The scheme that operates in the South has been highlighted by organisations such as National Energy Action, which used the scheme to bolster its campaign for the Government to become more involved in regulating social or affordable tariffs. The National Energy Action campaign is based on its concern that the matter is being left to the discretion of the energy industry, and that is why I have asked the two Ministers to take this matter forward.

The Government must be more proactive in developing social or affordable tariffs, which should not be left solely to the energy companies. Some of the energy companies in Britain have admitted that even the extra £225 million that they have pledged for social assistance is inadequate. Organisations that represent the elderly, such as Age Concern, have called for the introduction of a mandatory social tariff to help the most vulnerable households.

Given that energy companies make huge profits here and that energy prices here are higher, those companies have a corporate social responsibility to offer social or affordable tariffs to the households that need them. Whatever Members want to call such tariffs, we need to ensure that, this winter, those who are most vulnerable to fuel poverty are given the help that they need. Although I would like to see that assistance being given this winter, it might take some time. I want to see negotiations with the energy companies start now.

I want to stress that individual Ministers who have the responsibility for identifying vulnerable households, such as the Minister for Social Development, and for energy policy, such as the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, must enter into negotiations with NIE Energy and Phoenix Natural Gas to take this forward. That is why I singled out those Ministers in the motion.

All of us have a social responsibility to help those most disadvantaged in society. Energy companies and the larger commercial customers should pay for this, rather than other domestic customers. Social tariffs, taken in isolation, will not eradicate fuel poverty, but as part of an overall package they will definitely help vulnerable households this winter.

Mr Simpson: I beg to move the following amendment: Leave out all after "Assembly" and insert

" , being mindful of the alarmingly high levels of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland and the negative impact high energy prices have on the fuel poor, calls on the Minister for Social Development to work with her Executive colleagues to obtain an accurate assessment of actual need in respect of fuel poverty; notes that social tariffs could result in higher prices for a significant number of households and businesses; and urges consideration of a range of options to assist people most vulnerable to fuel poverty."

The motion calls on the Executive:

"to help people who are most vulnerable to fuel poverty."

It is hard to disagree with that sentiment. It is only right and proper that we do all we can to help the most vulnerable members of society. Fuel poverty is a problem throughout the United Kingdom, but it is a particular problem in Northern Ireland. High energy prices adversely impact on thousands of householders, with resultant damage not only to incomes but to health. Last winter the Executive sought to do what they could, and in his December monitoring statement my colleague the former Finance Minister Nigel Dodds announced £15 million to alleviate fuel poverty. A £150 payment was made to 100,000 households in receipt of income support or pension credits.

The motion may be well-meaning and superficially attractive, but it is fundamentally flawed. There is a danger that, in seeking to help those caught in the fuel poverty trap, we adversely impact on other sections of society. In short, we are in danger of robbing Peter to pay Paul.

If we introduce social tariffs, it will cost £76 million to provide a £300 payment to the 34% of households in Northern Ireland that are estimated to be fuel poor. How will that cost be met? How can the Government, faced with ever-increasing pressures on already-limited resources, find that sort of money to subsidise the fuel poor? If the Government cannot pay, do we turn to the energy companies? That is not a realistic proposition either. The energy companies are already limited to a profit margin of 1.5% and do not have the scope to subsidise customers directly. If pressure is applied to the energy companies to encourage them to pay, it will merely be a disincentive to further competition in the Northern Ireland energy market. The only other option is to pass on the cost of the social tariff to other consumers. Hard-pressed and hard-working families along with local firms and small businesses, already struggling in a recession, will face higher energy bills in order to subsidise the fuel poor.

Ms J McCann: NIE Energy alone made a profit of £120 million for shareholders last year. Its profit margin may be limited, but the profit is still large.

Mr Hamilton: It was reinvested.

Mr Simpson: My colleague has shouted it out before I got to it.

Energy companies make substantial reinvestments. The Member also sits on the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, which only last week was told that all energy companies were limited to a profit margin of 1.5%. Therefore, a substantial amount of money is reinvested.

I believe that the motion is a dangerous option. Let us look at the broader picture and consider the likely impact of such a move. It would plunge other families below the fuel poverty line. It could push businesses over the edge and into closure, with the result that more workers will join the dole queue and add to the fuel poor. Surely the proposers of the motion do not want that outcome. In seeking to correct one social injustice, we must be very careful not to create others. In seeking to cut off the head of the fuel poverty monster, we could enable it to grow more heads.

We need a full and accurate assessment of actual need in relation to fuel poverty. We urge the Minister for Social Development, in co-operation with her Executive colleagues, to conduct such an investigation urgently. There are cases in which circumstances dictate that it is almost inevitable that a person or household will find themselves in a fuel poverty trap. For example, a single pensioner, a lone parent, or a household with an annual income below £7,000 could easily slip into fuel poverty. However, for all the cases that are black and white, there are many that are grey, where the issue is less to do with income than with energy efficiency. In other words, throwing money at fuel poverty is not always the answer.

I commend the hard work that has been done by my colleagues the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Minister of Finance and Personnel to introduce and encourage energy efficiency initiatives; that is one of the main keys that will help us to unlock this problem. Ideas such as enhancing the fuel efficiency of homes; converting homes to use more efficient fuels; encouraging more use of pay-as-you-go and keypads, which offer the lowest possible price; and reforming a system that favours electricity generators over consumers need to be explored and encouraged.

At the start of my comments, I mentioned the high energy prices in Northern Ireland, but it is worth remembering that, in January, electricity prices fell by 10.8% and gas prices fell by just over 22%. A further review resulted in prices falling again this week, which is good news for all families and businesses.

Whatever way we address fuel poverty, and it must be addressed, let us not fall into the trap of undoing the progress that is being made. Knee-jerk reactions, as Members opposite never tire of telling us, are not the best sort of reactions. The motion has a hint of a knee-jerk about it, and that is the reason for the amendment. I commend the amendment to the House.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mr A Maginness): I speak as Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment. This is my first opportunity to address the House as Chairperson.

The Committee agrees that there should be some mechanism to assist those in fuel poverty to ease the burden of energy costs. However, I emphasise that the Committee has not rushed into proposals for how that should be achieved in practice. Part of the reason for that is that the issue is not as simple as it might first appear.

Stephen McCully, the managing director of NIE Energy, speaking on 'Good Morning Ulster' on 15 September, said that the 2.5% discount offered by the keypad pay-as-you-go system represents a very good social tariff.

When such statements are made, it is important to define what is meant by a social tariff. Ofgem defines it as a tariff that is at least as good as the lowest tariff offered to customers in an area. DSD defines it as the lowest possible tariff offered by suppliers to vulnerable or low income consumers, regardless of the payment method.

5.15 pm

Direct debit customers receive a 4% discount from NIE. Therefore, the pay-as-you-go system is not as good as the lowest tariff and is not the lowest possible tariff offered to customers. In fact, it represents a 1.5% surcharge over and above that paid by direct debit customers. To describe it as a social tariff might be considered as misleading by some. Under Ofgem and DSD's definitions, a 4% discount for keypad pay-as-you-go customers, similar to that enjoyed by direct debit customers, would represent a social tariff.

As I said, the issue of social tariffs is not as simple as it might first appear, and there is a number of reasons for that. Not least of those reasons is the issue of who pays. We have had some discussion about that. DETI officials have told the Committee that social tariffs are not a means to reduce NIE Energy's profits, but operate by spreading the additional costs among other consumers. On the other hand, the Consumer Council believes that the energy companies must make a valid and significant contribution to social tariffs. Suppliers, however, believe that they should not have to pay. Should companies, such as NIE Supply, Phoenix Gas and Firmus Energy have a role in paying for some social tariffs? That is a reasonable question.

Should other organisations that are contributing to the electricity tariff, such as the generators and those claiming network system costs and supply costs, have a role in paying for social tariffs? Should the Government or councils have a role in paying for social tariffs?

There are higher levels of fuel poverty here than in Britain. What will a social tariff system cost here? Electricity prices are already 12% higher here than in GB. If ordinary consumers have to pay, how much will such a tariff add to their fuel bills? I know that some Members are resisting that imposition, and that is a fair position to adopt.

If someone uses more electricity than their neighbour because, for example, they have a family or because they are a carer, will they have to make a higher contribution to the social tariff through a flat-rate system, or will there be a fixed-rate contribution from all consumers? What about those in fuel poverty who do not have access to gas and who rely on oil or coal for heat? Will they be excluded from this aspect of a social tariff? What will the administration costs be? Would it be less costly to provide help to those in fuel poverty through the benefits system, so that there is already clarity around who would be entitled, rather than to set up and administer a whole new system?

The Committee supports the introduction of a mechanism to ease the burden of those in fuel poverty. However, the questions that I have asked today are reasonable, and it remains for the Committee to make its mind up fully on the issue.

Mr Armstrong: The motion deals with a subject that is of great interest to many thousands of people in Northern Ireland who are affected by fuel poverty and the high energy prices. The Ulster Unionist Party is committed to tackling those issues. In 2004, 23% of households in Northern Ireland were in fuel poverty, and that rose to 34% by 2006. The cost of domestic electricity increased by 36% between January and October 2008, and, in the same period, the cost of domestic natural gas increased by 19%.

The rate of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland is almost three times the level that it is in England. We must focus on what we are trying to achieve and ensure that the lowest possible tariffs are provided to vulnerable or low-income consumers in Northern Ireland, regardless of their payment method.

Currently, no supplier in Northern Ireland offers social tariffs to customers. Although social tariffs may be part of the solution, they are not the entire solution. Indeed, the Northern Ireland Fuel Poverty Advisory Group has said:

“Social tariffs offered in isolation will not eradicate fuel poverty.”

Several initiatives have already been introduced by various bodies in an attempt to combat fuel poverty in Northern Ireland. Those initiatives include schemes from the Housing Executive, the Department for Social Development's warm homes scheme, winter fuel allowances and the Assembly's one-off fuel payment of £150.

The Minister for Social Development established a fuel poverty task force in May 2008, and among its recommendations on how to tackle fuel poverty, which were published in September 2008, was the need to examine the feasibility of the introduction of social tariffs. In light of that, the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has confirmed that the Utility Regulator has been working internally in that area and has employed consultants to undertake a policy analysis for the implementation of a social tariff in Northern Ireland. That analysis includes an examination of the potential positive and negative impacts that are associated with different options, and the Minister has also stated that the next steps in that process will include a public consultation on the report.

Therefore, work is in hand, and, consequently, it would be wise to await the outcome of that consultation. At that point, we can make an informed decision.

Mr Neeson: I welcome today's debate, because as the Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development said, the Committee has been dealing with the issue of social tariffs for some time.

Fuel poverty is higher in Northern Ireland than in any other part of the UK, with 34% of the population living in fuel poverty. Research has shown that a reduced tariff, based on personal circumstances — a social tariff — is the most popular type of financial support that can be offered to those who have trouble paying their energy bills.

In other parts of the UK, energy providers have offered social tariffs to help their most vulnerable customers. Indeed, all energy providers in GB must offer social tariffs to help their most vulnerable customers to cope with the high costs of gas and electricity. Those companies also offer a range of other services such as free insulation, boiler checks and advice to fuel-poor customers, particularly elderly people and those on low incomes.

British Gas's Essentials tariff is the UK's largest social tariff, and it aims to reduce the gas and electricity prices of 75,000 of the company's most vulnerable customers. Those customers' energy bills will drop by some £307 a year. The tariff also provides extra help to vulnerable customers, particularly those who use pay-as-you-go energy meters, which, despite helping those on low incomes to budget, are often a more costly way to pay for gas and electricity.

E.ON's social tariff, StayWarm, is specifically designed to help vulnerable customers who are over the age of 60. It is a fixed price tariff that keeps costs the same for 12 months after a customer has signed up to it. E.ON also offers free loft and cavity wall insulation to anyone over the age of 70 or to those receiving certain benefits, such as income support, housing benefit, council tax benefit or income-based jobseeker's allowance, whether or not they are customers. E.ON customers who are over the age of 60 can also switch to the Age Concern tariff, which could save them an average of £69. Those customers also receive safety and energy efficiency gadgets, such as energy-saving light bulbs and carbon monoxide detectors.

It is not just a question of refunding money; it is also about making customers more energy-efficient, and that is an issue that we need to address in Northern Ireland.

EDF Energy's assist tariff is aimed at those customers who have to spend more than 10% of their household income on gas and electricity or those receiving income support or pension credit, giving a 15% discount on EDF's standard energy prices. About 57,000 customers benefit from that reduced tariff, which is applied directly to those customers with standard or economy 7 meters, while those with prepayment or complex metering will atomically receive a rebate each year.

ScottishPower's carefree plus social tariff offers eligible customers a saving of up to £112 a year on their energy bills. Customers on the new tariff will also be able to have free insulation work done on their homes and receive a benefits health check to ensure that they receive all the help to which they are entitled.

Mr Hamilton: Will the Member give way?

Mr Neeson: I am sorry; I do not have the time.

A considerable number of consumers in Northern Ireland still use household coal, domestic heating oil and liquefied petroleum gas, and there is no control over the distributors of those fuels. The point was rightly made that some mechanism should be developed to bring the sale and distribution of those energy products under control.

Mr Moutray: I support the amendment in the names of my colleagues David Simpson and Simon Hamilton. By securing the amendment, they have injected an important element of common sense into the debate on energy in general and on fuel poverty in particular.

Fuel poverty concerns us all, as it has a serious financial and health effect on too many households in Northern Ireland. We all agree that it must be tackled robustly, but how? A social tariff is not the answer. Indeed, there is a danger that we could make a bad situation worse by suggesting that we throw money at the problem without properly analysing the issues. That is why the amendment urges the Minister for Social Development to work with her colleagues to assess fully the extent and nature of fuel poverty.

We must examine a range of options to help those who are worst off. We also need to ensure that in helping the worst off, more people and businesses are not adversely affected as a result. Since last winter, as Mr Simpson said, the price of electricity and gas has fallen twice. That is good news for all customers, and we need to see more of that, as it should help to reduce the number of homes caught in the fuel-poverty trap.

Mrs McGill: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome Minister Foster's presence in the Chamber.

I have listened to the Members who have spoken so far, and I understand why Members on the DUP Benches referred to getting a more refined definition of fuel poverty. Sinn Féin's motion provides that opportunity in the best circumstances. There is confusion around fuel poverty. Are the right people targeted and are the most vulnerable identified correctly? As my party colleague Jennifer McCann said, we have these debates from time to time. However, we must get clarity on the issue and we must take it a step further.

5.30 pm

I am not a member of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, so I am not privy to all the detail and nuances of the debate, but it is important that the social tariff get an airing. I will be disappointed if the House divides on the issue.

I thank the Assembly's Research and Library Service for providing an information pack on the issue. It refers to 'The Utility Regulator's Social Action Plan 2009-2014', which, I understand, contains a proposal, as part of the regulator's forward work programme, to produce a scoping framework document in 2009-2010 that will refer specifically to introducing a social tariff system. It is significant that that suggestion will be made by the regulator.

The information pack also contains a replication of the joint paper commissioned by the Consumer Council and the Utility Regulator. The research in that document comes out in favour of the social tariff system. I took some statistics from that document. It mentions three options, but the option that is favoured by 64% in a particular age group is the social tariff.

I think that Mr Maginness referred to people on benefits and the fact that there is clarity on their position at the moment, but the document that I mentioned contains statistics showing that 66% of those not on benefits favoured the social tariff for those in financial difficulty and fuel poverty and that 60% of those on benefits also favoured it. Almost the same percentage of those who are on benefits favour the social tariff as of those who are not on benefits.

I wish to make another point about who pays for it all. As my party colleague said, our position is that the consumer should not pay for it, and I am fully in agreement with that. Other Members also mentioned that.

The Consumer Council, in its response to the Utility Regulator's social action plan — again I refer to the information pack — said:

“Social tariffs are potentially an important tool with which to tackle fuel poverty. The Consumer Council is strongly of the opinion that social tariffs must not be solely funded by other consumers but that energy companies must make a valid and significant contribution.”

My party is proposing the social tariff system, and I am prepared to take the views of the Consumer Council on board. Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle.

Mr Easton: I support the amendment, as it is the best means of addressing fuel poverty.

First things first: as any good auditor acknowledges, we need to know the extent of the problem if we are to tackle it effectively. In this case, an accurate appraisal of what is required is the order of the day. I encourage the Minister to be proactive in response and to use the expertise and knowledge base of her Executive colleagues and the intelligence and data in their respective Departments to deliver a computation of need that can be stood over with a high degree of certainty.

All of us note the high energy prices that we in Northern Ireland pay. That, coupled with poor energy efficiencies and low income, creates in many cases a negative situation, which leaves many of our households fuel poor and living with the difficulties and complexities of fuel poverty. We cannot afford to ignore the high level of fuel poverty. It is a red flashing light that rightly alerts and warns public representatives that something must be done. I reiterate that high energy prices have a detrimental impact on the fuel poor. That is a fact that we cannot afford to ignore.

Many tools can be utilised to tackle fuel poverty, and we would be well advised to consider all options. The amendment is essentially correct in that a one-size-fits-all approach is the incorrect response to the complexities of fuel poverty.

I strongly contend that the research base showing that a social tariff system will act as some form of panacea to the woes of fuel poverty does not exist. In my analysis, there is no evidence base to justify a social tariff system as a mechanism to adequately address fuel poverty. We certainly do not wish to introduce a measure that, in seeking to address one problem by tackling fuel poverty, creates further harm by placing higher bills on the budgets of a significant number of other households. That would be a false economy. We must be careful, because many households that are taking a prudent approach to the household purse in difficult economic circumstances are genuinely fearful of increased bills leading to debt.

If the social tariff model is followed blindly, it should be anticipated that many households and the business community, which is taking the difficult economic strain, would be put in the position of facing mounting bills. We do not wish to take that direction or go down that route. Rather, like any good general, we should consider using all the weapons in our arsenal that have the capacity to minimise the number of households that have to live in fuel poverty. The public would, rightly, look aghast at us if we were to do otherwise.

We must look to energy efficiency. Too much energy is lost, and the energy resource is drained by poor housing and inadequate insulation. That is a key area, which, if effectively tackled, will reduce the number of households living with fuel poverty. Therefore, that and many other options must be further explored. Lead responsibility lies with the Department for Social Development, and many factors cut across other Departments. The issues of proper and effective insulation, to which the amendment speaks, will not only drive down costs and place fewer people in fuel poverty but will prove to be the environmentally friendly option. People do not wish to throw good money after bad because their boiler is underperforming. The amendment aims to address that, and it speaks to all the positive environmental benefits. I recommend it to the House.

Mr Cree: The issue is an important and emotive one, and I thank the Members who tabled the motion and those who tabled the amendment.

Fuel poverty is a real and persistent problem. Between 2004 and 2006, an additional 60,000 households in Northern Ireland entered fuel poverty. In light of rising fuel costs and increases in unemployment, there are concerns that the number of people who are fuel poor has reached unprecedented levels. Fuel poverty is caused by a combination of factors, including poor household energy efficiency, low income and expensive fuel.

Therefore, numerous potential solutions and ameliorating policies are open to us, of which a social tariff is one. I note and commend the actions that the Executive have already taken: the warm homes scheme, Housing Executive programmes and the one-off payment of £150 to people who are on income support and pension credit. It is obvious that the Executive and the Assembly are taking the issue seriously.

At first glance, the proposition to introduce a social tariff is attractive, because it reflects our desire to help the people who are most in need. However, given Northern Ireland's energy market, the make-up of the energy supply and the pricing system, such a proposition must be given careful scrutiny and thought. I note that the Fuel Poverty Task Force recommended that a study into a social tariff be carried out and that the Utility Regulator has undertaken investigations that he plans to report to the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. That is the correct way to address the issue. No guarantees or decisions should be given until we have all the facts.

The DUP amendment recognises those concerns. I note that an NIE briefing paper estimates that the cost of introducing a social tariff could lead to an increase of between 8% and 12% in electricity prices for all other users. In light of pressures that families already face due to increases in energy prices —

Ms J McCann: A couple of Members have suggested that households will have to pick up the bill for social tariffs. That does not have to be the case. Energy companies and larger commercial businesses should pick up the bulk of that.

Mr Cree: That is a nice idea. However, unfortunately, a monopoly applies in Northern Ireland. The actual margin for the electricity company, in particular, is fixed.

Mr Hamilton: Will the Member give way?

Mr Cree: I am concerned about getting through my wee bit. If the Member is quick, I will give way.

Mr Hamilton: Does the Member agree that passing the cost on to big business, however that is defined, will act as a disincentive to attracting that type of business to Northern Ireland and, indeed, could put people in those businesses out of work and thus create a vicious circle in which more people are trapped in fuel poverty?

Mr Cree: The Member is quite correct. Now, to get back to my point, for which, I am sure, Members are all waiting — [Laughter.]

In light of pressures that families already face due to increased energy costs, rising unemployment and the ongoing recession, such an increase could be detrimental, not only to the people who are involved, but to the entire economy. That point has just been made by Mr Hamilton.

Social tariffs exist in Great Britain. They were introduced initially to enable customers to access electricity at the lowest available rate, regardless of the method of payment. That issue arose from the fact that pre-payment customers in GB paid around £100 per annum more than those who paid by other means, such as direct debit or credit card. That situation is not as prevalent in Northern Ireland.

In addition, it must be recognised that the virtual monopolies that exist in Northern Ireland's gas and electricity markets have resulted in much tighter net profit margins, greater regulation, and much smaller scope for companies to subsidise customers directly, or, indeed, for customers to shop around for the best deals.

Fuel poverty is a major issue. It is a top priority for the Ulster Unionist Party. The strategic energy framework provides an opportunity to address some of the structural and underlying problems that create fuel poverty and which can limit the Assembly's options to solving it.

The Assembly looks forward to the findings of the Utility Regulator on the potential for a social tariff and the possible ramifications of introducing one. In the meantime, efforts must continue to reduce fuel poverty by increasing energy-efficiency measures in the home, ensuring maximum benefit uptake, and ensuring that all people who are eligible for the £150 one-off payment take it.

I support the amendment.

Mr O'Loan: The debate is worthwhile because the social tariff is an important, though not an easy, issue. The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment made a number of good points. Incidentally, it is clear that if the motion were carried, the matter would be DETI's responsibility.

To set social tariffs is a worthy concept, but a difficult one to carry through. There are considerable difficulties in realising that, which the Assembly needs to be mature enough to recognise.

Everyone recognises that three broad factors affect fuel poverty. They are energy costs, household income and household fuel efficiency, which has two elements: insulation standards and the efficiency of the heating system. Any programme to tackle fuel poverty must involve measures that deal with all three of those factors, not just one.

Measures that are already in place include the warm homes scheme, which is one of the Executive's key responses. The scheme is operated by the Department for Social Development. It has been hugely successful and very popular. Since 2001, more than £118 million has been spent on the scheme and, as a result, about 71,000 houses have been made warmer.

5.45 pm

Members will be aware of the new warm homes scheme, the managers of which are H&A Mechanical Services Ltd and Bryson Charitable Group. That scheme will better target resources so that those most in need get the most assistance. We should welcome the fact that for the first time, young families that are in receipt of working tax credits can benefit from improvements to their home-heating systems and that people over 60 can also benefit from the scheme.

We all know about the budgetary pressures on DSD in respect of housing. Despite that, £20·5 million has been allocated to the warm homes scheme this year, and that should assist 10,000 households. Therefore, good work is being done in that area.

DSD also looks after the public housing stock, one element of which is the conversion of houses to natural gas. More than 29,000 home-heating systems in Housing Executive properties have already been converted; however, DSD wants that conversion to be extended much more widely. That, of course, depends on the extension of the gas network, the need for which we are all starting to recognise. New social houses are being built to a very high standard and with a minimum code level 3 environmental rating, which makes them 25% more energy-efficient than before. Those are all relevant measures.

Maximising income is important. The focus on the economy and on getting more and better-paid jobs has its place in tackling fuel poverty. Of course, many of those who suffer fuel poverty are dependent on social security benefits. DSD's measures are extremely important in making people aware of the role of child tax credits, working tax credits and pension credits.

Benefit uptake is also extremely important, and DSD has run successful campaigns that have given a great deal of money to families and brought extra money into Northern Ireland.

DSD also administers the winter fuel payment. Although we want that payment to be increased, it makes a significant contribution to household budgets. The Executive's household fuel payment gave out no less than £24·5 million in April by distributing £150 payments to 167,000 homes.

To tackle the issue, we must look at the measures already in place to make each one better by being open to new ideas. The concept of a social tariff certainly deserves study. I am uncomfortable with the amendment, because it is too sweeping in its rejection of the social tariff concept. As I said, although the concept is difficult to realise, it is definitely worthy of examination.

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs Foster): I welcome the opportunity to discuss the issue, and I congratulate the Members who tabled the motion. This discussion is timely because the strategic energy framework is the subject of a consultation process, which a number of Members pointed out. That framework acknowledges the high levels of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland and emphasises my Department's continued commitment to work with the Department for Social Development on areas of mutual policy development to ensure that fuel poverty issues can be addressed.

I noted with some amusement Mr O'Loan's comment that if the motion were carried, the issue would be mine and mine alone to address. He then went on to tell the House about all the things that DSD does to address fuel poverty. I am not sure where all that sits. Nevertheless, he will be glad to know that Minister Ritchie and I work together to address those issues, and that that is recognised in the strategic energy framework.

The framework acknowledges that the Government are, as the Member pointed out, already working hard to ensure access to secure, competitively priced and sustainable energy supplies, while — and this is important — supporting economic growth as well. The framework also acknowledges that the era of cheap energy is over — something that we are all acutely aware of — that we must be more energy efficient and that we must seek to reduce our energy consumption.

Given the publication today of a report by Invest NI, it is appropriate that DETI's role, and my primary focus as economy Minister, is on business competitiveness. My Department's goal is to grow a dynamic, innovative economy, and the Programme for Government states that growing a dynamic, innovative economy is the Executive's top priority for the period 2008 to 2011. A key element in supporting that priority is ensuring that there is a fit-for-purpose energy policy in Northern Ireland. We are very much committed to ensuring an efficient, diverse, competitive and sustainable energy market that offers economic opportunity to businesses in Northern Ireland. We will work to ensure that energy costs are as low as possible for all consumers, consistent with maintaining adequate incentives for investment in energy assets for security of supply, irrespective of the investment being provided from equity-based or mutualised company models.

What has caused the high prices in energy? As elsewhere, the main driver for retail gas and electricity prices in Northern Ireland is the global price of wholesale gas. In 2008, global increases in the price of wholesale gas increased the price of gas, oil, coal and electricity for all energy consumers, including those already in fuel poverty.

I am pleased that, in late 2008, the Utility Regulator initiated separate reviews of the natural gas tariffs of Phoenix Supply Ltd in the greater Belfast licence area, and the electricity tariffs of NIE Energy throughout Northern Ireland. That led to the gas and electricity tariff reduction of 22·1% and 10·8% respectively in January 2009. A further tariff review resulted in an announcement by Phoenix of a 19% reduction in gas prices, and in a 17·7% price reduction for domestic consumers with Firmus Energy. From 1 October 2009, NIE Energy's 5% reduction in domestic electricity prices will come into effect. Those price reductions for consumers are particularly welcome given the significant economic difficulties that are being faced by many at the present time. I think that that needs to be acknowledged.

I welcome the debate on possible measures on electricity prices that would help hard-pressed customers. That said, I think it is important that we continue to focus energy policy on improving business competitiveness and on ensuring that we have a secure and sustainable energy future for all consumers. For example, as was mentioned, the Department supports the continued expansion of the natural gas network to provide additional fuel choices for consumers. The Department and the Utility Regulator are looking at the potential extension of the natural gas network in Northern Ireland, and I am very much looking forward to that vital piece of work being completed. I think that that will be welcomed across the Chamber, and I know that people will look forward to receiving it.

The Department plans to undertake a study to determine the economic cost-benefit analysis of implementing smart metering in domestic properties and micro-businesses in Northern Ireland. We have consulted on better billing and metering in Northern Ireland. The Electricity and Gas (Billing) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2009 requires suppliers to provide 12 months' worth of historical consumption data on energy bills. That will allow consumers to be better informed about their usage and to make more informed choices about energy use and energy efficiency.

As has been recognised by a number of Members, DSD works to address fuel poverty, too. In particular, the House will recall the one-off fuel payment of £150 that was made to vulnerable homes, which we heard about earlier in the debate.

It is important that we have an evaluation of how that scheme was rolled out. The House will then need to consider whether the action that was taken was the best way to deal with fuel poverty last winter or whether there are more appropriate measures to help vulnerable households.

Other Government initiatives were mentioned in the debate, including the warm homes scheme, through which DARD has provided funding to specifically target rural homes; the Social Security Agency's benefit uptake campaign; and, as I said, the winter fuel payment. All those initiatives help with fuel poverty.

There has been a lot of talk about the profit made by energy companies, but Members need to acknowledge that those companies are doing things to help. For example, the vulnerable customer programme, which is called For Your Benefit, is managed by NIE Energy. That programme assists vulnerable customers with identifying and claiming the various publicly funded benefits to which they are entitled. There are also customer-care registers operated by electricity- and gas-supply companies, which aim to keep a record of vulnerable customers so that the appropriate level of support can be offered.

There has been a lot of talk today about prepayment meters. It is important to say that Northern Ireland prepayment customers do not pay more than other customers, unlike their counterparts in GB. That is the result of a voluntary agreement established by the electricity- and gas-supply companies, working with the Utility Regulator. NIE Energy prepayment customers are offered a discount of 2.5% compared with standard credit customers, and natural gas customers are offered a prepay tariff that is equivalent to the standard-credit tariff. In other words, NIE Energy customers who prepay get a 2.5% reduction.

The Chairperson of the Committee gave us definitions of a social tariff, and I would expect nothing less from him. He said that, because direct-debit customers receive a 4% reduction on the standard tariff, the prepayment method was not, in effect, a social tariff. I acknowledge that, but he must acknowledge that we have a better system than the one that is available in GB, because there is at least an incentive to prepay. Other schemes include Firmus Energy's firmuscare scheme and the Phoenix Supply Ltd energy care scheme. The latter is aimed at the over-60s, the disabled and the chronically ill.

The aim of social tariffs in the energy sector is to enable low-income and vulnerable customers to access competitively priced energy tariffs. Given the level of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland, I empathise and understand that the concept of social tariffs merits further investigation as an appropriate policy response.

The proposer of the motion talked about the need to innovate. The concept of social tariffs has come to prominence in Great Britain, and it has been the subject of debate there for quite some time. In GB, many low-income customers use prepayment meters and, because they are vulnerable and need to use that method, they pay more for their electricity and gas, which seems perverse. That is not the case in Northern Ireland, where prepayment meters give a 2.5% reduction on the standard tariff.

Gas is the dominant form of heating for domestic customers in GB, but, as we heard from Mr Hamilton, that is not the case in Northern Ireland. Here, 70% of households are reliant on oil for home heating. As oil is not subject to economic regulation, there is relatively little information available on customer purchasing patterns in the oil industry. The Member for East Antrim Mr Neeson mentioned that both the LPG and oil industries are not regulated, but he will acknowledge that regulation of those industries would add to the cost of oil and LPG, although LPG represents a small proportion of the market. We need to recognise that adding regulation to the oil industry will add to costs for the consumer.

Some information suggests that customers who can afford to buy only a small amount of oil at a time are offered higher rates per litre compared with those who can afford to order in bulk. That, too, concerns us, because those in fuel poverty are being charged more for smaller amounts.

My Department is already working with the Utility Regulator's office to establish what scope exists for regulatory action to make tariff changes for those in fuel poverty. As Mr Armstrong, and, I believe, Mr Cree, indicated, the Utility Regulator is considering a consultant's report on the potential options for progressing the development of social tariffs in the electricity sector. The Utility Regulator's office issued the report as an informal pre-consultation document to allow key stakeholders to comment, including DSD and my own Department, with a view to understanding better the complex issues and charting the most appropriate way forward.

The Utility Regulator indicated that he hopes to release the consultant's report on social tariffs by the end of November, perhaps with initial suggestions on the way forward. The issues are complex and the theme of social tariffs touches on wider issues of social policy as well as policy and technical issues relating to energy markets. When the report comes out, therefore, it will be shared with the energy industry, voluntary groups, key energy stakeholders and all the other Departments.

However, any move to introduce social tariffs in the energy sector is, potentially, prone to negative knock-on effects. That fact was acknowledged throughout the debate. As I said in my opening remarks, as economy Minister, my priority is to promote Northern Ireland businesses and to guard against damage to economic competitiveness and employment. Businesses here already contribute to the Northern Ireland sustainable energy programme through a levy. We need to acknowledge that. There has been much talk about profits and companies doing nothing, but they do contribute. To expect them to contribute again to a fuel poverty levy would further increase business energy costs.

Many times, I have been lobbied by big businesses about their energy costs in Northern Ireland. The House would be sending a very negative message if it said that big businesses needed to pay more for energy. That would be a difficult message to send out. Indeed, perversely, it could result in the loss of business competitiveness, and, therefore, employment, which could bring associated increases in fuel poverty numbers. That point was made by several DUP and UUP Members.

I welcome the debate, which was measured and informative, and I look forward to the wind on the motion and the amendment. However, I urge Members to bear in mind the complex nature of the issue and to take everything into account when they vote.

Mr Hamilton: Everyone has acknowledged that there is a real fuel poverty problem in Northern Ireland. An estimated one in three households is in fuel poverty, which is a much higher rate than the rate in GB. That has a negative effect on not just household incomes but on the health of those in affected households.

It has been suggested before, and again today, that a social tariff is the solution to that problem. It was a bit of a fad and very much in fashion about this time last year when energy companies were putting up their prices — a bit like trainers with wheels in them or Tamagotchis, it was the popular thing at the time. In suggesting social tariffs as a solution to fuel poverty, however, it is worth posing and examining four broad questions.

First, who should it help? As the proposer of the amendment suggested, it is understandable that single pensioners, lone parents and those on extremely low incomes could get trapped in fuel poverty. When preparing for the debate, however, I read Northern Ireland Housing Executive figures from October 2008 which showed that a noticeable percentage of households with an income in excess of £30,000 were in fuel poverty. Questions then have to be asked about why and how that household is in fuel poverty.

The answer is not so much about income and more about fuel efficiency and energy efficiency in that household. In assessing the accuracy of need in Northern Ireland, we must consider whether the measurement model that we use to assess fuel poverty is correct. Moreover, we must assess the impact of the recent price reductions on those one in three households and the impact of the £150 fuel credit that was paid last year.

The second question is: who should pay? The debate has concentrated on that issue, and it should be foremost in our thoughts. In the current climate, we cannot expect Government to find the estimated £75 million that was mooted by some Members. There is talk that energy companies can pay out of their profits. Energy companies in Northern Ireland — Phoenix Gas and NIE, in any case — are restricted to margins of around 1.5%. Other Members cited examples of energy companies in GB. However, they operate on a margin of 6%, from which they pay social tariffs. Indeed, the cost of the social tariff was one reason that was cited recently for those energy companies' failure to reduce prices. It is much easier to do that with a bigger margin.

Asking energy companies here to pay out of their existing margin has a disruptive effect on incentivising competition, which we all support in the Northern Ireland energy market. Therefore, the only other option is to ask customers to pay for it. Whether some people should pay more so that others pay less is a legitimate question. It is important to pose that question, but it is extremely difficult to answer. Passing the cost to business, whether big or small, will disrupt competitiveness in Northern Ireland. Businesses in Northern Ireland increasingly cite energy prices as a hindrance to competitiveness; heaping more pressure on them will not be beneficial.

We must also ask what sort of system of social tariff we would put in place. Would people on certain benefits enjoy the benefit of a social tariff? When I examined the role of social housing, I visited some houses and noticed that some of the most fuel efficient houses, through their energy sources and insulation, are occupied by people who, I am sure, would receive a social tariff after a benefits test. However, they live in fuel efficient and energy efficient homes.

Ms J McCann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hamilton: No; I do not have time to give way.

Should we consider providing a social tariff on the basis of usage? Single pensioners have low usage, and, under such conditions, second homes and holiday homes could benefit.

What are the other options? Are other options as effective, if not more effective, than a social tariff? When considering increasing energy efficiency, we should consider converting properties that use inefficient fuels such as coal and oil to fuels such as gas. Thousands of houses in the Housing Executive stock do not meet the decent homes standard for thermal efficiency, and many houses that could use gas do not do so. We should consider converting those properties.

I accept the earlier points that were made about encouraging people to use pay-as-you-go tariffs and keypads. I agree with the Minister for Social Development; it is as much an income issue as it is one of fuel costs.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member should bring his remarks to a close.

Mr Hamilton: We need to consider a system that benefits generators over ordinary customers. Therefore, more money is not always the answer. As a society, we could take measures to help fuel-poor people, other than social tariffs or giving out more money.

Mr Butler: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. We have had a fairly thorough debate, in which we debated the pros and cons of the motion. I thank everybody who spoke. Whether or not we achieve agreement on the motion is another matter.

When my colleague Jennifer McCann brought the motion to the House, she was aware of the concerns about who pays for social tariffs. Other Members asked whether those costs should be passed on to other customers and businesses. Jennifer McCann made it clear that that is not the case and that we live in a society that has high levels of fuel poverty. Some Members, including Sean Neeson, Leslie Cree and even David Simpson, mentioned that levels of fuel poverty here are much higher than in Britain; I think they are three times higher than in Britain. The intent behind the motion was to address that issue.

Ms J McCann: Members have talked about the definition of “fuel poverty” and about who can afford to heat their homes and have electricity. Is the Member aware that the deaths of approximately 2,000 elderly people over the past six years were caused by cold-weather-related illnesses? People who do not have the money to heat their homes or put on the electricity — when we talk about fuel poverty, that is what we are talking about.

Mr Butler: I thank the Member for that information. It is startling that so many people in this society are still dying as a result of fuel poverty.

Jennifer McCann mentioned a very good scheme in the South of Ireland that has a social tariff dimension, particularly for pensioners. They get a certain amount of free units of electricity, oil or gas to heat their homes. It is worth noting that there are no concerns down South about elderly people and those on low incomes getting the benefit of social tariffs.

I realise that the issue is a complex one. David Simpson mentioned the £150 one-off payment that was made last winter. That was provided for in the Financial Assistance Act 2009. The Assembly recognises that fuel poverty is a big issue; that one-off payment went a long way towards alleviating difficulties for many people who were facing hikes in gas and electricity prices.

David Simpson also mentioned the tight profit margins on which the energy companies operate. He asked whether social tariffs would lead to reduced profits for those companies. However, the energy companies do have quite high profits. Jennifer McCann said that NIE Energy made a £120 million profit.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, Alban Maginness, spoke about the use of keypads as a form of social tariff. The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment said that there were concerns that people who pay by direct debit get a 4% reduction in their electricity prices, whereas keypad users only get a 2% or a 2.5% reduction. Mr Maginness also made a fair point about asked whether energy generators should pick up some of the costs of having a social tariff system.

Mention was made in the debate that 70% of households here use oil, the supply of which is totally unregulated. Some Members pointed out that the oil companies bear no responsibility whatsoever to bring in any energy efficiency measures. In addressing fuel poverty, we must think outside the box in determining how people on low incomes, elderly people and disabled people can pay less for their electricity. The Minister mentioned benefit uptakes and check-ups, and energy efficiency measures in the home, such as cavity-wall insulation and loft insulation.

Other Members, including Billy Armstrong, mentioned the warm homes scheme. Declan O'Loan gave Margaret Ritchie a plug when he said that more money has been invested in that scheme recently. Those measures can reduce fuel poverty, but there are still pensioners and people on low incomes who will suffer high levels of fuel poverty. As was said, it is unacceptable that approximately 2,000 elderly people here die every year as a result of fuel poverty.

My colleague Claire McGill asked how the Utility Regulator and the Minister can move the social action plan forward. The Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment has also discussed that issue. The Utility Regulator is considering the issue of social tariffs, and how NIE Energy and Phoenix Natural Gas, among other energy providers, can help to alleviate fuel poverty and reduce the bills that people here are paying.

Alex Easton said that we must be more energy efficient in our homes. He spoke about inadequate loft insulation and about how high energy prices impact on the most poor and vulnerable in society. That has been the theme of the debate. Although we may not agree on how to deal with fuel poverty, particularly among low-income families and the elderly, who are dealing with high electricity and gas prices, we all agree that we need to make it a priority for the Assembly to reduce gas and electricity bills.

As the Minister said, we need to examine how we can introduce measures to help alleviate fuel poverty as part of the strategic energy framework. The Minister will have to weigh up the social tariff and decide whether it will form part of that framework. Her main focus in the current economic climate is on helping businesses and driving the economy forward.

The Minister is concerned that businesses should not pick up the tab for any social tariff that is introduced. It has been made clear during the debate that the main thrust of the motion has been that neither other customers nor the business community should have to pay for social tariffs. Energy providers such as NIE Energy, Phoenix Natural Gas and others have a responsibility.

I acknowledge that those companies have some social responsibility; indeed, they have introduced some measures in past years. Controversy surrounds the discounts offered to electricity customers who use the keypad system, but that type of meter has been popular with many customers. Grants have also been provided, but we say that more needs to be done, given the high levels of fuel poverty from which this society suffers.

I hope that I have summed up the debate on what is a very important issue. It is complex and difficult to resolve. Whatever happens today, I hope that the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment and its Minister, as well as the Minister for Social Development, will revisit the issue. Go raibh maith agat.

Question put, That the amendment be made.

The Assembly divided: Ayes 36; Noes 31.

AYES

Mr Armstrong, Mr Beggs, Mr Bresland, Lord Browne, Mr Buchanan, Mr Campbell, Mr T Clarke, Mr Craig, Mr Cree, Mr Dodds, Mr Easton, Sir Reg Empey, Dr Farry, Mr Ford, Mrs Foster, Mr Hamilton, Mr Hilditch, Mrs Long, Mr B McCrea, Mr I McCrea, Dr W McCrea, Mr McFarland, Miss McIlveen, Mr Moutray, Mr Neeson, Mr Newton, Rev Dr Ian Paisley, Mr Poots, Mrs I Robinson, Mr P Robinson, Mr Ross, Mr Simpson, Mr Spratt, Mr Storey, Mr Weir, Mr Wells.

Tellers for the Ayes: Mr Armstrong and Mr Bresland.

NOES

Ms Anderson, Mr Boylan, Mr D Bradley, Mr P J Bradley, Mr Brady, Mr Brolly, Mr Butler, Mr Dallat, Ms Gildernew, Mrs Hanna, Mrs D Kelly, Mr G Kelly, Mr A Maginness, Mr A Maskey, Mr P Maskey, Mr F McCann, Ms J McCann, Mr McCartney, Dr McDonnell, Mr McElduff, Mrs McGill, Mr McGlone, Mr M McGuinness, Mr McKay, Mr Murphy, Ms Ní Chuilín, Mr O'Dowd, Mr O'Loan, Mrs O'Neill, Mr P Ramsey, Ms Ruane.

Tellers for the Noes: Mr Brady and Mr F McCann.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly, being mindful of the alarmingly high levels of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland and the negative impact high energy prices have on the fuel poor, calls on the Minister for Social Development to work with her Executive colleagues to obtain an accurate assessment of actual need in respect of fuel poverty; notes that social tariffs could result in higher prices for a significant number of households and businesses; and urges consideration of a range of options to assist people most vulnerable to fuel poverty.

Motion made:

That the Assembly do now adjourn — [Mr Deputy Speaker.]

ADJOURNMENT

Flooding in East Belfast

Mr Deputy Speaker: The proposer of the topic for debate will have 15 minutes in which to speak. All other Members who wish to speak will have approximately 10 minutes.

Lord Browne: For the second time in slightly over two years it is necessary for an Adjournment debate in the House to highlight the repetitive flooding in my constituency of East Belfast.

On 31 August 2009, homes and property in East Belfast were once again damaged by rainfall. In contrast to previous occasions, however, the rainfall was restricted — [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Members should either resume their seats or leave the Chamber.

Lord Browne: In contrast to previous occasions, however, the rainfall was restricted to a period of a few hours in mid-afternoon, yet it caused substantial flooding. The relevant agencies had argued that the rainfall in July 2007 was exceptional and they, therefore, presumed that to be the main cause of the flooding. However, no one could reasonably argue that that was the case on 31 August 2009. Yet again, the severe flooding in East Belfast made the headlines in the newspapers and other media. Among the worst-hit areas were Sydenham, Cregagh, the Woodstock Road, Castlereagh, Belmont and other areas in East Belfast.

However, without repeating the well-presented arguments that were made in the previous debate, I will highlight the main issues that need to be addressed as a matter of extreme urgency.

There is an urgent requirement to address the need both for a joined-up Government approach to flooding issues and for short-term flood-protection solutions as part of an overall strategic programme. Furthermore, there is a need to improve communications and information sharing. That could be done through a stakeholder group, because it is essential that stakeholders have an input to defining the problem before the Government try to resolve it.

Each of the drainage agencies must co-operate in providing joined-up approaches to mitigate recurrent flooding and to develop long-term prevention measures. There is an obvious lack of joined-up thinking and working among the drainage agencies in the areas in question. Until that is resolved and adequate resources are devoted to such work, flooding will, unfortunately, recur.

Of course, we know that many short-term initiatives can be implemented. Those include installing larger street gullies, increasing the availability of sandbags and fitting sewer line de-silting mechanisms in alleyways that are adjacent to homes that are likely to be affected. However, it is essential that the Departments that are involved implement, as quickly as possible, the strategy to prevent flooding recurring in parts of East Belfast.

The EU floods directive of 2007 requires transposition into domestic law by November 2009. I understand that the draft Water Environment (Floods Directive) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2009 have been produced in order to implement that directive. In fact, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) has been appointed as the competent authority for Northern Ireland for the implementation of that EU directive on the assessment and management of flood risk. Therefore, I would appreciate it if the Minister would confirm whether the Rivers Agency, on behalf of DARD, will take the lead in implementing the directive. I would also appreciate it if the Minister would confirm whether legislation will be in place by the appointed date.

In East Belfast, as in the rest of Northern Ireland, the historical approach to managing storm water and foul water has been to use a combined system that transports storm water and foul effluent to a treatment works. However, in recent years, installing separate systems has been the practice in new developments. Foul sewage is now collected in a dedicated sewer and goes to a treatment works, while storm water is directed into a watercourse in instances where little or no treatment is necessary.

Unfortunately, a large number of dual sewers are still in operation. That is particularly the case in built-up urban areas such as East Belfast where the population has grown. Of course, there has also been a reduction in permeable surfaces, which means that the sewers are increasingly unable to cope with the storm water.

The situation has also been exacerbated by the legal requirements to comply with the water framework directive and the EU floods directive and by the intense rainfall that we have experienced over the past number of years. Indeed, issues of climatic change need to be fed into any assumptions that are made and into the models that are used to assess future flood risk.

To address those issues, and in response to commitments that were made in the Northern Ireland sustainable development strategy to have sustainable drainage systems, Government have developed a strategy, which is known as SuDS, for promoting the use of sustainable drainage.

Sustainable drainage systems are hard and soft engineering solutions that are designed to mimic closely natural catchment processes in the management and treatment of storm water. Source-control SuDS seek to reduce storm-water discharge from developments by dealing with the run-off close to the source, whereas permeable-conveyance SuDS slow the velocity of the run-off, and then reduce its volume via filtration, infiltration and evaporation.

In developing the SuDS strategy, the Government established a working group comprised of representatives from all relevant Departments and agencies. I would appreciate the Minister's updating the House on the progress of that group. The Northern Ireland Environment Agency's consultation document 'Managing Stormwater: A Strategy for Promoting the Use of Sustainable Drainage Systems (SuDS) within Northern Ireland' raises interesting and challenging issues.

For example, it is accepted that traditional drainage systems may be inadequate to deal with storm water in new developments, especially with apparently more intense and increasingly frequent rainfall. However, the real problem could be that, although individual buildings are now designed, as I said, on a twin system, that system may merge into a single, combined system at the main drain. The loss of permeable surfaces that can absorb rainfall is exacerbating existing drainage problems and creating new flooding problems in urban environments, particularly in areas where large houses are harvested and replaced by multi-apartment buildings with car-parking spaces and little or no gardens.

Alternative, viable options to the traditional drainage systems, including SuDS, must be considered. However, all alternatives and additional methods of dealing with storm-water drainage to supplement or replace existing systems should be seriously considered. A holistic approach that involves developers and all the relevant agencies from the earliest stage of the planning process is also imperative to enable SuDS to be integrated into site designs, thus maximising the flood alleviation and water pollution benefits of SuDS.

It is crucial that all Departments and all the relevant agencies, including local government, co-ordinate and communicate before, during and after flooding episodes. It is vital that all possible steps are taken at the stage at which flooding might be prevented.

Although we should debate the need for joined-up Government thinking, action and strategy to rectify flooding in East Belfast, we should never forget the human suffering that many constituents have had to endure over the years. I know of a 93-year-old woman who has been greatly affected on no less than six occasions over the past four years. That would be an extremely difficult situation for anyone, never mind a lady of 93.

The time has long passed for talk and debate on this subject: it is time for the Assembly to deliver so that our people will not have to endure the hardships of flood water and sewage contamination in their homes time and time again. It is important to remove the fear that many of my constituents experience every time it rains. Many confine themselves to their homes when they get adverse weather warnings because they are afraid to go shopping; some feel that they have to return from holidays. Those people are suffering trauma and they need reassurance. Therefore, I call on the Minister to ensure that we are not back here in a year's time to debate flooding and the hardship that it causes in East Belfast. It is time for action.

Sir Reg Empey: In his opening remarks, Lord Browne referred to the previous debate, so it is déjà vu all over again.

On 26 June 2007, we made the same points that Lord Browne made in his speech this afternoon. There were several factors in recent events; over the summer, there was not just one, but a series of events. I spent several hours out in my constituency, and it was impossible to get through on the flood line. On ringing the traditional numbers, one was told that it was someone else's responsibility. That issue has not been resolved.

The same places are affected again and again and again. Maintenance, which should not be a huge logistical problem to overcome, is still not being carried out properly. I saw blocked gratings in places that we know are liable to flooding. Simply applying a six- or twelve-month maintenance schedule for the hot spots may not be adequate. The local Roads Service office knows where the hot spots are. I know that people park cars over gullies, etc, but those problems have to be overcome.

Every time it rains heavily, people are terrified. Even then, sandbags cannot be distributed until flooding occurs. We also asked for local people to be provided with signs that they could put out to stop people in 4x4s driving past and causing a backwash that brings water into their homes. Some housing associations have experimented with putting plastic or metal barriers over doorways and ventilators to stop water getting in.

The fact remains that the same people are suffering time and time again. I plead with the Minister to ask the Roads Service to review its maintenance schedules. I know that there is major expenditure in the area on Belfast's sewerage system — it is one of the biggest investments ever made — but that is no good if street gullies are unable to accept the water. It is clear that a lot of them are blocked. Sometimes builders are careless, and they leave sand and cement, which is washed down drains where it solidifies. There are lots of people who can contribute to the problem; however, the fact is that it is happening in the same places again and again.

I refer Members to the debate in June 2007. Although the focus then was on getting cheaper block insurance for people in such circumstances, Members made the same points. To be honest, the matter has not resolved itself. We are told that some of the main channels require additional maintenance and that they are silting up, but that is normal in such a system. Upstream of all this, so much development has been allowed that the system is inadequate; infrastructure has not kept pace with development.

None of the infrastructure will be of value unless it is maintained to an acceptable standard. Given that there are 10 or 11 hot spots in the area — we all know where they are; the Roads Service knows where they are — why is extra-special attention not given to them? Why do we have to ring up all the time? Why is the maintenance of those hot spots not put on an additional rota for extra-special attention? At least that would give people in those areas some confidence that their plight is being taken seriously. At the moment, many of them are in despair.

Mr Deputy Speaker, you well know what it is like to have a place flooded; it is almost worse than a fire. Everything is ruined, including the electrics; there is the smell; sewage mixes with storm water; and the place is in a terrible state. I appeal to the Minister to ask the Roads Service to redouble its efforts and concentrate on the hot spots, so that those people can be given some relief and confidence that their homes will not be flooded in the future.

Mrs Long: I thank Lord Browne for raising this issue again, although I regret the fact that we are having to have this debate.

I thank the Minister for meeting me on a number of occasions to discuss the ongoing and serious problem of flooding in East Belfast, including flooding that occurred during the past week. I apologise to him that, as a result of that, some of what he will hear now he has heard already. I am sorry that it is repetitious, but so is the flooding, and I will continue to repeat what I am about to say until I see a resolution to the problem. Most of my colleagues will agree that that is necessary.

I want to preface my comments with recognition that not all the responsibility for this situation lies with the Minister who is present to respond to the debate. Road drainage, the sewerage network and our rivers are interconnected, and, particularly in flooding conditions, there is surcharging and flooding as they interact with each other via combined sewer overflows (CSOs) and other linkages. Although he is here to respond, I trust that the Minister will ensure that his colleagues take note of what is said in the Chamber and that it is considered and acted on.

I will deal first with the strategic issues associated with flooding, and then I will comment on issues connected with the response, because those are two separate areas. We all recognise that the sewerage and drainage network, including rivers and culverts, is ageing and that its upgrade and refurbishment has failed to keep pace with development. We must be conscious that, in the case of rivers, upgrading is often restricted by development. Therefore, the system is under increasing pressure, and the issue of development is one that we must carefully consider. For example, in a combined system, where foul and run-off rainwater are in the same pipes, the problem is not just the number of housing units but the extent to which areas previously available to act as soakaways are being paved. In addition, it is not just the volume of run-off rainwater but the speed at which it reaches the system that can lead to flooding, particularly of the flash nature that we have experienced in East Belfast in recent years.

I want to highlight three measures concerning development that must be considered in the short to medium term. First, there must be an obligation on all developers to use sustainable urban drainage systems for any new development, including attenuation tanks to enable the slow release of run-off and rainwater. Rainwater recycling, which is not only environmentally sound but will reduce the amount of run-off that is reaching the system, must also be considered.

For a number of reasons, the introduction of such systems makes sense. It puts the onus on the developers to deal with the infrastructure pressures that their development creates. Economically, that is sound judgement. It is also environmentally sound and tackles issues around water quality, in that it should deal with the problem of CSOs triggering very rapidly. It will also maximise the life and capacity of the existing network and buy a little time for the Department to invest. Building Control Northern Ireland and the Planning Service have an important part to play in that.

The second issue that I want to raise in the context of planning is the quality of response from Northern Ireland Water when it comes to proposed new developments that are going through the planning system. When the Planning Service refers applications to Northern Ireland Water, Roads Service and other agencies, we must be confident that sufficient attention is being paid to the flooding history when responses are made. I have specific examples, as do other Members present, of situations in which there is a flooding history, yet Northern Ireland Water raises no objections to those developments. That is not acceptable. Furthermore, it is not simply a matter of someone's looking to see whether a specific location or address has flooded. Rather, it should involve consideration of the system downstream to see whether there is pressure there, and then consideration of whether the new development can be accommodated without exacerbating that problem. In responding to current and future applications, that must be carefully considered.

Thirdly, there have been examples of where under-capacity in a treatment works has caused the introduction of a moratorium on new upstream developments that connect to it. I am not aware that that has ever happened in a case in which the network is under capacity. I acknowledge that it is much harder to identify accurately the capacity of the network because of its complexity and the interconnections. A ban on development upstream of flooding points is no one's plan A, and we would much rather see the infrastructure improved. However, if, in the short term, we cannot get the investment to allow the infrastructure to be brought up to suitable standards, we cannot rule out the option of declaring certain locations completely unsuitable for development in the short term.

I also want to talk about the definition of "development". Paving in grassed areas is currently not counted as development, so people can pave their gardens. In a number of locations in East Belfast, Roads Service has paved features such as grass verges. As I said, that is not classed as development, but it should be, and to do it should require the consent and intervention of Northern Ireland Water before it goes ahead, because it has a direct impact on the network.

I want to move on to the medium to long term: the drainage area study and the plan that will come from it. A lot of energy has been invested in that work, and the recommendations that are developed from it will clearly alleviate some of the issues that we are discussing today and will plan for the future. Again, I raise my concern that the drainage network for East Belfast is being planned in the absence of an agreed Belfast metropolitan area plan. It is ludicrous that the infrastructure is being planned in a planning vacuum. However, that is a longer-term issue and a resource-intensive process.

In the meantime, I would like to see the implementation of flood alleviation schemes accelerated in areas where flooding is happening on a repeat basis. The argument that those floods are due to exceptional weather conditions no longer holds water — pardon the pun. Given that some locations have flooded three or more times this summer alone, it is no longer exceptional. Having suffered repeatedly, people are weary of the situation.

Accelerated flood alleviation schemes are crucial. In the meantime, residents continue to live with the stress, cost and disruption of not only the flooding itself but the threat of flooding. In those circumstances where it is repeated, it can be either impossible or unaffordable for people to insure against flooding; unlike in England and Wales, there is no public intervention on that. It also opens the Department and Northern Ireland Water to claims for compensation where they are aware that there is an underlying problem and have not acted to address it in a timely fashion. I would rather see money spent on prevention than cure; I would rather see it invested in the system.

With that in mind, and recognising the budgetary pressures, I will digress slightly to talk about how we spend money in relation to this. I want to highlight the £1,000 payment to assist those whose homes were flooded, which was welcome in the context of reassurances that it was as a result of exceptional weather conditions. However, that has now been invoked three times in the past three years, to the tune of around £3 million. That raises serious questions about how exceptional such flooding is and whether the payment is a good use of scarce resources.

A number of residents in East Belfast, who have been eligible for the payment on more than one occasion, have indicated to me that they would rather see money invested in measures to deal with the underlying causes. To put it in context: £16,000 to £20,000 could pay for storm water separation in some localities or provide assistance for scores of people to protect their properties against in-house flooding, both of which would address not only risk but consequent access to insurance. That is something that needs to be looked at. In relation to strategy, the maintenance of gullies and culvert grills needing to be cleared is also a serious matter.

I want to look briefly at the issue of response to flooding. I acknowledge the Executive's efforts to improve the response, but, despite those efforts, it remains woefully inadequate. The creation of the single line to report flooding was a welcome development. However, I had hoped that it would not be a single person answering that line. I believe that at the peak of the flooding on the bank holiday in August, there were two people answering the phones. It was the first test of the system, and Sod's Law dictated that it happened on a bank holiday weekend and without a severe weather warning. Nevertheless, the service was abysmal. It took upwards of 25 minutes to get through on the flood line, and people did one of two things: they gave up completely or they circumvented the system through elected representatives using other numbers. With the latter, we have no guarantee that those calls are being recorded and followed up in the same way as other calls.

There was a unified number, but not a unified response. People are still coming out on the ground telling residents that the water that they are standing ankle-deep in is not their problem; that adds insult to injury. We have to accept that responsibility is spread over a number of Departments, but we should not have residents left to cope alone. We also need co-ordination of other services. A number of Members have talked about road closures, for example. I hope that that is something that we will see better co-ordinated in future, as well as the follow-up and investigation.

However, if we are to have that level of co-ordination in strategy and response, we need the inter-agency flood working group, which was to be convened by DARD, as the competent authority via the Rivers Agency, to meet more regularly and to work intensively on the problem. I am disappointed by the flood working group's lack of activity and progress. I believe that no meeting was called until August or September. I hope that the Minister can reassure us that his colleagues will be putting that at the top of their agenda.

It is not acceptable or sustainable that our constituents live with the threat of flooding on a repeat basis. I hope that the Minister will be able to offer them and us, as elected representatives, some comfort that action will be taken to alleviate it as soon as possible.

Mr Newton: I thank my party colleague Lord Browne for securing this Adjournment debate on what is an ongoing and serious problem in the East Belfast constituency. As Lord Browne said, this is the second time that flooding in East Belfast has been the subject of an Adjournment debate in the House, and the matter has also been raised during Question Time, in face-to-face meetings with Ministers and by delegations of residents and business owners whose properties have been affected by flooding. Those who are suffering would not forgive us if the matter were not raised again and again. Members who have spoken in this Adjournment debate have made the point that until the problem is sorted, our constituents will expect us to continue raising the matter.

I thank the Finance Minister and the Environment Minister who took time out of their busy schedules to visit residents who were affected by the floods in the East Belfast constituency. I pay particular thanks to the Finance Minister for making the flood relief payment available on 31 August.

Over the past three years, we have seen East Belfast suffer what are probably the worst floods that have been experienced throughout the whole of the Province, and we have witnessed homes in areas such as Cregagh, Clonduff, the Castlereagh Road, Clarawood, Hamel Drive, Ardgowan Street and Hillsborough Drive being flooded. The names of those areas roll off the tongues of representatives of the East Belfast constituency, because for the past three years, we have had regular contact with the residents of those areas every time that heavy rain is forecast or when there is heavy rainfall.

Rev Dr Ian Paisley: I live in East Belfast, and there is great concern in the whole area about the lack of action and the lack of change. We are talking about serious flooding. When I moved to Cyprus Avenue in East Belfast, we had a beautiful fruit garden, but that garden has been washed away by floods, and we cannot depend on it not being flooded. Every time that it rains, the floods come. Therefore, a large part of my garden is absolutely useless. The rain also flows into the garden of the property next to mine and gathers there, and, subsequently, it affects the garden next to that. The floods are destructive, and I hope that the Minister will see to it that we will see action and a change in this situation as quickly as possible.

I thank the honourable Lord Browne for bringing the subject to the House, and I trust that the people of East Belfast will benefit from the Adjournment debate and that action will be taken.

Mr Newton: I thank Dr Paisley for his intervention. The situation that he described, with gardens being flooded, is replicated in the Finchley Park area, where two houses flood regularly every year. In fact, when we held a meeting with representatives of the statutory agencies in the back garden of one of those properties, the gentleman concerned produced a file, which was about two inches thick, on the correspondence that he has had on the flooding issue.

I referred to the areas in which homes had been flooded, and people in those areas are concerned. Such is their concern about the potential of being flooded out of their homes, some folk store sandbags on their driveways as a precaution. Having met a large number of residents from the areas affected and representatives from the Rivers Agency, Roads Service and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development over the past months, I can understand residents' frustration. I look forward to the publication of that report, and also to the report on the Loop, Knock and Connswater rivers. It is important, though, that action is taken as a result of those reports.

There appears to be some confusion as to which of the Departments is responsible for responding to flooding in East Belfast and for the maintenance of the rivers and the tributaries that contribute to that flooding. Indeed, statutory officials have told me that several very small rivers in the Clonduff area are unmapped, and although the officials know that those rivers exist, they do not know who is responsible for them. That lack of knowledge of who is responsible has contributed to the problems suffered by one lady in the Clonduff area whose home has been completely flooded four times in the past 11 years, and who is afraid to leave her house for a weekend or for a holiday for fear that it will be flooded again. The statutory authorities are aware of the problems, but we must reassure those residents that we are going to take action to tackle them.

Deciding who is responsible for the problem is difficult, but of equal difficulty is bringing about a solution. Action has been taken on the ground, and the various agencies want and are willing to help to find a solution to the problem. Indeed, when those agencies arrive, and see at first hand the difficulties that householders are having, there is a willingness among them to try to solve the problem. However, the problem can only be solved by the Departments taking a joined-up approach, the lack of which is not unique to this problem. Indeed, it runs through other issues and problems that are debated regularly in the Chamber.

There is confusion in the minds of those who are affected by the flooding, and for those who are seeking a solution to it. Those people know that there is a need for a joined-up approach, but they do not recognise that there is a problem between the Departments; they simply want a solution to the sporadic flooding.

The argument for a joined-up approach has been made by other Members. That approach was also emphasised by Belfast City Council, which, through its flood group and health and environmental services committee, compiled a number of proposals to deal with the flooding in East Belfast.

The first of those proposals highlights a need to improve communications between the various agencies and the public on what improvement works are being undertaken or planned. Furthermore, Belfast City Council has suggested that there is a need to develop a Government scheme to help those householders whose insurance premiums have been increased because of the risk of flooding. Indeed, I recently took a group of businesspeople to meet the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to discuss that issue. Those people's businesses had been flooded on several occasions due to an overflow of the Loop river, and, as a result, they now find it virtually impossible to insure their businesses.

Belfast City Council also identified the need for the Housing Executive to consider flood protection measures, and that further joined-up working on the provision of sandbags was required. I pay tribute to the organisers of an initiative in the Orangefield area where approximately 15 homes were completely flooded two years ago, and in addition to cleaning the river adjacent to the houses, a large container of sandbags was placed close to the houses and residents were given the telephone number of the person responsible for that container. That means that, in the event of flooding reoccurring, those sandbags can be distributed in perfect condition very quickly to allow residents to prevent the spread of the flooding. We need to have more such initiatives.

I welcome the fact that the Minister is in the Chamber; that is a good sign. I hope that, as a result of this and previous debates, some solutions will be found.

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the proposer for securing the debate, and I welcome the opportunity to participate in it. I also welcome the comments of the Members who contributed to the debate.

I recognise, quite understandably, why people express frustration at the reoccurrence of flooding in East Belfast over a number of years. However, many responsible and helpful suggestions and solutions have been put forward. I will ensure that a record of the debate is distributed among the various agencies, some of which are under my authority in the Department for Regional Development, and some, as Members have recognised, are outside my authority. Nevertheless, I will ensure that all the agencies have a copy of the Hansard report of the debate so that they will be aware of the issues that were raised and the helpful and productive suggestions that have been made. If Members have raised particular points that are not covered in my response, I will ensure that I respond in writing.

I appreciate fully that flooding causes great distress to people in addition to the damage it causes to homes. I also appreciate the frustration that Members have expressed when trying to deal with those matters.

During the latest flooding incident on 31 August 2009, the Met Office estimated that approximately 6 mm of rain fell in approximately 20 minutes. I accept what the Member said about that not being the type of exceptional rainfall that we had previously, and, therefore, it is all the more disappointing that, in those circumstances, areas continue to flood. The surface water accumulated rapidly during the middle of the day on 31 August, which resulted in surface flooding in the Carrington Street area and other areas of South and East Belfast. As a result, the design capacity of the drainage network was exceeded and, in some cases, was totally overwhelmed.

The flooding that occurred on 31 August was not caused by any failure to maintain the operational effectiveness of storm-water gullies or the road drainage system. The road drainage infrastructure was simply overwhelmed by the deluge of rain that fell in a relatively short time. Members will be aware that the responsibility for the drainage infrastructure is shared between the three main drainage organisations: the Rivers Agency, which is an agency of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Roads Service, and Northern Ireland Water (NIW).

Procedures for liaison and co-ordination of emergency responses between the three drainage organisations are set out in the inter-agency flooding information pack, and that information pack is currently being revised. I note people's concerns about what they considered to be the lack of a joined-up approach.

There is also a shared flooding hot spots list, which identifies those areas at greatest risk of flooding and the lead organisation for each location. Those organisations also take the lead in the development and implementation of measures to reduce the likelihood of future flooding of those hot spots. In addition, hot spot lists are held by each of the drainage organisations, and they have their own programmes for dealing with those on a priority basis.

In the case of Roads Service, the problems encountered at flood locations are not always easy to resolve, as a solution may be prohibitively expensive or not immediately obvious. Even with the most careful and thorough planning, gullies, road drains and watercourses can simply be overwhelmed by a deluge of rain falling in a short time. Roads Service has plans in place to deal with roads-related flooding incidents, which ensure that a response is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

As far as possible, Roads Service co-operates and works alongside NI Water, the Rivers Agency and other responding organisations, including the PSNI, local councils, the Fire and Rescue Service and other statutory agencies, to ensure that a quick and appropriate response is made to flooding incidents. In its response to flooding, Roads Service seeks to restore normality to flooded roads, having regard to the safety of the public and Roads Service personnel, the prevention of traffic disruption and the protection of homes and property.

When Roads Service becomes aware of roads that have flooded, signs are erected, where practical, to advise road users of the possible risks. However, in the event of widespread flooding, resources will be targeted to the busier routes that carry the greater volume of traffic.

Roads Service aims to inspect and, where necessary, clean all gullies in urban areas twice a year. That policy ensures that a reasonable level of maintenance is carried out to drainage systems, taking account of the Department's finite funding and staff resource levels. In addition to that scheduled operation, further cleaning is carried out to deal with blocked gullies, particularly at locations where falling leaves represent an ongoing problem at certain times of the year, or where there has been a history of gullies becoming blocked for other reasons.

Mrs Long: I thank the Minister for giving way on that particular point. There is an ongoing issue, which I think was raised by Sir Reg Empey and others, of cars being parked over gullies when the cleaning cycle is ongoing. In other countries, residents are notified in advance of the day on which their gullies will be cleaned, and vehicles that are blocking those gullies on those days can be towed away. Residents are advised not to park on those roads, which are marked on that day, so that the gullies can be cleaned. Can we not consider introducing similar measures here to ensure that gullies are properly maintained?

The Minister for Regional Development: I am content for Roads Service to examine that suggestion. The difficulty is that, although residents may be informed and may co-operate, there may be other people either doing business or visiting a street who may not be aware of it. I do not doubt that, if someone who was visiting a sick or elderly relative had their car clamped or towed away, other representatives would be saying that the Roads Service was being heavy handed. There are always contrary arguments —

Mr Newton: Will the Minister give way?

The Minister for Regional Development: I will give way in a moment. It would probably be better to ascertain the level of the problem caused by parked cars before we introduce measures to deal with it, but I am quite happy to explore that suggestion with Roads Service.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for giving way. He makes a valid point about visitors, and so on, but does he not agree that it would be common sense not to create the gullies in designated car parks so that the problem does not arise. I raise that point because it was a contributing factor to the flooding two years ago in the Clarawood estate, where vehicles were parked. The residents live in the high rise flats, and the gullies were actually created in the car-parking spaces.

The Minister for Regional Development: I will ask Roads Service to examine that particular issue, but I accept the Member's point. We often inherit systems that were built some time ago, and we try to make the best of them. I will ensure that note is taken of that particular issue, and will come back to the Member.

Since the flooding in East Belfast in 2008, Roads Service has carried out drainage-improvement schemes in Orangefield Lane, Merok Crescent and Tudor Drive. New gullies have been installed at Sandhill Park and Earlswood Road, and a number of replacement gullies have been installed in the lower Ravenhill Road area. In addition, further works are planned for Clonduff Drive, as has been mentioned by some Members, and Wynchurch Road, and investigatory work is continuing in Carnamena Avenue and Rosetta Road.

The Rivers Agency also has a regular inspection and maintenance programme for designated water courses in East Belfast to ensure the free flow of water. That includes the weekly clearance of urban grilles where blockage may cause a flood risk. The Rivers Agency has advised that, prior to the 2007 flooding, it had already been taking forward two flood-alleviation studies in East Belfast. Those studies have been concluded, and it is proposed that, subject to the availability of funding, substantial flood-alleviation works on the reaches of the Loop, Knock and Connswater rivers will be incorporated into the Connswater community greenway project. That multi-million pound urban environmental project is scheduled to commence in 2010-2011, and the flood-alleviation scheme is designed to manage the risk of flooding from rivers, but will not address the capacity of the road-drainage and sewerage network.

In advance of the proposed flood-alleviation works, the Rivers Agency has liaised with Northern Ireland Water, Roads Service and Belfast City Council to provide mitigation where possible. NIW has advised that its officials attended a site meeting with residents and elected representatives of Cooneen Way on Friday 4 September, and remedial work to reduce the risk of flooding has since been undertaken. NIW has undertaken a major de-silting operation at Carrington Street. Work commenced on 25 August and is expected to be completed by the end of this month. Investigations are also ongoing into the condition of the sewerage network in Cregagh Street, Willowholme Drive, Ardgowan Street and Hillsborough Drive, and an upgrade at Ravenhill Avenue is being considered in order to relieve the catchment.

NIW undertook a CCTV survey of the combined sewer in Sydenham Avenue to check for possible blockages, and some root intrusion was found. Work to resolve that problem has recently been completed. I understand that, during an investigation into localised flooding problems in Hawthornden Road, NIW discovered a cable that was partially impeding a sewer. The cable was relocated and the operation of the sewer has returned to normal.

All those measures are intended to prevent further flooding, pending the outcome of the ongoing drainage area study on the east Belfast sewerage network. The study will determine the condition of the infrastructure and identify any improvements that are required. The study is expected to be completed by late 2009, after which a drainage area plan, incorporating any improvements that the study recommends, will be developed. Completion of the plan will take a further six to nine months, and any planned improvement works will subsequently be included in NIW's capital works programme. The implementation of any proposals that are part of the plan will, of course, be dependent on the availability of funding.

After the flooding in August 2008, a flood improvement action plan was developed. That is being implemented by all three drainage organisations for emergency planning, actual response and the clean-up and recovery phases.

Over the past 12 months, the three drainage organisations have put considerable time and effort into developing the flooding incident line. The phone number was released into the public domain on 29 January 2009, and the new service is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week. I fully appreciate that, when a person's house is flooded, it is important to know who to contact and from whom to seek help. Members of the public do not now have to decide which organisation to ring; they simply contact the flooding incident line, where the details of the incident will be recorded and passed to the relevant agency.

I am aware, as has been raised today, that some residents reported difficulties with contacting the flooding incident line on 31 August. Members will recall that Minister Wilson explained that, on 31 August, the forecast weather conditions did not trigger a Met Office alert. However, an incident did occur, and the flooding incident line received a surge of calls: 42 calls were received between 2.00 pm and 2.30 pm, while only three calls had been received in the previous six hours. The number of staff was quickly increased, but, in the initial half-hour, some of the people who called to report incidents had to queue to have their calls answered.

Roads Service is involved in the implementation of the draft Water Environment (Floods Directive) Regulations as a preventative strategy for flood management. Those regulations establish a framework for managing flood risk that is aimed at reducing the adverse consequences on health, the environment, cultural heritage and economic activity. The regulations place an obligation on Government to identify areas of potential significant flood risk by undertaking a preliminary flood risk assessment of all river basin and coastal zones by December 2011.

Flood risk management plans must be produced by December 2015. Those plans will focus on prevention, protection and preparedness, and will detail objectives and measures to reduce the significant risk in those areas. The Rivers Agency will take the lead in implementing the directive here. The directive represents a shift to a more integrated, proactive and holistic approach to reducing flood risk and places an emphasis on the use of sustainable flood management.

I assure Members that the circumstances of, and my Department's response to, the flooding incident of 31 August 2009 will be investigated to identify any opportunities to reduce the risk of further events and to improve the standard of the inter-agency response. As with all such incidents, it is essential that lessons be learned for the future. I thank Members for the opportunity to speak in the debate. Go raibh míle maith agat.

Adjourned at 7.23 pm.

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): I am sure that, over the summer, members did not forget the Committee's scrutiny of the Education Bill. I remind members that this session is being recorded by Hansard, and I welcome our colleagues from Hansard. Members have a first draft report for their consideration. I am glad that Chris Stewart and Eve Stewart are present. Chris, you are welcome back to the Committee; I have no doubt that we shall see more of you over the next few weeks.

I shall go through the draft report to set the Bill in context at Committee Stage. The draft report sets out the background to the Committee's consideration of the Bill and the approach that will be taken.

In the section that deals with consideration it attempts to record by clause, groups of clauses or schedules the concerns raised by stakeholders; any advice or assistance of which the Committee has had the benefit; the issues that emerged during the Committee's deliberations on the Bill; the Committee's engagement on those issues with the Minister, departmental officials and stakeholders; and the progress made on resolving issues.

Members will appreciate that the Committee must progress its scrutiny so that it can finalise the report, including its conclusions on each clause and schedule so that it either stands part of the Bill or is to be subject to a Committee amendment. We hope that more progress will be made in the next couple of meetings as the Committee finalises the report.

We will look at the draft report as we revisit some of the outstanding issues. After that, we will resume our consideration of the Bill at clause 24; there are only 55 clauses, so we are getting there.

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education):
And the schedules.

The Chairperson: And the schedules.

I commend the Committee Clerk and his staff for the huge amount of work that they have done over the past weeks to bring us to this stage.

I propose that the Committee adopt the draft report in its present form. I stress that the draft report is a working document — I am not asking anyone to buy into something with which they cannot agree. The draft report is a working document; additional content and amendments that emerge from each Committee meeting and are added to the draft report will be tracked so that members can easily identify changes.

There are appendices to the report. Appendix 1 contains extracts from the minutes of the Committee's consideration of the Bill, which the Committee has formally approved.

Appendix 2 contains all the Hansard reports of oral evidence. Those reports have not been copied, because of the volume of paper that that would involve; each Committee member would have 14 files if all the reports had been copied. I remind Committee members that the Hansard reports of the evidence sessions on the Bill have been approved by the Committee, and that all 27 Hansard reports up to and including that of 1 July 2009 are available. They are sitting on the desk in my office if anyone wants to look at them, but I am sure that Committee members have received copies.

Appendix 3 contains the written evidence submitted by stakeholders; Committee members will be familiar with that evidence from the spreadsheet.

Appendix 4 contains correspondence and written submissions, including the Committee's correspondence with the Department, the Minister and the Secretary of State. It also contains letters and additional submissions from other bodies.

Appendix 5 contains a list of witnesses who gave evidence to the Committee during the Bill's Committee Stage. I ask Committee members to review the appendices over the next week with a view to approving them for inclusion in the draft report at next week's meeting. I am sure that Committee members will look forward to doing that over the weekend; I will ring you all on Saturday evening to make sure that that is what you are doing.

Mr O'Dowd: An Indian summer has been forecast for the weekend. [Laughter.]

Mrs M Bradley: That means that we can sit outside.

The Chairperson: You can sit outside and get a tan.

During the Committee's September meetings, members will be asked to approve the additional items necessary to keep the draft report's appendices up to date. I appreciate the indulgence of Committee members in that; there is a huge amount of work to be done, and we need to be as methodical as the Committee Clerk and his staff in collating all the papers.

Before the Committee continues its clause-by-clause scrutiny at clause 24, in light of information received from the Minister and the Department and advice received over the summer recess, I propose that we review several issues that were discussed at previous meetings, including the Minister's letter to the Committee of 5 August 2009.

The Department's responses of 31 July and 4 September are also included under item 2 in the white folder. Items 8 and 9 of matters arising are at tab 4 of the black folder.

Earlier, we referred to legal advice that we have received from the Examiner of Statutory Rules; we have agreed that we will pass that on to Chris. Perhaps we should deal with it now. Will we come to it later?

The Committee Clerk: That issue will arise naturally, Chairman.

The Chairperson: In that case, we shall work our way through the issues that are being revisited. The first is the membership of the education and skills authority (ESA). Paragraph 2(1) of schedule 1 proposes that the membership of the ESA will consist of a chairperson and between seven and 11 other members. Paragraphs 27 to 34 of the draft report set out the concerns of stakeholders and some members on that issue.

At the start of the summer recess, the Minister was still reflecting on the number of the ESA's members. On 5 August, the Minister wrote to the Committee, and her letter was circulated to members by the Clerk on 6 August. The Minister said that she will:

"continue to examine the issue of greater representation on the Board measured against factors such as finance and efficient delivery of services and will advise the Committee of my views as soon as possible."

The advertised remuneration for non-councillor members of the ESA is £8,800 per annum, plus travel and subsistence allowance. Chris, do you have an update from the Minister and the Department on that issue?

Mr C Stewart: No; there is no change in that position. The Minister continues to consider the matter of the number of members of the ESA and is aware of the Committee's deliberation on that point. To pick up on a point that Basil made earlier, it remains the Minister's policy that, irrespective of the number of members of the ESA, the majority should be local councillors.

The Chairperson: OK. We will have to wait for further detail. Like ourselves, the Minister and the Department are constrained by time. As the Minister is still thinking about the matter, I remind the Committee that in previous discussions several members said that they wanted the ESA's proposed membership of one chairperson and between seven and 11 members to be increased to about 20. Bearing in mind that the Committee has only two more scheduled meetings in which to finalise its report and that the result of the Minister's long reflection may well be to approve membership of between seven and 11, do members want to discuss that problem and how we might fix a number for the ESA's membership? It looks as though we could run into difficulty if, on reflection, the Minister tells us that she is not prepared to increase the ESA's membership.

Mr Lunn: Given that the advertisement has been published and the application stage of the process is now complete — the closing date for applications was 7 September 2009 — and that, presumably, the selection procedure is now under way, it seems highly unlikely that the Minister will change her mind about the number of board members. We can regard that as a given. The question now is whether there should be seven or 11 members. Does that depend on the quality and number of applications that have been received?

Mr C Stewart: It is difficult for me to speculate; I am not involved in the selection process at all. However, I can reassure you with respect to the first part of your question. The fact that the application process has been completed will not, in itself, determine the number of members, which will be decided by the Minister, having considered the Committee's views. When the advertisements were placed and the process was under way, we were aware that a final decision on the number had not been made, and that was reflected in the advertisement and the material that was sent to candidates. The fact that we have gone through the first part of the selection process will not determine the number of members who will be appointed.

Mr Lunn: However, for now, the selection panel will have to select a certain number, although I think that the Bill allows for additional members to be appointed in future as necessary.

Mr C Stewart: The Bill allows for the number of members to vary, either up or down, by Order, although, as you rightly surmised, the likely direction will be up. Of course, the first part of the process involves determining which applicants are eligible to be appointed and who meets the criteria to determine the pool of candidates who are, to use the popular phrase, above the line. It will only be at the subsequent stage, when the Minister makes appointments, that it will be necessary to have a number for the appointments to be made. At this stage, it is possible to continue with the process, even in advance of a decision on the numbers.

The Chairperson: I see that academic selection is not being used either. The advertisement states:

“Whilst there are no academic qualifications required”.

Therefore I will be looking for a comprehensive board.

Mr C Stewart: I am sure that the Minister is looking for a broad range of competencies that will be assessed in various ways.

Mr O'Dowd: We must be conscious of the cost of boards. If the number rises to 20, it will cost roughly an additional £64,000 a year just to pay board members to meet twice a month. Although I am open to persuasion about the number of members, we must be conscious of the cost.

The Chairperson: We must also be conscious of the fact that we are moving from five boards with 40-plus members to one board with 11 members, and we must think seriously about whether that is a fair and reasonable transition. Consequently, the cost of increasing the number of board members to 20 is miniscule compared to the Department's overall budget of £2-something billion. Although I do not underestimate the importance of cost savings, the nature and composition of the board is paramount, because it will deal with the most important issue. I am not saying that other boards do not deal with important matters; however, given the complex nature of education, we must ensure that we get it right.

Mr Lunn: I take a different view from John. Given the expertise and experience that is required for such key positions in what will be a huge organisation, I was surprised by the low salary being offered. The position probably merits a bit more than £8,800 a year. For that reason, I would be a bit worried about the quality of applicants.

Mr O'Dowd: You have spent too long running down councillors, saying that they were not worth paying.
[Laughter.]

Mr B McCrea: How was the figure of £8,800 arrived at?

Mr C Stewart: The short answer is that it was determined by considering the market rate to attract candidates of the necessary calibre, while bearing in mind, as John emphasised, the need to minimise the amount of money spent.

Mr B McCrea: Given what you said about the Bill being the most fundamental reform of administration and the contribution that members of the board will be expected to make, it seems to me that the job is very big. Therefore, to value it at £8,800 is interesting. Perhaps we have not got the balance right to get the type of people that we want.

It is not for me to influence that, but perhaps it could be looked at. Perhaps you could provide us with more information. You said that that is simply the market rate, but how did you arrive at that?

Mr C Stewart: I cannot comment on that in detail because the legislation team is not involved in it in any way. If the Committee wishes to have more information, I shall ask colleagues who are involved to provide it.

The Chairperson: What is the position with regard to existing members of boards? It may differ from board to board. If, as is envisaged by the Minister, the 11 members will also chair the 11 local committees, they will not only be engaged in board meetings but in a raft of other activities. That will be pretty demanding. Is that mentioned in the job description in the advertisement? Perhaps it was not required to be mentioned. Our recollection is that part of board members' functions will be to chair the local groups.

Mr C Stewart: That is certainly envisaged.

Mr D Bradley: In theory, the board could have seven members; that is the minimum number that is required. Even with a maximum of 11, the board would still be quite small. Given the advice that a body's size would impose limits and restrictions on its ability to be representative, it makes sense for the board to have more than 11 members. I am in favour of the board's having about 20 members.

The Chairperson: We shall return to that issue. Earlier today, we discussed the issue of how membership of the ESA will reflect the community in Northern Ireland. The Minister's position is set out in her letter of 17 June 2009, which stated:

“A representative membership is appropriate for Commissions that are operationally independent of Ministers and the Assembly. However, the ESA will not be operationally independent. Its role will be to implement the policies of the Minister of the day and legislation as passed by the Assembly with scrutiny and oversight by the Education Committee and the Assembly generally. As such, the ESA — like similar authorities for libraries, health and housing — ought to have a membership that reflects its core role of managing and delivering services.”

Some members expressed the view that the provision of education, unlike other areas that are affected by the RPA such as health and libraries, is largely provided in two separate school systems, reflecting the two largest political/religious communities in our society. Appointment purely on merit may — but will not necessarily — produce a broadly representative ESA regarding community background and education sector or, indeed, the geographic area of Northern Ireland and the gender balance of members. If one community, education sector, gender or sub-region of Northern Ireland is under-represented, there is a risk that the underrepresented group will not have the confidence in the ESA. Members might have seen a recent article in 'The Irish News' that highlighted that point.

The Minister's letter of 17 June also stated:

"I recognise that it will be important for the ESA membership to have the trust and confidence of education interests and the broader community. With this in mind, the appointment arrangements will reflect the need to ensure balance, insofar as this is compatible with the Commissioner's Code of Practice and the merit principle."

Members will recall that the Committee wrote to the Secretary of State regarding the arrangements by which he fulfils his statutory obligation in appointing a member from the Equality Commission and the Human Rights Commission and that, as far as is practicable, he secures that the commissioners as a group are representative of the community in Northern Ireland.

Members have been provided with a response to that issue from the Secretary of State, a summary of which is given in paragraph 31 of the draft report, and which includes the following extract:

"The second way in which the Secretary of State is able to take steps to meet the statutory requirements is at the final selection stage. The list of appointable candidates is provided to him, and he selects the candidates to appoint. In doing so, he can have regard to the community background of the candidates and other relevant information, including, for example, the practical expertise they could bring to the commission, and he can make selections that help to ensure that the commissioners as a group are representative of the community in Northern Ireland."

We may wish to consider whether amending the Bill to include a duty on the Minister to, "so far as practicable", ensure that the ESA membership is representative of the community in Northern Ireland would give the Minister greater freedom to ensure balance — a balance that, her letter of 17 June suggests, is desirable. Members will recall that the Minister's ability to ensure balance was subject to that balance being compatible with the code of practice of the Commissioner for Public Appointments and with the merit principle. Does the Committee have a view on whether the inclusion of a statutory duty would give the Minister greater freedom to ensure balance and thereby ensure public confidence in the membership of the ESA?

Mr B McCrea: We have discussed the issue, and I would like to hear what the departmental officials have to say.

Mr C Stewart: I have not seen the Secretary of State's reply, but from your brief summary it does not strike me that the process outlined by the NIO is significantly different from the process that was followed under the guidelines of the Commissioner for Public Appointments. It strikes me as a sound approach, and one that the Minister will want to adopt.

The Chairperson: We will ensure that Chris receives a copy of the correspondence from the Secretary of State.

Mr B McCrea: Will you get back to us and tell us whether that is how the Department will deal with the matter?

Mr C Stewart: Certainly. I have no doubt that the Minister will wish to respond to that. In her public comments and in her correspondence with the Committee the Minister has made clear her intention to have a process similar to that sought by the Committee that will produce an outcome similar to that which the Committee has said that it wishes to see. I cannot comment on whether an amendment along the lines described would assist or hinder the Minister in taking forward such a process. We would have to get legal advice on that.

Mr O'Dowd: The sensible approach is to forward the Secretary of State's letter to the Department and await a response about its approach. I must say that the Secretary of State and the NIO are not great sources of guidance on appointments processes — or perhaps they are now, after losing two judicial reviews on the matter and having their practices severely criticised by the Commissioner for Public Appointments. Perhaps they have refined their systems and are now using the Commissioner's public-appointments system. It is worth knowing that what brought them back into line was the judicial review process, under which the legislation before us is open to challenge. If any person or group is concerned that the appointments process has not been open, fair and transparent, it is open to judicial review.

The Chairperson: Surely we should ensure that we get it right in order to avoid judicial reviews and the difficulties that were encountered in the processes to which you referred. Without wishing to demean any other aspect of the delivery of government, education is not clean-cut; it is not the same as health. People make choices about where they are educated; therefore there is a distinct difference in the realm of education, although I will not go back over the history of it. That is why we need to get it right.

My understanding is that the Minister is not in favour of any proposed amendment to schedule 1 that would state that members of the board will be representative of the community in Northern Ireland. The Committee would appreciate clarification on that issue.

Mr C Stewart: It would be best if that were put to the Minister formally and if she was asked to reply formally to the Committee. To date, she has not indicated to me that she would favour such an amendment.

The question relates to the earlier question on numbers and on the view that the Minister and the Committee might take on the nature and purpose of the membership of the ESA. We have sought to illustrate in previous evidence that if the policy intention is that the ESA board should be a management-type or technical board that will scrutinise and govern the affairs of the organisation, then the numbers currently outlined in the Bill are in line with current best practice. On the other hand, if the policy intention is that the board must be representative of communities, then practice tends to be that such boards have a larger membership. As Dominic pointed out, it is easier to achieve the sort of balance or representation that is being sought when the numbers are larger.

The Minister's current position is that while she wants to achieve balance and ensure that there is not a lack of balance in the membership, the emphasis to date has been on the managerial role of the membership, which is reflected in the numbers. The Minister is still considering that. If the Committee's view crystallises around a particular number, I am sure that the Minister would want to consider and formally respond to that view.

Mr B McCrea: I agree, Chris; the seminal discussion is about the purpose of the ESA board. That is why we need to consider remuneration, the skills set and the numbers.

Let us take the scenario in which the board is composed of a smaller number of people and the focus is on management. It is still important to find a way of addressing concerns about community balance and other issues, because as the Minister herself has said, those issues are important. If the Minister suggested a smaller number, proposals would have to be made to outline how the Department would address the outstanding issues of community confidence and inclusion. Conversely, if the board were to be made up of a larger number because it is to try to deal with inclusivity and so on, then that raises certain issues about performance and management. It would be better if we could reach a consensus about the way in which those processes will work, because it would be easier to frame legislation that reflects a consensus.

Our underlying concern is that what is set up with good intent may end up working in a different way once the gates are opened. We need to find some way of safeguarding those legitimate concerns.

Mr C Stewart: I understand that position. That is reflected in the fact that the Minister has indicated that she has not yet made a final decision and has not closed the matter down as far as the numbers and related issues are concerned. If the Committee has a consensus position on a number or range of numbers and on the need or otherwise for the sort of amendment on representativeness that has been discussed, I am sure that the Minister would want to respond formally very quickly.

The Chairperson: There are two points. The Committee has received legal advice on aspects of the issue. Does the Committee have the power to forward that advice?

The Committee Clerk: Not in full and specific terms, but it may be useful to communicate the bottom line of some of that legal advice to officials to help the Minister when she looks at the issue of representativeness, because there is a way to define what is representative of the community in educational terms. That was part of the advice that the Committee received.

Mr C Stewart: That would be helpful. I do not expect the Committee to share the legal advice with us. I know that lawyers everywhere tend to be very resistant to that sort of notion. However, if the Committee could give us a broad steer on the direction in which it thinks we ought to travel — and which, on foot of legal advice, the Committee is convinced is sound — then the Minister would want to consider that.

The Chairperson: There are two issues. One, of course, is the possible amendment. The amendment to paragraph 2 of schedule 1 to the Bill would be that members of the ESA, as a group, should be representative of the community in Northern Ireland. Would members be happy for that to be forwarded to the Minister for consideration? That does not tie any party down to agreeing to the amendment; rather it states that the Committee requests that that be considered and asks for a response, given the very tight timescale to which we are now working. Is that agreed?

Mr O'Dowd: So we are not endorsing the amendment?

The Chairperson: We are not endorsing the amendment. I have a letter that staff will give out now so that members have it. I want to be clear: this is not about members endorsing the amendment, so it is not tying any party down to the particular wording of the amendment. However, it is the Committee saying that there is an amendment that we would like the Minister and the Department to consider. We can then come back to that issue.

Mr Lunn: Chris asked us to put a figure on the board membership, but we cannot do that. It is the other way around: the figure would be the end result of trying to satisfy all the criteria. There are 14 in the advertisement and there are four more of which I can think. There is specific mention in the advertisement of people aged under 40 and of women.

I would have far more sympathy with the Minister if she said to us that the Department wants to put together a board that is — whether or not we propose the amendment — representative of the people and the various interests in education in Northern Ireland. However, we cannot really talk about a board of between seven and 11 members any more that we can suggest a figure of 20, or 18, which I proposed a few months ago. It is top-of-the-head stuff — we really do not know what the optimum number would be. I agree that the optimum number should be as small as possible. However, there are many interest groups, and four different education sectors for a start. If the board were to have seven members, there would leave only three places for those sectors.

The Chairperson: In fairness to the Minister on this issue, she has indicated that she would like a steer from the Committee. Correct me if I am wrong, but this Committee's view is that the board membership should be more than what is currently outlined, which is seven to 11 members. The issue is whether it should be 18, 20, 25 or 30.

The simple way of doing this is for us to agree that the figure should certainly be more than what is currently proposed — seven to 11 — so that we do not get into the situation to which the Deputy Chairperson referred whereby it could be seven and not 11. It has to be a number that is greater than what is currently proposed, but consideration must be taken of the fact that some members said that there should be 18 members and others said that there should be 20.

Mr C Stewart: That is what I was suggesting, and I would not necessarily ask the Committee to settle on a particular number. Indeed, legislation on such matters usually tends to be framed to include a range of numbers, recognising the fact that it is not an exact science. I must be very careful not to pre-empt any decisions or views that that Minister might come to. However, if there is a consensus among the Committee that the range that is currently indicated in the legislation is not right — because the Committee feels that it would not be possible for the ESA membership to do its job or to meet other criteria such as representativeness and inclusivity — and if it were minded to suggest a different range, the Minister would want to take that on board.

It would also be helpful if the Committee would express a view as to whether any changes to the numbers need to be reflected formally in an amendment to the legislation, or whether such changes are capable of being dealt with by the provision already in the legislation to vary the number of members.

The Chairperson: Basil, I want to bring you in before we move to the issue that might help us to bring some sense to this matter.

Mr B McCrea: I hesitate to speak too long, given that there is a solution coming up. [Laughter.]

The difficulty appears to be that when one asks for advice, that advice should come from the Minister, through her proposals. The Committee has outlined certain concerns, one being about inclusivity, but the number of members depends on the functions that they will undertake; form will follow function.

What is it that the Department intends those members to do? I raised an eyebrow earlier when you said that you expected that small number of people to be very influential in a very important body and to chair a load of subcommittees all for a relatively small amount of money. You must decide. Someone must present proposals and decide whether the board is expected to fulfil a management role. If that is the case, we must have some other way of addressing the inclusivity issues that people have raised. I am providing this as an example only — it is obviously not what would be acceptable — but the Department could decide that it wants a management board with an advisory board to sit alongside it to deal with the larger issues such as inclusivity. That advisory body would include people who are there to represent the interests of the community rather than undertake a managerial role.

The Committee could come up with 101 different ideas, but to what purpose? The Department must say to us that it is taking on board the Committee's desire to do this and the Department's desire to do that and present its proposals. If those proposals address the concerns then the Committee will be able to say that they are a good idea.

At the risk of ruining Trevor's morning by agreeing with him again, the Committee could pick a number out of the air, whether it be 20, 18, seven or 11, but it really depends on what the Department wants those people to do.

I will not go on, but I will put the ball back firmly in the Department's court. Unless the Chairperson is able magically to create a solution, the solution must come from the Department. The Department must take on board the genuine concerns that have been raised by the Committee, and if the Department does that, the Committee will support it.

Mr C Stewart: I take your point entirely. I would not wish to give the impression that the Department is waiting for the Committee to jump first on any particular issue. The Minister will give her view in due course, having considered the views of the Committee and of the stakeholders. I merely asked the question to find out whether there is an emerging consensus in the Committee on a particular approach or a particular number. If that were the case, the Department would put that suggestion to the Minister.

Mr O'Dowd: As I said earlier, I am open to persuasion regarding the numbers. However, I do not want to re-establish an education board.

The ESA will be a management body, and its role will be to manage an education system through the policies of the Department of Education and legislation passed by the Assembly. People have referred to the scrutiny role and representative role of the ESA. Perhaps we have been out of power for so long that we have forgotten what the role of a politician is. We are the representatives; people elect us to represent their views. We are representative of the broader community, as a collective body.

The Education Committee's role is to scrutinise the Department of Education and the ESA, if and when it comes into operation. All those scrutiny layers already exist, so I am concerned that we could end up establishing yet another quango. As far as I am aware, most, if not all, of the parties are seeking to reduce rather than increase the number of quangos. I agree that we must get the balance right, and there are genuine concerns about a number of issues, but let us not get carried away. The body will have a management role; let us not undermine the Committee's scrutiny role.

Mrs O'Neill: I would like to clarify one point. The legislation provides for the number of board members to be changed as required. If the Committee decides to specify a number in the legislation, that would make the provision rigid. For example, say the board has 15 members but down the line it is decided that it is not able to cope with the demands being placed on it, another piece of legislation would then be needed to change the number of members. To specify a number would make the provision too rigid.

Mr C Stewart: Not necessarily; the way in which the legislation is drafted deliberately includes a degree of flexibility — the means to vary the number by an Order. That is in recognition of the fact that as an organisation evolves and develops the interim conclusions on the number of members required can change. The issue is more one of pragmatic consideration. Given that a mechanism already exists to change the numbers if the need to do so arises, is an amendment to the legislation actually needed? That is a matter for the Committee to decide on.

The Chairperson: That is the thing that worries me about Departments; they tell you what they cannot do, but there is always a clause in a Bill that tells you what they can do. Of course, paragraph 2(3) of schedule 1 states that:

"The Department may be order amend sub-paragraph (1)(b) by substituting for the numbers specified there such other numbers as may be specified in the order."

So, if we set the number at 15, the Department could increase it to 20 if it discovered that that number was not sufficient. Therefore, being prescriptive does not hinder the Department's powers. Even keeping the figure between seven and 11 will not mean that the Department does not have the power to change the number — the provision in schedule 1 gives it the power to do so.

Mr Lunn: I would be satisfied with the provision that the number could be increased in years to come as needs require. That is not the issue. My problem is with the initial composition and how we square the circle as regards the need for representation, however we describe it, and the demands of the job. Purely as a way of trying to move things forward, I suggest that we propose that the figures seven and 11 be changed to 12 and 20 and that the provision to increase or diminish the number of positions remain in the Bill.

The Chairperson: We will park that issue for one moment and move to a draft letter that has been prepared by Committee staff. I sound like I am appearing in a TV cookery class when I say that it is something that we have prepared earlier. Let me assure you that this is not an attempt to try to steamroll the Committee into a particular position; rather it is an attempt to try to respond to the Minister, and the draft gives us something on work on at today's meeting.

Members can appreciate where we are with this at the moment. Over summer recess, some correspondence was sent to the Committee, copies of which were sent to members. Just to refresh members' memories, I asked the Clerk to prepare during recess a draft response to the Minister's letter of 5 August so that the Committee could consider it and try to reach some agreement on the issue. The draft reflects the legal advice that the Committee received on the matter earlier today.

No doubt, there will be other matters about which the Committee will wish to write to the Minister, so I suggest that we add to the draft letter as we work our way through the Bill. There may be other points that members feel it is important to include in the letter, so I ask you to take a few minutes to read it and comment on whether it brings together in a coherent way the matters that we have been discussing.

Trevor, does the draft weaken or lessen your proposal?

Mr Lunn: What will the second page say?

The Chairperson: Do you want to include the suggestion that the number of ESA board members be increased to no fewer than 12 or more than 20?

Mr Lunn: That is what I proposed, so yes. It does not bind anybody to anything.

The Chairperson: If you had 12 —

Mr Lunn: Make it 11 to 19, plus a chairperson.

The Chairperson: I take Chris Stewart's point about us tying ourselves down to numbers —

Mr Lunn: We are being pressed to provide some sort of steer on the numbers.

Mr C Stewart: I would hate the Committee to think that I was pressing it about anything.

The Chairperson: Is it not the case that we are looking at a minimum of 20 members, as opposed to a figure of between 12 and 20?

Mr O'Dowd: We are not looking at anything.

The Chairperson: I am in the Committee's hands, so I would appreciate it if someone would say. Trevor is suggesting 12 to 20 board members whereas, other members have said 20 or 18.

Mr Lunn: All the suggestions have been in that range, and Dominic's offer of 20 is the highest yet. I am taking that range as a basis on which to move forward. Michelle has just whispered that we should wait another week until we see the Minister's response, but the Committee has been waiting for responses for more than two years and they have been very slow in coming forward, so I am just trying to move the ball forward a bit.

The Chairperson: Trevor has made a proposal, so, as the Chairperson, I am duty bound to —

Mr B McCrea: Let us split the difference between Trevor's 18 and Dominic's 20 and say 19.

Mr Lunn: My figure of 18 was just a suggestion some months ago.

Mr B McCrea: Pick a number.

The Chairperson: Is that a minimum figure?

Mr Lunn: I want to leave the Minister with a lot of flexibility. I am suggesting that, in effect, the current maximum should be the minimum, thus dramatically raising the maximum. That range provides a greater chance than the present one of satisfying the interests of all those involved.

Mr O'Dowd: We will be throwing darts at a dart board in a minute. I thought that the purpose of the letter was to emphasise to the Minister a number of amendments that the Committee may wish to consider and to ask her to consider them. We are now getting into definitive proposals, but I do not think that that will help us to move the matter on.

Mr Lunn: I am taking the letter as an invitation to put a figure on the number of ESA members. The draft letter has crossed out the figures 7 and 11, and I took that as an indication that we might provide a range of numbers. Is that not what it was meant to do?

The Chairperson: Yes, but we are not reaching agreement about what the range should be, which is probably why it was left that way.

Mr Lunn: We are not disagreeing.

The Chairperson: I think that there is consensus that the figures should be greater than those that are currently being proposed.

Mr O'Dowd: No; my exact words were that I was "open to persuasion." I believe that we could all sign up to the letter as it is currently worded. It asks the Minister to consider the number of members and emphasises that the Committee requires an answer and an end to her deliberations on it.

Mr Lunn: OK. I will go with that.

The Chairperson: Can we leave it at that?

Mr O'Dowd: There is just one small point; the Minister's name is spelt incorrectly.

The Chairperson: I certainly did not type it or there would be lots more spelling mistakes; it would not just be the Minister's name.

The Committee Clerk: So are members proposing that we insert the words "a greater number of" as opposed to providing any new range?

The Chairperson: We have not included the words "a greater number" in the letter.

Mrs M Bradley: No, that has not been included in the draft letter.

The Chairperson: The inference is that it should be a greater number than the seven or 11.

Mr Lunn: Could we say something along the lines of:

"a greater number commensurate with the need to satisfy the various interest groups and sectors"?

Mr O'Dowd: It is not a representative body.

The Chairperson: Not yet.

I do not wish to begin to consider a whole raft of changes to the letter, because it could take a long time — although that is the reason why we are here. I ask members to look at page 2 of the letter. We could change the wording to read:

"On the latter, the Committee could suggest Schedule 1, paragraph 2(1)(b) should be amended to increase the number of members."

That would leave it open-ended. Chris is here, and he is aware of all the discussions that have taken place this morning. The sentiments expressed here can be reported back in conjunction with the letter that will go to the Minister. Are Members agreed?

Mr D Bradley: Agreed.

Mr Lunn: Should we not change it to read:

"increase the number of members to satisfy the requirements of the suggested amendment"?

The Chairperson: I do not think that that would be needed. All that needs to be inserted is the phrase "increase the number of members". Are Members agreed?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: The Committee is still examining the issues that it feels should be revisited. We now come to the issue of regulations for the ESA's local committees, which is dealt with in paragraphs 60 and 65 of the Committee's draft report on the Education Bill. This has been a significant issue for some stakeholders and members. Members may wish to scan those paragraphs to remind themselves of developments to date.

The Committee wrote to the Minister on 29 June 2009 and informed her of the Committee's wish for regulations to bring "clarity, certainty and confidence" to the arrangements for the ESA committees, as currently set out at paragraphs 7 and 8 of schedule 1 to the Bill and expanded on in the Minister's letter of 17 June 2009. In that letter, the Minister indicated that she was not proposing to specify local committee arrangements in the Bill. In the Minister's letter of 5 August 2009, she again rejected the idea of regulations to set out local committee arrangements. The Minister's rationale in both cases is the same, and I quote from her letter of 5 August 2009:

"The ESA's local structures will develop and evolve over time, and in response to need, and it would be difficult to accommodate this if the detailed structures were specified in legislation."

Members will recall that at our meeting of 1 July 2009 the Committee Clerk was asked to prepare a draft enabling provision for regulations on ESA local committees. We are in the process of distributing the draft wording of an amendment to paragraph 8 of schedule 1 for members' consideration. That draft wording would read:

"The Department may by regulations—

(a) require prescribed functions of ESA to be exercised on its behalf by a prescribed committee or employee of ESA; and

(b) regulate the appointment by ESA of an employee for the purposes of exercising such functions."

Members should note that, implicit in a Department making regulations is a provision that enables the Department and the Minister to vary or revoke the arrangements for local committees by way of another regulation under the same enabling provision. Thus there is a facility to review the ESA committee structure and change it in response to need as it evolves over time. That facility addresses the Minister's concerns. Members may wish to consider factors such as how urgently a change to the ESA committee structure may need to be made; whether laying further regulations would be an obstacle to the development and evolution of the ESA committee structure; or, given the importance of an effective system of local committees, whether changes should be subject to Assembly control.

On that basis, members were minded in principle to see the ESA committee structure, particularly the structure of local committees, set out in regulations. During the recess, I asked the Committee Clerk to draft a section on that issue that could be inserted into the letter that the Committee will send to the Minister following today's meeting. I apologise for the amount of paper that is being given to you and, indeed, that it is only being given to you now. I would have preferred to have had this earlier, but that was not possible. The section would be additional to the letter that has been approved and will be sent to the Minister. The additional section attempts to formalise what I have said to members about local committees and asks the Minister to look at the issue and come back to us with a definitive view.

Mr O'Dowd: How will it work in practice? Do we envisage that, under this amendment, Assembly regulation or legislation will be required for a change to be made to the structure or shape of the local committee that covers Fermanagh, for example, or a large rural community?

The Chairperson: No; I do not think that that would be required.

The Committee Clerk: As set out in the Minister's letter of 17 June, the vision is for 11 local committees as well as the subcommittees that would be part of the main ESA board. That is the broad form; indeed, the make-up and appointment process to such local committees could have a community or political aspect.

Mr O'Dowd: I am aware of the structures. However, why is an amendment to regulate the structure of ESA committees necessary? Based on evidence, my understanding is that committee structures will become rigid if we include them in legislation. For example, if the subcommittee that will cover Fermanagh identifies issues that are particular to that area, and it wants to respond by making structural changes, does the amendment mean that that will have to go through the Assembly? If so, why do we need the amendment?

Mr C Stewart: In her reply the Minister indicated her concern by stating that she did not want to specify the structure in the Bill, based largely on the point that John made about rigidity. There is no doubt that an approach based on subordinate rather than on primary legislation is less rigid and easier to change. Nevertheless, each time a change is proposed to a committee or to other structures, additional legislation will be required. However, that is, perhaps, putting a technical cart before a policy horse. The issue is whether the Committee feels that it is necessary to regulate such decisions at all. If so, subordinate legislation is certainly the preferable route. At this time, however, the Minister's view is that it is not necessary to regulate that matter.

Mr O'Dowd: My understanding of the concerns that CCMS, ELB and NICIE raised is that the Bill says "may establish committees". Consequently, those bodies wish it to stipulate: "shall establish committees."

The Committee Clerk: On a point of clarification, those bodies wanted clarity and information on who would be on, the role of, and the nature of the appointment process to the ESA's regional subcommittees, which will replace the existing five boards. That is the point that stakeholders were making: what representation will the ESA have at sub-regional level? We are told by the Minister that, in all, there will be 11 such subcommittees. However, in the Bill, there is no information about the form, purpose or process for arriving at the establishment of those subcommittees. That, in my recollection, is the point that the stakeholders raised.

Mr O'Dowd: I am concerned that by attempting to resolve those matters we will put in place a structure that will not allow the local responses that will be required, whether in Fermanagh or in west or east Belfast. We are in danger of making things so rigid that that the ESA will have to come to the Assembly every time a structural change is required, and that would not assist anybody.

Mr B McCrea: It is the absence of any proposals that causes me difficulty. All that I have picked up on is that, at some stage, the Minister will let us know what she has in mind. There are difficulties with oversight arrangements and agreement on A Shared Future. Therefore, I, for one, would support a call for somebody to bring forward proposals about how it will operate. If those suggestions are broadly in line with what people want to see, agreement, with provision for amendments, can be reached.

Given that a huge amount of work is involved and that, legislatively, the Assembly is relatively immature and Members must learn a bit more about the way forward, I would prefer the legislation to include more scrutiny and oversight. At some stage, such arrangements may not be necessary. However, for now, can we please have definitive arrangements for the structures, including their powers; who will make appointments to them; their relationship with other bodies; the oversight arrangements that will be in place to supervise their activities; how we will ensure local inclusivity; and how equality legislation will be implemented? Let us have all those things laid out, and then we will be able to see whether we need to amend them. We have none of that detail, and that is why I am not prepared to give the Minister carte blanche and trust her to come up with a solution that will work, saying that if we do not like it she will change it. I am sorry, but that will not work for me.

The Chairperson: That is what I tried to address in the letter, which stated that implicit in such a provision for the Department to make regulations is the power to vary or revoke arrangements. The situation to which John has referred would not happen. There would be no need for micro-management; if a change were required it would not have to go through all the processes. I take the point that Basil made: we still need to see exactly what is being proposed. It is not enough to say that there may be committees; we need to see what those committees will be, and that should be reflected in the Bill. The day-to-day running of it would not be included in the Bill, but at least we would know exactly what we were getting. At the moment, we do not know.

Mr C Stewart: It may help if I summarise by saying that if there is ever to be a significant change to the committee structure of the ESA, the Minister of the day would of course want to approve or reject such a proposal by the ESA. The policy question that members have raised is whether that should be subject to a formal process of regulations or whether it should be an administrative ministerial matter to be decided in the normal course of events. Either option is technically possible; whether members prefer one option or the other is a political policy matter.

Mr B McCrea: That was nicely summarised.

Mr O'Dowd: I am still not convinced that the proposed amendment allays either Basil's concerns or the Chairperson's. I still reflect on the deliberations of the Committee, and our concern was that as the word "may" was used instead of "shall", there might be no committees established. I do not think that this amendment will ensure that committees are established, and I certainly do not think that it will help local delivery. I cannot endorse the proposed amendment today. I am sceptical about it, but I would like some time to ponder it.

Mr B McCrea: How and when will we learn what the committee structures will be, whether in legislation or not?

Mr C Stewart: I cannot give a straight answer to that today. I will have to speak to colleagues and come back to you.

Mr B McCrea: We are going around in circles here. You are right to highlight whether those structures will be under ministerial responsibility or established through regulation. You know my position on regulation, for the reasons that I have outlined, but, given that people have made a plea to come up with something, it would help us to deliberate if we had at least a template as a good "starter for 10", and we could work from that. However, the position of the UUP remains that we prefer regulation.

The Chairperson: In fairness, that does not tie John down to anything either. All that we are saying in both those elements of the draft letter to the Minister is that the issue should be reconsidered. We have been waiting. The point is made time and time again that the issue is urgent. I do not know how long we have to reflect before a decision has to be made, but it is not the place of the Committee to make that decision. It is for the Department and the Minister to decide what should be done, and then we will decide whether we agree or not.

We have tried to establish some context, and we are also trying to reflect the issues raised by stakeholders such as CCMS, the education and library boards and the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education (NICCE), who have raised the issue as a particular concern. That is the reason for the letter. It is not being prescriptive; it uses the phrase “to reconsider”. Rather than further delay, as John suggested — although I appreciate that he saw the letter only this morning — the letter is an attempt to bring all the issues together and put them to the Minister, and we could then have a definitive response by next week.

Mr C Stewart: I appreciate that, Chairperson, and I understand the point. I will relay to colleagues and to the Minister that members want to see more detail of what the Department has in mind for ESA committee structures and functions, and that those details will allow members to come to a view on what the levels of control and regulation of those matters ought to be. I cannot comment on the matter today, because at present it is outside the orbit of the legislation on which we are working. We will ask for more information and bring it back to the Committee.

Mr Lunn: It seems like a lot of discussion over a two-word amendment. If the Department decided that it needed to regulate a function of the ESA — the Bill gives them the authority to do that — and to delegate it to a prescribed employee of the ESA who may have had a big hand in making appointments, is there anything to stop the ESA then allowing that prescribed employee to form a committee, which is a natural thing to do?

Mr C Stewart: I am sorry; could you take me through that again? I am not sure that I followed all of it.

Mr Lunn: I hope that I can. Paragraph 8(4) of schedule 1 says that:

“The Department may by regulations —

(a) require prescribed functions of ESA to be exercised on its behalf by a prescribed employee of ESA;”

The proposed amendment changes that to “an employee or a committee”. I am not sure why it is there at all, but if the Department enforced that regulation and gave authority to a prescribed employee of the ESA to have a particular function, is there anything to stop the ESA providing that employee with a committee to do the work?

Mr C Stewart: No. It might be helpful to remind members that there is a boundary between employees of the ESA and members of the ESA — one cannot be both at the same time. If a decision is made to delegate a particular function to an employee, the ESA could set up a subcommittee to scrutinise the delivery of that function or the performance of a particular duty. The Bill allows committees to be established and functions to be formally delegated to committees or to employees. The issue that the Committee is deliberating on is whether it wishes to go one stage beyond that and ask the Department to take a power to regulate that delegation when establishing committees.

The Chairperson: The important word is functions, not structures; there is a vast difference. We have almost created confusion between structures and functions. The structure is of little importance sometimes; it is the function that that structure is engaged in that is crucial. That is why the proposed amendment refers to required prescribed functions, not to prescribed structures.

Can we reach agreement? I take the point that Basil made and the concerns that John raised, but we will not tie parties or individuals in to a definitive position. It is another attempt to say that the Bill has raised issues, and that following the letter of 5 August that we received from the Minister, we want those issues to be “reconsidered”, which was the word that was used in the letter. Can we agree that that letter, with the amendment that was added to it earlier, be sent to the Minister?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: I will raise the next matter before we lose quorum. I do not want to disappoint members, but I have only a couple of pages to revisit, after which we will get to clause 24. However, when we get to clause 24, we still have to get to clause 55. I suggest that we finish the issues that we were to revisit and that we meet again tomorrow at 10.00 am to start at clause 24 and finish our consideration of the Bill. Many of the issues from clause 24 onwards are procedural, so we should not have to go into as much detail. However, we still have a duty to ensure that we have considered them.

The Committee Clerk: On Friday, members received 34 departmental amendments. That adds to the burden of the Committee as we try to complete deliberations for a report at the end of September. It is becoming more urgent to address those 34 amendments and, if applicable, to get any issues back to the Department and the Minister.

The Chairperson: We will include those tomorrow. We have to start from clause 1 again. I suggest that we commence at 24 and take the proposed amendments as we come to the relevant clauses.

The Committee Clerk: We will go through the clauses until 55 and then return to the start and go through the clauses to which there are departmental amendments.

The Chairperson: Tomorrow’s meeting will be to first consider the amendments from clauses 1 to 24 —

The Committee Clerk: The vision was that we go from clause 24 onwards and then return to the amendments.

The Chairperson: Yes.

The Committee Clerk: Some clauses have departmental amendments and some, fortunately, do not. We have to revisit some of the earlier clauses for which the departmental amendments have just arrived.

The Chairperson: Do members agree that we will meet tomorrow morning?

Mrs M Bradley: I have a Social Development Committee meeting in the morning.

The Chairperson: Who will be available in the morning?

Mr McCallister: I will be available for a short time.

Mrs O'Neill: I will be available from 10.00 am to 11.00 am.

The Chairperson: My suggestion is that we should meet —

The Committee Clerk: For an hour at least.

The Chairperson: For as long as we have a quorum.

Mrs M Bradley: I will try to make myself available between the two Committees.

The Chairperson: I apologise that, procedurally — I am talking about my own party — we will not be able to reach full complement until after Monday. We got caught in House procedure on that one.

The Committee Clerk: The important thing is that any issues go back to the Department tomorrow afternoon. If we leave it until next week, time will run out.

Mr Lunn: Will we have a quorum tomorrow?

The Chairperson: At the minute, we have John, Michelle, and you. Dominic, will you be available in the morning?

Mr D Bradley: I will.

The Chairperson: We have a quorum.

Mr B McCrea: I cannot attend. Perhaps we can meet earlier at, say, 9.00 am.

The Chairperson: Do members agree to meet at 9.00 am?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: OK, the Committee will meet tomorrow at 9.00 am in room 21.

Mr B McCrea: I have to leave at 10.30 am.

The Chairperson: If we start at 9.00 am we should get a couple of hours. We will now revisit the issue of employment regulations. I remember that stakeholders and the Committee raised the point about bringing clarity, certainty and confidence to the employment relationships that are envisaged in the Bill. In her letter of 5 August 2009, the Minister confirmed her agreement to the insertion in the Bill of:

“an enabling power (not a duty) for regulations to be made on model schemes of employment and guidance on employment schemes. As requested at the Committee’s meeting on 1 July 2009, a paper on these employment scheme regulations will be prepared for the Committee.”

To date, that paper and the draft regulations have not been provided to the Committee. Chris, is there any indication as to when we will be provided with those?

Mr C Stewart: They are in my briefcase, Chairperson, but unfortunately I cannot hand them over to you until the Minister formally signs off on them. We hope to have those papers with the Committee very soon.

The Chairperson: Would it be possible to have them tomorrow?

Mr C Stewart: Yes, and I will aim to do that; they are drafted.

Members who wish to have an early insight into the possible scope and content of the regulations should look at schedule 2 to the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998, because they are very similar to it. Schedule 2 sets out in some detail the respective roles and responsibilities of the education and library boards and CCMS on the one hand and the boards of governors on the other. We want the regulations to make it clear that the key functions of boards of governors are for boards of governors only; they cannot be infringed on by the ESA in any way, shape or form, and we will govern the content of schemes of employment to ensure that that is the case.

I apologise that the paper that we owe you on employment matters is not with you; however, I can provide members with early notice of other significant matters that will be addressed in that paper. I will cover three matters. As you said, stakeholders and members wanted clarity and certainty around respective roles. We hope that the regulations will provide that.

Another issue that you asked us to look at was the availability of an effective challenge mechanism that a board of governors could avail itself of if it felt that the ESA was acting or purporting to act unreasonably either in the approval or operation of a scheme. We previously told the Committee that we would take advantage of an existing mechanism, the infamous article 101 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, and that we would try to provide a link or cross-reference in the legislation to that mechanism.

When members get a chance to study the regulations, they will notice that that is not included in the list of amendments that we have provided. The reason for that is technical and reflects the advice of the Office of the Legislative Counsel. It advised that it is not appropriate to make that sort of cross- or linking reference in legislation because it would merely restate existing law. In effect, the counsel said that we already have such a mechanism — article 101. It applies to all functions of the ESA, so a further reference to it in legislation would be inappropriate because it would not change the law. Therefore, our response to the Committee is that we accept entirely the need for such a mechanism and that it already exists.

The Chairperson: Who has the power to instigate article 101? Is it the Department? Is that power available to boards of governors?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. A board of governors could make a complaint under article 101 and the Department would be obliged to investigate it.

The Chairperson: OK.

Mr C Stewart: The third point is a fairly significant one. Some stakeholders raised concerns about staff dismissals and in particular about whether a decision of a board of governors to dismiss a member of staff could be made binding on the ESA. The advice that we have consistently given over the past few years to the Committee was that that was not possible. That reflected the legal advice that we had at the time. In essence, the legal advice was that employment law should always take precedence over education law. Employment law places certain responsibilities on the ESA as an employer and, because of that, the decision of a board of governors to dismiss a member of staff could not be automatically binding on the ESA. The ESA would have to have its own consideration of that decision.

Quite a number of stakeholders were significantly concerned by that, and they raised the matter with the Committee on many occasions. On foot of that, we were asked to reconsider the matter, which we have now done, with the benefit of legal advice. Having looked at it again very carefully, the lawyers have come to a different conclusion, which I hope stakeholders and members will find helpful. The conclusion is this: education law in these matters would take precedence over employment law. Therefore, the Bill, as currently drafted, makes a decision of a board of governors to dismiss a member of staff automatically binding on the ESA, which would be under a legal duty to put such a decision into effect, whether it agreed with it or not.

That means that there is a disparity between education law and employment law. That disparity would not affect the power of a board of governors to make such a decision, but if not addressed, could give rise to difficulty with the ESA in any subsequent legal proceedings. What it would, in effect, mean is that a board of governors would take a lawful decision, a member of staff would be dismissed, but the ESA would be found to be at fault under employment law because it had not gone through the necessary processes. We can remedy that disparity with an Order that would modify employment law to ensure that there is no disparity with education law. Indeed, the power to make such an Order is already proposed in clause 12 of the Bill.

That is a quick trot over a very technical issue, and the paper will set it out in a little more detail. However, the core issue is that we can, without further change to the Bill, address the key concern that a number of stakeholders raised with us, which was that a decision of a board of governors to dismiss a member of staff ought to be binding on the ESA. The effect of the Bill is that it will be binding.

The Chairperson: Chris, that is very helpful. That was a major issue that people from across the sectors had raised, and we will obviously consider it.

Mr C Stewart: The policy intention was always that boards of governors would have that level of autonomy. We wrongly perceived that there was a barrier to that in employment law. We have found a way around that barrier.

The Chairperson: I asked the Clerk to draft additional paragraphs for inclusion in the Committee's response to the Minister's letter of 5 August. Members will now be given a copy of those additional paragraphs. They deal with schemes of employment, and our purpose in drafting them is simply to find out the timescale for the formal regulations to be brought before the Assembly.

Mr C Stewart: We certainly want the Committee to see the detailed text of the proposed regulations within a matter of days. We want those regulations to come into force on 1 January. In order for that to happen, we need to have Royal Assent at the right time and the early commencement of the power to make the regulations. We then need to make the regulations and bring them forward for formal Committee scrutiny in order to have them operational in time for 1 January. That is tight but doable.

The Chairperson: In the Minister's letter to the Committee of 5 August, she objected to the suggestion that the enabling provision would state that the Department shall have a duty to make regulations. In her letter, the Minister states that:

"To provide a duty to make regulations would be a most unusual approach as, normally, regulations are made under enabling powers. Your letter does not make clear why the Committee is seeking such a prescriptive approach or is this a unanimous view of the Committee. The Committee will be aware that the RPA related legislation tabled before the Assembly by Executive colleagues has not been subject to such restrictions."

The draft paragraphs welcome the Minister's decision to have regulations and states that the Committee does not wish to be prescriptive. It also emphasises the Committee's wish to be informed of the timescale for bringing the regulations formally before the Committee and of the planned date to lay the regulations before the Assembly. Committee members may wish to consider whether such information will be adequate to give the Committee sufficient clarity, certainty and confidence with regard to the Minister's proposals.

The Department's paper of 4 September 2009 on the full set of departmental amendments to the Bill includes an amendment to clause 4, which inserts an enabling provision to allow the Department to make regulations on employment schemes. That amendment reads:

"The Department may by regulations make provision as to the form and content of employment schemes."

Do Committee members have any comments on that? I am trying to crystallise our position.

Mr B McCrea: To clarify, you are saying that if the Minister is able to bring forward her regulations, we will be able to have a look at them and move the process forward a bit more speedily.

The Chairperson: That is a good summary of what we are trying to do.

Mr C Stewart: We hope that the Committee will have the text of the regulations as early as tomorrow.

The Chairperson: Is that agreed?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: There was an issue with clause 12(1). Earlier today, the Committee discussed whether the power to make Orders should be subject to an affirmative procedure since it will amend primary legislation. Chris, will you comment on the rationale for clause 12(1) being subject to negative rather than affirmative resolution procedure? We have had difficulty in getting our heads around that.

Mr C Stewart: There is no particular policy intention behind that. I was as surprised as some members when I checked and found that the clause was subject to the negative rather than affirmative resolution procedure. As you rightly suggest, where there is a power to modify primary legislation, it is usually subject to the strong Assembly means of control through the affirmative resolution procedure. In the case of clause 12(1), I cannot explain why the Bill was drafted in the way it was; I can only assume that the legislative draftsman followed his normal practice for a clause that has the power to modify employment law. That is not new; there is such a power in the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.

There is no particular policy intention behind the drafting of clause 12(1) in that way. The Minister has not adopted a formal position on the issue, so if the Committee wants her to consider subjecting the power in the clause to the stronger Assembly method of control, without pre-empting her decision, I am sure that she will do so.

The Chairperson: The Committee discussed earlier whether the consultation requirements in clause 12(2) should be replicated in clause 50. Chris, will you comment on the absence of consultation requirements in clause 50 and say whether the Department would consider inserting some form of consultation requirement?

Mr C Stewart: Again, that is a matter for the Minister to consider. I have no reason to assume that she would resist the notion of consultation. The power to modify primary legislation through an administrative Act is serious and is not something that one should undertake lightly. It should never be done under the cover of darkness — there should be full consultation. Whether or not that should be on the face of the Bill is something on which the Minister may want to reflect.

The Chairperson: The Committee should perhaps consider whether that makes the process more cumbersome or achieves more clarity. The reason that we raised some of those issues was to achieve clarity.

Mr C Stewart: It could do —

The Chairperson: Consultation is good, but it is sometimes considered to be another delay in bringing something into the public domain.

Mr C Stewart: There is a trade-off. I should be candid and point out that the purpose of the provision, which is fairly standard, is not to give the Department the power to sneak around and make changes to primary legislation; rather it gives us belt and braces if something goes wrong. When the legislation is passed, if we discover that we got something wrong, left something out or included something incorrect, that clause gives us a means to — and the speed is important — rectify the problem quickly. We need to think carefully about the potential effect of consultation on the timescale for remedying mistakes quickly.

The Chairperson: If such a situation arose now, without the provisions contained in the Bill, how would the Department react?

Mr C Stewart: If something was discovered now, I think that the Minister would want to move an amendment at Consideration Stage. The provision takes account of something that might occur later.

The Chairperson: I mean that if the Education Bill did not exist, how would the current legislation that governs the Department deal with the situation?

Mr C Stewart: It depends; I cannot say off the top of my head where similar powers exist in current legislation. I imagine that they must exist —

The Chairperson: I mean in the Department of Education.

Mr C Stewart: Sorry; I do not quite follow the question.

The Chairperson: You said that the provision provides belt and braces if something does not function properly. How do you address that situation now? How would you amend it?

Mr C Stewart: We would bring forward an Order to amend the legislation.

The Chairperson: Would you not have a consultation process?

Mr C Stewart: It depends on the nature of the issue. I cannot provide a specific example; however, if an aspect of the education service could not function or would be unlawful unless we moved quickly, consultation might be impractical. On the other hand, if we had made a mistake and the legislation did not give proper effect to a policy intention, the case for consultation would be much stronger.

The Committee Clerk: I want to clarify a technical or detailed point for the Committee. The Committee may not be suggesting that you replicate the consultation requirements of clause 12(1) in clause 50(1). We could be talking about a similar type of requirement, bearing in mind what you said about the need to rectify a mistake urgently. That issue was raised in a stakeholder's response, which said that there should be some kind of consultation requirement.

Mr C Stewart: I understand that. With no disrespect to any stakeholders, they sometimes read legislation and interpret its intentions in the most draconian way possible. A colleague has advised me of an example where such a power was used to correct a simple spelling mistake in the Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order 2005. Such a matter is, perhaps, not particularly urgent nor does it require much consultation, but if such an error comes to light, it should be modified.

The Chairperson: Does such an error fall under the definition of "reasonably practicable" that we discussed earlier?

Mr C Stewart: Yes; an Order made under such a provision is no substitute for the normal legislative process that gives effect to a new policy.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Chris and Eve. You had an easy task again today, Eve. Endurance is all that is required. Today's session was important because it provides a starting point. Thank you for your time and attention; we will continue tomorrow morning.

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): We now move to the clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill. If we work hard, we can get this concluded by 11.00 am. That is the challenge, and the clock starts now. I thank Chris Stewart and Eve Stewart for making the effort to be here this morning.

In scrutinising clause 24, which deals with the duty of the education and skills authority (ESA) to conduct examinations and assessments, it will be helpful for members to refer to their folders, which include the Committee's draft report on the Education Bill. We are at paragraph 156 of the report. Members may also wish to take a moment to consider the stakeholders' comments on clause 24 and the Minister's letter dated 17 June.

In respect of clause 24, the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) has requested that the Department of Education (DE) amend the provisions to extend the ESA's role to cover a range of non-regulatory functions that relate to vocational qualifications, including advising DEL and supporting organisations that are involved in developing vocational qualifications. Has the specific wording for that amendment been agreed yet?

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education):

Yes; I was under the impression that we had provided the Committee with the text of the DEL amendments.

The Chairperson: Are they included in the folder? I did not see clause 24 mentioned in the amendments that were given to the Committee.

Mr C Stewart: A colleague has just confirmed that we have provided the Committee with the text of the proposed DEL amendments.

The Chairperson: Will members check if they have that?

The Committee Clerk: I wish to clarify that on 4 September we received proposed amendments from the Department for clause 26 but not for clause 24.

Mr C Stewart: There is a separate list of amendments.

The Chairperson: The other list that we have goes from clauses 1 to 23 only.

The Committee Clerk: The other list has some proposed amendments to clauses 1 to 23; however, the DEL amendments do not come to mind.

The Chairperson: Can we get that clarified immediately? There were also comments on clause 24 from the Association of Northern Ireland Education and Library Boards (ANIELB) and the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB).

Mr C Stewart: I apologise for any confusion; we might have made an error. We thought that we had sent the text of the DEL amendments to the Committee. If we have not, we will certainly forward that to the Committee today, because the detailed wording is available.

The Chairperson: The Association of Northern Ireland Education and Library Boards raised the issue of a perceived risk or potential conflict of interest that would damage public confidence in qualifications. Has that concern been addressed?

Mr C Stewart: We understand the point that the association has made, but it remains the view of the Department and the Minister that there is no conflict of interest for the association to fear. The issue of the standards of examinations or qualifications for which the ESA will be responsible and for which the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) is currently responsible is an important one. Close working relationships exist among the accreditation and regulation bodies throughout all the jurisdictions in the British Isles, and that will continue. Indeed, in the list of proposed departmental amendments, members will see that we propose to take a specific joint working power to further enhance that.

The underlying point is that all regulatory authorities recognise the importance of the portability of examinations. The standards of examinations and qualifications have to be internationally recognised, otherwise they would be devalued. That will be the main driving force behind the ESA's approach to that function. I think that the association has grossly overstated the issue of a potential conflict of interest.

Mr O'Dowd: Did the association have any evidence of that actually happening?

The Chairperson: In paragraph 158 on page 53 of the draft Committee report, the Association of Northern Ireland Education and Library Boards states:

"The inclusion of CCEA and its role within ESA gives rise to possible concern around the integrity of statistics and standards. The Bill needs to clarify and separate these functions to give the public confidence".

The association is saying, therefore, that public confidence will be eroded. It does not cite any empirical evidence for that. However, did the association make a reference at some stage to an organisation in England and Wales that it used as a comparison? Do members have any further comments on that?

Mr Lunn: What way does that change the existing situation?

Mr C Stewart: It does not change it particularly. That block of clauses effectively transfers the current functions of CCEA to the ESA. If there is any area in which there is a potential conflict of interest — and I see little such potential — it is the fact that the ESA will also be responsible for providing curriculum support and giving professional advice and training to schools. The Department does not regard that as involving any degree of conflict of interest. If the issue is, as the Chairperson said, one of statistics, I find the association's comments even more bewildering. Official statistics published by the Department are audited and must comply with standards set by the Office for National Statistics.

Mr Lunn: It looks like a non-event to me; there is no basis for the association's concerns.

Mr C Stewart: I entirely agree with the member's comments.

The Chairperson: Having considered that clause, are members content with it as drafted at this point?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clause 25 allows the ESA to carry out other functions in relation to the curriculum, examinations and assessments: for example, the production of teaching materials and the publication of guidance regarding the curriculum. The ESA also may charge other examining bodies or authorities for carrying out functions on its behalf. I refer members to a concern raised by the SEELB in paragraph 163 of the draft report. It states:

"by requiring ESA to produce materials for use in connection with the Curriculum for 2 year olds, there is a danger that this might formalize their learning experiences. The benefits of formalizing the curriculum for children of such a young age are questionable and come at a time when many other countries are introducing children to formal education at a much later age."

Others will have a different view on that. However, I thought that the SEELB was expressing a different point of view. Do members have any comments? Chris?

Mr C Stewart: It is an interesting comment by the SEELB on the Minister's policy. Perhaps it is an opportune time to remind the SEELB that Ministers make the policy and that it is the job of the education and library boards to carry it out.

The Chairperson: OK. That is what will appear in Hansard. I am glad that you said that and not me.

Having considered the clause, are members content with it as drafted?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clause 26 concerns the discharge by ESA of its functions under clauses 24 and 25. In carrying out its function in relation to the curriculum, examination and assessment, the ESA is placed under a duty to have regard to: "the requirements of industry, commerce and the professions regarding education."

It is also placed under a duty to have regard to the requirement of people with special educational needs and learning difficulties. I refer members to paragraph 166 of the draft Committee report and to the stakeholders' comments on the clause. In response to concerns raised by CnaG in paragraph 167 of the draft report, the Minister's letter of 17 June indicated that the Department was considering making an amendment to clause 26 to ensure that the curriculum support and similar services will be sensitive to the needs of Irish-medium education. The letter also states that the Minister is considering an amendment to clause 2 of the Bill, which concerns the functions and general duties of the ESA, to include a duty on the ESA to encourage, facilitate and develop Irish-medium education.

We have supplied members with copies of the proposed amendments this morning. However, as we said yesterday, we will come back to those amendments. The Department has also proposed to delete clause 26(2)(b), indicating that the DEL amendment is no longer required. Can you clarify why that is necessary?

Mr C Stewart: Our DEL colleagues have simply advised that that provision is no longer required.

The Chairperson: The Department's proposed amendment to clause 26(1) would mean that a new third sub-paragraph would be included at the end:

"(iii) the requirements of those attending Irish speaking schools (within the meaning of Article 3(2) of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 2006) who are taught in Irish".

Are there any comments from Members?

Mr Lunn: Where is that amendment going to be inserted?

The Chairperson: Clause 26(2)(b) will be removed, and at the end of clause 26(1) a third subparagraph will be added, which will simply read:

“(iii) the requirements of those attending Irish speaking schools (within the meaning of Article 3(2) of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 2006) who are taught in Irish”.

Do members have any other comments?

Mr O'Dowd: Will we be returning to that issue?

Mrs M Bradley: I am sure that Dominic Bradley will want to comment on it as well.

The Chairperson: Yes; I am sure that he probably will. Indeed, I also express a difficulty as a member rather than as the Chairperson. I would not approve the amendment at this stage.

Mr B McCrea: Can you clarify the process that we are going through? We are having a run-through to ascertain whether members have any general comments that the Department can consider. Are we then going to come back and look at things in more detail?

The Chairperson: Yes; we will have to consider each individual amendment.

The Committee Clerk: At the end of the day, the Committee has to decide whether the clause should stand as read in the Bill or whether the clause should be amended. That consideration includes looking at the Bill plus the now 34 departmental amendments and, indeed, maybe a few more that are still to be proposed. The Committee will have to decide whether it is content with the Bill plus the departmental amendments or whether it wants to amend any of the clauses. We will look at the schedules in the same way. Today's process is one of consideration so that we can tease out any final questions that can be put to the Department today or put formally to the Department later, as was done yesterday. In the next week, and certainly in the following week, the Committee will have to make a final decision on each clause.

The Chairperson: Are members content with the clause as it stands, or do they support the proposed amendment? I am certainly not content with the amendment.

Mr O'Dowd: Having listened to the Committee Clerk's advice, we must take a view on the amendment today. We support amending the clause as proposed by the Department.

Mr B McCrea: Having just received the proposed amendment, we will need to consider our position, but our overriding concern is that a particular sector must not be treated differently to any other sector. We will have to look at it and see what we come up with.

Mr O'Dowd: If members need more time to consider the amendment, I am happy to withdraw my proposal until they have had a chance to look at it. We can revisit it.

Mrs M Bradley: That allows Dominic to make his comments.

The Chairperson: I am happy to accept that.

We move to clause 27. Some members have perhaps not brought their black folders, which include a copy of all the amendments that were sent to us by the Department.

The Committee Clerk: The Department provided us with a useful table last Friday. It shows the rationale for the amendments and the terms of the amendments.

Mr B McCrea: Which black folder?

The Chairperson: It is in yesterday's folder, and it is included under the heading 'Matters arising'. Members, it gets difficult with all these pieces of paper; we will try to keep it as simple as possible.

Clause 27 is entitled 'Functions of the Department in relation to accreditation of certain external qualifications'. It requires the Department to develop and publish accreditation criteria for external qualifications and accredit those qualifications where they meet those criteria. The Department may obtain advice from the ESA or any UK body exercising accreditation functions and shall seek to ensure that standards of qualifications accredited by it are recognised as equivalent to standards of qualifications accredited by other UK bodies.

We have no stakeholder comments on clause 27. Paragraph 172 of the draft report relates to clause 27, and it contains the rationale for the Department's amendment to the clause to provide for a joint working power. At present, CCEA works jointly with regulators in England and Wales on a number of regulatory issues. However, when CCEA is abolished and the Department assumes its responsibilities, the Department's legal advice indicates that a specific joint working power for the Department will be necessary.

The wording of the Department's proposed amendment was received by the Committee on 4 September 2009. It would insert new subsections (5)(a) and (5)(b) at clause 27. It is proposed that clause 27(5)(a) and 27(5)(b) will read:

“(5A) The Department may —

(a) co-operate or work jointly with another body exercising functions in relation to the accreditation of qualifications (whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere);

(b) provide information relating to the accreditation of qualifications to such a body.

(5B) Nothing in subsection (5A) —

(a) affects any power that exists apart from that subsection; or

(b) authorises the disclosure of information in contravention of any provision made by or under any statutory provision which prevents disclosure of the information.”

That is ensuring that the ESA has the power that currently exists within CCEA.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct. It underlines the point that was made earlier about a potential conflict of interest. It is worth drawing members’ attention to the fact that it is the Department that accredits the qualifications. CCEA does the heavy lifting and provides us with the advice, but the formal function is with the Department.

Mr B McCrea: Clause 27(5) as it stands in the Bill contains the wording:

“exercising similar functions elsewhere in the United Kingdom”.

The amendment proposes that that be changed to “the United Kingdom or elsewhere”. That is the substance of the change that has been brought in.

Mr C Stewart: You are correct in that the addition of the new subsection will not change what happens on the ground; it is merely to put absolutely beyond doubt its legality. You are right; the clause has been drafted in a way to ensure that that joint working is possible with the corresponding authorities across all the jurisdictions in the United Kingdom and outside it.

Mr B McCrea: Does clause 28 deal with equivalent qualifications or has that more to do with DEL’s role?

Mr C Stewart: Both Departments will have similar functions, and in exercising their functions, they rely on the advice that they receive from CCEA at present and that they will receive from the ESA in due course — or, in DEL’s case, from the Office of the Qualifications and Examinations Regulator, which is known as Ofqual.

Mr B McCrea: There is an issue over equivalent qualifications from the South and from other European countries. Does the Department of Education intend to take the lead in introducing equivalent qualifications throughout the island of Ireland? That is certainly a cause of concern for us, and I am not sure whether I am for or against that.

Mr C Stewart: I cannot answer that in detail, Basil. I shall have to consult colleagues on the curriculum side. If I were to answer that, I would be getting into areas of policy with which I am not familiar. The intention of the clause is to put beyond doubt the power of the ESA to work jointly with the equivalent bodies in the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom, the Republic of Ireland, and, indeed, beyond if necessary.

Mr B McCrea: I note that that is what the clause is for, and we must reflect on how it is properly constructed.

Mr Lunn: Chris has just answered the point that the clause is intended purely to allow the Department to work jointly with other authorities. If the intention is to standardise the quality — if that is the right word — of our qualifications with those from other parts of the world, whether that is the Republic or anywhere else, surely that is a good thing. That would be a move from consulting to working jointly in that area.

Mr C Stewart: I may not have understood Basil’s question correctly, but I think that he was drawing a distinction between ensuring comparability of standards between qualifications and moving to joint qualifications. I am not qualified to comment on joint qualifications.

Mr Lunn: I do not see anything to indicate that joint qualifications will be introduced. It refers only to our qualifications and, as far as possible, standardising them so that those qualifications mean as much in the outside world as those in the Republic, the UK or Finland.

Mr C Stewart: Neither the clause nor the amendment contains anything specific on joint qualifications. I think that Basil was asking whether the purpose of the clause was to facilitate such a policy change. I cannot comment on such a potential policy change; I simply do not work in that area.

Mr Lunn: Are you being unduly suspicious, Basil?

Mr B McCrea: I only asked the question.

The Chairperson: Can we get clarification from the Department on that point?

Mr C Stewart: Yes, certainly.

Mr O’Dowd: It will be up to the relevant Government or Department to decide whether to accredit qualifications. We could not say to the Dublin Government, the Scottish Government, the Welsh Government or the French Government that they have to accept our qualifications; only they have the power to accept them. In case there are suspicious minds that see a conspiracy theory, the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) can also deal with joint qualifications. The clause is concerned with ensuring that the structures under which the Department of Education works are capable of being scrutinised by the Committee for Education and the Assembly.

The Chairperson: In fairness, the concern is that the new organisation will meet Monday to Friday from 9.00 am to 5.00 pm all year, as opposed to the NSMC, which meets only once a quarter. The issue is over what may or may not go on, and I question why the new subsection is necessary. Clause 27(4) currently states:

“The Department may obtain advice on the exercise of its powers under this section from ESA or any body exercising functions in the United Kingdom in relation to the accreditation of qualifications.”

Therefore, not much is being changed.

Mr C Stewart: We do not propose a huge change to clause 27. The fact that I was cautious in my answer may have resulted in unnecessarily giving rise to concern on the part of some members. I can confirm that there is nothing in the review of public administration (RPA) policy that is intended to lead to any change in the qualifications that are awarded. The purpose of the clause is merely to put beyond doubt the legality of current practice, which is that the various bodies that are responsible for those functions in the various jurisdictions already work closely together, and that will continue.

The measure was not something that we thought was necessary, but our lawyers advised us to include it for belt and braces to put the matter entirely beyond doubt. I am not aware of any intended policy change behind the measure, but as the curriculum and examinations are not matters on which I work, I will double-check with my colleagues and get back to the Committee to confirm that.

Mr Lunn: Although everything that Chris said was relevant, his most relevant comment concerned the solicitor's advice. We are not looking at an issue about which the Minister has a bee in her bonnet; we are looking at the solicitor's advice.

Mr C Stewart: On this occasion, the bee was in the lawyer's bonnet.

Mr B McCrea: All I did was ask a question.

Mr Lunn: You see what happens.

Mr B McCrea: I will not make that mistake again.

There is no reason why the Department should not look at positive engagement. As I said, I was not sure whether I was for or against the matter.

Mr Lunn: Now you are convinced that you are in favour of it.

Mr B McCrea: Like you, I am in a benign mood today, so all sorts of things could happen. The Committee will receive a response and discuss it, and I am happy with that.

Mr Lunn: Although we are on only our third clause, we have already had two minor divisions along the lines of two political views that are represented in the Assembly. Sooner or later, we will have to come to a decision and exhibit a wee bit more trust and a little less suspicion. I wish that that would happen now, because the few arguments so far seem to me, who is sitting in the middle without a particular axe to grind, to have been superfluous.

The Chairperson: I appreciate your comments, Trevor. However, we must ensure that all genuine concerns about the Bill are raised. If and when the Bill is passed, it will be too late to raise any concerns as it will be law. We are not dealing with a school report; we are dealing with something that will become law and which will have wide-ranging implications for the future governance of education in Northern Ireland for many years to come. I accept your point, but genuine concerns and issues must be allowed to be raised. Yes, we will have to make decisions on the Bill, and we have a few weeks in which to do that.

Mr Lunn: I fully understand the differences of opinion on the bigger issues, but some of the disagreements have been mighty trivial. I long for the time when the Committee agrees on aspects of the Bill. I am still waiting.

The Chairperson: Concerns have been raised and, having considered the clause and the proposed amendments to it, are members content? Can we ask the Department to show us the legal advice that it received?

Mr C Stewart: The Department's lawyers would be reluctant to provide that information. We can give the Committee the thrust of the legal advice and the thinking behind it, but members will find that there is very little to it.

The Committee Clerk: We received a very useful table last Friday, which details the terms of the departmental amendments. A copy of that document was sent to each Committee member, but I can get a copy for those members who do not have theirs with them.

Mr Lunn: What colour of folder was it in?

Mr B McCrea: The Committee staff will have to do a little bit to help the Chairperson and members with the paperwork, because no matter what folders I bring with me, they are always the wrong ones. Fortunately, John McCallister brings another set of folders, so between us we nearly have all of the papers.

The Chairperson: It is very difficult to manage all the papers; we have to find a logical way to work through them. It would be very useful for members to have the spreadsheet in front of them.

The Committee Clerk: If members have the spreadsheet in front of them, the Chairperson will not have to spell out the terms of each amendment, which are quite detailed. I will make six copies of the spreadsheet. As soon as we received the spreadsheet on Friday, we sent copies of it to all members.

Mrs M Bradley: Was it sent as a separate sheet?

The Chairperson: No, it was not.

Mr B McCrea: May I make a suggestion? Is there any chance that we could have it on a computer screen so that we could see the clause rather than the Chairperson having to read through everything? Is that too far advanced?

The Committee Clerk: The Assembly is moving in that direction for the presentation of paperwork.

The Chairperson: The other reason that it has to be read out is that it must be read into the record of Committee proceeding.

Mr B McCrea: I have no problem with the Chairperson reading it; I know that it must be done. Nevertheless, when it is read I just say, “OK” because I have not found the relevant piece of paper. Either someone must put the piece of paper in front of me and say that that is what we are discussing so that we can move fast, or it should be on a screen. It is only for reassurance so that members can get the point. People keep telling me that there is a really useful spreadsheet here, a really useful table there, and that in the black folder that I received yesterday there are other papers. It is difficult to keep up to speed.

Mr O’Dowd: I wonder how they do it elsewhere.

Mr B McCrea: They use computer screens to show information. Anyway, I will soldier on because I do not want to fall down.

The Chairperson: The draft report gives a clause-by-clause explanation that can be used in conjunction with the Bill.

Mr B McCrea: I have worked that one out.

Mr C Stewart: Notwithstanding the logistical difficulties, Mr O’Dowd’s drawing attention to the table is timely in relation to that point. Members will find that the wording in the table is very close to the wording of the legal advice that we received. It gives the gist of the legal advice.

Mr B McCrea: Where is that table?

The Committee Clerk: It is being photocopied. The table arrived at 5.00 pm on Friday after the folder had gone to members. It was e-mailed and put in members’ pigeonholes on Friday. However, members will receive a copy now.

The Chairperson: A technician has to look at one of the microphones so we may have to suspend.

Mr B McCrea: Are you saying that my words of wisdom are not being recorded? What a complete waste of a morning.

The Chairperson: It simply means that we will have to go back to the start again.

Mrs M Bradley: Everything that Basil said has gone down the tube.

Mr B McCrea: Absolutely, Mary. What a waste.

The Chairperson: We can continue.

We move on to clause 28, “Approval of courses leading to external qualification”, which ensures that grant-aided schools will only provide courses of study that result in a qualification that is approved by the Department. Likewise, the clause also ensures that institutions of further education will only provide courses of study that are approved by the Department for Employment and Learning. SEELB is concerned with clause 28 and stated that it appears to open up the possibility of post-primary schools offering approved post-16 courses without specific teaching approval in response to development proposals, as have been required since 2003.

Mr C Stewart: No, that is not the case.

The Chairperson: The answer to that is that it does not.

Mr B McCrea: Is there nothing in the white folder about clause 28?

The Committee Clerk: Not as yet. There were no comments, with the exception of SEELB. We will be dealing with that in due course in our draft report.

The Chairperson: Do members have any comments?

Having considered clause 28, to which no amendments have been proposed, are members content with the clause as drafted?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clause 29, “Disciplinary powers of General Teaching Council”, amends existing provision for disciplinary procedures in respect of teachers by the General Teaching Council in cases of unacceptable professional conduct or the conviction of registered teachers. There are comments about this in the draft report at paragraphs 175 to 181.

The General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland said in its submission that it was content with the new provisions and that they are sufficiently robust to allow the council to fulfil its regulatory function.

Are there any comments?

Mr Lunn: If I remember correctly, the General Teaching Council started off with major concerns about this, but it now seems to be satisfied; let us hope that everybody else will be as well.

The Chairperson: Having considered this clause and any proposed amendments at today’s meeting, are members content with clause 29 as drafted?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We will consider clauses 30 to 33, which deal with schemes of management, their content and arrangements for their preparation, submission, approval and revision, as well as the reserve power of the ESA to make such schemes. There are similarities with the schemes of employment, which you may wish to highlight in light of the differences that we discussed yesterday in regard to the schemes of employment.

Clause 30 requires every grant-aided school to have in place a scheme of management that provides for the membership and procedures of the board of governors and for the management of that school. It is the duty of the board of governors to give effect to the scheme of management. The arrangements in clause 31 mirror those for the preparation and approval of employment schemes, with the submitting authority preparing a draft scheme for submission to the ESA for approval, taking into account the ESA's guidance, including model schemes.

Clause 32 reserves to the ESA a power to make a scheme of management for a school in the absence of agreement with the submitting authority. Clause 33 permits the submitting authority to prepare a revised scheme and gives the ESA a power to direct the submitting authority to revise its scheme. These clauses are referred to in paragraphs 182 to 190 of the draft report.

Wording for a departmental amendment to clause 31(7) was received by the Committee on 4 September 2009. It changes the meaning of "submitting authority" and replaces the present 31(7)(a) and 31(7)(b) with new wording so that, as with employment schemes, the submitting authority in relation to schemes of management is the trustees of a school, where a school has trustees. In the case of a controlled school, the submitting authority is the board of governors of the school; in a voluntary or grant-maintained integrated school, it is the trustees of the school or, if the trustees so determine, the board of governors of the school.

The Association of Northern Ireland Education and Library Boards comments that the existing schemes are no longer fit for purpose but that boards of governors are being encouraged to run with them. Chris, can you clarify that point? What is the situation regarding that?

Mr C Stewart: With one or two exceptions where schools have declined to comply with the legislation, all schools have schemes of management. It is, perhaps, a sweeping statement to say that they are all no longer fit for purpose, although I am sure that that is the case for some schools. Most schools have schemes of management in place at present.

The requirement on the ESA will be to produce guidance and model schemes. It will, in due course, want to review the existing schemes of management for all schools to ensure that they are fit for purpose or that they are modernised and brought up to good practice if necessary. Unlike schemes of employment, schemes of management are, by and large, in place, and therefore it is possible to have a degree of continuity on 1 January 2010. It is not quite the same with schemes of employment.

The Chairperson: One of the issues raised by the Western Education and Library Board was that the preparation of schemes of management would place a considerable burden on boards of governors. At one stage, it was said that model schemes were being worked up by the Department. Has any of that work been done?

Mr C Stewart: That was in relation to schemes of employment. As yet, there is no development of model schemes of management, but that will need to be taken forward. I understand the concern articulated by the Western Board on behalf of boards of governors, and I will respond to it in two ways. First, when model schemes are available — of course we would involve all the interests across the sphere of education in the development of those schemes — it is perfectly possible for a school to adopt a model scheme without amendment. That would place no particular burden on any board of governors.

Stepping back from the issue, it is important to remind ourselves of the importance of schemes of management. There are 1,253 grant-aided schools, which spend £1.8 billion of public money, and educate 400,000 children. The provisions state that, in discharging those functions, there must be rules that must be adhered to. The Department believes that that is important. It will impose some workload on boards of governors, but the view of the Department is that it is inescapable.

The Chairperson: Can you recall a case where a school included an element of a scheme of management that was not approved by the Department?

Mr C Stewart: Not to my knowledge, but I would have to double-check with colleagues to give you an absolute assurance. By and large, the existing provisions have not called for much intervention on the part of the Department.

Mr B McCrea: It will be perceived as an attempt to control more independently minded boards of governors.

Mr C Stewart: It is difficult to counter that perception if there are those who are determined to adopt it. However, the crux of the provisions is to place an obligation on a public institution to have rules and to stick to them.

Mr B McCrea: Yes, but in certain areas — the voluntary grammar schools, for example, feel that they are doing a good job — there is an issue. It would be helpful to see what the model rules will look like. We could then provide much more reassurance to people that they are in fact common-sense proposals.

Mr C Stewart: That is a fair point. If there are those in schools who feel — justifiably — that they have been doing a very good job for a long time and that their governance arrangements constitute best practice, we would encourage them to assist the Department in the development of the model schemes.

Mr B McCrea: That is a useful way of moving forward. It would be useful if people felt that, rather than arrangements being imposed upon them, — albeit benignly — they were involved in the development of the arrangements and could establish what room for manoeuvre there was. Although I agree that there is a need for codified standards, it would be useful for us in deliberating the Bill if we knew what those were and what provision there would be for people to amend or become part of the development of those standards.

Mr C Stewart: That is a fair point, and the Department wants to encourage that. The provisions are not an attempt to control or to suggest that one size fits all; there is considerable room for manoeuvre. The Department accepts that boards of governors and trustees of schools are best placed to know what governance arrangements work best for them. If they have a model that works well for them and which meets the Department's requirements for sound governance arrangements, there is no reason why those arrangements cannot be rapidly approved, or, indeed, become a model scheme for adaption by other schools.

Mrs M Bradley: Boards of governors seem to be scrupulous in doing their job. They are volunteers, and we must be careful not to cause any problem for them, because many teachers and principals greatly depend on their boards of governors. The board of governors is the heart of a school, and we must be careful with that.

Mr O'Dowd: I agree that boards of governors must be involved in the development of management schemes. The question seems to be whether there is a need, in principle, for such schemes. No argument that holds water can be made against the need for having schemes of management.

This morning, we saw the PAC report, and in my time on the PAC we produced a governance report. There is an onus on all Departments to ensure that arm's-length bodies — in this case one could consider boards of governors as arm's-length bodies — that spend public funds must have written contracts, in this case management schemes, so that there is proper governance between those bodies and the relevant Department. Things must be properly managed, and, no doubt, in 99.9% of cases they are. However, if something goes wrong, one must be able to go back to the agreement to determine whether procedures were followed or whether they were robust enough and must be changed or managed in a certain way. Consequently, management schemes are important. Indeed, they must be developed in conjunction with boards of governors, but this amendment is designed to ensure that they are in place.

Mr C Stewart: That is a valid point, and, further to what Mary said, we are cognisant of the fact that boards of governors are taking on significant responsibilities in a voluntary capacity. Governors and potential governors tell us that they want training, support, advice and, above all, clarity with respect to what they are responsible for and how they are expected to carry out their duties. That is what the scheme of management will provide: a clear framework within which governors will be able to operate.

Mr B McCrea: We all agree with everything you said; however, we are attempting to work out when misperceptions might arise or, in exceptional cases, when we might have to do something. People are concerned that a one-size-fits-all approach, in which a model that is adopted is not theirs, will cause problems. All that we are trying to point out, as John rightly said, is that it is to governors' advantage to have model rules set down and to have our help available. It would be to their disadvantage to implement a draconian system with which they are unhappy. As I said, we are trying to identify problems that are likely to arise in order to find some way to reassure governors.

I outlined my position at the start: given the lack of trust, I want everything to be stipulated in the Bill. Trevor asked why I could not just take things on trust. Can we find a middle way? The governance of governors is a serious matter that is strategic to everything that we are attempting to do, so we must address it. We have raised our concerns, and we would like the Department's assistance to identify some way to deal with them.

Mrs M Bradley: Some boards of governors have said that they want to continue doing the job; however, if concerns or worries arise, they might walk away. I hope that I am not offending anyone, but boards of governors include excellent people who know exactly how the work is done. They want to continue doing the same work, so we must not introduce too many changes that will make them feel that they were not doing the job right in the past. Some of them may walk away, and schools do not need that.

Mr C Stewart: I agree with you entirely, and we wish to reassure governors on that point and on the points that Basil made. Indeed, management schemes are not a new requirement, and it is not implying that boards of governors have been somehow deficient in how they have led schools. Schemes of management have been a requirement in legislation since 1998; we are simply bringing those provisions up to date. We agree entirely with your sentiments about the need to support and not discourage potential governors.

With respect to Basil's point about providing assistance to identify a middle way, I agree entirely, and we will make every effort to do so.

We have framed the legislation in that way because we recognise the differing views from different schools and different boards of governors; some say that their job is difficult enough and that they do not want to write the governance rules; they want a sensible model that they can adopt and put into practice. Equally, other boards of governors do not want to be controlled and do not support a one-size-fits-all approach. They say that they have operated well for 350 years and that they do not have to prove their competence. They want us to approve their governance arrangements and allow them to get on with the job.

The legislation is flexible enough to cope with both groups and all shades of opinion in between. If a school wants to contribute to the development of a model scheme or merely adopt the model scheme, it can do so. If a school is not interested in the model scheme and feels that it has a perfectly acceptable and proven model of governance, it can submit that view to the ESA, which should approve the scheme rapidly.

Mr Lunn: Schemes of management have been a requirement in legislation since 1989, according to the Department.

Mr C Stewart: I beg your pardon; I stand corrected.

Mr Lunn: That is 20 years instead of 11.

Mr C Stewart: Time flies when reading such information.

Mr Lunn: Again, I wonder what all this is about. The Association for Quality Education's (AQE) objection is probably the most significant, because that body makes the running on many issues at the moment. However, I do not get it. If schools have theoretically had to provide a scheme of management for the past 20 years — whether or not they have — the legislation appears only to formalise the situation and ask schools to submit the information to the ESA rather than to the Department.

Mr C Stewart: Sometimes the AQE will not take yes for an answer. [Laughter.]

Mr Lunn: I know; I am not getting at the AQE. I sympathise with Mary's comment about the fragile nature of governors and their commitment to schools. I understand that sentiment, because governors, along with everybody else, must be wondering what is going on. It is an easy job to walk away from unless the individual is highly committed, which most governors are. Therefore, I do not want to impose more work or stress on governors. However, the legislation does not do that.

Mr C Stewart: That is an important point. The thrust —

Mr Lunn: The legislation should formalise the situation for governors and offer ease rather than stress. They will know exactly where they stand, because they will have a formal scheme, which they should have had in the first place.

Mr C Stewart: That is the intention of the legislation. It is not intended as a control mechanism or a mechanism by which the ESA will dictate to boards of governors. It will give boards of governors a clear framework in which to discharge their responsibility to lead and manage schools. That is an important role. The thrust of many RPA proposals is not, as some people characterise it, command and control. That is why the Department will place duties on the ESA to provide training and support for governors and professional staff in schools, because they will lead and deliver. The ESA's job is to support, not to control or regulate.

Mr B McCrea: People do not understand the benign nature of the Department's interest. A board of governors might have operated successfully for some time and might think that the Department will use the legislation to dictate a model scheme for the future regardless of the scheme that has operated in the past. That is why they are concerned. They need reassurance; that is the AQE's view. We must explain the Department's benign interest in order to make progress.

The Chairperson: There are three elements. If the situation is the same as in the past, why does clause 31(4) state that the:

“submitting authority of a school shall also submit to ESA such information as ESA may require concerning the extent (if any)”.

The second part of that quotation is critical. The ESA will be given the power to require schools to include certain matters in their scheme of management.

The Minister's initial position was that employment schemes should be fit for purpose. However, genuine concerns raised by stakeholders forced the Minister to amend that provision. We now have regulation for employment schemes. Yesterday, the Committee discussed the clarity and certainty of and confidence in employment schemes; we want to instil those three elements in boards of governors. We could, surely, do that through regulation. Moreover, if schemes of management are so important, why in September 2009, three months before the establishment of the ESA, does the Department not have the schemes in place?

If a school wanted to treat the Department or the ESA as a friendly colleague, explained that it did not want to be burdensome and asked for a scheme of management, the ESA would have to reply by saying that it did not have one, even though there is a requirement in legislation for that to be in existence.

Mr C Stewart: I will endeavour to reassure you on all three points. You asked why there are no model schemes when the operative date is so close, but there are model schemes. Schemes are in existence in the vast majority of schools. Standard schemes have been adopted in the Catholic maintained sector for Catholic maintained schools, and in the controlled sector for controlled schools. I have no doubt that those schemes could be improved, and, in due course, the Department expects the ESA to produce new and better models. If a board of governors asks the existing authorities or the Department for help or a model scheme, we can provide that.

You asked why the Department does not follow the same route used for employment schemes and regulate the content of schemes of management. The driver for that change, and the concern that was expressed by stakeholders, does not arise. The purpose of a scheme of employment is to apportion functions between the ESA and a board of governors to decide who does what in the employment arrangements.

Some stakeholders were concerned that the ESA would not be benign in that matter; that it would have too much power and too many functions and encroach upon the proper role of boards of governors. That was never the Department's intention, and it is not the ESA's intention. However, in recognition of those concerns, the Minister proposes regulations that will govern what can be included in an employment scheme, and will put absolutely beyond doubt the ability of the ESA to gather too much power unto itself, even if it wanted to.

That issue does not arise for schemes of management, because they do not apportion functions between the ESA and boards of governors: all the functions are for boards of governors. A scheme of management is simply a set of rules under which a board of governors will operate. The ESA will have no role in the management of any school, even controlled schools. One key change that will be made in the second review of public administration (RPA) Bill will make boards of governors the managing authorities for those schools, not the ESA. The ESA will have no role in the operation of any scheme of management; therefore the Department does not see the same need to regulate as it does for schemes of employment.

The Committee is concerned about the clause that allows the ESA to ask for information in particular circumstances. The reason that I asked for that particular provision to be included is much simpler than you fear. Stakeholders asked us to minimise the bureaucracy. They told the Department that they did not want to submit a draft scheme to the ESA only to find that it takes the ESA 18 months to approve or suggest further work be done on that scheme. Stakeholders were very concerned that we would introduce a bureaucratic process that could not be operated by the ESA.

The intention behind the clause is to allow a school to propose a scheme of management, which is one of the model schemes that the ESA has produced and which should therefore be approved instantly.

Equally, a school might present a draft scheme of which the first 19 out of 20 paragraphs are the same as those in the model scheme, with the twentieth paragraph slightly tailored because it wants a slightly different approach. That would allow the ESA not to worry about the first 19 paragraphs because they are standard, and it could look quickly at paragraph 20 and clear the scheme. The purpose behind that is not to impose a draconian information-gathering regime on a board of governors but to provide a quick and easy route for the approval of schemes so that we can cut down on bureaucracy. Mary stressed the importance of that very point.

Mrs M Bradley: Boards of governors are totally confused by the way in which the education system is going. They express that view all the time at governors' meetings. Governors have served schools well for years, and it is very important for them to look after their schools. We must encourage them.

Many governors are tired and are getting on in years, and they say that they could not cope with the new system. That is simply because no one has ever addressed them or told them what will happen. That has happened as a result of neglect by the Department. Volunteers give a hell of a lot of hours, and a hell of a lot of work goes into those hours. Someone must at least recognise the work of governors and talk to them to try to save good people from walking away.

Mr C Stewart: That is a very valid criticism. I shall not attempt to defend the Department if that is the way that governors feel. The message for the Department and the existing organisations that work closely with the governors — the education and library boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) — is that they must recognise their responsibilities to work with the boards of governors to prepare them for the change and to ensure that they are provided with accurate information about the effect of the provisions and are not unnecessarily or unduly concerned by the one or two wilder speculations from some stakeholders.

Mrs M Bradley: Chris, although you are doing a good job trying to convince the Committee about that —

Mr C Stewart: Is that recorded in Hansard, Chairman?

Mrs M Bradley: Someone from the boards must go out and convince the governors to stay where they are.

Mr C Stewart: That is very important.

The Chairperson: Is it appropriate for the ESA to become the employer of all grant-aided schools before schemes of management are in place?

Mr C Stewart: Schemes of management will be in place. If we do nothing at all, there will be schemes of management in the vast majority of schools on 1 January 2010.

The Chairperson: The existing ones?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. It is important that new schemes of employment are in place by that date, because those do not currently exist.

Mr B McCrea: Some people looked at the clauses negatively, but you said that there is plenty of flexibility and that if a scheme is pretty close, that is OK. Is there a set of guiding principles on which the ESA will base its judgement? As John mentioned some time ago, certain guiding principles are needed for corporate governance. Provided that those are met, it should be OK. People are worried that the ESA may, for other reasons, use those powers to take control. There could be a set of parameters within which the ESA must work. The ESA might say that annual accounts must be produced. Would it also say what those accounts must look like? How far could it specify? What are the terms of reference that the ESA will use in coming to its determinations?

The Chairperson: Your question is: what are the guidelines? We have not seen them. We are taking it on trust, and that is the problem. On the issue of employment, we heard stakeholders tell the Committee that they did not trust what the Department was doing. Steps were taken, and we await the response from those stakeholders. I assume that they will be reasonably content with the proposed amendments.

However, schools and stakeholders have raised the concern that they do not know what the guidance on the schemes of management or the model scheme will be. Perhaps that is something that the Assembly and the Committee need to see.

Mr C Stewart: I understand that point, and I understand the perceptions that some stakeholders have. That is why we said to stakeholders that they should not wait for us to impose our wisdom, or lack of it, on them from on high. They are the people who run schools on a day-to-day basis, and they know what works best, so we asked them to work with us to develop the models.

Basil asked who guards the guards, or who sets the rules. A hierarchy of rules comes from the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) and the Audit Office through the guidance that they produce on how public authorities are to be run and governed and how accountability is to be operated for public finance. We are all obliged to stick to those rules.

When it comes to our stewardship of the ESA, we will be looking to ensure that it does not impose unnecessary bureaucracy on schools. Therefore, if schools have a form of annual report or a set of accounts that conform to a standard model, we would not expect the ESA to make those schools jump through hoops simply because the ESA would prefer a different form of table or a slightly different approach to an annual report. That is not in anybody's interests. It would take up scarce resources and scarce time and take people away from the important job of leading their schools. That is certainly not something that we would tolerate.

Mr B McCrea: The big problem is what happens if you get promoted?

Mr C Stewart: There is little danger of that.
[Laughter.]

Mr B McCrea: Judging by the way that things are going today, you are doing really well. You sit here, with your silken Civil Service skills, and say that everything is rosy and that everything will be fine.

Mr C Stewart: I am just checking that Hansard got all that. [Laughter.]

Mr B McCrea: For the benefit of Hansard, you are very good at your job. However, I am trying to make a point. I am not doing so to be difficult; it is a new term and a new start and we are trying to engage. When we look at legislation, we have to point out our issues and suggest ways in which we think that those issues could be fixed. You are saying that you are not legislative counsel and that you do not understand the way that things are going down. However, I wonder whether there is not a middle way that provides basic guidelines — guidelines to which we would be adhering anyway. That way, people can agree that what we are doing is reasonable. If we include certain accountability measures, people can check those and see that what is happening is correct. It would create a locus for what the ESA will be looking for.

Everything that you said was absolutely right. If someone comes along with a better idea, we can have a discussion on that and move forward. However, looking at the Bill, it is the same as any contract that I have ever seen. Many people would think: "I'm not signing that." For example, clause 33(1) states that:

"The submitting authority of a grant-aided school—

(a) shall if ESA so directs or revised guidance issued under section 31(3) so requires".

The language, which I understand to be legislative counsel's type of language, is not particularly encouraging to people who think that they are running their schools.

Mr C Stewart: That is a fair point, and I thank you for your earlier kind words. I have to confess to the Committee that they contrast with the description of me that I heard at the Presbyterian General Assembly. There, I was described as a Marxist brute. [Laughter.]

Mr B McCrea: They may have access to a higher truth than I do.

Mr C Stewart: I will leave members to decide which description is the more apt.

I understand the point that you are making. Anyone who is looking for a minimalist degree of control, or as hands-off a relationship as possible with the ESA, is not likely to find encouragement in the standard forms of words that are used in legislation. We will have to work hard to get the trust that, as you quite rightly said, needs to characterise the relationship. One of the things that I would do is tell schools — particularly the voluntary grammar schools, which have very significant concerns about this and which would rather not be part of the arrangements if it were at all possible — that this is the policy of the Minister and the Government of the day, but that we want to make the arrangements work as best we can for them.

I would invite them to tell us what their minimalist model for a scheme of management would be — the simplest, most straightforward set of governance rules that, left to their own devices, they would adopt for themselves and that they would see as being necessary for the smooth running of their schools. That seems to me to be a good starting point for a model scheme for schools that want the maximum independence from the ESA. The Department would then tell the ESA that if it wants anything more than that in a scheme of management it would have to produce a pretty convincing argument, because those who run schools tell us that that is enough.

The Chairperson: In fairness, Chris, it was not just the voluntary grammar schools that raised that concern. The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) said:

“These schemes take on added significance when it is widely acknowledged that the responsibilities of Boards of Governors from 1st January 2010 will change fundamentally, yet it is the understanding of the NEELB that Boards of Governors will be encouraged to operate under existing schemes of management which in the view of this Board are ‘no longer fit for purpose’. In the view of the NEELB it is essential that model schemes are available to all schools with effect from the introduction of ESA.”

However, we do not have them.

Mr C Stewart: If the representatives of the NEELB were here I would ask them why the managing authority for controlled schools is operating schemes of management that, by the board’s own judgement, are no longer fit for purpose. That is a question that only the NEELB can answer. I recognise their concerns, and they are entitled to express their views, but it must also be recognised that the education and library boards have opposed this part of the Minister’s policy. They do not agree with the policy of giving schools autonomy to run their day-to-day affairs. They would prefer that, within the RPA, we had adopted a model of controlled schools administration, and they have put forward their arguments for that. However, that is not the Minister’s policy. The Minister’s policy, recognising the views that have been put by other stakeholders, is that schools are most successful when they have the opportunity to run their own affairs on a day-to-day basis without undue interference from education authorities. That is the thrust behind those proposals and right through the RPA.

The Chairperson: Trevor, do you have any comments?

Mr Lunn: I am OK, Chairperson. Let us just say that earlier comments might apply again, but I will not delay proceedings.

Mr O’Dowd: I concur with what Chris said about the NEELB’s comments about schemes of management. If that board is admitting that its schemes of management are not fit for purpose, the Education Committee should write to it asking what it has done to ensure that those schemes of management are brought up to standard. In that instance, its governance arrangements are obviously inadequate. Some of the comments by the education and library boards about the Education Bill have been designed to be unhelpful; I am being as moderate as I can be about some of those comments. The education and library boards have been charged with the governance of the education system for a long time. Instead of reflecting their experience to us, they have, until redundancies come into effect at least, adopted an oppositional stance.

I say “fair play” to anyone who steps forward to take a place on a board of governors. I served on a board of governors for some time, and I was shocked by the amount of work involved and the commitment it took to run the school. However, people do step forward and volunteer to do the job. People who serve on those boards are there not only to look after the pupils’ education, but to look after a vast amount of public funds. I think Chris mentioned a figure of £1·8 billion — £1·8 billion of public funds that boards of governors are tasked with spending. As a scrutiny Committee of the Assembly, we must put in place the most rigid of governance schemes to ensure that that money is used properly and that the boards of governors look after pupils’ education. That is our task; we must ensure that that happens.

Should we introduce legislation that makes it impossible for boards of governors to operate? Of course not. Should we encourage and help boards of governors? Yes, we should. The development of those schemes of management must be achieved in conjunction with the boards of governors. If the model schemes suit some boards of governors, so be it. If other boards of governors believe that they can tweak those model schemes, that should be encouraged. The bottom line is that if a board of governors steps forward and refuses to implement a scheme, or if the scheme is inadequate, then that board of governors must be challenged. They are there to educate children and they are tasked with using £1·8 billion of public funds effectively. The Education Committee needs to scrutinise that.

The Chairperson: We could get into that debate, but it is not the time or the place. Various stakeholders have commented on the legislation. Various elements of the education world, not just voluntary grammar schools or the Governing Bodies Association (GBA), have made very critical comments. The Minister has commented on certain education sectors, describing them as an unhelpful minority. If we get into that, we will be here all day.

Mr O'Dowd: The GBA and other bodies are perfectly entitled to criticise and comment, but a governance body that says that its schemes of management are not up to scratch needs to be challenged. An education board is telling us that its schemes of management are not up to scratch. What has that board done about it? If the board has not done anything, there is a serious question mark hanging over it.

The Chairperson: Chris, do you have any other comments?

Mr C Stewart: We have gone over the ground fairly extensively.

The Chairperson: Having considered clauses 30 to 33 and the proposed amendments, are members content with them as drafted? I register the fact that I still have concerns.

Mr O'Dowd: We agree with the amendments, but if people want to return to them, so be it.

Mr Lunn: I take it that this is not a majority decision and that if any member has a concern, they can register it.

The Chairperson: Yes.

Clause 34 places a duty on the board of governors of a grant-aided school to promote high standards of educational attainment by pupils of the school, and places a duty on the board of governors to co-operate with the ESA regarding actions that the ESA has undertaken to promote the achievement of high standards of educational attainment.

Clause 35 states that the board of governors shall include community governors, and defines them as:

“persons living or working in the local community”.

Clause 36 allows part-time assistant teachers to be eligible for election to a board of governors.

Paragraphs 191 to 210 of the draft Committee report outline the issues that were raised in relation to those clauses. In its submission, C na G sought a legal requirement that governors of Irish-medium schools should be committed to the continuing viability of the school as an Irish-medium school, mirroring the legislative requirement for integrated schools. The Minister seemed to agree with C na G in correspondence that the Committee has seen.

Chris, do you have any other information on that?

Mr C Stewart: The Minister is still considering the need for the amendment suggested by C na G, along with two others, which are not related to these clauses: one from Sir Reg Empey, and one from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC), which we will come to in due course. The Minister has not yet come to a decision on those three amendments.

The Chairperson: Time is of the essence.

Mr C Stewart: We appreciate that.

The Chairperson: The Bill will allow for part-time teachers to become governors. How will that work in practice? That has not been the case to date.

Mr C Stewart: It has not been the case to date, and we think that that is a weakness and inequality in the current legislation, which is the reason for the proposal. It would operate in exactly the same way as it would for other members of staff. Part-time teachers will be eligible for nomination and election to staff governor.

The Chairperson: Could a situation arise whereby a part-time teacher becomes a member of one school's board of governors while also teaching at another school? Is there an issue of conflict of interest around intake and enrolment of pupils?

Mr C Stewart: I recognise the point that you are making, but we do not see schools operating in that way. Increasingly, it needs to be the case that schools that serve a particular community must recognise that they are part of a system and that they should work in co-operation and not in competition. That is particularly true for post-primary schools, which clearly need to co-operate in order to deliver the curriculum entitlement to the communities that they serve. That would lessen the scope, if any, for conflict of interest in that type of situation.

Miss McIlveen: Why were they excluded in the first instance? Was there a rationale for it?

Mr C Stewart: I do not know; I could speculate, which may be unhelpful. Perhaps it was thought at the time — and we are going back quite some time as regards the legislation — that only those working in a full-time capacity would be able to represent the views of the body of staff in the school. The thinking has moved on quite considerably from those days.

Miss McIlveen: I suppose that there are now full-time teachers who may be working reduced hours or who may have moved to part-time teaching.

Mr C Stewart: I think that that is right, and the incidence of part-time working is probably much higher than it would have been when the legislation was drafted originally.

Mr Lunn: I would like clarification around an amendment to the previous Orders. Does that mean that assistant teachers always could be members of the board of governors?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. If I recall the definition correctly, an assistant teacher means anybody other than the principal and vice-principal.

Mr Lunn: So the provision is just being extended to include part-time teachers.

The Chairperson: An issue has been raised around clause 35, which mentions community governors. Some people have argued that it is very prescriptive to define a community governor as someone who lives and works in the local community. There is no definition of what the local community is, because the local community for one school will be completely different to the local community for another school. Is the local community defined by geography, by religion or by social and economic boundaries? We run the risk of running into another legal minefield as regards how we define a person who lives and works in the local community.

Mr C Stewart: We will do our best to keep the lawyers out of it. We recognise the concerns of stakeholders, but trying to adopt a tighter definition than the one we have might be unhelpful. It would run the risk of imposing a one-size solution that would certainly not fit all. We would interpret that definition as flexibly as necessary, with the determining factor being that we want to get the best people possible to serve on the boards of governors and to lead the schools. A working interpretation would be that the local community is the community served by the school. That, of course, will vary from school to school and from sector to sector.

Some of the larger post-primary schools pointed out that they have very large catchment areas; in some cases, pupils travel over half the country to attend the school. Therefore, the communities served by those schools cover large geographical areas. I do not think that we would use that definition, or permit the ESA to use that definition, to stand in the way of any perfectly reasonable appointment of a community governor to a school — someone with the skills and competencies, the dedication and commitment to give up their time to play a leading role in a school. If there are people who are prepared to do that, we would welcome them with open arms. We would not want to use any obstructive definition to try to keep them out of a school.

The Chairperson: Members have considered the clauses and any proposed amendments. Are members content with how they stand in the Bill?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: I still have a concern around the issue of community governors.

Clauses 37 to 42 deal with inspections on behalf of the Department; powers of inspectors; reports and action plans; inspections of library premises; inspections on behalf of DEL; and assessors and lay persons. I will not read aloud all the issues around clause 37, but the stakeholders' comments give an overview. Members should refer to paragraphs 212 and 213 of the draft Committee report.

I note the Department's response to the Belfast Education and Library Board's comment on the requirement in clause 37(1) that schools be open at all reasonable times to inspection. The Department has clarified that the concept is well established in law and has explained that the Department would inspect schools when teaching, learning and ancillary activities are going on.

The Department proposed an amendment to clause 37 as set out in the Minister's letter of 17 June. It read:

"Clause 37(5) places a duty on inspectors to monitor, inspect and report on the nature, scope and effect of advisory and support services provided or secured by ESA under Clause 13 of the Bill. An amendment is proposed to include references to Clauses 24 (examinations and assessments), 25 (other functions of ESA in relation to the curriculum, examinations and assessments), and Clause 13 (advisory and support services) in order to bring these functions within the inspection regime."

On 4 September, the Committee received the specific wording for the departmental amendment. It added at the end of clause 37(5) the additional words:

"and on the discharge by ESA of its functions under sections 24 and 25 (except section 25(1)(b))."

The Department states that that amendment extends the remit of the Education and Training Inspectorate to allow the inspection of curriculum and qualifications.

Mr C Stewart: On that first point, I reiterate the reassurance that we offered to the Committee in response to the Belfast Education and Library Board's point. I am not an education inspector, but I was an inspector in a previous career, and I can assure you that in almost every instance where there is legislation that involves inspectorate functions engaging with a business or an authority, the standard formulation is that a business should be open at all reasonable times; in other words, when business is being carried out. However, it certainly does not allow the Education and Training Inspectorate to knock the door of a school at midnight and require admittance.

I now turn to the scope of the clause and the amendment. In the clause as originally drafted, we proposed powers for the inspectorate to inspect, on behalf of the Department, some of the ESA's functions. The Minister accepted the chief inspector's advice that in order to produce a more rounded picture of what the ESA does and of its effectiveness, the inspectorate ought to have the right to use its formal powers to inspect a broader range of the ESA's functions, particularly around the issues of curriculum, curriculum support and examinations. Those are the front-line support functions that the ESA needs to provide for boards of governors and staff so that they can do their jobs. Therefore, it is important that the Department ensures that the ESA is doing its job effectively in providing those functions; hence, the proposed amendment to broaden the scope of the inspection powers.

The little exception to the amendment is the function of the ESA in providing advice to the Department. That simply reflects the reality that the provision of advice is not something that one can really inspect. The ESA will provide advice, and we will either accept it or not accept it. If we think that the ESA's advice is not very good, we will soon say so. However, advice is not really something that is amenable to inspection.

The Chairperson: In response to the concern of the Association of Northern Ireland Education and Library Boards about the right of inspectors to access information held by a school under clause 38, the Department has confirmed that the powers are similar to those in other jurisdictions and do not give the right to access data that would be prohibited under statute, such as the Data Protection Act 1998.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct. We have confirmed that point. My colleagues in the inspectorate sought clarification about access to information. On receipt of further legal advice, we clarified that the legislation does not give anybody the power to contravene the Data Protection Act 1998.

The Chairperson: The Ulster Teachers' Union is concerned about who else could access reports.

Mr C Stewart: The legislation governs that matter and sets out the rules on how the inspectorate must deal with the reports. The Data Protection Act 1998 comes into play again. People who have access to information have that access for a particular purpose. Using the information for a different purpose contravenes the Act.

The Chairperson: Clause 39(3) imposes an obligation on boards of governors, as the responsible authority, to prepare an action plan in response to an inspection report. One of the education and library boards commented that the Bill places greater responsibility for educational standards on boards of governors. Furthermore, it mentioned the need for greater rigour in the inspection process and for a follow-up report with clear outcomes that will allow those charged with management responsibility at local level to discharge their duties. The Department said that it would consider the North Eastern Education and Library Board's comments. Has the inspectorate considered that matter?

Mr C Stewart: The inspectorate has taken that comment on board, and inspectorate colleagues contend that they regularly seek feedback from the Department, schools and stakeholders on the effectiveness of their inspection activities, particularly inspection reports. I know that the chief inspector recognises — as did his predecessor — the need to strive constantly to improve and sharpen the focus of their reports so that they meet their objective, which is to provide boards of governors and leaders of schools with the guidance that they need to improve operations in schools. That is the thrust of the inspection regime. It is not intended to be punitive; it is intended to be supportive and to help schools to discharge their responsibilities. The quality of inspection reports is vital. The inspectorate always welcomes feedback on its reports and will continue to do so.

The Chairperson: In its response, the Department said that the legislation will merely bring powers into line with best practice in other jurisdictions. What new powers, if any, will the legislation give the inspectorate?

Mr C Stewart: The new powers, such as requiring persons present to assist with access to documents, are outlined mainly in clause 38. Those are fairly standard powers of inspectorate provisions in a variety of public services. The legislation is imported almost directly from the equivalent English legislation, the School Standards and Framework Act 1998.

The Chairperson: The Department proposes an amendment to clause 42, which relates to the appointment of assessors and lay persons for the purposes of inspection. The Department for Employment and Learning has requested an amendment that requires the Department of Education to consult it before appointing assessors and lay persons.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct, and we have proposed a similar amendment for inspections that are carried out on behalf of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL). If those functions are discharged on behalf of the Department for Employment and Learning or DCAL, it is not unreasonable for those Departments to have a say in who is appointed to carry out the inspections.

The Chairperson: Are we still awaiting that amendment or is it incorporated in —

Mr C Stewart: It should be on the list.

The Chairperson: On the subject of lay persons, officials noted the error in the section of the explanatory and financial memorandum that relates to clause 42.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct. A very important "not" was left out or mistakenly included in the sentence. There is a disparity between the Bill and the explanatory and financial memorandum. The Bill is correct; the memorandum is wrong.

The Chairperson: That will, I take it, be changed.

Mr C Stewart: The memorandum will be reprinted in due course, whereupon we will correct the error.

The Chairperson: Are members content to group clauses 37 to 42?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clause 43 is “Grants for educational and youth services etc.” Members will sit up at the mention of “grants”. Perhaps we should take a moment to remind ourselves of the clause’s provisions. It allows the Department for Employment and Learning and DCAL, in accordance with the regulations, to pay grants to persons who offer a service or carry out research that is connected to education. Those grants will not be paid to the ESA, trustees or managers of a voluntary or grant-maintained integrated school or the governing body of an institution of further education. Paragraphs 215 and 216 of the draft report and the spreadsheet contain relevant information.

YouthNet sought an amendment to clause 43, which deals with the purposes for which grants may be paid, the effect of which would be to refer to educational services and youth services in the same clause. Clause 43 (1)(a) would then read that: “the Department may pay grants, etc.” Have members any comments? Chris, can you clarify that no amendment was made and that the Department did not consider one necessary?

Mr C Stewart: We understand YouthNet’s position. It has an understandable wish to ensure that youth services, early-years services and schooling are treated on the same basis and are given parity of esteem, if I may use that phrase, wherever possible in the legislation. That is entirely laudable, and we support it.

However, every so often, that runs up against technical problems. Members may recall discussion on clauses 2(2)(a) and 2(2)(b), which we will deal with again in more detail. Sometimes, for technical reasons, it is simply not possible to include all the services in one provision, mainly because of the differing age ranges of those in receipt of them. In that case, the construction of the clause was determined by the Office of the Legislative Counsel. Its view is that, for technical reasons, that is the best way to draft the clause.

There is no difference in effect between what the clause, as drafted, allows to be done and what YouthNet wants to be done. It is a standard grant-making provision. In fact, it is not new: it is a direct lift and re-enactment of article 115 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. It does not introduce any new policy or grant-making regime. It simply tidies up legislation in the way that legislative counsel believes is technically sound.

The Chairperson: Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Clauses 44 to 48 deal with the protection of children and young persons. I refer members to paragraphs 220 and 222 of the draft report. At the informal reception, the Committee received a suggested amendment to clause 47 from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC). The suggested amendment would enable the ESA not simply to issue directions to boards of governors but also to school principals when appropriate. The NSPCC memo and accompanying papers was forwarded to the Department on 15 July 2009.

Mr C Stewart: The Minister is considering that suggestion, Chairman. I will not pre-empt her decision. One of the factors that she will want to consider is whether such an amendment would be appropriate because it may risk usurping the proper role of boards of governors. It is for boards of governors to lead and manage schools; it is for them to lead and manage principals and their staff. If we break the link, as it were, and allow the ESA to come between boards of governors and principals, that may not be appropriate. That is one matter about which other stakeholders might have significant concerns.

Mr O’Dowd: The NSPCC is a respected body, whose views should be heard. However, how its views are listened to is important.

Am I right in thinking that the amendment was proposed during the informal gatherings?

The Chairperson: It was subsequently approved.

The Committee Clerk: It was received late and, subsequently, the Chairperson gave his approval for it to be forwarded to the Department as a late submission. We have had several late submissions.

Mr O’Dowd: The Committee agreed which bodies would attend evidence sessions, and we received submissions from those bodies. However, a body — albeit a respectable body — came in late and submitted an amendment that was forwarded to the Department on behalf of the Committee. That seems to be an improper process.

The Chairperson: I disagree. We can receive submissions during the Bill’s scrutiny. I think that we have a duty to allow organisations with bona fide concerns to raise those with the Department.

The Committee Clerk: Several sectoral bodies have followed up their correspondence in the initial evidence. The Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education (NICCE) and Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta (CnaG) are two examples. We have had a great deal of correspondence.

Mr O'Dowd: Those bodies gave evidence to the Committee. Did the NSPCC give evidence to the Committee?

The Chairperson: The informal receptions were part of the Committee's work, so it is not outside the remit of the Committee.

Mr O'Dowd: I have no difficulty with the NSPCC — it is, as I say, a respectable body — however, there is a process. Nonetheless, what is done is done.

The Chairperson: Are we awaiting something from the Minister?

The Committee Clerk: Yes. The Minister will respond to that.

The Chairperson: Some members said that they have to leave at 11.00 am. If they do, the Committee will become inquorate. We have reached clause 49.

Mr C Stewart: Will we take the rest of the clauses on the nod, Chairman? [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: No. We will resume on Wednesday morning at 10.00 am in room 144.

Mr O'Dowd: Will we meet all day on Wednesday? What are the arrangements?

The Chairperson: I thought that it would be helpful to start the meeting on Wednesday morning, because it would give us more time to get more work done.

The Committee Clerk: Chairperson, perhaps you should let members know that there is a possibility of another meeting next Thursday.

The Chairperson: Would you prefer to have an all-day meeting on Wednesday, or would you prefer to do as we have done this week and meet on Wednesday and Thursday?

Mr Lunn: We will have the same problem on the Thursday; there will be a maximum of only two hours.

The Chairperson: That is correct. Do you want to have those two hours on Wednesday? We could start at 9.00 am, have lunch at the Committee and finish at 2.00 pm or 3.00 pm.

Mr O'Dowd: I am flexible on both days.

The Chairperson: Members, come prepared to have a longer session on Wednesday.

The Committee Clerk: We will have to switch Committee rooms at lunchtime. We failed to incorporate the September monitoring presentation from the Department into yesterday's or today's meetings. We have yet to get papers on that.

The Chairperson: We would do better to leave that until we get papers, and we will do it the following week.

The Committee Clerk: We will do it on Wednesday if we can get the papers.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT (MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) BILL (NIA 10/08)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mrs Dolores Kelly (Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Roy Beggs
Mr John Dallat
Mr Danny Kinahan
Mr Ian McCrea
Mr Alastair Ross
Mr Peter Weir

Witnesses:

Ms Olga Murtagh }
Mr Lewis Porter } Craigavon Borough Council

The Chairperson (Mrs D Kelly): I invite Ms Olga Murtagh, the director of development for Craigavon Borough Council, and Mr Lewis Porter, the principal administrative officer on land and property for Craigavon Borough Council, to make their presentation. You are very welcome.

Mr Dallat: Madam Chairperson, I know that you are a member of that august body. Why are there no elected representatives in the delegation?

The Chairperson: I will put that question to the witnesses. I remind them that they have 10 to 15 minutes to make their presentation. Ms Murtagh, will you explain at the outset whether members of the council were available to attend?

Ms Olga Murtagh (Craigavon Borough Council): Thank you, Chairperson and Committee members. We welcome the opportunity to give oral evidence today. Due to operational issues, it was deemed appropriate for officers to attend to give evidence on the issue because we had already produced a written submission on behalf of the council.

Mr Lewis Porter (Craigavon Borough Council): I, too, thank the Committee for the invitation to give evidence following our submission of written comments on the Bill. Members will have noticed from the aforementioned response that Craigavon Borough Council was satisfied with the content of the Bill in all areas except clause 18, which pertains to the acquisition of land otherwise than by agreement. It is considered that that clause could be amended and extended to cover more than Part II of the Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1997. Members will note that Craigavon Borough Council has suggested an amendment that reads: "A district council may acquire land otherwise than by agreement for the purposes of any of their Statutory Functions (i.e. existing, transferring and/or new)."

At the March 2009 meeting of the regional finance and estates working group, on which I serve, it was reported that for new councils the powers pertaining to land and property would be as they currently exist, together with those powers that are associated with the transferring functions. I drew the working group's attention to the fact that no cognisance appeared to have been taken of the functions of community planning and well-being, which are new functions and, as such, are not transferring with the existing associated powers.

As a result of that comment, it was subsequently reported that the then Minister of the Environment, Mr Sammy Wilson, had considered the proposed amendment to cater for the new functions of community planning and well-being in relation to land acquisition but that it was his view that this was not fundamental to enable local government in 2011 and could be addressed at a later date.

No doubt members will be aware that when councils obtained powers to promote economic development under the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1992, it was not until the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 2002 came into force that councils acquired powers to acquire land for economic development. In other words, a period of 10 years had elapsed.

According to the commentary on the clauses of the Bill that are under discussion today, clause 18 gives provision to rectify the position left as a result of the provisions for councils to:

"vest land for any of their purposes in Part 2 of the Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 — a provision that had been inadvertently omitted from that Order."

A period of 12 years has now elapsed since that original Order. Given the long period taken to amend Orders and/or grant councils the power to acquire land for those functions, councils are understandably concerned at the omission of such powers in respect of the new functions of community planning and well-being.

The power to acquire land otherwise than by agreement does not simply refer to lands acquired from the private sector. No doubt members will also be aware that, from time to time, Government Departments declare land surplus to their requirements. Details are then circulated to other Departments and councils by the central advisory unit of Land and Property Services in order to ascertain whether there is any interest in having the lands transferred to their ownership prior to the properties and lands being placed on the open market.

Should a council express an interest in acquiring the subject land, a case has then to be put to the Department including details as to the legislation under which compulsory purchase powers are available for the purpose for which the land is required. Without inclusion of enabling legislation in respect of community planning and well-being, councils will not be in a position to avail themselves of such a transfer opportunity. If, as was suggested by the then Minister, there is such a backlog in the legislative timetable, it is considered that it would be in the best interests of all concerned to make a relatively minor amendment at this stage, to the effect that a district council:

“may acquire land otherwise than by agreement for the purposes of any of their Statutory Functions (i.e. existing, transferring and/or new).”

That would cover any new function which might arise in the future.

Such an amendment would avoid any confusion as to what functions councils could acquire lands in respect of. It would also avoid any frustration, on the part of councils and third parties, at potential delays in delivering projects falling under community planning and well-being. Councils are being granted those functions without one of the essential tools with which to deliver. It would also assist the new Minister and the Assembly in avoiding any difficulties in that, having had the matter highlighted in advance of the enactment of any legislation, the proposed amendment was not made.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your thorough explanation of the need for the amendment. I would be grateful if you submitted your oral note to ensure accuracy in the Hansard report.

Mr Beggs: In the current wording of the Bill, one can see the clear community benefit in the acquisition of land. For instance, it might be required to meet European directives on waste facilities, and, without it, there could be problems in meeting those directives. Therefore, there is a clear community benefit. If the power were granted to councils, what requirement would there be on them to demonstrate clearly the community need and the community benefit? Does it need to be tied to community well-being in some way? What balance would be put on the power so that councils were not able to grab any land that they think that they need?

Mr Porter: That is a good point. The power of well-being is vague, as members will appreciate. We in Craigavon can provide a few firm examples of the need for community planning. Craigavon Borough Council had an opportunity to build a community development hub in Brownlow, which is quite a deprived area — as, I am sure, the Chairperson will agree. We had an opportunity to bring together a new health centre and a new community centre together with provision on a library, etc. That meant bodies other than the council acting together. If the council had not owned the land, we would not have been able to bring those disparate bodies together.

Councils need the power to respond quickly and vest land if an opportunity exists. As I said, the legislation is not to allow councils to go land-grabbing from the private sector; it relates also to other lands that are being made available from other Departments and on which councils need to respond quickly.

Mr Beggs: I specifically asked what gave balance to the power. I can see clear community benefit in the instance that you are talking about. It is a good way for planning and looking at the needs of the wider community and at how things could be done better. However, that is because you are applying that process. What is to stop an unreasonable council from using the power to grab land where it would not be able to demonstrate clear community benefit?

Mr Porter: As members will be aware, and as been referred to, planning is being reformed and local councils are being given powers in relation to the local development plans in the not-too-distant future — 2011. Those plans will set the framework and the pattern. In fact, they will stop unscrupulous councils from grabbing land. That will be part of the local development plan, into which the community plan will be feeding.

Mr Beggs: Would it not be better if enabling powers were put into this legislation? Subsequently, when those powers are transferred to local government, therefore, they could be implemented. You are saying that if the power were given today, there would be no balancing power.

Mr Porter: I am not saying that there would not be a balancing power; I am just saying that past experience tells us that it has taken 10 years for the economic development powers to get the power to acquire land, and the waste management powers have taken 12 years to date. The previous Minister said that he wanted to wait until 2011 for the legislation to be put in place. We need to be prepared for the transfer of the functions. You are all public representatives and you know what it is like. There will be media coverage of community planning and other functions being given to councils, and local communities will immediately expect their district councils to deliver. If we have to wait years for the enabling legislation to be passed to allow the development of much-needed functions, we will have egg on our faces.

Mr Weir: You have made a persuasive case, but I want to keep an open mind. Some concerns immediately occur to me. To pick up on Mr Beggs' salient point, depending on the precise way that local area planning works, if there is a general power to acquire land, I am not sure that the existence of a local development plan is a complete restriction. Presumably, a council may say that the local development plan was agreed but has been overtaken by an event which means that it wants to do x, y and z — things that fall outside the plan. The council may have a very good reason for saying that, because circumstances may have changed. In planning and development issues, we have all seen how the recession has massively changed the landscape for housing and a range of other capital projects. Therefore, I am not sure that the restriction is that tight.

You mentioned your desire to tie in with community planning. However, community planning is really about the council being the leader in the community — getting bodies around the table may not hinge on the council being the enabler, which means that it may not be the body that needs to acquire the land. Presumably, being ready is also an issue; you said that you could have egg on your face if councils are given the function of community planning but do not have the power immediately. However, if the amendment were accepted in the way that you suggest, would that not mean that councils have the power ahead of community planning? Therefore, there would not be a community planning framework or anything of that nature, and councils could just jump in. If the Bill is passed by the end of the year, councils will have the power 18 months ahead of community planning and will be able to pre-empt community planning. How do you answer that?

Mr Porter: In the interim, every other function that councils have — and hopefully we will have a waste function if the Bill is passed — includes powers to acquire land other than by agreement. To my knowledge, no council has unscrupulously grabbed land under any of those other functions. All I am saying is that there appears to have been an oversight in relation to community planning and well-being in that those powers are not transferring, so there were no existing powers to acquire, hold or manage land for those purposes. That is why we need to have those powers in place.

One of the good things about the local development plan in the future — I know that we are not talking about that at this point — is that it will be subject to review on a more regular basis, which will enable the type of thing that you are talking about to be handled more readily. In the meantime, we have Peace III and EU funding, and there is a requirement on councils to deliver those to the best of their abilities. That is why we need to have those powers in place ready for when the funding is received, so that when an opportunity arises it is developed in the best way for the community.

Mr Weir: You are moving from a situation in which the proposed legislation has a specific change for a specific purpose, and I think that everyone will acknowledge that the reason for that specific purpose is to give a green light and move as fast as we can on waste management. From a technical point of view, does moving from a situation of simply repealing one piece of legislation to the inclusion of a general provision that covers everything potentially alter many pieces of legislation?

Secondly, the legislation has been put out to consultation on the basis of a specific power to deal with waste management. If the move from a specific to a general power were to enact something on which no real discussion had taken place, is there an argument that the consultation might be rendered null and void? Is there a danger that the amendment is too wide-ranging?

Mr Porter: I am not sure that it is. It is good practice to encapsulate as much as possible in one piece of legislation, rather than having to re-enact it every time there is a new function. If we can receive an assurance that the legislation will be moved up the pecking order and consulted on quickly in time for 2011, there is no difficulty. That is in the hands of the Assembly and the Minister. We regard the Bill as an opportunity to highlight the need for that type of legislation. If it can be amended now, so much the better.

Mr Kinahan: Yours is an extremely good idea, but we must consider how to balance that at the other side. My feeling is that it should not be included in this Bill. We should find out how to get things done quickly and perhaps add on that provision when we come to the consideration of local planning and development. I worry that, if the amendment were to be introduced now, a mass of people, including landowners, would get together to stop this Bill from going ahead. I know that it is in the Assembly's hands to push it through, but we would find ourselves facing a huge battle.

Mr Porter: Unless I picked it up wrongly in discussions that took place before we were due to give evidence, I understand that there may even be a delay to the Bill as it stands, to allow for provisions relating to swine flu.

The Chairperson: It is only a two-week delay.

Mr Porter: It is not to include that in the legislation?

Mr Beggs: No.

The Chairperson: The delay relates to Committee business.

Mr Porter: My apologies, then. Mr Kinahan, will you rephrase your point?

Mr Kinahan: To rephrase, it is the wrong time to include that enabling power in this Bill. It should be introduced during another phase when we are working out how to address the community development side. That would give us time to think it through and put in place the correct checks and balances to ensure that councils do not have too much power. At the same time, the whole process will be speeded up so that it works.

Mr Porter: I made it clear that we were not talking only about private land. We are, in fact, more concerned about the potential declaration of surplus land from within the Departments. Community planning and well-being has no sponsoring Department to act on councils' behalf in that regard. Even Departments' hands are tied at the moment. If a Department wanted a particular piece of surplus land to be developed for community planning, it could not, under current legislation, do so. That is our worry for the interim.

An assurance that the enabling powers would come into being in 2011 with the rest of the legislation would be most welcome. However, the information that has been fed back from the Minister, through the finance and estates working group, is that that may not happen. Instead, the legislative procedure will have to take the normal course and begin after 2011, and that is our concern.

Mr Kinahan: Shall we find out what the Department has to say?

The Chairperson: Yes. I was going to suggest that we write to the Department to ask why it turned that down the first time. We could also seek advice from the Bill Office.

Mr Beggs: If I picked up what you said correctly, Mr Porter, councils cannot bid for some of the surplus public land.

Mr Porter: At this stage, we cannot bid, because, in order to present a paper, an urgent need must be demonstrated and appropriate legislation must exist under which we could vest. The idea behind the central clearing house is that it circulates to Departments and councils, because they have vesting powers. There would be no point putting something on the open market if we, in turn, vested it.

Mr Beggs: We should pursue the Department with respect to that specific issue, because some well-located land may end up going outside the public sector when, in the long term, it might be put to some worthwhile use.

The Chairperson: The officials from Craigavon Borough Council also made the point that there is a limited window of opportunity for funding under Peace III, and some good projects could come to fruition if those powers were to be exercised.

If members agree with that approach and there are no further questions, I thank Ms Murtagh and Mr Porter for their presentation. If you have additional information, the Committee will be happy to receive it as soon as possible. Thank you both; you are welcome to stay or to return to Craigavon.

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): I welcome Chris Stewart and the departmental officials to this morning's Committee meeting on the Education Bill. I remind you that the meeting is being reported by Hansard. I want to ensure that we work through the Bill as simply as possible this week, because members raised concerns last week about having to use a couple of folders. We will stay with the white folder, as best we can. We are awaiting more copies of the second version of the draft report, but there is one copy to share among members. You can set the black folders to the side.

Mr B McCrea: Before we proceed, I would like to deal with a couple of matters arising. The amended clause 3(2)(a) will deal with employment schemes, and clause 31 with schemes of management. They relate to school governance and trustees, but they contradict the Minister's letter of 17 June, in which she said:

"I have also made it clear that ownership will not convey any advantage or disadvantage to any school or sector in terms of the planning, governance, or funding of education."

The amendments confirm the link between the ownership of schools and their governance, and it leads to a questioning of the Minister's statement. We would like a response to that.

There is also an issue with the nascent controlled sector body. We understand that it has been meeting, but we have no indication of who is on it, how they were appointed and whether the sector is satisfactorily served by it.

The Chairperson: There is a report from Eve Stewart at B3 in the yellow folder. It provides a list of the people who attended the meetings of the controlled sector and the number of meetings that there has been. A controlled sector support meeting was held on 30 June in the Island Civic Centre, and an additional meeting was held in the same venue on 18 August. Some detail has also been provided in the letter to John Simmons.

Mr B McCrea: I am happy to deal with that when it arises.

The Chairperson: Would it not be preferable to deal with those points when we look at the amendments?

Mr B McCrea: I am merely highlighting a concern and giving the Department a chance to respond. We will, of course, deal with them when we reach that stage. To make it easier, I will drop you a note on the issues with which we have concerns.

The Chairperson: We will come to those items anyway, but you are at liberty to drop me a note.

Mr B McCrea: It is a matter of getting through the papers. I wanted to highlight an issue; I do not want to detain people.

The Chairperson: I become concerned when we have too many pieces of paper in front of us.

I want to explain the items. At tab 4, item 1 of the black folder is the Department's paper of 10 September on the employment schemes with the draft education employment scheme regulations attached. Those are the regulations with regard to the employment schemes. Tab 4, item 2, contains the Department of Education's and the Department for Employment and Learning's amendments, which were received on 10 September, with two new clauses to be inserted after clause 28 and amendments to clause 28 and schedule 7. Tab 4, item 3, contains the proposed amendments that the Committee received from the Department on 4 September. The Department has provided that in two formats: the first is a table format with a brief explanation of the amendment; the second format is the considered amendment format, which provides a full text of the proposed amendments, in particular for schedules 7 and 8. At tab 4, item 4, there is a briefing paper from Assembly research on the comparable issues from the Libraries Bill, the Health and Social Care (Reform) Bill and the Education Bill. Members will remember that they made inquiries on how those issues were dealt with in other Committees when Bills such as the Libraries Bill were being discussed. The briefing paper will be useful for providing context.

Having identified those papers, I propose that we move to the scrutiny of clause 49. We will continue through to the end of the schedules considering the departmental amendments as we come to them, and then work through the remainder of the departmental amendments on clauses 1 to 23 and clause 28.

I want to clarify that all new members have received the grey lever-arch file from last week's meeting from the Committee Clerk. The appendices will be updated after today's meeting. We need the Committee's approval for those appendices to be brought up to date.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: It just gives members more papers to read.

Clause 49 —

Mr B McCrea: Will you give me a chance to raise item B3 in the yellow folder?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: Will that be now, before we move on?

The Chairperson: If you do not mind, we will move on. As a result of that item, certain issues will be raised during the clauses, and you can raise the issue then.

Mr B McCrea: Judging from the list in annex A, I am concerned that there are not enough representatives from the controlled schools on the controlled schools sectoral body.

It is important that we ensure that the controlled sector has effective representation. I am sorry, but the list is not effective representation. How were those people appointed? How should they be appointed? How we can ensure that a controlled-sector body develops? The controlled sector must have equal standing and representation with all the other sectoral bodies; that is fundamental. I am sure that you will agree, Chairman, that there are not many controlled schools on that list and that some names are missing.

The Chairperson: The other concern is that there were five representatives of the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) at the first meeting but only one at the second meeting. I have grave concerns, and I echo the comments that have been made. We have to ensure that there is equality across all sectors, including the controlled sector. We have not seen any work emerging, and we have not seen any of the papers that have been provided for the working group.

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education): I am happy to pass all those points on to the working group, but I draw the Committee's attention to the fact that it is a controlled sector working group over which the Department has no control. We are there to assist and support the group in its work, but it is not for us to dictate what members the group should have or what papers it should consider.

The Chairperson: You say that the group is representative of the controlled sector, but how does Dr Peter Shirlow from Queen's University have an association with the controlled sector?

Mr C Stewart: Dr Shirlow is a well-known researcher, particularly on the effects of conflict in urban communities. He will have a perspective on the role that education can play in community cohesion.

Mr B McCrea: How would Michael Wardlow of the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) have a relevant view?

Mr C Stewart: That is a matter for Mr Wardlow. He decided to go to the meeting, but I was not present. Michael would be best placed to describe the contribution that he will make.

Mr B McCrea: Michael Wardlow is a good man, and I have no problem with his being at the meeting. However, in this case, we are trying to set up a body to look after the controlled sector rather than the integrated sector. We need to address the fact that the Bill disadvantages schools that are not part of a strong sectoral body. I raised that issue with you when we were considering other clauses.

Mr C Stewart: I understand the member's point, but I must clarify that the Department drew up the list of people who were invited to the first meeting having canvassed suggestions from various sources, including members. We made it clear that, thereafter, it is up to the group to decide who from the controlled sector takes part.

The Chairperson: The difficulty is that the Department initiated its first meeting with regards the controlled sector in the first week of July 2009, two years after the review of public administration (RPA). Every other sector has a business case and has been able to get ahead. Indeed, one sector placed a newspaper advertisement seeking the chairperson of the sectoral body that will represent it.

Mr C Stewart: The advertisement was for a chief executive, and that appointment has, indeed, been made.

The Chairperson: The controlled sector body has had only two meetings and is being given little direction or substantial resource. The Committee agreed the principle that the controlled sector needs to ensure that it has all the necessary financial and structural elements to make the right decisions on the best body to serve its needs. That concern will have to be adequately addressed.

Mr C Stewart: I understand that, and I reassure members that the Department will continue to support the group in its work and will move with the group at the pace at which it is capable of moving. There has been a third meeting. The group has asked us to provide it with assistance in the development of a business case to be submitted to the Department, and we have agreed to do that. We will commission the business case with either external or internal consultancy from DFP colleagues who have expertise in that area. We will underwrite the capacity that we provide, and we will work with the group to assist it in producing a business case for our consideration. The Department will not hold things back, but we must work with the sector at the pace at which the sector is capable of working.

The Chairperson: The other problem is that working at the sector's pace does not mean that that timetable can be reflected in our work on the Bill. The Bill has to be approved by 31 December for the establishment of the ESA on 1 January. If the sector is allowed to work at a snail's pace, the Bill will go nowhere.

Mr C Stewart: I am conscious of that concern. However, those are not matters for the Bill; they are not specific legislative requirements to provide sectoral support beyond the grant powers that already exist in legislation.

Mr B McCrea: Schools that are part of sectoral bodies appear to have a different set of arrangements from schools that are not. We want to sort out the question of equality and fairness; it is not good enough for you to say that the Department is there to help if the sector wants to move forward. For some years, the problem has been that it has not been able to move forward. We must do something to help that body to come up with a representative stance. I want that point recorded in the minutes.

Can we have a list of the attendees at the third meeting? That way we can see if there is continuity. It will be interesting to see if anybody has been to all three meetings.

Mr C Stewart: A small group of perhaps half a dozen people is beginning to take a leadership role in the group. That group is beginning to adopt an informal committee structure to split the work among the larger group. It appears that Hugh McCarthy, the principal of Killicomaine Junior High School, is chairing the meetings at this stage.

The Chairperson: We move to clause 49, "Catholic maintained schools". I refer members to paragraph 251 of the draft report and ask that they take a minute to remind themselves of the provisions of clause 49, which defines a Catholic maintained school.

The Department now wishes to remove that clause from the Bill. Included in the Minister's letter to the Committee of 17 June was the Department's explanation that:

"The main purpose of the definition was the delineation of the group of schools for which the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) was responsible. With the demise of CCMS, the provision will no longer be required for that purpose, and there is no other policy reason for retaining the separation between these schools and other voluntary schools."

On 4 September, the Committee received formal notice from the Department that when the question is put to the Assembly that clause 49 stand part of the Bill, the Minister will oppose it, as a separate approach to Catholic maintained schools is no longer required. Chris, do you have any comment on that?

Mr C Stewart: In the beginning, as you rightly said, the reason for having a definition of Catholic maintained schools was that there were quite separate administrative arrangements for those schools. With the RPA coming on stream that will no longer be the case: a separate definition is not required. Members will see in the paperwork that there will, nevertheless, be a small number of references in legislation to Catholic schools. That is necessary; for example, to point consultation requirements to the right place so that we can identify who needs to be consulted on matters concerning those schools.

In legislation there will be, if you like, a more local definition of Catholic schools. Quite simply, a Catholic school will be a school whose trustees are appointed by or on behalf of the Roman Catholic Church. Members may ask what the difference is, or think that we are simply swapping one definition for another. However, the definition in legislation is associated with quite separate administrative arrangements and a separate education system for Catholic maintained schools. The change is that we are now moving towards a single system that can support a diversity of school types. However, from time to time it will still be necessary to refer to those different school types.

Mr D Bradley: Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta (C na G) asked for an amendment to define Irish-medium education. Has any progress been made on that?

Mr C Stewart: The Minister is not convinced of the need for a different definition for Irish-medium education. One already exists in legislation in the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 2006, which we think is sufficient for the purposes required.

Mr B McCrea: Other schools are designated as grammar schools, integrated schools, and so on. C na G's argument is that there is no designation for an Irish-medium school.

Mr C Stewart: There is and there is not. It is perfectly possible for there to be an Irish-medium grammar school or an Irish-medium controlled school; in fact, I believe that there is one. The terminology is not mutually exclusive; there is potential overlap. In the early days of the RPA, there was an intention, wherever possible, to reduce the number of separate definitions and references and try to establish the holy grail of one school type. That has proved to be a much more ambitious task than we thought at the beginning.

Although this Bill and the second Bill will make some progress towards that end, we are a long way from saying that there is one type of school. To reach that point, we would need to make many more changes to the detailed arrangements for governance and finance in the various types of school. Members will be aware that one problem with governance is that, in order to retain the role of the Transferor Representatives' Council (TRC) and appoint governors to controlled schools, we need to leave the current governance provisions as they are. It is not possible to harmonise them at this point.

Mr B McCrea: My understanding is that the issue is not only about governance — although that is important — but about area-based planning. If we accept that one size does not fit all, should we not designate schools in such a way that, when the Department is planning, it can determine whether there is sufficient availability of the various school types that we need? I suspect that that is why C na G is keen on designation. That has fundamental implications for other sectors that I am interested in, such as schools that were formerly voluntary grammars. Designation is critical.

Mr C Stewart: I understand why many stakeholders might share that view, specifically in relation to Irish-medium schools. There is no particular difficulty, irrespective of the definition, in identifying whether a school is Irish-speaking or not. I know that C na G may have some concerns about the difference between an Irish-speaking school and an Irish-speaking unit in a school. Nevertheless, against a background of a sound existing definition and a clear recognition of what an Irish-speaking school is, we do not foresee any great difficulty in ensuring that the needs and preferences of young people and parents for an Irish-medium education are easily identifiable and properly addressed in area-based planning.

Mr B McCrea: I am sure that they have no problem with the issue of units in schools. However, it is important, for equality reasons, that that is available to all other schools, such as schools that wish to designate as grammar schools or integrated schools. The interesting bit — perhaps this is not the appropriate clause to deal with it, but Dominic led on the issue — is that if area-based planning takes that direction, it is appropriate to stipulate the reason for including designations. If I understand correctly, you are saying that, largely, it is no longer necessary to designate maintained schools because all schools are now equal. A trajectory of travel away from the RPA suggests that we need an arrangement from one size fitting all to designated sectoral schools.

Mr C Stewart: I understand your point. You might then say that an unintended benefit of our not removing all the other designations and definitions is that they remain in statute: “grammar school” and “integrated school” will continue to be defined formally. Indeed, all the types and sectors whose needs and views need to be considered, and which need to be able to take part in area planning, will, I think, be able to rely on clear designations and definitions in the legislation.

Mr D Bradley: Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta told the Committee that it is unhappy with the present definition of Irish-medium education, because it defines it by curriculum only. It sees it as important for the development of Irish-medium education, especially in collaboration with existing English-medium, that it be clearly defined.

Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta says that the current definition in the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 does not acknowledge that Irish is used as the everyday language of the school, nor does it acknowledge any other aspect of Irish-medium provision. It also says that there is no current definition except as directed by Department of Education policy as to what exactly constitutes an Irish-medium unit for the purpose of education Orders. Nor is there any legislative direction on how a unit should be established. Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta says that that is in contrast to the 1989 Reform Order for integrated education.

All other types of schools are defined in part 1 of the revised Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. Therefore although the Department is inclined to dismiss Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta's request for clear definition, Comhairle has a very strong argument for having a clear definition where co-operation with English-medium schools by way of units and so on is pursued. There is a danger that conflicts can arise between the English-medium section and the Irish-medium section. In such circumstances, for example, it is important to have a clear definition of Irish-medium education, over and above the curriculum element.

Mr C Stewart: First, I assure you that the Department would not dismiss any point put to it by any stakeholder; we may disagree with it, but we certainly would not dismiss it. We have considered C na G's arguments, but I disagree with it that it is a curricular definition; that is slightly misleading. The definition turns on the proportion of the curriculum that is taught in Irish. Therefore it is based on the form of education that is delivered in the school. We think that that is clear, and we would struggle to find an alternative definition that would meet the needs.

Mr B McCrea: Why can you not simply designate people as they wish to be designated? When it comes to an issue about area-based planning, people get concerned about one sector taking resources away from another sector. If the Department was trying to remove ambiguity, it could simply define schools; other bodies have suggested that schools be designated Irish-medium or grammar, for example. Once a school has been designated, the Department can carry out the appropriate area-based planning.

Mr C Stewart: That is one possible approach. However, it might attract the very danger that concerns C na G: a school might be officially designated as an Irish-medium or an Irish-speaking school without any guarantee that the form of education delivered in it is in the Irish language. That seems to be C na G's main concern. It feels very strongly that the immersion model of Irish-medium education is the correct one. That conclusion was supported by its view of Irish-medium policy, and it would want to ensure that an Irish-medium school is a school in which children and young people are taught in Irish. The mere designation in a scheme would not offer C na G that guarantee or reassurance.

Mr B McCrea: Dominic is better at arguing for C na G than I, but it seems to me that there is a direction of travel here. Where a school is designated as Irish-medium, there would be certain expectations about the type of education that that school offered.

Equally, if a school is designated as an academic school, there would be certain expectations about the way that things were done. When trying to progress issues, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and getting it right will reassure people that their views are being respected.

I cannot sign up to the one-size-fits-all approach because I believe in parental choice. It may not be my choice, but parents should have that choice, and we must ensure that there is a certain level of provision across the Province through area-based planning. Perhaps, as you have said, the law of unintended consequences brings a happy happenstance; nevertheless, it may be better to have equivalence across the board to allow for the development of other issues.

Mr C Stewart: I can see where you are coming from on that, but I think that equivalence or a one-size-fits-all approach, albeit flexible, might be difficult to achieve. Definitions arise for a variety of reasons. There is, for example, some commonality between the Irish-medium sector and the grammar sector in that the definitions of both need to turn on the nature of the education that is provided. For the integrated sector the situation is different, because the definition turns on the composition of the school population and is not really linked to the curriculum or the form of education. As has been said, it is possible to have an integrated grammar school or an integrated Irish-medium grammar school — I do not think that one of those exists yet, but it is certainly permissible under the law.

Mr B McCrea: It is the task of the Department, or whatever designated body, to work that out. It must get a level of provision across the various parts of Northern Ireland that adequately meets the needs of the population. That is at the very core of area-based planning.

It would be impossible to remove some of the variables, because, as you have just amply illustrated, there are so many. Would it not be better for the Department to define the broadly recognised sectoral interests and the type of education that they provide? That would give a tighter list of parameters on which to base area-based planning, and it would go a long way towards reassuring all the disparate sectoral bodies, including C na G.

Mr C Stewart: That is exactly the balance that we are seeking to strike. Left to our own devices, the solution that the bureaucrats might come up with would be much simpler, with one type of school and a very simple set of administrative arrangements.

Mr B McCrea: Just one school, in fact.

Mr C Stewart: Indeed, perhaps just one school, and it would be very easy to work out the administrative arrangements.

Mr B McCrea: Perhaps in Templepatrick, to go along with the one police station that is left.

Mr C Stewart: I will not comment on that matter.

The Department has listened very carefully to what those in education have told us, and their view was that it was neither practical nor desirable to go as far in that direction as we might otherwise have done. A range of issues comes to the fore, not least of which is the need for the Department to recognise the ethos of the various types of schools, how they want and expect to see that reflected in their identity, the way that they deliver education on a daily basis and the way that they are referred to in legislation.

Therefore, we have had to reach a compromise or balanced position. The matter is not as neat, simple or straightforward as we would have liked. We may not always have been able to accommodate all the concerns or desires of stakeholders, but we feel that a balance has been struck that gives us a better and deliverable system.

Mr Lunn: Not for the first time, I am listening to the discussion and not fully understanding it. Could you explain to me in nice, simple terms what the danger is in allowing C na G to have its own designation? What is the problem? It is a bit like the issue of school enrolment that the Committee talked about last week, whereby 198 pupils were satisfied and two were disappointed.

Mr C Stewart: There is no danger from the Department's perspective. The suggestion that Basil made would mean the Department adopting a definition similar to that of Catholic maintained schools, which is quite simply a school that is on the list of Catholic maintained schools. We could also adopt the same approach for Irish-medium schools, and it would be administratively very simple for the Department and the ESA. However, I suspect that C na G would object to that approach, because its fear is that a school could become Irish-medium in name only. It might appear on that list, but it would be open to the board of governors to depart from the purity of the immersion education model while retaining the designation of Irish-medium school.

Mr Lunn: I am really glad that I asked that question. [Laughter.]

Mr C Stewart: If my explanation was oversimplified, I would be glad to elaborate.

The Chairperson: As regards the issue that Basil raised, individual Members and their parties will have the opportunity to agree or disagree on whether that particular amendment stands or is removed. That decision will be made no later than next week. If an amendment is required, it can be tabled in the Assembly. However, obviously, there is concern. There is no consensus on the merits of removing clause 49. Correct?

Mr D Bradley: The Chairperson forwarded a letter that he received from Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta to you in June, which outlined a number of issues that it wants the Department to address. Is that process ongoing?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. It is ongoing on one particular issue. The other issues are reflected in amendments that have been brought forward. The Minister is still considering that issue, which is a request by C na G for a statutory duty on the boards of governors of Irish-medium schools to maintain their Irish-medium status or designation, as it were, which relates to the very point that we have just discussed.

It arises from a concern on C na G's part that some schools in the Irish-medium sector would depart from what is recognised as the effective approach to Irish-medium education. Therefore, it wants a duty that parallels that which is placed on governors of integrated schools, who are required to use their best endeavours to ensure that those schools remain integrated. C na G wants there to be a similar, corresponding requirement on Irish-medium schools. The Minister is considering it.

Mr D Bradley: The other issues have been addressed?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. We have not said yes to them all. The Minister has indicated those with which she agrees, and those with which she does not agree.

Mr B McCrea: The point that has just been raised clarifies the position about which, as you said earlier, C na G might be worried. If the two matters are brought together, and there is a designation and "best endeavours" clause — or you define what it is — I expect that C na G's concerns will be met.

Mr C Stewart: Yes. That is a fair point.

Mr B McCrea: It is possible that such an approach could also be used for other sectors, such as the integrated and voluntary grammar sectors. The point that I am making is that most schools fear the diminution of their ethos. I am simply saying that if there is a way to give reassurance on that, I believe that it would be easier to move forward.

Mr C Stewart: Again, I concur with the point that you make. However, I will tread carefully as I reflect on what its implications might be for other sectors. Such an approach is relatively straightforward for an integrated school where the definition is relatively straightforward. It is certainly feasible for Irish-medium education. Where it becomes slightly more difficult is in the realm of faith-based education, such as Catholic education. Where it becomes difficult and, perhaps, even controversial is when it comes to grammar schools. The duty to ensure that a grammar school maintains its status as such might take us into territory around post-primary transfer that is occasionally controversial, and to which I will hesitate to go today.

Mr B McCrea: I appreciate that, but you understand the argument.

Mr C Stewart: I do.

Mr B McCrea: It is an argument that is as good for Irish-medium schools as it is for those of other sectors. Anyway, the point of the session is to raise such an issue, so that you can consider it. It will certainly have an impact.

The Chairperson: I want to raise an issue that comes up continually. It is now critical. At what stage, Chris, will we get a definitive response from the Minister on some of those matters? In the past, accusations of delay have been made. We have been accused of unduly delaying progress because we asked for an extension of Committee Stage. Had the Committee not been granted that extension of its scrutiny of the Bill, I doubt if some of those issues would be resolved by now anyway, because we are still waiting on responses. You have highlighted one such issue: we are still waiting on the DEL amendments. We are also waiting on the amendments from the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC). We do not have a lot of time, because the Committee has to report to the House by 30 September. In fact, the report has to be printed by 30 September.

Mr C Stewart: I appreciate that. The DEL and NSPCC suggested amendments arose relatively late in the day and at the tail end of the Committee's considerations of these matters. Issues around definitions of schools and school types have been debated at length in Committee meetings and with stakeholders; they are not particularly new issues. The Minister's position on them is clear. In the papers that she has sent to the Committee, she has indicated what she proposes to do at this stage in relation to the definition of schools.

Mr D Bradley: You may correct me if I am wrong, but only one of the amendments requested by Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta — the amendment to clause 2(4), placing a duty on the ESA to encourage and facilitate Irish-medium education — has been included in the grid that you gave us.

Mr C Stewart: There is a further amendment to clause 26.

Mr D Bradley: That relates only to the curriculum and examinations.

Mr C Stewart: Yes, but they are the two major issues that C na G asked us to consider.

The Chairperson: We will come back to them later.

Mr D Bradley: I would not consider them to be the two major issues. One of them might be major, but there were a few other requests. Are we to assume that they have been denied?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. I understood that we had copied to the Committee the Minister's reply to C na G. That would have been some months ago.

The Chairperson: Yes, because I think that you made reference to it last week. The Hansard report of last week's meeting mentions the Minister's letter of 17 June.

Mr C Stewart: There was a specific reply on the C na G issue. Dominic had kindly forwarded the letter to us, and I understood that the reply was copied to Committee members at the time.

The Committee Clerk: Is there a date to that?

Mr C Stewart: I will check that, John, and come back to you.

The Committee Clerk: Please provide an extra copy as well.

The Chairperson: Will you clarify the status of the proposed departmental amendments that have been agreed by the Minister with regard to Executive endorsement? Have they been copied to the Executive members by the Minister? They stand as proposed amendments until their fate is decided in the Assembly.

Mr C Stewart: At this time, any amendment stands only as a proposed amendment until the Minister or a Member tables it. The amendments have not yet been sent to the Executive for consideration. The guidance on legislative procedures suggests that that is done after Committee Stage. That, of course, would raise a difficulty, because there is a comparatively short time between Committee Stage and Consideration Stage. Therefore I believe that it is the Minister's intention to take her proposed amendments to the Executive at the earliest possible date and probably before the end of Committee Stage. However, the Minister would, of course, make the Executive aware of the Committee's views, wherever possible, on the proposed amendments, as the Executive would expect.

We have a delicate path to tread with regard to timing, but it is the Minister's intention to present the amendments for Executive consideration, as set out in the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister's guidance.

The Chairperson: It is an Executive Bill, so it would be an issue if one Minister did not feel that it was appropriate to send the amendments to the Executive.

Mr C Stewart: It is the Minister's intention to send the amendments to the Executive. The Executive will want to consider amendments that have been put forward by other Ministers. The Minister for Employment and Learning has requested a series of amendments to the Bill.

The Chairperson: Again, we are tied for time.

Mr C Stewart: It is difficult. If one looks at the orthodoxy of the guidance on legislation, one might argue that it is impossible to seek Executive endorsement between the end of Committee Stage and Consideration Stage. That is why the Minister wants to go early. Our advice from the legislative secretariat is that the Executive are not asked to consider amendments to the majority of Bills until after Committee Stage.

The Chairperson: We move on now to the supplementary clauses, which are clauses 50 to 55. Clause 50 deals with supplementary, incidental, consequential and transitional provisions. Clause 51 deals with regulations and Orders.

Clause 50 allows the Department to make, by Order, such supplementary, incidental, consequential and transitional or saving provisions — that was a mouthful — as it considers appropriate to give full effect to the legislation. On 18 February 2009, officials advised the Committee that that provision is included to enable the Department in case it is discovered that a mistake was made in the drafting of the Bill. The provision allows that mistake to be corrected quickly. In response to clause 50, the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) commented:

"The board would contend that the point to 'amend, repeal, revoke or otherwise modify any statutory provision (including this order)' should require prior and full consultation with the stakeholders who may be affected by any such change."

I refer members to the Department's response in paragraph 254 of the draft report that:

"The Minister would welcome the views of the Committee on the suggested duty to consult."

At last week's meeting, the Committee noted that clause 12(2) of the Bill specifies certain consultation requirements. It states:

"Before making any order under this section the Department shall consult—

(a) ESA; and

(b) such organisations representing—

(i) the interests of Boards of Governors of grant-aided schools; and

(ii) staff in such schools,

as appear to the Department to be appropriate."

At last week's meeting, members considered whether the same consultation requirement should apply where the Department proposes to exercise the power to make Orders pursuant to clause 50(1), bearing in mind that such an Order would have to be laid before, and positively affirmed by, a resolution of the Assembly. Chris, have you any comments on that?

Mr C Stewart: As we said, the Minister would welcome the Committee's views on that. I do not think that she has a particularly strong or absolutely fixed view on that. However, the Department is not convinced by the arguments put forward for the need for a legislative requirement for consultation. Of course, such consultation will take place when it is practicable and necessary to do so. However, the example that we gave last week of where such powers are used illustrates that consultation may not be as much of an issue as some consider it to be. In the Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order 2005, a similar provision was used to correct a spelling mistake. I doubt that the Committee would expect us to consult stakeholders on making such a correction.

The Chairperson: Do members have any comments?

Mr Lunn: The only point that I note is that the South Eastern Education and Library Board is the only body to raise a concern. The Southern Education and Library Board simply noted the fact, and no one else commented. What is the big deal? If it were a serious issue, we would have had a stronger reaction. The explanation given by the Department is that the provision is intended simply to provide grace should we discover that we have made a mistake, which will probably be the case.

Mr C Stewart: I know that it is a terrifying prospect that the Department might get something wrong, but the theoretical possibility exists.

Mr Lunn: Clause 51(3) states that no Order can be made unless it is laid before and approved by a resolution of the Assembly. I would have thought that that was a fair guarantee, and I see no reason that, should a moderately serious issue arise, the Department would not wish to consult on it.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct, and it is important also to bear in mind that the purpose of the provision, as set out in the clause, is not simply to allow the Department to tinker with the law because it feels like it, rather it is to give effect to the substantive provisions in the Bill. It is, therefore, an Order to correct a mistake where a failure to do so would not be giving effect to the will of the Assembly in passing the legislation. It is not simply because we may come up with nice ideas of how to change the law.

Mr B McCrea: Your example was one of tidying up the legislation by correcting a spelling mistake, and no one would have an issue with that. The grey area is when any change is slightly more serious. The legal profession determines that the law is as it was written. The problem arises when one uses such provisions to do slightly more than fix spelling mistakes.

Mr C Stewart: That is where the Assembly control mechanism comes into play. Although I have stated that the circumstances in which we might use such a power are strictly limited to giving effect to the Bill, it is, nevertheless, a serious matter to change primary legislation, and that should not be done without the consent of the Assembly.

Mr B McCrea: We have talked about clause 51 and about the regulations that it provides for being subject to negative resolution procedure. Although we understand that it is a more efficient way of dealing with matters, negative resolution procedure, if combined with the need for cross-community support, does have an implication as to whether one can or cannot do something. Are we on clause 51? Although not everything has to be subject to affirmative resolution procedure, we will be looking at certain key areas that we feel should be — unless we can be convinced otherwise.

Mr C Stewart: That is a fair point, but it is not one on which it would be appropriate for me to take any stance. The draftsman has drafted the legislation in the normal way. If the Committee or the Assembly feel that a different approach is appropriate for particular provisions, then that is a matter for the Committee and the Assembly to decide on.

Mr B McCrea: In the past, you said that although there are comparisons with the health RPA legislation and so on, education is — if I can use the pun — a law unto itself. However, there are different implications because of the nature of the Education Bill. I know that you can get advice that says that, under normal legislative conditions, negative resolution procedure might be the way to do things. However, I want to put on record my belief that because many of those issues are contentious, they must be dealt through the affirmative resolution procedure, if we are planning to change.

Mr Lunn: When clauses 50 and 51 are read together, you can almost see a contradiction. Having said that, I did not see a problem with clause 50. However, clause 51(1) states:

Clause 51(3) states:

“No order shall be made under section 50(1) unless a draft of the order has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Assembly.”

Are regulations and Orders different?

Mr C Stewart: Yes, they are, and they are for different purposes.

Mr Lunn: Can you explain that to me in simple terms?

Mr C Stewart: I could attempt to explain it to you in simple terms, but I would undoubtedly fail. However, I refer the Committee to two papers that were prepared some time ago — one that I produced and one that the Committee Clerk produced — and which explain the different forms of subordinate legislation and the different forms of Assembly control. Rather than weary the Committee with a further explanation of it now, would it be helpful if we were to resurrect those papers?

The Committee Clerk: Those papers were provided on 19 February, when there was a Committee session and discussion on the merits of negative and affirmative resolution.

Mr C Stewart: There is scope for a PhD in explaining the differences between Orders and regulations.

The Chairperson: Another issue is involved, because this is all linked to clause 12. We cannot read clauses 50 and 51 without referring to clause 12. At some stage, members discussed whether the Orders mentioned in clause 12 should be subject to the same control as those mentioned in clause 50. The affirmative resolution procedure will apply to clause 50, whereas the negative resolution procedure will apply to clause 51.

Mr C Stewart: The Minister will welcome the Committee’s view on that matter. At this point, she does not have a fixed or immovable view. As I said last week, I was slightly surprised to find that clause 12 would not be subject to that form of Assembly control. Nevertheless, counsel has drafted it in that way because that is the accepted and normal way to do things. It is not a new type of provision or a new provision in education law. A similar power to modify employment legislation exists in schedule 2 to the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.

The Chairperson: In members’ folders, there is a letter from Eve Stewart about the Minister’s outstanding responses to the Committee. It states:

“The Minister does not believe there is a need to insert a consultation requirement in clause 50. Clause 51(3) requires a draft of the Order under clause 50(1) to be laid and approved by resolution of the Assembly. This is in our opinion a higher standard to meet than a consultation requirement.”

Her response on clause 12(1) states:

“The rationale for the different levels of Assembly control is that clause 50 can be used to amend the Act itself, whereas clause 12 is a power to modify employment law to reflect the provisions of the Act. Therefore the Minister does not intend to move such an amendment.”

The Committee should consider whether there is any merit in amending clause 50(1) by adding a reference to clause 12. For example, it could state that no Order shall be made under clause 12(1) or 50(1) unless a draft of the Order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Assembly. That would give the Assembly the power and control, and there would be no way that one element of the legislation could be used to do something else that is not clearly defined in one clause of the Bill. What you cannot get in clause 50 or 51, you could get by using clause 12.

Mr C Stewart: Only in relation to employment law.

The Chairperson: Yes, but we need to settle that question in our minds. Does the Committee think that such an amendment would be useful? What would be the implications of such an amendment in light of the Minister’s response?

Mr C Stewart: I am not convinced that the implications would be particularly profound. The letter indicates that the Minister is not convinced, at this point, of the need for such amendments. However, if the Committee has a strong view that those amendments are required, the Minister will, of course, want to consider that.

I do not think that the amendment would make a huge difference. This is not — if members fear that it is — an opportunity for the Department to exercise some sort of untrammelled power over primary legislation. Controls and checks and balances are in place. The point of the provisions is not to thwart or subvert the settled will of the Assembly; rather it is to ensure that we are in a position to give effect to the settled will of the Assembly. It is in case we overlook something, get something wrong or find that we need to do something else to give effect to what has been endorsed by the Assembly. These are standard mechanisms to allow us to do that. However, if members have a particular concern, I am sure that the Minister will want to give careful consideration to that.

The Chairperson: The officials were asked to consider an amendment on this issue after last week’s meeting.

Mr C Stewart: If I may put it bluntly; you have not yet convinced the Minister.

The Chairperson: Her response in the letter indicates that. Bearing in mind the deadline, and given the concerns and last week's discussion, does the Committee think that we should ask the Clerk and his staff to draft an amendment to this clause?

Mr B McCrea: I would be happy to propose that.

Mr O'Dowd: Is it a proposed amendment?

The Chairperson: No. I asked whether the Committee should ask the Clerk to draw up an amendment for us to consider, and then it would be up to the Committee to decide whether to adopt it.

The Committee Clerk: Just to clarify, that is in relation to an affirmative resolution for clause 12(1). Are we also saying that clause 51 should have some consultation requirements? That was the other proposal that the Committee put to officials last week. This response from yesterday evening says no to that.

The Chairperson: In the Committee's opinion, that is a higher standard to meet than a consultation requirement. Therefore, is consultation necessary?

The Committee Clerk: Draft affirmative resolution involves the House; it imposes no obligation to consult stakeholders. The obligation to consult stakeholders in the education field is when the Department speaks to stakeholders. If I am correct, all that the Department would have to do is bring the regulation to the House; it does not need to speak to stakeholders on a draft affirmative resolution.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct; however, we are pointing out the incongruity of having to consult stakeholders about a proposal to give effect to the will of the Assembly. You would be asking stakeholders whether they agree with the Assembly.

Mr B McCrea: I agree. If we opt for a draft affirmative resolution, we do not need to consult. We need to consult only on clause 12.

The Chairperson: Are we clear on that? As clear, I suppose, as we can ever be. Before we move on to clause 52, I would like clarity on what is meant by "stakeholders" when speaking about consultation on employment regulations.

Mr C Stewart: Consultations have taken place with the Catholic trustees specifically on the employment regulations. Consultations have taken place with other stakeholders on a more general level about the approach that the Department might take to regulating schemes of employment.

The Chairperson: What is the difference between a more general level and having consultations with the Catholic trustees? Did you consult with the stakeholders who raised issues about employment regulations?

Mr C Stewart: There has not been a general consultation with all stakeholders on the issue. The concerns were raised by two sets of stakeholders: the Catholic trustees; and the Governing Bodies Association (GBA). The GBA, as you know, has declined to meet us.

The Chairperson: On that issue?

Mr C Stewart: On any issue.

The Chairperson: Did the Department write to the GBA to ask for its concerns about the employment regulations?

Mr C Stewart: No, we have not specifically done that. The GBA, as you might recall, was asked in the Committee whether it would be prepared to discuss those matters with officials, and it declined to do so. Our door, of course, remains open to it at any stage.

The Chairperson: OK, let us move to clause 52, "Interpretation", which contains definitions of terms that are used in the Bill. I refer members to paragraph 233 of the draft report, which relates to clause 52 and where the comment of the Western Education and Library Board is noted:

"It is very unfortunate that the Department has not taken this opportunity to introduce a new consolidated Education Bill embracing all of the legislation which has been introduced since 1986 in a systematic format."

That, I assume, refers to the 11 pieces of subordinate legislation.

Mr C Stewart: That is a comment that could be made only by someone who has never had any involvement in drafting legislation.

The Chairperson: The Department's written response is sympathetic to the Western Board's concerns:

"consolidation exercises are major undertakings, and are normally carried out after, rather than during, major legislative reform".

Mr C Stewart: Precisely; one does not try to hit a moving target.

The Chairperson: As the draft report notes, that issue was already raised by a member of the Committee on 18 February 2009.

The response from the departmental officials is also set out in the draft report. It describes the task as "mammoth and extremely technical." Members will note a sequence of events that precede consolidation:

"When the two Bills on RPA are finalised — and, perhaps, one Bill to reform the legislation generally — we might be able ask counsel to create one consolidated piece of legislation."

Mr C Stewart: It may be possible at that point, Chairman. I agree with the sentiments that may have prompted the Western Board's comment: there is far too much legislation in education. It is difficult for those involved in education to deal with 11 primary Orders and Acts, and soon, one hopes, 12 or 13. Frankly, it is difficult even for the Department to keep track of it all. We share the desire to have a much smaller body of legislation. However, we are often asked to do that as if it were a simple and straightforward task; it is not. It would take several years and the work of many staff.

The Chairperson: When we started our scrutiny of the Bill, we saw that there were 11 pieces of legislation. It is sometimes difficult for the Committee to comprehend matters relating to the Bill; a simple example of that this morning was when we keep referring to clauses 50 and 51 and then back to clause 12. That is in one piece of legislation, but there are references to other Orders throughout the Bill. Would it take that length of time to consolidate the legislative framework?

Mr C Stewart: The process leading to consolidation would certainly take that length of time. The financing provisions that we referred to earlier, for example, are Byzantine in their complexity. Everyone would welcome a simplification of those provisions, and a move to a much simpler and more straightforward legislation on schools finance would have to be made first. We would need to adopt a new model of schools financing, repeal all existing provisions and introduce new ones that encapsulate the new model.

Similarly, if circumstances permit, we may want to simplify and clarify the arrangements on school governance; we may also want to deal with other provisions of the legislation. Having completed the remodelling or re-engineering of the legislation, we would undertake the consolidation task. It would be extremely difficult, challenging and resource- and time-intensive.

The Chairperson: Do members have a view on whether the Department should consider consolidation at some stage?

Mr Lunn: In February, I might have mentioned the task of dealing with all the previous Orders. It is not something that the Department can look at now; it is one for the future. The word “Byzantine” hardly begins to cover it; it would be a massive task. However, it might not be such a massive task if it were done gradually. It seems to be suggested here that, at some stage, the Department will be asked to accommodate all the Orders in one exercise. It would be a massive task, but it may be possible to look at it in an orderly way. The Orders could be considered gradually, starting with the oldest and moving on to what we are discussing now.

Mr C Stewart: You are right; we would have to do it in that way. In this legislation, we are taking significant parts out of the oldest piece of legislation, the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. The second RPA Bill will continue that process and will also affect the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. Those would be the first targets in attempting a radical overhaul of the legislation.

It is perhaps fair to say that the task is difficult because the Department has allowed it to become difficult. We put more and more legislation into the cupboard, but we should have cleared out the cupboard much earlier. It is very difficult to bring 11 Orders together now. Nineteen eighty-nine or 1990 might have been the opportune time, although I am sure that there are reasons why the Department did not, or was unable, to consolidate at that point. However, the longer the matter is left, the harder it becomes.

Mr Lunn: We seem to be moving house now rather than just emptying the cupboards.

Mr C Stewart: That is true.

The Chairperson: The problem is that people are always worried that there is another cupboard somewhere that they are not aware of, but which the Department is aware of. [Laughter.]

Mr C Stewart: Indeed, that proved to be the case when the Committee secretariat uncovered a small cupboard that had passed beyond our recollection.

The Chairperson: And of course we have article 101, which is always with us and lurking in the background.

Mr C Stewart: The other issue is one of resource. I would not expect the Committee to have too much sympathy with the hard-pressed Civil Service, but most of the legislative resource that the Department has available is before the Committee today.

The Chairperson: With respect to resources, does the Department have a tracked version of the changes to the Education Bill with the amendments annotated on it? That would be useful, as it would provide a tracked change of what has taken place with the Bill, and would mean that the Committee has the Bill as presented to it as well as the list of amendments.

Mr C Stewart: It does not. It could attempt to provide one, but it would be risky. Transposing the changes into the Bill would have to be done very carefully, as errors could easily creep in.

The Chairperson: Would it be impossible to produce it?

Mr C Stewart: It would not be impossible, and if the Committee would find it helpful, the Department would certainly endeavour to compile such a document.

The Chairperson: Would members find that helpful?

Mr O'Dowd: I suppose that it would be helpful. However, the amount of work that such a document would involve might interfere with the Committee's timescales.

Mr C Stewart: I am glad that a member raised that, but that was what I was alluding to.

Mr B McCrea: That suggestion came from the teacher's pet over there.

The Chairperson: Given the fact that the Department is working through a piece of legislation, would it not be procedure to have such a document?

Mr C Stewart: Not that I am aware of, not least because the Committee or individual members may wish to propose their own amendments or amendments to amendments. The Executive consideration could produce further changes, and the Department could end up producing umpteen different versions for the Committee to keep track of.

Mr Lunn: I am sure that Chris must leave here sometimes and go home and kick the cat. [Laughter.]

Mr C Stewart: I am not allowed to have a cat for that very reason. [Laughter.]

Mr Lunn: The Committee seems to be piling more and more work on him.

What the Chairperson suggests sounds terrific in theory, but in practice I am sure that it is something that Chris could do without.

Mr C Stewart: It is perhaps best if I do not respond to that.

Mr Lunn: I said it for you.

The Chairperson: The Committee has already received documents indicating that changes will take place. However, let us move on.

Clause 53, “Minor and consequential amendments and repeals and revocations” applies to schedules 7 and 8. The Committee has received no stakeholder submissions on clause 53, and those that it has received for schedules 7 and 8 will be covered when we examine those schedules. Are there any comments on clause 53?

Mr Lunn: None. Agreed. Move on.

The Chairperson: At least we have some agreement on minor and consequential amendments. Chris, do you have any comment?

Mr C Stewart: No. It is the most straightforward of straightforward provisions. You will not see a Bill without a similar provision.

The Chairperson: Clause 54 contains provision for the commencement of the Bill. I refer members to paragraph 239 of the draft report, which relates to that clause. I also refer members to the extract from the departmental officials’ briefing to the Committee on 18 February 2009. It sets out the two methods of commencing the provisions of the Bill, either by Royal Assent or by commencement Orders made by the Department under clause 54. The extract goes on to note that the commencement arrangements are unusual in that all the substantive provisions of the Bill will be initiated by means of commencement orders so that the commencement of the first Act can be adjusted if necessary to ensure that it remains synchronised with the second Act. That will enable the single legislative programme approved by the Minister and the Executive to be reflected.

Do you have any comment to make on that, Chris?

Mr C Stewart: That is a very accurate description of the approach behind the commencement of the Bill.

Mr B McCrea: Clause 54(2) states that “the Department may by order”.

Is that Order subject to affirmative or negative resolution?

Mr C Stewart: Commencement Orders are not normally subject to any form of Assembly control; they are administrative arrangements. When the Assembly passes a piece of legislation, it is not merely giving us permission to implement it; it is telling us to get on with it. When the Assembly makes its decision, it expects the Department to respond with alacrity and get the commencement Orders made.

Mr B McCrea: You said “not normally”, but the Department would get on with it as and when it sees fit.

Mr C Stewart: As and when the Assembly sees fit.

Mr B McCrea: As I understand it, the synchronisation of the second Bill and whatnot is for you, so it will be the Department that sees fit when the commencement Order is ready to go.

Mr C Stewart: It is the Department that makes the decision as to when to make a commencement Order, but that is not a matter in which we have complete discretion. We have to be mindful of the fact that if the Assembly passes a piece of legislation, there is an expectation that we will implement it at the earliest possible date. I cannot remember the exact circumstances of such cases, but there is a body of case law on instances in which, for no good reason, as the courts thought, a Department sought to delay the commencement of a piece of legislation, but such a delay was found to be improper.

Mr B McCrea: I am checking the procedural possibilities. As it stands, it is automatic that the Department decides when to go. If the Assembly wanted to take a view on it, it would have to propose an amendment.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct.

The Chairperson: The Department is proposing an amendment to clause 54, which relates to clause 29 and schedule 6 in relation to the General Teaching Council.

Mr C Stewart: Those are the additional powers for the General Teaching Council. The original proposal was that those would be introduced by commencement Order, but the advice from the General Teaching Council, which the Minister has accepted, is that there is an urgent need to bring those provisions into effect as quickly as possible — the earliest possible date being the date on which Royal Assent is received.

The Chairperson: That explains why the Department wishes to amend clause 54.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Are members content with clause 55, “Short title”, or do they want something more complicated?

Mr Lunn: Why does it say that this Act “may” be cited instead of “shall” be? Is there a legal reason?

Mr C Stewart: It is the way he normally does these things. The Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 contains an explanation of the different uses of “may” and “shall”.

Mr Lunn: Can we have a 50-page report on that?

Mr C Stewart: If you insist. I would struggle to keep it down to 50 pages, but we will do our best.

Mr B McCrea: When were those uses defined?

Mr C Stewart: It was defined in the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954.

The Chairperson: Earlier, you referred to the legislation governing the funding arrangements for schools, which will be revisited when the Department reviews the common funding formula. Surely that would be an element of the legislation that governs how the Department pays education and library boards — as they were then — which, subsequently, pass the money on to schools.

Mr C Stewart: Yes and no is the unhelpful reply. I am over-simplifying, but the common funding formula defines how much money schools get and what they get it for. However, in legislation there are Byzantine arrangements for the mechanisms by which schools receive their money under the common funding formula. At its simplest, controlled maintained schools receive delegated budgets, and others receive maintenance grants. They get comparable amounts of money to do comparable things, but they get them through different legislative routes, to which differing degrees of control and administration are applied.

In pursuit of the policy of maximising the autonomy of schools, the Minister may, at some point, decide to try to move all schools to grants rather than delegated budgets.

The Chairperson: We will move on to the schedules. We plan to conclude our clause-by-clause scrutiny so that we can consider the Department’s amendments. The plan is that we will break for lunch at 12.30 pm, and reconvene at 1.00 pm.

The Committee considered all the provisions of schedule 1, “The education and skills authority”, along with clause 1. The Committee’s consideration to date is recorded in paragraph 26 onward of the draft report. Schedule 2 is the transfer to the education and skills authority of staff employed by boards of governors. At its meeting on 4 March 2009, the Committee received a written and oral briefing from officials on schedules 1 to 5. If members wish to remind themselves of that briefing, copies are available from the Committee staff. We are at paragraph 273 of the draft report, which notes the comments of the South Eastern Education and Library Board and the Department’s subsequent response. Are there any comments on schedule 1 or schedule 2?

Mr B McCrea: We have already discussed schedule 2.

The Chairperson: The briefing paper is available if members want to remind themselves of what was said.

Schedule 3 is the “Transfer of assets, liability and staff of dissolved bodies”. Remember, the draft report is exactly that: a draft report of what will be approved by the Committee to go to debate in the Assembly. Schedule 3 is covered from paragraph 276 onwards. Members will see that paragraphs 277 and 278 of the draft report set out some of the issues that the Committee raised with officials, particularly the costs involved and the tax positions arising from those transfers.

Chris, is there any update on stamp duty, VAT and land registry fees?

Mr C Stewart: There is, Chairman. I look to my colleague to keep me correct on the detail because she has been pursuing it. In essence, there is not a problem. We explored it with our colleagues in the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Treasury and found that no issue of tax liability arises. I think that one area where we still need absolute confirmation is corporation tax.

Ms Eve Stewart (Department of Education): We have been advised by one area of HM Revenue and Customs that the ESA should not be subject to corporation tax. However, HMRC wants to check that out with its policy and legal people, and we are waiting for them to come back to us on that.

Mr C Stewart: At this stage, we are satisfied that there are no difficulties in the pipeline.

The Chairperson: In February, Chris, I think, assured the Committee that he was talking to colleagues in the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Treasury to minimise the effect that the transfer of assets has on the Department’s budget and on the public purse.

Mr C Stewart: That remains the case.

The Chairperson: Have we any ideas when we will have clarification from HMRC?

Ms E Stewart: We are awaiting a response. Informally, one side of HMRC told us that it does not think that there is a problem. However, HMRC wants to get confirmation of that from its policy side and its legal people.

Mr B McCrea: Given the expenses scandal, it would be very embarrassing if we got caught in capital gains avoidance.

Mr C Stewart: We will endeavour to avoid that.

Mr B McCrea: I am just trying to look after my colleagues.

Mr C Stewart: Colleagues in Departments and agencies were sympathetic to our desire to ensure that we do not adversely affect the education budget by what would amount to no more than circular transitions of public money between one public authority and another, and they reassured us that that is not the effect of the legislation.

The Chairperson: Could we have something from the Department on that? Given that that was a major concern of the Committee's, we want to be satisfied that if an embarrassment or difficulty arose, it could be included in our report.

Mr C Stewart: We will give you a short note in the next day or two on VAT, stamp duty and stamp duty land tax. As soon as we get the final confirmation on corporation tax we will give that to the Committee as well.

The Chairperson: Paragraph 280 of the draft report deals with the proposed departmental amendments to schedule 3, which the Committee received on 4 September. At paragraph 281 the Department proposes that paragraph 2(3)(b) of schedule 3 be omitted since it is no longer necessary as:

“these assets and/or liabilities have already transferred to the new Libraries Authority”

Mr C Stewart: It is simply a bit of tidying up at the suggestion of the Office of the Legislative Counsel, who advised that the provision is no longer required.

The Chairperson: Paragraph 5 of schedule 3 is to be replaced in order to make an amendment to arrangements for the education and skills authority's procedure with regard to reporting on the first set accounts following advice from DFP.

Mr C Stewart: That is correct, Chairman. It is a very technical part of the Bill. In essence, the provisions that we originally asked to be drafted were more onerous than they needed to be with regard to complying with the normal rules set by DFP for those matters. DFP drew that to our attention and the Office of the Legislative Counsel has drafted an amendment, which will place slightly less onerous requirements on the ESA, but ones that still comply fully with what DFP expects on reporting requirements.

The Chairperson: There is the issue of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Mr C Stewart: That, if I recall correctly, is the crux of the change. We had asked for the particular involvement of the Comptroller and Auditor General, which is not required under the rules on Government accounting. We had gone too far.

The Chairperson: Members are content with schedule 3, subject to its being amended as the Department proposes. We will go through the amendments later; at this stage, however, we want to go through the schedule.

Schedule 4 is the “Transfer of certain assets and liabilities of CCMS before appointed day”. Paragraph 284 of the draft report relates to the commencement arrangements for the provision and the reasons for them. Paragraph 285 of the draft report notes that on 4 September the Department provided the Committee with a proposed amendment to paragraph 2(3)(b) of schedule 4, which refers to clause 49, in which the relevant Church authorities are listed. However, clause 49 is being removed. Paragraph 2(3)(b) of schedule 4 refers to:

“the relevant church authorities (as defined in section 49(5))”.

Clause 49(5) defines the “relevant church authorities” as the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Clougher, and so on. Is that a legal or technical point that is required?

Mr C Stewart: The definition of relevant Church authorities?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr C Stewart: Yes, it is. It is simply to identify the Roman Catholic Church. I will remind members of the rationale for the schedule. Unlike the other dissolved bodies, some of the assets of CCMS were not publicly funded. They were provided by the Church, and, on the dissolution of the body, ought to return to the Church.

The schedule provides a mechanism by which to do so. It has been constructed in such a way that assets that ought to be returned to the Church will be identified and returned before the appointed day. Anything that is not returned to the Church goes automatically to the ESA.

The Chairperson: Has an audit of those assets been carried out?

Mr C Stewart: At present, that work is ongoing.

The Chairperson: I have always made the point — which has also been raised by other members — that every sector receives public money. The bottom line is that regardless of whether schools are maintained, controlled, voluntary grammar, or whatever, they have received a substantial amount of public money. In fact, none of them would exist if public money had not been poured into them.

There is the issue of the capital grants that were awarded. Some time ago, we discussed how, after a particular point in time — 1972 — that money became, basically, unrecoverable. Therefore, if a school received money, which it paid into a particular asset, that asset, despite its being paid for by public money, is now owned by a private body. In this case, it belongs to the trustees. I have never been satisfied that that was good practice, irrespective of who has been the recipient.

Mr C Stewart: Let me offer some reassurance. The focus of those particular provisions is not schools or capital grants to schools: it is the office accommodation of CCMS. The net effect of all those proposals is as follows: CCMS assets that were publicly funded will transfer to the ESA; CCMS assets that were funded by the Church will return to the Church.

The Chairperson: At some stage, will we see a list of those assets and how that has been broken down?

Mr C Stewart: Yes. I am sure that we could prevail upon colleagues to provide that for the Committee.

The Chairperson: Are there any further comments on schedule 4, members? Are members content with schedule 4, subject to the amendment that is proposed by the Department? As there are no comments, we shall move on.

Schedule 5 deals with the transfer of certain staff of the Department. Paragraph 287 onwards of the draft report deals with that clause, which makes provision for the transfer of staff from the Department to the ESA. Staff will be afforded protection of their terms and conditions of employment under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006.

In that context, C na G raised a concern about the protection of its staff who will transfer to the ESA. The Department's response is set out at paragraph 288. Of course, that relates to the issue of the hybrid Bill, Chris.

Mr C Stewart: The position remains as advised in that correspondence, Chairman. C na G has a perfectly reasonable expectation that its staff who transfer will receive the same level of protection as staff from other any other organisation. The Minister has given an absolute assurance that that will be the case.

However, for the reasons that have been given to the Committee previously, it is not possible to include provisions to that effect in the Bill. That would have the effect of turning the Bill into a hybrid Bill — a mixture of public and private law. As yet, the Assembly does not have the agreed procedures to take forward a hybrid Bill. Therefore, if we attempted to do what C na G wants, in the way that it has asked, the net result would be a significant delay in the legislation.

However, we can give effect to the request administratively. It is the case that a C na G member of staff who transfers will do so with exactly the same protection as regards his or her pay and conditions and pension entitlement as any other member of staff.

The Chairperson: Have members any further comments? If not, are they content with schedule 5 as it appears in the Bill? As there are no comments, we shall move on.

Schedule 6 is entitled "Schedule 1A to the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998, as inserted". It is dealt with at paragraph 289 of the draft Committee report. Clause 29 and schedule 6 insert a new schedule 1A into the 1998 Order, which makes provision for investigation, hearing and determination of disciplinary cases by the General Teaching Council. The Committee considered clause 29 at its meeting on 10 September. At that stage, it indicated that it is content with the clause. If members have no further comments, we shall move on.

Paragraph 290 of the draft report relates to schedule 7 and is entitled "Minor and consequential amendments". It quotes from a letter from the Minister to the Committee dated 17 June 2009:

"An amendment is proposed to Article 29(6) of the 2006 Education Order. This amendment will enable the Department to put in place the appropriate arrangements to facilitate a new exceptional circumstances procedure in relation to post-primary school admissions."

On 4 September 2009, the Committee received detailed and specific wording of the Department's proposed amendment to schedule 7 in the table of amendments. The accompanying explanation states:

"The most significant amendments relate to an amendment to the Education Order 1997 to place a duty on the ESA to appoint Exceptional Circumstances Tribunals to consider appeals from parents regarding admission to secondary school for their children."

There is a consultation paper in members' information packs entitled 'The School Admissions (Exceptional Circumstances) Regulations (NI) 2010'. Could you take a minute or two, Chris, to expand on that particular amendment? It causes some concern.

Mr C Stewart: I am conscious that it takes us into the area of post-primary transfer, which, from time to time, can be controversial, but there is no change in policy behind this. It is not proposed to change how the procedures that are allowed for in the provisions of the 2006 Order operate. The effect of the amendment proposed here is simply to place the function on the ESA. The 2006 Order set out the functions that were to be carried out, and envisaged that a body, without specifying what that body would be, would be established to take those functions forward. In keeping with the RPA policy, the Minister's view is that the ESA ought to be the body that carries out those functions, and that would be the effect of the amendment. However, the procedures, and the policy behind them, would not change as a result of that.

The Chairperson: Any comments, members? The document, 'The School Admissions (Exceptional Circumstances) Regulations (NI) 2010' is in members' yellow pack. There used to be yellow packs in a particular supermarket, if I remember rightly. Will that document go out for consultation?

Ms E Stewart: Yes, I understand that it is going out for consultation.

The Chairperson: How, therefore, do we end up in a situation whereby we have a Bill going through the House, an amendment is tabled by the Department, and we end up going out to public consultation on an element of that Bill? How can that be? Who is in control of what goes on here?

Mr C Stewart: I can answer that: it is the Minister.

The Chairperson: Well, that is what would cause the concern about the way in which this is being done. I have never seen that done before.

Mr C Stewart: Just to put your mind at rest, the consultation will not be on the Bill but on the regulations that will be made under the new power to be introduced by an amendment to the Bill.

The Chairperson: But if the new power is not brought into place — that is, if the Bill is not endorsed — how can you go out to public consultation on regulations?

Mr C Stewart: If, for whatever reason, the Assembly rejected the amendment, then we would certainly have wasted time and effort in consulting on regulations that we would not be in a position to make. However, in order to get to the point where we have effective arrangements in place at the earliest possible date, we have sought to give the Committee the earliest possible sight of the approach that it is intended to take in the regulations. Yes, it could be argued that we are getting things somewhat out of sequence in showing you the wording of regulations when there is not currently a power to make those regulations, but, of course, that is the very approach that the Committee encouraged us to take in relation to employment matters under the Bill.

The Chairperson: With the greatest respect, it is the earliest possible sight and it is as close as the iceberg was to the Titanic — and we know what happened with that one. Members have just now had sight of the document, and that is the difficulty. The first that I saw of the draft report was when I got the folder this morning. We had no idea about it. Obviously, we are going to have to go through that. Do we know when the regulations will be put out to consultation?

Mr C Stewart: I will have to check on that and come back to you.

The Committee Clerk: The documents say that the consultation ends at the end of October. Earlier, the Committee agreed that it would analyse the outcome of the consultation vis-à-vis the Minister. At that stage, if it so desires, the Committee can receive a presentation.

The Chairperson: Do members have any comments?

Mr B McCrea: Only to say that I share your discomfort, Chairperson.

Mr C Stewart: If members feel that the Department is somehow trying to run away with the game, let me reassure the Committee that it is being given early sight of the draft regulations and that the regulations will not be made until or unless the Assembly approves the power to make them.

The Chairperson: I accept that.

The Committee Clerk: In the bundle of papers, it says that the regulations will be made the day after the Bill becomes law. That is the vision.

Mr C Stewart: They will certainly not be made the day before.

Mr B McCrea: What is the implication if the regulations are not made at that time?

Mr C Stewart: If the regulations are not made at that time there will be no proper procedures in place to deal with exceptional circumstances and appeals. It could be that young people with exceptional circumstances may suffer as a consequence.

Mr B McCrea: I understand that the Minister lectured what she calls the breakaway grammar schools on their transfer arrangements, stating that it was absolutely imperative that exceptional circumstances provisions were put in place.

Mr C Stewart: Members may have a range of views on what they think constitutes appropriate post-primary transfer arrangements. However, I hope that all members will agree that, whatever those arrangements are, where there are exceptional circumstances and appeals there needs to be a robust and effective mechanism for dealing with them. That is what the regulations propose.

Mr B McCrea: Yes, but my point was that schools seem to be being chastised. Perhaps I have got it wrong, but the timing of the regulations seems rather unusual.

Mr C Stewart: It is difficult for me to comment on that. There is a perceived need to put arrangements in place, and this constitutes the earliest possible opportunity to do that.

Mr B McCrea: I will not labour the point. Chris, you know the point that is being made.

The Chairperson: Chris, can you clarify the current position?

Mr C Stewart: I need to check that and come back to you. It is not an area in which I or my team are deeply involved on a day-to-day basis. However, we can provide the Committee with further information.

The Chairperson: Is it simply a case of the current provisions for education and library boards being transferred to the ESA, or is this something different?

Mr C Stewart: I do not think that the provisions that we are talking about have been commenced yet.

Ms E Stewart: No, they have not been commenced yet. The regulations are to do with exceptional circumstances in which a child has, perhaps, a health problem.

The Chairperson: Currently, how is that dealt with? What is the difference between the current arrangements and those proposed in schedule 7?

Ms E Stewart: We would need to check that and come back to you.

Mr B McCrea: Why would you need to bring the regulations forward if there are existing provisions? There must be existing provisions.

Mr C Stewart: There must be existing provisions. However, at the time of the 2006 Order, a need was clearly identified for a different and, one hopes, better approach. For a variety of reasons those provisions have not yet been introduced. One of the reasons for that was that the RPA came along and there was a need to pause, take stock and see what the role of the ESA might be. The conclusion arrived at was that the ESA was the appropriate body to be given those functions. Now, there is a need to get on with that.

Mr B McCrea: The draft regulations state that cases that involve a child's educational ability shall not be considered exceptional circumstances. Is that the substantial point? Are we redefining what exceptional circumstances are?

Mr C Stewart: It is difficult for me to comment in detail because I do not deal with the policy behind that. However, if it would assist the Committee, I will ask colleagues to provide a fuller briefing paper on it.

Mr B McCrea: I want to understand the need for change. I understand, in the first instance, that the Department will have to nominate a body to deal with the matter; that is fine, it will be the ESA. However, the regulations, which are fairly short and simplistic in their outline, say that three things are OK and three things are not. Anyway, you will come back to us on that matter.

The Chairperson: That is why we agreed earlier to ask for a briefing from the Department.

Mr C Stewart: We will arrange that. It is likely to be Dorothy Angus and Paul Price who will provide the substantive information on that. They deal with policy in that area.

The Chairperson: Paragraph 293 of the draft report shows that C na G had raised concerns about schedule 7, and, if members want to refresh their memory, the Department's response is included at paragraph 294. Moreover, the concerns of the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) are outlined in paragraph 295, and the response is included in the following paragraph, in which the Minister indicated that she saw value in adding non-teaching staff and pupils to the list of those persons whom the ESA must consult about a development proposal.

Mr D Bradley: Chris, will you explain how the Department addressed the point made by Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta in relation to trustees of Irish-medium schools?

Mr C Stewart: Will you remind me what that point was, please?

Mr D Bradley: It suggested the need for a provision that gives the trustees of Irish-medium schools a statutory right to be consulted about development proposals that is similar to the right enjoyed by Catholic trustees.

Mr C Stewart: I believe — and colleagues will correct me if I misquote it — that our advice was that that change was not required because the Minister felt that sufficient consultation requirements were already in place. However, at the risk of giving a misleading answer, I will check that and come back to you.

The Chairperson: The NEELB said:

"In relation to Schedule 7 and proposals relating to controlled primary and secondary education, the Board would wish to reserve its position until the outcome of the consultation on RPA Policy Paper 20 is known. Although the general approach as outlined appears sound there may need to be an accommodation depending on the structures that eventually emerge for the management of the controlled estate and the role of the Transferors. The Board notes that in relation to the future of a school, the legislation does not include consultation with non-teaching staff and pupils. Is this not a serious omission?"

Mr C Stewart: I do not know whether we are convinced that it is a serious omission. Consultation with those two parties could, and should — and I am sure that it does — take place. I am not certain that we will be convinced of the need to go one stage further and create a formal requirement in legislation. Although the Minister may not yet be convinced, if the Committee feels strongly about that matter, she will want to consider it.

The Chairperson: From what we gather, the Minister indicated that she saw value in adding non-teaching staff.

Mr C Stewart: I see the value in consultation. Whether or not we need yet more legislation and more requirements on consultation is, perhaps, another matter.

Mr D Bradley: The notes state:

“Paragraph 9(4) of Schedule 7 to the Bill will insert a new article (14) into the 1986 Order, dealing with development proposals. Under that article, the trustees of any school must be consulted about a development proposal that would affect the school.”

Mr C Stewart: That rings a bell.

Mr D Bradley: Has the Committee seen the wording of that?

Mr C Stewart: It is contained in new article 14, which appears on page 49 of the Bill. The particular wording is at line 4 of page 50.

The Chairperson: The Committee will note the concerns that have been raised about the regulations, and we will move on to consider schedule 8, the final schedule to the Bill, which deals with repeals.

Paragraphs 297 to 301 of the Committee’s draft report deal with schedule 8, and I refer members to paragraph 298, which deals with CCMS’s concerns about the repeal of schedule 2 to the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998. The Department’s initial response was that:

“respective roles of boards of governors and the ESA will be set out in schemes of employment.”

However, members will note that the provisions on the role of boards of governors in employment matters are now to be included in the draft regulations being proposed by the Minister. The Department’s paper on employment regulations states that those regulations are based very closely on schedule 2 to the 1998 Order. Chris, that was what you told the Committee last week, and that is now the case in what you have presented to us.

Mr C Stewart: That is exactly the case. Many Committee members were concerned about our original proposal that we would regulate the respective roles of the ESA and boards of governors merely by means of guidance. Many members and stakeholders felt that that was not robust enough, and that it did not provide the clarity and certainty that they were seeking. The Minister has listened to those concerns and agrees that there is a need for subordinate legislation, which has now been proposed.

The Chairperson: The caveat that I would add is around partial consultation with stakeholders. That is a major concern for some Committee members.

Mr C Stewart: I understand that, but I assure the Committee that the Department remains willing to consult any stakeholder who is prepared to engage with it on the matter.

Mr D Bradley: Paragraph 17 of the Department’s submission entitled ‘Review of Public Administration (RPA): Employment Arrangements in the First Education Bill’ states that:

“There may be occasions when the law is unclear, and where it is in the interests of all parties to clarify matters through legal proceedings. Where this is the case, the Department would expect the ESA to support the actions of a board of governors in seeking to clarify the legal position.”

Is the phrase “would expect the ESA” not a little weak? It does not really oblige it to do anything.

Mr C Stewart: If the ESA does not meet the Department’s expectations, then the Department will oblige it.

The Chairperson: Under article 101.

Mr C Stewart: You said it for me.

Mr D Bradley: Is it not possible to make it clear to the ESA in the Bill, without reverting to room 101, sorry article 101?

Mr C Stewart: We could do, but perhaps the key point is that the decision on what to do about the matter is with the boards of governors and not with the ESA. The Department has made clear that it expects the ESA to play a supporting and advisory role in that. If, for whatever reason, the ESA was less than enthusiastic in its support, the right of a board of governors to make the decision that it thought was correct would not be curtailed in any way.

The Chairperson: That concludes this part of our consideration of the Bill. I thank Chris and Eve, who will rejoin us later this afternoon.

The Chairperson: I want to consider the two letters that we received yesterday evening from the Minister and the Department, which have been tabled at B3 in the yellow folder. The letter from the Department responds to many of the outstanding issues raised by the Committee. The letter from the Minister advises the Committee that she will respond shortly on three amendments suggested by Sir Reg Empey, the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and C na G, and responds to the Committee’s letter of 9 September, following on from last week’s meeting regarding the local structures of the ESA and also on schemes of employment.

We will deal with the letter from the Minister first and then with the letter from Eve Stewart. Do members have any comments about the letter from the Minister?

Mr C Stewart: May I offer a point of information that is relevant to one aspect of the Minister’s letter? Unfortunately, just before lunch, I inadvertently misled the Deputy Chairperson in response to one of his questions; I was inaccurate, and I apologise. There were two letters from C na G, and I had forgotten about one of them; their content overlaps to a degree. The Minister replied to one of those letters, but has not yet replied to the other. I apologise for that omission. One issue in that letter remains outstanding, and that is mentioned in the Committee’s paperwork. It is the suggestion about the duty on the boards of governors of Irish-medium schools. I apologise to the Deputy Chairperson for having given him an inaccurate answer.

The Chairperson: Thank you. I appreciate that clarification.

Mr Lunn: Since I have asked for it every week for about 18 months, I should welcome the Minister's increase in the number of members of the ESA board and her commitment to stick to the maximum number, which is 14. That was the limit of my expectations, so I am very pleased about that.

The Chairperson: I am concerned about what the Minister says in today's letter to the Committee; at the end of the paragraph entitled "Membership of the ESA" she says:

"I am not convinced of the need for the possible amendment as discussed by the committee for a further duty, and I am not minded to support it."

I am concerned, because although the membership of the ESA board has been increased to a maximum of 14, education is not the same as education and library boards or health: it is more complex and diverse. If the ESA board is to have the confidence of the education community that it exists to serve, it is essential that it be reflective of that community, whether geographical, sectoral or religious. The worst scenario would be a board that, from day one, is perceived or accused of not being reflective of the community that it exists to serve. I speak as a member of the Committee when I say that the DUP has a severe concern that the Minister is not prepared to view that as a real issue that needs to be addressed if we are to have confidence in the ESA.

I am not convinced either that 14 as a maximum is the best option. Last week, we got into a debate about whether 11 or 14 was the best option. Does anyone have a comment?

Mr B McCrea: The Minister's letter states:

"I remain of the view that the role of the ESA is the management and delivery of services according to the policies of the Minister of the day."

Usually, there is a caveat about the Assembly having some sort of influence on such issues, but that has been dropped. That confirms my view that the ESA is a Trojan horse being used by the Minister to put through policies that are not agreed by significant proportions of the people of Northern Ireland or by education stakeholders. There is a difficulty in that. People should realise that education is an important issue for many people, and a one-size-fits-all approach will not work.

There might have been an opportunity to get broad-based consensus if we had brought more people into the decision-making process, but that is not going to happen. I am concerned about the way in which the Minister intends to appoint people to the ESA board. They will be hand-picked by the Minister of the day and be given terms of reference forbidding independent thought; appointees will be allowed to implement only what the Minister decides. Although the Ulster Unionist Party has attempted to engage responsibly through the scrutiny of the Bill, the Minister's letter does not in any way allay my fears about where the Bill is heading. I do not think that it will be sustainable. I urge departmental officials and the Minister to understand that if we are to make progress, we need to understand the points of views of others.

Mr O'Dowd: I am disappointed and surprised that Basil has based that latest statement, which he has repeated many times in the Committee, on the fact that a line or a sentence has been deleted from a letter. I would not read any intentions into "policies of the Minister of the day." That wording comes from various factors, including scrutiny by the Committee and implementation by the Assembly. The Minister will appoint people to the board in the same way that the Minister of Health appointed people to the various agencies, trusts and boards for which he has responsibility. Such appointment procedures are open to legal challenge by individuals who do not make it through the appointment process and by anybody else who believes that the appointment process has been unfair and does not reflect all the principles of open and fair employment.

It is the same way in which the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure appointed nine councillors to the Library Authority. It is not as though the Minister of Education has pulled an appointment process out of thin air; the appointments process has been approved by the Commissioner for Public Appointments, who will monitor and regulate it. That process is open to judicial review if it does not work. How many safeguards do you require?

You should be open and honest if you are opposing the Bill for political reasons. You say that you are open to persuasion and wish to enter dialogue; however, I am the Sinn Féin spokesperson for education, and you have never once rapped on my door and asked to talk about the Education Bill. You have never approached me to suggest that we sit down and talk about the ESA, party to party.

Mr B McCrea: I have, however, spoken to the Minister of Education and her adviser about several issues. I think that she said that that would not lead anywhere because her mind was made up.

Mr O'Dowd: Is that a direct quotation?

Mr B McCrea: It would not be right to give a direct quotation, but that is the essence of her words. I am open to correction if that is not the case.

It is not sustainable for people to say that there is one view, and only one view, on education. There are fundamental differences of opinion, and I am not saying that one is right and another wrong; I am just saying that the different ways of educating our children should be reflected. My party happens to believe in the primacy of parental choice. I accept that there are other models that can be taken on board. As you say, I have stated it before, but I do not like procedural methods being used to get around policy differences. The scrutiny of the Committee and the oversight of the Assembly amounts to nothing, because there is no possibility of changing things after the event.

You said that I was making this a political issue as though that makes it a dirty issue, but I am here as a political representative; everything that we do here is about politics and trying to find a way forward. If the Bill is used as a way of getting round all the objections, there will be further objections from the community. Phones work both ways, John. I am not aware of you, as Sinn Féin's spokesperson for education and a representative of the Minister, ever coming to me to talk about the matter and attempt to come up with a solution. I am willing to engage if you want to engage.

Mr O'Dowd: I will take you up on that offer, but I will do so as a representative of the party rather than of the Minister.

The member opposite seems to be confused about the role of the ESA. The ESA will not exist to carry out the role of the Committee or the Assembly; it will exist to implement and manage day-to-day educational practices. The implementation of that and the policies and procedures that flow from the ESA will be directed by the Department or the Minister and by the policies and statements that have to be agreed by the Assembly and the Committee.

Perhaps Mr McCrea wants to live in quangoland for the rest of his life. I want to move away from quangos; that is why the Assembly is in place. People are elected to this place to debate politics and to thrash out solutions, and I have no difficulty with what you said in that regard. When I say that you are approaching the Bill from a political point of view, I do not mean left, right, unionist or republican; rather, I mean a tactical position of stopping the Bill because of the Minister who sponsored it. If that is the case, I think that you are making —

Mr B McCrea: That is not what I said. My party is concerned about the Bill because, if I read the letter correctly, it will be used to implement the policies of the Minister of the day.

The problem is that I have no influence on the policies of the Minister of the day; yet many people who talk to me and other Committee members disagree with the policies of the Minister of the day. We will be creating a large bureaucracy, not dissimilar to the Department of Education, to which people can come with good ideas, yet those ideas will be turned down because of what is stated in the regulations.

The Chairperson: I do not want the Committee to become embroiled in difficulties that have arisen in correspondence between the Ulster Unionist Party and Sinn Féin; that is an issue for those parties. I have raised a concern from my party's perspective about the Minister's response. It behoves the parties in the Committee to regard that letter as outlining the Minister's definitive position and vote accordingly on the amendments.

If John's analysis is correct, why did the Catholic bishops intervene on employment issues? They raised genuine concerns that will now be reflected in changes to the Bill. Basil and others are raising genuine concerns about how the Minister's intentions will affect a particular sector or sectors. John, you say that there is nothing wrong and that there is no cause for concern. You advocate that we all sign up because the ESA will deal only with how to organise chairs, cut grass, and so forth.

If that were the case, amendments would have not been proposed by the Minister to deal with the genuine concerns of the Catholic bishops. Therefore, we must take seriously the concerns of members and other organisations who feel that some provisions of the Bill do not reflect their needs as education providers.

Mr O'Dowd: Let me clarify. Basil objects to the Minister's letter because several words are missing from it that had been included in a previous letter. I would not read too much into that. The process, although painstaking, repetitive and sometimes monotonous, has been useful. Perhaps we could have done it differently or more efficiently, but it has been useful.

The Catholic bishops or trustees raised concerns before the process even started, and any genuine concerns should be listened to and, if possible, resolved. Many concerns were resolved as the Bill was being drafted. The ESA is an important body and represents a major change to the education system. Some members' concern is that the ESA will carry out the policies of the Minister of the day: they should remember that the education boards, each with 35 or 40 members, were not policy-making forums; their role was to carry out the policies of the Minister of the day.

The Chairperson: Other elements in the letter include the local structures about which the Minister says:

"The regulations, far from providing certainty and clarity, may merely impose a solution with no guarantee that it will be fit for purpose, or that it will meet evolving local need."

The Minister does not, therefore, accept what the Committee said about putting in place regulations to provide clarity. We sought clarity not so much on the form but on the function of local committees; it was the function that we considered important and we made that distinction. The maximum number of the ESA board members has now increased to 14. Remember, the Minister said that if 11 committees are set up, the chairperson will be one of the members of the ESA.

That would mean someone having to be chairperson of two bodies.

Mr Lunn: There will be 15 members.

The Chairperson: That is correct; there will be 15 altogether, including the chairperson.

Mr O'Dowd: It is important that the record reflect accurately what the Committee has done thus far. The Committee did not agree on an amendment; it suggested an amendment to the Minister.

The Chairperson: Yes, and that amendment has been rejected. Therefore, it is up to the Committee to decide whether it should propose its own amendment, and we will come to that.

Mr B McCrea: What is the position on that? Since the Committee is unlikely to get consensus on those issues, can it propose an amendment by majority vote?

The Committee Clerk: Yes; a paper has been circulated to members dealing with that issue. The Committee must examine each of the 55 clauses and 8 schedules and decide on three possible options: first, the Committee must decide whether the clause as drafted stands — in other words with no amendments; secondly, the Committee can decide on the Minister's amendments; thirdly, the Committee can propose its own amendments. Consensus is neither here nor there; any vote will be taken on a majority basis, as Mr McCrea suggested.

Those are the three possible decisions on each clause. The paper that has been circulated spells that process out and it is a process that must be completed by 24 September 2009, or by 25 September 2009 at the latest if the Committee decides to hold another meeting. However, that is for the Chairperson to discuss with members.

Mr B McCrea: Would any vote that we take be recorded?

The Chairperson: Yes.

I want to raise concerns about the employment arrangements in the Bill. In the final paragraph of the Minister's letter of 16 September 2009, she states:

"I welcome the Committee's support for the amended employment arrangements".

That support, I feel, must be with the caveat that concern was expressed at the Committee meeting earlier today. From our discussion with Chris Stewart, the Committee learned that it seems that only one sector engaged in consultation with the Department, and in saying yea or nay to the Minister's proposed amendments. That is gravely concerning, and raises a further concern regarding what the Bill proposes.

I wish to consider members' views on the letter from Eve Stewart, which is a summary of some of the concerns and issues that were raised on clauses and schedules. One of the core elements of the letter, which provides new information, concerns the controlled schools ownership body that Basil raised earlier. There is concern about the timing of the establishment of that body and how it can be focused, given the very short timescale for establishing the ESA.

If members do not wish to raise issues, given that some of those issues were referred to earlier in the Committee's examination of clause 12 and 50, I suggest that we continue our clause-by-clause scrutiny.

That done, the Committee will next week go through clauses 1 to 55 and schedules 1 to 8, clause by clause, following the procedure that the Committee Clerk outlined earlier. I am aware that the process is laborious and repetitive, but we had to go through the Bill clause by clause. All we have to do now is go through the departmental amendments, and that will conclude the process.

The Committee Clerk: That is correct. Basil McCrea raised the business of the Committee's formal clause-by-clause decision making on the Bill; that process will be recorded in the Committee's report that will go before the Assembly for Consideration Stage.

The secretariat needs direction from the Committee. We are hearing individual members' concerns about what amendments might be drafted. If the Committee is considering an amendment, members need to know all the possible options.

I will put any amendments that have been discussed by the Committee against the relevant clauses. For example, suggestions have been made to the Minister, and the question is whether or not the Committee considers those amendments next week when it deliberates on the clauses. I will put all the options before members, and the Committee can decide which option to go for.

The Chairperson: That is not to say that the Committee agrees to the amendments. It is a scoping exercise in light of the letter from the Minister and the Committee's deliberations to date. Any possible Committee amendments will be in addition to the Department amendments that we will consider.

The Committee Clerk: Yes.

The Chairperson: If members are content with that, they will have the amendments before next Wednesday.

Mr B McCrea: Let me make sure that I have got it right: you are suggesting that we give a scoping exercise amendment to the Clerk before next Wednesday. Do those amendments have to be technically competent?

The Chairperson: No; I do not mean that members should submit amendments. For example, the Minister said that she is not minded to establish committees; therefore the Committee must decide, having regard to its deliberations on the matter, whether we still want to propose an amendment.

Mr B McCrea: There are some proposed amendments to which we have tentatively agreed.

The Chairperson: In our letter, we set out our concerns about local committees, the schemes of employment and the membership of the ESA, to which the Minister said no. However, the Committee needs to make a decision. Therefore we are asking the Committee staff to draw up amendments that reflect our concerns and on which we can vote. It can be confusing. However, we are trying to simplify the process so that no one can accuse the Committee of not doing what it proposed to do.

We are at the final stage of our consideration of the Bill, and time is not on our side. I suspect that we will have to go through this next Wednesday, and again on Thursday morning. The Committee could meet for two hours on Thursday morning to go through clauses 1 to 55 and schedules 1 to 8. That would allow the Committee to come to a definitive position on the Bill.

Mr B McCrea: I agree with that. However, next Thursday is difficult for me as there is a meeting of the full Policing Board.

The Chairperson: OK. We will have to meet on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr D Bradley: Will the Policing Board meeting last all day?

Mr B McCrea: It will last until 3.30 pm or 4.00 pm.

The Chairperson: What time does it start?

Mr B McCrea: It will start at 9.30 am. I might be able to do an afternoon. I would accommodate people.

The Chairperson: The Committee needs to decide whether it will meet on Wednesday afternoon as well as on Wednesday morning. We could have a break for lunch and meet for two hours after lunch.

Mr B McCrea: I have advance notice, and I am happy.

The Chairperson: I appreciate that. It is an important issue for you.

Mr B McCrea: Yes, it is. The Committee Clerk will do his level best to give us sight of our tentative amendments well before Wednesday.

The Committee Clerk: I shall attempt to put before the Committee all that has been considered during these deliberations, particularly with regard to communications with the Department. For example, there have been various discussions on the number of ESA members, and there may be different views within the Committee on the Minister's proposal to change the range of membership to 11 to 14.

Mr B McCrea: Given that we may have to talk with other colleagues who are not here, it would be better to get that information before 5.00 pm on Tuesday. However, I know that that puts a bit of pressure on you.

The Committee Clerk: The intention is to put the information in the black folders for Wednesday's meeting. Members will get that folder first thing on Monday morning, perhaps. That is an extra task that I am putting on my colleagues.

Mr B McCrea: Alyn, the Assistant Assembly Clerk, looks as though he is up for it. [Laughter.]

Mr Lunn: To get some advance notice, are we talking about meeting on Wednesday afternoon or Thursday morning?

The Chairperson: We had better make that decision now. I appreciate the difficulties, and I try to be as helpful as possible. Is it better to say that we will meet on Wednesday morning, break for lunch, and come back at 1.00 pm or 1.30 pm, with the purpose of going through the amendments?

Mr Lunn: It seems to work reasonably well. We are all here except the DUP, so it is working great. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: But I am still here, Trevor, so you will not get past me. I am not as liberal as you think. [Laughter.] OK, so we will meet on Wednesday afternoon.

Mr B McCrea: Wednesday afternoon suits me better.

The Chairperson: That is fair. Unless someone says that they have a real problem with that, we will try to work along those lines.

The Committee Clerk: So the Committee will start at 10.00 am on Wednesday and move through into the afternoon, as we did this morning.

Mr B McCrea: I do not mind what time the Committee starts, if that is of any help.

Mrs M Bradley: We can start at 9.00 am, if you like.

Mr Lunn: Do not start that: 10.00 am is fine.

Mr B McCrea: We will leave it that we will start at 10.00 am.

The Chairperson: OK, we will start at 10.00 am.

Let us move swiftly to the departmental amendments to clauses 1 to 23. I refer members to the table of proposed departmental amendments and the Department's spreadsheet.

Mr B McCrea: Are we noting the amendments or considering them?

The Chairperson: We will just consider them briefly.

Mr B McCrea: And next week we will say yea or nay to them?

The Chairperson: Yes. If there are any points that need clarification, Chris will be here. Obviously, Chris will not be involved in the decisions, so, at that stage, there will be no requirement for Chris to be present. We will have a farewell gift for you, Chris, so do not worry.

Mr C Stewart: I do not know what we will do on Wednesdays.

The Chairperson: Members will recall that clause 2 deals with the ESA's functions and general duties. The first amendment is to clause 2(2)(b), which is referred to in paragraph 72 of the draft report. It explains the background to the Department's amendment, which seeks to address a concern raised by a number of stakeholders. Do members have any comments?

Mr B McCrea: I remember when we discussed that matter, but I might have missed the reply to the suggestion that the word "mental" be included in that paragraph. Was there a reply?

The Committee Clerk: That is a separate proposal in another clause later in the Bill.

Mr B McCrea: That is OK. The Bill imposes a duty on the ESA to contribute to children's moral, cultural, social, intellectual and physical development. I suggested — and there was some support for it — that given the impact of mental-health issues, mental development should be included. I remember that issue being raised, and I remember people saying that it was a good idea. I do not recall whether we received a response.

Mr C Stewart: The response is in Eve's letter of 15 September 2009.

Ms E Stewart: The duty for mental health rests with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS), and it is not appropriate for two Departments' duties to overlap.

Mr D Bradley: The Department of Education provides health education, social and personal development and professional counselling, which is aimed at improving the mental health of children, especially those who are under particular pressures. That defeats your argument that mental health is solely confined to the sphere of the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. It clearly is not. The Department of Education has a responsibility, too; that has been highlighted by the fact that the Department has brought in professional staff to help young people after the terrible spate of suicides in various parts of the North in the past number of years.

Mr C Stewart: We would not for one moment argue that mental health is solely the preserve of our colleagues in health and social services or that education does not have a key role to play. For the reasons that Dominic has given, it clearly does. However, the Minister is concerned that placing two almost identical duties on two separate Departments will be a recipe for a lack of clarity, and for confusion, overlap and, perhaps, unseemly tussles between the two Departments about which is responsible for what. It corresponds with the view that DHSSPS colleagues have taken on the special education review. For the same reason, they resisted the notion that health and social services bodies should have a statutory duty in relation to special education.

Mr D Bradley: Using that argument, you could say that, because the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is responsible for sport, PE should not be taught in schools, or that, because it is responsible for culture, culture should not be included in this clause. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr C Stewart: We do not seek to have it both ways. However, there is a difference between recognising the role of education in the various spheres of development and a statutory duty for mental well-being, which, I think, members had originally proposed.

Mr D Bradley: The fostering and development of good mental well-being is as much a part of education as intellectual development.

Mr C Stewart: It depends whether we are talking about — to use the common shorthand — mental health or mental development. If we are talking about mental development, the Department argues that it is covered by the requirement for intellectual development. If we are talking about mental health, we argue that that represents an overlap with our colleagues in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

Mr B McCrea: I fully support Dominic's point. Approximately 20% of young people suffer from some sort of depression or face a mental challenge, and there are unfortunate incidents of suicide, and so on. We have already talked, even earlier in today's meeting, about sexual education and domestic violence, which are the preserve of the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. However, those issues affect education as well.

I truly believe that an emerging theme is the importance of young people's mental well-being. If we ask schools to take a role in that — which we appear to be doing, because they have counsellors — we ought to give them the remit to do so. Otherwise, they, or the ESA, will be carrying out work that we have not asked them to do. The inclusion of that one word may sound insignificant: however, if we want to be progressive, it is an important way forward.

Mr D Bradley: We are splitting hairs as regards the definitions of mental development, intellectual development, and so on. There is a close relationship between mental and intellectual development and mental health. If a child does not have good mental health, that has a detrimental influence on his or her mental and intellectual development. Therefore, if schools can help to foster — not be solely responsible for — good mental health in their programmes, which they do already in their social and personal development programmes, that enhances schools' ability to nurture children's mental and intellectual development.

Mr C Stewart: You are coming dangerously close to taking my side in the argument. It is important that we do split hairs. If we do not have precision and clarity about the legislative duties that we place on organisations, it is a recipe for extreme difficulty down the line which, ultimately, would only be resolved by the courts.

It is absolutely correct to say that education services have a role to play in fostering mental health. You are absolutely correct to say that in the absence of mental health, intellectual development would certainly be impaired. In the absence of physical health, intellectual development would certainly be impaired. However, there is no proposal to make the education and skills authority responsible for the physical well-being of children and young people. There is a responsibility for it to contribute to children's physical development. The two matters are quite different.

Mr Lunn: I am listening to all that with interest. I am not sure whether we are talking about well-being, health or development. Basil started off talking about mental health, which appears to me to be, primarily, a matter for the Department of Health.

If the ESA manages to make a positive contribution to children's spiritual, moral, cultural, social, intellectual and physical development, surely that should go a long way towards, at least, providing a level of mental well-being. When you move into mental health, that is a different matter. That clause will help to produce happy, well-rounded, holistically perfect children.

The Chairperson: Is there a way out of that by means of delineation between function and duty? At present, we are talking about function under clause 2. However, clause 23 is about general duty. Can something be included there? Would that help? Perhaps, I am answering my own question. Is clause 23 merely a restatement of what appears in clause 2(2)(a)?

I understand what you are saying, Chris, about who would, ultimately, have responsibility. However, even with current legislation, we already have that problem because people try to argue that something is the responsibility of the Health Department, while others argue that it is the responsibility of the Education Department.

Mr C Stewart: I believe that if the focus were to shift to clause 23, it would make matters worse, because it deals with the general duty of the Department, rather than that of the ESA. Certainly, if there are two Departments with overlapping statutory duties, it raises all sorts of issues.

The concern that members have expressed is a real one. No one would disagree with that. It is the need for a range of statutory authorities, which have a contribution to make, to operate in a joined-up way, and not to spend their time arguing with each other about who is responsible for what. I do not believe that there is any disagreement about the problem. However, there might be disagreement on what would be an effective solution.

It is our contention that overlapping statutory duties are not an effective solution. A better solution might lie in seeking some sort of compulsion on the ESA and health authorities to co-operate. That might take us into the realms of community planning, which would bring a third Department, our colleagues in the Department of the Environment (DOE), into the equation.

Mr B McCrea: Perhaps it is late in the day to be going back over the issue, but a tree in Hillsborough was cut down without telling anyone because a second person was found hanged from it. A 14-year-old child hanged herself because she was depressed. I deal with such incidents all the time, and I do not know what to say on those occasions. The same thing happened in Dromore. If we consider the effect on the school, community, and so forth, the loss of a child who has taken his or her life is simply devastating.

That is a genuine concern that educationalists should be picking up on. Child psychologists and others are involved but we should also take some responsibility. To pick up on Dominic's argument, it could be argued that spiritual and moral development are not the business of education and are the responsibility of the Churches. The similar argument that could be made about culture is that it is the responsibility of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure and is none of the Department of Education's business. It could be argued that physical development is the responsibility of the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, and not the Department of Education. It is not a matter of semantics, but a change in the way that schools should be seeking to bring up young people.

Dominic is right in saying that if some young people are either physically or mentally unwell, that will have a hugely detrimental impact on their development. That impact could spread to colleagues, friends, and so forth. Whether the issue is included in the Bill or not, the problem will persist and the schools will have to deal with it, but without any support. I am simply saying that, if we are seeking to be progressive by tackling a modern and emerging issue, the Department of Education, through its agent, the ESA, and the schools should address the issue of mental well-being.

The Chairperson: The Committee will give a joint presentation with the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, probably in October, based on Professor Ferguson's report that deals with health and education. Work is, therefore, ongoing. Speaking personally, I would not trust the ESA and the Department of Education with the issue of spiritual well-being, which is why my children are being educated in an independent Christian school, but I will not go into that. The fact that it is mentioned in the Bill does not cause me undue concern but the fact that another sector is not mentioned is a huge issue and a matter of concern.

Mr D Bradley: I would be happy to insert the word "mental" between social and intellectual, so that it would read: social, mental, intellectual and physical development. There is a difference between the mind and intellect. Intellect is a function of the mind, but there is more to the mind than purely intellect. Someone may function adequately intellectually but suffer from poor mental health.

Mr C Stewart: I will not second-guess what he will say, but I strongly suspect that legislative counsel would regard that as a tautology.

Mr D Bradley: What the Office of the Legislative Counsel regards as a tautology may differ from what people living in the real world regard as a tautology.

Mr B McCrea: What is the Ulster Scots version of tautology, as a matter of interest?

The Chairperson: It might be codology.

Chris, will you explain how the Office of the Legislative Counsel defines tautology?

Mr C Stewart: It defines it as the unnecessary repetition of two terms that have the same meaning.

The Chairperson: Chris, that is most impressive.

Mr D Bradley: I have just explained that mind and intellect do not have the same meaning. Any of the terms concerned are open to interpretation, particularly moral and spiritual. We have heard from the Chairperson that he would offer an alternative interpretation of spiritual.

Mr C Stewart: The usual approach that legislative counsel and other draftsmen take is that where a term such as that is not sufficiently, clearly and universally understood by the right-thinking man in the street, a specific definition is included. Where, by your argument, two terms are very close, or perhaps two different dimensions of the same thing, and where they are both to be mentioned in the same sentence, then we have to define them both.

Mr Lunn: I think that Dominic has got it in one. We are nearly there. If we put the word "mental" in clause 2(2)(a) rather than the words "mental health", it will mean mental development because the word "development" appears at the end of the list.

Mr C Stewart: Mental development as an alternative to intellectual development would, I am sure, be perfectly acceptable. However, that does not answer Basil's point; mental development it is not the same as mental health.

Mr Lunn: I am struggling to see the difference between mental and intellectual; I think that they overlap. However, as long as we are not talking about mental health and intruding on the Health Department's patch, I am more than happy. I cannot see any harm in it; we are talking about mental development, spiritual development, moral development and cultural development.

Mrs M Bradley: I think it is important for young people that we find some way of getting that wording in. Any youth groups that I know of are working with young people with mental-health problems to try to give what support they can to those who avail themselves of their facilities. How do we include the matter in the Bill? We could include the phrase "health and well-being"; perhaps that is not strong enough to cover all sorts of health problems.

Mr C Stewart: My concern is that that would be too strong.

Mrs O'Neill: A lot of good work on mental health is being carried out jointly by the Health Department and the Education Department. In particular, there is a focus on some sort of work programme for mental-health issues to be dealt with in schools.

All the aspects of development that are mentioned in clause 2(2)(a) contribute to the overall well-being of a person. The clause takes a whole-person approach, and that is good. However, PlayBoard springs to mind as an example of something that is passed between the Health Department and the Education Department because we are not sure who is responsible for it. Chris, are you saying that we could end up in a similar situation with this provision?

Mr C Stewart: That could happen, but another issue could arise if you give an education body a specific legal duty around mental health. At the moment, there is joint participation and working by the two sectors, but, in the area of mental health, the overall priorities are determined and led by the Health Department, which has the greater professional expertise in that area. If there are two bodies with similar duties, that will create rivalry. The Health Department and the Department of Education would both be bidding for scarce resources in the mental-health field, and arguing about where the priorities ought to be. It strikes me that that is not going to provide an effective solution to the sorts of problems that Basil quite correctly pointed to.

The Chairperson: Surely that is an admission that the two Departments cannot come to an amicable arrangement as to what ought to be done. It is not a definitive interpretation. If you take Dominic's point, the word "mental" would be used in the context of development and not in the context of health. That may not go far enough for Basil, but it would, at least, put the onus on the ESA to make sure that it pays due regard to mental development — I do not know whether we want to get into that. At least the word “mental” would be included in the clause. If it is not included, it will not even be considered.

Mr C Stewart: I understand that, and I understand that it might provide some reassurance to members and, perhaps, the public at large. Forgive me, however, if I look at the matter through a civil servant’s eyes. Our job, when not dealing with legislation, is to make the best possible case for funding for education, to argue that it is the most important area for the Assembly to consider and to ask the Assembly to give us lots of money. If Eve and I were transferred to the Health Department tomorrow, we would do exactly the same job arguing for its priorities. Government always face the difficulty of allocating scarce resources between competing priorities. If we set up a situation whereby two Departments are making rival bids or arguments for the same thing, that will not solve the problem.

Mr B McCrea: I think that the mental well-being of children in schools should be a fundamental responsibility of the Department of Education. I do not think that the issue can be addressed as well in other areas. I realise that that may involve a change in policy, and one which may have to be debated elsewhere, but I cannot get away from the fact that the mental well-being of children is inextricably linked with their overall well-being and their educational advancement. Indeed, the Committee has received papers on that fundamental issue, and we attended an event in the Long Gallery.

I am telling you now, folks, in the gentlest and nicest way possible, that whether you propose an amendment or not, I will be bringing an amendment to the House on the issue. The schools have been placed in an invidious position, and the Committee ought to give them the support that they require. Schools are best placed to tackle some of those issues, and they should have the support of their colleagues in the Department of Health. I am not suggesting that teachers should go to the hospitals to speak to patients there. My point is that children are in their teachers’ care, and there are serious ramifications if mental-health issues are not picked up on. We, as part of the education system, should be progressing that issue. My feelings on that issue are as strong as Mary’s.

Mr D Bradley: I wish to make a proposal that reflects what Chris said earlier. I would be reasonably happy if the Committee proposed replacing the word “intellectual” with “mental” in clause 2(2)(a). I do not know whether Basil would be happy with that. To my mind, the word “mental” is a much more inclusive word. It includes intellectual development and the development of emotional intelligence, which is key to good mental health.

Mr B McCrea: I would have a difficulty with the word “intellectual” being removed from that clause altogether. The whole idea of a school is that it should enhance people’s intellectual ability. I know that Dominic is seeking a compromise, and I am not averse to that, but I feel that I should raise that point.

The Chairperson: In light of that conversation, and if Dominic is happy with the suggestion, can we ask the Committee Clerk and his staff to formulate an amendment that we could consider as a Committee? I am very conscious of the timing issue with respect to the Bill Office, as we are at a critical stage. However, if that amendment could be produced by next week, the Committee would be able to consider it.

Mr B McCrea: OK. Thank you.

The Chairperson: That discussion was very useful. Let us move on to consider clause 2(2)(b), to which the Department is proposing an amendment. That amendment clarifies that the duty on the ESA in relation to youth services is similar to the duty in relation to schools and educational services. Are members content with the amendment?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Of course, that is subject to the amendment being brought forward to include the word “mental”, or whatever form of words is agreed.

Mr Lunn: Does what we are talking about apply to clause 2(2)(a) rather than clause 2(2)(b)?

The Chairperson: It would apply to clause 2(2)(a).

Mr Lunn: It follows, then, that if the Committee found a wording that suited it in clause 2(2)(a) —

The Chairperson: The Committee would have to amend clause 2(2)(b).

Mr Lunn: The Department would obviously agree to change it. If that is the case, would the Department then also agree to change clause 23? It uses the same wording as clause 2(2)(a) except that instead of the word “contribute”, clause 23 uses the word “promote”.

Mr C Stewart: I think that it would be essential that the general duty of the Department matches the general duty of the ESA. Therefore, whatever changes the Assembly decides to make will, no doubt, apply to both.

The Chairperson: Are members content with that?

The Department proposes another amendment to clause 2, inserting a new clause 2(4A) to place a duty on the ESA to encourage and facilitate Irish-medium education. I must say that I have an issue with the amendment.

Mr D Bradley: May I ask Chris why the Department uses the terminology “Irish-speaking school” and not “Irish-medium school”?

Mr C Stewart: “Irish-speaking school” is the terminology in the Education (Northern Ireland) 2006 Order.

The Chairperson: Do members have any other comments?

Mr B McCrea: Yes, just the expected one, that an equality issue is involved. One must try to deal with all sectors. The trouble is that it raises difficulties if one sector is included and others are left out.

The Chairperson: I have an issue with the fact that the legislation places a duty on the Department to encourage two particular sectors: the Irish-medium and the integrated sector. There are other sectors, including the maintained and controlled sectors. Since the Minister tells us that she wants equality, we must strive for equality. I do not think that the new clause 2(4A) helps to achieve equality.

Mr D Bradley: I beg to disagree. The reason that Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta wanted the new clause included is partly historical; it is not an attempt, on behalf the Irish-medium sector, to lord it over any other sector. Because the Irish-medium education is relatively young in comparison to other sectors, with the possible exception of the integrated sector, it was left out — not always deliberately — and provision was not made for Irish-medium education in the various policies of the Department of Education and other educational bodies, such as the CCEA. There was a feeling in the sector, particularly with Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta, that it wanted to be sure that in future under the new educational body, the ESA, there would be no repeat of such neglect. The sector felt that the best way of assuring itself that it would not be neglected was to ask for new clause 2(4A). .

Mr B McCrea: I have no problem with tackling the issue to find a solution. However, had an amendment come forward that:

“the ESA shall be tasked with encouraging and facilitating the development of education among white, Protestant middle-class schoolchildren who live on the Malone Road”, there would have been an outcry because that is not fair.

Mr D Bradley: That would be a racist proposal, and it is wrong to compare it with what has been proposed.

Mr B McCrea: It was not a proposal; it was designed to highlight the dangers of singling out individual issues. Although I can be won over by your argument about the historical problems, and I am sympathetic to finding a resolution, if that proposal is included on its own it will be misinterpreted. It is counterproductive. If the Irish-medium sector wants to address certain issues, it should find a way to do that; but this approach will cause problems.

Mr D Bradley: To all intents and purposes, the ESA and the Department have that responsibility already.

The Chairperson: Why, then, is the amendment necessary?

Mr D Bradley: I have already explained why it is necessary: historically, the experience was that the Department did not always discharge its responsibility to the Irish-medium sector; not always through deliberate neglect, but often through lack of forethought.

Miss McIlveen: Is it a matter of perception by the Irish-medium sector that it is not being provided for, and is the amendment necessary?

Mr C Stewart: Those are matters of policy on which it would not be appropriate for me to comment.

Mr D Bradley: I will comment if you want, Michelle: it was not perception; it was experience. The sector thought that the amendment was one way of ensuring that there would not be a repetition of what happened under the Department up until now.

Miss McIlveen: Basil made the point that that sector had a loud enough voice to have the ear of the Minister to have such an amendment included that another sector might not have had.

Mr D Bradley: I think that it was I who promoted that amendment on behalf of Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta through the Committee or through a letter to the Department.

The Chairperson: When C na G was before the Committee it gave a cautious welcome to a suggestion by one Committee member that a duty should be placed on the ESA to facilitate and develop all sectors. Do you remember?

Mr Lunn: I am glad to see that the suspicion that I sometimes refer to is a two-way street. It seems to me that the first line of —

Mr D Bradley: I am sorry; I did not quite catch what you meant.

Mr Lunn: I have frequently accused the other side of the House, so to speak, of being suspicious of the Minister’s intentions. Now, I find that —

Mr D Bradley: Everybody is. [Laughter.]

Mr Lunn: Not precisely; but surely that clause covers all grant-aided schools, including Irish-medium schools. I am not without sympathy for what Dominic is saying, but the clause as it stands does the job that it is meant to do, and it surely —

The Chairperson: And there is no requirement for the amendment.

Mr Lunn: There must be some other way, apart from the amendment. I could argue that another amendment, say 2(4B), should facilitate and encourage integrated schools, but there is no such need. There must be another way to hold the Department to account if it neglects one sector, whether the Irish-medium sector or any other. I do not see the need for the amendment.

The Chairperson: Do you want to comment, Chris?

Mr C Stewart: I will, with the caveat, of course, that anything that I say is not an attempt to justify or promote a particular policy line but merely to explain what the Minister is attempting to do. Dominic accurately summarised C na G's argument, which the Minister has accepted. The purpose of that clause is not to get the ESA to promote one form of education at the expense of another. It is to recognise that Irish-medium education has particular needs and that in order to meet those needs, the functions that the ESA discharges — and the new clause does not give it any new functions — need to be discharged in a particular way. That is the meaning of the words to which Trevor referred: its functions relating to grant-aided schools. The plain English explanation of clause 2(4A), if I could attempt one, is that in doing what it does for schools, the ESA must recognise that Irish-medium schools have particular needs.

The Chairperson: That could be said of the other sectors. The Department's own report identifies underachievement among working-class Protestant boys. It could be argued that a duty should be placed on the ESA with regard to controlled schools, as its own research shows there to be a huge problem there. Why can we not argue for equality? Why should we argue for one sector over another?

That is the problem that the amendment creates. I take Trevor's point: the clause is sufficient without the amendment.

Mr C Stewart: It is not for me to argue for or against a particular policy line.

The Chairperson: I appreciate that.

Mr C Stewart: The Minister's thinking reflects the fact that the needs of Irish-medium education arise from the fact that teaching and learning are carried out through the Irish language. In areas such as examinations or curriculum support, the one-size-fits-all approach is unsuitable. In order to encourage and facilitate the development of education in those schools, the ESA must adopt an approach that recognises their needs, which, many argue, are unique.

The Chairperson: OK. I take it from the discussion that members are not content, at this stage, with the Department's amendment to insert proposed new clause 2(4A).

Mr D Bradley: Some of them are not.

The Chairperson: Some of them are.

Mr Lunn: Some of them are still reflecting.

The Chairperson: The next proposed amendment is to clause 3. We might get to the end if we concentrate for the next few minutes. Members will recall that clauses 3 to 12 deal with the ESA as a single employer of all staff in grant-aided schools and schemes of employment. Members should refer to paragraphs 87 to 91 of the draft report. We have already had some discussion on this issue. Do members have any comments?

I am gravely concerned that there has been consultation with one sector but not with another. The voluntary grammars, represented by the GBA, have not had any consultation or contact with the Department to ascertain its views. I stand to be corrected, but I assume that this amendment has been approved by the trustees of the maintained sector or it would not have got this far.

Mr C Stewart: Not necessarily, Chairman. The trustees have not yet given a formal response to the Minister, but informal contact with representatives of that sector suggests that they feel that the amendment is on the right lines. I understand that the Minister is due to meet the GBA this week. Unfortunately, that organisation, in giving evidence to the Committee, indicated that it did not wish to have contact with departmental officials.

The Chairperson: Will those discussions take place?

Mr C Stewart: The Minister intends to meet the GBA this week.

The Chairperson: If we engage with stakeholders, we have a duty to engage with them all.

Mr C Stewart: I agree. Our door is open to all stakeholders.

Mr Lunn: Did the GBA give any reason for not conducting talks?

Mr C Stewart: If memory serves, its representatives gave two contrasting reasons. The first was that they were too busy; the second was that they did not feel that they would hear anything new.

Mr Lunn: That is amazing.

The Chairperson: If an organisation takes that view, can you consult one stakeholder but not another?

Mr C Stewart: We welcome consultation with any and all stakeholders; however, I cannot force the GBA to meet me.

Miss McIlveen: I missed that earlier. Has the Department not made any approaches to the GBA since it made its presentation to the Committee?

Mr C Stewart: No.

Miss McIlveen: Because of comments that were made to the Committee?

Mr C Stewart: We have indicated to the GBA that we are prepared to meet it at any time to discuss the issues.

The Chairperson: Was the text of the amendment sent to the GBA?

Mr C Stewart: No.

Miss McIlveen: Therefore there has been no contact whatsoever between —

Mr C Stewart: Not since the GBA ended contact.

The Chairperson: OK. Are members content, at this stage, with the Department's proposed amendment? I am certainly not content.

We move to clause 4, which relates to employment schemes for grant-aided schools. Members will recall stakeholders' concerns on the issue of employment schemes. The Minister now proposes to amend clause 4 by inserting the following at the end:

“(4) The Department may by regulations make provision as to the form and content of employment schemes.”

This matter is covered in paragraphs 93 to 111 of the draft report. The Department's employment paper and draft regulations have been received and are included in members' packs. Do members have any comments? I suppose that this amendment follows on from the amendment to clause 3. If a change is made to clause 3, a change must be made to clause 4.

Mr C Stewart: The two amendments are related, Chairman, but one does not necessarily follow the other. The change to clause 4 reflects the concern of many members and stakeholders that it is not sufficient to regulate employment schemes simply with guidance. Members and stakeholders felt that greater clarity and certainty were required in the form of subordinate legislation, and that is the approach that the Minister has decided to take.

The Chairperson: If members do not have any comments, we will move on. Clause 6 relates to the reserve power of the ESA to make employment schemes. We are at paragraph 114 of the draft report, and the amendment appears to stem from the enabling provision that we have just considered in clause 4.

Mr C Stewart: You are correct, Chairman. This one is consequential to the previous amendment.

The Chairperson: If members do not have any comments, we will move on. The Department's next proposed amendment is to clause 11, “Salaries, etc. of staff: administrative and financial arrangements”. Paragraphs 128 and 129 of the draft report relate to the background to this proposed amendment. Do members have any comments on clause 11, which enables staff salaries to be included in the budget share of all grant-aided schools?

I may sound cynical, but I hope that there is no jiggery-pokery in how schools are funded. Members have stated before that there is a duty of accountability when money is received from the taxpayer. In light of the review of the common funding formula, is there anything here that could be changed? As was mentioned this morning, there are two distinct ways in which schools can receive money. Is the amendment being made in preparation for changes to the common funding formula?

Mr C Stewart: No, Chairman, it is not. I assure you that there is no jiggery-pokery whatsoever.

The Chairperson: That sounds better than the word that you used earlier.

Mr C Stewart: The amendment is to fix a mistake that we made when clause 11 was drafted. It was not the draftsman's mistake; we instructed him incorrectly. As you say, there are two methods of funding schools. However, the idea behind the policy is for schools to get comparable amounts of money to do the same things. Clause 11, as originally drafted, would have run counter to that. Some schools would have had control over their salaries budgets; others would not. That was an error, and it was never the Minister's policy intention to arrive at that position. We propose to fix the error with an amendment that would ensure that all schools have control over their salaries budgets, irrespective of the mechanism by which they are funded.

The Chairperson: Will the amendment affect schools' freedom or autonomy in the use of budgets?

Mr C Stewart: If the mistake had not been fixed, we would have taken a considerable amount of autonomy away from controlled and maintained schools.

The Chairperson: The Department's next proposed amendment relates to clause 16. That clause sets out that the ESA will pay capital grants, which were formerly paid by the Department, to voluntary and grant-maintained integrated schools. Paragraphs 147 and 148 of the draft report set out the relevant detail.

The amendment to clause 16 is reasonably lengthy. Do members have any comments?

Miss McIlveen: Can we have clarification on “certain” capital works in the title of the amendment? Does it relate to something specific?

Mr C Stewart: It relates to major works. Minor works would still be carried out by the schools; major works will be carried out by the ESA.

The Chairperson: Is there a financial memorandum that sets a threshold?

Mr C Stewart: I am sure that there is, although I am not aware of what it is.

The Chairperson: Clause 17 provides that superannuation benefits for teachers, which were formerly paid by the Department, will be paid by the ESA. The Committee raised no issues in relation to clauses 16 and 17; the Department's amendment to clause 17 is set out in paragraph 149 of the draft report. It is a functional transfer.

Mr C Stewart: This is a purely technical amendment on the advice of the Office of the Legislative Counsel to put the meaning of the clause beyond doubt.

The Chairperson: The amendment to clause 26 calls on the ESA to consider the requirements of those attending Irish-speaking schools in relation to curriculum examination. Some members will probably have the same concerns with this amendment as they had with proposed new clause 2(4A).

Mr B McCrea: Why is it necessary? Has the Department not been doing that already?

Mr C Stewart: The argument made by C na G was that, in exercising curriculum support functions and examination functions, the authorities, the boards and CCEA were not meeting the needs of Irish-medium education sufficiently.

The Chairperson: That does not reflect the intention of trying to establish equality.

Mr D Bradley: I do not want to reiterate everything that I said before, but the same arguments apply from C na G's point of view, and I am sure that other members will agree, although not everyone. Children being taught in a language other than English have specialised requirements. Cognisance must be taken of that fact, and it must be reflected in the operations of the ESA and its examination and curriculum function.

Mrs O'Neill: I agree with Dominic. That is the reason behind the amendment.

Mr B McCrea: I have no argument with Irish-medium schools having an Irish-medium curriculum and Irish-medium exams. However, the amendment brings unnecessary attention to the issue, and that is why I asked whether that had not been done already.

Mr D Bradley: That was one of the reasons that Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta considered that specific reference and felt that that provision was needed in the Bill. Its experience was that the needs of teachers and pupils were not taken into consideration when guidance materials were produced. That contributed to an experience of neglect. As I said before, it may not always have been deliberate neglect, but that experience has led Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta to ensure that it will not have to endure such neglect in future.

Mr B McCrea: If academic schools requested help and advice for entrance tests, which set out their conditions, or faith-based schools requested their own conditions, we could end up with a plethora of special-interest cases. Is it not better to have some form of general requirement?

Earlier, I spoke about designation, an issue that the Gaelschools were examining and which would require schools that are so designated to perform in a certain way. Therefore, there are ways of accommodating legitimate sectoral aims without making special cases. All that I am saying, Dominic, is that it seems that the Bill is specifically for Irish-language schools and not for everybody.

Mr D Bradley: I do not agree with you, Basil. Academic schools or faith-based schools in the system — never those outside it — have not had the experience of being neglected, left out of policy making or not being provided for in service-training programmes. As a result, those schools would not need or want a specific mention in the Bill. The Irish-medium sector has had that experience, and, in some cases, it has had to fight to be included, even though it was entitled to be included from the beginning.

The amendment is an attempt to ensure that the Irish-medium sector does not have to continue to experience what it has experienced in the past. However, there may be other ways of satisfying its desires.

Mr Lunn: There is a difference between the argument that the Committee had earlier on new clause 2(4A) and this amendment. The previous argument related to the ESA's requirement to encourage the development of Irish-speaking schools, whereas this is purely to do with curriculum and examinations. Irish-speaking schools have special requirements with respect to curriculum materials and examinations, because they are conducted in a different language from other schools. I understand the first argument, but I cannot understand this one.

The Chairperson: The argument relates to what is currently being provided, and provision is surely already being made for those who wish to have curriculum materials and examinations in Irish. The argument is about the need for an additional amendment to deal with one sector of education. The Irish-medium sector exists, and there are curriculum materials and examinations in Irish; therefore why must an additional requirement — that I assume would be very costly — be placed on the ESA?

Mr C Stewart: I cannot comment on the size of the cost implication of the provision. However, the Irish-medium sector argues that the present curriculum support does not meet its needs. That is not because that support does not exist, but because it is not sophisticated enough and does not sufficiently recognise the particular needs of the sector. For example, it is not sufficient simply to translate English-language curriculum support materials into Irish; that does not meet all the needs of Irish-medium education.

In making its argument, C na G acknowledges the developments that have taken place in the education organisations and that things are better than they were. However, they argue that things have not developed sufficiently, and that there is a need to give that development greater impetus through the proposed amendment.

Mr D Bradley: It has implications for the staffing of the ESA. In order to fulfil the needs of Irish-medium education, the ESA will have to employ staff who are not only skilled in the language, but in the other aspects of the curriculum, examination, and design.

Mr B McCrea: Other people — and I will not embarrass or bring the Chairperson into the debate — will make an argument that they are distinctly unhappy with the teaching of evolution and might want an amendment to the Bill that says that the Department must take cognisance of their deeply held beliefs. Issues of special cases will begin to emerge. I would rather include a general requirement on the Department or the ESA to look after the needs of all schools and to give them the appropriate level of support and advice. That can be done in other ways, rather than through including specific issues in the Bill. I am open to suggestions about how to do that. I only know that when one sector is accommodated, that raises the issue of including other sectors.

The Chairperson: There is one word for that — equality. As I have said to the Minister and to the Committee numerous times, we will either have equality or we will have none. A party around this table used to say that it was either neutrality or equality. The Bill will either achieve neutrality or equality. I do not say that because — as people might accuse me — it is about the Irish-medium sector. I would make the same argument about the integrated sector. We might establish a new dispensation for education that provides equality of access, but we will never achieve equality of outcome because all our children are different. However, it will provide equality of access in how our schools are governed and in how we decide the future of our estate.

Including other duties has the implication of unravelling the Minister's intention, which is to achieve equality. I take the point that you will make that the sector will argue that the provision is necessary because existing inequality must be addressed. That will be addressed by that sectoral body telling the ESA what it requires. The legislation is sufficient to make the ESA able to respond to the needs of any sectors without giving specific reference to one particular sector over and above another.

Mrs O'Neill: Equality is about addressing imbalance, not about giving an equal amount to everybody.

The Chairperson: There is a huge amount of work to do on that.

Mr B McCrea: It is also about education, equality of opportunity and equality of outcomes. That argument was put forward in Transfer 2010. The issue is about getting a fair and equitable solution for all concerned; that is what we are about.

Mrs O'Neill: That is what I said; it is about addressing imbalance.

Miss McIlveen: Taking that to its conclusion, does that mean that the imbalance that affects the controlled sector will also be addressed?

The Chairperson: That is the point that I made to Chris earlier. A report from the Department clearly identifies a problem with working-class Protestant boys. There should be a requirement in the Bill that specifically places a duty on the ESA to ensure that that is addressed. That would address an imbalance and inequality that has been highlighted by the Department. If we go down that road, the difficulty is that we might begin to set one organisation up against another. Although I do not want to be controversial, I must say that the Minister's attitude has been very dismissive of a sector that educates 42% of post-primary schoolchildren, namely the grammar sector. That sector provides 1.3% of our education but has only a very small percentage of the school estate. There is a huge issue of disparity.

Mr O'Dowd: I take it that the Chairperson still supports parental choice.

The Chairperson: I still support parental choice, but parental choice —

Mr O'Dowd: Then your argument slightly falls apart.

The Chairperson: No, it does not, because parental choice comes at a cost, and, as a parent, I made a parental choice and it cost me. I educated all my children outside the state, and that cost me as a parent.

Mr O'Dowd: I can assure you that there are associated costs for any parent who is putting their children through any level of Irish-medium education.

The Chairperson: I do not doubt that. However, we should not compound the issue by giving preference to one sector over another.

We want to conclude this matter, because we could be here all day. Obviously, there is no agreement on clause 26. I have to apologise to the Committee: I made an error, which is that the Committee already considered the amendment. I had to be reminded by the officials that at last Thursday's meeting the Committee worked from clause 24 onwards.

Mr B McCrea: So we can go now?

The Chairperson: No; there is one more clause. The Committee did not consider clause 28, which is entitled 'Approval of courses leading to external qualifications.' The DEL amendments propose changes to clause 28 and the insertion of two new clauses. Chris, will you provide an outline of them?

Mr C Stewart: I can give a brief outline, but you will appreciate that it will require DEL colleagues to brief the Committee in detail on the policy intention behind those amendments. Essentially, DEL needs the ESA to carry out certain functions on its behalf aimed at supporting DEL in its functions with regard to qualifications that it would designate. The popular shorthand for that is vocational qualifications. That is what DEL is looking for here. Essentially, the amendments ask the ESA to carry out a range of functions on behalf of DEL, which are very similar to the functions that it would carry out on behalf of the Department of Education.

Mr O'Dowd: I am tempted to ask whether those policies would be driven by the Minister for Employment and Learning.

The Chairperson: That is what might worry me, so the Committee needs to scrutinise that.

Mr B McCrea: I speak in defence of the most excellent Minister for Employment and Learning, but I want to ask about new section 6(a) in one of the DEL amendments. I have lost the will to live, but somewhere along the line we were adding in the equivalent phrase. There was an amendment to add a paragraph (c) in the equivalent section. Is that correct?

Mr C Stewart: You have me at a disadvantage, Basil.

Mr B McCrea: I think there was somewhere where we had to have due regard for the Irish-medium sector. Was there not? The second proposed new clause in the DEL amendments states that the ESA shall have regard to:

“(a) the requirements of industry, commerce and the professions regarding designated qualifications; and

(b) the requirements of people with special learning needs”.

Mr C Stewart: Sorry, yes, I am with you now.

Mr B McCrea: Yes, help me out.

Mr C Stewart: The Minister for Employment and Learning has not asked for a similar provision for Irish-medium education.

Mr B McCrea: Yes, but the provision —

Mr C Stewart: I am not certain that there is Irish-medium education in the further-education sector

Mr B McCrea: Maybe there ought to be. Just help the Chairperson, because he is looking at me as if I have two heads.

The Chairperson: No; carry on.

Mr B McCrea: Will you be introducing one amendment that has a 6(a) and (b)?

Mr C Stewart: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: And somewhere else there will be a 6(a), (b) and (c)?

Mr C Stewart: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: I am just raising that as a quirky issue.

The Chairperson: So do you not agree with the amendment, Basil?

Mr B McCrea: I am just pointing that out. I have not had time to really consider the matter, but as it is my leader that is bringing the amendment forward, I am sure that it is brilliant — for the record, you know. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Be careful.

Mr B McCrea: I am just pointing out that whatever decisions the Committee makes, it would be appropriate to have compatibility. It would look wrong to have two supposedly identical clauses but one with only two paragraphs and the other with three. Anyway, I have brought the matter to the Committee's attention and the Department can have a think about it.

Mr O'Dowd: After me and you meet, you should go and meet Reg. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Do members have any further issues about clause 28? The DEL amendments propose the insertion of two new clauses, which relate to the functions of the ESA with regard to qualifications.

The Committee Clerk: What was distributed was the Committee for Employment and Learning's endorsement of the Committee amendments.

The Chairperson: That concludes consideration of the amendments.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

16 September 2009

EMPLOYMENT BILL (NIA 9/08)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Ms Sue Ramsey (Chairperson)
Mr Thomas Buchanan (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Paul Butler
Mr Trevor Clarke
Rev Dr Robert Coulter
Mr David Hilditch
Mr William Irwin
Ms Anna Lo
Mr David McClarty
Mr Pat Ramsey

The Chairperson (Ms S Ramsey): We move to the Committee's clause-by-clause consideration of the Employment Bill. I remind members that this part of the meeting is being covered by Hansard, so all mobile phones must be turned off, including any that anyone in the public gallery may have. Members will find an updated timetable for the Committee Stage of the Bill at tab 2 of their packs. Last week, we discussed a motion for a two-week extension of the Committee Stage. Based on advice that we have received, it has been suggested that we ask for a four-week extension. If we do not need that much time, so be it, but it allows for the possibility of a swine flu outbreak, or some other problem. Are members agreed that we request a four-week extension to the Committee Stage, and are they content with the wording of the motion?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Members will also be aware that the Department has proposed amendments to the Bill. Those have not yet been finalised, but the wording will be ready for next week's meeting.

I am going to ask the Committee Clerk to take us through the clauses of the Bill. People are seated in the public gallery who are ready and willing to answer questions, if required.

The Committee Clerk: Thank you, Chair. The Bill team from the Department is in the public gallery. Our Bill Clerk is also present, who can provide guidance for members if they wish to make any amendments.

I draw members' attention to the table at tab 4 of their packs. That table lays out the wording of the Bill as it stands, the explanation from the explanatory memorandum, and the four options that the Committee will have in respect of each clause. At this stage, we are just running through the Bill to highlight areas where the Bill will amend other pieces of legislation. It will be next week before the Committee decides final agreement, or otherwise, on the clauses.

Members also have a pack that corresponds with other pieces of legislation that the Bill will amend. I will go through the clauses to point out areas where the wording of the Bill will be inserted into those other pieces of legislation. We will be seeking provisional agreement on what has been set out — next week, the Committee will decide on the final, formal agreement.

Clause 1 amends the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to provide for offences under employment agency legislation to be triable either in a magistrate's court or the Crown Court. At present, the maximum fine that can be awarded by a magistrate's court can be no greater than level 5 on the standard scale — currently £5,000. Agencies that act unlawfully can make much more than that amount. Allowing more serious cases to be tried in the Crown Court will provide for the potential for unlimited fines to be awarded against such agencies.

As members can see from the table, clause 1 of the Bill is entitled "Employment agencies: mode of trial and penalties for certain offences". Clause 1 states:

"(1) In the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (NI 20), in each of Articles 5B, 6(3) and 7(2), for the words from "on summary conviction" to the end substitute —

(a) on conviction on indictment, to a fine;

(b) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum."

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply in relation to an offence committed before the commencement of that subsection."

Members can see at tab 1 of the separate pack of legislation to be amended where in the 1981 Order the provisions of the Employment Bill will be inserted. Those insertions will be at articles 5B, 6(3) and 7(2) of the 1981 Order. At this point, if members do not see any problem with that, we can move on to clause 2. Next week, we will consider the amendments. Provisionally, are members content with that first clause in respect of those insertions into the 1981 Order?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Clause 2 concerns powers of enforcement. Clause 2 amends the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to provide the Department for Employment and Learning with powers to compel agencies and third parties, such as banks, to provide the Department with financial information about an agency for investigation purposes. Limits will be placed on the circumstances in which that power can be used, and it will be available only where an agency is suspected of serious offences under employment agency legislation and is asked for, but does not provide, the necessary financial information. That power can be used only following authorisation by a senior officer of the Department — at least director level, which equates to grade 5: the level just below deputy permanent secretary.

Clause 2 refers to the same Order as clause 1. The clause is entitled “Employment agencies: powers of enforcement”, and it states:

“(1) In the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (NI 20), Article 7B (powers of officers) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph (1) for sub-paragraph (b) substitute—

‘(b) inspect—

(i) any records required to be kept under this Part; and

(ii) any financial records not falling within head (i) which he may reasonably require to inspect for the purpose of ascertaining whether the provisions of this Part and of any regulations made under this Part are being complied with or of enabling the Department to exercise its functions under this Part;’.

(3) In paragraph (2) for the words from ‘he may require’ to the end substitute ‘the officer may by notice in writing require the person carrying on the employment agency or employment business to furnish him with the record or information at such time and place as he may specify.’”

The Chairperson: Is it necessary to read out all of the clause?

The Committee Clerk: Perhaps not, if you do not want me to. This is laying out the powers of enforcement of the Department in respect of agencies. Those insertions go into the same piece of legislation that the first clause deals with.

The Chairperson: Some of what is in the table is self-explanatory and some of it is technical. I thank the Committee staff for providing the table, and it will be helpful for members to read. I am not sure that it all needs to be read out. Does it need to be read out for the record?

The Committee Clerk: No. Next week, we will decide on our final and official sign-off of each clause, and we will have the text of the amendments.

Clause 2 makes more insertions into the 1981 Order at various points. It makes much clearer the powers of enforcement that the Department will have, and it regulates the fines. Are members provisionally content with clause 2?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Clause 3 concerns membership of the Industrial Court. It makes amendments to the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 to replace current arrangements for Industrial Court appointments with equivalent subordinate legislation provisions, which will provide greater flexibility in making appointments. Clause 3 also makes a minor change to remove the restriction that the court’s secretariat functions may be fulfilled only by staff from the Department.

The wording of clause 3 represents an insertion into the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992, which is at tab 2 of members’ additional packs. As with the previous clause, there is probably no need for me to read out the full text. Clause 3 essentially sets down specific changes to that Order with respect to membership of the Industrial Court.

The Chairperson: This came about as a result of discussions between the Department and the Labour Relations Agency. Are they content with those provisions?

The Committee Clerk: They are content that the Department has carried out a consultation. Are members provisionally content with clause 3?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Clause 4 concerns legal representation before the Industrial Court. It amends article 92(4) of the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 to enable parties before the Industrial Court to engage legal representation, with the exception of one jurisdiction related to the provision of voluntary arbitration in relation to industrial disputes. That reflects the view of the Industrial Court that voluntary arbitration, by its nature, would not benefit from legal representation. Legal advice states that failure to allow legal representation could lead to a challenge under article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights — the right to a fair trial.

The clause closes the loophole in the remaining jurisdiction that is not already covered. The insertion into the 1992 Order is simply to close that loophole. Members can read in the table the wording of clause 4, and where it is to be inserted.

Mr P Ramsey: There is a spelling mistake in the table: it says “cause 4” rather than “clause 4”.

The Committee Clerk: Yes; that will be amended. Are members provisionally content with clause 4?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Clause 5 concerns information on employment agencies and the national minimum wage. It amends the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 and the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to clarify the law relating to information-sharing and to allow HM Revenue and Customs national minimum wage compliance officers and Department for Employment and Learning employment agency inspectors to legally share and exchange information discovered by them in the course of exercising their powers. At present, the exchange of such information is restricted. The removal of that restriction will, for example, enable employment agency inspectors to report breaches of the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 by employment businesses to HM Revenue and Customs.

Clause 5 allows HM Revenue and Customs to communicate with the DEL inspectors to allow an exchange of information, closing any gaps in the knowledge of the inspectors. The insertions are detailed on the table and shown at tab 4 of members' supplementary packs. I will not read out the full text. Are members provisionally content with clause 5?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Clause 6 concerns minor and consequential amendments and repeals. It provides that the minor and consequential amendments and repeals set out in the schedules to the Bill will have effect.

Clause 7 concerns commencement. It gives the Department power to bring the membership of the Industrial Court provisions of the Bill into operation by commencement Order. It also provides that the remaining provisions of the Bill will come into operation on the day after the Bill receives Royal Assent.

Are members provisionally content with those clauses?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Clause 8 cites the short title. When the Bill is enacted, it will be known as the Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 2009. Are members provisionally content with that?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Schedule 1 sets out the changes that are to be made to various other pieces of legislation as a result of the Bill. All of those changes are set out in members' supplementary packs. That simply reflects the effect of the clauses that we have gone through. There is nothing new in schedule 1 — it just outlines what those pieces of legislation are, and which parts will be changed. Are members provisionally content with schedule 1?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Schedule 2 lays out the specific repeals of parts of other legislation that the Bill will bring about. The detail is in members' supplementary packs. Are members provisionally content with schedule 2?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Next week, we will have before us the final wording of the amendments. We will lay that wording over the clauses, and the Committee can give its final approval, or otherwise. If members have other amendments that they wish to draw up, it would be useful if they could flag that up in advance so that we can discuss those with the Bill Clerk and the Bill Office.

Members may also wish to note that the supplementary pack includes a research paper, which is an analysis of the Employment Bill and its provisions. Are members content that we include that paper in the appendices to our report on the Bill?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: To sum up, are members provisionally content to accept the clauses and schedules, prior to our formal examination next week of the Bill, in light of the amendments?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Mrs D Kelly): I welcome Mr Ciaran Quigley, director of legal services in Belfast City Council, and Kevin Heaney and Owen Mason, who are here as observers. However, if there is a difficult question, I am sure that Mr Quigley will pass the ball on.

Mr Ciaran Quigley (Belfast City Council): It is my job to refer anything difficult. [Laughter.]

Mr Beggs: Given that a new set of witnesses has arrived, are members required to declare our interests at this point?

Mr Weir: We made the previous declarations when all witnesses were already in the room.

Mr Beggs: That is fine. I was unaware of that.

The Chairperson: Rather than make members declare their interests during each discussion on the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, I will note that members have declared their interests.

Mr Quigley: Thank you for the opportunity to brief the Committee on the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. I am accompanied by Owen Mason, who is a policy officer who works with me, and Kevin Heaney, who is Belfast City Council's change manager. Kevin is dealing with the business of transition, and so on.

The Bill is in three parts, and I will discuss them in order. The three parts are entitled "Contracts of Councils"; "Local Government Reorganisation"; and "Miscellaneous and Supplementary". Part 1 replicates existing legislation in Great Britain and clarifies the powers of district councils to enter into PFI and PPP contracts with the private sector. That is more relevant now as we enter a stage of very large waste disposal contracts. The legislation is coming at a critical time.

I act as corporate counsel for Arc21, and, therefore, I declare an interest. Arc21 will be represented by its chief executive, John Quinn. I have not seen John yet; I presume he is outside. John will comment on the Bill from an Arc21 perspective. Belfast City Council is one of the 11 members of Arc21, and, therefore, John, essentially, will speak for Belfast City Council on Part 1.

I do not need to bore the Committee with replication. However, there are several perceived gaps in Part 1, which deals with PFI. The good news is that those gaps have largely been picked up on by the Department in the proposed waste Bill. However, if the proposed waste Bill is to cover those gaps in Part 1, which deals with vires issues and powers of district councils, it will need to be introduced expeditiously, given the timetables for the letting of large contracts. Otherwise, we might face trouble when dealing with the lawyers who act for the contractors on big waste contracts. I am sure that John Quinn will replicate that view. I am happy to take questions as we go along.

Part 2 of the Bill, in general terms, deals with local government reorganisation. There are four chapters in Part 2. Chapter 2 creates a framework whereby the Department may give directions that prohibit existing councils from disposing of land or entering into capital or non-capital contracts over specified thresholds, which will be specified by regulation. Chapter 3, which provides for the creation of the proposed —

Mr Weir: If I may interrupt, it would be more helpful if members could follow your references. I know that those matters are covered under chapters, but it would be useful if you were to refer to the individual clauses.

The Chairperson: Members could follow the witnesses' written submission, which helpfully sets out the clauses.

Mr Quigley: I am not speaking to the written submission. I have speaking notes, which I will give to the Committee.

The Chairperson: That would be helpful, thank you.

Mr Quigley: I am making more general comments.

The Chairperson: We will hear your general comments, and members will have to do their best.

Mr Quigley: I am happy to be interrogated on the detail.

Part 2 is in four chapters. Chapter 1, clause 9, is simply the introduction on which I have no comment. Chapter 2 contains clauses 10 to 13. That simply creates a framework for the Department to give directions to prohibit the existing councils from entering into contracts. That includes contracts for capital works and non-capital works over thresholds that will be specified by regulation.

Chapter 3 contains clauses 14 to 16. Those provide for the creation of proposed statutory transition committees. Again, they provide the Department with the power to make regulations on how those committees will be set up. I do not intend to get into the detail of those regulations, because they do not yet exist. However, the power in the Bill to give directions and to make regulations seems to be drafted in a general way. Therefore, the Department will have the power to make directions in relation to all the existing councils and to make regulations for all the statutory transition committees. However, it is not entirely clear whether that power would extend to giving directions or making regulations in relation to individual councils or statutory transition committees.

I make that point because Belfast City Council does not claim any special status in the review of public administration (RPA). I emphasise that it is affected by the RPA as much as everyone else. I say that in case anyone thinks that it is claiming privileges, which it is not. However, Belfast City Council is in a slightly different legal position because 25 of the 26 councils are, effectively, merging in clusters. Belfast City Council is not merging with any other council, but it will assimilate territory if the Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland's recommendations go through, and that remains to be confirmed.

If those recommendations go through, Belfast City Council will extend its boundary to take in parts of Castlereagh, Lisburn and a tiny part, I think, of North Down. However, it is not merging with the existing Lisburn or Castlereagh councils, and that legal difference needs to be reflected in the legislation. Otherwise, the Department might not have a clear power to make special provision for circumstances in relation to ongoing, amicable discussions between Belfast City Council and the neighbouring Castlereagh and Lisburn councils. Therefore, the only substantive point about Part 2 of the Bill is that I would like the legislation to be clarified to ensure that that power exists. There is a simple legal mechanism to do that, which I have set out in my speaking notes, and which I will give to the Committee.

I do not want to pre-empt the Office of the Legislative Counsel, which would, I am sure, get extremely annoyed if I started to draft legislation. However, it would be extremely simple to put a new paragraph in clause 9 to the effect that the power of the Department to give directions in chapter 2 and to make regulations in chapter 3 will include the power to do so in relation to the circumstances of one or more specified councils. That is my main point. A simple legislative amendment could deal with that without upsetting anyone or creating a suggestion that there is an agenda, which there is not.

I hope that that is clear. The only other point that I wish to make concerns the powers in the enabling legislation to give directions to make regulations. We ask that all the councils and the local government sector in general be consulted before any directions or regulations are finally made. There is a concern that there is a set of regulations waiting in the background to be issued as soon as the Bill comes into effect, without any further consultation with the local government sector. In order that we can be comforted that those concerns can be addressed, I ask that the local government sector be consulted. I do not speak for all sections of local government, but I think that local government in general would agree that consultation, as a general principle, is a good thing.

Clause 17, entitled "Severance payments to councillors", is an enabling provision. Kevin Heaney has submitted particular comments about severance. I do not need to go into those, but, in general, we have no problems with that issue. Severance will be dealt with by regulations; this is an enabling Bill. That is why I ask again that when the regulations are made, councils be consulted on the detail of the regulations so that they can make informed comment on the issue rather than simply issuing a high-level note.

I know that the Committee previously commented on the subject of clause 18, entitled "Acquisition of land otherwise than by agreement". The shorthand for that is "vest", which always gets people exercised. When the old Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 was revoked by the Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1996, a mistake happened, because the previously existing power to compulsorily acquire or vest land was dropped and was not reinstated. That has now been picked up in the Arc21 submissions, and both Arc21 and Belfast City Council are glad to note that that power has been reinstated. The power now extends to the regional subcommittees — Arc21 and the Southern Waste Management Partnership (SWaMP) — both of which have legislative status as joint committees. Therefore, Belfast City Council, as a member of Arc 21, would welcome that, as, I think, would SWaMP.

Tomorrow morning, I will attend a meeting of Belfast City Council's policy and resources committee to follow up on a query about clause 18 — whether it will mean that Arc21, for example, could vest land belonging to Belfast City Council. I have noted that that has been an issue in the past. The short answer is no; it could not. Under the terms of reference of the subregional waste groups, one of the principles, which I drafted, is about consensus, and it says that any big decisions have to be approved by all the partner councils. The conspiracy theory that Arc21 is going to vest Belfast City Council land does not stand.

I am sorry for the confusion about the document that we submitted from Kevin Heaney's office. I wanted to take the opportunity today to get the high-level points across rather than bore members with the detail of lawyers' drudgery.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much, Mr Quigley. When should the proposed waste Bill be in place in order to avoid the problems that you mentioned?

Mr Quigley: John Quinn is better placed to answer that. Through Arc21, we are embarking on the third phase of the procurement process. The procurement process is governed by European law, and, because of the amount of money that is involved, it is an extremely complex process.

We are about to kick off with the invitation to submit design solutions. I stand to be corrected by John Quinn, but I understand that Arc21, which is leading the field in all of this, has shortlisted three tenders, so it is getting serious. The three consortia involved in tendering will submit detailed design solutions, which will have to undergo a lengthy consideration process. However, it is now 2009, and my understanding is that, by next summer, we will enter into dialogue with lawyers to set up the contracts. Again, I stand to be corrected by John, but that means that the waste Bill needs to be in place by next summer.

When I talk about gaps in Part 1 of the Bill, although there are a number of supplementary points, I have identified two major issues that must be picked up. First, the joint committee, or groups of councils that are working together — Arc21 has 11 councils — will have to sign up as guarantors to big contracts. They will also have to give guarantees. Where is the legal power for, for example, Ballymena to give a warranty for, or guarantee, the business of Carrickfergus or Belfast? That is a major issue. I am concerned that lawyers on the other, counterpart side might raise that as a substantive issue, and, because of the current nervousness of the banks about their own situation, that might prejudice in some fashion the deliverability of those contracts. Therefore, I urge members to expedite the waste Bill as much as possible, although I understand that that is an argument for a different day.

Mr Weir: Thank you for your evidence, Ciaran. I shall begin with the acquisition powers. Some of us in the wider area of Arc21 would have been happy had the conspiracy theory been right. I do not know whether Mr Kinahan agrees. Nevertheless, your interpretation of how Arc21 works is quite right, and those who have a conspiracy theory that clause 18 will compel Belfast City Council to do particular things are fairly wide of the mark.

With respect to the widening of acquisition powers — last week, we heard evidence from Craigavon Borough Council, which holds a similar position on the matter — there is a lot of merit in what you suggest. However, to play devil's advocate, if that was felt to be a good idea, first, would there be an opportunity to put that wider power into subsequent legislation? Secondly, my only concern with widening that power is that when the Bill was put out for consultation, the urgent need to get it through became apparent. Therefore, were the Bill to be amended from having one specific power to a general-purpose power, there could be an argument that the whole thing would have to go out to consultation again, because such an amendment would go beyond a legislative-level amendment.

Mr Quigley: In our submission to the Department on the draft Bill, we picked up on that point. We said that, as a matter of principle, we would prefer the power to compulsorily acquire land to extend across a range of statutory functions. The existing legislation means that you have to look at various pieces of enabling legislation in order to discover whether a power to vest land exists. For example, you will find a power to vest in The Recreation and Youth Service (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, but when you look at other pieces of legislation, no such power exists. That touches on the power of general competence in dealing with land.

My view is that the matter should be picked up in the next RPA legislative phase, which is the reorganisation Bill. The reorganisation Bill will deal with the more constitutional issues of local government. It was supposed to have been out by now, but there has obviously been a delay. It would probably not be feasible to deal with that power in this Bill, because that would lead to consultation problems and would perhaps delay the Bill, which no one wants. However, I stress that there are a lot of issues that need to be picked up in the reorganisation Bill.

I have argued previously for powers of general competence on the wide range of work that councils do. Not everyone agrees with that argument, and the riposte now is that a power of well-being will be granted through community-planning provisions. However, I believe that there is a difference between a power of well-being and a power of general competence. I may be ranting at the winds on the matter, but I maintain my position as a lawyer in local government. Power of well-being is fine and dandy as far as it goes, but local government should be given the means to go about its business in a proper, efficient and resourceful way. That means that it should have general powers in relation to its functions. I do not mean that local government should have continental-style powers to do anything that it wants to unless someone refuses. However, there should be a general power to do a range of things regarding its statutory functions; that is a slightly different point.

The Chairperson: Thank you.

Mr Weir: I have other questions.

The Chairperson: Will you make them as quick as possible?

Mr Weir: I thought that we were scrutinising legislation.

The issue of general competence and general well-being is a debate for another day. However, I was a little surprised by your comments about the impact of statutory transition committees on consultation with councils for two reasons. First, a list of questions containing detail on the specifics of governance and the constitution of statutory committees has already been sent to my, and presumably every other, council. Secondly, local government has drafted what will effectively form the basis of the regulations. Policy development panel A, which is composed entirely of local government councillors, drafted that. A member of Belfast City Council has always been one of the 10 people on that panel. The representative soul of the people who advise the panel comprises the chief executives of local government, so local government officers are also involved. The fruits of their labour have been sent to local councils, so I was a bit surprised by what you said about the regulations.

I suppose that Belfast is in a slightly grey area as regards its attitude to some aspects of the RPA. As you have acknowledged, it is not a merger, but a new legal entity will be created. I am not convinced that people in Lisburn or Castlereagh regard it as satisfactory that they will simply be assimilated into the new council. It almost bears the hallmarks of Germany's assimilation of Austria. Rather than simply taking the decisions and then consulting the people of Lisburn and Castlereagh, do you not believe that areas that are due to come into an enlarged Belfast council should be formally represented on any transition group in Belfast City Council?

Mr Quigley: I attended a couple of policy development panel A meetings, and I understand that it has drafted the principles and so on, and I have no problem with that. My only concern is to make sure, from a lawyer's point of view, that I see the detail of the regulations before they become law. It is my experience that the detail of legislation can sometimes depart from what people thought they were going to get. As a lawyer, therefore, I would like to have that opportunity on behalf of my council, Belfast City Council, to have a look at and to be consulted on that detail. That is the best practice that has been adopted by Departments over the years.

With regard to Lisburn and Castlereagh councils: I thought that "assimilation" was a kind word, because it sounded better and kinder than "incorporation" or "takeover". However, whatever the word, I am sure that it will be a coming together in friendship and harmony. [Laughter.]

In the spirit of that friendship and harmony, our chief executive convened an inaugural meeting a few weeks ago between representatives of Belfast, Castlereagh and the Castlereagh/Lisburn transition committee. Another meeting has been arranged for October.

I am glad to report that the discussions were friendly and noted the points that Mr Weir raised. There was consensus that we needed to take on board the issues that were raised. Belfast City Council's policy and resources committee is its transition committee. However, I think that we have tentatively agreed — and Kevin can correct me if I am wrong — that members from the Lisburn/Castlereagh transition committee will be on our transition committee. Have we agreed that?

Mr Kevin Heaney (Belfast City Council): No.

Mr Quigley: We have not agreed that? [Laughter.] I thought that I was getting away with that. I should not have brought you.

Mr Weir: You are starting to sound like the Executive.

Mr Quigley: We were going to negotiate with them; is that the case?

Mr Heaney: No —

The Chairperson: We are enjoying the craic, but if we could just keep to the business.

Mr Heaney: The current position is that there has been a joint agreement that there will be a joint committee forum of delegated representatives from the Lisburn/Castlereagh transition committee to the Belfast City Council transition committee. They will meet on a formal basis, initially every two months. They will then devise a joint programme of work, which we will talk about at our next meeting in October, to examine transition-related matters. Belfast City Council's response to the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill recommended that that type of engagement mechanism should be formalised in the legislation to ensure that —

Mr Weir: Will that body, in effect, become a transition committee for that area?

Mr Heaney: It will be a joint transition committee, representing Belfast council's transitional committee and the Lisburn/Castlereagh transition committee.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation, and I am glad to see that Belfast is not getting any special treatment. As an Armagh man, I would have taken a wee bit of offence at that. You spoke about consultation. Obviously, NILGA has been playing a major role, and the key is that councils are fully equipped to deliver those functions.

I am getting a sense that things are perhaps not going right. I am off the council now, but my understanding from council officers and panel members is that things are moving forward in consultation and discussion. Obviously, there is a time frame, but it seems to be going OK. Are you saying that there seem to be a few problems that we need to address, because time is of the essence; or do you feel that contributions from councils are not going so well on the ground? Local councils have the responsibility, and they played a major role in this. You spoke about proper consultation. I thought that a pretty good body of work was already ongoing.

Mr Quigley: I am talking about the consultation on the specific directions and regulations that are to be made. This legislation is, in large part, framework or enabling legislation. In other words, regulations and directions will be made or given under this legislation. I am simply saying that councils want to be consulted on the detail of that.

One hears different stories about relationships with NILGA. Belfast City Council works with NILGA, which carries out an important role on behalf of local government. I suppose that there are other sectoral interests, but Belfast City Council has worked closely with NILGA. Nora Winder from NILGA is here today to talk to the Committee. I have spoken to Nora in the past couple of days, and I am happy with what she is saying to the Committee.

Mr Boylan: Thank you; I just wanted clarification.

Mr Kinahan: You mentioned that we should ensure that councils are kept up to date on changes. I wonder whether we should give councils a monthly summary. I am concerned that if we tell councils about certain matters, we will end up re-discussing them a month later. Our council was concerned about being kept up to pace all the way through the RPA, particularly on waste matters. That area is so big that we were not always in the picture and, therefore, delays were more likely because we did not know what was happening.

The Chairperson: We can put that matter to the Committee when the witnesses leave.

Mr Dallat: My concerns have passed with the passage of time. I was worried that we would create an international incident between Germany and Austria. However, I am now convinced that it is Belfast and Castlereagh. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: I thank the witness for the presentation.

We can deal with Mr Kinahan's comments about whether the Committee has a role to keep councils informed or whether that is a departmental responsibility.

Mr Boylan: That is why I sought clarification; work is ongoing, and NILGA is the body that should keep councils informed. Is Mr Kinahan saying that that is not happening? NILGA plays a major role and, perhaps, there is a gap that we do not know about.

The Chairperson: We can write to the Department to ask about its mechanisms for updating councils, whether through NILGA or by individual council.

Mr Beggs: We could place a large burden on our staff if we ask them to produce an additional set of briefing notes. We should, perhaps, make councils aware of the proceedings and how they can check our minutes and any documents that we have received. Someone who wants to follow matters more closely can do so. Other than that, it would place a big burden on our staff.

The Chairperson: We should, perhaps, write to the Department and ask about the current system. The NILGA representatives will, no doubt, read the transcript of today's meeting, and, if any gaps exist in that communication process, they will let us know. Do members agree with that approach?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We move to a briefing on the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill from NILGA and Arc21. I ask Committee staff to note members' declarations of interest in relation to their council membership. Members will note that NILGA and Arc21 have similar views on the Bill and have asked that they be allowed to brief the Committee jointly. That may be helpful.

I welcome Councillor Joanne Bunting, chairperson of the RPA policy development panel A. She is a member of Castlereagh Borough Council. I also welcome my party colleague Councillor Shaun Gallagher, who is from Derry City Council and is chairperson of the NILGA waste working group. I welcome Ms Nora Winder, NILGA's director of policy and strategy, and Mr John Quinn, who is the chief executive of Arc21. You are all very welcome. You have 10 or 15 minutes to brief the Committee, after which we will take questions and comments from members. I invite you to make your presentation.

Councillor Shaun Gallagher (Northern Ireland Local Government Association/Arc21): Thank you and good morning, Chairperson. We are grateful for the opportunity to appear before the Committee and outline the local government position on the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. The Bill has three parts: today, we will address the first two parts. John Quinn, chief executive of Arc21, and I will talk about council contracts. Councillor Joanne Bunting, chairperson of the RPA policy development panel A, and Ms Nora Winder, NILGA director of policy and strategy, will address local government reorganisation.

First, I will confirm that, on the whole, NILGA broadly supports the provisions of the Bill. We would, however, like to use this time to make a few specific comments. As chairperson of the NILGA waste working group, I want to raise some issues about additional powers that are being contemplated in the waste Bill and the provisions that are designed to remove any concerns that contractors and financiers might have about entering into long-term service contracts.

The Department is aware of our comments, as we had previously submitted them in response to the written consultation on the draft Bill and, more recently, to the consultation on the proposals for a waste Bill. Those comments relate in particular to the granting of warranties, guarantees and indemnities, and the granting of cross-indemnities and acceptance of joint and several liabilities. The preamble in respect of the formal consultation on the draft waste Bill made reference to pre-consultation discussions with local government prior to the earlier consultation on the draft Local Government (Contracts and Compulsory Purchase) Bill, now renamed the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, in which the Department acknowledged that:

In addition, it explains that the Department sought legal opinion which advised that:

“it would be very prudent (even if not essential) to make appropriate legislative provision in relation to these issues.”

Those are the issues of guarantees, warranties, indemnities, and joint and several liability. Given the obvious critical nature of those elements, we are disappointed that those provisions have been omitted from the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill and are now being contemplated in the later draft waste Bill, despite strong representations by local government during the consultation. Unless there is a strong rationale for not doing so, we would encourage the Committee to consider inclusion in this Local Government Bill, rather than incur the inevitable delay which would result by deferral to the waste Bill.

We understand that Royal Assent for the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill is scheduled for November 2009, with the draft waste Bill following by June 2010. Alongside the issue of local government waste infrastructure procurement, those dates are likely to coincide with the most intense dialogue stage of the tendering process for the waste management groups. From a commercial and competitive perspective, we believe that, although the June date is sufficient to allow financial close and award, the earlier date would potentially enhance the confidence of the bidders and financiers who will be selected to enter the final stage of those competitions and, hopefully therefore, contribute to the most economically advantageous solution. Furthermore, the earlier date would allow final bidders to undertake due diligence in a timely fashion and reduce the risk of timetable delay.

Consequently, unless the legislative process is deemed to be compromised or materially delayed by the inclusion of those elements in this Bill, we consider there to be commercial advantage in “banking” the additional vires more than six months earlier in the procurement process.

Accordingly, we seek the addition of the following elements into the Bill, subject to their inclusion not delaying or comprising the Bill's passage. First, the addition of a paragraph to clarify either that the councils/joint committees have express power to grant warranties, guarantees and indemnities, or that Part 1 of the Bill should be extended to cover stakeholder agreements and collateral guarantees. Secondly, the addition of a paragraph to clarify that the councils/joint committees have express power to grant cross-indemnities and to accept joint and several liability, or that Part 1 of the Bill should be extended to cover stakeholder agreements and collateral guarantees.

I will now hand over to Councillor Joanne Bunting, who will outline further concerns, particularly in relation to work carried out by policy development panel A.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Councillor Gallagher.

Councillor S Gallagher: It was very technical.

The Chairperson: It has to be heard. Thank you.

Councillor Joanne Bunting (Northern Ireland Local Government Association/Arc21): Thank you for this opportunity. NILGA members, through their work on policy development panel A, developed proposals to inform the content of clause 14, entitled “Statutory transition committees: constitution”. We are pleased that the Minister took the proposals on board and that he has reflected the panel’s views in that clause. We fully support its implementation. That is all I have to say on the matter, so I will pass you to Nora Winder, who is the director of policy and strategy for NILGA.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Councillor Bunting. This is the point at which a number of us have to declare an interest. [Laughter.]

Ms Nora Winder (Northern Ireland Local Government Association/Arc21): With respect to clause 17, “Severance payments to councillors”, at this stage, I would like to recognise that the National Association of Councillors (NAC) is taking the lead in lobbying for and agreeing a severance package for councillors. NILGA supports the NAC’s position.

NILGA supports the provision in the Bill, but our members strongly endorse a centrally funded severance scheme, which must be introduced simultaneously with amended co-option legislation to allow councillors to make informed choices on the way forward. NILGA’s members would urge the Department to liaise, as necessary, to ensure that the required legislation is put in place as a matter of urgency, and NILGA supports the view that the scheme should apply during the period from January 2010 until the date of the local government elections in May 2011. I shall pass you to Councillor Gallagher, who will sum up and finish the presentation.

Councillor S Gallagher: Much of the detail of the outworkings of the legislation will be set out in subsequent subordinate legislation. NILGA would strongly urge the Department to ensure that local government bodies are consulted, in accordance with good practice, in the drafting of relevant, detailed regulations.

We hope that our submission is considered favourably by the Committee, and our delegation is happy to answer any questions. If they are difficult ones, we will give them to John Quinn.

On behalf of the local government sector in Northern Ireland, I again wish to record our appreciation for the invitation to submit evidence to the Committee and, obviously, I thank you for the opportunity to address members today.

Mr Boylan: Thank you for your presentation. Nora, you are very welcome. Nora and I worked together on Armagh City Council. As I was co-opted out, I was wondering whether you have looked into that in the severance package. [Laughter.] I take that as a flat no, so there is no need to respond.

In light of the presentation concerning NILGA reporting back to councils and councillors properly understanding what is coming down the track, how is that relationship working and are you delivering on those goals? We need a proper, fit-for-purpose service, and we need people to be properly trained to deliver the new functions. I was wondering, therefore, whether all local councils are tied into the process from NILGA’s point of view and how it is working. You may respond generally.

Councillor S Gallagher: In fairness, most councillors rely on NILGA to keep them informed about goings-on. Presently, there is good communication. Once a month, through NILGA, each elected member gets an update on what is happening in all the Committees and strands of government at Stormont. Since those updates have been introduced, it has been a lot easier to understand exactly what is going on.

Mr Boylan: Is there still a gap in filtering information from central government down, or is the body of work continuous?

Councillor Bunting: The strategic leadership board (SLB), which comprises members from central and local government, has developed a communication strategy. We recognised that there were some weaknesses in that area, so we developed a communication strategy, which should filter down to everybody. Obviously, we have no control on whether people read and pay heed to what they are given, but we have taken steps to ensure that as much information as possible is circulated and that people are afforded the opportunity to feed back. Likewise, we hold events; a capacity-building programme is envisaged. We hope that all those actions will address what has not been great communication to date, but which should now be greatly improved.

Mr Boylan: You have just raised another point. You are right: whether or not people read information, there are group leaders in each council, and they have a responsibility to report back.

Mr Weir: I see a lot of familiar faces here. Shaun, you spoke about additional powers and amendments. Am I right in thinking that your first preference would be for those additional powers to be incorporated into the Bill, and if the Department, for whatever reason, thought that that was not possible, the fallback position would be to put them in the proposed waste Bill? Is that the pecking order?

Councillor S Gallagher: Yes.

Mr Weir: OK. The Committee is dealing with the issue of enabling powers for the statutory transition committees, which do not go into great detail. The more detailed stuff about transition committees will be in the regulations. Could Joanne or Nora comment on what would constitute detailed transition guidance that would form the basis for regulations; what work has been ongoing on with policy development panel A and the SLB on how transition committees would be constituted and operate? What has been the level of local government involvement? What is the extent of political consensus on those issues?

The Chairperson: Easy questions there.

Councillor Bunting: Just those minor issues? NILGA looked at a number of issues. We considered the level of membership of transition committees and how people should be appointed. At one stage, the Minister asked us to consider whether the membership was producing the appropriate proportionality. He also asked us to look at whether the membership should follow the initial guidance, which was that each constituent council should have equal representation. We produced proposals, which said that our view was that there should be proportionate representation if we are to go forward in partnership and if there was not to be a feeling of one council taking over another.

That was not the position of all parties, but we stipulated in our discussions that, where a party position differed, that was recorded and sent further up the line, because it was important that party positions were recorded. We also looked at inclusivity in representation and ways to address that with regard to membership. We were acutely conscious that a democratic election had taken place, so we were trying to ensure that there was inclusivity and proportionality in accordance with a democratic election, and it was important that that principle was enshrined. To that end, we proposed a menu from which councils could choose: d'Hondt, Sainte-Laguë or single transferable vote (STV). Councils need to agree how they will progress that, and choose an option. If they cannot agree, the default mechanism is d'Hondt.

Another issue that arose during discussions about voluntary transition committees was that councils were using potentially different d'Hondt mechanisms, which caused concern. Therefore, NILGA recommended that whatever divisor method was used, it was applied consistently across each council in Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: Did you say that one of the options that the Minister initially suggested was that each party be represented at a council level, but that you decided to produce a different menu? Did I pick that up correctly?

Councillor Bunting: It was not necessarily parties, but that there was proportionate representation of the membership of each constituent council.

Mr Weir: At one stage, there was an issue about, for instance, Coleraine being a lot bigger than Moyle, and whether there should, therefore, be five or six members from Coleraine and only two or three from Moyle. However, there is also the view that if councils of different sizes are merging, they are, nevertheless, all separate and different entities, and membership should be level. Was that the issue to which you were referring?

Councillor Bunting: Partly; yes. Part of the issue was that there was a maximum number of members on a transition committee, because, as you can appreciate, the larger the committee, the more difficult it becomes to have efficient and effective decision-making. Therefore, transition committees had a maximum of 16 members. That, for example, allowed Lisburn and Castlereagh to have eight members each. Where three councils were merging, it allowed those councils to have a minimum of five members each. However, four councils were merging in the Causeway Coast group, and they were only afforded perhaps four members each. We moved to a position that allowed the Causeway Coast group to have 20 members, so that each council was afforded the equivalent minimum number of members.

The Chairperson: Gender balance was mentioned at a conference yesterday, but I am very pleased to see you here today.

Councillor S Gallagher: We are very balanced.
[Laughter.]

The Chairperson: We are talking about reflecting the wider population, and 51% of the population is female. I appreciate that it is up to parties to put forward candidates, but what steps will councils be encouraged to take to ensure gender balance?

Councillor Bunting: It is not for us to dictate who parties and councils nominate. We like to think that people consider issues such as gender balance, but that is not in our gift.

Mr Weir: In addition to discussion on composition, there has been discussion on the powers, operation and checks and balances of the transition committees. More broadly, I appreciate that there may occasionally be differences of opinion across the five political parties that are involved. What is the level of overall consensus on the issues?

Councillor Bunting: Are you asking about consensus on the checks and balances?

Mr Weir: I am asking about consensus on the general operation of the transition committees, because, presumably, that will be the basis of the regulations.

Councillor Bunting: There are a number of issues tied in with that, and I will try to make my answer as brief as possible. It is quite detailed, so bear with me.

The Chairperson: If you want, you can supply the Committee with the detailed answer later.

Mr Weir: It would be useful to get that detail in writing. However, has there been broad consensus on the general powers and work streams of the transition committees, or has there been a wide divergence of views?

Councillor Bunting: It has, more or less, been agreed by everyone. There were a couple of very minor exceptions, and those were recorded. Where there were exceptions and party positions were recorded, it is important to note that any agreement was cross-community. To date, there have never been circumstances in which unionists have taken one view and nationalists have taken another. There were general differences in party views, but those were minimal. By and large, the panel has worked extremely well on governance. We have, generally, found consensus.

The Chairperson: I think that that answers Mr Weir's question. I am happy to accept a more detailed response later.

Mr Kinahan: We raised concerns with the previous witnesses about the gap in the information reaching councils. I congratulate you on your very good circulation of information. However, in Antrim Borough Council, we have quite often found that not every councillor was up to speed when we reached a council meeting. Not every councillor had read everything, and decisions were being overturned or stalled. It meant that a thorough summary was required at every main council meeting, and I assume that that happens elsewhere. You may have sent the information to Antrim Borough Council in every conceivable form, but it had not been read, and the debate often got carried by whoever was in attendance. We need a thorough way of briefing.

My second point concerns the acceptance of joint and several liability, although I am not a fully trained lawyer such as Mr Weir and others. A council may not want to agree to something, but they will all have to act as part of Arc21. Surely that council will have to agree, because all the councils will have signed up to joint and several liability?

Mr John Quinn (Northern Ireland Local Government Association/Arc21): That point is academic as far as the current regime is concerned. It affects joint committee structures, which concerns two of the three groups. The arrangement in both those groups is to have a supplemental agreement to the collaboration agreement, which is the joint committees' constitution. That has already been agreed by the member councils. Those points have already been addressed in the current governance arrangements; it is simply a matter of copper-fastening them in statute.

The Chairperson: Ms Winder, do you want to address the issue of communication? That is what Mr Kinahan was addressing; he was asking for a better summary. Will Councillor Bunting answer that question?

Councillor Bunting: Just so that I am clear, Chairperson: I presume that members are referring to decisions that are made by the voluntary transition committee. The minutes go back to the relevant council, which then decides whether the committee has gone too far.

Mr Kinahan: It takes various forms. It also applies to decisions about waste that are coming through from Arc21 and the transition committees. The danger always seemed to exist that if certain councillors were there and others were not, decisions were being overturned. Therefore, communication is vital; we must find a means by which everyone knows what is happening. It comes down to a briefing at the relevant council meeting.

Councillor S Gallagher: In fairness, Chairperson, waste management can be an emotive issue for councils. In my experience, every sore head has an opinion and expertise on waste management. Unfortunately, if that agenda gets ahead of the real agenda, it can create serious delays. The waste management groups and people like me have to remember that Europe has put down stringent deadlines for recycling and environmental impact measures, and rightly so. We should not get away from that. There will be difficulties and delays, but the bottom line is that there are no landfill sites left. We cannot throw waste on the ground anymore; we have to process it and learn to recycle. Government could do more to get that message out, because there is a gap there.

One example that I gave the Minister is that the Wake up to Waste campaign of a few years ago increased recycling by 7.5%. That is value for money in my opinion. In order for us to reach our targets, central government must come up to the mark. I know that there is a credit crunch, but people must be educated. Following that, councillors will realise what the broader issues are, and will hopefully get the message. I agree what has been said; if the message falls in the wrong place, it can get lost.

Mr Ross: Not being a councillor, I am happy to talk about severance pay.

Mr Weir: You might get lynched outside.

Mr Ross: I might.

You said that you were happy to run from January 2010 until the date of an election. In part, severance is designed to recognise the service of councillors throughout the years, which is the correct thing to do. However, there is also the issue of those who were not going to stand for election to the new councils. Obviously, there must be co-option legislation in place to allow them to stand down, but then we can get new people in and build their capacity and knowledge in readiness for the new councils to go live.

Is there not a danger that, in running severance pay right up to the date of an election, councillors who have no intention of standing for the new councils will not stand down, even if the co-option legislation is in place? Was any thought given to making that window smaller, so that, if the co-option legislation is in place, those who are not going to stand will step away before the election so that new blood can be brought in?

Councillor S Gallagher: Most of the political parties will go through a selection process during that period. For example, SDLP councillors are required to say whether we wish to stay on or take whatever package is available. Most political parties will work in the same way. The argument about the time period also allows political parties to bring in new people and give them an opportunity to see what they are getting into. That is a good idea, because I worry that we could lose all our good people in local government overnight if they all decide to go. A lot of experience could walk out the door. My point of view is biased, but over the past 30 years of the Troubles, local government kept the Province going.

Very few elected councillors have not experienced some impact on their private and home life. Some have experienced threats and so on. The bottom line is that we must recognise that. We all know that it is not a nine-to-five job and that in the past few months some people have adopted a kick-a-politician attitude. The bottom line is that an awful lot of people work very hard in local government; unfortunately, that is overlooked. That message has been lost during the past six months.

My worry is that people who make a positive contribution to local government will have had enough and will walk away from their role. The political parties have a job to do to convince the people whom they want to keep in local government to stay. It is in the interests of the Assembly to have strong local government. Once the situation beds down, the Assembly will benefit from strong local government.

Mr Ross: I am not disputing the fact that we need strong local government, nor am I disputing the severance scheme. I am asking whether it would be beneficial to narrow the window of opportunity. Parties, of course, have responsibilities. However, we must ensure that new members receive training for the new councils, which have a responsibility to be up to speed on matters once the new system goes live. Would narrowing the window not be beneficial?

Ms Winder: There is an issue of capacity. We are embarking on a major reform process in local government. If we lose all our councillors in one swoop, in January 2010, many people will need to get up to speed very quickly. We must not underestimate the size of the reform programme and the short time period. Therefore, by phasing in the severance scheme throughout 2010 and up to May 2011, the sector retains the capacity to oversee the change process for as long as possible.

The Chairperson: A couple of members want to comment on the same point; please keep your comments brief.

Mr Kinahan: I know that we are held back by being councillors. I am a councillor in Antrim Borough Council. However, I have only been there for four years, so am not included in the severance package. I take on board your comments that people who have been there for years know why councils made decisions and know the route that they have taken. We should, perhaps, consider a way to allow them to remain in a council as, for example, honorary members. That would allow them to remain in the system but not have a vote, allowing the councils to call on their experience, at least. That way, you would not kick them out the door and lose them.

Mr Dallat: My understanding is that the severance arrangement has more to do with creating space for new members who plan to spend a lot of time in new councils, rather than simply to reward those who have been there for a long time. I am somewhat confused about that now. It is best to resolve the severance issue as soon as possible to allow those who want to leave to do so.

Earlier, we mentioned the fact that the proposed Causeway Coast and Glens district council will have four extra representatives. Two of those four councillors are currently nationalist, but will become one big unionist. It is not often you get the opportunity to plan your own funeral; perhaps the extra places were deserved.

Councillor S Gallagher: We must recognise long-term service in local government. The balance must be found to allow new blood to come in and to create new opportunities. Hopefully, politics will be appealing enough to attract the right kind of new blood.

Mr Beggs: I have a question for John Quinn. Aspects of the Bill were designed to give confidence and assurances to the contractors and financiers who will build the new waste-management infrastructure. It has been indicated that it all needs to be finalised by June 2010. Earlier today, Ciaran Quigley from Belfast City Council said that Arc21 could proceed with a site only with the approval of individual councils. That is his interpretation of the guiding rules of Arc21. Does the current arrangement in which you have to operate enable a site to be established?

Will the necessary confidence be available for — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] If you do not have a site, you do not have a plan, and nothing can happen.

Mr Quinn: We have a raft of sites at our disposal. The issue about our governance relates to the issue of consensus around any major decision, including that of releasing a site that is in council ownership for waste-management purposes. That is only one of a range of decisions that require consensus. In a democratic process, the converse is that any council has a veto for those major decisions, including contract award.

That, I guess, can militate against an expeditious decision-making process in one organisation in which there are 11 — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] To date, those governance arrangements in all three groups have worked very well. The issues specific to — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.] The Belfast situation as referred to by Ciaran Quigley relate to the authority of a council to make available a site. In this case, Belfast City Council decided not to make its site available. However, that does not mean that there are not other sites in the public or private domain.

Mr Beggs: Are you confident that you will be able to get approval for sites from owners so that the deadlines can be met at affordable prices?

Mr Quinn: Yes.

Mr Boylan: I have just one issue on which I need clarification, because the Committee will discuss in a moment how the Assembly can help his process.

Mr Kinahan said that reform is a major body of work, and we need to have local government staff fully trained in order to implement it. The Chairperson spoke about the role that local government has played. I am mindful that people out there are very busy, especially during the evenings. However, I am seriously concerned that the message seems not be getting across.

Is the greater part of the message getting across, whether through group leaders or whoever? I know that individual councillors will dispute different issues, but it is important for the Committee to have an understanding, because we will make a decision whether the message is being effectively communicated and how we can help in the communication process.

The Chairperson: With regard to communication and getting messages across, I have been informed that someone has their mobile phone on, and it is continuing to affect the recording system.

Mr Dallat: Chairperson, I can tell you every occasion that a phone rings, because I cannot hear anything. Under Section 75, and the provision of the loop system, I am entitled to know what is going on here, and I cannot hear because there is constant buzzing in my ear. That is unfair.

The Chairperson: I hope that the guilty party will take note, if any, but that message came from Hansard. People must turn off their mobile phones, please — not only for Hansard, but in order to allow Mr Dallat to hear.

Mr Dallat: Well, if it continues, I will have to find out what my rights are in here. This is the only Committee in which I have experienced the problem.

The Chairperson: OK.

Ms Winder: I will give an overview of the way in which NILGA has attempted to include people. From a local government point of view, a lot of member and officer time has been devoted to policy development when working with the strategic leadership board on the reform process over the past year. We have tried, as far as possible, through the communication strategy, to ensure that the detail of what has been agreed is available for access by everyone involved with the process. There is information on the DOE and NILGA websites.

In addition, a monthly update on the reform programme is sent to all councillors and all councils, as well as a NILGA update, which gives a general overview of what is happening in local government.

A 12-month review was carried out of the strategic leadership board and the policy development panels. Although final agreement has to be reached on that report at the next SLB meeting on 16 October, there is general agreement on the development of a regional transition committee that will come into effect when transition committees become statutory. The regional transition committee would have a representative from each of the new 11 council areas. We hope that that will build the capacity and improve the communications flow so that messages go directly back to the transition committees that will have to make decisions.

Throughout the process, we are continually trying to improve on communications, and we take on board the point that was made earlier, which I will bring back as a summary. Unfortunately, however, some of these matters are very detailed, and some of that detail is lost if it is summarised too much.

Councillor S Gallagher: I find the Assembly's website a bit difficult to use. It could be a lot more user-friendly. I admit that I am not very IT literate, but perhaps that website could be looked at.

The Chairperson: The Committee agreed earlier to write to the Department about communication issues, and we will mention the website.

I thank you all for coming along and for your contributions.

The Chairperson (Mr Hamilton): I welcome the representatives of the Housing Rights Service to this morning's Committee meeting. Janet Hunter is its director and Nicola McCrudden is the policy and communications manager. The Committee has received a submission from the Housing Rights Service on the Housing (Amendment) Bill, with a supplement to that in the tabled items. Ms Hunter will make some introductory remarks, to be followed by members' questions.

Ms Janet Hunter (Housing Rights Service): Thank you for this opportunity to come back and speak to the Committee, now that we have had an opportunity to review the text of the legislation in detail. As we said previously, the Housing Rights Service does not have any major concerns about the Bill; it is largely uncontroversial.

It contains a number of provisions that we are keen to see reach the statute book. In the interests of brevity, our submission will focus on the provisions contained in the Bill and will highlight one or two areas in which we think that changes in wording would improve the Bill. As well as that, I will highlight two areas of the Bill about which we have more substantial concerns

Clause 1 is about placing a duty on the Housing Executive to formulate a homelessness strategy. The clause states that the Housing Executive:

"may formulate and publish a homelessness strategy".

That is an unusual form of words to use. Locally, in legislation, the use of "may" generally implies a power rather than a duty. Having read the rest of clause 1 and the explanatory and financial memorandum and having been involved in the background to the Bill, we know that that is not the Department's intention. The intention is to introduce a requirement for such a strategy. To avoid possible ambiguity in any future interpretation of clause 1, our recommendation is that "may" be changed to "will".

We have more substantive concerns about clause 4, which are outlined in our supplementary paper. Clause 4 gives the Department the power to prescribe the form of advice and assistance that the Housing Executive offers to people who present to it as homeless and who are undergoing a formal assessment process. The Housing Executive has had that duty for over 20 years. Although we would not claim that there could not be some improvement in how the Housing Executive discharges that duty, that alone does not warrant legislative intervention or the provision of guidance from the Department to the Housing Executive.

The background to all the homelessness provisions in the Bill is supposed to be the work of the promoting social inclusion (PSI) group on homelessness and 'Including the Homeless', a strategy published by the Department for Social Development. As a member of the PSI group and as someone who was involved in those discussions all those years ago, I am clear that, as it stands, clause 4 represents neither the spirit nor the intention of the working group, nor does it reflect the intention of the Department as stated in 'Including the Homeless', in which the recommendation was for:

"DSD Housing Division to amend the law to provide for NIHE to have statutory responsibility for ensuring advice is available and to regulate the form of advice and the means of provision."

That recommendation is about introducing a new and additional duty; it is not about something that has been in existence for 20 years. That distinction is important because a central theme of the strategy is to try to place increasing emphasis on the prevention of homelessness and recognising the key role that good-quality advice can play in preventing homelessness if it is delivered early in the process.

One example that is relevant in the current economic climate is the provision of debt advice to someone who is in mortgage arrears. Good advice given at the right time can prevent someone from losing their home as a consequence of debt. That is different from the type of advice that the Housing Executive will be giving to someone who is already homeless. I hope that that helps the Committee to understand the distinction.

The PSI group felt that that distinction was so important that it recommended that a new, broader duty be imposed on the Housing Executive to ensure that advice and assistance was available to any person, free of charge, when he or she is faced with the threat of homelessness. In that case, people would not have to be at the crisis stage of formally presenting as a homeless person.

Clause 2 introduces a new, broader duty of providing advice, and it is that duty around which the Department needs to be prescriptive and produce guidance. The Department must ensure that that duty is implemented effectively, the advice is comprehensive and covers the full scope of issues and the quality of that advice can be assured. That is a fundamental point, as it would bring us in line with the position in England, Wales and Scotland. When the duty to provide advice was introduced in those places, it was quickly realised that without guidance from the relevant Department to ensure that the advice was comprehensive, that advice was largely ineffective.

I hope that I have conveyed the importance of that point and how we feel that what is represented in the Bill does not reflect in any way the intention of the original working group on homelessness. Later, the Committee will hear from the Council for the Homeless and the Simon Community, organisations that were also involved in that working group, and I hope that they can support us on that point.

I draw members' attention to a technical point around clause 5. We have covered that in our written submission and, I suspect, it is one of those things that is easier to cover in writing than verbally. Clause 5 introduces a statutory right to a review of an adverse homeless decision. The clause includes a recommendation that the Housing Executive should, during any review process, be able to provide the applicant with temporary accommodation. A similar issue concerning the Housing Executive's ability to provide temporary accommodation is covered later in the clause. However, as currently drafted, the wording of the two proposed new articles is different. To ensure consistency, our recommendation is that where the two similar issues are covered in the same clause, the wording should be the same.

Clause 10 relates to antisocial behaviour. The clause suggests that there should be a statutory requirement on the Housing Executive to publish its policies and procedures in relation to antisocial behaviour. We fully support that proposal, and we absolutely agree with the Department's rationale for introducing it: not only will it allow tenants to see how any complaints that they may have in relation to antisocial behaviour will be progressed, it lets them know the standard of behaviour expected of them as tenants.

Our advisers would very much welcome the publication of policies and procedures. Those are an important tool when it comes to assisting clients who have issues relating to antisocial behaviour. However, our experience shows that it is not only Housing Executive tenants who are involved as the victims, or alleged perpetrators, of antisocial behaviour. For example, we deal with just as many people who live in the housing association sector. Our clear recommendation is that clause 10 be reworded to extend to all social landlords.

I am happy to take questions on those clauses; however, at this stage, I will hand over to Nicola. She will talk about clause 14, which concerns the definition of houses in multiple occupation, which, as I am sure members are aware, we have previously raised concerns about.

Ms Nicola McCrudden (Housing Rights Service):

Members who have been on the Committee for some time will be aware that we first raised this issue a year ago, when the Minister stated her intention to bring forward the Bill and propose an amendment to the definition of a house in multiple occupation (HMO). We have a number of concerns about clause 14.

The rationale for regulating HMOs is to minimise the risk to the health and safety of the occupants living in them. Therefore, in our view, any amendment to that definition should be viewed as substantive, because it could significantly impact on the rights and protection of people living in such high-risk accommodation. As such, we believe that a thorough consultation should be carried out before any change is implemented. Unfortunately, it is being treated as a technical amendment and is being introduced without proper and due consideration.

We also have concerns that the explanatory memorandum to the Bill is, in fact, misleading. The definition being proposed goes further than what is stated in that document. As members are probably aware, the amendment is being introduced as a result of a judgment in 2005, in which a judge criticised the definition of "family member". The view of the Housing Rights Service is that it would require one amendment to address those concerns; that is, a change to the definition of "family member" to ensure that extended family members are not treated as living in HMOs. We agree that that is the only definition that would need changed, but the amendment goes further than that. We feel that that is unnecessary and that the matter has not been given proper consideration.

The Bill also amends the definition of a HMO, which will have unintended consequences. It will mean that two unrelated families living under the same roof will no longer be treated as living in a HMO, and will no longer be afforded the protection that the regulations provide. That is very worrying. It has not been pointed out in the explanatory memorandum; therefore, there has been no proper consideration of the potential impact of the amended definition.

Thirdly, as I think everyone is aware, there are significant numbers of non-UK nationals, migrant workers and young people living in that form of accommodation. Unfortunately, the equality-impact assessment does not contain any statistics relating to HMOs and their occupancy with regard to migrant workers and young people. That is a concern. There was no consultation on the equality-impact assessment. Had it been put out for consultation, we — along with other stakeholders, including the councils and other colleagues — would have had the opportunity to make some input.

The Housing Rights Service agrees that the definition of HMO needs to be reviewed. We believe that the definition as currently worded should be removed from the Bill, and should be subject to proper consultation with key stakeholders. It should be emphasised that councils must be involved in that process, because they will be taking over the statutory responsibility from the Housing Executive for the registration scheme for HMOs under the review of public administration (RPA) in 2011. That is why we recommend that the amended definition should be removed, because if it is included in the legislation, and that is passed in the Assembly, it will have a detrimental impact on people who were never intended to be included in the definition.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your presentation. To return to the homelessness strategy, do you consider that the list of organisations, agencies and Departments in clause 1 is complete?

Ms Hunter: A lot of the recommendations were made as far back as 2004. Nicola mentioned the forthcoming review of public administration, which is relevant because it will give councils a bigger role, not only in private-rented housing but in the whole community-planning process. It might be good to extend that list to include councils.

Ms McCrudden: We suggested that registered housing associations should be required to be involved in the development of the homelessness strategy. They will be involved in implementing it, but, as housing providers, they should also be involved in its development.

Ms Hunter: That would make sense, as housing associations will have an increased role in housing provision.

The Chairperson: You have touched on a lot of salient points in the Bill, and I know that members will wish to ask some questions.

Mr F McCann: I want to make a couple of points. Along with a number of other groups, the Housing Rights Service took part in drawing up a homelessness strategy in 2004. Having spoken to some of those groups, I understand that there were concerns that by the time that the strategy was implemented, a lot of its content would be out of date and would need to be upgraded. I notice that you said that the Bill is a tidying-up exercise to take account of some issues that were raised. Do you not feel that the Bill presents an opportunity to deal with some other outstanding issues; not only antisocial behaviour, but homelessness and immigrants? If we miss this opportunity, it may be years before we are again in a position to deal with those issues.

Ms Hunter: We agree with that. A lot of the things that were talked about as part of the formulation of the homelessness strategy did not make it into the final document. There are other legislative reforms to deal with homelessness and the broader housing world that we would be keen to see being made. Our understanding was that, at this stage, it was almost too late to bring those things to the table and that the opportunity to debate them would come with plans for any future housing legislation; for example, legislation around the private-rented sector. If we had a carte blanche, we could add a lot more to this.

Mr F McCann: I am concerned that it could be years before a lot of those issues can be picked up on. We have an opportunity now. This Bill goes to the Assembly and it is for political parties to debate it in the House, but it would be a wasted opportunity not to pick up on a number of the outstanding issues. For instance, Nicola spoke about HMOs. The interpretation that we were given is fairly vague, as you said. I would like to see you expand on what that actually means to people in houses of multiple occupation. It would give us a good insight into how that matter is approached. We were also told that, because of the court case that took place, you may have little room for manoeuvre; however, you are saying that that is not exactly the case.

Ms Hunter: Yes, Nicola was quite clear on that point. The issue around the court case was about the definition of “family member”, not the definition of HMOs. It is our view that that legal concern could have been dealt with simply by changing the definition of “family member”. Our view on that is very clear.

Ms McCrudden: The amended definition is the Scottish one. The practice of lifting clauses from other jurisdictions and introducing them locally is probably a throwback to direct rule. It seems to be felt that, because something has been used in other jurisdictions, it can be brought in here. However, Scotland never had our definition, so we do not see why we need to bring in its definition. It has gone beyond what the judge's concerns were, so we think that that change in definition is unnecessary.

Mr F McCann: The issue of antisocial activity affects not only the elected representatives here, it affects everyone in society; we are all inundated with problems to do with it. We have been told that there is sufficient scope in the Housing Executive's regulations to deal with antisocial behaviour. If that is the case, has the problem not been dealt with by the Housing Executive? There is talk about publishing those regulations; how will that impact on antisocial activity?

Ms McCrudden: Requiring the Housing Executive to publish that information would mean that there is more transparency. Our concern is not to do with the Housing Executive, because we have that information already. Our concern relates more to housing associations because not all of them have policies and procedures and sometimes it can be difficult for our advisers to get their hands on that information. If somebody comes to us with a complaint that another tenant is being antisocial, it takes us a while to get the information on how the association will deal with it and whether it is following its procedures. It is very important that housing associations be required to publish that information so that they are transparent. It would also mean that the Housing Rights Services, and other groups like us, may have an opportunity to input to their procedures and policies. Therefore, it is not only to do with the Housing Executive; it is broader than that.

Mr F McCann: Do you regard the Housing Executive's regulations as being ample to deal with antisocial activity? Are those the sort of regulations that should apply across all social providers, including housing associations and the private-rented sector?

Ms McCrudden: My understanding is that the housing associations have similar powers to those of the Housing Executive in the procedures that they follow and the eviction process for a tenant who is being antisocial. For example, they all have introductory tenancies, which was brought in under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 and means that tenancy is probationary for one year and there is a quick process for a landlord to evict a tenant who is being antisocial. That applies to both the Housing Executive and housing associations. We think that there is sufficient legislation and powers, but they have to be enforced and used.

Ms Hunter: Making the process transparent will assist in that.

Mr F McCann: You mentioned the duty on the Housing Executive to formulate a homelessness strategy, and I understand that that strategy is supposed to be reviewed every five years. I am not sure whether it was representatives of the Simon Community who told us that if it has taken four years for the original recommendations to be made into a strategy, to wait another five years will mean that ten years will have passed before the review takes place. In the South, a group looks at all aspects of homelessness and other housing-related issues. Rather than relying solely on the Housing Executive, would you see such a group as well-placed to do that review and pull together the family-housing sector, as was done with the PSI group on homelessness?

Ms Hunter: That would be useful. That sort of model was created with PSI, when it was not only the statutory players who were involved in discussions; the voluntary sector and other key stakeholders were involved. It is important to continue with that model because those groups have a lot to bring to the table in such discussions, and PSI is proof of that.

Mr Hilditch: Is there much of a difference between the Housing Executive policy on antisocial behaviour and that of the registered housing associations? Have you been able to get a hold of any of the housing association policies?

Ms Hunter: That is one of the difficulties. It is hard to say because, as we cannot access the policies, we are not able to draw those comparisons. Our advisers inform us that some of the housing associations have policies that are fairly easy to access and that are similar to the Housing Executive's, but they also say that it is difficult to access the policies of some other housing associations. That does not mean that they do not have a policy in place, but in its absence, it is difficult for us to progress work on behalf of a client.

Mr Brady: Thank you for your presentation. In your comments on clause 4, you emphasised the need for proper and comprehensive advice on homelessness, because the Housing Executive's current advice is minimal.

Ms Hunter: That is correct; it is narrow and, at present, the requirement for it is also narrow. However, there is little point in introducing a new, broader duty unless guidance is offered on how that should be implemented. There is, therefore, a need to redraft clause 4 and relocate it so that it clearly relates to the new duty, which is contained in clause 2, and not to the existing duties. As you rightly say, currently the advice is minimal and I do not believe that it would prevent anyone from becoming homeless, which is what the whole thrust of the strategy is supposed to be.

Mr Brady: The Housing Executive's advice on the wider issue of homelessness is minimal. Do you think that it is incumbent on DSD to widen the scope of that advice? I think that that is what you are saying. Do you think, as I do, that there is a need for specialist homelessness advisers in the Housing Executive and that providing such advice should not be the responsibility of someone at the front counter who does not know much about it? Anyone who has dealt with such issues over the years or has sought advice will know that such advice is sadly lacking. If you are introducing legislation, it has to be backed up, because prevention is better than cure.

Ms Hunter: That is correct, and that is the point that we are trying to make. The Department has gone part of the way by introducing a new duty, but without introducing the guidance to ensure that that is implemented effectively, there is little point in introducing it, because it could still mean very little to people on the ground. For the new duty to be effective, it needs to be accompanied by prescription or some form of guidance from the Department.

Mr Brady: It is pointless to introduce the legislation unless there is strong backup. It will not solve the problem; it will not go even close to solving it.

Ms Hunter: Without that back up, it is largely tokenism. The experience in England, Wales and Scotland has been just that: a duty was introduced, and several years later it became apparent that it had no teeth unless there was guidance to describe what that advice should look like in order to have an impact on people and prevent them becoming homeless.

The Chairperson: To return to the issue of HMOs; it seems that the explanatory advice gives scant regard to the potential consequences of the change in definition. You have suggested that the amended definition should be removed and that there should be further consultation, but have you any preference for what a better clause should look like?

Ms McCrudden: As I said, one way to address the issue would be to amend the definition of the phrase “family member”. That would address the judge’s concerns and those of the Department and the Minister. I do not think the Housing Rights Service is best placed to come up with a definition and form of words on its own.

The Chairperson: Is it not simple or straightforward?

Ms McCrudden: It is extremely complex. We have appeared before the Committee three times trying to explain it. The wording of the legislation is very complex, and it is very difficult for landlords to know whether their property is classified as a HMO. Any tinkering with the wording could have a significant impact on people. We are not confident in doing it on our own, but we would like to work with others, including the Department, the Housing Executive and councils, to try and come up with a Northern Ireland definition that suits our circumstances in today’s environment.

The Chairperson: It is easy to see who would be negatively impacted by the proposed changes, but who would be impacted positively?

Ms McCrudden: People affected positively would be those with aunts, uncles, nieces and nephews living in their accommodation. Currently, if one is living in a property with those relatives, that property could be classed as a HMO. It was never the policy intention to include such people in the definition, because a lot of people here live with their extended families.

The new definition will remove lodgers from the equation, but there are other ways of doing that. There could be a separate clause excluding lodgers, so that if a husband and wife rent a room to someone else, their property could be classed as a HMO. We have no objections to lodgers being excluded, but the new wording will mean that two families sharing a house will be excluded from the definition of a HMO. Such a situation can often happen with migrant workers. We do not feel that that has been properly thought through.

The Chairperson: It sorts one problem out but gives rise to another. In relation to the publication of policies on antisocial behaviour, you said that references to the Housing Executive in article 27A should be changed to include all social landlords. When you say “social landlords”, you clearly mean registered housing associations. What do you intend the wording to be.

Ms Hunter: That is what we mean. We want it to include registered housing associations.

The Chairperson: You are not straying into the private-rented sector?

Ms Hunter: No, because there have been difficulties with that in the past.

The Chairperson: That was my fear.

Ms Hunter: We are suggesting that registered housing associations be included.

Ms McCrudden: Housing is allocated from a common waiting list; so if a tenant is allocated a Housing Executive or housing association property, those should be treated exactly the same. We cannot see any justification for having differences.

Ms Hunter: People generally do have the same rights and entitlements; there is very little difference. We think that that parity should be maintained as a matter of principle.

The Chairperson: They may pay more rent for the place.

Mr F McCann: On the back of that, there is more reliance on the private-rented sector to provide houses for the social sector. Why should that sector be excluded when the other two social housing providers are being asked to take on those responsibilities? When dealing with the private sector, your organisation deals with a lot of cases, as other groups bear testimony to. You deal with illegal evictions, overcharging, poor housing, etc. How can those things be dealt with if that sector is excluded from the legislation?

Ms McCrudden: You have raised an interesting issue. The clause is being inserted into the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 at a point relating to injunctions for antisocial behaviour. All landlords, including private landlords, can apply for injunctions to prevent a tenant from being antisocial. I do not know whether any private landlords have done so.

The Landlords' Association of Northern Ireland (LANI) took a case involving the HMO judgement against the Housing Executive under the HMO registration scheme. LANI argued that it was not a public authority and should not, therefore, have the same obligations imposed on it as other housing providers. LANI won the case.

Ms Hunter: We do not necessarily agree with that, but the case has already been lost.

Mr F McCann: Surely a body that receives nearly £100 million of public money annually to deal with the issue should have to adhere to the same rules and regulations affecting the other two.

Ms Hunter: We agree, but we are aware that the legal debate has been lost.

The Chairperson: It is a minefield.

Ms McCrudden: We are starting to stray into issues of private-rented accommodation. The Committee is aware that we support registration, but that is for another day.

Mr F McCann: That is if it is ever dealt with at all.

The Chairperson: We will come back to that. We have concentrated, naturally, on some of the parts of the Bill about which you are not overly happy. You said that you generally welcome the Bill. Do you want to highlight any positive clauses to the Committee?

Ms Hunter: We are extremely supportive of the duty to form a homelessness strategy, as long as it is exactly that; a duty. We have long been concerned that, in Northern Ireland, no statutory right existed to request a review of an adverse decision, whereby the Housing Executive states that an individual is not homeless. We always considered that to be unfair. We are delighted that that is coming on to the statute books.

We also strongly support clause 2, which broadens the duty to provide advice and changes the emphasis to the prevention of homelessness. However, as I said, our reservations are that clause 4, as drafted, could render that meaningless, and that would mean the loss of a valuable opportunity.

The Chairperson: Before I let you go, I will recap your evidence and go through the reasons why you are here today, because members may wish to express their views or put further questions to you. I will try to synthesize your evidence as best I can. Feel free to correct me.

The Housing Rights Service has made the following suggestions: the requirement to produce a strategy should be strengthened; the type of advice on homelessness should be specified; temporary accommodation for those awaiting decisions should be provided; housing associations should publish a policy on antisocial behaviour, and the HMO clause, which is clause 14, should be removed. Do members wish to express their views at this stage?

Ms Lo: We had a long, detailed meeting with the Housing Rights Service, and I strongly support what it has said today. The new HMO definition will create ambiguity and cause many problems. Some health and safety issues will arise as an unintended consequence. I strongly support the removal of that clause. A proper public consultation should take place on that subject. Let us get it right, rather than rushing into including that clause.

The Chairperson: If members have no further views, we will come back to that subject during the deliberations on our report. Thank you, Nicola and Janet, for your useful evidence today.

Ms Hunter: Thank you.

The Chairperson: We are now joined by representatives from the Simon Community: Paddy McGettigan, the director of housing and support services; Ciara O'Hagan, director of finance and facilities, and Alyson Kilpatrick. You are welcome, and thank you for coming to the meeting. As with the previous session, perhaps you will provide a few introductory remarks about your submission, after which I will open the session for members' questions.

Mr Paddy McGettigan (Simon Community Northern Ireland): Thank you. I want to clarify that Alyson Kilpatrick is a board member with the Simon Community Northern Ireland. She is also a barrister at law and an expert in housing.

The Chairperson: We met informally, during the summer, at the Housing Commission

Ms Alyson Kilpatrick (Simon Community Northern Ireland): I am not wearing that hat today.

Mr McGettigan: The Simon Community thanks the Chairperson and Committee for the opportunity to comment on the Housing (Amendment) Bill. At the outset, I want to say that we fully endorse and support the comments made by the Housing Rights Service in its submission. You will see a correlation between some of the points in our submission and some of their remarks.

We want to concentrate on issues relating to the development homelessness strategy. Although Simon Community Northern Ireland has seen a decrease in the number of people who referring as homeless, we believe that it is essential that the work carried out following the publication of the 'Including the Homeless' strategy is continued and have concerns that there have been some suggestions that the work of the steering group and subgroups should be reduced. The DSD strategy document also recommends that it be a statutory requirement for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to publish a homelessness strategy and, therefore, we welcome its inclusion in the Bill.

Now, more than ever, given the current climate, there is a need to concentrate on social-inclusion issues. It must be recognised that the challenges facing the sector, and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive as the statutory authority, are unprecedented. The development of a homelessness strategy must, therefore, become a priority in order to give clear direction to all providers.

The Simon Community Northern Ireland believes that, given the current environment, the suggestion in the Bill that the Housing Executive develop a five-year strategy is unrealistic. We recommend that the strategy should be developed for no more than three years, with an annual review to allow for appropriate action to be taken in a time of change.

The development of a homelessness strategy is essential to the targeting of limited resources in order to ensure the cost-effective use of public funds and to maximise value for money. The supporting people team is already leading the way in trying to encourage joint-working initiatives and co-operation in order to develop more effective ways of working. That work must be supported with the appropriate strategy in order to give a clear way forward for all providers. That would also help to provide some stability to the sector and allow organisations to plan ahead with some degree of confidence.

When it comes to the co-operation of other statutory organisations, it is essential that the organisations listed in the proposed article 6A, paragraph 5, be required to take account of, and give effect to, the strategy. Without that approach, the effect of any strategy will be severely limited. We see the strategy as an opportunity to point in the direction of homelessness prevention, highlighting the need for community education on homelessness. A co-ordinated approach to homelessness prevention involving all Departments in the Executive is essential. In addition, the strategy must point the way forward in securing community ownership of the problem of homelessness.

Ms Ciara O'Hagan (Simon Community Northern Ireland): For future provision and regulation, we suggest that the development of a homelessness strategy provides an opportunity for the Housing Executive to carry out a critical analysis of the homelessness sector and its own landlord function. In the current climate, the Housing Executive has been under increasing pressure financially; and, as the largest social landlord, it must look at how it is to maintain, sustain and develop its property base in the future.

The Simon Community suggests that the homelessness strategy looks at the development of options, such as community housing companies, as an effective way of providing opportunities for the cost-effective management of social housing without increasing the demands on the public purse. That could offer a way forward for community ownership linked to community regeneration, development, and a shared future in housing. There are also links to community planning, RPA, council reform and the management of community behaviour.

The Simon Community recognises the need for the private rented sector to be seen as one of the solutions to future housing need. However, we suggest that regulation of that sector is necessary, using a balanced approach that will encourage the inclusion of the many excellent landlords already operating within the sector. At the same time, such regulation will act as an effective disincentive to poor practice and have the overall aim of providing an affordable housing option. Regulation of the private-rented sector could provide assurances, with respect to standards, in that type of accommodation and be seen as a reasonable way of providing housing for people on the common selection scheme list.

In summary, the Simon Community sees the requirement to publish a homelessness strategy as essential to mapping the way forward. We believe that it offers the best opportunity to provide innovative solutions, to secure a collective approach to the problem of homelessness and to strengthen our Northern Ireland communities.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much. I will open up the meeting for members' questions.

Mr F McCann: Over the past number of years, the private-rented sector has performed what has been termed as "taking up the slack" with respect to the lack of social housing. If that sector is to be more widely used, how far would you go with legislation? For example, would it be mandatory legislation? Surely, at the minute, quite a number of people are being grossly abused by landlords through poor conditions and by being charged over and above the rate of housing benefit. How would you deal with that?

Ms O'Hagan: That is a big question. There are already good landlords working in the private-rented sector. The Housing Executive relies on that sector and puts homeless people into private-rented-sector houses. The legislation must be regulatory in allowing people to register and continue as private-rented landlords, but not so onerous that it discourages them from registering and being subjected to standards. If landlords do not register, that will force people towards an almost black-market economy in the private-rented sector. I suppose that the standard needs to be at a level where it is not a barrier for private-rented landlords to sign up to such a register.

Mr F McCann: Surely, strong regulations, which are currently not in place, will start to pull this unregulated sector into line. In England, opinions are starting to change on how the private-rented sector has been treated. Obviously, a large section of private landlords provide an excellent service, but a sizeable rump of them do not, and they grossly abuse their tenants.

The Chairperson: Fra, we are in danger of straying into an entirely different issue.

Mr F McCann: It came up during the debate, but I will move on.

Your documentation refers to how you would deal with 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds. Will you elaborate on that?

Mr McGettigan: We are concerned that the Housing (Amendment) Bill does not include anything about that group being a priority need: we understood that that was going to be part of the Bill. However, we have been advised that a process is ongoing that will bring that part of legislation forward without the need for it to be included in this Bill. Case law on the issue has developed in England. In May 2009, the case of G versus Southwark went through the House of Lords, and we believe that that will set a precedent in law. The choice is whether to set legislative requirements or allow case law to develop that will point the way anyway.

Ms Kilpatrick: Sixteen-year-olds and 17-year-olds who leave care here are not automatically considered to be in priority need, whereas they are in Great Britain. They could be accepted as being vulnerable for another reason, but I have only seen that happen in a handful of occasions. As a matter of law, I can see no reason why either primary legislation, which could have been included in the Bill, or secondary legislation could not have stated that 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds leaving care are considered to be in priority need. That would mean that they would be accepted by the Housing Executive as being owed a housing duty.

Mr McGettigan: Even more worrying are the cases of 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds who have no care history. Quite often, they are shifted between the health authorities and the Housing Executive, with no one taking real responsibility for them. The Simon Community feels that those young people are at real risk, because they do not have support. It is also an issue for young people who leave care, but, generally, they have social work support and a number of agencies working with them. Young people who leave home one night after falling out with their parents and have nowhere to go are at real risk in the current system.

Mr F McCann: Around 20,000 people declare themselves homeless each year, and less than half are accepted as homeless. I am always trying to work out where the rest of them go, but I take it that many 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds are left to their own devices.

Mr McGettigan: We have no definite figures on that. However, the point links back to the duty to give advice and assistance. Under the legislation, no such duty lies with the Housing Executive. We think that a child in such a position should be assessed as a child in need, but the health authorities are reluctant to take young people of that age into care. If a child were to be assessed as a child in need, he or she would automatically enter the care system.

The case that went through the House of Lords in May 2009 clarified that the primary responsibility for a young person of that age presenting as homeless lay with the health authority and that they could not be regarded under homelessness legislation. I think that, eventually, the precedent from that case will apply here. The issue comes up day in and day out, and, from a practical point of view, a young person who presents as homeless at a Housing Executive office is often told to go to a social work office. When they present at a social work office, they are often told to go the other way. That toing and froing is not helpful.

Ms Kilpatrick: For those looking at the legislation, it must be clarified as to who owes the duty. Do the two agencies owe it? Should they liaise with each other? If so, what is the duty? How do you discharge that duty to them? Does it encompass accommodation needs, support needs and social services needs? That is what people need to grasp. Who owes the duty and how is it discharged?

Mr McGettigan: We are going back to the point that we made in our submission about the homelessness strategy. The development of the strategy is a great opportunity, but it will not work unless there is buy-in from all Departments. There are links throughout education, health and employment, which need to be considered in tandem if we are to address the issue of homelessness.

Mr Hilditch: I think that Ms Kilpatrick has already referred to my next point. The proposed statutory rule, the Homeless (Priority Need for Accommodation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2009 will replicate the English and Welsh situation. Will that address the concerns here?

Ms Kilpatrick: I think that it will. There is case law, albeit from the English Court of Appeal; and I think that one of the points was taken in the House of Lords, which makes it fairly clear. It takes longer to feed through the courts, but I think that the Order will fill the gap.

Ms Lo: I agree with what you say about the 16-year-olds and the 17-year-olds declaring themselves homeless: often, it is a ping-pong situation. From my experience as a family and childcare social worker, I know that social services are reluctant to take on anyone at age 17. With the closing of so many children's homes, they do not have places for them. Often, as you say, they disappear. They could be sleeping on the streets, finding themselves in vulnerable situations and going to live with inappropriate people.

Mr McGettigan: There were approximately 2,800 referrals last year, and 50% of the people who are referred to us are under 25. The majority are around the ages of 16 and 18.

The Chairperson: You spoke about developing community housing companies. Will you elaborate on what the role of such a company would be and how that would differ from that of a registered housing association?

Mr McGettigan: We relate that to the current arrangement in the Housing Executive, which is regulator and landlord. If you are to look at real community involvement in the future, an opportunity to address the issues around antisocial behaviour, community development, community planning and community regeneration could be linked to giving ownership to the community by way of their housing. Therefore, it is an opportunity to create a housing company from existing structures within the Housing Executive. They are structured along district and area lines.

If ownership of accommodation was registered as a housing company, with a board that was made up of local people and local businessmen and linked to the new council structures, it would provide an opportunity to give ownership back to the community and have the people invest in their communities. That has the potential to help to give some of the answers to antisocial behaviour, because people are less likely to destroy or be at odds with something if they feel that they belong to it or have ownership of it. Alyson has some knowledge of the linkages from some of the work that she has done.

Ms Kilpatrick: It is clear from what I have looked at here and in England, Wales and Scotland that the areas in which the community invests in housing and in the area, the children and young people who are responsible for antisocial behaviour — although not only them — tend to be regulated within the community, and I do not mean in a summary justice sort of way.

There have also been positive results in relation to some of the work that has been done with Travellers.

When travellers are residing in sites that they have some permanent connection to, there are fewer complaints from neighbours and the accommodation is well looked after.

The point about antisocial behaviour and the publishing of policies ties in closely with the idea of a community strategy. The policy could take account of the housing companies' views on antisocial behaviour in the locality. Publishing the policy is important not only for reasons of transparency; it can also help to ensure accountability. There is accountability to the person about whom the complaint is being made, because sometimes complaints that are made are unjustified and arise as a result of different cultural beliefs and ways of behaving or as a result of behaviour that is simply bizarre and it is not fair that the person is targeted as being antisocial.

The publication of the policy also means that the Housing Executive can be held to account when it fails to take action on antisocial people living in an area. It can be asked why it has not applied the policy — in relation to a particular family, for example — and can be expected to provide a written reason for that. The people living in the locality can then decide whether to challenge the Housing Executive's failure to take action. The publication of the policy, so that people can understand what is in it and how it is applied, is essential to accountability and transparency. That ties in very closely with bringing the community housing groups much more into the focus of all these policies.

The provision of advice and assistance was raised by the Housing Rights Service and it is possibly one of the most important things that can be achieved through the Bill. All my experience has been in representing local authorities and, mostly, the homeless applicant. If a person has presented as homeless and the decision has been taken that they are not owed a duty, it is too late. The only thing that can be done is to instruct a solicitor or barrister to take the matter to the High Court, which can take 12 months. In the meantime, that person is usually not in temporary accommodation; certainly not in suitable accommodation.

To effectively prevent homelessness, the advice and assistance has to include practical elements, such as taking someone to a letting agency or introducing them to the private sector. The English system, in which there was not prescribed guidance, simply did not work and made no difference whatsoever; people simply fell back to consulting lawyers. I do not think that anyone wants to see lawyers being the only answer.

The Chairperson: Except the lawyers. [Laughter.]

Ms Kilpatrick: Even I do not want to see that.

Mr McGettigan: There is also the opportunity for housing companies to have a structure in which it is possible to borrow against assets and to realise funding through private finance, whereas the Housing Executive does not presently have the finance to do what it needs to. There is an increasing demand on budgets in this Building and there is a projected Budget deficit next year. There is already a deficit of £100 million in the housing budget this year. We must look into finding a range of solutions and having real community ownership for a shared future.

The Chairperson: That is something that the likes of the Commission on the Future for Housing in Northern Ireland is looking at as well.

You said that advice on homelessness should be available to everyone in Northern Ireland regardless of status. With specific reference to migrant workers, immigrant workers and those seeking asylum here, I have a question about how practical that is in respect of two factors: the limited resource available and the potential conflict with existing immigration law. Scotland has pushed the matter a bit, but what are your views on the ability for us in Northern Ireland to step outside immigration law as it stands and the consequential knock-on effect on resources that that would inevitably entail?

Mr McGettigan: We recently saw a situation develop in Belfast in which we had to deal with the problem after it had happened. To return to the issue of prevention, if we can give people appropriate housing advice and assistance, that will, in some cases, reduce the long term problems that exist.

Ms Kilpatrick: If I understand you correctly, Chairperson, you were talking about those people who are ineligible for any housing assistance, including advice. People are frightened even to discuss who should help people who have been declared ineligible for assistance. An opportunity exists to be a little more creative. It is not a question of the Executive having to go out and find the people who need advice and assistance. However, there could be some mechanism whereby if anyone presents as homeless at an early stage or presents as being in mortgage arrears and having had repossession proceedings issued against them, the Housing Executive or a housing association could be notified and could provide that advice and assistance.

Organisations such as the Simon Community will assist those people to whom nothing can, in effect, be offered. Essential advice can be given on health issues and on access to education for children for however long is necessary. It is a contentious and difficult subject, but something must be done to provide for those people who receive no other assistance.

The Chairperson: I raised that because it is a difficult and sensitive issue. Even raising the issue can create a problem as one can be pigeonholed as having a particular view. I am aware of the problem. The consequence of offering help, even if it is simply advice and assistance, is that it can steamroll into other areas such as education and health, which you mentioned. Some of the individuals concerned have passports that are stamped “no recourse to public funds”, and that can raise tricky legal issues.

Ms Kilpatrick: Thankfully, that is a political rather than a legal question, and I will duck it completely. However, if something is to be done for such people, those loose ends must be tied up, and it must be decided what duty, if any, is owed and who owes it.

Mr McGettigan: The problem exists already. Last year, 84 migrant workers to whom no duty was owed were referred to the Simon Community. We fully support such people through our fundraising initiatives and the money that we raise in the community. However, that is not sustainable. Ultimately, some Department will have to deal with the issue, as was recently the case with the Romany families in Belfast.

Surely we want to prevent a recurrence of that type of situation by providing good housing advice, assistance and support at a stage when it could make a real difference, before Northern Ireland and Belfast, or any other city here, becomes stigmatised? The television reports that we saw recently were not nice to witness. A collective approach is needed and, as Alyson said, a political decision is required to try to find a way forward.

The Chairperson: I understand the problem. It is even more acute when dozens of people are involved, but we should all be concerned if even one person presents with a problem. If no help can be offered, what happens to that person? He or she may disappear and fall into awful circumstances; we do not know. Equally, as sympathetic as we all may be, it is a tricky problem to resolve, as we all recognise.

Mr F McCann: Recently I heard someone from the Simon Community talking about the lack of obligation to help migrant workers to find accommodation, even initially. Should the Bill be used to help people who come here? Where does the responsibility lie? Sometimes that responsibility gets caught between Departments.

Mr McGettigan: I think that there is room to specify that housing advice and assistance can be given to migrant workers or those who may not necessarily fall within the statutory remit. Unless it is specified that such advice and assistance can be given, it will not happen, because the Housing Executive would then be operating ultra vires. Clarity must be given. The current situation is unsustainable because, typically, what happens is that those people do not receive advice and assistance. A number of years ago, a case in Coleraine was highlighted. Thankfully, we have not had anything as bad as that since. However, any night of the week, we could have a recurrence of that situation. When somebody dies on the street, it is too late.

Mr F McCann: What about including it under the provision of temporary accommodation for people?

Ms Kilpatrick: There are different duties already owed to people who are ineligible. The Bill could be amended to state that people who are otherwise ineligible are entitled to advice and assistance and it could describe what that advice and assistance would be. It would then be a question of whether the Housing Executive has the duty to provide that advice; I can see no other body that would provide it. It would be quite easy to stipulate that in the Bill.

Mr McGettigan: Currently, we accommodate anyone who presents to us as homeless. However, that is at our cost, and it could not happen without the funding that we get from the public in Northern Ireland. That can add up to a substantial amount of money at the end of each year.

Ms Lo: I and a number of other MLAs have people coming to our constituency offices and asking for help. It is then that we realise that those people have no access to public funds. That relates not only to housing issues; other issues are also involved. I am very interested in what you are saying, Alyson; perhaps we can look at that in more detail.

We have all been scratching our heads over how to deal with this. Belfast City Council would find it very difficult if there were a repeat of the situation involving the Romany families. Its hands are tied. Unless there are 100 people in crisis, the council cannot trigger a crisis management scheme, and the same goes for the Housing Executive.

At the moment, children can be offered accommodation if their family becomes homeless. However, that means taking the children into care, and parents do not want to be separated from their children.

Ms Kilpatrick: It can be decided that it is in the best interest of the child to accommodate the family with the children. However, that depends on there being accommodation suitable for a family. You are right; it can end up that only the child is accommodated.

Ms Lo: Families do not want to be stigmatised by having their children taken into care.

You said that we can put in an amendment to say that under difficult circumstances people with no access to funds can go to an organisation, such as the Housing Executive, and it would have a duty to provide advice and information.

Ms Kilpatrick: That would have to be reconciled throughout the Bill. However, the Committee would first have to decide whether it is appropriate that a duty is owed to people who are currently ineligible for assistance. The Bill could be amended to include that duty, but it comes down to political will. If it were decided to amend the Bill in that way, legally, it would be very easy to do that.

The Chairperson: It is something that cuts across other issues, for example, immigration, which is not within the preserve of any Department, and there is also a cost issue. However, we are still in the early stages of scrutinising the Bill, so perhaps the Committee Clerk can get back to us on that and we can talk to the Department about it.

Mr Brady: At the moment, without the provision of specialist help and advice, the prevailing situation seems to be total confusion. Such knowledge is built up over a period of time. That kind of specialist input and understanding must be given by people who can advise on what exactly is involved for those who do not normally qualify. It goes back to the old adage that prevention is better than cure. If that advice were provided, it would go some way towards sorting out some of the problems that exist, although obviously it would not solve them all.

As someone who has worked in an advice centre for many years, it seems to me that the Housing Executive does not actually have specialist knowledge about this issue. As a public body, it should have that knowledge. At present, there is total confusion, and that will continue until that problem is addressed. Rather than the problem being solved, that lack of knowledge is exacerbating the problem.

Mr McGettigan: Our experience is that there is a range of situations and, depending on the district or area office that someone goes to, they will either get a good response or a poorer response. Therefore, I cannot comment using a broad brushstroke. Having managed temporary accommodation and having worked closely with Housing Executive staff, I know that they have an excellent track record in trying to accommodate and help people. That cannot be taken away from them. However, improvements can always be made.

In times of change, in which the Housing Executive must make adjustments to its organisation, people who previously worked in areas such as housing benefit are now on the front desk giving information and advice to people. Those individuals need to be supported and given the proper tools to do their job. It is essential that when someone walks through the door of a Housing Executive office, the person who gives him or her advice knows, if not how it all works, at least, how to access that information.

Mr Brady: I absolutely agree with your comments. That has been my experience. However, my point is that because it is such an important issue, advice should not be hit and miss. It should not depend on whether you speak to someone who might know more than someone else. Advice should be equal throughout the sector.

Mrs M Bradley: Paddy is correct: we cannot comment using broad brushstrokes. In certain areas, advice is good; in others, it is weaker. We must ensure that staff are given proper training, so that they can provide good advice in all areas. It is not enough to have good provision in one area and different provision in another. That is not good enough. We must deal with that.

Ms Kilpatrick: There is also a problem with access to independent legal advice. Heroic work is being done by the Housing Rights Service and various advice agencies. However, only the Housing Rights Service gives housing advice. You can have all the laws in the world, but if people do not challenge decisions or are not represented in court, it does not matter what is on the statute book.

That is where the legal profession — I hold my hands up — needs to take responsibility. There are no specialist groups of advisers. There are no pro bono units that deal with housing. In England, the big difference is that many lawyers started to, at first, act for free and then got together in groups to offer representation. Some people say that there are too many of them now, but here there are not really any.

The Chairperson: To sum up your comments: you suggest that there should be a three-year strategy for homelessness, with an annual review; the organisations that are listed should be required to implement that strategy; there should be further analysis of the Housing Executive's role as a landlord in respect of antisocial behaviour; and community housing companies should be developed. Thank you very much for your evidence.

We will move on to the next evidence session on the Housing (Amendment) Bill. With us is Ricky Rowledge, director of the Council for the Homeless NI, and Tony McQuillan, its vice-chairperson. Copies of their submission are included in the Committee papers. You are both very welcome. After you make a brief presentation, I will open up the floor for members' questions.

Ms Ricky Rowledge (Council for the Homeless Northern Ireland): We are coming in at the heels of the hunt. It is left to us to try to reiterate, underpin and echo some of what our colleagues have said about the Bill and, hopefully, add to and provide further clarification on some of the specific comments that were made.

In common with our colleagues, we welcome the Bill, and we thank you for the opportunity to respond to it on behalf of our member organisations. However, we feel that there are some areas that we would like to see strengthened. I will focus on the statutory requirement in clause 1, and Tony will touch on some of the other clauses regarding advice, information, HMOs and so on.

I want to go back to the establishment of PSI, which was mentioned by the other organisations that made presentations. PSI was supported and championed by Minister Ritchie and the DSD. The foundation of PSI, and some of the recommendations of its report, is what led to the proposed legislative amendments within the Bill. The strength of PSI was that it was cross-departmental and inter-sectoral, and it recognised that homelessness is not just a housing issue.

The Housing (Amendment) Bill is an opportunity to do something new and very special in Northern Ireland, by making it a requirement of, and a duty upon, other Departments to work in partnerships with the DSD and the Housing Executive to roll out a homelessness strategy for Northern Ireland. The ownership of that strategy will lie with the Stormont Executive. The strategy should recognise the complex needs often presented by homeless people and recognise that their housing situation comes at the end of many other processes that have gone on in their lives. Such a strategy will make us a forerunner of best practice in the area of homelessness.

It is great that there will now be a duty on the Executive to have a homelessness strategy, as opposed to that being a voluntary decision. We agree that it should be reviewed every three years and should, perhaps, run in line with the comprehensive spending review, as that will give us a more practical way of monitoring and evaluating the success of the strategy.

However, we do stress very strongly, and we recommend to the Committee, the point that some onus be put on the partner Departments to come up to the mark as regards sharing responsibility for the prevention of homelessness and supporting people who become homeless.

PSI has been a tremendous success. As the Committee knows, the initiative is at the end of a two-year process, and a report will be made to the Minister quite soon. One thing that I found incredibly encouraging and which gives me the confidence to say that we would be pushing at an open door if we were to ask for a requirement of duty from other Departments is that, time and again in the review of the past two years, high-level staff in other Departments have said that this is the way forward and that they do not want this kind of joint working to end. They have said that it must be mandated at departmental level in order to improve engagement but that it is working for them as well as working for us in housing.

Questions were asked about what could be done for 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds. The PSI youth subgroup has been doing a lot of work on that issue. It has been understood that there is no need for the proposed change in their priority needs to go through in primary legislation or as an amendment to primary legislation. The change will go through the Assembly and the Executive as a Statutory Instrument in parallel to the Bill. That will give priority need to all 16-year-olds and 17-year-olds irrespective of whether they have been in a care background or have been in the position of being exploited. On grounds of age alone, they will have priority need status for advice, assistance and housing.

Through PSI, joint working and the mandate that has been placed on health and social services, the group has been doing work to try to enumerate how many young people may need accommodation. The group has been looking at the development of joint protocols between health and social services, and it has been trying to ensure that young people no longer get ping-ponged between Departments. The Bill provides the opportunity to strengthen that, and there have been tremendous successes.

We have discussed with other agencies the stipulations in the Bill that will possibly focus on all those who are at risk of homelessness or who are assessed as homeless among A8 and A2 nationals. We suggest that clauses in their current form relating to those groups of people be removed from the Bill. Serious consideration will have to be given if we make those groups eligible for particular duties, given that we do not have the ability in law to fund any positive solutions at the other end.

Mr McCann, I am not referring to giving those people advice and assistance; that should be our duty to every citizen who lives within the borders of this country. I am talking about any duties being introduced that may end up making people from those groups eligible for accommodation when, at present, we have no way of paying for that. The Stormont Executive must look very seriously at how they will meet that, and I recommend the Human Rights Commission's paper, 'No Home from Home'. We do not think that it goes far enough, but it contains some suggestions about how the Executive can, within the bounds of law, fund emergency accommodation and support for those client groups.

Mr Tony McQuillan (Council for the Homeless Northern Ireland): I am speaking in my capacity as deputy chairperson of the Council for the Homeless, as opposed to my work in Shelter (Northern Ireland) Ltd.

Chairperson, you asked about the list of names of organisations in clause 1. We feel strongly that district councils should be included in the list. They are part of the housing executive's consultative round, and that is already covered in existing legislation, but their inclusion would go beyond that; it would allow for their involvement in issues concerning HMOs and regeneration. There is also the potential power of well-being, and so forth, in which they have an important role that should be considered.

Elsewhere in the Bill, there is a proposal, and rightly so, that other organisations should work with the housing executive in delivering services. However, we in the voluntary sector believe strongly that we are not simply a passive provider of services. In fact, as Ricky said, we are heavily involved through our engagement with statutory agencies. We often chaired meetings of subcommittees as part of the PSI process. Therefore, we would like relevant voluntary organisations to be included in the list and not just be passive recipients or providers of services.

In clause 1, the proposed paragraphs 6B(3) and 6B(4) refer to institutions, and they lump together various statutory organisations with voluntary and other organisations. To reinforce the point about the duty of statutory agencies to work with the Housing Executive, the legislative draftsman should separate them, because the same duty cannot be imposed on a voluntary or private organisation. It is simply a drafting error.

My colleague mentioned the Human Rights Commission's report 'No Home from Home', and some of the issues were touched on earlier. Many councils already prepare welcome packs for migrant workers. Just because migrant workers are not eligible for Government support does not mean that they cannot come here. Many people are, rightly, entitled to be here and are, therefore, entitled to receive information. It is a bit of a no-brainer; there is no problem with providing advice and information. I accept that some people may be particular about who pays for that, but the public purse pays for it in some form anyway.

The Human Rights Commission's report makes several recommendations. Some primary legislation from Westminster is required, but the commission makes suggestions as to what the Assembly can do too. I recommend that the Committee read that report. One suggestion is that there should be a pot of money. The proposal is to make that public money available to the Simon Community, the Churches, and all the other agencies, such as the Welcome Centre, who work with people who are not otherwise eligible for support from the public purse. I am not sure how that could be included.

Although there is nothing wrong with clause 3, it does not go far enough in examining the duties regarding people who are ineligible for housing assistance and who may be, for example, destitute. The Human Rights Commission is concerned about that situation. I recommend that the legislative draftsman either removes that clause or amends it. Ms Lo made that point during the previous presentation to the Committee.

Clause 4 concerns the powers to prescribe advice and assistance. I agree with what our colleagues said in their earlier presentation. We encourage the Department to adopt the model of the Scottish regulations from 2002 as a good-practice model. We would also like a timetable included to ensure delivery. Often, actions that are prescribed disappear into the distance. As for the detail, we want delivery to be uniform, and we want the information to be widely available and provided in appropriate languages and format.

Clause 5(2) proposes the insertion of supplementary provisions. Those refer to people who are trying to appeal against adverse decisions by the Housing Executive on their homelessness status. I understand that the intention is to break the duty on the Housing Executive to continue to provide temporary accommodation for someone it deems is not owed that duty. However, the clause, as drafted, also states that the Housing Executive can continue, at its discretion, to continue to support that temporary accommodation. That opens up the issue of consistency of application regarding information and advice, to which reference was made earlier.

In my experience, it is not good legislation to say, on the one hand, that something is a duty, and on the other hand, that it is a discretionary practice. That is just not sensible. One either drops the amendment or makes it a very clear prescription as to the exact circumstances in which the Housing Executive would be allowed to continue supporting somebody who has already been declined, and whether temporary accommodation should be allowed.

Clause 9, which deals with the abandonment of introductory tenancies, proposes the dropping of the word “secure”: it appears in page 13, line 20 of the Bill. Although I think that that may well relate to introductory tenancies, and I understand perfectly that those are not secure tenancies, the clause relates to a wider group of what are regarded as matters that can define suitable accommodation. Was it the intention of the legislative draftsmen to narrow it down to just introductory tenancies, and that that is why the clause has been drafted in this way, or, does it have a wider impact, which is what I am concerned about? We do not want to lose any rights that people have over security of tenure and so on.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much. In your written submission, you welcome the changes to the definition of HMOs. Today, we heard others, including some members, express concerns about that. Will you elaborate on why you welcome those changes?

Ms Rowledge: It is mainly because we are stupid.

The Chairperson: That is a rare admission in this Building. [Laughter.]

Mr T McQuillan: We are from the voluntary sector; we always tell the truth.

Ms Rowledge: This is not an area that we specialise in. We read the definition very much in the broad sense. We did have concerns, particularly about migrants with very large or extended families, and we felt that the new definition would give them more security and be better for them. I think that that may have been a misinterpretation. Normally, we do not tend to share responses within our sector. For example, when organisations are invited to jointly present evidence to Committees, we will share our responses afterwards but not beforehand. It was my fault, and I apologise.

The Chairperson: It was not a criticism; I wanted to see why you welcomed the changes.

Ms Rowledge: That is why.

The Chairperson: Fair enough.

Mr T McQuillan: The Housing Rights Service presentation got it spot on.

Ms Rowledge: We agree with them and trust them to know more about that aspect than we do.

The Chairperson: It was just in case you had a particular view. The Committee is all about recognising that, sometimes, there are different perspectives. Thank you for clarifying that.

Mr F McCann: I have a question about the definition of a HMO. There was some concern with the Private Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 that enough time has elapsed to find out whether there were difficulties with that. Groups such as yours were already pointing up that the regulations were not strong enough to allow you to deal with those problems. Do you see this Bill as another option to try to strengthen the regulations?

Mr T McQuillan: It is a matter for the Committee to determine how it deals with the Department’s legislation. However, some issues, such as priority need, would have been very important to debate. In Scotland, the Government have agreed to take priority need out of the assessment by 2012, which will leave the homelessness tests as intentionality and eligibility: that area was worthy of examination and debate in relation to this legislation. At the moment, Scotland has diluted priority need in such a way that it is almost ineffective as a criterion: almost everybody has a priority need. Homelessness should not be about priority need, because that relates to the services that are required to prevent homelessness or help people not to be homeless. Priority need is about assessment for services, as opposed to status.

Therefore, if there were time, I would include those items in the Bill. Obviously, we do not want to hold up the legislative duty that is being placed on the Housing Executive to produce a homelessness strategy in the proper format. If that were to be delayed for 12 months or 24 months, then it would not work out. However, if one could include other provisions in the Bill, then there are certainly some that we would like to discuss.

Ms Rowledge: May I ask a question in order to clear up some confusion in my mind? The voluntary sector, as a whole, has strongly called for the mandatory registration of private landlords? Is Mr McCann saying that that could be added to the Bill? Does he feel that it has gone too far in the Private Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 that it can, therefore, no longer be included at this stage? Alternatively, does he want to take a belt-and-braces approach?

Mr F McCann: Consultation has been ongoing and the results have yet to be released. I recall people saying that several pieces of legislation under the Private Tenancies Order 2006 were not strong enough to allow councils and other people to deal with certain difficulties. What I am saying is that that may not be picked up in the consultation on the private-rented sector and I am asking whether there a mechanism that you believe could be inserted in this Bill?

At the outset, most people were led to believe that this was simply a tidying-up exercise that would mop up certain issues. However, it might be years before we get back to this point. Should the Bill be used to deal with some of the problems that exist currently?

Mr T McQuillan: I do not know the mechanism for that. If one introduces something new, does one have to consult on it? Clearly, there are issues with the Private Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 2006: it is not strong enough. One has to wait until certain criteria are met before one can act. If there is evidence that earlier action is needed, one should be able to do something instead of having to wait until late in the day.

Therefore, there are issues. However, councils would feel that they have the right to be consulted about these things and make contributions. The issue is what can be delivered within the Committee's timetable. I do not want to take away your role, Mr Chairman, to decide on those matters.

The Chairperson: We expect legislation to be introduced off the back of consultation on the private-rented sector.

Mr T McQuillan: Many people, including our organisation, have sent rather long returns to the Department to try to make some of the points that you have mentioned, Mr McCann. Certainly, there could have been a wider debate on some issues. We were not given the opportunity until now.

The Chairperson: It is in the pipeline.

Mr F McCann: It will be interesting to see what comes out of the other end of the pipeline.

The Chairperson: That is correct. That is where the debate is.

Ms Lo: I have two questions. First, the PSI group has obviously done a tremendous amount of work to bring the situation to its current stage. Is there a mechanism by which the group can be sustained? For instance, could it scrutinise the strategy and hold people accountable?

Secondly, I have seen so many so-called interdepartmental strategies in which one lead Department gets other Departments to buy in and work with it. Obviously, the homelessness strategy will require that sort of joined-up working. How will we ensure that other Departments play ball?

Ms Rowledge: The PSI strategy group is due to report to the Minister. The final meeting of the group in its current incarnation will be on 29 September 2009. We received a letter from Barney McGahan putting forward three proposals for the way forward for PSI. He asked which of those membership options the group would be comfortable with. The voluntary sector has chosen the third option and asked for it to be strengthened slightly. That option is to have an overarching interdepartmental working group. It would not necessarily be called the PSI group any longer, but, ideally, it would comprise the same constituent groups. The group would have some kind of summit meeting biannually. A new action plan would also be developed.

The action plan could be rolled out through subgroups, which is the way that the PSI has worked to date: there is one main group and five subgroups, which have done a tremendous amount of work. That work was not just about policy, but was very practical work, such as coming up with operational ideas and the development of new actions. That group would then report to the two summits.

However, voluntary-sector members would need to see a mandated buy-in and some sort of Government lead, which, to date, has been done successfully by the Department for Social Development. That is why we see an inextricable link between the legislation and the homelessness strategy, the requirements placed on other Departments, and the building of the foundation of PSI. They are linked not just through the homelessness strategy, which is a duty of the Housing Executive at the housing end of things, but through bringing together all other government strategies to get an overview of where Departments' responsibilities lie in regard to people who are, or who are at risk of becoming, homeless.

I cannot overemphasise my astonishment at how successful that has been. There are particular Departments that, for years, the voluntary sector had tried to bring to the table. Now, those Departments have said that they want this to continue. However, the only way that that can happen is if the Stormont Executive say that there has to be engagement. I think that this is the way to do that. We hope that PSI will, in some form, continue, but that it will have some kind of monitoring and evaluation role. That role would not just be in rolling out the homelessness strategy, but on the elements of the strategy that relate to people's needs outside of housing needs.

It is a case of watch this space. I have a colleague in the Public Gallery who is from the Department, and I hope he is listening to this with eager anticipation. Under his auspices, I hope that the Department will seriously consider strengthening the link between the homelessness strategy and promoting social inclusion.

Ms Lo: I strongly support that. You set a precedent with the migrant workers subgroup and the PSI group on ethnic minorities. That group is still meeting, but, as the three years comes to an end, it is going into review.

Ms Rowledge: Yes.

Mr T McQuillan: That is why we support the Housing Rights Service's suggestion to change the word "may" to something like "must" or "shall".

Ms Rowledge: We would like "must". [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: "Shall" is the appropriate word.

Mr T McQuillan: "Must" is much better though.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for your evidence. To recap: you agree to a three-year homelessness strategy basing particular emphasis on the partnered organisations listed in clause 1; relevant organisations being mandated, including the PSI steering group; a requirement for homelessness support for the destitute; a good practice guide for homelessness advice, and the enhancing of consistency of treatment for those appealing decisions.

Mr T McQuillan: We would like the word "secure" in clause 9 to be checked, and whether the draftsman intended that to relate to security of tenure or to have a wider impact.

The Chairperson: We can clarify that. Thank you very much, Ricky and Tony.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

22 September 2009

FORESTRY BILL (NIA 11/08)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Ian Paisley Jnr (Chairperson)
Mr Tom Elliott (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Thomas Burns
Mr Willie Clarke
Mr William Irwin
Dr William McCrea
Mr Patsy McGlone
Mr George Savage
Mr Jim Shannon

Witnesses:

Mr Stuart Morwood } Forest Service
Mr David Small

The Chairperson (Mr Paisley Jnr): The Committee is joined by David Small, chief executive of the Forest Service, and Stuart Morwood, director of woodland development strategies. You are both very welcome, and we appreciate your coming. We look forward to your presentation on the Forestry Bill. The floor is yours.

Mr David Small (Forest Service): Thank you. This is the first opportunity that we have had to address the Committee since the Bill was referred to its Committee Stage. I plan to outline the background to the Bill, its main purposes and the main clauses. I expect that to take around 10 minutes.

Current forestry legislation dates back to 1953 in the form of the Forestry Act (Northern Ireland) 1953 and reflects the priorities of that time, when the main focus was on commercial timber production. That legislation is dated, and it has been evident for some time that new legislation was needed.

The forestry strategy that we published in 2006 highlighted two key policy priorities. The first was the need for sustainable management of existing forests to deliver the full range of forestry benefits, and the second was a steady expansion of tree cover. The strategy seeks to deliver a more competitive forestry industry through a balanced approach between producing commercial timber, protecting the forest environment and providing increased opportunities for forest-based leisure and recreation.

We need legislation that will provide a statutory framework to deal with those varied issues, and the new Bill will address the Department's contemporary and evolving commercial, environmental and social forestry objectives. It will allow us to obtain better value from the forest estate through new revenue-generating opportunities, and it will enable us to secure better use of recreational facilities and buildings and facilitate wider objectives, such as tourism. It will help protect all forest trees, both private and public, from damage; it will reintroduce a restriction on the felling of trees in private woodland; and it will provide a public right of access to state forests.

The Bill contains 39 clauses and two schedules. It provides a statutory framework within which the Department can deliver its forest expansion and sustainable forestry objectives. Clause 1 creates the foundation of the Bill. It describes the Department's duty to promote forestry. A similar clause set the framework for the 1953 Act, but the wording in the new proposed clause is wider to reflect an expanded duty to promote the wider economic, environmental and social context of modern forestry.

Our aim is to promote and facilitate the full range of benefits that forests can offer. That includes the economic benefits delivered by the timber industry, as well as the renewable energy opportunities that can be delivered. It also includes the wider social benefits. For example, we are currently working with a number of councils to develop recreational tourism products. We recently worked closely with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency to facilitate the relaunch of the Ulster Way. We are currently engaging with the Tourist Board to identify the tourism opportunities in our forests and we are engaging with commercial partners to promote new leisure facilities. The draft Bill will enable us to develop those opportunities.

The Bill will also allow us to protect our existing woodland, both publicly and privately owned, especially where it has high biodiversity value — for example, ancient and long-established woodland. In promoting those wider social and environmental benefits, the Bill supports what is meant by the concept of sustainable forestry. That expanded duty is carried throughout the Bill, for example, in clauses 4 and 7.

Clauses 2 and 3 provide the Department with the main powers to support the afforestation of land and forest activity, including the acquisition and disposal of land, as well as the ability to provide facilities on forestry land to improve its amenity. That provision will enable the Department to deliver social and recreational forestry, for example, through arrangements with a range of partners. In July, we published a strategy to develop the recreational and social use of our forests. The provisions in the Bill will provide the Department with the powers to support the implementation of that strategy.

Clause 4 includes provisions to allow the Department to use or develop its forestry land for purposes other than forestry. The aim is to allow the Department to develop or facilitate what might be regarded as non-forestry opportunities — for example, tourism opportunities such as the provision of forest chalets or cabins in forests, which currently, under our legislative framework, we probably cannot do. It will also allow us to do things like develop renewable energy possibilities such as wind farms.

The provisions will enable us to better realise the full potential of our forests and, at the same time, obtain better value from the forest estate. However, in exercising those powers, under clause 4, the Department will be required to have due regard to the general duty — outlined in clause 1 — to promote forestry. Therefore, we must ensure that there is an appropriate balance when we use those provisions.

Clause 5 creates a new power to enable the compulsory acquisition of land for any of the functions under the Bill. We seek that power primarily to deal with situations in which forests and the associated timber assets are landlocked, and access, even after reasonable negotiations with landowners, simply cannot be secured. In those situations, the public value of mature timber, which may be the result of many years of public investment, could be lost. Our primary purpose is to try and enable access to landlocked public assets. There may be other circumstances in which land may be required — for example, to facilitate access to a recreational or tourism type of project, or for biodiversity purposes. Therefore, the power is widely drafted. At this stage, we cannot see the full range of contingencies that may require such a power. However, our intention is that the power will be used very sparingly and only with ministerial supervision.

The vesting process is described in schedule 1 to the Bill and is based on the procedures that are used under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, which is considered to be the cornerstone of modern vesting law, with all the established rights, including recourse to an inquiry by the Planning Appeals Commission, compensation, etc.

Clause 6 provides the Department with powers to carry out inquiries and to collect and disseminate the results, including the preparation and publication of statistics for the purposes of any of the functions under the Act. That is largely a carry-over from the 1953 Act.

Clause 7 is a new power that allows the Department to:

“do anything which appears to it to be conducive or incidental to the discharge of its general duty under section 1(1).”

This clause also allows engagement in partnerships or participation in a body corporate in support of the Department’s general functions, which could, for example, include recreational or renewable-energy initiatives. The power is not intended to be additional to the general duty, but to supplement it.

Clauses 8 and 9 are intended to protect forest trees from damage by wild animals. Clause 8 allows an owner and occupier, in the event of damage by wild animals to trees growing on his land, to cull such animals at any time, either in his woodland or in any adjoining land that he owns. That clause applies to owners of any woodland, private or public.

Clause 9 provides the Department with a power to deal with damage or likely damage to woodland, public or private, by wild animals living in adjacent land in other ownership. The context for that is our long-term aim to double the area of forest cover. The powers are designed to enable the Department to limit possible damage and will only be exercised where landowners are unable or unwilling to address the problem.

Clause 10 is a carry-over from the 1953 Act and is a standard provision in forestry legislation, aimed at protecting woodlands private and public from fire damage. Clause 11 offers protection to woodland owners or the Department’s authorised officials taking action under clauses 8, 9 or 10 of the Bill against prosecution under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 or the Game Preservation Act (Northern Ireland) 1928.

Clause 12 includes provisions to restrict the burning of vegetation close to forests and, again, is a carry-over from the 1953 Act. Clause 13 amends the Plant Health Act (Northern Ireland) 1967 to provide powers to make subordinate legislation to control the danger of tree disease posed by wood packaging.

Clauses 14 to 29 deal with the felling of trees. The key provision in this section of the Bill is the requirement for a felling licence to fell trees on land of 0·2 hectares or more. That will help to underpin our strategic objective of sustainable forest management. The aim is to ensure that private landowners manage their land with due regard to sustainability, including restocking, where appropriate, of sites that have been felled. We hope to use that mechanism to protect woodland of special biodiversity value — for example, ancient woodland. In order to obtain a felling licence the landowner will have to prepare a felling management plan for consideration by the Department. Our aim will be to keep that management plan as simple and straightforward as possible.

Felling licences are already a requirement in England, Scotland, Wales and the South of Ireland. Their introduction here is consistent with the principles of good forest management. In order to safeguard the interests of private landowners, there is provision for compensation. In the event that an application for a felling licence is refused, there is also a right of appeal against the decision. A further important provision is the power to require restocking after unauthorised felling. That provision also has an appeal mechanism. Procedures relating to an application for a felling licence and the requirement for a felling management plan will be described in subordinate legislation which will be subject to separate consultation.

Clause 30 of the Bill introduces a statutory right of access for pedestrians to the Department's forests for the purposes of recreation, subject to by-laws. The remaining clauses — 31 to 39 — include powers of entry, regulation-making powers, provisions for amendments and repeals, and provisions relating to commencement of the provisions of the Bill.

That summarises the key provisions of the Bill. I apologise if it took a bit longer to deliver than I had hoped. I wanted, as far as possible, to explain the policy aims behind the legislation.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much. That is a very helpful precis of the Bill. As you know, the Second Stage of the Bill was taken in the House last week, and it did not get universal approval. A number of concerns were expressed by Members of the Assembly and members of this Committee. I am sure you noted them.

You said that you are currently identifying ways to promote forests with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. Are you not putting the cart before the horse in that regard? Should those ways not have been identified before the legislation was drafted? One criticism that has emerged is that the Bill is not ambitious enough and does not recognise the full potential of our woodlands and forests to make the hit with tourists.

Mr Small: We have had discussions with the Tourist Board about where there may be tourism opportunities in the forests. We accept, and the Minister is clear, that we are not getting as much out of the forests as we should and that there is an awful lot more potential to be realised, in recreational leisure, tourism, health, education and so on.

Our feeling is that forests can and should deliver a wider range of Government objectives. We have been having discussions with the Tourist Board about the opportunities for tourism potential in the forests, and about which key sites can deliver more tourism. The Bill has been drafted to give us broader powers.

We believe that the powers in the Bill, particularly in clause 4 and clause 7, give us sufficient power to enable us to deliver tourism products, either directly, in partnership with other groups such as district councils — we are working with a number of district councils at the moment on tourism products — or perhaps as part of a joint venture. Clause 7 would allow us to enter into a partnership or body corporate to jointly deliver a tourism, or renewable energy, project, where we can secure the public return at the same time as delivering a new product. Our view, and our legal advice, is that the Bill gives us sufficient powers to do all of that.

The Chairperson: Who is leading those discussions with the Tourist Board?

Mr Small: The first discussions were taken forward by me and my deputy, John Joe O'Boyle, along with Alan Clarke, the chief executive of the Tourist Board, and his colleague Laura Harvey. Ms Harvey is developing a paper that will set out where the Tourist Board believes there is scope to do more. That will take us forward in identifying the kind of projects that might be possible at key sites and the kind of partnership arrangements that we might want to see in place to help us take those projects forward.

The Chairperson: Are you convinced that the Tourist Board is enthusiastic about that?

Mr Small: I am; the Tourist Board is very enthusiastic, and we are very keen to work with it.

The Chairperson: Has there been any exchange of paperwork yet between the Forest Service and the Tourist Board?

Mr Small: Not really, other than letters arranging meetings and establishing the desire to work together. The next stage is that Ms Harvey will produce a memorandum of understanding or heads of agreement that will set out how we will work together.

The Chairperson: If it is to meet the potential, my view, and that of other Committee members as expressed in the House, is that that is key to changing gear on our approach to getting the best bang for our buck from forests.

Mr Small: We accept that. Another separate, but related, piece of work that we are taking forward is the development of a stronger commercialisation approach in the Department. We are working jointly with the Strategic Investment Board (SIB) to identify the commercial opportunities to do more with the forests. In that respect we will be looking at the possibility of commercialising our current caravan and camping provision, which is generally very well regarded by all those who use the facilities. However, we feel that we are constantly struggling to maintain that standard of delivery, and the private sector would have an interest in delivering caravanning and camping on a commercial footing. We are working with the SIB to look at opportunities like that. We have just secured, with SIB assistance, a partnership with a company called Go Ape to deliver high trees adventures in our forests.

The Chairperson: Monkey business.

Mr Small: Yes. That company operates widely in GB. With the SIB, we will hopefully be looking at opportunities for tourism-type accommodation, such as forest chalets and forest cabins. Those are the kind of things that we are trying to take forward on a commercial footing with the assistance of the SIB and with commercial partners. On the other hand, we are also trying to develop relationships with district councils that wish to deliver tourism products and recreational leisure products, socially supported through public subsidy.

The Chairperson: You will have to guard against advancing some private interests. It has to be an open competition.

Mr Small: Absolutely.

The Chairperson: I know that a number of Members have expressed an interest. I would like to come back to some of the issues later, but, to get the discussion started, perhaps Members will identify the clause on which they wish to speak.

Mr Elliott: As you will appreciate, I will not go through the entire Bill today, because there is quite a bit of it. I will leave it until the Committee Stage, but I will mention a few broad issues. First, following the plenary session, have Mr Small and his team identified anything that they can immediately think of that may be acceptable for the Department to bring forward as an amendment before we develop any of the other issues? Is there anything they see immediately that can be changed or amended so that we do not have to concentrate on it so significantly?

Mr Small: At this stage, I do not think that we have, Tom. Following last week's debate, we want to sit down with the Minister and talk about any areas that she feels may be suitable for amendment. We have not done that yet. The Minister said in the Assembly that she wishes to withdraw the Irish hare from the definition of "wild animal", in the context of managing and controlling the damage that can be caused by wild animals. That is something that the Minister will be bringing forward. We have not yet had the opportunity to sit down and discuss with her the other issues that were raised in the debate. However, that is a process that we must take forward.

Mr Elliott: Do you accept that clauses 4, 5 and 7 significantly change major areas of the powers of the Forest Service, giving it an unfair advantage over private commercial forest operators?

Mr Small: I think that you are absolutely right. Those clauses significantly change the level of power that we have. However, the purpose of giving us some of those powers, in particular those provided by clauses 4 and 7, is to enable the Forest Service to take forward the type of projects that we just discussed, such as tourism-related projects.

Mr Elliott: But the powers are not restricted to that, David. If they were, perhaps I could accept it. The difficulty is that they are not. The Bill gives you wide-ranging powers over compulsory acquisition that the private industry does not have. If those powers only provided for access, we could accept that, or, at least, see some way to develop it. However, the wide-ranging powers go far beyond what any private commercial operator can compete with.

Mr Small: I will talk about the commercial forestry element in a moment. However, when it comes to developing tourism projects, we believe that the powers set out in clause 4 and clause 7 give us sufficient scope to do that and do it well. If we are to try to draw back from that level of freedom to negotiate with a private organisation or, indeed, with a council, that will limit the wider benefits that forests can deliver. The compulsory purchase power was debated in the Assembly, and a range of issues were raised about the breadth of that power. The Minister noted the specific interests of the Committee and the other comments made during the debate. We will sit down with the Minister and discuss whether there are ways to amend that particular clause.

The clause was drafted in a broad way on the basis that, while we know that there will be issues around access to landlocked timber that we will want to try to address, we believe that similar circumstances might arise in facilitating a tourism product. Some adjustment might be needed, for example, to our own access roads into a site, such as broadening a corner. That is the type of adjustment that we might make and the type of problem that we might want to resolve. However, we do not know all the contingencies in which we would want to use that sort of power. Essentially, that is why it was drafted in that broad fashion. However, the Minister will have noted the comments of the Committee and the comments made during the debate, and we will discuss those issues with her.

The Chairperson: You have twice said that those powers were drawn up to be used "sparingly". Given that, and your explanation of the understated ways in which the power will be used, is there not an advantage, as has been suggested, to specifying how that power will be used?

Mr Small: That is a suggestion that was made at a previous Committee meeting, and it is something that we will look at. We accept that those powers, as currently drafted, are very broad, and would enable us to compulsorily acquire land for any purpose. We acknowledge the point that is being made by the Committee, and we will discuss that with the Minister. There may be ways of restricting that. However, our concern is that we restrict it too far and face the situation, again, where those powers do not do what we want them to. However, that is an issue that we will look at.

Mr Stuart Morwood (Forest Service): The Forest Service manages 75,000 hectares of open land and forest, mostly for forestry purposes. However, compared with other land managers — and comparison was made with the private sector — we want to achieve value from the asset. I recently visited a woodland estate which had a significant wind farm attached, enabling the owner to ensure value from his estate. Clauses 4 and 7 allow us to achieve from the forest the value that we would expect any manager of land to achieve. That is important for public value.

Mr Elliott: You miss the point. It gives you an unfair advantage over private industry and private foresters. You expect to increase your forest cover through private developers, because you are not going to do it yourself. You admit that the Forest Service cannot do that on its own, so you will expect the private industry to increase forest cover. However, they will be restricted, and you will have an open-ended approach. For example, if forest timber reached an exceedingly good price and Forest Service had 10,000 acres coming to maturity and needed access to it, you could easily get that through these compulsory powers. However, the private landowner does not have that same power. Forest Service, unlike private operators, does not need a felling licence. Therefore, it has a huge advantage over private industry, and that is not recognised in the Bill.

Mr Small: I note the comments. Similar comments have been made by stakeholders during the consultation and in the run-up to introducing the Bill. Forest Service has noted the issue and will be discussing it further.

The Chairperson: How much will felling licences cost? Is Forest Service proposing to pay compensation for refusing to grant a felling licence?

Mr Small: Forest Service is looking at the issue of an application fee for felling licences. The Bill allows us to prescribe a fee. However, we are aware that no fee is payable for an application in England, Scotland, Wales and the South of Ireland. We are working on a business case to establish the merit or otherwise of having a fee. We recognise that it will be very difficult to apply a fee here when the same process operates elsewhere without a fee. We will take account of the number of applications that we expect to receive, the cost of administering the system, and the wider Department of Finance and Personnel policy on cost recovery.

The Chairperson: And compensation?

Mr Small: There are compensation provisions in the Bill in circumstances where we refuse a felling licence and that results in a loss for the woodland owner in terms of the value of the timber.

Mr Morwood: Effectively, it is compensation for deterioration of timber value.

The Chairperson: Over the period when the application was made and was refused?

Mr Morwood: Over that period.

Dr W McCrea: David and Stuart, you acknowledged several times that you had noted the comments that the Committee previously made. Yet, although you noted those comments, you went on with the Bill without actually addressing them. Once again, you have said to the Deputy Chairperson that you have noted the Committee's comments. However, that does not give us any confidence whatsoever. We are not asking the Department to note our comments. With the greatest of respect, if it was simply a matter of noting comments, we could have written to you, and a meeting would not have been necessary. We want more than the noting of comments.

The Committee's role is to scrutinise the Bill. I will not go into the detail now because we will be going through every section of the Bill clause by clause. We also need to hear the representations that are made by others. At the Committee Stage, we bring people in to make their representations rather than us doing that for them. We have to hear from those who are involved.

There are a number of things that you have set out. There is this bland statement:

"A Strategy for Sustainability and Growth".

Where in any of this is there a strategy for sustainability and growth?

Mr Small: It is not in the Bill, obviously; the Bill is the legislative tool to enable us to deliver the strategy, which is a published —

Dr W McCrea: We need to know exactly where you are taking us. Therefore, we really do need to have a strategy for that sustainability and growth. We need to know what that means in order to know the Bill that is required to accomplish it. If that is the background of the policy objective, it should be set out first. Then, in the light of where you want us to go, you bring in the legislation to support it.

It seems that we have a situation in which we have legislation in the minds of officials without having any clear or definite strategy. We can say that we want to double the area of forest, but you know very well that that has not been achieved. I do not know of anything that will attract farmers to plant trees. There has to be a policy and an incentive that will make them turn away from using the land for another purpose and plant trees. Quite frankly, that is going to take the offer of money. Have we got that money?

There is genuine concern among Members when we hear about the incidental powers that give Departments general powers to do anything. Elected representatives are suspicious of Departments looking for general powers, because that could mean anything, as we often find that it does. This Bill gives the Department power in such things as the compulsory acquisition of land.

The Deputy Chairperson has also made the point about the inequality of what the Department is demanding of others and what it is going to do itself. An example that has been mentioned is the felling licence that it will be demanded that people have, whereas the Department will simply decide willy-nilly whether that is so. You will also have the power to acquire land for the fulfilment of what you want. There is unfair competition between what the Department is demanding and what it can dodge.

Without going into the nitty-gritty of the Bill, which the Committee will go through line by line and clause by clause, particularly where we have concerns, what about the protection of the ancient woodlands?

Mr Small: I accept absolutely what you are saying about us noting the comments. When I say that I note the comments, I mean that I note them and I give the Committee a commitment that we will take them away, seriously consider them, discuss them with the Minister, and report back to the Committee.

Dr W McCrea: My point is that you have had meetings with us in which you have noted those comments, but they are not seen anywhere in the Bill. Therefore, it seems to be noting with no outcome. We want something productive at the end of the noting.

Mr Small: I appreciate that. In those earlier discussions with the Committee, a number of comments were made, but reference was also made to the importance of the Committee Stage that would follow and the opportunity that it would offer to have a real debate. In fairness, we were expecting that debate to take place at Committee Stage, having set out our proposals.

I accept your point about the need for a strategy. We published the strategy for sustainability and growth in 2006. It sets out our aims for sustainable forest management, how we address issues of forest expansion, and how we put in place measures and the kind of legislation thought necessary to enable us to ensure sustainable management of Northern Ireland's woods and forests.

Dr W McCrea: That strategy was published in 2006, and we are now in 2009. What real changes can we see on the ground three years later? What has changed to give us confidence that we are not simply looking at words, but at a way forward?

Mr Small: There are a couple of things. The first is the Bill. The strategy committed us to look at areas where we felt that legislative change was needed. We have done that, and we have developed the legislative proposals. The strategy committed us to taking a more serious approach to the social and recreational use of forests, and in July 2009 we developed and published a recreational and social use strategy, which sets out a two-page implementation plan indicating what we will do to try to deliver more from the forests with regard to leisure, recreation, social use, tourism, health and so on.

While we have been developing the Bill, which took a fair bit of work, we have also been developing and publishing our recreation strategy, which was quite a piece of work and involved consultation. We have been working hard to develop new approaches to promoting, marketing and incentivising woodland planting as part of our forest expansion aspirations.

I accept that we have not been making as much progress as we would like. We have been involved in a review of those incentives and how we incentivise woodland creation. That has involved a review of the rates of incentive and grant, and it has involved looking at other, more extensive, means by which we can make woodland creation happen at a faster rate than at present. I accept that it is difficult to persuade some farmers who have been farming their land for years, and in some cases generations, to set aside that agriculture interest in place of forestry. Nevertheless, it is something that we need to try to address.

You raised, as Mr Elliott did, the issue of felling licences applying to private woodland owners but not to us, and the issue of compulsory purchase and the advantage that that might give us. All I can do at this stage is note those comments and give an undertaking that we will take them away and look seriously at what is being proposed and what has been said, and see whether we can make amendments that would try to balance that a bit better.

We believe that there are provisions in the Bill that will enable us to manage and protect ancient woodland in the future. We do not have a provision that clearly indicates that ancient woodland will be protected in all circumstances, but we believe that there are provisions in the Bill that will enable us to protect the higher-biodiversity woodland in Northern Ireland, such as ancient woodland, long-established woodland and native woodland.

Mr Morwood: That provision is made specifically through the felling regulation, which enables us to indicate to owners the timing of their felling, the extent of their felling and how woodland should be regenerated. It is worth bearing in mind that ancient woodland is a living thing: trees are young, they get older, and they die. Woodland will often be managed, and owners will often want to fell individual trees in their woodland for a particular end use and to derive benefit from it. The felling regulation seeks to ensure that that is done according to good forestry practice, which is identified in the UK forestry standard that is just out for consultation, along with the associated guidelines and booklets available on the subject. Through the felling regulation, we will be able to assess an owner's proposal to manage his ancient woodland, and we expect that to be managed in conjunction with good forest practice. We will apply that to ancient woodland and to other types of woodland.

The Chairperson: Do you feel that there would be more chance of growth, success and development if the scheme was grant-supported?

Mr Small: In terms of creating new woodland?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr Small: A grant scheme is available, and broadleaf trees account for 70% of its uptake. We have issued clear guidance on, and definitions of, "native" woodland to ensure that anyone who is contemplating putting woodland in place understands what is needed to make it "native".

Mr Morwood: Incentives for the establishment of woodland are available through the woodland grant scheme. In addition, annual payments are available under a farm woodland premium scheme to compensate for income forgone for a period of up to 15 years. Support is available to landowners through the rural development programme, the woodland grant scheme and the farm woodland premium scheme. As David indicated, we have recently examined those levels of support.

The Chairperson: Do you accept that those support levels are not sufficient to attract a lot of people to forest diversification?

Mr Morwood: I recognise that, in the previous year, we did not achieve the target that we set out to achieve. In the three years previous to that, we did achieve our targets on the annual rate of increase in new woodland. The decline in uptake has made us focus not only on the rates but on how we promote the schemes and engage with farmers and landowners to ensure that they are aware of the schemes and can see the benefits of woodland ownership.

Mr Small: Although we achieved our targets in those years, we recognise that we need to set higher targets if we are to achieve our long-term target of doubling forest cover.

The Chairperson: We will measure your commitment to those stated objectives by the changes that come forward as a result of today's dialogue.

Mr W Clarke: The Bill should make reference to using forestry as a tool for alleviating flooding and combating climate change. It is more than 50 years since the last change was made, and it could be a hell of a long time until the next change is made.

I agree with you about ancient woodland: management is the key. There is no point in having 200-year-old trees and no growth of young trees. You could get a storm and they would all be gone, so management is vital. How does that dovetail with Department of the Environment (DOE) tree preservation orders? How do you work with other Departments in relation to that? Which Department has the greatest powers?

I am glad that there is great emphasis on positive stuff such as recreation, social wellbeing and tourism. However, those things must be delivered, and there is a difficulty in relation to recreation. I do not want to get into that, but at times there seems to be a bit of foot-dragging. It is a case of Forest Service managing change and making it clear that the organisation is no longer into only wood production. It is a new phase, and you must take people with you. How difficult is it for you to manage change?

It is obviously going to take a considerable amount of money to deliver the Bill. Will the generation of new income that is needed to deliver the changes remain ring-fenced within Forest Service?

Will there be a greater opportunity to employ people in forestry? I envisage that we will need many more staff to deliver the programme. Who will administer repairs to roads and restore damage on roads? I am conscious that the Department for Regional Development is responsible for standards on rural roads and stuff like that. Who will administer repairs, and how will that be rolled out?

Mr Small: I appreciate that the wider issues of climate change and flood alleviation are not explicitly mentioned in the Bill. We fully recognise those issues. However, we feel that we have sufficient power to do what is needed — to mitigate and adapt, from a forestry perspective, on climate change and to maximise the Forest Service's role in flood alleviation. I will, perhaps, say more about that issue in a moment.

You talked about the distinction between the felling regulation system that is proposed in the Bill and tree preservation orders. The Bill's aim is to protect areas of woodland and forestry rather than individual trees or small numbers of trees, which will continue to be protected by the tree preservation order system. I know that that system can have weaknesses, but it is the system that is there to deal with that kind of situation. Our focus is very much on areas of woodland and forestry; that is the type of woodland that we want to protect.

Income retention is something that we would like to see happen. In our discussions with the Strategic Investment Board on our joint work trying to identify commercial opportunities, part of that arrangement is an acknowledgement that we should be able to retain some of the income that we secure. I would like to think that that income can be recycled, either by increasing staff numbers or by taking forward further initiatives to get more commercial projects going.

The issue of employing greater numbers in forestry introduces the issue of wider resourcing within government. We have been under quite a bit of pressure in the past couple of years, and it has forced us to become more efficient. That has meant reducing staffing numbers. I expect that pressure to continue. However, it would be good if our work with SIB on the commerciality of our activities could enable us to retain some income. We will certainly continue to negotiate to that effect with SIB and, ultimately, the Department of Finance and Personnel.

We acknowledge the issues of roads. The Minister and I receive correspondence about that. We are engaging with Roads Service to try to find a better way through which either Roads Service or Forest Service can become more clearly responsible for repairing damage that we are satisfied has been caused by forestry operations. There is nothing in the legislation about that. We have had discussions with Roads Service, and we believe that we can put mechanisms in place without legislation. The Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 contains legislative provision that allows Forest Service to go out and do work. However, we need to develop any approach in more detail with Roads Service. We acknowledge that problem and are committed to addressing it.

Mr Irwin: Like other members, I welcome some parts of the Bill and have concerns about others. It is positive that Forest Service is looking at tourism. In my area, Armagh, Clare Glen and Gosford Forest Park have been used in conjunction with the council. That is good. As one member has already said, elected members always fear too much power, because it might be abused. We need clarification on that matter.

Clause 4 outlines the powers that the Forest Service wants to have over its own lands. That is fair enough; Forest Service needs power over its own lands. The compulsory acquisition of land is more difficult. I understand that there may be narrow laneways and other things that could be difficult. However, it needs some tidying up and clarification.

Mr Small: That point has come through strongly. We take note of it and we commit to considering the issue.

Mr Shannon: I apologise for being late this morning. I had a meeting set up in advance of the Committee and it had to go ahead. I am sorry that I was not here to hear the presentation. I suspect that Tom was the first to speak after the presentation. Is that correct?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr Shannon: I caught the gist of what he was saying.

The Chairperson: Go ahead and ask a question.

Mr Shannon: I am concerned about a number of issues. I am not sure that this is the time or place to raise them. However, I want to mark up what other members have said, and in particular what Willy McCrea has said.

If we wanted to have a wee chat, we could e-mail each other using the modern system of technology, but that is not what we are about. The Chairman has reiterated, and I agree with him, that the Forestry Bill should incorporate all the issues that we have. The Department should respond to that. The Minister has said in the Chamber that she will work with the Committee to bring things forward. She wants the Bill just as we do. However, it is not right that we support it uncritically. I want to be sure that all the issues are dealt with.

The Chairperson: I hope that we will help to get it right. That is the intention that I proceed on.

Mr Shannon: I am convinced that we will. That is my intention, too.

Compulsory purchase of land has already been mentioned. I will not go over it again, but I want to make it quite clear that I, too, have those concerns. There are other ways of doing business without resorting to compulsory purchase of land. You could have a compulsory right of access. There are ways of doing things without taking land away. If we are going to have a process of moving forward together, which is what we are here for, let us do it without the compulsory purchase provision.

Mr Morwood mentioned that take-up in relation to new woods and the planting of trees has not been as good over this last period. The Minister has said in the Chamber that she would like tree-planting to increase by 6% to 12%. I am sorry, that is off the top of my head. We need to have incentives in place to ensure that that will happen. It is all very well to say let us do it, but it will only happen if there is something to encourage farmers to do it. It is not just about the reworking of land. When you plant trees, you take that land out of agricultural use for a great many years beyond the time when the trees are removed.

I am very concerned about — I hope I have the right clause here —

The Chairperson: Just call out the clause and ask the question. No need to go through all 30 clauses.

Mr Shannon: I have only half a dozen here. The compulsory purchase of land is in clause 5; clause 1 is the incentive to plant trees; clauses 8 and 9 are to do with the powers of the rangers. That sounds exciting. Rangers, like in war films, go onto private land adjacent to forests public and private to shoot deer.

The Chairperson: OK, Tonto.

Mr Shannon: I am very concerned about opportunities that the rangers might have. In particular, the DOE has a red grouse project under way. That is a biodiversity project that requires that everyone play ball. I am concerned about that project, which £0.5 million of private finance has been put into. The Department of Agriculture and the forestry rangers might be roaming freely over land, doing away with all the good work that is done.

I am also concerned at clause 11, which enables staff to shoot deer day or night. There has to be some control over departmental officials and staff. We have to think about where we are in relation to deer welfare. It is about managing the animals, deer in this case, in a sustainable way.

Also according to clause 11, your staff are exempt from the provisions of the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and the Game Preservation Act (Northern Ireland) 1928. Why should that be? Nobody is outside the law. I am putting down a marker. I am concerned that the rangers — not Glasgow Rangers, the other rangers — are exempt from the provisions of the 1985 Order and the 1928 Act. That must never be the case.

You said that the Department may cull deer that might cause damage, for goodness' sake. Every person who drives a car "might" cause an accident; every person who walks across the street "might" get knocked down; every deer that happens to be in a forest "might" cause damage. It is unbelievable. I refer back to clause 9. The Department wants the costs of such deer culling on private land to be recoverable from the owners of adjacent land, and that is supposedly for the benefit of other private woodland owners. They will shoot all the deer, take them back to wherever they go to and then send the bill to the landowner, because it was his or her land on which the animal was shot.

Mr McGlone: And they were wild.

Mr Shannon: And they were wild. It is incredible. The Forest Service accepts no responsibility for road traffic accidents that are caused by wild deer. That is correct. I accept that; that is how it should be. Neither does it accept responsibility for losses incurred by sheep farmers from foxes that inhabit their forests and stray out onto farmland. However, the Department wants to reverse that in its own interests and cull wild animals on private ground. You cannot be poacher and gamekeeper; you are either one or the other. Hopefully, you will not be a poacher. If you are, you will be on a sticky wicket. It is worth noting the inconsistency of this.

Earlier, I mentioned the £500,000 grouse project. There are people putting their hands deep into their pockets to ensure that the grouse are encouraged to multiply, and there will be economic benefit to that.

The compulsory purchase of land has been touched upon. During the Bill's Second Stage, I said that at no stage when talking about clause 4 did the Minister refer to recreational deer stalking or recreational shooting. There is an economic benefit there which the Department has not taken on board and which is being denied. It is not mentioned anywhere here. The Minister said in the Chamber that she was prepared to look at it. I am asking the Department to do that and make sure that they have taken it on board.

My last point, which everyone will be glad to hear, is to do with —

The Chairperson: I am enjoying this, Jim; it is very informative.

Mr Shannon: I suggested that there is a need for a deer forum or a users' forum. The Minister indicated that she would be receptive to that. I introduced my comments by saying that I would be unhappy if we proceeded with a Forestry Bill that does not take those issues on board. However, I think that the Minister and the Committee can work together to deliver that. It takes us to work together, and it takes the Department to be receptive to the viewpoints put forward by members around the table today. I hope that all of the points are taken on board. I am sorry for the lengthiness of my comments, but it is important that I put down the marker at this stage. I will be watching with great interest to see whether the Bill that everyone wants is delivered.

The Chairperson: Mr Small, I think that you get the gist. A balance has to be struck between the extent of the powers that the Department wants and what is in the best interests of the Forest Service. There was a lot of detail in those questions. I want you to give a general answer now, but I would like you to come back on each of those issues, because there is a lot there, and we need to get it right.

Mr Small: You talked about compulsory right of access, as have other members. We will be properly considering all of the issues that have been raised and reporting back to the Committee. You talk about forest expansion and the need for better incentives, and that is something that we are looking at. We recognise that we are not achieving as much woodland creation as we would like or need to support if we are going to achieve our longer-term targets. We are looking at that whole issue. However, I do not think that that is something for the Bill, which, if it is passed, will give us powers to pay grants, incentives and annual premiums. The power to do that will be enshrined in the Bill.

Mr Shannon: It is not that the power is not there, but the incentives must be right to encourage people to take advantage of it. If they are not right, who will do it?

Mr Small: As I said, we already pay incentives, but they are not achieving what we want, so that is something that we are looking at.

You spoke a lot about clauses 8 and 9, which are about controlling the damage to forests by wild animals. For example, you talked about the exemption for authorised officers of the Department who shoot deer and who would otherwise be in contravention of some of the other wildlife legislation.

Mr Shannon: You should be aware that such people might also be in contravention of environmental legislation.

Mr Small: We are aware of that. The protection also applies to other woodland owners who cull wild animals under clause 8, so it is not just something that we are putting in place for our own — [Interruption.]

The Chairperson: My Clerk has just culled a wild animal.

Mr Small: Clause 11 specifies that it is any landowner who exercises the powers under clauses 8 or 9. The other thing is that the power in clause 9 to go on to adjacent land to control deer is only exercisable when everything else has failed. We will endeavour to resolve those situations by negotiating with landowners, and it will only be when that fails and it is apparent that an entire area of young woodland will be destroyed that we would want the power to go in and deal with the problem. But I appreciate the sensitivities of what was suggested —

The Chairperson: The legislation could be shaped for specific, rather than general, circumstances. That brings us back to comments that were made earlier.

Mr Small: The only other issue is clause 4, which does not refer specifically to recreational shooting. In fact, it does not mention any particular recreation, whether that is high-trees adventuring or mountain biking. We are not trying to specify in the Bill every form of recreation that we will want to facilitate.

Mr Elliott: Otherwise, you would have to put in wild dove shooting.

Mr Shannon: Before mountain biking became the modern-day craze that it is, hunting deer, whether by bow and arrow, spear or modern firearm, had been going on for centuries, so it seems to be a bit unrealistic to have excluded it. There is potential to be realised.

The Chairperson: The point that the Bill is unambitious has been well made, both in the debate and around the table.

Mr Shannon: I think so. There was one other thing — the forum.

The Chairperson: We really have to move on. Be very quick about the forum, because time is getting on.

Mr Small: The forum issue was mentioned during the debate, and, again, we will discuss it with the Minister.

Mr McGlone: A number of issues have already been touched on in considerable depth. I am anxious to establish the level of collaboration that there will be on the burning of vegetation between the Forest Service and the DOE, particularly the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. Many people from the farming community and rural areas will know about problems with licensing for lighting fires and about officers landing out with them, so I am concerned that they might have to go through another permission-seeking process, which would further add to an unending stream of bureaucracy and red tape. Therefore, in order to ensure that we have not created more hoops for people to jump through just to burn a lock of briars, I am anxious to establish the level of contact with yourselves, and, for want of a better phrase, your harmony of approach on this matter.

When we come to clause 30, I will be interested to get a flavour of the Department's thinking on the by-laws.

Finally, bearing in mind what Mr Shannon referred to earlier, the explanatory and financial memorandum says of clause 31:

“in a case of extensive damage being caused to forest land by wild animals on land adjacent to the forest”.

I would have thought that, in the first instance, it should read:

“from land adjacent to the forest”.

However, does that tie in with making the landowner on whose land those wild animals currently are responsible for any damage that those animals may have caused on forest lands? They may not even be his animals or his stock. If the animals are on land adjacent to the forest, they cannot damage the forest, if you know what I mean. The language is either clumsy or incompatible.

Mr Shannon: You can almost see the stag and the doe on that person's land —

Mr McGlone: You would need to have a pretty long neck.

Mr Shannon: They say, “don't go across that line”. What they do not know is that the ranger is on top of the hill watching them, and he blows the both of them away.

The Chairperson: Is that what you do?

Mr McGlone: Anyway, that is something that we can discuss later. In the light of what Jim said, it is something that we want to watch.

Mr Small: I do not think that there is any intention —

The Chairperson: I do not think that anyone trusts the Department; I just get that impression. [Laughter.]

I do not know if you have picked that up or not. Most of my colleagues have been very subtle in their approach.

Mr Small: I have tried to describe the circumstances under which the powers in clause 9 would be used; that is, in circumstances in which we have not been able to reach agreement with the landowner on a resolution to a problem that we know exists, where a significant piece of either private woodland — which has been the subject of private investment — or public woodland is seriously at risk. In a situation in which one stands to lose the entire area of woodland unless the animal, which happens to be a deer, is dealt with, it is only after discussions and negotiations with the landowner that we would go in and use that power to cull the deer. It is not something that we would resort to as a first option.

Mr McGlone: I was questioning the wording of the explanatory and financial memorandum.

Mr Small: I do not have the memorandum to hand; I have a copy of the Bill. However, I will look at how that is worded.

Mr McGlone: Thank you.

The Chairperson: Thank you for that comprehensive explanation of those clauses. Following on from what I have heard, it is my intention to consider inviting the Tourist Board and the SIB to give us their views. I know that you have had discussions with them as well. That would be very helpful to us. There are some substantial matters to consider, and which are of genuine concern to people. I would like you to come back on those issues so that when we go through the Bill we get an agreement. Otherwise, the Bill will end up being opposed in the House. We want an efficient piece of legislation that will be as ambitious as it needs to be.

I ask members to approve the submission of a draft motion to the Business Office for an extension of the Bill's Committee Stage to 2 March 2010.

Members indicated assent.

Mr Small: I assure members that we will consider seriously the points that have been raised and report back to the Committee. It is our desire to reach an agreement on the Bill that we can all be comfortable with.

The Chairperson: That is great. Thank you very much.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR EDUCATION

23 September 2009

EDUCATION BILL (NIA 3/08)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Mervyn Storey (Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley (Deputy Chairperson)
Mrs Mary Bradley
Mr Jonathan Craig
Mr Trevor Lunn
Mr John McCallister
Mr Basil McCrea
Miss Michelle McIlveen
Mr John O'Dowd
Mrs Michelle O'Neill
Mr Alistair Ross

Witness:

Mr Chris Stewart } Department of Education

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): Issues that are set out in the correspondence from the Minister of Education are relevant to the Bill and will be considered at the appropriate stage, unless members have other comments on the correspondence. The Committee had its concerns and was criticised when it asked for an extension to consider the Bill.

One thing that has bedevilled us over the past months is the lack of haste in producing amendments. Even yet, the latest correspondence states that the Minister is still considering the precise wording of an amendment, which will depend on advice from the Office of the Legislative Counsel. The Minister says that she will endeavour to let the Committee have the wording before the end of the Bill's Committee Stage, if possible. That stage ends today, after the Committee considers the Bill clause by clause.

Therefore, any amendment proposed subsequent to today's meeting would not be in the Committee report that is to be signed off next Wednesday. The Committee is time-bound to deliver that report to the Assembly by 30 September.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee must sign off the report, as approved, next Wednesday at the latest. Today's deliberations are the final decisions on the Bill's clauses and schedules so that the report can be produced, including its recommendations to the Assembly.

The Chairperson: What happens if the Minister tables an amendment at Consideration Stage?

The Committee Clerk: The Minister will choose a time in October, or indeed, a date of her choice, to bring the Consideration Stage debate forward. Standing Orders relate to the end of the Committee Stage and the beginning of the Consideration Stage debate. There must be a certain time gap, usually two or three weeks.

The Chairperson: Can that period be longer?

The Committee Clerk: It is the Minister's choice when that is brought forward. The final date for tabling amendments will be established when the date for the Consideration Stage debate is known. That will be the Thursday before the debate, which will be on a Monday or Tuesday. The Minister, Members and the Committee can table amendments to the Bill up until that time.

The Committee's report records exactly what was agreed at Committee Stage until today and until its publication next Wednesday 30 September.

Mr B McCrea: Is there a schedule for those dates? Have we been furnished with that information in written format?

The Committee Clerk: I can bring advice on Standing Orders in relation to the period between the 30 September and the possible dates that the Minister could suggest for Committee Stage.

Mr B McCrea: That would be useful for the critical path analysis. Have we had clarification about what happens if we do not meet the deadline of 1 January 2010? There has been some discussion about the implications for the education and library boards if the Bill has not been passed by that time. If they are abolished, will they still be able to pay staff?

The Chairperson: From my recollection of the correspondence, and Chris Stewart can clarify this, the preferred date was 1 January; however, the date of 1 April was mentioned.

Chris, can you join us? You will have to sit in the public gallery when we move to the clause-by-clause scrutiny, as that is part of the Committee's deliberation. It will be good to get some clarification.

Mr Chris Stewart (Department of Education): It would not be a Wednesday if I did not get to join you at the table.

Mr B McCrea: It is good to get your on your own for once.

Mr Stewart: Support is only a shout away.

As regards Basil's question, if for some reason the Bill did not become law by 1 January, the education and library boards would not be dissolved; they would remain in existence and could continue to pay staff and discharge their functions.

Miss McIlveen: The Chairperson mentioned possible amendments being tabled by the Minister, and the time scales around that. We are nearing the end of our Committee Stage.

Mr Stewart has attended the Committee on numerous occasions when it discussed the second Bill at length; members wanted to see it before concluding their deliberations. The Minister made it clear in her statement to the House that the second Bill was to have been introduced to the Assembly by June 2009. Has there been any sighting of the second Bill?

Mr Stewart: The draft second Bill is with the Minister for her formal sign-off. As soon as she is content with it, the Department will send it to the Committee.

Miss McIlveen: Is the Committee likely to see it by next week?

Mr Stewart: That is the Department's aim. Unfortunately, I cannot send the draft Bill to the Committee until the Minister confirms that she is happy for me to do so.

The Chairperson: The Committee's working assumption was that it would be content to proceed with the first Bill once it had sight of the second Bill; that has not happened. That is a major problem, because the Bills are inextricably linked and there are major problems, particularly for the controlled sector, in the second Bill. Members will correct me if I am misrepresenting the Committee by stating that it believed it would have sight of the second Bill before clause-by-clause scrutiny was reached. Today, the Committee will make decisions on the clauses of the first Bill.

Mr Stewart: The Chairperson is correct. For some time, the Minister has intended that the Committee should see the second Bill before the first was signed off. I recognise that we are well into the eleventh hour in relation to that. It is unfortunate that the Committee has not received the draft second Bill. I will pass those points on to the Minister and I will let the Committee have the second Bill as soon as possible.

I hope that when members see it they will be reassured that the two Bills are complementary. The second Bill gives effect to the Executive's decision that there should be a single legislative programme to take through the entire RPA policy. Members will see that the gaps that they pointed out have been filled in by the second Bill. To use a well-worn phrase, I hope that members will see that there are no Trojan horses in the Bill; it merely gives effect to the other parts of the policy that must be put in place.

Mr O'Dowd: I want to go through what the Education Bill says about the boards' life span. What would the process be for the boards to remain in existence until 1 April? Would that require legislation by the Assembly?

Mr Stewart: No. It is important to emphasise that the Minister's aim is to have the legislation on the statute book and the ESA established by 1 January. If, for whatever reason, that did not take place, the existing legislation would remain in force, and education and library boards would exist as statutory organisations. The membership of those boards would have to be reconstituted at that point, but that is an administrative step.

Mr O'Dowd: Would the Minister reconstitute the boards?

Mr Stewart: Yes.

Mr O'Dowd: However, in effect, the boards will come to an end on 31 December 2008, and, if the Minister wished to, she would reappoint public representatives to a board or, as has been the misfortune in other cases, establish a commission.

Mr Stewart: That would be possible.

Mr B McCrea: What factors would the Minister have to consider if the education and library boards need to be reappointed for a short period? I am thinking about the decision whether to establish a commission or appoint members to a board.

Mr Stewart: I will answer as fully as I can, with the caveat that we are talking hypothetically about a situation for which we have not planned and that is not on the radar at present. If the period involved were short, as Mr McCrea suggests, what is likely to be uppermost in the Minister's mind is the continuity and smooth operation of the organisations in the interim while awaiting the establishment of the ESA.

Mr B McCrea: It would be useful to minute formally the points that are being made about what will happen, because there was some confusion. John O'Dowd referred to the fact that the Committee was of the opinion that the boards would disappear automatically, leaving a void. If the education and library boards do not disappear automatically but continue in existence, the Minister would have to decide whether to reappoint or establish a commission.

Mr O'Dowd: The discussion has been useful. In that event, the 35-person administration body of the education and library boards would remain in place. However, I put on record my party's concerns that the boards may be reappointed for three to four months.

Mr Lunn: The Bill will abolish the education and library boards when it becomes law. Is that correct?

Mr Stewart: Yes.

Miss McIlveen: I find it amazing that no consideration has been given to an alternative. There is an assumption that the Bill will go through on time.

Mr Stewart: It would be presumptuous of us not to continue to plan according to the decisions that the Executive have already taken. The Executive and the Assembly have indicated that they wish to see the ESA established by 1 January 2010.

Mr B McCrea: Is it fair to say that in other areas of the industrious Civil Service, contingency planning is in place for all eventualities?

Mr Stewart: Plans for a contingency depend on the likelihood of the contingency.

The Chairperson: I cannot remember the exact reference that was used in the correspondence. However, the date of 1 April 2010 was mentioned as an alternative if the establishment of the ESA went beyond 1 January 2010. Therefore, 1 January 2010 was not always set in stone by the Department. I think that the words used were either that it was the “intention” of both the Department and the Executive to have the ESA established by 1 April 2010 or that that was the “intended” date. The other words that the Minister used were “the aim”.

Mr Stewart: That is correct, Chairman. The Minister was properly reflecting — as we hope we do — that one cannot take anything for granted until the Assembly takes a formal decision. Until the Bill becomes law, no one can say with absolute certainty that anything will happen on a particular date. Nevertheless, we must be mindful of the effects on staff working in the education system, because this is the most momentous step change for them in 35 years.

On the one hand, it is important that we do not anticipate the will of the Assembly; on the other, it is important that we do not cause staff unnecessary concern by painting an unnecessarily uncertain picture. It is the aim of the Executive and the Assembly to establish the ESA on 1 January 2010. We are working as hard as we can to establish that.

The Chairperson: We are not anticipating failure; rather, we are making sure that there are no flaws. As has been pointed out, the original Bill had major difficulties, problems and mistakes. The fact that there are some 35 amendments and a raft of other amendments that the Committee may be minded to make proves that this process works, albeit sometimes it has been laborious and repetitive. However, that is the nature of the business.

Mr Stewart: The process has been painstaking and thorough. You are right: that fact shows the strength of the process and the importance of the Department working closely with the Committee to ensure that we get the best possible Bill.

Mr O'Dowd: People need to be careful about temporary measures. Two years ago, six commissioners were put in charge of the Southern Education and Library Board as a temporary measure; they are still in place and administering the work of the education board. They ensure that staff are paid, that education is provided and that school meals are delivered. No one wants to reach that stage across all the boards. People should not be talking about temporary measures, as, once taken, temporary measures could become permanent. The good work that we have put into the Bill and our engagement with the various sectors would be diminished. Although I have had disagreements with the Chairperson on how we should proceed, in general, I believe that the Committee has done good work on the Bill.

We have teased out stakeholders' concerns; however, we cannot allay everybody's concerns. That is the nature of politics. Sometimes, you should not meet everyone's needs. Politicians are elected to make decisions, but they cannot keep everybody happy.

We should continue to work towards establishing the ESA on 1 January 2010; that will be a democratic process in which the Committee and the Assembly will be involved. As I said, my party has serious concerns about the establishment of temporary boards from 1 January 2010 to whenever. We could end up with a long stalemate, which will do no one any favours.

Let us go through the democratic process of engaging and putting the Bill through the Assembly with whatever amendments we have approved.

The Chairperson: The Department's letter of 22 September 2009 comments on tax liability arising from the transfer of property and assets to the ESA. It relates to schedule 3, which deals with tax liability. The letter covers stamp duty, land tax and corporation tax. As regards corporation tax, it states:

“there is a potential for tax liabilities to arise in the other three organisations; CCEA, CCMS and the Youth Council. However, given the nature of the assets held by these organisations, combined with the low valuation of possible relief available, any potential liability appears minimal.”

It does not rule it out.

Mr Stewart: At present, it is not ruled out absolutely, Chairman. We hope that within a matter of days, it will be completely ruled out. Unfortunately, my colleague in Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (HMRC) who advised me on that has retired. We now liaise with his successor.

As of today, we cannot give the Committee an absolute guarantee that there is no liability; however, we strongly believe that there is not. We hope to confirm that within a matter of days.

The Chairperson: Primarily, the matter was raised with regard to the assets and liabilities of the controlled sector, because of its nature. It retains £2.3 billion worth of estate. In a sense, the correspondence raises concerns about the assets and liabilities of CCEA, CCMA and the Youth Council. It states that:

“any potential liability appears minimal”.

I am sure that they would be very concerned that there was any potential liability.

Mr Stewart: As would we, Chairman. We are talking about the transfer of public assets from one public authority to another. A general principle of taxation and public financing is that it really ought not to give rise to tax liabilities, and we are working to ensure that that is the case. If any action is necessary to ensure that that is the case, we will certainly take it.

The Chairperson: I am sorry to labour the point, Chris, but I want to be clear: if a situation arose, who would pay the bill? Who would be liable for the ownership of both the liability and the properties: the organisation or the body that would come into existence?

Mr Stewart: If there was a liability, ownership would fall to the ESA. However, I do not want to worry the Committee unnecessarily. We have couched a letter in understated Civil Service language, and we do not think that there is a problem. Although I am 99·5% certain; until I get the other 0·5%, I am not.

The Chairperson: Chris, this is not a criticism of you as an individual, but according to your comments to the Committee on 9 September, we have had a legal opinion on a particular issue for years; we now discover that there is a different opinion, and some of us contend that that opinion is not correct. I do not want to create a minefield for lawyers; unfortunately, however, that is the ground on which we have to tread. That raises a concern, which has been highlighted or compounded by the fact that we are now not only looking at an issue that may be an issue for the controlled sector but for other sectors as well.

The phrase “appears minimal” in relation to potential liability is why I asked who would pay the bill if there were any liability.

Mr Stewart: Potential liability appears minimal, and I hope to reassure the Committee before the end of this Stage that it is zero.

Mr D Bradley: I have looked at the list of attendees of meetings of the controlled schools sectoral support group, and there seems little continuity. A few people appear to have attended some but not all the meetings. What is the work programme that the group is involved in? I take it that it is an ad hoc group.

Mr Stewart: Unfortunately, Dominic, I do not have full details of that. The Department has that information, however, and I would be happy to send it to the Committee.

Mr D Bradley: Could we have a report of its discussions to date?

Mr Stewart: I am sure that that is possible. I would be happy to pass that request to the group.

The Chairperson: The Committee Clerk informs me that we have already asked for that. We should reaffirm whether we are still looking for that information.

This is not a reflection on individuals, but I am concerned about how much knowledge members of that group have about the sector for which they are to take opinions and on whose behalf they formulate policies. That is a major concern. Dominic mentioned consistency, and from examining the attendance list, I see that people have attended one meeting but not the next one. There has not been a consistent attendance. There are rumblings in the undergrowth from some people who have attended, which are beginning to permeate through to us.

Mr D Bradley: How is the membership of the controlled sector group made up? How were its members recruited?

Mr Stewart: At the beginning of the process, the Department attempted to kick-start it by putting together the broadest possible list that we could think of, having taken soundings from sources, including the Committee. Thereafter, it is self-selecting. The group and the sector decide who wishes to take part and who feels that they may have something to contribute.

The challenge, as the Chairperson suggested, is that whoever is involved in the group has to demonstrate to a very large and diverse sector that they are capable of representing its needs and views and of discharging the functions that they have taken on.

Mr O'Dowd: Is there any suggestion that anybody has been turned away from those meetings or made to feel unwelcome or that their presence or opinion was not valued?

I am happy to support the controlled sector in whatever way we can, and the establishment of any new body will always generate rumblings. However, the Committee must know whether people are being turned away or made to feel unwelcome or that their opinions are not wanted. The Committee's concerns must be firmly based. Can the Committee even request the minutes of meetings of the working group?

The Chairperson: The Department established it, so I assume that the Committee can seek the minutes; is that correct?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee can certainly ask.

Mr O'Dowd: Have we any authority? I am just teasing out our options.

The Chairperson: We are not saying that people have been turned away. I may be accused of parochialism, but if a body were established to look at the maintained sector and people from other religious persuasions or other groups had been put on that body — people whose opinions may not be focused on that sector — concerns would be raised by the maintained sector.

The list of attendees — whether attending by invitation or self-appointment — includes people who, without devaluing the contribution that they can make, do not come from a background that suggests passion for that particular sector. There are people on the list who have that passion, and I am glad that they are there because they can make a very good contribution. I see that there are one or two principals who have been in the controlled sector for many years, so they should have a good grasp and understanding of that sector. However, the bigger problem is that the group has been set up two years later than it should have been.

Mr Stewart: I can offer some information on that. Section 44 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 gives the Committee considerable powers to request whatever information it wishes, but it may not want to use such a sledgehammer in this case.

The Department will endeavour to provide as much information to the Committee as it can about the operation of the working group, but I stress that the group was not established or run by the Department. The Department is there in a consulting and advisory capacity. It recognises the need to take that role, because, unlike the other sectors, the controlled sector is at much earlier stage of evolution in the process and may have a much greater need than other sectors for the Department's help, support and guidance.

To illustrate what happens: on the day that the working group meets, Department officials will be there, but they leave the room for the greater part of the meeting. They are not present while the group conducts its business, unless the group asks them to come forward to assist it, in much the same way as we do with the Committee.

Committee members' concerns might be best addressed by, in due course, inviting members of the working group to deliver a presentation on the work that they are doing and the stage that they have reached. They may be able to answer the Committee's questions more convincingly than I can, simply because they are directly involved in the process and I am not.

Miss McIlveen: Much of what I was going to ask has been answered. However, does the group have terms of reference, a secretariat and a chairperson?

Mr Stewart: The acting chairperson is Hugh McCarthy, the Principal of Killicomaine Junior High School, and the Department has been providing a secretariat because the group does not have its own and there is no alternative. Aside from someone taking minutes being in the room, the Department does not take part in the meeting.

Miss McIlveen: Were the terms of reference established at the outset?

Mr Stewart: I believe that the group itself drew up its terms of reference in its first or second meeting.

Miss McIlveen: The difficulty shared by members is the fact that it has taken so long to establish the group, which leaves it to catch up on a considerable amount of time. The membership appears random and attendance is very ad hoc. Those are initial observations from the first few meetings, but they raise questions about the dedication of many of those involved.

Mr Stewart: All those points are perfectly fair. I will not try to put words in the mouths or the minds of those who attend, but because it is a new approach and a new initiative, I am sure that many people have come along with great enthusiasm and all have attended with considerable dedication. Others have come with curiosity and wonder whether they feel that it is appropriate and something in which they wish to play a direct role. Perhaps it will take one or two meetings for people to come to their own conclusions.

The Chairperson: Who has their hand on the tiller of this vessel? Perhaps it is a ship that is away out at sea that everybody hopes will find a port or destination at some stage. People can get on if they want, but we are not that worried if they do not want to. That concerns me because we are talking about a sector that educates 98% of the Protestant children in Northern Ireland.

Mr Stewart: I do not think that we could be as neutral on the matter as your question implies because we would be as concerned as you if we thought that the group could fail. It is very important that the controlled sector has an effective representative body. However, I think that the Committee would be equally concerned if it received reports from the sector that stated that the Department's heavy hand was all over the group and that the Department was dictating and demanding that it went in a particular direction or went about its work in a particular way. The Department does not do that with other sectors.

We are there to assist and guide. Certainly, if we think that something is going seriously wrong, we will not be slow to tell the working group of our view. However, that does not mean that it has to slavishly follow every piece of advice that the Department offers or that it will agree with everything that we say; it is quite the reverse. One of the measures of the success of this exercise is that there will be a strong and effective body that feels that it has the capacity to argue with the Department about the future direction of education. If it were not so, I do not think that the body would be effective.

Miss McIlveen: What bothers me is the fact that there has not been any real progress. The letter from the Minister that was given to the Committee today implies that C na G is so forward-looking that the Minister is contemplating further amendments on behalf of that sector, yet the controlled sector does not even have a body. That is what really bothers me.

Mr B McCrea: The membership list that we received does not appear to include any people from west of the Bann, apart from the Foyle women's group. There appears to be at least one councillor who, to my knowledge, sits only on the boards of Catholic maintained schools. No principals of non-grammar controlled schools are represented on the body. There are also some concerns about the way in which the meetings were called. The first meeting was on the last day of school, so there might have been some difficulty in getting people to attend, and then the next meeting was held on near enough the first day of school. The people who we are trying to attract are busy, so the timing is all wrong.

Chris, although you said that the Department was taking a hands-off approach and that you would tell the Committee if you thought that things were not quite going to plan, I am concerned that we are not really anywhere with that body. The needs of the controlled sector must be addressed if we are to address the needs of all the other sectoral interests. I do not think that it is working.

Mr Stewart: I do not think that the group would share your view, and its view is perhaps more important than mine in that regard. As I have said, we are not in a position to police the membership. We are certainly not in the business of turning away anyone who turns up. If there are gaps, we will certainly pass on those concerns to the group, but the issue is for it to address.

You are absolutely right: the timing of the first meeting was poor. I do not think that we could have picked a worse date for school principals than the last day of term. One or two of them made that point to us quite forcefully. However, the second and subsequent dates were chosen by the group. We asked what it thought would be a suitable date for the second meeting, and that date was identified by the group, including by the school principals.

Mr B McCrea: When you spoke about the controlled sector, my immediate response was to think not of controlled grammar schools but secondary modern schools, or whatever you wish to call them. The fundamental point is that the principals of those types of schools are not represented on the group. I am sorry to say, Chris, but the emperor has no clothes. The people who will be affected most are not in the group.

I suspect that some of the grammar school principals are considering joining the Governing Bodies Association (GBA) or another voluntary organisation. There are not enough people in the group who can represent the sector about which we are concerned. Those on the group will not be able to carry that sector. Although I am grateful to all the people who turned up, it was a case of omission rather than of rejection. We need to get more representatives from the controlled sector. If we do not do that, I am afraid that the needs of the controlled sector will not be addressed.

Mr Stewart: With the greatest respect, it is a bit early to conclude that the membership is not representative. Without asking the individuals concerned, none of us can say why certain people were or were not present at a particular meeting. As you rightly stressed, school principals are busy people, and they cannot, therefore, come along to every meeting.

At the first meeting at which I was present, there were principals from non-grammar schools and secondary schools, and a principal from a controlled school. The latter might not have been present at subsequent meetings for reasons I do not know. Your general point is correct: the group must represent all the various parts of a very diverse sector. That is a challenge for the group and is not something that the Department can dictate.

Mrs M Bradley: I was about to mention the representation west of the Bann, but Basil beat me to it. I am concerned about the lack of representation from the Western Education and Library Board (WELB) area. I recognise only one name on the list, and she is not an educationalist. I am not condemning that woman — in fact, I know her very well, and I would not do that. I think that people who work in controlled schools in Derry would have been keen to be part of the group. However, I do not know whether they applied. I am concerned that the WELB area does not seem to be represented at all.

Mr Stewart: I must stress again that no one was excluded and no one had to apply to attend. People who wish to attend the meetings and get involved are very welcome.

The Chairperson: In fairness, that is not the best way to do it. Surely the onus is on the Department to appoint an interim manager while the new body is being set up. We do not even know who chairs the group. How is that decided? Is it a case of throwing all the names into a hat on the day of the meeting and picking out the name of one person to chair that meeting, and then repeating the process at the next meeting? The approach seems scattergun. It gives the impression that the controlled sector does not matter, even though it owns £2.3 billion of the estate and caters for the greater percentage of Protestant children.

That was not the case when we dealt with the other sectors over the summer. They battered on the door and brought about change, and there are different reasons for that. I concur with Basil's point: it just gives the impression that the sector is not at the game. The controlled sector is at the heart of everything that goes on in the community. I think that the Department has abdicated responsibility, washed its hands clean and thought that if it works, it works and if it does not, it does not. That is the wrong attitude.

Last week, we saw the Department's attitude towards another sector. The Department took the view that if the GBA was not going to talk to it, it was not going to talk to the GBA. Then we received a letter from the Minister stating:

"Members are already aware that I have arranged to meet the GBA this week, and I am pleased to say that, following the Committee meeting, the GBA has also requested a meeting with officials."

I believe that that meeting is taking place today. That shows the Department's attitude, which is

"We will take the ball off the pitch. We will decide what we are doing, and if anyone wants to talk to us, the door is open, come to see us."

Mr Stewart: You made a number of points to which I ought to respond. I understand your points. However, with respect to you and the Committee, I think that you are being a little unfair on the group and, perhaps, on the Department, too. The group is not as ad hoc as your question might imply. It has a chairperson, who is chosen from among its members. It has adopted a committee structure, which it has chosen itself.

The Chairperson: Who is the chairperson of the group?

Mr Stewart: It is Hugh McCarthy.

The group has adopted a working plan and a committee structure, and, given the fact that it has been going for only a short time, it has made encouraging progress, and it continues to do so.

On the point about the GBA, as I said last week, there is no question of the Department taking the ball off the pitch. We have never refused to meet any stakeholder or to accommodate any stakeholder's wish for dialogue. The GBA was asked by the Committee whether it was prepared to meet the Department, and it declined to do so. Subsequent to that meeting, a member of my staff wrote to the GBA and asked again for a meeting, and they received a reply turning it down. That reply expressed the organisation's view that it did not see any value in having dialogue with the Department. There is a limit to the number of times that we can ask the GBA for a meeting, and we certainly cannot force it into meeting us.

When I returned to the office after last week's meeting with the Committee, I was pleased to find a request from the GBA for a meeting. I do not know what prompted its change of heart; perhaps it had been listening to the Committee's debate. We welcome that request. As I said at last week's meeting, the Minister already had plans to meet the GBA. That meeting is taking place today. We are pleased to see that it is prepared to resume dialogue with officials, and that dialogue is under way. If the ball was ever off the pitch, it was not at the Department's behest. Perhaps more importantly, I assure you that the ball is back on the pitch.

The Chairperson: As a Calvinist, I can say that you got that request because of confidential circumstances.

Mrs M Bradley: Should it have been ensured that all the board areas were well represented on the group?

Mr Stewart: We will certainly welcome any assistance that Committee members will give us on that. When the original list was drawn up, it included all the names that were suggested by Committee members. If you wish to suggest other names, we will be happy to put those forward.

Mr Lunn: How many people were invited to join the body? The average attendance seems to be 15 or 16. How many are entitled to be there?

We have asked for the minutes of the meetings, and I do not know whether we can get them. I know that only three meetings have taken place, but has the body put any identifiable product back to the Department for consideration?

People are concerned about the sector being properly represented, and there are various concerns about geographical considerations. Someone said that at least one person is listed as being an attendee who does not have a direct interest in the controlled sector and who might even have an direct interest in the maintained sector. That would be a good thing, because the body could perhaps learn something from the perceived success of the other sector in some areas. If he or she wishes to contribute to the body, fair play to them.

Mr Stewart: I certainly concur with that point; that would be a great advantage. The people on the group recognise that they can learn from the experience of some of the other sectors. Those from the maintained sector would say that it is perceived to be a successful sector and that the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) is perceived to be an effective organisation, but it was not always that way, even in the maintained sector. CCMS mentioned that when it gave evidence. That organisation would say quite openly that it took it a period of time to build up its capacity in the sector and to build up the trust and confidence of its own sector to do a job.

Bearing in mind the points that members have rightly made about the controlled sector being behind some of the other sectors, we want to accelerate the process as best we can. If, as part of that, the controlled sector could learn lessons and draw on the experience of other sectors that have trodden the path before them, that would be a good thing.

Mr Lunn: What product has come out of the group?

Mr Stewart: There is product in the sense that there are minutes of meetings and that the group has a work plan. I cannot say that they have signed off particular products, such as a constitution or a business case. I do not think that the group is at that stage yet. However, perhaps sensibly, the first thing that the group has done is to scope the task, and it is now engaged in taking that forward.

Mr Lunn: How many people were invited to join the body?

Mr Stewart: I would have to check that information and come back to you. I think that the original list of invitations may have contained around 40 or 50 names, although not that many people turned up on the first day, largely because we picked a daft day for the first meeting. Attendance at the second meeting was better.

The Chairperson: I want to conclude this line of questioning so that we can move on.

Mr O'Dowd: If memory serves me right, on several occasions before summer recess, departmental officials, including Chris, asked Committee members if we had any names that we thought should be included on the invitation list. If any member suggested names and those people were not invited to the group's meeting, that would be a matter of concern. It has been indicated that, so far, no one has been turned away.

Another aspect that I found interesting is that certain parties here have lobbied, quite correctly, for a sectoral support body for the controlled sector, because there was a demand for that in the sector. It appears from the attendance thus far that there has been a muted response from that sector. If the demand was as high as some people in this room tell me it is, I would have expected people to be kicking the door down to get in. That does not seem to be the case.

If the Department has gone about this the wrong way or made errors in the invites that it sent out, that must be corrected. If the Department can support the group, it must do so in a professional manner. However, I get the impression that some members want the controlled sectoral support body to be a subcommittee of this Committee. That is not what any of the sectoral support bodies are about. They need to be free-standing and independent-thinking. They need to lobby for their sector and have an advocacy role. There is no point in having a subcommittee of this Committee.

To return to my original point; if any member put forward names of people who they felt should be invited to the first meeting and those people were not invited, that situation should be rectified. The debate today has opened questions in my mind about how much of a demand there is in the controlled sector for this body.

The Chairperson: I think that that is more of a reflection of the way in which the controlled sector has conducted its business. It is more interested in the job that it is doing, rather than a preservation of a particular structure or ethos. Other sectors can become so embroiled in their ethos or structures that they become more important than the business that they are about. It is like comparing apples with oranges. It is a matter of how particular sectors view themselves. That is why a huge amount of work needs to be done with the controlled sector, because it has had to be inclusive. Controlled schools have not had the luxury of saying that they will accept only certain children. That sector is the real integrated sector of education in Northern Ireland, but it has never been given the opportunity to have that reflected in how it carries out its business.

I ask Mr McCrea to ask his question, and then we must conclude this discussion. If we continue at this rate, members will be here until the same time as they were last night. Members, the choice is yours; the matter is entirely in your hands. I can only guide and direct, but if members want to arrive home late two nights in a row, that is fine. They can text home to say that they will be late again tonight.

Mr B McCrea: I take your point, Chairperson. It may be that we have to put the discussion of the sector on the agenda, because what John has just said shows that there is a profound misunderstanding of why we have to deal with the issue. My response to Trevor's point will be the same as my response to John's. In certain other sectors, there are people who are highly focused and highly organised. They, quite rightly, have their own agenda, and they know where they are going. Notably, the Catholic maintained sector was able to amalgamate and reorganise its schools to get a particular level of pupils. The controlled sector refused, was unable to, or could not come together. As a result, when decisions were eventually being considered under the Bain proposals, there was one large, well-organised Catholic maintained school and two or three small controlled schools. Those schools would, therefore, fall foul of the efficiency issues.

The difficulty that arises when trying to organise the controlled sector is that it is so diverse and operates in such a huge range of areas that it does not have a common position on many matters. The fundamental problem is that the sector will end up being squeezed by other sectoral bodies if it does not organise itself.

I will finish on the issue of whether people from other sectors should be involved in the sectoral group for the controlled sector. One could say that we should accept views from outside and learn lessons from others people's experience, but, as the Chairperson pointed out, it would be strange if the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools was dominated by people from outside the sector. Equally, I note in the letter from the Irish-medium schools to the Minister that they are concerned that school governors maintain the ethos of their schools. That is reasonable. The point that I am making is that the controlled sector is really large and educates a lot of our young people, but, for historic reasons, it is not able to compete with its sectoral counterparts. We are trying to find a solution to that problem.

I suggest that the problems facing the controlled sector be put on the agenda. Chris uses the phrase "with respect", and we are being nice and friendly with each other today, but, in my opinion, this group will not resolve the problems that we have with the controlled sector, no matter how hard the individuals work.

The Chairperson: Chris, could you convey back to the group our suggestion that it would be helpful see either the chairperson of boards of governors or parent governors from the sector among its membership. We know that members of the Transferor Representatives' Council (TRC) are on the group, as are principals from controlled schools. Concerns have been raised, and the Committee will urgently return to the issue.

We now begin our clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Education Bill. Before we proceed, I will try to ensure that Committee members have in front of them the appropriate documents so that we can make this process as seamless as possible. I know that you have struggled with me as the Chairperson, and I apologise for my inadequacies, but I have struggled with the process as much as you have. Let us try to set the scene.

Destination is lunch for 1.00 pm; how we get there is entirely in your hands.

The Department has proposed amendments on its own behalf and at the request of the Department for Employment and Learning. Those are set out in the document in the relevant clauses as proposed departmental amendments. The Education Bill amendments are in the document before us.

At last week's meeting, the Committee agreed and instructed the Clerk to prepare draft Committee amendments, which the Committee may wish to consider, on clauses on which some members canvassed the possibility of amendments during the Committee's scrutiny of the Bill. Those are listed in the document as Committee amendments — if appropriate. If the Committee wants to recommend amendments in those areas to the Assembly, we will have draft wording before us today and the Committee can take a decision on them.

Additional documents are available. At tab 4, item 1, there is a copy of the Minister's response of 16 September to the Committee's letter of 9 September, which included the issues of ESA membership, representative membership, and local committees. At tab 4, item 2, there is a copy of the Department of Education's amendments. That table is useful because members will recall that the way that it is set out gives us —

Mr B McCrea: Mervyn, you lost me about 30 minutes ago.

The Chairperson: We are looking at tab 4 in the black folder. There is a document entitled 'Education Bill Amendments'. Following that, there is a response from the Minister, which is useful information to have in front of you.

Mr B McCrea: Is that the letter dated 16 September?

The Chairperson: Yes. Then there is the letter that deals with outstanding responses. Then there is tab 2.

The Committee Clerk: Tab 2 is a very useful document because it outlines an explanation of the numerous departmental amendments.

Mr B McCrea: What is in the white folder?

Mr O'Dowd: Just follow my lead, Basil. If I agree with something, you go with it. [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Follow my nod.

Mr B McCrea: Go easy on me, John.

The Chairperson: Tab 2 — that is it. We are getting there.

Mr McCallister: You told us that yesterday, John.

The Chairperson: The two documents that you need to have in front of you are the 'Education Bill Amendments' — exhibit a — and tab 2, or exhibit b, and, of course, the Bill.

OK. I believe that that is all that we need. Chris, I ask you to take a place in the public gallery. Patricia Casey, from the Bill Office, is present to advise us on any technical issues that need to be addressed. You are very welcome, Patricia. I apologise that I did not welcome you earlier.

I refer members to the Education Bill amendment document. I remind you of the procedure in the Committee Clerk's note. It advises that in relation to each clause and schedule where there is no proposal to amend, the Committee will state whether it is content with the clause or schedule as drafted.

Where an amendment is proposed by the Minister of Education, the Committee will decide whether it is content with the amendment that is proposed. Depending on whether the Committee is content with the amendment, it will indicate either that it recommends to the Assembly that the clause be amended as proposed by the Minister — or, if applicable, as proposed by the Committee — or that it does not recommend an amendment. In that case, the Committee would indicate that it is content with the clause as drafted.

Are members content that we proceed? Are there any questions before we begin our clause-by-clause, schedule-by-schedule scrutiny of the Bill?

Mr B McCrea: I want to make a brief statement for the record. The Ulster Unionist Party will attempt to be as constructive as possible in the clause-by-clause scrutiny. It does not wish to be seen to be trying to block the creation of the ESA as a streamlined oversight body.

We will not, however, agree to the Minister's proposals for a highly centralised, bureaucratic body that undermines the autonomy of boards of governors and sectoral representatives. With that caveat, we will try to perform a constructive role in the clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill.

The Chairperson: OK. If there are no further comments, we shall proceed to clause 1.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Schedule 1 (The Education and Skills Authority)

The Chairperson: Members, on this occasion only we will proceed not to the next clause but to schedule 1; we must deal with it before we can proceed to clause 2. The first decision is the number of members of the education and skills authority (ESA). The Minister proposes that schedule 1 be amended as follows: In page 31, line 15 leave out "7 or more than 11" and insert "11 or more than 14".

If any member wants to propose a higher number, a Committee amendment has been drafted to that effect. We would take a decision on that amendment first. If the Committee decides to recommend a higher range than that which the Minister proposes, the Committee will not consider the Minister's amendment or the existing wording of the Bill.

If a member proposes a higher range than 11 to 14 members, the Committee's amendment will be to leave out, "7 or more than 11" and to insert the proposed new number.

Mr D Bradley: Should that read "or no more than"?

The Chairperson: Sorry, it should be "no more". Therefore the question is —

Mr B McCrea: No, you are correct.

The Chairperson: It is not "fewer"; so the question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly that paragraph 2(1)(b) of schedule 1 be amended as the Minister proposes. Members must decide whether they accept the Minister's amendment to increase membership to 14 or increase that number again.

Mr Lunn: I am content with the Minister's amendment.

The Chairperson: Are there any other proposals?

Mr D Bradley: I would like a higher number.

The Chairperson: Do you have a number in mind?

Mr D Bradley: I propose:

"no fewer than 15 and no more than 20".

The Chairperson: I have a proposal from Dominic that membership should be 15 to 20. That is seconded by Basil McCrea. I beg to move

Question proposed:

In page 31, line 15, leave out "7 or more than 11" and insert "no fewer than 15 and no more than 20." — [Mr D Bradley]

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 9; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Mr Lunn, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

NOES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Mr Lunn: If the Committee wants to suggest a further amendment to schedule 1, must that be done at a different stage?

The Chairperson: Yes; that would be a party amendment or a Member's amendment at Consideration Stage in the House. Is that correct, Clerk?

The Committee Clerk: It is open to a member to raise an issue now on a further part of that schedule, but the main areas of discussion have been identified in the document being considered by the Committee.

Mr Lunn: The amendment that we have just accepted would mean that there would be 11 councillors on the ESA. Now may not be the time to raise it, but I intend to propose an amendment at Consideration Stage to amend that. Is it appropriate to suggest an amendment now that the Committee might adopt?

The Chairperson: Trevor, you are entitled to propose an amendment; it is up to the Committee to second and approve it. If that attempt is unsuccessful, you can still table it for Consideration Stage in the House.

Question proposed: In page 31, line 19, leave out

“that at any time a majority of members are councillors (within the meaning of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 (c.9)” and insert “at any time one third of members should be councillors (within the meaning of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 (c. 9)”. — [Mr Lunn.]

The Chairperson: Members have a proposal from Mr Lunn. Does anybody second it? Nobody seconds the proposal; therefore, it falls. However, it has been recorded.

The Committee Clerk: The proposal must be put to a vote to allow members to indicate that they are against it.

Mr O'Dowd: It was not seconded.

The Chairperson: It was not seconded.

The Committee Clerk: It does not need to be seconded. If a member proposes an amendment, it can be put to a vote.

Mr B McCrea: Before you do that, I am not averse to the amendment, but it has come as a bit of a shock, and I have not had a chance to consider it. I do not want to be recorded as voting against it because there may be some merit in it, but it has only come to me now so I cannot make a judgment.

The Chairperson: John, can you clarify the position?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee could agree that it noted Mr Lunn's amendment, whether or not it wishes to bring forward a Committee amendment to put it into effect today. It depends on whether a majority of members would support Mr Lunn's amendment. If not, that should be recorded now, and Mr Lunn can then raise it, from his party's point of view, as a Committee amendment.

The Chairperson: OK, we are clear on that. It can be noted by the Committee, or members can vote on Trevor's proposal.

The Committee Clerk: The effect would be to remove “majority” and replace it with “one third”. If members wish to consider voting on that now, that is open to the Committee.

The Chairperson: OK, members, those are the only two options: either to note the amendment or to vote on it.

Mr O'Dowd: For the record, Sinn Féin would be opposed to that amendment. How will that be known if we do not vote against it?

The Chairperson: I will put it to the Committee that there is a proposal that “one third” replace “majority” so that it reads:

“at any time one third of members”.

Is that correct?

Mr Lunn: Yes. I would be content for the Committee simply to note the fact that I have proposed the amendment rather than force a vote. Basil is right that I have pulled it out of the blue, although everyone had probably seen it coming in some form or other after the past 18 months. I am content to have it noted.

The Committee Clerk: The question is, as I said earlier, whether the Committee wants to bring forward for consideration in early October an amendment that would go before the Committee when the detailed wording has been worked out, although that amendment would not be in the Committee's report. Members would then have time to reflect before it was brought forward. In that case, members should indicate whether they vote yes or no to that proposal.

The Chairperson: I am not clear what was said there. We have these amendments, as well as a report to produce for the House; therefore we have to make a decision. We have no more time in which to consider any amendments after today.

The Committee Clerk: That is right, but the report can state that the Committee noted a proposal from a member this morning —

The Chairperson: Yes, but that is a different thing.

The Committee Clerk: — and that the Committee agreed, by majority, to draft an amendment that would be considered after the report had been issued. It is possible to do that.

The Chairperson: How can we draft an amendment if we conclude our consideration of amendments now and the report goes before the House? Surely all we can do is note that a concern was raised that “majority” should be replaced with “one third”. From what I see, there will not be support for Trevor's proposal.

The Clerk of Bills: There is another option. As well as recommending the wording of an amendment and agreeing it today, the Committee could recommend to the House that it agreed an amendment to say such and such, but that the wording has not been agreed. I think that that is the point that the Committee Clerk is trying to make. It is not ideal; obviously it would be preferable to agree the wording of the amendments today, but as the proposal was made only today, members may need more time to discuss it. The fall-back option is to agree to bring forward an amendment on that basis, but not to agree the wording of it today, because there is no time. That would be stated in the report, and the Chairperson could address it when briefing the House at Consideration Stage. That is an option.

Mr D Bradley: Can parties table amendments during Consideration Stage?

The Clerk of Bills: Yes. Up to 9.30 am on the Thursday before Consideration Stage, whenever the Minister brings that forward, any Member, Committee or the Minister can table an amendment. Members may wonder how they would find out about that if the report had already been printed. The Bill Office will issue a notice of amendment for any amendment that is brought forward, and that will appear in Members' pigeon holes. The Marshalled List, which is the final list, is published after 9.30 am on the last Thursday before Consideration Stage. Chairperson, you are correct to want to agree as much as possible today, but if members do not have the wording of an amendment or have not thought it through, they can use that system as a fall-back.

The Chairperson: The proposal is for an amendment to remove "majority" and replace it with "a third". Is the Committee minded to consider such an amendment?

Mr Craig: I would have huge difficulty with such an amendment. I do not like bodies that are not democratically accountable, and I really do not like outside bodies that do not have a majority of elected members. The amendment would create a democratic deficit. For 30 years, Northern Ireland was run with a democratic deficit, and that must change. I do not see the rationale for the amendment. I am totally opposed to it.

The Committee Clerk: If the Committee were to decide by a majority vote that it wished to return to the amendment in early October, the amendment could be put on that day. On that Wednesday in October, the Committee may reject the amendment, and it would be left to Mr Lunn to decide whether he wished to table it on behalf of the Alliance Party. The Committee is to decide now whether it wishes to note the amendment from Mr Lunn and whether to put it down for further consideration after the Committee's report has been issued. The amendment will be decided on that day.

The Chairperson: Do Members wish to note the amendment in the terms that the Committee Clerk outlined?

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 1; Noes 8.

AYES

Mr Lunn.

NOES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Miss McIlveen, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

The Chairperson: John McCallister and Basil McCrea have abstained.

Question accordingly negatived.

Mr Lunn: For the record, does that mean that the amendment will not be noted formally but that it will appear in the record of today's meeting?

The Committee Clerk: Yes; the vote on it will be recorded, but the amendment was not agreed.

The Chairperson: Members will recall the Committee's discussions on how the ESA membership could be made representative and the request to the Minister to consider an amendment to paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1. The Minister is not minded to propose an amendment to that part of the Bill, and we have a draft wording if Members wish to consider a Committee amendment.

Mr D Bradley: I would accept the Committee amendment if the word "proportionately" were inserted before "representative". The amendment would then read:

"and: (c) that the members, as a group, are proportionately representative of the community in Northern Ireland".

The Clerk of Bills: That would make it a completely different amendment; that wording is much more precise. The Bill has been drafted in keeping with a provision in the Northern Ireland Act 1998. The Committee has received legal advice on the meaning of the phrase:

"representative of the people of Northern Ireland" and its various aspects. Adding the word "proportionately" would be a completely different matter.

Members also need to consider the amendment in the context of the wording of the schedule:

"so far as practicable to secure".

Members should take into consideration the difference between "so far as practicable" and "proportionately representative", which suggests a precise number.

The Chairperson: Dominic, why would "proportionately" give the result that you desire? I assume that your desired outcome is that the education and skills authority is democratically or electorally representative of Northern Ireland.

Mr D Bradley: Yes, I would like the ESA's membership to reflect accurately the various political communities in Northern Ireland.

The Committee Clerk: There is an option of considering an amendment to paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1, which the Committee discussed following advice about the definition of the phrase:

"representative of the community of Northern Ireland".

The Chairperson: Would that wording define the phrase?

The Committee Clerk: Yes.

The Chairperson: That would give the same outcome. We are working on the assumption that the Committee would approve that, but we do not know because it has not yet been put to the Committee. Do members have views on that?

Dominic would prefer the word “proportionately” qualifying “representative”. Members have heard the comments from Patricia and John; are there any other views? Defining “proportionately” could create legal difficulties.

The Clerk of Bills: In order to effect that, you may need further amendments to define what is meant by “proportionately”.

Mr Lunn: That is more or less what I was going to say. It could not be left as a one-word amendment; it would have to be developed. If I heard Dominic correctly, he wants political and religious proportionate representation of the membership. The proposed Committee amendment to paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1 does not refer to either of those things; it refers only to skills and geography. The term “a broad geographical range” appears. I do not think that that gets us over the hurdle.

Mr D Bradley: If the majority of members of the board are to be councillors, I would like that body of councillors to be proportionately representative of political opinion in Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: The Minister’s intention has been that those members would be appointed on merit, not on proportional representation of the community that they serve.

The Committee Clerk: If the majority of the Committee wants that to be considered, we could treat it in the same way as the previous proposal. We could note the proposal and bring it back to Committee after advice about the implications of such words being included. It is a question of whether the Committee is minded, at this point, to accept the current wording. If the majority of the Committee wishes, it could be amended later to include the word “proportionately”. However, we would have to get legal advice, which would be available some time in October, after the Committee’s report has been published. Of course, the point that was raised would be noted in the report.

Mr O’Dowd: Dominic’s proposal should have been made much earlier than now so that there could have been a discussion about it and questions around the legal context and everything else. To throw it in now causes major difficulties in trying to assess it.

I have a question about the Committee’s proposed amendment to paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1, which proposes that members of the ESA, as a group, be representative of the community in Northern Ireland. Does that rule out people from England, Scotland, Wales and the Twenty-six Counties? What about the European context? It may be off the wall to suggest that people will come over for board meetings for which they will receive £8,000 each year, but is it legally competent to include such an amendment? It could rule out people from other places.

The Clerk of Bills: There would need to be some consideration of the equality implications of including that wording in relation to introducing a political element.

The Chairperson: Of what element? Of the element to which Dominic referred, or to —

The Clerk of Bills: The “proportionately” element.

The Chairperson: What about the other comment that was made about defining the phrase “representative of the community in Northern Ireland”?

The Committee Clerk: The proposed Committee amendment to paragraph 22 of schedule 1 tries to define precisely what is meant by “representative of the community in Northern Ireland”.

Mr O’Dowd: We are talking about a management body. People will be asked to join the board of a management body of a publicly funded organisation. Does that wording rule out people from England, Scotland, Wales and the Twenty-six Counties, and is that legal? If it is legal, I have no argument, but we need to check that out.

The Committee Clerk: It is a legal point. We can check that out if members wish us to do so. Any legal advice would not be available for the Committee’s deliberation before the publication of the report. It would be available post-report, as I have said. It is a matter of whether members are prepared to look at the proposed amendment to paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1, bearing in mind the reservations.

The Chairperson: Did you propose that, Dominic?

Mr D Bradley: Yes.

The Chairperson: Do I have to put that proposal to the Committee?

The Committee Clerk: Yes.

The Chairperson: Is there someone to second it?

The Committee Clerk: It is a matter of whether the Committee wants to take that to a vote.

Mr D Bradley: If there are legal implications to what I proposed, I am happy to wait until October, so that the Committee has had the chance to be briefed and informed about those legal implications.

The Chairperson: If I am right about this, we would then request clarification of the legal competency of an amendment that is worded:

“that the members, as a group, are proportionately representative of the community in Northern Ireland”.

John wants clarification of whether that excludes anybody outside of Northern Ireland. Does that mean that we are not content with paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1 as drafted? That is the decision that we must make, because it was only a Committee amendment.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee can make a decision on the schedule as drafted if it wants to. The further amendments could be considered after we receive legal advice in early October.

The Chairperson: We cannot include that amendment in our report because of the printing deadline, but that does not prevent the Committee from bringing forward such an amendment before the Consideration Stage.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee can, if it wishes, further amend the amendment in early October — providing the amendment is accepted now — to insert the word “proportionately”, or it can change paragraph 22. It would be noted in the report that an issue was raised and that the Committee would be returning to it. Whether that manifests itself in a further amendment is a decision for the Committee in October, in light of advice that it receives.

The Chairperson: In light of that, the Committee is not content with paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1 as drafted, because it is asking for an amendment to be considered. Surely, that is the logical conclusion.

Mr Lunn: We have not accepted or voted on the original amendment in the first place.

The Chairperson: That is what I am saying. However, we have had a discussion and, although it has not been put to a vote, it seems that there is agreement among members that we should receive clarification on the legal competency of a possible amendment, which would read; “the members, as a group, are proportionately representative of the community in Northern Ireland.” That advice will take into account the issue of proportionality and the issues raised by John O’Dowd about whether that excludes anybody from outside Northern Ireland.

Mr Lunn: Surely we are going to have to vote on everything today, so we must vote on the original amendment.

The Chairperson: That is why I am saying; we are either content or we are not. All I am trying to say is that the Committee cannot say that it is content when it is getting clarification on the legal competency of an amendment. Logic follows on some of these things. My advice is that the Committee registers that it is not content but adds a caveat that we are getting clarification on the amendment, as we have discussed.

Mr B McCrea: I would have thought that we are content with the amendment as drafted, subject to —

Mr Ross: We cannot be content with the schedule as drafted in the Bill if we are considering an amendment. We have to decide whether we are content with it as drafted. Well, no, we are not, because we are considering an amendment.

The Chairperson: That is the Question. I put it to the Committee: is the Committee content with paragraph 2(2) of schedule 1 as drafted?

Mr O’Dowd: We will just abstain. It will save a lot of hassle.

The Chairperson: So you register that. It has to go to a vote then. So we are not content?

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 9; Noes 0.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Lunn, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

The Chairperson: I note that John O’Dowd and Michelle O’Neill have abstained. We are still on paragraph 7 of schedule 1.

Mr B McCrea: Are we not voting on that amendment then?

The Chairperson: No; we cannot vote on it until we receive the relevant legal advice.

Mr B McCrea: Although we may want to amend the amendment, would we not be better to say — because we want it on the record — that we at least want a board that is representative of the community. I would like that to be included in the report. I am quite happy to amend it subsequently if we get different advice.

The Chairperson: That means that we make a decision, and the Question is then whether the Committee agrees its intention to bring forward a Committee amendment or amendments to paragraph 2(2). It is only an intention to bring forward an amendment.

Mr B McCrea: As long as it is in the report, I am happy.

Mr O’Dowd: Have we not just voted and made a decision?

Mr B McCrea: I thought that there was a series of decisions. First, you decide if you are happy; then you decide if there is an amendment.

The Chairperson: Basil, it complicates the situation. We have agreed that we are not content.

Mr B McCrea: I will make life easy; if you are happy, I am happy.

The Chairperson: The Committee will receive legal advice on the proposed Committee amendment that the ESA members, as a group, are proportionally representative of the community in Northern Ireland. Then we can make a decision.

Mr Lunn: Chairman, you made it very clear last week that today was D-Day, and we have to either accept or reject each of the amendments, no matter where they come from. The Committee has to take a view on them. However, that does not appear to rule out that Committee expressing some reservations and coming back to it from a legal standpoint. It does seem a bit odd that we are now turning down our own amendments.

The Chairperson: In fairness, that is only because it was introduced now as opposed to last week or six weeks ago.

Mr Lunn: We are going to come up against this a lot of times.

The Chairperson: Yes; it is going to make it a very long day.

Mr Lunn: You were adamant about your instructions last week. I was not sure at the time whether you were simply laying down ground rules to make us concentrate —

The Chairperson: I think that I was.

Mr Lunn: — or whether it was a legal requirement that we had to take a firm decision.

The Chairperson: What it proves, Trevor, is that it fell on deaf ears. All right; happy enough with that?

Mr Lunn: All right; yes.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: in page 33, paragraph 7, line 7, after “may” insert

“to the extent that the Department may by regulations provide.”.

In page 33, paragraph 7, line 8, insert new sub-clause (2) as set out below and re-number existing sub-clauses (2) and (3) accordingly

“(2) Regulations made under sub- paragraph (1) shall include those functions which may be exercised by each committee.”

In page 33, paragraph 8, line 20, after “under” insert: “paragraph 7 and”.

The Committee will recall that it also raised with the Minister the option of an enabling provision for regulations on the ESA committees, in the light of the concerns of some members and key stakeholders about local committees. The Minister’s letter of 22 September 2009 makes it clear that she does “not propose to make regulations”. The Committee agreed in principle that it needs clarity, certainty and confidence — those are the three words that were used repeatedly — on this matter. The Committee amendment would place a duty on the Department in so far as it proposes to add the words:

“to the extent that the Department may by regulations provide.”.

The issue was that the regulations were required to give that clarity, certainty and confidence.

At schedule 1, page 33, paragraph 7, line 8, we would insert a new sub-clause (2) that would read:

“Regulations made under sub-paragraph (1) shall include those functions which may be exercised by each committee.”

The Question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly that schedule 1, paragraph 7 be amended as set out in the amendments. Are there any comments? John O’Dowd and Michelle O’Neill have indicated that they will abstain.

The Committee divided: Ayes 9; Noes 0.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 36, paragraph 22, at end insert

“ ‘Representative of the community in Northern Ireland’ ”

23.— (1) In this Schedule, and without prejudice to the generality of the words, a membership ‘representative of the community in Northern Ireland’ shall in particular include—

(a) persons with experience of the controlled, maintained, grant-maintained integrated, Irish-medium and voluntary grammar school sectors; and,

(b) persons from [a broad geographic range of] local government districts, where ‘local government district’ has the same meaning as in the Local Government (Boundaries) Act (Northern Ireland) 2008.”

This amendment has an effect on what we have already agreed in respect of paragraph 2 of schedule 1. The legal advice to the Committee highlighted the possibility of inserting a definition at paragraph 22 of schedule 1 to make clear the factors that the Committee considers the Minister should have particularly in mind in relation to appointments to the ESA, so that the ESA members, as a group, are representative of the community in Northern Ireland. Adding a definition to paragraph 22 is an option if members wish to consider it.

The amendment gives rise to the issue of the legal competency of the words “a broad geographic range of”. Just as we did with the proposal earlier to add the word “proportionality”, we have to consider the legal competency of this amendment.

The Clerk of Bills: The amendment is consequent to the one that you have just parked. It cannot be decided on until members decide on the other one.

The Chairperson: The Question is whether we are content with schedule 1, paragraph 22, as drafted.

The Clerk of Bills: You may be, depending on the advice that you receive.

The Chairperson: Yes, but, at this moment in time, we are not content.

Mr D Bradley: It is pending legal advice.

The Chairperson: I will keep it simple; we are not content now because we are considering an amendment the legal competence of which has yet to be verified.

The Committee Clerk: What we are saying is that we will bring the amendment back to members in light of the instruction given on the earlier amendment to paragraph 2 of schedule 1 that we seek legal advice on any changes.

Mr O'Dowd: I assume that that legal advice will also consider the definition of "community" as outlined in the amendment, considering that there are a number of issues around section 75 of the 1998 Act. The amendment states that the membership should be representative of the community, but it goes on to mention only educational communities, backgrounds or sectors. To my mind, the two matters are not comparable.

The Chairperson: I understand what you are saying. On one hand, the amendment states that membership should be representative of the community of Northern Ireland, but then the amendment goes on to specifically define sectors.

Mr O'Dowd: Education sectors are being defined as the community. I do not know if that is competent.

The Committee Clerk: That can be checked and legal advice can be sought, as with the amendment that was parked earlier.

The Chairperson: Let us go back to the Question about paragraph 22, so that we are all clear — although I do not think that we are very clear on any of this. The Question is that members are not content with the Committee amendment to paragraph 22 of schedule 1.

Mr O'Dowd: We are content with it.

The Chairperson: Some members are content, so we will put it to a vote. If members are not content, that will mean that the Committee amendment will be considered for its legal competency and brought back to the Committee.

Question put, That the Committee is content with schedule 1.

The Committee divided: Ayes 2; Noes 9.

AYES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

NOES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Mr Lunn, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

Mr Lunn: I thought that we had to say that we are not content with paragraph 22 of schedule 1 in the light of the previous decision.

The Chairperson: These things are not always straightforward. I hope that I am not going to throw a spanner in the works, but we have not gone through paragraphs 1, 2 and 3; rather, we have voted only on certain paragraphs of schedule 1.

Mr B McCrea: I agree; I was going to ask you that.

Mr D Bradley: We are dealing only with the paragraphs to which there are proposed amendments. If there were no amendments to the other paragraphs last week, we do not need to deal with those this week.

The Chairperson: Am I not meant to ask the Committee, for the record, whether it is or is not content with all those items?

Mr D Bradley: We did that last week.

The Chairperson: What about the other paragraphs of schedule 1? Does that include the whole schedule?

The Clerk of Bills: Once the Committee has considered all the amendments to the different paragraphs of schedule 1, a Question is asked at the end about the schedule as a whole. If any amendment has been agreed, the Committee would agree the schedule as amended. If no amendments are agreed, the Committee would agree the schedule as drafted, unless the Committee has some alternative.

The Chairperson: The Question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly that schedule 1 in its entirety be amended as proposed in the Minister's amendments and the Committee's amendments set out as we have already agreed.

The Clerk of Bills: You cannot come to that Question yet because you have parked some matters relating to the schedule.

The Chairperson: So, we cannot take a decision on schedule 1?

The Committee Clerk: It is fair enough if you put a Question to members asking them whether they are content with the other paragraphs of schedule 1. If there is a proposal from members that they want to deal with the other paragraphs of schedule 1 to say that they are content with everything else that has not been the subject of proposals this morning, that is fair enough to put that to members.

The Chairperson: I am worried that we are getting very confused about this. We have dealt with the amendments to the paragraphs of the schedules; however, we have not said whether we are content with the other paragraphs of the schedules. That worries me.

Mr D Bradley: Surely, Chairman, we did that last week.

The Committee Clerk: We did not take any final decisions last week. Today is when we mop up all final decisions.

The Clerk of Bills: If any member has a difficulty with some part of schedule 1 that is not covered by any one of those amendments, they can either bring forward an amendment or vote against the final Question. Ultimately, members must make a decision on each of the schedules and clauses. If there are parts of the schedule that are not represented on the following few pages, then members must make an individual decision and then take a collective vote.

The Chairperson: Do members have any comments on that?

The Committee Clerk: If members now wish to vote that they are content with the remaining paragraphs of schedule 1, which we dealt with this morning, they may do so.

Mr Lunn: Why would we not?

The Chairperson: That is my opinion. It makes it very simple. Other than the elements of schedule 1 that we have agreed to seek legal clarity on or amendment to, are members content with the other paragraphs of that schedule?

The Committee Clerk: You have proposed that, Chairperson, so members may wish to signal whether they agree.

The Chairperson: I just want to be sure that members know where we are at. Schedule 1 is on pages 31 to 36 of the Bill, and it contains 22 paragraphs. I do not want anyone to think that there was an element of that schedule that they did not agree with. We have gone through the entire Bill, and five lever-arch files prove that.

Mr O'Dowd: We should start again.

The Chairperson: We could start again; that is what worries me.

Are members agreed that they are content with schedule 1, apart from the paragraphs that we agreed actions on? I note that Basil McCrea and John McCallister have abstained.

Clause 2 (Functions and general duty of ESA)

The Chairperson: Members will recall the Committee's consideration of adding the word "mental" to the list of ESA duties in clause 2(2)(a) and clause 2(2)(b). This is our final consideration and decision, starting with paragraph (b). Our amendment, which is an amendment to the amendment that was tabled by the Minister of Education states: "that contribute towards the spiritual, moral, cultural, social, mental, intellectual and physical development of those for whom those services are provided;"

It followed on from a discussion that took place last week. The Question is whether the Committee recommends to the Assembly that the clause be amended as set out above.

Mr O'Dowd: In principle, it is difficult to argue against that amendment, but if something is included in a Bill, it must be ensured that it is competent, and the ripple effects of it must be considered. I note from the Minister's letter that she is writing to the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Michael McGimpsey, to seek his views on what effect the Department of Education's inclusion of that amendment would have. The Committee would be wise to wait for that response.

The Committee Clerk: This morning, advice from the Assembly's Legal Services established that the amendment is competent and that it has meaning. Indeed, the word "mental" was included as part of a collection of words in English legislation; the Education Act 2002 and the Education Act 2005. Mental and physical development of children and young people were grouped together.

Mr B McCrea: I would so propose, Chairperson.

The Chairperson: It is proposed that the amendment be put forward by the Committee. Dominic Bradley has seconded it.

Mr Lunn: Do we need to go through this procedure?

The Clerk of Bills: You do not need a proposer when considering amendments to a Bill; the Committee either agrees the amendment by acclamation or pushes the amendment to a Division.

The Committee Clerk: As long as a member is signalling that he or she wants to push it to a vote.

The Chairperson: Are members content with the amendment?

Mr O'Dowd: We will have to abstain if there is a vote. I want to hear what the Health Minister has to say; if he agrees with it, I have no difficulty with it.

Mrs O'Neill: In her letter of 22 September, the Minister says that she wants to accommodate the Committee's wishes on the matter and that she will write to the Health Minister. She says that:

"I consider that the best approach would be to place a statutory duty on the ESA to co-operate with the Regional Health and Social Services Board and Health and Social Services Trust in promoting the mental health of children and young people."

The Chairperson: Michelle is referring to the final paragraphs of the Minister's letter.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee can note that and put it on the record. The Minister may bring forward an amendment in her own right.

Mr O'Dowd: I would be happy enough to go to the vote.

Question proposed, that the Committee recommend that the word "mental" be added at clause 2, page 1, line 15.

The Chairperson: John O'Dowd and Michelle O'Neill have abstained.

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Chairperson: I want to be clear about this: the Department proposed an amendment to clause 2(2)(b), but we have proposed our own amendment that amends the Department's amendment, so we do not have to put the Question on the departmental amendment.

The Committee Clerk: That amendment amended clause 2(2)(b). We have to go over clause 2(2)(a) again if we want to repeat it.

The Chairperson: That is what I am saying — we do not need to.

Mrs O'Neill: What are you saying about the departmental amendment? That amendment clarifies the duty that the ESA will have in relation to youth services, which is similar to the provision on schools, so we have to vote on that as well.

The Chairperson: Our amendment includes all the wording in the Department's amendment and inserts an additional word.

The Committee Clerk: That amendment has just been agreed.

The Chairperson: The Committee has agreed an amendment that adds the word "mental" to the Department's amendment — "that contribute to the spiritual, moral, cultural, social, intellectual and physical development of those for whom those services are provided" — therefore we do not need to vote on the Department's amendment.

The Committee Clerk: The proposal is that clause 2(2)(a) be similarly amended by adding the word "mental" to the list.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

Mr B McCrea: Where are we now?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee has voted to reject the Minister's amendment; it is now being asked whether it is content with the rest of the clause as drafted.

The Chairperson: That is, as the clause was before the insertion. Is the Committee content with the clause as drafted?

Clause 3 (ESA to employ all staff of grant-aided schools)

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In clause 3, page 2, paragraph 2(a), line 27, leave out sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) and insert

"(i) in the case of a controlled school, the Board of Governors of the school;

(ii) in the case of a voluntary or grant-maintained integrated school, the trustees of the school or (if the trustees so determine) the Board of Governors of the school; and".

Members will recall that C na G sought an amendment to the Bill so that the owners and trustees of an Irish-medium school will be its submitting authority rather than the board of governors. Essentially, that is the same arrangement as that which has been proposed for Catholic maintained schools. The Minister proposed that amendment.

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows:

In page 3, subsection 3, line 19, at end insert

"(4) The Department may by regulations make provision as to the form and content of employment schemes."

Members will recall the concerns of stakeholders, including NICCE, AQE and GBA, regarding the lack of clarity on the employment relationships that the Bill will create. At the Committee's request, the Minister has agreed to make provisions as to the form of intended employment schemes by way of regulations. The Department's proposed amendment introduces the enabling provision for such regulations.

Clause 6 (Reserve power of ESA to make employment scheme)

The Chairperson: This amendment springs from the amendment to clause 4 and gives the ESA a power to make employment schemes when the scheme submitted does not comply with the regulations to be made in relation to the form and content of employment schemes.

I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows:

Page 4, paragraph (1)(c), line 11, leave out from "subsection" to "cannot"

I also beg to move the following amendment: In line 13, insert

"section 5(1)(b) does not comply with regulations under section 4(4) or does not accord with any guidance issued by ESA under section 5(3) and cannot (in either case)."

The Committee Clerk: A complication exists because the Committee has rejected the amendment to clause 4. There is a proposed departmental amendment.

The Clerk of Bills: On two occasions, the Committee declined to accept either its own or the Minister's amendment and voted against the clause. What is the Committee proposing?

The Clerk Assistant: I do not wish to complicate this difficult matter further. The Committee is entitled to support neither the amendment nor the clause, and members may have different reasons for doing so, and those will be included in the report.

The Committee will have to return to another issue, and I do not suggest that you should do so now, because you are better going through the process and having a record of your view. If the Committee wants to act, there will have to be clarity on what the action will be. For example, if the Committee were to say that it did not support a clause, it would have the following options. First, it could agree to an amendment that would remove the clause. That would have major implications, because the clauses are significant, and the Committee would have to consider carefully whether it wished to do that. The second option is proposing amendment to a clause. The third option is that the Committee could decide that it had done what it could by forming its view and that it is for others to take action.

When the Committee agrees an amendment, the Chairperson will sign an amendment form on behalf of the Committee, and the amendment will be published on the Marshalled List of Amendments. If the Committee supports neither the amendment nor the clause, an action is to be taken, but we will not know what that action is unless the Committee gives us clarity.

I do not suggest that the Committee do anything about it now; it should come back to it. It is important that the Committee recognise that it has put on record its opposition to both the amendment and the clause; however, no action can be taken on its behalf without clarity on what the Committee wishes to do. The Committee must be clear on whether it wishes to remove the clause or whether it wishes to amend it.

My suggestion is that the Committee continue with the approach of agreeing its position. As has already been discussed, the Committee can come back to it before Consideration Stage and either do something or say that it has done as much as it can and that it is up to others to propose amendments. It is important that members understand the effect those decisions. It is entirely reasonable because people may have different reasons for coming to the same conclusion.

The Committee Clerk: Members were not opposing the clause; they were saying that they were not content with the clause.

The Clerk Assistant: That is my point. There is nothing wrong with what the Committee has decided, but it should be clear on that before any action can be taken on its behalf. The Committee can say that it has a view and that that is as far as it is going. It can return to the issue another day.

The Chairperson: Members, we should try to keep that in our minds: we are either content or not content. We will vote either to accept or reject the amendments, but the question still has to be put on whether we are content or not content with the clause. If we say that we are not content, do we still need to put in an action?

The Clerk Assistant: You may do. The Committee could say that it has too many differing views on an issue and that, having done its best, it can do no more. Everyone will see the Committee's views in the Hansard report.

The Chairperson: That is a fair position.

The Committee Clerk: The Department has proposed an amendment to clause 6. The question is whether the Committee recommends to the Assembly that the clause be amended as proposed by the Minister.

The Chairperson: The reason that the Department gave for putting forward that amendment was to ensure that the submitting authorities should comply with the regulations on employment schemes.

The Committee Clerk: If there is a signal that all members are content, that is taken as the majority and a count is not needed; however, if there is a signal that that is not the case, the Committee has to vote.

Mr Lunn: Last week, the Ulster Unionists asked for a recorded vote on every clause.

Mr B McCrea: I think that it is a recorded vote. Is it not?

The Chairperson: It is not recorded if the Committee is content. However, if we are saying that we will vote on all the clauses, then we will vote on all of them.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Clause 11 (Salaries, etc. of staff: administrative and financial arrangements)

The Chairperson: Members will recall that the need for an amendment was highlighted by the stakeholders, notably the Western Education and Library Board and the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland (GTCNI). The General Teaching Council pointed out that salaries would be drawn from the LMS formula funding regime of any school, which was surely not the intention. The Department recognised that and proposed a two-part amendment to clause 11. I will not read it all out, but members are aware of the issue. Perhaps Chris will clarify the matter.

The issue of teachers' salaries being looked at as an average has been raised. Older teachers can cost schools more money because of the different promotion points on their salary scales. Why is there a need for that clause?

Mr Stewart: Chairman, are you asking why there is a need for the clause at all or for the amendment?

The Chairperson: Sorry; I am asking why there is a need for the amendment.

Mr Stewart: Without the amendment, boards of governors would not be able to manage the very difficulty that you pointed out. It is a fact that teachers of different ages and experience can give rise to wins and losses and to benefits and costs in respect of the management of staffing budgets.

Without the amendment, boards of governors will not be able to address that problem; rather, the education and skills authority will make those decisions for controlled and maintained schools, while other schools will have the flexibility to manage their budgets to address, among other things, the difficulty that you raised. The amendment will level the playing field, provide equality and ensure that all boards of governors can manage their staffing budgets.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 6, subsections (5) and (6) line 23, leave out subsection (5) and (6) and insert

“(5) Notwithstanding any of the previous provisions of this Act, the budget share of a grant-aided school shall include an amount in respect of —

- (a) the salaries and allowances of the staff of the school; and
- (b) the relevant contributions in respect of such staff.

(6) But —

(a) in the case of a voluntary grammar school, ESA may set-off against the maintenance grant payable under Article 61(2)(a) of the 1998 Order any payments made by ESA itself in respect of the matters mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (1);

(b) in the case of a grant-maintained integrated school, ESA may set-off against the maintenance grant payable under Article 63(2)(a) of the 1998 Order any payments made by ESA itself in respect of the matters mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (2).”

Clauses 12 to 16 agreed to.New Clause

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the following new clause be inserted: After clause 16, insert

"ESA to contract for certain capital works [j2597]

*.—(1) ESA may enter into contracts for, or in connection with, the provision or alteration of the premises of a grant-aided school.

(2) Those contracts may include contracts with the trustees or Board of Governors of a voluntary or grant-maintained integrated school requiring specified payments to be made to ESA by the trustees or Board of Governors at specified times.

(3) ESA may under the powers conferred by subsection (1) enter into a contract ('an approved contract') with another person ('the contractor') —

- (a) under which the contractor undertakes at his own cost —
- (i) to provide or alter any premises of a grant-aided school; and
- (ii) to maintain, or provide other services in relation to, those premises over the term of the contract, in consideration for the payment by ESA of sums of money in instalments over the term of the contract; and

- (b) which has been approved by the Department for the purposes of this subsection.

(4) The inclusion in a contract of matters other than those mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (3) does not prevent the contract falling within that paragraph.

(5) In Article 2 of the 1986 Order for paragraphs (2G) and (2H) substitute —

'(2D) In the Education Orders references to —

- (a) an approved contract,
 - (b) the contractor, in relation to an approved contract,
- shall be construed in accordance with section {j2597}(3) of the Education Act (Northern Ireland) 2009.

(2E) References in the Education Orders to the staff of or at a school or to persons employed at, in or about a school do not include references to persons employed by the contractor for the purposes of an approved contract.' "

This is a new clause to be inserted after clause 16. It addresses a provision to allow the ESA to be the contracting authority for major capital works in grant-aided schools.

Clause 23 (General duty of the Department and DEL)

The Chairperson: I beg to move: That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 12, line 8, after “social” insert “mental”.

Clause 23 concerns the general duty of the Department and DEL. As discussed earlier under clause 2, which we have agreed to, we have approved the insertion of the term “mental”.

The Committee Clerk: Those amendments relate to clause 2(2)(a) and clause 2(2)(b)

The Chairperson: That means that we have to amend this clause in the same way in order to be consistent. We would have to agree to that, the same as we did for clause 2.

The Committee Clerk: That is up to members. It could be seen as a consequential amendment.

The Chairperson: I note that Michelle O’Neill and John O’Dowd have indicated that they will abstain.

Mr B McCrea: Is that clause about the Department of Education and the Department for Employment and Learning? Am I on the right clause?

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: Were the two Ministers meeting to discuss something? Is this the clause that they will discuss?

The Chairperson: There is a reference to that in the Minister’s letter.

Mr D Bradley: The Education Minister is going to contact the Health Minister.

The Chairperson: No, this is to do with DEL.

The Committee Clerk: I do not think that the letter indicated a clause.

The Chairperson: Perhaps I said DEL and I should not have; it is really the Health Department.

The Committee Clerk: The Minister’s letter of 22 September mentions an amendment that relates to the Careers Service.

The Chairperson: That is not to do with clause 23.

Mr B McCrea: I read somewhere that the Minister said she was talking to Reg Empey.

Mr D Bradley: She has accepted the amendment from DEL.

Mr B McCrea: So, is this it?

The Chairperson: No. There is nothing in clause 23 that refers to DEL. Sorry, there is. Clause 23(2) states that:

“It shall be the duty of DEL to promote further and higher education in Northern Ireland.”

That was not any reference to —

Mr B McCrea: I was just checking. Thank you.

The Chairperson: We took a vote on clause 23, did we not?

The Committee Clerk: Yes, we did.

Clauses 24 and 25 agreed to.

Clause 26 (Discharge by ESA of its functions under sections 24 and 25)

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 14, line 12, at end insert

“(iii) the requirements of those attending Irish speaking schools (within the meaning of Article 3(2) of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 2006) who are taught in Irish; and”

This is a departmental amendment in response to a submission from C na G, which aims to ensure that the ESA, in relation to the curriculum and examinations, considers the requirements of those who attend Irish-speaking schools.

The Question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly that this clause be amended as proposed by the Minister as set out above.

Mr Ross: How does that extend the current position? Are we saying that due regard is not currently being given to the requirements of those attending Irish-medium schools? I do not see the need for the amendment.

The Chairperson: Will Mr Stewart facilitate the Committee, please?

Mr Stewart: The member has partly answered his own question. The amendment is proposed because the Minister is satisfied that the needs of those being educated through the medium of Irish are not currently being sufficiently met, particularly in relation to curriculum support, and it is felt that placing that duty on the ESA would put it in a position to remedy the current shortcomings.

Mr Ross: What are the current shortcomings that have been identified as needing to be resolved?

Mr Stewart: To put it in crude and, perhaps, over-simplified terms, it was felt that something of a one-size-fits-all approach was being taken, particularly around curriculum support, and that such an approach does not sufficiently recognise that students are being taught through the medium of Irish rather than English. Therefore, the needs for curriculum-support materials are quite different. It is not enough to translate English-language materials into Irish: a more fundamental examination is needed of what materials are required by teaching staff.

Mr D Bradley: Until now, the education and library boards have said that they are under no legal obligation to provide curriculum support and back-up for Irish-medium schools; consequently, there has not been much of it. Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta wanted the amendment to ensure that that would not be the case under the ESA and to copper-fasten the provision of those services to the sector.

Mr McCallister: How can curriculum support be defined in any one area? The Committee hears the same claims about the need for support materials from others, particularly special needs groups; they need specific materials for people who are blind or who have hearing difficulties.

Mr Stewart: That is already covered by the clause.

Question put.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Lunn, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

NOES

Mr Craig, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

Question accordingly negatived.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: in page 14, line 19, leave out from "and" to end of line 21.

The effect of that is to remove clause 26(2)(b):

"persons who have a learning difficulty (as defined in Article 2 of the Further Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 (NI 15))."

Mr O'Dowd: Chairperson, may I have a moment to familiarise myself with the proposed amendment.

The Chairperson: Does Mr Stewart want to comment on DEL's recommended amendment? If I remember accurately, the Committee received correspondence from the Committee for Employment and Learning that stated that it was happy with the proposed amendment.

Mr Stewart: I may have taken longer to get to the table than I will spend at it on this occasion. I am not in a position to comment in detail about why DEL has put forward the amendment, but it is proposed on the advice of that Department. I do not think that the amendment reflects any great policy change; it is based on technical advice that the provision is no longer required.

Mr Lunn: I am curious about why there is no explanation. DEL says that we do not need the Further Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, but was it not needed in 1997? What is different now?

Mr Stewart: I cannot shed any light on that today; I will have to check that with DEL colleagues and come back to the Committee with an answer.

The Chairperson: Clarification of that would be useful.

Mr Stewart: I am conscious of pressures on the Committee's time; therefore, if it helps, I will try to get a line on that over lunchtime.

The Chairperson: I will now ask the Committee whether it recommends to the Assembly that the clause be amended as proposed by the Minister as set out above. This Question relates to the DEL amendment.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Committee postpone a vote until after lunch, by which time it will have received that clarification?

The Chairperson: With members' agreement, the meeting is suspended until 1.30 pm.

Twenty-five minutes of proceedings not reported as Hansard not provided with sound recording.

Clauses 43 to 46 agreed to.

Clause 47 (Directions as to exercise of child protection duties by Boards of Governors)

The Chairperson: Do Committee members have any comments on the clause?

Miss McIlveen: The National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC) raised an issue with the clause.

The Chairperson: The Minister's letter of 22 September 2009 states:

"NSPCC has proposed that Clause 47 be amended".

It also states:

"It is not appropriate for ESA to issue a direction to a Principal and, in effect, 'by-pass' the Board of Governors. Boards of Governors are accountable for the actions of school-based staff, and it is for the Boards to issue instructions to those staff. Issuing directions to the Board of Governors, albeit on foot of a failure by the Principal, will ensure that they are kept informed of the position and have the opportunity to consider the issue and wider safeguarding practice within the school."

Miss McIlveen: I just wanted to put on the record that the NSPCC raised an issue with the clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 47 agreed to.

Clause 48 agreed to.

Clause 49 (Catholic maintained schools)

The Chairperson: Members will recall that the Department's proposes to remove clause 49 as a separate approach to Catholic maintained schools is no longer required. The Minister will give notice of her intention to oppose the Question that clause 49 stands part of the Bill. Are members content with that proposal?

Mr B McCrea: No, we object.

Mr D Bradley: Chris, will you refresh our memories on the Department's reasons for wanting to remove clause 49?

Mr Stewart: Clause 49 is a carry-over from the existing provisions in the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, which set up a definition for Catholic maintained schools as part of a much broader provision. That set out a separate set of administrative arrangements for Catholic maintained schools with the aim of moving towards a single set of administrative arrangements, albeit one that would support a diversity of schools.

It is no longer necessary or appropriate to take that approach to defining Catholic maintained schools. As we mentioned briefly last week, it is, nevertheless, still necessary in one or two places to refer to Catholic schools in legislation. On foot of that, we have proposed in the amendments a different definition for Catholic schools. Lest it would give rise to any concern on the part of Committee members, that is not a softening of the policy intention to simplify administration; it is simply a pragmatic reflection of reality. From time to time, it is necessary to refer to different types of schools and to have definitions, but the approach that is currently taken in clause 49 is not required, hence the Minister's proposal that it be removed.

Mr D Bradley: Why was that clause included in the Bill in the first place?

Mr Stewart: From the beginning of the RPA, it was always intended to make those changes. The original proposal was to remove the definition of Catholic maintained schools in the second education Bill. That was purely because we thought that it was quite an onerous and difficult task to deal with all the various references in legislation. However, when we looked at it in some detail, we recognised that it was not as difficult as we had first thought and that it was possible to deal with it in the first Bill.

Mr B McCrea: In your explanation, you said that there was some need for different designations of schools at different stages. Given the way that thinking is emerging about area-based planning, it might be useful to have certain designations. That is why we are opposed to their removal; we believe that a one-size-fits-all policy cannot be used, and that we will end up with designations.

Mr Stewart: That is correct, and the Minister would agree with that. She would point to the fact that the designations and definitions for other types of school are already in legislation and will remain in legislation; we are not taking any away. The Catholic trustees strongly support the removal of the separate definition of Catholic maintained schools. They are very clear that they want to see participation by the representatives of Catholic schools in area-planning arrangements, but they do not favour a separate categorisation of Catholic grammar schools and Catholic maintained schools. The definition of grammar school will remain in legislation.

Mr B McCrea: Perhaps it is too much detail to deal with at this stage, but there was a general agreement that having some form of designation might be helpful in area-based planning. I am reluctant to take away a definition that is already in existence.

Mr Stewart: The Committee must come to a view on that. I reassure you that that would not disadvantage any Catholic schools, maintained or otherwise. The trustees are also of that view.

Chairperson, if you wish to return to clause 26 while I am here, I am happy to do so.

The Chairperson: Thank you, Chris. We will deal with clause 49 and then return to clause 26.

The Question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly the removal of clause 49 as proposed by the Minister and set out above. I ask members to indicate whether they are in favour of clause 49. I note that Jonathan Craig, Michelle McIlveen and Alastair Ross have indicated that they wish to abstain, and I also shall abstain.

Clause 49 disagreed to.

Clause 26 (Discharge by ESA of its functions under sections 24 and 25)

The Chairperson: Chris, can we go back to clause 26 now, please?

Mr Stewart: Members have asked for a further explanation as to why DEL proposed an amendment to remove clause 26(2)(b). Having checked the background to it, the amendment was based on the advice of legislative counsel and was agreed by our colleagues in DEL. Legislative counsel pointed out that clause 26 refers back to clauses 24 and 25. The focus of those clauses is entirely on what happens in schools. Therefore, it pointed out that the reference in clause 26(2)(b) to further education was simply not necessary and was superfluous, and it was recommended that it ought to be taken out.

Subsequent to that, as you know, DEL sought an agreement to amendments to introduce a similar range of functions for the ESA to cover further education, similar to those in clauses 24 and 25, which deal with schools. At the end of the new clause that DEL has proposed to be inserted after clause 28, a reference to persons with special learning needs, similar to the one that is proposed to be removed from clause 26(2)(b), is included. In essence, it is proposed that that reference be taken out from a part of the Bill where it is not appropriate and that it be reinserted in a new clause in the Bill where it would be more appropriate.

At the risk of further complicating the matter, we read the clause and the amendments again over lunch, and we are not entirely satisfied that the wording of the proposed DEL amendment is entirely correct.

It appears to include a cross-reference to the clause that we have proposed to remove. We will seek advice from legislative counsel. If there is an error, it will not be difficult to fix. We would revise the wording of the DEL amendment in order to ensure that there is not an erroneous cross-reference.

Mr B McCrea: You will just rewrite it then, Chris. Is that what you are saying?

Mr Stewart: If there is an error, we will fix it. I believe that there is an error.

The Chairperson: We did not agree on the amendment that was tabled by DEL. All we can do is agree on that amendment. An amendment will probably have to be tabled by the Department at Consideration Stage. Alternatively, it could come back to us.

Mr Stewart: It might assist the Committee if we confirm with our colleagues in DEL that their amendment is not quite correct at present. We will secure their agreement to correct that error. We will bring that back to the Committee. When it comes to Consideration Stage, I suspect that the Minister of Education will move the amendment. However, she will move a slightly revised amendment. I assure members that the effect of the amendment will remain exactly as currently drafted.

The Chairperson: I still think that we need to agree clause 26 as amended. So the Question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly that the clause be amended as proposed by the Minister for Employment and Learning.

Mr O'Dowd: Can we consciously accept it? Can we note it and return to it later?

The Committee Clerk: On a point of clarification; if I understand Chris correctly, the opposition to and removal of that is correct. Somewhere else in the DEL amendments, there may be an error that the Committee has already approved. Therefore, it is not an issue here. Chris has given us an extra piece of information, which we will learn about in the future. It does not affect this vote, as I understand it.

The Chairperson: Are members content?

Mr B McCrea: I have no idea.

Mr Stewart: You will just have to trust us.

"Except as provided by subsection (6),"

In page 29, line 24, paragraph 5, at end insert

"(6) No regulations shall be made under Schedule 1, paragraph 7 unless a draft of those regulations has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Assembly."

The Committee has discussed the merits of making important regulations or orders under the Bill subject to draft affirmative resolution by the Assembly as opposed to negative procedure. Please, do not go down that road today. The Committee now has the opportunity to recommend to the Assembly such an amendment to the Bill; however, only if the Committee has recommended the amendment to schedule 1, paragraph 7.

The Committee Clerk: There is one complication, which I will mention in a moment. The Committee may consider three or, perhaps, all four of those sets of amendments. With regard to the third, I will make a slight change to the Chairman's proposal.

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 9; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Mr Lunn, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

NOES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 29, line 16, paragraph (1), at start insert

“Except as provided by subsection (6),”

In page 29, line 24, paragraph 5, at end insert:

“(6) No regulations shall be made under section 30(6) unless a draft of those regulations has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Assembly.”

NOES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Committee Clerk: The next proposal is a draft affirmative resolution for proposed new clause 4(4), which relates to the regulation on employment schemes. As the Committee has opposed the Minister's amendment relating to employment schemes, I will adjust the Question, if I may, so that it would read:

“The Question is that, should the regulation amendment in relation to bringing forward regulation on schemes of employment be tabled, the Committee recommend to the Assembly that clause 51 be amended as set out above”.

The Chairperson: That simply means that if the Minister or someone else proposed the amendment, it would be subject to the draft affirmative resolution procedure.

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 9; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mrs M Bradley, Mr Craig, Mr Lunn, Mr McCallister, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

NOES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

Question accordingly agreed to.

The Chairperson: The next proposed amendment is still related to clause 51.

The Committee Clerk: That still applies. If I may clarify, that proposed amendment would have the effect of making clause 12(1), which is the modification of employment law, subject to draft affirmative resolution of the Assembly.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 29, line 17, leave out “section 50(1)” and insert “sections 50(1) or 12(1)”.

I note that Mr O'Dowd and Mrs O'Neill wish to abstain from this vote.

Clause 54 (Commencement)

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 30, line 24, at end insert

“(cc) section 29 and Schedule 6;”

This amendment is proposed by the Department. Members will recall that it allows the commencement of the clause on disciplinary powers of the General Teaching Council to be commenced upon Royal Assent, as those clauses are urgently required in order to comply with other jurisdictions. There are six abstentions; Jonathan Craig, John McCallister, Basil McCrea, Michelle McIlveen, Alastair Ross and myself.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the Committee's proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 54, subject to the Committee's proposed amendment, agreed to.

Clause 55 agreed to.

The Chairperson: We now move to the schedules. We have already dealt with schedule 1.

Mr B McCrea: Do we not have to deal with the schedule in its entirety? We have dealt with individual parts of it.

The Committee Clerk: We have dealt with it in its entirety.

Schedule 2 (Transfer to ESA of staff employed by Boards of Governors)

The Chairperson: I note that Basil McCrea and John McCallister have indicated that they wish to abstain.

Schedule 3 (Transfer of assets, liabilities and staff of dissolved bodies)

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 40, line 8, paragraph 5, leave out paragraph 5 and insert

“5. — (1) ESA shall make arrangements for a statement of accounts to be prepared in relation to each dissolved body for the relevant period.

(2) Each statement of accounts shall —

(a) be in such form, and

(b) contain such information,

as the Department may direct.

(3) ESA shall, within such time after the end of the relevant period as the Department may direct send a copy of each statement of accounts to the Department.

(4) In this paragraph ‘the relevant period’ means the period —

(a) beginning on such day as the Department may direct; and

(b) ending immediately before the appointed day.”

That proposed departmental amendment makes arrangements for the ESA to proceed with regard to reporting on its first set of accounts following advice from the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Members will recall that the amendment from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) to line 20 on page 38 is no longer required because those assets or liabilities have already been transferred to the new Library Authority.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 41, paragraph (3)(b), line 16, leave out head (b) and insert

“(b) the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Armagh and the Roman Catholic Bishops of Clogher, Derry, Down and Connor, Dromore and Kilmore; and”

This is a departmental amendment. Members will recall that the definition is required because of the proposed removal of clause 49. I note six abstentions: Jonathan Craig, John McCallister, Basil McCrea, Michelle McIlveen, Alastair Ross and myself.

Schedule 7 (Minor and consequential amendments)

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 48, line 25, leave out from

'for' to end of line 27 and insert 'for the words from "has the meaning" to the end substitute "means a maintained school whose trustees are appointed by, or on behalf of, the Roman Catholic Church;"'

Schedule 7, page 50, line 5, leave out paragraph (6)

Schedule 7, page 51, line 16, leave out paragraph (15)

Schedule 7, page 55, line 31, leave out from 'and' to end of line 33 and insert —

'(aa) in paragraph 1(2) for sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute "the trustees and Board of Governors of the school;"'

Schedule 7, page 61, line 5, leave out paragraph 18 and insert —

'18. — (1) In Article 10(3)(aa) and (4)(aa) for "the body constituted by" substitute "a tribunal constituted in accordance with".'

(2) In Article 16(2) for sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute "the Board of Governors of a grant-aided school shall consider any representations made to it by ESA".

(3) In Article 16A(1) for the words from the beginning to "direction" substitute "ESA shall make arrangements for enabling the parent of a child of compulsory school age to apply to a tribunal constituted in accordance with regulations under paragraph (6) for a direction".

(4) In Article 16A(2)(a) and (b) for "body" wherever occurring", substitute "tribunal".

(5) In Article 16A(5)(a) for "pupil" substitute "child".

(6) In Article 16A(6) —

(a) for "a body" substitute "tribunals";

(b) in sub-paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) for "the body" substitute "a tribunal";

(c) after sub-paragraph (c) insert —

"(cc) may provide for two or more tribunals to sit at the same time;"

(d) in sub-paragraph (d) for "the Department" substitute "ESA".

(7) In Article 16A after paragraph (6) substitute —

"(6A) A tribunal is not to be regarded as a committee of ESA."

(8) In Article 16A for paragraph (7) insert —

"(7) ESA may make payments to members of a tribunal —

(a) for or in relation to their service as members; and

(b) by way of travelling and subsistence allowance."

(9) In Article 16B(1)(d), for "the body established" substitute "a tribunal constituted".'

Schedule 7, page 62, line 13, leave out sub-paragraph (7) and insert —

'(7) In Article 32(2) for sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute "the Board of Governors of a controlled or maintained school shall consider any representations made to it by ESA."'

Schedule 7, page 62, line 21, leave out sub-paragraphs (13) to (17) and insert —

'(13) In Article 55(3) and (6) for sub-paragraph (c) substitute —

"(c) where the school is a maintained school, the trustees of the school,"'

(14) In Article 56(1) —

(a) for "the board concerned" substitute "ESA";

(b) for sub-paragraph (b)(iii) substitute —

"(iii) where the school is a maintained school, the trustees of the school,"

(c) in sub-paragraph (b) for "that Council" substitute "those trustees".

(15) In Article 56(2) for sub-paragraph (d) substitute —

"(d) where the school is a maintained school, the trustees of the school,".

(16) In Article 60(5) for "all the boards, the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools" substitute "ESA".

(17) In Article 60(8) and (11) for sub-paragraph (c) substitute —

"(c) where the school is a maintained school, the trustees of the school,".

This departmental amendment is neither minor nor consequential because it is as long as the schedule. Members will recall that the Department commented that the most significant amendments in schedule 7 relate to the amendment of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1997. It will place a duty on the ESA to appoint exceptional circumstances tribunals to consider appeals from parents regarding admission to secondary schools for their children. We know that the regulations are going out for consultation.

Question put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 54, line 28, omit "and"

In page 54, line 29, at end insert

"and (d) the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 2009".

This amendment has been tabled by the Department for Employment and Learning.

Question put and agreed to.

The Committee Clerk: Before we leave schedule 7, I draw members' attention to the Minister's letter of 22 September, in which the Minister highlighted another amendment in relation to DEL and the Careers Service. The four lines at the end are effectively the amendment, the detail of which is given in the commentary. Does the Committee want a moment to consider deciding on that amendment now? Alternatively, the Committee may wish to defer reaching an opinion as it has only just received the information.

The Chairperson: Do members have any comments?

Mr O'Dowd: Do we know whether the Committee for Employment and Learning has a view?

The Chairperson: That was not included in the correspondence from the Department for Employment and Learning. This amendment has only just been received. Chris, can you elaborate?

Mr Stewart: It may not have been considered by the Committee for Employment and Learning yet, because the need for the possible amendment arose after the main block of amendments was proposed by DEL. The Minister of Education sees no difficulty with it. The rationale for the amendment is clear: it is to put beyond doubt the legality of the ESA and schools providing to the Careers Service information that it needs to assist children and young people, particularly those who are at risk of losing contact with the education system. It is to ensure that the Careers Service is in a position to provide the most effective service that it can, and the Minister supports the amendment for those reasons.

The Chairperson: It is nice to see the independent schools getting a mention at last. It might be only a very small step, but it is in the right direction. I have to say that I declare an interest.

Mr Stewart: Independent schools are mentioned in clause 37 as well. They are within the remit of the inspection regime.

The Chairperson: We know that — passed with flying colours.

Clerk, can you advise us on whether the Committee can accept that amendment?

The Committee Clerk: If it is the Committee's wish to do so, despite the late notice.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 64, line 4, at end insert

“(4) In Article 37(8) after sub-paragraph (c) insert—

‘(ca) the Board of Governors of a grant-aided school; and

(cb) the proprietor of an independent school.’.”

I ask members to consider the amendment set out on the last page of the Minister's letter.

Question put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the schedule, subject to the Committee's proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Schedule 7, subject to the Committee's proposed amendments, agreed to.

Schedule 8 (Repeals)

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows:

In page 72, leave out lines 13 and 14

In page 72, leave out lines 20 to 24 and insert —

In page 73, leave out lines 12 and 13

In page 73, leave out lines 35 and 36 and insert —

‘In Article 61(1) the words “situated in its area”.

Article 61(3).’

In page 73, leave out lines 39 and 40 and insert —

‘In Article 63(1) the words “situated in its area”.

Article 63(3).’

In page 73, line 47, leave out from beginning to end of line 3 on page 74 and insert

‘Article 70(3) to (7), (9) and (10).’

In page 74, line 41, at end insert —

‘Article 28.’

These are proposed departmental amendments to schedule 8. Chris, is this a tidying-up exercise?

Mr Stewart: Yes.

The Committee Clerk: It is a whole collection of amendments.

Mr B McCrea: The amendments are simply tidying-up amendments.

The Chairperson: Yes; that is what I have just asked Chris. Chris, can you clarify further?

Mr Stewart: To be clear: is the focus of your question schedule 8?

The Chairperson: Yes; schedule 8.

Mr Stewart: These are a set of consequential repeals. They do not in themselves make any great policy change, but they give effect to the policy changes elsewhere in the Bill. As you say, they are a tidying-up exercise. They remove pieces of the vast body of education legislation that are no longer required.

The Chairperson: The Question is that the Committee recommends to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as proposed by the Minister?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: That brings us to the end of our clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill.

I want to place on record concerns about the way in which the Bill affects the controlled sector, and we had some discussion on that earlier. First, I want to highlight the extremely slow progress that there has been in establishing the controlled sector body. The lack of progress has meant that the controlled sector has not had the same opportunity as other sectors to influence the scrutiny of the Bill. The Minister has been willing to move to address some of the concerns raised by sectoral bodies. That begs the question of what might have been achieved had an effective controlled sector body been up and running six to eight months ago.

I am also concerned that the Department has told the Committee that it has no plans to commence its review of the teacher-employment and fairness/equality issues that arise in that regard through: the fair-employment exemption for teachers; the impact of the requirement to have a certificate in religious education on open access to teaching vacancies in the maintained sector, both now and if the exception is removed; and, in particular, how the latter will affect the respective opportunities of teachers in controlled schools and maintained schools if there is a significant rationalisation and school closures. There is a serious concern about whether staff be treated fairly.

If, as the Bill proposes, all teachers are employed by the ESA, then all ESA vacancies will presumably be open to all teachers who are at risk of redundancy. However, if roughly half of the vacancies are in maintained schools, in the majority of cases, vacancies in maintained schools will not really be open to those teachers who work in controlled schools and who are at risk of redundancy because there may be a requirement for a certificate in religious education. On the other hand, all vacancies across both the controlled and maintained sectors will be open to teachers from the maintained sector who are at risk of redundancy.

Where the teachers in the different sectors were employed by different employers, the employers did not need to look beyond their own employees in trying to find alternative employment for teachers who are at risk of redundancy in their own schools. The ESA's obligations will be different and will encompass all staff at risk of redundancy in all grant-aided schools and all vacancies across all sectors. It appears that that will mean that there will be fewer alternative employment opportunities open to teachers in the controlled sector than in the maintained sector.

I propose that the Committee's report include a very strong recommendation that the Minister take urgent action to address all the issues that I have just summarised and find the resources to make immediate progress. That recommendation can be made in the knowledge that the Minister has already indicated to us in correspondence that there is neither the budget nor the resources available to carry out the promised review of the exemption in regard to the provision for a certificate for Catholic education. That ties in with the concerns that we have about the controlled sector, and I ask the Committee for its support on the issue so that the report that goes to the Assembly reflects our concerns in the strongest possible terms and asks the Minister to address them.

Mr O'Dowd: There are parts of your comments that I have sympathy with and support, but there are parts with which I completely disagree. I am disappointed that you have raised your concerns at this juncture in the Committee's deliberations. Having heard your comments in the Committee meetings and elsewhere, I know that your concerns are connected to your party. Those matters do not necessarily need to be contained in the Committee's report to the Assembly. The Committee's report to the Assembly is a factual report of the deliberations on evidence given, amendments and the Bill in general. On that basis, I will not support the inclusion of those comments in the report.

On the issue of whether we could have heard more from the controlled sector, all five of the education and library boards have appeared before the Committee, as have the educational boards' representative body, the grammar sector and the GBA. The door was open to anyone who wished to make written or oral presentations to us. Therefore, we have heard from the controlled sector. The thought that was in my head at the start of this morning's meeting is still there now: representatives in this room told us that there was a need and demand for a body for the controlled sector, but the evidence suggests to me that that may be more of a political demand than a demand from the sector itself.

The Chairperson: The education and library boards were not tasked with being the sole advocate for, or defender of, the controlled sector. You must remember that when litigation was taken against some maintained schools, and when costs were incurred as a result of decisions made by, for example, CCMS, to amalgamate some schools, who picked up the tab? It was the education and library boards, not CCMS. I repeat; we are comparing apples with oranges. There is a sector that is clearly disadvantaged. In fact — speaking as a member of the Committee and not as its Chairperson — I would go so far as to say that, in some cases, it could be argued that it was not only disadvantaged but discriminated against because of the structures that were in place.

If we are moving into a new dispensation and if, as the Minister continually tells us, she wants equality and a level playing field for all, consideration must be given to the serious concerns about employment opportunities for staff in the controlled sector. They will be seriously disadvantaged when there is a rationalisation of the schools estate. We are not scaremongering; that will happen. There are schools in the controlled sector that will not be in existence in 10 or 15 years, as there are in the maintained sector. Who is going to employ those teachers if such a disincentive exists? Those teachers believe that they do not have the same opportunities as their peers or equals. I am quite happy for the Committee to comment further on that issue.

Mr D Bradley: It is unfortunate that you raise those issues five minutes before we are due to finish the scrutiny of the Bill. I am not in a position to give my party's support to your views on that sort of notice. I would prefer to have discussions with my party first before I give you a definitive answer. I echo what John has said; the TRC appeared before the Committee to represent the controlled sector, or at least part of it. The representatives of that body made their case very strongly, and the Committee has acted on the shortcomings that they saw in the Bill and has tried to accommodate their proposals. We had a discussion earlier about the new maintained body.

I also contend that the education and library boards do have a duty to represent the controlled sector's concerns. There are five of those boards, plus their representative body. There was ample opportunity for a number of bodies to represent the controlled sector. The TRC did that very well, and the Committee has acted upon, and tried to accommodate, its concerns. That is probably as much as we can do at this late stage.

The Chairperson: I am quite happy to put the proposal to the Committee. I propose that —

Mr Lunn: I would like to make a comment. Without wishing to repeat a lot of what has been said, on the face of it, I have a lot of sympathy for what the Chairperson has said, but it may be a bit much to expect me to commit to that sort of verbal statement on behalf of my party, especially at this stage.

As I said, that sounds very reasonable; however, I wish to see the proposal in writing so that I can dwell on it for at least a week. I do not understand why it has to be part of the Committee's report on the scrutiny of the Bill.

The Chairperson: It is important that it be included in report in order to give confidence to all the sectors. Some sectors will gain certain things and others will not. In fairness to the Minister, she has refused some of the recommendations that the Irish-medium sector made. She made a decision, so not everyone will get what they are looking for. I think that the controlled sector wants to know what it is getting from the process.

Mr O'Dowd: Where exactly is it saying that? Where is the statement from the controlled sector in which it states that position?

The Chairperson: We are often told by the Minister that we are representing, or are not representing, the sector because of the debate on academic selection. The principals of controlled primary schools, a considerable number of which are in my constituency, have told me that they just get their heads down and get on with their jobs. The issue for them is not so much the protection of the controlled sector but the fact that it has to fit within defined criteria. Other sectors have had safeguards and guarantees that they felt were necessary for the protection of their sector, but there are still serious concerns about the controlled sector.

Many people still have grave concerns about the issue of employment. It is not fair or right that one section of teachers has an advantage over others when applying for a job. We must put down a marker to show our concern, and I think that the right place to do that is in the report. I appreciate that some members feel that this issue has been brought to the table only today. However, it has been rehearsed numerous times in the past, ad infinitum, so I do not want to labour the point. I would be happy if we had the time to consider the proposal and put it to a vote next week. Do we have time?

The Committee Clerk: Time is very tight because the Committee must approve its entire report at next week's meeting. I do not know whether the Committee wants to put it to a vote. A draft could be prepared in advance.

The Chairperson: Yes; that is fair. We will supply members with a draft of my remarks and a specific proposal as soon as possible. We can vote next week on whether that should be included in the report.

Mr O'Dowd: We are at the point of including papers on party positions in the report. That is where we are at. If that is what we need to do, that is what we need to do. There is a possibility that, for the first time, the Education Committee will have an agreed report. We are on the verge of having that. I do not see any need for the proposal. I do not need to read an Education Committee report to know what the DUP's or Ulster Unionist Party's position is. It airs that vocally, both privately and publicly, and is quite entitled to do so. However, do we really need to include that in the Education Committee's report on the Education Bill?

The Chairperson: As has been previously said by members around the table, it would be good to get a consensus that there are serious issues within the controlled sector that need to be addressed.

Mr O'Dowd: There are serious issues across all the sectors. One of the good things —

The Chairperson: Maybe I could get finishing.

Mr O'Dowd: I am sorry for interrupting, Chairperson, but just let me finish this. One of the good things about working in the Education Committee is that I get to meet people from all sectors. I not only meet and talk to principals from maintained schools but those from the controlled sector, too. I am sure that it is the same for you.

The Chairperson: It is the same for us all. We have already spent this morning looking at the sectoral body for the controlled sector. That sector is at a clear disadvantage. It does not have a coherent structure in place within the timescale that has been allowed, and I am not convinced that the Department is not leading the controlled sector down a particular road.

The Hansard reports and the minutes of previous meetings will show that the Committee accepted that that sector needed additional resources to bring it close to the levels of other sectors — and we have heard from C na G, Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) and CCMS. Therefore, it would be only right and fair from an educational perspective, not a party political one, to address that. Everybody has agreed that there are concerns; the Committee has highlighted concerns in other sectors, so there is no reason not to do so in this sector. Therefore, we will circulate to members the bones of the proposal that I outlined and the Committee will decide on it next week. Is that OK?

Mr B McCrea: Chairperson, you know that you have my support. The Committee has not conducted many inquiries because it has had so much legislation to deal with. What are the chances of getting an inquiry into the controlled sector?

The Chairperson: Will members consider the issue of inquiries for next week? The other matter that I will put on the table is the report by Deloitte MCS Limited, which clearly indicated that there was underachievement among working-class Protestant boys.

Mr B McCrea: I am wholeheartedly with the Chairperson; the Committee must look at both those issues.

Mr D Bradley: I have already proposed an inquiry into the funding of primary school education. I was told at the time that that would be put on hold until such time as the scrutiny of the Education Bill was finished.

The Chairperson: Will the Committee have the Clerk bring back a report on that in light of comments from Basil, Dominic and myself?

The Committee Clerk: Most importantly, I must mention to the Committee the policy reviews and the likelihood of the second education Bill arriving shortly, as discussed earlier. The important review of special educational needs and inclusion is out for consultation at the moment. The Department has told me that the all-embracing review of early years is about to come back to the Committee. Bearing in mind the volume of work that emerged from the first Education Bill, members must consider whether one three- to three-and-a-half hour meeting each week will cover the workload if a second education Bill, two other reviews and an inquiry arrive all at once.

However, I can bring all of that to the Committee in a paper that will show members what is timetabled for departmental policy scrutiny, which is part and parcel of the Committee's statutory responsibility.

The Chairperson: Are members happy with that approach?

Members indicated assent.

Mr B McCrea: I understand that that the Committee has a responsibility to consider legislation and areas under statute, but there is no doubt that the way to deal with a truculent Committee is to drown it in paper. This Committee keeps being given loads of things to do, without actually getting to grips with the very real issues that exist. The three issues that have been raised are really important and members must find some way to deal with them. If that does not happen this side of Christmas, then they must definitely be made a priority once the Bill is passed. The Committee will just have to tell the Department that it cannot deal with some business; it must tackle issues that it considers important.

Mrs M Bradley: Sure, we will work over the Christmas recess.

Mr B McCrea: Mary, I wish you well.

Mr O'Dowd: I have no difficulty looking at each inquiry as it is proposed, but an inquiry is held in order to reach a conclusion; one does not have a conclusion then an inquiry. I think it is great that after 30 years of having control of the education boards, members have copped on that there is a problem with the controlled sector.

Mr B McCrea: You do not accept that the controlled sector exists.

Mr O'Dowd: The controlled sector —

Mr B McCrea: You think that there is no problem —

The Chairperson: May I have some control of the meeting, please? The Clerk will bring forward a paper as agreed.

There is another important issue for us to deal with. The Committee has a work programme, and next week we will go through the Committee report. I referred to the issue previously, but now we have to make a decision one way or the other on the time of the Education Committee meeting. I had asked whether it was possible for us to move our meetings from the morning to the afternoon. I appreciate that that is a problem for Alastair, because he is a member of the Committee on Standards and Privileges, which meets on a Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs M Bradley: I have a problem, but I am working on it.

The Chairperson: Can we have a consensus on this? It is very difficult to facilitate everybody, but the reason for changing the time of our meetings is that one of our members is the Deputy Chairperson of another Committee that meets at the same time. I am not doing it because that member happens to be in my party; if any other member had come to me with the same problem, we would have brought the matter to you. I want to make that clear. Can we leave it that the Committee is happy to move to afternoon meetings as an interim arrangement to see how it works? Then, if we find that the arrangement is problematic, we can revisit it.

Mr O'Dowd: What time are we agreeing to move to?

The Chairperson: 2.00 pm on a Wednesday afternoon.

Mr D Bradley: Anything is better than Friday morning.

The Chairperson: Yes; we do not want to move back to Friday mornings. You know the difficulties that we had with that.

So, the Committee will meet on Wednesday afternoons from 7 October 2009. Clerk, can you explain the reason for that date?

The Committee Clerk: We have a long report to clear next week and the deliberations could take longer than the morning meeting. Therefore, I suggest that we meet at 10.00 am next week as usual in Room 144, with the option of going on into the afternoon should we need to. Thereafter, from 7 October, we will move to 2.00 pm on Wednesday afternoons for an interim period.

The Chairperson: Members must bring all their folders next week. Thank you very much for your indulgence, which is very much appreciated.

The Chairperson (Ms S Ramsey): We move on to clause-by-clause analysis of the Employment Bill. Without any preamble, I hand over to the witnesses.

Ms Valerie Reilly (Department for Employment and Learning): Good afternoon, and thank you for inviting us today. What would the Committee like us to do? Shall we go through the provisions of the Bill or concentrate only on the amendments?

The Committee Clerk: Perhaps you would go through the clauses and overlay the amendments, making clear exactly where those are. Members should bear in mind that the Committee is in a position to give its final approval only to the clauses. As the amendments have not yet been laid with the Executive, they may not be in their final form. Today's objective is simply to see where the amendments fit. However, when members are asked to give their final approval using the formal wording, it will be for the clauses. Therefore, please give the Committee the full context of the amendments.

Ms Reilly: You asked us to "overlay" the amendments, but we have not attempted to insert the amendments into the Bill.

The Committee Clerk: That makes it easier.

Ms Reilly: OK; that is fine. Committee members should have received copies of the Bill as introduced in the Assembly. The explanatory memorandum is helpful when considering the clauses.

Clause 1 relates to employment agencies and the mode of trial. It provides for offences by employment agencies to be tried either in a Magistrates' Court, as at present, or in the Crown Court. The latter allows for unlimited fines, whereas, at present, the maximum fine that can be imposed by a Magistrates' Court is £5,000. The Department considers that that represents an insufficient deterrent to agencies that may make a great deal of money by exploiting agency workers. The proposal, therefore, is that offences could also be tried in the Crown Court to facilitate unlimited fines.

Clause 2 gives the Department the powers to compel third parties, namely banks and building societies, to provide it with financial information. That is necessary to enable the Department to carry out meaningful inspections of employment agencies, particularly when financial irregularities are suspected. The power would be used only in exceptional circumstances and would have to be approved at director level, at least, which is grade 5 in the Department.

Clause 3 amends the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 to replace the arrangements for appointments to the Industrial Court, which are currently contained in primary legislation, with the equivalent subordinate legislation. The Department considers the current provisions to be too restrictive and that subordinate legislation would facilitate future changes to appointments to the Industrial Court and make the process more efficient and capable of being carried out in a timely manner. The Committee will have an opportunity to see the subordinate legislation before it is passed.

Clause 4 allows for legal representation before the Industrial Court. Legal representation is currently permitted only in relation to the court's main role, which is the statutory recognition of unions in the workplace. However, when new jurisdictions connected to European directives on employee consultation and information rights were added to the court, the Department should have disapplied certain provisions of the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 to permit legal representation for those new jurisdictions. However, the Department did not do so and proposes to amend the legislation to allow for legal representation by either party before the Industrial Court, should they so wish.

The Department also took legal advice on that, which showed was that the Department could be challenged under article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, which is the right to a fair trial.

Clause 5 amends the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 and the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to allow for the sharing of information between employment agency inspectors and HM Revenue and Customs (HMRC) inspectors who are responsible for the national minimum wage. Currently, our legislation does not allow for that sharing, and if departmental inspectors find agencies that are not paying the national minimum wage, that information cannot be passed on. Clause 5 will, therefore, amend the current legislation and allow the Department to share information with HMRC.

Clauses 6, 7 and 8 deal with minor and consequential amendments and repeals as a result of the Bill. Clause 7 deals with the commencement of the various provisions, and clause 8 cites the short title of the Bill.

The first part of schedule 1 amends the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 to provide for consultation with the Labour Relations Agency (LRA) and appointments to the certification office. The effect is that the Department will consult the LRA on the arrangements for appointments to the certification office, but not on the actual individual who is to be appointed, as that will be the responsibility of the Minister. That was agreed between the LRA and the Department. Schedule 1 also provides for minor and consequential amendments.

Schedule 2 provides for appeals that result from the Bill, and it also repeals provisions contained in the Employment Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 2004 that relate to the right of trade unions to expel members. Those provisions were never commenced, which is why they are being repealed.

Again, the Committee should have received copies of proposed departmental amendments. Amendment No 1 will insert a new clause 6 into the Bill to empower tribunals to order employers to pay compensation, for example, for bank or interest charges, where a tribunal has found that the employee has suffered an unlawful deduction from his or her wages or the non-payment of a statutory redundancy award.

Currently, a tribunal can only order an employer to pay the amount that arises directly from the employer's liability, but the new clause will allow tribunals to compel the employer to pay other costs, such as interest charges, suffered by the employee as a result of unlawful deductions. In the past, the claimant had to bring such actions through the civil courts, which is expensive for both the employer and the employee. The new clause will permit tribunals to make such awards.

Amendment No 2 will amend the Employment and Training (Northern Ireland) Act 1950 and the Employment and Training (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1988. The Department recently made

The Steps to Work (Miscellaneous Provisions) Order (Northern Ireland) 2009 to ensure that payments made to Steps to Work participants were not treated as income for National Insurance contributions or for benefits purposes. However, the primary legislation, the 1950 Act, and the 1988 Order only cover payments that are made by the Department.

Training providers also make payments to trainees in relation to travel, for instance. At the minute, the risk is that such payments made by training providers could be subject to National Insurance contributions and could affect trainees' benefits. We propose to amend the 1950 Act and the 1988 Order to read "payments by any person" and thereby ensure that such payments are protected.

Miss Lynne Taylor (Department for Employment and Learning): I will speak to two amendments that will create new provisions in schedule 1. If the Committee is content, I will speak to both amendments together because they make similar changes, but to two separate bodies, namely the Labour Relations Agency and the Construction Industry Training Board (CITB).

By way of background, appointments to the boards of the LRA and the CITB are ministerial appointments that are regulated by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments (OCPA). Under the legislation, the Department is required to consult with organisations that are representative of employers and employees when appointing board members. In practice, the Department observes that requirement by writing to such bodies at the outset of a competition to ask them to encourage their members to apply. It is made clear that those individuals who are encouraged to apply will be treated in the same way as other applicants.

However, it has come to our attention that consultation could potentially be interpreted differently. Legal advice suggests that it could be interpreted in a way that involves consultation with specific individuals, which is similar to the provisions that relate to certification officers, which Valerie has already explained. The Department considers that to be inconsistent with the ministerial code and the OCPA code of practice, which require appointments to be made on merit. As a result, we recommend that the legislation be amended. The Department recognises that the LRA and the CITB benefit from employer and employee representation. For that reason, rather than remove the consultation rights, we propose to clarify that those organisations will be consulted on arrangements such as the criteria to appoint board members. As we said, the Employment Bill contains a similar provision.

Ms Reilly: Those are all the amendments.

The Chairperson: That was painless.

Ms Reilly: Who for?

The Chairperson: This question could be way out there, but work with me. Amendment No 1 proposes changes to the process for claiming compensation. Last year, several companies closed and there were issues about redundancy packages. I will not name those companies, but you are aware of who they are. Annex A of the Department's letter explains the compensation for financial losses and says that new provision will be included to allow an employment tribunal to make an additional award. However, above that, it says that a tribunal will order the employee to pay or repay the amount arising from the employer's direct liability for breaches. It also discusses the issue of unlawful deductions of wages and the non-payment of statutory redundancy awards.

How does that fit in cases where auditors have assessed several companies, and staff have been last in the pecking order to receive assets, because bills have been paid first? Given that, will the amendment help staff in any way?

Ms Reilly: No. The Employment Bill is a mixed bag; it is not entirely initiated by employment relations branch. However, it provides an opportunity to rectify some issues. My understanding is that it does not apply to employers who have gone into administration or liquidation, which is the group that you are talking about. It only applies to employers who are making people redundant and are capable of making the redundancy payment but fail to do so. It is not about insolvency.

The Chairperson: That is fair enough. However, you need to consider that as well, because it is an ongoing issue. The other thing is —

Ms Reilly: The Trades Union Congress (TUC) raised that issue recently.

The Chairperson: One of the unions raised that issue with me. I do not want to get into a discussion about that. However, if we are considering loopholes, we need to consider other issues that Members are, rightly, raising in the Assembly. Some employers made staff redundant, tweaked the job description a bit and employed other people. That created allegations in communities that foreign nationals were being employed. Legally, those companies were doing nothing wrong, but their actions were morally questionable and created a lot of issues. Perhaps you will come back to us, having found out whether there is scope to include some of that in the Employment Bill.

Ms Reilly: We will look at the issue that was raised by the TUC and ascertain whether there is a proposal to do anything about it.

Mrs McGill: The CITB is mentioned in annex 2 of the Department's letter. How will your proposals work out in relation to the CITB?

Miss Taylor: Are you referring to consultation rights on CITB appointments?

Mrs McGill: No; perhaps you were not here for the briefing session on the review of the CITB.

The Chairperson: We were given a presentation on the options, but these witnesses were not here for that session.

Mrs McGill: We have a report on the future of the CITB, which deals with new branding and rationalisation. Indeed, Ms Lo asked about a new name and so on. How relevant is all that to the Bill?

Ms Reilly: We are not proposing anything that is relevant to all that. There may be a need for new legislation on the CITB, and we met our CITB colleagues yesterday to discuss that. However, that is not relevant to the Bill. We are concerned with appointments to the CITB and how people should be consulted in relation to those appointments.

Mrs McGill: The CITB will not be there; did you not know that?

Ms Reilly: We are aware of the review, but I thought that there was still to be a board.

Miss Taylor: The amendment is being introduced in consultation with the officials who are responsible for CITB. It is a case of being consistent for the time being. If legislation has to change in due course, new legislation will take account of changes to CITB.

The Chairperson: That is actually an amendment, but you are absolutely right, Claire. Given the presentation that we heard earlier, which lasted more than an hour, the officials may need to go back and check that. Nuala Kerr, director of the skills and industry division in DEL, mentioned the issue of legislation. Given that we heard a presentation that says there is a possibility of moving on CITB, we can put the amendment to one side for today and wait for further information. Are you happy with that arrangement, Claire?

Mrs McGill: Yes; perhaps I have shown ignorance of what is happening.

The Chairperson: No; it is a relevant point. We have been asked to deal with legislation that impacts the CITB and now other legislation has appeared.

The Committee Clerk: If members are content, the Committee will formally approve the clauses today. The issues that have been flagged up relate to the amendments and not to the Bill, and officials will come back to us on those. Am I correct that the amendments have not yet gone to the Executive?

Ms Reilly: The amendments have not yet gone to the Executive. We are waiting the Committee's report on the Bill, and anything that members have to say about the amendments, before we go to the Executive.

The Committee Clerk: That is fair enough, and members have now made those comments. Putting the amendments to one side, members can now flag up any further questions or issues on the clauses as they stand.

Clauses 1 to 8 agreed to.

Schedules 1 and 2 agreed to.

The Chairperson: Today's meeting is being reported by Hansard, and we will return to the amendments at a later date. I am keen for you to return with the information that we have requested, because if there are things that we want to put to the Executive, we want to do that as quickly as possible.

Ms Reilly: I will also check on the matter that was raised about the CITB before returning to the Committee.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR EDUCATION

30 September 2009

EDUCATION BILL (NIA 3/08)

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Mervyn Storey (Chairperson)
Mr Dominic Bradley (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Trevor Lunn
Mr John McCallister
Mr Basil McCrea
Miss Michelle McIlveen
Mr John O'Dowd
Mrs Michelle O'Neill
Mr Alistair Ross

The Chairperson (Mr Storey): I welcome Patricia Casey from the Bill Office and Damien Martin, the Clerk Assistant, who have assisted the Committee with its work on the Bill, as they will do today. I also welcome officials from the Department, who, I am sure, relish coming up the hill on Wednesday mornings.

Version 4 is the updated version of the draft report. I hope that all members have a copy. You may discard version 3 by giving it to staff, who will dispose of it in an environmentally friendly way. Version 4 of the draft report commences with the title page of the Committee report. The yellow flags at the right-hand side indicate the different sections of the report, which was circulated as a separate item in the Committee folder. Decisions taken at last week's clause-by-clause consideration have been fully reflected in version 4. Changes to the previous version have been tracked in blue.

Having agreed the Committee's decision on almost all clauses and schedules at last week's meeting, there are only a few issues from that meeting to revisit before we start the process of formally approving the draft report itself.

Before we start, I ask members to turn to tab 5 of their packs, where they will find the Clerk's note on the final session on the Bill. Immediately behind it at point 1 is the Clerk's note on the indicative timing of the Consideration Stage debate on the Education

Bill. Members should note that the earliest date that the Minister can choose for that debate is the week commencing Monday 12 October 2009. I refer members to the attached guide, particularly to the paragraph on the deadline for tabling amendments, which is 9.30 am on Thursday 8 October. The earliest date that the Minister can come to the Assembly for Consideration Stage is 12 October.

The Committee Clerk: An informal indication has been made that Consideration Stage may be scheduled for Tuesday 13 October 2009.

The Chairperson: Members should note that the Hallowe'en recess will affect the timing of Further Consideration Stage.

The Committee Clerk: I admit to an error in that regard. The date of 26 October did not take into account the Hallowe'en recess. Therefore, some of the dates that are shown for Further Consideration Stage and Final Stage are slightly incorrect. We can amend that (Inaudible due to mobile phone interference).

Mr B McCrea: When is the deadline for tabling amendments?

The Chairperson: Thursday 8 October, which is the Thursday before Consideration Stage — that is, if Consideration Stage is on the Order Paper for 13 October.

Mr B McCrea: Therefore if Consideration Stage is scheduled for 13 October, amendments must be tabled by Thursday 8 October. By what time must they be tabled?

The Committee Clerk: Nine-thirty in the morning.

The Chairperson: We will proceed to outstanding issues. I beg your indulgence for a moment. I refer members to version 4 of the draft report. Paragraphs 46 to 49 on pages 20 to 22 of the draft report summarise last week's deliberations. At the bottom of page 21, members should note that the reference to "paragraph (2)(2)(6)" of schedule 1 will be changed to "paragraph (2)(2)(b)"; that was a typo. Members should also note that the reference to schedule 11 will be corrected to schedule 1.

Someone's mobile phone is on, and it is not mine.

Mr D Bradley: It is mine; sorry.

The Chairperson: I refer members to the draft amendments at the top of page 22. Having had the benefit of advice this morning on the issues that were raised at last week's meeting, does the Deputy Chairperson have any comments that he wishes the Committee to consider in light of that legal opinion?

Mr D Bradley: I listened carefully to the legal adviser, and I accept the points that he made.

The Chairperson: The Question that the Committee recommend to the Assembly that schedule 1 be amended by the insertion of a new head as set out at the top of page 22 of the draft report. The amendment is as follows: In page 31, paragraph 2, line 23, at end insert: “and: (c) that the members, as a group, are representative of the community in Northern Ireland.”

The Committee Clerk: It would be better if you put the question to the Committee so that members can indicate whether they support the amendment.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 31, paragraph 2, line 23, at end insert

“and:

(c) that the members, as a group, are representative of the community in Northern Ireland.”

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 6; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mr Lunn, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

NOES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the schedule 1, subject to the Committee's proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: We come to the second proposed amendment to schedule 1. The Question is that the Committee recommend to the Assembly that schedule 1 be amended by the insertion of a new paragraph, which is set out at the top of page 22 of the Committee draft report. I beg to move

Mr B McCrea: Where are we?

Mr O'Dowd: We will never get out of here by twelve o'clock.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee is considering the second proposed amendment to insert a new paragraph at the end of paragraph 22 of schedule 1 on page 36 that defines “representative of the community of Northern Ireland”.

Mr B McCrea: Who proposed that amendment? Did we bring it forward?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee drafted it.

The Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the schedule be amended as follows: In page 36, paragraph 22, at end insert

“Representative of the community in Northern Ireland”

23.— (1) In this Schedule, and without prejudice to the generality of the words, a membership ‘representative of the community in Northern Ireland’ shall in particular include—persons with experience of the controlled, maintained, grant-maintained integrated, Irish-medium and voluntary grammar school sectors; and, persons from the local government districts, where ‘local government district’ has the same meaning as in the Local Government (Boundaries) Act (Northern Ireland) 2008.”

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 2; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mr Lunn.

NOES

Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill.

The Chairperson: Basil McCrea, Michelle McIlveen, Alastair Ross and Mervyn Storey have abstained.

Question accordingly negated.

The Chairperson: The next issue from last week is a proposed amendment to clause 32. Will members turn to paragraph 266 of the draft report, which is on page 104? Members will see at the bottom of the page —

Mr B McCrea: Where are we?

The Chairperson: Clause 32, page 104. You will see at the bottom of that page the proposed amendment to clause 32. At last week's meeting, that amendment was agreed in principle, with the precise wording to be drafted by the Clerk. The amendment would allow the education and skills authority to impose a scheme of management where a submitting authority submits a scheme of management that does not comply with the regulations and schemes of management under clause 30. Members will recall that at last week's meeting the Committee agreed to recommend to the Assembly that clause 30 be amended to include a requirement for regulations to be made as to the form and content of schemes of management. That is contained in paragraph 264 of the draft report.

The proposed amendment to clause 32 flows from the requirement on the Department to make regulations. It is a consequential amendment, and it follows that submitting authorities should submit schemes that comply with regulations that the Assembly has approved. The Question is that the Committee recommend to the Assembly that clause 32 be amended as set out in paragraph 266 of the draft report. That amendment states:

“leave out from ‘subsection’ to ‘cannot’ in line 2 on page 18 and insert ‘section 31(1)(b) does not comply with regulations under section 30(6) or does not accord with any guidance issued by ESA under section 31(3) and cannot (in either case)’.”

The Committee Clerk: It is a question of whether the Committee is in favour of the amendment. It is a consequential amendment to an amendment that was agreed by the Committee.

Mr D Bradley: Does this amendment come from the Committee?

Mr B McCrea: Is the effect of that amendment that a scheme complies with the regulations, or, is it that the regulations will have to go through the Assembly by affirmative resolution?

The Chairperson: Yes.

I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that the clause be amended as follows: In page 17, line 42, leave out from “subsection” to “cannot” in line 2 on page 18 and insert

“section 31(1)(b) does not comply with regulations under section 30(6) or does not accord with any guidance issued by ESA under section 31(3) and cannot (in either case).”

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 6; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr D Bradley, Mr Lunn, Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

NOES

Mr O’Dowd, Mrs O’Neill.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause 30, subject to the Committee’s proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Mr Lunn: Are these votes still recorded?

The Chairperson: Yes.

The Committee Clerk: The decisions made in the last few minutes on Committee amendments will be reflected in the Committee’s report. As the Committee goes through the report to agree it, we will strike that out as appropriate and amend the report for final approval. It is already in the report as either/or.

An item has been tabled for members’ consideration in relation to amendments received this morning from the Department. It is for the Committee to decide whether or not it wishes to consider that.

Mr B McCrea: Where are we now?

The Chairperson: You should have in front of you an e-mail from Eve Stewart. It states:

“We have just finalised 2 additional amendments and I am forwarding them on for the Committee for information. They relate to the increase in ESA numbers and ensuring governors commitment in Irish speaking schools.”

That e-mail includes the wording of the amendments:

“Clause 30, page 17, line 3 at end insert —

‘() The scheme of management for an Irish speaking school shall require the Board of Governors to use its best endeavours to ensure that the management, control and ethos of the school are such as are likely to ensure the continuing viability of the school as an Irish speaking school.

() The scheme of management for a grant-aided school for which a part is Irish speaking shall require the Board of Governors to use its best endeavours to ensure that the management, control and ethos of the schools are such as are likely to ensure the continuing viability of the Irish speaking part of the school.’”

Mr B McCrea: Is it necessary to deal with that today? Given that it has just been tabled, I would prefer to deal with it next week after I have had a chance to look at it.

The Committee Clerk: It will not be reflected in the Committee’s report. If it is the will of the Committee just to note that the amendment was received, I can attach that to the report.

Mr B McCrea: I am happy for it to be noted, but I cannot decide on it without having had time to consider it.

The Chairperson: This highlights the difficulty that the Committee has had repeatedly in not having matters brought to it in a timely way. On the day that we are signing off the report, the Department brings us another amendment. Therefore, it should be just noted.

The Committee Clerk: The amendment to increase the membership of the ESA was dealt with last week. The Minister’s proposal was for an increase from 11 to no more than 14 members. The Committee raised that issue at last week’s meeting. Therefore, it has, in effect, been dealt with and recorded in the report. Therefore it is the second amendment to clause 30 that the Committee is saying that there is no time to consider, so it will not be reflected in the Committee’s report other than it was received this morning and noted.

Mr Lunn: The Committee has always had the problem of matters coming to it very late in the day. I can sort of sympathise with Basil’s saying that he needs a week to consider it. For once, however, the amendment is in plain language, the Queen’s English, and I can understand it.

The Chairperson: It concerns Irish, but it is in the Queen’s English. [Laughter.] There is an irony in that, but we will not go there.

Mr Lunn: I used that term deliberately.

The Chairperson: Thanks, Trevor.

Mr Lunn: The point is, however, that the amendment is simple: it just requires a board of governors to use its best endeavours; it is not prescriptive. Sometimes, perhaps, the Committee could just look at something and take a decision on it.

Mr D Bradley: The amendment applies to Irish-medium schools and boards of governors; it does not affect schools in any other sector. It is purely to protect the ethos of Irish-medium schools. There is no threat to any other sector. Therefore, the amendment is not contentious. I would be happy to approve it today.

The Chairperson: One difficulty that arises, particularly from the second paragraph, is the phrase:

“shall require the Board of Governors to use its best endeavours to ensure that the management, control and ethos of the school are such as is likely to ensure the continuing viability of the school as an Irish speaking school”.

That places a pretty strong requirement on a board of governors. It may be the mind of the Committee to seek legal opinion about such a strong requirement being placed on a board of governors with the words “its best endeavours”. We have not seen that in the legislation for other sectors. Therefore, we have a proposal from Basil that the Committee note the amendment.

Mr B McCrea: Yes.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee in favour of noting that the amendment was brought to the Committee at this stage?

Question put.

The Committee divided: Ayes 6; Noes 2.

AYES

Mr B McCrea, Miss McIlveen, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill, Mr Ross, Mr Storey.

NOES

Mr D Bradley, Mr Lunn.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Committee take note of the proposed departmental amendments to clause 30.

Mr O'Dowd: I want to clarify our position: Sinn Féin supports the amendments; however, it is fair for a party to request another week to judge. We endorse the amendments as proposed.

The Chairperson: I appreciate that.

Are members content to seek legal advice and consider the matter at next week's meeting?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Do members have any questions?

Mr D Bradley: Given that both amendments have been discussed at today's meeting, will they be included in the report?

The Committee Clerk: Yes; the discussion will be included in the Hansard report, and the draft report will outline that the Committee noted the amendments.

The Chairperson: I want to raise the issue that we mentioned at the conclusion of last week's meeting. I draw members' attention to paragraph 148, on pages 59 and 60 of the report, which arose from a proposal to include a recommendation on the controlled sector. I agreed to circulate a wording to members for consideration at last week's meeting. The comments on the sectoral body for the controlled sector appear in paragraphs 53 to 73. The paragraphs endeavour to reflect some members' concerns about the controlled sector.

Are members content to include a paragraph in the report, as set out in paragraph 148 of the draft report, including a recommendation that the Committee request that the Minister take urgent action to address those issues and find the resources to make immediate progress to resolve them?

Mr O'Dowd: As I said last week, we have concerns about including what is, essentially, a political statement rather than a reflection of the scrutiny of the Bill. Earlier in the report, there are comments from members that reflect those concerns as comments made in the Committee; I have no difficulty with their inclusion in the Bill. However, I have a difficulty with the inclusion of a recommendation on one sector or subject. The issues behind the recommendation can, and will, be debated at length in the Committee; indeed, they should have debated and resolved long before the Assembly was established. Having read the recommendation, I am unsure whether it is an alibi for the controlled sector or an apology to it for having done nothing in the past. I cannot support the inclusion of such a recommendation in the report.

The Chairperson: It is neither an apology nor an alibi. It is a defence of a sector that has played second fiddle to other sectors that have only been interested in their own institutions and that have paid lip-service to equality, inclusion and the recognition of the existence of other sectors.

We have seen enough, over the past months, of sectors that are interested only in self-preservation. The controlled sector, under the umbrella of the education and library boards, played, and does play, its full role in promoting equality; it excludes none and puts no barriers in front of any children coming through the doors of its schools, unlike other sectors that have prerequisites and pre-requirements whereby people have to sign up to certain ideologies.

Mr O'Dowd: Are you talking about the grammar school sector?

The Chairperson: Sorry?

Mr O'Dowd: Are you talking about the grammar school sector?

The Chairperson: No, not the grammar school sector; the Catholic certificate is a prime example. That is a major concern. I for one will not allow any sector to be left isolated in the way that the controlled sector has been on many issues. The proposal is a way of ensuring that those concerns are addressed.

Are there any other comments?

Mr O'Dowd: One of the purposes of the education and skills authority and of the Bill that we have been scrutinising is to ensure that no sector is left behind. There are sectors that need support; I am not arguing against raising some sectors to the level of others. My concern is that we are including a statement and a recommendation in a Committee report that is mainly a party-political stance. Having listened to your good self, Chairperson, I am now convinced that it is a mixture of an alibi and an apology to the controlled sector rather than a serious attempt to move forward the issues that have to be resolved in relation to that sector.

Mr B McCrea: May I ask the Committee Clerk whether the statement and the recommendation are competent? John asked whether such recommendations should be in a Bill.

The Committee Clerk: One can include recommendations in a Bill report. This statement does not relate to an amendment, which would go before the House. Its competence, in that sense, is not to be tested; however, a Committee can make recommendations in a Bill report if the information has been presented and the Committee has considered it.

Mr B McCrea: Thank you; that is very helpful. I share your concern, Chairperson, that the controlled sector was not able to have an influence on the progress of the Bill. Without making a political point, it is important that we are inclusive on all the issues and that there should be a level playing field for all. For that reason I am happy to support it.

The Chairperson: This highlights the suspicions and concerns that some people have. On the day that we are concluding the report on the first Bill, having been promised that we would have sight of the second Bill, when do we get the second Bill? Today. After being told that it was not prepared and that we were going to see it in tranches or in bits and pieces, all of a sudden the Bill appears.

I have never been known to be a sceptic or to be suspicious, but I do not see too many people coming up to the mark about what was going on in relation to a particular sector. If the maintained sector had been treated in such a way, the people with red hats would have been knocking down the door to talk to the Committee. I am very concerned that we get sight of the second Bill just today. Nobody, in the time available to us, will be able to go through the second Bill, unless we read through it for the next half an hour. That is why, in the report, we will reflect whether the Committee agrees. That is not a party-political point; it is a genuine concern on behalf of a sector that owns £2.3 billion of the education estate and educates 98% of the Protestant children in Northern Ireland.

Mr O'Dowd: My understanding is that the second Bill will come under the scrutiny of the Committee, the Executive and the Assembly. If you were getting excited about being presented with a fait accompli that said how things were going to be, I would be jumping up and down with you. However, the fact of the matter is that, as was the case with the first Bill, there is a lengthy process to go through. If there are genuine concerns about the second Bill, they will have to be dealt with, as was the case with the first Bill, and, we hope, we will reach a conclusion in due course.

The strength behind any sector comes first from the people within that sector, but more importantly, it is given by the political leadership in society. The maintained sector got its act together in the early 1980s. It moved forward and kicked in a few doors to make its voice heard. Even when the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) was formed, it continued to fight the system for several years to make sure that its voice was heard.

Even at this stage of setting up the controlled sector support body, there is a responsibility on all of us and the Department to support it. There will be a fight, and the people best placed to lead that fight will be the new controlled sector support body. That body should be regular visitors to this Committee and to all our offices. Those are the people who will turn the controlled sector around, with our support.

Mr D Bradley: I do not think that this is an accurate reflection of what happened last week. Chairperson, at the end of last week's meeting, you made a statement that I asked you to circulate to Committee members during the week so that we would have a chance to share and discuss it with our parties. That did not happen. The statement that is included in the draft final version of the report appeared without the previous statement being circulated as agreed at the meeting. I do not believe that it is a true reflection of what happened at last week's meeting, and, therefore, it should not be contained in the report.

The Chairperson: Are there any other comments?

Mr B McCrea: I have already made my position clear. There may be differences of interpretation about what went on at last week's meeting — and I take Dominic's point — but it remains a fundamental issue that there is an omission of input from the controlled sector, which does have an influence. I have expressed to officials that there must be some form of representative body so that we can have a level playing field.

As Mr O'Dowd said earlier, other sectors got their act together. He said that they "kicked in a few doors" at a time. It is right and proper that they put their views across. The fact is that other sectors did not do so, and we must find some form of balance.

I know that the Chairperson can defend himself, but I add my support to the fact that, when we started this marathon journey, we were promised that we would be able to look at the two Bills together and that there would be cohesion and an holistic approach. I think that that intention is included in the draft report, and it has not been possible to deliver on it. We have repeatedly said that that is important.

At one stage, we wanted the two Bills to be combined in one single Bill. We were told that that was not possible, for various reasons, but that we should not worry, because there would be an overlap so that we could treat them as one for the purposes of workflow. That has not happened, which rightly raises some concerns, and the Chairperson is right to highlight them.

Mr Lunn: Not in my most generous moment could I think that it is a coincidence that the second Bill is produced on the very day that we are supposed to be signing off on the first Bill. I think that it is a disgrace. We were originally promised that there would be an overlap in the two Bills; it was as simple as that.

If I remember rightly, we were supposed to see the second Bill before recess to give us time to examine the effect of one on the other and to compare them. It is that basic: it was promised. Once again, it is par for the course; we are being shoved into a corner and are having to take action on the first Bill without having had the opportunity to read the second. I do not know what we can do about that, but it keeps happening. Indeed, I put on the record that this is the most serious episode of that nature yet.

Chairperson, we were asked to consider a statement that you read out last week. I indicated that I was not too happy about making a judgment without having seen that statement in writing. Surely, as Dominic said, it would have been fairly simple to circulate it. However, I am reasonably content that the proposal in the draft report accurately reflects the statement that you read out. Therefore, I am not going to make too much of that issue. It would have been helpful to have been given a written copy of your exact words, but the fact that we were not does not preclude me from making a judgement on what is before us. For the record, I support the proposal.

The Chairperson: I apologise for the fact that the statement was not sent out to members individually. The statement is in the Hansard report, but Dominic is right that we said that each member would receive a copy. It does not change the context, and I appreciate Trevor's comments.

This is not a party political broadcast; it is a serious situation concerning a major education sector in Northern Ireland. That sector is not a minority, as the Minister describes some other sectors. I am deeply disappointed at the shabby way in which the Department has treated the sector, particularly by producing the second Bill today. Our acceptance of the first Bill depends entirely on what is contained in the second Bill. The Minister and the departmental officials, who are here today, need to listen carefully to the message coming from the Committee. If the serious issues are not addressed, there could be the same sort of train wreck that some people mentioned months ago in regard to other issues. The Committee has now made its comments.

Are members content to include paragraph 148, as it appears in the draft report and including the recommendation, in the Committee's report?

Members indicated dissent.

The Chairperson: Basil McCrea, Trevor Lunn, Alastair Ross, Michelle McIlveen and I are in favour. John O'Dowd, Michelle O'Neill and Dominic Bradley are against.

Now that those bits and pieces have been tidied up, I propose that we move to the draft report. We are not doing too badly, and I appreciate your help. I remind members that we have made our decisions on the clauses and schedules. Rather than revisit those decisions, we are here to satisfy ourselves that the draft report reflects the Committee's scrutiny and decisions. I propose that we work our way through the report by grouping its paragraphs in manageable bites and, where possible, by clause or groups of clauses, and give Members an opportunity to comment.

As our first group, I suggest that we take the title page, the page detailing membership and powers and the contents page. Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: As our second group, I ask Members for comments on the introduction to the report, comprising paragraphs 1 to 25.

Mr O'Dowd: Paragraph 5 states:

"The Chairperson outlined the Committee's key concerns, summarized as follows".

However, the Committee had made no decisions on the Bill at that stage. How, therefore, could the Chairperson have outlined the Committee's concerns? Part of that paragraph should, in my opinion, be rephrased:

The Committee Clerk: Remember that the Committee carried out a substantial pre-introduction scrutiny, and several papers and letters from the Committee to the Department that outlined quite a number of concerns were on record. That sentence reflects those concerns that were still being considered by the Committee and indeed at the debate on Second Stage. The sentence did not reflect the concerns that were in front of the Committee at the point of scrutiny at Committee Stage, because that had not yet commenced.

The Chairperson: Would it be better to rephrase that sentence: "The Chairperson outlined key concerns"? The concerns would not, therefore, be attributed to the Committee.

Mr O'Dowd: I would be happier with that.

The Chairperson: Are all members happy enough with that?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Do members have any further comments?

Mr O'Dowd: Sorry, Chairperson, but there is a similar instance in paragraph 10 on page 6:

"Members will note that despite these policy changes to the Bill, the Committee continued to have a number of concerns with the Bill, as reflected".

Perhaps that could be changed to "there remained a number of concerns" or perhaps "Committee members continued to have concerns".

The Chairperson: Would you like the word "members" to be inserted?

Mr O'Dowd: Yes, please.

The Chairperson: Are members happy enough? Does everyone know what we have decided? Paragraph 10 on page 6 would read, "Committee members will note".

The Committee Clerk: No; the insertion of the word "members" comes after the second "Committee" in that paragraph.

The Chairperson: OK. John, are you satisfied with that?

Mr O'Dowd: Will you read it, please?

The Committee Clerk: "Members [of the Assembly] will note that despite these policy changes to the Bill, Committee members —

Mr O'Dowd: It should read "some Committee members" or "a number of Committee members".

The Chairperson: "Some" is preferable. Are members happy with that?

Mr O'Dowd: OK.

Mr B McCrea: The "some" is sometimes greater than the whole.

The Chairperson: I am still struggling with the mathematical exposition that we received in the House the other day. Do members have any other comments? We are still considering paragraphs 1 to 25, so perhaps you would have a glance over those. If any members want to dissent, I want to ensure that that is recorded accurately. I do not want any member to feel trapped by the Committee.

Are members content with paragraphs 1 to 25, as amended?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We move on to paragraphs 26 to 28, which relate to clause 1. We are now on page 12. Are members content? Any member who is not content, please indicate accordingly.

Mr O'Dowd: Give me one second, please, Chairperson. Again, it is a matter of emphasis; paragraph 37 on page 16 —

The Chairperson: We are dealing with paragraphs 26 to 28. We will come to that in a minute or two. I would like to be at paragraph 36, but that is just a wish on my part.

Mr O'Dowd: I am away ahead of myself.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 26 to 28?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We now move to paragraphs 29 to 35, which also relate to schedule 1. These paragraphs deal with the number of ESA members. Members are reminded that the blue text represents what is being inserted as a result of the decisions taken last week.

Are members content with paragraphs 29 to 35?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: OK. We now move to paragraphs 36 to 49, which relate to schedule 1 and the ESA membership being representative of the community in Northern Ireland. John had an issue with paragraph 37.

Mr O'Dowd: Paragraph 37 states:

"The Committee, having had sight of the Office of the Commissioner's of Public Appointment's (OCPA) Code of Practice, remained concerned".

In my opinion, that should read, "Some of the Committee members, having had sight" or "A number of the Committee members, having had sight". The Committee did not take a formal position on that.

The Chairperson: It is accurate to say, as the report does:

“The Committee, having had sight of the Office of the Commissioner’s of Public Appointment’s (OCPA) Code of Practice, remained concerned”.

Do you want to reflect that some members remain concerned?

Mr O’Dowd: Yes.

The Chairperson: Should we include “Some Committee members”?

Mr O’Dowd: Yes, whatever way that fits into that sentence.

The Chairperson: We need to be clear about where we include it.

Mr O’Dowd: Clearly, it is accurate that the Committee had sight of the report.

The Chairperson: After the reference to the code of practice, we could include the phrase, “some Committee members remain concerned”.

Mr O’Dowd: Yes.

The Chairperson: OK. We are still looking at paragraphs 36 to 49.

The Committee Clerk: In paragraph 49, we will strike out the part of the amendment that members did not agree in earlier sessions. However, we will leave in the amendment that states:

“(c) that the members, as a group, are representative of the community in Northern Ireland”]

That was agreed by the majority of the Committee this morning.

The Chairperson: Are members clear about what we will do? We are on page 22. We did not agree the amendment to schedule 1, page 36, so that paragraph will not appear in the report. However, the amendment above that will be included. It states:

“(c) that the members, as a group, are representative of the community in Northern Ireland”]

Are members content?

Mr O’Dowd: I am sorry: what are we signing off on?

The Chairperson: We are on page 22. This morning, we did not agree to include —

Mr O’Dowd: Yes; sorry.

The Chairperson: The only amendment that will appear in the report is the top one, which states:

“(c) that the members, as a group, are representative of the community in Northern Ireland”]

OK?

Mr O’Dowd: Paragraph 41 states:

“The advice to the Committee dealt with a number of issues and concluded.”

There then follows a number of statements. At that stage of our deliberations, did we take positions on any of those matters?

The Chairperson: No, although the paper states “and concluded”.

Mr O’Dowd: Should it state “and observed”?

The Chairperson: We are talking about the advice to the Committee. Are you questioning the use of the word “concluded”?

Mr O’Dowd: Does it give a sense that those five bullet points were a conclusion or an agreement of the Committee?

The Chairperson: Is that advice to the Committee rather than its conclusion?

The Committee Clerk: It is a summary of the advice that the Committee received.

Mr O’Dowd: If that were the case, it should read, “The advice to the Committee was” instead of:

“The advice to the Committee dealt with a number of issues and concluded.”

The latter almost reads as though the Committee had reached the conclusion.

The Chairperson: Might “concluded” be changed to “included”?

Mr O’Dowd: Yes, otherwise the wording is open to interpretation.

Mr Ross: Have the passages printed in black not already been agreed in previous meetings? Are we just going over that again? I have been a member of the Committee for only a couple of weeks, but I remember going through those points.

The Chairperson: The Committee is trying to compile a factual summary of all of its work. We have gone through the clauses, but this document will contain the legal advice that we received and opinions that were expressed by members. Is that correct, Clerk?

Mr Ross: The passages in blue are the changes made since the last time we looked at the matter.

The Committee Clerk: All the rest of the text was in front of the Committee in versions 1, 2 and 3 of the draft report. It was drawn to the Committee’s attention that that would be included in the report, subject to the Committee’s final agreement. The whole sweep through is being done only now, but that text was brought to the Committee a number of weeks ago.

The Chairperson: However, it would not change the emphasis to replace “concluded” with “included”. Thus, the passage would read, “The advice to the Committee dealt with a number of issues and included”. The document then lists the factual position. Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 36 to 49, as amended?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Paragraphs 50 to 52 relate to Assembly disqualification. Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Paragraphs 53 to 73 —

Mr B McCrea: Before the Committee moves on, and it may not be appropriate to amend it at this stage, but we debated whether MLAs should be involved. I now agree with paragraph 51, which states: “There was general consensus that the demands on MLA’s time would necessarily limit their ability to serve on such bodies”

However, my position was that I was not happy with the oversight that MLAs were able to provide on the workings of the ESA. I was concerned, and it was repeatedly said that the ESA is here only to serve the policies of the Minister of the day.

The Clerk: The member is right; the Committee debated that, but it did not come to any conclusion, so no amendment to the schedule was discussed. The question is one of whether the words reflect any conclusion, but, from memory, there was no conclusion.

Mr B McCrea: There may not have been a conclusion, but, as John O’Dowd has pointed out, we have discussed and noted many things. I do not know whether this is the appropriate place to deal with the matter — I will take advice on that — but I remain extremely concerned about it. Central to all that we have been saying is the fact the MLAs are not in a position to provide the necessary oversight of the ESA.

The Chairperson: In fairness, that concern and your previous concerns are recorded in Hansard reports. Paragraph 51 does not state that the Committee has come to a conclusion on the matter. It simply states:

“There was general consensus that the demands on MLA’s time would necessarily limit their ability to serve on such bodies”

That relates to the issue of disqualification; whether they should be members of the ESA, rather than the power —

Mr B McCrea: I quite accept that, and the issue might be better addressed elsewhere. I am happy enough that the Hansard report records that fact. However, when we get to the end of the report, I would like the Clerk to point out where my concern is recorded in the Committee’s report, because I read out a statement at the start of the meeting that —

The Chairperson: That is recorded in last week’s Hansard report, and it will all be cross-referenced in the report. Correct me if I am wrong, but we are not proposing to give 108 Members all the documentation on what we have done — they would each have six lever-arch folders to take home.

The Committee Clerk: It will be in the form of a CD.

Mr B McCrea: Is there a video of us?

The Chairperson: I would not go that far.

The Committee Clerk: All those words will be available.

Mr B McCrea: I am content. It was only that we were being quite precise about some Committee member’s comments on other issues. Although it may be a minority position, I believe that MLAs ought to have some form of oversight over the ESA process — if it is not done in the ESA committee, because of time constraints or whatever, it must be done somewhere else. I want to record the fact that there is a democratic deficit in the proposal. However, I will not add to the Committee Clerk’s burden.

Mr O’Dowd: We are in danger of opening up a debate. The Education Committee is the oversight body.

Mr B McCrea: I rest my case.

The Chairperson: For John McCallister’s benefit, we are considering page 23 of the draft report.

Mr B McCrea: For the benefit of Alastair Ross, who has been through this process only once, and John McCallister, who came in late, we should go back to the beginning and go through everything again.

The Chairperson: Moving swiftly on —

Mr McCallister: Are you not going to ask for a seconder? [Laughter.]

The Chairperson: I will see you all in the cardiac unit. Are members content with paragraphs 50 to 52?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 53 to 73? They deal with a considerable amount, particularly with respect to the controlled sector.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Paragraphs 74 to 83 relate to schedule 1, particularly the number of ESA members. The Committee Clerk has indicated to me that at the end of paragraph 83 the amendment with respect to “representative of the community” has been repeated in error and will be removed. Paragraph 83 will state:

“The Committee agreed to recommend to the Assembly that Schedule be amended as set out above.”

Everything else, including the section that is highlighted in yellow, will be taken out. Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 84 to 90, which relate to youth services?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 91 to 99, which relate to the proposed duty to encourage and facilitate development of Irish-medium and integrated education? Once again, this is an accurate reflection of what we discussed last week.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 100 to 103, which relate to promoting the achievement of high standards of educational attainment?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 104 to 112, which relate to the single employing authority and submitting authority?

Mr O'Dowd: You say "the Committee decided". However, we usually use the phrase "the Committee agreed". That is the phrase we have been using thus far.

The Chairperson: That is fine. We agree to agree on agree.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 113 to 37, which relate to the change in employer status and employment regulations? I remind members that this is a reflection of what we agreed.

Mr B McCrea: That is a big leap; you sneaked that one in.

The Chairperson: I did. I am only following what is in front of me.

The Committee Clerk: The grouping is according to subject area, not to the length of the text.

Mr B McCrea: It is all right, John; it was an attempt at a little light relief.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 138 to 144, which relate to the development of employment schemes?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 145 to 148? I remind members that we decided those paragraphs earlier.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 149 to 159, which relate to salaries and modification of employment law?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 160 to 167, which relate to other functions of the ESA?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 168 to 173, which relate to library and education and youth services?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 174 to 181, which relate to the payment of capital grants and teachers' superannuation?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 182 to 191, which deal with the ESA's ancillary powers and commercial activities?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 192 to 195, which relate to the dissolution of the education and library boards; the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS); the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA); the Youth Council for Northern Ireland; and the Staff Commission for Education and Library Boards?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 196 to 201, which relate to the general duties of the Department and DEL?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 202 to 230, which relate to examinations, assessments, qualifications and curriculum?

Mr O'Dowd: Paragraph 205 on page 81 states:

"The Department's written response to SEELB did not appear to recognise that there was any potential conflict of interest".

I think that the Committee had agreed with the Department that there was not a conflict of interest. Perhaps it should read:

"did not appear to recognise that there may be a potential conflict of interest".

The Chairperson: Are Members happy with the wording "may be" rather than "was"?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are Members content with paragraphs 202 to 230, as amended?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 231 to 237, which relate to amendments requested by DEL?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 238 to 244, which relate to the powers of the General Teaching Council?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: There is no dissension, so we will move on. Are members content with paragraphs 245 to 268, which relate to schemes of management?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee agreed an amendment to clause 32 earlier; therefore, the square brackets are removed from paragraphs 266 and 267 to reflect the Committee's decision.

The Chairperson: Are Members content?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 269 to 291?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 292 to 304, which relate to inspections and grants for educational and youth services?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 305 to 308, which relate to the protection of children and young people?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 309 to 313, which relate to Catholic maintained schools?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Members, if I am moving too quickly, please say so. Are members content with paragraph 314?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 315 to 323?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 324 to 329?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 330 to 341?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 342 to 346?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 347 to 363?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 364 to 375?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 376 to 380?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We move now to the document containing final decisions on our clause-by-clause scrutiny. This section of the report sets out, in short form, the Committee's decisions on each of the clauses and schedules, referring, where appropriate, to the preceding consideration section. In members' copies of this section, the numbering begins with number 1, but, in the final printed version, the numbering will continue from the end of the numbering in the consideration section. I remind members that this section contains summaries of the Committee's decisions.

Are members content with the introduction?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 1 to 12?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 13 to 23?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 24 to 29?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 30 to 40?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 41 to 50?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 51 to 54?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Moving on to paragraphs 55 to 58 —

The Committee Clerk: The Committee must strike out the second amendment in paragraph 56 and insert the first amendment.

The Chairperson: Are members content with those changes and with the remainder of paragraphs 55 to 58?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraphs 59 to 63?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We now move to the executive summary, which we will go through paragraph by paragraph. Are members content with paragraph 1 of the executive summary?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: If I am moving too quickly for members, please let me know. Are members content with paragraph 2?

Mr O'Dowd: Line 5 of paragraph 2 reads:

"The Committee raised various fundamental concerns".

In my opinion that should read:

"Some Committee members raised various fundamental concerns".

Similarly, line 10 reads:

"However, the Committee continue to have a number of serious concerns"—

Mr B McCrea: I was happy earlier not to misrepresent people, but I feel that the insertion of "some members of the Committee" gives the impression that a minority of Committee members had expressed concern. That is despite the fact that a majority of Committee members had raised fundamental concerns.

Mr O'Dowd: I am happy for the term "majority" to be inserted. The Committee had not come to a decision at that stage; therefore the report cannot refer to the Committee as a whole.

Mr B McCrea: OK. I am happy with that.

The Chairperson: Returning to paragraph 2 —

Mr Lunn: Chairman, you said that those lines will read "the majority of Committee members".

However, no vote was taken; members merely expressed their opinions. How do we know that the majority of the Committee feels that way?

The Committee Clerk: It is up to Committee members to decide on the form of words. The Chairperson communicated on behalf of the Committee at that stage, which reflected to the Minister that there were fundamental concerns throughout the whole process. It is open to the Committee to decide.

Mr O'Dowd: What about "many Committee members"?

The Chairperson: Line 5 states:

"The Committee raised various fundamental concerns"

Mr Lunn: Could we just say "members"?

The Chairperson: Rather than "The Committee"?

Mr Lunn: Yes.

Mr O'Dowd: "Members raised" is fair enough; I would agree to that.

The Chairperson: Thank you. Will we do the same when we come to line 10? Will we use "members"? Are members content with paragraph 2, as amended?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We move to paragraph 3.

Mrs O'Neill: We need to correct the last line, which states:

"The Committee unfortunately did not receive a draft of the Second Education Bill before the end of the Committee Stage of the Bill."

That is factually incorrect.

The Chairperson: We could change it to read:

"The Committee unfortunately did not receive a draft" and we could insert today's date. That would be factual. Do you want to put in the time?

Mr B McCrea: I would like to add to that:

"making it impossible for the Committee to consider the second Bill in concert with the first Bill".

The Chairperson: Before we find ourselves with a whole raft of difficult phraseology, we will take it piece by piece. Perhaps members could agree to:

"The Committee unfortunately did not receive a draft of the second Bill until 30 September, making it impossible for the Committee to give any consideration in relation to the first Bill".

Mrs O'Neill: Perhaps we could say:

"The Committee did not receive a draft of the second education Bill until 30 September" and leave it at that.

The Chairperson: No; the agreement was — and we have heard comments from all members — that we would get sight of the second Bill to help us to have an understanding of the context.

Mr O'Dowd: Is that reflected in the Committee report? The summary is a summary of the Committee report. Where in the Committee report do we reflect on the second Bill?

The Chairperson: We reflect on it in the appendices and the documentation that came from the Department, where reference was made to promises that were given that we would get sight of the second Bill.

The Committee Clerk: It is a quotation from the Minister's statement, where she said that we would get sight of the second Bill before the summer recess. I cannot remember the words, but it is in the statement.

The Chairperson: Paragraph 62 states:

"The Committee had not received sight of any provisions of the second Bill at its meeting on [??] September 2009".

We need to insert a date.

Miss McIlveen: We skipped to the end of paragraph 3. If we read paragraph 3 in its entirety, it explains the context in which we are talking about the second education Bill. It states:

“At this time the Committee Chairperson emphasised the need for scrutiny preparatory work on the Second Education Bill and to examine the two Bills coherently and holistically.”

That is clear from reading the whole paragraph in context rather than skipping to the last line, as we have done.

The Chairperson: I will return to paragraph 3, which we want to read:

“The Committee unfortunately did not receive a draft of the second Education Bill until 30 September.”

What do we want to include, if anything, in reference to the second Bill?

Mr B McCrea: You are welcome to negate —

Mr Ross: It should use the words that are used in the lines above it so that it reads:

“making it impossible to examine the two Bills coherently and holistically”.

That is consistent with the language that was used earlier.

The Chairperson: Therefore it will read: “making it impossible —”

Miss McIlveen: “— to examine the two Bills coherently and holistically”. It is a repetition of the previous line.

The Chairperson: Clerk, if you will read it again, I will put it to the Committee.

The Committee Clerk: The last line of paragraph 3 would be amended to read:

“The Committee unfortunately did not receive a draft of the second Education Bill until 30 September 2009, making it impossible for the Committee to examine the two Bills coherently and holistically.”

Mr O'Dowd: That keeps us happy.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 3, as amended?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We will return to paragraph 62 of the main report, which should be amended to read:

“The Committee had not received sight of any provisions of the second Bill until its meeting of”,

followed by today's date.

Are members content with that?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: We move to paragraph 4. If there are no comments, we will move on.

Mr Lunn: Paragraph 4 states:

“Unfortunately there was an almost persistent delay”.

I think that we are being kind. It should state that there was a “constant delay”.

The Chairperson: Or,

“Unfortunately there was a persistent delay”.

Mr Lunn: That will do.

Mr O'Dowd: Although there was a delay in papers coming back, it was not persistent. The phrase:

“there was an almost persistent delay” allows agreement.

The Chairperson: Some would prefer the paragraph to read:

“Unfortunately, there was an almost persistent delay”,

whereas Trevor Lunn thinks that it should read:

“Unfortunately, there was a persistent delay”.

Those in favour of it reading “a persistent” —

Mr Lunn: It could be changed to read “frequent”, which would keep it simple:

“there were frequent delays by the Department”.

The Chairperson: Should the line be amended to:

“Unfortunately, there were frequent delays”?

Mr B McCrea: The delays were many, frequent and often.

The Chairperson: Sorry?

Mr B McCrea: I was speaking in tautology again. I did not want Chris Stewart to come to the table.

The Chairperson: Do not go there; it sounds painful. The line should read:

“Unfortunately, there were frequent delays”.

Are members content with the paragraph, as amended?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 5?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 6?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 7?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 8?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 9?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 10?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 11?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Paragraph 11 should read “having received advice”. It is not often that I pick up on spelling mistakes.

Mr B McCrea: It is recorded in Hansard.

The Chairperson: Indeed, it will go down in history. Are members content with paragraph 12?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Are members content with paragraph 13?

Members indicated assent.

Mr B McCrea: Can that be changed to,

“agreed to recommend to the Assembly some, but not many”?

[Laughter.]

The Chairperson: Agreed. [Laughter.]

Thank you very much, members. We have dealt with the executive summary. We shall now proceed to the appendices. Members will recall that all contents of the appendices, except Hansard reports, were contained in the grey lever-arch files that were distributed earlier. I hope that they found a prominent place in your offices.

At subsequent meetings, updates to the appendices were distributed to members. Today, the Committee will note any further additions. If it is happy, it will agree that the entire contents of the appendices be printed in the report. If you bear with me, I will go through those appendices for the record.

Appendix 1 contains the minutes of proceedings that relate to the report. Members have approved last week’s minutes. The minutes of today’s meeting will be produced as quickly as possible and circulated to members. Are members content for me, as Chairperson, to approve the minutes of today’s meeting in so far as they relate to the Bill for the purposes of their being appended to the Committee’s report for printing?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Thank you. Are members content with appendix 1?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Appendix 2 contains the minutes of evidence. The Hansard report of last week’s meeting was circulated to you yesterday afternoon. Are members content with appendix 2?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee Clerk: Members have been made aware of the deadline for sending the document to print, which is 4.00 pm today. Members should bear in mind that the meeting last week was five hours long. Certainly, the Hansard report of last week’s meeting was contained in the white envelopes that members received yesterday afternoon.

The Chairperson: Are members agreed that it can be added to appendix 2 of the Committee report and that I, as Chairperson, can approve the Hansard report of today’s meeting for inclusion in the report for printing?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Do not worry, members; you have not given me power that I will abuse.

Appendix 3 contains written submissions. There are no changes to the submissions that were circulated to members in the grey lever-arch folder several weeks ago. Therefore, are members content with appendix 3?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Appendix 4 deals with other correspondence and written submissions. The following new items are to be added to appendix 4: the Assembly research briefing paper ‘Comparable issues from Library, Health and Education Bills’ that was circulated to members on 16 September; correspondence from the Department of Education in regard to the controlled schools sectoral meeting that was circulated on 23 September; correspondence from the Minister of Education about possible further amendments and suggestions on the Education Bill that was circulated on 23 September; and correspondence from the Department of Education regarding schedules 3, 4 and 7, which was also circulated on 23 September.

The Committee Clerk: Earlier, the Committee received two more documents for inclusion in appendix 4: the second Education Bill and the amendments from the Department.

The Chairperson: Does the Committee agree that those documents should be included in appendix 4?

Mr O’Dowd: Can we publish the second Education Bill before the Executive see it?

The Committee Clerk: It is a draft.

Mr O’Dowd: Sorry, OK.

The Chairperson: It is usual for a Committee report on a Bill to indicate whether the Committee is content with the long title. I, therefore, ask Members to turn to page 1 of the Bill. The long title is:

“A Bill to provide for the establishment and functions of the Education and Skills Authority; to make further provision about education, educational services and youth services; and for connected purposes.”

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: In conclusion — I sometimes thought that we would never get here — the Question is that the report, as amended, be the first report of the Committee for Education for 2009-2010 to the Assembly and that the Committee orders the report to be printed on 30 September 2009.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: I conclude by expressing my sincere thanks and appreciation to John Simmons, Alyn Hicks and their staff for the huge amount of work that they have done. We sometimes felt as though we were snowed under with paperwork; however, I can assure you that it would have been all the more difficult had I been left to steer the Committee through it. On behalf of the Committee, I express our appreciation and thanks to John, Alyn and their staff for all that they have done.

I thank the departmental officials for their forbearance and assistance, particularly Chris Stewart and his team, who attended meetings on a regular basis.

Mr B McCrea: Are we taking a vote on that?
[Laughter.]

The Chairperson: I also thank the Hansard staff for their accurate reflection of all our deliberations.

The Chairperson (Mrs D Kelly): In according with the guidance received, I remind members who are councillors to declare an interest. I declare an interest.

Mr Beggs: I declare an interest.

Mr McQuillan: I declare an interest.

Mr Dallat: I declare an interest, and I will not be participating in the questioning.

Mr Kinahan: I declare an interest.

The Chairperson: Mr Whitten, thank you for coming along.

Mr James Whitten: Thank you for rearranging the evidence session; I was not able to make it to the meeting last week.

I am a retired director of finance for Crawley Borough Council in Sussex. I am making my submission solely as an interested resident and taxpayer. I am not a representative of any political party or other organisation.

I have submitted written evidence to the Committee as part of my response to the public consultation. I want to make a minor change to my submission, where I refer to Dr Hall as the chairman of a working group which reported to the Councillors Commission. Dr Hall was not the chairman of the working group; he was the author of the report.

My submission is in relation only to clause 17 of the Bill, which deals with severance payments to councillors. I do not want to go through all the submission, because the Committee will have already read that. I am looking at the draft Bill, on which the Committee will make comments to the Assembly in due course.

It seems to me that, as it stands, clause 17 confers a power on the Department to make regulations for those payments, but it does not provide discretion to individual councils to determine whether such payments should be made. It appears that the Department has not yet determined what the payments will be or how they will be funded; whether they will come from departmental resources, or from the councils. In either case, it is certain that the taxpayer will pick up the bill through either the local council tax or the charge that is made from the centre.

Therefore, it is important that local councils be given the opportunity to have their own view on this matter, rather than it being prescribed to them. The working group report on councillor remuneration found that when a severance scheme was introduced in Wales in 2003, individual authorities had discretion as to whether they implemented such a scheme, and some did not. In Scotland, however, the centre directed that payments would be made. A choice has to be made, and the legislation ought to provide the opportunity for local influence to be brought to bear. I am not a parliamentary draftsman, but I think that clause 17 should include an element of local discretion.

The public are concerned about the cost of, and the justification for, the severance scheme. The review of public administration (RPA) proposed a substantial reduction in the number of councils. Originally, the number of councils was going to be reduced to seven, with a reduction of around 160 councillors. That was supposed to happen in 2008; however, given the local revisions, we are now looking at 11 councils and a reduction of 120 in council posts.

It is pertinent to reflect on the situation that existed before devolution. The fact that there are now 108 MLAs involved in public administration must also be taken into account. The overarching number of public representatives for which the taxpayer pays is being reduced by only 12. That does not warrant a severance scheme, and it certainly does not warrant one that has been estimated to cost from £2 million to £5 million, as was considered in the consultation paper.

It is also relevant to compare the situation here with the substantial reorganisation that has taken place in England. In April, seven county areas in England, with a combined population of 3.2 million residents, were reorganised so that the original 44 county and district councils became just nine unitary councils. All of those authorities undertook a broader range of services than most of the 26 district councils in Northern Ireland. It is interesting to note that there were no severance payments for the councillors who stood down. An analogy can be drawn from that.

Perhaps more importantly, given the present state of public finances, it appears to be somewhat of an extravagance to go ahead with a severance scheme which was first proposed in 2005. Public finances were more buoyant then than they are now. As we all know, the world has moved on financially. Front line services are now under greater pressure, and there can be little justification for incurring additional major costs through a severance scheme. I am asking that clause 17 be deleted; however, that is a matter for the Assembly to consider.

I do not want to finish on that note, because councillors provide a valuable service to their communities, and their contribution to public life should be recognised. Local councils have been doing just that for a very long time, and my view is that they should be left to make their own arrangements, as the cost to the public purse would be much more modest.

Mr McQuillan: You say that the local councils should make the arrangements. Will you elaborate on that? In which way do you see that happening?

Mr Whitten: Every council has its own arrangements for celebrating the service of councillors who leave following an election. The ultimate accolade that can be given to someone who has given exceptional service over many years is the freedom of the borough or equivalent for whatever type of council it is. However, there are other ways in which people's contributions can be rewarded. Lots of organisations reward long service with a memento of the person's time working there, such as a bowl engraved with the coat of arms or a silver salver.

Mr McQuillan: Someone who serves on a council for 30 years or more will have given up a lot of their family life. I have served two terms on my local council, and my son has grown from a four-year-old to a 16-year-old in that time. I have not seen him, and I hardly put him to bed at night even once. I do not think that being presented with a glass bowl would be worthwhile after all that.

Mr Dallat: I have no sheep to graze in the town centre. [Laughter.]

Mr Ross: Part of the idea behind the severance package is to reward long service. However, another reason is to encourage people who are not going to stay in local government to move on and make way for new blood to build capacity for when the new councils go live. In previous weeks, I have said that the window for the severance package should be shorter, so as to encourage people who have no intention of standing again to leave local government and let new people in. Making sure that the new councils have the adequate capacity when they go live is a big issue. The severance scheme is partly aimed at doing that. How do you see councils being able to build capacity with new members, and getting people who do not want to stand again to move away, without it?

Mr Whitten: That is a relevant point. The first thing is divide responsibilities between the Assembly and local councils. I noted that quite a lot of Members had to declare an interest because they wear two hats. That is the first thing: to free up room for new blood to come in at local council level. In Wales, part of the justification of the scheme was just that. However, anecdotal evidence of the Welsh experience showed that there was not much change in the age profile of members of the authorities after the introduction of the severance scheme. The majority of local councillors, particularly in England and Wales, are older, maybe because they have more free time to contribute.

To some extent, the severance scheme is a disincentive to existing members who may want to serve one of the new authorities. Some of those people may take the money rather than lending their long experience to the new authorities. That may happen if the scheme is too generous, so a balance has to be struck. It is down to individual members to make their own value judgements. I do not have any specific suggestions on how to get younger people and new blood into councillors' roles.

Mr Ross: I do not want to appear ageist. I was not necessarily saying that younger people should be brought in. I was just talking about the people who will be there, because —

The Chairperson: New faces.

Mr Ross: Yes. A certain amount of training is needed because the new councils are going to have new powers. It is not necessarily about younger people.

Mr Whitten: No; it is not. In your earlier discussion, the point was raised about the equality agenda and involving a broader cross-section of people in local councils and other organisations. I refer the Committee to an excellent report that was produced for the Councillors Commission in England. It addresses that very issue, particularly with reference to getting women into community empowerment and involving minority ethnic groups in what goes on in their communities. There are things in there that could be done. Access to community empowerment is the problem. All councils need to reflect on how they acquire new people to stand for election.

Mr Boylan: Dr Robert Eames received the freedom of Armagh city, and I do not see him chasing sheep round the Mall every Saturday morning, which was the tradition.

You referred to other areas, but I think that the North is unique in what it has gone through. I was a councillor, and I will not be receiving any payment. I am co-opted now. The amount of work must be put in context. I worked nights, which Mr McQuillan referred to. Outside of severance pay, what else can be given to those councillors for all the work that they have done down through the years? I am glad that you did not finish on your proposal to take the severance package out altogether. How can those people — some of whom have given 30 years of their lives — be compensated? You can talk about Wales, Scotland and elsewhere, but the North is unique.

Mr Whitten: That has been addressed through the remuneration package, which reflects the time that people devote to local council duties in the wider sense. The basic allowance system that was introduced in the 1990s was designed to reflect the time commitment involved in undertaking those duties.

The Chairperson: I have to tell you that it is well below the minimum wage.

Mr Boylan: I do not think that the public have the right perception about the amount of hours that councillors put in. A lot of good work has been carried out, despite what has gone on in the media for the past 12 months, and that has to be appreciated.

Mr Whitten: Certainly. I know that, because I have worked in the system.

Mr Kinahan: I take on board the current climate and all that has been said in the media. I did not plan, five or six years ago, to be a politician. I was asked to join a council and thoroughly enjoyed it. However, I cannot believe how much work councillors put in. I was told that it would take up a day a week, and maybe one evening.

The Chairperson: I was told that too.

Mr Kinahan: However, it ended up being two full days and every evening, plus attendance at other events. What staggered me was the fact that there were people there who had done that for 30 years — most of that time without any pay. They now get some pay, although it is a tiny amount for the pressure, the time and the effect on family life. I saw the severance package as working through for councillors with long service.

There is no pension system. A gold watch or an etched bowl is almost the biggest insult possible. I worked at Shorts for three years and saw people being given a gold watch after 40 years' service, and I was appalled. However, they did get a pension. They had had a career and they had had a job all their life, and all that must be borne in mind.

Wales and England have different payment systems. I am nervous about the idea of leaving it to councils because then they end up with pressure from the press, which distorts all that goes on. I take Mr Whitten's point: yes, we must look at the severance package, but I am afraid that we need to praise the old councillors — "old" is the wrong word; I mean those who have given long service and have given lots of time.

Mr Whitten: Of course, that point is relevant. However, as I understand it, the severance scheme is a one-off payment and will not continue, while your point applies in perpetuity.

The Chairperson: Yes, it is. At risk of running afoul of any guidance on the contribution that I am allowed to make, although the severance scheme is a one-off, there will be different payment structures with regard to ongoing financial reward for people who choose to enter public life. Therefore, there is a difference between the situation in the future and that of the past.

Mr Whitten, thank you for your presentation; your points were well made. I hope you feel that you have been heard. We will see how the Bill proceeds in its Committee Stage and in the Assembly.

We have a letter from the Rural Community Network outlining its views on the Bill. We also have the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action's views on the Bill, presented after I spoke at the local government event that it hosted on 16 September. As I reported to the Committee last week, I spoke at the annual general meeting of the National Association of Councillors (NAC) last Friday evening. The major concern there was around finance and whether there is enough money to see through the RPA. As additional powers are moving across to local councils, the NAC is concerned about whether the appropriate budgets will move across. The Committee may want to put that to the Department, either this morning or by writing to the permanent secretary or the Minister.

Mr Boylan: I agree. The issue of the funding package is raising its head, so we must try to get some answers.

The Chairperson: We also have letters from the Women's Ad Hoc Policy Group on the gender breakdown of statutory transition committees. We could incorporate the key issues raised in those letters into the Committee's report on the Bill. We could also forward the letters to the policy groups on the RPA, and to local councils. It will be a matter for political parties as to who they nominate at council level to sit on the committees.

Mr Kinahan: That is the way to deal with the issue — leave it to the councils.

The Chairperson: We have an updated table which outlines each clause of the Bill and explains the issues that have been raised in submissions to the Committee. We have an opportunity to consider each clause and decide whether we are content with them as drafted or need to get further information or seek amendments. Officials are present to provide an overview of clauses 9 to 17 and 20 to 23, which relate to reorganisation, and to answer any queries that Committee members may have on the clauses.

I welcome Ian Maye, the deputy secretary from the Department, who was mentioned earlier; Julie Broadway, a grade 7 officer in the local government policy division; Jim Stewart, a deputy principal in the local government policy division; and Angela Fitzpatrick, a deputy principal in the local government policy division. I invite you to take us through each clause, explaining briefly what they mean in practice, and take any questions that members have on a clause-by-clause basis.

Mr Ian Maye (Department of the Environment): I want to make a couple of opening points before I pass over to my team, who will deal with the detail of the issues. I will be involved throughout the discussion.

Important points were just raised about the funding of the programme, whether it would go ahead on time and whether it was worth taking forward. Those questions are increasingly being asked, and the Minister is aware of them. As members know, the Minister is going round each statutory transition committee, and those issues are being put to him.

On the issue of funding, we have almost completed a full economic appraisal of the programme. That is a major piece of work, on which we have been supported by PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC). We will bring that to the strategic leadership board on 16 October. It needs some polish applied to it, but it demonstrates that if certain choices are made — made by you, as politicians — the programme will yield significant future cash and non-cash benefits for citizens, ratepayers and taxpayers. Critically, however, those dividends will only be delivered if choices are made over the next few months about how local government will be brought together from May 2011 and beyond, and what it does in that period.

The strategic leadership board will be faced with some important issues. We look forward to having a full discussion with the board. The Minister will want to take those views away and present them to the Executive. The next stage in the process will be to take a proposal to the Executive: first, to get their continued commitment to delivering the programme — my Minister is absolutely committed to that; and secondly, to tie down how it will be funded. We need precise information on funding mechanisms, and we need clarity on that before the beginning of the next financial year. The statutory transition committees will need that information and will need to know where the money is coming from to get the job done.

Those are the general points that I wanted to make. Things are beginning to come to a head, and we are reaching a point in the process where we will be taking concrete advice to the Executive so that they can agree a funding mechanism and a funding programme to take the work forward. Today, we are talking about the detail of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, which will also take that work forward, particularly since it gives us the enabling provisions to put the statutory transition committees in place.

Increasingly, as we move the programme forward, the statutory transition committees will make key decisions and take forward key work at the local level to bring the new councils into being. They will modernise the councils, drive out efficiencies and savings in the long term and drive out improved services for citizens. It is critical that the transition committees be set up at the earliest possible opportunity next year to deliver the programme. My Minister is absolutely committed to that; he will take the package to the Executive and seek their continued support for the programme. I know that he has had discussions with individual Executive colleagues over the past few weeks and that they are committed to taking this forward.

The Chairperson: Thank you for your presentation. Those are important points to make, and it was important for us to hear them. We look forward to seeing the outworkings of the economic appraisal. However, previous Ministers gave commitments to ensure that the representation on the statutory transition committees would be subject to checks and balances. Some parties are not represented on some councils, and I am sure that members of other parties would like to hear how that will be addressed, because it is not addressed in the legislation before us today.

Mr Maye: That is one of the issues that we want to explore in detail with the Committee. The Minister was conscious that the then Minister had asked policy development panel A, which focuses on the governance arrangements for the new councils, to consider how the governance package that the policy panel agreed and brought to the strategic leadership board could apply to the statutory transition committees, and could ensure, as far as possible, that there was proper proportional representation on those committees. The panel recommended that the new model, which was designed for the 11 new councils, should be used to the maximum extent possible in populating the new statutory transition committees. The detail of that model will be in the local government reorganisation Bill. This Bill gives us the first taste of what that will be.

The policy development panel's core proposals, which have been agreed by the strategic leadership board and which the Minister is taking to the Executive in the local government reorganisation Bill, involve tying down the mechanisms and providing flexibility and options for the new councils to choose from three models in particular: d'Hondt, Sainte-Laguë and single transferable vote (STV). The flexibility to choose the precise method of applying d'Hondt, Sainte-Laguë and STV is reduced, and we do the same as is the case in the Assembly. The subordinate legislation that supports the new governance arrangements will specify in detail how those mechanisms will be applied. It will then be for the new councils to choose which allocator method meets their needs, and that choice will be a matter for political discussion in each council.

That is the broad model, and there is a lot of detail around how it will work. The Department is seeking to bring the elements of that model into the construction and composition of the statutory transition committees, so that they operate in almost a shadow sense, and use to the maximum possible extent the governance arrangements that will apply to the new councils.

The Chairperson: It might be useful for the Committee to receive a briefing paper on that at an early stage.

Mr Maye: We will be very happy to do so.

The Chairperson: Thank you.

Ms Julie Broadway (Department of the Environment): Clause 9 defines certain terms that are used in Part 2 of the Bill in relation to the provisions of local government reorganisation. Clause 10, "Control of disposals and contracts of existing councils", sets out a system of controls on disposals of land and capital and non-capital contracts being entered into by the current 26 district councils in the period leading up to their dissolution and the establishment of the 11 new district councils. The Department will have powers to direct that councils must, from a specified date, obtain consent from their statutory transition committees before engaging in the specified activities, subject to minimum thresholds. Those activities are disposing of land and entering into capital and non-capital contracts.

The Chairperson: A number of councils have raised concern about that. You may have heard the issue of veto raised earlier in the meeting.

Ms Broadway: Yes.

The Chairperson: What cognisance is the Department taking of the presentations and submissions which Belfast City Council and Omagh District Council?

Ms Broadway: It is important in the run-up to reorganisation that statutory transition committees be given a right to have some view on the disposals of land and contracts. After all, contracts that are entered into now could affect all of a new district. That is why the Department thinks it important that the statutory transition committees should have a view.

Mr Maye: That view came directly from one of the policy development panels. The panel was conscious that, because we are not going to have a shadow period, that the statutory transition committees, which will be asked to strike the rate for the new councils for their first year and set their budgets, need to have some control over spending, particularly in the constituent councils' last year. It is, in a sense, protecting the interests of the new councils in that first year, and acting almost as the angel on their shoulder watching over the existing councils, and, to a degree, bringing some control and coherence to the preparations for the new councils.

The Chairperson: Some people are not of the view that there are many angels sitting on shoulders. [Laughter.] More like a monkey on your back.

Mr Boylan: Obviously, there are corporate plans and projects ongoing. What are we looking at with regard to time frames and vetoes? Obviously, we are looking at putting the Bill through, but I am sure that there are councils that are trying to get projects up and going. There are obviously concerns. Last week, I mentioned one end of the district compared to the other. But what is the time frame? When can that start, when will it stop, and is it part of the ongoing work?

Mr Maye: It is very much so. Individual councils are bringing their capital programmes and individual projects to transitional committees, not with a view to the transition committee having a veto in its current voluntary phase, but to share information, and to make sure that everybody is comfortable that that project or programme makes sense in the run up to the creation of the 11 new councils in May 2011.

The Minister's intention is to put in place the new statutory transition committees as early as possible in 2010. We have issued guidance to the existing voluntary transition committees and set out a fully detailed implementation timetable, which we will be adding detail to as time goes on. However, some of the key tasks that we have asked those transition committees to deliver can only happen when the statutory transition committees come into being and assume their new powers.

The first critical task for each committee is to appoint a chief executive designate. The view that we are getting from the strategic leadership board, the policy development panels, and across the sector, is that it is important to get that person in post as early as possible next year. The current intention is that the statutory transition committees will appoint chief executives designate for the new councils by around March next year. Therefore, it is important that those committees are in place before that so that they can take control of the selection process and make the final choice as to who they want to take charge of their new council. That is the starting point, and we want those chief executives designate in place as early as possible.

The last year or 14 months in the run up to May 2011 is absolutely critical in converging the work of the existing councils, for bringing together programmes, and for looking at the systems and human resources issues. The statutory transition committees needs to play a very strong role in driving that process, supported by the chief executives designate and the new senior management teams designate, and working with the existing teams and the existing councils. Increasingly, however, the statutory transition committees will be providing the glue that holds those preparations together.

Mr Beggs: I declare an interest as a local councillor. I can see that the transition committees are a reasonable mechanism to regulate future investment that has implications for future councils and in allowing some projects to go forward. I understand that, at present, the Department has to approve significant investment. Could the Department regulate such significant investment without giving that authority to the transition committees? Does the Department have the power to refuse any major new investment because the councils are going through a period of change? Will the Department continue to have a role, and could it regulate that without the transition committees?

Mr Maye: In theory, it could. However, I think that it would be quite difficult for the Department to take a view, based on what is happening at local level, on whether there was a specific need for a project to be taken forward. Some of the work that is already under way needs to be carried forward and completed.

In a sense, the proposition that the Minister is putting on the table is for the statutory transition committees and the Department to play a role in the process, to provide the necessary checks and balances and ensure that the decisions made are in the interest of the new council and are fully considered, not only by the individual councils within the current 26 councils, but by the transition committee. When those projects come to the Department, they come with the benefit of that consideration. We think that the transition committee considering a proposal makes sense in the context of the new council, and makes it easier for the Department and the Minister to decide whether a loan sanction is provided. Equally, if there is no agreement, that puts the Minister and the Department in a position to consider whether a loan sanction is not granted for a particular project.

Mr Beggs: Do you need to legislate for that? In the future, could the Minister or the Department decide that if councils wish to have major capital expenditure approved, the Department will have to be satisfied that it is a reasonable investment and that there is support in the transition committees? Could that be regulated without the need for legislation?

Mr Maye: The difficulty with the system that is currently available to the Minister and the Department is that it is difficult to enforce. The ultimate sanction is the withholding of loan sanction, as the project cannot then go ahead. Equally, however, that could give rise to legal issues and the Department could be challenged by an individual council in those circumstances.

The Department feels that the transition committees must be given a statutory role in the process, because of the nature of the work that they are being asked to deliver for, and in advance of, the new council.
[Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

Indeed, concerns have already been raised by neighbouring councils within the transition committees that things are happening that really should not be happening, and that liabilities could be incurred that carry forward into the new councils. It was with those issues in mind that the Department suggested both statutory provision and the backstop of strong intervention by the Minister through the loan sanction arrangement.

The Chairperson: Mr Dallat, did you indicate that there was interference in the hearing loop system?

Mr Dallat: I could not hear a word that was being said. Someone's mobile phone was going constantly.

The Chairperson: Can everyone please turn their mobile phones off? They are interfering with the hearing loop system. Phones must be turned off and should not be on silent or on divert.

Mr Ford: First, I must apologise for being out of the room, and for now being in the position of having to redeclare my interest as a member of Antrim Borough Council. Secondly, and in the context of clause 17 I also state that, as an MLA, I do not expect to take advantage of any severance payments.

Mr Maye, you appeared to refer to the benefits of the Department consulting the transition committees, and yet clause 10 of the Bill prescribes that they will be given statutory powers of veto. I cannot disagree with a word that you said about the benefits of the transition committees being consulted, but I can conceive of a situation where the majority of a transition committee might take a short-term view of an investment that was felt to be quite important by representatives of a minority council within that committee.

You also appeared to downplay the fact that the Department, in exercising its loan sanction decision, actually has the ultimate play, which we have all understood that to be the statutory position for many years. You almost implied that loan sanction did not really count, because it could be legally challenged, but also suggested that the provisions of clause 10 could not be challenged in such a way.

Mr Maye: There is always a risk with the current loan sanction regime. The Department must demonstrate that it has good reason to turn down loan sanction for a project, because a project will only have been forwarded by a council after full consideration of its merits. We feel that we need a bit of both. We need to be able to use the loan sanction arrangement to the maximum degree possible as a control mechanism, but the statutory transition committees must also have a strong role in the process — not just a consultative role but a strong role.

However, I take the Member's point that that could militate against some councils in a particular group, and I am very happy to take away any ideas the Committee has, and discuss those ideas with the Minister and the policy development panel concerned. We believe that we have a reasonably balanced package on the table, but we welcome any proposals that the Committee may have to make that package even better.

The Chairperson: The Committee may come back to you on that.

Clause 1(3) says that clause 1 will apply to contracts entered into after 22 June 2009, and that date has now passed. Does the Department have another date in mind for that?

Mr Jim Stewart (Department of the Environment): As was mentioned last week, the Department is considering omitting that clause from the Bill, subject to ministerial agreement. When the Bill was originally drafted, the Department envisaged that some risk-management contracts could have been let in the intervening period between the Bill's being introduced and its being passed. Those contracts have slipped a little, so that date is not a key date and, with the Minister's approval, we hope to be omitting that particular provision.

Ms Broadway: Clause 11 clarifies the powers of statutory transition committees when giving consent for the purposes of a direction, and makes provision for contracts where the consideration is not wholly in money. Where the value of a consideration is questioned, and the council and the statutory transition committee fail to reach agreement, the Department will have the power to determine the value of the consideration.

Clause 12 provides that a statutory transition committee considering an application from a council for a disposal or contract shall take into consideration any other disposals or contracts undertaken by the council from a date specified in a direction from the Department.

The Chairperson: Has the Department indicated yet when that date might be?

Ms Broadway: No, not yet.

Clause 13 covers the contravention of directions. It provides that, where an existing council makes a disposal or enters into a contract without obtaining the consent required under the terms of a direction made by the Department, the disposal is void and the contract cannot be enforced against the successor council.

The Chairperson: Belfast City Council commented on that. Do you have a note of that?

Ms Broadway: Yes, I have a note of it, and we are seeking legal advice. We will come back to the Committee on the issue of voiding.

The Chairperson: Yes. You can come back to us on that.

Ms Broadway: Clause 14 provides that the Department shall, by regulations, establish a statutory transition committee for each of the new councils and that such a committee will be a body corporate. The regulations will provide that statutory transition committees will consist of members of predecessor councils, and may provide for the appointment of the chairpersons and other members of the committees; their tenure of office; procedures to be followed; the payment of allowances to committee members; and the making available to committees of the facilities, staff and premises of existing councils.

The clause also enables the Department to make payments to committees, and provides that they are local government bodies for the purposes of account and audit. That relates back to one of the points raised earlier. The Department will apply the same provisions on accounts and audit to transition committees that it currently applies to councils.

The Chairperson: There is significant unease about the shotgun weddings that are being proposed. For example, some of the larger councils, such as Derry, and some of the smaller councils, such as Strabane, are concerned about equal representation. Does the Department have a view on that?

Mr Maye: Those views were very carefully considered by policy development panel A, which considered a number of options. The proposal that the panel brought back was to stick with equal representation across the council groups. The panel felt that that was the best and most defensible option. It felt that none of the alternatives offered a better solution.

That was taken before the strategic leadership board. It was also taken back into Department leadership structures to be validated. That is the view that we have taken forward, and the model that we have applied to the construction of the current voluntary committees, and the one that we propose to apply to the new statutory transition committees.

Mr Ford: I cannot find reference in the Bill to the specific definition of “predecessor council”. What happens to the representation of people from what one might call greater Dunmurry or greater Cregagh in the context of the new Belfast council? It is clear that, for 10 councils, there is no issue as to what the predecessor councils are, but it seems to me that setting up a transition committee for Belfast which ignores the interests of those who currently live outside the city of Belfast is not the way to provide good governance for those suburbs.

Mr Maye: To a degree, the issue is linked to how the new council boundaries will be settled. As you know, the Minister is currently considering the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner’s report. In the not-too-distant future, he will bring forward a paper to the Executive and an Order to the Assembly. That complicates the issue a little. We recognise, however, that the two councils and the two transition committees will need to work together, because there are a number of issues.

First, there is the issue of how the interests of citizens and ratepayers who are due to transfer to the new Belfast council area are represented. Service delivery issues need to be considered, and those people need a mechanism that ensures that their voices heard are through their elected representatives. We are considering that issue.

Secondly, there are significant assets and liabilities in the ownership of Lisburn City Council or Castlereagh Borough Council that are due to transfer to the new Belfast council. Again, there needs to be a mechanism for discussion about what will happen to those assets and liabilities and about the impact that decisions about them will have on service delivery, not only in the area that is being transferred but in the area that is not.

For example, Castlereagh’s major recycling and waste management facilities are located in an area that is due to transfer to the new Belfast council area. How then will the new council for Castlereagh and Lisburn deliver those services to the areas of Castlereagh that are not transferring? The two council groups and the two statutory transition committees must consider, discuss and negotiate those types of critical issues.

On one level, all those issues can be dealt with by negotiation and through detailed discussion between the two statutory transition committees. This is really the only area where two neighbouring committees will have to work closely together. It is not just an issue for the elected representatives in the areas that are moving; there are broader service delivery and legacy issues to deal with.

Equally, people living in areas that are being transferred to a new council will need to have some sense that their voices are being heard. The Belfast transition committee cannot simply decide how that new population should be served; rather, the existing elected representatives in Lisburn and Castlereagh must be able to express a view on that and the Belfast transition committee must then take that into account when making its decision.

Therefore, we are looking at a number of options, ranging from simply providing detailed guidance — rules of engagement — to manage the discussion between the Belfast transition committee and the Lisburn-Castlereagh transition committee, to putting in place formal arrangements whereby the Lisburn transition committee is represented on the Belfast transition committee. That could involve either people being co-opted to the Belfast transition committee or a subcommittee being formed, drawn from both transition committees and reporting back to both. Something of that nature will be needed in order to allow those discussions to happen — and there is no doubt in anyone’s mind that they should happen.

We are considering those options. We are also considering urgently whether the powers that we are seeking in the Bill are sufficient to provide for that degree of co-operation between the two neighbouring transition committees in order to deal with those issues.

Mr Ford: What you have set out is a perfectly logical way of discussing the issues of service delivery and asset management between the two transition committees for the two future councils. However, my question was more about the representation of citizens from the areas that are being transferred. I do not know who is currently on the Lisburn-Castlereagh transition committee or who will be on the statutory committee. The most logical option would be to have councillors representing the areas that will be transferring to the new Lisburn and Castlereagh council area.

How are people being directly represented on the Belfast transition committee, given the vast powers that are being given to it to set the direction for the new Belfast council? That can be resolved only by having representatives on the Belfast transition committee who are from the areas being transferred.

As far as I can see, this is not a significant issue; the only other boundary area that is really affected is a small corner of Banbridge. I suspect that its population does not warrant inclusion in the Newry and Down transition committee. However, there is a clear case for Lisburn and Castlereagh representatives to be on the Belfast transition committee if it is to perform the functions that the Bill proposes to give to transition committees — to set the future direction of Belfast for many years. That cannot be done simply by Lisburn and Castlereagh, with their other priorities, having occasional chats with Belfast.

Mr Maye: That is one of the options that we will consider as part of the process. It is one of the issues that we have to weigh up in the balance.

Mr Dallat: I hope to lighten this discussion a wee bit. Local councillors love their titles — Mr Mayor, alderman, and the cloaks and big chains of office. Has any thought been given to borough status? Earlier, we were talking about freedom of boroughs and being able to graze sheep in town centres. During the last reorganisation in Coleraine, which was way back in the 1950s, the chains of office just disappeared — not that I particularly want one. Is there any thought about that?

Mr Maye: We have been thinking about those issues in relation to the status of the districts themselves — city status and borough status, because there are issues to address — and also whether we carry forward the alderman structure. If a council area is a borough, we have to think about what to do about the chains of office and all of those issues.

Mr Stewart: Where a council that currently has borough status is coming together with other councils, it is likely that we will include provisions in the statutory transition committee (STC) regulations to enable the STC to decide whether it wants to retain the borough status for the new council district. We are continuing to take legal advice on that matter, but that is the instance. There is one council — I think that it is Omagh and Fermanagh — that will be a district council because neither of those councils have borough status currently. All of the others will have the option of retaining borough status.

Our difficulty is in relation to the cities. Some of the city statuses that have been awarded in the past refer to the borough, and some refer to the previous town. We are having a little difficulty in sorting out the legal implications of that. However, generally it will be a matter for STCs to decide whether they wish to retain borough status for the new local government district, so they will be able to keep their chains of offices, and so on.

Mr Dallat: So there will not be a surplus of mayors or mayoral cars? [Laughter.]

Mr Stewart: There may well be.

Mr Boylan: I was going to make a remark about the sheep again, but that is OK.

The Chairperson: Well, enough about that. We have too much work to do. Clause 15?

Ms Broadway: Clause 15 provides that the functions of statutory transition committees are essentially — [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

It also enables the Department, by regulations, to confer powers and impose duties on committees, in particular concerning the making of district rates and the appointment of staff.

The Chairperson: Or, indeed, redundancies. There will be redundancies in the new councils. They will not need all these directors.

Mr Maye: [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

It will then be for the existing council and the statutory transition committee to determine who is accepted for severance. The severance payment would be paid on the first day of the new council. That is still being discussed. [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

Whether it is in the interests of the existing councils or the statutory transition committees to allow individuals to leave early is a different matter. [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

The Chairperson: Are people looking to hedge their bets? Surely, the appointments to the new positions will be made in advance of the first day of the new councils. In effect, there will be too many cooks in the one kitchen.

Mr Maye: [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

It is not every member of staff; it is a very small proportion. However, it is still a significant number of people, and choices will have to be made about where they fit in the organisation. [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

There will be some jobs that will need to be done in the new councils. [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

There will be jobs for a small number of people to wind down the old organisation. [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference.]

It is quite a complicated mix, and it will come down to detailed negotiation with individuals within the context of the new structure being settled by the statutory transition committee.

The Chairperson: I will wish to return to that issue, because it must be done in the best interests of the ratepayer, as opposed to those of the public servant.

Another phone is switched on, and it is seriously interfering with the Hansard recording. Members, please turn your phones off.

Mr Beggs: Are there any estimates on the cost of the redundancy scheme? Can you provide any guidance on whether the transition committees will have the power to veto new appointments? There is little point in appointing a new chief executive to be in place for 18 months and then be given a redundancy package.

Mr Maye: The working assumption is that the people who are newly appointed by the statutory transition committees will TUPE across into the new organisation to do the job that they have been appointed to do. It is assumed that they will not necessarily be able to avail themselves of packages. The people who are at risk in the current organisations will be eligible to be considered for the severance package. We do not regard the statutory transition committees' appointments of chief executives designate, directors of human resources, directors of finance, or any other such positions that they feel are needed, to be in the at-risk group. Therefore, they will not be eligible for severance packages.

Mr Beggs: What role, if any, will the transition committees have in filling existing vacancies in councils as the RPA date approaches?

Mr Maye: The Local Government Staff Commission has issued a document that puts in place a new vacancy control system, with effect from today. That control system will be exercised and operated by the existing councils.

As time moves on, and as the new statutory transition committees are appointed and take up their roles, there will increasingly be discussions on the filling of vacancies. That will have budgetary implications, and it may mean that a post is filled by an individual who might have to draw down the severance package and leave the organisation in May 2011 or shortly after, so it is legitimate for a statutory transition committee to have a role in determining whether the post should be filled and, if so, how it should be filled. The local government reform joint forum will be considering how, when we reach that point, the statutory transition committees exercise a role in vacancy control in the existing 26 councils, and how those negotiations and discussions happen in reality.

Mr Beggs: You seem to be saying that you see that evolving role being governed by Local Government Staff Commission guidance. Is that correct?

Mr Maye: The current arrangements have been agreed collectively by the local government employers, the Civil Service members who are on that negotiating forum, and the trade union side. The staff commission provides an independent and joint secretariat to that body. In a sense, we are using the staff commission as the vehicle to issue the vacancy control document, because it then attracts the potential use of the Minister's power of direction if a council wilfully ignores the guidance that has been issued. It does not mean that the staff commission has drawn that together: it did some of the legwork at an earlier stage, but the decisions on the final shape of that document were a matter for the local government employers who sit on the local government reform joint forum, and for trade union side. That is where that negotiation and agreement occurred.

Mr Beggs: You seem to be saying that it is the trade unions and senior council officials in the local government employers who are —

Mr Maye: No. The local government employers are represented by elected members and officers from the National Joint Council for Local Government Services and the Northern Ireland Joint Council for Local Government Services, so it has political representation and officer representation.

Mr Beggs: So long as there is no conflict of interest at that level in determining procedures.

Mr Maye: We are very conscious of the potential.

Mr Dallat: I do not want to wander away from the Bill again, but when all of these early retirements, severances, redundancies, enhancements and all are taken into account, is it not the case that no savings will be made?

Mr Maye: We do not think so — not based on the work that has been done so far on the economic appraisal, which, as I said, will be taken to the strategic leadership board. In the economic appraisal, we have identified as precisely as possible the upfront implementation costs, including severance for members, severance for officers, systems costs for designing new systems and putting them in place, and a whole range of other costs that will need to be met in creating the new 11 councils, and balanced them against the areas where savings will be driven out and the potential for savings to be driven out. All of that is set out in great detail in the economic appraisal, which will be brought to the strategic leadership board on 16 October.

The Minister has already said in response to an Assembly question that he intends to publish that economic appraisal. Once there is agreement on the shape of that economic appraisal, I suspect that the Minister will want to make a statement to the Assembly to set out what it means and seek to demonstrate that the programme makes sense for citizens, ratepayers and taxpayers.

Mr Dallat: So we can dispel the rumour that, because of financial restraints, there will be elections next year for another four-year term to the existing 26 councils?

Mr Maye: My Minister's firm intention is to deliver the programme, and that means that there will be elections in May 2011.

The Chairperson: Move on to clause 16.

Ms Broadway: Clause 16 will enable the Department, through regulations, to provide that any local government legislation or rating legislation that applies to an existing council will apply to statutory transition committees, with or without modifications, or that it will not apply in relation to that council or apply with modifications. The clause also defines “local government legislation” and “rating legislation”.

The last time we were before the Committee, some concerns were raised that this seemed to be a very wide power for the Department. However, I will explain the Department’s intention. We want, as far as possible, to apply the provisions of the current local government and rating legislation to statutory transition committees, with the necessary modifications to set the context. We will modify “council” to “statutory transition committee” and “councillor” to “member”.

In relation to disapplying certain bits of the legislation to the current councils, perhaps I can give an example that will demonstrate the Department’s intention. Statutory transition committees will be given a specific function to strike the rate for the first year of the new councils. However, the current local government legislation places that duty on councils. Therefore, we need to disapply that provision for the first year of the new councils.

The Chairperson: OK. We will move on.

Ms Broadway: Clause 17 provides that the Department may make regulations for a severance scheme for councillors that would set out when the scheme would be held; the eligibility criteria, such as length of service; the amount of the severance payments; and the method of calculating those payments. The clause also amends section 4(1) of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 to disqualify anyone who receives a severance payment from being a councillor in the future.

Mr Ford: Sorry Chairperson, I am a bit slow. Can I go back to clause 16 for a moment? Based on what you have just said, what functions will remain with the existing councils after the statutory transition committees are established? It seems to me that that regulation, even in the way in which you outlined it, will mean that, potentially, the councils could have no remaining functions other than to continue to manage existing services, with any significant change being implemented by the transition committees. Therefore, councillors who are not on that committee will have nothing to do.

Mr Maye: The critical issue, and the only area in which we seek to disapply the existing rating legislation, is in relation to the striking of the rate for the coming year, because the responsibility for striking the rate and setting the budget for the new councils when they take up their mantle in May 2011, and for that short period from the beginning of April to the election date, will fall to the transition committees rather than the individual councils. Therefore, for that year alone, the 26 councils will not strike the rate for the year ahead —

Mr Ford: You say that that is the only area, but you have already outlined the issues of approval for capital projects and the appointment of senior staff. Therefore, it is not just about the rate for one year; it is about anything that has significant, long-term implications for the council. When you consider the relatively low level of activity that may require a loan sanction, if that all goes to the transition committee, there is very little left for the existing councils to do.

Mr Maye: That is a consequence of the decision that was taken about a year ago not to have a shadow period but a sharp transition from the old councils to the new ones in May 2011. That, in a sense, transferred the onus for key decisions and actions in that final year, in preparation for the creation of the new councils, to the statutory transition committees. I think that you are right —

Mr Ford: There will actually be a sharp transition from 26 councils to 11 transition committees at some date in the next few months. Some councils will then remain with no significant functions until May 2011.

Mr Maye: That is a fair and valid point. You are absolutely right. The existing councils will continue to deliver and develop services and programmes, but they will do so in the context of the transition committee’s work. It is a direct consequence of the decision not to have a shadow period after the election of the new councils. The view that was put to us by the policy development panels and the strategic leadership board, and which the Minister accepted, was that that was a necessary evil in the circumstances of not having a shadow period after the election.

The Chairperson: I have another meeting to attend briefly. I am indebted to the Deputy Chairperson, who will continue the meeting and oversee the formal clause-by-clause procedure. Thank you.

(The Deputy Chairperson [Mr Boylan] in the Chair)

The Deputy Chairperson: Do members have any other questions?

Mr Beggs: Mr Maye pointed out that the transitional committees will be given significant powers. Some of us were aware of, and concerned about, the lack of democratic accountability in this new structure as described, and therefore opposed it. Did the Department make everyone else aware of the changes that will result when the transitional committees are established?

Mr Maye: We presented some detailed proposals in the course of the public consultation, which was completed in May. We exposed the views and proposals that came from the policy development panels through the strategic leadership board, and put them out for public consultation. A number of councils and others responded to that consultation.

The Deputy Chairperson: Are we on clause 17, Julie?

Ms Broadway: I have read the responses to clause 17.

The Deputy Chairperson: Do members have any questions about clause 17?

Does the Department have any comments to make about the views expressed by Omagh District Council and the Northern Ireland Local Government Association (NILGA)?

Ms Broadway: The final decisions on severance payments to councillors have yet to be taken. We will feed the comments that have been received to the Minister when making the decisions on the format of the severance scheme and the eligibility criteria.

Mr Maye: The critical issue that the Minister is not yet in a position to determine is the timing of delivery of severance. That depends on continuing discussions that he is having with Paul Goggins about co-option, and the willingness of the Northern Ireland Office to change the law on co-option. Most of the parties would agree that they wish to avoid having a few hundred by-elections in the run-up to May 2011, not just because of cost, but because it would unsettle the political process.

Mr Goggins has yet to tell us what he is prepared to do. Our Minister met him a few weeks ago and pressed the case for a change in the law on co-option — not only for the short term, in order to deal with the transition issue, but as a long-term proposition for local government, given the arrangements that have been agreed for the Assembly. Mr Goggins agreed to consider those issues and bring back some proposals. We got a clear impression that he was not persuaded, at this point, that an early change in the law on co-option would be the way forward. We are still waiting for him to bring proposals to the table.

On the question of timing, therefore, it is not possible to predict whether it will be possible to provide for severance in advance of May 2011, but that is what the Minister would like to achieve, so that new people can be brought in as early as possible. He is not in a position to make that decision yet because of Mr Goggins's involvement and the decisions that he, as an NIO Minister, has to make.

Mr Dallat: I am a bit confused as to why Mr Goggins remains to be convinced. He must be aware that there has been considerable discussion about double-jobbing. Many of us who find ourselves on councils in which we are minorities desperately want to fulfil the principle of one man, one job, but we cannot do it. What is his reasoning for not doing that?

Mr Maye: He is not persuaded that he can deliver, in the time available, something that represents a fundamental shift in electoral law. He is responsible for electoral matters. That is the way he views the situation at the moment. As a longer-term proposition, his view is that it is potentially deliverable, but only after full public consultation. The short-term nature of what we need to do between now and May 2011 means that he has doubts as to whether significant change to the law on co-option could be delivered in the time available, with full public consultation, and in a way that ensures that the other parties at Westminster sign up to and row behind what is being proposed.

That is the view that he has expressed. I assure you that our Minister has made the strongest possible arguments for an early change in the law on co-option and a longer-term change, as did his predecessor. The arguments have been put. We have shared with the NIO and Mr Goggins the outcome of the consultation that we did in the spring, because it showed very strong support for early severance and for a change in the law on co-option to enable early severance. He has not ruled it out, but he is not persuaded — he has gone off to think about his options and whether there are other ways to allow severance to be delivered before May 2011.

Mr Dallat: I was not talking about severance in particular, because we have to be extremely careful about our comments on that. I was talking about co-option; you are saying that it is not going to happen.

Mr Maye: We do not yet know. However, we understand that Mr Goggins will come back fairly quickly to put proposals on the table for our Minister to consider, and we look forward to seeing those proposals.

Mr Ford: I know that it is unfair to ask a civil servant to interpret the mind of someone else's Minister, but you are doing so well that I will give it a try. Are we to take it that Mr Goggins does not regard your consultation as being adequate for him to move legislatively?

Mr Maye: That would be a fair inference.

Mr Ford: You also mentioned changing the law on co-option in the longer term, as opposed to merely dealing with the current issues of severance and reducing the number of councillors. I cannot see how your consultation did not cover the short-term issue adequately; whether or not I like the results, I accept that you did the job. Is it because you have also raised the issue of changing the law permanently on co-option?

Mr Maye: No; Mr Goggins and his officials in the NIO feel that such a fundamental change to electoral law for local authorities would require full and explicit consultation. Our consultation did not put forward concrete proposals for changing the law on co-option

— it could not, because it would not be within the gift of the Assembly or the Department to do so.

Mr Ford: The responses to the consultation covered that.

Mr Maye: What proposals are put forward and what happens will be the call of Mr Goggins. That means that we have to wait until he puts forward his proposals to the Minister. My Minister has asked him to do that as soon as possible, because he does not want the issue to drift. He knows that parties, individuals, the NAC, NILGA and others want an early resolution so that we know what will happen on severance and co-option as quickly as possible.

Mr Ford: Given that co-option is possible with unanimous agreement from remaining councillors, could the severance package that you are working on be implemented unchanged under the current law if co-option was agreed?

Mr Maye: Yes, it could.

Mr Ford: Therefore, if there was good will from all councillors, we would not need a decision from Mr Goggins. That is a challenge to the 562 councillors in Northern Ireland.

Mr Dallat: It is also an act of faith.

Ms Broadway: We covered clauses 18 and 19 last week.

Clause 20 provides that regulations under clause 3(7), which deals with certification requirements for contracts and the statutory transition committees, are to be made by affirmative resolution. All other regulations are to be made by negative resolution.

Clause 21 defines certain words and terms that are used in the Bill.

Clause 22 provides that clause 3 of the Bill, which provides the power to make regulations concerning certification requirements, and the remainder of the Bill will come into operation the day after Royal Assent. The other provisions in Part 1 will come into operation by means of a commencement Order.

Clause 23 is the short title.

The Deputy Chairperson: Are members happy with those clauses? Do they require any further information or wish to suggest any amendments?

Given that no one has responded, I thank the departmental officials, Ian Maye, Julie Broadway, Jim Stewart and Angela Fitzpatrick. We will now commence the clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill, and I want members to pay attention, because this stage is very important.

The Committee Clerk: I remind members that [Inaudible.]. If members do not have enough time to discuss certain clauses, they can be parked and come back to at a later date. In the meantime, members can go through the more straightforward ones to see whether some form of acceptable agreement can be reached.

The Deputy Chairperson: If we require further information about any clauses, we can put them on hold.

Clause 1 (Functions to include power to enter contracts)

The Deputy Chairperson: There is an issue with clause 1, so are members agreed that we park it until we receive further information?

Mr Ford: Could we agree that we accept clause 1 if the Department were to suggest deleting subsection 3?

The Committee Clerk: Yes, you certainly can do that.

Mr Ford: Then I am quite happy to accept what the Department is saying.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the Committee's proposed amendment, put and clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 (Certified contracts to be intra vires)

The Committee Clerk: The Department referred to a possible amendment to delete subsection 5(a). I do not know whether members have an opinion on that.

Mr Ford: I think that we should park clause 2, because it is a bit more complicated.

The Committee Clerk: In addition, Belfast City Council mentioned clause 2 with respect to [Inaudible.].

The Deputy Chairperson: Do members agree that we park clause 2?

Clause 2 referred for further consideration.

Clauses 3 to 8 agreed to.

Clause 9 (Introductory)

Mr Ford: I had an exchange with Ian Maye about the expansion of Belfast City Council, which is not covered by this clause. I would not be happy to approve this clause today, given that there was talk about the Department looking at its implications. The Committee needs to hear further from the Department.

Clause 9 referred for further consideration.

Clause 10 (Control of disposals and contracts of existing councils)

Mr Ford: Again, this was a clause about which the Department said that it would welcome the Committee's further thoughts. We should park this clause, too.

Clause 10 referred for further consideration.

Clauses 11 and 12 agreed to.

Clause 13 (Contravention of direction)

The Committee Clerk: The Department's advice is that it is seeking more information.

Clause 13 referred for further consideration.

Clause 14 (Statutory transition committees: constitution)

Mr Ford: I am not sure about clause 14. To some extent, this hangs on my concerns about clause 9. The Committee needs to park clause 14 until it hears more about clause 9.

Clause 14 referred for further consideration.

Clause 15 (Statutory transition committees: functions)

The Committee Clerk: There were a range of concerns about this clause, too

Clause 15 referred for further consideration.

Clause 16 (Power to modify existing legislation)

Mr Ford: Again, this hangs on the same point.

Clause 16 referred for further consideration.

Clause 17 (Severance payments to councillors)

Mr Ford: Do we have a quorum capable of taking that decision, if members are ruling themselves out on that point?

Mr Beggs: I think that we need guidance on that.

The Deputy Chairperson: OK. Is the Committee agreed to get more information and guidance on that matter?

Clause 17 referred for further consideration.

Clause 18 (Acquisition of land otherwise than by agreement)

The Committee Clerk: Several organisations had concerns about the width and power of the clause.

Mr Beggs: Someone wanted it widened; was that not it?

Mr Ford: Someone wanted to widen it for other purposes, but the question was whether there had been adequate consultation to cover anything other than waste management issues.

The Committee Clerk: There was an issue with community planning.

Mr Beggs: Yes, it struck me that there was no balance, or anything to demonstrate an overall community benefit, because community planning is not there. Waste is a clear issue where there will be — personally, I am satisfied.

The Deputy Chairperson: OK. Would the Committee like to park clause 18?

Mr Ford: I think that we could agree this clause. The evidence on the lack of consultation showed that we could not widen it at this stage.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

Clauses 19 to 23 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

e-Pic Project

Mr J Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment (i) if any staff within the Planning Service have been held responsible for the significant delays and cost overruns in the management of the e-PIC project; and (ii) have any staff involved with the project been disciplined, demoted, transferred, or dismissed, in connection with the failure to meet targets for the implementation of the project. (AQW 8102/09)

Minister of the Environment (Mr S Wilson): There have been many factors which caused delay and cost overruns on the ePIC project, in particular the complexity of the solution required to support planning in Northern Ireland. A high level of unavoidable personnel turnover within the Planning Service and within the consortium of contractors, at earlier stages of the project, was also a factor. None of the difficulties which caused delays and cost overruns is directly attributable to staff involved in the project and no staff have been disciplined, demoted, transferred or dismissed.

PPS21

Mr D O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment if a dwelling approved on a farm under draft PPS21 must be of a certain size, design or type; and to detail the criteria used for these factors. (AQW 36/10)

Minister of the Environment: Draft PPS 21 does not specify the size, design or type of dwelling which will be acceptable on a farm. However, Policy CTY 13, which deals with the integration and design of buildings, states that a new building will be unacceptable where (among other things), the design is inappropriate for the site and its locality.

PPS21

Mr D O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment when a complete, detailed PPS21 will be in place. (AQW 37/10)

Minister of the Environment: I will discuss the finalisation of PPS21 with the Executive Subcommittee on the Review of Rural Planning Policy. The final version will be put in place after it has been agreed by the Executive.

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Freedom of Information Act: Section 10

Mr Kennedy asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what action is being taken to improve the Department's compliance with Section 10 of the Freedom of Information Act. (AQW 17/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr McGuinness): The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister is committed to fulfilling its obligations under Section 10 of the Freedom of Information (FOI) Act in providing responses to FOI requests within the statutory time frame. The Department has an excellent track record in dealing with information requests since the introduction of FOI legislation in January 2005. Although OFMDFM has experienced significant year-on-year increases in the number of requests received, we have nevertheless responded to 94% of the 566 requests received to date within the statutory time frame (including extensions permitted under section 10(3) of the FOI Act).

The Department has a number of arrangements in place to ensure continuous improvement in its FOI performance. This includes allocating a senior official as the Senior Responsible Owner for each FOI request, weekly reports to us on all departmental FOI cases, oversight scrutiny of performance by the Departmental Board and the provision of guidance and support on the proper application of exemptions by the departmental Information Management Unit. In addition, all requests are monitored on an ongoing basis to ensure compliance with FOI legislation, including section 10 compliance.

To date, the Department has achieved an impressive performance in providing responses to FOI requests within the statutory time frame and expects to maintain and indeed improve its levels of performance in the future.

Freedom of Information: Central Team

Mr Kennedy asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an outline of the recent reports issued by the Central Freedom of Information Team on trends and significant developments in FOI. (AQW 19/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Central Freedom of Information Team produces a number of reports on behalf of all Departments. This includes an Annual Report and quarterly reports which focus on the performance of the Departments in complying with the Freedom of Information Act 2000, and which are published on the OFMDFM website. The Annual Report for 2008 and the report for quarter one of 2009 are the latest available.

Monthly reports are also produced for our information and copied to Executive colleagues. They incorporate an executive summary which notes any significant trends and also policy or casework developments, a list of significant requests, and a statistical summary. The report for July 2009 is the most recent we have seen.

Ministerial Code

Mr Savage asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to clarify who has statutory authority to deal with alleged breaches of the Ministerial Code. (AQW 27/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Section 28A of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 requires Ministers to act in accordance with the provisions of the Ministerial Code and any alleged breach of the Code could therefore be decided as a matter of law.

Under various provisions of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, failure by a Minister to observe any of the terms of the Pledge of Office, as set out in paragraph 1.4 of the Ministerial Code, may be the subject of a motion for a resolution of the Assembly for the purposes of:

- the exclusion of a Minister from office (Section 30)
- the reduction of a Minister's salary (Section 47A)
- the censure of a Minister (Section 51D)

Any such motion cannot be moved unless:

- (a) it is supported by at least 30 members of the Assembly; or
- (b) it is moved by the First Minister and deputy First Minister acting jointly; or
- (c) it is moved by the Presiding Officer in pursuance of a notice from the Secretary of State.

In addition, such resolutions cannot be passed by the Assembly without cross-community support.

Internal Consultancy

Mr McGlone asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to define 'internal consultancy' and what guidelines are in place for its use by Departments. (AQW 44/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Internal consultancy describes advice, expertise and services provided to the Department by another department or agency within the Northern Ireland Civil Service. Examples of internal consultancy services used by OFMDFM include business consultancy services provided by the Department of Finance and Personnel's (DFP) Delivery and Innovation Division (DID), research and analysis undertaken by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA), and professional procurement services and support provided by DFP's Central Procurement Directorate (CPD).

DFP guidance on the Use of Consultants, which has been revised to incorporate recommendations made by the Assembly's Public Accounts Committee in November 2007, is applied by OFMDFM in all proposals to engage internal or external consultants. In the first instance, Departmental or NICS skills and resources are utilised by OFMDFM, where available, to undertake new areas of work or to provide expert advice and services.

Strict controls are operated over the management of all consultancy assignments, including the appointment of an individual or team to manage each assignment, careful monitoring of agreed interim milestones and targets, and the completion of Post-Project Evaluations (PPEs) to ensure that the objectives of the assignment have been met and lessons learned. All consultancy assignments are rigorously managed to ensure costs are controlled, objectives are met in full, and that an effective skills transfer takes place.

The use of internal consultants delivers value for money, and ensures that Departmental and NICS skills and resources are fully utilised and exploited. All consultancy spend is directly related to the delivery of OFMDFM's obligations and commitments in the Programme for Government 2008-11.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr Shannon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what percentage of the site-specific objections to the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan could, or should, have been addressed through written representation procedures rather than by any form of hearing. (AQW 116/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Planning Appeals Commission is an independent tribunal Non-Departmental Public Body. Given its independent tribunal status, its Chief Commissioner has been asked to provide a response directly to you, and we understand that she has written to you in the following terms:

"I have been asked to provide you with information requested in the above Assembly Questions.

The Planning Appeals Commission received 4,257 objections to the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan, 5,017 objections to the draft Magherafelt Area Plan and 1,590 objections to the draft Bandridge, Newry & Mourne Area Plan.

The Commission does not have the resources to examine all the above individual objections to establish what percentage of the thousands of site-specific objections could, or should, have been addressed through the Written Representation procedure.

I would be happy to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable.”

Magherafelt Area Plan

Mr Shannon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what percentage of the site-specific objections to the draft Magherafelt Area Plan could, or should, have been addressed through written representation procedures rather than by any form of hearing. (AQW 117/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Planning Appeals Commission is an independent tribunal Non-Departmental Public Body. Given its independent tribunal status, its Chief Commissioner has been asked to provide a response directly to you, and we understand that she has written to you in the following terms:

“I have been asked to provide you with information requested in the above Assembly Questions.

The Planning Appeals Commission received 4,257 objections to the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan, 5,017 objections to the draft Magherafelt Area Plan and 1,590 objections to the draft Banbridge, Newry & Mourne Area Plan.

The Commission does not have the resources to examine all the above individual objections to establish what percentage of the thousands of site-specific objections could, or should, have been addressed through the Written Representation procedure.

I would be happy to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable.”

Banbridge, Newry & Mourne Area Plan

Mr Shannon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what percentage of the site-specific objections to the draft Banbridge, Newry & Mourne Area Plan could, or should, be addressed through written representation procedures rather than by any form of hearing. (AQW 118/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Planning Appeals Commission is an independent tribunal Non-Departmental Public Body. Given its independent tribunal status, its Chief Commissioner has been asked to provide a response directly to you, and we understand that she has written to you in the following terms:

“I have been asked to provide you with information requested in the above Assembly Questions.

The Planning Appeals Commission received 4,257 objections to the draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan, 5,017 objections to the draft Magherafelt Area Plan and 1,590 objections to the draft Banbridge, Newry & Mourne Area Plan.

I would be happy to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable.”

Planning Appeals Commission

Mr Shannon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that the Planning Appeals Commission committed itself to capturing the relevant data commencing from 1st April 2009, what percentage of appeals received from that date are being addressed by informal hearing and does the Commission believe these could, or should be, addressed through written representation procedures rather than by any form of hearing. (AQW 119/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The Planning Appeals Commission is an independent tribunal Non-Departmental Public Body. Given its independent tribunal status, its Chief Commissioner has been asked to provide a response directly to you, and we understand that she has written to you in the following terms:

“I have been asked to provide you with information requested in the above Assembly Question.

The Planning Appeals Commission received 187 appeals during the period 01 April 2009 to 31 August 2009. In response, the Commission wrote to 79 (42%) of these appellants suggesting that their appeal could be best determined by the exchange of Written Submissions, without either an Informal Hearing or an Accompanied Site Visit which had been requested.

Of the 187 appellants, 64 had requested Informal Hearings. The Commission wrote to 36 of these suggesting that oral proceedings were unnecessary.

Of the 187 appeals received from 01 April 2009, 38 (20%) are now following the Informal Hearing procedure.

I would be happy to provide any further information you require arising out of this response or to meet with you to discuss the matter if that would be more suitable ”

IT systems: OFMDFM

Mr Hamilton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) all new IT systems installed within their Department in the last 5 years; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date. (AQW 127/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: All new IT systems installed within the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister in the last five years are shown in the table below.

| Year | System Name | Initial Budget | Actual Cost | Estimated Start Date | Actual Start Date |
|---------|---|----------------|-------------|----------------------|-------------------|
| 2005/06 | None | | | | |
| 2006/07 | None | | | | |
| 2007/08 | None | | | | |
| 2008/09 | ChARM – business planning system | £4900 | £4900 | Aug 08 | Aug 08 |
| 2009/10 | Departmental and Business Area Business Planning Systems – developed from ChARM | £4800 | £4800 | Jul 09/ Sep 09 | Jul 09/ Sep 09 |

The list excludes NICS-wide systems (the reform programme and IT Assist-led infrastructural systems) installed in the Department of Finance and Personnel or in IT service provider premises during the period.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

NI Library Authority: Board

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for the names and political party affiliation of Councillors appointed by him or his predecessors to the Board of Library's NI. (AQW 130/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr N McCausland): Eleven Councillors, details as listed in the attached annex, were appointed to the Board of the Northern Ireland Library Authority (Libraries NI) on 1 August 2009.

Nelson McCausland MLA

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

School Milk

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to detail how many children in (i) nursery schools; (ii) primary schools; (iii) secondary and grammar schools; and (iv) special needs were in receipt of (a) free school milk; and (b) school milk at a cost as they did not qualify for free school milk, at the start of the academic year 2009/10. (AQW 24/10)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): The figures requested showing the number of pupils taking milk in the 2009/10 academic year are not yet available.

However, under my Department's Milk and Meals Arrangements free school milk is provided to;

- all pupils at special schools,
- pupils in nursery and primary schools who do not have access to school meals, and
- individual nursery and primary school pupils where it is deemed necessary in the interests of their health.

All pre-school children are eligible for free milk under the DHSSPS's Day Care Food Scheme. In addition, drinking milk must be available every day as an option with school meals. There is no accurate way of measuring how many choose to buy milk with their school meal.

Tá liostaithe thíos na figiúirí is deireanaí atá ar fáil ó na Boird Oideachais agus Leabharlainne, a thaispeánann líon na ndaltaí a bhí ag fáil bainne i mí Meithimh 2009.

I have listed below the latest available figures, supplied by the Education and Library Boards, which show the number of pupils taking milk as at June 2009.

| | Free | Paid |
|-----------------------|-------|--------|
| Nursery | 8,979 | 0 |
| Primary | 192 | 37,357 |
| Secondary And Grammar | 0 | 0 |
| Special | 3,491 | 0 |

Psychology Students

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Education if all psychology students who obtained their doctorates in the academic year 2008/09 have now taken up posts with the various Education and Library Boards. (AQW 26/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Príomhfheidhmeannaigh na mBord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne (ELBanna) gur ceapadh gach duine den dáréag a chuir Dochtúireacht i Síceolaíocht an

Oideachais, an Pháiste agus an Ógánaigh (DECAP) i gcrích sa bhliain acadúil 2008/09, gur ceapadh chuig poist lánaimseartha leis na ELBanna iad mar seo a leanas:

The Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have advised that all twelve trainees who completed a Doctorate in Educational, Child and Adolescent Psychology (DECAP) in the academic year 2008/09 have been appointed to full-time posts with ELBs as follows:

| | Permanent | Temporary |
|-------|-----------|-----------|
| BELB | 1 | 2 |
| SEELB | 0 | 3 |
| WELB | 5 | 1 |

Of the above seven have already taken up their new posts, two are hoping to do so shortly and three are finalising their doctorates in the near future.

All entrants to the DECAP course are required to sign an undertaking agreeing to apply for posts in the ELBs for a period of two years following completion of their qualification and, if successful in their application, to work for a Board for a period of two years. If they fail to do so without reasonable excuse, the ELBs will take steps to recover all or part (depending on the circumstances of the case) of the course fees and bursaries paid to the trainee.

Irish-Medium Post-Primary Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many pupils enrolled in Irish-medium post-primary schools in each of the last three years including 2009/10. (AQW 28/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh leagtha amach sna táblaí thíos. Ní bheidh fáil ar shonraí rollaithe don scoilbhliain 2009/10 go dtí go gcríochnófar an daonáireamh scoile níos moille i mbliana.

The information requested is set out in the tables below. Enrolment data for 2009/10 will not be available until completion of the school census later in the year.

Notes:

1. Enrolment figures include pupils in nursery, reception and year 1 – 7 classes where applicable.
2. Figures exclude pupils who are enrolled in Irish-medium units.
3. 'n.a.' is "not applicable" as the school existed as an independent school.

Irish-Medium Primary Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to list all Irish-medium primary schools by parliamentary constituency in each of the last five years including 2009/10. (AQW 30/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh leagtha amach sna táblaí thíos.

Irish-Medium Primary Schools

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many pupils enrolled in Irish-medium primary schools in each of the last three years including 2009/10. (AQW 33/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh leagtha amach sna táblaí thíos. Ní bheidh fáil ar shonraí rollaithe don scoilbhliain 2009/10 go dtí go gcríochnófar an daonáireamh scoile níos moille i mbliana.

The information requested is set out in the tables below. Enrolment data for 2009/10 will not be available until completion of the school census later in the year.

Note:

- Enrolment figures include pupils in nursery, reception and year 1 – 7 classes where applicable.
- Figures exclude pupils who are enrolled in Irish medium units.
- 'n.a.' is "not applicable" as the school existed as an independent school.

Children not Sent to School

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what assistance has been given to parents who have opted not to send their children to school at the start of the academic year 2009/10. (AQW 64/10)

The Minister of Education: Tugann Boird Oideachais agus Leabharlainne tacaíocht do thuismitheoirí le scoil a fháil dá bpáiste i rith agus i ndiaidh na bpróiseas rollaithe oscailte (a thugann áit do pháistí i scoil). Muna mbíonn áit ar fáil i scoileanna tosaíochtaí an pháiste, soláthróidh an Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne liosta de scoileanna eile a bhfuil áit ar fáil iontu do thuismitheoirí.

Education and Library Boards support parents in finding a school for their child both during, and after, the open enrolment processes (which place children in a school). If a child's preferences have been exhausted, the Education and Library Board will supply the parents with a list of alternative schools with places available.

If at the end of the process some children remain unplaced, their parents are advised to identify a preference for one of the schools with places available in order to ensure that their child will be placed in time for the beginning of the school term. Details of children un-placed and not attending school after the start of the school year are forwarded to the Education Welfare Service as, by this point, there is a non-attendance issue.

Education and Skills Authority: Chair Designate

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the position of Chair Designate of the Education and Skills Authority (i) how many applicants applied; (ii) how many were short listed; (iii) what criteria were applied for each stage of the appointment; and (iv) who served on the appointment panel. (AQW 65/10)

The Minister of Education: Is féidir liom a chur in iúl: (i) go bhfuarthas 14 iarratas san iomlán; (ii) agus nuair a seiceáladh na hiarratais do incháilitheacht na n-iarratasóirí in aghaidh na gcritéar riachtanach, iarradh ar naonúr acu teacht le haghaidh agallaimh;

I can advise that: (i) a total of 14 applications were received; (ii) following an eligibility paper sift of the applications against the essential criteria nine applicants were invited for interviews; (iii) applicants were expected to demonstrate that they had the necessary skills, experience and competencies, both on their application form and at interview, to meet all the essential criteria as set out in the Information/Application Pack issued to potential candidates. The criteria were Corporate Governance; Leadership; Thinking Strategically; Making an impact with others; and Analytical thinking; (iv) the short listing and interview panel was comprised of Mr Will Haire (DE Permanent Secretary), Ms Brenda McLaughlin (Civil Service Commissioner) and Ms Joan Smyth (Independent Assessor appointed by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments (OCPANI)).

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Companies: Cost to DE

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education how much has been spent by her Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events companies. (AQW 70/10)

The Minister of Education: Fuair an Roinn seirbhísí ó ghnólaigh príobháideacha comhairliúcháin agus ó chuideachtaí imeachtaí ar roinnt ócáidí le cúig bliana anuas. Tá achoimre sa tábla thíos ar na costais a tabhaíodh i ngach bliain le cúig bliana airgeadais anuas.

The Department have employed the services of private consultancy firms and events companies on a number of occasions over the last five years. A summary of the costs incurred is contained in the table below for each of the last five financial years.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

| Financial Year | Private Consultancy Firms £ | Events Companies companies |
|----------------|--------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 2004/05 | £765,799.21 | £0.00 |
| 2005/06 | £532,244.15 | £4,205.00 |
| 2006/07 | £905,600.57 | £764.89 |
| 2007/08 | £1,067,704.53 | £4,630.00 |
| 2008/09 | £665,009.68 | £3,620.00 |

Special Educational Needs Statements

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of young people who have received Special Educational Needs Statements, broken down by (i) constituency ; and (ii) District Council area, in each of the last three years. (AQW 75/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Príomhfheidhmeannaigh na mBord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne (ELBanna) nach gcoinnítear an t-eolas a d'iarr tú de réir toghcheantair nó de réir limistéar na gComhairlí Ceantair. Mar sin de, tá an t-eolas á thabhairt de réir limistéar na mBord, mar seo a leanas:-

The Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have advised that the information you have requested is not held by either constituency or District Council area. The information has, therefore, been provided by Board area as follows:-

| | BELB | NEELB | SEELB | SELB | WELB |
|----------|------|-------|-------|------|------|
| 2006/07* | 430 | 273 | 335 | 410 | 350 |
| 2007/08* | 393 | 326 | 342 | 660 | 231 |
| 2008/09* | 451 | 280 | 145 | 342 | 200 |

* academic years

The above figures refer to children and young people who received final statements of special educational need. They do not include those who may have received reviewed statements.

Special Educational Needs

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education to detail how the additional £25 million for Special Educational Needs has been distributed to date. (AQW 77/10)

The Minister of Education: Fuair mo Roinn cistiú de £25 milliún thar dhá bhliain le tús a chur le forfheidhmiú na moltaí beartais san Athbheithniú ar SEN agus Chuimsiú. Tá sé beartaithe go gcaithfear £750k sa bhliain 2009-10 agus £24.3 milliún sa bhliain 2010-11.

My Department has secured funding of £25 million over two years to commence implementation of the Review of SEN and Inclusion policy proposals. It is planned that £750k will be spent in 2009-10 and £24.3 million in 2010-11.

The £750k secured for 2009/10 will be used for pre-implementation activities on a capacity building programme for teachers and on developing standards/indicators and good practice guidance for Special Educational Needs Co-ordinators (SENCOs); funding has also been set aside for the consultation process which is currently underway.

To date, £5k has been allocated to the 5 Education and Library Boards to provide substitute cover for teachers attending SENCO sub-group meetings which formed part of the pre-consultation process.

The 24.3m secured for 2010/11 will be used for the implementation of a number of proposals contained in the Review and which will be individually costed in the coming months.

Post-Primary Entrance Test

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage intake of each entrance test grade accepted by each individual grammar school at the start of the September 2009 school term. (AQW 80/10)

The Minister of Education: Níl an t-eolas seo ag an Roinn Oideachais faoi láthair. Cruinníonn na Boird Oideachais agus Leabharlainne na staitisticí seo ó iar-bhunscoileanna i mí Mheán Fómhair agus i mí Dheireadh Fómhair gach bliain, le haistriú daltaí idir scoileanna sna chéad chúpla seachtain den téarma acadúil a chur san áireamh.

This information is not currently available to the Department of Education. Each year the Education and Library Boards gather these statistics from post primary schools in September and October, allowing for movement of pupils between schools in the initial weeks of the academic term.

Once the statistics are collated and checked they are made available to the Department by early November. When this information becomes available I will write to you providing the statistics you seek.

Alcohol Awareness for Children

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education to outline what plans she has to introduce alcohol awareness for children under the school health curriculum. (AQW 95/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá mé sásta a chur in iúl go bhfuil feachtas ar alcól do pháistí mar chuid den churaclam cheana féin. Tríd an churaclam athbheithnithe, bíonn gach duine óg ábalta foghlaim faoi na héifeachtaí a bhíonn ag substaintí dleathacha agus mídhleathacha ar an chorp agus faoi na rioscaí agus na hiarmhairtí a bhaineann lena mí-úsáid. Bíonn siad ábalta scileanna a fhorbairt a bhíonn de dhíth orthu le déileáil le piarbhrú agus leis na fadhbanna a thug orthu drugaí agus alcól a ghlacadh sa chéad áit.

I am pleased to say that alcohol awareness for children is already part of the curriculum. The revised curriculum gives every young person the chance to investigate the effects on the body of legal and illegal substances and the risks and consequences of their misuse. It allows them to develop the skills they need to deal with peer pressure and the problems that may drive them to drugs and alcohol in the first place.

Schools, along with parents and others, have an essential role to play in ensuring our young people are fully equipped to make the right choices with regard to drugs and alcohol. My Department has policies in place to educate and support our young people and has issued guidance to all schools on drugs education, including alcohol. Schools are required to have a drugs policy which includes education on alcohol and drugs misuse. Education Boards provide support to schools and youth clubs with dedicated drug and alcohol education officers.

The youth and community sector also targets programmes at those most at risk of drug and alcohol misuse, to help them make healthy choices.

I would like to assure you that my Department is participating fully in the DHSSPS led New Strategic Direction on Drugs and Alcohol Steering Group, including the DHSSPS Minister's recent cross-departmental, integrated Action Plan that seeks to prevent and reduce the harm suffered by children and young people from alcohol misuse.

Dyslexic Children

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education how many children in schools are dyslexic; and how many are awaiting assessment. (AQW 96/10)

The Minister of Education: Léiríonn sonraí ó Dhaonáireamh Scoile 2008/09 go raibh 5,944 dalta scoile san iomlán ag Céim 1 – 5 den Chód Cleachtais do Riachtanais Speisialta Oideachais (SEN) a raibh disléicse orthu.

Data from the 2008/09 School Census shows that there were a total of 5, 944 pupils in schools at Stage 1 – 5 of the Special Educational Needs (SEN) Code of Practice with Dyslexia.

There were 175 pupils recorded at Stage 4 of the SEN Code of Practice. Stage 4 of the Code is when the relevant Education and Library Board (ELB) considers the need for a statutory assessment and, if appropriate, makes a multi-disciplinary assessment. Therefore, pupils at this stage are awaiting assessment from the ELB to determine if they are to be classified as being statemented.

Note:

1. Figures include nursery schools, primary, post primary and special schools.

Swine Flu

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what action she is taking to address the possibility of Swine Flu outbreaks at primary and secondary schools. (AQW 115/10)

The Minister of Education: Ón uair a bhris flú na muc amach níos luaithe i mbliana, tá mo Roinn ag comhoibriú go dlúth leis an Roinn Sláinte, Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sábháilteachta Poiblí agus leis an Public Health Agency le comhairle agus treoir a sholáthar do scoileanna agus don earnáil oideachais ar fad.

Since the outbreak of swine flu earlier this year, my Department has worked closely with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Public Health Agency to provide schools and the wider education sector with advice and guidance.

This advice and guidance was updated and issued to schools in time for the new school year starting this month and school principals have been given direct access telephone numbers to the Public Health Agency, if they require specific case advice. Regular good personal hygiene practice is key to reducing the spread of all virus, including swine flu, in schools. Schools have been advised to ensure that adequate supplies of liquid soap and hot water are available for both pupils and staff.

I have met on two occasions with the Minister of Health and on one occasion with the Minister for Employment and Learning to ensure a continued co-ordinated approach to how the education sector deals with any impacts of swine flu. In addition, my officials monitor advice from the World health Organisation and liaise on an all Ireland basis.

Interactive Computerised Assessment System

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what plans are in place to review the Interactive Computerised Assessment System. (AQW 198/10)

The Minister of Education: Tugadh isteach an Interactive Computerised Assessment System (InCAS) ar bhonn céimneach ón scoilbhliain 2007/08 le tacú le measúnú diagnóiseach i mbunscoileanna do dhaltai i mblianta 4-7.

The Interactive Computerised Assessment System (InCAS) has been introduced on a phased basis since the 2007/08 school year to support diagnostic assessment in primary schools for pupils in Years 4-7.

My officials are working with the Education and Training Inspectorate to plan the evaluation of the use of the InCAS outcomes in primary schools to inform teaching and learning and good practice will be highlighted as part of the inspection process.

In addition, training and support for teachers in using InCAS has been provided by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) and an evaluation of the InCAS implementation process has been carried out in both the 2007/08 and 2008/09 school years. My officials are providing you with a copy of the 2008/09 evaluation report in your capacity as Chairperson of the Education Committee, and a copy of the previous evaluation was provided last year to Committee members. CCEA advises that their evaluation process has been independently appraised by the Consultation Institute and that the feedback from this is very positive.

0-6 Strategy

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education when the 0-6 Strategy will be published. (AQW 209/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an Straitéis á dréachtú faoi láthair le hionchur ó na príomhpháirtithe leasmhara. Tá sé beartaithe comhairliúchán a dhéanamh leis an Ghrúpa Réigiúnach Tagartha agus le Bord an Tionscadail níos moille i mbliana sula gcuirfear an Straitéis faoi bhráid an Choiste Oideachais. Ina dhiaidh sin, eiseofar an Straitéis le haghaidh comhairliúcháin phoiblí.

The Department is currently drafting the strategy in conjunction with input from key stakeholders. Consultations with the Regional Reference Group and Project Board are planned later in the year prior to the Strategy being made available to the Education Committee, after which time the Strategy will be issued for public consultation.

STEM Review

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education when the STEM Review will be published. (AQW 210/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá sé beartaithe go bhfoilseoidh an fhoireann neamhspleách athbhreithnithe an tuarascáil ar athbhreithniú STEM agus go gcuirfidh an Dr Hugh Cormican faoi mo bhráid agus faoi bhráid an Aire Fostaíochta agus Foghlama í ag ócáid lainseála ar 30 Meán Fómhair 2009 ag an Ghailearaí Fada ag Stormont.

It is intended that the STEM review report will be published by the independent review team and presented to the DEL Minister and myself by Dr Hugh Cormican at a launch planned for 30 September 2009 at the Long Gallery in Stormont.

Ballymoney High School: Newbuild

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline the reasons for the delay in a new school build for Ballymoney High School. (AQW 212/10)

The Minister of Education: The Outline Business Case (OBC) for Ballymoney High School and Rainey Endowed School confirming PPP procurement was approved by the Department in October 2008. Since that time problems with financial markets brought about by the Credit Crunch called into question the viability of achieving a Value for Money (VfM) solution to the Schools' accommodation needs via PPP procurement. The Department needed to assess the impact of the current economic climate on this and other PPP projects before proceeding. The Department has concluded that an affordable VfM solution to the Schools' accommodation needs is unlikely to be achieved through the use of PPP procurement.

Ar 4 Meán Fómhair 2009 cuireadh litir chuig Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirthuaiscirt, agus cuireadh cóip di chuig Príomhoide Ballymoney High School, le cur in iúl gur féidir tús a chur le planáil don scoil nua agus go bpleanálfaid don scoil faoi mhodh soláthair atá á mhaoiniú go comhghnásach.

On 4 September 2009 a letter issued to the North Eastern Education and Library Board, copied to the Principal of Ballymoney High School, confirming that planning for a new school can now commence and will be taken forward under a conventionally funded procurement route. The existing Economic Appraisals will be used to take the project forward to the planning stage and the existing project manager has been retained to provide continuity of service to both schools and to accelerate delivery.

IT systems: DE

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) all new IT systems that were installed within her Department; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date, in the last five years. (AQW 217/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh mionsonraithe thíos:

The information requested is detailed below:

- (i) Teachers' Payroll/HR System
- (ii) Initial Budget
 - £868k implementation cost
 - £95k recurrent cost Year 1
 - £136k recurrent cost Year 2 onwards
- (iii) Actual Costs
 - Implementation costs to Date £836k. Known costs to complete implementation £70k.
 - Recurrent costs will be as stated
- (iv) Estimated Start Date April 2008
- (v) Actual Start Date March 2009

Castle Towers School, Ballymena

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to relocate the Castle Towers School, Ballymena, onto a single site; and to ensure that this project is brought to an early conclusion. (AQW 283/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá mórsceim chaipitiúil oibreacha do Castle Tower Special School ag céim an Bhreithmheasa Eacnamaíochta (EA). Moltar foirgneamh nua ar iarláithreán Ballymena Boys' and Girls' Schools san EA.

A major capital works scheme for Castle Tower Special School is at Economic Appraisal (EA) stage. The EA recommends a new build on the former site of Ballymena Boys' and Girls' Schools.

In August 2009, the Department of Education (DE) provided the NEELB with comments on the EA and a further revised EA is expected to be submitted shortly. Following approval of the EA, it has been agreed that the scheme will proceed to project development and design stage. The project will then be in a strong position to compete for funding from a future capital announcement.

Primary and Post-Primary Schools

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Education how many primary and post primary schools have closed in each of the last six years. (AQW 328/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas mionsonraithe sa tábla thíos. Ní áirítear Náiscoilleana, Scoilleana Speisialta ná aonaid ag bunscoilleana ná ag iarbhunscoilleana ar druideadh iad.

The information is detailed in the table below. Closures of Nursery Schools, Special Schools or closure of units at primary or post-primary schools are not included.

| School Year | Primary (incl. preparatory departments) | | Post Primary | |
|---------------|---|---------------------------------------|--------------|-------------------------------------|
| | Closures | Amalgamations | Closures | Amalgamations |
| 2003/04 | 4 | 1 amalgamation involving 2 schools | 0 | 2 amalgamations involving 4 schools |
| 2004/05 | 4 | 5 amalgamations involving 12 schools | 0 | 1 amalgamation involving 3 schools |
| 2005/06 | 8 | 1 amalgamation involving 2 schools | 1 | 1 amalgamation involving 2 schools |
| 2006/07 | 9 | 3 amalgamations involving 8 schools | 2 | No amalgamations |
| 2007/08 | 8 | 4 amalgamations involving 9 schools | 4 | No amalgamations |
| 2008/09 | 8 | No amalgamations | 4 | No amalgamations |
| Totals | 41 | 14 amalgamations involving 33 schools | 11 | 4 amalgamations involving 9 schools |

Primary School Uniform Grants

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Education how many Primary school uniform grants were awarded up to the start of the new school term; and what was the monetary value of those grants awarded. (AQW 354/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá deimhnithe ag na Boird Oideachais agus Leabharlainne, arb iad a riarann an scéim, go raibh 24,135 deontas íoctha acu ag deireadh mhí Lúnasa i leith costais éidí bunscoile ag costas iomlán de £844,725. Tá curtha in iúl acu fosta go bhfuil iarratais ar an deontas d'éidí bunscoile á bpróiseáil acu go fóill.

The Education and Library Boards, which administer the scheme, have confirmed that at the end of August they paid 24,135 grants towards the cost of primary school uniforms at a total cost of £844,725. They have also advised that they are still processing applications for the Primary School uniform grant.

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Belfast Metropolitan College: Efficiency Review

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to the proposed E3 campus (i) when the business case was carried out; (ii) when the business case was reviewed and amended; and (iii) whether the proposal been included in the Efficiency Review of the Belfast Metropolitan College. (AQW 11/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): The Economic Appraisal for the proposed E3 campus confirmed that it was value for money in November 2004. No substantive change has been made since that date. The project received a Ministerial funding commitment at April 2006. Although the impending 2007 college merger delayed the project, design development has now been completed, Planning Approval has been granted and the project is out to tender with contractors expected to be on site in January 2010.

The Terms of Reference for the Efficiency Review of Belfast Metropolitan College required the adequacy and effectiveness of the College estate planning process to be examined. The Review considered the adequacy of the college's approach to strategic planning across the entire estate but did not carry out a detailed examination of individual sites.

Belfast Metropolitan College: Efficiency Review

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many draft reports on the Efficiency Review of the Belfast Metropolitan College have been written and subsequently amended. (AQW 12/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The team of consultants which carried out the Efficiency Review of Belfast Metropolitan College has provided two draft reports to the Department. The second draft has been formally presented to the college governing body for consideration and comment. The college provided comments which are now being considered and, once agreed, the report will be finalised.

Belfast Metropolitan College: Efficiency Review

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the cost of the Efficiency Review of the Belfast Metropolitan College. (AQW 13/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The total cost of the Efficiency Review of Belfast Metropolitan College was £71,273.

Crèche Facilities: UU, Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is the current status of the crèche at the University of Ulster's Coleraine Campus. (AQW 18/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I am advised by the University of Ulster that the current childcare arrangements on all its campuses will be maintained in their present form until, at least, August 2010.

The University is currently considering options for childcare provision at its Coleraine, Jordanstown and Magee campuses. The overall aim of the review is to ensure the most effective support for the widest range of students, staff and children. As part of this review, the University has recently undertaken a public consultation process.

The consultation period ended at the end of August 2009, with over 350 responses. The University's Child Care Review Working Group will now be reviewing the submissions received. Following this review, options will be presented to the University for consideration.

The University has stated that it remains committed to providing support for childcare services. As mentioned earlier in this response, the University has also stated that, whatever the outcomes of the consultation process, the current childcare arrangements on all its campuses will be maintained in their present form until, at least, August 2010.

Crèche Facilities: UU, Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on any plans which may affect the future status of the crèche at Coleraine campus, University of Ulster. (AQW 20/10)

Higher Education Strategy

Mr Storey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the terms of reference for the Higher Education Strategy announced on 6 August 2009. (AQW 200/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Terms of Reference for the Higher Education Strategy are currently in draft form. The Steering Group, which will oversee the development of the Strategy, will meet in late Autumn to agree the Terms of Reference. When they are agreed, it is my intention to share them with Assembly colleagues.

IT Systems: DEL

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) all new IT systems that were installed within his Department; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date, in the last five years. (AQW 219/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: There have been no new IT systems installed within the Department in the last five years.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Companies: Cost to DETI

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much has been spent by her Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events companies.

(AQW 152/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs Foster): In relation to the amount spent over the last 5 years by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on (i) Private Consultancy Firms and (ii) Events Companies, the information is outlined in tables shown in Annexes A and B respectively.

ANNEX A

GDP: Tourism Sector

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give an estimate, on the basis of the most recent figures available, of the size of the tourism sector as a percentage of the overall Northern Ireland Gross Domestic Product.

(AQW 155/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The most recent year for which information on the share of Gross Value Added¹ (GVA) accounted for by tourism in Northern Ireland is 2005. The direct value added from tourism is 2.0% of total Northern Ireland GVA in 2005 and when indirect and induced effects are also included it contributed a total of 3.7% to Northern Ireland GVA².

- 1 Regional Gross Value Added is now used by the Office for National Statistics instead of Gross Domestic Product, when producing the UK Regional Accounts.
- 2 The latest updated estimates are included in the research report 'Tourism in the Northern Ireland Economy – Updated estimates to 2005' which was published in June 2008.

Economic Disadvantage

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many people are estimated to be living in economic disadvantage in (i) each constituency; and (ii) each council area. (AQW 187/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Estimates of 'economic disadvantage' are based on the income and employment domains of the 2005 NI Multiple Deprivation Measure. These domains are not mutually exclusive i.e. one person may be counted as both 'income deprived' and 'employment deprived' depending on their circumstances. It is therefore not possible to answer this question and provide a single measure of the number living in 'economic disadvantage'.

However for information, the tables below provide details of the numbers of people who are 'income deprived' and 'employment deprived' by Parliamentary Constituency and Local Government District per the 2005 measure.

(I) NUMBER OF PEOPLE 'INCOME DEPRIVED' OR 'EMPLOYMENT DEPRIVED' BY PARLIAMENTARY CONSTITUENCY.

| Parliamentary Constituency | Number Income Deprived | Number Employment Deprived |
|----------------------------|------------------------|----------------------------|
| Belfast East | 14,981 | 6,378 |
| Belfast North | 30,450 | 10,569 |
| Belfast South | 14,959 | 6,478 |
| Belfast West | 39,709 | 12,889 |
| East Antrim | 11,948 | 6,263 |
| East Londonderry | 18,055 | 7,420 |
| Fermanagh and South Tyrone | 20,572 | 7,787 |

Visitors to Northern Ireland

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many people have visited Northern Ireland (i) in total; and from (ii) Great Britain; (iii) the Republic of Ireland; (iv) Mainland Europe; (v) North America; and (vi) elsewhere, in each of the last five years. (AQW 188/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Number of trips taken in Northern Ireland by out of state* visitors who stayed at least one night (2004-2008)

| | (i) Total out of state* visitors to NI (000s) | (ii) Visitors to NI from Great Britain (000s) | (iii) Visitors to NI from the Republic of Ireland (000s) | (iv) Visitors to NI from Mainland Europe (000s) | (v) Visitors to NI from North America (000s) | (vi) Visitors to NI from elsewhere (000s) |

| 2004 | 1,985 | 1,408 | 252 | 133 | 122 | 70 |

* Out of state refers to visitors from outside Northern Ireland, i.e. excludes domestic tourism.

Broadband: Satellite

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps she has taken to reduce the cost of satellite broadband for customers who are unable to avail of fixed line broadband. (AQW 243/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: DETI has put in place a contract with Avanti Communications which will provide subsidised satellite broadband services across Northern Ireland for the next three years. Under the contract, Avanti are offering a range of services with downstream rates of between 512 kbps and 3 megabits per second (mbps) for business and residential users.

Prices start at £24.47 per month and £74.75 for installation. These compare favourably with the cost of similar services available under normal commercial conditions elsewhere in the United Kingdom, which are estimated, on average to be approximately £70 per month, with an installation charge of £1,400.

The telecommunications market is privatised and regulated nationally by Ofcom. Investment decisions in the delivery and pricing of services are made by the private sector service providers. DETI has no remit to intervene in such decisions, but may make investments in the marketplace to deliver networks or improve their extent, quality and reliability where it notes underlying market failure.

Satellite represents one solution for users unable to access a fixed line broadband service. In addition to the Remote Broadband Services contract with Avanti Communications, my Department is also currently supporting 3 projects under the Northern Ireland Broadband Fund which will deliver substantial fixed wireless networks across rural parts of Northern Ireland. These projects will promote competition, making an alternative broadband solution available to customers, including those based in Cookstown and surrounding areas. Where there is sufficient evidence of demand and take-up, this may impact on pricing of services.

Broadband: Fixed Line

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if any assessment has been carried out to establish which areas are unable to avail of satisfactory speed fixed line broadband, and if so, to detail these areas. (AQW 245/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: DETI has worked hard to ensure that all premises across Northern Ireland have access to a broadband service of 512 kilobits per second which can satisfactorily support the services small businesses require today. However, my Department has maintained a technology neutral stance, letting the market decide on the most cost effective and efficient solutions.

It is important to note that this market consists of networks which are owned and managed by private sector companies. My Department cannot establish with absolute certainty those areas where broadband can be delivered over fixed telephone wires as the market is continuously changing and evolving. However, it is currently estimated that over 99% of premises are able to get a service delivered over fixed telephone lines. This estimate is based on studies mapping distances between postcodes and telephone exchanges and assuming that services can be delivered by fixed telephone lines to postcodes up to 8km away from an exchange (an assumption validated by the private sector).

Those premises that require an alternative technology are scattered right across Northern Ireland, mainly in rural areas. It is impractical to provide a detailed list but a map which indicates these areas can be accessed at www.detini.gov.uk/BT Exchanges or by contacting Telecoms Policy Unit at DETI on 02890 529900.

Manufacturing Firms: Craigavon Area

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the percentage of Northern Ireland manufacturing firms which are situated within the Craigavon Borough Council area. (AQW 268/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The latest figures sourced from the Inter departmental Business Register indicate that at June 2009, there were 225 manufacturing businesses situated in the Craigavon Borough Council area. This equates to 5% of all the manufacturing businesses located within Northern Ireland.

Please note that the business register only contains information on all businesses in the United Kingdom which are VAT registered or which operate a PAYE scheme. As a result the estimates used in this answer will exclude those smaller businesses which do not exceed the VAT threshold or are VAT exempt.

Manufacturing Firms: Belfast Area

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the percentage of Northern Ireland manufacturing firms which are situated within the Belfast City Council area. (AQW 269/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The latest figures sourced from the Inter departmental Business Register indicate that at June 2009, there were 340 manufacturing businesses situated in the Belfast City Council area. This equates to 8% of all the manufacturing businesses located within Northern Ireland.

Please note that the business register only contains information on all businesses in the United Kingdom which are VAT registered or which operate a PAYE scheme. As a result the estimates used in this answer will exclude those smaller businesses which do not exceed the VAT threshold or are VAT exempt.

Water Charges

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what measures have been taken to provide assistance to small, local businesses and shops with water charges during the current economic downturn. (AQW 297/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has no powers to provide assistance in respect of water charges.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

PPS 21: Approved Planning Applications

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the number of planning applications approved since the introduction of PPS 21 in each of the following District Council areas; Omagh, Strabane, Derry City, Fermanagh, Cookstown, Magherafelt and Limavady. (AQW 15/10)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Poots): Following publication of draft PPS 21 on 25 November 2008, my Department has approved a total of 1827 planning applications in the above District Council areas between this date and 31 March 2009. This is broken down by District Council area as follows:

| District Council Area | All Approvals | All Rural Approvals | Rural new single dwelling approvals | Rural replacement single dwelling approvals |
|-----------------------|---------------|---------------------|-------------------------------------|---|
| Cookstown | 224 | 154 | 49 | 26 |
| Derry | 235 | 54 | 11 | 15 |
| Fermanagh | 437 | 315 | 150 | 42 |
| Limavady | 130 | 75 | 16 | 14 |
| Magherafelt | 276 | 191 | 56 | 51 |
| Omagh | 312 | 211 | 99 | 20 |
| Strabane | 213 | 119 | 54 | 21 |
| Total | 1827 | 1119 | 435 | 189 |

The figures for all rural approvals comprises applications for any development type in the rural area including, commercial, housing, industrial and agricultural land uses.

The next Development Management quarterly statistics are due for publication on 24 September 2009. These figures will include those applications submitted to my Department between April 2009 and June 2009.

PPS 21: Undetermined Planning Applications

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment how many planning applications remain undetermined under draft PPS21 for (i) single dwellings; and (ii) replacement dwellings, in each divisional planning office.

(AQW 38/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Following the publication of draft PPS 21 on 25 November 2008, my Department is currently considering 1357 planning applications for single dwellings and 211 planning applications for replacement dwellings submitted between this date and July 2009. This is broken down by Divisional Planning Office as follows:

| Division | Single Dwellings | Replacement Dwellings | Total Rural Applications |
|--------------|------------------|-----------------------|--------------------------|
| Ballymena | 150 | 39 | 289 |
| Belfast | 15 | 10 | 32 |
| Craigavon | 522 | 63 | 727 |
| Downpatrick | 65 | 31 | 151 |
| Londonderry | 126 | 29 | 223 |
| Omagh | 479 | 39 | 593 |
| Total | 1357 | 211 | 2015 |

The column entitled total rural applications refers to all rural applications, including commercial, housing, industrial and agricultural proposals that are currently under consideration by the Department.

Local Government Review

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment how much has been spent on the Local Government Review (i) in total ; and (ii) on consultancy fees.

(AQW 41/10)

The Minister of the Environment: A total of £4,415,053, including £453,867 for consultancy fees, has been incurred on the local government review by the Department of the Environment, over the period 2005/2006 to 2008/2009. Provision for the current financial year is £4,133,000, which includes £233,000 for consultancy fees. In addition, the Department has covered the cost of the Office of the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner – the first review costing £627,137 and the second review £616,877 (estimate), all of which is recoverable from the Consolidated Fund.

Illegal Dumping at Ballyhornan Road

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the investigation into the allegations of illegal dumping at Ballyhornan Road, Downpatrick.

(AQW 54/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Officials are continuing with their investigation into this case. I am unable to provide more detailed information at this juncture, as to do so could compromise the integrity of our investigation and any future legal proceedings, as well as infringe on the rights of the persons being investigated.

Tree Preservation Order: Myrtle Lodge

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment what action his Department is taking to enforce the Tree Preservation Order at Myrtle Lodge, Bryansford.

(AQW 55/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Firstly, just to clarify, it is assumed that the question relates to Myrtle Lodge, Bryansford Road, Newcastle.

The Department is currently finalising its investigation into an alleged breach of planning control where trees, subject to a Tree Preservation Order, were removed. Unfortunately I cannot provide more information at this stage due to data protection reasons and also so as not to prejudice potential legal action.

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DOE

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 69/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The table below gives details of my Department's expenditure on private consultancy firms and events organisers for each of the last 5 years.

| DOE | 2004/05 £ | 2005/06 £ | 2006/07 £ | 2007/08 £ | 2008/09 £ |
|---------------------------|------------------|------------------|------------------|------------------|------------------|
| Private Consultancy Firms | 1,031,179 | 1,292,223 | 2,097,051 | 2,131,030 | 1,346,791 |
| Events Organisers | 64,831 | 67,974 | 70,033 | 155,360 | 148,380 |
| Total | 1,096,010 | 1,360,197 | 2,167,084 | 2,286,390 | 1,495,171 |

PPS 21: Deferred Planning Applications

Mr Bresland asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications awaiting the outcome of the consultation on PPS 21, in each of the following Council areas - Omagh, Strabane, Derry City, Fermanagh, Cookstown. (AQW 99/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The number of planning applications which are deferred and awaiting the outcome of the consultation on PPS 21 in each of the Council Areas at 31 July 2009 are as follows;

| District Council Area | Deferred PPS14/21 applications |
|-----------------------|--------------------------------|
| Omagh | 176 |
| Strabane | 55 |
| Derry City | 33 |
| Fermanagh | 223 |
| Cookstown | 54 |

Bonfire Sites

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the total costs incurred by each local council for cleaning and repairing bonfire sites during the summer of 2009. (AQW 112/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The total expenditure incurred by each district council in cleaning up and repairing bonfire sites in the summer of 2009 is set out in the table below.

| Council | £ |
|---------------|--------|
| Antrim | 2,978 |
| Ards | 7,202 |

Planning Reform

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the planning reform (i) to detail the total cost of additional staff employed; and (ii) what degree of costs was absorbed by the reduction in existing staff costs due to decreased numbers of planning applications. (AQW 138/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The total cost of additional staff recruited and re-deployed into specific Planning Reform posts during 2008/09 was £504,317. The costs for 2009/10 are projected to be in the region of £950k as staff will be in post for the full financial year. To date, the cost of the staff working on reform has been met through bids for additional funding rather than any reduction in existing staff costs and further bids will be submitted to cover these costs for the current and next financial year.

Driving Licences

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the total costs of recalling and replacing the 400 driving licences which were recently issued with an incorrect expiry date. (AQW 161/10)

The Minister of the Environment: A total of 409 licences have been identified as requiring amendment to the dates printed on the licence. The standard cost of producing a replacement driving licence is estimated at £19, giving a total cost of £7,771. This cost, which will be borne by the Department, includes all administrative, production and normal postage charges.

Council Officials: Redundancies

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment how many middle management and senior council officials have either (i) been made redundant; or (ii) had their employment terminated and subsequently re-employed at another council in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 164/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Neither my Department nor the Local Government Staff Commission holds the requested information.

Grouse Committee

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the Grouse Committee set up to address the fall in grouse stocks, whether he has developed a suitable method of fox control to enable grouse stocks to regain some of their lost status. (AQW 182/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The population of red grouse in Northern Ireland has only recently (2004) been accurately estimated at between 202 and 221 pairs with densities of between one and three pairs per square kilometre and sometimes lower.

Loss and fragmentation of upland heathland and blanket bog habitat as a result of overgrazing, agricultural improvement and afforestation are believed to be the most significant factors affecting grouse distribution across Northern Ireland. Predator control, including control of foxes has traditionally been carried out by land managers as part of their management of grouse moors.

After extensive consultation, a Northern Ireland Species Action Plan for Red Grouse was published in 2008. The inaugural meeting of the Steering Group established to advise on the delivery of this Action Plan takes place this month and the issue of appropriate predator control will be discussed.

This Group, with representation from a wide range of sporting and conservation interests, will encourage its members to implement the identified actions to ensure effective and sustainable outcomes for red grouse.

Red Kites

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for an update on the release of Red Kites in the Mid and South Down area; and (ii) what are the findings on the impact of Red Kites on bird life and animals in the area. (AQW 184/10)

The Minister of the Environment: In 2008, 27 red kites were released into the South Down area as part of a three year re-introduction programme. A further 26 birds were released in summer 2009. There have been four fatalities of red kites over the first year of this project.

Where red kites have been introduced at other locations throughout the UK and Ireland there have been no reports of negative impacts on the biodiversity of the area.

Red kites mainly scavenge for their food and so they are expected to have little impact on birds and animals in the South Down area. Ongoing monitoring and radio-tracking have shown the birds foraging on farmland where they have been observed feeding mainly on earthworms and other invertebrates.

Flooding: Emergency Payments

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the summer flooding, to detail (i) the total number of successful emergency payment claims made; (ii) the total amount of emergency payments made; and (iii) the estimated cost of administering emergency payments in each of the last five years, in each local council area. (AQW 288/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The first “Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance to District Councils – Flooding” was introduced in June 2007. With regard to this Scheme, (i) the total number of successful emergency payment claims made was 1,181; (ii) the total amount of emergency payments made was £1,181,000; and (iii) the estimated cost of administering emergency payments was £238,099.

In relation to the second Scheme which was announced in August 2008; (i) the total number of successful emergency payment claims was 1,643; (ii) the total amount of emergency payments made was £1,643,000 and (iii) the estimated cost of administering emergency payments was £146,692.

The “Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance to District Councils – Flooding 2009/2010” was re-activated on 2 September 2009 and claims from district councils are due to be received by the Department by 1 December 2009.

The details for individual councils are set out in the tables below.

| District Council | Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance to District Councils – June 2007 | | |

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how many complaints have been received by his Department in relation to the Central Procurement Directorate from (i) individual companies; (ii) consortiums; (iii) solicitors on behalf of individual companies; and (iv) solicitors on behalf of consortiums.

(AQW 149/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr S Wilson): During the period April 2006 to March 2009 a total of 19 formal complaints were made in relation to the Central Procurement Directorate. All were from individual companies. A breakdown for each year is as follows:

| Year | Number of Complaints received |
|--------------|-------------------------------|
| 2006/2007 | 3 |
| 2007/2008 | 7 |
| 2008/2009 | 9 |
| Total | 19 |

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if the Central Procurement Directorate is quality assured, and, if so, to what level.

(AQW 160/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Central Procurement Directorate was externally and independently audited on 22nd to the 25th June 2009 and was assessed and formally certified as meeting the requirements of BS EN ISO 9001:2008 standard.

Rates Payments

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what measures have been taken to provide assistance to small business and shops with Rates payments during the current economic downturn.

(AQW 295/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: A clause providing for a Small Business Rate Relief scheme for Northern Ireland has been included in the Rates Amendment Bill which I introduced into the Assembly on 14 September. This was one of the Executive measures announced by my predecessor Nigel Dodds in December 2008 to address the economic downturn. It will provide around £8m to £9m of rate relief to in excess of 16,000 small businesses with enhanced relief for small Post Offices and will be funded through the DEL. Provided we get the Bill through the Assembly, the scheme will come into operation on 1 April 2010. It will be applied automatically to eligible businesses. I would strongly encourage members support for the passage of the Bill so that the scheme can be put in place and assistance provided to our small business sector at this most difficult time.

In addition to the Small Business Rate Relief scheme, small businesses are also currently benefitting from the freeze in the non-domestic regional rate during the current CSR period, and many will also benefit from the pegging of industrial rates at 30% liability until 31 March 2011.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Dental Surgery in Dungannon

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety on what date the application for planning approval for a new Health Service dental surgery in Dungannon was submitted; and the exact location of the proposed surgery. (AQW 100/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): The new health service dental surgery in Dungannon is being commissioned as part of the wider programme to recruit an additional 38 health service dentists. The contract to provide this service was awarded to Oasis Dental Care in May. Under the terms of this contract, Oasis, and not my Department or the HSC Board, are responsible for identifying, securing and equipping the new practices, and this includes all planning matters. However, I understand that the planning application for this practice has been submitted and is being considered by the relevant Council.

I have already stated that all 38 additional dentists will be in place within 12 months of the first new practices opening in Enniskillen and Londonderry later this year. I remain confident that this will happen.

Omagh: Enhanced Hospital

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety the current stage in the procurement process for the proposed enhanced hospital in Omagh; and when he anticipates making an announcement on this matter. (AQW 180/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The procurement of the new enhanced local hospital in Omagh has been paused to facilitate a review of the business case, including the procurement method. Due to the uncertainties in financial markets, I considered it appropriate to review whether PFI remains the most appropriate procurement option for this project in terms of affordability and value for money. The review is nearing completion and, at that stage, I will be better placed to advise on the timing of the procurement process and the commencement of the construction phase of the project.

Councillors: Party Affiliation

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for the names and political party affiliation of any Councillors appointed by him to an agency, trust or board under the governance of the Department. (AQW 205/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In my capacity as Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety I have appointed the following Councillors to HSC agencies, trusts or boards as listed below:

| Name of Organisation | Appointed Member | Political Party Affiliation |
|--|------------------|-----------------------------|
| Northern Ireland Ambulance Service | Seamus Shields* | SDLP |
| Patient & Client Council | Elizabeth Adger | DUP |
| Patient & Client Council | Tim Attwood | SDLP |
| Patient & Client Council | Sean McGuigan | Sinn Fein |
| Patient & Client Council | Trevor Wilson | UUP |
| Public Health Agency | Cathal Mullaghan | SDLP |
| Public Health Agency | Stephen Nicholl | UUP |
| Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service (NIFRS) | Sean Clarke | Sinn Fein |
| Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service (NIFRS) | Arnold Hatch | UUP |

* Appointed as 'individual member' – not as a local government representative member.

 No longer member of NIFRS

Cardiac Waiting Lists

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether recent changes in the provision of acute cardiac services affected the cardiac surgical waiting lists. (AQW 306/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There has been no change to the requirement for Trusts to deliver cardiac services within the target times specified in Priorities for Action. Those targets are that from April 2009 no patient should wait longer than 9 weeks for a first outpatient appointment; 9 weeks for a diagnostic test and 13 weeks for inpatient or day case treatment.

Agenda For Change

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to ensure that, under Agenda For Change, District Nursing professionals will be given their back pay. (AQW 391/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The process for grading for District Nursing professionals is continuing. Staff will be advised of their Agenda for Change banding when that process is complete. Following that, back pay will be processed by the local trust payroll offices; this will be done in line with the same process that has been applied to all other Agenda for Change staff groups.

Child Protection: Ryan Report

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration he has given to the implications for child health in Northern Ireland of the Ryan Report into child abuse in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 6/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I was concerned to learn about the level of abuse highlighted by the Ryan Report and want to offer my sympathy to all of the victims.

The implications for child health in Northern Ireland, of the Ryan Commission, mainly arise from the implementation plan published by the Irish Minister for Children and Youth Affairs in July.

Within the plan they have indicated that they are considering legislation to provide for a duty to share information in the best interests of children which will be placed on both agencies and on a range of individuals within statutory services.

My officials are liaising with their ROI counterparts to ascertain the likely extent of these legislative proposals and if the proposed legislation will include the sharing of information with Northern Ireland authorities. Depending on the detail of these proposals they may represent a significant step in underpinning cross border child protection arrangements.

DHSSPS Budget 2008-2011

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the 2008-2011 budget settlement for his Department. (AQO 7/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department faces its lowest uplift in recent times. Over the three years, my Department will receive uplifts of an average of 2.3% in real terms. This compares to average real terms English uplifts of 4%, 2.8% in Wales and 3.2% in Scotland. In addition, the Executive agreed that my Department must secure CSR savings of 3% per annum which amount to £700m over the CSR period.

John Appleby's report on relative funding for Northern Ireland concluded that, taking need into account, Northern Ireland was worse off than England by almost £300m at the start of the period. Given the difference in growth, this figure will rise to almost £600m by March 2011.

I reluctantly accepted the budget on the grounds that it was as good as it gets. The three elements of the final budget settlement include a guarantee of the first £20m of in-year resources; flexibility; and specifically that my Department should bid to the Executive for additional funding in the case of an emergency situation such as pandemic Flu.

Swine Flu: Schools

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the arrangements in place between his Department and the Department of Education to deal with cases of swine flu within schools. (AQO 8/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Officials in my Department are in regular contact with officials in the Department of Education. I met with Caitríona Ruane and Sir Reg Empey on 20th August to discuss swine flu preparations for the new academic year in schools, colleges and universities. The Department of Education has now been given additional guidance from the Public Health Agency. Schools have already re-opened as normal. Advice given to the Department of Education about dealing with cases of swine flu is that if pupils or staff feel unwell and think they might have swine flu, they should go home (or stay at home) and phone their GP.

Another message which I continue to reinforce is that good hand hygiene is very important in helping to prevent the spread of the virus. This is the focus of our Catch it – Bin it – Kill it information campaign. Schools have been asked to promote good hygiene practices among pupils and staff.

The Public Health Agency provides specific public health advice to individual schools on a case by case basis if they have an outbreak of swine flu.

Rapid Response Vehicles

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in what circumstances the Rapid Response Vehicle is the most appropriate response. (AQO 9/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The most appropriate ambulance service response to an emergency life threatening incident is a rapid response regardless of whether the paramedic arrives at the scene in a rapid response vehicle or an A&E ambulance. NIAS deploys its emergency response fleet using a tactical deployment plan which means that the nearest available paramedic resource is sent to an incident, be that by means of a rapid response vehicle or an A&E ambulance.

Dental Services: Private Patients

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what regulations and protections are in place to ensure that private paying patients are not being overcharged for dental treatment. (AQO 12/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Private dental treatment is carried out under private contract between the patient and dentist. As with any private contract, charges are normally agreed between both parties at the outset.

The patient has the option of accepting the charges quoted or seeking private dental care elsewhere.

Cancelled Appointments: Costs

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if an audit has been carried out on the financial costs of cancelled appointments. (AQO 13/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In April 2007, the Northern Ireland Audit Office published a report on the subject of missed outpatient appointments (i.e. where the patient fails to attend) and cancelled clinics (i.e. where the Trust cancels). The Assembly Public Accounts Committee subsequently considered this report at a hearing in June 2007.

The NIAO report examined the financial and organisational impact of missed appointments and cancelled clinics. It pointed to the potential under-utilisation of manpower and equipment, and the negative impact on waiting lists, resulting from patients' failure to attend or from the cancellation of clinics by hospitals.

Mental Health Care for Older Persons

Mrs Long asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust's assertion that the modern approach to older persons mental health day support is best achieved by individual care plans rather than centre-based activities. (AQO 14/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I agree with the Trust that the needs of each of its older people should be assessed on an individual basis to formulate tailored care plans. This was also recommended by the Bamford Review which strongly advocated the person centred approach. Part of the care plan could, of course, be placement in an appropriate day centre.

Cardiac Rehabilitation

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what percentage of heart attack patients in the last year received cardiac rehabilitation directly after a heart attack. (AQO 15/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is not possible to provide the information in the format requested.

In keeping with Northern Ireland Cardiac Rehabilitation Guidelines and Standards, cardiac rehabilitation is not only offered to patients who have experienced a heart attack but also to other groups of patients with coronary heart disease.

I recently published the service framework for cardiovascular health and wellbeing which sets a standard that "All patients identified as requiring cardiac rehabilitation, in line with regional guidelines, should be offered this service." A baseline audit to establish current levels of access to these services will be carried out by March 2010.

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Culmore Roundabout

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the redevelopment of the Culmore roundabout. (AQW 92/10)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): On Tuesday 8 September 2009, I announced the upgrade of the existing Culmore roundabout to a larger signalised roundabout. Preparatory work has started on site and it is expected that the main contract will start early next year. Information letters have been sent to all local MPs, MLAs and Councillors, as well as a letter drop to local residents to inform them of our plans for this scheme.

A4 at Tamlaght, Enniskillen

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 8829/09 (i) to confirm that the improvement works on the A4 at Tamlaght, Enniskillen have been completed; and (ii) to detail the final cost of these works. (AQW 102/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that the reconstruction and resurfacing works on the A4 at Tamlaght has been completed.

The final cost of this scheme is expected to be £893,300, with £888,000 having been paid to date.

Bonfire Sites

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total costs incurred by his Department for cleaning and repairing bonfire sites during the summer of 2009. (AQW 111/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: As I explained, in my reply to the Member's Assembly Question AQW 113/10, my Department's Roads Service does not maintain details of bonfires lit on public roads. However, Roads Service has estimated that it has cost approximately £84,000 to clean and repair bonfire sites during the summer of 2009.

I should advise that this figure includes approximately £20,000 to repair fire and structural damage to the concrete and road surface of the Lecky Road Flyover in Derry.

Bonfire Sites

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development how many bonfires were lit on public roads during the summer period in each of the last five years. (AQW 113/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service does not maintain details of the number of bonfires lit on public roads.

However, the table below provides details of Roads Service's estimated expenditure on attending/repairing bonfire sites in each of the last five years.

| Year | Estimated expenditure attending/repairing bonfires |
|---------|--|
| 2004/05 | £80,000 |
| 2005/06 | £218,000 |
| 2006/07 | £63,000 |
| 2007/08 | £60,000 |
| 2008/09 | £60,000 |

NI Railway Timetable: Londonderry/Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will change the train timetable to ensure the earlier arrival of the first train into Londonderry from Coleraine. (AQW 194/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Following a review of the position originally announced by Translink, changes have been made to the revised timetable initially proposed.

The first train will now arrive in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than at present and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR.

Public Transport: Londonderry/Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of how the later arrival of the first train into Londonderry from Coleraine encourages people to use public transport. (AQW 195/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Changes have been made to the revised timetable initially proposed by NIR. These changes will encourage people to use public transport.

The first train will now arrive in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than at present and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR. In addition rail users from Derry to Belfast and Coleraine to Belfast will benefit from reduced journey times of 10 and 15 minutes respectively.

NI Railway Timetable: Londonderry/Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline why, under the new NI Railway timetable, the earliest service from Coleraine to Londonderry will arrive at 9.30am instead of 9.10am. (AQW 196/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Changes have been made to the revised timetable initially proposed by NIR.

The first train will now arrive in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than at present and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR.

Belfast to Derry Train Timetable

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development what consultation was carried out in the Derry and Coleraine areas on the proposed new timetable for the Belfast to Derry train line. (AQW 197/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The need for the timetable changes has arisen from the infrastructure upgrades carried out this year between Coleraine and Ballymena to permit faster trains and reduced running times. This will deliver benefits to the users of these services.

In order for these benefits to be delivered the existing timetable has to be amended.

On the one hand, journey times from Derry to Belfast will be reduced from circa 2 hours 10 minutes to circa 2 hours. Journey times from Coleraine to Belfast will be reduced from typically 1 hour 30 minutes to circa 1 hour 15 minutes. This represents significant benefit to the hundreds of commuters who are now travelling every day from Derry to Belfast and Coleraine to Belfast.

However, some aspects of the amended timetable caused me concern and I asked Translink/NIR to review again the options available. Translink has now put forward an alternative set of proposals which means that the first train from Coleraine will arrive in Derry at 9.00am with the 5.05pm train from Derry remaining in place. This timetable will be in place from 27 September.

Translink is expected to pay regard to its Passenger's Charter commitments, which require new timetables to be in the public domain sometime prior to introduction.

Translink is in continuous consultation with customers through "Translink Feedback". NIR have been advising customers from early 2009 that following line reconstruction in April to June 2009 that new train timetables would be introduced in September. However, no specific consultation in relation to detailed train times took place prior to the issue of timetables at stations on 8 September 2009 and I have already expressed my concern at the way this was handled.

NI Railway Timetable: Londonderry

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he intends to take to ensure that the NI Railway timetable for the Londonderry line meets passenger expectations and requirements. (AQW 226/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have intervened, in this case, to ensure changes were made to the revised timetable initially proposed by NIR.

The first train will now arrive in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than at present and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR. The new timetable will also benefit rail users travelling from Derry and Coleraine to Belfast with reduced journey times.

Translink: Derry/Londonderry

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there is a protocol in place for Translink staff in relation to the usage of the names Derry and Londonderry when dealing with members of the public. (AQW 250/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink has advised me that it has no specific protocol in place for staff in relation to the usage of the names Derry and Londonderry. However, Translink's call centre staff has been instructed to use the name first used by a caller.

Water Charges

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures have been taken to provide assistance to small local businesses and shops with water charges during the current economic downturn.

(AQW 298/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Executive has taken into account the current economic circumstances and has agreed a deferral of additional household water and sewerage payments for a further year. In light of this decision the Executive also unanimously agreed, in February 2009, to extend the phasing arrangements for non-domestic customers and to introduce a domestic allowance for sewerage. As a result, from 1 April 2009, metered premises will have a domestic allowance for both water and sewerage while unmeasured premises continue to be charged at 50%.

Regional Development Strategy

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the timeframe and process for taking forward the review of the Regional Development Strategy.

(AQO 22/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I anticipate sending a final draft of the consultation document to the Regional Development Committee and issuing for inter departmental consultation next month. I will then seek Executive clearance to proceed to public consultation.

This process takes time and I estimate that public consultation will start around Christmas.

Following a three month period of consultation and the analysis of responses the final document is likely to be published in summer 2010.

City Quays Development

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Regional Development what consultation the Belfast Harbour Commissioners have undertaken with the community of North Belfast in relation to the development of a master plan for the city quays area.

(AQO 23/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: This is an operational matter for the Belfast Harbour Commissioners. However, I understand that they commenced a period of consultation with stakeholders on a master plan for the development of the city quays area in July 2009. This process is currently ongoing and includes consultation with elected representatives for the North Belfast area; North Belfast Housing Action Forum; North Belfast Partnership; Sailortown Regeneration Group; St. Patrick's and St. Joseph's Housing.

North/South Co-operation: Infrastructure and Transport

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the prospects for enhancing North-South co-operation and delivery in relation to infrastructure development and transportation.

(AQO 24/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I fully recognise the value of North / South co-operation and this is reflected, strategically, in my Department's reviews of the Regional Development Strategy and the Regional Transportation Strategy. Co-operation between both Governments has been enhanced through bodies such as the North South Ministerial Council and The Cross Border Steering Group.

The North South Ministerial Council, in Transport Sectoral Format, strives to promote common policies and approaches to strategic transport planning.

My Department's Roads Service has established excellent relations with the road authorities in the South, facilitated through the Cross Border Steering Group, which is attended by lead officials from Roads Service, the National Roads Authority and the Irish Department for Transport. These meetings provide joined-up planning between both jurisdictions to ensure that the Strategic Road Network is developed in a manner that will be of benefit to the whole island of Ireland.

An example of how cross border projects can be delivered can be found in the recently completed A1/N1, Newry to Dundalk dual carriageway.

This level of co-operation is being further enhanced through delivery of the A5 and A8 improvements. You will be aware of the Irish Government's intention to make available £400m to help fund major roads programmes on the A5 Western Corridor and on the A8 Belfast to Larne route. These projects highlight how progress is being made between both jurisdictions, to develop the strategic road network, for the benefit of the whole island of Ireland.

At a local level, cooperation also exists on various roads projects, whereby officials from the three Roads Service Divisions which interface with the South, meet as appropriate with their counterparts in the Southern County Councils.

The establishment of the North West Gateway Initiative, which was announced at the British Irish Intergovernmental Conference in May 2006, further enhanced cooperation between the North and South. This initiative was established to foster and encourage economic growth in the North West area. The objective is to provide a focus for sustained cooperative action from the two Governments which, over a period of time, will make a real difference to the region.

Turning to co-operation on rail improvements, with respect to the Belfast Dublin Enterprise service, NIR and Iarnród Éireann have developed a long term vision, known as 'Enterprise 2020', which includes the reduction in timetabled travel time between Belfast and Dublin. However, this is a long term strategy and much further work is required before the capital and revenue funding will be made available. The Investment Strategy in the North and the successor to Transport 21 in the South, provide the context in which these ideas can be taken forward.

Buses: Biofuels

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the commitment in the Programme for Government to promote the use of renewable energy, what consideration he has given to the conversion of all public transport bus stock to operate on bio-fuels. (AQO 25/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Whilst the procurement of fuel is an operational matter for public transport providers, I am aware that from April 2008, following extensive trials in 2007, Translink, the major provider of public transport services, has operated its entire bus fleet using a blend of 5% bio-fuel and 95% ultra low sulphur diesel.

Translink continue to closely monitor the future availability and sustainability of alternative blends of bio-fuel and diesel in conjunction with normal commercial considerations in the formulation of its fuel policy.

Water Charges

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the Minister for Regional Development how much the further deferral of water charges beyond 2010-2011 would cost his Department annually. (AQO 26/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I answered a similar question from the Member's party colleague Billy Armstrong at oral questions in June this year.

The Executive has not yet agreed future funding arrangements for water and sewerage services.

Based on current estimates deferral of the introduction of additional household payments will cost NI DEL around £1 billion over the period 2010 – 2013. However, these costs could vary depending on the nature of any Executive decision.

Roads: Ards Peninsula

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will provide extra funding for roads on the Ards Peninsula. (AQO 27/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I would firstly like to assure the Member that the structural integrity of the entire roads network, remains a key priority for my Department's Roads Service.

Members will be interested to note that the outcome of the Budget 2008-2011, means that Roads Service's total funding for structural maintenance in 2009/10 has increased to £71.8 million, compared with the initial allocation of £56.3 million in 2008/09. However, I should stress that this amount is considerably less than the independently established figure of approximately £108m per year, at 2009 prices, that is needed to maintain the structural integrity of the road network in the North. All proposed scheme's, therefore, have to be prioritised.

The Roads Service budget is allocated to its four Divisions on the basis of need, using a range of weighted indicators, tailored to each maintenance activity. The budget allocation for work in the Ards Borough Council area, for 2009/10, is £5.2 million.

Unfortunately, it is not possible to indicate how much of the expenditure for the Ards Borough Council area will go specifically to work in the Ards Peninsula. However, the allocation is distributed throughout the entire council area, based on need and in accordance with other predetermined criteria. The Ards Peninsula therefore receives its fair share of the overall Ards Council area budget and, it would not be appropriate or equitable to allocate a greater proportion of the budget to this region.

North/South Transport Links

Mr Attwood asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the recent collapse of the Malahide Railway Viaduct, to outline any proposals he and his counterpart in the Dublin Government are discussing for maintaining and enhancing North-South transportation links. (AQO 28/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Firstly I would like to express relief that, due to the keen observation of an Iarnród Éireann train driver, a potential disaster was avoided. This incident reinforces the need for safety considerations to be given top priority at all times. Safety issues on the part of the track affected are the responsibility of the Southern authorities.

The operational issues arising from the Malahide bridge collapse are jointly the responsibility of NIR and Iarnród Éireann in so far as they impact the Enterprise Service. I have been made aware of the recent timetable changes implemented from 6 September and clearly the need to maintain a sustainable service is important.

I am being kept closely informed of developments and, should the need arise, I will meet with my counterpart in the Dublin Government on these issues.

Prior to the rail incident at Malahide, options had been discussed between the 2 rail companies to improve the reliability of the trains as part of a longer term vision to reduce timetabled travel time between Belfast and Dublin. These issues will be reconsidered once the Malahide railway viaduct is restored and will be taken forward within the context of the Investment priorities and frameworks for both Governments.

Railways: Enterprise Service

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what practical measures Translink has put in place to accommodate passengers using the Belfast to Dublin Enterprise service following the recent collapse of the Malahide Railway Viaduct. (AQO 29/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The collapse of the bridge resulted in one of the three Enterprise trains (Enterprise trains are jointly owned by NIR and Iarnród Éireann) being stranded on the Dublin side of the bridge. This meant the remaining two trains were left to deliver the normal service between Belfast and Drogheda, from where a bus substitution service takes passengers on to Dublin.

After one week of running the normal service with the two trains, NIR experienced significant operational difficulties. Each train was required to operate 4 return trips per day which is beyond the fuel tank capacity of the locomotive. This resulted in the need to relocate each train daily to Drogheda depot for refueling. This in turn meant that turnaround times at the start and end of each journey were very tight and NIR found it difficult to maintain the normal timetable between Belfast and Drogheda.

As a consequence the number of train services per week day was reduced from 8 to 6 from Sunday 6 September. The revised service amalgamated two off peak afternoon services into one service and two off peak evening services into one service. The primary reason for making these changes is to ensure that passengers can be guaranteed a regular and timely service and this change has been endorsed by the Consumer Council. Passengers continue to receive up to date information on the progress on the repair work and timetables operating.

It is also planned to provide a number of promotions and possible fare reductions. These measures are aimed at ensuring a sustainable service for all passengers.

Crystal Alliance

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the functions taken in-house from the Steria-led Crystal Alliance consortium, and any costs associated with this change. (AQO 30/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that it has not taken any functions in-house from the Steria led Crystal Alliance consortium. Following the termination of the Steria contract its functions were transferred to other service providers. Four people were transferred from Steria to Northern Ireland Water under TUPE, the cost of which will be approximately £285,000 in a full year.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Beechfield Estate, Donaghadee: Heating Scheme

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when the heating scheme for Beechfield Estate in Donaghadee will go ahead. (AQW 5/10)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): A scheme which includes proposed works to 111 dwellings in Beechfield Estate is currently programmed to commence on 30 November 2009.

Beechfield Estate, Donaghadee: Kitchen Scheme

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when a new kitchen scheme for Beechfield Estate in Donaghadee will be considered. (AQW 6/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive completed a major multi element improvement scheme within the Beechfield Estate in 1993/94. Kitchens within Housing Executive stock are normally scheduled for replacement on a 20-year life cycle and therefore the kitchens in this estate are not due for replacement until 2013/14. A scheme will be programmed for kitchen replacement in this area at the next annual programme review which will take place in early 2010.

Ballyree Drive: Pensioners' Bungalow Scheme

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when the Pensioners' Bungalow Scheme for Ballyree Drive in Bloomfield Estate will begin. (AQW 7/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Improvement works to the one bedroom bungalows in the Bloomfield estate was programmed in three phases - Phase 2 of the proposed improvement works includes the bungalows at Ballyree Drive. The work to improve 44 dwellings is unlikely to commence before April 2010 as this is dependent on the availability of funding.

Loughview Estate: Flats

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development if her Department plans to go ahead with the demolition of the flats at Loughview Estate in Holywood, and if so, when. (AQW 8/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is currently concluding an economic appraisal outlining options for the West Green area of Holywood.

These are expected to be submitted for approval in the autumn and I will make an announcement on our plans at that time.

Improvement Grants: Village Area

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development how many improvement grants have been issued for the 538 properties in the Village Redevelopment area within the last ten years; and the total value of these grants. (AQW 23/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The number of grants paid in the proposed Redevelopment Area within the Village area since 1 September 1998 was 52, and the total amount of grant aid paid was £517,613.

Improvement Grants: Village Area

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development how many improvement grants have been issued within the designated improvement area of the Village in the last ten years; and the total value of these grants. (AQW 25/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The number of grants paid in the designated improvement area within the Village area since 1 September 1998 was 66. The total amount of grant aid paid was £624,195.

Self-employed Persons

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what services and practical and financial support have been (i) offered; and (ii) provided to self-employed persons who are unable to claim Jobseekers Allowance but are in need of practical and financial assistance in the current economic climate. (AQW 34/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Jobseeker's Allowance has a contribution-based and an income-based element. Contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance is intended to help people who have paid enough Class 1 National Insurance Contributions and experience short spells of unemployment between jobs.

Those unemployed people, including the self employed, who do not qualify for contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance and are in financial need will be eligible to claim income-based Jobseeker's Allowance but any other income a person may have will normally be taken into account when calculating the amount payable.

Income Support is also available for people who are not required to be available for work and whose resources are insufficient to meet their day-to-day living expenses.

For those not entitled to social security benefits, other financial assistance may be available from the Social Security Agency under the Social Fund scheme through the award of an interest free payable Crisis Loan. The award of such a loan is dependent on the individual's circumstances and the nature, extent and urgency of the need.

The Department for Employment and Learning provides a comprehensive range of services to help people, including the self employed, find and remain in work. These are: job search; job brokerage; work-focused interviews; and the Department's range of employment programmes including Steps to Work, Pathways to Work, Progress to Work and specialist programmes and services for people with disabilities.

Social Security Benefit Fraud

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how many residents in the Republic of Ireland have been detected and convicted of crossing the border and committing Social Security Benefit fraud in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and what was the monetary value of these frauds. (AQW 47/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Social Security Agency's systems do not record details of whether persons detected and convicted of benefit fraud were officially resident in the Republic of Ireland. The Agency records information relating to all individuals detected and convicted of 'Cross Border' benefit fraud offences against the Northern Ireland Social Security system, irrespective of where they reported that they were living.

The table below shows details of cases where a 'Cross Border' benefit offence has been committed against the Social Security Agency. Information is only held in respect of the last 3 years plus the current year.

| Cases where a 'Cross Border' benefit offence was involved | 2006-2007 | 2007-2008 | 2008-2009 | 2009 - 8th September 2009 |
|---|-----------|-----------|-----------|---------------------------|
| No of cases detected | 14 | 13 | 12 | 9 |
| Total monetary value for cases detected | £154,554 | £177,193 | £262,412 | £96,711 |
| No of cases convicted | 0 | 1 | 3 | 1 |
| Total monetary value for cases convicted | £0 | £19,083 | £28,470 | £6,280 |

Conlig Estate: Flats

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development when the flats at Conlig estate will be demolished.

(AQW 108/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is selling these flats on the open market as part of the Breezemount Regeneration Strategy. Any plans for their retention or demolition after that sale will be for the new owners to determine.

Six Mile Water: Derelict Bridge

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on proposals to remove the derelict bridge across the Sixmilewater at Alexandra Park and Grainger's Mill in Muckamore, Antrim.

(AQW 167/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I visited Sixmilewater River at Grangers Mill on Thursday 27 August 2009. My Department is currently working with the Rivers Agency to consider the options available to prevent a repeat of the flooding of August 2008. Removal of the bridge and the impact thereof is one of the options under consideration and I expect to receive a report on this matter from my officials within the next few weeks.

I will be happy to contact you again at that time.

SPED Scheme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if she would be prepared to purchase the homes within the Special Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings scheme that have not been sold and to reintroduce them as Housing Executive properties.

(AQW 183/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I would be prepared to purchase a SPED acquisition which had previously been in social ownership and reintroduce as Housing Executive stock or through purchase by a Housing Association. The policy is to dispose of the property on the open market, however if there is a high level of unmet urgent housing need or the property suits the special needs requirements of an applicant and such requirements would not otherwise be met in a reasonable period of time, the property would be used for social housing.

Budget: DSD

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline her budget for the next financial year.

(AQW 238/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The initial budget allocations for the 3 years 2008-09 to 2010-11 for all Departments, including Social Development, were set out in the Budget 2008-11 document published by the Executive in January 2008.

The overall allocation for my Department in respect of 2010-11 is £817.7 million. In addition, the Department's Annually Managed Expenditure budget for 2010-11, covering mostly social security benefit expenditure and the Financial Assistance Scheme, amounts to some £5.3 billion.

Warm Homes Scheme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to outline how having two companies involved in the Warm Homes Scheme improved efficiency and value for money. (AQW 247/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The aim of the new approach to procurement in the Warm Homes Scheme is to maximise value for money for the taxpayer. This approach was developed in light of the findings of the Northern Ireland Audit Office and subsequent Public Accounts Committee report on the Warm Homes Scheme and allows the Department to benchmark performance and cost to ensure the delivery of a quality, value for money service. The new contract was awarded on 01/07/2009 to H&A Mechanical Services Limited and Bryson Charitable Group. Monitoring arrangements are in place and monthly performance meetings are held with Department officials and Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who are the scheme administrators. An interim evaluation is planned for December 2009, six months after commencement of the new scheme.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development for the average time taken by each Social Security Office from receipt of an application for Jobseeker's Allowance to a decision being made on that application. (AQW 256/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Social Security Agency aims to process new claims to Jobseeker's Allowance within an average of 14 days. The information requested is set out in the table below.

Budget: DSD

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development to provide an update on her Department's budgetary position. (AQO 35/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department's budget for 2009-10 is divided into three separate pots, reflecting the broad spending areas of Social Security, Housing and Urban Regeneration. Following the June Monitoring round, the current expenditure limit is £767m. There are many funding pressures but the main pressure for my Department is in relation to the Housing budget. This has arisen as a result of the shortfall in capital house and land sales receipts due to the economic downturn. The Budget 2007 settlement anticipated some £73.6m in house and land sales receipts in 2009-10, but the latest estimate is that only £7m will be realised.

I have done what any conscientious Minister would do and that is try to protect the budgets which directly affect the most vulnerable. I have protected the newbuild programme so that we can maximise help for those in housing stress (while helping the construction sector). I have also protected the budget for Warm Homes, for people facing fuel poverty, and for Supporting People, so that people can live in the community instead of institutions. A consequence of this is that we face unprecedented pressure on housing grants and maintenance budgets.

I have tabled bids in excess of £84m in the September Monitoring Round and am relying on being afforded a degree of flexibility to redirect, reprioritise and adjust resources across all my business areas. I have consistently impressed upon Executive colleagues the indisputable benefits of injecting funding into Housing, a point supported recently by informed external economic consultants, John Simpson and Professor Mike Smyth of the University of Ulster. This would provide much needed social housing for the homeless and prevent further job losses in the construction industry, thus protecting many of the most vulnerable in society. As the year progresses, my officials will continue to monitor and manage the budget position very carefully.

Public Consultation: DSD

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the rounds of public meetings and consultations she is having in the broad area of social development. (AQO 36/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I thank the Member for her question. Over the past month or so I have undertaken a series of public meetings across Northern Ireland. I will be finishing my first round of 10 meetings next week but frankly I have found the experience so useful I intend to extend the programme further.

The point of the public meetings is simple. They give me the opportunity to hear at first hand ideas and suggestions on how my Department, the Executive and society in general might go about tackling one of the biggest challenges we face but have yet to summon the will to tackle. I am talking of course about the legacy of separation, segregation and sectarianism that scars our past and present, and will blight our future if we sit back and do nothing.

More than a decade after the Good Friday Agreement, society seems to have changed little. For the most part we still live apart, we are educated apart and socialise apart. And this despite survey evidence that the vast majority of us, if given the choice, would choose to live in mixed communities.

That strikes me as a very important agenda and so in the public meetings I am seeking ideas and suggestions on how we might go about the normalisation of our society and I have to say there have already been some good and insightful suggestions.

Ross Street Flats, Belfast

Mr P Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to Ross Street flats (i) if she has visited the flats; (ii) if she stands by her statement that these flats are well maintained; and (iii) who her officials consulted before rejecting the Housing Executive's recommendation to demolish the flats. (AQO 37/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I have visited the Lower Falls on a number of occasions and am well aware of the issues surrounding these particular flats at Ross Street. I haven't been to the flats themselves yet, however, I was pleased to have had the opportunity to engage with local residents at the recent public forum in Belfast, when a number accompanied your colleague, Fra McCann, to our meeting discussing a Shared Future.

Broadly, the flats are reasonably maintained, but they were built in 1976, just over 30 years ago and require general updating.

Let us be clear, I want to increase the supply of housing to help those in greatest need and I will not put people out of their homes to demolish perfectly good housing if other solutions are available. I have yet to hear a good housing argument in favour of demolition.

In the Lower Falls alone there are nearly 300 people on the waiting list to be housed, 200 of them in Housing Stress. With an average waiting time of 28 months before an allocation is made, I do not want to put another 20 people from their homes just because of the actions of those who come into the area to use it as a playground for anti-social behaviour and criminality.

The fundamental problem here is not the flats themselves. We must address the core problem of anti-social behaviour. From a housing perspective we will look at a range of environmental improvements that will make the area itself less appealing for those who would use it for their anti-social behaviour whilst making it more appealing for those who live there.

My officials have already discussed this decision with the Housing Executive who will now develop plans for both refurbishment of the flats alongside wider environmental improvements to the area which should deliver the desired outcome we all want, not least the residents of Ross Street.

I am actually quite surprised at the line being adopted by the Member, who also serves this House as Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. He seems to be saying that because there is bad behaviour, the solution is to demolish millions of pounds worth of housing. That in my view would be financially irresponsible. I can imagine how he might view it as PAC Chairman if he was considering a report where large numbers of units of serviceable accommodation had been demolished by Margaret Ritchie just because it was popular with local residents. So maybe he should be asking himself some questions.

Housing Executive Grants

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development what percentage of the £20 million her Department was allocated in the June monitoring round is being directed to private sector discretionary grants for replacement, renovation and repairs. (AQO 38/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Before dealing with the number directly, might I commiserate with the Member on the recent defeat of the Tyrone Senior Football team at the hands of Cork. I trust he, like me, will be cheering for Armagh's Ulster-Championship winning minor team which is competing for all-Ireland honours.

The answer on the £20million June Monitoring money is straightforward. 75% of it i.e. £15million is being directed at Private Sector Grants – the remainder to Disabled Adaptations. The £20million is welcome but given the magnitude of the challenge, there is the danger that despite our valiant efforts we end up – like Tyrone – just falling short of what is needed.

Shared Space

Ms J McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to explain the concept of 'shared space' and to confirm if she has had any communication with interface groups about how her Department can help to resource their work. (AQO 39/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I consider that 'shared space' is the creation of places where every person in Northern Ireland, regardless of their Section 75 group, can live, work and spend leisure time free from intimidation and where diversity is welcomed and respected.

The creation of shared spaces and ultimately a shared future permeates the work of my Department. I have placed shared space at the heart of all my endeavours in housing and have launched a Shared Neighbourhood Programme to enable 30 existing estates to realise this goal. My Department's urban regeneration masterplans and public realm schemes have, as a core objective, been making public space attractive for people to relax in and live at peace together. In Neighbourhood Renewal the creation of Shared Future is also a key priority as we cannot move forward tackling disadvantage without it.

To achieve this goal my Department meets and engages with interface groups throughout Northern Ireland. Funding for a number of these groups is also provided by my Department through various initiatives such as Neighbourhood Renewal and community capacity building programmes. The discussions I have led through my current round of public meetings have included discussion of the difficulties faced by interface communities.

Marine Gardens, Bangor

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the proposed Marine Gardens development in Bangor. (AQO 40/10)

The Minister for Social Development: On 10 June, I announced a public consultation on the proposed Marine Gardens development at Queen's Parade in Bangor. Due to exceptionally high levels of interest in the scheme, I extended that consultation period until 24 July.

Almost 700 responses were received to the consultation exercise. My Department is carefully analysing those responses. A report of the consultation will be published before the end of September. I will take my decision on whether the Department should support the scheme after that report is published.

Housing: Finance

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the financial challenges facing housing programmes at present. (AQO 41/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Due to the downturn in house and land sales the Housing Executive started this year with a £100 million shortfall, which is having an impact on all housing programmes. Additional funding of £20 million was allocated in the June Monitoring Round, however pressures of over £80 million still remain. Bids have been submitted through the September Monitoring Round to cover the shortfall in funding for both capital and revenue programmes.

Mortgage Rescue Scheme

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many people have been evicted from their homes since the announcement of the mortgage relief scheme nearly 18 months ago; and (ii) when the mortgage relief scheme will be in place. (AQO 42/10)

The Minister for Social Development: My Department does not hold the information requested. However, figures on Mortgage possession actions are published on a quarterly basis by the Northern Ireland Court Service.

In the absence of sufficient funding to launch a Mortgage Rescue scheme, earlier this year I provided additional funding for Housing Rights to launch the Mortgage Debt and Advice Service, which now provides specialist advice for people experiencing mortgage difficulties to help them remain in their homes. I will continue to bid for the necessary funding for Mortgage Rescue during in year monitoring rounds.

Messines and Brussels: DSD Visit

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development to report on her recent visit to Messines and Brussels. (AQO 43/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I accepted an invitation from Glen Barr OBE, of the Maydown Ebrington Group to visit historical sites in Belgium as part of the International School for Peace Studies. The visit was extended to enable me to carry out a programme of events in Brussels.

While in Belgium, I visited Messines in support of the work currently being undertaken by the International School for Peace Studies, led by Mr Barr and the Maydown Ebrington Group. This programme, which my Department funds under the Neighbourhood Renewal Investment Fund, aims to promote peace and reconciliation between communities in disadvantaged areas of Northern Ireland. It uses the experiences of those from both parts of Ireland who fought and died together during the First World War in Belgium and in and around Messines in particular.

I had the opportunity to visit a number of cemeteries and memorials to the men of the 16th Irish and 36th Ulster Divisions. I also met with local political representatives who have been advocates for the work of the International School for Peace Studies.

My visit last week was timed to coincide with that of a group of young people from three different schools in Derry who were taking part in the Peace Studies programme. I was honoured to have the opportunity, along with these young people and their teachers, to participate in a memorial service at the Menin Gate in Messines.

During my short visit to Brussels I attended 8 separate events and met with a range of politicians and officials including the newly appointed Commissioner for Regional Development Mr Samecki and the new chair of the Parliament's Regional Development Committee – Ms Hübner. In my meeting I emphasised the important contribution the EU has made to Northern Ireland but that much still needs to be done to tackle the problem of segregation, and that a further EU contribution to this would be welcomed.

Housing: Intimidation

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to review the allocation of intimidation points to ensure that those in genuine need are rehoused and that those making fraudulent applications are clearly identified. (AQO 44/10)

The Minister for Social Development: With increased political stability in Northern Ireland, incidences of sectarian intimidation have reduced significantly. Even though the definition of intimidation has been amended to include racist and homophobic issues as well as serious neighbour disputes, the number of intimidation cases has been decreasing steadily since 2002. New and tougher approaches to dealing with anti-social behaviour also provide more scope for making the applicant's home safe through discussion, support, mediation and, in some cases, legal action.

My officials are currently reviewing how certain components of need are dealt with and this review may well result in changes to the Common Selection Scheme. Any changes to intimidation action will of course take into account causes of intimidation, level of threat, and standard of evidence.

Living Over the Shops Scheme

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to the £500,000 made available for the Living Over the Shops scheme, to detail (i) the source of this additional funding; (ii) how it will be delivered; and (iii) in which towns. (AQO 45/10)

The Minister for Social Development: We all know that for far too long, many town centres have been seen as being alive only during shopping hours. The Living Over The Shops initiative is an important regeneration tool which breathes new life and vitality into town centres by converting under used retail space into housing. That is why I felt it important to secure funding for this important work during the current financial year. The continuation of this scheme will not only enhance our urban regeneration activity, but will provide much needed additional housing in areas of high housing need.

Additional funding for the scheme – beyond the £320,000 already committed by the Housing Executive - has been sourced from within DSD's Urban Development Programme in order to make grant available within the 23 already designated Town Centre Living Initiative Areas

The locations are as follows – Antrim, Armagh, Ballycastle, Ballymoney, Ballynahinch, Bushmills, Cookstown, Derry, Donaghadee, Downpatrick, Dromore, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Lisburn, Lurgan, Newtownstewart, Omagh, Portaferry, Strabane, Tandragee and the Woodvale and Shankill Roads, Sandy Row and Donegall Road and Newtownards Road, all in Belfast.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 25 September 2009

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Freedom of Information

Mr Kennedy asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) the date; and (ii) the topics discussed at the most recent meeting between the Central Freedom of Information Team and the Information Commissioner's Office Northern Ireland Regional Office. (AQW 16/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr McGuinness): The Central Freedom of Information team and the Northern Ireland Regional Office of the Information Commissioner last met on 26 February 2009. The topics discussed were: the performance of the Northern Ireland Departments in processing requests under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 and the Environmental Information Regulations 2004; the investigation of complaints against Departments by the Information Commissioner; the implementation of the new model Publication Scheme by the Departments; the training of Civil Service staff in handling requests for information; and the public consultation concerning the designation of additional public authorities under section 5 of the FOI Act.

Maze Site

Mr Savage asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress of the Development Corporation formed to investigate options for the Maze site; and the costs incurred to date. (AQW 29/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We refer the Member to our previous responses to AQW 8858/09 and AQW 8457/09 dated 29 June 2009.

We can confirm that no costs have been incurred to date as OFMDFM officials are currently progressing the necessary legislation to establish and empower the Development Corporation.

United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Dr Farry asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 8996/09, whether Northern Ireland officials were invited to attend the meeting of the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to examine its report of 22 May on the United Kingdom; and what decision was taken in relation to any invitation. (AQW 68/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: OFMDFM officials were invited to the examination. OFMDFM has agreed to co-ordinate any questions specific to here which the UN Committee might have following this examination and to co-ordinate an Executive response to the Concluding Observations Report .

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost of OFMDFM

Mr McGlone asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent by their Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 74/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Table 1 details how much the Department has spent in the last five financial years, on both private consultancy firms and events organisers.

The cost of 'private consultancy firms' is deemed to be the cost of 'external consultancy' for the last five financial years.

The cost of 'events organisers' is deemed to be the annual expenditure incurred by OFMDFM on companies categorised as event organisers.

OFMDFM has taken the lead in organising all events managed in this five-year period. The invoices supplied by event organising companies engaged by OFMDFM also include the costs of services provided by the companies' sub-contractors for services such as catering, seating, etc. These sub-contractor costs are included in the expenditure figures set out in Table 1

Sustainable Development Strategy

Mr Spratt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when a new Sustainable Development Strategy will be in place. (AQO 51/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We have agreed a draft of the new Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland and recently wrote to the Committee for OFMDFM seeking its views on the draft Strategy.

We intend to seek Executive agreement to begin the public consultation process that will lead to the publication of a Strategy which is now, we believe, more effectively aligned with the Programme for Government.

Additionally, we have recently approved the process to appoint a Commissioner to the Sustainable Development Commission. This is an important step as it will provide us with a strong representative voice in the Commission alongside the other devolved administrations. It will also allow access to expert resources.

We anticipate that the Commission will continue to be heavily involved in the ongoing development and implementation of the new Sustainable Development Strategy. In this context the appointment of a new Northern Ireland Commissioner will be particularly welcome.

UN International Day of Older Persons

Mr Buchanan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how they intend to mark the contribution our elderly citizens make to society, in light of the forthcoming Older Person's Day. (AQO 52/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: This year the United Nations International Day of Older People will take place on 1st October. As in 2007 and 2008, we intend to use the day to:

- underline the Executive's commitment to addressing older people's issues;
- celebrate improvements in the well-being of older people and their contribution to social, economic and cultural life; and
- meet with representatives from a range of older people's groups from the voluntary and community sector.

In 2007 and 2008, the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister organised events in Belfast and Cultra and this year an event is being organised on behalf of the Junior Ministers, in the Everglades Hotel, to again celebrate the day with older people from all over Northern Ireland.

It is our intention to shortly launch the consultation document on the powers and duties of the Commissioner for Older People.

The United Nations International Day of Older People offers a unique opportunity for those Departments and organisations who provide key services for older people, to publicise and inform on relevant issues such as benefits, Community Safety and transport.

These 'Information Stands' have proved a popular feature in previous years and will again be provided at this year's event.

Cohesion, Sharing and Integration Strategy

Dr Farry asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what steps have been taken to agree a draft policy on the Cohesion, Sharing and Integration Strategy over the past three months. (AQO 53/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The draft Programme for Cohesion, Sharing and Integration was originally meant to have been brought forward before the end of last year. That and subsequent commitments on timing were made in good faith and it was our expectation that these would be met. It was not possible to meet that date. However, reaching agreement on CSI remains one of the top policy priorities in OFMDFM.

Whilst we continue to work intensively towards an agreed strategy that will benefit all our people now and over the longer term; work to promote community relations and good race relations has continued over the past two years, led and supported by OFMDFM Ministers and the whole ministerial team.

There are many examples of that commitment:

- We have invested £29m in good relations work in the current CSR period – to build a shared and better future – that is not insubstantial!
- Additionally, we provide match funding to EU funding under the PEACE III Programme. As the Accountable Department for three Priorities within the Programme we are strategically placed to ensure co-ordination of local activities at the local level.
- Junior Ministers continue to chair the North Belfast Working Group focusing on interface issues in Belfast and across Northern Ireland. We have spent £500,000 this summer on resourcing work on summer interventions programme.
- In Coleraine we have been working proactively with our key partners both statutory and non-statutory following the death of Mr Kevin McDaid in May and we have provided an additional £23,000 to Coleraine Borough Council for diversionary work on top of the £86,000 awarded to the Council for good relations activities. Junior Ministers will meet with our key partners again on 23rd September as part of our ongoing commitment to the area.
- Similarly in Craigavon, the Junior Ministers have been chairing meetings with all our key partners on the issues and tensions there and we are supporting and facilitating diversionary work on a multi-agency basis.
- Flags monitoring has been undertaken on our behalf since 2006 by the Institute of Irish Studies at Queen's University and the last survey will be conducted at the end of this month and we expect to receive the report by the end of this year.

Presbyterian Mutual Society

Rev Dr Robert Coulter asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what progress has been made in negotiations with HM Government and HM Treasury regarding compensation for savers with the Presbyterian Mutual Society. (AQO 54/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are very aware of the anxiety and distress caused to members of the Presbyterian Mutual Society by the prevailing uncertainties around their savings. The Administrator is scheduled to provide members with an update report this month and the Ministerial Working Group chaired by HMT is required to produce its report to the Prime Minister in September.

We are encouraged by the fact that the Officials group has so far met 6 times and progress has been made in exploring the possible options for government help.

We have also received a report from a working group of the Presbyterian Church and this is being considered.

We do recognise, however, that there are significant commercial and other sensitivities associated with some options for resolving the PMS difficulties. Therefore, at this point, we cannot elaborate on the options. To do so may jeopardise or compromise a resolution.

We want to assure Members of this Assembly and of the Presbyterian Mutual Society that this matter is still very much receiving our close attention.

Cohesion, Sharing and Integration Strategy

Rt Hon J Donaldson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress made in agreeing the revised strategy for Cohesion, Sharing and Integration. (AQO 55/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The draft Programme for Cohesion, Sharing and Integration was originally meant to have been brought forward before the end of last year. That and subsequent commitments on timing were made in good faith and it was our expectation that these would be met. It was not possible to meet that date. However, reaching agreement on CSI remains one of the top policy priorities in OFMDFM.

Whilst we continue to work intensively towards an agreed strategy that will benefit all our people now and over the longer term; work to promote community relations and good race relations has continued over the past two years, led and supported by OFMDFM Ministers and the whole ministerial team.

There are many examples of that commitment:

- We have invested £29m in good relations work in the current CSR period – to build a shared and better future – that is not insubstantial!
- Additionally, we provide match funding to EU funding under the PEACE III Programme. As the Accountable Department for three Priorities within the Programme we are strategically placed to ensure co-ordination of local activities at the local level.
- Junior Ministers continue to chair the North Belfast Working Group focusing on interface issues in Belfast and across Northern Ireland. We have spent £500,000 this summer on resourcing work on summer interventions programme.
- In Coleraine we have been working proactively with our key partners both statutory and non-statutory following the death of Mr Kevin McDaid in May and we have provided an additional £23,000 to Coleraine Borough Council for diversionary work on top of the £86,000 awarded to the Council for good relations activities. Junior Ministers will meet with our key partners again on 23rd September as part of our ongoing commitment to the area.
- Similarly in Craigavon, the Junior Ministers have been chairing meetings with all our key partners on the issues and tensions there and we are supporting and facilitating diversionary work on a multi-agency basis.
- Flags monitoring has been undertaken on our behalf since 2006 by the Institute of Irish Studies at Queen's University and the last survey will be conducted at the end of this month and we expect to receive the report by the end of this year.

Executive Office, Brussels

Mr Neeson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when their Department last used the Executive Office in Brussels. (AQO 56/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Regular use of the Executive Office in Brussels is made by OFMDFM Ministers as well as other Executive Ministers and officials from their Departments. The uses of the office range from advice and briefing on European policies and programmes, facilitation of operational and technical meetings and representational meetings in Brussels on issues of local concern.

The Office is currently facilitating a two-day visit by Junior Minister Kelly, during which he will chair a plenary meeting of the Barroso Taskforce Working Group, present the report of the 2008/09 work of the Task Force and hold a series of profile-raising meetings. The Office planned and facilitated two other Ministerial visits during September 2009, one for the Minister for Social Development and one for the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. Both Ministers met institutional and diplomatic contacts at a high level in Brussels to enable them to discuss matters of interest and concern to their respective Departments.

We last visited the Brussels office on 31 March and 1 April 2009, and Junior Ministers held a series of high-level meetings to raise issues of concern including the State Aid application by Bombardier for its C-Series project.

Executive Ministers and their Departments work through the Brussels office to progress their implementation of the recommendations of the European Commission Taskforce.

Legislation: Executive Bills

Mr Dallat asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the number of Executive Bills that they anticipate being tabled before Christmas recess. (AQO 57/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Three Bills have already been introduced in this session, on Rates, the Department of Justice and, earlier today, Water and Sewerage Services. We are also aware at this time of a further five Bills which Ministers propose to introduce before Christmas recess subject to consultation with the relevant Assembly Committee and agreement by the Executive.

North/South Implementation Bodies/Tourism Ireland: Value for Money

Mr Craig asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what action is being taken to ensure that the taxpayer in Northern Ireland is getting value for money from the North/South implementation bodies and Tourism Ireland Ltd. (AQO 58/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: In connection with the examination of the efficiency and value for money, the North South Implementation Bodies and Tourism Ireland Ltd operate under the overall direction of the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC), with accountability lines back, not only to the Council, the Oireachtas and the Assembly, but also to Finance and other Departments responsible for their funding.

Each Body is required to:

- comply with the provisions of a Financial Memorandum drawn up for it by Sponsor and Finance departments;
- submit a report on its activities in each year to NSMC;
- prepare a statement of accounts in respect of each year. The Comptroller and Auditor General for Northern Ireland and the Irish Comptroller and Auditor General, in co-operation, examine and certify the accounts; and
- lay their Annual Reports and statements of account before the Northern Ireland Assembly and both Houses of the Oireachtas. Tourism Ireland Ltd operates under similar controls.

When called upon the Bodies will, if so requested, appear before, or otherwise co-operate with a Northern Ireland Assembly Committee. There are similar arrangements in relation to the Oireachtas.

The North/South Bodies, like all other public bodies, are required to deliver their objectives and programmes more efficiently, particularly in the current economic climate. Each Body is therefore required to identify 3% per annum cash releasing efficiency savings in their 2009 and 2010 Business Plans.

In addition, the St Andrews Agreement provided for the establishment of a Review Group with a remit that included; 'examine objectively the efficiency and value for money of existing Implementation Bodies.'

The Review Group consists of senior officials and an advisory panel of four experts/advisers. Work is ongoing and it is hoped that the review will be concluded by December 2009.

Coleraine: Vulnerable Communities

Mr Campbell asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what progress has been made in assisting vulnerable working class communities in the Coleraine area following the inter-communal problems which preceded and followed the killing of Mr. Kevin McDaid over the summer. (AQO 59/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Junior Minister Kelly and former Junior Minister Donaldson met with elected members and statutory bodies from the Coleraine area on 16th June to discuss these problems and responses to them. Ministers undertook to meet again after the summer recess.

To that end Junior Ministers Kelly and Newton will meet with this grouping again on 23rd September to follow up on a number of issues such as developments on events over the summer period; diversionary activities over the summer; progress on appointment of a consultant to develop a community plan; and a report of a meeting of elected members with the Chief Executive of the Community Relations Council.

We have provided additional funding of £23,000 to Coleraine Borough Council for summer diversionary work on top of the £86,000 awarded to the Council for the 2009/10 good relations programme.

The additional monies include funding for a children's camp at Corrymeela between 10th-13th July; additional Dialogue and Identity Programme work and the development of a 3-month Cross Sectoral Development Strategy to address wider issues in the Coleraine area such as youth and community provision.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Slurry Spreading Deadline

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she has had any discussions with the Minister of the Environment regarding the possibility of extending the slurry spreading deadline for this year. (AQW 40/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): I and the Minister for the Environment are fully aware that farmers are having practical difficulties with spreading slurry due to the poor weather this summer. I have provided the Minister of the Environment with details of the advice my Department has been able to offer to farmers recently and explained some of the difficulties that farmers are having with managing slurry.

I welcome the fact that farmers have avoided the risk of causing water pollution by not spreading slurry when conditions have been unsuitable over the recent months. However, this means that many farms have significant amounts of slurry in storage tanks and now need a suitable opportunity to spread slurry ahead of the winter housing period.

Without this opportunity, I recognise that some farmers could face practical difficulties in complying with the Nitrates Action Programme Regulations. The closed period for slurry spreading is a regulatory requirement under the Nitrates Action Programme Regulations. The NI Environment Agency is responsible for inspection and enforcement of these Regulations. Therefore, any regulatory matters are primarily for the Minister of the Environment to consider.

DARD Direct Offices

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made on the final location of the DARD Direct offices; and when she expects to make an announcement on this. (AQW 42/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: In January this year, I announced that a network of 12 DARD Direct offices would be established to deliver services to customers across the north of Ireland. At that time I identified the locations of 10 of these offices. These are Omagh, Dungannon, Armagh, Newry, Downpatrick, Newtownards, Ballymena, Coleraine, Claudy and Magherafelt. (These are in addition to the Enniskillen office, which was established as the pilot DARD Direct office). In July, I confirmed that the 12th and final office would be located in the centre of the South and East Antrim area (eg, between Mallusk and Antrim).

With respect to identifying actual office accommodation, my officials are working in partnership with DFP (Department of Finance and Personnel) to determine this, as they are responsible for providing office accommodation to meet the needs of all Government Departments. They are working through a range of steps to assess the suitability of existing accommodation and/or identify alternative accommodation that will optimise alignment with the DARD Direct specification. It is a process of elimination and at this stage, for the majority of locations, there is no final decision on what accommodation we will occupy.

So far, decisions have been taken to refurbish accommodation currently occupied by DARD at Newry, Dungannon and Coleraine. It is envisaged that this work will be completed by March 2010. As suitable buildings are identified and secured at other locations, they will be made known.

Dairy Industry: Support DEFRA/EC

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what representations she has made to DEFRA and the European Commission regarding support for the dairy industry. (AQW 43/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: When milk prices fell sharply last October I and my Executive colleagues worked tirelessly to support the dairy industry. We lobbied hard to secure the re-introduction of export refunds which have been so important to it over the years. In particular –

- I spoke to the Defra Secretary of State, Hilary Benn, on 23 October to underscore the dependence of our dairy industry on milk powders and to ask him to support the re-introduction of export refunds for dairy products.
- On 19 November Arlene Foster and I wrote to Hilary Benn to alert him to the fact that our dairy industry was facing a crisis and to seek his support in forthcoming discussions in the EU Dairy Management Committee. We emphasised that there was an urgent need for the UK to request the European Commission to reintroduce export refunds for milk powders. We urged him to take positive action that would help our dairy industry through these difficult times.
- On 26 November I wrote again to Hilary Benn saying that I was bitterly disappointed that Britain appeared set to oppose a request from the Polish authorities for the re-introduction of export refunds. I assured him that the global downturn was for real for our dairy sector and asked him to re-consider Britain's position and along with Poland and other Member States to put pressure on the Commission to reintroduce export refunds.
- On 27 November, at my behest, the First Minister and Deputy First Minister wrote to the Prime Minister outlining the crisis for our dairy industry which was being damaged by exceptionally difficult market conditions in a disproportionate way compared to the situation in Britain. We emphasised that the immediate introduction of export refunds would boost returns, restore confidence and help tide the industry through an extremely difficult period.
- On 27 November I also spoke with the Defra Minister, Huw-Irranca Davies, attending the EU Agricultural Council meeting in Brussels on 28 November to again emphasise the importance of the issue and express disappointment that so far there had been no movement at EU level on export refunds.
- On 10 December Nigel Dodds and I, along with David Dobbin of United Dairy Farmers and a senior DARD official met with Hilary Benn to present the case in support of the re-introduction of export refunds. At the end of the meeting he acknowledged the strong case we had made and accepted the greater relative contribution of the dairy sector to the overall the north of Ireland's economy than is the case in Britain.
- On 11 December, at my behest, a senior DARD official wrote to the Director of Dairy Policy in Defra covering the salient points covered at the meeting on the previous day.
- At this stage Arlene Foster and I also sought a meeting with the European Commissioner, Mariann Fischer-Boel, to ensure that she was aware of the seriousness of the situation. This was arranged for 11 February (when the First Minister, deputy First Minister and I planned to attend) but this agenda item was cancelled following the European Commission's announcement on 15 January that export refunds were to be re-introduced.
- On 20 January Arlene Foster and I again wrote to Hilary Benn urging him to instruct his officials to support the re-introduction of export refunds. As a result he instructed his officials to abstain in the vote on the matter. This important change was only realised following intensive lobbying.
- As the dairy industry continued to face difficulties stemming from the downturn in global markets I urged the Commissioner Fischer at the Balmoral Show to continue to do what she could to help in the dairy sector in the months ahead.

I would welcome a higher level of export refunds to help the dairy industry through the current difficult period stemming in large measure from the economic downturn. However, I was disappointed to note that at the EU Management Committee meetings Defra officials continue to resist proposals which would benefit the dairy sector. In particular at the meeting on 18 June they voted against a Commission proposal to increase export refunds for milk powders; on 23 July they voted against an emergency measure to extend intervention for butter and skimmed milk powder until 30 November 2009; and on 3 September, following the increase in prices at the Fonterra auction asked if the Commission would reduce export refunds for whole milk powder. In view of these developments you may wish to press Hilary Benn to follow a more helpful line for the good of our dairy industry.

More recently, the Commission produced a "Dairy Market Situation 2009" communication. At my behest officials wrote to Defra on the matter and asked Defra to take a more measured approach at the September Council of Ministers meeting when other Member States ask for help. In the letter it was emphasised that while the current measures taken by the Commission have been helpful, prices are still not adequate to secure the long term future of the dairy sector and it is not sufficient for Defra to say that the market will sort it out.

I was pleased to note that at the 7 September EU Council of Ministers' meeting Commissioner Mariann Fischer-Boel used our industry as an example of a region that has been hard hit by the depressed world market. In addition Hilary Benn referred to the difficulties faced by our local producers. These references confirm that the message regarding the difficulties faced by our industry has registered in both London and Brussels.

The situation is being carefully monitored and I will continue to press Defra and the European Commission to act in the best interests of our dairy industry. Our mutual aim is to secure outcomes on issues which are in the best long term interests of the local dairy industry.

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DARD

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much has been spent by her Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 73/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Expenditure incurred by the Department on consultants in the last five years is as follows:-

YEAR TOTAL SPEND

|-------|------------|
| 04/05 | £1,820,000 |
| 05/06 | £340,000 |
| 06/07 | £780,000 |
| 07/08 | £480,121 |
| 08/09 | £488,450 |

Expenditure incurred by the Department on events organisers in the last five years is as follows:-

|-------|-------|
| 04/05 | £0.00 |
| 05/06 | £0.00 |
| 06/07 | £0.00 |
| 07/08 | £0.00 |
| 08/09 | £0.00 |

Brucellosis

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to brucellosis in cattle, to detail (i) the cost of testing; (ii) the cost of veterinary fees for testing; and (iii) the number slaughtered, but found to be disease free, to date in 2009. (AQW 98/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development:

- (i) The laboratory testing costs for brucellosis for financial year 2008/2009 have not been supplied by AFBI (Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute) to date. For calendar year 2008, the laboratory costs were £2,088,928. This includes serological testing of blood samples; bacteriological culture; testing of milk samples and the cost of the test kits.
- (ii) Veterinary fees for brucellosis, i.e. fees charged to herd owners by private veterinary practitioners, are a feature of private testing and pre-movement testing only (or post movement testing, if the pre-movement test has not been carried out). These fees are a commercial matter between the PVPs and their clients.

For all other routine and risk testing for brucellosis, Animal Health and Welfare Inspectors, employed by DARD's Veterinary Service, visit farms to take the blood samples for laboratory testing. These staff are not veterinarians and they carry out brucellosis programme tasks as well as other animal health and welfare duties.

- (iii) From 01/01/2009 to 07/08/09, (the last reactors for which there are culture results available) a total of 60 serological reactor animals had glands taken post slaughter for culture.

Of the 60 samples that were cultured, 41 were culture negative, 19 were culture positive.

A percentage of infected animals will show a negative culture.

Welfare of Animals Bill

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the reasons for the delay in introducing the Welfare of Animals Bill; and if she foresees any further delay. (AQW 109/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department consulted with stakeholders on a review of animal welfare legislation in 2006. As this consultation was carried out during Direct Rule, I wanted to take the time to engage directly with key stakeholders to hear at first hand their concerns. Since taking up office in 2007, my officials and I have engaged extensively with a wide range of welfare interests, from here, the south and Britain. This has taken time, but I want to get any new Animal Welfare Bill right. I also want to draw on lessons learnt in England, Wales and Scotland since the introduction of their new legislation in 2006 and 2007 respectively. In addition, I want to take account, as far as possible, of developments in the south as they bring forward new welfare legislation.

A new Animal Welfare Bill is one of my key ministerial priorities and it is my intention, subject to Executive approval, to progress a new Welfare Bill through to enactment during the lifetime of this Assembly.

IT Systems: DARD

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) all new IT systems installed within her Department in the last 5 years; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date. (AQW 128/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The following table details new IT systems installed within the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (excluding corporate NICS systems installed by the Department of Finance and Personnel).

TABLE: NEW IT SYSTEMS INSTALLED IN DARD

| Year | System | Initial Budget (£k) | Actual Cost (£k) | Estimated Start Date | Actual Start Date |
|-------|--|---------------------|------------------|----------------------|-------------------|
| 04/05 | Grants and Subsidies Geographic Information System | 1,786.4 | 1,651.8 | Nov 04 | Jan 05 |
| | Forest Service Geographic Information System | 525.0 | 523.8 | Jun 04 | Jun 04 |

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many Farm Modernisation Scheme applications were (i) received; (ii) approved for payment; and (iii) of those approved, how many applicants took up payment. (AQW 224/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: 9,269 Farm Modernisation Programme applications were received.

1,268 applications have been made an offer of financial support.

As of 16th September 2009, 1,024 farmers had indicated they would be taking up their offer of support.

Payments to farmers are only approved when the project has been completed, a valid claim submitted and the expenditure verified as being eligible. To date 20 projects have been approved for payment.

Brucellosis

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many cattle have been tested for Brucellosis in the past (i) three months; (ii) six months; (iii) nine months; and (iv) twelve months. (AQW 227/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: For accuracy, Official Veterinary Service statistics are published with a 5 week time lag. Therefore, the following were calculated from finalised statistics available for period ending 31/07/2009.

The number of cattle tested for brucellosis was:

- (i) 159,114 for period 01/05/2009 to 31/07/2009
- (ii) 476,844 for period 01/02/2009 to 31/07/2009
- (iii) 774,531 for period 01/11/2008 to 31/07/2009
- (iv) 913,992 for period 01/08/2008 to 31/07/2009

Sheep: Electronic Identification

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with her colleagues across the UK about the introduction of electronic identification of sheep. (AQO 61/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I, and my officials, have worked closely with Defra and Devolved Administration Ministers on the issue of sheep electronic identification, or EID. Such discussions have taken place as part of my regular meetings with Defra and Scottish and Welsh Ministers. I also spoke to my Ministerial colleagues by phone on several occasions in the run up to critical negotiations in Brussels.

I have also discussed the issue of sheep identification and movement with Commissioner Vassiliou and Commissioner Fischer Boel as I have always believed that we in the North should move directly to EID, rather than introducing double-tagging of sheep, as was the case in Britain. I believe that changing the system more than once in a short period of time would have been confusing for keepers. My efforts have been widely acknowledged and supported by the industry here.

Through negotiations at EU level we had already secured a two year delay in the implementation of EID and the phasing-in of individual recording of tag numbers. In July this year we secured further important concessions from the Commission which allow markets and meat plants to read and record tag numbers on behalf of keepers. This will significantly reduce the burden on keepers here.

I have also had discussions with my Ministerial colleagues in Dublin.

My officials and I have been working closely with industry representatives to design a sheep EID system that will strike the right balance between the cost of tags and the administrative burden that will be placed on keepers. My Department published a consultation on the new rules for sheep EID on 11 September, and I would encourage all those involved in the sheep industry to submit their views.

Duplicate Fields

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is her Department's position on the Duplicate Fields court ruling and what are the implications for affected farmers. (AQO 64/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: Firstly, I would like to remind Members that the judgement in this Court Ruling was that 2 of the 4 cases involved should be returned to Panel for consideration of the "not at fault" provision. These cases have now been cleared with penalties withdrawn and interest paid. In the other 2 cases, there was no action for my Department and the penalties in these cases remained unchanged.

Since the judgement, my Department has been taking advice about its impact on other duplicate field cases. We have been advised that, from a legal perspective, we have fulfilled our strict obligations in respect of the Judicial Review.

However, as I recognised that this is an area of great sensitivity and concern to the farming industry, I asked my officials to see whether it is possible to allow other cases the opportunity for review.

My officials have been considering the options and are now working with the UFU and NIAPA to determine how the remaining penalty cases can be handled. One thing that has become clear is that there is no "one size fits all" solution, cases will have to be considered on their individual merits against a set of defined criteria. In addition, any action taken has to be defensible from a legislative perspective.

Good progress has been made and I will be keeping the ARD Committee advised of developments.

Food Processing: Contracts

Mr Dallat asked of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she has taken to ensure that Northern Ireland based food processing companies will continue to have equal opportunity when bidding for contracts from Irish Government departments. (AQO 68/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I understand that the Member is referring to the recent Irish Farmers' Association press article calling for all future public procurement contracts to be focused on Irish produce.

As members will be aware all public procurement contracts are subject to strict EU procurement law to ensure that there is a fair, open and transparent process. In this particular instance the Irish Defence Department awarded Crossgar Poultry to supply poultry products to the south. My personal view is that produce from the north of Ireland is "Irish Produce" and the fact that this particular company has plants across Ireland, north and south illustrates that point.

I subsequently wrote to Willie O'Dea, Minister for Defence, on 2 July seeking clarification of the public procurement policy in the South and he has assured me that all contracts will be awarded in line with the requirements set out in the EU procurement rules.

Rural Development Programme

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with the Minister of Finance and Personnel and Her Majesty's Government following legal developments regarding the conacre ruling in the McClean case. (AQO 70/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The decision in the McClean case, which denied Business Property Relief in respect of land let in conacre, has concerned me greatly. I commented publicly on this issue following the British House of Lords refusal to grant leave to appeal the decision. Since then, I have written to the Minister of Finance and Personnel about the matter and we have agreed to seek a joint meeting with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Liam Byrne). Subsequently, I have written to the British Treasury outlining my concerns at the potential impact of this ruling on conacre letting and the likelihood of enforced sales of agricultural land. I am pleased to say that the Finance Minister and I have common views on this issue and officials from both Departments are working very closely on the matter.

Livestock and Meat Commission

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the Strategic Review of the Livestock and Meat Commission. (AQO 71/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: I welcome this independent strategic review of the Livestock and Meat Commission (LMC) which I announced on 18 August 2009. The review's aims are to address the LMC's functions, structural and funding arrangements. This strategic review will help identify a model which will deliver the best results, for those stakeholders who pay a levy to the LMC. It will also need to take into account changes in the marketplace and effective and value for money arrangements to meet the needs of levy payers.

The review is being carried out by Pricewaterhouse Coopers (PwC), who have been seeking the views of a full range of stakeholders as part of their consultation process and I have encouraged all those involved to engage fully, to help ensure that we get the best outcome for our industry.

I expect to receive the Review's Report before the end of this year. Therefore, it is too early to provide an assessment of the Review, which is still underway. As such, I do not want to pre-empt the findings of the Review's Report before I receive them. At that stage, what I can say is that I will give full consideration to all of the recommendations and their implications, before deciding on the best way forward, in the interests of all those involved.

Rural Development Programme

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many projects have been approved under Axis 3 of the Rural Development Programme being delivered through local council clusters. (AQO 72/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: With you permission Mr Speaker I will answer questions 13 and 15 together.

I am pleased to say that just over sixteen hundred applications have been recorded on the database for the measures under Axis 3 of the Rural Development Programme. These can be broken down into cluster areas as follows:

| | | |
|-------|-----|---|
| SWARD | 616 | (Fermanagh, Dungannon, Magherafelt and Cookstown) |
| LRP | 108 | (Lisburn, Castlereagh and Belfast) |
| GROW | 95 | (Antrim, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey) |
| NER | 109 | (Ballymena, Ballymoney, Coleraine, Moyle and Larne) |
| DRAP | 198 | (Ards, North Down, Banbridge and Down) |
| ARC | 330 | (Omagh, Strabane, Derry and Limavady) |
| SOAR | 183 | (Armagh, Craigavon and Newry & Mourne) |

I would point out that not all areas have opened all their measures yet.

Following eligibility checks and site visits nearly eight hundred of these applications have now been considered as eligible for assessment by the Local Action Groups. To date over one hundred and thirty projects have achieved or exceeded the pass mark for assessment marking them eligible. Indeed the GROW group made up of Antrim, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey council areas issued letters of offer worth over four hundred thousand pounds last week, a quarter of a million of this to farm diversification projects. I have been told that at least three more areas will be in a position to issue letters by the end of the month and this will inject much needed investment into our rural areas.

Rural White Paper

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the work of the stakeholder forum on the Rural White Paper. (AQO 73/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The Rural White Paper Stakeholder Advisory Group is currently undertaking work in sub-group format on the five themes - Rural Vision, Rural Governance, Rural Services, Rural Places and Rural People.

I recently met with the chairpersons of the five stakeholder sub-groups and was provided with a progress reports on the work of each of the sub-groups. I am satisfied with the progress made by the sub-groups to date and am particularly pleased that the representatives of the various rural sectors are working effectively together to ensure that there are meaningful and achievable outcomes to the stakeholder work.

The sub-groups have initially been focussing on researching those rural issues which fall within their terms of reference and are now in the process of identifying measures which will help to ensure the future sustainability of rural areas. The sub-groups are scheduled to report back on the outcome of their work later in the autumn and I am confident that the experience and expertise of the sub-group members will ensure that the Stakeholder Advisory Group makes an important contribution to the final overall Rural White Paper.

Rural Development Programme

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many applications have been made to the Rural Development Programme for each of the seven council clusters; and how many have been granted. (AQO 74/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: With you permission Mr Speaker I will answer questions 13 and 15 together.

I am pleased to say that just over sixteen hundred applications have been recorded on the database for the measures under Axis 3 of the Rural Development Programme. These can be broken down into cluster areas as follows:

| | | |
|-------|-----|---|
| SWARD | 616 | (Fermanagh, Dungannon, Magherafelt and Cookstown) |
| LRP | 108 | (Lisburn, Castlereagh and Belfast) |
| GROW | 95 | (Antrim, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey) |
| NER | 109 | (Ballymena, Ballymoney, Coleraine, Moyle and Larne) |
| DRAP | 198 | (Ards, North Down, Banbridge and Down) |
| ARC | 330 | (Omagh, Strabane, Derry and Limavady) |
| SOAR | 183 | (Armagh, Craigavon and Newry & Mourne) |

I would point out that not all areas have opened all their measures yet.

Following eligibility checks and site visits nearly eight hundred of these applications have now been considered as eligible for assessment by the Local Action Groups. To date over one hundred and thirty projects have achieved or exceeded the pass mark for assessment marking them eligible. Indeed the GROW group made up of Antrim, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey council areas issued letters of offer worth over four hundred thousand pounds last week, a quarter of a million of this to farm diversification projects. I have been told that at least three more areas will be in a position to issue letters by the end of the month and this will inject much needed investment into our rural areas.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Metropolitan Arts Centre

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he has approved the funding pledged by his Department to develop the Metropolitan Arts Centre. (AQW 53/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McCausland): The Metropolitan Arts Centre is one of a small number of the Department's strategic arts infrastructure projects. Scrutiny of the Business Plan has been completed and the Department is moving towards a letter of offer. Outstanding issues are being addressed by DCAL officials in liaison with the Arts Council and project promoters.

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DCAL

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 72/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure spent the following amounts on (a) private consultancy firms and (b) events organisers in the financial years 2004-05 to 2008-09:

| Year | Private Consultancy Firms (£) | Events Organisers (£) |
|---------|-------------------------------|-----------------------|
| 2004-05 | 244,661 | 12,191 |
| 2005-06 | 197,378 | 3,712 |
| 2006-07 | 1,178,042 | 0 |
| 2007-08 | 3,373,393 | 0 |
| 2008-09 | 172,832 | 2,679 |

Freedom of Information Act: Compliance

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action is being taken to improve the Department's compliance with section 10 of the Freedom of Information Act. (AQW 94/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure received a total of 523 Freedom of Information (FOI) request in 2008. 116 (22%) sought access to active Departmental records and 407 sought access to transferred records held in the permanent archive managed by the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI).

- The Department responded to 112 of the active requests on time i.e. 96.5%. This compares favourably with clearance figures in other Departments.
- PRONI responded to 344 requests for access to permanent archive records on time i.e. 84.5%. This was an improvement of 4% on the previous year.
- PRONI carried out a review of its FOI procedures in February 2009 and the following actions were implemented
 - Appointment of additional curatorial staff.
 - Prioritisation of complex requests.
 - Application of permitted extension to time-limits for public interest consultation with originating Department

Hunger Strike Commemoration Rally

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he intends to raise with the GAA the use of the ground in Galbally for a commemoration of deceased members of the Provisional IRA. (AQW 123/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I have publicly called on the GAA to carry out a full investigation into the activities of 16 August at Galbally. I understand the Central Council of the GAA have remitted the Ulster Council to establish the exact circumstances surrounding the use of the Galbally Pearses ground for a commemoration of deceased members of the Provisional IRA. I am awaiting the outcome of their findings and look forward to receiving a report when it is completed.

Sport makes an important contribution to a shared and better future, one in which terrorism and sport cannot be mixed. I should hope and expect that no sports facility in Northern Ireland would be used to commemorate or celebrate terrorism or any other illegal activity.

Salmon

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for his assessment of the effectiveness of measures taken by his Department to address the fall in numbers of salmon caught in Northern Ireland. (AQW 124/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Compliance against salmon conservation targets in the former Fisheries Conservancy Board area has improved in recent years following the introduction of:

1. A voluntary net buyout scheme in the Fisheries Conservancy Board area which reduced fishing effort by 90% from 2000 – 2002
2. A carcass tagging and logbook scheme in 2001 which improved records of commercially and recreationally caught fish
3. Byelaws that require release of rod caught fish from the start of the season to 31 May and that impose a bag limit of 2 fish per day thereafter

A detailed scientific assessment undertaken in 2007 has indicated that the buyout has conserved around 460 River Bush salmon each year from 2002 - 2007 representing 42% of the rivers conservation target.

DCAL officials will continue to work with the scientific advisers in the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute to seek robust and effective measures which will make significant impact in the drive to conserve salmon in the former Fisheries Conservancy Board area of Northern Ireland. The Department intends to seek measures for restrictions rather than a total ban.

GAA Clubs

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, what consideration he has given to the potential funding ramifications of the GAA naming (i) clubs; (ii) grounds; and (iii) competitions after deceased members of the Provisional IRA. (AQW 125/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), an arm's length body of my Department, is responsible for distribution of sports funding in Northern Ireland. The GAA and its affiliated clubs are entitled to apply for funding on the basis that they are voluntary sports organisations within the meaning of Article 2 of the Recreation and Youth Service (Northern Ireland) Order 1986. As a public body, SNI has a statutory obligation under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to ensure that it continues to promote (1) equality of opportunity and (2) good relations. To meet this obligation, SNI funding programmes have an equality clause as a standard condition of their grants and SNI may suspend, reduce or stop payments or reclaim the grant in full if this clause is breached. Whilst not constituting a breach of this clause, I believe there is no place in sport for the naming of clubs, grounds and/or competitions after deceased terrorists and this practice is certainly not in keeping with the promotion of good relations as required under the equality legislation. I have asked officials to review the equity clause in the current terms and conditions and to advise if changes should be considered. Any change should reflect that sport makes an important contribution to a shared and better future, one in which terrorism and sport cannot be mixed.

IT Systems: DCAL

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) all new IT systems installed within his Department in the last 5 years; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date. (AQW 129/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The relevant costs and dates for DCAL systems costing more than £100,000 are set out in the table below.

| System | Initial Budget | Actual Cost | Estimated Start date | Actual Start Date |
|--|-----------------|-------------|----------------------|-------------------|
| Digitisation of Will Calendars and Wills | * Not available | 252,360 | 31 -03-2004 | 18-3 -2006 |
| OS Historical Maps | 213,545 | 448,406 | 20-03-2006 | 10-11-2008 |

| System | Initial Budget | Actual Cost | Estimated Start date | Actual Start Date |
|---------------------------------------|----------------|-------------|----------------------|-------------------|
| eCATNI – Archival Management System | £1,346,010 | 1,446,010 | 30-06-2006 | 26-08-2008 |
| eCATNI – On-Site Public Access System | | | 30-06-2006 | 10-11-2009 |
| eCATNI – Internet Search Engine | | | 30-06-2006 | 05-01-2009 |

* The business case for phase 1 (electronic index of will calendars and digitisation of Londonderry wills) had an estimated cost of £100,000 and an actual cost of £113,480. The total cost of the project which was done in 4 phases was £252,360

Special Olympics: Funding

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding his Department has allocated to the Special Olympics in each of the last three years. (AQW 206/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The total amount of funding awarded to Special Olympics in each of the last three years by my Department is as follows:

|--------------|-----------------|
| 2006/07 | £531,800 |
| 2007/08 | Nil |
| 2008/09 | Nil |
| Total | £531,800 |

In addition, Sport Northern Ireland has awarded Special Olympics £11,815 through the Awards for All Programme.

Historical Re-enactments

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding and performance opportunities are available for historical re-enactments depicting events important to the Protestant culture and heritage. (AQW 207/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Funding and performance opportunities for historical re-enactments are available through the Ulster-Scots Agency and Northern Ireland Screen, bodies sponsored by my Department. For example:-

- The Ulster-Scots Agency's Financial Assistance Scheme enables Voluntary and Community Groups to apply for funding towards drama projects including pageants and re-enactments which have an Ulster-Scots dimension.
- Northern Ireland Screen would consider supporting professional film or television productions. Northern Ireland Screen has previously supported the production of a short film entitled 'A Right Royal Lodge'.

Sports Training

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he would consider hosting specialist sports training days for young people using professional players and coaches. (AQW 208/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. SNI does not host sports specialist sports training days but can provide financial support to a range of sports organisations, including sports governing bodies, sports associations and sports clubs, that wish to do so. SNI is currently designing an Awards for Sport Programme from which assistance in this area may be obtained. This programme is presently expected to open for applications before the end of the 2009/10 financial year.

Maze Stadium Project

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the redistribution of monies that are no longer required for the Maze stadium project. (AQW 248/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Last year, 2008/09, £10m was allocated under the Multi Sports Stadium budget line. The full amount was declared as an easement in the Monitoring Round process.

This year, 2009/10, £28.92m was allocated. £1.979m was declared as an easement in the June Monitoring round and £1.1m is being declared as an easement in September Monitoring. As permitted under the acceleration and slippage arrangements in the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland (ISNI), it is proposed at this point in the year to reallocate the remaining £25.841m as detailed in the attached table. This proposed reallocation will be regularly reviewed throughout the year and adjustments made where necessary.

This proposed reallocation is subject to the September Monitoring process which is scheduled to be considered at the Executive meeting on 24th September.

Hunger Strike Commemoration Rally

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he is taking to secure a guarantee that events such as the hunger strike commemoration rally at Galbally Gaelic Athletic Club will not happen again at any GAA venue in Northern Ireland. (AQW 249/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I have publicly expressed my concerns at what took place at Galbally on 16 August and have called on the GAA to carry out a full investigation into the matter. I understand the Central Council of the GAA have already asked the Ulster Council to establish the exact circumstances surrounding the use of the Galbally Pearses grounds for a commemoration of deceased members of the Provisional IRA. I am awaiting the outcome of these findings and look forward to receiving a report when it is completed.

Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport including the distribution of funding. SNI have been asked to carry out a review of their existing terms and conditions of grants to sport. I look forward to receiving a report of SNI's analysis and, if appropriate, recommendations for change by the end of November.

Olympic Games: Funding

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many athletes, and from which sports, who are expected to compete in the 2012 Olympic Games representing Great Britain and Northern Ireland have received, or are likely to receive within the next 12 months, funding from his Department. (AQW 251/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including distribution of funding. SNI is currently providing financial assistance, through its Athlete Support Programme, to seven talented athletes considered to have the potential to represent Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games as follows:-

| Sport | Number |
|-----------------------|----------|
| Archery | 1 |
| Wheelchair basketball | 2 |
| Hockey | 2 |
| Table Tennis | 1 |
| Smallbore shooting | 1 |
| Total | 7 |

SNI's Athlete Support Programme is presently closed for further applications. Consequently, the full number of talented athletes considered to have the potential to be part of the Great Britain and Northern Ireland team at the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games, and likely to receive funding from SNI within the next 12 months, will not be known until after the Athlete Support Programme reopens. SNI currently hopes to reopen this programme for further applications in October 2009.

Commonwealth Games

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the size of the Northern Ireland team competing in the next Commonwealth Games; (ii) the number of individuals taking part in each sport; (iii) the number of team administrators; (iv) the number of team coaches; (v) the number of support staff attending; and (vi) the likely cost. (AQW 252/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Northern Ireland Commonwealth Games Council (NICGC) is responsible for the selection of the Northern Ireland team competing in the next Commonwealth Games. This includes the (i) size of the team; the number of individuals taking part in each sport; (iii) the number of team administrators; (iv) the number of team coaches; (v) the number of support staff attending; and (vi) the likely cost. I understand that the NICGC is in the process of selecting the team and that its final decision on these matters is unlikely to be known until the summer of 2010.

Athletes: SNI Funding

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of athletes who have received funding from his Department and represented countries other than Northern Ireland in international competition, broken down by sport. (AQW 253/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. The attached list provides an overview of the number of athletes who have received funding from SNI over the last three financial years broken down by sport and representation/team.

Employment of Coaches or Development Officers

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what financial assistance is offered to sports clubs for the employment of coaches or development officers. (AQW 271/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. SNI is currently in the process of developing two programmes, Active Communities and Awards for Sport, through which sports clubs may be able to obtain assistance in employing sports coaches and/or development officers. It is presently expected that these programmes will open for application in the next few months. In addition, SNI currently operates an Investing in Performance Sport programme through which sports clubs may, via their respective sports governing bodies, be able to access coaches and/or development officers to assist with athlete development.

GAA

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail all (i) GAA clubs; (ii) grounds; and (iii) competitions named after republican terrorists. (AQW 329/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure does not retain information on GAA clubs, grounds or competitions that are named after republican terrorists.

However, one of my major priorities as Sports Minister is to promote sport as a vehicle for improving community relations and community cohesion in Northern Ireland. I therefore fully expect all sports bodies, including Gaelic Sports, to do all they can to support these objectives. Linkages to terrorism in whatever form are not acceptable.

Ulster Scots: Dictionary

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) what bodies based outside the UK have offered to contribute to the development of a dictionary for Ulster Scots since 1999; (ii) the names of those bodies; (iii) how much was offered; and (iv) what was the outcome. (AQW 403/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Department has no information relating to offers of funding from any body outside the UK for a dictionary of Ulster Scots. Additionally the Department has engaged with the Ulster-Scots Agency, the Ulster-Scots Community Network and the Ulster-Scots Language Society and they also have no knowledge of any proposed funding from any body outside the UK for any Ulster-Scots dictionary project.

Museums: Mondays Closures

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if his Department has looked at other ways of making savings to prevent the closure of museums on Mondays, due to come into effect from 1 October 2009. (AQW 498/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: National Museums Northern Ireland regularly examines the way in which its services are aligned more closely with the needs and expectation of its visitors. While the organisation continues to prioritise its revenue funding in line with its Corporate Strategy objectives, the limited resources have to be targeted at improving the visitor experience, extending engagement with increasingly diverse audiences and widening access and participation within the communities its serves.

National Museums strives to align its business with the needs of users and following extensive consumer research, has decided to increase opening hours at weekends to meet an increasing demand from visitors. To achieve this objective within a very challenging funding environment, the organisation has also taken the decision to close the museums on a Monday (apart from Bank Holiday Mondays) – the day on which fewest visitors attend. The new opening hours are designed to match visitor demand and reflect the changing pattern of museum visits within the United Kingdom and more widely.

Legislation: DCAL

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline any legislation his Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 532/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: My Department has no plans to introduce any legislation to the Assembly before 31 December 2009.

Employment Levels: DCAL

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans he has to change employment levels within his Department in the next twelve months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 545/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: As part of Budget 2008-11, my Department has a target to deliver cash releasing efficiencies of £21m over the period 2008-11 (2008/09, £3.6m; 2009/10, £7m and 2010/11, £10.4m). The 2008/09 target has been achieved. In reaching the targets set for the remaining two years, existing staffing levels will be considered. Any changes which may be required to staffing levels in the next twelve months have not been quantified but will be considered in the context of the efficiencies referred to above. It is expected that any reduction in staffing levels will be achieved by natural wastage

Sports Coaches

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when he will carry out a public consultation on the extension of positions of trust to sports coaches, as recommended by the Assembly's ad Hoc Committee on the Draft Sexual Offences Order (NI) 2007. (AQW 607/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Northern Ireland Office (NIO) is responsible for sexual offences legislation in Northern Ireland. Decisions about the timing, and whether or not, to carry out a public consultation on the extension of positions of trust, under such legislation, to sports coaches are therefore entirely a matter for the NIO. I can, however, confirm that the previous Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, Gregory Campbell MP MLA, agreed in March 2009 to a request from Paul Goggins MP, Minister for Policing and Criminal Justice at the NIO, to undertake a consultation with sports bodies to ascertain their views on the issue. A consultation with sports bodies is currently expected to be carried out this autumn.

Swimmers at Camlough

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will issue a statement congratulating the swimmers at Camlough on their world record; and if he will consider hosting a reception to commemorate the occasion. (AQW 608/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I am aware of the recent Guinness world record breaking open water swim event which took place at Camlough. I have written to the Newry and Mourne Swimming Club as organisers of the event to congratulate them on achieving this Guinness world record.

Football: Grounds Improvement

Mr Dodds asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for his plans in relation to the grounds improvement for football. (AQW 684/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Responsibility for ground improvements for football rests, in the first instance, with the owners and operators of football grounds. However, Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding and has a number of programmes aimed at assisting ground owners, including football grounds owners, to make improvements to their stadia. These include:

- the Stadia Safety Programme which aims to assist the owners of major football, rugby and GAA grounds, on a strategic basis, to ensure the safety and comfort of spectators attending fixtures at their venues;
- Places for Sport to assist in the development of a range of new, improved and shared sports facilities; and
- the Soccer Strategy which aims to develop football stadia to UEFA, Irish Premier League and Premier Intermediate League level.

To ensure that international football can continue to be played at Windsor Park, a limited programme of essential work has been agreed to bring the stadium up to standard in the short to medium term. In addition to this, the IFA has submitted its preferred option for future stadium provision which is currently being examined to ensure value for money, operational viability, sustainability and affordability.

I will also be considering future funding for sports grounds improvements, including football grounds, in the context of my Department's bid under the forthcoming Comprehensive Spending Review.

Motorcycling Union of Ireland

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he can confirm that the Motorcycling Union of Ireland, via 2 and 4 Wheel Sport, has offered the Ulster Grand Prix £135 for course safety improvements to the pits area; and when this will be delivered. (AQW 741/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: I am aware that the 2&4 Wheel Motorsport Steering Group Limited (2&4 Wheel MSG), with the support of the Motorcycle Union of Ireland (MCUI) and other motorsports governing bodies, is currently developing a business case to Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) for assistance with safety improvements at a range of motorsports venues across Northern Ireland.

I also understand that as part of that process, the MCUI on behalf of 2&4 Wheel MSG has invited the promoters of motorcycle road racing events, including the organisers of the Ulster Grand Prix, to submit proposals for safety improvements at their venues which may be included within the 2&4 Wheel MSG business case. I am not aware that the MCUI, via 2&4 Wheel MSG, has offered the Ulster Grand Prix funding for safety improvements at this stage. I understand, however, that 2&4 Wheel MSG may consider including proposals for safety improvements at the Ulster Grand Prix within its final business case application to SNI.

Olympic Games

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what he would view as a deliverable legacy of the London 2012 Olympic games to the UK. (AQO 83/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The delivery of a legacy from London 2012 for the UK is the responsibility of the Department for Culture Media and Sport (DCMS) and is articulated through the DCMS 2012 Legacy Action Plan.

In NI, I chair a 2012 Leadership Group that is responsible for delivering a NI Games legacy. Work is underway to secure increased business opportunities and revenue for NI companies through helping them to bid for and win Olympic-related contracts.

The Games present a unique once in a lifetime opportunity to inspire healthier lifestyles of a whole generation of young people through participation in sports and arts. My predecessor, Gregory Campbell, committed to using the power of the 2012 Games to tackle obesity and leave a sustainable sporting legacy. This significantly contributes to the Government's health agenda including the 'Fit Futures' programme.

NI 2012 Programmes, such as 'Connections' will contribute to the legacy by encouraging sports and arts organisations to work in partnership. NI is contributing to the Cultural Olympiad through participation in 4 major Cultural Projects, and by securing visiting teams to NI for pre-games training along with the torch relay to NI venues will help profile NI on an international platform.

PRONI: Closure

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for his assessment on the justification of the eight month closure of the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland during its relocation to the Titanic Quarter. (AQO 85/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The opening of a brand new, £30 million, state-of-the-art Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) in Titanic Quarter will be a highly significant event for the preservation and accessibility of Northern Ireland's archival heritage. This major investment is a chance in a lifetime opportunity to enhance public access to that heritage, and it requires proper project management, aided by sufficient time and space, to carry out the work methodically and efficiently.

The estimate of up to 8 months for the work is based on a pilot exercise carried out 2 years ago (and on discussions with removal contractors) when approximately 14 linear kilometres of material was relocated. This time 40 linear kilometres, amounting to millions of individual documents, many of them unique, priceless and irreplaceable, plus staff and equipment, have to be moved to the new building.

To ensure a systematic decant and relocation of the records, and to keep within health and safety guidelines, it will simply not be possible for PRONI to remain open during this period.

Shared Future

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what role he envisages for his Department in promoting a shared and better future for Northern Ireland. (AQO 86/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Improving relationships between and within communities in Northern Ireland and building a shared and better future, based on equity, diversity and interdependency, remains a high priority for my Department.

As the Department with responsibility for culture, DCAL has a duty both to support the diverse cultures in Northern Ireland and to ensure the widest possible opportunity for people to express their own, and have access to other cultures.

My Department's commitments to A Shared Future and the Racial Equality Strategy were set out in the Triennial Action Plan and the Racial Equality Implementation Action Plan.

An example of some of the good relations work sponsored by my Department I would cite the following:

- Sport - DCAL, in partnership with Sport Northern Ireland (SNI), has drawn up a new 10 Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation for Northern Ireland, entitled "Sport Matters: The Northern Ireland Strategy for Sport and Physical Recreation, 2009-2019". Sport Matters commits Government in Northern Ireland to "promote community cohesion through sport and physical recreation in the context of a Shared Future". The concept of "working towards a Shared Future" is also one of the key principles underpinning the document.

- Language Diversity Policy, on which DCAL is in the lead, has the potential to make a contribution to the promotion of good relations in Northern Ireland. I envisage that the Indigenous or Regional Minority Languages Strategy will enhance and develop the Ulster-Scots culture, heritage and language and enhance and protect the development of the Irish Language.
- Arts - Many areas of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland's work directly contribute to promoting a shared and better future. Notable examples include the Re-Imaging Communities Programme and the Cultural Traditions Programme. The Arts Council of Northern Ireland has advised that two thirds of its 'Regularly Funded Organisations' target activity that relates to cross-community work, and that it has provided over £12.5m funding since 2004 to programmes and projects which make a contribution to promoting a shared future for our society.

Work continues on many of the initiatives contained in these action plans as the Department awaits the detail and direction of the Executive's good relations policy under the new 'Programme of Cohesion, Sharing and Integration'

Ulster Scots: US Links

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what strategic plans his Department has to enhance the development of the Ulster-Scots, East-West relationship with the United States of America. (AQO 87/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: The Ulster-Scots Agency, the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Screen have all been involved in the promotion of Ulster-Scots in the United States of America.

The Ulster-Scots Agency in conjunction with organisations such as Tourism Ireland is working to raise awareness of Ulster-Scots in the United States. The Agency also cooperates with American based organisations such as the Ulster-Scots Society of America and the Scotch-Irish Society.

The Arts Council of Northern Ireland sits on the Belfast-Nashville Advisory Group which develops and organises Sister City related events and activities between Belfast and Nashville.

Northern Ireland Screen has previously supported the production of a documentary telling the story of the Ulster-Scots and their settlement in the United States.

Shared Future

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action his Department is taking to promote a Shared Future. (AQO 88/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Improving relationships between and within communities in Northern Ireland and building a shared and better future, based on equity, diversity and interdependence, remains a high priority for my Department.

As the Department with responsibility for culture, DCAL has a duty both to support the diverse cultures in Northern Ireland and to ensure the widest possible opportunity for people to express their own, and have access to other cultures.

My Department's commitments to A Shared Future and the Racial Equality Strategy were set out in the Triennial Action Plan and the Racial Equality Implementation Action Plan.

An example of some of the good relations work sponsored by my Department I would cite the following:

Sport Matters commits Government in Northern Ireland to "promote community cohesion through sport and physical recreation in the context of a Shared Future". The concept of "working towards a Shared Future" is also one of the key principles underpinning the document.

- Language Diversity Policy, on which DCAL is in the lead, has the potential to make a contribution to the promotion of good relations in Northern Ireland. I envisage that the Indigenous or Regional Minority Languages Strategy will enhance and develop the Ulster-Scots culture, heritage and language and enhance and protect the development of the Irish Language.
- Arts - Many areas of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland's work directly contribute to promoting a shared and better future. Notable examples include the Re-Imaging Communities Programme and the Cultural Traditions Programme. The Arts Council of Northern Ireland has advised that two thirds of its 'Regularly Funded Organisations' target activity that relates to cross-community work, and that it has provided over £12.5m funding since 2004 to programmes and projects which make a contribution to promoting a shared future for our society.

Work continues on many of the initiatives contained in these action plans as the Department awaits the detail and direction of the Executive's good relations policy under the new 'Programme of Cohesion, Sharing and Integration'

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Education and Skills Authority Bill

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail any stakeholders with whom she or her Department held meetings over the summer regarding the development of guidance and model schemes of employment in relation to the Education and Skills Authority Bill. (AQW 35/10)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): Over the summer various opportunities have been taken to have informal discussions with a variety of stakeholders ahead of being able to consult on a more formal basis on the content of a draft employment scheme including a draft scheme for recruitment and selection of teaching and support staff in schools.

Tionóladh cruinniú foirmiúil le hionadaithe ó na hiontaobhaithe Caitliceacha ar 17 Lúnasa 2009 agus tá cruinnithe á bpleanáil leis na páirtithe eile leasmhara sna míonna atá romhainn.

A formal meeting with representatives of the Catholic trustees took place on 17 August 2009 and meetings with the other stakeholders are being planned for the near future.

Schools Heating Systems

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Education, in relation to schools converting heating systems to natural gas, how many (i) have converted; and (ii) are capable of converting but haven't yet done so. (AQW 131/10)

The Minister of Education: Baineann an t-eolas sa fhreagra seo le scoileanna atá suite i gceantair a bhfuil líonra gáis nádúrtha iontu. Fuarthas an t-eolas ó na Boird Oideachais agus Leabharlainne, ó scoileanna deonacha gramadaí agus ó scoileanna imeasctha deontaschúnta.

The information in this answer relates to schools that are located in areas served by a natural gas network. The information has been supplied by the Education and Library Boards, voluntary grammar schools and grant maintained integrated schools.

- (i) 371 schools have converted to natural gas; and
- (ii) 95 schools are capable of converting but have not yet done so.

Mobile Classrooms

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to list those schools currently using mobile classrooms with temporary planning permission broken down by (i) Education and Library board; and (ii) sector. (AQW 199/10)

The Minister of Education: Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.

This information is not available. Planning permissions are not awarded on a temporary basis. Planning permissions can however be time limited to a maximum of 5 years within which the proposed development needs to be taken forward. Grant aid is not reimbursed by my department without evidence (including planning) of all statutory approvals.

Education and Skills Authority Bill

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail, by education sector, any stakeholders with whom she or her Department held meetings over the summer regarding employment arrangements contained in the Education and Skills Authority Bill. (AQW 202/10)

The Minister of Education: Over the summer various opportunities have been taken to have informal discussions with a variety of stakeholders ahead of being able to consult on a more formal basis on the content of a draft employment scheme including a draft scheme for recruitment and selection of teaching and support staff in schools.

Tionóladh cruinniú foirmiúil le hionadaithe ó na hiontaobhaithe Caitliceacha ar 17 Lúnasa 2009 agus tá cruinnithe á bpleanáil leis na páirtithe eile leasmhara sna míonna atá romhainn.

A formal meeting with representatives of the Catholic trustees took place on 17 August 2009 and meetings with the other stakeholders are being planned for the near future.

Pre-School Education Expansion Report

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for an update on how her Department is progressing with the recommendations of the Northern Ireland Audit Office Pre-School Education Expansion Report. (AQW 214/10)

The Minister of Education: Foilsíodh Tuarascáil an NIAO ar an Pre-school Education Expansion Programme ar an 19ú Meitheamh 2009. Liostaíodh inti roinnt gnéithe arbh fhéidir a fheabhsú, agus ar chóir don Roinn a chur san áireamh agus beartas do pháistí á fhorbairt as seo amach.

The NIAO Report on the Pre-school Education Expansion Programme published on 19th June 2009 listed a number of areas for potential improvement which the Department should consider when developing future policy for children.

The Department is committed to addressing the observations and recommendations in the NIAO Report and will be taking those forward in developing the Early Years 0-6 Strategy.

Southern Education and Library Board: Travel Costs

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 7298/09, to detail the £1.58 million travel costs of the Southern Education and Library board, broken down by (i) the mode of transport used; (ii) economy/first class/business class used; (iii) the destination; and (iv) the reason for the journey. (AQW 237/10)

The Minister of Education: The level of detail requested in respect of the £1.583 million travel costs for the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) in 2007-08 is not held electronically by the SELB and would require the accessing of all original claim documentation. The SELB process between 700 - 1,000 mileage claims per month and therefore it would not be reasonable in terms of the disproportionate costs involved to manually source this documentation.

Tá taifead ar chóras ríomhairithe, áfach, de shonraí ar chostais taistil an SELB don bhliain airgeadais 2007/08 san fhormáid seo a leanas agus seo a leanas miondéalú ar na costais sin:

However, the details of travel costs for the SELB for 2007/08 are recorded on a computerised system in the following format and are broken down as follows:

| | £,000s |
|--|--------------|
| Staff claims for mileage / subsistence | 856 |
| Essential car users lump sum | 286 |
| Travel expenses for pupils | 441 |
| Total | 1,583 |

Maintained Primary Schools: Faughanvale Parish

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education to provide an update on the provision of capital investment in the maintained primary schools sector in the Faughanvale parish. (AQW 285/10)

The Minister of Education: Is ceist í planáil eastát na scoileanna faoi chothabháil a bhaineann le Comhairle na Scoileanna Caitleachacha faoi Chothabháil (CCMS) ar an chéad dul síos.

The planning of the maintained school estate is a matter for the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) in the first instance. CCMS has advised that discussions are now ongoing with Trustees in regard to the future development of educational provision in the parish

Naoiscoil Colmcille

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to assist Naoiscoil Colmcille, in this its 25th anniversary year, to ensure ongoing Irish medium nursery provision in the local area. (AQW 303/10)

The Minister of Education: I commend Naíscoil Cholmcille in achieving its 25th anniversary.

The naíscoil has been in receipt of funded places under the Pre-School Education Expansion Programme since the Programme started in September 1998 and, for as long as the group continues to meet the requirements of the Programme, it will continue to receive funding.

Tá Naíscoil Cholmcille ar cheann de na soláthróirí réamhscolaíochta Gaeilge i gceantair Dhoire a fhaigheann maoiniú ón Roinn. Tá an t-éileamh ar na soláthróirí seo breithnithe agam, agus tá mé sásta go bhfuil soláthar leordhóthanach réamhscolaíochta Gaeilge i gceantair Dhoire faoi láthair.

Naíscoil Cholmcille is one of several funded Irish-medium preschool providers in the Derry area and, having looked at the uptake across those providers I am satisfied that there is adequate Irish-medium preschool provision in the Derry area at the present time.

Magherafelt High School: New Facilities

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the construction of new facilities at Magherafelt High School (i) what progress has been made to date; (ii) what is the reason for any delays to date; and (iii) when is the work due for completion. (AQW 318/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an próiseas tairisceana don tionscadal ag Magherafelt High School críochnaithe agus tá an Roinn ag na céimeanna deireanacha d'fhaomhadh an chonartha.

The tender process for the Magherafelt High School project is concluded and the Department is in the final stages of approving the award of the contract. This was one of three contracts that was at an advanced stage in procurement under the major works framework and was stopped when the framework was set aside following a High Court ruling on the framework. The project had to be subsequently prepared for a single procurement outside of the framework. As a result of these delays the economic appraisal for the project ran out of time and required fresh approval. The project cannot be awarded until approval is in place but officials are working on this as a priority. This is a 24 month contract and work is currently programmed to conclude on this in December 2011.

South Eastern Education and Library Board: Commissioners

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many meetings the Commissioners at the South Eastern Education and Library Board held in each of the last three years. (AQW 331/10)

The Minister of Education: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that, since their appointment in July 2006, the Commissioners have met as follows:

|------|----------------------------|
| 2006 | 6 meetings |
| 2007 | 12 meetings |
| 2008 | 10 meetings |
| 2009 | 8 meetings up to September |

Go ginearálta, maireann na cruinnithe seo 2 lá.

These meetings generally extend to 2 days.

South Eastern Education and Library Board: Commissioners

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the total expenses of the Commissioners of the South Eastern Education and Library Board, in each of the last three years. (AQW 333/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt gur mar seo a leanas na méideanna iomlána a íocadh leis na Coimisinéirí, lena n-áiríodh táillí, taisteal agus cothabháil:

The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that the total payments, including fees, travel and subsistence, made to the Commissioners is as follows:

|------|---------|
| 2006 | £50,316 |
| 2007 | £97,677 |
| 2008 | £75,361 |
| 2009 | £47,885 |

Teaching Appointments Committee

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education if the Commissioners at the South Eastern Education and Library Board sought legal advice on the Teaching Appointments Committee before taking over its functions. (AQW 336/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt nach bhfuil na Coimisinéirí freagrach as feidhmeanna an Teaching Appointments Committee (TAC), agus tá an TAC fós ag feidmiú.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that the Commissioners have not taken over the functions of the Teaching Appointments Committee (TAC), and the TAC continues to operate as before.

Teaching Appointments Committee

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education under what legal authority the Commissioners at the South Eastern Education and Library Board took over the functions of the Teaching Appointment Committee. (AQW 341/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Bord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne an Oirdheiscirt nach bhfuil na Coimisinéirí freagrach as feidhmeanna an Teaching Appointments Committee (TAC), agus tá an TAC fós ag feidmiú.

The South Eastern Education and Library Board has advised that the Commissioners have not taken over the functions of the Teaching Appointments Committee (TAC), and the TAC continues to operate as before.

Primary Languages Programme: French and German

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education when her Department will introduce French and German into the Primary Languages Programme; and if the inclusion of these two languages on the NI Curriculum Primary Languages website is a preliminary step towards that end. (AQW 348/10)

The Minister of Education: Thug mé isteach Clár na dTeangacha Bunscoile le tacaíocht a thabhairt do na bunscoileanna sin a bhí ag iarraidh nuatheangacha a chur ar fáil. Tá an Ghaeilge agus an Spáinnis ar fáil faoi láthair agus leathnófar an clár sa bhliain acadúil seo leis an Pholainnis a chur san áireamh. Níl sé beartaithe faoi láthair an Fhraincis ná an Ghearmáinis a thabhairt isteach mar chuid den chlár.

I introduced the Primary Languages Programme to provide support for those primary schools who wished to make available modern languages. Currently, Spanish and Irish are available and in this academic year the programme will be expanded to include Polish. There are currently no plans to introduce French and German into the programme.

It is of course open to schools to offer additional language learning opportunities outside of the Primary Languages Programme, including in French and German, and I am pleased that many already do this. There is a range of existing support arrangements in place for those primary schools wishing to offer French and German, including through the education and library boards and CCEA, who has developed material in French, German, Spanish and Irish to assist Primary teachers to develop and integrate an element of language teaching into their classrooms. These resources are available to all schools via the Curriculum website to which you refer to. I believe that all efforts to provide enjoyable experience of language learning are valuable. The Primary Languages Programme offers opportunities for our youngest pupils and it, along with the wider efforts of schools, will, I believe, encourage more young people to continue with languages at post-primary level and beyond.

Primary Language Programme: Polish

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education when the Primary Languages website will include material in Polish to fully develop the language skills of school children who will be introduced to the Polish language by peripatetic tutors during this academic year. (AQW 349/10)

The Minister of Education: Cuimsíonn láithreán gréasáin na dTeangacha Bunscoile teangacha a múineadh mar chuid de chlár píolótach Teangacha Bunscoile de chuid na Comhairle Curaclaim, Scrúdúcháin agus Measúnaithe (CCEA), ar tháinig deireadh leis i mí Lúnasa 2009 agus soláthraíonn an láithreán tacaíocht agus acmhainní do scoileanna atá ag iarraidh nuatheanga a thabhairt isteach.

The Primary Languages website features languages that were part of the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment's (CCEA) Primary Languages Pilot programme which concluded in August 2009 and provides support and resources for schools which wish to introduce a modern language.

The languages included on that website do not currently include Polish but I have asked the Primary Languages Group to work with CCEA to explore how the resources being developed for Polish within the Primary Languages Programme might be made more widely available to schools, including through links from the Primary Languages website to the training modules for Polish which are being incorporated into the learning platform available to all schools via the C2k network.

Physically Disabled Children

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education how many physically disabled children are being educated in mainstream primary and post-primary schools in each Education and Library Board. (AQW 356/10)

The Minister of Education: Léirítear sa tábla thíos líon na ndaltaí atá cláraithe mar dhaltai a bhfuil Riachtanais Speisialta Oideachais le haicmiú fisiciúil acu.

The number of pupils recorded as having Special Educational Needs with a physical classification is shown in the table below.

PRIMARY AND POST PRIMARY PUPILS WHO ARE RECORDED AS HAVING 'PHYSICAL' SPECIAL EDUCATION NEEDS – 2008/09

| ELB | School type | | Total |
|--------------|-------------|--------------|--------------|
| | Primary | Post primary | |
| BELB | 101 | 100 | 201 |
| NEELB | 131 | 77 | 208 |
| SEELB | 101 | 70 | 171 |
| SELB | 151 | 118 | 269 |
| WELB | 113 | 72 | 185 |
| Total | 597 | 437 | 1,034 |

Source: Annual school census.

Note:

1. Primary includes nursery, reception and year 1 – 7 classes.
2. The physical special educational needs classification includes needs such as: cerebral palsy, spina bifida and/or hydrocephalus, muscular dystrophy, significant accidental injury and any other physical need.
3. Figures relate to pupils in mainstream classes and special units within primary and post primary schools.

Childhood Obesity

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to address childhood obesity within the school health curriculum. (AQW 357/10)

The Minister of Education: Áirítear sa churaclam athbhreithnithe an snáithe Forbairt Phearsanta agus Comhthuiscint do dhaltai bunscoile agus an snáithe Foghlaim don Saol agus don Obair do dhaltai iarbhunscoile trína mbionn daltaí ábalta ceisteanna a fhiosrú, mar shampla tairbhí bia sláintiúil agus gníomhaíochta coirp, iarmhairtí drochroghanna cothaithe, bealaí le cothú sláintiúil a bhaint amach, na tionchair ar a bhfoláine coirp agus mothúchán agus bealaí lena bhféinmheas a fhorbairt.

The revised curriculum includes a Personal Development and Mutual Understanding strand for primary pupils and a Learning for Life and Work strand for post-primary pupils which allow pupils to explore issues such as the benefits of healthy eating and physical activity, the consequences of poor dietary choices, ways of achieving a healthy diet, the influences on their physical and emotional health and ways of developing their self-esteem.

It is also a requirement of the revised curriculum for all children to undertake Home Economics at Key Stage 3. This will provide opportunities for young people to develop their understanding of a healthy diet and the hygienic and healthy use of foods in the preparation of meals.

Physical Education is a compulsory part of the revised curriculum for all pupils in Years 1 – 12 and the Department's guidance recommends at least 2 hours per week. Recognising the importance of developing children's physical literacy skills, I introduced a sports programme in 2007 to encourage children to have a healthy and active lifestyle. Since then, 62 GAA and IFA coaches have worked in 600 schools with over 32,000 children and over £3.7 million has been made available to the programme.

My Department recognises that a healthy, balanced diet is vital for children's growth and development, and for their long term health and well being. It has been working for some time to improve the quality of food in schools here and compulsory nutritional standards for school lunches are now in place in all our schools. It has also been working with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to draw up a Food in Schools policy document which draws together the range of strategies and plans that are being put in place to deliver improved nutrition for our school children.

The policy aims to ensure that school food is representative of the five food groups; makes a significant contribution to childhood nutrition and enables children to develop the necessary skills and knowledge to make healthy food choices both at school and at home. The draft policy was issued for public consultation on Monday, 14 September and I would encourage everyone to respond.

Finally, I would like to assure you that my Department is participating fully in the DHSSPS led Obesity Prevention Steering Group and advisory groups.

Magherafelt Primary and Nursery Schools: New Facilities

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the construction of new facilities at Magherafelt primary and nursery schools (i) what progress has been made to date; (ii) what is the reason for any delays to date; and (iii) when the work is due for completion. (AQW 401/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá pleanáil do na foirgnimh nua scoile ag Magherafelt Primary School agus Magherafelt Nursery School ag céim Réamhthairisceana an phróisis pleanála faoi láthair. Ní féidir an togra seo a thabhairt ar aghaidh chuig an chéim tairisceana áfach, mar gheall ar mhoilleanna i dtaca leis an láithreán nua molta do na scoileanna a fháil.

Planning of the proposed new school buildings for Magherafelt Primary School and Magherafelt Nursery School is currently at Pre-tender stage of the planning process. The project cannot, however, progress to tender stage due to the delays the NEELB are experiencing in acquiring the proposed new site for the schools.

The delay in acquiring the site has arisen due to a need to purchase a strip of land at the front of the proposed site. This strip of land which is owned by DRD Roads Service is key for access to the proposed school site. Discussions are underway with Roads Service with a view to effecting a transfer of the land. However, further progress on the site acquisition and planning of the project cannot be made until full access to the site can be guaranteed.

Statemented Children

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many children have been statemented by each of the Education and Library Boards, in each of the last five years. (AQW 423/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá curtha in iúl ag Príomhfheidhmeannaigh na mBord Oideachais agus Leabharlainne gur mar seo a leanas líon na bpáistí a fuair ráitis ar riachtanas speisialta oideachais le cúig bliana anuas:

The Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards have advised that the number of children who have received statements of special educational need in the last five years is as follows:

| | BELB | NEELB | SEELB | SELB | WELB |
|----------|------|-------|-------|------|------|
| 2004/05* | 285 | 299 | 492 | 343 | 304 |
| 2005/06* | 317 | 354 | 528 | 409 | 249 |
| 2006/07* | 430 | 273 | 335 | 410 | 350 |
| 2007/08* | 393 | 326 | 342 | 660 | 231 |
| 2008/09* | 451 | 280 | 145 | 342 | 200 |

* academic years

The above figures refer to children and young people who received final statements of special educational need. They do not include those who may have received reviewed statements.

Truancy

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education what is the current truancy rate across all Education and Library Boards; and what measures are in place to combat truancy. (AQW 453/10)

The Minister of Education: Bailíonn an Roinn eolas ar atreoruithe chuig an tSeirbhís Leasa Oideachais (EWS) a iarrann scoileanna mar gheall ar bhuarthaí faoi dhaltaí a bhíonn as láthair ón scoil. Léiríonn an tábla thíos líon na ndaltaí ar atreoraigh scoileanna chuig an EWS iad i ngach bliain le cúig bliana anuas:-

The Department collects information about referrals by schools to the Education Welfare Service (EWS) because of concerns about non-attendance. The table below shows the number of pupils referred for non-attendance by schools to the EWS in each of the last five years:

| School Year | Number of pupils |
|-------------|------------------|
| 2003/04 | 8,041 |
| 2004/05 | 5,633 |
| 2005/06 | 4,467 |
| 2006/07 | 5,083 |
| 2007/08 | 4,275 |

Information on the number of referrals for non-attendance in the 2008/09 school year is currently being collected and will be published on the Department's website in due course.

The reasons for persistent non-attendance are frequently symptomatic of other problems being experienced by a pupil, such as caring responsibilities, pregnancy or being a victim of bullying. The initial response to a referral of a pupil by a school to EWS is a home visit. This provides the Education Welfare Officer (EWO) with an opportunity to assess whether the absence is condoned by parents and if they are in a position to ensure regular attendance. When this is the case court action may be considered.

Where parents are judged to be in need of support or addressing the underlying reasons for non-attendance will require sustained intervention, then the EWO will act as lead worker and in collaboration with all parties seek to agree an action plan. This may involve a 'case conference' at which the pupil, his/her parents and the school are represented. Depending on the nature of the presenting problems participation may be broadened to include other agencies. For pupils with particular problems regular attendance at their host school, or any other mainstream school, may not be an option. Where this is the case, pupils may be referred by their EWO to a suitable alternative education programme.

Transfer 2010

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Education to detail the total costs involved in publishing and circulating her Department's Directive 'Document Guidance Transfer 2010/11' and the reasons why it was published in bi-lingual format resulting in considerable inconvenience and delay for principals and relevant staff. (AQW 509/10)

The Minister of Education: Foilsíodh Imlitir 2009/07 ar 7 Meán Fómhair 2009, agus tugtar mionchomhairle oibriúcháin do scoileanna inti ar phróiseas an aistriú iarbhunscoile d'iontrálacha i mí Mheán Fómhair 2010, maidir le Treoir dheiridh na Roinne ar Aistriú 2010 a foilsíodh ar 25 Meitheamh 2009.

Circular 2009/07 was published on 7 September 2009, and provides schools with detailed operational advice on the process of post-primary transfer for September 2010 admissions, with reference to the Department's final Transfer 2010 Guidance published on 25 June 2009. The document was published and distributed electronically, as is the norm for Departmental Circulars, with the only related cost being that of translation into Irish, which amounted to around £1,000.

The use of Irish in Circular 2009/07 reflects the fact that there is a growing number of Irish speakers within, and being served by, our schools. They have the right to receive communications from me in their first language under the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. The Charter places obligations on governments to protect and promote languages such as Irish as part of a cultural heritage. I also have statutory duties under the Good Friday Agreement and I intend to fulfil these.

I view a bi-lingual format as a sensible and pragmatic way of fulfilling my commitments as described above.

School Closures: Criteria

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Education to outline the pupil numbers criteria for school closures.

(AQW 510/10)

The Minister of Education: Leagtar amach sa Pholasáí do Scoileanna Inbhuanaithe na critéir a úsáidtear le hinmharthanacht scoileanna a athbhreithniú mar a leanas:

- Eispéireas Oideachasúil d'Ardchaighdeán
- Treochtaí Seasta Rollaithe
- Staid Airgeadais Fhónta
- Ceannaireacht agus Bainistíocht Láidir
- Inrochtaineacht
- Naisc Láidre leis an Phobal.

The Sustainable Schools Policy sets out the criteria for reviewing the viability of schools as follows:-

- Quality Educational Experience
- Stable Enrolment Trends

- Sound Financial Position
- Strong Leadership and Management
- Accessibility
- Strong Links with the Community.

Minimum enrolment thresholds form part of the “Stable Enrolment Trends” criterion and are as follows:

| School Type | Pupil Numbers |
|---------------|---------------|
| Rural Primary | 105 |
| Urban Primary | 140 |
| Post-primary | 500* |
| 6th Form | 100 |

* excluding 6th form provision

There is no intention to use these enrolment thresholds in a mechanistic fashion to close schools. Any review of a school’s viability will be based on an assessment across the full range of criteria, taking account of local circumstances on a case-by-case basis. The quality of education provided will be the overriding consideration.

Portadown College: Newbuild

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education, in relation to Portadown College’s newbuild economic appraisal, to detail (i) the reason for the postponement and rejection of the appraisal; and (ii) all meetings and correspondence between the Southern Education and Library Board and her Department on this matter.

(AQW 526/10)

The Minister of Education: The Economic Appraisal for a major capital works scheme for Portadown College has not been postponed or rejected by the Department. In July 2009, a revised Appraisal was submitted by the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) and is currently being considered by the Department’s Professional Advisors.

Ní raibh aon chomhfhreagras ná chruinnithe idir an SELB agus an Roinn Oideachais ar an ábhar seo.

There has been no correspondence or meetings between the SELB and the Department of Education on this matter.

Area Planning

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for an update on the findings of the central group and five local groups tasked with considering area planning.

(AQW 551/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an obair curtha i gcrích ag na cúig Ghrúpa Áitiúla agus an Lárghrúpa a bhí freagrach as breithniú a dhéanamh ar sholáthar éifeachtach agus éifeachtúil an Chreata Teidlíochta ar bhonn ceantair agus tá an tuarascáil agam. Tá mé ag déanamh breithnithe ar na fionnachtana agus ar na moltaí agus beidh mé ag tabhairt freagartha ar ball.

The work of the 5 Local Groups and the Central Group tasked with considering the efficient and effective delivery of the Entitlement Framework on an area basis is now complete and the report is with me. I am currently considering the findings and recommendations and will issue my response in the near future.

Irish-Medium Education

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage growth of pupils enrolled in (i) Irish-medium primary schools; and (ii) Irish-medium post-primary schools, set against (a) the total number of pupils; and (b) the total number of pupils enrolled in Irish-medium education, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 552/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh sa tábla thíos.

The information requested is detailed in the table below.

PERCENTAGE CHANGE IN IRISH-MEDIUM AND TOTAL SCHOOL ENROLMENTS 2006/07 – 2008/09

| Enrolments | 2006/07 | 2007/08 | % change 06/07 - 07/08 | 2008/09 | % change 07/08 - 08/09 |
|-----------------------------------|---------|---------|---------------------------|---------|---------------------------|
| Irish-Medium Primary schools | 2,041 | 2,132 | 4.5 | 2,217 | 4.0 |

Notes to Table :

1. Figures for primary schools include nursery, reception and year 1 – 7 classes.
2. Figures for ‘Total Irish-medium Education’ include the Irish-medium primary and post-primary school enrolments, as well as children in: independent schools; Irish-medium units in primary and post-primary schools; and funded places in voluntary and private preschool centres.
3. Figures for ‘Total all schools’ include the total primary and post-primary enrolments as well as children in: funded places in voluntary and private preschool centres; and in special, independent and hospital schools.

Post-Primary Entrance Tests

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many pupils will sit entrance tests for post primary schools in the next academic year (i) in total; and (ii) as a percentage of the total number of P7 pupils. (AQW 556/10)

The Minister of Education: Ní heol don Roinn Oideachais líon na ndaltaí a iontráladh do theisteanna easaontacha. Is féidir an t-eolas seo a fháil uathu sin atá freagrach as riar na dteisteanna easaontacha.

The number of pupils entered for breakaway tests is not known to the Department of Education. This information can only be provided by those who are responsible for administering breakaway tests.

Employment Levels: DE

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education what plans she has to change employment levels within her Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 566/10)

The Minister of Education: Is é an príomhfhachtóir a mbeidh tionchar aige ar an leibhéal fostaíochta i mo Roinn sna 12 mhí atá romhainn ná athstruchtúrú na Roinne mar ullmhú do agus mar gheall ar chruthú an Údaráis um Oideachas agus Scileanna (ESA).

The key factor which will impact on the employment level in my Department over the next 12 months is the restructuring of the Department in preparation for and as a result of the creation of the Education and Skills Authority (ESA). In line with normal NICS practice, redeployment of staff will be used and it is not envisaged that a redundancy situation will arise.

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Further Education Colleges: Staffing

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many members of staff, at lecturer grade and above, have been made redundant and subsequently re-employed in each of the Further Education Colleges in the last three years, and in what capacity. (AQW 10/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): The information requested for each of the six regional colleges is detailed in the table below:

| Year | No. of Redundancies | No. of re-deployments | Redeployment role |
|--------------------------------|---------------------|-----------------------|-----------------------|
| Southern Regional College | | | |
| 2006/07 | 0 | 0 | n/a |

The operation of the Teacher' Premature Retirement Scheme (TPRS) is a matter for individual Colleges, in their capacity as the employing authority. It is a matter for individual Colleges to defend their actions in this regard, given their assurances that the lecturing posts declared redundant have been suppressed. The Department has obtained assurances from Colleges that there has been no abuse of the terms of the TPRS and that all of the posts declared redundant have been permanently suppressed. Although there is no legal impediment to former lecturers applying for College positions, the Department of Education (DE) is considering the scope for applying further restrictions to the re-employment of teachers and lecturers who have benefited from the Scheme's provisions. My Department fully supports DE's intention in this regard.

Belfast Metropolitan College

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when the Efficiency Review of the Belfast Metropolitan College will be published. (AQW 14/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Once the report on the Efficiency Review of Belfast Metropolitan College has been finalised which, it is anticipated, will be during October 2009, it will be made available to the public via the Department's online publication scheme.

Further Education Colleges: Staff Grievances

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) the number of outstanding staff grievances; and (ii) the category of each grievance in each of the Further Education Colleges. (AQW 63/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The number of outstanding staff grievances in each the six Further Education Colleges and their category is detailed in the table below:

| College | No. of Outstanding Staff Grievances | Category |
|--------------|-------------------------------------|----------|
| BMC | 21 | Formal |
| NRC | 6 | Formal |
| NWRC | 2 | Formal |
| SERC | 2 | Formal |
| SRC | 4 | Formal |
| SWC | 0 | N/A |
| Total | 35 | |

Further Education colleges are employing authorities in their own right. Each College operates their own staff grievance procedures, which are agreed in conjunction with the relevant trade unions. The Department has no remit in this process.

Further Education Colleges: Drop-out/Retention Rates

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the drop-out and retention rates for students at each of the Further Education Colleges in each of the last five years. (AQW 66/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Drop out and retention rates at Northern Ireland Further Education Colleges are only available on an 'academic year' basis and therefore relate only to student enrolments on the final year of their course (approximately 70% of all enrolments). These data are listed below in the format of the current six college model for the period 2003/04 to 2007/08 (latest available data).

| Academic year | | Belfast Metropolitan | Northern Regional | South Eastern Regional | Southern Regional | South West | North West Regional | Total |

Vulnerable Students

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what emotional support services are in place in colleges and universities for vulnerable students, particularly those who are away from home for the first time. (AQW 132/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: All Higher Education Institutions and Further Education Colleges in Northern Ireland provide a range of support services for vulnerable students, details of which are attached at Annex A.

Annex A

The University of Ulster

The University of Ulster has a system in place that supports all vulnerable students. This system operates both informally, via the Students' Union, and more formally, through the professional counselling and health services delivered by Student Support. The Counselling Service offers regular "drop in" sessions and, for students with existing mental health issues, the Register of Support Providers arranges mentoring and study support. The University also has a Peer Mentoring system for students with mental health concerns.

The University's Student Support Outreach Adviser will, prior to the start of the academic year, make contact with new students coming from a background of care for whom the transition to a new environment may be particularly difficult.

For those students experiencing financial difficulties, due to delayed loan or grant payments, emergency payments are available from the Student Funding Advisor until a more detailed assessment of need can be made.

The University of Ulster also employs Resident Assistants who are more experienced students that are able to advise and assist with transitional concerns. In addition, all students participate in induction activities, including information on support services. Information is also available on the Student Support website, and on posters and printed materials throughout the University.

Queen's University Belfast

Queen's University's Welcome Week helps students familiarise themselves with the requirements of their chosen degree and the comprehensive range of services and facilities available within the University. The week includes Academic induction programmes and a range of social and practical events run by the University's central support services.

Each student has a Personal Tutor with whom they meet during their first week at the University. The Personal Tutor will act as a point of contact on all issues of concern, academic or personal, and will assist the student in accessing the full range of University support services.

The support services are based in the Student Guidance Centre. These include the following:

- The Counselling Service offers students access to professionally accredited counsellors.
- Disability Services staff liaise with all new students who have declared a disability and, together with the student, will determine non-medical support requirements.
- The Learning Development Service offers workshops and one-to-one consultations on a range of academic support areas, including stress management.
- A Careers, Employability and Skills Service.

Under the University's Student Care Protocol, students identified as having emotional support needs, and whose academic progression or attainment could be at risk, are flagged to the University's central support services and appropriate interventions made.

The University Accommodation Service employs three resident qualified Community Youth Workers who lead a team of 12 Residential Assistants and work with University staff to help new students integrate into University accommodation.

The Union, through its Advice Centre and its team of elected student officers, provides a Monday to Friday and out-of-hours information and advice service, covering issues such as academic problems, accommodation issues, debt management and general welfare matters. In addition, the Union administers a Hardship Fund that provides support for students in extreme financial difficulty.

The University's Students' Care Review Group meets on a regular basis to discuss issues relating to vulnerable students, and to assess and provide recommendations regarding support levels. The Students' Union may make appropriate referral to other support services, both within and external to the University, with the specific permission of the student.

St. Mary's University College

St. Mary's University College provides an Induction Programme, which is revisited twice during the academic year. College counseling is also available in addition to a ten person Student Support Team. All students have a Personal Development Tutor and are encouraged to use the pastoral support services available in the College.

Stranmillis University College

Stranmillis University College provides an on campus counselling service in addition to Queen's University's counselling service. Students are also encouraged to approach Hall Wardens, their Advisor of Studies, the Student Union President and the campus Nurse with any concerns. The University holds Communication Workshops, which offer peer guidance and support for students experiencing difficulties, and Exam Workshops designed to minimise stress. Financial assistance is also provided in the form of student bursaries.

Stranmillis University College maintains a Student at Risk Register which supports identified students. This confidential database is a joint project between the Stranmillis Counselling Service and the Occupational Health Department. The Advisor of Studies and the University's Head of Departments make recommendations to support any health needs. Support from the medical officer is provided during examinations to accommodate any students with difficult domestic situations.

Further Education (FE) Colleges

24/7 Carecall counselling service

Carecall provides a 24/7 counselling service for all FE students and staff. Some colleges have also employed College Health and Welfare Officers to provide a counselling service.

Staff and Student training sessions

Staff training awareness are held regularly to encourage staff to remain alert to student needs e.g. to be aware of students who become unusually quiet or behave differently. Carecall also offer training sessions for staff. A series of student training awareness sessions are completed through the college induction process.

Student Charter

Each FE College has a Student Charter outlining information and facilities which are available for students including support and counselling services.

Student Activities Focussed events

FE Colleges hold regular student focused events. Examples include drug and alcohol awareness and healthy eating seminars.

- Health Promotion Events

Colleges organise health days through the Health Promotion Agency. This involves bringing in the local pharmacist and other organisations such as Breakthrough, Menssana and NUS and the Royal College of Nursing to raise issues including alcohol & drugs awareness.

- Aware Defeat Depression – Sessions

The Southern Regional College (SRC) (Newry Campus) has in collaboration with Aware Defeat Depression held a number of session for students focusing on mental health issues.

- Choices DVD – Southern Regional College

Southern Regional College (SRC) has produced a DVD to raise awareness in relation to the following topics:

- Disability
- Drug and Alcohol Abuse
- Domestic Violence
- Emerging Communities
- Diversity
- Street Violence

Anti Harassment Policy for Students

An Anti Harassment policy is agreed by each individual college governing body to help prevent harassment and to help resolve any problems.

Careers Advice

Careers Officers are available at each of the six regional FE Colleges to provide information and support for students.

Disability Policy for Students

A disability policy is agreed by each individual College governing body to reflect local procedures and practices, in line with the Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order (SENDO).

Health Promoting College

The Southern Regional College (SRC) and the South West College (SWC) are presently involved with the Southern Health & Social Care Trust and the Western Health & Social Care Trust in developing a "Health Promoting College". This will be a three year project working in partnership to promote ongoing improvement and development of physical and emotional health of which suicide risk will be a significant component. This is a pilot programme which will, if successful, be rolled out to all across all six regional FE Colleges in due course.

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DEL

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 151/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The amount that the Department has spent on external consultancy in the past five years is contained in the table below. The Department adheres to DFP guidance on professional services, which defines external consultancy expenditure and best practice in relation to the engagement of consultants.

| Year | 2004/5 £m | 2005/6 £m | 2006/7 £m | 2007/8 £m | 2008/9 £m |
|--------|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|--------------|
| Amount | £0.42 | £0.62 | £0.38 | £0.6 | £0.74 |

The amount the Department has spent on event organisers in the past five years is contained in the table below. The Department procures event organisers in association with the relevant branch and the Central Procurement Directorate – CPD within DFP.

| Year | 2004/5 | 2005/6 | 2006/7 | 2007/8 | 2008/9 |
|--------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|-----------|
| Amount | £16750.00 | £16750.00 | £29790.00 | £22723.00 | £35972.00 |

Night Courses: Upper Bann

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning the number of people who enrolled in night courses in the Upper Bann area (i) in total; and (ii) by campus, in each of the last five years. (AQW 190/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The table below shows the number of enrolments on evening courses at Upper Bann Institute from 2002/03 to 2006/07. Upper Bann Institute became part of the Southern Regional College in August 2007. The latest enrolment data available is for academic year 2007/08, however this cannot be broken down into the pre-merger college format. In addition, campus breakdown is not available.

| Academic year | Enrolments on evening courses |
|---------------|-------------------------------|
| 2002/03 | 7,448 |
| 2003/04 | 6,692 |
| 2004/05 | 6,829 |

Apprenticeships: Upper Bann

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many people have been enrolled in apprenticeships in the Upper Bann area in each of the last five years. (AQW 191/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department has supported 2663 apprentices in the Upper Bann area between March 2004 and March 2009. The data in Annex A lists numbers of apprentices in each of the last five years whose given address is within the Upper Bann area. Although these apprentices reside within the Upper Bann area, they may or may not have enrolled with Training Providers in the Upper Bann area and may or may not be employed by companies in the Upper Bann area. The Department is not in a position to break enrolments down by constituency.

ANNEX A

NUMBER OF ENROLMENTS FOR APPRENTICESHIPS PROGRAMMES IN THE UPPER BANN AREA SEPTEMBER 2004 – SEPTEMBER 2009

|-------------------------|-----|
| March 2004 – March 2005 | 375 |
| March 2005 – March 2006 | 436 |
| March 2006 – March 2007 | 413 |
| March 2007 – March 2008 | 655 |
| March 2008 – March 2009 | 784 |

Drug and Alcohol Issues

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what measures are being taken to highlight drug and alcohol issues for higher education students. (AQW 235/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: All Higher Education Institutions and Further Education Colleges have in place measures to highlight drug and alcohol issues for students.

The Department issued a policy circular to all Further Education (FE) Colleges in 2001, which sets out guidelines to enable colleges to put in place policies on a number of health issues, including drugs and substance abuse. An additional guidance circular was issued by the Department of Education in 2005, which also applied to the FE sector.

Annex A details the measures in place.

Annex A

Higher Education Institutions

University of Ulster

The University of Ulster's Students' Union runs a number of campaigns each year related to drug and alcohol issues. This academic year there will be a campaign on the dangers of Binge Drinking. The dangers of alcohol and drug abuse are included in some of the other campaigns, such as Love Thy Neighbour and Mind Your Head.

Student Support offers support and advice to students regarding alcohol and drugs. Health, counselling and other Student Support Services work with internal and external agencies to raise awareness of problems associated with alcohol and drug misuse and the mental health of students.

The following measures are currently in place:

- A full time University Counselling Service is available with professional counsellors. This includes an Addictions Counsellor and a Mental Health Advisor. A referral system is also in place for students to receive specialist alcohol counselling.
- The Student Support Health Service provide Health Promotion Days for students which include advice, support and help for students experiencing alcohol and drug related problems. These days are facilitated by nursing staff.
- The “Student Hints and Tips Group” works across disciplines to raise awareness and support for students on a range of matters and issues throughout the year. A theme of “Alcohol Management” is currently in progress.
- A booklet, designed to give support and advice about alcohol and drinking behaviour, is available in the University.
- Links with local, and regional, external agencies which offer additional specialist support in the community. Referrals and advice are sought from the local Addiction Service.
- The University’s Community Liaison Officer works closely with students in private accommodation, with landlords and with community groups to educate and respond to substance related issues.

St. Mary’s University College

Students at the College are advised during its Induction Programme about the use of drugs and alcohol. Throughout the year, and in co-operation with the Students’ Union, poster campaigns are organised to alert students to the dangers of drug and alcohol abuse. In addition, a “Take Care of Your Health Day” is organised annually to alert students to the dangers of drugs and alcohol. The College Counsellor is available to students experiencing various difficulties, including alcohol and drugs.

Stranmillis University College

Prior to enrolment at Stranmillis University College, a health questionnaire, including any history of addiction, is completed by each Year 1 student and sent to the Occupational Health Department at Stranmillis University College, where the answers are screened by the Nurse. In the event of a student answering yes to any of the questions, an appointment is made with the Nurse. Following this appointment, the student may then be referred to an Occupational Health Physician, their GP, the University Counsellor or an appropriate outside agency.

All Year 1 students visit the Student Support Centre where they are given an overview of the confidential services available and receive a list of emergency health and councillor services, 24hr telephone numbers and email address for health agencies in Northern Ireland. In addition, health promotion literature is displayed and available within the Student Support Centre, including details of support services for Drug and alcohol dependency.

Queen’s University Belfast

As part of their induction to Queen’s, students are made aware of the range of University professional support services including: Counselling; Student Welfare; the University Health Centre; and the Students’ Union Advice Centre, where advice and support on general welfare issues, including substance and alcohol abuse, is provided.

Students living in Queen’s accommodation also have access to three resident Community Youth Workers, trained to assist students with emotional or lifestyle problems and help them to access professional support services.

Every student has a Personal Tutor with whom they meet during their first week at the University. The Personal Tutor acts as a point of contact for the student throughout their time at Queen’s. Each Personal Tutor is trained to identify students who may be at risk and will assist the student in accessing the full range of University professional support services. Support service staff work closely with academic colleagues to ensure that students are able to progress with their academic studies.

The University’s drugs and alcohol policy advises students of the consequences of their misuse and promotes support for students in difficulty. As part of Queen’s ‘Student Mental Health Policy’, a University awareness-raising campaign will highlight factors which contribute to mental wellbeing and will include a mental health awareness week on campus. The Student Mental Health Policy will dovetail with the drug and alcohol policy in promoting student wellbeing.

At the beginning of each academic year, the Vice-Chancellor and the President of the Students’ Union both address all First Year students and make it clear that anti-social behaviour, including that resulting from alcohol consumption, will not be tolerated by the University and is a disciplinary matter.

Further Education (FE) CollegesStudent Activities Focussed events

FE Colleges hold regular student focused events. Examples include drug and alcohol awareness and healthy eating seminars.

Health Promotion Events

FE Colleges organise a number of 'health days' through the Health Promotion Agency. This involves bringing in the local pharmacist and other organisations such as Breakthrough, Menssana and NUS and the Royal College of Nursing to raise issues including alcohol & drugs awareness.

Student Loans

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students are, or may be, in financial crisis due to difficulties with obtaining their student loans. (AQW 537/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department is not aware of any Northern Ireland domiciled students being affected by the delays in payments by the Student Loans Company that have been recently reported in the media, and is not, therefore, aware of any students in financial crisis due to difficulties in obtaining their student loan.

It is my understanding that these delays are primarily the result of a change in the arrangements for processing applications for new English domiciled students and an increase in applications from English domiciled students. There has been no change in arrangements for Northern Ireland domiciled students. Applications will continue to be processed by the Education and Library Boards, with payments made by the Student Loans Company.

Rather than engage with specific political parties, my Department liaises closely with the other United Kingdom administrations on a wide range of student finance issues and is always represented at Student Finance Quadrilateral (Devolved Administrations) meetings, which are also attended by student finance colleagues from England, Scotland and Wales. In addition, there is regular liaison between my Department, the Education and Library Boards and the Student Loans Company to ensure that Northern Ireland domiciled students receive an effective service. As Minister, I engage with a wide range of interested parties on this and other issues.

Student Loans

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he intends to take, unilaterally and in conjunction with his Conservative political partners in England, Scotland and Wales, to ensure that the difficulties students have faced obtaining their student loans do not arise in future years. (AQW 538/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department is not aware of any Northern Ireland domiciled students being affected by the delays in payments by the Student Loans Company that have been recently reported in the media, and is not, therefore, aware of any students in financial crisis due to difficulties in obtaining their student loan.

As Minister, I engage with a wide range of interested parties on this and other issues.

Student Loans

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the approximate numbers of higher education students in Northern Ireland who have not received their student loans in time for the start of the academic year; and for her assessment on the Student Loans Company's inability to process all loans in time this year. (AQW 567/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department is not aware of any Northern Ireland domiciled students being affected by the delays in payments by the Student Loans Company that have been recently reported in the media.

It is my understanding that these delays are primarily the result of a change in the arrangements for processing applications for new English domiciled students and an increase in applications from English domiciled students. There has been no change in arrangements for Northern Ireland domiciled students. Applications will continue to be processed by the Education and Library Boards, with payments made by the Student Loans Company.

Whilst a number of Northern Ireland domiciled students have yet to receive payment from the Student Loans Company, this is due to a variety of legitimate reasons. These include instances where a student's application has not yet been approved, for example, as a result of insufficient information provided by the student; where the student's application was not received on time; where the student's course has not yet commenced or where a Higher Education Institution has not yet confirmed a student's attendance.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Bankruptcy/IVA

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of (i) declared bankruptcies; and (ii) individual voluntary arrangements in the over 65 age category, in each of the last five years. (AQW 114/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs Foster):

- (i) It is not mandatory for those made bankrupt to provide details regarding their age but when it is provided it is recorded by DETI's Insolvency Service. Based on the limited information available, it is estimated that in the most recent year ending 31 March 2009 3.6% of declared bankrupts (1155) were over 65 years. Insufficient data is available from previous years to make any meaningful comparisons
- (ii) Below is a table showing the number of individual voluntary arrangements (IVAs) for the over 65 age category for the last three financial years. Information for years ending 31 March 2005 and 31 March 2006 is unavailable¹.

| Year ending | Total number of IVAs | IVAs where DOB recorded | Age 65 and over | Percentage |
|---------------|----------------------|-------------------------|-----------------|------------|
| 31 March 2007 | 724 | 589 | 14 | 2.9% |
| 31 March 2008 | 436 | 407 | 10 | 2.5% |
| 31 March 2009 | 606 | 599 | 13 | 2.2% |

¹ With the coming into operation of the Insolvency Service (NI) Order 2005 on 27 March 2006, insolvency practitioners are required when registering an Individual Voluntary Arrangement, if possible, to supply a date of birth for the debtor. Because this provision came into operation at the end of March 2006, information for years ending 31 March 2005 and 31 March 2006 is unavailable.

Foreign Direct Investment

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment the estimated total amount of foreign direct investment in (i) Upper Bann, (ii) Banbridge District Council; and (iii) Craigavon Borough Council, in each of the last five years. (AQW 193/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Tables (i), (ii) and (iii) provide information on the amount of foreign direct investment offered support by Invest NI within the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) and Banbridge and Craigavon District Council Areas (DCA) respectively during the five-year period 2004/05 to 2008/09.

This represents the estimated total cost of these projects to Invest NI's externally-owned clients. The number of projects and the associated assistance offered by Invest NI is also included. Projects have been split into those where the main focus is on employment creation and those that are innovation based, including activities such as training, research and development, trade development and technology and process development.

Eco-Business Advice and Job Creation

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what information has been made available to the public in relation to Eco-Business advice and job creation, particularly via the NI Direct website (AQW 240/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI is committed to improving the competitiveness, productivity and sustainability of NI business by encouraging more efficient use of resources and improved environmental performance. As a part of this remit, Invest NI funds three UK wide Programmes – Envirowise, National Industrial Symbiosis Programme (NISP) and The Carbon Trust. A fundamental aspect of these programmes is provision of best practice guidance on a range of topics, including sustainable energy, clean technologies, waste minimisation and waste management. The programmes offer a number of information and advisory functions to a wide business audience including dedicated helplines, websites, free literature, technical seminars, events and training provision.

NI Direct website is targeted at the private citizen and provides a link to nibusinessinfo (nibusinessinfo.co.uk/) which is the website that has been developed and delivered by Invest NI to be the key online delivery mechanism for business information. The site receives over 20,000 visits per month. Nibusinessinfo has a section dedicated to 'Environment & Efficiency' guidance which comprises nearly 60 guides and tools with topics ranging from best practice in environmental compliance to new business innovation, as well as signposts to government support.

Invest NI publicises local environmental business events on nibusinessinfo.co.uk/ through the Events and Business News sections and also on the events calendar on investni.com/.

Invest NI is also actively engaged in promoting and raising awareness of the opportunities that are rapidly emerging from the global market for renewable energy technology amongst local businesses.

Invest NI is facilitating collaboration between companies which share a common interest in, for example wind energy, bio-energy or marine energy, to ensure that opportunities to diversify from more traditional engineering activities into the renewables market are identified and exploited where possible.

A series of five DVDs to demonstrate NI capabilities in the renewable energy sector was launched in May 2009:

- Sustainable Energy - Marine
- Sustainable Energy - Low Carbon Technologies,
- Sustainable Energy - Bio-energy
- Sustainable Energy - Wind - Investment Potential
- Sustainable Energy - Wind Energy.

These videos have been placed on YouTube at www.youtube.com/investnirenewables to be available to a wider audience.

An International Energy and Environmental Conference, to be held at the Waterfront Hall, Belfast on 14th October 2009, will provide delegates with access to present and future technologies, eco-business opportunities, research and development programmes and energy and environmental business supply chains. Information on local, national and international collaboration for the purpose of developing new eco-business opportunities will be debated.

Invest NI also provides a forum for companies and entrepreneurs that are planning to invest in energy related technologies. The Energy Research Group ensures that Northern Ireland businesses receive ongoing support and up-to-date guidance to help fast-track the development of the latest energy technologies.

Apple Growers

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance her Department (i) has given to date; and (ii) continues to give to apple growers to help them find new markets for their products.

(AQW 284/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI has had and will continue to have significant engagement with apple processors to assist them in finding new markets for their products. Over the past three years, five companies have participated in 75 specialist 'Meet the Buyer' events organised by Invest NI. Some of these processors have also exhibited/attended major sectoral trade shows such as the International Food Exhibition (IFE) in London and CATEX in Dublin.

In addition, through Invest NI's Food Sector Marketing Advisors, over £200,000 first year sales were secured for three clients engaged in apple processing to 11 customers outside Northern Ireland. Given the timing of this business it is estimated that this could represent in excess of £500,000 cumulative sales.

Debt Advisory Services

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 8216/09, for an update on the delivery of telephone debt advisory services.

(AQW 319/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The free to use, confidential telephone debt advice service for Northern Ireland, Advice4debtNI went live on 1 September 2009. The associated website, www.advice4debtNI.com is now also operational.

Advice4debtNI representatives have met with a number of key stakeholders in Northern Ireland's advice network to discuss potential cross working opportunities and suitable referral protocols.

There has also been widespread distribution of posters and leaflets throughout Northern Ireland promoting the new service and its free phone number, 0800 917 4607.

Debt Advisory Services

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many staff are employed through the Northern Ireland telephone debt advisory services contract, broken down by location.

(AQW 320/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In April 2009, my Department awarded a 2 year contract to A4e to provide a telephone debt advice service for Northern Ireland.

The free to use, confidential telephone helpline, advice4debtNI went live on 1 September 2009 and employs four staff – 2 debt advisors, a senior debt advisor and a marketing co-ordinator.

All 4 members of staff are based in Belfast.

In addition, 2 senior A4e staff, the Northern Ireland Development Director and the Contract Manager, oversee the management and delivery of the contract on a part time basis.

Inward Investment: Upper Bann

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the amount of inward investment in Upper Bann; and (ii) the number of jobs created as a result, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 359/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Table 1 addresses both points (i) and (ii) above. It provides information on the amount of foreign direct investment offered support by Invest NI within the Upper Bann Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) and the number of jobs promoted or safeguarded as a result during the five-year period 2004/05 to 2008/09. The information in Table 1 represents the estimated total cost of these projects to Invest NI's externally-owned clients and the number of jobs that the projects expect to create or safeguard. The number of projects and the associated assistance offered by Invest NI is also included.

Projects have been split into those where the main focus is on employment creation and those that are innovation based, including activities such as training, research and development, trade development and technology and process development.

9. New Jobs represent the number of jobs expected to be created by the project.
10. Safe Jobs represent the number jobs that would have been lost if the project was not supported.

Credit Unions

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress she has made to date, to allow Credit Unions in Northern Ireland to offer the same range of financial services and products as their counterparts in Britain and the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 574/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: One of the recommendations included in the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment's report of its inquiry into the Role and Potential of Credit Unions in Northern Ireland was that NI credit unions be permitted to expand their range of services to include, at the very least, those services which credit unions in Great Britain can offer currently. In my response to the report, I endorsed this recommendation.

To enable credit unions in Northern Ireland which wish to expand their current range of services, new legislation will require to be enacted. To progress this matter, along with other recommendations contained in the Committee's Report, my Department has established a team to take forward the legislative changes needed to facilitate this expansion of services.

This requires working closely with Her Majesty's Treasury (HMT) which has also completed a separate Review of the Legislative Framework for Credit Unions and Industrial and Provident Societies in Northern Ireland. The input of the Financial Services Authority (FSA) will also be crucial to the process. A joint project team consisting of HMT, DETI and FSA officials has been established to take forward the legislative and non-legislative recommendations of both Reports. These discussions have proved a useful starting point. Further meetings are planned.

My Department is committed to working to implement the recommendations of the Committee and will take all steps to ensure that this is completed as soon as practically possible. A key next step will be to consult in Northern Ireland and in GB on the detail of the proposals for the reform of the regulatory framework for Northern Ireland credit unions and I am hopeful that this will happen by the end of the year.

Small Local Businesses: Assistance

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what measures have been taken to provide assistance to small, local businesses and shops during the current economic downturn. (AQW 631/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In the last twelve months, my Department has introduced a number of initiatives to help small businesses survive the current economic downturn and help them prepare for recovery. Invest NI organised a series of 'credit crunch' seminars throughout Northern Ireland which offered advice to client companies on how to navigate their way through the downturn and these were adapted for joint local council, Enterprise NI and Enterprise Agency events, with a focus specifically on non Invest NI businesses of all sizes.

The agency also has programmes designed to assist all Northern Ireland businesses with energy and environmental efficiency support and access to comprehensive online business advice and support through www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk which includes a "Beat the Credit Crunch" section.

In January 2009, the UK Government introduced the Enterprise Finance Guarantee (EFG), which provides a 75% government guarantee on Small and Medium Enterprise (SME) loans up to £1 million which can be used to convert an overdraft into a loan. Most sectors are eligible for EFG, providing they meet the banks' own lending criteria. I have met all the main Northern Ireland banks to underline the importance I attach to the active promotion of EFG.

DETI has produced an overview guide to the various support schemes which have been introduced at European, UK and local level to help businesses through the current economic downturn. This can be accessed on the DETI website.

Small businesses are benefitting from a 'prompt payment' policy introduced across all NI departments which ensures more efficient cash-flow to businesses and from April 2010 small businesses will also be able to take advantage of the small business rate relief scheme which is estimated will benefit some 16,000 businesses in Northern Ireland.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Clamping of Vehicles

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment what policy exists with, regards to the clamping of vehicles left untaxed in the street, when the owners of those vehicles are in care or in hospital. (AQW 141/10)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Poots): Vehicle Licensing is an Excepted Matter, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Transport. The arrangement for the removal and disposal of untaxed vehicles and associated policy is administered by the Driver & Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) Swansea. I have referred your question to DVLA and officials in that Agency have agreed to respond directly to you on this matter.

Planning Application Z/2008/0489/F

Mrs Long asked the Minister of the Environment whether the landscape planting scheme which formed part of Planning Application Z/2008/0489/F was considered in the context of providing suitable replacement planting for the Tree Preservation Order trees which were removed from the site at 135 Shandon Park, Belfast. (AQW 143/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The landscape planting plan showed 5 semi-mature trees to replace the 4 TPO protected trees that had been removed. These were considered to be suitable replacements and were also considered acceptable as part of the landscape planting plan.

Planning Application Z/2008/0489/F

Mrs Long asked the Minister of the Environment whether the landscape planting scheme which formed part of Planning Application Z/2008/0489/F was (i) considered in the context of the site at the time it was determined, with the Tree Preservation Order trees already removed from the site at 135 Shandon Park, Belfast; or (ii) considered in the context in which the application was originally submitted with the Tree Preservation Order trees still in situ. (AQW 147/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The drawings originally submitted with the planning application showed the 4 Tree Preservation Order protected trees still in situ. Planning Service subsequently became aware that these trees had been removed. An amended tree survey drawing was then submitted showing the 5 replacement trees. Planning Service determined the application in the knowledge that the TPO trees had been removed and on the basis of the amended landscape planting plan.

Planning Application Z/2008/0489/F

Mrs Long asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment as to whether the landscape plans, which formed part of Planning Application Z/2008/0489/F, would have been acceptable to Landscape Branch in the context of the mature trees which were subject to Tree Preservation Orders having been still in situ. (AQW 148/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Landscape Branch was consulted on the amended landscape planting plan. In their reply of 7 October 2008 they noted that the building footprints had been reduced and redesigned and that some TPO trees had been removed. They confirmed that they had no objection in principle to the proposed development. I am unable to speculate as to whether their comments would have been any different had the TPO trees still be in situ.

Legal Advice: Cost to DOE

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQO 3070/09, to detail the number of hours and the estimated cost of legal advice sought from the Departmental Solicitor, regarding legal advice provided to the previous Minister, because of his potential or actual conflict of interest as a local Councillor. (AQW 173/10)

The Minister of the Environment: As my predecessor advised, the Planning Service Management Board sought legal advice in relation to the application for the Aurora Building regarding the procedural handling of the application post Council consultation.

The Department did not at any time seek legal advice in relation to the previous Minister because of potential or actual conflict of interest as a local Councillor.

Planning Applications

Mr Storey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the time taken by each divisional planning office to approve planning applications for the erection of poultry houses, in each of the last three years. (AQW 201/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The time taken by each Divisional Planning Office to approve planning applications for the erection of poultry houses in each of the last three years is as follows:

| Divisional Planning Office | Average Processing Time – Weeks (Number of Applications Processed) 1 April 2006 – 31 March 2009 | | |
|----------------------------|--|-----------------|-----------------|
| | 2006/2007 | 2007/2008 | 2008/2009 |
| Ballymena | 18 (1) | 34 (4) | 20 (11) |
| Craigavon | 61 (7) | 31 (5) | 26 (8) |
| Downpatrick | 246 (1) | 41 (1) | No applications |
| Londonderry | 21 (2) | No applications | 23 (14) |
| Omagh | 35 (12) | 26 (6) | 20 (21) |
| Agency | 41 (23) | 31 (16) | 22 (54) |

The figure in brackets represents the number of planning applications decided in that year. The application decided in 2006/2007 in Downpatrick Planning Office was an Environmental Impact Assessment development and required the submission of an Environment Statement and involved protracted negotiations with Roads Service over access issues including a number of amendments to the application.

High Hedges

Mr Storey asked the Minister of the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation on High Hedges. (AQW 211/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I fully appreciate the level of concern over nuisance high hedges in Northern Ireland. I have just announced my decision to bring legislative proposals before the Executive and the Assembly. Naturally, I intend to consult publicly on these proposals.

IT systems: DOE

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) all new IT systems that were installed within his Department; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date, in the last five years. (AQW 220/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has installed only one IT System costing over £100,000 within the last 5 years. Project details are given below.

| Project Name | Initial Budget | Actual Cost | Estimated start date | Actual Start date |
|-----------------------------------|----------------|-------------|----------------------|-------------------|
| Taxi Licensing Information System | £465,778 | £463,629 | June 2008 | October 2008 |

Farm Land: Rights of Access

Mr Ross asked the Minister of the Environment what current legislation allows, in terms of rights of access to farm land for horse riders; and if the Department has any plans to review the current legislation. (AQW 270/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The common law right of access by horse riders to private land can be established through the general public having unrestricted access, on horseback along a defined route, which has been tolerated by the landowner for a period of time.

The responsibility for asserting such routes falls to District Councils under Article 3 of the Access to the Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

I have no plans to amend the current legislation.

Dangerous Wild Animals Order (Northern Ireland) 2004

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the total number of current licences for keeping animals which have been granted by his Department under the Dangerous Wild Animals Order (Northern Ireland) 2004; (ii) a breakdown of all dangerous animals held under these licences; and (iii) to state whether these animals are owned by (a) circuses; (b) zoos; (c) private individuals; or (d) held under some other ownership arrangement. (AQW 286/10)

The Minister of the Environment:

- (i) The Dangerous Wild Animals (Northern Ireland) Order 2004 enables my Department to regulate private individuals in Northern Ireland who keep Dangerous Wild Animals. There are currently 19 licences to possess Dangerous Wild Animals covering 60 animals.
- (ii) The following animals are licensed in Northern Ireland:

|--|--|
| Emu | 10 |
| Wolf/wolf dogs | 8 |
| Ring tailed lemurs (primate) | 10 |
| Black and white ruffed lemur (primate) | 3 |
| Brown ruffed lemur (primate) | 2 |
| Saki monkey (primate) | 4 |
| Tamarins | 8 (small primate) |
| Capuchin | 5 (small primate) |
| Tiger | 1 |
| Cheetah (Bengal cat/Ocicat cross, the latter being an all domestic breed of cat) | 1 |
| Vicugna (camelid) | 2 |
| Zebra | 2 |
| Dwarf caiman (reptile) | 2 |
| Venomous snakes | 2 (white lipped viper, western diamondback rattlesnake). |

- (iii) All licences apply to private keepers, although one licence holder also runs an 'open farm'. Zoos and circuses are exempted from requiring licences to possess Dangerous Wild Animals under Article 7 of the Order.

High Hedges

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment what legislative action he intends to take to address the problem of nuisance high hedges. (AQW 305/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I fully appreciate the level of concern over nuisance high hedges in Northern Ireland. I have just announced my decision to bring legislative proposals before the Executive and the Assembly. Naturally, I intend to consult publicly on these proposals.

Child and Adolescent Mental Health Unit in Templepatrick

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment if full planning permission has been granted to build a child and adolescent mental health unit in Templepatrick; and for an update on the status of this project. (AQW 327/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department is processing a planning application for full permission for erection of a residential institution for child and adolescent care at 182 Templepatrick Road, Ballyclare. On 7 September 2009 a recommendation of approval was placed before Newtownabbey Council. Another MLA has requested a meeting with me to discuss the application and this will take place as soon as possible. At the Council meeting the Planning Officer agreed that no decision would issue until the request for the meeting was considered.

High Hedges/Trees

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment the proposed timescale for legislation on high hedges and trees. (AQW 330/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I fully appreciate the level of concern over nuisance high hedges in Northern Ireland. I have just announced my decision to bring legislative proposals before the Executive and the Assembly. Naturally, I intend to consult publicly on these proposals. Unfortunately I am unable to confirm the timetable at present however, I can assure you that I am fully committed to introducing this legislation at the earliest opportunity.

Lisburn: City Status

Mr Butler asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for his assessment of the city status of Lisburn in the wake of the proposed local council boundary changes; (ii) what steps his Department will be taking to confer new city status on Lisburn as part of the Review of Public Administration proposals; and (iii) will this require new legislation. (AQW 371/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department is currently developing proposals for legislation, which will enable all five cities in Northern Ireland, to retain their city status following the reorganisation of local government in 2011. The Department will need to consult the relevant councils and you can expect my officials to be in contact with your Council in due course.

Colin Valley Golf Course

Mr Butler asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the economic appraisal on Colin Valley Golf Course (i) when it was completed; (ii) when it was provided to the Department of Finance and Personnel; and (iii) what conclusions and recommendations it contains. (AQW 374/10)

The Minister of the Environment: A submission was made to the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) in December 2008 to determine the feasibility of leasing Colin Valley Golf Course to Colin Glen Trust for 99 years. DFP's response in January 2009 did not rule out the possibility of such a lease, but required the submission of an economic appraisal justifying it. My officials attempted this exercise but were unable to assemble a sufficiently robust case with the information supplied by the Trust. Instead they followed the advice of my predecessor, Sammy Wilson, and proposed providing a letter assuring potential backers of my Department's intention to replace the existing lease with one renewable on a 25-year cycle.

The completion of an economic appraisal supporting this course of action awaits confirmation from the Trust that the letter sent by my officials has satisfied the Trust's financial backers.

Red Kites

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if any of the Red Kites released in Mid and South Down have been found dead; and whether there has been any monitoring of their numbers. (AQW 388/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Four red kites have been found dead over the course of the first year of the RSPB re-introduction programme.

All released birds are fitted with radio transmitters which allow them to be tracked and monitored. The radio transmitters fall off after the first season when the birds moult. In addition, all released birds are permanently wing tagged which allows individuals to be identified and their movements recorded.

While the project is still at an early stage, useful data is being collected by the RSPB. Early observations show that the birds tend to stay around the South Down release area although one has travelled as far as County Wicklow. The birds have been observed foraging in fields where they take insects and earthworms.

The Northern Ireland red kites are still juveniles and they are not expected to breed until they are 2-3 years old.

Magpies

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what action he is taking to address the increase in the numbers of magpies; and whether he has held any discussions with the British Association for Shooting and Conservation or Country Side Alliance Ireland to initiate a control scheme. (AQW 389/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Breeding Bird Survey, carried out by the British Trust for Ornithology, shows no increase in the numbers of breeding magpies across Northern Ireland during the last survey period 1995-2006.

Magpies are currently listed on the General Licence in the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. This allows authorised persons to take or kill this species for reasons such as 'preventing serious damage to livestock' or 'conserving wild birds'. Control of predators has always been seen as the responsibility of landowners.

My officials have a good working relationship and regular liaison with the British Association for Shooting and Conservation and the Countryside Alliance. To date they have not received any requests from either organisation to consider additional control measures for magpies.

Infill Sites

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of the Environment how many infill sites have been passed for (i) Coleraine; (ii) Limavady; (iii) Moyle; (iv) Ballymoney; (v) Magherafelt; and (vi) Ballymena since the introduction of draft PPS21. (AQW 397/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department does not record this level of detail on the current system of electronic retrieval – 20/20. Planning applications for single dwellings in the rural area are categorised as either rural new or rural replacement. A statistical code for a single dwelling in the rural area which represents an infill development is not an available option on the 20/20 computer system. To provide accurate figures for the data requested would require a manual search of all our existing files. This information would not be available in the time specified and would incur disproportionate costs.

Flooding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if he will be making the £1000 payout available to all households that have been subjected to flooding, and in particular to households in Strangford. (AQW 435/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance to District Councils was re-activated on 2 September 2009 following severe flooding in parts of Northern Ireland in the latter part of August 2009. The main purpose of the £1,000 emergency payment afforded to householders is an offer of immediate practical assistance to those who have experienced severe inconvenience, to ensure their homes are made habitable as quickly as possible.

A framework which provided the basis for the 2009/2010 Emergency Financial Assistance Scheme issued to district councils on 20 May 2009, to enable them to take immediate action in the eventuality of a flooding incident in their area. Therefore, having followed these guidelines, should a council be able to provide the Department with evidence of any isolated incidences of severe inconvenience caused by flooding which occurred prior to 2 September 2009, these cases will be considered by officials and a response issued to the council. Such applications would, of course, have to adhere to the general terms and conditions of the Scheme.

The Department, having consulted with both Ards Borough Council and Down District Council can confirm that emergency payments were paid to two individual householders who suffered severe inconvenience as a result of flooding in the Strangford constituency area on 2 and 3 September 2009.

Landfill Site at Craigmore Road, Ringsend, Coleraine

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to detail his plans to ensure that any expansion of the landfill site at Craigmore Road, Ringsend, Coleraine, is subject to a formal planning application and a full consultation with the local community. (AQW 446/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 provides the legislative context through which Planning Service exercises control over development. The Craigmore Road site has been the subject of a number of planning applications within the last five years. I am satisfied that any future development proposals for the site will be subject to the necessary planning application process. Any application will be processed in accordance with the requirements of the legislation.

PPS 7: Addendum

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment if and when he intends to publish a draft addendum to PPS7, 'Safeguarding the Character of Established Residential Areas'; and whether it will be treated as a material planning document with immediate effect when assessing applications. (AQW 478/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I am currently considering Draft PPS 7 Addendum 'Safeguarding the Character of Established Residential Areas', which I intend to publish for consultation as soon as possible, following Executive clearance.

In line with Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 1 'General Principles', draft planning policy statements, once published, may be regarded as a material planning consideration in the determination of planning applications.

Effluent Dispersion Modelling Report

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 3716/09, to detail the results of the Effluent Dispersion Modelling Report commissioned by NI Water and the NI Environment Agency, in relation to sewerage treatment and coastal discharge for Whitehead, Ballycarry and Ballystrudder districts. (AQW 481/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) requested that Northern Ireland Water (NIW) carry out a marine dispersion model to assess the impact of the discharge from Whitehead, Ballycarry and Ballystrudder on the receiving water.

Initial modelling carried out by NIW was for an untreated screened discharge as the population equivalent (p.e.) has been determined as less than 10,000. The modelling study showed that a large section of coastline would be impacted by the discharge, which NIEA did not consider to be acceptable. Consequently, NIEA asked NIW to model the discharge with varying levels of treatment.

NIW modelled a discharge consisting of secondary treated effluent from Ballycarry and screened effluent from Whitehead and Ballystrudder through a proposed 500m long outfall at Cloughfin Bay.

The Northern Ireland Estuarine and Coastal Waters Classification Scheme (NIECWCS) requires that any Waste Water Treatment Works (WWTW) discharging to coastal waters serving a p.e. greater than 250 must allow the mandatory requirements of the Bathing Water Directive to be met during the bathing season.

The modelling requested by NIEA demonstrates that the discharge meets the requirements of the NIECWCS.

NI Environment Agency

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 3716/09, if the NI Environment Agency has asked for and received a model for the option of discharging secondary treated effluent into the North Channel at Cloghfin Bay, Islandmagee. (AQW 485/10)

The Minister of the Environment: A model for the option of discharging secondary treated effluent into the North Channel at Cloghfin Bay, Islandmagee was not requested because the modelling of the secondary treated effluent from Ballycarry and screened effluent from Whitehead and Ballystrudder, met NIEA standards.

Effluent: Islandmagee

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the potential for pollution to the adjacent coastline due to high bacterial levels from untreated screened effluent being discharged via a 500 metre outfall pipe proposed in Cloghfin Bay, Islandmagee. (AQW 486/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The proposed discharge at Cloghfin Bay consists of secondary treated effluent from Ballycarry and screened effluent from Whitehead and Ballystrudder. The Northern Ireland Environment Agency requires that any Waste Water Treatment Works discharging to coastal waters serving a population equivalent greater than 250 must allow the mandatory requirements of the Bathing Water Directive to be met during the bathing season. The modelling of this proposed discharge was carried out under a range of tide and wind conditions and shows that standards set in the Bathing Water Directive will be complied with out to 200m below low tide between June and mid-September. There are no designated bathing or shellfish waters in this area which would require bacteriological standards to be applied along the coastline.

Illegal Dumping

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the work carried out by his Department to counter illegal dumping. (AQW 508/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Since January 2009, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has overseen 27 successful prosecutions, one suspended six-month prison sentence and an associated £115,950 in fines against illegal waste offenders. My officials have been instrumental in obtaining the agreement of the Irish authorities to repatriate vast quantities of illegally imported waste and will continue to work closely with their counterparts to see this work through to its conclusion.

The increased focus of NIEA's Environmental Crime Unit (ECU) on an intelligence-led strategy is producing tangible results. In March 2009, ECU's trained and accredited Financial Investigators (using the increased powers available to them under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002) secured their first confiscation order, independently of the Serious Organised Crime Agency for £200,000, against a Co Antrim man convicted of illegally disposing of 50,400 tonnes of waste.

This confiscation order builds on four previous confiscation orders obtained on behalf of NIEA by the former Assets Recovery Agency totalling £832,000 in the period November 2007 to February 2008 and raises the total sum of environmental crime confiscation orders to over £1 million.

Illegal Dumping

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost of disposing of all tyres collected as a result of illegal dumping, in each District Council, in (i) 2006/07; (ii) 2007/08; and (iii) 2008/09. (AQW 534/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has no statutory authority over the collection and disposal of illegally dumped materials, and therefore does not hold these details. Figures would be collated by individual District Councils.

Motorcycle Safety Gear

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what steps is he taking to encourage bikers to wear correct safety gear when on their bikes. (AQW 539/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department launched a new Highway Code for Northern Ireland in July 2008. The new Code contains a section on motorcycling which states that riders and pillion passengers on motorcycles, scooters or mopeds must wear protective helmets, which must comply with the Regulations and must be fastened securely. It also provides advice on eye protectors and suitable clothing.

The Highway Code is widely available from bookshops and other retail outlets, and can be downloaded from the DOE road safety website. It is also available in Portuguese, Polish, Lithuanian, Mandarin Chinese and Russian.

My Department is also considering, in the context of the proposed new road safety strategy for Northern Ireland, what further measures could be taken to improve the safety of motorcyclists, and on 15 September 2009 motorcyclists were invited to participate in a relevant research project.

Landfill Tax Regime

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment what waste licences currently regulate the Arena race track, Nutts Corner, under the Landfill Tax Regime. (AQW 679/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Department does not issue Waste Licences under the Landfill Tax Regime.

This site is not licensed under the Waste Management Licensing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

NI Direct Website

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how long it took to develop the NI Direct Government Services website and at what cost. (AQW 45/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr S Wilson): Development of the NI Direct website began in December 2008 with the site going live, on target, on 31 March 2009.

The cost of developing the site including preparatory work was £348k.

NI Direct Website

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline what contact was made with the Direct Government UK Services website during the development of the NI Direct site. (AQW 46/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The evaluation of the options for delivering the NI Direct project objectives concluded with a decision to base the new website on the very successful Directgov site which had been operating in Great Britain for some years. It was decided that this would be the most effective, speediest and efficient method of creating the new website. Although modelled on Directgov, NI Direct is being developed to reflect the particular needs of citizens in Northern Ireland.

Directgov has been very supportive and co-operative in setting up NI Direct and during the initial development phase, there was significant contact between the Directgov team and NI Direct.

Staff at Directgov have provided advice on a number of issues including technical, publishing, analytical and operational matters. A Memorandum of Understanding was developed to formalise the contact between the two websites.

Senior members of the Directgov team also came to Northern Ireland to give presentations to the NI Direct project board. The Directgov operational board also includes a representative from Northern Ireland (the head of the NI Direct central editorial team).

Directgov also agreed that their site could be copied to use as a template for the “localisation” of the content for Northern Ireland citizens.

Carbon Trust

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline why Northern Ireland is the only part of the UK where the public sector has not been able to avail of support from the Carbon Trust to improve energy efficiency in its operations and the energy efficiency and energy systems within buildings. (AQW 71/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: In Northern Ireland, the Carbon Trust is funded by the Department of Enterprise, Trade & Investment through Invest NI, which limits the provision of their free services to the private sector. However their services are available to any public sector organisation that is prepared to cover the cost. A separate fund to support energy efficiency improvements in Northern Ireland public sector buildings already exists.

Central Energy Efficiency Fund

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) grant awards to Craigavon Borough Council under the Central Energy Efficiency Fund from 2003 to date, including the reference numbers; and (ii) the savings that resulted from energy saving measures funded by these grant awards. (AQW 81/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The table attached sets out all Central Energy Efficiency Fund grants awarded to Craigavon Borough Council from 2003 to date. The estimated energy, carbon dioxide and monetary savings that each project could achieve have been extracted from the project data supplied by the Council in each of their bids. The Department does not have a record of actual savings achieved by the projects.

The Department is not aware of partial funding from the Clear Skies programme for the installation of wind turbines at Kinnego Marina. The bid submitted by the Council referred to one wind turbine only and was funded fully by the CEEF.

Health and Safety Inspection

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) who vetted the qualifications of the company that carried out the Health and Safety inspection of the Craigavon Borough Council owned wind turbines; and (ii) if that company met the required qualifications. (AQW 82/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: It is the responsibility of Craigavon Borough Council, not the Department, to vet the qualifications of the company that carried out the health and safety inspection of the Council-owned wind turbines and thereby determine if that company met the required qualifications.

Central Energy Efficiency Fund

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the savings made (i) by the installation of wind turbines at Kinnego Marina, which were part funded by the Central Energy Efficiency Fund (CEEF) and Clear Skies; and (ii) by the three wind turbines at the Carn Depot in Craigavon, which were fully funded by the CEEF. (AQW 83/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The table attached sets out all Central Energy Efficiency Fund grants awarded to Craigavon Borough Council from 2003 to date. The estimated energy, carbon dioxide and monetary savings that each project could achieve have been extracted from the project data supplied by the Council in each of their bids. The Department does not have a record of actual savings achieved by the projects.

The Department is not aware of partial funding from the Clear Skies programme for the installation of wind turbines at Kinnego Marina. The bid submitted by the Council referred to one wind turbine only and was funded fully by the CEEF.

Energy Return Reports

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide copies of the annual Energy Return Reports from Craigavon Borough Council to his Department for the last three years. (AQW 84/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Craigavon Borough Council last completed and returned an Energy Data Request form to the Department for the year 2005/06, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Despite repeated requests to the Council for energy data for 2006/07 and 2007/08 the Department has received no response. The Energy Data Request for 2008/09 will be issued in the week ending 18 September 2009 for return no later than 31 October 2009.

Northern Ireland Civil Service: Vacancies

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) location; and (ii) number of vacancies in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at (a) Administrative Officer; (b) Executive Officer II; (c) Executive Officer I; and (d) Staff Officer grades in each Government Department. (AQW 88/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The location and number of vacancies in permanent posts in each Northern Ireland Civil Service department at the grades of (a) Administrative Officer; (b) Executive Officer 2; (c) Executive Officer 1; and (d) Staff Officer are set out in the table attached.

Floodline

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the protocols and procedures that come into force at Floodline whenever rain is expected. (AQW 89/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: NI Direct has a Flooding Incident Line (FIL) Liaison Officer who monitors weather forecasts and liaises with the Met Office and the three Flood Response Agencies (Rivers Agency, Roads Service and NI Water).

On receiving heavy rain or flood warnings from the Met Office, the FIL Liaison Officer consults with the Flood Response Agencies to assess the level of risk of flooding and decide on the appropriate course of action.

In cases where a warning relates to a period outside normal business hours, the appropriate number of additional Customer Service Representatives (CSRs) are assigned to report for duty and work alongside the normal out of hours team. Additional CSRs may also be put on stand-by.

The on-call duty officer and the FIL Liaison Officer coordinate and manage staff levels thereafter and can reduce or further increase them as appropriate.

Prediction of serious flooding is not an exact science. In the interests of proper value for public funds, it is necessary to balance the need for an appropriate level of staff given the forecast, against the need to avoid having too many CSRs on duty if flooding does not materialise.

Floodline

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) how many staff are employed in Floodline; and (ii) how many staff were working at Floodline on 29 August 2009 at noon. (AQW 91/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Currently there are 8 on-call duty officers plus 50 Customer Service Representatives (CSRs) including an Out of Hours Team of 8.

At noon on 29th August there were 2 CSRs working plus there was an on-call duty officer. As a precautionary measure, a further 4 CSRs were put on call since it was a holiday weekend.

Floodline

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many staff, on average, work in Floodline on a daily basis. (AQW 93/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: An average of 36 Customer Service Representatives (CSRs) trained in Flooding Incident Line (FIL) would be working on other NI Direct activities during normal business hours. They are diverted instantly to FIL as calls come in.

Outside normal business hours a minimum of 2 staff are on FIL duty. On receiving heavy rain or flood warnings from the Met Office, the level of risk of flooding is considered and additional CSRs are assigned to report for duty. Additional CSRs may also be put on stand-by.

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) how many court cases have been taken against the Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) in each of the last 5 years; and (ii) how many were (a) won by CPD; and (b) lost by CPD. (AQW 144/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Court cases can only be taken against DFP, as CPD's parent Department. Details requested in respect of the number of court cases brought against DFP in relation to procurement competitions managed by CPD are set out below.

| Year | Won | Lost | Withdrawn | Total |

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how the Central Procurement Directorate is audited. (AQW 145/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Central Procurement Directorate's (CPD) income and expenditure is audited annually by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG) as part of his audit of the departmental Resource Accounts.

On an annual basis, the Department of Finance and Personnel's Internal Audit function compiles an audit plan based on an assessment of specific risks. The 2008/09 Assurance Report, concluded that the control framework within CPD provided an overall satisfactory level of assurance.

Floodline

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the relationship between Floodline, his Department, and the Met Office. (AQW 146/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: NI Direct uses the Met Office National Severe Weather Warning Service to receive emails and SMS text alerts of early warnings and / or flash messages of Heavy/Extreme rainfall. These warnings are proactively distributed by the Met Office. Advisories of heavy / extreme rainfall are web-based only and are not proactively distributed. In addition, NI Direct is part of a local Northern Ireland group that receives, where necessary, further updates from the Met Office Public Weather Service Advisor in Northern Ireland, allowing more localised or regional advice for planning purposes. NI Direct has established a good and effective working relationship with the Met Office and regularly consults with them on both a formal and informal basis.

GDP: Manufacturing Base

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give an estimate, on the basis of the most recent figures available, of the size of the manufacturing base as a percentage of the overall Northern Ireland Gross Domestic Product. (AQW 154/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Gross Domestic Product (GDP) is not produced for Northern Ireland. Because of a definitional change, what was formerly referred to as GDP was actually Gross Value Added (GVA) at basic prices. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is responsible for producing GVA for the UK and its regions. The most recent figures available are for 2006 and show that Manufacturing accounts for 15.4% of Northern Ireland's Gross Value Added.

GDP: Agricultural/Agri-business Sector

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give an estimate, on the basis of the most recent figures available, of the size of the agricultural and agri-business sector as a percentage of the overall Northern Ireland Gross Domestic Product. (AQW 156/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Gross Domestic Product (GDP) is not produced for Northern Ireland. Because of a definitional change, what was formerly referred to as GDP was actually Gross Value Added (GVA) at basic prices. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is responsible for producing GVA for the UK and its regions. The most recent figures available are for 2006 and show that Agriculture accounts for 1.7% of Northern Ireland's Gross Value Added.

GDP: Services Sector

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give an estimate, on the basis of the most recent figures available, of the size of the services sector as a percentage of the overall Northern Ireland Gross Domestic Product. (AQW 157/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Gross Domestic Product (GDP) is not produced for Northern Ireland. Because of a definitional change, what was formerly referred to as GDP was actually Gross Value Added (GVA) at basic prices. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is responsible for producing GVA for the UK and its regions. The most recent figures available are for 2006 and show that Services (including both public and private elements) account for 71.6% of Northern Ireland's Gross Value Added.

GDP: Construction Sector

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give an estimate, on the basis of the most recent figures available, of the size of the construction sector as a percentage of the overall Northern Ireland Gross Domestic Product. (AQW 158/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Gross Domestic Product (GDP) is not produced for Northern Ireland. Because of a definitional change, what was formerly referred to as GDP was actually Gross Value Added (GVA) at basic prices. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) is responsible for producing GVA for the UK and its regions. The most recent figures available are for 2006 and show that Construction accounts for 8.5% of Northern Ireland's Gross Value Added.

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DFP

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 162/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The total expenditure for The Department of Finance and Personnel over the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms and (ii) events organisers is set out in the tables overleaf.

The majority of the consultancy expenditure relates to NICS reform projects and has been necessary to support the development and implementation of the NICS reform programme. With most of these key reform projects moving from the implementation to service delivery phases expenditure on external consultancy is expected to fall significantly in 2009/10, and a target reduction of 25% has been adopted by my Department.

IT Systems: DFP

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) all new IT systems installed within his Department in the last 5 years; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date. (AQW 204/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Within the last 5 years, DFP have installed 15 IT projects costing more than £25k. The initial budget for these projects was £124,684,550 and the actual cost is £134,924,206.

I have included further information relating to each individual project in the table attached.

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether the Central Procurement Directorate has been found in breach of Article 83 of the EC Treaty. (AQW 221/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: CPD has never been found in breach of Article 83 of the EC Treaty.

Administration Staff and Specialist Appointees: DFP Statistics

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for statistics on administration staff and specialist appointees within her Department, broken down by religion and percentages for each religion. (AQW 230/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Information on the community background of NICS staff is collected for the purpose of monitoring the effectiveness of NICS equality and personnel policies. Because these are corporate policies it is appropriate that they are monitored centrally by the Department of Finance and Personnel on behalf of all departments. In keeping with this approach DFP will publish monitoring information for the NICS as a whole and by occupational grouping. The further processing of NICS monitoring information at the level of department, directorate or location would not be consistent with Data Protection principles.

Commercially Sensitive Information

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail his Department's policy in relation to the release of commercially sensitive information to the media via (i) press releases; and (ii) requests for further information from journalists to his Department's Press Office. (AQW 254/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: It is the policy of my Department not to release commercially sensitive information to the media.

Workplace 2010: Collapse

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the needs of the public sector office estate and to report on his plans to improve it, following the collapse of Workplace 2010. (AQW 276/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Following the termination of the WP2010 procurement process, my Department has commenced a review of the options available to it to address the continuing deterioration of the office estate. The NICS remains committed to the general accommodation principles set out under the WP2010 programme including the move to an open, flexible office environment. This will increase the density of workstations, reduce our overall office footprint and reduce our running costs. However given the limitations on budget this change will have to take place over a considerably longer time frame than that envisaged under the WP2010 PFI process.

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail any occasions when Central Procurement Directorate has been found in breach of EU law. (AQW 277/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Since CPD was established in April 2002 it has been found to be in breach of the Public Contracts Regulations 2006 (which implement the EU Procurement Directives) on one occasion in respect of the procurement of a framework agreement, in 2008, for Integrated Supply Teams to design and build a variety of construction projects. The judgement is being appealed.

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much Central Procurement Directorate has had to pay out in compensation as a result of having lost court cases in each of the last five years. (AQW 332/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Central Procurement Directorate has not paid any compensation as a result of lost court cases in the last five years.

Central Procurement Directorate

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to give the reasons why Central Procurement Directorate has been (i) taken to court; (ii) forced to pay fines; and (iii) forced to pay damages or loss of income compensation, in each of the last five years. (AQW 334/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Court cases can only be taken against DFP, as CPD's parent Department. Details requested in respect of court cases brought against DFP in relation to procurement competitions managed by CPD in each of the last five years are set out overleaf.

There were no instances when DFP/CPD was forced to pay fines, pay damages or loss of income compensation.

Quangos

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what estimate he has made of the potential savings to the public purse by reducing the number of quangos and similar bodies. (AQW 373/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Department of Finance and Personnel sponsors 2 Non Departmental Public Bodies – the Northern Ireland Building Regulations Advisory Committee and the Statistics

Advisory Committee. As both of these committees are required by statute and appointments to them are not remunerated, there is no scope for potential savings.

Legislation: DFP

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline any legislation his Department intends to bring before the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 404/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: I introduced the Rates (Amendment) Bill to the Assembly on 14 September. I have no other plans to introduce any further legislation before 31 December 2009.

Civil Service Pay Claim

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in relation to the Civil Service pay claim, when the review of technical grades was completed; and to provide a synopsis of the results. (AQW 467/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Thanks to the cooperation of both the unions and staff, the field work stage of the review was completed on time at the end of August. Officials are considering a draft report of the review, a copy of which has been provided to NIPSA for its consideration and comment as part of the normal arrangements for staff reviews. It is only when that process is completed that the report will be finalised.

Rating of Empty Homes

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given the economic downturn and the decline in the housing market, if he will reconsider the introduction of the rating of empty homes. (AQW 470/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: I am reconsidering the timing of the introduction of this measure and I am currently waiting for confirmation from the Finance and Personnel Committee regarding their position.

I am well aware of the difficulties that are being experienced by homeowners during the current economic downturn. This has been demonstrated most sharply in terms of the decline in the housing market. I am keen to avoid doing anything through the rating system that would either worsen the current situation, through further reducing property prices, or hamper stabilisation of the market.

I believe that, in principle, the rating of empty homes can bring many benefits under the right circumstances. However, now does not seem to me to be the right time to place an additional burden on home owners. The local housing market has seen dramatic price falls since the policy was first announced in 2007 and increasingly the owners of empty properties cannot find buyers or tenants.

For this reason I believe that the rating of empty homes at 100% should not be introduced in April 2010. I have listened carefully to views expressed at the DFP Committee and although I am awaiting final confirmation I would like to postpone this measure until April 2011. By this time I expect the property market will have stabilised and the conditions for introducing it will be much healthier.

National Asset Management Agency

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the potential impact of the Republic of Ireland's National Asset Management Agency proposals on Northern Ireland's economy. (AQW 653/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: I recently had a very constructive meeting with Finance Minister Lenihan on the NAMA issue. During this meeting I was briefed on the NAMA proposals and the extent to which Northern Ireland assets would be involved. There will be some €4.8 billion in Northern Ireland loans transferring from participating banks into NAMA. These loans cover a range of assets including existing property and land.

Minister Lenihan agreed with me that there should be no 'firesale' of these assets. I was concerned that any such sale would have a deflationary impact upon the local property market and the wider Northern Ireland economy. Minister Lenihan agreed that it was in no-one's interest that this should happen.

I will continue to engage with Minister Lenihan on this important issue over the coming months.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Ambulance Trust: North Down Efficiency Plans

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the Ambulance Trust's efficiency plans for ambulance cover for the North Down area. (AQW 9/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): Ambulance cover in North Down is mainly provided from Bangor and Newtownards Ambulance Stations and from deployment points at Donaghadee (Fire Station), Bangor Marina and the Ulster Hospital, Dundonald.

The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) plans an increase of 4,093 hours of paramedic cover at Bangor. The profile of emergency cover at Newtownards will remain unchanged.

I have invested £17.4 million capital over the CSR period to modernise NIAS's fleet, estate, equipment and IT infrastructure. This investment will primarily be used to commence the replacement of the fleet, allowing around 20 A&E ambulances and 20 patient care service vehicles to be replaced annually. A total of 26 rapid response vehicles will be also purchased over this period.

As a result of these changes, there will be more vehicles on the road capable of responding to emergencies than in the past. Research evidence shows that for every minute between collapse and commencement of life support, survival rates reduce by 10%. The introduction of more paramedic rapid response capability is about increasing the speed and the clinical quality of the ambulance service response to those patients with the most serious life-threatening medical emergencies.

Mental Health Legislation

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AWQ 8944/09, to report (i) on the number of responses to the Department's consultation on the Legislative Framework for Mental Capacity and Mental Health Legislation in Northern Ireland which made specific reference to the issue of a single bill versus separate pieces of legislation; and (ii) from that subset, the percentage of responses which argued for a single piece of legislation. (AQW 49/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Thirty seven responses to the Department's consultation on the Legislative Framework for Mental Capacity and Mental Health Legislation in Northern Ireland made reference to the issue of a single Bill versus separate pieces of legislation; of which approximately 76% indicated support for a single piece of legislation.

Having carefully considered the views expressed in the consultation responses, I announced my intention to proceed with a single Bill on 10 September 2009.

Anti-obesity Drugs

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number, broken down by age, of people who have been prescribed anti-obesity drugs in each of the last five years. (AQW 56/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the form requested.

NHS Dentists

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide an update on the recruitment of 38 more NHS dentists. (AQW 85/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The contract with Oasis Dental Care Ltd specifies that there will be a phased roll out of dental practices across Northern Ireland, starting with the areas of greatest need. The first new dental practices will open in Enniskillen and Londonderry and begin seeing patients before the end of this year.

Subject to acquisition of suitable properties, and any required planning permission being approved promptly, I fully expect that all of the new dentists will be in post within 12 months of the first new practice opening.

Scoliosis

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the provision made for people with a scoliosis condition. (AQW 86/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Patients suffering from scoliosis have access to care and treatment from an appropriate part of the Health and Social Care sector depending on their individual needs, ranging from primary and community care to general orthopaedic and specialist scoliosis clinics.

Regional orthopaedic services are provided by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust's orthopaedic department. Scoliosis clinics are held at Musgrave Park Hospital. Two consultants run 6 Wednesday morning clinics per month; if a 5 week month then 1 extra clinic is held. These clinics are also attended by a spinal liaison nurse to help patients and their parents prepare for surgery. Surgery is carried out at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children. There is one scoliosis theatre list per month. From September capacity is to be increased to provide one week of paediatric scoliosis lists per month for 6 months to address those patients currently waiting for surgery.

Speech and Language Therapy Action Plan

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the planned speech and language therapy action plan will be published. (AQW 87/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is anticipated that the draft Speech and Language Therapy Action Plan will be published for public consultation by the end of 2009.

Hospital Cleanliness Audit Team

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration has been given to the establishment of a dedicated hospital cleanliness audit team to carry out routine and unannounced inspections and publish regular reports on their findings. (AQW 97/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) carries out a programme of unannounced inspections of hospital hygiene including environmental cleanliness. A dedicated team uses an audit tool and the reports are published on the RQIA website.

NI Medical and Dental Training Agency

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of junior doctors appointed to each maternity unit this year by the NI Medical and Dental Training Agency; and (ii) how many of the doctors appointed to each maternity unit have taken up their posts. (AQW 101/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The number of junior doctors appointed to Obstetrics and Gynaecology in each hospital in this year's recruitment round is detailed in the table below. At the end of August 2009 107 of the 126 training posts available in Obstetrics and Gynaecology in Northern Ireland were filled.

OBSTETRICS AND GYNAECOLOGY JUNIOR DOCTOR VACANCY POSITION, AUGUST 2009

| Hospital | Total No of Posts | Posts filled at Aug 09 |
|-----------------|--------------------------|-------------------------------|
| Antrim | 17 | 17 |
| Altnagelvin | 13 | 13 |
| Craigavon | 15 | 15 |
| Causeway | 9 | 5 |
| Daisy Hill | 7 | 6 |
| Lagan Valley | 7 | 5 |
| Mater | 6 | 5 |
| Royal | 30 | 25 |
| Ulster | 16 | 15 |
| Erne | 6 | 1 |
| Total | 126 | 107 |

With the exception of the Erne, the vacancy situation did not adversely impact on Obstetrics and Gynaecology patient services at any of the hospitals listed in the above table. Full services at the Erne were restored on 14th September 2009.

Agenda for Change

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why senior district nursing staff in the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust have not yet been banded under Agenda for Change. (AQW 106/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The process for grading senior district nursing staff posts is continuing. Staff will be advised of the Agenda for Change banding when that process is complete.

Agenda for Change

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the banding for sisters in outpatients in the Bangor, Ards and Ulster Hospitals under Agenda for Change has been agreed by the South Eastern Health and Social CareTrust. (AQW 107/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The review process for the banding of Sisters in Outpatients in Bangor, Ards and the Ulster Hospitals is nearing completion and the Trust hopes to be in a position to release the outcome shortly.

Bamford Action Plan

Mrs Long asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he anticipates the Bamford Action Plan will be presented to the Executive for approval. (AQW 120/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am currently seeking agreement from Executive colleagues to publication of the cross-Departmental Bamford Action Plan 2009-2011. The draft Action Plan was circulated to Executive colleagues in June.

Subject to agreement from OFMdFM, I hope this issue will be considered at the next meeting of the Executive on the 24 September.

Bamford Action Plan

Mrs Long asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has the resources required to implement the Bamford Action Plan. (AQW 121/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I have submitted to the Executive a proposed Action Plan for 2009-2011 on the implementation of the Bamford Review. This focuses on actions which can be achieved over the period to 2011 within the funding levels set out in the Executive's spending plans following the Comprehensive Spending Review, but some longer term objectives are also signalled in the Plan.

My Department's total new investment in mental health and learning disability services in support of Bamford amounts to £87m over three years, resulting in recurrent additional investment of £44m from 2010/11.

Substantial resources are also being contributed by other Departments, in particular Department of Education and Department for Social Development.

If the Plan is approved by the Executive, the necessary resources up to 2010/11 are in place. However I have made it clear to Executive colleagues that this is only a start; we will need to continue to secure substantial additional monies for these services in future spending rounds to deliver the Bamford vision. The Bamford Review envisaged a 10-15 year programme of change, costing over £300m in additional resources.

Hospital Heating Costs

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the heating systems used in each of Northern Ireland's hospitals; and the annual cost of heating in hospitals in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 126/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: This information is not held centrally by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

South Tyrone Hospital: Dormant Wards

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if consideration has been given to the further refurbishment of dormant wards in South Tyrone Hospital, specifically for elderly after-care, in order to free up bed space in Craigavon Area Hospital. (AQW 133/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: At present, the Trust is completing a programme of refurbishment work in South Tyrone Hospital, which will allow all non-acute beds to be located in Loane House and provide a new day hospital and out patient department for older people's services.

There are currently no plans to refurbish dormant wards to increase the number of non acute hospital beds for older people in South Tyrone Hospital.

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many cases of Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder are currently diagnosed in (i) Fermanagh; and (ii) South Tyrone. (AQW 135/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the format requested.

Swine Flu

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the procedure for swine flu testing; and to clarify if testing of Northern Ireland cases is carried out locally. (AQW 136/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Testing is carried out locally at the Regional Virus Laboratory, Belfast Health and Social Care Trust.

Testing for the influenza A (H1N1) virus which causes swine flu is carried out by taking a swab from the patient's nose and throat. The swab is then sent to the Regional Virus Laboratory for testing.

Initially swine flu tests were only available at the Public Health Laboratory Service in Colindale, North London. However, testing was then rolled out to regional laboratories across the UK and the Regional Virus Laboratory in Belfast began testing for swine flu when the necessary validation data was determined on 8 June 2009. This ensures a prompt and responsive local service.

Surgical Site Infections

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many surgical site infections occurred in the orthopaedic wards at Altnagelvin Hospital in the last 5 years. (AQW 140/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: For the period 1 January 2004 to 31 December 2008, 42 Surgical Site Infections resulting from 4321 documented orthopaedic procedures were reported by Altnagelvin Area Hospital to the Healthcare Infection Surveillance Centre (HISC).

Staff Grade Doctors

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to address the shortage of staff grade doctors treating (i) cardiology; (ii) older people; and (iii) respiratory conditions at Causeway Hospital. (AQW 142/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I can confirm that the Northern Trust have arrangements in place to ensure that there is proper medical cover of cardiology, older people and respiratory services. There is no evidence of any vacancies in Cardiology, Older people or Respiratory conditions within Causeway Hospital.

Recruitment is the responsibility of trusts. My Department has however invested year on year in additional training grade doctors to meet the HSC's demand for career grade doctors of all types. The number of doctors in the training grades has increased from 1421 in 2001 to 1752 in 2008, an increase of 23%, with a view to meeting these and other service demands.

Agenda for Change

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his Department's implementation of the Agenda for Change pay structure in relation to ambulance workers. (AQW 165/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Agenda for Change agreement is being implemented by Health and Social Care employers in partnership with local Trade Unions. The Northern Ireland Ambulance Trust is working towards resolving the outstanding implementation issues in line with the AfC Joint Working Group's principles and protocols. This includes processing 8 grading review applications covering 16 ambulance staff and undertaking full job evaluation for Emergency Medical Technicians, Paramedics and Rapid Response Paramedics. All parties are due to meet on 27 November to sign-off the Job Evaluation questionnaires and providing agreement is reached on that date the job evaluation process will move to the next stage.

Fire Service/Health Service Vehicles

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of recorded incidents of (a) theft; and (b) vandalism against Fire Service and Health Service vehicles in each of the last 5 years and; (ii) the total costs incurred by his Department in respect of these incidents. (AQW 168/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is shown in the tables. The information shown in tables (c) shows the total cost for theft and vandalism for Health service Vehicles as the information is not recorded separately. Table (c) does not include details relating to the Northern Trust, as the information is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

(A) THEFT FROM NI FIRE & RESCUE SERVICE VEHICLES

| Year | Number of Incidents | Cost |
|---------|---------------------|----------|
| 2004/05 | Nil | - |
| 2005/06 | Nil | - |

| 2007/08 | 8 | 36 | £10,200 |
| 2008/09 | 3 | 14 | £22,344 |
| Total | 16 | 102 | £88,219 |

Swine Flu

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people diagnosed with swine flu have not been treated with Tamiflu tablets. (AQW 169/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

Health and Social Care Trust: Efficiency Plans

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has approved the five Health and Social Care Trusts' efficiency plans. (AQW 170/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department has approved the final proposals presented by Southern, Western, Belfast and South Eastern HSC Trusts, except in the case of Belfast Trust's Victoria Day Centre, with regard to which discussions are still ongoing.

Northern HSC Trust proposals are still under consideration.

Ambulance Trust: Efficiency Plan

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has approved the Ambulance Trust's efficiency plan. (AQW 171/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department has approved the NI Ambulance Service efficiency proposals, with amendments, and the outcome of these decisions have been publicly announced.

Swine Flu

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if cases of swine flu are only recorded if they receive Tamiflu. (AQW 172/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Cases of swine flu are recorded as confirmed once the laboratory test is found to be positive. Although all suspected cases of swine flu were tested in the early stages of the outbreak (the containment phase), not all suspected cases undergo testing as the outbreak develops. Therefore the number of confirmed cases ceases to be a useful way to estimate the actual number of cases.

Since Northern Ireland moved to the treatment phase on 2 July, the numbers of cases of swine flu are estimated from consultations for flu and flu like illness recorded by a sample of GP practices across Northern Ireland known as Sentinel GP practices. Consultations in Out of Hours centres are also included.

The number of courses of Tamiflu and Relenza is recorded on a daily basis, but not all patients receive treatment with antivirals.

Sexual Abuse Allegations: Termonbacca, Londonderry

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to outline the child health issues arising from the allegations of sexual abuse in Termonbacca, Londonderry; and (ii) how he intends to investigate the child health issues associated with those allegations. (AQW 174/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Within Northern Ireland, the statutory framework requires that where allegations of child abuse come to light these must be reported immediately to PSNI and Social Services for investigation. I would encourage anyone who has any information regarding any allegations of child abuse to report these immediately to the statutory authorities for investigation so that perpetrators can be brought before the courts where this is appropriate.

Regulation, inspection and provision here have been strengthened significantly over many years. Since the public inquiry by Judge Hughes in 1985 into abuse at the Kincora Boys' Home we have continuously strengthened arrangements for vulnerable children. We established an independent Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority with statutory responsibility and powers to inspect services. The Northern Ireland Social Care Council, the independent public regulatory body for the social care workforce in Northern Ireland, is dedicated to improving and regulating standards of training and practice for social care workers.

Under current legislative procedures in Northern Ireland individuals who wish to work in a paid or unpaid capacity with children in a regulated position are subject to pre-employment vetting procedures. Information regarding individuals who have harmed a child or placed a child at risk of harm will be considered with a view to placing that individual on a disqualification list thereby preventing them from working with children in the future. Individuals placed on disqualification lists have the right of appeal to the independent Care Tribunal.

The introduction of new Safeguarding Vulnerable Groups legislation next month will further strengthen protection for children and vulnerable adults in workplace situations. These new safeguarding arrangements will help to meet Government's commitment to increasing public protection by significantly extending the range of activities and workplaces from which individuals may be barred from working with children and vulnerable adults. Consequently, many more individuals than at present who may pose a risk to children or vulnerable adults can be removed from the workplace.

My Department also intends to bring forward legislation next year to establish a regional, independently-chaired Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland. The Board will ultimately replace the non-statutory Area Child Protection Committees and will have a duty to make arrangements to safeguard the welfare of children and young people. There will be a duty for relevant agencies to make arrangements to safeguard and promote the welfare of children and to co-operate to improve the well being of children. This measure will strengthen further safeguarding arrangements within Northern Ireland.

Acute Hospital in Enniskillen

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (i) the current stage of development of the new acute hospital in Enniskillen; (ii) if it is on schedule for completion in 2012; (iii) if it is still on budget; and (iv) whether any additional costs have been incurred. (AQW 177/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Financial close for the South West Acute Hospital was achieved on 20 May 2009. Northern Ireland Health Group commenced work on site immediately in order to achieve the 2012 deadline. The general construction programme is on schedule with work currently focusing on the sub-structure works. The total capital construction costs for the project remains at £270 million with no additional costs incurred on this project. The project will be managed within the contract sum.

Freedom of Information Act

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department is taking to improve compliance with section 10 of the Freedom of Information Act. (AQW 181/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The actions taken by my Department to improve compliance with section 10 of the Freedom of Information Act include the use of an electronic tracking system to log, track and issue reminders for each request, the allocation of each request to a trained Local Information Manager and the regular monitoring of performance, including scrutiny by the Departmental Board.

Insulin Pumps

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the funding currently provided in relation to the provision of insulin pumps in each Health and Social Care Trust area. (AQW 185/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

On 25 June 2009, my Department endorsed National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence Technology Appraisal No 151 on insulin pump therapy as applicable to Northern Ireland. The Health and Social Care Board and Trusts are currently developing plans to facilitate implementation of this guidance.

Type 1 Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, as a whole number and a percentage, how many people with Type 1 diabetes in each Health and Social Care Trust area are currently on insulin pump therapy. (AQW 186/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available centrally.

Sexual Abuse Allegations: St Patrick's Home

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to outline the child health issues arising from the allegations of sexual abuse in St Patrick's home on the Glen Road, Belfast; and (ii) how he intends to investigate the child health issues associated with those allegations. (AQW 189/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Within Northern Ireland, the statutory framework requires that where allegations of child abuse come to light these must be reported immediately to PSNI and Social Services for investigation. I would encourage anyone who has any information regarding any allegations of child abuse to report these immediately to the statutory authorities for investigation so that perpetrators can be brought before the courts where this is appropriate.

Regulation, inspection and provision here have been strengthened significantly over many years. Since the public inquiry by Judge Hughes in 1985 into abuse at the Kincora Boys' Home we have continuously strengthened arrangements for vulnerable children. We established an independent Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority with statutory responsibility and powers to inspect services. The Northern Ireland Social Care Council, the independent public regulatory body for the social care workforce in Northern Ireland, is dedicated to improving and regulating standards of training and practice for social care workers.

Under current legislative procedures in Northern Ireland individuals who wish to work in a paid or unpaid capacity with children in a regulated position are subject to pre-employment vetting procedures. Information regarding individuals who have harmed a child or placed a child at risk of harm will be considered with a view to placing that individual on a disqualification list thereby preventing them from working with children in the future. Individuals placed on disqualification lists have the right of appeal to the independent Care Tribunal.

The introduction of new Safeguarding Vulnerable Groups legislation next month will further strengthen protection for children and vulnerable adults in workplace situations. These new safeguarding arrangements will help to meet Government's commitment to increasing public protection by significantly extending the range of activities and workplaces from which individuals may be barred from working with children and vulnerable adults. Consequently, many more individuals than at present who may pose a risk to children or vulnerable adults can be removed from the workplace.

My Department also intends to bring forward legislation next year to establish a regional, independently-chaired Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland. The Board will ultimately replace the non-statutory Area Child Protection Committees and will have a duty to make arrangements to safeguard the welfare of children and young people. There will be a duty for relevant agencies to make arrangements to safeguard and promote the welfare of children and to co-operate to improve the well being of children. This measure will strengthen further safeguarding arrangements within Northern Ireland.

Alcohol and Drug Awareness Programmes

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding is given to the community and voluntary sectors for alcohol and drug awareness programmes. (AQW 213/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Through my Department's New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs, £3,159,665 has been allocated in 2009/2010 via the Public Health Agency to a range of community and voluntary sector organisations across Northern Ireland to raise awareness, and to prevent and address alcohol and drug related harm.

It is anticipated that this will increase to £3,712,819 in 2010/11.

Missed Appointments

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much public money was lost through (i) missed GP appointments; and (ii) missed hospital appointments in the past twelve months. (AQW 215/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The cost of (i) missed GP appointments and (ii) missed hospital appointments is not available centrally.

Swine Flu

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many cases of Swine Flu have been recorded in east Belfast. (AQW 228/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

Blood Donation

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total number of (i) whole blood donations; (ii) platelet donations which the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service has received in each of the last 5 years; and (iii) the number of those who became repeat donors. (AQW 231/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: (i) and (ii)

| Year | Whole blood | Platelets |
|---------|-------------|-----------|
| 2004/05 | 67,384 | 4,049 |
| 2005/06 | 64,338 | 3,716 |
| 2006/07 | 61,132 | 3,483 |
| 2007/08 | 57,872 | 3,905 |
| 2008/09 | 57,388 | 3,854 |

(iii) whole blood donations in any year are donated by donors at an average frequency of around 1.6 donations per donor per year (based on some donors donating up to three times per year, and some donors only once).

Blood Donation

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the total number of people registered to give blood in Northern Ireland; and (ii) the number of registered donors who are (a) active; and (b) lapsed or inactive. (AQW 232/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

- (i) Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service introduced a new IT system in 1996, and almost 400,000 people have been enrolled on this register (including those transferred from the legacy computer system).
- (ii)
 - (a) The current active donor panel is in excess of 64,000 - approximately 6% of the eligible population
 - (b) A simple definition of a lapsed donor is a person who has not donated for two years. However, a more useful indicator of the change to the database is the percentage of donors who become inactive each year - which can be as much as 15% in a year. Hence the constant need for new donors i.e. in the region of 8,000 to 10,000 each year.

Blood Donation

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much was spent advertising and promoting blood donation in each of the last five years. (AQW 233/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

| Year | Advertising spend (£'000) |
|---------|---------------------------|
| 2004/05 | 158 |
| 2005/06 | 119 |
| 2006/07 | 127 |
| 2007/08 | 110 |
| 2008/09 | 119 |

Blood Stock and Reserves

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the current status of blood stock and reserves in Northern Ireland. (AQW 234/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: On 11 September Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service held just over nine days stock of blood, against a 'satisfactory' target of four days. However, stocks of one specific group O Rhesus negative were at just over 6 days (due to the higher usage of this universal blood group).

It should be noted that blood stocks have been increased in the light of current pandemic 'flu planning.

NI Fire Service

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has approved the NI Fire Service efficiency plans. (AQW 244/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: NI Fire Service efficiency proposals are currently being finalised and will then be sent to me for my approval.

Nexium (esomeprazole)/Lyrica (pregabalin)/Tramacet

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if (i) Nexium (esomeprazole); (ii) Lyrica (pregabalin); and (iii) Tramacet have been prescribed by GPs, consultants or hospitals. (AQW 347/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information is not available centrally in respect of drugs prescribed by consultants and hospitals; however I can confirm that each of the three drugs Nexium (esomeprazole); Lyrica (pregabalin); and Tramacet were prescribed by GPs during 2008.

Nexium (esomeprazole)/Lyrica (pregabalin)/Tramacet

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the guidelines issued to GPs, consultants and hospitals in relation to prescribing (i) Nexium (esomeprazole); (ii) Lyrica (pregabalin); and (iii) Tramacet. (AQW 393/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Guidance on prescribing for specific conditions is regularly disseminated to the Health and Social Care sector and reflects an evidence-based approach to care as developed by the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE), other national bodies and regional Northern Ireland groups such as the Guidelines and Audit Implementation Network (GAIN).

In respect of Nexium (esomeprazole), the most recent guidance on the medicines used to treat symptomatic reflux and / or dyspepsia were issued by DHSSPS in March 2007. This recommended the use of Nexium® (esomeprazole) as an option if initial treatment of the condition with a cost-effective generic medicine had not achieved an adequate response. This guidance is in line with advice issued by NICE in 2004.

The Clinical Resources Efficiency Support Team (CREST) issued guidance dealing with the management of neuropathic pain in February 2008. This guidance lists Lyrica® as a treatment option for patients who develop side-effects with other more cost-effective drugs.

No specific prescribing guidance has been issued by the Department on the use Tramacet®.

Guidance issued to the Health and Social Care sector does not override or replace the individual responsibility of health professionals to make appropriate decisions in the circumstances of their individual patients, in consultation with the patient and/or guardian or carer.

Foyle Epilepsy Action

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline what action he intends to take following his recent meeting with representatives of Foyle Epilepsy Action. (AQW 504/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: At the meeting on Tuesday 15 September a number of issues were raised and I have asked Departmental Officials to take these forward with the relevant Health and Social Care bodies, Public Health Agency and other relevant Departments.

Extracorporeal Membrane Oxygenation Therapy

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) what provision is in place for patients suffering from swine flu and associated complications who require Extracorporeal Membrane Oxygenation therapy; and (ii) what is the protocol involved. (AQW 535/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: There are only five dedicated adult Extracorporeal Membrane Oxygenation (ECMO) beds in Britain, located at Glenfield Hospital in Leicester. ECMO facilities for children are located at the Freeman Hospital, Newcastle, the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, Glasgow; and Great Ormond Street Hospital, London.

If an individual clinician recommended ECMO for a patient, it would be considered on a case by case basis by the Health and Social Care Board for an extra-contractual referral to a centre providing this therapy. However, during the peak of a surge of pandemic influenza, it is likely that there would be limited availability.

Extracorporeal Membrane Oxygenation therapy (ECMO) is only one of a number of treatments for respiratory failure. Robust clinical evidence to support the use of ECMO is limited and the treatment is not without considerable risks.

In Northern Ireland, patients who require ventilatory support are cared for in intensive care units. Plans are in place to expand the provision of critical care to more than double capacity through the purchase of an additional 47 ventilators for adults and 38 ventilators for children.

Mid-Ulster Hospital

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail all plans for changes, or anticipated dates for announcement of changes, to services at the Mid Ulster Hospital, Magherafelt, with particular reference to the Accident and Emergency Unit. (AQW 559/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Northern Trust has recently forwarded proposals for the reform of acute service provision across the Trust area. I am currently considering those proposals and expect to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Mid-Ulster Hospital

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his recent visit to the Mid-Ulster Hospital. (AQW 683/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Northern Trust recently forwarded for my consideration proposals for the reform of acute services within its area. To help inform my decision on these proposals I took the opportunity to visit the Mid-Ulster hospital on 21 September and to see for myself the facilities and newly refurbished areas at the hospital.

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

A56 Newry to Tandragee Road

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development if there are any plans to improve or upgrade the A56 Newry to Tandragee Road following the recent fatal accidents on this road. (AQW 48/10)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): It is assumed that the question relates to the stretch of the A27 road between Newry and Tandragee.

I am pleased to advise you that my Department's Roads Service proposes to carry out a number of road improvement schemes, over the next few years, which will contribute to improving road safety on this stretch of the A27, namely:-

- a right turn lane at Terryhoogan Road;
- a right turn lane at Mullahead Road;
- an improvement to the forward visibility at Blacks Lane; and
- road link to the A28 as part of the A1 upgrade which is currently ongoing.

Pay and Display Machines

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the (i) number; and (ii) location of pay and display machines in the East Antrim constituency. (AQW 50/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that there are 20 pay and display machines used in Roads Service car parks in the East Antrim Constituency. Their locations and the number at each car park are shown in the table below:

| Carrickfergus | |
|----------------------|-----------------|
| Location | No. of machines |
| High Street | 2 |
| Joymount Street | 2 |
| Lancasterian Street | 3 |
| St Brides | 4 |
| Larne | |
| Location | No. of machines |
| Agnew Street | 2 |
| Circular Road West | 2 |
| Fairhill | 1 |
| Narrowgauge Road | 4 |

Pay and Display Machines

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) how many pay and display machines have been broken in the East Antrim constituency, in the last year; and (ii) for how long each machine was broken. (AQW 51/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that during the period from 1 September 2008 to 31 August 2009, each one of the 20 machines in the East Antrim Constituency experienced at least one fault that rendered it out of order. A total of 362 machine faults were reported in the last year.

I am also advised that the average total length of time that each machine was not operational, as a result of these faults, was 5.6 days. This equates to approximately 1.8% of the total working time of the machines.

Flags on Lampposts

Dr Farry asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the number and nature of requests that have been made by the Roads Service to the Police for the names and addresses of those responsible for erecting flags on lampposts to enable enforcement action to be taken. (AQW 52/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that it has not made any requests to the PSNI for the names and addresses of those responsible for erecting flags on Roads Service lampposts.

Vesting of Properties

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) all properties on the A2 Greenisland widening scheme that have been vested to date; and (ii) what budget has been set aside for the vesting of properties during 2009/10 and 2010/11. (AQW 76/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that, to date, no properties have been vested as part of the A2 Greenisland widening scheme. However, over the last few years a number of houses were acquired under blight legislation. This legislation obliges Roads Service to acquire properties, if the presence of a protection line for a road scheme has led to the owner being unable to sell the property at market value. So far Roads Service has acquired 23 properties, with a total cost of approximately £9 million.

I can also advise that no budget has been identified at this time for the vesting of properties during 2009/10 and 2010/11. Further applications under blight legislation will of course be addressed.

Roads Service will continue to bid, through the normal process, to obtain funding to allow the vesting of land and construction to proceed at the earliest opportunity.

A1/Dromore Road Flyover, Banbridge

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development why, four months after completion, the A1/Dromore Road flyover, Banbridge, is still not fully operational. (AQW 78/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The works to provide a new flyover at the Dromore Road junction on the A1 at Banbridge are part of Package 2 of my Department's Roads Service's Design, Build, Finance and Operate programme. Roads Service has advised that the date specified in the contract for the completion of the new flyover is December 2009.

However, once the construction works on the flyover were substantially completed, ahead of schedule, traffic was able to travel one-way across the new bridge from the southbound carriageway to Dromore Road. While the new road may have appeared to be ready for opening, a Road Safety Audit, carried out by an independent Road Safety Auditor appointed by the Contractor, highlighted a number of issues which needed to be addressed. This is normal procedure on such contracts. At the same time, the Contractor's own Quality Inspectors conducted a survey to identify works that were not fully completed, or where defects needed to be rectified. While I am advised that none of the issues identified were matters of concern, they did need to be attended to, prior to fully opening the flyover to traffic.

Activities have, therefore, been continuing on site to address the issues raised by both the independent Road Safety Auditor and the Contractor's Quality Inspection team. In the interest of safety, of both the travelling public and the workforce on site, traffic management measures have remained in place on the flyover.

I am pleased to be able to now confirm that the Dromore Road junction on the A1 at Banbridge was fully opened to all traffic on Monday 14 September 2009.

Water/Storm Drainage Infrastructure

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of (i) Northern Ireland Water infrastructure; and (ii) Roads Service storm drainage infrastructure, in the Belfast and surrounding area, with particular reference to performance on Saturday 29 August 2009. (AQW 79/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I am advised that there were only isolated reported incidences of flooding on 29 August 2009. Both Northern Ireland Water and Roads Service have reported that there were no major problems with the performance of their drainage systems on the subject date.

Primary Road Network Connections

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the report on primary road network connections around the Derry City area; and to indicate when it will be made public. (AQW 90/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service appointed consultants, Scott Wilson, to consider the strategic needs of the traffic around Derry City and it was previously anticipated that the report would be completed this summer.

However, due to the level of detail required, it is now anticipated that the report should be completed by the end of 2009.

A47 at Bo Island, Co Fermanagh

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline what improvement works his Department plans to carry out on the A47 at Bo Island, Co. Fermanagh over the next three years. (AQW 103/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that two significant resurfacing schemes on the A47 Boa Island Road are near completion. These schemes, located at The Commons near Belleek and on Boa Island near Ardshankil, have a combined value of some £200,000.

Over the next three years Roads Service plans to carry out further widening work on the A47 near Lusty Beg, as suitable fill material becomes available from other schemes. Resurfacing the widened section of road will, however, be subject to the availability of funding.

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DRD

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been spent by his Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 153/10)

The Minister for Regional Development:

(i) The expenditure incurred by my Department on private consultancy firms during the financial years 2004/05 to 2008/09 is set out in the table below.

DRD EXPENDITURE ON PRIVATE CONSULTANCY FIRMS

| | 2004/05 | 2005/06 | 2006/07 | 2007/08 | 2008/09 |
|-----------------|-------------------|-------------------|--------------------|-------------------|-----------------|
| Core Department | £2,178,062 | £1,372,423 | £5,076,850 | £1,081,710 | £248,299 |
| DRD Agencies | £5,261,687 | £7,240,114 | £10,861,783 | £757,368 | £533,145 |
| Total | £7,439,749 | £8,612,537 | £15,938,633 | £1,839,078 | £781,444 |

(ii) The expenditure incurred by my Department on external events organisers during the financial years 2004/05 to 2008/09 is set out in the table below.

DRD EXPENDITURE ON EVENTS ORGANISERS

| | 2004/05 | 2005/06 | 2006/07 | 2007/08 | 2008/09 |

Rapid Transport Division

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the progress of the Rapid Transport Division in carrying out detailed survey work on route options provided in the Rapid Transit strategic outline case. (AQW 175/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Rapid Transit Division have completed Traffic and Parking Surveys for all routes.

Topographical, Geotechnical, Deflectograph, and Land Acquisition Surveys are currently ongoing along the route options provided in the Strategic Outline Case.

Rapid Transport Scheme

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQO 2237/09, what action has been taken to solicit developer contributions to the Rapid Transport scheme. (AQW 176/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Rapid Transit Division has met with a number of key developers to discuss contributions. Initially it was envisaged that developer contributions would contribute significantly to the funding of the Rapid Transit project. However, this may be difficult to realise in the short term due to the current economic climate.

Rapid Transit Division is also being advised of planning applications on/adjacent to the routes which will enable them to seek contributions from new developments as part of planning conditions.

Rapid Transport Division

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the progress of the Rapid Transport Division in carrying out a market sounding exercise for the Rapid Transit scheme. (AQW 178/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Rapid Transit Division completed the Market Sounding Exercise and reported to me on 27 July 2009.

In summary, the report demonstrates that there is a high level of interest from operators in the design, operation and maintenance of the BRT system. The limited interest in its financing is due to the current market conditions, the current formative level of system design, and uncertainty in relation to legislative and operational risks.

Londonderry Line Passing Loop

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQO 664/09, for an update on the Londonderry line passing loop. (AQW 179/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: A detailed track capacity and Infrastructure Study of the line between Belfast and Derry has now been completed. The objective of the Study was to identify specifically the infrastructure upgrades necessary to support an hourly intercity train service between Derry and Belfast. The Study suggests that Ballykelly is not the preferred location for a passing loop on what is otherwise a single track railway. For the optimal hourly train service and technical reasons the passing loop needs to be located close to Derry. Translink are now advancing their detailed plans to determine the precise location for the passing loop and intend to incorporate this development into the much larger track relay and re-signalling project between Coleraine and Derry which is planned to run from 2011 to 2013. These decisions are subject to the outcome of the economic appraisal and will require the necessary statutory approval process.

NI Railways: Timetable

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what consultation was carried out with NI Railway passengers on the Londonderry Line before the new timetable was agreed. (AQW 222/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: NIR are formally obliged to consult with my department, under existing Public Service Obligations, in relation to changes in service levels (i.e. the number of trains per day) however, no changes in service levels are proposed on the Derry line.

Translink are in continuous consultation with customers through “Translink Feedback”. NIR have informed me that they have been advising customers from early 2009 that following line reconstruction in April to June 2009 that new train timetables would be introduced in September. No specific consultation in relation to detailed train times took place prior to the issue of timetables at stations on 8 September 2009.

Translink are also expected to pay regard to its Passenger’s Charter commitments, which require new timetables to be in the public domain a number of weeks prior to introduction. I am not convinced that adequate consultation took place in this case and these issues have been discussed with Translink.

NI Railways: Timetable

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration was given to passenger requirements when developing the new NI Railway timetable for the Londonderry line. (AQW 223/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have had changes made to the revised timetable initially proposed by NIR.

The first train will now arrive in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than at present and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR. However the revised timetable retains the proposal that will mean rail passengers from Derry and Coleraine will have reduced journey times to Belfast. This aspect was central to Translinks consideration of the proposals originally announced.

NI Railways: Working Time Directive

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline how the working time directive is applied to NI Railway drivers, conductors and signal staff. (AQW 225/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: NI Railways has informed me that the working patterns for train drivers, conductors and signals staff are covered by EU Working Time Directives and that they are in full compliance with same. In particular this is applied to minimum daily rest periods, minimum weekly rest periods, maximum weekly working hours and average weekly working hours. Working patterns are monitored on a regular basis.

A8 Road

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the A8 road, to outline (i) the process undertaken when dealing with landowners affected by the preferred route; and (ii) what level of compensation will be offered to landowners impacted by the preferred route. (AQW 236/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Firstly, in relation to the processes undertaken when dealing with landowners affected by the preferred route for the A8, my Department’s Roads Service has advised that, affected landowners were given the opportunity to discuss this scheme, by attending public exhibitions which were held in May 2008 and November 2008. At that time landowners were offered one to one meetings with Roads Service officials and the design consultants. These meetings gave an opportunity to explain the scheme options being considered and the likely impact they may have on landowners. In addition, over 600 people took the opportunity to view the preferred route and speak with officials, at the “Preferred Route Announcement” exhibition which was held on 5 and 6 August 2009.

It is considered that there are approximately 100 landowners likely to be affected by the preferred route and discussions are planned with these landowners, during the coming months, where the impact on landowners will be discussed and attempts made at identifying measures to mitigate this impact.

With regard to compensation, I can advise that landowners’ rights and interests are protected by legislation and the Department of Finance and Personnel’s, Land and Property Services, will act for the Department on these matters. They will evaluate the level of compensation, on an individual basis, in line with their published guidance on the assessment of compensation.

IT Systems: DRD

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) all new IT systems that were installed in his Department; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date, in the last five years. (AQW 261/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Over the past five years the Department for Regional Development has installed one new system - the Decriminalised Parking Enforcement (DPE) Penalty Charge Notice (PCN) Processing System.

The business case estimated the cost of the system (initial budget) at £2.76M over a contract period of 10 years. Based on the initial capital cost and monthly volume based service charges to date, the projected actual cost to 2016 (assuming no significant change in volumes) is £2.46M, i.e. £300k within budget.

The project had an estimated go-live date of October 2006, and the system did indeed go-live in October 2006.

In addition to this Departmental specific system, a number of common NICS systems were implemented within the Department during the past five years including Records Management HR Connect, and Account NI. Implementation of these systems was managed by the DFP.

Rail Level-crossing on the A76 in Lurgan

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development why he does not consider it a priority to address the issue of the rail level-crossing on the A76 in Lurgan, which is closed for over three hours each day, interrupting the town's main link to the M1 motorway, by providing uninterrupted vehicle access through an underpass or flyover. (AQW 265/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: As you are aware, a study was carried out, in September 2007, to assess the William Street crossing in Lurgan.

The report considered a number of engineering options including an overpass, an underpass and a tunnel. All the options proved to be very expensive, ranging from approximately £20 million to £250 million. None of the options performed well under economic appraisal, and all had significant environmental consequences for the William Street/Lough Road area of Lurgan.

Translink has advised me that there are three crossings on the section of railway line, within the vicinity of Lurgan town centre, and the timing of the relevant signals has been optimised to mitigate delays to road traffic. NIR's new timetables from 27 September 2009 will have no impact on existing road closure times at the railway crossing on the A76 in Lurgan.

Roads Maintenance

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development how much he is spending on roads maintenance per mile of road (i) on trunk roads; (ii) on motorways; (iii) on A class roads; and (iv) on B class roads. (AQW 266/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service do not maintain details of expenditure broken down by road class. However, when the structural maintenance expenditure for 2008/09 is assessed against the total number of miles of all classes of public roads, this equates to approximately £4,000 per mile of road.

Contingency Fund: DRD

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount of any contingency fund he retains within his departmental budget. (AQW 267/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My department's budget has been fully allocated across the Roads, Transport and Water and Sewerage programmes as set out on page 43 in the current Corporate and Business Plan (available on the DRD website at http://www.drdsn.gov.uk/drd_corporate_plan_2009-11_and_business_plan_2009-10.pdf). My department does not have a policy to withhold allocations to maintain a contingency fund.

During the year my department's focus is on managing risk through contingency plans on an ongoing basis across those allocations.

Roads Infrastructure

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to developer contribution to roads infrastructure, if there is any agreement or understanding in cases where the developer is another public body, that Roads Service will fund the cost of the development. (AQW 280/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The principle of developer contributions for roads and other infrastructure, as a result of new development, is well established in Planning Policy Statements (PPS) 3 (Access, Movement and Parking), and PPS 13 (Transportation and Land Use).

The principle applies equally to proposals coming forward from other public bodies, and there is no general agreement or understanding that Roads Service would fund infrastructure requirements identified in a Transport Assessment.

Translink

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he can confirm that all timetable changes being considered by Translink in the future will be subject to a passenger consultation, to ensure that passengers have a direct input into service improvement and development. (AQW 313/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Translink Passenger's Charter has been drawn up in agreement with DRD and the Consumer Council. Within this Charter Translink are committed to tell passengers about timetable changes 4 weeks before the new timetable applies. This can reduce to 2 weeks when essential engineering work is the reason for the timetable change.

Timetable changes are an operational matter and are the responsibility of Translink. There is no specific requirement for Translink to consult on timetable changes but I would expect Translink to consult at a local level with customers for major changes.

Timetable development is a complex matter requiring the balancing of various stakeholder interests. In addition, to best, meeting as many customers' needs as possible, Translink need to balance the policy aims of government, operational effectiveness and efficiencies.

Under the Transport Act 1967 if sufficient numbers of customers complain to me about rail services I can review the position and if necessary ask Translink to change their proposals. This is not my preferred position and can be avoided, in my view, if local consultations and communications take place. Clearly I also need to take account of the legal requirement for Translink to work to a commercial remit.

I have advised Translink that they need to consider carefully the impacts of potential timetable changes and to reconsider their methods for consulting locally with customers and political representatives. We also need to recognize that not all stakeholders will be fully satisfied with any existing or new timetable. Translink have also offered to provide my department with proposed major timetable changes 2 weeks prior to publication of the proposal. However we need to be careful about ensuring that Translink are allowed to operate with some degree of operational autonomy and to recognize the commercial remit the company operates under.

NI Railways: Timetable

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will seek the input of local elected representatives on future timetable changes proposed by NI Railways. (AQW 316/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Timetable changes are an operational matter and are the responsibility of Translink. There is no specific requirement for Translink to consult on timetable changes but I would expect, for major changes, Translink to consult at a local level both with customers and elected representatives.

I have advised Translink that they need to consider carefully the impacts of potential timetable changes and to reconsider their methods for consulting locally with customers and political representatives. Translink have also offered to provide my department with proposed timetable changes 2 weeks prior to publication of proposed timetable changes. I also need to be careful about ensuring that Translink are allowed to operate with some degree of operational autonomy and to recognise their commercial remit.

NI Railways: Timetable

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the approval process for changes to NI Railways timetables. (AQW 321/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Translink Passenger's Charter has been drawn up in agreement with DRD and the Consumer Council. Within this Charter, Translink are committed to tell passengers about timetable changes 4 weeks before the new timetable applies. This can reduce to 2 weeks when essential engineering work is the reason for the timetable change.

There is no formal agreed process for my department to approve bus or rail timetables. Timetable changes are an operational matter and are the responsibility of Translink. I do expect Translink to consult at a local level with customers and to discuss major changes with my department. Under the Transport Act 1967 if sufficient numbers of customers complain to myself about rail services I can review the position and if necessary ask Translink to change their proposals. This is not my preferred position and can be avoided, in my view, if local consultations and communications take place. Clearly I also need to take account of the legal requirement for Translink to work to a commercial remit.

It is the case that passengers can complain about Translink services through the "feedback" website and Translink are committed, within the Passenger's Charter, to investigate all complaints thoroughly and fairly.

I have advised Translink that they need to consider carefully the impacts of potential timetable changes and to reconsider their methods for consulting locally with customers and political representatives. Translink have also offered to provide my department with proposed major timetable changes 2 weeks prior to publication of the proposal. Under existing Public Service Obligation arrangement a schedule of rail services detailing the number of train services exists. Changes to this schedule must be agreed with my department in light of available resources. We need also to be careful about ensuring that Translink are allowed to operate with some degree of operational autonomy and to recognise the commercial remit.

Tourist Signage

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he has taken to review departmental policy on the use of 'brown' directional signs to assist users of hotels and guesthouses, particularly in rural areas. (AQW 379/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service facilitates the provision of white on brown tourist traffic signs using its policy "Tourist Signing in Northern Ireland". The policy, published in April 2004, was jointly developed and agreed with the NI Tourist Board (NITB) and provides a framework for the provision of tourist signing, in a consistent and equitable manner.

I have recently asked Roads Service to examine the policy, to establish if there is potential for an enhancement that would allow additional rural businesses to be accommodated. As deliberations are just underway, it is too early to say what changes are possible.

Roads Service has to be mindful of the impact that a proliferation of signing could have on the rural landscape and road safety, and any change will have to be done in a controlled way.

Passing Loop Between Derry and Coleraine

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the provision of a passing loop between Derry and Coleraine. (AQW 399/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: A detailed track capacity and Infrastructure Study of the line between Belfast and Derry has now been completed. The objective of the Study was to identify specifically the infrastructure upgrades necessary to support an hourly intercity train service between Derry and Belfast. The Study suggests that Ballykelly is not the preferred location for a passing loop on what is otherwise a single track railway. For the optimal hourly train service and technical reasons the passing loop needs to be located close to Derry. Translink are now advancing their detailed plans to determine the precise location for the passing loop and intend to incorporate this development into the much larger track relay and re-signalling project between Coleraine and Derry which is planned to run from 2011 to 2013. These decisions are subject to the outcome of the economic appraisal and will require the necessary statutory approval process.

NI Railways: Timetable

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development why the 21.20 train from Belfast to Londonderry on Saturday and Sunday evenings and the 21.20 from Londonderry to Belfast on Sunday evenings have been completely removed from the NI Railway timetable. (AQW 402/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The current 2120 hours Saturday night train from Belfast to Derry has been rescheduled to depart Great Victoria Street Station at 2110 hours and Belfast Central at 2120 hours. It will arrive into Derry at 2323 hours, some 17 minutes earlier than the current timetable.

The current 2120 hours Sunday night train from Belfast to Derry had been rescheduled to 2143 hours departure but with the train terminating in Coleraine. Following discussions with Translink this planned change has now been withdrawn and the rescheduled service will terminate in Derry.

With respect to Sunday night Derry to Belfast trains, there is no current 2120 hours train to Belfast. Currently the last train to Belfast departs Derry at 1935 hours. This will become a 1925 hours departure in the new timetable proposals.

The new weekend timetables between Derry and Belfast have been recast to provide regular clockface departures throughout the day – that is a train every two hours on Saturdays and every three hours on Sundays. Translink experience to date is that by providing regularity and consistency of timetables, as far as possible, that this is generally welcomed by passengers and that it generates additional ridership. It is also worth pointing out that the new timetables at weekends will deliver reduced journey times.

Roads Service: Maintenance Engineers

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development why Roads Service has reduced the number of maintenance section engineers from 24 to 20. (AQW 437/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Roads Service has not reduced the number of maintenance section engineers from 24 to 20. At present, two of the 24 Section Engineer posts are unfilled.

Roads Service: Maintenance Engineers

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development what areas are affected by the recent decision by Roads Service to reduce the number of maintenance section engineers from 24 to 20. (AQW 438/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 437/10.

Direct Labour Operational Depots

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail any proposed closures of the direct labour operational depots of Roads Service. (AQW 443/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: In order to meet the Executive's Budget 2008 administrative efficiency savings my Department's Roads Service is reviewing its administration costs, with a view to identifying potential savings.

Within Roads Service, the first stage of a Depot Review is almost complete. As yet, no final decision has been made, however, consideration is being given to closing three Depots and moving associated staff to neighbouring depots.

Roads Service has invited the Trade Union Side to enter into discussions about this matter.

Steria Contract

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQO 30/10, in relation to the termination of the Steria contract, to list (i) the functions transferred; and (ii) the service provider, to which the functions were transferred. (AQW 487/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that following the termination of the Steria contract, functions relating to ICT support and help desk were transferred to Northgate Ltd and the provision of the back office functions of the Customer Service Centre were transferred to Echo Managed Services Ltd.

In addition, the management of a number of small contracts which were under the control of Steria transferred either to NIW or Echo Managed Services Ltd.

NI Railways: Timetable

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost to the public purse of Translink having to withdraw the planned revised NI Railway timetable for the Londonderry line last week. (AQW 503/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink have advised me that they incurred £811.00 expenditure for the printing of 30,000 timetables, which have now been withdrawn, for the Derry line rail service.

Burrenbridge/Ballyhafry Road Junction, Castlewellan

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development when the Burrenbridge/ Ballyhafry Road junction, Castlewellan, will be repaired. (AQW 514/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that no repairs are considered necessary to the Burrenbridge Road / Ballyhafry Road Junction. However, a section of the Burrenbridge Road, near to the Ballyhafry Road, was damaged recently, as a result of a retaining wall collapse. A contractor has been appointed to carry out repairs, and it is anticipated that this work should be completed by 15 October 2009.

Roadside Trees

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to erect warning signs in areas where roadside trees act as a hazard. (AQW 518/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I can advise that, where trees are considered to pose a high risk hazard to road users or they have been found to be the primary cause of a serious collision, they are invariably removed, if on Roads Service owned land, or protection measures are installed.

I can also advise that Roads Service is jointly working with the national road authorities of Scotland, Wales and the South to develop a Road Protection Scoring system, using the EuroRAP protocols, which will assess the level of protection a road offers to vehicle occupants in the event of a collision. One of the elements that the system will assess is the likely outcome of a run-off collision with roadside hazards, such as trees. The information provided will be used by Roads Service to consider what mitigating measures are necessary to improve the road safety performance of each route.

NI Water: Pricing Arrangements

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost associated with a connection to an existing water main for a new dwelling in the countryside; and to explain the pricing arrangements adopted by NI Water. (AQW 542/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the charges for connecting a property to the watermain are detailed in its Scheme of Charges for 2009/10, which is available on its website at www.niwater.com. The cost of a connection will depend on the circumstances of each case, but the charge for a full standard water connection in a public area/roadway is £882. Where a connection is in private lands and the customer can undertake all excavation and reinstatement works at their own expense, the cost of a standard connection is £216.

Roads Surveys in Toome and Castledawson

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development if there have been any surveys done in Toome and Castledawson in the last five years, since the opening of the bypasses, to determine if there has been any change in patterns of business following the new road layout being established. (AQW 558/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that no surveys of this nature have been carried out in the last five years, and that it has no plans to carry out such surveys in the future.

Belfast Harbour Commission Land

Ms Ni Chuilín asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to Belfast Harbour Commission land, to detail (i) how much land it has; (ii) if any land has been transferred or sold to other companies, if so, (a) will any land be used for regeneration; and (b) what type of regeneration will be developed. (AQW 572/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The total area of land owned by Belfast Harbour Commissioners is 1955 acres. Since 1847 the Belfast Harbour Commissioners have granted a total of 1438 acres on various leases. Of this figure, 377 acres may be described as regeneration land on which commercial office, warehousing, local service retail, leisure and residential development has either taken place, is being developed, or is proposed.

Road Building and Improvement Schemes

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) all road building and improvement schemes undertaken by his Department; (ii) the estimated and actual costs of each scheme; and (iii) the current stage of each scheme, in each constituency, since 2007. (AQW 624/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service does not hold information on schemes on a constituency basis. However, information on schemes completed and proposed schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address: www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Roads Service is currently compiling their Autumn Reports to Councils.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Social Housing Waiting List

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the current religious breakdown of the applicants on the social housing waiting list. (AQW 1/10)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): The table shows the social housing waiting list by religious background at 1 June 2009.

SOCIAL HOUSING WAITING LIST BY RELIGIOUS BACKGROUND
(AT 1 JUNE 2009)

| Religion | Number of position 1 applicants | Percentage |
|--------------|---------------------------------|-------------|
| Catholic | 14671 | 38.4% |
| Other | 3395 | 8.9% |
| Protestant | 15260 | 39.9% |
| Undisclosed | 4901 | 12.8% |
| Total | 38227 | 100% |

Notes

- The religious composition of households is based on 'self reported' answers to the question held in the General Housing Application Form. The religion of the Position 1 individual (i.e. the person appearing first on the General Housing Application Form) in the household is assumed as a proxy for the religion of all individuals in the household.
- The Housing Executive is currently unable to identify 'mixed' religion households although we are aware that a number of households currently described as 'Roman Catholic' or 'Protestant' would clearly fall into a 'Mixed' category.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive: Discretionary Grants

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development what consideration was given to the impact on the construction sector of the decision to stop NIHE discretionary grants. (AQW 2/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Obviously the decision to suspend grants, except where obligations and commitments already existed, was going to impact on the construction sector. However the total spend on grants this year is likely to be of the order of £35.5 million against £40.5 million the previous year. We have also been managing the newbuild programme to ensure that more houses are built on land we already own-thus transferring funding from land purchase to pure construction activity.

You will aware that, due to the downturn in land and house sales, there is a £100 million shortfall in the Housing Budget for 2009/10 which will impact on all spending programmes. My priority is to protect vulnerable households and I have therefore protected the budgets for:

- Warm Homes – to help households facing fuel poverty;
- Supporting People – to help people live independently in the community rather than in institutions; and
- the newbuild programme – to help those in acute housing stress and the homeless.

Warm Homes Scheme

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many referrals and applications have been received since the inception of the new Warm Homes Scheme contracts; and (ii) how many schemes have been enacted. (AQW 3/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Since the new Warm Homes Scheme commenced on 1 July 2009, 2,092 new applications have been received. Five hundred applications have been approved and allocated to contractors for installation of measures to improve the energy efficiency of the homes. There are a further 265 applications which have been approved and the work will to be allocated to a contractor in the next few days. I have set a Public Service Agreement target to implement energy efficiency measures in 10,000 households in 2009/2010 and I expect this target to be met.

Warm Homes Scheme

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how many Warm Homes Scheme installations have been made in each year of the lifetime of the Scheme, including the 2009 year to date. (AQW 4/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Over 71,000 homes have been made more energy efficient by the Warm Homes Scheme Since its inception in 2001. Two new scheme managers were appointed in July 2009. The number of homes assisted for each complete year of the scheme is shown in the table below. To date, 500 energy efficiency measures have been installed in 379 households during the financial year 2009/10. The Public Service Agreement target is to implement energy efficiency measures in 10,000 households and I fully expect that target to be met.

| Year | Households Assisted |
|--------------|---------------------|
| 2001-02 | 3,826 |
| 2002-03 | 7,484 |
| 2003-04 | 7,124 |
| 2004-05 | 8,557 |
| 2005-06 | 10,266 |
| 2006-07 | 11,687 |
| 2007-08 | 11,279 |
| 2008-09 | 10,927 |
| 2009-10 | 379 |
| Total | 71,529 |

Decent Homes Standard

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how many homes owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive meet the Decent Homes standard in terms of energy; and how many do not. (AQW 59/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Of the 90,272 Housing Executive dwellings, 12,300 do not currently meet the Decent Homes standard for thermal comfort. Through its programmes of planned improvement and heating replacement schemes the Housing Executive has reduced this figure from 55,970 in 2001.

Natural Gas

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many homes are owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; (ii) how many of these are in areas served by natural gas; and (iii) how many have converted to natural gas. (AQW 60/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive stock levels currently stand at 90,279 dwellings across Northern Ireland. The Housing Executive does not hold details about which areas are served by natural gas. Currently 29,161 Housing Executive properties have been converted to natural gas heating.

Energy Efficiency Measures

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how many Northern Ireland Housing Executive owned homes have had energy efficiency measures installed in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 61/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Energy efficiency improvements were carried out by the Housing Executive on its properties as follows:-

|---------|-------|
| 2004/05 | 10476 |
|---------|-------|

|---------|-------|
| 2005/06 | 10978 |
| 2006/07 | 8606 |
| 2007/08 | 5394 |
| 2008/09 | 2547 |

Heating Systems

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how many homes owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have (i) oil fired; and (ii) economy 7 heating systems. (AQW 62/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive currently has 36,879 dwellings with oil heating and 11,339 dwellings with Economy 7 heating systems.

SPED Scheme

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how she proposes to raise additional funding for the Special Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings scheme for PSNI officers intimidated out of their homes. (AQW 105/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I am pleased that the Executive, with a commitment to additional funding, has agreed that my Department can now reinstate the SPED scheme with immediate effect. I have now instructed the Housing Executive to process the outstanding SPED applications.

Bonfire Sites

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the costs incurred by her Department in cleaning and repairing bonfire sites during the summer of 2009. (AQW 110/10)

The Minister for Social Development: For the period 1 July 2009 to 31 August 2009 the Housing Executive incurred costs of £108k through the removal and reinstatement works associated with bonfires. This compares to £125k costs through such works during 2008/09.

SPED Scheme

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how many dwellings her Department has purchased under the Special Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings scheme in each of the past three years. (AQW 216/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The number of properties purchased under the Special Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings Scheme for the period requested was as follows:

|-----------|----|
| 2006/2007 | 22 |
| 2007/2008 | 22 |
| 2008/2009 | 46 |

Private Consultancy Firms and Events Organisers: Cost to DSD

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development how much has been spent by her Department in each of the last five years on (i) private consultancy firms; and (ii) events organisers. (AQW 229/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information on consultancy and event organiser costs for the last 5 years is set out in the table below:

| | Consultancy costs £ | Event Organiser Costs £ |
|-----------|------------------------|----------------------------|
| 2004-2005 | 923,945 | - |
| 2005-2006 | 719,511 | 860 |
| 2006-2007 | 640,518 | - |

North Down: Housing Executive

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much money has been allocated to the Housing Executive for schemes in North Down for the next financial year. (AQW 239/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm its programmes of activity for 2010/11 and cannot therefore confirm how much will be available for planned maintenance and improvement schemes in North Down during the next financial year.

North Down: Housing Executive

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much money has been allocated to the Housing Executive for new housing in North Down for the next financial year. (AQW 241/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is currently formulating the new Social Housing Development Programme for 2010/11-2012/13 and therefore it is not possible at this stage to state how much money will be allocated for new housing in North Down for the next financial year. I anticipate that the new Social Housing Development Programme will be ready for approval in 2010.

North Down: Housing Executive

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much money has been allocated to the Housing Executive for maintenance in North Down in the next financial year. (AQW 242/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive cannot confirm its programmes of activity for 2010/11 at this stage, and cannot therefore confirm how much will be available for maintenance in North Down during the next financial year.

Solid Fuel to Oil Conversions

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development, under Egan, what has the average cost been for solid fuel to oil conversions in disabled persons homes in each NI Housing Executive area over the past year. (AQW 246/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The average costs for solid fuel to oil conversions in disabled persons homes in the last financial year are detailed below:

| Housing Executive Administrative Area | £ |
|---------------------------------------|------|
| Belfast | 7893 |
| South East | 7322 |
| South | 7011 |
| North East | 7061 |
| West | 7000 |

Neighbourhood Renewal Funding

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how much neighbourhood renewal funding has been spent in Fermanagh and South Tyrone; and on what specific projects from January 2008 to date. (AQW 273/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are two Neighbourhood Renewal Areas in the Fermanagh and South Tyrone constituency. These are in Dungannon (covering the Annaghshee, Fairmount Park and Milltown estates) and Enniskillen (covering Windmill Heights, Cornagrade, Kilmacormick 1, Rossory Church Road and Galliagh Park). From January 2008 to date, DSD has provided £476,297.44 to projects in the Dungannon Neighbourhood Renewal Area and £310,535.28 to projects in the Enniskillen Neighbourhood Renewal Area. Specific projects details are listed below.

Co-Ownership Housing Scheme

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how many applications to the Co-Ownership Housing Scheme were accepted in each of the last five years. (AQW 311/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Co-Ownership Housing has advised me that it records statistics for financial years. The table below details the information requested.

| Year | Applications made | Accepted |
|---------|-------------------|--------------|
| 2004/05 | 707 | 502 |
| 2005/06 | 718 | 504 |
| 2006/07 | 532 | 325 |
| 2007/08 | 1923 | 935 |
| 2008/09 | 381 | 325 |
| 2009/10 | 896 | 250 estimate |

The number of applications for the 2008/09 financial year was affected by the suspension of new applications to the scheme between April and November 2008. A quota system was introduced by Co-Ownership Housing in April 09 as a response to the increased volume of applications to the scheme; as such the figure of 896 will include a large number of applications which have been resubmitted on one or more occasions.

Co-Ownership Housing Scheme

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many applications have been received for assistance via the Co-Ownership Housing Scheme in each month of the last year; and (ii) how many applications were accepted. (AQW 312/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The table below details the information requested.

| Month | Applications received | Accepted |
|--------------|-----------------------|-------------------|
| November 08 | 84 | 1 |
| December 08 | 35 | 7 |
| January 09 | 34 | 12 |

| September 09 | 75 | Not yet available |

The number of applications for the 2008/09 financial year was affected by the suspension of new applications to the scheme between April and November 2008. A quota system was introduced from April in response to the increased volume of applications to the scheme; as such the monthly figures include a large number of applications which have been resubmitted on one or more occasions.

West Belfast District Housing Executive: Manager

Mr P Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to the transfer of the manager of the West Belfast District Housing Executive office to another branch, (i) why he is being transferred; (ii) if he agrees with the transfer; (iii) was he consulted on the move; (iv) if the Minister has any concerns about this move; and (v) has the transfer anything to do with the maintenance contract the Housing Executive has with Red Sky. (AQW 390/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I am unable to answer this question as it is an operational matter for the Management of the Housing Executive.

Cookstown and Magherafelt Districts: Newbuild Programmes

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail all current and proposed new build programmes for the Cookstown and Magherafelt districts. (AQW 415/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Social Housing Development Programme is available on the Housing Executive's website at www.nihe.gov.uk and is broken down by District Councils and Parliamentary constituencies containing details of all current and proposed new build programmes for the Cookstown and Magherafelt districts.

Pension Credit Applications

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development how many pension credit application forms submitted to the Pensions Service at Carlisle House in Londonderry are currently logged as lost or misplaced. (AQW 420/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is not available. Since the introduction of new IT and enhanced telephony under the Pensions Transformation Programme in July 2008, approximately 90% of all new Pension Credit claims are made by telephone. This minimises considerably any incidences of misplaced forms.

Co-ownership Housing Scheme

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how many applications for the co-ownership housing scheme have been received from people in the East Antrim constituency in each of the last three years. (AQW 441/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Co-Ownership Housing has advised me that it records statistics according to local council area, rather than by parliamentary constituency. The table details applications received relating to the Larne, Carrickfergus and Newtownabbey District Council Areas.

| Year | Applications received |
|---------|-----------------------|
| 2006/07 | 18 |
| 2007/08 | 50 |
| 2008/09 | 6 |
| 2009/10 | 4 |

The number of applications for the 2008/09 financial year was affected by the suspension of the scheme between April and November due to insufficient funding.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development how many people aged 16 to 24 claimed Job Seeker's Allowance in each of the last twelve months. (AQW 499/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is set out in the table below.

| Month | No of People |
|----------------|--------------|
| September 2008 | 10769 |
| October 2008 | 10823 |
| November 2008 | 11359 |
| December 2008 | 12088 |
| January 2009 | 12883 |
| February 2009 | 14702 |
| March 2009 | 15977 |
| April 2009 | 16390 |
| May 2009 | 16451 |
| June 2009 | 16702 |
| July 2009 | 17564 |
| August 2009 | 18873 |

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development how many people claimed Job Seeker's Allowance in each of the last twelve months, in each employment sector. (AQW 505/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is not recorded in the form requested.

Legislation

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to outline any legislation her Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 513/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I intend to bring the Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill and the Pensions Regulator Tribunal (Transfer of Functions) Bill to the Assembly by the end of the calendar year, subject to consultation with the Social Development Committee and agreement by the Executive. The Housing (Amendment) Bill which was introduced prior to the summer recess is currently undergoing its Committee stage. I will also be bringing forward a range of subordinate legislation to the Assembly during this period.

Alexander Avenue, North Belfast

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to clarify whether Alexander Avenue in the Parkside area of north Belfast will not be included in redevelopment plans; (ii) if not, how was this decision reached; and (iii) if a detailed conditions or in-depth survey was carried out on the housing in the area. (AQW 578/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive has prepared an Economic Appraisal for the Parkside area of North Belfast which includes Alexandra Avenue and is currently being considered by the Department. Once a decision is taken on the way forward a detailed plan will be presented to the community.

Derry City: Social houses

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development how many social houses were started in Derry City in year ending March 2009. (AQW 583/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The number of social housing starts on site in Derry City Council area during the 2008/09 Programme Year was 160 units.

Upper Long Streets

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development when a decision will be made regarding the urban renewal status for the Upper Long Streets in the New Lodge area. (AQW 585/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Economic Appraisal for Upper Long Streets consisting of a number of proposed options is currently being finalised by the Housing Executive. It should be completed by the end of November and I will then be in a position to consider the options before announcing how we will proceed.

Volunteer Drivers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if she would consider implementing a package whereby volunteer drivers, who use their own cars to provide alternative community transport to various community organisations and associations, could receive out of pocket mileage expenses. (AQW 609/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Funding for volunteer travel expenses is currently available under the Small Grants scheme. The Small Grants scheme is administered by the volunteer centre network.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many active cases are currently being dealt with by the Employment and Support Allowance Branch. (AQW 628/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Employment and Support Allowance Centre is currently dealing with 12,880 active cases, figures correct at 31 August 2009.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many staff are employed in the Employment and Support Allowance Branch (ESAB); (ii) to provide a breakdown of the sections within ESAB; and (iii) how many staff work in each section. (AQW 630/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is set out in the table below.

STAFF EMPLOYED IN ESA CENTRE BY SECTION

| Section | Number of Staff |
|---------------------------|-----------------|
| Accuracy & Medical | 31.65 |
| Decision Making & Appeals | 37.00 |
| Processing | 75.44 |
| Operational Support | 36.80 |
| Telephony | 70.90 |
| Total | 251.79* |

* This number is based on whole time equivalents and will include a number of part time staff

Employment and Support Allowance: Claims

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the average time it takes to process an Employment and Support Allowance claim. (AQW 634/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The average clearance time for a claim to Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) is 17.5 days. These figures relate to August 2009, the last month for which there are full figures available.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many Disability Living Allowance tribunal appeals have been deferred due to non availability of GP notes, in each constituency, in each of the last three years. (AQW 669/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information cannot be provided in the detail requested as The Appeals Service does not maintain statistical data on the basis of constituency areas.

The total number of Disability Living Allowance appeals adjourned for General Practitioner records are:

|---------|------|
| 2006/07 | 526 |
| 2007/08 | 821 |
| 2008/09 | 1147 |

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Parliament Buildings: Main Entrance

Mr Burns asked the Assembly Commission for an overview of the design and an explanation of the figures and symbolism displayed on the facade at the front of Parliament Buildings above the main entrance. (AQW 287/10)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Mr Neeson): The front of Parliament Buildings is adorned by Britannia and her guardian lions at the top and features the Royal Coat of Arms on the 1st Floor Balcony.

In between, on the pediment above the portico is a sculpture group that is not so easily identified or categorised.

While it is clear that the sculpture involves the flame or torch of liberty, there are differing views on what the sculpture portrays.

One record of Parliament Buildings, published by H.M.S.O., claims that the sculpture represents Ulster presenting the golden flame of loyalty to Britain while another record, published by the Ulster Architectural Heritage Society says that the sculpture represents the Commonwealth or Britain presenting the lighted torch of liberty to Northern Ireland.

Unfortunately we are not in a position to determine which of the above interpretations is correct.

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Child Abuse: Allegations

Mr Simpson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister if, within the Department's responsibilities relating to children and young people, they will seek a meeting with (i) the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland; (ii) the Chief Constable; and (iii) the Children's Commissioner in order to press for a thorough investigation of allegations of child abuse in (a) St Patrick's home on the Glen Road, Belfast; (b) Termonbacca in Londonderry; and (c) any care facility organised by (i) the Roman Catholic Church; (ii) any other church or religious organisation; and (iii) any care facility run by the state. (AQW 255/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister (Mr P Robinson and Mr McGuinness):

- The issue of child protection and the safeguarding of children is a key priority for all of us and an issue which impacts on the work of several departments in the devolved administration, as well as the Northern Ireland Office.
- OFMDFM has recently published a major policy statement on Safeguarding Children which has brought together developments underway across the Northern Ireland Executive, NIO and Court Service. It has helped us to identify gaps and where further initiatives are required.
- Regulation, inspection and provision of arrangements for vulnerable children here have been strengthened significantly over many years. An independent Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority has been established with statutory responsibility and powers to inspect services. The Northern Ireland Social Care Council, the independent public regulatory body for the social care workforce in Northern Ireland, is dedicated to improving and regulating standards of training and practice for social care workers.
- Under current legislative procedures here, individuals who wish to work in a paid or unpaid capacity with children in a regulated position will be subject to pre-employment vetting procedures. New Safeguarding Vulnerable Groups legislation will be introduced next month to strengthen further protection for children in workplace situations. DHSSPS also intends to establish a regional Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland next year. This will strengthen further safeguarding arrangements within Northern Ireland.
- In February 2008 the NSMC considered a paper on child protection and agreed that a cross-border group of officials from relevant departments would intensify co-operation on child protection and report progress to NSMC. The Executive has also proposed child protection as a new work stream within the British Irish Council. The Council has deferred a decision on the proposal pending the outcome of the various enquiries into the Baby P case, but has tasked officials to consider the matter.
- We share concerns about allegations of abuse against children and want to see full investigations of any specific incidents take place. We would strongly urge if anyone has evidence of abuses committed within this jurisdiction against them, if they have not already done so, to bring it to the attention of the PSNI for investigation.

We have agreed to put the issues that you have raised on the agenda of the next Ministerial Sub-Committee on Children and Young People for discussion.

Sexual Abuse of Children

Mr Simpson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister if their Department has had any discussions with the Children's Commissioner regarding the question of sexual abuse of children in (i) any environment of trust organised by the Roman Catholic church; (ii) any environment of trust organised by any other church or religious organisation; (iii) any state run care environment. (AQW 291/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: The issue of child protection and the safeguarding of children is a key priority for all of us and an issue which impacts on the work of several departments in the devolved administration, as well as the Northern Ireland Office.

Because of the cross cutting nature of this issue and its direct link to the 'living in safety and with stability' aspect of the 10-year strategy for children and young people, we took the initiative to co-ordinate the development of the recently published Safeguarding Statement which pulls together the work of a number of departments.

We worked closely with the Commissioner for Children and Young People on the development of the cross-departmental Safeguarding Statement but our Department has not been approached by the Commissioner regarding sexual abuse of children in any specific environment or organisation.

Under current legislative procedures here, individuals who wish to work in a paid or unpaid capacity with children in a regulated position will be subject to pre-employment vetting procedures. New Safeguarding Vulnerable Groups legislation will be introduced next month to strengthen further protection for children in workplace situations. DHSSPS also intends to establish a regional Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland next year. This will strengthen further safeguarding arrangements here.

We have not directly been made aware of any calls for an investigation into any particular institution. If anyone has specific information about Termonbacca, St Patrick's or any other institution, they should report it to the PSNI and seek help from the Social Services. Every individual case brought to the attention of the PSNI or Social Services will be investigated.

We have agreed to put the issues you raise as an agenda item for discussion at the next Ministerial Sub-Committee for Children and Young People.

Child Abuse: Investigations

Mr Simpson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what consideration their Department has given to supporting calls for an investigation into child abuse in any care facility organised by (i) the Roman Catholic church; (ii) any other church or religious organisation; and (iii) the state. (AQW 292/10)

Child Protection Issues

Mr Simpson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what is their Department's assessment of the child protection issues arising from the allegations of sexual abuse in Termonbacca, Londonderry; and how they intend to investigate those child protection issues. (AQW 293/10)

Child Protection Issues

Mr Simpson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what is their Department's assessment of the child protection issues arising from the allegations of sexual abuse at St Patrick's home on the Glen Road, Belfast; and how they intend to investigate those child protection issues. (AQW 294/10)

Integrated Development Fund

Mr Durkan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much of the monies allocated to the Integrated Development Fund remains unallocated, and to indicate how these monies will be made available to qualifying projects. (AQW 301/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Of the 32 pilot projects submitted for approval to date, 31 have been formally approved and Integrated Development Funding support totalling £45.2m has been made available to the projects. The most recent project to be submitted for approval, Broadbridge Dualling in the North West, is being considered.

The Executive closed all Central Funds, including the Integrated Development Fund, as part of the Budget 2008 settlement. Consequently, there are no further monies to be allocated from the Fund.

Those outstanding pilot projects which had previously received approval in principle may still be brought forward as bids for funding, subject to the provision of the required economic appraisals. Following formal endorsement by OFMDFM/DFP Ministers, each will be considered, as a high priority, for funding support by the Executive as part of the quarterly financial monitoring process.

Legislation: OFMDFM

Mr Savage asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline any legislation their Department intends to bring before the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 405/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We introduced the Department of Justice Bill in the Assembly on 14 September 2009. A policy consultation is currently underway in relation to the setting up of a Victims and Survivors service which will require primary legislation in due course. A Legislative Consent Motion will be brought forward seeking the Assembly's endorsement to the extension of the UK Child Poverty Bill to Northern Ireland. We also anticipate bringing secondary legislation to create a Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation to drive forward redevelopment of the site before 31 December 2009.

Commissioner for Older People

Mr Shannon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the Commissioner for Older People will be in place; and what discussions have taken place, since the announcement of their intention to appoint a commissioner, with Help the Aged and other such organisations to garner opinions on any appointment. (AQW 429/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We intend shortly to seek the Executive's agreement to issue a consultation document and Draft Bill which sets out our proposals to establish a Commissioner for Older People. After careful consideration of all the consultation responses, we will make a decision about the scale and scope of the proposed Commissioner's powers. We are unable to appoint a Commissioner until the legislative process is complete and it is likely that this will take until spring 2011.

Since the decision to appoint a Commissioner was announced, OFMDFM officials have been engaged in research and pre-consultation with key stakeholders, including Help the Aged/Age Concern; Age Sector Platform, the Advocate, Dame Joan Harbison and others. They have had a range of meetings with stakeholder organisations to ensure that there is the broadest possible involvement in the policy development and legislative processes prior to formal public consultation. A list of these meetings has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Furthermore, Junior Minister Kelly and Junior Minister Newton also met with Dame Joan Harbison in July this year to hear at first hand about the issues which older people are raising with her and to discuss the Advocate's role in the consultation process.

North Antrim Constituency: OFMDFM Projects

Mr McKay asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) what projects their Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by their Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 462/10)

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what plans they have to change employment levels within their Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 600/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: Staffing levels in the Department are regularly reviewed to ensure the work of the Department is delivered in the most efficient and effective way. The size of the Department has reduced from 408 staff in post in September 2007 to 394 in September 2009.

Proposals for organisational change to support delivery of current and future Departmental objectives are currently under consideration.

A key aim for the Northern Ireland Civil Service is to avoid redundancy if this is possible; it is planned that any staff who become surplus through organisational changes in the Department would be redeployed within the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Child Protection Issues

Mr Simpson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) for their assessment of the child protection issues arising from the allegations of serious physical assault against children in (a) Termonbacca, Londonderry; (b) Nazareth House, Londonderry; (c) Nazareth Lodge, Belfast; (d) Nazareth House, Belfast; (e) St Patrick's home, Belfast; and (ii) how they intend to investigate those child protection issues. (AQW 672/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: As we have stated previously, the issue of child protection and the safeguarding of children is a key priority for all of us and an issue which impacts on the work of several departments in the devolved administration, as well as the Northern Ireland Office.

Recognising the seriousness of this matter, Ministers will consider it at the next meeting of the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Children and Young People.

We would like to repeat that we have not directly been made aware of any calls for an investigation into any particular institution and have no plans to seek meetings at this time. However, we share concerns about allegations of abuse against children and want to see full investigations of any specific incidents take place. We would strongly urge if anyone has evidence of abuses committed against them within this jurisdiction, if they have not already done so, to bring it to the attention

Executive: Issues not Agreed

Mr Savage asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list all issues on which the Executive has not reached agreement. (AQW 874/10)

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: It is not our practice to disclose details of Executive business. The content of Executive papers and all aspects of Executive business are confidential.

Executive: Issues Agreed

Mr Savage asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list the 451 issues on which the Executive has reached agreement. (AQW 875/10)

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Apple Industry

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the current state of the apple industry. (AQW 278/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Gildernew): There are approximately 1500 hectares of orchard in the north of Ireland, with approximately 200 apple growers. Bramley Seedlings occupy 97% of the orchard area.

The projected yield for 2009 is estimated at 30,000 tonnes which represents 45% of the 2007/2008 crops. However, it represents 75% of the long term average yield. The projected reduction in crop yield is due to the extremely poor weather conditions (wet and cold) in May when the orchards were in blossom. However, it is anticipated that the apple sector will meet market demand from the fresh and processed sectors.

It is too early in the season to make definitive statement on producer returns for 2009, however early indications are that an increase on 2008 prices is anticipated.

Apple Growers

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what assistance is available for apple growers. (AQW 279/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department through CAFRE works closely with the apple industry to deliver industry training, knowledge and technology transfer and benchmarking programmes. CAFRE, in conjunction with AFBI, appraise plant health and assist growers to develop pest and disease control plans for their orchards. Technical support and advice is also given on the processing and packaging of apples and apple products.

My Department is a major sponsor of apple research, with considerable research being carried out by AFBI, Loughgall. Financial assistance may be available to the apple industry involved in the processing and marketing of apples through the Rural Development Programme's Agriculture and Forestry Marketing Development Grant Scheme. This scheme, which is currently open to producers and processors in the Agri-Food and Forestry sectors can provide grant assistance of 40% up to £150,000, to assist in the development of marketing capability.

The EU Agricultural and Forestry Processing and Marketing Scheme seeks to improve the economic performance and international competitiveness of the agri-food processing, horticulture and forestry sectors.

The Supply Chain Development (SCD) Programme is aimed at helping farmers and food producers work together to improve the rewards from their supply chain by helping to stimulate the formation of “embryonic” supply chain partnerships and support these as they move forward, by providing financial assistance and expert guidance.

The Department has assisted the Fruit Industry Federation in developing an application to register ‘Armagh Bramley Apples’ as a Protected Geographical Indication (PGI) under the EU Protected Food Names Scheme.

The EC Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Aid Scheme aims to channel “grants” to Producer Organisations (POs), who come together to produce, harvest, store, package and market their crop. Approved programmes are guaranteed up to 50% EU funding of their incurred expenditure.

Apple Growers

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what assistance her Department (i) has given to date; and (ii) continues to give to apple growers, in conjunction with DETI and Invest NI, in finding new markets for their products. (AQW 281/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: To date my Department has awarded £1.35m of grant aid to the Apple Industry, under the previous Processing and Marketing Grant Scheme (PMG) 2000 – 2006.

DARD has facilitated the Fruit Industry Federation in their application for Protected Geographical Indication (PGI) status for the Armagh Bramley under the EU Protected Food Name Scheme. This scheme aims to identify regional and traditional foods whose authenticity and origin can be guaranteed.

The Fruit Industry Federation participation in the Supply Chain Development Programme (SCDP) helped the industry develop a strategy to enable them to move forward together.

In May 2009, the apple industry was provided with £10k of support through the NI Regional Food Programme which aims to promote quality regional food and its consumption within Ireland and Britain.

As part of the NI Rural Development Programme 2007 - 2013, financial assistance continues to be made available to apple growers and processors through schemes administered by DARD. These include the EU Agriculture and Forestry Processing and Marketing Scheme which is delivered jointly by DARD and Invest NI; and The Agriculture and Forestry Marketing and Development Grant Scheme which provides financial support to encourage greater integration and collaboration between producers, processors and others in the Agri - food, wood supply and renewable energy chains.

In addition, Invest NI has had and will continue to have significant engagement with apple processors to assist them in finding new markets for their products. Over the past three years, five companies have participated in 75 specialist ‘Meet the Buyer’ events organised by Invest NI. Some of these processors have also exhibited/attended major sectoral trade shows such as the International Food Exhibition (IFE) in London and CATEX in Dublin.

In addition, through Invest NI’s Food Sector Marketing Advisors, over £200,000 first year sales were secured for three clients engaged in apple processing to 11 customers outside the north of Ireland. Given the timing of this business it is estimated that this could represent in excess of £500,000 cumulative sales.

Organic Farming Scheme

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) when the Organic Farming Scheme will open for applications; and (ii) when successful applicants will receive financial payments under the scheme. (AQW 307/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development:

- (i) On 6 August I issued a press release confirming that the Organic Farming Scheme (OFS) will open for new applications again in early 2010.
- (ii) Successful applicants will receive payment at the end of each OFS agreement claim year if all agreement requirements have been met. All OFS agreement claim years run from 1 January to 31 December each year.

Hence, for agreements entered into in January 2009, the first payments will be due to commence in January 2010.

DARD Direct Facility, Newtownards

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) what sites are being investigated as possible locations for the DARD Direct facility in Newtownards; and (ii) when the new service will be fully operational. (AQW 308/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: In January this year, I announced that a network of 12 DARD Direct offices would be established to deliver services to customers across the north of Ireland. At that time I identified the locations of 10 of these offices. These are Omagh, Dungannon, Armagh, Newry, Downpatrick, Newtownards, Ballymena, Coleraine, Claudy and Magherafelt. (These are in addition to the Enniskillen office, which was established as the pilot DARD Direct office). In July, I confirmed that the 12th and final office would be located in the centre of the South and East Antrim area (eg, between Mallusk and Antrim).

With respect to identifying actual office accommodation, my officials are working in partnership with DFP (Department of Finance and Personnel) to determine this, as they are responsible for providing office accommodation to meet the needs of all Government Departments. They are working through a range of steps to assess the suitability of existing accommodation and/or identify alternative accommodation that will optimise alignment with the DARD Direct specification. It is a process of elimination and at this stage, for the majority of locations, there is no final decision on what accommodation we will occupy.

A property search of the Newtownards area has not identified any suitable premises. We are currently working with DFP to explore the potential of new accommodation being available by working through an “Expressions of Interest” process for this location. This is a complicated process and may take considerable time to implement.

In the shorter term, we are implementing management changes to enable us to deliver all key services from the existing offices at Kiltonga.

It is hoped that our customers can benefit from this improved accessibility to our services from the Spring of next year.

Protected Geographical Indication Status: Comber Potato

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the achievement of Protected Geographical Indication status for the Comber potato. (AQW 309/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The NI Potato Stakeholder Forum’s application to register ‘Comber Earlies’ under the EU Protected Food Name Scheme is currently being finalised.

Once the application has been finalised, the Department will oversee a consultation with interested parties. Following this, the application will be forwarded to Defra, as the competent authority, before onward transmission to the EC.

The EC can take at least 18 months to consider, approve and register the product under the scheme.

Food Production Sector

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what strategy is in place for the growth of the food production sector; and what targets have been set for expanding the industry. (AQW 310/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The local agri-food sector plays a significant role in contributing to the wider local economy, as well as being the backbone of rural communities here. It is the single largest private sector employer and demand for our quality local produce means that the sector contributes significantly to external sales.

In May last year, I, and the then DETI Minister, Nigel Dodds, established new structures for development support for the agri food industry. These comprised an Inter-Departmental Group (IDG) and an Industry Advisory Panel (IAP), which gave representatives of the agri-food industry unprecedented direct influence at a strategic level on public policy relating to this important sector.

The IAP and IDG have agreed a Strategy Framework for the agri-food industry to help build a strong and robust food sector capable of competing within the competitive environment which exists in both the domestic and international marketplace. Work is now underway with industry representatives to develop performance indicators against which to measure the Strategy Framework.

A key issue for consideration was to define the scope and focus of development priorities for the industry. The Framework identified market dynamics, changing demographics, lifestyles and consumer consumption patterns as challenges which underlined the need for priority to be given to industry investment in both marketing and innovation and points to the need to further stimulate capability development across critical strategic areas.

To support the development of these priorities, key strategic themes were identified: market understanding and development, fostering innovation, supply chain management, capability development and waste & energy. Dedicated Project Teams, including representation from the IAP, have been established to take forward work in these respective areas.

Waste Management Solutions

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if her Department has advertised for tenders for the provision of waste management solutions to address the problem faced by poultry farmers in relation to the disposal of poultry litter. (AQW 326/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: My Department has not advertised for tenders for the provision of waste management solutions. Those who have waste to dispose of may have commercial contracts to do so.

The Nitrates Action Programme Regulations require farmers to put in place sufficient storage capacity for livestock manure. In the case of poultry enterprise this needs to be sufficient for at least 26 weeks.

Pig Producers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many pig producers are registered in 2009 compared to each of the last 3 years. (AQW 392/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The number of pig producers in the last four years as recorded from the Agri farm census were:

| 2006 | 2007 | 2008 |
|------|------|------|
| 452 | 490 | 488 |

Figures for 2009 will not be available until December 2009.

Animal Welfare Act

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when she intends to introduce the Animal Welfare Act. (AQW 426/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: A new Animal Welfare Bill is one of my key ministerial priorities and it is my intention, subject to Executive approval, to progress an Animal Welfare Bill through to introduction to the Assembly by June 2010 and enactment during the lifetime of the current Assembly.

Farm Modernisation Programme

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the documentation associated with unsuccessful applications to the Farm Modernisation Programme will be acceptable as applications under any further releases of the programme, and will they be given preferential treatment over fresh applications. (AQW 430/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: As the European Commission have requested additional selection criteria for future tranches of the Farm Modernisation Programme and as there will be there will be revisions to the List of Eligible Items it will be necessary for farmers to submit a further application. I will be ensuring however that the application forms remains as straightforward and as easy to complete as before.

Applications will therefore be assessed on the revised selection criteria.

North Antrim Constituency: DARD Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) what projects her Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by her Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 464/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The following table details the projects funded since 8 May 2007:-

| Name of Project | Funding | Description of Project |
|---|---|---|
| *Projects Funded by Forest Service | | |
| *Harvesting of trees | It is not possible to extract costs that were incurred on this project through Forest Service operational expenditure | 80,000 m ³ harvested, with associated replanting and maintenance actions. |
| *Conservation | It is not possible to extract costs that were incurred on this project through Forest Service operational expenditure | Assistance with NI Environment Agency (NIEA) on restoration work to Breen Oakwood ponds Special Area of Conservation. |
| *Squirrel preservation | It is not possible to extract costs that were incurred on this project through Forest Service operational expenditure | Facilitated Red Squirrel preservation using feeders and crop manipulation jointly with the Glens Red Squirrel Group. |
| *Deer management | It is not possible to extract costs that were incurred on this project through Forest Service operational expenditure | Establishment of deer lawns in Ballycastle and ongoing monitoring of population levels. |
| *Boundary drain cleaning | It is not possible to extract costs that were incurred on this project through Forest Service operational expenditure | 250 metres of boundary drains cleaned. |
| Projects funded by Rivers Agency | | |
| Ballymoney Ring Road Drain | £42,000 Approximate Cost | Drainage infrastructure (pipe laying and river channel works) project constructed by Rivers Agency's Coleraine Area Office, Direct Labour Organisation to facilitate drainage from development of approximately 10 hectares of land in Ballymoney. Project completed in December 2007. |
| Lower Bann Motorisation of Sluice Gates | £900,000 Approximate Cost | Mechanical & Electrical project to install electric motors on the 3 main sluice gates control structures on the Lower Bann River (at Toome, Portna & Cutts Coleraine). Project also included, automation of controls to enable remote control and installation of CCTV systems for monitoring the gates. Project completed in December 2008. |
| Projects funded by Animal Welfare | | |
| Bluetongue Eradication | £47,190 | Bluetongue was detected in animals imported to a north Antrim farm in February 2008. The Minister took prompt and decisive action: the animals concerned (and in-contacts) were culled, restrictions were imposed, and additional testing was carried out. This action was successful in stopping the Bluetongue becoming established here. |

| Name of Project | Funding | Description of Project |
|--|---|---|
| Projects funded by Service Delivery Group | | |
| DARD Direct Accommodation Rollout Project | £25,000 | Refurbishment and upgrade of customer service reception area and private interview room in Kilpatrick House, Ballymena. |

| *Projects funded by the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) | | |
| *CAFRE – Further and Higher Education programmes | It is not possible to extract from the College accounts the money spent on delivery of these programmes on the north Antrim Constituency. | Further Education and Higher Education programmes provided for those wishing to pursue a career in the agri-food industry and delivered at the CAFRE Campuses of Greenmount, Loughry and Enniskillen. Courses are open to application to those who meet the required entry criteria from across the north of Ireland. |
| *Industry training programme | It is not possible to extract from the College accounts the money spent on delivery of these programmes on the north Antrim Constituency. | Training courses for those working in the agri-food industry, which are delivered locally across the north or at the CAFRE Campuses of Greenmount, Enniskillen and Loughry. |
| *Knowledge and Technology Transfer programme | It is not possible to extract from the College accounts the money spent on delivery of these programmes on the north Antrim Constituency. | This programme aims to equip those in the agri-food industry with the knowledge, skills and experience to adopt appropriate technologies and systems within their businesses. CAFRE Technologists and Development Advisers work with the industry to encourage the adoption of the technology or system within their businesses. This is achieved through training courses, normally delivered throughout the north, Demonstration events on the College Farm/local farms or Food Processing Units and through mentoring. |
| *Benchmarking programme | It is not possible to extract from the College accounts the money spent on delivery of these programmes on the north Antrim Constituency. | This programme involves the collection of physical and financial data from farmers and growers, the analysis of this data by CAFRE Business Technologists and comparison with similar farm businesses. Through this programme the strengths and weaknesses of farm business performance can be identified and actions to improve performance implemented. This programme is available to farmers and growers across the north. |
| Projects funded by Rural Development Division | | |
| Empowering Community Energy | £46,957.17 | The upgrading of an existing water turbine installation at Houston's Mill complex to improve energy output from 1kwh to 14kwh. |
| North Antrim Community Development and Networking | £419,336.40 | The project is to provide a community development and networking service in the rural areas of Ballymena, Ballymoney, Moyle and Larne. The primary areas of work within this project will involve building capacities of rural communities, stimulating community development in areas of low community infrastructure, to increase and support voluntary activity and networking |

| Name of Project | Funding | Description of Project |

The project below was a cross-border initiative between north Antrim and Donegal. The outputs and impacts from this project were to be shared equally across the target areas. In this instance, it has not been possible to disaggregate the actual amount of funding apportioned to the north Antrim Constituency.

| Name of Project | Funding | Description of Project |
|-------------------------------|------------|--|
| Maximising the Rural Resource | €1,269,631 | There are four themes to the framework based on shared natural and cultural resources in the two areas:- Marine Leisure Development; Language and Culture; Building sustainable capacity; and Reviving traditional skills. |

* It is not possible to disaggregate specific funding for the north Antrim Constituency for these projects.

Farm Modernisation Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to the Farm Modernisation Scheme, (i) how many applications were received since its inception; (ii) how many were approved for payment; and (iii) of those approved, how many took up payment, in the North Down constituency. (AQW 469/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: 33 applications from farm businesses located in the North Down Constituency were submitted to the First Tranche of the Farm Modernisation Programme.

Of these 7 have received Letters of Offer of financial support towards the purchase costs of modernisation items.

As farmers have 4 months in which to purchase these items and submit their claims, information on the number of farmers in the North Down constituency who have received payment is not yet available.

Legislation: DARD

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline any legislation her Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 533/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has no plans to formally introduce any new legislation to the NI Assembly before 31 December 2009.

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans she has to change employment levels within her Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 601/10)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development currently has no plans to change its employment levels in the next 12 months or to make any staff redundant. Should change become necessary the Department would make every reasonable effort to minimise the number of employees compulsorily made redundant.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

North Antrim Constituency: DCAL Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) what projects his Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by his Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 461/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McCausland): The information requested is set out at Annex A.

Northern Ireland Association of Target Shooting Sports

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he would consider meeting with the NI Association of Target Shooting Sports to ensure that there are opportunities for young people to be introduced to the sport in preparation for the 2012 Olympics. (AQW 717/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: Responsibility for providing opportunities for young people to be introduced to shooting sports rests, in the first instance, with the recognised governing bodies for the sports. Sport Northern Ireland, which is responsible for the development of sport including the distribution of funding, recognises the Northern Ireland Shooting Federation as the umbrella body for the three principal shooting organisations - the Ulster Rifle Association, the Northern Ireland Smallbore Shooting Union and the Ulster Clay Pigeon Shooting Association.

I have not received a request from the NI Association of Target Shooting Sports for a meeting but would be prepared to consider such a meeting if their proposals had the clear support of the Northern Ireland Shooting Federation and the relevant governing bodies.

Post Offices

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) what services his Department currently provides through post offices; and (ii) for his assessment of any additional services that could be provided through local post offices. (AQW 753/10)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure: DCAL currently sells angling permits and licences through a distribution network including fishing tackle shops, hotels and tourist information outlets. The Department also use the services of local Post Offices in rural locations to act as angling permit and licence distributors on behalf of the Department.

Where there are geographical gaps in the current distribution network, rural Post Offices located close to prime angling waters could consider becoming an approved DCAL angling permit and licence distributor and stock angling related merchandise to encourage anglers into their premises.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

GAA Sports Coaching

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to list the eight controlled primary schools which offer GAA sports coaching under the sports teaching programme, which she introduced in 2007. (AQW 67/10)

The Minister of Education (Ms Ruane): Tá socraithe agam go gcuirfear an t-eolas a iarradh i Leabharlann an Tionóil.

I have arranged for the information to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Class Sizes

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the average class size at (i) Key Stage one; and (ii) Key Stage two in (a) controlled schools; (b) maintained schools; (c) integrated schools; and (d) Irish medium schools, in each of the last five years. (AQW 719/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh sa tábla thíos.

The information requested is detailed in the table below.

Notes To Table:-

- Figures for 2004/05 and 2005/06 include classes in special units. From 2006/07 data have been collected in such a way that special units can be identified separately. Figures for 2006/07, 2007/08 and 2008/09 exclude special units.
- The integrated sector includes 'controlled integrated' and 'grant maintained integrated' schools.
- Classes that contain pupils from more than one year group are referred to as 'composite'. Composite classes that span Key Stage 1 and Key Stage 2 have been excluded.
- In 2006/07 the definition of Key Stages changed. Prior to this, Key Stage 1 included Years 1 – 4. From this year onwards, Years 1 and 2 have been referred to as 'Foundation stage', with only Year 3 and 4 being defined as Key Stage 1. For the purpose of this exercise, Key stage 1 has been defined as Years 1 – 4, to provide consistency across all of the five years.

Pupil:Teacher Ratio

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education what is the pupil/teacher ratio for primary level education in the (i) controlled sector; (ii) voluntary sector; and (iii) Irish-medium sector. (AQW 755/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá an t-eolas a iarradh sa tábla thíos.

The information requested is detailed in the table below.

PUPIL: TEACHER RATIOS, 2008/09

| Sector | Pupil: Teacher Ratio |
|--|----------------------|
| (i) Controlled ¹ sector | 20.4 |
| (ii) Voluntary ² sector | 20.4 |
| (iii) Irish-medium ³ sector | 16.3 |

¹ Includes controlled integrated primary schools, and the preparatory departments of controlled grammar schools.

- 2 Includes maintained and grant-maintained integrated primary schools, and the preparatory departments of voluntary grammar schools.
- 3 Includes schools in which Irish is the only medium. English-medium schools with Irish-medium units are not included.

Pupil:Teacher Ratio

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education what is the pupil/teacher ratio for secondary level education in the (i) controlled sector; (ii) voluntary sector; and (iii) Irish-medium sector. (AQW 757/10)

1 Includes controlled integrated secondary schools, and controlled grammar schools.

2 Includes maintained and grant-maintained integrated secondary schools, and voluntary grammar schools.

3 This figure refers to the only wholly Irish-medium secondary school.

Nutritional Policy Objectives

Ms J McCann asked the Minister of Education to outline her policy objectives in relation to improving nutritional standards in schools and educating children on healthy food choices. (AQO 95/10)

The Minister of Education: Chuir an Roinn Oideachais, i bpáirtíocht leis na boird oideachais agus leabharlainne, tús le Caighdeán Chothaitheacha Nua do Lónta Scoile i mí Mheán Fómhair na bliana dhá mhíle a cúig, agus tá siad in áit in gach scoil anseo.

The Department of Education, in conjunction with Education and Library Boards, began the implementation of New Nutritional Standards for School Lunches in September 2005 and they are now in place in all schools here. The aims of the Standards are to help pupils make healthy choices by providing a range of healthy meals, to convey the meaning and importance of a healthy diet, and to contribute to a reduction in levels of child obesity.

From September 2007 the Standards programme was extended to include other sources of food in schools, such as tuck shops and vending machines. Only healthy choices should be provided in vending machines, tuck shops, and other sources of food within the premises of each school.

The revised curriculum includes a Personal Development and Mutual Understanding strand for primary pupils and a Learning for Life and Work strand for post-primary pupils which allow pupils to explore issues such as the benefits of healthy eating and physical activity, the consequences of poor dietary choices, ways of achieving a healthy diet, the influences on their physical and emotional health and ways of developing their self-esteem.

It is also a requirement of the revised curriculum for all children to undertake Home Economics at Key Stage 3. This will provide opportunities for young people to develop their understanding of a healthy diet and the hygienic and healthy use of foods in the preparation of meals.

My Department, in conjunction with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, is developing a Food In School policy which will encompass all aspects of food in schools, including other food provided in schools, such as breakfast clubs, tuck shops, etc and education on nutrition and healthy eating. The policy was issued for public consultation on 14 September.

Classroom Assistants: Pay Dispute

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education for an update on the resolution of the classroom assistants' pay dispute. (AQO 96/10)

The Minister of Education: Is maith a thuigim an ról tábhachtach atá ag cúntóirí ranga. Mar Aire Oideachais, thug mé cuairt ar roinnt mhór scoileanna agus chonaic mé le mo chuid súl féin an tacaíocht ard-cháilíochta foghlama a chuireann cúntóirí ranga ar fáil, agus chonaic mé fosta chomh tiomanta agus dílis atá siad.

I very much appreciate the important role that classroom assistants perform. As Minister for Education I have visited a large number of schools and have witnessed at first hand the high quality learning support that classroom assistants provide, and their commitment and dedication.

I am, therefore, very concerned about the length of time it is taking to complete the classroom assistants' job evaluation process. Whilst I do acknowledge that it is a complex task, I am calling on all parties involved – the Education Boards, the Trade Unions, the School Principals and the classroom assistants - to resolve all outstanding issues at the earliest possible date.

As regards the progress that has been made since the November 2007 JNC Collective Agreement, I can advise that 94% of classroom assistants have signed and returned the 'Variation of Contract Form' and have received the one-off compensatory payment due to them. However, the calculation of salary arrears, which in some cases date back to 1 January 1995, has proved to be a much more complex and detailed process.

To date, of the 5,266 career histories and job descriptions that issued to schools, 1,958 cases have been assessed and agreed, and 44% (853) of these have received their arrears.

I can also advise that, while all classroom assistants who signed the Variation of Contract form were entitled to receive the one-off compensatory payment, it is estimated that up to 50% of classroom assistants could be entitled to Job Evaluation arrears.

The Boards have given priority to processing Special Schools' cases to ensure that those most likely to be entitled to arrears are paid their arrears as quickly as possible.

There have also been difficulties agreeing some of the job descriptions. It is hoped that proposals for an appeals process to expedite the clearance of these cases will be agreed by the Joint Negotiating Council (JNC) in the very near future.

The Boards have assured me they are working proactively with the schools to ensure that the remaining career histories and job descriptions are submitted as soon as possible. Nevertheless, I will be writing to the Boards to ask them to redouble their efforts to ensure that all the outstanding cases are processed as quickly as possible.

Educational Performance: Ethnic Minorities

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister of Education, in light of the increase in the number of children from ethnic minorities leaving school with no qualifications, if she has a strategy to improve their educational performance. (AQO 97/10)

The Minister of Education: Is é ceann de mo chuid tosaíochtaí é mar Aire Oideachais a chinntiú go mbaineann páistí mionlaigh eitnigh a lánchumas amach.

Ensuring that minority ethnic children reach their potential is one of my priorities as Minister of Education.

There has not been an increase in the percentage of minority ethnic children leaving school with no qualifications here in the north. Following the establishment of the Inclusion and Diversity Service in 2007 and the Department's initiatives, Departmental statistics show a considerable drop in the percentage of minority ethnic children leaving school with no qualifications between 2006 and 2008. However, while I am pleased this has happened, we can't be complacent. We need to achieve further improvements. Credit should be given to the children, parents and the schools.

Schools with newcomer and Traveller children, including Roma, are funded directly via the Common Funding Formula. In the current financial year, a total of just over £7.7 million of additional funding has been provided to schools on this basis.

In April of this year I launched the policy 'Every School a Good School – Supporting Newcomer pupils.' The aim of this policy is to ensure that schools and Education and Library Boards are in a position to welcome newcomer pupils into their school communities. I have taken action to help schools assist newcomer children with their acquisition of the language of instruction, whether it is English or Irish, in an inclusive manner, to enable them to access the curriculum in particular, and partake in every aspect of school life.

Whilst the number of minority ethnic children leaving school with no qualifications has reduced, most of these children are Travellers. There are still significant numbers of Traveller children leaving school with no qualifications, indicating that there is still a long way to go to ensure that Traveller children reach their potential in the education system.

To this end, I established the Taskforce for Traveller Education in November 2008 jointly chaired by Katherine Joyce and Robbie McVeigh, as a cross-sectoral group including members of the Traveller community from across the north, representatives from a range of non-government organisations, as well as government Departments and public bodies from all of Ireland. The aim of the Taskforce is to assist the Department develop an action plan on Traveller education.

My Department funds the regional Inclusion and Diversity Service (IDS), which is responsible for a range of work areas aimed at providing support to schools with newcomer pupils. These services range from providing school-based support for initial parent/teacher meetings to follow-up advice on pastoral needs, basic language needs, curriculum support and an extensive training programme for school staff etc.

Currently, each Education and Library Board is also funded for Traveller services which will be brought together under the Education and Skills Authority.

I plan to continue to build the capacity and skills of the school workforce to support minority ethnic pupils both now and into the future as part of the overall raising standards agenda.

Primary School Strategy: East Belfast

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Education if a strategy for new builds of primary schools in inner city east Belfast has been agreed and, if so, what is the timescale for implementation. (AQO 98/10)

The Minister of Education: Níor cuireadh straitéis pleanála ceantair do bhunscoileanna ionchathracha oirthear Bhéal Feirste faoi bhráid mo Roinne le breithniú agus ceadú a dhéanamh uirthi.

An area-planning strategy for primary schools in inner city east Belfast has not been submitted to my Department for consideration and approval.

The Belfast Education and Library Board has advised, however, that it is currently progressing an area-based approach for all controlled primary schools in Belfast.

It is vital for the Belfast Education and Library Board to take this forward so that following the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority in January 2010, the modernisation of the schools' estate can progress as quickly as possible.

Educational Underachievement

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education to outline the major contributing factors to educational underachievement; and what action she has taken to address each of them. (AQO 99/10)

The Minister of Education: Nuair a rinneadh Aire Oideachais díom fuair mé le hoidhreacht córas a d'fhreastail ar riachtannais daichead den chéad de pháistí.

When I was appointed as Education Minister, I inherited a system that was built around the needs of 40% of children.

Last year around 11,000 children left school without five good GCSEs including literacy and maths. They were failed by the education system here. For the most part, these were already disadvantaged children. I am not prepared to tolerate such inequality.

Even among schools with similar levels of disadvantage, performance varies greatly. Gaps also exist between schools under different management types. Traveller children experience some of the worst educational outcomes of any minority ethnic group.

I am taking forward a major reform programme that will enable every young person to fulfil her or his potential.

On 30 April, I launched 'Every School a Good School – A Policy for School Improvement'. This flagship policy will tackle underachievement and promote equality and the raising of standards across the north.

On June 25, 2009 I published my final Transfer 2010 Guidance. This document provides post-primary schools with a menu of recommended admissions criteria that, if used, will end academic selection at 11. The much needed abandonment of academic selection at 11 will enable excellence to be spread around our system rather than unfairly concentrated in a minority of schools.

These will be supported by other key reforms aimed at raising standards. These include the revised curriculum; the Entitlement Framework for post-primary pupils; a revised literacy and numeracy strategy; an early years strategy; the Way Forward for Special Educational Needs and Inclusion; support for Newcomer pupils; and the Extended Schools programme. I am also working through the North South Ministerial Council to tackle underachievement because it is an issue of concern right across this island.

Lagan College: Newbuild

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education whether she can give a clear indication of when the building work at the new premises at Lagan College will commence. (AQO 100/10)

The Minister of Education: Is féidir tús a chur le hobair tógála i ndiaidh conradh a shíniú; sular féidir seo a dhéanamh, áfach, caithfidh mo Roinn dearbhú a fháil gurb é an bealach is fearr chun tosaigh é an tionscadal. Dá bhrí sin, tá mo Roinn ag obair i bpáirtíocht leo sin atá bainteach sa tionscadal le aghaidh a thabhairt ar an ábhar seo go práinneach.

Building work can commence after a contract has been signed but before this can happen my Department has to be assured that this project is the best way forward. The Department is therefore working closely with those involved in the project to address this issue as a matter of urgency.

Post-Primary Places

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education if it is her intention to revoke the primary legislation which gives priority to children living in Northern Ireland in respect of securing post-primary school places. (AQO 101/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá rún agam an reachtaíocht a scrios a cheanglaíonn ar gach scoil thuaisceartach tús áite a thabhairt in iontrálacha do iarratasóirí a bhfuil cónaí orthu sa Tuaisceart.

It is my intention to delete the legislation which requires all northern schools to give priority in admissions to applicants resident in the North. I wish to make sure that there can be no potential for conflict with EU law on the accessing of services across geographical boundaries between member states.

I wish to give schools the freedom to choose the nature of their geographical admissions criteria. I believe that children in border areas should enjoy the same prospects of admission to local schools as children in other areas.

Many families, from all community backgrounds, live their lives, work and access services on either side of the border and we should modernise our approach to admissions to reflect this.

I am currently considering a paper for the Executive on this issue.

School Uniform Grants

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Education how many children were awarded a grant for a primary school uniform up to the start of the new school year. (AQO 102/10)

The Minister of Education: Am cruatain eacnamaíoch é seo, go háirithe dóibh sin a bhfuil teaghlaigh óga acu nó tá deacrachtaí acu riar ar chaiteachas gach aon lae, mar shampla, éide scoile.

This is a time of economic hardship, particularly so for those in our community with young families who struggle to meet the cost of basic everyday needs, such as the cost of school uniforms.

As Minister of Education, I am determined to do everything I can to help ease the financial need faced by parents simply by sending their child to primary school. I introduced this new payment as an anti-poverty measure to help reduce the spiralling costs facing parents at this time of year and it is the first time that such a measure has been taken here.

The Education and Library Boards, which administer the scheme, have confirmed that at the end of August they paid 24,135 grants towards the cost of primary school uniforms. They have also advised that they are still processing applications for the Primary School uniform grant.

Rural Schools

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Education what action her Department is taking to protect smaller rural schools. (AQO 103/10)

The Minister of Education: Leagann mo Bheartas do Scoileanna Inbhuanaithe amach na sé chritéir seo leanas do inmharthanacht scoileanna a mheasúnú:

My Sustainable Schools Policy sets out criteria for assessing the viability of schools, both rural and urban, but recognises and takes specific account of the particular needs of rural schools and communities. This is reflected in the lower minimum enrolment threshold for primary schools in rural areas (at 105) than in urban areas (at 140). The policy also provides guidance on reasonable home to school travel times for pupils, which takes account of the availability of suitable schools in the area, and considers the strength of the school's links with the local community.

Ballynahinch High School: Newbuild

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education for an update on her Department's plans to provide a new complex for Ballynahinch High School. (AQO 104/10)

The Minister of Education: Tá saincheisteanna athfhillteacha ann maidir le Rollú Fadtéarmach agus inmharthanacht Ardscoil Bhaile na hInse, rud a tharraingeann aird ar lochtanna sa phróiseas pleanála caipitil atá againn.

There have recurrent issues surrounding the Long-Term Enrolment and sustainability of Ballynahinch High School, which highlights the deficiencies in the current capital planning process. The area based planning system, which will be taken forward by ESA will ensure that in future provision is accurately matched to demand.

There is also the question of the number of children who travel from Down to Belfast to attend post-primary schools. In 2007/8, this number was 309. The rationality of this amidst the fact that post-primary schools in Down are losing pupils has to be addressed. If followed, the Department's Transfer 2010 Guidance, will help address this: it recommends that schools no longer use academic criteria and it is these criteria, in the main, that facilitate long-distance admissions.

DEPARTMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Belfast Metropolitan College: Evening Classes

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many people have enrolled for evening classes at Belfast Metropolitan College in Castlereagh in each of the last three years. (AQW 344/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Sir Reg Empey): The table below shows the number of enrolments on evening courses at Castlereagh College from 2004/05 to 2006/07. Castlereagh College became part of the Belfast Metropolitan College in August 2007. The latest enrolment data available is for academic year 2007/08, however this cannot be broken down into the pre-merger college format.

Apprenticeships: East Belfast

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many people have enrolled in apprenticeships in East Belfast in each of the last three years. (AQW 355/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department has supported 770 apprentices in the East Belfast area between March 2006 and March 2009. The data in Annex A lists numbers of apprentices in each of the last three years whose given address is within the East Belfast area. Although these apprentices reside within the East Belfast area, they may or may not have enrolled with Training Providers in the East Belfast area and may or may not be employed by companies in the East Belfast area. The Department is not in a position to break enrolments down by constituency.

Apprenticeships: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many people have enrolled in apprenticeships in North Down, in each of the last three years. (AQW 422/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department has supported 946 apprentices in the North Down area between March 2006 and March 2009. The data in Annex A lists numbers of apprentices in each of the last three years whose given address is within the North Down area. Although these apprentices reside within the North Down area, they may or may not have enrolled with Training Providers in the North Down area and may or may not be employed by companies in the North Down area. The Department is not in a position to break enrolments down by constituency.

North Antrim Constituency: DEL Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) what projects his Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by his Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 457/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department has provided European funding to one organisation in the North Antrim constituency area since May 2007. During 2007/08, DEL offered £172,020 of funding to the Triangle Housing Association Ltd, Ballymoney under the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity (2000-2006) for the Triangle Supported Employment Service project.

Under the Northern Ireland European Social Fund Programme 2007-2013, DEL has offered the Triangle Housing Association Ltd £1,091,256 in funding towards the project costs of the organisation's Progression to Employment Services project, over the period 1 April 2008 to 31 March 2011.

Under the Department's Bridge to Employment programme, which aims to provide trained staff for inward investment companies and existing companies entering an expansion phase, the Department has supported one company over two projects to recruit unemployed drivers in North Antrim. The total spend was £4,935 and nine people were employed.

Skillsafe was introduced by the Department to assist apprentices that were being put on short time by their employer as a result of the economic downturn. The purpose of the scheme is to fill the Apprentice's downtime with accredited training that will contribute to their Apprenticeship. To date there is one company in North Antrim availing of this opportunity, with three apprentices currently working a four-day-week and one day at the Training Provider. The total spend to date is £5,624.

Under Management and Leadership Development a total of 17 small to medium enterprises have received support through the Management Analysis and Planning (MAP) programme representing total funding of £44,170. In addition, 85 individual managers have been supported through the Management and Leadership Development (MLDP) and INTRO graduate programmes, representing a total funding of £141,402. The programmes outlined seek to develop and enhance managerial and leadership skills in Northern Ireland companies and social enterprises.

Jobskills/Training for Success/ApprenticeshipsNI - Funding

The Department contracts with over 50 Suppliers to deliver Jobskills, Training for Success and ApprenticeshipsNI throughout Northern Ireland.

Six of these Suppliers are headquartered in the North Antrim constituency and, since May 2007, the Department has approved some £17.7m by way of funding and associated allowances to individual participants.

In the Further Education sector, the Department has funded a number of projects in Northern Regional College since May 2007. The total spend is £2,913,871.02, broken down as follows:

- Cultural Diversity project - £36,765.49;
- Innovation Fund project - £66,729.53;
- Joint DEL/DE Vocational Education Programme - £1.6m;
- Upgrade to Northern Regional College interconnectivity network - £31,000;
- Upgrade of IT Equipment from Information Learning Technology Capital Funding - £620,576; and
- 28 small construction projects funded through Health & Safety, Minor Works and Disability Compliance programmes - £563,000.

Sir Reg Empey MLA

Minister for Employment and Learning

Night Classes: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many people have enrolled for night classes in North Down through the South Eastern Regional College, in each of the last five years. (AQW 489/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The table below shows the number of enrolments on evening courses at North Down & Ards Institute from 2002/03 to 2006/07. North Down & Ards Institute became part of the South Eastern Regional College in August 2007. The latest enrolment data available is for academic year 2007/08, however this cannot be broken down into the pre-merger college format.

| Academic year | Enrolments on evening courses |

Redundant Workers

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to workers made redundant in Mid-Ulster in the last 18 months, to detail (i) the number of employees made redundant; (ii) what action her Department has taken to re-skill and retain redundant workers within the local area; and (iii) the number of redundant workers that have been re-employed within the local area. (AQW 493/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning:

- (i) The number of confirmed redundancies notified to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) in the last 18 months (1st March 2008 to 31st August 2009) in the Mid-Ulster Parliamentary Constituency Area was 347. This represented 6.3% of the 5,523 confirmed redundancies in Northern Ireland over the same period.
- (ii) My Department provides a comprehensive range of services and programmes to help people find and remain in work. These are, job search, work-focused interviews and employment programmes including Steps to Work, Pathways to Work, Progress to Work and specialist programmes and services for people with disabilities. The Department has also introduced contingency arrangements to allow apprentices who were made redundant from the construction, engineering and motor vehicle sectors to continue with training.
- (iii) There is no information available on the number of redundant workers that have been re-employed within the local area. There is no system or system links between DETI and DEL which can link info on those made redundant to those re-employed. Even within DEL we only have info on clients who use our services; many get jobs without engaging with us.

Programme-Led Apprenticeship Scheme

Lord Browne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) how many campuses have agreed to accept apprentices for work placement in the Programme Led Apprenticeship Scheme; and (ii) the category of places that have been agreed. (AQW 540/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: At the 24th September 2009, there were 2,287 participants on Programme-Led Apprenticeship provision across 27 training suppliers, including 1,497 in the 6 regional colleges.

We are not in a position to comment on the category of places that have been agreed as we are still within the assessment timeframe and it is not yet possible to provide more detailed information such as uptake by occupational area.

Legislation: DEL

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any legislation his Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 546/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Department for Employment and Learning does not intend to bring any new primary or subordinate legislation to the Assembly before 31 December 2009.

However, it is anticipated that the “Amendments to Conduct of Employment Agencies and Employment Businesses Regulations (NI) 2005”, which are subject to Affirmative Resolution, will be brought before the Assembly in early 2010.

You will be aware that the Employment Bill is currently before the Assembly, following its introduction in June 2009.

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to change employment levels within his Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 565/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department plans to at least maintain its current levels of staffing, while responding to additional demands and remaining within the limits of its existing available budget, over the next 12 months.

The Department has no plans to make changes through redundancies.

Student Complaints

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the measures his Department has in place to address student complaints in Further and Higher Education institutions. (AQW 754/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Further and higher education institutions are independent and operate at arms length from the Department. As a result, my Department does not have any direct or formal involvement with student complaints from either type of institution.

In the universities, student complaints which cannot be resolved internally are referred to the university's "Visitor" who ensures that the Statutes, Ordinances and Regulations of the University have been properly observed and carried out and that natural justice is observed within the institution.

Within Further Education (FE), the colleges have developed and implemented their own complaints procedures.

Programme-led Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what has been the uptake of the new Programme-led Apprenticeship Scheme and how this compares with the provision made by his Department. (AQW 802/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Programme-Led Apprenticeships is a demand led programme and as such it is very difficult to predict the uptake with a high degree of accuracy. There are currently 2,395 programme-led apprentices who have been registered since the inception of the programme on 7 September compared to an estimated total uptake of some 3,000.

Student Loans

Mrs M Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he has taken with his colleagues in other jurisdictions to raise the threshold for repayment of student loans. (AQO 111/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Following the announcement earlier this year that the March 2009 Retail Price Index was negative (-0.4%), it was agreed by all Devolved Administrations (and with Treasury) that the threshold for the repayment of income-contingent student loans should be frozen at £15,000 for a further 12 months. Had a negative Retail Price Index rate been used to calculate the repayment threshold from April 2010/11, the threshold would have reduced and borrowers would have started repaying earlier and ended up paying more.

All Devolved Administrations remain committed to exploring the option of increasing the threshold in line with Retail Price Index from April 2011/12 onwards but such a decision will be subject to the outcome of the next Comprehensive Spending Review.

University of Ulster: New Belfast Campus

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give the estimated capital spend on the proposed new University of Ulster Campus in Belfast; and to outline if this will include expenditure from his Department or any other Northern Ireland Executive budget. (AQO 112/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The university has submitted an economic appraisal for the proposed campus in Belfast. The appraisal details a capital cost of £254.6m. This includes the cost of the work in the both the Belfast campus and the Jordanstown campus. It is estimated that the construction timeframe will be five years.

The economic appraisal is still being considered within my Department and, if approved, will be forwarded to DFP for its approval. It is only after these approvals are received that any capital contribution from this Department can be considered. Moreover, the Department can only commit funding out of the current CSR period that expires in 2010/11.

I am not aware, at present, of any proposed expenditure on the Belfast campus project from any other Executive budget.

Student Loans

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he is aware of any Northern Ireland students being affected by the recent delay in payments from the Student Loans Company; and what action can be taken to ensure that Northern Ireland students are not affected by similar delays in the future. (AQO 113/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: My Department is not aware of any Northern Ireland domiciled students being affected by the delays in payments by the Student Loans Company that have been recently reported in the media.

It is my understanding that these delays are primarily the result of a change in the arrangements for processing applications for new English domiciled students and an increase in applications from English domiciled students. There has been no change in arrangements for Northern Ireland domiciled students. Applications will continue to be processed by the Education and Library Boards, with payments made by the Student Loans Company.

There is regular liaison between my Department, the Education and Library Boards and the Student Loans Company to ensure that Northern Ireland domiciled students receive an effective service.

Creche Facilities

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to ensure that higher education institutions are providing creche facilities. (AQO 114/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: Responsibility for the provision of crèche facilities is a matter for the respective Higher Education institutions. However, my Department provides financial support in the form of 85% towards the cost of childcare for full-time students with dependant children and, a Parents' Learning Allowance of up to £1,508 in the current academic year.

STEM Subjects

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what actions are being taken by his Department to increase the participation in, and completion of, science, technology, engineering and mathematics subjects, at further and higher level. (AQO 115/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The Step Up Programme which is funded by my Department encourages young people from disadvantaged areas in Belfast and Londonderry to study science in universities. This programme is extremely well regarded and has a completion rate of 95%. In addition, my Department is on target to achieve its Programme for Government target to increase by 300 the number of PhD research students at local universities in economically relevant subjects, such as science and technology, by 2010. Further Education colleges carry out a range of activities aimed at increasing participation in STEM subjects. These include promotional campaigns, collaboration with Northern Ireland's University partners through the "Connected Programme" to provide joint projects in STEM curricula areas and the development of industry linked Foundation Degree programme in STEM subject areas. My Department is also currently considering the possibility of providing a bursary or scholarship to encourage more people to study STEM subjects in further and higher education in Northern Ireland.

Apprenticeships: Leavers

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many people have left apprenticeships without attaining their qualification in the last 2 years. (AQO 116/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: During the period, September 2007 to August 2009, there were 14,235 new apprenticeship starts. Of these, the Department has been notified that 4,666 have left without completing their apprenticeship and 8676 continue in training. The majority will have acquired skills and qualifications, including National Vocational Qualifications, technical certificates and/or Essential Skills. The department is working with the Learning and Skills Development Agency Northern Ireland to develop retention strategies and these will be rolled out as best practice early next year.

Give and Take: Educational Maintenance Allowance Claims

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if he is aware that participants who take part in the Give and Take scheme provided by Include Youth are not entitled to claim Educational Maintenance Allowance; and if he has any plans to change these arrangements. (AQO 117/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: I am aware that participants who take part in the Give and Take scheme provided by Include Youth are not entitled to claim Educational Maintenance Allowance (EMA). Include Youth has a long history of working to enhance services for vulnerable 16 – 21 year olds who for various reasons are unable to participate in mainstream training and employment opportunities. In addition to helping fund the Include Youth's Give and Take scheme, my Department's Career's Service has a Partnership Agreement with the scheme to facilitate access to careers guidance for participants facing barriers to education, training and employment. The Give and Take scheme is not prescriptive in terms of the hours each young person should attend as it does recognise there are individual issues and barriers to participation.

EMA in contrast is an attendance based scheme with allowances and bonus payments closely linked to recorded student attendance and absence. EMA's primary objective is to encourage participation in school or further education for 16 - 19 year olds.

As the requirements for participation in the Give and Take Scheme and EMA are quite different my Department will continue to support each separately for the foreseeable future.

Holylands, Belfast: Stakeholders' Consultation

Mr Cree asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the stakeholders consultation process regarding the Holyland area of Belfast. (AQO 118/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: As the member may be aware, my Department facilitated a Stakeholder Forum on 7 May 2009, from which a draft report was produced. This report has identified a number of proposals and possible solutions.

An Editorial Group, comprising of key stakeholders, convened on 26 August 2009 to discuss the draft report, allocate responsibilities and develop an action plan.

I have since written to the agencies and organisations cited in the report, including my Ministerial colleagues, seeking their views on the proposed actions.

I intend to hold a follow-up conference on 28 October 2009.

Further Education: Enrolments

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students have enrolled in courses in Further Education colleges for this coming academic year. (AQO 119/10)

The Minister for Employment and Learning: The statistical data on student enrolments in Further Education colleges for the academic year 2009/10 will be available from 20th November 2009. I will write to you at that time.

DEPARTMENT OF ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Broadband: Fixed Line

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is being done to ensure that 100% coverage for fixed line broadband service can be offered to all households at an acceptable speed and standard. (AQW 296/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Mrs Foster): Within the context of a privatised and independently regulated market my Department has taken a number of steps to stimulate investment in Northern Ireland's broadband telecommunications infrastructure and to promote competition. However, my Department has maintained a technology neutral stance - in line with UK policy and in order to maximise competition and minimise market distortions - letting the market decide on the most cost effective and efficient solutions.

Research by the Department of Business, Innovation and Skills Digital Britain initiative indicates that the costs to upgrade existing infrastructures to provide services over fixed line technologies, are not economically viable for the telecommunications companies, without significant additional funding sources and this is particularly the case for rural areas. Independent research has estimated that the cost of deploying a 100% fixed line solution across all of Northern Ireland is prohibitive, with estimates of the size of investment required range from £200m to £500m depending upon the extent of fibre deployed in the solution. Naturally the private sector will only intervene and invest where the rate of return on their investment is sufficient to justify the investment.

In August 2008, I launched the Northern Ireland Broadband Fund to encourage the private sector to consider where best to deploy "in-fill" solutions into a number of priority rural areas where distance from the nearest telephone exchange prevents a fixed line-based broadband service.

As of September 2009, three projects are underway delivering wireless broadband services in rural areas in Counties Antrim, Fermanagh, and Tyrone. A fourth project trialling the delivery of wireless broadband in the Foyle basin is scheduled to commence in November 2009.

The last significant intervention my Department undertook left a significant legacy with over 99% of all premises with access to fixed line broadband. Currently, we are undertaking a £18m procurement targeted on a Programme for Government commitment, to ensure 85% of businesses have access to next generation broadband by 2011. No result is available yet from the procurement process. But overall, Northern Ireland remains very well served for fixed line broadband access.

Invest NI

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what expenditure on job creation has been made by Invest NI in the last five years for (i) each constituency; and (ii) each district council. (AQW 299/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Table (i) provides information on the amount of assistance offered by Invest NI to employment-related projects within each Parliamentary Constituency Area during the five-year period 2004/05 to 2008/09. The same information is repeated for each District Council Area in Table (ii). This represents the value of support which is expected to be paid towards employment-related investment during the life-time of assisted projects. The amount of investment that these projects plan to stimulate is also included.

TABLE (I): INVEST NI ASSISTANCE OFFERED TO EMPLOYMENT-RELATED PROJECTS AND ASSOCIATED PLANNED INVESTMENT BY PCA (2004/05 TO 2008/09)

Notes to Tables:

1. Table totals may not add due to rounding.
2. Planned investment includes assistance offered.
3. Some of the assistance offered may not be paid if projects are not fully delivered by the client.
4. 'Location Not Yet Determined' refers to an inward investor that has not yet selected a specific location.

This represents 60% of the total assistance offered by Invest NI over the period and 80% of the associated planned investment. The remaining 40% (£252m) of support was offered to innovation based projects, including activities such as training, research and development, trade development and technology and process development. Although not directly related to job creation, these capability development activities will underpin business competitiveness leading eventually to growth and employment opportunities, although they cannot be accurately forecasted at this stage.

In addition to the assistance offered directly by Invest NI, offers totalling over £7m were made indirectly through the Start A Business programme to individuals intending to set up a business. This programme is delivered in partnership with Enterprise Northern Ireland and provides guidance to new businesses, reliant on the local Northern Ireland market.

Incinerator at Glenavy

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if Invest NI is proposing to make funding available for the proposed Rose Energy chicken litter incinerator at Glenavy; and, if so, how much funding is proposed. (AQW 323/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI is in discussion with the promoters regarding this project. Quotations have been updated and are currently being assessed from an engineering and financial viewpoint.

The project promoters' case for support will be subject to the normal appraisal process.

The project is currently the subject of a planning application and any financial support would, of course, be conditional on planning approval being received.

Incinerator at Glenavy

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) if public funding from Invest NI will be required to finance the construction of the proposed Rose Energy incinerator at Glenavy; and (ii) the anticipated amount of Invest NI funding required. (AQW 324/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Rose Energy originally submitted their proposal for support under the DETI administered Environment and Renewable Energy Fund (EREF). The company was seeking £16m of assistance towards the commission and operating of the waste incinerator. Their application, however, was declined. The company subsequently approached Invest NI for support.

Invest NI is in discussion with the promoters regarding support towards this project. Quotations have been updated and are currently being assessed from an engineering and financial viewpoint.

Consequently, I am not in a position to disclose an amount at this juncture. When the quantum of support is agreed the case for support will be submitted through the approval process.

Chicken Litter: Disposal

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to clarify if any formal procurement process has been undertaken in seeking waste management facilities or solutions for the disposal of chicken litter in Northern Ireland. (AQW 325/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: My Department is not aware of any formal procurement process having been undertaken in seeking waste management facilities or solutions for the disposal of chicken litter in Northern Ireland.

In 2005, a study was carried out on a biomass combined heat and power plant using poultry litter as a primary fuel. However, this was solely a feasibility study on one potential solution and did not consider alternative available options.

North Antrim: Inward Investment

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the amount inward investment in North Antrim; and (ii) the number of jobs created as a result, in each of the last five years. (AQW 358/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Table 1 addresses both points (i) and (ii) above. It provides information on the amount of foreign direct investment offered support by Invest NI within the North Antrim Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) and the number of jobs promoted or safeguarded as a result during the five-year period 2004/05 to 2008/09. The information in Table 1 represents the estimated total cost of these projects to Invest NI's externally-owned clients and the number of jobs that the projects expect to create or safeguard. The number of projects and the associated assistance offered by Invest NI is also included.

Projects have been split into those where (1) the main focus is on employment creation and (2) those that are innovation based, including activities such as training, research and development, trade development and technology and process development.

6. Safe Jobs represent the number jobs that would have been lost if the project was not supported.

East Derry: Investment

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of visits she has made to east Derry to promote new investment in the last 12 months. (AQW 381/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I have made two visits to the East Londonderry constituency in the last year. In April I was invited by Coleraine Borough Council to a meeting where they outlined their ideas for the future development of the Borough. This meeting also afforded me the opportunity to meet with a number of the area's key employers including AVX, TBF Thompson and Northstone Concrete. During August, I visited Armstrong Medical to hear from John Armstrong of his ambitious expansion plans for the company.

I would like to assure you that Invest NI continues to work to promote all of Northern Ireland, including East Londonderry, as an attractive and viable location for both inward investment and expansion by existing companies located in the area. In particular, Invest NI is working closely with local stakeholders to encourage the development of regional sales propositions. One such example is Coleraine Borough Council's 'Invest in Coleraine' initiative, which helps ensure that the product offering for the Coleraine area is maximised to attract visits by potential investors.

Invest NI's ongoing work with those overseas investors already located in Northern Ireland is also essential, both in terms of assisting them to grow and develop and in promoting the benefits of investing in Northern Ireland. This approach has helped cultivate and foster relationships that have secured and promoted investment in East Londonderry by international companies such as Nicobrand, Dairy Produce Packers and Fugro-BKS.

It is also important to emphasise Invest NI's work in assisting indigenous companies to grow and develop by focusing on exploiting export opportunities. In East Londonderry this has helped promote the growth and development of a number of key employers such as Armstrong Medical and Causeway Data Communications.

The purchase of the former Seagate Limavady facility by Limavady Gear Company has also been particularly encouraging and I hope to visit them in the next few weeks. The company operates at the forefront of the renewable energy sector, which a recent Carbon Trust report identified as having the potential to create over 30,000 jobs. Limavady Gear is now well placed to exploit the tremendous opportunities for the growth the sector offers, for the benefit of not only East Londonderry, but Northern Ireland as a whole.

North Down: Inward Investment

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the amount of inward investment in North Down; and (ii) the number of jobs created as a result, in each of the last five years. (AQW 421/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Table 1 addresses both points (i) and (ii) above. Inward Investment: Visits Facilitated by Invest NI

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of inward investment visits facilitated by Invest NI to the Cookstown District and to the Mid-Ulster region, in the last 18 months and any progress made. (AQW 494/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: In the last 18 months, Invest NI facilitated 4 visits by potential investors to the Cookstown District and Mid Ulster Region. Invest NI remains in contact with the visitors in order to pursue any investment opportunities. However, I am conscious of the impact of the current economic conditions on investment decisions. Furthermore, securing an inward investment project is the end point of an extensive process which may span a considerable period (18 to 24 months) and involve a number of visits to Northern Ireland.

Invest NI's role is to promote "Northern Ireland" as an attractive and viable location for new inward investment opportunities. Whilst Invest NI makes its best efforts to ensure a spread of investment across the region its role is to promote Northern Ireland as an entity. Ultimately, the final location decision rests with the investor. If the investor seeks information on specific areas within Northern Ireland then Invest NI will work with the local stakeholders to best promote the area.

Economic Difficulties

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail any plans she has to tackle the severe economic difficulties being experienced in Mid- Ulster. (AQW 495/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I am very aware of the economic difficulties being experienced throughout Northern Ireland, including the Mid-Ulster constituency.

In an effort to lessen the impact of the downturn across Northern Ireland a £44.5 million package of measures was announced by the Executive toward the end of last year. These measures included: £15million to help those most vulnerable to fuel poverty; the introduction of a new 10 day prompt payment policy across departments to aid business cash-flow; and further investment in schools and roads, which would have a positive impact on the construction industry.

As DETI Minister, I established sub-groups of the Economic Development Forum which reported to me with a list of recommendations of further steps that could be taken by the Executive to support the economy at this time. I am pleased to say that the majority of the prioritised proposals have been progressed.

In terms of support offered to companies in the Mid-Ulster area, Invest NI made 294 offers of assistance in 2008/09. This was the highest number of offers to any Parliamentary Constituency in Northern Ireland and comprised £6.3million of assistance, which leveraged total investment of £48.2million into the area.

Additionally, Invest NI held a series of seminars across Northern Ireland to provide business advice to companies. One of the first of these seminars was held in Cookstown. This enabled companies from the Mid-Ulster area to discuss their individual business needs in detail, identify key projects to improve performance and access specialist business skills to assist them to implement these projects.

Furthermore, I announced the Short Term Aid Scheme (STAS) in May 2009. This scheme allowed Invest NI to show greater flexibility in the support which could be provided to businesses in difficulty. STAS is open to both Invest NI Clients and the wider business community and has a total of £15million grant support available. To date, over £2.8million of support has been offered to 18 businesses, including businesses located in the Mid-Ulster area, with the value of these offers ranging from £13,000 to over £400,000.

In order to keep all businesses informed of the series of schemes available, my department has produced a guide to the schemes which have been introduced at European, UK and local level, to support businesses through the current economic downturn. This can be accessed on the DETI website.

My Executive colleagues and I will continue to do all that we can to support the local economy through this difficult period.

Competitiveness Programme

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what flexibility there will be in the Competitiveness Programme to address local economic difficulties being experienced in Mid-Ulster and other parts of Northern Ireland. (AQW 496/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The Local Economic Development (LED) measure of the Northern Ireland European Sustainable Competitiveness Programme 2007-2013, Priority 2 Sustainable Enterprise & Entrepreneurship is open to all 26 District Councils. The LED measure aims to provide support for locally identified projects addressing local needs. The measure is flexible in the nature of activity that can be supported and focuses in particular on innovation, entrepreneurship and research and development.

Applications can be made to DETI at any time giving Councils the opportunity to address local needs as they arise. The measure has a total programme value of £50million (£25million European Regional Development Fund matched by £25million Council expenditure) throughout the seven year period of 2007-2013, with a further two year period up to 31 December 2015 for expenditure to be incurred.

Councils in Mid-Ulster have successfully submitted applications focusing on stimulating economic growth and improving competitiveness for their region. In June 2009, the Department in conjunction with Northern Ireland Local Government Association, held a one-day workshop in Cookstown to help Councils identify further opportunities available through the LED Measure. The Department continues to work closely with all Councils including those in Mid-Ulster to ensure future proposals address the specific needs.

Legislation: DETI

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline any legislation her Department intends to bring before the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 517/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: A consultation in relation to the Unsolicited Services (Trade and Business Directories) Bill was completed in August 2009. I anticipate bringing this draft Bill before the Assembly before the end of the year. I also anticipate bringing secondary legislation, to add to the list of statutory tourist establishments as set out in article 12(1) of the Tourism (NI) Order 1992, before 31 December 2009.

Land Purchased from Invest NI

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) how many companies have asked for land they purchased from Invest NI to be bought back by Invest NI; (ii) how much the land was sold for; and (iii) the reason's why companies have asked for land to be returned to Invest NI. (AQW 575/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Due to the current global economic downturn, a number of Invest NI client companies have been forced to delay or abandon plans to expand or further develop their business. As a result, Invest NI introduced a number of interim policy changes.

One such change has been the introduction of a "land buy back" option which enables Invest NI to re-purchase undeveloped land it had previously sold to client companies. The buy back option is available only to those companies assessed to be in acute hardship as a result of the current economic downturn and it is intended as a short term measure. As such, it is reviewed on a regular basis.

Invest NI has had initial discussions suggesting the potential re-purchase of undeveloped land with seven client companies over the past 12 months. It is not expected, however, that all discussions will result in a buy-back and to date no land has been re-purchased. In terms of the amount originally paid by the client companies for the lands in question the range is from circa £290,000 to circa £1 million per site depending on size and location.

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans she has to change employment levels within her Department in the next 12 months; and how many changes will be made through redundancies. (AQW 594/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The Department of Enterprise, Trade & Investment is committed to meeting its 2007 Comprehensive Spending Review targets by achieving a reduction of 47 posts over the 3 year period 2008/2009 to 2010/2011. Many of these efficiencies have already been achieved; the remaining 28 efficiencies are due to be achieved within the next 12 months. We expect to achieve all the staffing efficiencies through redeployment and natural wastage and do not therefore anticipate any redundancies being necessary in the next 12 months.

The above figures include HSENI and reflect the position at 31 August 2009.

Foreign Direct Investment in North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is the estimated foreign direct investment in North Down, in each of the last five years. (AQW 621/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Table 1 provides information on the amount of foreign direct investment offered support by Invest NI within the North Down Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) and the number of jobs promoted or safeguarded as a result during the five-year period 2004/05 to 2008/09. The information in Table 1 represents the estimated total cost of these projects to Invest NI's externally-owned clients and the number of jobs that the projects expect to create or safeguard. The number of projects and the associated assistance offered by Invest NI is also included.

Projects have been split into (i) those where the main focus is on employment creation and (ii) those that are innovation based, including activities such as training, research and development, trade development and technology and process development.

Invest NI

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many jobs Invest NI has created over the last 2 years. (AQW 729/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: During the 2 financial years 2007/08 and 2008/09 Invest NI promoted 11,248 jobs and safeguarded 3,055 existing jobs. This represents the number of jobs that Invest NI clients, both locally and externally-owned, expect to create or safeguard during the lifetime of projects offered assistance during the period under review.

Despite challenging economic conditions Invest NI has made good progress towards achieving the Programme For Government target of securing 6,500 new jobs through inward investment by 31st March 2011. Provisional figures based on offers approved by Invest NI between 1st April 2008 and 31st August 2009 show that 4,879 new jobs have been promoted.

In addition, Invest NI made 5,676 indirect offers through the Northern Ireland Start A Business programme to individuals intending to set up a business. These offers are expected to create almost 6,000 new jobs. This programme is delivered in partnership with Enterprise Northern Ireland and provides support to new businesses, reliant on the local Northern Ireland market.

Fuel Poverty: Social Tariff System

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if she will enter into discussions with the Utility Regulator and energy companies to bring forward proposals to introduce a social tariff system to help people who are most susceptible to fuel poverty. (AQO 122/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: I am conscious that one of the Fuel Poverty Taskforce proposals included a recommendation on the feasibility of introducing a social tariff scheme. Such a tariff would be extremely complex and not a panacea to the hardships caused by poverty.

The Regulator's office has nonetheless undertaken work relating to the feasibility of social tariffs and has employed consultants to undertake an analysis of the options for implementing a social tariff in Northern Ireland, including an examination of the likely impact associated with the various options. The work has raised a whole range of difficult issues particularly around targeting and to which sectors such tariffs might apply.

Social tariff charges to try and help the fuel poor could, for example, impact disproportionately on other customers, including businesses. This could ultimately have a negative impact on employment levels and so, perversely, result in increased levels of fuel poverty. Equally, without proper targeting of those most in need, overall numbers of fuel poor could actually be increased.

The next steps in the Regulator's work are likely to include a full public consultation, followed by a recommendation to Ministers on a way forward. This will include the need for any supporting policy action by key Northern Ireland Departments, including legislation.

However, I would stress that the full implications of any social tariff charges will need to be considered carefully by the Executive.

Job Creation

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how many jobs her Department has created over the last 2 years. (AQO 128/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Although my Department, through Invest NI, promotes jobs associated with the business development projects it assists, ultimately, it is the individual company that creates these jobs.

In the two financial years to 31st March 2009, Invest NI promoted 11,248 jobs and safeguarded 3,055 existing jobs. This represents the number of jobs that Invest NI clients, both locally and externally-owned, expect to create or safeguard during the lifetime of projects offered assistance.

In addition, Invest NI made 5,676 offers, through the Start A Business programme, to individuals intending to set up a business reliant on the local Northern Ireland market. These offers are expected to help create almost 6,000 new jobs.

In total, Invest NI assistance during the period in question promoted approximately 17,000 new jobs, safeguarding a further 3,055 jobs.

Despite challenging economic conditions, Invest NI has made good progress towards achieving the Programme for Government target of securing 6,500 new jobs through inward investment by 31st March 2011. Provisional figures based on offers approved by Invest NI between 1st April 2008 and 31st August 2009 show that 4,879 new jobs have been promoted.

Stream International Call Centre

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide an update on Invest NI's work to provide more contracts to secure employment with the international call centre, Stream. (AQO 129/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: The redundancies at Stream are extremely regrettable and I fully appreciate the impact on those employees affected.

The securing of new contracts is a matter for Stream and we hope that the company is ultimately successful in this regard. Invest NI has supported the company in the past and will continue to offer support where it is appropriate.

Moreover, I have written to the CEO of the Stream Group, urging him to put additional work into the Londonderry operation. I also hope to meet the CEO when I visit the United States in the autumn.

Invest NI continues to support the company as it tries to break into new markets and in addition, my department, Invest NI and the Department of Employment and Learning, are working closely together to provide practical help to those facing redundancy.

Foreign Direct Investment Targets

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on progress in relation to the foreign direct investment targets outlined in the Programme for Government. (AQO 130/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI's 2008-09 results showed that the agency had considerably exceeded its FDI targets during the year, with supported projects promoting 4,055 new jobs against an original target of 2,200.

Targets for the current year are challenging, especially in the current economic climate. Invest NI continues to actively pursue all available opportunities aggressively in order to secure inward investment projects.

Renewable Energy: Targets

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions she has had with the Minister of Finance and Personnel concerning the NI Civil Service estate's role in meeting renewable energy targets, as set out in the Draft Strategic Energy Framework. (AQO 131/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Given its responsibilities for the Government estate and for Government procurement, DFP has a important role in demonstrating Government's lead on sustainable energy.

I have not, as yet, had direct dialogue on this issue with my Ministerial colleague. However, DFP and DETI officials work closely together through a number of formal structures including the Sustainable Energy inter-departmental working group and in all four of its sub-groups. These relate to bioenergy, communications, economic opportunities and energy efficiency. These working groups are aimed at bringing forward a coherent plan to ensure better integration and alignment of sustainable energy policy and activities across all the NI departments.

Inward Investment: Coleraine/Limavady

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, following the loss of 1,000 jobs at Seagate, what inward investment projects have been, or are being, promoted in the Coleraine and Limavady areas. (AQO 132/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI continues to work hard to promote all of Northern Ireland as an attractive and viable location for inward investment.

In particular, the agency is working closely with local stakeholders to encourage the development of regional sales propositions. One such example is Coleraine Borough Council's 'Invest in Coleraine' initiative, which helps ensure that the product offering for the Coleraine area is maximised to attract visits by potential investors.

Invest NI's ongoing work with those overseas investors already located in Northern Ireland is also essential, both in terms of assisting them to grow and develop and in promoting the benefits of investing in Northern Ireland. This approach has helped cultivate and foster relationships that have secured and promoted investment in East Londonderry by international companies such as Nicobrand, Dairy Produce Packers and Fugro-BKS.

It is also important to emphasise Invest NI's work in assisting indigenous companies to grow and develop by focusing on exploiting export opportunities. In East Londonderry this has helped promote the growth and development of a number of key employers such as Armstrong Medical and Causeway Data Communications.

The purchase of the former Seagate Limavady facility by Limavady Gear Company has also been particularly encouraging. The company operates at the forefront of the renewable energy sector, which a recent Carbon Trust report identified as having the potential to create over 30,000 jobs. Limavady Gear is now well placed to exploit the tremendous opportunities for the growth the sector offers, for the benefit of not only East Londonderry, but Northern Ireland as a whole.

Credit Unions

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the progress of legislation to enhance Credit Union services. (AQO 133/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: One of the recommendations included in the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment's report of its inquiry into the Role and Potential of Credit Unions in Northern Ireland was that NI credit unions be permitted to expand their range of services to include, at the very least, those services which credit unions in Great Britain can offer currently. In my response to the report, I endorsed this recommendation.

To enable credit unions in Northern Ireland which wish to expand their current range of services, new legislation will require to be enacted. To progress this matter, along with other recommendations contained in the Committee's Report, my Department has established a team to take forward the legislative changes needed to facilitate this expansion of services.

This requires working closely with Her Majesty's Treasury (HMT) which has also completed a separate Review of the Legislative Framework for Credit Unions and Industrial and Provident Societies in Northern Ireland. The input of the Financial Services Authority (FSA) will also be crucial to the process. A joint project team consisting of HMT, DETI and FSA officials has been established to take forward the legislative and non-legislative recommendations of both Reports. These discussions have proved a useful starting point. Further meetings are planned.

My Department is committed to working to implement the recommendations of the Committee and will take all steps to ensure that this is completed as soon as practically possible. A key next step will be to consult in Northern Ireland and in GB on the detail of the proposals for the reform of the regulatory framework for Northern Ireland credit unions and I am hopeful that this will happen by the end of the year.

Business Start-up Projects

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the targets her Department set for the Enterprise Development Fund for new business start-ups for last four months; and how many new businesses started during that period. (AQO 134/10)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment: Invest NI's Enterprise Development Programmes have a target of 3,800 business start ups per annum. This equates to approximately 1,267 start ups over a four month period.

Interest in the programme to date has been encouragingly high. Between its launch in April 2009 and the end of August, over 3,200 clients had met with an advisor and indicated they wished to participate in the start-up strand of the programme.

In the same period, over 360 start-ups have been recorded on the programme. It is to be expected that this figure will increase significantly in the months ahead as the programme beds in and clients work their way through the options available to them. It is interesting to note that the number of start ups recorded in August 2009 exceeds that of July 2009 by over 55%.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Incinerator on the Ballyutoag Road

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the proposal to build an incinerator on the Ballyutoag Road on the outskirts of Belfast. (AQW 473/10)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Poots): The proposal to construct an energy from waste plant on the Ballyutoag Road has been designated as an Article 31 major planning application. As this application is likely to come before me for decision it would not be appropriate to offer any assessment at this stage.

North Antrim Constituency: DOE Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) what projects his Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by his Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 536/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The table below provides details of my Department's expenditure on projects in the North Antrim constituency since May 2007.

| Projects | Expenditure £ |
|---|----------------|
| Portrush Coastal Zone: Replacement Exhibition | 63,382 |
| Dunluce Castle: Cliff stabilisation | 356,992 |
| Rathlin Island: Road upgrade and guardrail | 38,000 |
| Causeway Coast and Glens Heritage: Management of AONB | 232,007 |
| Grants for Listed Building projects | 63,379 |
| Total | 753,760 |

Legislation: DOE

Mr Savage asked the Minister of the Environment to outline any legislation his Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 547/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The legislation that my Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009, subject to Environment Committee consideration and Executive Committee approval as appropriate, is set out below:

- Wildlife Bill;
- Carbon Reduction Commitment Order;
- Local Government (Boundaries) Order (Northern Ireland); and
- Local Government (Statutory Transition Committees) Regulations (Northern Ireland).

Taxi Enforcement Officers

Rt Hon J Donaldson asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the impact of the twelve additional taxi enforcement officers appointed recently and to confirm any plans he has to recruit further such staff. (AQW 602/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I can advise that an additional 10 front line enforcement officers have been recruited by DVA to date in order to bolster up Taxi, Bus and Goods Vehicle Enforcement. Of these, 5 have been assigned to the existing taxi enforcement team based in Belfast, bringing the total compliment of front line staff dedicated to taxi enforcement at present up to 12 officers.

The recruitment of further enforcement officers will be kept under review in the light of our ongoing assessment of their impact and the resources available to the Department.

The impact of having a team of 12 dedicated taxi enforcement officers has been very positive both in terms of improved regionalised deployment and higher volumes of vehicles targeted and checked at the roadside. Between 1 August and 10 September 2009, a total of 32 taxi enforcement operations were conducted across Northern Ireland with 266 taxis checked. The following statistics refer to the geographical areas where operations were mounted and the outcome of those operations:

| Areas of Operational Deployment (Period 1/8/09 – 10/9/2009 Incl) | |
|--|--------------|
| Antrim | Strabane |
| Ballymoney | Craigavon |
| Bangor | Maghera |
| Belfast | Nutts Corner |
| Lisburn | Omagh |
| Londonderry | Newry |

Of those vehicles inspected the following detections were made:

| Nature of Offence | Number of Offences Detected |
|-----------------------------------|-----------------------------|
| No Public Service Vehicle Licence | 20 |
| No Valid Taxi Driving Licence | 7 |
| No Insurance | 6 (13 awaiting production) |
| Defective Brakes | 10 |
| Defective Lights | 14 |
| Defective Tyres | 19 |
| Other Defects | 2 |
| PSV Condition of Licence Breaches | 193 |
| Total offences detected | 271 |

Of those detections the following sanctions were applied:

| Sanctions | |
|--|----|
| Defect Notices Issued | 14 |
| Immediate Prohibition Imposed | 8 |
| Taxi Plates Suspended at Roadside | 5 |
| Prosecution Reports Generated | 41 |
| Detections pending Licensing Suspension/Revocation Reports | 15 |

Taxis: Operator Registration Scheme

Rt Hon J Donaldson asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on his plans to introduce an Operator Registration Scheme for taxis by the end of the year; and how the scheme will be implemented.

(AQW 603/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Work is on schedule to introduce the registration scheme by the end of the year. Applications for this voluntary scheme, which will be free to operators, will be available from mid October 2009. The scheme will be a forerunner to a permit scheme and then to full operator licensing. New regulations will be required for the permit scheme and full operator licensing, and work will begin once the effectiveness of the voluntary registration scheme has been assessed. It is intended that the permit scheme will be in place by 2011 and full operator licensing by 2013.

Taximeters: Specifications

Rt Hon J Donaldson asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made on the development of specifications for taximeters; and when will the fitting of such meters become mandatory. (AQW 604/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Officials have developed a modern specification for the taximeters that all taxis will have to be fitted with in due course, and work is in progress to develop the draft legislation to support the specification. We will be consulting on the specification and draft legislation later this year. Subject to that consultation and the Assembly legislative process we intend to bring new taximeter Regulations into effect by June 2010.

It is proposed that the new Regulations will apply, in the first instance, only to those taxis that already work to regulated fares i.e. Belfast public hire taxis. In many cases their existing taximeters are likely to be acceptable in the short to medium term and there is a lead-in time to allow them to replace any taximeters that will not meet the specification. Other taxi drivers will require taximeters only after the planned Northern Ireland wide taxi fare has been introduced. However, it is intended that the new Regulations will help to inform the industry about what taximeters will be acceptable in the future.

Taxis: Legislation to Regulate

Rt Hon J Donaldson asked the Minister of the Environment what plans he has to expedite any of the proposed legislation to regulate taxis, to ensure that the impact of the Taxi Act is in felt before mid 2010. (AQW 612/10)

The Minister of the Environment: When the Taxis Act was enacted it was envisaged that a programme of taxi reform would be implemented progressively over a three to five year period, as resources permitted, and that remains the intention. The first Commencement Order under the Taxis Act is expected to be introduced in October 2009. That will enable the PSNI and the Driver & Vehicle Agency to enforce taxi legislation on Belfast Harbour Commissioners land including major locations for taxis such as Belfast City Airport. My officials met with stakeholders to make them aware of the proposed changes and to help them ensure that they comply with the new requirements. Progress has also been made on some of the measures necessary to underpin future plans. For example, officials have developed a specification for the taximeters that all taxis will have to be fitted with in due course. We will be consulting on this specification later this year. We have also developed a suite of relevant fixed penalty offences; drafting has already begun on amending legislation and it is intended that these will be in place by March 2010. Preliminary discussions have been held about the review of taxi fares that is scheduled to start in 2010. Plans are at an advanced stage for the introduction by the end of this year of an operator registration scheme, with a view to moving progressively to full operator licensing by 2013. Preliminary work is under way to consolidate and modernise the specification for taxi vehicles, and this is on schedule for implementation by 2011.

Driving Licences: Commonwealth or Former Commonwealth Countries

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration is being given to the status of driving licences from Commonwealth or former Commonwealth countries, to ensure that they are recognised in Northern Ireland, as in other parts of the United Kingdom. (AQW 618/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Where a country is assessed as having a driver training, testing and licensing regime which meets the strict standards applied within the United Kingdom, it may be considered for the purpose of driving licence exchange. In practice, the assessment of candidate countries is carried out by the Driving Standards Agency (DSA) in Great Britain following a formal request from the candidate country to enter into an exchange agreement. The assessments take into consideration the quality and depth of the driving test, the robustness of the driver licensing system, security of the driving licence and other facts, such as road traffic accident and mortality rates.

Countries deemed suitable for licence exchange must be designated for such purpose by making a Designation Order. The Department has designated several countries under the Motor Vehicles (Exchangeable Licences) Order (Northern Ireland) 1994.

On 12 October 2009, the Department will bring into force a new Designation Order which will allow for the exchange of driving licences issued in the provinces and territories of Canada, the Falkland Islands, the Faroe Islands, the Principality of Monaco, South Africa and the Republic of Korea. This will mean that the exchange arrangements in Northern Ireland are the same as those throughout the rest of the United Kingdom.

The Department has not been approached by the driver licensing authorities in any other countries to enter into exchange arrangements.

Local Government Review

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 41/10, to detail the expenditure incurred on the Local Government Review, including provisions for the current year and all consultancy fees.
(AQW 633/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Further to AQW 41/10, the detail of the expenditure incurred on the Local Government Reform is set out in the tables attached.

Table 1 describes reform costs, including consultancy fees/expenses from 2005/2006 up to 31 August 2009. Please note this amount includes an additional £109,357 relating to Transition Committee funding. The table also includes details of the provisions for the current financial year.

Table 2 provides costs associated with the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner.

Taxis Act

Rt Hon J Donaldson asked the Minister of the Environment to provide an update on the first commencement order for the Taxis Act. (AQW 638/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I fully appreciate the level of concern over nuisance high hedges, and have just announced my decision to bring legislative proposals before the Executive and the Assembly. Naturally, I intend to consult publicly on these proposals. While I am unable to confirm the precise timetable at this stage, I hope that the legislation can be in place by the time that the new councils are formed in 2011.

Economic Considerations

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister of the Environment what impact the previous Minister's statement, on the weight to be given to economic considerations, has had on planning decisions. (AQW 641/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The previous Minister's statement has provided guidance to my Department on the weight to be accorded to the economic aspects of development proposals when making planning decisions, ensuring the planning system makes a full and positive contribution to the growth of the economy.

In line with the previous Minister's statement my Department will take full account of the economic aspects of a planning proposal, including the wider benefits to the regional or local economy, alongside social and environmental aspects, in so far as they are material considerations in the determination of the planning application to which they relate. In cases where the economic benefits of a proposal are significant, substantial weight is afforded to them in the determination of that planning decision.

It should be noted that this statement is now the subject of judicial review proceedings together with a further statement made by the previous Minister on 16 June 2009 on major development proposals and the development plan system. Leave was recently granted by Mr Justice Weatherup in the High Court and he will hear the case on 17 November 2009.

Historic Ruins: Alleged Damage

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on investigations into alleged damage to historic ruins situated at Ringbuoy Point in Cloughey, County Down. (AQW 650/10)

The Minister of the Environment: By way of background, a site of archaeological interest has previously been identified on the lands at Ringbuoy Point. My Department does not, however, have any records of upstanding historic ruins of any masonry or earthwork feature at this location and the site of archaeological interest does not have statutory protection under the provisions of the Historic Monuments and Archaeological Objects (NI) Order 1995.

The Department is currently investigating an alleged breach of planning control in relation to the caravan site at Ringbuoy Point Cloughey, County Down. Unfortunately I cannot provide you with more details at present as any release of information at this stage may prejudice any future potential legal action in relation to this case.

High Hedges and Trees

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment what plans his Department has to introduce legislation aimed at tackling problems with nuisance high hedges and trees. (AQW 651/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I fully appreciate the level of concern over nuisance high hedges, and have just announced my decision to bring legislative proposals before the Executive and the Assembly. Naturally, I intend to consult publicly on these proposals. While I am unable to confirm the precise timetable at this stage, I hope that the legislation can be in place by the time that the new councils are formed in 2011.

Irish Hare Population

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the latest figures showing the rise in the Irish hare population, if he will consider introducing the Irish hare into the quarry list again. (AQW 667/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department has undertaken a series of night driven transect surveys of Irish hares in Northern Ireland since 2002. These have indicated that the Irish hare population can be subject to wide annual population fluctuations. The present series is due to be completed in 2010 after which an assessment will be made regarding the general trend of the population.

The 2009 survey indicated a slight fall in the population of Irish hares, although this was not significant. Based on this result I have decided to bring forward another temporary Special Protection Order (SPO) for Irish hares to commence in December 2009.

Irish hares will revert to their original status when the Temporary SPO has expired. The requirement for further protection, whether temporary or permanent, will be assessed when the 2010 survey has been completed and in the light of future proposals within a revised Irish hare Species Action Plan.

Race Tracks at Nutts Corner

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment if all possible measures are in place to monitor noise from both legal and illegal race tracks at Nutts Corner. (AQW 676/10)

The Minister of the Environment: District council's as the statutory regulatory authority have powers under the Pollution Control and Local Government (NI) Order 1978 to investigate, monitor and take enforcement action for noise nuisance from motor sport race tracks. The powers also extend to neighbouring councils to take action against a noise nuisance that arises outside their jurisdiction.

Race Tracks at Nutts Corner

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment to list all existing legal race track sites and all illicit sites at Nutts Corner. (AQW 677/10)

The Minister of the Environment: There are two approved and lawful motorsport tracks at Nutts Corner. One is the long established Nutts Corner Motorsport Centre at Dundrod Road. The other is a stock car track at Moira Road known as Nutts Corner Raceway.

Currently, there are no illegal tracks at Nutts Corner. However, Planning Service is investigating 4 alleged unauthorised tracks in the Moira Road area of Nutts Corner.

Orange Arches

Mr Butler asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of orange arches that have been erected in each of the last three years which (i) met his Department's planning regulations; or (ii) were not approved by his Department or did not meet planning regulations. (AQW 696/10)

The Minister of the Environment: My Department does not receive planning applications for any type of Ceremonial Arches and has no records of the numbers erected.

Historically Planning Service has not required planning applications to be submitted as these are temporary structures ultimately removed in a reasonable timescale. Issues relating to the structural safety of the arch are dealt with by DRD Roads Service under the Roads Order.

Pollution Incidents

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment to list all pollution incidents which have occurred in the Shimna River below Fofanny Water Treatment Works in the last three years; and to detail (i) the severity; (ii) the source of the pollution; and (iii) what sanctions were imposed. (AQW 713/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has confirmed that from 1 January 2006 to date, there has been one report of potential pollution impacting the Shimna River below Fofanny Water Treatment Works.

The pollution incident occurred on 20 September 2009 and was considered as high severity by NIEA officials. The source of the pollution remains under investigation.

Given that the incident investigation remains 'live', no enforcement action has been initiated against any party at this time. However, NIEA normally seeks to carry out an enforcement action for High and Medium Severity water pollution incidents where the polluter is identified. Sanctions are ultimately a matter for the courts.

Marine Bill

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment why there is a delay in progressing the Marine Bill. (AQW 727/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The position on the Northern Ireland Marine Bill remains unchanged from that given to the Assembly on 2 March 2009. I remain committed to introducing legislation to the Assembly in 2011, subject to Executive approval, with a view to its being on the Statute Book in 2012.

The UK Marine and Coastal Access Bill, which contains provisions relevant to Northern Ireland, is expected to receive Royal Assent this autumn.

Unroadworthy Vehicles

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment how many joint operations were carried out in the last 12 months by staff from the vehicle test centres and the PSNI to detect unroadworthy vehicles; and what were the findings. (AQW 771/10)

The Minister of the Environment: On the road enforcement work by the Driver & Vehicle Agency is undertaken by a specialist team and is not part of the general work of staff based in vehicle test centres.

In the period 1 October 2008 to 30 September 2009, DVA enforcement officers carried out 4 joint enforcement operations with the PSNI. Operations were undertaken at Ballymena, Larne and Newry resulting in 34 vehicles examined of which 30 (88%) were discovered to be unroadworthy.

Those detections resulted in the following sanctions being applied at the roadside:

| Defect Notices Issued | Immediate Prohibition Imposed (for serious mechanical defects) | Prosecution Reports Generated |
|-----------------------|--|-------------------------------|
| 10 | 11 | 14 |

Staff employed by DVA can also operate independently from the PSNI and have a wide range of powers to enable them to stop, inspect, direct, detain vehicles or drivers and if offences are detected proceedings may be initiated for this through the Public Prosecution Service.

Local Government Service Delivery

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the conclusions of the Pricewaterhouse Coopers report on Local Government Service Delivery; and the monetary and non-monetary costs in the economic appraisal of the options. (AQW 776/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The PricewaterhouseCoopers report on Local Government Service Delivery is currently under development; this includes the economic appraisal aspects of the options. However, once completed and considered by the Strategic Leadership Board, I will make the report public.

Review of Public Administration

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment how much has been spent by his Department on the Review of Public Administration. (AQW 777/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I refer the member to my responses to his previous questions - AQW 41/10 and AQW 633/10.

Fox Predation

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he intends to take to address the concerns of the Grouse group about fox predation reducing the number of grouse. (AQW 785/10)

The Minister of the Environment: A Northern Ireland Species Action Plan for Red Grouse was published in 2008.

The inaugural meeting of the Northern Ireland Red Grouse Species Action Plan Steering Group was held on 21 September 2009. A wide range of interests were represented at the meeting. Predator control was one of many issues discussed.

This Group will advise on the effective delivery of the Action Plan, encourage the implementation of the identified actions and ensure effective outcomes.

Predator control is an issue traditionally dealt with by moorland managers in local areas. However, I will ask the Northern Ireland Environment Agency to keep me informed of the recommendations from the Group as they develop their discussions.

Grouse Project

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the significant financial contributions made by private benefactors to the Grouse Project; whether grouse numbers can be increased and sustained. (AQW 787/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The inaugural meeting of the Northern Ireland Red Grouse Species Action Plan Steering Group was held on 21 September 2009. The aim of the Action Plan is to increase the population of red grouse across Northern Ireland. The Group is chaired by Roger Pollen of the British Association of Shooting and Conservation and a very positive first meeting covered a wide range of issues.

A wide range of interests and stakeholders were represented at the meeting, including the Glenwherry Upland Regeneration Project. This is a moorland habitat improvement project which is showing encouraging benefits for managing red grouse populations and has been supported by a number of private benefactors.

The participation of moorland managers in the grouse group is to be welcomed and their knowledge and experience will be of benefit to the group's aim of achieving increased red grouse numbers.

Jellyfish Population

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what steps the NI Environment Agency is taking to ensure that the small purple jellyfish population explosion which has invaded that coast of Antrim and Down is contained, to prevent damage to the salmon industry. (AQW 788/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) Fisheries Division is responsible for issues connected with commercial sea fisheries.

However, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has a statutory responsibility for marine nature conservation and as such undertakes marine surveillance and monitoring. It can also provide scientific advice on the distribution and extent of jellyfish blooms to other Departments, Agencies and coastal stakeholders.

On 16 September 2009, NIEA informed Glenarm Organic Salmon, DARD Fisheries Division, the National Trust and coastal Councils of the presence of significant numbers of mauve stinger jellyfish off the North Antrim coast. NIEA also advised DARD to request that the Marine and Fisheries Agency of the UK Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs fly over the area in their surveillance aircraft to determine the extent of the infestation.

The mauve stinger is occasionally present in coastal waters but is typically found offshore and in small numbers. Containment of jellyfish blooms at sea is not a feasible option. It is the responsibility of each fishing operator to make contingency plans to protect its interests and to guard against jellyfish blooms.

Brown Hare and the Irish Hare

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment if he is aware that the inter-breeding of the Brown Hare and the Irish Hare is causing concern to naturalists; and what steps he intends to take to control and monitor the problem. (AQW 789/10)

The Minister of the Environment: I am aware of the potential impact of hybridisation on the Irish hare.

The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has raised this with other members of the Irish hare Species Action Plan Steering Group. As a result, a 'Brown hare sub-group' has recently been formed to consider the issue.

NIEA previously funded scientists at Queens University (QUB) to undertake genetic analysis of road kill specimens of both Irish and Brown hares, which subsequently confirmed that hybridisation had occurred between the two species in Northern Ireland. This study has revealed that there is two-way hybridisation taking place; female Irish hares mating with Brown hares and female Brown hares mating with Irish hares. This gives concern for the protection of the 'uniqueness' of our native Irish hare population.

To fully assess the impacts of this hybridisation, NIEA has commissioned QUB to produce a report which will highlight the risks and provide options/recommendations on how to address the problem.

NIEA has requested that the report is assessed and peer-reviewed by a panel of international hare experts from countries where similar 'inter-breeding' has caused concern for native hare populations.

Local Government Boundary Commissioner

Dr Farry asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the timescale for bringing the final recommendations of the Local Government Boundary Commissioner to the Assembly. (AQW 809/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The final recommendations of the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner will be given effect, with or without modification, by a Local Government (Boundaries) Order. This is subject to consideration by the Executive. I will lay the Local Government Boundaries Commissioner's Final Recommendations Report in the Assembly, together with a draft Order giving effect to the recommendations, with or without modifications and, if necessary, a statement of the reasons for any modifications at the earliest opportunity after Executive consideration is completed.

Bridleways

Dr Farry asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the policy of his Department on the (i) protection and (ii) future provision of bridleways. (AQW 810/10)

The Minister of the Environment: Responsibility for the assertion, protection and provision of bridleways lies with District councils under the Access to the Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

The Northern Ireland Environment Agency, through its Natural Heritage Grants Programme, supports the Countryside Access and Activities Network (CAAN). CAAN's objectives include working with the British Horse Society on the development of off-road horse riding trails for public use.

Bridleways

Dr Farry asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the provision of bridleways in Northern Ireland compared to other jurisdictions within the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 811/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Department does not hold data on bridleways in Northern Ireland as responsibility for their provision lies with District Councils under the Access to the Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

Planning Management Board

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 173/10, to detail the number of hours and the estimated cost of legal advice sought by the Planning Management Board. (AQW 812/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The time and cost of providing the legal advice in relation to the Aurora Application, as advised by the Departmental Solicitor, was 7.66 hours totalling £1,019.67.

Planning Appeals Commission

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment (i) when the Planning Appeals Commission intends to report its findings on the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan to the Planning Service; and (ii) when the Planning Service intends to publish the final plan. (AQW 918/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The Draft Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan 2015 (BMAP) was published in November 2004. The Public Inquiry commenced in April 2007 and concluded in May 2008.

The Planning Appeals Commission (PAC) is currently considering all the information before it prior to completing its report and making its recommendations to the Department. The PAC has indicated a preliminary timescale for delivery of the report to Planning Service as early summer 2010. Any review of timescales undertaken by the PAC may advance the Report or elements of the Report.

In October 2008, the Department wrote to the PAC and requested the early release of that part of the BMAP Report relating to strategic retail issues, including Sprucefield. The PAC took the view that this was a discrete issue and, as the public sessions of the Inquiry were complete, it could comply with the Department's request. The Commission issued the report to the Department on 21 January 2009, and it is now available to the public on request.

Upon receipt of the remainder of the report, Planning Service will consider the recommendations of the PAC and prepare the Plan for adoption. Although the date of adoption will be dependent on the date that the PAC Report is received, it is unlikely that the Plan will be adopted before 2011.

Rose Energy: Planning Application

Mr Burns asked the Minister of the Environment when a decision will be made regarding the planning application by Rose Energy to build an incinerator in Glenavy. (AQW 966/10)

The Minister of the Environment: The planning application, accompanied by an Environmental Statement, for a biomass fuelled power plant at Ballyvannon Road Glenavy was submitted to Planning Service on 4 June 2008. Article 31 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 was applied to the proposal on 23 September 2008, designating the proposal as a major application.

Following initial consideration of the power plant application, additional environmental information was requested on 11 February 2009 as an Addendum to the Environmental Statement. The Addendum was submitted to Planning Service on 12 June 2009. At the same time Rose Energy also submitted a new separate planning application for the abstraction of water directly from Lough Neagh. The new application for water abstraction is accompanied by an Environmental Statement. The water abstraction application was designated Article 31 on 11 August 2009 and is being processed in tandem with the power plant planning application.

On 28 August 2009 Rose Energy submitted a further addendum to the Environmental Statement accompanying the power plant application. The addendum comprises an amended Noise Assessment and was submitted voluntarily by Rose Energy. Consultations on the addendum were issued to the relevant consultees on 1 September 2009. Neighbour re-notification in respect of the addendum issued on 7 September 2009 and advertisement took place on 9, 10 and 11 September 2009. Advertisement of the addendum in the Antrim newspapers and in the three daily newspapers will take place on 7, 8 and 9 October 2009. In accordance with the Environmental Impact Assessment Regulations, the public have been given 4 weeks from the date of advertisement to submit representations regarding the environmental effects of the proposals. The 4 week period will end on 6 November 2009.

A number of detailed and technical objection reports were submitted to Planning Service, on behalf of the Communities Against Lough Neagh Incinerator (CALNI), on 18 and 21 September 2009 and the advice of expert consultees has been sought on the content of these reports.

My department is processing both planning applications as quickly as it is possible to do so and I hope to be in a position to take a decision on the way forward in the near future.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Quangos

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many quangos and similar bodies are currently operational. (AQW 372/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Mr Wilson): The total number of Northern Ireland public bodies in operation on 14 September 2009 was 74.

All public bodies sponsored by Northern Ireland departments are listed in the annual public bodies report.

The most recent published report is for 2008 and is available in the Assembly library. The 2009 report (position at 31 March 2009) is currently being finalised and will be available in the Assembly Library by the end of October.

Building (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, with reference to F1 and F2 of the Building (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006, what checks does his Department carry out to make sure that (i) building certificates are not being issued without the required air tightness testing certificates; and (ii) those carrying out such tests are suitably accredited and qualified. (AQW 466/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Technical Booklets F1 (for dwellings) and F2 (for buildings other than dwellings) of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000 (as amended) set out standards and construction methods that, if adhered to, will be deemed to have satisfied the requirements of Part F (Conservation of fuel and power) of the Regulations. Technical Booklets have no force under statute, and there is no obligation to comply with the methods or standards set out in them, however if an applicant decides to deviate from these standards, he must demonstrate to the satisfaction of Building Control that the requirements of the regulations have been met.

If an air tightness test is to be carried out, the tester must be suitably qualified and be registered and approved by an appropriate professional body such as the British Institute of Non-Destructive Testing.

Under Article 11 of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 (as amended), district councils have a duty to enforce building regulations in their council area. It is up to each council to determine the appropriate method of enforcement for their council area, and to liaise with other councils to ensure consistency of approach. There is no enforcement role for the Department under this legislation.

Building (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in relation to F1 and F2 of the Building (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006 (i) what controls and checks are undertaken by Building Control in each local council area to ensure that air tightness tests are carried out to the required standards as set out in the Air Tightness Testing and Measurement Association's publication 'Measuring air permeability of building envelopes'; and (ii) if he can confirm that the engineers carrying out such tests are suitably qualified and accredited.

(AQW 471/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Technical Booklets F1 (for dwellings) and F2 (for buildings other than dwellings) of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000 (as amended) set out standards and construction methods that, if adhered to, will be deemed to have satisfied the requirements of Part F (Conservation of fuel and power) of the Regulations. Technical Booklets have no force under statute, and there is no obligation to comply with the methods or standards set out in them, however if an applicant decides to deviate from these standards, he must demonstrate to the satisfaction of Building Control that the requirements of the regulations have been met.

If an air tightness test is to be carried out, the tester must be suitably qualified and be registered and approved by an appropriate professional body such as the British Institute of Non-Destructive Testing.

Under Article 11 of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 (as amended), district councils have a duty to enforce building regulations in their council area. It is up to each council to determine the appropriate method of enforcement for their council area, and to liaise with other councils to ensure consistency of approach. There is no enforcement role for the Department under this legislation.

Building (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what assurances each council can provide that Building Certificates are not being issued without air tightness tests being carried out and to the required professional standards under F1 and F2 of the Building (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006.

(AQW 472/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Technical Booklets F1 and F2 set out the standards and methods of construction that, if adhered to, will be deemed to have satisfied the requirements of Part F (Conservation of fuel and power) of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000 (as amended). There is no legal obligation to adhere to the standards or methods set out in the Technical Booklets, however if a designer decides to adopt an alternative standard or method, he must satisfy the district council that the requirements of the regulations are met.

If an air tightness test is to be carried out, the tester must be suitably qualified and be registered and approved by an appropriate professional body such as the British Institute of Non-Destructive Testing.

Under Article 11 of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 (as amended), district councils are tasked with enforcing the regulations within their council area. It is a matter for each council to determine an appropriate level of enforcement of each aspect of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000. As the local government function falls within the remit of the Department of the Environment, it would not be appropriate for my Department to dictate how district councils fulfil their enforcement duties.

Land and Property Service

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what systems are currently in place for the transfer of information, relating to land or property owners, from the Land and Property Service to NI Water.

(AQW 520/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: Land & Property Services does not transfer information on land or property owners to NI Water.

Land & Property Services extracts Net Annual Values and related Valuation List information for non-domestic properties from its valuation and rating computer systems, and provides this data to NI Water to enable the calculation of the variable charge in respect of the unmeasured (non-metered) non-domestic properties.

Flooding Incident Line

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many customers has the new Flooding Incident Line dealt with since its inception. (AQW 560/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Flooding Incident Line has dealt with 1,465 customers since its inception up until 18 September 2009.

| 1st Quarter (Jan - Mar) | 2nd Quarter (Apr - Jun) | 3rd Quarter (Jul - Sep*) | 2009 to date |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|--------------------------|--------------|
| 292 | 427 | 746 | 1465 |

*Note: Incomplete quarter; figures for period up until 18 September.

Flooding Incident Line

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what evaluation process has been put in place to assess the effectiveness of the new Flooding Incident Line. (AQW 561/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: There are several processes to assess the effectiveness of the Flooding Incident Line.

Statistics reflecting the number of calls received and the time taken to answer each call are examined on a weekly basis and also after all major incidents.

A report detailing all of the reported incidents from the previous day is circulated to the three Flood Response Agencies on a daily basis to assess the quality and accuracy of the information recorded.

A selection of calls are sampled and listened to for quality assurance purposes.

FIL has a complaints procedure in place should a complaint be received from a caller.

Flooding Incident Line

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if his Department intends to put customer satisfaction surveys in place or carry out customer check ups, in relation to the Flooding Incident Line. (AQW 562/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The Flooding Incident Line (FIL) is operated under the NI Direct Programme. NI Direct is Customer Contact Association (CCA) accredited and regularly runs satisfaction surveys such as “mystery shoppers”. The intention is to extend these checks to the FIL now that it has been established. In addition, a sample of callers will also be included in the 2009 DFP Customer Satisfaction Survey.

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans he has to change employment levels within his Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 599/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: My assessment is that the number of posts in the Department is likely to reduce by up to 75 in the next 12 months.

I expect to achieve this reduction by not filling vacant posts, dispensing with temporary staff, redeployment to other Departments and by natural wastage.

I do not foresee a redundancy situation in the next 12 months.

Recruitment Prospects

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the current recruitment prospects in each Department for (i) males aged 18-24; and (ii) females aged 18-24. (AQW 652/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: It is Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) policy that all eligible persons shall have equal opportunity for employment, training and advancement in the NICS on the basis of their ability and aptitude for the work. All recruitment to NICS Departments is open and fair and in accordance with the NI Civil Service Commissioners Code. All external competitions are advertised in the Belfast Telegraph, Irish News, Newsletter and on www.nicsrecruitment.gov.uk, www.jobcentreonline.com and www.nijobs.com. These competitions are open to all who meet the criteria for the position regardless of gender or age.

Lease Arrangements

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) how many 99 year lease arrangements his Department approved in the last three years; (ii) how many 25 year lease arrangements his Department approved in the last three years; and (iii) to list all bodies and organisations operating both 99 and 25 year leases. (AQW 682/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: DFP has not approved any 99 year lease arrangements in the last three years;

DFP has not approved any 25 year lease arrangements in the last three years;

None of DFP's Agencies has a lease over 25 years. DFP itself has one property held on a 125 year lease.

Cold-Related Illness

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many people died of a cold related illness in each of the last three winters. (AQW 685/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The following table provides figures for the annual number of deaths registered in Northern Ireland where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate for 2006 to 2008.

Number of deaths registered with a mention of hypothermia¹ on the death certificate, Northern Ireland, 2006 to 2008.

| | 2006 | 2007 | 2008(P) |
|---|------|------|---------|
| Deaths with mention of hypothermia on death certificate | 15 | 13 | 18 |

¹ Deaths with a mention of hypothermia defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) code T68.

(P) 2008 data is provisional

Barnett Formula

Dr Farry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the conclusions and recommendations in the report by the House of Lords Select Committee on the Barnett Formula, including its consistency with the evidence presented by the Head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service. (AQW 807/10)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel: The conclusions of the House of Lords Select Committee on the Barnett Formula report produced in July 2009 are consistent with the written evidence presented by the Head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service and the oral evidence given by DFP officials to the Committee.

Northern Ireland officials had expressed concern about the need to have recognition of relative regional need in any funding allocation mechanism that might succeed the Barnett Formula. Officials also stressed the importance of having transparency and independence in any new funding mechanism. Both these issues lie at the heart of the conclusions presented by the Select Committee.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

IT Systems: DHSSPS

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) all new IT systems that were installed in his Department; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date, in the last five years. (AQW 259/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Mr McGimpsey): In addition to the accounting, personnel, records management and infrastructure systems that were installed in all Departments as part of the NICS Reforms Programme, the following IT systems were installed in DHSSPS in the last five years:

| System | Initial Budget | Actual Cost | Estimated Start Date | Actual Start Date |
|----------------------------|----------------|-------------|----------------------|-------------------|
| Emergency Contact System | £71,000 | £73,000 | April 2004 | September 2004 |
| HPSS Superannuation System | £2,364,000 | £2,519,000 | October 2007 | October 2007 |

The Emergency Contact System was installed as a means of bringing together teams to respond in the event of an emergency.

The HPSS Superannuation System was a replacement system to administer pensions for ex-employees of the HPSS.

ME Service at Belfast City Hospital

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he is aware that the M.E. service at Belfast City Hospital has ceased to accept further referrals. (AQW 262/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Belfast Trust has advised that the clinic at Belfast City Hospital was being provided on a voluntary basis by a consultant with a special interest in ME. Due to the pressure of competing priorities that consultant is no longer available to provide this service and no new cases have been referred since 2 July 2009.

As you will be aware, the allocation of resources for specific services is a matter for the Health and Social Care Board. I understand that to date the Board has not received a business case for a fully commissioned service for ME.

However, people suffering from this very debilitating condition continue to have access to appropriate care and treatment, ranging from primary and community care to specialist regional neurology services, depending on their assessed individual needs.

I can also advise that I have commissioned the HSC Board to undertake a full and comprehensive evaluation and report of the effectiveness of the implementation of the recommendations in the 2002 review of neurology services and a report is expected next year.

ME Provision at Belfast City Hospital

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will guarantee that the M.E. provision at Belfast City Hospital, which is the sole Health Service facility, will continue to provide this service. (AQW 263/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Belfast Trust has advised that the clinic at Belfast City Hospital was being provided on a voluntary basis by a consultant with a special interest in ME. Due to the pressure of competing priorities that consultant is no longer available to provide this service and no new cases have been referred since 2 July 2009.

Fertility Treatment

Mrs Long asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he will take to ensure that Belfast Health and Social Care Trust will adhere to NICE guidelines which stipulate that people should receive three courses of fertility treatment. (AQW 264/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Northern Ireland aspires to provide the full three cycles of fertility treatment as recommended by NICE however financial constraints currently make this unachievable. The current provision of one publicly funded cycle of treatment is comparable to many other areas of the United Kingdom.

I have recently announced an additional £1.5m recurrent funding for fertility services. This, in addition to an investment of £800k in a waiting list initiative, means that no patient will now wait more than 12 months for treatment from being placed on a waiting list. It is hoped that it will also be possible to introduce a cycle of Frozen Embryo Transfer in addition to the currently funded stimulated cycle of treatment where this is appropriate.

Transport Entitlements

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why, in the case of transport entitlements, for people with learning disabilities, the Western Health and Social Care Trust makes distinctions between adults who are in foster care and adults who are adopted; and if such distinctions are part of his Department's policies. (AQW 282/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Access to Trust transport services is provided on the basis of assessed need where an individual is assessed as requiring a Social Care service, using the eligibility criteria established in A Transport Strategy for Health & Social Care Services in Northern Ireland 2007.

The Western Health & Social Care Trust makes no distinction between adults, who were formerly in foster care placements, or adults who were subject to adoption. The needs for Social Care Services and access to transport to facilitate attendance are assessed on an individual case basis, and those needs met within available resources.

The Trust has no responsibility for transport to activities other than those provided directly, or contracted out, by the Trust.

Cosmetic Surgery: Prisoners

Mr Burns asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many serving prisoners have had cosmetic surgery funded by the Health Service in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 290/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: This information is not available as the hospital Patient Administration System does not record if patients attending for any type of procedure are serving prisoners for reasons of patient confidentiality.

Cardiac Surgery

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many inpatients are currently awaiting urgent cardiac surgery and (ii) what is the acceptable waiting time for these patients once they have been accepted by a cardiac surgeon. (AQW 304/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

- (i) On 14th September 26 patients who had been accepted for cardiac surgery were waiting in hospital. In addition a further 6 patients who had been referred to cardiac surgery were waiting for a decision to treat. All patients who remain in hospital whilst waiting for cardiac surgery can be deemed as urgent.
- (ii) A Clinical Advisory Group has agreed regional guidelines and standards for Trusts including a target that all patients who have been accepted for cardiac surgery and are required to stay in hospital until that surgery is complete should have a date for surgery within 28 days of the decision to treat.

Social Care Trust Staff

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many Health and Social Care Trust staff are currently employed on fixed term contracts; (ii) how many employees have been transferred from fixed term to permanent contracts since April 2009; and (iii) to outline the criteria which apply to such changes in contractual terms. (AQW 322/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information is not available in the format requested. The type of employment contract is a matter for the HSC organisations and my Department could only establish this information at a disproportionate cost.

Primary Carers

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many carers are registered; (ii) how many school age children does the Department know, or estimate, to be the primary carer in a household; and (iii) how many people over 60 does the Department know or estimate to be the primary carer in a household in the Banbridge and Craigavon Council areas. (AQW 342/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is assumed that this question relates to informal carers. The information is not available in the format requested.

Cardiac Rehabilitation

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what provision is made by (i) his Department; (ii) the Regional Health and Social Care Board; and (iii) by each Health and Social Care Trust to facilitate cardiac rehabilitation. (AQW 350/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

- (i) In June this year, I launched the Service Framework for Cardiovascular Health and Wellbeing, which sets a standard that "all patients identified as requiring cardiac rehabilitation, in line with regional guidelines, should be offered this service". A baseline audit to establish current levels of access to these services will be carried out by March 2010.
- (ii) A Clinical Advisory Group has agreed regional guidelines and standards for Trusts, which the HSC Board will use to monitor performance against the Cardiovascular Service Framework.
- (iii) Cardiac rehabilitation programmes are currently provided in 16 centres province-wide. Each of the Trusts currently offer cardiac rehabilitation at three different centres, apart from the Northern Trust, which offers the service at four centres.

Cardiovascular Health and Wellbeing Service Framework

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following the publication of the Cardiovascular Health and Wellbeing Service Framework, if his Department will (i) set targets for its delivery; and (ii) invest in cardiac rehabilitation services. (AQW 352/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety:

- (i) Target performance levels for these standards will be determined when all baselines have been established by March 2010. Where there is already a data source in place, the standards are to be fully implemented by March 2010. For the remaining standards, data sources and baselines are to be established by March 2010. The HSC Board will monitor and report to the Department on the achievement of all targets on a six-monthly basis.
- (ii) The current budget for 2008/09 to 2010/11 includes £12million for cardiovascular services, £14million for stroke services, £11million for renal capacity, and a non-recurrent bridging supplement to support the delivery of the Framework, including cardiac rehabilitation.

Dementia

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if Health and Social Care Trusts are obliged to obtain all facts pertaining to people diagnosed with dementia; and if they are further obliged to inform those who prescribe and care for those people diagnosed with dementia of all the facts. (AQW 360/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Every person diagnosed with dementia receives an individual, multi-disciplinary assessment of their needs. This will be conducted by a range of professionals who will consider the service user's physical, psychological and social functioning.

This information is recorded, collated and distributed to authorised persons involved in the ongoing treatment and care of the patient, when appropriate and necessary.

Freedom of Information

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if Health and Social Care Trusts are obliged, under the Freedom of Information Act 2000, to supply information in answer to enquiries within twenty working days, or alternatively advise within twenty working days if the requested information is not known. (AQW 361/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Health and Social Care Trusts are compelled by the Freedom of Information Act 2000 to inform any person making a request for information, whether it holds the information and if it does, to provide that information, subject to consideration of exemptions afforded to all public authorities by Part 2 of the Act. They must comply promptly and not later than twenty working days after receipt of the request.

Health Service: Employees

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the numbers of Health Service employees working in laboratories delivering pathology services have changed in the past five years. (AQW 362/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Please see information requested in the table below

Notes:

- 1 The Northern Trust advises that the drop in numbers for 2007 to 2008 is due to the relocation of the Infection Control Team from Laboratory to Clinical Governance.
- 2 The Belfast Trust can only identify Headcount for 2008 and the decrease in the WTE figures for 2007 – 2008 has been attributed to the amalgamation of the 6 Trusts to the Belfast Trust with the efficiency savings, the MORE project and the Comprehensive Spending Review leading to reprofiling.
- 3 The Western Trust can only provide figures for 2007 and 2008.
- 4 H/C = Headcount, WTE = whole-time equivalent. WTE is calculated by aggregating the total number of hours that staff in a grade are contracted to work, and dividing by the standard hours for that grade.

Notes:

- 1 Southern Trust figures for this category relate to haematology and coagulation services. NI Blood Transfusion figures relate to all laboratory staff. All other Trust figures relate to all services mentioned in this category and cannot be separately identified.
- 2 Southern Trust are unable to assign their administrative staff to the requested services, therefore not included in this table are a further 29 (24.99 WTE) administrative staff who provide support to all laboratories.
- 3 HC = headcount, WTE = whole-time equivalent. WTE is calculated by aggregating the total number of hours that staff in a grade are contracted to work, and dividing by the standard hours for that grade.
- 4 n/a = not applicable. The Northern, South Eastern, Southern Trusts and NI Blood Transfusion Service do not provide immunology services.

Health Service: Hospital Laboratories

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the numbers of employees within Health Service hospital laboratories delivering (i) clinical chemistry; (ii) immunology; (iii) haematology; (iv) coagulation; and (v) blood transfusion services have changed in the past five years. (AQW 364/10)

Mental Health Issues

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many programmes, established to address mental health issues, are operating in the Greater Belfast area receive funding from his Department. (AQW 385/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My Department funds the Health and Social Care Board which commissions from Belfast Trust a broad range of mental health promotion, primary care, community and inpatient services and programmes to address mental health issues in the Greater Belfast area.

Mental Health Issues

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide a breakdown of programmes established to address mental health issues within the Greater Belfast area, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 386/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is not possible to give a detailed breakdown of programmes established to address mental health issues within the Greater Belfast area. This could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust is responsible for delivering a broad range of mental health services and programmes in Greater Belfast. These cover mental health promotion, primary care, community mental health provision and inpatient facilities. The Trust also commissions additional support services from the independent sector.

Mental Health Issues

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety who regulates the work, care and/or treatment of programmes established within the Greater Belfast area to address mental health issues.

(AQW 387/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: A dedicated team within the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority is responsible for inspecting and reviewing mental health services across Northern Ireland. Its remit covers:

- Conducting reviews into monitoring and improvement arrangements;
- Carrying out investigations and inspections;
- Recommending actions for improvement; and
- Reporting unacceptable, poor quality or insignificant failings to the Department.

Individual mental health professionals are regulated by their respective professional bodies.

Contact Youth

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 3888/09, (i) what partnerships between Contact Youth and other counselling providers to deliver services in the Foyle constituency were extended after 31 March 2009; (ii) whether any other counselling providers had the opportunity to add their services to the Contact Youth folio at that time; (iii) how many clients have been assisted by Contact Youth since its contract commenced; and (iv) how much public monies have been drawn down as part of that contract to date.

(AQW 394/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: In delivering the “Lifeline” service, Contact Youth has developed partnerships with a number of organisations which provide counselling, mentoring, befriending, and complementary services in the Western Health & Social Care Trust area. With regard to the specific information requested, I can confirm that:-

- (i) Information on partnerships is not held by parliamentary constituency, but is available at Health and Social Care Trust level. Lifeline service provision contracts with Contact Youth were extended after 31 March 2009 with the following organizations in the Western HSC Trust area:- Aisling Centre; Zest; CALMS, Northwest Counselling; Cunamh.
- (ii) Contact Youth held information days for tendering for Lifeline contracted services in February 2008 and June 2008. Information about the tendering process was advertised in the Belfast Telegraph, and placed on the Contact Youth and Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action websites. Contact Youth also addresses gaps in service provision by approaching community based organisations located in areas where there is low support service provision. These approaches are made through the local suicide prevention networks. Two organisations in the Western HSC Trust area expressed an interest in tendering to offer counselling services and were provided with the necessary information to submit a tender. One of these organisations has tendered and a contract will be signed shortly.
- (iii) Lifeline came into operation at the end of January 2008. By the end of August 2009, the service has dealt with 119,208 calls from people seeking help. Over this period, 3,275 callers have been referred to the various support services - 17% of these referrals have been within the Western HSC Trust Area.
- (iv) The draw down of funding for the Regional Crisis Helpline Service is as follows:- £456,000 (2007/08); £3,500,000 (2008/09); £1,867,000 (to date for 2009/10).

Mental Health Issues

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what standards of clinical excellence are applied to programmes established within the Greater Belfast area to address mental health issues. (AQW 395/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Belfast Trust, which is responsible for the provision of healthcare in the Greater Belfast area, delivers mental health assessment, treatment and care programmes in accordance with a range of quality standards laid down by my Department, professional bodies, employers, the Trust itself, legislation and the National Council for Clinical Excellence.

Mental Health Issues

Lord Browne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what method of assessment has been applied to programmes established to address mental health issues within the Greater Belfast area to evaluate their effectiveness and lasting benefit to the patients. (AQW 396/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Programmes which the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust directly provides to address mental health issues within the Greater Belfast area are subject to clinical governance arrangements, including internal audit, to independent review and inspection by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority and to review and inspection by my Department.

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQO 6/10 to detail all (i) correspondence; and (ii) meetings he has had since assuming office with (a) the Children's Commissioner; and (b) with the NIO, in relation to child sexual abuse. (AQW 407/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Since assuming office, I have met and corresponded with the Children's Commissioner and the Northern Ireland Office on a number of occasions regarding a wide range of children's issues. Some will have involved direct discussion about policy matters relating to the protection of children including child sexual abuse.

In addition, there continues to be co-operation at official level in both Departments on existing and developing safeguarding policy and at service delivery level particularly between Trusts and the PSNI.

Dates of meetings and correspondence relating to safeguarding issues which have been identified are as follows:

| Children's Commissioner Meetings | |

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQO 6/10, if he will contact the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland requesting that an investigation into child sexual abuse in environments of trust or care facilities organised or overseen by (i) the Roman Catholic church; (ii) other religious denominations or organisations; and (iii) the state. (AQW 409/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The statutory framework in Northern Ireland requires that where allegations of child abuse come to light these must be reported immediately to PSNI and Social Services for investigation. If such allegations are reported to PSNI then I would expect that a full and thorough investigation will be undertaken.

If anyone has any information regarding any allegations of child abuse they should report these immediately to the statutory authorities for investigation so that perpetrators can be brought before the courts where this is appropriate.

Hoax Phone Calls: Ambulance Depots

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many hoax phone calls were responded to by each ambulance depot in each of the last five years. (AQW 410/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is contained in the following table:

N.B. The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service records hoax calls under four separate data headings: hoax caller; no case at scene; nothing found at scene; and patient absconded.

Hoax Phone Calls: Fire Stations

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many hoax phone calls were responded to by each fire station in each of the last five years. (AQW 414/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is shown in the table, which indicates that, over the past five years, the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service has reduced the number of hoax call mobilisations by 36%.

Swine Flu

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money has been identified out of the existing health budget to help pay for Swine Flu treatment costs. (AQW 417/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It estimated that Swine Flu will cost the Department between £65m and £96m this financial year. The current best estimate predicts costs of £78m.

The Department has put in place, with considerable difficulty given the budgetary pressures it faces, plans to meet £27m of these costs.

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr Simpson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment his Department has made of the need for an investigation into child sexual abuse in environments of trust or care facilities organised or overseen by (i) the Roman Catholic church; (ii) other religious denominations or organisations; and (iii) the state. (AQW 419/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The statutory framework in Northern Ireland requires that where allegations of child abuse come to light these must be reported immediately to PSNI and Social Services for investigation. Anyone who has any information regarding any allegations of child abuse should report these immediately to the statutory authorities for investigation so that perpetrators can be brought before the courts where this is appropriate.

Alcohol Addiction

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people are currently receiving treatment for alcohol addiction in each Health and Social Care Trust area. (AQW 442/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

Carers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children are currently registered as carers for parents or siblings. (AQW 452/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is assumed that this question relates to the number of children who are informal carers for parents or siblings.

The information is not available in the format requested.

Joint Protocol Investigations

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Joint Protocol Investigations Social Services have undertaken with the PSNI on suspected cases of child abuse, cruelty and/or neglect in the last twelve months. (AQW 454/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on how many Joint Protocol Investigations Social Services have undertaken with the PSNI on suspected cases of child abuse, cruelty and/or neglect in the last 12 months is not available.

GP Surgeries: Premium Cost Phone System

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to change the present premium cost phone system for contact with GP surgeries as many people with mobile phones cannot afford to ring their doctor. (AQW 460/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My department has previously taken steps to ban the use of premium rate numbers beginning 087, 090 and 091 within the Health Service. Officials will investigate the recent announcement by the Dept of Health that calls to 084 numbers should cost no more than a standard call with a view to taking forward these changes in Northern Ireland.

North Antrim Constituency: DHSSPS Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what projects his Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by his Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 465/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not held centrally by my Department and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Swine Flu

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many cases of swine flu have been recorded in North Down. (AQW 468/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The information requested is not available.

Drug Addiction

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people are currently receiving treatment for drug addiction in each Health and Social Care Trust area. (AQW 474/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Information on individuals presenting to treatment services with problem drug use is held on the Northern Ireland Drug Misuse Database (DMD).

The table below shows the number of individuals in treatment for problem drug use between 1st April 2007 and 31st March 2008 by Health and Social Services Board area – the current Health and Social Care Trusts were not in existence until 1st April 2008.

| HSSB | Numbers in treatment |
|--------------|----------------------|
| Eastern | 1,286 |
| Northern | 227 |
| Southern | 102 |
| Western | 221 |
| Prison | 148 |
| Total | 1,984 |

The DMD collects information on problem drug users presenting to treatment services for the first time, or for the first time in six months or more. A problem drug user is defined as a person who experiences social, psychological, physical or legal problems (related to intoxication and/or regular excessive consumption and/or dependence) as a consequence of their own use of drugs or chemical substances. It is important to note that being in treatment for problem drug use does not necessarily constitute addiction.

Mental Health Issues

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what programmes on mental health issues have been funded in the East Antrim constituency in each of the last three years. (AQW 475/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: It is not possible to specify these programmes, as the information is not collected on constituency basis and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Alcohol Awareness Issues

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what programmes on alcohol awareness issues have been funded in the East Antrim constituency in each of the last three years. (AQW 476/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Through funding made available via the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs, the former Northern Board commissioned and funded a number of specialist Board wide and locality based substance misuse services in support of Northern Drug and Alcohol Co-ordination Teams 's Action Plan in the three year period 2006/07, 2007/08 and 2008/09.

These services and programmes address both alcohol and drug awareness, reflecting the strategic approach to tackling substance misuse and best practice in regard to alcohol, illicit drugs, prescribed drugs and other substances. Northern Board wide services/programmes were available to residents of East Antrim.

The services available to those in the East Antrim area are set out in the table below:

| Type of service/programme | Provider | Locality/Area | Contract period Year of Small Grants Scheme (SGS) |
|--|--|----------------------------|---|
| Tier 2/3 counselling, support and mentoring service for 17 years and under | Dunlewey Substance Advice Centre | Former Northern Board wide | 1 October '06 – 31 March '09 |
| Community and family support services | Ballymena Family & Addicts Support Group | Former Northern Board wide | 1 October '06 – 31 March '09 |
| Cross-sectoral training and awareness programme | Coleraine Rural & Urban Network | Former Northern Board wide | 1 October '06 – 31 March '09 |
| Alternative criminal justice options (education and prevention) | Northern Health & Social Care Trust (NHSCT) | Former Northern Board wide | 1 October '06 – 31 March '09 |
| Supported and direct access accommodation | Living Rivers Trust | Former Northern Board wide | 1 October '06 – 31 March '09 |
| Tier 4 specialist in-patient services | NHSCT | Former Northern Board wide | 1 October '06 – 31 March '09 |
| How to drug proof your kids | Carrickfergus Community Drug & Alcohol Advisory Group (CCDAAG) | East Antrim | 2006/07 |
| Health education and training – drugs and alcohol | ACET (NI) Ltd | Former Northern Board wide | 2006/07 |
| Targeted education and prevention programmes with young people | ACET (NI) Ltd | East Antrim | 1 May '07 – 31 March '09 |
| Targeted education and prevention programmes with adults | Dunlewey Substance Advice Centre | East Antrim | 1 May '07 – 31 March '09 |
| Drug awareness (Monkstown) | Monkstown Community Association | East Antrim | 2007/08 |
| Drugs and alcohol awareness 4 Mossley | Monday Night Madness | East Antrim | 2007/08 |

| Type of service/programme | Provider | Locality/Area | Contract period Year of Small Grants Scheme (SGS) |
|---------------------------------------|----------------------------------|----------------------------|---|
| Counting the cost of alcohol | Community Direct | Former Northern Board wide | 2007/08 |
| Drugs and alcohol awareness 4 Mossley | Monday Night Madness | East Antrim | 2008/09 |
| Motiv8 | CCDAAG | East Antrim | 2008/09 |
| Diversionary activities | Dunlewey Substance Advice Centre | Former Northern Board wide | 2008/09 |
| Pilot Project | CCDAAG | East Antrim | 2007/08 |
| Project Co-ordinator | CCDAAG | East Antrim | 2008/09 |

The former Northern Board also commissioned a comprehensive Addictions Treatment service throughout this period within secondary care (community and in-patient) which was open and accessible to all residents within the Northern Board area including East Antrim - whilst this is a specialist treatment service, alcohol and drug awareness would also be addressed with clients/patients and their families/carers where relevant.

Generic primary/secondary care services in the Northern Board area would also have addressed alcohol and drug awareness with clients/patients and their families/carers where relevant.

Drug Awareness Issues

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what programmes on drug awareness issues have been funded in the East Antrim constituency in each of the last three years (AQW 477/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Through funding made available via the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs, the former Northern Board commissioned and funded a number of specialist Board wide and locality based substance misuse services in support of Northern Drug and Alcohol Co-ordination Teams 's Action Plan in the three year period 2006/07, 2007/08 and 2008/09.

These services and programmes address both alcohol and drug awareness, reflecting the strategic approach to tackling substance misuse and best practice in regard to alcohol, illicit drugs, prescribed drugs and other substances. Generic primary/secondary care services in the Northern Board area would also have addressed alcohol and drug awareness with clients/patients and their families/carers where relevant.

Swine Flu

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what the spending by the Health Service is on swine flu since the start of the outbreak. (AQW 482/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: £29.7m has been incurred/ committed in dealing with Swine Flu since the start of the outbreak. The majority of costs, £27.5m, are the result of nationally driven initiatives that ensure a level of protection that is consistent across the whole of the UK. This includes the procurement of antiviral drugs, vaccines, antibiotics, consumable stock and Personal Protection Equipment.

It is to be expected, as the situation develops, that costs will continue to increase throughout the health service.

Diabetes UK

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has had any discussions with Diabetes UK around the issue of people diagnosed with type 2 diabetes being more susceptible to hearing problems and hearing loss; and possible measures to counter these problems or help these people. (AQW 525/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I have met with representatives from Diabetes UK (NI) on a number of occasions and I can confirm that these issues have not been raised in any of these discussions.

Swine Flu

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he will give an assurance that the swine flu vaccination does not pose a threat of any danger to young children. (AQW 527/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: At present the swine flu vaccination is awaiting a license from the European Commission and will not be available for use until a license has been granted. Similar types of flu vaccine have already been tested using the H5N1 avian flu strain. The swine flu vaccine simply substitutes the H1N1 strain. Based on years of experience of seasonal flu vaccine the insertion of a new strain should not substantially affect the safety or level of protection offered.

Swine Flu

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the current availability of the swine flu vaccine; and how it is being dispensed. (AQW 529/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The swine flu vaccine will not be available for use until it is licensed. The vaccine manufacturers expect to receive a license from the European Medicines Agency in October.

Once the vaccine has received a licence a vaccination programme will be delivered by GPs and supported by Trust staff for the high risk clinical groups. Occupational Health Services will vaccinate frontline health and social care workers.

Histiocytosis

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many children have been diagnosed with Histiocytosis; and (ii) what is the expected life span for patients who receive immunosuppressive drugs and chemotherapy as opposed to patients who do not. (AQW 530/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Histiocytosis is the name for a range of disorders caused by an excess of white blood cells called histiocytes which attack various parts of the body.

It is not known how many children have been diagnosed with the disease; however there have been 65 admissions to hospitals, by 15 individuals, during the last five years.

It is not possible to make comparisons between expected life spans depending on the treatment given, as treatment options vary depending on the location and severity of the disease; however, it should be noted that most patients will survive histiocytosis.

Legislation: DHSSPS

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline any legislation his Department intends to bring to the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 531/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: No legislation is planned to be introduced before 31 December 2009.

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to change employment levels within his Department in the next twelve months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 548/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Under CSR 2007 my Department is required to make savings of 5% per annum from 2008/09 to 2010/11. Efficiency targets are being delivered from a number of sources and staffing levels are being considered but have not been quantified. It is therefore not possible to predict what the change in employment levels will be in the next twelve months.

I can confirm that redundancy is not being considered.

Occupational Therapy Services

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration has been given to increasing the level of funding for occupational therapy services and aids in the North Down area. (AQW 554/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Health and Social Care Board has agreed additional investment of £178k for occupational therapy services within the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust, commencing 2009/10. This additional investment will benefit service users throughout the Trust area including those of North Down. Funding requirements for Occupational Therapy aids remain subject to consideration through local commissioning arrangements.

Naltrexone: Low Dose

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what investigations and research have taken place on the Low Dose Naltrexone drug; and what plans there are for clinical trials. (AQW 573/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Naltrexone is licensed only for the prevention of relapse in patients who were formerly dependant on opioids. No conclusive study has been completed for low dose naltrexone in the treatment or maintenance of any other medical condition.

Details regarding research or clinical trials on specific drug therapies are not held by my Department.

Public Health Agency

Mrs O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how the newly established Public Health Agency plans to reduce inequalities in health outcomes. (AQW 586/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Reducing health inequalities is a particular challenge requiring long term co-ordinated effort across government and all sectors. This issue will be a key priority for the new Public Health Agency which will contribute through -

- Strengthening partnership relationships, including for example with local and central government, to focus collective efforts on areas of inequality
- Promoting better co-ordination and integration of services at local level, and enhancing opportunities to share and spread good practice across Northern Ireland
- Joint working with the Regional Health and Social Care Board and its Local Commissioning Groups to embed inequalities and health and well being improvement within the commissioning of health and social services
- Prioritising and targeting resources to interventions and actions with greatest impact to those in greatest need

The new Public Health Agency is currently developing a comprehensive plan to address inequalities at both regional and local levels.

Care Providers from Outside of Northern Ireland

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he can give an assurance that value for money criteria and continuing patient care can be met by employing care providers from outside of Northern Ireland. (AQW 587/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Health and Social Care Board negotiates and manages contracts with the Independent Sector on behalf of the five Trusts in Northern Ireland. Contracts for the procurement of assessment and/or treatment services are negotiated through a competitive tendering process aimed at ensuring best value for money.

Transfers to the Independent Sector generally cover the immediate assessment and/or treatment of the patient, together with any immediate post operative care, after which patients are transferred back to the care of their GP or local Trust as appropriate.

Northwest Independent Clinic

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to outline the reasons for the Western Health and Social Care Trust withdrawing patients from pre-planned treatment at the Northwest Independent Clinic as from 29 June 2009; (ii) what arrangements were made to compensate the clinic for the cost of issuing cancellation notifications; and (iii) if these patients have been seen at Altnagelvin or Western Health and Social Care Trust facilities within departmental targets. (AQW 588/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am advised that the Western Trust is committed to significantly reducing expenditure in 2009/10 and, in that context, is reducing the level of referrals for treatment to the independent sector across a range of specialties.

Issues in relation to specific contracts with independent sector organisations are a matter for the Trust concerned and the Health and Social Care Board.

There has been no change to the waiting times targets for outpatient, inpatient or daycase care which the Trust is required to meet.

Autism Services

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of the costing of the independent review into autism services, led by Ken Maginness. (AQW 589/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The total cost of the Independent Review of Autism Services led by Lord Maginnis of Drumglass was £16,583.25. This comprised of £12,039.77 for Independent Review Members expenses and £4,543.48 on administrative costs.

Ophthalmology Services

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) if he can give an assurance that all providers of ophthalmology treatment on the Western Health and Social Care Trust list of approved service providers were given the opportunity to submit tenders for ophthalmology services now being provided by a private company within the Trust area; (ii) what ophthalmology services have been contracted out to private sector providers; (iii) in what locations treatment is taking place; and (iv) if there is a continuing care package in place for the patients seen by the current care provider. (AQW 590/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Issues in relation to specific contracts with independent sector organisations are a matter for the relevant Trust. I am advised that:

- (i) There is no Western Health and Social Care Trust list of approved independent sector service providers. There is a Select List of approved Independent Sector providers for Northern Ireland and Trusts wishing to initiate new contracts for services must seek tender submissions from a minimum of three providers on the Select List before awarding a contract. Where existing contracts for service are in place with more than one provider each Trust has discretion to transfer patients as operational requirements dictate.
- (ii) The following ophthalmology services have been contracted out to independent sector providers: new outpatient referrals; the treatment consequences of the outpatient consultation; and review consultations required as follow up.
- (iii) Treatment is taking place at Tyrone County Hospital, Roe Valley Hospital and the North West Independent Hospital.
- (iv) The Western Trust has existing contracts for the provision of ophthalmology services with a number of independent sector providers including the North West Independent Hospital and Medinet. The individual contracts will specify the arrangements for consultation, treatment and review.

Front Line Care

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his definition of front line care; and if he has signed off on any efficiency saving proposals which will result in a cut in front line services. (AQW 791/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I define frontline care as the health and social care services provided directly to patients and clients.

I have signed off on efficiency proposals based on assurances from the Trusts that the quality of services for patients and clients will be maintained or improved, that Priority for Action targets and commitments will be delivered and that the implications for staff affected can be managed without recourse to compulsory redundancy. In addition, each Trust has also been asked to ensure that it has the right number and skill levels of doctors, nurses, social workers and other professionals in place at the right time to provide the right service to all those who require health and social services.

All Departments must achieve challenging efficiency savings targets of 3% per annum translating to £700m in the case of DHSSPS and in that, the Executive gave no dispensation to the DHSSPS. That is why I asked the Assembly to exempt the Service from efficiency savings, which it did not do.

Contingency plans containing proposals by Trusts to recover deficits have been submitted to my Department but these are still being considered.

Autism

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that Autistic Spectrum Disorder teams in Health and Social Care Trusts have targets of thirteen weeks in which to assess and diagnose children who may have autism, (i) can he explain why the Western Health and Social Care Trust have a waiting list averaging fourteen months; and (ii) when he expects a reduction in this waiting time. (AQW 818/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: The Western Health & Social Care Trust has inherited large waiting lists from the legacy Trusts. It has however already reduced waiting times from 4.5 years in 2007.

The Priorities for Action 2009/10 target for autism services states that “By March 2010, ensure that all children wait no longer than 13 weeks for assessment following referral”. The Western Health and Social Care Trust is working towards the 13 week target on waiting times and has provided a waiting list reduction plan that shows that it will be 13 week compliant by Sept 2010.

Belfast Health and Social Care Trust: Executive Management Team

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for the names of those who sit on Belfast Health and Social Care Trust’s Executive Management Team. (AQW 820/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: This information is contained in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust’s Annual Report a copy of which is available on the Trust’s web site.

Belfast Health and Social Care Trust: Executive Management Team

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) if the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Executive Management Team viewed the proposals concerning cuts of beds; (ii) if so, on what date did this meeting take place; (iii) who was in attendance; (iv) did the proposal go to a vote, and what was the outcome; and (v) when he, or his officials, were made aware of this proposal. (AQW 845/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: My understanding from the Trust is that:

- (i) and (ii) a number of proposals to be included in the contingency plan were discussed by the Trust Executive team on 16 September 2009.
- (iii) William McKee, Chief Executive, Wendy Galbraith, Director of Finance, Dr Tony Stevens, Medical Director, Valerie Jackson, Director of Older People, Medicine and Surgery, Nikki Patterson, Acting Director of Nursing, Jennifer Welsh, Director of Specialist Services, Marie Mallon, Director of Human Resources, Brendan Mullen, Director of Mental Health and Learning Disability, Patricia Donnelly, Director of Clinical Services, Denise Stockman, Director of Planning and Development, Catherine McNicholl, Acting Director of Performance and Planning, Ian Jamison, Head of Patient and Client Support Services, June Champion, Co-director, Risk and Governance.

- (iv) the proposals did not go to a vote- that is not how the executive team works. No decision was taken. The contents of the plan remain proposals and require Departmental approval.
- (v) The Department received the Trust's contingency plan detailing its proposals on 17th September 2009.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Efficiency Savings

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what instructions he has given to officials and Health and Social Care Trusts to ensure that efficiency savings do not result in cuts to front-line care. (AQW 893/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: Approval of all CSR efficiency proposals was conditional on assurances from Trusts that the quality of services for patients and clients would be maintained or improved, that Priority for Action targets and commitments would be delivered and that the implications for staff affected could be managed without recourse to compulsory redundancy. Trusts were also advised that they should ensure that they have the right number and skill levels of doctors, nurses, social workers, paramedics and other professionals in place at the right time to provide the right service to all those who require health and social services.

The DHSSPS guidance on contingency plans to address deficits emphasises that proposals with implications for front line care should be avoided where at all possible. My Department has received contingency proposals from the Belfast Trust and these are currently being considered. No decisions have been made and the proposals are still just proposals.

Hospital Beds

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) what action he is taking to address the lack of availability of beds in the Causeway Hospital and Antrim Area Hospital; and (ii) to explain why four patients in the mid-Ulster Hospital were left on trolleys on 28 September 2009. (AQW 1019/10)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety: I am advised by the Northern Trust that there are no general bed pressures within either Antrim or Causeway hospitals. There are, however, days where activity can be higher than normal and this can cause some delays.

The Trust has advised that Monday 28 September was an extremely busy day in the 4 A&E Departments in its area. The Trust has also confirmed that, in light of this increased activity, four patients at the Mid Ulster Hospital were appropriately cared for on trolleys whilst awaiting admission. The four patients were subsequently admitted within 1-4 hours of a request for a bed.

DEPARTMENT FOR REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NI Railways: Londonderry Line Timetable

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development when NI Railways will publish a new timetable for the Londonderry line. (AQW 314/10)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr Murphy): The new timetable was published on the Translink website on 22 September 2009.

Translink have advised me that the new timetable was issued to stations during the week commencing Monday 21 September and became operational on Sunday 27 September.

Castlerock Railway Station

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if the completion of repairs to platform 2 at Castlerock railway station is an integral part of the Coleraine to Londonderry track relay scheme planned for 2010. (AQW 315/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink has informed me that it plans to undertake necessary works to platform 2 at Castlerock railway station as an integral part of the Coleraine to Derry track relay. The scheme is planned to run from 2011 to 2013/14, subject to the necessary approvals and funding being available.

Passing Loop

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will give an assurance that a passing loop will be an integral part of the Coleraine to Londonderry track relay scheme planned for 2010. (AQW 317/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink is currently in the planning stage of the track relay between Coleraine and Derry. The relay work is scheduled to begin in 2011 with an estimated completion date of 2013/14. A passing loop is an integral part of the project and options will be developed further when the economic appraisal is being prepared.

NI Water: Travel Costs

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 7298/09, to detail the £1.3 million travel costs of Northern Ireland Water, including (i) the mode of transport used; (ii) whether economy, first class or business class; (iii) the destination; and (iv) the reason for the journey. (AQW 343/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the £1.3 million travel costs for 2007/2008 covers a wide range of journeys and destinations and the information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, the overall travel cost is summarised in the table below:

| Area of Travel | £000s |
|------------------|--------------|
| Within the North | 1,265 |
| To Britain | 66 |
| Total | 1,331 |

The mode of transport within the North is mostly private vehicles used by staff undertaking the normal day-to-day duties associated with operating a widely dispersed network of water and sewerage installations. The mode of transport for travel to the mainland is mostly air for staff attending meetings and other events.

NIW does not pay for first class or business class so all travel is at economy or equivalent.

Roads Service Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned for the Victoria area of Donaghadee over the next five years. (AQW 345/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that there are currently no schemes planned for the Victoria area of Donaghadee over the next five years.

Roads Service Schemes

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned for the Cypress area of Donaghadee over the next five years. (AQW 346/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that some of the street lighting columns may be replaced in the Cypress area of Donaghadee over the next five years. Roads Service has no other schemes planned for this area.

Business Service Unit in Downpatrick

Mr P J Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain his decision to centralise jobs from the Business Service Unit in Downpatrick to Belfast; and to detail any discussions he or his Department held with Trade Unions or others prior to the centralisation being agreed. (AQW 351/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: As you will be aware, Account NI, a reform project centralising all Government Departments' financial processing units, is a NICS-wide reform project, and all decisions in relation to the location of the Shared Service centre were considered and implemented by Department of Finance and Personnel. The Account NI contract for services was signed in 2006.

On 6 July 2009, transaction processing activities within my Department's Roads Service transferred to Account NI as part of the reform programme. These activities were previously undertaken by a team of fifteen staff based in Downpatrick.

A random selection exercise was undertaken to identify staff to fill posts at AO grade in the Downpatrick area. This resulted in eleven staff at AO grade being selected for existing posts and a further five staff at AO grade were identified as surplus. The Department is actively pursuing alternative posts for these staff, within reasonable travelling distance from their homes.

In addition to staff at AO grade, there was also one surplus post at SO grade. A suitable post has now been found which the member of staff has agreed to transfer to.

This process has been carried out in accordance with the general principles of redeployment, as set out in the staff handbook, and TUS have been kept informed at each stage of the process.

Traffic Congestion

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he has taken to reduce traffic congestion on the approach roads to Ballykelly, particularly during rush hour and weekends. (AQW 380/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that it has readjusted the timings on the traffic signals at the junction of Main Street, Ballykelly with Glenhead Road and Duke's Lane. The time previously allowed for traffic exiting the Ministry of Defence facility has now been allocated to through traffic and as a result, congestion on the approach roads to Ballykelly has been reduced.

In the longer term, the Investment Delivery Plan for Roads contains a scheme for the section of the A2 between the City of Derry Airport and Limavady, this being, a dual carriageway bypass of Ballykelly, of approximately 6 km in length. The construction of a bypass would remove strategic traffic from the village, thereby improving journey times, reducing congestion at peak periods, and improving both safety and the environment in Ballykelly. Roads Service would anticipate completion of this scheme towards the end of the Delivery Plan period.

Coach Car Park Contract

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the coach car park contract between Roads Service and Banbridge District Council, to detail (i) the length of the contract; (ii) if the performance of Banbridge District Council is to be reviewed; and (iii) the cost of this contract to Roads Service per annum since the inception of the contract. (AQW 406/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: In replying to your question I have made two assumptions. Firstly, that your reference to the coach car park is the public car park at Church Square, Banbridge, known by some as The Coach car park, because of its proximity to "The Coach" nightclub. The second assumption is that the contract between Roads Service and Banbridge District Council, to which you refer, is in relation to the cleaning of this car park.

I should explain that Church Square car park is, like other non-charged car parks in Banbridge District Council area, cleaned by the District Council on behalf of Roads Service.

Roads Service has advised that the agreement between it and Banbridge District Council, to clean the non-charged car parks within Banbridge District, is made annually. Similarly, the performance of this agreement is also reviewed on an annual basis.

The arrangement, which is for the cleaning of all non-charged car parks within the Banbridge District, has been in place since November 1988. Roads Service's costs since the inception of this arrangement are detailed below.

COST TO ROADS SERVICE FOR CLEANING ALL NON CHARGED CAR PARKS PER ANNUM IN BANBRIDGE DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA

| Financial year | Cost |

| 2006/07 | £8,834.00 |
| 2007/08 | £9,213.00 |
| 2008/09 | £9,489.00 |

NI Water: Consultancy Spend

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development how much NI Water has spent on consultancy, in respect of construction and otherwise; and to list all the consultancy companies and individuals and how much they received in payment, in each of the last three years. (AQW 408/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the associated fees and other payments to consultancy firms employed by Northern Ireland Water from 1 April 2007 to 31 August 2009 are as detailed below. The costs are exclusive of VAT.

Roads Service Schemes: Millisle

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned for the Churchill area of Millisle over the next five years. (AQW 411/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that at present, it has no schemes planned for the Churchill area of Millisle over the next five years.

However, the works programme is constantly kept under review and if schemes are identified, they are implemented on a scheme priority basis.

I would remind the Member that information on the completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Services' Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Roads Service is currently compiling their Autumn Reports to Councils

Roads Service Schemes: Groomsport

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned for the Groomsport area over the next five years. (AQW 412/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that at present, it has no schemes planned for the Groomsport area over the next five years.

However, the works programme is constantly kept under review and if schemes are identified, they are implemented on a scheme priority basis.

I would remind the Member that information on the completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Services' Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

Roads Service Schemes: Holywood

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned for Holywood over the next three years. (AQW 424/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that the following schemes are planned for the Holywood area over the next three years:

Footway Resurfacing

- Rannoch Road, Holywood
- Lochinver Avenue, Holywood
- Torgrange, Holywood

Carriageway Resurfacing

- Seapark Road, Holywood
- Dunlady Road, Holywood
- Ballymenoch Park, Holywood

This programme may be subject to change, as the resurfacing works programme is constantly kept under review, and implemented on a scheme priority basis. Commencement of the works will be dependant upon the availability of finance and other competing priorities.

I would remind the Member that information on the completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Services' Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Roads Service Schemes: Bangor

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned for Bangor over the next three years. (AQW 425/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that the following schemes are planned for the Bangor area over the next three years:

Footway Resurfacing

- Newtownards Road, Bangor
- Henderson Road, Bangor
- Cranley Road, Bangor

Carriageway Resurfacing

- Downshire Road, Bangor
- Beverley Hills, Bangor
- Beverley Drive, Bangor
- Ashley Drive, Bangor

This programme may be subject to change, as the resurfacing works programme is constantly kept under review, and implemented on a scheme priority basis. Commencement of the works will be dependant upon the availability of finance and other competing priorities.

I would remind the Member that information on the completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Services' Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

Sewage Pumping Station in Saintfield

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development on how many occasions the sewerage pumping station in Saintfield has failed or required maintenance in the last year. (AQW 427/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the wastewater pumping station in Saintfield required maintenance work on 12 occasions during the past year. This was as a result of equipment failure or for operational maintenance.

'Long Meadow' at Comber Road, Killyleagh

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of the serious road accidents taking place at the area known locally as the 'Long Meadow' at Comber Road, Killyleagh, what steps he is taking to improve road safety at this location as a matter of urgency. (AQW 436/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that full details of the recent tragic accident at this location have not yet been received, and it would, therefore, be premature to indicate what measures, if any, may be provided at this location.

When the full details have been received from the PSNI, Roads Service will carry out an assessment. I have asked Roads Service to forward the results of this assessment to you, when they are available.

Kerbstones, Road Signs and Street lights: Defacing

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what discussions he has held with the PSNI in relation to the prosecution of individuals or groups involved in defacing kerbstones, road signs, street lights and other property belonging to his Department or agencies. (AQW 447/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Issues associated with graffiti are operational matters and are dealt with by my Department's Roads Service officials. I have had no personal involvement in discussions with the PSNI.

Kerbstones, Road Signs and Street Lights: Graffiti

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his policies in relation to the removal of sectarian graffiti on kerbstones, road signs, street lights and other public property owned by his Department and agencies; and how these policies have been applied in Garvagh and Articlave, County Derry. (AQW 448/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that they will remove sectarian graffiti from its property if it is considered to be offensive or compromise public safety. However, experience has shown that sectarian graffiti removal is often counter productive unless there is over whelming local support. Without this support, repainting generally occurs very quickly and is often more extensive than the original graffiti.

Following a £300,000 refurbishment and reconstruction scheme on Main Street, Garvagh in 2004, extensive painting was carried out during July 2005. Roads Service removed the painting at the request of community representatives, however, painting of kerbs and other Departmental property reoccurs each year. It is considered that any further intervention at this stage would be counter productive.

Kerbstones throughout Articlave village are also painted each July and any attempt to remove the paint would not have the support of the local community and would be counter productive.

Translink: Budgets

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the total budget expended by Translink for the promotion of rail travel; and (ii) the budget specifically targeted at the Belfast to Derry inter-city service, in each of the last three years. (AQW 449/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The table below shows the amount spent by Translink NI Railways to promote local and cross border rail travel respectively for the relevant periods. The table also details spend which is specific to the Belfast to Derry inter-city service. Most marketing spend is on general local rail services. However due to the introduction of new services from Ballymena and Coleraine in 2007/08 and the upgrade work and line closure in 2009/10, the Derry line has benefited from specific advertising campaigns. Thus specific marketing activity for the Belfast to Derry rail service has been greater than that of the other local lines.

NI RAILWAYS LOCAL RAIL MARKETING SPEND

| 2007/08 | 2008/09 | 2009/10 to date |
|----------|---------|-----------------|
| £202,232 | £98,386 | £81,540 |

Roads Maintenance: Compensation

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to compensation paid due to poor road maintenance, to detail (i) the number of claims; (ii) the total amount paid; and (iii) the number of claims still outstanding, in each of the last five years. (AQW 450/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The number of public liability, personal injury and vehicle damage compensation claims made against the Department for Regional Development arising from defects in the roadways and footways in each of the last five financial years is shown below. The amount of compensation paid to date and the number of claims still outstanding are also listed against each figure below –

North Antrim Constituency: DRD Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) what projects his Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by his Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 459/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service does not hold information on schemes on a constituency basis. However, information on schemes completed and proposed schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Sewerage Treatment and Disposal Scheme

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the difference between the sewerage treatment and disposal scheme referred to in AQW 1049/09 and the scheme modelled by NI Water and presented to NI Environment Agency in July 2009. (AQW 484/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the proposal presented to the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) in July 2009 differs from that outlined in AQW 1049/09 in that the existing treatment facility at Ballycarry will be retained and its residual effluent will be combined with screened effluent from Ballystrudder and Whitehead. The effluent will be discharged to sea via a marine outfall which has now been extended from 350 metres to 500 metres.

This new proposal is acceptable to the NIEA and the modelling has been independently verified by the Water Research Council.

Roads Service Schemes: East Antrim

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development what Roads Service schemes are planned in the East Antrim constituency over the next 12 months. (AQW 490/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service does not hold information on schemes on a constituency basis. However, information on completed and proposed schemes can be found in the Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

http://www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Road and Footpath Schemes: Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what road and footpath schemes are planned for the Whitehill Estate, Bangor, over the next five years. (AQW 491/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that, at present, it has no schemes planned for the Whitehill Estate, Bangor, over the next five years.

However, the works programme is constantly kept under review and if schemes are identified, they are implemented on a scheme priority basis.

I would remind the Member that information on the completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Services' Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

NI Railways: Taxi Hire

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of taxis paid for by NI Railway in the last year (i) for each NI Railway station; and (ii) including the reason for the taxi hire. (AQW 506/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The tables below detail the cost of taxis paid for by Northern Ireland Railways in the last financial year by railway station, for taxi hire (staff and passenger).

2008/2009 TAXIS COSTS BY LOCATION

| Location | Value £ |
|------------------|------------------|
| Ballymena | 718.44 |
| Bangor | 1348.14 |
| Belfast Stations | 53,607.11 |
| Carrickfergus | 821.90 |
| Coleraine | 4,142.86 |
| Larne | 15.00 |
| Lisburn | 568.00 |
| Londonderry | 1,533.00 |
| Lurgan | 191.50 |
| Newry | 415.50 |
| NIR HQ | 4,891.66 |
| Portadown | 6,640.00 |
| Total: | 74,893.11 |

Taxi costs, relate to fares for security alerts, line closures, train failures, train cancellations and accidents and passenger transfers. This includes providing disabled passenger assistance. Employee taxi hire costs are also included as taxis are sometimes required to move crews between depots (inter depot working). Inter-Depot working allows for major depots to cover smaller country depots without the requirement for localised overtime.

Employee taxi hire arises on some occasions when train crews are required to be transferred from one location to another. Some staff may not drive or have access to a car. Likewise, there may not be appropriate public transport links to where they need to go at the time of day they require to travel, i.e. early starts/late finishes. Some depots/sign-on points are not located on main arterial bus routes, such as Larne Harbour.

Translink: Seating Capacity

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if Translink will increase seating capacity on the 16.08, 16.55 and 17.23 services on the Belfast Central to Londonderry line to prevent passengers having to stand for extended periods of time. (AQW 507/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Translink normally operates 3-car trains on these services and the only way to increase individual train capacity is to increase 3-car to 6-car by joining 2 trains together. However, all suitable 3-car trains are already in service across the network.

A revised rail timetable took effect from 27 September which increased commuter capacity by 25% by rescheduling 5 trains to depart Belfast Central at 16:10, 16:40, 17:10, 17:40 and 18:10 hours in place of the present 4 trains which currently depart at 16:10, 16:57, 17:25 and 18:05 hours.

The additional peak time service has been achieved by compressing an off peak service into the peak commuter period i.e. the present 15:30 ex Belfast moves to 16:10 ex Belfast. There is no overall change in the number of services over the course of the week day.

Translink expect to be in a position to operate additional trains and/or larger trains from 2012 after delivery of the next batch of new trains during 2011/2012.

Legislation: DRD

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any legislation his Department intends to bring before the Assembly before 31 December 2009. (AQW 516/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The legislation which my Department intends to bring before the Assembly before 31 December 2009 is as follows:

1. Water and Sewerage Services (Amendment) Bill (introduced 21 September 2009)
2. Draft Lissue Level Crossing Order (Negative Resolution)
3. Train Driver Licensing and Certification draft Regulations (Negative Resolution)
4. Draft River Bann Navigation Order (Affirmative Resolution)

All legislation is subject to consultation with the Regional Development Committee and agreement by the Executive, where appropriate.

Water Rates: Bills

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister for Regional Development how many errors in customer bills for water rates have been recorded, as a result of incorrect information being passed to NI Water by the Land and Property Services in 2009. (AQW 528/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that, from April 2009, over 16,500 unmeasured bills have been issued to customers based on a Net Annual Value provided by Land and Property Services.

NIW does not keep records that identify amended water bills resulting from incorrect data supplied by Land and Property Services, and is therefore unable to provide the details sought.

Road and Footpath Schemes: Strand Area, Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what road and footpath schemes are planned for the Strand area of Holywood over the next five years. (AQW 543/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that at present, it has no schemes planned for the Strand area of Holywood, over the next five years.

However, the works programme is constantly kept under review and if schemes are identified, they are implemented on a scheme priority basis.

I would remind the Member that information on completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Roads Service is currently compiling their Autumn Reports to Councils.

Road and Footpath Schemes: Redburn Area, Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what road and footpath schemes are planned for the Redburn area of Holywood over the next five years. (AQW 544/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that at present, it has no schemes planned for the Redburn area of Holywood, over the next five years.

However, the works programme is constantly kept under review and if schemes are identified, they are implemented on a scheme priority basis.

I would remind the Member that information on completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to change employment levels within his Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 564/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Within the next 12 months, employment levels in DRD will be reduced by 44 full time equivalent posts as a result of ongoing Northern Ireland Civil Service reform initiatives. The Department aims to achieve these efficiencies without the use of redundancies and will seek to redeploy any surplus staff in accordance with the agreed procedures.

In addition to these specific plans, my Department has to deliver cash releasing efficiencies of £3.1m in 2009/10 and £5.4m in 2010/11. In realising these efficiencies consideration will be given to staffing levels across my Department. Again it is expected that any further reduction in staffing levels will be achieved without the use of redundancies.

Roads Service/NI Water: South Antrim

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Regional Development what work is planned to be carried out by Roads Service and NI Water, in the South Antrim constituency, in September 2009. (AQW 569/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service has advised that the following work will be undertaken in the South Antrim Constituency during September 2009:

- Motorway Maintenance: grass cutting, weed control treatments, sweeping, emergency telephone and communications cabinet cleaning, and safety fence replacement on the M2 and M22.
- Street Lighting Replacement: Templepatrick Road / Mill Road, Ballyclare; and Manse Walk, Rise, Court, New Mossley.
- Carriageway Resurfacing: Dublin Road, Antrim, Church Road, Randalstown, Kilbegs Road, Antrim, and Admiralty Estate, Antrim.
- Traffic calming: Rathenraw Estate Antrim; and Toome village.
- Footway provision: Barnish Road, Randalstown.

The works programme is constantly kept under review and implemented on a scheme priority basis; all of the above work is therefore subject to the availability of financial resource.

I would remind the Member that information on completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Roads Service is currently compiling their Autumn Reports to Councils.

NI Water has advised it plans to carry out the following capital works in the South Antrim Constituency during September 2009:

- Bellahill, Ballycarry: Replacement of watermain.
- A2, Shore Road: Upgrading of existing watermain, sewers and pumping main.
- Whiteabbey Lower: Replacement of watermain.
- Moyra Road, Brookfield, Doagh: Foul sewer extension.
- Victoria Road, Ballyclare: Maintenance and replacement of small sewers.

- Joymount Drainage Area Plan: Replacement of existing shaftesbury pumping station with combined storage pump. New and upgraded storm pipework and desilting work.
 - Newtownabbey, Manse Road, Camross Park: Combined Sewer Overflow cleaning and repairs to storm system.
 - Various Locations: Upgrading of small Wastewater Treatment Works.
- This work is in addition to the day-to-day maintenance and repair required to the water and sewerage network.

Road and Footpath Schemes: Craignantlet Hills

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what road and footpath schemes are planned for the Craignantlet Hills area of North Down over the next five years. (AQW 595/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I can confirm that my Department's Roads Service has prioritised the resurfacing of the carriageway at Dunlady Road, Holywood, which is programmed to be carried out within the next three years.

The resurfacing programme is kept under review and implemented on a scheme priority basis, subject to the availability of financial resource.

I would remind the Member that information on completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

www.roadsni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-council_reports.htm

Road and Footpath Schemes: Breezemount Estate

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what road and footpath schemes are planned for the Breezemount estate area of Bangor over the next five years. (AQW 597/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I can confirm that my Department's Roads Service has no schemes planned for the Breezemount Estate area of North Down over the next five years.

Whilst there are no plans to carry out any footway or carriageway reconstruction or resurfacing schemes in this area, the works programme is kept under review and implemented on a scheme priority basis, subject to the availability of financial resource.

I would remind the Member that information on completed and proposed roads schemes can be found in Roads Service's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from the Roads Service internet site at the following web address:

Road and Footpath Schemes: Loughview Area, Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what road and footpath schemes are planned for the Loughview area of Holywood over the next five years. (AQW 598/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I can confirm that my Department's Roads Service has no schemes planned for the Loughview area of Holywood over the next five years.

Whilst there are no plans to carry out any footway or carriageway reconstruction or resurfacing schemes in this area, the works programme is kept under review and implemented on a scheme priority basis, subject to the availability of financial resource.

Road Damage Repairs

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development how many pothole and road damage repairs have been carried out by his Department since 2007; and the cost of these repairs, for each constituency. (AQW 627/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service does not maintain a central register of the information that you have requested on a constituency basis. However, I am able to provide you with the total number of defects repaired, which includes potholes, at Roads Service Divisional level, and the total expenditure incurred on repairing all defects in the last two financial years.

TABLE 1

| Roads Service | 2007 – 2008 | | 2008 – 2009 | |
|-------------------|---|-----------------------------|---|-----------------------------|
| | Number of defects repaired ¹ | Expenditure ² £k | Number of defects repaired ¹ | Expenditure ² £k |
| Northern Division | 46332 | 4731 | 44848 | 4756 |
| Southern Division | 50623 | 5021 | 62146 | 5466 |
| Eastern Division | 60281 | 5650 | 62636 | 6166 |
| Western Division | 48295 | 5309 | 58180 | 6013 |

1. Total number of recorded defect repairs (including potholes) in relation to carriageway and footway surfaces.
2. Recorded patching expenditure in relation to carriageway and footway surfaces.

Footpath from Ballymena to Cullybackey

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the completion of the footpath from Ballymena to Cullybackey; and whether it will be completed by 2010. (AQW 654/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Further to my response to the Member's Assembly Question, AQW 5411/09, Roads Service has advised that detailed design of the remaining 0.8 kilometres of footway, required to connect to the existing footway network in Cullybackey, is still ongoing.

The provision of the remaining footway link, which may have to be carried out in two stages, is currently included in the draft works programme for the 2010/11 financial year. However, delivery of this link will be subject to the successful acquisition of land and the availability of funding at that time.

Half Fare SmartPass Scheme

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development when the return fares scheme for Half Fare SmartPass holders on NI Railways will commence. (AQW 688/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Half Fare SmartPass holders have been able to purchase two single tickets on NI Railways services since 30 March 2009.

Half Fare SmartPass Scheme

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake an Equality Impact Assessment on the expanded Half Fare SmartPass Scheme, given that it now includes the purchase of return fares. (AQW 689/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I can confirm that the Department's policy of permitting the purchase of two single tickets on train journeys by Half Fare SmartPass holders has undergone an equality screening analysis. This screening concluded that there was no negative impact on any of the section 75 groups and that a full Equality Impact Assessment is not required.

Travel Times: Ballymena to Derry

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of trains each day and the average travel times (i) from Ballymena to Derry; and (ii) from Derry to Ballymena. (AQW 733/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The NIR timetable indicates the following number of trains between Ballymena and Derry with associated average travel times.

| | Number of trains from Ballymena to Derry | Average Travel Times | Number of trains from Derry to Ballymena | Average Travel Times |
|-----------|---|----------------------|---|----------------------|
| Week days | 9 | 1 hr 28 min | 9 | 1 hr 26 min |
| Saturday | 7* | 1 hr 23 min | 8 | 1 hr 23 min |
| Sunday | 5 | 1 hr 22 min | 5 | 1 hr 20 min |

* includes direct through trains only

Rail Travel Time: Derry to Belfast

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to reduce the travel time for rail passengers between Derry and Belfast (i) in the short term; and (b) in the longer term. (AQW 734/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The track renewal/track life extension project between Ballymena and Coleraine, which is nearing completion, has permitted a return to full line speed of 70mph over that section of track. New timetables introduced in September 2009 have seen the majority of services in both directions operating with reduced running times of between 3 and 15 minutes. Some journeys now operate from Derry to Belfast Central in two hours.

In the medium-term future the Department has earmarked £75m to fund a project to completely re-lay and re-signal the track between Coleraine and Derry including the construction of a new passing loop. This work is scheduled to commence in 2011 and complete in 2013/14. Completion will coincide with the arrival of a second fleet of new trains which will enable 2 additional trains to be brought into service on the Derry line. Both measures will permit more regular train services, reduce existing journey times between Coleraine and Derry and most importantly will allow trains to operate into Derry before 08:00 and 09:00am.

In the longer term, there are proposals to further improve frequency, however further infrastructure development is required, i.e. additional passing loops to support hourly frequency services between Belfast and Derry.

Belfast to Derry Train

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the Belfast to Derry train, to detail (i) the journey time for the first week-day train; (ii) the average speed in miles per hour; and (iii) how the current timetable compares to the previous one. (AQW 735/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The following table presents, for the first week day train from Belfast to Derry, the current and previous timetables, journey times and average speeds.

| | Current Timetable | Journey Time Between Each Journey Stage | Average Speed Between Each Journey Stage | Previous Timetable | Journey Time Between Each Journey Stage | Average Speed Between Each Journey Stage |
|--------------------|----------------------|---|--|-----------------------|---|--|
| Belfast Central | 6.20 | - | | 6.55 | - | |
| Ballymena | 7.06 | 46 min | 42.4 mph | 7.31 | 36 min | 54.2 mph |
| Coleraine (arrive) | 8.00 | 54 min | 31.4 mph | 8.19 | 48 min | 35.3 mph |
| Coleraine (depart) | 8.15 | - | - | 8.20 | - | - |
| Derry | 9.00 | 45 min | 44.7 mph | 9.10 | 50 min | 40.2 mph |

Parking in Older Housing Estates

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development if he has plans to improve parking in older housing estates where green space exists additional to that required for amenity space, which could be utilised to provide extra parking, in turn alleviating the congestion of access routes and improving safety for pedestrians. (AQW 797/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: My Department's Roads Service is currently reviewing the policy for providing parking in housing estates.

Roads Service has previously contributed towards the cost of improved parking provision within some housing estates. However, such contributions have been restricted to routes where traffic was experiencing significant progression problems, or where road safety was compromised. In all other cases, the provision of additional parking facilities is the responsibility of the landowner.

Roads Service expenditure decisions are directed by the Sub-Regional Transport Plan (SRTP), the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan (BMTP) and current policy. Neither the SRTP nor the BMTP address the provision of car parking in housing estates. Therefore, until the current review of the policy has been completed and agreed, Roads Service will not be making any decisions in relation to funding to improve parking in older housing estates.

Rail Travel: Commuters

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development if he has plans to reopen or construct new halts to accommodate the increasing numbers of commuters opting for rail travel. (AQW 798/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: Whilst I have aspirations to provide further halts, this is not likely in the near future unless additional funding or developers' contributions can be secured. There are no definitive plans to reopen or construct new halts within Translink's current Corporate Plan. However, as part of the introduction of 20 New Trains between 2011 and 2013 and in order to increase passenger capacity, NIR are planning to lengthen 50 platforms to allow 6 car train sets to stop at selected stations and halts. The expected completion date is Summer 2012.

I have asked Translink, in liaison with my department, to develop 10 year and 25 year capital plans which can be considered as part of future Investment Strategies through the Executive subject to budget availability.

Fofanny Water Treatment Works

Mr W Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how many discharges there has been from the Fofanny Water Treatment Works in the last three years. (AQW 827/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that the only discharges from Fofanny Water Treatment Works during the past three years were intermittent discharges on 19 and 20 September 2009, which related to operational issues within the Works.

Belfast to Londonderry Railway Line

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Regional Development why the first train each morning on the Belfast-Londonderry railway line now takes 2 hours 40 minutes to reach Derry, rather than 2 hours 15 minutes on the previous timetable which was changed at his request. (AQW 828/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: To make the most of the benefits of the investment in the track between Coleraine and Ballymena, Translink proposed timetable changes to reduce passenger journey time where feasible. As you indicate my intervention should result in the first train now arriving in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than the old timetable and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR. However the main benefit of the timetable change should be to reduce journey times on the journey between Derry and Belfast.

To ensure the first train arrives in Derry at 9.00am the first week day train to Derry from Belfast currently departs at 6.20 am rather than the previous 6.55 am. As you indicate the overall journey time has increased from 2 hours 15 minutes to 2 hours 40 minutes for this individual train. Clearly this is not an ideal solution.

Based on information provided by Translink this appears to be unavoidable in the short term and is caused by train stops which are necessary to allow trains travelling in the opposite direction to pass.

Current infrastructure, with lengthy sections of single track and limited opportunities for passing, mean that some difficult choices are required. As you are aware in the longer term capital investment is planned to address this issue.

In respect of the current Belfast to Derry 6.20am train, I understand that Translink will continue to review timetables on the Derry line in the context of the whole network and will seek to deliver further improvements in running times, where feasible, in the near future.

Portaferry to Strangford Ferry Service

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the outcome of the question and answer survey carried out in relation to the Portaferry-Strangford ferry service. (AQW 832/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) carried out a customer satisfaction survey on the Strangford Lough Ferry Service, on behalf of my Department's Roads Service, during the week 14–20 September 2009.

NISRA is currently analysing the survey sheets at present. However, I have asked John Humphreys, Acting Head of Roads Service Consultancy, to provide you with the main findings of the survey, once the outcomes have been considered by Roads Service.

NI Railways: Londonderry Line

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake an immediate and second intervention with NI Railway, to protect the passengers on the Londonderry line from timetable changes which impact adversely on their travelling times. (AQW 865/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: You raised the issue of the time of the first train arriving in Derry in AQW 196/10.

I replied that my intervention resulted in the first train now arriving in Derry at 9.00 am. This is 10 minutes earlier than the old timetable and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR.

The new timetable also allows for a reduced journey time for passengers travelling from Derry and Coleraine to Belfast (of between 10 and 15 minutes).

Any further changes to the timetable are problematic in the short term and could bring us back to the original revised NIR timetable and back to the problems with the time of arrival of the first train to Derry. Translink have argued that, because of operational and infrastructure constraints, not every journey can gain immediately from the reduced times. This is despite recent track investment between Coleraine and Ballymena.

Specifically to ensure the first train arrives in Derry at 9.00am the first week day train to Derry from Belfast currently departs at 6.20 am rather than the previous 6.55 am. The overall journey time has increased from 2 hours 15 minutes to 2 hours 40 minutes for this individual train. Clearly this is not an ideal solution.

Based on information provided by Translink this appears to be unavoidable in the short term and is caused by train stops which are necessary to allow trains travelling in the opposite direction to pass.

My understanding is that for the vast majority of travellers on the Derry line travel times have reduced as a result of the recent investment in track between Coleraine and Ballymena, but continued infrastructure issues with lengthy sections of single track and limited opportunities for passing, mean that some difficult choices are required. As you are aware in the longer term capital investment is planned to address this issue.

For these reasons I do not believe that there is any value in an immediate and second intervention, but in respect of the current Belfast to Derry 6.20am train I understand that Translink will continue to review timetables on the Derry line in the context of the whole network and will seek to deliver further improvements in running times where feasible.

NI Railways: Londonderry Line

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the increase of 25 minutes travelling time in the first morning NI Railway service from Belfast to Londonderry, considering the investment into the rail network. (AQW 866/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: To make the most of the benefits of the investment in the track between Coleraine and Ballymena Translink proposed timetable changes.

My intervention resulted in the first train now arriving in Derry at 9.00am. This is 10 minutes earlier than the old timetable and 30 minutes earlier than in the revised timetabled initially proposed by NIR.

Specifically to ensure the first train arrives in Derry at 9.00am the first week day train to Derry from Belfast currently departs at 6.20am rather than the previous 6.55am. As you indicate the overall journey time has increased by 25 minutes from 2 hours 15 minutes to 2 hours 40 minutes for this individual train. Clearly this is not an ideal solution but needs to be considered in the context of all journeys undertaken on the line.

My understanding is that for the vast majority of travellers on the Derry line travel times have reduced as a result of the recent investment in track between Coleraine and Ballymena.

In respect of the current Belfast to Derry 6.20am train, I understand that Translink will continue to review timetables on the Derry line in the context of the whole network and will seek to deliver further improvements in running times, where feasible, in the near future.

Water Pipes in Main Street, Greyabbey

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development when NI Water will install the water pipes in Main Street, Greyabbey; and if his Department will then carry out urgent total resurfacing work rather than patchwork repairs. (AQW 889/10)

The Minister for Regional Development: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that it has no plans to lay water pipes in Main Street, Greyabbey, but is proposing to commence construction work in Autumn 2010 to lay new sewers. The arrangements for road reinstatement will be agreed with Roads Service nearer the commencement of the scheme.

DEPARTMENT FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Egan Internal Audit Report

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development, given that the Egan Internal Audit Report of October 2007 stated that only 37 percent of call outs were due to misunderstanding or misuse, to outline why call outs for maintenance under the Egan contract have doubled. (AQW 257/10)

The Minister for Social Development (Ms Ritchie): Since 2001/02, the first year of response maintenance under the major Egan heating contracts, some 25,300 heating systems have been replaced with more energy efficient gas and oil heating systems within Housing Executive dwellings systems as part of their programme of Improvement schemes. The greater complexity of these systems necessitates more regular servicing and this is reflected in the increase of repair jobs from some 26,300 to 51,000 during the period referred to in the report.

Housing Executive: Egan Contract

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development why the cost of maintenance response increased from £1.46 million in 2002/03 to £3.5 million in 2005/06 in the Housing Executive Egan contract for maintenance. (AQW 258/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The expenditure in 2002/03 was £1.46m for some 26,300 jobs at a unit cost of £55.54. This had risen in 2005/06 to £3.43m for some 51,000 jobs at a unit cost of £67.15. The contracts have increased in value by some 21% to reflect the increase in cost of materials and labour.

The costs of heating maintenance have increased every year as the Housing Executive has installed more energy efficient gas and oil heating systems as part of their programme of Improvement schemes. However due to their complexity these schemes are more expensive to maintain than their solid fuel room heaters predecessors.

IT Systems: DSD

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) all new IT systems that were installed in her Department; (ii) the initial budget; (iii) the actual cost; (iv) the estimated start date; and (v) the actual start date, in the last five years. (AQW 260/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is set out in the tables below, along with a brief description of the purpose of each system. In addition to the systems listed, a number of projects were run from within the Department of Finance and Personnel during this period to implement systems in all NICS Departments, namely: for accounting (Account NI); personnel (HR Connect); records management (Records NI); and wide-area networking (Network NI).

NI Housing Executive Homes: Fermanagh and South Tyrone

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many NI Housing Executive homes in Fermanagh and South Tyrone are awaiting renovation or modernisation before being allocated to tenants.

(AQW 272/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are currently 12 Housing Executive properties in the Fermanagh and South Tyrone Districts which are awaiting renovation or modernisation before being allocated to tenants.

Housing Executive Tenants

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many NI Housing Executive tenants were evicted from their homes for anti-social behaviour in each of the last three years.

(AQW 274/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The table below details the number of properties recovered by the Housing Executive by District Office administrative area on the grounds of anti social behaviour for the last three years.

Housing Executive Schemes: Victoria Area, Donaghadee

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Victoria area of Donaghadee over the next five years. (AQW 338/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go on site in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The Ards District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Housing Executive Schemes: Cypress Area, Donaghadee

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Cypress area of Donaghadee over the next five years. (AQW 339/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The Ards District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk

Housing Executive Schemes: Cottown Area

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Cottown area over the next five years. (AQW 340/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The Ards District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk

Repair and Maintenance of Houses: Village Area

Mr B Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development how much money has been spent by the NI Housing Executive on repair and maintenance of houses in the Village redevelopment area in the past 10 years. (AQW 384/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The total figure for Housing Executive spend on repair and maintenance on houses in the Village redevelopment area in the past 10 years is £1,332,129.

This can be broken down as follows:

| Planned Maintenance-Housing Executive homes | Response Maintenance-Housing Executive homes | Home Improvement grants- Private Homes |
|---|--|--|
| £331,000 | £483,516 | £517,613 |

House Sale in the Newtownards Area: Cost to Process

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 8905/09, how much it cost to process the sale of the one house sold in the Newtownards area in 2008/09; and how this compared to other council areas. (AQW 398/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information is not available in the format requested because the Housing Executive cannot disaggregate the costs for each house sale application received. However, the Housing Executive estimates that for the financial year 2008/09, for each house sale application received it incurred an average processing cost of £174. This figure refers to the total costs incurred through the processing of 919 house sales applications received by the Housing Executive in 2008/09 financial year across Northern Ireland only 54 of which proceeded to completion stage.

Home Improvement Schemes: Groomsport

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what Housing Executive home improvement schemes are earmarked for the Groomsport area over the next five years. (AQW 418/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The North Down District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Home Improvement Grants: Fermanagh and South Tyrone

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many home improvement grants in Fermanagh and South Tyrone are currently suspended. (AQW 428/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Since 1 April 2009, 1030 applications in Fermanagh, and 390 applications in Dungannon have been cancelled or refused because of the budget restrictions.

Community and Voluntary Groups

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development to detail all funding given to community and voluntary groups by her Department in the East Antrim constituency in each of the last three years. (AQW 439/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department for Social Development has provided funding to voluntary and community groups within East Antrim through a range of funding programmes in each of the last three years as listed below.

| | 2006/2007 | 2007/2008 | 2008/2009 |
|-----------------------------|--------------------|--------------------|--------------------|
| Areas at Risk | 1,839.78 | 121,459.71 | 119,514.96 |

| Neighbourhood Renewal | 114,192.00 | 92,445.00 | 56,497.00 |
| Totals | £583,369.25 | £974,373.67 | £858,182.64 |

North Antrim Constituency: DSD Projects

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) what projects her Department has funded; and (ii) the amount of money provided by her Department, in the North Antrim constituency, since May 2007. (AQW 463/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I have listed below all projects within the North Antrim Constituency under the Areas At Risk and Neighbourhood Renewal programmes that have been funded since May 2007. With regard to Town Centre Regeneration we do not hold this information in a way that would allow us to answer your question but we have included a list of projects that were approved since May 2007 but some of the funding may not all have been spent in some cases:

Housing Executive Schemes: Conlig

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Conlig village area of North Down over the next five years. (AQW 479/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The North Down District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Housing Executive Schemes: Whitehill Estate

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Whitehill Estate, Bangor over the next five years. (AQW 480/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The North Down District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Town Centre Regeneration

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to provide details of the review of her Department's policy on the provision of funding for town centre regeneration, including all existing and potential delivery mechanisms. (AQW 483/10)

The Minister for Social Development: My Department's policy on town centre regeneration is currently being reviewed as part of a wider review of urban regeneration policy and within the context of proposals for the Reform of Public Administration, which will see responsibility for delivery of urban regeneration transferring to local councils. This review process, which is at an early stage, will be informed by the Social Development Committee's ongoing review of town centre regeneration, and will consider all existing and potential delivery mechanisms.

Hostels in South Belfast: Sex Offenders

Mrs Hanna asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of hostels in south Belfast that house sex offenders; (ii) the number of sex offenders in each hostel; and (iii) a breakdown, by category, of the sex offenders in each hostel. (AQW 497/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I am unable to answer this question as this information falls under Policing and Criminal Justice which is a reserved matter and can only be dealt with by the Northern Ireland Office

Projected Income: DSD

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the projected income for her Department for the previous twelve months, and the actual income received; and (ii) the total amount of projected income for her Department over the period of the CSR, and the actual income to date. (AQW 500/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Department's primary source of income is from house and land sales, for which the information requested, broken down by financial year, is set out in the table below.

| | 2008-09 £m Budget Actual | | 2009-10 £m Budget To Date | | 2010-11 £m Budget |
|---------------------------------|-----------------------------|------|------------------------------|-----|----------------------|
| Departmental House & Land sales | 82.3 | 10.3 | 71.9 | 7.8 | 197.4 |

The Member will note that projected income levels are not fixed and the position is monitored continuously and adjustments reflected during the in-year monitoring round process. For example, various interventions were necessary to cope with the drastic fall in receipts in 2008-09. Year to date receipt levels for 2009-10 reflect the position at 31 August 2009.

NI Housing Executive: Renovation

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the criteria used to define “special circumstances” in determining applications for NI Housing Executive renovation, repair, replacement and disabled facilities grants. (AQW 502/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Disabled Facilities Grant applications supported by an Occupational Therapist’s recommendation are mandatory. When a discretionary renovation, repair or replacement grant applicant has submitted all the documentation necessary to comply with Article 36 of the Housing (N.I.) Order 2003 (documents complete stage), the Housing Executive Grants Manager will review the application under the following criteria:

- Is the application for a discretionary grant (Renovation or Home Repairs Assistance) being processed simultaneously with an application for a Disabled Facilities Grant and are the works under the Renovation/ Home Repairs application necessary to enable the adaptation works to proceed?
- Is there an imminent and significant health and safety risk?
- Is there a serious risk from the structural stability of the property?
- Any there any other circumstances which the Grants Manager considers to be exceptional?

Where the Grants Manager considers that exceptional circumstances might exist, the application will be referred to the Assistant Director, Private Sector Improvement Services, with a recommendation listing the grounds upon which the decision is based. A committee, consisting of the Assistant Director, senior officers and senior technical officers, assesses the referred cases and decides if grant aid may be approved.

The committee meets regularly to consider referred cases as quickly as possible. Where it agrees that exceptional circumstances exist, the committee may decide to allow only those work items that address the specific circumstance. Any decision made by the committee is reported to the Grants Manager immediately with an appropriate recommendation.

Customer First Programme

Mr Savage asked Minister for Social Development (i) when the decision was taken to stand down the central tenet of the Customer First programme and the Customer Access Phones initiative; (ii) why these decisions were taken; and (iii) if she approved the decision. (AQW 512/10)

The Minister for Social Development: No decision has been made to stand down any of the central tenets of the Customer First Programme. It has however been decided jointly by the Social Security Agency and the Department for Employment and Learning Project to stand down the Customer Access Phones (CAPS). This decision was taken for two reasons, firstly given then current economic downturn, the space required to house CAPS was not available and the Public Consultation process highlighted limited support for people queuing in local offices to access a telephone service. I had previously indicated that I would also find this unacceptable, however the matter was for the CAPS project and my approval was not required.

Decontamination Project

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the decontamination project for parts of the Fort George site in Derry. (AQW 519/10)

The Minister for Social Development: It is believed that there may be significant contamination present on the Fort George site dating back to its previous uses as shipyard, port, timber treatment yard and military base. It is estimated that the costs of remediation work could be up to £9 million. In acquiring the site in 2005, the Department for Social Development took care to ensure that previous owners, including the Londonderry Port & Harbour Commission and the MOD, provided indemnities in respect of the costs of such remediation works.

The Department and ILEX are seeking to ascertain the full nature and extent of the contamination and to resolve the complex legal issues arising from the question of who is responsible for the contamination and therefore liable to pay for remediation.

Ilex will meet MoD representatives next month to review the issues relating to contamination.

Housing Executive Schemes: Strand Area, Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Strand area of Holywood over the next five years. (AQW 522/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The North Down District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Housing Executive Schemes: Redburn Area, Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Redburn area of Holywood over the next five years. (AQW 523/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The North Down District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Business and Resource Centre in Rathenraw

Mr Burns asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 592/09, AQW 3640/09 and AQW 6966/09, to provide an update on the project to build a Business and Resource Centre in Rathenraw, Antrim. (AQW 555/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Construction of the new family and resource centre has progressed well since the appointment of a new contractor in January 2009. I anticipate that the project will be completed during October 2009.

Living Over the Shops Scheme

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what steps her Department is taking to fulfil the five year commitment given in 2006 to Cookstown District Council, to ensure that Cookstown remains a successful Living Over the Shops scheme, and meets the demands of property owners and tenants to convert existing town centre property into affordable, high quality housing stock. (AQW 563/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Living over the Shops initiative is an important regeneration tool which breathes new life and vitality into town centres by converting under used retail space into housing. Since 2006 approval has been given for 25 properties under the Living Over the Shops scheme in the Cookstown area. The continuation of this scheme will provide much needed additional housing in areas of high housing need.

I am pleased to confirm that the additional £500k I have allocated to this initiative will allow the Housing Executive to continue this work within the 23 Town Centre Living Initiative Areas already designated, including Cookstown.

Town Centre Regeneration

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the criteria her Department uses to support and assist Town Centre Regeneration in towns and cities; and if this criteria is equitable and effective in addressing the needs and requirements of town centres that are struggling to survive. (AQW 568/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I have published my criteria for prioritising regeneration projects in Vital and Viable, DSD's good practice guide for breathing new life into cities and towns, and I have placed a copy of this in the Assembly library. My Department works towards the creation of prosperous, sustainable towns and cities via the detailed criteria, which I am content are effective and equitable.

With the reorganisation of the Local Councils post 2011, local structures will have greater responsibility for development in their respective areas, enabling regeneration plans to further promote the unique character of our towns and cities.

Town Centre Regeneration Projects

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development, given the decline in footfall and increasing retail vacancy levels, to outline how her Department is supporting key towns with a high proportion of locally owned independent retailers, which are not located in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas. (AQW 570/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I have published my criteria for town centre regeneration projects in Vital and Viable, DSD's good practice guide for breathing new life into cities and towns, and I have placed a copy of this in the Assembly library. My Department works towards the creation of prosperous, sustainable towns and cities via these published criteria, which identify the retail offering as one of the key priorities for successful regeneration.

Social Housing Development Programme: Ring-Fencing

Ms Ní Chuilín asked the Minister for Social Development to explain the decision to remove ring fencing for north and west Belfast, and the north west region, given that the Equality Impact assessment of the strategic guidelines has yet to be completed. (AQW 576/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The mechanics for distributing the Social Housing Development Programme must be responsive to the places and people where housing need is greatest. More especially when more public housing is needed to meet growing levels of housing need; and there is such a significant shortfall in the housing budget.

In 2008 in the light of the inexorable growth in housing need, coupled with the collapse in housing capital receipts, the Housing Executive approved the immediate application of new Strategic Guidelines. These included the removal of ring fencing from all areas and the distribution of the Social Housing Development Programme on the basis of an area's proportionate share of total housing stress. Importantly, this distribution is also weighted to reflect the length of time applicants wait before being rehoused.

A preliminary Equality Impact Assessment showed that these new guidelines were robust, fair and equitable. This will be finalised in the coming months and if necessary the policy adjusted to take into account any adverse impacts identified in the final Equality Impact Assessment.

Housing Benefit Claims

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, to detail (i) the length of time it takes to process housing benefit claims; (ii) what steps her Department has taken to address long delays in processing claims; and (iii) if delays in processing claims are a result of the reorganisation within the Housing Executive under the Modernising Services programme. (AQW 579/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive currently has a target of processing 90% of all new Housing Benefit claims within 14 days of all necessary information being supplied by the claimant. The current performance is detailed in the table.

| Service Centre | % |
|-------------------------|------|
| Belfast Private HB Unit | 100% |
| Belfast Public HB Unit | 97% |
| South East | 90% |
| South | 92% |
| North East | 89% |
| West (Derry) | 94% |
| West (Omagh) | 96% |
| NIHE Overall | 94% |

Following reorganisation, under the Modernising Services programme, Housing Benefit claims are now processed at seven Service Centres across Northern Ireland. The Housing Executive considers that this offers a more efficient delivery of service. However, due to the current economic situation there have been significantly higher numbers of Housing Benefit transactions including new claims and higher numbers of changes in circumstances. In view of this increase in demand, the Housing Executive increased Housing Benefit staffing resources. This has resulted in a significant improvement in the overall service over recent months despite the continuing increase in demand.

Housing Need

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development which area has the greatest housing need. (AQW 580/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The table below details the number of applicants on the waiting list by Housing Executive geographical area, as at 30 June 2009.

| NIHE Area | Housing Applicants | Housing Stress |
|------------|--------------------|----------------|
| West | 4889 | 2312 |
| Belfast | 9953 | 5774 |
| North East | 7765 | 3761 |
| South | 6819 | 3315 |
| South East | 8810 | 4881 |

Social Housing: Derry City

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are on the list for social housing in Derry City. (AQW 581/10)

The Minister for Social Development: At the 30 June 2009 there were 2425 applicants on the waiting list in the Derry City Council area.

Social Housing: Derry City

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are on the list for urgent social housing in Derry City. (AQW 582/10)

The Minister for Social Development: At the 30 June 2009 there were 2425 applicants on the waiting list in the Derry City Council area of which 1411 were in housing stress.

Social Housing: Derry City

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Social Development how many social houses will be started in Derry City by year ending March 2010. (AQW 584/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are currently 4 schemes and 240 units programmed to start in Derry city by year ending March 2010.

Housing Executive Schemes: Craigantlet Hills

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what Housing Executive schemes are planned for the Craigantlet Hills area of North Down over the next five years. (AQW 591/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Housing Executive is unable to confirm details of its programmes of activity beyond the current financial year and cannot therefore advise when individual schemes are likely to go onsite in subsequent years.

The Housing Executive will review its programmes when budgets have been confirmed as the delivery of these programmes is dependent on the availability of finance in any given year.

Details of the Housing Executive's programmes of activity are included in their District Housing Plans which are reviewed annually and presented to local councils. The North Down District Housing Plan is available at www.nihe.gov.uk.

Employment Levels

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development what plans she has to change employment levels within her Department in the next 12 months; and how many of these changes are planned to be made through redundancies. (AQW 596/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are no plans to change employment levels within the Department for Social Development for the financial year 2009/10. Within the Department, the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Division is funded for work carried out on behalf of the Great Britain Child Support Agency. Staffing levels are dependent on the level of funding provided. As funding levels have reduced for 2009/10, fewer staff will be allocated to this work, with the reduction handled through vacancy management.

As budgets have not yet been finally agreed for 2010/11 the Department is not in a position to comment on employment levels from April 2010.

There are, at this stage, no planned redundancies.

Disability Living Allowance Appeal Tribunals

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development what steps she is taking to prevent the deferral of Disability Living Allowance appeal tribunals due to non-availability of GP records. (AQW 611/10)

The Minister for Social Development: For every Disability Living Allowance appeal received The Appeals Service ask the appellant for permission to obtain their General Practitioner records. Where consent is given, a letter is issued to the doctor's surgery three weeks before the hearing to request the records.

If the records have not been received one week before the hearing date a letter is issued to the appellant advising them of the non receipt and suggesting they contact their doctor to ensure the records are available for the Tribunal hearing.

If the surgery refuses to release the records a letter is issued to the appellant advising them of the refusal and suggesting they contact their doctor to make alternative arrangements to ensure the records are available for the Tribunal hearing.

On the day of the hearing the Tribunal is advised of the steps taken by The Appeals Service to obtain the records.

Any subsequent decision to adjourn due to the non availability of records is an independent judicial decision over which The Appeals Service has no influence.

Hunger Strike Memorial

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development what action she intends to take to remove the hunger strike memorial erected illegally on Housing Executive land in Newtownbutler. (AQW 614/10)

The Minister for Social Development: It is understood that a memorial was erected on Housing Executive land within the Galloon Gardens area of Newtownbutler without the agreement, involvement or knowledge of the Housing Executive. The Housing Executive is currently consulting with a range of local representatives with a view to resolving this issue.

Child Maintenance Payments

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to detail how much has been outstanding in child maintenance payments in each of the last 5 years from individuals resident in the Irish Republic; and (ii) to outline the measures in place with authorities in the Irish Republic to assist in recovering these payments. (AQW 616/10)

The Minister for Social Development:

- (i) It is important to note that the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Division has no jurisdiction either to:
- make a new determination of child maintenance liability, or
 - continue with an existing child maintenance liability

where the Non Resident Parent is deemed to be habitually resident outside Northern Ireland or Great Britain.

Individual cases do exist in which Non Resident Parents failed to pay child maintenance liabilities when they were habitually resident in Northern Ireland but payment cannot be enforced as those Non Resident Parents are now habitually resident in the Republic of Ireland.

Cases where maintenance payments are outstanding in these circumstances are not counted separately. However this debt is not “written off”: the Division suspends recovery action until such times as the individual’s circumstances change and it will continue to make strenuous efforts to recoup this outstanding maintenance of behalf of Parents with Care.

- (ii) Reciprocal agreements are not in place, either with the Republic of Ireland or any other jurisdiction outside Northern Ireland and Great Britain, to recover arrears of payments arising from non payment of child maintenance liabilities calculated by the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Division.

The Republic of Ireland is, however, a signatory to the Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders which is an international convention. Maintenance orders made by the courts on behalf of Great Britain and Northern Ireland residents can be registered and enforced by courts or other authorities in other countries against people resident there.

A resident of Great Britain or Northern Ireland who wishes to apply to obtain Child maintenance from a person outside the jurisdiction should approach:

- Their local magistrates court if they have an existing court order for maintenance,
- Their local magistrates court if there is no existing court order.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre: Backlog

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to give details of any backlog within the Employment and Support Allowance Branch, including the reasons for this backlog. (AQW 626/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are no backlogs in the benefit processing teams within the Employment and Support Allowance Branch, the outstanding work is well within acceptable levels. There are currently 627 appeals outstanding and this is more than the acceptable number. The backlog is due to more people than expected being disallowed Employment and Support Allowance because they are found not to have a limited capability for work following the Work Capability Assessment.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many (i) desktop computers; (ii) laptop computers; (iii) fax machines; and (iv) telephones are utilised within each section of the Employment and Support Allowance Branch. (AQW 629/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is provided in the table below.

| Section | Desktop Computers | Laptop Computers | Fax Machines | Telephones |
|---------------------------|-------------------|------------------|--------------|------------|
| Accuracy & Medical | 32 | 0 | 0 | 33 |
| Decision Making & Appeals | 37 | 0 | 0 | 37 |
| Processing | 76 | 0 | 1 | 77 |
| Operational Support | 37 | 2 | 1 | 42 |
| Telephony | 71 | 0 | 1 | 73 |
| Total | 253 | 2 | 3 | 262 |

North East Quarter Masterplan

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development, (i) for an update on the current status of the North East Quarter Masterplan for Belfast city centre; (ii) what stage the process is currently at; (iii) to outline any steps still to be taken; and (iv) the time-scale for completion. (AQW 632/10)

The Minister for Social Development: My Department's adopted masterplan for the North East Quarter of Belfast city centre was published in August 2005. A development brief for the area was subsequently issued and in March 2006 the North East Quarter was selected as the next area for a major retail-led regeneration scheme in the city centre, on the basis of proposals submitted by Leaside Developments Limited for the Royal Exchange scheme.

My Department is currently finalising the Development Agreement for the scheme which provides the legal contract for the statutory planning, commercial and funding requirements for the scheme. The Development Agreement will set out the timetable for the scheme and I will make an announcement about this as soon as the Agreement has been finalised with the developer.

Benefit Fraud

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to outline her Department's policy on the naming and shaming of those found guilty in the courts of benefit fraud; and (ii) if the names of people guilty of benefit fraud have ever been published by her Department or the Social Security Agency. (AQW 635/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I am fully committed to minimising social security fraud. My Department has a robust counter fraud strategy but does not have a policy on "naming and shaming." Until recently personal details of individuals convicted of benefit fraud were included in the regular bulletins published on the Department's website. Whilst publication of personal details was viewed as a potential deterrent to those individuals who might commit benefit fraud, it was not considered to be a 'naming and shaming' exercise.

The content of the Department's website is continually reviewed and updated. Increasingly the website is focusing on the strategic messages that I wish to communicate about the work of my Department. Although the personal details of individuals convicted of benefit fraud will no longer be published on the website, details will still be issued to the local media by way of press releases. In addition, the regular bulletins on the website about the Department's success in tackling social security benefit fraud will continue.

Housing Maintenance

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Social Development how much of the £20 million promised to be released immediately for housing maintenance in the June monitoring round has been released to date.

(AQW 636/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The £20 million to be released to EGAN contractors in the June Monitoring Round was not a promise made by me but a unilateral condition the Executive placed on the £20 million capital funding allocation for Private Sector Grants (£15 million) and Disabled Adaptations (£5 million). The funding for the EGAN contracts was to be found from within the existing revenue resources already allocated to my Department.

However Housing was facing a £100 million shortfall before the June Monitoring Round and the £20 million allocation, while welcome, was needed to meet the existing commitment in relation to Private Sector Grants. To release funding to the EGAN contractors the Housing Executive will have to postpone other maintenance and related works, including suspending asbestos removal and change of tenancy repairs which will affect hundreds of smaller contractors.

The Housing Executive is continuing to investigate the possible options and ramifications of releasing the required funding.

Since June 2009 the Housing Executive has released £8 million to Egan contractors.

Social Housing: Tenants

Mr O'Loan asked the Minister for Social Development if she has given consideration to the fact that many tenants in social housing have no contents insurance; and to state what plans she has to address this matter.

(AQW 637/10)

The Minister for Social Development: I am aware that many people, both in social and private housing, have no contents insurance. This is a matter for the individuals themselves, the Government cannot compel tenants to have this insurance. However, Supporting Communities Northern Ireland, an independent province wide voluntary organisation, have arranged a contents insurance scheme with Royal and Sun Alliance Plc, which offers a weekly payment scheme for Housing Executive Tenants. The scheme does not operate on a post code basis which means that all Housing Executive tenants can avail of the same rates. In addition replacement of glass, which many other insurers will not accept for tenants, is available through the scheme.

I have asked the Housing Executive and Housing Associations to continue to advise their tenants of the benefits of being adequately insured.

Vandalism on Housing Executive Property

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development how much has been spent by her Department cleaning or repairing acts of vandalism on Housing Executive property in each of the last five years.

(AQW 642/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The table below details the Housing Executive's expenditure through remedial works associated with damage caused by vandalism for the period requested.

| Financial Year | Expenditure £k |
|----------------|----------------|
| 2004/05 | 703 |
| 2005/06 | 733 |

| Financial Year | Expenditure £k |
|----------------|----------------|
| 2006/07 | 716 |
| 2007/08 | 376 |
| 2008/09 | 415 |
| Total | 2,943 |

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development, within the Employment and Support Allowance Branch (ESAB), how many cases have been delayed due to the loss of documents received by ESAB.

(AQW 657/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is not available. The Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) Centre receives around 3000 medical certificates and 4500 envelopes containing other documentation every week. In view of the large volumes involved it is almost inevitable that some documents may, on occasion, be mislaid. Every effort is made to obtain the right documentation to ensure that benefit payments are not delayed.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development (i) for her assessment of the effectiveness of the Employment and Support and Allowance Branch (ESAB); (ii) whether ESAB is fit for purpose; and (iii) how often it has attained its Key Performance Indicators targets.

(AQW 658/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is set out below.

(i) & (ii) Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) has been the most significant change in the benefit system in years and the transition has been a very positive one. The introduction of the new benefit would have been challenging at any time but with the current economic downturn the task was made more difficult. Not only is ESA a new benefit, but it introduced new working practices for staff including taking claims by telephone and for the first time, the ability to process a signatureless claim. There has been a marked improvement in the performance of the ESA Centre in recent months, due to the hard work and commitment of staff and management, thus demonstrating its effectiveness and supporting the view that it is fit for purpose.

(iii) While there is no official target for processing ESA claims, the average actual clearance time for an ESA claim has improved from 23.4 days in May to 17.5 days in August. The number of outstanding claims is well within acceptable levels and telephony performance has been excellent over recent months.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development if her Department has any plans to transfer more staff into the Employment and Support Allowance Branch.

(AQW 659/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Staffing levels in the Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) Centre are monitored on an ongoing basis and when necessary, reviewed, to ensure they reflect variations in workloads. At present there are 8 vacancies in the Centre and new recruits are being identified to fill these posts.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development if her Department has any plans to expand the role and remit of the Employment and Support Allowance Branch.

(AQW 660/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) Centre is responsible for processing, maintaining and paying claims for all ESA clients. There are currently no plans to change this.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of the annual budget of the Employment and Support Allowance Branch. (AQW 661/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The allocated budget for the ESA Centre for 2009/10 is currently £4,107,000. A breakdown of this allocation is provided in the table below.

| Business Area | Budget |
|------------------------------------|-------------------|
| Wages and Salaries | £4,016,000 |
| General Administrative Expenditure | £91,000 |
| Total | £4,107,000 |

Mullacreevie Site: Development

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 3166/09, (i) for an update on the development of the Mullacreevie site, including zoning and open space provision; (ii) if a planning application has been submitted in relation to the 22 houses in the Mullacreevie Phase 1 development in Armagh city. (AQW 662/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Fold Housing Association has been nominated to develop the Mullacreevie Phase 1 scheme. They have carried out a feasibility study and are working towards submitting an application for planning approval which will include details of the open space provision as well as the number of homes they hope to build.

Housing Executive Homes: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many NI Housing Executive homes in North Down are awaiting renovation or modernisation before being allocated to tenants. (AQW 666/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are 43 properties in North Down awaiting renovation, which will subsequently be allocated.

Social Housing: Targets

Mr McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the specified targets for social housing in (i) Crumlin; (ii) Randalstown; (iii) Toome; and (iv) Antrim, for the next twelve months. (AQW 681/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The table below details the planned social housing starts within Antrim Borough Council area for 2009/10. There are schemes planned for Crumlin (5 units), Randalstown (25 units), and Antrim (18 units). Currently there are no schemes planned to start during 2009/10 in Toome.

| Scheme | No. of units | Client Group |
|--------------------------------|--------------|---------------|
| Neilsbrook Phase 1 Randalstown | 25 | General Needs |
| Cunningham Way, Antrim | 12 | General Needs |
| 51 Main Street, Crumlin | 5 | General Needs |
| Castle Park, Antrim | 6 | General Needs |

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development, since its inception, how many complaints have been received by the Employment and Support Allowance Branch from (i) individual claimants; (ii) Citizens Advice Bureau staff; (iii) solicitors; and (iv) elected representatives such as councillors, MLAs or MPs. (AQW 698/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is set out in the table below.

| Origin of complaint | Number of complaints |
|------------------------------|----------------------|
| Individual claimants | 220 |
| Citizens Advice Bureau staff | 7 |
| Solicitors | 3 |
| Elected Representatives | 94 |

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development if there is a dedicated call handling section in the Employment and Support Allowance Branch. (AQW 699/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) Centre has a dedicated call handling section. The section has two dedicated telephone lines: the freephone claim line handles calls from customers who want to make a claim to ESA or want information about the benefit; the enquiry line handles calls from customers (or their representatives) with an existing claim who want to report a change of circumstances or have a general enquiry about a claim.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development if staff with responsibility for processing in the Employment and Support Allowance Branch are also manning telephones whilst engaged in day to day duties. (AQW 700/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Telephone duties are carried out by processing staff as they regularly have to contact customers and other operational business areas to progress claims.

Employment and Support Allowance Centre

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many staff within the Employment and Support Allowance Branch are tasked on a daily basis with tackling benefit fraud. (AQW 701/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The Employment and Support Allowance Centre has two trained Fraud Liaison Officers. Fraud awareness training has been delivered to operational staff in the Centre. A continuous awareness programme is in place throughout the year. All staff are aware of their responsibility to report any suspected cases of fraud to the Fraud Liaison Officers.

Disability Living Allowance: Administrative Staff

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many staff are employed in the Disability Living Allowance Branch. (AQW 702/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are 229.52* staff employed administering Disability Living Allowance.

This number is based on whole time equivalents and will include a number of part time staff.

Housing Executive Bungalows: Millburn, Coleraine

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development what the starting date is for the renovation and repair of the NI Housing Executive bungalows for pensioners and disabled people at Millburn, Coleraine. (AQW 712/10)

The Minister for Social Development: A Housing Executive Multi Element Improvement scheme for the bungalows in the Millburn estate was initially scheduled to start during the 2008/09 financial year. However due to the current budgetary constraints this start date was deferred. Currently the Housing Executive is unable to confirm when this scheme will start.

Examining Medical Practitioners: Complaints

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of complaints lodged against Examining Medical Practitioners regulated through the medical support services, about claims for (i) Disability Living Allowance; and (ii) Attendance Allowance, in each of the last three years. (AQW 720/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The total number of complaints received following a domiciliary visit by an Examining Medical Practitioner for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) are provided in the table below.

| Year | Domiciliary Visits | No of DLA Complaints | No of AA Complaints |
|-------------------------|--------------------|----------------------|---------------------|
| April 2006 – March 2007 | 9813 | 93 | NIL |
| April 2007 – March 2008 | 9713 | 85 | NIL |
| April 2008 – March 2009 | 9640 | 71 | NIL |

Disability Living Allowance: Staff Numbers

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to list (i) the sections within the Disability Living Allowance Branch; and (ii) the number of staff in each section. (AQW 765/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is set out in the table below.

Staff employed within Disability Living Allowance Branch by Section.

| Section | Number of Staff |
|--|-----------------|
| Operational Support | 13.81 |
| Contact Centre & Customer Maintenance Team | 70.58 |
| Document Handling Centre | 27.74 |
| Disability Appeals | 44.76 |
| Decision Making Team | 72.63 |
| Total | 229.52 * |

*These numbers are based on whole time equivalents and will include a number of part time staff

Disability Living Allowance: IT Equipment

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many (i) desktop computers; (ii) laptop computers; (iii) fax machines; and (iv) telephones are utilised within each section of the Disability Living Allowance Branch. (AQW 766/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information requested is provided in the table below.

| DLA Section | Desktop Computers | Laptop Computers | Fax Machines | Telephones |
|--|-------------------|------------------|--------------|------------|
| Operational Support | 14 | 1 | 1 | 12 |
| Contact Centre & Customer Maintenance Team | 71 | 0 | 0 | 70 |
| Document Handling Centre | 28 | 0 | 0 | 10 |
| Disability Appeals | 45 | 0 | 0 | 30 |
| Decision Making Team | 73 | 0 | 0 | 63 |
| Totals | 231 | 1 | 1 | 185 |

Disability Living Allowance: Active Cases

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development how many active cases are currently being dealt with by the Disability Living Allowance Branch. (AQW 767/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Disability Living Allowance Branch is currently dealing with 180,451 active cases, figures correct at 5 September 2009.

Disability Living Allowance: Backlog

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development to give details of any backlog within the Disability Living Allowance Branch, including the reasons for this backlog. (AQW 769/10)

The Minister for Social Development: There are no backlogs of work within Disability Living Allowance Branch; the outstanding work is well within acceptable levels.

Co-ownership Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many applications for the Co-ownership Scheme have been received from people in the North Down constituency in each of the last three years; and how many have been accepted. (AQW 801/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Co-Ownership Housing has advised me that it records statistics according to local council area, rather than by constituency. The table below details the information requested in both the North Down and Ards Council areas which are situated, at least in part, in the North Down Constituency.

| Year | Applications made | Accepted |
|----------------------|-------------------|----------|
| 2006/07 | 131 | 89 |
| 2007/08 | 305 | 180 |
| 2008/09 ¹ | 42 | 43 |
| 2009/10 ² | 99 | 28 |

1. The number of applications for the 2008/09 financial year was affected by the suspension of new applications to the scheme between April and November 2008.
2. The number of applications received during 2009/10 are currently being processed. Therefore, the number of successful applications may increase.

Housing Division: Staff Relocation

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the rationale behind transferring Housing Section staff from James House to the Lighthouse Building. (AQW 819/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Housing Division staff were relocated from James House to the Lighthouse Building for business efficiency reasons. To assist in delivering against my priority of investing in housing and addressing the housing crisis I consider it is essential for me to have ready access to the management and staff who work in the Housing Division of my Department, which has been facilitated by this move.

Housing Executive: Tenant Financial Data

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if she can explain why the Housing Executive cannot receive data from banks and building societies on tenants who have accumulated arrears in their accounts, given that they share this information with other organisations. (AQW 823/10)

The Minister for Social Development: All matters relevant to data protection and data sharing are the subject of a submission by the Department of Finance and Personnel to the Public Accounts Committee following its recent hearing on “The Management of Social Housing Rent Collection and Arrears”. This will be made widely available in due course.

Housing Executive: Strangford/Ards

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many houses have been allocated by the NI Housing Executive in (i) Strangford; and (ii) Ards, in each of the last three years. (AQW 826/10)

The Minister for Social Development: The information is not available in the format requested as the Housing Executive does not record allocations by parliamentary constituency.

The table below details the total annual housing allocations for the Housing Executive’s Newtownards, Downpatrick and Castlereagh District Office areas, which contain the areas within the Strangford constituency boundary.

| | 2007 | 2008 | 2009 |
|----------------------|------|------|------|
| Ards District | 290 | 335 | 286 |
| Down District | 177 | 184 | 219 |
| Castlereagh District | 259 | 259 | 316 |

Motability Vehicles

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Social Development to list the approved accident repair companies tasked by her Department to repair Motability vehicles damaged in accidents. (AQW 840/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Motability is an independent voluntary organisation and is responsible for the administration of the Motability contract hire scheme. Whilst my Department facilitates the operation of the scheme by diverting payments of disability living allowance to meet contract hire payments, it is not directly involved in the administration of the scheme. Further information about the scheme can be obtained directly from Motability.

Disability Living Allowance: Process Time

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development what the average time is to process a Disability Living Allowance claim. (AQW 876/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Against a Public Service Agreement target of 41 days the average clearance time for a claim to Disability Living Allowance is 39.2 days. These figures relate to August 2009, the last month for which there are full figures available

Disability Living Allowance: Branch Role/Remit

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development if her Department has any plans to expand the role and remit of the Disability Living Allowance Branch. (AQW 880/10)

The Minister for Social Development: Disability Living Allowance Branch is responsible for processing, maintaining and paying claims for all Disability Living Allowance customers. There are currently no plans to change this.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Maze Stadium Project

In Bound Volume 43, page WA 77, replace the answer to question (AQW 248/10) asked by Mr McNarry with:

Last year, 2008/09, £10m was allocated under the Multi Sports Stadium budget line. The full amount was declared as an easement in the Monitoring Round process.

This year, 2009/10, £28.92m was allocated. £1.979m was declared as an easement in the June Monitoring round and £1.1m is being declared as an easement in September Monitoring. As permitted under the acceleration and slippage arrangements in the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland (ISNI), it is proposed at this point in the year to reallocate the remaining £25.841m as detailed in the attached table. This proposed reallocation will be regularly reviewed throughout the year and adjustments made where necessary.

This proposed reallocation is subject to the September Monitoring process which is scheduled to be considered at the Executive meeting on 24th September.

Athletes: SNI Funding

In Bound Volume 43, page WA 78, replace the answer to question (AQW 253/10) asked by Mr McNarry with:

Sport Northern Ireland (SNI) is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of funding. The attached list provides an overview of the number of athletes who have received funding from SNI over the last three financial years broken down by sport and representation/team.
