patients on (i) admission; and (ii) transfer, for MRSA; (b) treating patients who test positively for MRSA; (iii) notifying relatives of patients who test positively for MRSA; (d) offering medical advice to relatives of patients who test positively for MRSA; (e) washing the clothes of patients who test positively for MRSA; and (f) allowing family members to carry out minor medical care such as swabbing on patients who test positively for MRSA; and on how many occasions these procedures were not followed in the last calendar year, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 4421/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr M McGimpsey): Details for each Trust are given in the table attached. These procedures are subject to review. [See pages WA377-379]

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the types of genetically modified (GM) imported animal feed stuffs, broken down by (i) the quantity of each type; and (ii) the country of origin, in each year since 1998. (AQW 6276/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available. There is no legal requirement to collect information on the quantities, or country of origin, of imported genetically modified feed stuffs. Only those genetically modified feeds authorised by the European Union (EU) can be imported into the EU.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I met the Commissioner on Tuesday 24 February to discuss Speech and Language services for Children and Young People.

Ambulances

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his definition of the golden hour for ambulances. (AQW 6293/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The ‘golden hour’ is regarded as the period immediately following traumatic injury in which medical treatment is most effective; although no generally accepted definition exists. However, this term is not normally used in the context of emergency ambulance response. The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service aims to respond to all life-threatening calls, including traumatic injury, within 8 minutes.

Patients with Learning Disabilities

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the cost per year to the Health Service, of patients with learning disabilities. (AQW 6294/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The cost to the Health Service of providing learning disability services to clients in 2007/08 was £200m.
Muckamore Abbey Hospital

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what his long term plans are for Muckamore Abbey Hospital. (AQW 6295/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As supported in the Bamford Review Equal Lives Report, plans are being made at Muckamore Abbey Hospital for approximately 160 people who do not require hospital treatment, to be resettled into appropriate community services.

In addition, there are plans to provide 87 assessment and treatment beds for adults with learning disabilities who require a short-term inpatient admission but who will return home following their treatment. Of these beds, 68 will provide a service for people from the Belfast, South Eastern and Northern Health and Social Care Trust areas. The remaining 19 beds will provide a regional service for people with learning disabilities who require treatment because of offending behaviours.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether all Northern Health & Social Services Board jobs based at County Hall in Ballymena will be retained at County Hall, as indicated in an article in the Ballymena Guardian on 12/03/2009. (AQW 6302/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: On 4 February 2009 I wrote to Chairs and Chief Executives of Health and Social Care bodies announcing my decisions on the location of the headquarters of the new HSC organisations. In the letter, the text of which is set out below, I advised that as a result of those decisions, the majority of staff who will not be working in the new headquarters will remain in their current location at 1 April 2009.

Exact numbers will depend on the outcome of current staff mapping and the application of an agreed human resources framework. However, we estimate under these arrangements over 80% of staff affected by the reforms will remain in their current location.

Letter issued on 4 February 2009 to Chairs and Chief Executives of Health and Social Care bodies:

I am pleased to be able to write to you formally about the decisions on the location of the headquarters of the new HSC organisations with effect from 1 April 2009.

Through the consultation processes associated with this phase of the reforms, staff and Trades Unions have emphasised the importance of timely decisions on location and a commitment was given by the Department that an announcement would be made at the end of January 2009.

From the outset I made it clear that, irrespective of the location of the headquarters, the new structures would maintain the strong local presence that is a feature of the health and social care system. As a result of these decisions, the great majority of staff who will not be working in the new headquarters will remain in their current location in Londonderry, Ballymena, Armagh, Broughshane, Omagh, Lurgan and Belfast at 1 April 2009.

The following decisions have been the subject of a comprehensive scoping exercise for suitable accommodation, business case approval by DFP and equality screening, carried out in line with existing guidance:-

- The Health and Social Care Board headquarters will be based in the current EHSSB HQ from 1 April 2009. Commissioning Support Units will be based in Londonderry, Ballymena, Armagh and Belfast.
- From 1 April 2009, the Public Health Agency headquarters will be based in surplus DHSSPS accommodation in Stoney Road, Dundonald on an interim basis until March 2010, with other Belfast-based staff, such as the Health Promotion Agency, remaining in their current accommodation. Work will commence immediately on the development of a longer term solution for the Agency headquarters based in Belfast, which is intended to be in an area that will reflect its important role in addressing health inequalities. Agency staff will also be based in the four Commissioning Support Units.
- The Business Services Organisation headquarters will be located on an interim basis in the CSA headquarters in Franklin Street, Belfast where the great majority of its staff are currently based. Staff currently based in Londonderry and elsewhere will remain in their present location. A further comprehensive option appraisal will be carried out to determine the location and accommodation for the shared service centres. There will also be an exercise to determine the location of the permanent headquarters which will be sited outside Belfast.
• The PCC headquarters will be based in suitable leased accommodation in Antrim. Four of the five local offices will be based in the same locations as the existing HSS Councils – Broughshane, Belfast, Lurgan and Omagh. New premises will be required for the Omagh office because staff are currently housed on Trust property. The new local office for the South Eastern area will be located in Newtownards.

We estimate that under these arrangements over 80% of staff will remain in their current location and over one third of the tier 3 posts will not be in headquarters. We are also examining the scope for further regional functions to be provided from local CSUs.

These decisions have taken account of the need to minimise as far as possible the impact for the majority of staff and ensure resources are not diverted from frontline services. We are also committed to applying the agreed principles that were adopted as part of the Human Resource Framework. The Framework sets out the arrangements that will govern the management of staff and staff issues during the structural reforms and also provides important mitigating measures and protections for staff in terms of location and over the next two years we shall closely monitor its application. These steps are part of our clear commitment to make every effort to avoid compulsory redundancies.

I trust that this provides clarity on the important issue of location. Enquiries about individual circumstances should be handled by the existing employer until 31 March and by the new employer with effect from 1 April 2009.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many jobs there have been in the (i) Northern Health and Social Services Board; (ii) Western Health and Social Services Board; (iii) Eastern Health and Social Services Board; and (iv) Southern Health and Social Services Board in (a) 2006/07; (b) 2007/08; and (c) 2008/09. (AQW 6303/09)

1. Jobs are defined as staff in post plus vacancies at the mid-point of each financial year.
2. WTE = whole-time equivalent.
3. Figures exclude bank staff or those with a whole-time equivalent of less than or equal to 0.03. Figures include staff on secondment.
4. The Southern HSS Board figures show a significant reduction in jobs from 2006 to 2008. This was due to the transfer of Internal Audit, Social Care Training Unit and Southern Area Urgent Care Services to the Southern HSC Trust.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Eastern Health and Social Services Board jobs there are per head of population in that Board area. (AQW 6304/09)

Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how many people over 46 years old have sexually transmitted diseases; and (ii) on average for how long they have suffered from this disease.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available. (AQW 6318/09)

Sexually Transmitted Diseases

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people under 45 years of age who have sexually transmitted diseases; and on average, for the length of time they have suffered from the disease.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available. (AQW 6319/09)

Abortions

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department determines the legality of each abortion performed in each of the last five years.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Health and Social Care Professionals must provide care within the law in Northern Ireland. The decision to advise a woman to have a termination of pregnancy will be a matter for professional clinical judgement, made within the legal framework which currently exists in Northern Ireland.

In September 2005 the then Chief Medical Officer, Dr Henrietta Campbell, wrote to all health workers who may be involved in the termination of pregnancy setting out the legal criteria under which a termination of pregnancy may be carried out. In March 2008 the Chief Medical Officer, Dr Michael McBride, wrote again re-iterating the legal position.

On Friday 13 March my Department issued Guidance on the Termination of Pregnancy: The Law and Clinical Practice in Northern Ireland to health professionals. This document re-states the legal criteria that must be met for a termination of pregnancy to be carried out in Northern Ireland.
Abortions

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in which hospitals were abortions performed in each of the last five years. (AQW 6323/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Guidance issued by the Office of National Statistics states that “the identity of the practitioner as the person who carried out the procedure should be protected. Similarly the identity of the hospital as the place where the termination occurred should also be protected”. It is therefore not appropriate to state in which hospitals abortions were performed in each of the last five years.

Abortions

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what official system his Department uses to monitor abortions. (AQW 6324/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Department of Health does not hold an official system solely for monitoring terminations of pregnancy.

The Department holds information on the Hospital Inpatient System which records information on diagnosis and procedures carried out on patients admitted to acute Health and Social Care hospitals in Northern Ireland as inpatients or day cases. This includes patients who have had a termination of pregnancy.

Southern Health and Social Services Board

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Southern Health and Social Services Board jobs there are per head of population in that Board area. (AQW 6325/09)

Northern Health and Social Services Board

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will take into account the Bain Report proposal that public sector jobs should be relocated to, not from Ballymena, when considering the location of jobs currently based in the Northern Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 6326/09)
The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I made it clear from the outset in my proposals for the reform of Health and Social Care structures that, irrespective of the location of the headquarters, the new structures would maintain the strong local presence that is a feature of the health and social care system.

As a result of the decisions contained in my announcement of 4 February, it is estimated that over 80% of staff who will not be working in the new headquarters will remain in their current location in Londonderry, Ballymena, Armagh, Broughshane, Omagh, Lurgan and Belfast at 1 April 2009.

I have noted the recommendations in Professor Bain’s Report and am aware that decisions around the future location of public sector jobs could have important implications for communities throughout Northern Ireland. Indeed, the wide dispersal of 70,000 health and social care sector jobs in NI, particularly high quality jobs outside Belfast, is already in evidence.

I will therefore engage with colleagues on the Executive in addressing the recommendations of the Bain Review. However, this process will inevitably take some time and you will understand that it was imperative for a number of reasons including service continuity and staff morale that the Department continued with its work, in line with current guidance, to determine the location of the new health and social care bodies from April 2009.

Northern Health and Social Services Board

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he can give an assurance that none of the jobs in the Information Services Department of the Northern Health and Social Services Board will be relocated to Belfast. (AQW 6327/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: On 4 February 2009 I wrote to Chairs and Chief Executives of Health and Social Care bodies, and trade unions, informing them that it is estimated that 80% of staff affected by these reforms will remain in their current location. From 1 April 2009 the Information Services Department of the Northern Health and Social Services Board will become part of the Health and Social Care Board. Decisions on location will take account of the need to minimise as far as possible the impact for the majority of staff. At this stage I cannot give any assurance for one particular group.

Regional Health and Social Care Board

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if department, heads in the new Regional Health and Social Care Board will have a direct say in where their staff will be located; or will there be set criteria or a policy that will dictate where jobs are located. (AQW 6328/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I would refer the member to my answer to AQW 6302 on 30 March. The final location of staff will depend on the outcome of the current staff mapping exercise and the application of an agreed human resources framework.

Northern Ireland Hospice Care Centre

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what economic and medical assistance his Department gives to the Northern Ireland Hospice Care Centre. (AQW 6334/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department provides Northern Ireland Hospice Care (NIHC) with a core annual grant of £130k, together with £200k recurrent funding to develop outreach nursing services at the Children’s Hospice. During 2008/09, I have also agreed to a £1k allocation for social work training and awarded a grant of £7k for the provision of siblings’ weekends at the children’s hospice.

Arrangements are also in place for Commissioners to provide 50% funding per adult patient cared for by NIHC. For the financial year 2008/09, funding for adults’ and children’s services is expected to amount to £2.543m.

Although my Department does not directly provide medical assistance to NIHC, junior medical staff at the hospice are funded by the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency and medications are funded by the Central Services Agency.
MacMillan Cancer Support

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what economic and medical assistance his Department gives to the MacMillan Cancer Support.

(AQW 6335/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Firstly I would like to recognise the invaluable contribution Macmillan makes to the care of cancer patients. As one of the largest national charities Macmillan has used its considerable resources to good effect in improving wellbeing of those affected by cancer in Northern Ireland. In common with health departments in other UK jurisdictions, the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety does not supply economic or medical assistance to Macmillan Cancer Support. The services Macmillan provides are entirely independent of Government support.

Childhood Obesity

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department is taking to tackle childhood obesity.

(AQW 6342/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Tackling childhood obesity in Northern Ireland is a top priority for my Department. To this end I have established a cross-sectoral Obesity Prevention Steering Group (OPSG) with responsibility for taking forward the recommendations contained in the Fit Futures Implementation Plan. This year we shall be developing a life course approach to improve participation in physical activity, increasing awareness of healthy eating and promoting healthy weight within an over-arching Obesity Strategic Framework.

Preventing the rise of childhood obesity will have a positive impact on the health of our communities in the future and whilst I acknowledge appropriate clinical interventions have a role to play, I believe we need to place particular emphasis on the early prevention of obesity which can help reduce related health issues such as diabetes, cancer and heart disease.

Outpatients Appointment Targets

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why some Health and Social Care Trusts have missed their outpatients appointment targets.

(AQW 6356/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: All Trusts have made satisfactory progress towards achieving the outpatients waiting list targets set for 2008/09. However, breaches of these target times can and will occur due to a range of unforeseen circumstances including capacity issues, recruitment issues and staff absenteeism.

My Department has established robust monitoring and performance management arrangements to ensure that all Trusts continue to make progress towards the achievement of the Priority for Action elective care targets.

Dementia

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have dementia.

(AQW 6357/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not collected centrally, and if available, could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Alzheimer’s Disease

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have Alzheimer’s disease.

(AQW 6358/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not collected centrally, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.
Epilepsy

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have been referred to Great Ormond Street hospital for treatment for epilepsy in the last three years. (AQW 6359/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The table below shows the number of people that have been referred from Health and Social Care Trusts in Northern Ireland to Great Ormond Street hospital for treatment for epilepsy in each of the last three years.

Family Support Workers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to his answer to AQW 5815/09, if there will be a reduction in the number of family support workers in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust, from the eight currently in the post. (AQW 6365/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust currently has no plans to reduce the number of family support workers from the eight currently in post in the Armagh and Dungannon locality.

Ambulances

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions have taken place with private companies and charity representatives about the provision of an air ambulance. (AQW 6371/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Officials from my Department have met with representatives of the Ireland Air Ambulance charity, also known as Alpha 5 to discuss the charity’s proposals for a helicopter emergency medical service. My Department has had no meetings with representatives of other private companies or charities regarding an air ambulance service.

In all contacts with Ireland Air Ambulance, officials have made clear that our policy priority for some years to come must be to invest in modernising ground ambulance services. This is essential to enable the ambulance service to improve its response to emergency life-threatening calls, to secure the best possible outcomes for patients and to deliver its performance targets.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what his Department is doing to tackle irresponsible drinking. (AQW 6380/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department takes the misuse of alcohol very seriously, particularly binge drinking and underage drinking. Through the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs, current actions to address this issue include:

- the establishment of a binge drinking advisory group;
- the continuation of the award winning binge drinking public information campaign;
- the provision of local treatment, support and information programmes; and
- positive engagement with the drinks industry.
Latest figures from the Adult Drinking Patterns Survey show that binge drinking levels have fallen from 43% of men and 33% of women in 2005 to 33% and 29% respectively in 2008. These levels are still too high and I intend to issue an integrated action plan to address young people’s drinking in the near future.

Alcohol Misuse

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety the estimated annual cost of alcohol misuse. (AQW 6381/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A 1998 report undertaken by my Department concluded that alcohol misuse was costing Northern Ireland Society approximately £770 million per year, and of this the direct costs to the Health Service were in the region of £25 million per year. As the original costings are now likely to be an underestimate my Department intends to update these over the next financial year.

Northern Health and Social Services Board

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many workers in the Northern Health and Social Services Board have been informed that they, or their positions, are being moved out of the Northern Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 6382/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I understand that no workers have been given formal notice that they, or their positions, are being moved out the Northern Health and Social Services Board area.

Mental Health Services

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what community groups and other organisations were consulted in relation to the new complaints system for mental health services. (AQW 6391/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A consultation paper, Complaints in the HPSS, was issued in November 2006. As a public consultation this was open to all individuals, groups and organisations. The consultation period closed in March 2007, by which time 91 responses had been received from a wide cross-section of interested parties including the HSC, community, voluntary, private and professional organisations.

Complaints in the HPSS and the subsequent Complaints in HSC: Standards and Guidelines for Resolution and Learning apply equally to all health and social care services. This includes, but is not specific to, mental health services.

New Health Service Dental Contract

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the new health service dental contract. (AQW 6405/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Negotiations between my Department and the British Dental association on a new bespoke primary dental care contract for Northern Ireland are ongoing. Once the contract is agreed it is intended that it will be piloted across a number of sites by the end of this year.

The new contract will allow dental services to be targeted at the groups and areas which have the highest need, provide stable and sustainable dental services, fairly remunerate dentists for the services they provide and improve the oral health of the people of Northern Ireland.
Charges for Drugs

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety the reasons why the transitional provisions contained in the Charges for Drugs and Appliances Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2008, whereby a reduction in the regulated charges for 2009 have been implemented, are without a pro-rata refund for those who hold a 12 month certificate of prepayment of charges valid from 2008 to 2009. (AQW 6445/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The reduced £3 charge for each prescription item dispensed, and reductions in the cost of 4- and 12-monthly Prescription Prepayment Certificates (PPCs) to £25 and £9 respectively, came into effect on 1 January 2009. It was decided not to issue pro rata refunds in respect of PPCs that had already been purchased, as for the great majority of people who purchase these, a PPC continues to represent a saving, since holders of a PPC receive unlimited, free prescriptions for the valid period.

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm that both Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service appliances in Portstewart are available for an immediate dispatch to an emergency fire or rescue callout. (AQW 6450/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: As I have indicated previously, I am considering proposals about the future of the second appliance from the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service Board. Pending my decision on those proposals, both appliances are available for immediate dispatch.

Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety who his special adviser is for questions regarding the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service. (AQW 6452/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I have no special adviser specifically for questions regarding the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service. I take advice on operational matters from the Chief Fire Officer and the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service Board.

Health and Social Care Trusts

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety the total number of (i) Directors; (ii) Assistant Directors; and (iii) support staff employed in each of the Health and Social Care Trusts. (AQW 6518/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is given in the table below.

Notes:
Senior Nursing Positions

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many nurses in the Western Health and Social Care Trust area, who took early retirement, are back in senior nursing positions. (AQW 6522/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Trust management have advised there are no nurses that availed of early retirement, re-engaged in senior nursing positions.

Midwife-Led Maternity Unit in Omagh

Mr McEllduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the estimated number of women expected to have ‘no risk’ labours (i) if his Department will establish a community midwifery led unit in Omagh; and (ii) to detail the outcome of the recent consultation exercise on this matter. (AQW 6541/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

i) I want to give my fullest consideration and to take the necessary professional advice on all of the issues raised in the Western Board’s feasibility report on the provision of a midwife-led maternity unit in Omagh. I will make an appropriate announcement when I have done so.

ii) The key issues which emerged from the Western Board’s study were:

• Mother and baby safety;
• The need for an effective transfer system in the case of an emergency;
• Eligibility criteria;
• The availability of skilled midwives;
• Impact on plans for the new south west acute hospital;
• The long-term sustainability of a midwife led unit;
• Impact on existing obstetric units at Altnagelvin and Erne hospitals; and
• Costs and value for money.

Replacing Light Bulbs in Hospitals

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the protocol is for replacing light bulbs in hospitals in the Western Health and Social Care Trust area; and the associated costs of each replacement. (AQW 6562/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Western Health and Social Care Trust replace lamps as soon as reasonably practical after a lamp failure is notified to the Trust’s Estates Department. The average cost of routine lamp replacement is £5.40. This covers all lamps used in WHSCT facilities such as compact fluorescent, fluorescent, low voltage, filament lamps, tungsten halogen and other discharge lighting.

Nursing Staff

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what opportunities are available in the Western Health and Social Care area for young nursing staff to gain experience. (AQW 6563/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Newly qualified nurses are recruited at Band 5, and following induction, are provided with a preceptor during the first 6-12 months of their experience to provide them with support and enable them build their confidence within a safe environment. A wide range of skills training is funded by my Department and available through the In-service Education and Development Consortium.

Opportunities are also provided for nursing staff to transfer between different specialties within the service area that they are qualified to work. This can be either to meet individual requests or service needs. This helps broaden their overall experience and opens up new career and promotion opportunities.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to confirm his commitment to Health and Social Services Boards, following its reorganisation on 1 April 2009, that 80% of public sector jobs will remain in local areas and that senior positions will not be centralised in Belfast; and (ii) if he will act in accordance with the recommendations of the Bain Report in relation to the location and decentralisation of public sector jobs. (AQW 6595/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

(i) In my 4 February 2009 announcement on the location of the headquarters of the new organisations, it was estimated that over 80% of staff would remain in their current location and over one third of the Tier 3 posts would not be in headquarters. Exact numbers and the final location of staff will depend on the outcome of current staff mapping and the application of an agreed human resources framework.

(ii) I will engage with colleagues on the Executive in addressing the recommendations of the Bain Review. However, this process will inevitably take some time and you will understand that it was imperative for a number of reasons including service continuity and staff morale that the Department continued with its work, in line with current guidance, to determine the location of the new health and social care bodies from April 2009.

Ambulances

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many ambulances service the Mid Ulster area. (AQW 6621/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There are two ambulance stations in Mid-Ulster at Magherafelt and Cookstown. The ambulance resources based at these stations are shown in the table below.

It is important to recognise that, as the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service dynamically deploys its emergency response fleet and will send the nearest available appropriate resource to 999 calls, it is possible that responses to 999 calls from the Mid-Ulster area will not originate from Magherafelt or Cookstown ambulance stations.

Ambulances

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the average waiting time is for patients requiring ambulance transport to the Royal Victoria Hospital from the (i) Mid-Ulster Hospital; and (ii) Antrim Area Hospital. (AQW 6622/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The arrangements for the inter-hospital transfer of patients apply uniformly across all hospitals in Northern Ireland. The hospital where the patient is resident makes a booking for transport with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) clinically categorising the patient transfer as either "emergency" or "routine".

NIAS has advised that the average waiting time for inter-hospital transfers is not routinely collected and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.
Ambulances

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the transfer arrangements are for patients travelling from the (i) Mid-Ulster Hospital; and (ii) Antrim Area Hospital to the Royal Victoria Hospital. (AQW 6623/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The arrangements for the inter-hospital transfer of patients apply uniformly across all hospitals in Northern Ireland. The hospital where the patient is resident makes a booking for transport with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) clinically categorising the patient transfer as either “emergency” or “routine”.

Emergency transports receive an immediate response from the nearest appropriate emergency ambulance. Non-emergency transfers receive a planned response in line with timeframes outlined by the clinician.

These procedures are well established and have served patients well for many years.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many employees are in his Department in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area. (AQW 6644/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The DHSSPS has 35 employees working in Waterside House, Londonderry at 26 March 2009.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many employees in his Department travel from Londonderry/Derry to work in Belfast. (AQW 6668/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The DHSSPS currently has 6 employees with an address in Londonderry/Derry who work in the Belfast area.

The 6 officers currently have an address with a postcode of BT47 and BT48.

Scottish Medicines Consortium

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the Scottish Medicines Consortium’s legal standing in Northern Ireland. (AQW 6724/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Scottish Medicines Consortium (SMC) assesses and makes recommendations on all new drugs to NHS Boards and their Area Drug and Therapeutics Committees across Scotland. SMC has no legal standing in Northern Ireland. SMC guidance is not currently reviewed or assessed as applicable in Northern Ireland.

Forum For Action On Substance Abuse

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what financial assistance he will give the Forum For Action On Substance Abuse in North Down as its funding will end in two months. (AQW 6789/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The allocation of local funding, as well as the identification of local needs and local priorities, is the responsibility of the local Health and Social Care organisations. In the case of the FASA initiative in North Down neither the Department nor the local Drug and Alcohol Team provided funding for its establishment.

I do want to ensure the provision of an appropriate range of services across Northern Ireland to support those individuals and families affected by substance misuse. The new Public Health Agency, established on 1 April 2009, will therefore consider how best to provide resources for initiatives that help reduce the harm related to alcohol and drug misuse across Northern Ireland to organisations such as FASA and others.
Young People with Drugs and Alcohol Problems

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to assist young people with drugs and alcohol problems. (AQW 6792/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Health and Social Care (HSC) commissions and funds a number of specialist services at a local level that provide treatment through HSC facilities for young people with drug and alcohol dependencies. These include:

Substance Misuse services for young people aged 17 and under based on a 4-tier model;
Tier 2/3 Counselling, Support & Mentoring services for young people under 18; and Tier 3/4 specialist treatment services for young people under 18

In addition, a number of education, awareness raising and training initiatives have been put in place, and all residents (including young people) also have access to generic primary/secondary care services who will meet other physical/mental health needs that may arise because of dependency to drugs and/or alcohol.

Children in Need

Ms J McCann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department’s guidance in relation to those children categorised as ‘children in need’. (AQW 6817/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Article 17 of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 sets out the circumstances in which a child is to be considered ‘in need’. Part IV of, and Schedule 2 to, the Order set out the main responsibilities of Health and Social Care Trusts for children in their areas who are in need and their families; and children in need whom they look after. Guidance on the statutory framework and its underlying principles is contained in eight volumes of Children (NI) Order 1995 Guidance and Regulations.

A single assessment framework, Understanding the Needs of Children in northern Ireland, (UNOCINI) has been developed for use by those involved in assessing the needs of children in need in Northern Ireland. Guidance has also been issued to support those using the new framework.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what recognition his Department gives to fibromyalgia and chronic fatigue syndrome/M.E. (AQW 6836/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In January 2008, my Department endorsed the NICE clinical guidelines on the diagnosis and management of Myalgic Encephalomyelitis/Chronic Fatigue Syndrome (ME/CFS) in adults and children in Northern Ireland. These guidelines are endorsed as developmental standards, and the Department expects Trusts to take account of them in planning and delivering their services.

In relation to Fibromyalgia, the cause of this condition remains unknown. The variability of symptoms in potential sufferers means that there is difficulty in diagnosis. At present there is no dedicated fibromyalgia service and no diagnostic test or cure for the illness.

The majority of care for both conditions is provided by general practitioners. Patients also have full access to a wide range of treatment and support services in secondary, primary and community care settings, including neurology services and mental health services.

Hip Arthroscopy Surgery

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of hip arthroscopy surgery provision. (AQu 241/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am advised that hip arthroscopy is a relatively new procedure for the treatment of some hip conditions and the Health Boards have not yet agreed to commission it on a routine basis. The Health Boards have however asked clinicians to submit an evidence based business case for the development of a hip arthroscopy service and the Boards will wish to consider this in full before making decisions on the recurrent funding of a hip arthroscopy service in Northern Ireland. In the interim, where this procedure is recommended on clinical grounds, the Health Boards will consider funding the treatment of individual patients through their standard procedures for extra-contractual referral. The alternative treatment is physiotherapy and medical therapy and this may be offered where it is considered clinically appropriate.

Action Cancer Big Bus

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have had cancer detected through the Action Cancer Big Bus and what financial assistance is provided by his Department for this service.

(AQO 2412/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety does not hold any data on how many people have had cancer detected through the Action Cancer Big Bus. The Department does not provide any financial assistance for this service.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Ms Ni Chui lin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what liaison he has had with the Minister for Social Development in relation to the future for neighbourhood renewal.

(AQO 2413/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: On my behalf officials of this Department have had significant and ongoing contact with DSD. This clearly reflects that tackling health inequalities is one of my key priorities and in this respect there is a strong correlation with the work of Neighbourhood Renewal.

Midwives

Mr Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to increase the number of qualified midwives to meet the long term need.

(AQO 2414/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A review of the Nursing and Midwifery workforce is currently underway. The review is examining current and future recruitment and retention issues impacting on the workforce, and will provide a prediction of future supply and demand for midwives over the next five years.

I have increased midwifery training commissions for academic year 07/08 and 08/09. Over the last 3 years I have increased midwifery training commissions by 40%, from 44 to 62 places. Further decisions will be taken once I have considered the recommendations of the workforce review. However there are no plans to reduce the midwifery training numbers.

Regional Agency for Public Health and Social Well-Being

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his priorities for the new Regional Agency for Public Health and Social Well-Being.

(AQO 2415/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Public Health Agency, once established on 1 April, will be asked to develop plans and actions to improve the health of the population, to protect the health of the population and to tackle the particular challenge of reducing health inequalities. There are already clear priorities addressing these issues in the form of Public Service Agreements which cover issues such as life expectancy, smoking, sexual health, obesity, alcohol misuse promoting mental health and suicide.

On the health protection side, the Agency will take forward plans in regard to reducing healthcare associated infections, preparing for pandemic flu and screening programmes.

Following its establishment on 1 April, the new Public Health Agency will be requested to submit its plans to address these priorities, for my approval.
Efficiency Targets

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of his Department achieving 3% efficiency targets.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Targets were imposed on all Departments at the same rate and there was no special dispensation made for health - despite inherent underfunding of £600m. The efficiencies are a major challenge for my Department but must be achieved if I am to deliver my service developments and maintain existing services. We are on course to deliver the full complement of efficiencies for 2008/09.

Resettlement Programme

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans there are to increase day care under the Resettlement Programme.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The whole ethos behind the Resettlement Programme is about ensuring the betterment of the lives of people who currently live in learning disability hospitals. It necessarily includes further investment in the community infrastructure to enable those people being resettled to remain in the community and to support them to live independently. Day care services are part of that additional investment. The additional resources of £33m (£17m recurrent) for learning disability services which I secured under the Comprehensive Spending Review for the period 2008-2011 are being used to provide a range of additional services including day care.

My officials are currently in the process of gathering comprehensive information in order to support robust future bidding processes. Any new resources secured for the Resettlement Programme beyond 2011 will also include an element to be invested in the community infrastructure which will include day care.

Home Births

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his Department’s policy in relation to women who want to give birth at home.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department’s maternity policies recognise that, for the majority of women, pregnancy and childbirth are normal life events and that promoting women’s experience of having choice and control in childbirth can have a significant effect on children’s healthy development.

A home birth is therefore an option open to women experiencing a low risk pregnancy and who wish to have their baby delivered at home. Each Trust will have its own arrangements and guidelines for the facilitation and support of home births within their maternity services.

Children’s Development and Life Chances

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to help parents in poverty to improve the development and life chances of their children.

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department’s family and parenting strategy, Families Matter: Supporting Families in Northern Ireland, gives a commitment to work towards the elimination of poverty, particularly child poverty, through supporting parents who experience poverty. It seeks to increase the range of services available to support families and parents; to ensure that those services are accessible to all families and parents; to improve the range of information available to families and parents to enable them fulfill their duties in bringing up children and to promote multi-agency working. In addition, the public health strategy Investing for Health recognised poverty as a major determinant of health and well-being and as a result many actions are underway at regional and local level in partnership with others.
A&E Patient Priority

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the accepted criteria for determining the priority of patients to be seen at A&E departments. (AQO 2420/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Patients attending A&E, other than emergency or cases such as blue-light ambulances or cardiac cases, are assessed initially by a skilled triage nurse and then treated on the basis of clinical priority.

In addition, the current waiting time target requires Health and Social Care Trusts to ensure that from April 2008, 95% of patients attending A&E are either treated and discharged home, or admitted within four hours of their arrival in the department; no patient should wait longer than 12 hours.

Southern Trust: Agency Staff Spend

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline why £5 million was spent on agency staff in one year, in the Southern Trust area, and what action is being taken in relation to staff recruitment to avoid further expense of this nature. (AQO 2421/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There are many reasons why Health and Social Care Trusts may appoint agency staff, for example, during periods of temporary staff shortage it may be necessary to use agency staff to provide short-term cover for essential services, when there is no viable alternative.

The Southern Trust has advised me that they are actively reviewing their agency usage and an Agency Protocol has recently been introduced to facilitate robust monitoring of agency usage.

The Trust has an on-going campaign of recruitment to minimise the need for agency staff and is actively seeking to recruit banks of staff, which can be utilised as required to reduce the need for agency usage. In addition the Trust reports that it continues to complete its restructuring process which will stabilise its staffing compliment.

The Southern Trust assures me that it is committed to providing an excellent service to all patients and clients within its catchment area and recognises the need to balance the provision of high quality services within tight financial constraints.

Extended Schools Programme

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with the Minister of Education in relation to future funding for Extended Schools Programmes. (AQO 2422/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Extended Schools Programme is an initiative of the Department of Education and as such the future funding of the programme is an issue for that department. Therefore, I have not had discussions with the Minister for Education regarding the funding of this initiative.

Maternity Services

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the pressures facing maternity services. (AQO 2423/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Maternity services in Northern Ireland are of a very high standard, professionally delivered and safe.

The service is currently facing a number of pressures due to increasing numbers of births and the need to reconfigure services to meet modern standards. These pressures are constantly monitored and in response I have recently announced significant investments in the maternity units at both Craigavon and Daisy Hill along with the establishment of a Community Midwife Unit at Lagan Valley Hospital. In addition the EHSSB has recently completed a review of maternity provision in their area aimed at ensuring that there is sufficient capacity moving forward to meet demand.
I am committed to providing high quality, accessible services for all parents and babies.

Efficiency Savings

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the efficiency savings proposals outlined by Health and Social Care Trusts. (AQO 2425/09)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Health Committee paper in October included an indicative split of Trust proposals between different types of efficiencies, to be obtained by 2010/11, as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>(1) RPA</th>

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Road Maintenance

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development to give an assessment of the cost of providing lighting along the full length of the A1 between Newry and Lisburn. (AQW 6308/09)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr C Murphy): My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the A1 between Lisburn and Newry is approximately 47 km long, with approximately 5 km currently having lighting, or in the process of being lighted. This is mainly made up of lighting at roundabouts and other intersections, together with the approaches to these features.

The cost of lighting the remaining 42 km of the A1 is estimated to be around £357,000 per km with a total estimated cost of around £15,000,000.

It should also be noted that this estimate does not include the cost for the following:-

- Establishing around 80-100 electrical supply points. These supply points would have to be served from the NIE network. Given the isolated rural nature of the terrain and the remoteness of these networks from the A1, the costs involved are likely to be very substantial.
- Excavating in adverse ground conditions, as much of the route of the A1 passes through a rock sub-base.
- Upgrading older existing lighting systems on the A1 to match the standard of the new lighting.
- No estimate has been made in respect of future electricity and maintenance costs.

Roads Service

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development to breakdown the levels of funding allocated to each section office in his Department’s (i) Eastern; and (ii) Southern Divisions. (AQW 6309/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service budget is allocated to its Divisions and the Section Offices on a basis of need.
In relation to roads maintenance, the resources available are allocated to the four Roads Service Divisions using a range of weighted indicators, which are tailored to each maintenance activity, including resurfacing, patching, gully emptying and grass cutting. Divisions use these indicators when apportioning resources across Sections, to ensure, as far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds across the whole of the North. The level of funding allocated to each section office in Eastern and Southern Divisions for maintenance operations, as at 23 March 2009, is provided in the tables below.

In relation to the Roads Service budget for major works, improvements are prioritised across the whole of the North, after considering a wide range of criteria, which includes strategic planning policy, traffic flow, number of accidents, potential savings in travel times, impact on the environment and value for money. While the actual spend on a major work scheme may be within one Roads Service Division, the benefits of such schemes are not confined to the area covered by a Division, Section, constituency or county, in which it is located.

With regard to Roads Service expenditure on minor road improvements, which includes minor works, accident remedial schemes, transportation measures and minor bridge strengthening, the resources available for such works are allocated to the four Roads Service Divisions, on the basis of need. This approach uses indicators such as population, weighted road lengths and the number of accidents. It also prioritises work to our bridge structures, using criteria such as loading restrictions due to bridge failures and/or defects and parapet repairs as a result of changes to current legislation. The Divisional budget is then split across the Sections in the Division using the same criteria. This approach ensures, as far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds across the North.

Portstewart to Coleraine, Cromore Road

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans there are to upgrade the Portstewart to Coleraine, Cromore Road, in the next two years. (AQW 6333/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that it is considering a proposal to provide right turning facilities at the Cromore Road / Islandtasserty Road / Agherton Road, staggered junction. However, progress of this scheme would be dependant on the successful acquisition of land and the availability of funding over the next two years.
Road Maintenance

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the expenditure for road maintenance in the (i) Western Region; (ii) Dungannon; (iii) Cookstown; and (iv) Magherafelt for (a) 2004/05; (b) 2005/06; (c) 2006/07; (d) 2007/08; and (e) 2008 to present. (AQW 6336/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service spend on roads maintenance, in Western Division, Dungannon, Cookstown and Magherafelt District Councils, in each financial year from 2004/2005 to 28 February 2009, is set out in the table below.

Footpath Resurfacing Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what footpath resurfacing schemes are planned for the Donaghadee and Millisle areas, in the next financial year. (AQW 6360/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that there are no plans to carry out any footway resurfacing schemes in Donaghadee and Millisle during the next financial year.

Steria/Crystal Alliance

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development how much of the £70 million paid to Steria/Crystal Alliance has been recouped following termination of the contract between them and NI Water. (AQW 6397/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the contract with Steria was awarded in 2006 and was expected to last seven years at a total cost of £70 million. At the end of December 2008 NIW had paid approximately £27 million under the contract. While the termination of the contract with Steria was announced on 16 December 2008 it only comes into effect on 15 December 2009 and NIW is currently negotiating with Steria on the commercial terms of the termination.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development how much NI Water have spent on bottled water since 1 April 2007. (AQW 6398/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it holds a limited stock of bottled water to provide an emergency supply to customers during prolonged interruptions to the public water supply. NIW does not provide bottled water for use by staff except in the Duncrue Street Incinerator control room where welfare and health and safety considerations require the availability of drinking water but restrict the introduction of mains water in close proximity to sensitive electronic equipment. Since 1 April 2007, a total of £25,718 has been spent on bottled water, including £757 on the water used in the control room.
Public Transport

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development which disability groups he has met in relation to public transport issues facing people with disabilities. (AQW 6411/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Since taking up post I have met regularly with the chairman and representatives of the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (Imtac). Imtac is the main source of independent advice to Government and others in the North on all transport issues that affect the mobility of older people and disabled people. My most recent meeting with Imtac, on 19 March 2009, included representatives from Age Sector Platform, Disability Action, East Belfast Trust Sight Support Team, Guide Dogs, Mobilise, the Omnibus Partnership and Shopmobility.

On 17 February I met a delegation from the All Party Assembly Group on Disability. It included representatives from Disability Action, Guide Dogs, the Omnibus Partnership and the Royal National Institute for Deaf People.

In addition, as part of other meetings with MLAs and others, I meet people who represent the age and disability sectors.

Travelwise Safer Routes to School Initiative

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 1968/09, the expected timescale for the implementation of the Travelwise Safer Routes to School Initiative. (AQW 6413/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that since the Travelwise Safer Routes to School Initiative was launched in 2004, it has worked in 151 schools in the North, involving over 45,000 pupils and has committed over £2.3 million to this initiative.

Given the impact of the initiative to date, and the further potential benefits to be realised, at the present time Roads Service intends, within available resources, to roll out the Safer Routes to School programme.

On average, there are 30 places available each year, and schools are encouraged to self-nominate for inclusion on the programme.

New A1 Dual Carriageway

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what actions are being taken to control dust pollution during the building of the new A1 dual carriageway from Cloughogue to Beechill, and the frequency of actions taken. (AQW 6419/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the possibility, that local air quality may be temporarily reduced, as a result of the construction of the A1 Beech Hill to Cloughogue strategic road improvement, was considered in the Environmental Statement (ES) for the scheme. The ES, which was published in 2004, was also the subject of a Public Inquiry in 2005. The ES recognised that the scheme required substantial earthworks, due to the undulating topography and that during prolonged dry periods, higher than normal airborne dust levels may pose a problem, with properties within about a 50 metre radius of the works, being most affected.

The ES requires Lagan Ferrovial, the Construction Contractor for this Design Build Finance and Operate project (the contractor), to take measures to minimise the amount of dust created by the works. In this respect Roads Service expects the contractor to exercise current good practice, to control dust emanating from the works.

While there have been concerns about dust generated by the works, these have been addressed through direct contact with the contractor’s Community Liaison Officer. An example of the type of contact is the ongoing Community Liaison Panel Meetings, which are facilitated by the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council.

I have been informed, that in response to a particular complaint about dust arising from the ongoing processing of rock material, being undertaken north of Cloughogue, the contractor advised you of the minor operational changes, which were implemented following a visit to the site, by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency, Pollution Control Department and the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council.
These works are also subject to a Pollution Prevention and Control Permit, issued by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency, Pollution Control Department.

I am further advised that, in consultation with the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council, the contractor has engaged the services of the School of Chemistry at the Queen’s University of Belfast, to set up and monitor dust at 3 strategic locations near the works. Results for the period, 20 October 2008 to 29 January 2009, were presented at the recent meeting of the Community Liaison Panel, held on 13 March 2009, and I understand all councillors were invited to this meeting.

While an interpretative report from Dr Patricks, of Queen's University is awaited, the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council, referring to a German standard in the absence of a corresponding UK standard, indicate that at present, there does not appear to be a dust nuisance, at the locations being monitored.

The measures, which the contractor is implementing to control dust, are therefore continuing as is the monitoring, which the contractor and other agencies are undertaking to assess their effectiveness.

New A1 Dual Carriageway

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what actions are being taken to keep existing nearby roads and pavements clean during the building of the new A1 dual carriageway from Cloughogue to Beechill, and the frequency of actions taken.

(AQW 6420/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Environmental Statement (ES) for the new A1 dual carriageway, from Cloughogue to Beechill, recognises that wet weather creates problems of mud being dispersed onto the public road network, by vehicles leaving the works site.

My Department’s Roads Service has advised that recommendations for controlling this problem include, access being limited to designated points and the washing of mud from construction vehicles. In this respect, Lagan Ferrovial, the Construction Contractor for this Design Build Finance and Operate project (the contractor) has two water bowser and two road sweepers, available on the new dual carriageway site, to clear debris from the carriageway. Additional sweepers are available should conditions deteriorate. The contractor also has three foremen and twelve supervisors on the ground, at any one time, who can respond, should this problem arise.

I understand that construction works have now reached a stage where access to the site is limited to three locations, and Roads Service’s site representatives have asked the contractor to consider improving facilities, to prevent mud being carried onto the carriageway. Roads Service staff and their site representatives will continue to monitor the conditions of the roads adjacent to accesses to the site, to identify problems of mud on the carriageway and to inform the contractor where action is required if this is observed.

New A1 Dual Carriageway

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development how the amenity of housing developments along the route of the new A1 dual carriageway will be protected when the road is built.

(AQW 6421/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that even before publication of the Environmental Statement (ES), when the specimen design for this strategic road improvement was being developed, Roads Service and their technical advisers met, on several occasions, with the Confederation of Community Groups in Newry. The purpose of this was to describe and explain the developing project and to listen to the Group’s concerns.

The discussions which took place at that time, resulted in the provision of the Martin’s Lane Link, which will cross the new dual carriageway at the location of the former footbridge. This short link road addressed several of the community’s concerns, including those about traffic, particularly commercial vehicles, rerouting through the residential areas and passing the several schools in the vicinity, following the closure of the Martin’s lane access onto the bypass. This link also provides access, particularly for children from the residential areas on the east side of the new road, to the Corrinshego playing fields. Requests for a secure boundary between the residential area and the new road were also noted at that time.

The Confederation of Community Groups also submitted comments, following publication of the ES and participated effectively in the subsequent Public Inquiry. For example, in response to the Groups representations and the Inspectors’ recommendation, substantial lengths of footway are being provided on the new minor road network, which is being constructed on the west side of the new dual carriageway, in the vicinity of Chancellors Road. This will provide links from the residential areas into the countryside, particularly towards the Bernish view point. Roads Service has also agreed that mature planting would be provided to offset the visual impact at the areas most affected by the scheme. In this respect, the landscape designers from Lagan Ferrovial, the Construction Contractor for this Design Build Finance and Operate project (the contractor) have already provided proposals to the Parkhead Crescent representative, who, at a meeting with Roads Service on 20 March 2009, requested further consultation with the contractor’s designers.

The scheme design aims to meet the “Relevant Air Quality Standards” and maintain road traffic noise below prescribed levels. For example, a low noise surfacing material is proposed for the main carriageway, throughout the scheme. Safety barriers will also be provided, as indicated by the normal risk assessment for the entire route.

While the alignment and main characteristics of the scheme have been confirmed through the Statutory Procedures, which included Public Inquiries, the contractor has appointed a Community Liaison Officer, and a Community Liaison Panel has been formed. Regular meetings with the Community Liaison Panel, which are being facilitated by the Environmental Health Department of Newry and Mourne District Council, are formally reported to the council. These provide an ongoing opportunity for those in the community, who have concerns about the scheme, particularly during this construction stage, to have these matters addressed.

New A1 Dual Carriageway

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what assessment he has made of whether the building of the new A1 dual carriageway will block out light, be overbearing, and present a potential health and safety hazard to the residents of Parkhead Crescent, Newry. (AQW 6422/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Environmental Statement (ES) includes specific reference to the “Visual Impact on dwellings at Parkhead and Carnagat closest to the A1 (approx.65 No)”. It describes this impact as “Adverse to Substantial” particularly since the “first line of houses [Parkhead Crescent] would be approximately 20 metres from the toe of the 8-10 metre high embankment. Views of distant hill tops above the railway embankment would be partially obscured or lost.” My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the primary measures for mitigating this visual and landscape impact, is the provision of appropriate planting, which was the subject of discussion at the ES Public Inquiry and included in the Inspectors’ recommendation.

Therefore, while the ES for the scheme does not specifically indicate that the new road embankment, immediately adjacent to Parkhead Crescent, would block out light, be overbearing, or present a potential health and safety hazard, it does recognise the substantial adverse visual impact which this new road feature will have on the adjacent houses. In this respect, the ES includes recommendations, by way of planting, to mitigate the impact, which were in due course reinforced through the Public Inquiry procedure. I understand that consultation is currently continuing between Roads Service, the landscape designers from Lagan Ferrovial, the Construction Contractor for this Design Build Finance and Operate project and the representatives of Parkhead Crescent, in relation to the planting of this embankment.

It should be noted that the Independent Inspectors, in commenting on the ES for the A1 Beech Hill to Cloghogue dual carriageway scheme, described it as “an exhaustive examination of the impact of this scheme on the local environment and that it attempted to balance the conflicting interests in accordance with standard procedures.”

Water Resources Management Plan

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development if he has any plans to introduce a water resources management plan, and if so, when this will occur. (AQW 6426/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it has a Water Resource Strategy for the period up to 2030 which was prepared in 2002 and reviewed in 2007. The strategy is used for asset management and operational planning purposes and NIW is currently planning a further update. It intends to award a commission for a new Water Resource Management Plan during April 2009 and expects the Plan to be completed by mid 2010 when any recommendations will be incorporated into the planning process for the price control review in 2013.
Land and Property Services

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development how many water bills for commercial customers are based on information received from Land and Property Services; and how many of these bills have been amended due to inaccurate information provided by Land and Property Services. (AQW 6432/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that from April 2008 over 26,000 unmeasured bills have been issued based on a Net Annual Value provided by Land and Property Services.

NIW does not keep records that identify amended water bills resulting from incorrect data supplied by Land and Property Services, and is therefore unable to provide the details sought.

Resurfacing Footpaths

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development how his Department prioritises the repaving of footpaths. (AQW 6460/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has a statutory duty to maintain the public footways in a safe and serviceable condition. Roads Service operates a system of regular safety inspections to ensure that essential response maintenance is identified and completed, as necessary.

These safety inspections help identify the condition of the public footways, and this information is then used in the preparation and prioritisation of Roads Service’s annual footway reconstruction and resurfacing programme.

Resurfacing Footpaths

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development how his Department prioritises the resurfacing of footpaths. (AQW 6461/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service undertakes an annual programme of footway reconstruction and resurfacing works, subject to the availability of financial resource.

This programme is prepared on the basis of a number of factors encompassing the footway usage, general surface condition, structural deformation, public enquiries and public liability claims.

Resurfacing Footpaths

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the budget for repairing footpaths in South Belfast. (AQW 6462/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that its budgets for particular areas of work are not allocated on a Parliamentary Constituency, or Council ward basis.

However, I have been advised by Roads Service that, in the 2008/09 financial year, the budget for repairing the public footways in the Belfast South Section Office area, was £228,000. Belfast South Section Office’s area of responsibility covers parts of East, South and West Belfast.

The budget allocations for the 2009/10 financial year are presently being finalised, and it is anticipated that the financial allocation for this function will be similar.

Resurfacing Footpaths

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the budget for resurfacing footpaths in South Belfast. (AQW 6463/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads service has advised that its budgets for particular areas of work are not allocated on a Parliamentary Constituency or Council ward basis.
However, I have been advised by Roads Service that in the 2008/09 financial year, the budget for footway reconstruction and resurfacing in the Belfast South Section Office area was £352,000. Belfast South Section Office’s area of responsibility covers parts of East, South and West Belfast.

The budget allocations for the 2009/10 financial year are presently being finalised, and it is anticipated that the financial allocation for this function will be similar.

Resurfacing Footpaths

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Regional Development what (i) remedial repairs have been carried out; and (ii) resurfacing undertaken, on footpaths in South Belfast; and to detail the cost of the work. (AQW 6466/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has a statutory duty to maintain the public footways in a safe and serviceable condition. Roads Service operates a system of regular safety inspections to ensure that essential response maintenance is identified and completed, as necessary.

It should be noted that budgets for particular areas of work, are not allocated by my Department’s Roads Service on a Parliamentary Constituency or Council ward basis.

However, I have been advised by Roads Service that, in 2008/09, footway repairs, comprising of over 2900m2 of patching, 300m2 of flagged footways repairs and 650m of replacement kerbs and drainage channels were carried out in the Belfast South Section Office area. Belfast South Section Office’s area of responsibility covers parts of East, South and West Belfast. The patching budget for this work was £228,000.

In 2008/09, the footway resurfacing programme completed in the South Belfast Section Office area, included Deramore Park, Rosetta Park, Benmore Drive, Strathallen Park, Strathyre Park, Aberfoyle Park, Aberfoyle Gardens and Old Forge Manor, at a cost of £352,000.

Double Yellow Lines at Junctions

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to double yellow lines extending around junctions, (i) what his Department’s policy is; and (ii) what distance can they be. (AQW 6509/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Member will be aware that double yellow lines indicate where you cannot wait in a vehicle at any time during the day. They are used to signify where a waiting restriction/prohibition is in force.

The extent of double yellow lines at junctions will depend on the length/nature of the restriction/prohibition in force, considered necessary at a particular location.

Road Safety on the A26 Dual Carriageway

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development what his Department’s plans are to improve road safety on the A26 dual carriageway from Dunsilly to Ballee roundabouts. (AQW 6539/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service, in conjunction with the PSNI, monitors the safety performance of all roads across the North.

Roads Service has advised that the A26 Lisnevenagh dual carriageway, between Dunsilly and Ballee, was constructed to a high standard, in line with the standards applicable at the time. An analysis of the collision history, carried out in December 2008, concluded that it was not possible to establish a common pattern that could be addressed by road safety engineering measures.

Street lighting has been provided at two of the busiest junctions along the A26, to address night time collision problems that were identified. In addition, Roads Service has also recently erected a number of new junction warning signs at the busier junctions along the A26. New ‘School’ warning signs have also been provided on the approaches to the Valley Road junction for Carnaghts Primary School.

Although Roads Service has recently agreed to monitor traffic speeds in the vicinity of the Carnaghts Primary School, there are no plans to introduce any further measures on the A26 Lisnevenagh dual carriageway, at present. However, Roads Service will continue to monitor the road safety of the route in conjunction with the PSNI.
Road Safety on the A26 Dual Carriageway

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development, in view of the large number of accidents, if he will consider implementing a 50 mph speed limit from Woodgreen Junction to Cronkill Junction. (AQW 6540/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that the A26 Lisnevenagh Road dual carriageway, between Dunsilly and Ballee, including the stretch of road from Woodgreen to Cronkill, is subject to the national speed limit of 70 mph.

Although Roads Service has recently agreed to monitor traffic speeds in the vicinity of the Carnaghts Primary School, there are no current proposals to reduce the speed limit on any section of this road.

Park and Ride Facilities

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to increase park and ride facilities in (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) North Down. (AQW 6542/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department aims to encourage people to consider using more sustainable forms of travel. With this aim in mind, Roads Service’s Divisions, in association with Translink, who provide the formal bus service, are implementing a number of additional Park and Ride facilities across the North:-

- Northern Division are progressing two additional schemes in Dungiven and Drumahoe, having already extended the existing facility at Ballee in Ballymena, and are looking at further sites on the proposed new realignment of the A6.
- Southern Division are currently progressing several schemes in the Armagh City area.
- Western Division are intending to provide schemes at:-
  - A5 Ballygawley Roundabout, at the junction between A5 and A4;
  - Crevenagh Road, Omagh - trial park and ride, using the existing Park and Share facility.
  - Wellington Road, Enniskillen - provide park and ride spaces in a free car park, adjacent to the existing bus station in Enniskillen; and
  - Park and Share facilities are also planned at Stangmore and Tamnamore roundabouts on the M1. While these are initially planned as park and share, they have been planned with Park and Ride in mind should the demand be appropriate.
- Eastern Division - Within the Belfast Metropolitan Area the plans for introducing park and ride facilities are contained in the Belfast Metropolitan Transportation Plan (2015). There are proposals for local park and ride sites, using bus-based services for each of the six main transport corridors into Belfast, totalling 4000 spaces for the greater Belfast area, by 2015. In North Down specifically, the Plan proposes a new bus-based park and ride facility with 400 spaces at Tillysburn, adjacent to the A2/A55 junction, to provide a further public transport option for travel to Belfast from the North Down area.

Park and Ride facilities at NIR stations and halts across the North are planned to increase by 1,811 spaces between 2009 and 2015. These plans are subject to agreement of Translink’s Corporate and Business Plan, which takes account of the availability of funding over the remainder of the budget period. The figure quoted includes an increase of 143 spaces on the Bangor Line in North Down between 2011 and 2015.

Northern Ireland Water

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to the answer to AQW 6268/09, to provide a breakdown of (i) how NI Water will spend £667 million; (ii) the services provided; (ii) the companies involved; and (iv) how much they will be paid. (AQW 6543/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it spent £424 million on capital works projects between 1 April 2007 and the end of February 2009 and plans to invest a further £243 million to the end of 2009/10, subject to the completion of statutory and other processes. This spend can be broken down into four main asset categories as detailed in the table below.
This major investment is aimed at improving the water and sewerage infrastructure to achieve compliance with European Union water quality and environmental standards and will provide maximum benefit for customers including enhanced drinking water quality, improved delivery of services, greater protection of the environment and public health.

The list below shows the companies employed on capital works projects since 1 April 2007. The value of individual contracts is deemed to be commercially sensitive information which NIW is unable to release.

Resurfacing Footpaths

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what the budget is for (i) repairing; and (ii) resurfacing footpaths in North Down. (AQW 6548/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that in the 2008/09 financial year, the North Down area had a budget of:-

(i) £102,000 for carrying out repairs to the public footway network; and
(ii) £150,000 for resurfacing the public footway network.

Although budget allocations for the 2009/10 financial year are not yet finalised, it is anticipated that the apportionment of expenditure in each function, is likely to be similar.

Movilla Road, Newtownards

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to extend the 30 mph speed limit on Movilla Road, Newtownards to beyond Abbey Primary School, considering the area’s poor road safety record. (AQW 6607/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service considers the Movilla Road, Newtownards to have a reasonably good safety record and therefore, there are no proposals, at present, to extend the speed limit on this road.

Belfast International Airport

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how many passengers have used Belfast International Airport in each of the last ten years. (AQW 6619/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department does not maintain such statistics on a regular basis. Data on passenger numbers at airports are collected by the Civil Aviation Authority and published on its website. That source shows that the number of terminal and transit passengers using Belfast International Airport was as follows.

Antrim Train Station

Mr T Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how many passengers have used Antrim train station in each of the last ten years. (AQW 6620/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink have informed me that passenger journey figures record each time a passenger either departs from the station or arrives at the station and have provided the following figures for Antrim train station:
Northern Ireland Water

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) if Northern Ireland Water has plans to develop a new headquarters or other significant capital projects; (ii) if any geographical restrictions on preferences apply to these works; (iii) to provide an update on those plans. (AQW 6655/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it plans to lease accommodation for a new Head Office but to date no decision has yet been taken on the most appropriate location. There are no geographical restrictions or preferences for the site of a new Head Office. The decision will be based on sound business needs and best value for money. When NIW identifies a suitable location it will submit a Full Business Case to me for consideration.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development how many employees are in his Department in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area. (AQW 6669/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: At present, 74 of the Department for Regional Development’s staff work at locations within the Londonderry/Derry City Council area.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development how many employees in his Department travel from Londonderry/Derry to work in Belfast. (AQW 6670/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: The travel arrangements of individual members of staff are not recorded. There are, however, 5 staff within the Department for Regional Development who have home addresses within the Londonderry/Derry City Council area and who currently work at locations in Belfast.

Improvement Works on A57

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) to detail what action Roads Service is taking to restore the surface of the A57 between Templepatrick and the International Airport, and (ii) to list the improvement works which have been undertaken on this road, in each of the last five years. (AQW 6701/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has advised that a tender to carry out resurfacing works on the A57, from its junction with the north eastern end of the Old Ballyrobin Road, for a distance of 1.9 km towards the International Airport, will be advertised on 2 April 2009. Following the award of the successful tender, it is hoped that resurfacing works will be complete by early July 2009.
With regard to improvement works carried out on this stretch of road, I am further advised that there have been no other improvements undertaken within the last five years.

Northern Ireland Railways

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development who is responsible for the provision of wheelchair access to the platform of Northern Ireland Railways halt at Bellarena.

(AQW 6766/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: Northern Ireland Railways are responsible for the provision of wheelchair access from the public footpath at Bellarena halt.

Work to bring the halt in line with the Disability and Discrimination Act (DDA) will be undertaken during the re-lay of the track between Coleraine and Derry, which is scheduled to commence in 2011.

Removal of Emblems

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development if he plans to remove emblems depicting Republican Sinn Fein on lamp standards.

(AQW 6780/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department’s Roads Service has signed up to the Multi Agency Protocol on the Display of Flags in Public Areas. The protocol indicates that the PSNI will take the lead where the display of flags or emblems is causing tension, or is having a detrimental affect on the quality of life in a community.

The PSNI would therefore be the appropriate lead agency to contact regarding this matter.

A57 Improvement Works

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to his answer to AQW 6701/09, to detail any repairs or improvement works which have been carried out on the A57 between Templepatrick and the International Airport, in each of the last 10 years.

(AQW 6870/09)

The Minister for Regional Development: In my response to your previous query, regarding the planned resurfacing works on the A57 (AQW 6701/09), I advised that there had been no other improvements undertaken on this road within the last five years.

My Department’s Roads Service has further advised that it no longer holds records of works carried out, on this stretch of road, prior to the five year period, and is therefore unable to provide any details of the information requested.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Projects Planned for North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the (i) projects; and (ii) amount of capital investment planned for the North Down constituency for (a) 2009/10; and (b) 2010/11.

(AQW 6265/09)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms M Ritchie): The available information on capital investment projects in my Department relevant to the Member’s North Down constituency is set out below.

The Bangor Jobs & Benefits Office Project will see a combined welfare and employment service delivered to customers. The costs of the project – which will fall in the 2010-11 financial year, are not currently available as these will depend on whether front or back office processing is the option chosen for benefit delivery in the new Bangor Office. This decision will be made following the outcome of public consultation on the Social Security Agency’s Strategic Business Review, expected in April/ May 2009.
The information on capital investment projects relating to housing is not yet available. The 5 year Social Housing Development programme (for newbuild housing) for 2009/10 onwards has not yet been approved and published. Similarly, the Housing Executive’s budget for capital improvement works for housing for 2009/10 is not yet finalised. Once approved, the Social Housing Development Programme will be published on the Housing Executive’s website. However, it should be noted that, for reasons of commercial sensitivity the Housing Executive does not release individual scheme values with regard to the Programme.

Social Housing

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the progress of the social housing provision at the Skeoge lands in Londonderry/Derry. (AQW 6272/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Fold Housing Association has submitted detailed plans to develop social housing at the Skeoge lands in Derry.

This scheme has not yet been approved as there are some outstanding EU Procurement issues that need to be resolved. Legal advice has been sought and a decision will be made following consideration of that advice.

I am determined to meet the increasing housing demand in Derry and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who manage the Social Housing Development Programme on my behalf have already identified a number of new sites and opportunities that will ensure Derry gets its full allocation of new homes irrespective of the application for Skeoge which is still under consideration.

Housing Executive

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are on the waiting list for Housing Executive homes in (i) Lurgan; (ii) Craigavon; (iii) Portadown; and (iv) Banbridge. (AQW 6301/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The following table details the number of applicants on the waiting list for Housing Executive homes in (i) Lurgan; (ii) Craigavon; (iii) Portadown; and (iv) Banbridge, at December 2008.

Housing Officers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many complaints have been received by the housing officers in Newtownards, in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 6367/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Informal complaints can be regularly received and resolved quickly without the requirement to process them through the formal complaints system. Formal complaints dealt with by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive’s District Office at Newtownards are as follows:-

Housing Executive

Mr P Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the status of the contract between Red Sky and the Housing Executive’s West Belfast district; and to outline any issues that have arisen. (AQW 6377/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Red Sky currently has a maintenance contract with the Housing Executive for the West Belfast area. The Assembly’s Public Accounts Committee Office received a letter from the West Belfast Housing Community Network complaining about the lack of cleaning services provided by Red Sky at several flat complexes in the Housing Executive’s Belfast District’s 1 and 3 estates.

Because of the ‘whistleblower’ nature of this letter the Public Accounts Office referred the letter to the Northern Ireland Audit Office for investigation. The Housing Executive had commissioned Cooke & Kettle, a local consultancy firm, to inspect a sample of communal halls and galleries of various flat complexes within the Housing Executive District of West Belfast.

The consultants assessed whether the periodic cleaning schedule was in fact being complied with and whether any work was carried out in accordance with the specification set out in the contract with Red Sky. A number of concerns are raised in the Consultants report which I intend to see are fully dealt with. However, as the Northern Ireland Audit Office is investigating this matter I am unwilling to comment further until I receive their report.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many economic projects have been funded under neighbourhood renewal in North Down, in each of the last three years. (AQW 6384/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Whilst no specific economic projects have been funded under neighbourhood renewal in North Down during this period, funding has been provided for two projects which include an element aimed at improving employment opportunities in the Kilcooley area.

Housing Executive

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development what is the current average length of time for repairs to be carried out to Housing Executive properties from the time the problem is reported. (AQW 6387/09)

The Minister for Social Development: All repairs reported to the Housing Executive are prioritised into emergency, urgent or routine repair categories in accordance with the current tenancy agreement.

During the period April 2008 to February 2009 repairs were completed from the time the problem was reported as follows:

- 98.5% of all emergency repairs within 24 hours
- 94.25% of all urgent repairs within 4 days
- 80% of all routine repairs within 4 weeks

Autism Initiatives

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development for her assessment of the availability of floating services by Autism Initiatives. (AQO 2424/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Autism Initiatives Northern Ireland is an accredited Supporting People provider funded through the Supporting People programme to deliver housing support services. The Supporting People programme provides funding for 9 accommodation based schemes and 2 floating support services.

The total annual contract value for these services for 08/09 is £740,000. The accommodation based services are located in Antrim, Armagh, Bangor, Belfast, Castlereagh, Downpatrick, and Lisburn. Supporting People funds over 50 providers to provide over 75 floating support services across Northern Ireland.
Autism Initiatives are one of these and the operating scope of their two floating support services is the Northern Trust area and former South and East Belfast Trust (now Belfast Trust) area. Whilst the Supporting People budget has been baselined the Area Supporting People Partnerships continue to prioritise proposals for developing new and expanding existing services for this client group.

Benefit Overpayments

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to detail for each of the past 10 years (i) the total number of benefit overpayments; (ii) the total sum of benefit overpayments; (iii) the type of benefits where overpayments were paid to deceased persons; and (iv) the total amount that has been successfully reclaimed from overpayments made.

The Minister for Social Development: The information relating to social security benefits is only available from November 2006.

The table below sets out the number and sum of social security benefit overpayments paid to deceased persons and the amount successfully reclaimed during the period November 2006 to 20 March 2009. The type of social security benefits where overpayments were paid to deceased persons includes Income Support, State Pension, State Pension Credit, Attendance Allowance, Disability Living Allowance and Incapacity Benefit.

While some overpayments of Housing Benefit to deceased persons would undoubtedly have been made over the period in question, these are not separately categorised and therefore the Housing Executive is not able to provide the information requested. Recovery of such overpayments would normally be sought from the estate of the deceased person.

Private Landlords

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development if she has any plans to bring forward new legislation to give more protection for private landlords.

The Minister for Social Development: I will shortly be launching a consultation document on a Strategy for the Private Rented sector in Northern Ireland. The proposals in this strategy will reflect the outcomes of an evaluation of the 2006 Private Tenancies Order which currently governs the operation of the private rented sector including landlord and tenant obligations. Proposals reflecting the need for any new or amending legislation emerging from the strategy will be brought before the Assembly during 2010.

Housing Executive

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties in the East Antrim constituency are currently awaiting maintenance work, and how long on average they have been waiting.

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is not available by Parliamentary Constituency, nor is it available in the format requested. The Housing Executive’s Carrickfergus, Larne and Newtownabbey 2 District Offices include the areas which comprise the East Antrim constituency areas.

At 27 March 2009:
- Carrickfergus District Office had 158 routine repairs outstanding, with an average waiting time of 8 weeks.
- Larne District Office had 83 routine repairs outstanding, with an average waiting time of 8 weeks.
- Newtownabbey 2 District Office had 139 routine repairs outstanding, with an average waiting time of 8 weeks.
Housing Executive

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how many vacant Housing Executive properties there are currently in (i) Larne; (ii) Carrickfergus; and (iii) Newtownabbey. (AQW 6430/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The number of vacant properties within the administrative areas covered by the Housing Executive’s Larne, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey 1 and 2 District Offices are as follows:-

Housing Executive

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development would she consider changing the criteria for heating in extensions in homes of people with disabilities to ensure that sufficient radiators are put into bedrooms. (AQW 6486/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive’s current heating policy makes appropriate provision for a radiator within each bedroom of a property of an appropriate size to adequately heat the room. Where an extension has been provided for a person with a disability, the Housing Executive will ensure that the property complies with this standard.

Charities

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how the new legislation will protect legitimate charities; and (ii) what action will be taken against non-legitimate charities. (AQW 6515/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The main aims of the Charities Act (NI) 2008 are to protect and support local charities, encourage good governance arrangements and provide greater public confidence in charitable giving. All charities will be required to register with the new Charity Commission and submit annual returns on their activities and financial performance. This information will be open to public scrutiny and will allow charities to be more accountable and to demonstrate their public benefit.

Whilst there is limited evidence of fraudulent charities operating in Northern Ireland, the Act provides the Commission with wide ranging powers to identify and investigate apparent misconduct or mismanagement in the administration of charities and to take remedial or protective action. It will liaise closely with the PSNI, HM Revenue and Customs and other charity regulators in the UK and Ireland to ensure that information is shared and action taken where appropriate.

Charities

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development in relation to charities legislation, whether trustees and committee members of charities will be required to declare an interest if they are to gain financially from fund raising activities, and to clarify the sanctions for not declaring such interests. (AQW 6517/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Part 9 of the Charities Act (NI) 2008 contains provisions relating to charity trustees. This includes regulations on the remuneration of trustees providing services to a charity. The new Charity Commission for Northern Ireland will be required to issue detailed advice and guidance to charities on this issue. This is likely to follow best practice adopted by other charity regulators in the UK which only permits such payments in limited circumstances where the service is required by a charity in pursuit of its charitable purposes, where it is in the charity’s best interests and where there is a written agreement between the charity and the trustee.

Part 13 of the Act contains provisions relating to the control of fundraising and public collections. This details the circumstances in which an officer, employee or trustee of a charity can engage in fundraising activity and includes a requirement to produce a written statement if any remuneration is to be received in connection with such activity.

The Charity Commission will have wide ranging powers to investigate any evidence of non compliance with the regulations. These include powers to suspend or remove a charity trustee where the Commission is satisfied that there has been misconduct or mismanagement in the administration of a charity.

Warm Homes Scheme

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to bring eligibility for financial assistance for insulation through the Warm Homes Scheme, in line with other parts of the UK, by giving assistance to people over the age of 70 regardless of their financial circumstance. (AQW 6538/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Warm Homes Scheme is broadly similar to the Warm Front Scheme in England but it takes account of the unique circumstances which face householders in Northern Ireland. The free insulation project operating in others parts of the UK is funded through Carbon Emissions Reduction Target (CERT). CERT funding is not available in Northern Ireland and cannot be replicated here. It is my intention to use all available resources to fund the Warm Homes Scheme which will target those people in greatest need with help to insulate and heat their homes.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how many economic projects have been funded under Neighbourhood Renewal in East Antrim, in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 6599/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Part of Rathcoole estate in East Antrim falls within a Neighbourhood Renewal Area. Funding of £12,820 was provided to the area in 2006/07, £32,220 in 2007/08 and £39,695 in 2008/09 for two economic projects.

Carer’s Allowance

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many people received Carer’s Allowance, per constituency, in each of the last 3 years; and (ii) if she can provide statistics on the number of family members who provide care without pay. (AQW 6660/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The table below sets out the information requested for part (i).

The number shown reflects the number of customers where an amount of Carer’s Allowance is in payment. Information is not available for part (ii) as my Department does not collect or hold statistics on the number of family members who provide care without pay.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Social Development how many employees are in her Department in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area.
(AQW 6671/09)

The Minister for Social Development: In the Department for Social Development there are 815 employees in the Londonderry/Derry City Council area.

Departmental Staff

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Social Development how many employees in her Department travel from Londonderry/Derry to work in Belfast.
(AQW 6672/09)

The Minister for Social Development: There are 65 employees in Department for Social Development who have addresses in Londonderry/Derry and work in Belfast.

Departmental Budget

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when she plans to reveal her Department’s budget for the next financial year, for the North Down area.
(AQW 6696/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The initial budget allocations for the 3 years 2008-09 to 2010-11 for all Departments – including Social Development, were revealed in the Budget 2008-11 document, published by the Executive in January 2008.

The overall allocation for my Department, at £754.4m in total, covers the whole of Northern Ireland and is not broken down on a Constituency basis. In addition, the Department’s Annually Managed Expenditure budget for 2009-10 – covering mostly social security benefit expenditure and the financial assistance scheme, amounts to some £4.86 billion.

Social Housing/Homelessness

Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Social Development for her assessment of the impact that the current waiting lists for social housing will have on homelessness this year.
(AQO 2451/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Waiting lists and homelessness are clearly connected, but they are also impacted by a range of other factors.
Homelessness applications rose between 2003/04 and 2006/07 before falling in 2007/08. Current indications are that a further decrease in homelessness applications will follow in 2008/09. The number of applications on the Social Housing Waiting List has increased year on year between 2003/04 and 2008/09.

Demography is the key driver in terms of housing need and has a direct effect on both the profile and size of the waiting list. Between 2006 and 2021 there is a projected 10% growth in the population with a consequent growth in household formation of 19% over the same period. The population profile is also aging and when this is combined with the move towards Independent Living the pressure on future housing requirements is clear to see.

Citizens Advice: Funding

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development whether she will consider increasing funding to Citizens Advice Bureaux to assist those affected by the economic downturn. (AQO 2452/09)

The Minister for Social Development: My Department already provides significant support to the Citizens Advice Bureaux (CAB) for the valuable service they provide and to others who provide much needed advice services and I am happy to continue to do so.

My Department directly core funds voluntary advice services up to £1.5 million per annum through the Regional Infrastructure Programme. For the 2009/10 year Citizens Advice Regional Office will be able to claim up to £665k, Advice NI £246k and the Law Centre £680k.

My Department’s contribution towards the provision of local voluntary advice services for 2009/10 totals £1.9m through the Community Support Programme. This funding is matched by local councils who contribute a further £1.9m. Local Citizens Advice Bureaux and other local voluntary advice providers can apply to councils for financial support.

Furthermore subject to appraisal, Neighbourhood Renewal in the North West will provide £124k to the Derry CAB.

In January I also announced plans to recruit 150 new staff to the Social Security Agency frontline. This is a proactive response to the current difficult economic situation.

In addition Citizen’s Advice has been involved in the delivery of the Social Security Agency’s Benefit Uptake Programme since 2006. Up to 31 March 2008, this has generated an additional £15 million in benefit. To date £554k has been paid to Citizen’s Advice Regional Headquarters with further payments likely to be made in May 2009.

Through the Regional Infrastructure Programme the Housing Rights Service will receive £672k core funding. Additionally from April 2009 I hope to provide approximately £100k to increase the level of advice for people who are experiencing difficulty making mortgage payments.

Secretary of State for Work and Pensions: Discussions

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Social Development what recent discussions she has held with the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions. (AQO 2453/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I met with the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, James Purnell, in November 2008. We discussed a range of issues relevant to our responsibilities for social security, child support and pensions including welfare reform and the reform of the social fund. I pressed Mr Purnell on a number of issues including the eligibility for winter fuel payments, greater assistance for carers and the availability of disability living allowance, in particular, for the sight impaired. On that last issue, I am pleased to say that Mr Purnell has subsequently accepted an amendment to the Welfare Reform Bill currently before Parliament which will allow those with a severe sight impairment to have access to the higher rate mobility component. Subject to Executive approval, I intend to bring corresponding legislation before the Assembly.

We agreed to meet on a regular basis and a further meeting is currently being arranged.
Red Sky

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Social Development how the Housing Executive monitors the progress of work carried out on its behalf by Red Sky. (AQO 2454/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I understand, that Red Sky has a maintenance contract with the Housing Executive for the West Belfast area. This Assembly’s Public Accounts Committee Office received a letter from the West Belfast Housing Community Network complaining about the lack of cleaning services provided by the contractor, Red Sky, at several flat complexes in the Housing Executive’s Belfast District’s 1 and 3 estates. Because of the ‘whistleblower’ content of this letter the Public Accounts Office referred the letter to the Northern Ireland Audit Office for investigation. The Housing Executive has commissioned Cooke & Kettyle, a local consultancy firm, to inspect a sample of communal halls and galleries of various flat complexes within the NIHE District of West Belfast. The consultants assessed whether the periodic cleaning schedule was in fact being complied with and whether any work was carried out in accordance with the specification set out in the contract with Red Sky. A number of concerns are raised in the Consultants report which I intend to see are fully dealt with. However, as the Northern Ireland Audit Office is investigating this matter I am unwilling to comment much further until I receive their report.

Budgetary Position

Mr Cree asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on her Department’s budgetary position. (AQO 2455/09)

The Minister for Social Development: My Department’s budgetary position for 2008-09 can be summarised as follows:

The Final Plan Departmental Expenditure Limits for Social Security and Urban Regeneration/Community Development are £224.5m and £101.8m respectively and it is expected that overall spending will be within budget and acceptable tolerance levels at the year end.

The lack of capital receipts throughout the year due to the economic downturn, has impacted on the overall financial provision available for Housing and unmet bids of £30.6m at February monitoring typifies the difficulty of the situation. As a result, spending on both capital and revenue Housing programmes has had to be curtailed in order to live within the net overall £432.4m available.

The Department’s overall Final Plan budget of £758.7m, includes the initial £15m recently allocated by the Executive to fund Fuel Poverty payments. The opening allocation for next year is some £4m less than this at £754.4m, illustrating that 2009-10 is likely to be another difficult year for funding. However, as always my priority will be to protect the most vulnerable in our society, in particular through the key social security and housing programmes.

Co-Ownership: East Londonderry

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the number of co-ownership applications in East Londonderry in the last year; and how many were successful. (AQO 2456/09)

The Minister for Social Development: Co-Ownership Housing has advised me that it records statistics according to local council area, rather than by parliamentary constituency. During the fiscal year 2008/09, a total of fourteen applications were received by people seeking to purchase a home in the Limavady and Coleraine Borough Council areas, which form the East Derry/Londonderry constituency. Of these, five were successful, six have still to be decided and three were unsuccessful.

Off-the-Shelf Houses

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development how many off-the-shelf houses the Department has purchased from developers since May 2007. (AQO 2457/09)
The Minister for Social Development: In the 2007/08 programme year, 270 Off-the-Shelf units of accommodation were purchased. During the period 1 April 2008 to 19 March 2009, 214 Off-the-Shelf units of accommodation have been purchased.

Housing Budget: Shortfall

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development for an assessment of how the £100 million shortfall in the housing budget will impact on spending programmes. (AQO 2458/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The £100m shortfall in the housing budget will lead to reduced expenditure on a range of capital works across the housing programme. Available funding will have to be directed to priority programmes and to where commitments already exist. It is also a priority to protect the vulnerable.

I will continue to make bids for additional funding in future monitoring rounds in 2009/10.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development when the next inter Departmental meeting in relation to neighbourhood renewal will take place. (AQO 2459/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The next meeting of the inter-departmental Ministerial Group on Neighbourhood Renewal will be on the 13th of May 2009.

Social Mobility

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Social Development what discussions she has held with the Minister of Education in relation to social mobility. (AQO 2460/09)

The Minister for Social Development: I have held no specific discussions with the Minister of Education in relation to social mobility.

Shared Future

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development for her assessment of how society is moving towards a shared future particularly in housing. (AQO 2461/09)

The Minister for Social Development: When I launched the New Housing Agenda in February 2008 I made a Shared Future a central theme. A twin track approach has been adopted to developing and supporting shared neighbourhoods through the Social Housing Development Programme and in existing housing areas. The most recent published Northern Ireland Life & Times survey (2007) found that 80% of people in Northern Ireland would prefer to live in a mixed neighbourhood. The sad events of recent weeks have also clearly demonstrated that the people of Northern Ireland want to leave behind the baggage of the past and build a new future together. I am, therefore, more convinced than ever that Northern Ireland society wants, and is relentlessly moving towards, a Shared Future where diversity is welcomed and embraced.

‘Shared’ Housing Developments

Mrs Long asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the conversion of current locations to ‘Shared Housing’ developments. (AQO 2462/09)

The Minister for Social Development: The Shared Neighbourhood Programme adopts a community based approach to supporting local communities to designate existing social housing areas as Shared Neighbourhoods. The Programme is designed to build on existing relationships and structures within current housing areas and to develop a good relations plan and neighbourhood charter that offers the opportunity for people to live in a shared neighbourhood where diversity is welcomed. A total of 30 neighbourhoods will be identified over the pilot three year period, through a selection process and community consultation, to participate in the Shared Neighbourhood Programme. In conjunction with the International Fund for Ireland, I launched the first five estates in August 2008 with details of the next ten neighbourhoods to be announced over the coming year.

Alcohol Legislation

Mr A Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the reasons for not bringing legislation forward to ensure that off-sales display their shop names on carrier bags and what action she is taking to reduce under-age drinking. (AQO 2463/09)

The Minister for Social Development: In the South of Ireland, where legislative provision to brand containers for drinks for consumption off licensed premises was introduced in 2003 but never used, experience demonstrated that seeking to compel retailers to adopt this approach raises difficult issues to do with European human rights and competition rules. There are also major issues around rules of evidence in courts.

In my Statement to the Assembly on 17 November 2008 I set out my plans for a 2-stage programme of legislative reform which will include a number of measures aimed at reducing under-age drinking. I am committed to working with Executive colleagues to ensure that liquor licensing legislation contributes positively to combating the harm caused to our young people by alcohol abuse.

Social Housing

Mr Attwood asked the Minister for Social Development for her assessment of the social and economic benefits that flow from accelerated investment in social housing provision. (AQO 2464/09)

The Minister for Social Development: On 27 November 2008 I submitted a paper to my Executive colleagues entitled ‘Social Housing – An effective way to address the Downturn in the NI Economy.’ In this paper I outlined how an increased investment in social housing could have a profoundly beneficial effect on the economy in a relatively short period of time.

In addition to the economic benefits of increased investment in social housing, delivery against important social policy objectives, particularly those identified in the Programme for Government could be more quickly achieved with this investment.

My paper contained specific and costed proposals for increases in the Social Housing Development Programme, social housing maintenance and repairs and the Warm Homes Scheme. Unfortunately the Executive was not able to support my proposals at that time. However, I remain convinced that the current market conditions are more suited now than ever before to increase our investment in social housing to stimulate the economy, protect jobs and help those in housing stress.

I will continue to lobby my Executive colleagues for their support of my proposals.

Construction Industry

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to support the construction industry and to confirm whether any new housing developments will be tendered to local firms. (AQO 2465/09)

The Minister for Social Development: On 27 November I submitted a paper to my Executive colleagues entitled ‘Social Housing - An Effective way to address the downturn in the NI economy’.

In this paper I outlined how an increased investment in social housing could have a profoundly beneficial effect on the economy in a relatively short period of time. The Construction industry which has suffered so much in recent months would obviously have benefitted heavily from this increased investment.

Unfortunately the Executive was not able to support my proposals at that time but I remain convinced that this increased investment would help stimulate the economy, boost the construction industry as well of course as helping those in housing need and I will continue to make this case.

I will continue to seek support from my Executive colleagues for such proposals.
In respect of restricting new developments for local firms, it is not possible or legal to guarantee work for local developers or contractors in this manner. I would of course encourage as many local firms to bid for this work as possible, particularly given the real problems I know many are facing in these challenging times.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Assembly IT System

Mr D Bradley asked the Assembly Commission why the Assembly IT system cannot receive e-mails from all e-mail providers; and what action is being taken to remedy this situation. (AQW 6282/09)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr S Neeson): The Assembly Commission provides a centrally managed e-mail system for use by Members and Secretariat staff, on Assembly business. The system is designed to accept all correctly addressed e-mail, from whatever source and deliver it directly to the recipient. Industry standard security systems examine all incoming e-mails for any signs of malicious threats and procedures are in place within the IS Office to deal with any quarantined e-mail or any incorrectly addressed e-mail with the minimum delay.

There have been instances when Members and Secretariat staff have reported that e-mail they were expecting had not arrived. However upon investigation there was no record of either the message reaching the NI Assembly systems or of any message being rejected outright. As the originating systems were outside the direct control of the Commission it was not possible to determine the exact cause of the problem. The IS Office will continue to monitor the NI Assembly e-mail system for any problems.
